Mr. CHARLTON. We would have reduced the taxation instead of inaugurating a reign of corruption in order to spend the money. The late Henry Ward Beecher said that every boy, when he got a new knife, was bound to whittle; and when my hon. friends opposite got more money they were bound to whittle; and they did whittle down the surplus to a remarkable extent.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). When you got a new knife you whittled away the stick altogether.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Finance Minister has told us that our debt and taxation have enabled us to make the country what it is. That is as true as the Gospel of St. Luke. It has made the country what it is, simply that and nothing more, and the hon. gentleman has stated the truth. He said it has placed us in the vanguard—I do not know whether he means in the vanguard of colonies or nations, or in the vanguard of those governments that delude and plunder the people. I rather think the truth would be in the latter. It has placed us, he said, in the vanguard, and in a better position to get settlers. That is a most astounding assertion. The idea that the increase of the debt, the doubling of the debt, the doubling of the interest charges yearly, the increase of expenditure and taxation—the idea that these put us in a better position for securing settlement is an absurd and stupid assertion, quite in keeping with many other assertions of the hon. gentleman. It will not for a moment bear investigation. It cannot be shown to be even a plausible assertion.

Then, he told us that the Opposition raise their voices to deprecate the country. Well, suppose my hon. friend were ill and called in a physician, and that the physician made a diagnosis and gave a prescription, would he accuse him of being the author of his disease? That would be just as reasonable as the charge he brings against us. We raise our voices against the country? No, Sir. We raise our voices against the men that are ruining the country. We raise our voices against the policy that is destroying the country. We do not raise our voices against the country, but in defence of the country. We raise our voices against the cormorants that prey upon the country. That is what we do. And we hear that howl all over the country: Oh, you are doing all this mischief; you are driving the people from the country; you are destroying the country; you are defaming the character of the country. Nothing of the kind. We are attacking the policy of the party who have kept this country in the background and retarded its progress. We are attacking that policy which must be removed before this country fulfils the destiny Providence has designed it shall fulfil.

Then he told us that Canada has passed its hardest period; that it has built railways and canals, and can now go ahead. Well, Sir, we have heard assertions from that side before. We have heard something about the tall chimneys that were to rise in every little village in 1879, but we have not seen them yet. We were told that 640,000,000 bushels of wheat would come from our west alone this time, but it has not come yet. We were told that we would have a revenue of $70,000,000 from the lands of the North-West up to 1891, but we have not had a cent of it yet. And now we are told that we have passed the turning point, that the hardest struggle is over, and that we are about to enter upon an era of prosperity. No, Sir, we are now about to reap the fruits of our folly unless we change our policy. We have now reached the point when a heavy burden is upon us, when the interest on our debt must be annually met, when we have incurred enormous expenditure, which we find it almost impossible to reduce. We have reached that point when the fruits of all the sins and follies we have been committing are coming home to us. We are now in that position that the Government tell us that they cannot enter into a trade arrangement which would secure the prosperity of the country, because forsooth it would reduce our revenue somewhat. We are in that position that we can not forego one dollar of the revenue we now derive from this tariff which exacts from the people sums much greater than they are able to pay. No, Sir, we have not passed the turning point. The hardest is not over; we are not about to go ahead, but we have to pay the price of our folly. We are now about to be called on to pay from year to year for this great burden that rests upon us, and every year we must strain every nerve to meet the burden which the folly of my hon. friend and those associated with him in office have placed upon the people.

So much for the remarks of the Finance Minister, to which I intended to refer briefly only; and now I propose to give my attention for a short time to a question more particularly pertinent to the matter under discussion, the census returns. I may say, by the way, that my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, seems to have forgotten what the question before the House is. I think he did make one incidental allusion to it, but that was all. In approaching the discussion of this question the first thing we have to do, Mr. Speaker, is to account for the fact that our increase of population has been very small. How shall we account for it? Shall we assert that the country has not the scope, has not the undeveloped resources, has not the facilities necessary to enable us to add to our population? Will we say that our resources are fully developed, that the limit of our ability to maintain population has been reached, and that now we have no choice but to serve as a hive, as the fully populated countries of the old world do, from which to send out our surplus population to the United States year after year. Will that assertion be made? I do not think it will, for when we come to look at our country what do we find? If we start at the Atlantic coast we find first the Province of Nova Scotia, with its fisheries, and its lumber, and its agricultural resources, not fully developed, with its great stores of coal undeveloped, and with its coal mine owners, under the influence of the cowardice begotten of protection that leads them to fear open competition in the markets of the world and prevents there seeking the natural markets where they might sell millions of tons annually. We find in that province vast deposits of iron ore where iron can be made cheaper than at any other point, if we except Birmingham, Alabama; we find that province with room for millions of people, with room for indefinite expansion and development, and we cannot say there is no lack of room in Nova Scotia. We come to New Brunswick, and find there undeveloped resources and room for a great number of people in addition to those now inhabiting it. We come to Quebec, and we find a province controlling the Imperial highway to the great inland seas of this continent and the teeming west; we find cities placed where their birthright was that they should be great commercial entrepots and centres of the trade of this continent; we find great areas undeveloped around Lake St. John and in the St. Maurice district, and we cannot conclude that in that province the limits of population is reached. We go to Ontario, the most beautiful and fruitful of all the provinces, resting its southern border upon four great inland seas, with a stretch of country along Lakes Ontario, Erie, Huron and Georgian Bay, the finest, the most salubrious, the most productive section on this continent, not one-half of which is under cultivation, and with great stretches of uncultivated land in the Rainy River Valley and Algoma, with its stores of nickel, of copper, of iron, of silver, of gold, of structural material, a province infinitely rich in resources, one of the grandest commonwealths of this continent, and we cannot say there that the limitation of population has been reached, for there is room for a score of millions more. We go to the North-West, with its enormous tract of arable land, from a small fraction of which a score of million bushels of wheat will be sent to market this year, a country suited for mixed farming, and with great stores of petroleum, iron and coal, and certainly it is not there the limit of population has been reached. We go to British Columbia, with its grand mountains and its scenic wonders, with its agricultural lands in the valleys, with its mineral wealth, its timber, and its fisheries, and it is not there that the limit of population has been reached. In these various provinces there is room for at least four score million of people, and we have less than a quarter of a score of millions. We have the room for the people who are here; we have room for the increase of that people; we have room for the immigrants who will come from the old world; we have room for all these and for many millions more. Will we assert that our population is effete—that, like the population of the Sandwich Islands, the decree of fate is on them, and that they are doomed to gradual extinction? Not so. We have one of the most active, one of the most energetic, and, physically, one of the best races in the world here in British America. We are bound to conclude that this population should show the highest rate of natural increase, and that every immigrant who comes to our shores should find a home congenial to him. Then what is the matter? Have we increased as we should? The only gratification we can get out of these returns is something like that which the old Methodist minister got. He was preaching in the backwoods, and he sent his hat round for contributions, and the hat came back without a copper in it. He turned it up and looked into it, and then he said: "I thank thee, O Lord, that I have been permitted to receive my hat back from this congregation." We may feel this degree of thankfulness, that we have as many people here as we had ten years ago and very few more.

Now let us look the field over, and first we have the Maritime Province group. They have increased by 10,209, or 1·17 per cent., about one half the increase in the towns. Quebec and Ontario have increased by 315,626, or 9·60 per cent., about the increase in the cities and the towns and the district of Algoma. Then, we have the vast North-West, which has increased in ten years by 173,000 souls, including British Columbia, while just south of it is Dakota, with an increase of 376,350, or about double the amount, and Minnesota with an increase of 521,053, or three times the increase of our North-West, or in those two sections an increase of 897,403, or five times the increase of the entire North-West and British Columbia.

Now I propose to make a further analysis of our census returns, and as I embarked in this investigation it led me to results which surprised me. I revised them, I went over them, and yet the results were the same, and our increase is of a character more unsatisfactory than I supposed it to be. Between 1871 and 1881 the increase in our population was 638,314, or 17·31 per cent. During the same period the increase in the population of the United States was 11,597,402, or 30·08 per cent. In that period the number of immigrants to Canada amounted to 362,675, or an increase of 9·53 per cent. out of the total increase of 17·31 per cent. The immigration to the United States in the same period was 2,812,191, or a percentage of 7·29 out of the total increase of 30·08 per cent., that is, provided that in each case the immigrants were retained in the two countries. The natural increase in the United States was 8,785,221, or 22·79 per cent., or the natural increase in the United States was 15 per cent. greater than the natural increase in Canada in the decade between 1871 and 1881. The excess of the addition to the population of Canada over that of the United States from immigration amounted to 2·24 per cent., while the total excess of the increase in the population of the United States over that of Canada was 12·77 per cent.

Taking the present census of 1890 in the United States and 1891 in Canada, we find, as the first bulletin states, though that will be slightly varied by the subsequent statement of the Postmaster General, that our population has increased by 498,534, or a percentage of 11·52. The population of the United States has increased by 12,466,467, or 24·85 per cent. The immigration to Canada from 1881 to 1891 is represented to have been 886,173, or a percentage of 20·49 on the population of 1881, or 8·97 per cent. more than our total increase. We have an increase of 498,534 in the population, and we had an immigration of 886,173, showing a loss of 387,639, besides our natural increase. The immigration received by Canada in the last decade was much larger in proportion to its population than that received by the United States. The immigration to the United States from 1880 to 1890 was 5,246,695, or 10·46 per cent. of the amount of increase. The immigration to Canada was 886,173, or 20·49 per cent. of the population in 1881. If the immigration to the United States had been equal in proportion to population to the immigration to Canada, it would have amounted to 10,985,779 instead of 5,246,695, or the United States required an additional amount of immigration to place them in the same position as Canada of 5,739,084. Take another view of the case, and you find that to place Canada in the same position as the United States we should reduce the amount of our immigration from 886,173 to 416,464, or we received 469,709 immigrants too many in order to place ourselves in the same proportion as the United States. Our excess of immigration over that of the United States amounted to 10·03 on the population of 1881. Had our natural increase equalled that of the United States in the last decade it would have amounted to 14·39 per cent., and if we had retained our immigration that would have amounted to 20·49 per cent., so that our total increase in the ten years, instead of being 11·52 per cent., would have been 34·88 per cent.

Now, I propose briefly to compare the results of the census of Canada for 1881 with the census for 1891. In 1881, as I have stated, our increase was 638,214. Now, deduct from this the immigrants received during that decade, 363,000, it leaves a natural increase of 275,000, or 7·78 per cent. That is the natural increase in Canada in the decade between 1871 and 1881 if we had retained the immigrants received during that period. Now, let us apply that rule to the last decade and see what the result will be. We will estimate that in the last decade we had the same natural increase that we had in the preceding one, and that we retained the immigrants received during that decade; that would have given us a natural increase of 336,476 during the last ten years; add to that the immigration, assuming that we retained it, of 886,000, and that gives the total increase for the last ten years of 1,222,643 souls. Now, we did increase in population according to the memo. that has been laid upon the Table of this House and upon which my calculations are based 498,534, so that we fall short of the population we should have, if our natural increase had been the same as it was during the previous decade, assuming that we retained our immigration—we fall short by 724,109 souls of the increase we should have secured in the last decade. Now, this is a bad showing. England and Wales, hives of industry, teeming with population, sending off swarms annually to Australia, South Africa, New Zealand, Canada and the United States—England and Wales show a larger increase than we have done. Their average increase since 1801 was 14·07 per cent.; the lowest increase between 1851 and 1861, was 11·93; the next lowest, between 1871 and 1881, was 12·11, therefore making a far better showing than we have done.

Now, my hon. friend from South Oxford this afternoon estimated that the natural increase of Canada was 2¼ per cent. per annum. Good authorities estimate the natural increase of Quebec at 4 per cent. per annum. I think I will be able to convince the House that it is reasonable to assume that a population such as that of Canada, a vigorous population, with ample room for expansion, inhabiting a healthful country, should have a natural increase of 30 per cent. each ten years. I assume that is the case, and I will give reasons for making that assumption. I will take the United States as a parallel case. The United States from 1790 to 1840 maintained a natural increase every ten years of from 29·33 per cent. to 35 per cent. In 1790 that country had a population of 3,929,000, just about a quarter of a million more than we had in 1871. Now, the United States received during the first 30 years of its existence a very small amount of foreign immigration. That country received only 250,000 from 1790 to 1820. That country, with a population of 3,929,000 in 1790, had a population of 7,219,000 in 1810. Upon the same basis, starting as we do in 1871, upon a quarter of a million less population than that country had in 1790, we ought to have very nearly seven millions of inhabitants 20 years afterwards without the aid of immigration; so it is evident from this parallel case that our increase has been ridiculously small. The rates of increase in the United States from 1790 to 1890 were as follows:—

1790 to 1800,	35·10 per cent.	1840 to 1850,	35·83 per cent.
1800 to 1810,	36·38 " "	1850 to 1860,	35·10 " "
1810 to 1820,	33·06 " "	1860 to 1870,	22·65 " "
1820 to 1830,	32·50 " "	1870 to 1880,	30·08 " "
1830 to 1840,	33·52 " "	1880 to 1890,	24·85 " "

Average 31·90.

Now, while there is no record of immigration to the United States from 1790 to 1820, it is certain that the natural increase of each of those decades was not less than 32 per cent., and in some cases 35 per cent. The first year in which we are able to make any comparison is that of 1830, when the immigration for the previous ten years had been 128,000. The total increase of population for the decade was 32·50, and the natural increase was 31·03, and that is the lowest figure of the natural increase in the United States up to that period. In 1840 the natural increase had only fallen to 29·33; in 1850 it was within a fraction of 28·12. Now, this comparison convinces me that the population of Canada, a population as vigorous as that of the United States at any time between 1790 and 1830, with conditions of expansion just as favourable as those enjoyed by the people af the United States, has lost a large portion of its natural increase. I assume if the population of the United States maintained a natural increase of from 30 to 35 per cent. for the three decades ending in 1820, and of from 31 per cent. in 1830 to almost 30 per cent. in 1840 and 1850, it is fair to assume that the native population of Canada would have a natural increase every ten years of 30 per cent. I assert that to be the case; there is not the slightest doubt that it is the case. I do not believe the population of this country is less vigorous, less strong physically, less likely to increase rapidly, than that of the United States at any period in the history of that country.

Now, let us see what we have been doing in this race of national progress. Upon that basis, instead of the natural increase being 30 per cent., we find this last decade is has been only 11·52, including immigrants. We received immigrants enough to make the increase 20·49 per cent. more, so that we should have had an increase of 50 per cent. in place of 11·52 this last ten years, if all the population of the country had stayed here, and we had retained our immigrants. Now, let us see what would have been the result in ten years, if my assumption with regard to this matter is true. We started with 4,324,000 in 1881 : 30 per cent. increase in ten years would give 1,297,000. We had 886,000 immigrants coming into this country, and if they had remained here we should have had an increase of population, during that decade, of 2,183,616. Allowing nothing for the difference between the birth rate and the death rate of immgrants received during the ten years, what would be the result? Why, Sir, we should have a population in 1891 of 6,508,426. Assuming the natural increase was 30 per cent., which I believe it was, assuming that the immigrants coming to Canada stayed here, we would have an increase of population of $50\frac{4}{10}$ per cent., or an increase of 2,183,616, instead of 498,000, or a total population of 6,508,426. The population is 1,685,082 less than it should be according to these figures.

I propose to pursue this investigation a little further. I start with the assumption that the natural increase of the population is 30 per cent., that our people are just as virile and vigorous as the population of the United States were at any time in their history from 1790 to 1850, and I assume our increase was 30 per cent., because their increase was that percentage, and in some cases 5 per cent. more. Let us work that out for 1871, the first census we had after Confederation. We start with a population of 3,686,596, a quarter of a million less than the United States in 1790, and their population was over 7,229,000 in 1810. Add 30 per cent. to our population in 1871, and it would give us an increase of 1,105,978. We received during the ten years, from 1871 to 1881, 362,675 immigrants from the old world. So the population in 1881, with a 30 per cent. increase in the native population and with the retention in the country of the immigrants, without any allowance for the difference between the birth and death rate of the immigrant population, in 1881 should have been 5,155,249, instead of 4,324,000. Now we will start out in 1881 and compute the natural increase of 30 per cent. for the decade, which would give 1,546,574. The immigration amounted to 886,173. So the population by the returns which the Minister of Finance says are not entirely satisfactory should have been 7,587,996 in 1891, if there had been no emigration of native population or of immigrants. I reiterate what I stated, that this calculation makes no allowance for the increase of population from the difference between the birth rate and death rate of the immigrants arriving during that decade.

This is a bad showing. But there is something more. I am endeavouring to point out the effect of the exodus on the population for years past. At the commencement of this period, 1871, the point where I commence the calculation, we had Canadians living in the United States to the number of 490,041, they having been born in Canada. The census returns for 1871 give no return of children born in the United States of Canadian parents, the father or mother being a Canadian. The census of 1881 does, however, show this, and by that census it appears that there were 712,000 Canadians in the United States, that there had been 939,000 children born in the United States whose fathers were British Canadians and 931,000 whose mothers were British Canadians. On the data thus furnished, I estimate the number of children born of these 490,000 Canadians in the United States prior to 1871 at 627,000, besides the 490,000 people born in Canada. These figures give in the United States, in 1870, 1,117,040 of population properly belonging to Canada, if there had been no exodus. Add that number to the rest, and the result of the computation of the increase of population in 20 years, on the basis of a 30 per cent. natural increase, would give a total population now of 8,705,037. I make no allowance for the increase in the population on 1,117,041 Canadians and their children who were in the United States in 1871, during the two following decades, which at the rate of 30 per cent. in each ten years would be 770,754. If you add the natural increase of 30 per cent. each decade, amounting to 770,754, these figures would give as a population we should actually have in Canada 9,475,791 in 1891, if there had been no exodus from this country, and if we had maintained a natural increase of 30 per cent. each decade, which is less than the United States maintained for 50 years of its natural existence.

It is evident that something is wrong, and it is to be lamented that the interests and the future of a magnificent country like this, stretching from ocean to ocean, with all its resources in timber, soil, minerals and fisheries, a country capable of supporting 80,000,000 of people, a country starting on the race of progress with prospects so fair, should have had its interests so mismanaged by incompetency that in place of having what it might have had if it maintained the ratio of increase which the United States has maintained, and kept its people and immigrants at home, a population of 9,475,791, has less than 5,000,000. Truly my hon. friend was correct when he said that taxation and increase of debt are just the factors to produce the results we have in this country.

To recapitulate for a moment. This calculation may seem extravagant. I was led to this result step by step. First, I took the United States census returns and found that the natural increase there was over 30 per cent. every 10 years, and had been so for the first 50 years of their national existence. I enquired, Is there any reason why Canada should not present as good a showing? I could not find any reason, for I believe the Canadian people are as vigorous and as likely to increase in population as are the American people, and if any one can show a reason to the contrary I will revise my figures. But as I believe we are as vigorous a race as the Americans, I hold that we should show at this stage of our national existence what they showed for fifty years after their national existence began, over 30 per cent. increase every ten years, and I assume that our natural increase is as great. Assuming that point to be established, I go on then and show beyond peradventure that if our immigrants had stayed with us we should have had a population of 7,500,000, entirely independent of the number of people who have left Canada prior to 1871 ; and the whole calculation was thus worked out, and the result cannot be questioned. If the basis is right, the result is right. If we have a natural increase of 30 per cent., as the Americans have had, if we had retained our immigrants, as we ought to have done, and had had no exodus of the native population, we would have had the population I have indicated, which the census returns show we have not got.

So much for the general question. I desire to refer for a moment to the section of country in which I am immediately interested. I find on examination of the partial returns brought down that the group of ridings along Lake Erie, commencing at the Niagara frontier and running as far west as Elgin, embracing Norfolk, Haldimand, Monck, Welland, Lincoln and Niagara, this group of ridings had in 1881 a population of 127,004. It has by the last returns a population of 115,810, a loss of 7,194, or 6 per cent. in 10 years. When I call attention to that portion of the country I think it will strike hon. members as strange that this should be the result. These ridings lie along Lake Erie. They are traversed by two through lines of railway passing from east to west, giving connection with Detroit on the west and Buffalo and New York on the east. They are excellent agricultural counties; they are excellent fruit counties; Lincoln and Niagara are the finest peach regions in Canada, and if any section should show an increase of population these ridings should show it, as they possess the finest soil and superior facilities for reaching markets. My own riding of North Norfolk has declined from 20,933 in 1881 to 19,400 in 1891, or a loss of 1,533, equal to 7.32 per cent. South Norfolk has decreased from 19,019 to 17,780, being a loss of 1,237, or 6½ per cent. Now, Sir, there is not a more beautiful country on this continent than these two ridings. They are abundantyl watered with pure spring streams and copious living springs; a magnificent fruit country, a country raising the finest wheat, a country admirably adapted to the production of fruit, and clover, and root crops, and barley, and oats, and all crops that grow in the temperate zone; the finest corn country in the Dominion, a country that is capable of being made a garden, a country not one-half of which is under cultivation at the present moment; and yet that country, situated as it is, with two great lines of railways traversing it from east to west, presents a loss of population of 6½ per cent. in one riding and 7½ per cent. in the other. That is surely a commentary on this National Policy that does not require further dwelling upon.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there was a time when the Province of Ontario increased in population at a satisfactory rate. That period was from 1851 to 1861, when we had for seven years of that period the benefit of reciprocity with the United States. Ontario increased during that decade from 952,000 to 1,396,000, an increase of 46·60 per cent. That was a satisfactory increase, and we never have had a satisfactory increase since. Quebec, during that same decade, increased from 890,000 to 1,111,000, an increase of 221,000, or 24·96 per cent. I repeat, Sir, that this was during the operation of a reciprocity treaty, because for seven years of that period, from 1854 to 1861, we had reciprocity. During the next decade the increase is not so satisfactory, but during that period we had the retarding influences of the American war, and for five years of that period we had no reciprocity. It was natural to suppose that the decade from 1861 to 1871 would not be as favourable or as satisfactory as the other. So, Sir, I affirm, from the data furnished here, from the fact that Ontario increased by 46 per cent. of population in the ten years, during a portion of which we had reciprocity, from the fact that it has not increased satisfactorily since reciprocity was lost to this country, I infer that reciprocity with the United States and access to our natural markets had very much indeed to do with the expansion of the population in that province during the period I mention. I assert that the showing of the present census returns is unsatisfactory, and I assert that it proves conclusively, when we come to examine it, that there is something wrong in the policy which is now prevailing in this country and which has prevailed for the last thirteen years. A country situated as Canada is, a country possessing the resources that Canada does, a country inhabited by the kind of population that inhabits Canada, is a country that should increase faster than at this snail's pace we have been going. Something is required to give an impetus to the progress of this country, something is required to secure for this country that measure of prosperity which it certainly has not enjoyed for the last twenty or thirty years.

While this last decade has been passing away we have been making progress in some respects. We have made satisfactory progress in the matter of accumulating our public debt. We started out with a debt of $155,000,000, and we landed at the end with a debt of $237,000,000. We have increased our debt $82,000,000, or 52 per cent., even if we have only increased our population by 11 per cent. We started out at the commencement of the decade with Customs and Excise taxes amounting to $23,942,000, and we ended with Customs and Excise taxation amounting to $31,587,000, or an increase of $7,644,000 in taxation. If we take the previous year of 1880, we find that we have increased our taxation by $13,107,000, or 70 per cent. since then, and we have increased our expenditure from $25,502,000 to $35,994,000, an increase of $10,491,000, or 41 per cent. increase. Here, Sir, are the results of this miserable fiasco called the National Policy. Here are the results of this political falsehood, of this fiscal confidence game, that enables the few to plunder the many, that makes the fishermen, the farmers, the lumbermen and the miners the prey of a very small portion of the population. That is the outcome of what the Government designates by the high-sounding title of the National Policy; and yet we are told by the Minister of Finance that under its operation for twelve years, with the evidence we have now before our eyes, that that policy has been a satisfactory one. What do we want in this country, Mr. Speaker? We want access to our natural market; we want to have done with this condition of things which has brought this country to the verge of ruin; we want to put a party in power that will manage the finances of this country with that prudence with which they were managed from 1873 to 1878, we want to put a party in power that will secure for this country such commercial treaties and such commercial arrangements as will give us access to the population of 63,000,000 at our doors, which is a matter of vital importance to us. We want, Sir, to inaugurate a policy that will put an end to that system of things that leaves us with a population of less than 5,600,000, when we should have a population of 8,500,000. This year we are likely to export to the United States, of the produts of Canada, a quantity very much less than in 1866, at the end of the reciprocity treaty. After the expiration of twenty-five years we will have a smaller trade with that great country than we had in 1866, when it had only half the population it has now. We want to inaugurate a policy which will cease to require this country to act as a hive to send off its annual swarms to the United States, and which keeps our population down to low-water mark, with a beggarly increase of 11 per cent. in ten years, when there ought to be an increase of 30 per cent., in addition to the increase from immigration. We want, Sir, a policy that will drive from power the men who have doubled the public debt of this country, who have piled upon this country an extravagant, and unjustifiable, and unnecessary expenditure; the men who have made the name of this country a by-word among the nations of the earth, giving us a character for corruption, and peculation, and fraud, and contract sweating, the most unenviable reputation enjoyed by any civilized country in the world. I say, Sir, we want to drive from power the men who are responsible for this condition of things and whose garments smell very strongly, to say the least, of the odours that emanate from this foul sink of corruption. Sir, we want in short, and the sum of it all amounts to this, we want to participate on equal terms, and without impediment and without exaction, in the energies and in the activity that characterizes all the Anglo-Saxon people of this continent. We want, in place of having free trade with seven Anglo-Saxon nations under the British flag, to enlarge the number, so that we will have free trade with forty-nine. We want the market of 63,000,000 of people across the border; we want to sell them the productions of our mines, and our forests, and our seas, and our soil. If the Liberal policy is carried into effect, if that arrangement which the Liberal party is able to give to this country, and which the Liberal party if in power would secure for this country, if that arrangement is carried into effect, then, as my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, says, the turning point would indeed come; then we would have prosperity, and then Canada would show to the world all the things she is capable of; she would show to the world that with her grand resources, her extensive sweeps of fertile soil, her forests, her mines and her fisheries, that her energetic population are capable of accomplishing as much as any given number of people on the face of the earth is capable of doing. Sir, it is melancholy to see a noble young country like this, with all its magnificent resources chained down; it is melancholy to see it overburdened by debt; it is melancholy to see it in the hands of such men as we see sitting opposite us, incompetent, if not worse, who have brought the country to the verge of ruin; and unless they are driven from their place of power, unless their grip upon the country is released, we shall see even worse times than we have seen yet.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who has just taken his seat has treated the House as usual to a long list of figures in the line of the argument which he has adopted. He can prove almost anything, if you only allow him to handle figures. He can prove by statistics at one time that protection is good for the country, and he can prove in the following year that the very reverse is the case. He can prove that there is an exodus in the population, and at the same that there is an increase, if you allow him to do it by figures. In fact, the hon. gentleman's demonstration from figures appears to be as intelligible to the country as the old professor's illustration of chemistry. A boy to whom he was attempting to explain the mysteries of chemistry asked the professor what was chemistry? He answered: "If you take an effervescent and add a deliquescence, there will be a precipitation: that's a conglomeration, which will amount to a demonstration." That is about as intelligible as the demonstration which the hon. member for North Norfolk has made regarding the condition of the country from the figures he has given us to-night. The hon. gentleman, before taking his seat, said that he was prepared to tell the country what change was needed in the policy of the country, and he wound up by saying, as representing the Opposition, that we want a policy that will drive the Conservative party or those incompetents from power. I said in response to the hon. gentleman that he and his party had been hunting for that policy for twelve years, and that they had failed to find it yet: but if they are ever successful in finding that policy I venture to say that the hon. member for North Norfolk will make a dozen affidavits that they will never let it go. They have failed to find it, although they have devised several policies and submitted them to the country; but fortunately the country did not think as they did. The hon. gentlemen opposite seem to be in the position of the insane man in the asylum, who contended that he was sane and the others around him insane, and when asked: How comes it that you are here if you are not insane? He answered: Simply because those who put me here are in the majority, and they keep me here. So the hon. member for North Norfolk says that the people are wanting in intelligence because they do not drive the present Government from power; but, strange to say, the majority are on the other side, and the Opposition, like the insane man, are kept where they are because the majority are against them. Then the hon. member for North Norfolk gave us several reasons why we have not a larger population. He drew a comparison between the increase of the population of the United States and the increase of the population of Canada, and what periods did he take? One would naturally suppose that if he were honest he would endeavour to submit to the House comparisons which would be considered legitimate and fair; but he drew a comparison between the increase of the population of the United States a hundred years ago and the increase of the population of Canada at the present time. He failed to compare the percentage of increase in the United States to-day with the percentage of increase in Canada, because it suited his purpose better to make the comparison between the United States of one hundred years ago and Canada to-day. The hon. gentleman went further, and drew a comparison between the increase of population in Dakota and Minnesota with the increase in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, taking the period from 1881 to 1891. Now, the hon. gentleman forgot to tell this House and the country that there is no fair comparison between those two sections of country to-day—why? Because Minnesota and Dakota draw their population from their own country: they draw it from the 50,000,000 people who occupy the eastern and middle states. The expansion of population in the east is so great, and the want of homes is so strong, that the people go west and settle in Minnesota and Dakota much more rapidly than we expect to settle Manitoba and the North-West Territories. Another important difference is that Dakota and Minnesota have great markets at their doors, in the cities of St. Paul, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Chicago, and other cities; and the highways of commerce and the avenues of trade were opened up before 1881, so that the people who went to settle in Dakota and Minnesota were able to enjoy the advantages of civilization when they went there. Therefore, it is not to be wondered at that the influx of people into Minnesota and Dakota was much greater than the influx into Manitoba and the North-West. On the other hand, what was the condition of Manitoba and the North-West? Before 1881 the only access we had to the country was by way of the United States, and as our immigrants were passing through that western country they were allured away by the attractions presented to them by the agents for Minnesota and Dakota; and in this way we lost many of our valuable immigrants who started from here with the intention of going to Manitoba and the North-West Territories, on account of our not having railway connection. We commenced to build the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1881; but the larger part of the decade was spent in getting ready to build up the country. From that we have been going on year after year, building railways in that country for the convenience of the people going there, and we are only to-day, at the end of the decade, in a fair position to compete with Dakota and Minnesota by having those advantages which they had ten years ago. But because we have not attracted settlement to that western country as rapidly as Minnesota and Dakota have during the last ten years, with all those advantages at the commencement of the decade, the hon. member for North Norfolk and the hon. member for South Oxford say that this is on account of the policy of the present Government. I think that is most unfair; it is most misleading. It is unfair, not only to the men who are administering the country to-day, but to the country which these hon. gentlemen profess to represent. Then, again, we are asked to condemn the policy of the Government because we have not attracted as many immigrants to our shores proportionately as the United States have during the last ten or twenty years. Now, it will be necessary for us for a moment to direct our attention to the classes from which we have drawn our immigrants. We have been drawing almost entirely from one class, the agricultural class in the mother country—and why? Because we have been told by the Opposition in this country, year after year, that we were only bringing immigrants into the country to compete with the mechanics and artizans already here, who could not find employment; and, therefore, we endeavour to confine ourselves as much as possible to the introduction of the farming class into the country. We have been drawing from that small class in Europe only, while the United States, with their great manufacturing centres, with their woollen mills, and iron foundries, and machine shops, have been drawing hundreds of thousands and millions from the artizan class, simply because they could furnish them with spheres of employment, which we, being in embryonic state of manufacturing life, could not hold out to them. Hon. gentlemen opposite ought to lay this before the people, and not unfairly blame this Government because we have not attracted to our country as many settlers during the past ten years as the United States have. The Government are also attacked on the ground that the increase in our population has not been as great as it was anticipated it would be: but the hon. gentlemen who make that charge are not fair enough to admit that there are other causes in operation which would fairly account for a large portion of this, and which the Government cannot control. The Minister of Finance alluded to one, and it is a very important one—that is, the different method pursued in taking the last census compared with that followed in 1881. In 1881 the regulations provided that no matter how long the members of a family were absent from the country, provided the head of the family had reason to believe they would come back, they were to be counted as residents of Canada. It did not matter whether they were away one year or ten years, so long as the head of the family expected them to come back. That rule was not followed when taking the last census, but, on the contrary, all those who had been absent for over a year were not counted, no matter whether they intended to return or not. Let me give one illustration, which I will take from the County of Grey. In one family there four out of five of the sons are in the United States, but these four have all been earning money and sending it home to the eldest, who remained at home, to buy land, and the eldest son has bought a hundred acres of land, which he had nearly paid up last year, and then bought another hundred acres with money sent home from those members of the family who were away earning money for that purpose, in order to provide a home for his brothers, who intend to return and settle in this country. But as these have been absent for over twelve months they were not counted in the last census. In 1881, however, they would have been counted; and the natural result is, that these four members of the one family, who were included in the census of 1881, are not included in the present one, thus showing a decrease in this instance where there is really no decrease. I only cite this one instance, but I could give a dozen others of a similar character, though the numbers might be different, taken from my own locality. That fairly accounts for the decrease in population compared with what we would naturally expect at present; and it is to be regretted that we did not adopt the same system as that which we followed in 1881, or devise some other means whereby a proper and fair comparison of the increase in the last decade compared with the previous one could be arrived at. The present system not only does injustice to the country, but to the Government and those men who are endeavouring to do their best for the country, and furnishes our opponents with arguments which they will use te the detriment of Canada. There are other reasons which might fairly account for the small growth of the population of Canada, or for what the hon. member for North Norfolk calls the exodus. That hon. gentleman talked eloquently about the exodus, and he accounted for it by the National Policy. He accounted for it also by what he is pleased to call the incompetency of the men who are governing the country; but he hides from himself and the country the most important element in the matter. We have had here during the last twelve years in this House and the country a class of men who have been constantly running down the country, who have been constantly decrying its public men, who have been constantly drawing comparisons between this country and the United States, to the disadvantage of Canada, so that it is not to be wondered at if the electorate of Canada, believing in the honesty and integrity of these men, have, many of them, left Canada to seek for homes in those elysian fields which have been painted so green and bright by the members of the Opposition. A few years ago when discussing the National Policy, in reply to hon. gentlemen opposite, I referred to the same argument, and I stated I would not be surprised to find that the constituencies represented by members of the Opposition—if we could only ascertain what was the trend of events or the drift of population—would show a larger exodus than those represented by members of the Conservative party. Looking over the census, what do the figures show? They bear out that contention very largely. I take the constituencies represented by Reformers in this House and those represented by Conservatives, and what do I find? I find that those represented by Conservatives, numbering in all forty-seven from the Province of Ontario—and I deal with that province, because I am better acquainted with it and with the political complexion of the men who represent it—and I find of those forty-seven constituencies represented by Conservatives, in only thirteen is there a decrease of population compared with the census of 1881. There are 42 constituencies represented by Reformers, and there is a decrease in the population of 26 of them, whereas there is a decrease in only 13 out of 47 represented by Conservatives. Does not that show that the arguments of the hon. gentlemen have been instrumental in convincing many of the people that there are better homes for them in the Western States than in Canada, and have tended rather to depopulate the country than to increase our population? Should not these hon. gentlemen be fairly held responsible for a large share of the exodus which has taken places in the last ten or twelve years? A few years ago some of the older members of the House will remember an immigration pamphlet which was got up, showing the advantages of Minnesota and Dakota for settlers compared with this country. Where did they find their arguments to prove that? They put a portion of a speech from the Hon. Edward Blake in that pamphlet, which was made decrying his country, and they put his photograph as a frontispiece on that pamphlet, and that was sent to England to show the advantages of the North Western States, and I think they had a speech of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) also. These pamphlets were thrown broadcast over European countries, and could we then expect to obtain our share of immigrants? We could not, because these men stand high in political life. They are able men; they are supposed to be honourable men and intelligent men, and their speeches were selected for this purpose—speeches by Goldwin Smith, by the Hon. Edward Blake, by the member for South Oxford, and the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who is now leaving the room because, I suppose, he is beginning to feel ashamed of his conduct. The only wonder is that we have not lost more of our population, and these men are to be held responsible for the limited increase which has taken place. Going further, I take the three ridings of Bruce. The north riding is represented by a Conservative, and there has been an increase of 3,388. The west riding is represented by my hon. friend over there, and there has been a decrease of 4,500. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Rowand) does not talk much in this House, but his people at home must believe in him, because 4,500 of them have gone away from the country, and that county has been represented by a Reformer since 1878. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) gave us an important lecture to-night, and his righteous indignation was raised to a pitch which knew no bounds. He used all the invectives and all the harsh language which he has so readily at his command. During the past few weeks he has been restraining himself, but his pent-up wrath broke out to-night. He talked about the vicious policy of the Government, the scandalous policy of the Government, the corruption of the Government, the ignorance of the people, because they did not put his party in power; the debauched condition of the constituencies, the subsidized press, the corruption in the Civil Service and out of it. That hon. gentleman has been following the same line of argument for twelve years, and in his own constituency he has succeeded in sending away his people. In 1881 the population of his riding was 24,771, and to-day it is only 22,421, so that he has succeeded in convincing 2,357 people that it was better for them to leave that riding and to go to those elysian fields which he pictures so graphically in the American North-West. The hon. gentleman is entitled to a medal, but I think it would rather be a leather medal than a golden one. The eloquence of the member for South Perth (Mr. Trow) has convinced 2,206 of his people that they had better find a home in another country. Prince Edward County was represented for eight years by Dr. Platt. In 1881 its population was 21,000 and now it is only 18,892. North York, which is represented by our eloquent and gifted friend (Mr. Mulock), had a population of 21,730 in 1881, while now it has only 20,284, representing a loss of 1,446, no doubt owing to his eloquence; and yet I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman will vote for the motion of the hon. member for South Oxford, condemning the Government because there has not been an increase in the population of the constituency which he has been convincing the people to leave. North Wentworth, in 1881, had a population of 15,594, and to-day it has only 14,491, so that the representative of that riding has succeeded in convincing 1,193 of his constituents to go to another country because this God-forsaken country is not a place to live in. Then take the three ridings of Grey. There is an increase in the population of North and East Grey, both represented by Conservatives, but my eloquent friend from South Grey has succeeded in inducing 2,037 people to leave his constituency in the last ten years, though that is the newer part of the county and should have increased more in proportion than the other two ridings. The hon. member has been preaching blue ruin, but the people in the other ridings remain in their places and are citizens whom Canada is proud of. Now, I take South Wentworth, and what is the condition there? It is one of the border counties the member for North Norfolk spoke about, and he said that every one of them were losing their population during the last decade. It is represented by a Conservative, and I find that in 1881 it had a population of 15,500, it now has 16,731, an increase of 1,231; whereas the other riding, represented by a Reformer during the last twelve years, has lost 1,406. Is that comparison not a fair one? I say if it proves anything in the world it proves that the constituencies represented by those men who say that Canada is not the best country to live in, have lost in population, the people apparently believed their Liberal representatives, and have left this country for another country. Now, I take North Wellington, whose representative is, perhaps, the most assiduous member the Opposition have. He is invariably ready to condemn the Government for every thing, and I have no doubt that before this debate is through he will give this House a lengthy argument condemning the Government because the population has not increased in his riding. In 1881 North Wellington had a population of 25,400; to-day, although it has been represented by that hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) for eight years, it has a population of only 24,962, or a decrease of 438. Now the hon. gentleman's arguments cannot be as effective at home as he would like them to be, or he would be like many of his fellow members, and he would have succeeded better in driving his people away from the country. I take North Norfolk where the population has been decreased 1,533, by the eloquence of the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Charlton). Then I take East Huron, from whose representative we will probably hear. In 1881 it had a population of 21,112, to-day the population is 18,960 or a reduction of 2,752, showing how assiduous the hon. gentleman has been in convincing his people that there is a better country for them out of Canada. Then take West Huron, there has been a reduction from 23,000 to 22,000. Remember those constituencies have been represented for years by Reformers in this House. Then I take South Huron, and I find the population has decreased from 21,000 to 19,000. Take North Brant, whose representative (Mr. Paterson) is one of the ablest exponents of the Liberal policy, his county has lost in population 652 during the last ten years. Then take West Ontario, whose representative (Mr. Edgar) is not in his seat, and I find that in 1881 it had a population of 20,189; it has now a population of 18,792, or a reduction of 1,387, and it has been represented for years by a Reformer in this House. Then I take North Ontario, a part of the same county, and I find that it had a population of 20,000 in 1881, and it has increased by 599 during the decade. I go over the whole list, and I find that in almost every county where one riding is represented by a Conservative, there is an increase in the population of that riding, and where the other riding is represented by a Reformer, there is a decrease in the population. Now, I ask, who should be held responsible for whatever exodus there has been from this country, or if there has been no increase in the population? I give these facts because I believe they fairly account not only for the lack of natural increase, but for the decrease in many sections of our country. I believe it is a fair argument that no one can contradict. If any one will take the trouble to analyse the census returns of the various constituencies in Ontario, he will come to no other conclusion than the one I have drawn. Now, the hon. member for South Oxford treated the House to a little prophecy. Because he predicted last year there would be a decrease in the population, he comes now and says: "I told you so." He reminds me of the old lady who, when anything happened, always said: "I told you so." She blamed her husband for being responsible for everything that happened, and one day he came in and said to her: "The cow has eaten the grindstone." She said: "I told you so, you old fool; you would not put it in." And the hon. member for South Oxford, because his predictions happen to be right once in fifty times, comes and says: "I told you so." Last year, in the course of the Budget debate, he said:

"In fifty counties in Ontario the population has retrograded during the last nine years."

And he gives the figures. I have examined those counties and compared the figures with the census just taken, and I find that in about eight out of ten he is wrong. Now, we have heard his prophecies before. I remember that he prophesied in 1876 that if we increased the duty from 15 to 17½ per cent., it would raise enough money to carry on the affairs of the country. The duty was raised, but his prophecy did not prove correct. Then he came back and prophesied again; he said he could raise a greater revenue if they would only allow him to adopt his own means for raising it. The House allowed him to follow his own plan, but instead of having enough money, there was a deficit. In 1879 he prophesied that if the National Policy was introduced it would be a failure in raising a revenue, and he staked his reputation upon it. What was the result? It was proven that he was a false prophet; enough revenue was raised for all the purposes of the Government. He prophesied that the National Policy would signally fail in building up the manufactures of the country; but now he tells us about the bloated millionaires of the country whose fortunes have been built up by the National Policy. So that all his prophecies about the National Policy proving an injury to this country, about its decreasing instead of increasing our manufacturing interests, have remained unfulfilled to this day. I need not go over the various prophecies to which he has treated us during the last twelve years, but if you analyze them fairly you will find that in about 49 out of every 50 cases he has proven himself to be a false prophet. If the Scriptures were to be literally fulfilled we would naturally expect that the latter days were come, because it was foretold that in the latter days many false prophets would arise, and the hon. gentleman from South Oxford has proven his right to stand at the head of the list of false prophets. Now, because he has happened for once in his life to be right, he is encouraged to make other predictions and to tell us what evils will befall this country if we do not adopt unrestricted reciprocity, forgetful of the fact that his prophecies, as a rule, have turned out to be just the reverse of what has actually happened. The Minister of Finance said there must be an exception to every rule, and in this instance it was the exception that proved the rule, because the hon. member for South Oxford was notable for making false prophecies, and the exception was that one of them had been fulfilled. Now, I say that in every one of these lines, instead of holding the National Policy responsible for it, instead of holding the policy of the Government responsible for it, instead of holding the immigration policy responsible for it, we can look to the sources I have mentioned as fairly responsible for what we have in the country at the present time. From 1878 to the present time we have been hearing complaints from hon. gentlemen opposite that the Government were spending too much money for immigration, that they were bringing in a class of people that were not needed. The Government heeded that advice too much, and cut down the amount for immigration. What has been the result? Although the expenditure has been reduced year after year, we have still more people brought to this country at a lower cost than was done by the Reformers when in power. During the 5 years of the Mackenzie regime 149,376 people were brought to the country at a cost of $8.04 per head. During the following 5 years there were 373,000 at a cost of $3.52 per head: during the last 5 years 425,000 people at a cost of $3.62 per head. But hon. gentlemen opposite say we have not kept them in the country. They are alone responsible for the fact that we do not find as many people in Canada to-day as we ought to find. They have been constantly decrying the country. Men come here with their two hands as their capital to work out the problems life. A young man starts out with the buoyancy of hope and endeavours to work himself forward and work out successfully his future. What sustains him through poverty, privation and hard work? It is hope which buoys up his spirits during those dark days. If you destroy that hope, which is the stock and trade of a great mass of the Canadian people, the only capital they possess to start in life with, that hope in his country and its destiny, it is not to be wondered at if he leaves his country and goes to find success in a foreign land. That has been the course followed by the Opposition during the last twelve years. They have been destroying that buoyant hope which keeps up our people during days of privation and hardship. The hon. member for South Oxford said that it was to be regretted that our people left the country, but it was doubly to be regretted that our rising generation were leaving it. The young men, when told that there was no hope for people remaining in Canada or for Canada itself, naturally went to another country in order to better their condition. No doubt the philosophy of the hon. member for Bothwell, the arguments of the hon. member for South Oxford, and the eloquence of the hon. member for North Norfolk have tended very materially to destroy that buoyant hope in young Canadians, and, therefore, they have left the country. Hon. gentlemen opposite have taken away the most valuable capital possessed by those young men starting in life and that hope which buoys them up through privation and hardship and leads them on to success, and to become great and good men and valuable citizens in Canada. They have destroyed this hope at a time in the history of these young men when they were not able to contend against the argument presented, and they have thus sent them away from our shores in the early period of life.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Why did you do it?

Mr. SPROULE. I say the Opposition have done it. If they want proof of it, let them take their own constituencies, where their arguments have been reiterated and they show the results of their arguments. Why have the people left those counties? It is because hon. gentlemen opposite have destroyed their hopes in the future of this country, and yet to-day hon. gentlemen opposite hold the Government responsible for this state of affairs. An analysis of the census returns will show who are responsible for this condition, and it is clear that hon. gentlemen opposite are driving their friends so rapidly out of the country that their ranks are being thinned from year to year, and if it continues long enough we may some day expect to find none but Conservatives returned from those constituencies. I need not longer occupy the time of the House, because many other speakers are to follow, but if I continued another hour I could address arguments equally strong, and contentions equally as weighty, as those I have presented. I have proved that the Opposition are largely responsible for the fact that our population is not as large as it was expected to be. I could use as strong arguments as I have used to account for the exodus that has occurred during the last decade. I could show that the Opposition are more responsible for it than any other class of the community. At the commencement of this decade and indeed through it we have been expending very large sums to improve our highways of commerce so as to enable our people to carry on life successfully. We have placed our country ready for the reception of immigrants, and it ought to give them the advantages to be found in older countries, the expenditure has been very large. We have accomplished the result admirably. We have the great Canadian Pacific Railway built through Manitoba and the North-West Territories, over the Rocky Mountains to British Columbia, and have opened up millions of acres of arable land to receive the teeming millions from European countries, with all the advantages that may be found in much older countries. We have built, besides this main line, various other lines throughout the western country. We have improved our canals and harbours, and placed within reach of the Canadian people all the advantages of modern civilization; and, therefore, we may naturally expect a larger immigration during the next decade, because, having made these improvements future immigrants will have the benefit of them. These results have been obtained in the face of great opposition. We have had to fight the Opposition at every step with respect to building the Canadian Pacific Railway, establishing the National Policy, keeping Canada for the Canadians, and maintaining that buoyant hope which Canadian should possess. The Opposition persistently decried our country and represented foreign countries as much better than ours, so that not only Canadians but foreigners coming here constantly heard that the Western States were preferable to Canada. Yet to-day, these hon. gentlemen turn around and hold the Government responsible for the results as shown in the census, using unfair, unmanly and unreasonable arguments. When the results of the census are analyzed, the sober second-thought of the people will declare that the present Government have done a great deal for the country; they will admit that the present Government are Canadian at heart, British in sentiment and loyal to the core, that they have done what Canada needed and will do it in the future, and they will be maintained by the people in power for many years to come.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) will pardon me if I do not follow him in his long speech. The hon. gentleman said in concluding his speech that if he spoke for an hour longer he could advance arguments just as strong as the arguments he had advanced before. I agree with the hon. gentleman. I believe if he spoke for twenty-four hours one argument would be just as strong as another argument. The hon. gentleman in order to show that the census returns and the deplorable exhibition they make is attributable, rather to the Liberals and Liberal speeches and the conduct of Liberal members of Parliament, pointed out a number of counties represented by Liberals in which the population has decreased, and a number of counties represented by Conservatives in which the population has increased, and he attributed the decrease in the populations of these counties to the speeches made by Liberals to their constituents, in Parliament and in the country, on the trade policy and kindred questions. I am not prepared to say why it is that some constituencies that have returned Conservatives to Parliament have increased in population. It may have been because they did not read the newspapers. It may have been because there is not the general intelligence in constituencies of that kind that there is in constituencies represented by members of the Opposition; but the hon. gentleman was a little unfortunate in one or two of his references. The riding of East Huron was not represented for years by a Liberal, until 1887. For seven years of the past decade that county was represented by a Tory, and, I believe, if it had continued to be represented by a Tory, there would not have been as large a population there as there is now. West Huron was represented by a Conservative prior to 1882 and subsequent to 1887, for at least six years of the present decade, and, if the population has decreased in that county, it is certainly not because the constituency was represented by a Liberal. I would like to know what the Minister of Finance thinks of the hon. gentleman's argument; I would like to know what the Minister of Inland Revenue thinks of the hon. gentleman's argument; I would like to know what the Minister of Justice thinks of the hon. gentleman's argument. If the decrease in the population is attributable to disloyal speeches of members representing these counties, how is the hon. gentleman from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) going to satisfy the Minister of Finance? Why, the very moment the hon. gentleman uttered that sentiment, the Minister of Finance escaped from the chamber. He was afraid to remain, and the hon. gentleman frightened him from his seat. I find that the county represented by the Minister of Finance has decreased from a population of 25,617 to a population of 23,000, a falling off of 2,617. Now, the Minister of Finance must have been uttering some thoroughly disloyal sentiments in the County of King's, N.B., or the population would not have fallen off. He has been decrying the country, and he has been preaching blue ruin; how is the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) going to reconcile himself with his hon. friend who sits right behind him (Mr. Tupper). He had better go over to the adjoining seat and make up friends with the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He also must have been preaching blue ruin to the County of Pictou for the last ten years, and the result is that the County of Pictou has decreased from 35,000 to 34,000. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries ought to have been brought to account, because if the argument of the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is correct he has by his disloyal utterances in the County of Pictou preached 1,000 people into the United States. What has his friend the Minister of Justice done? Is he as great a sinner: he has got the reputation of being a little more eloquent and, perhaps, of having a little more influence in the Province of Nova Scotia than his colleague; his speeches have the reputation of being a little more telling, and his disloyal utterances for the last ten years have actually driven into the United States of America 2,000 Canadians from his own county of Antigonish. If the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) went on for another hour and gave us just such admirable logical arguments as these, we would not all be disposed to listen to him for long. Now, here is a thoroughly disloyal man sitting right in front of me (Mr. Mills, Bothwell,) who has been preaching these disloyal doctrines for twenty-five years, who has been preaching blue ruin according to the theory of the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), and yet his county has increased in population by 4,000. The hon. member for East Grey must see how potent and how logical his argument is. Everybody with an ounce of brains knows that it does not signify what county you represent, the people read in every county. I know the Conservatives as well, I dare say, as the hon. gentleman; I know that a great many of them are reading men, and if disloyal sentiments are uttered in Parliament, or out of Parliament, or blue ruin is preached in Parliament or out of Parliament, it is read by them; and because one county represented by a Liberal happens to lose population and because another county represented by a Conservative happens to gain a few hundred, that is about the weakest kind of argument I ever heard in Parliament against the present amendment, but it is worthy of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). Now, is it really possible in the Parliament of Canada and on the Treasury benches, where there are some able men, that there was not a single Minister of the Crown able to rise to his feet for the purpose of defending the Minister of Finance, and that the duty had to fall upon a prospective Minister of Agriculture? Is it possible that in the Parliament of Canada, upon the other side of the House, there is not a single member of the Conservative party who had the courage to get to his feet to relieve, or to attempt to relieve, the Minister of Finance from the difficulties in which he was placed? Is it possible that there is not to-night a single member of the Conservative party in this House who has the courage of his convictions, and who will tell the Minister of Finance to his face that the deplorable results presented by the census returns are attributable to two causes, namely, the vicious commercial policy of the Government, and the still more vicious administration of our public affairs for the last ten years? Is it possible that there is not a member of Parliament on the other side of the House who could suggest a remedy for the evils in which the country is now placed? It is true that the Minister of Finance attempted to shirk responsibility for the deplorable condition in which the country now is, as shown by the census returns, by preaching somewhat the same doctrine as his follower from East Grey (Mr. Sproule), and declaring that the speeches of blue ruin which have been made in Parliament and out of Parliament have everything to do with the loss of population? It is true, he told us that the speech of the late leader of the Liberal party in Parliament and out of Parliament, especially in connection with the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, had something to do with it. I challenge the Minister of Finance or any other member of the Government to lay his finger upon a sentence that ever the Hon. Edward Blake uttered in condemnation of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is true, he condemned the mode of construction; it is true, he condemned the outrageous and absurd conditions that the company exacted from the Government of Canada; it is true, he condemned the conditions that were imposed by the company upon the Government of Canada with relation to the North-West Territories; it is true, he predicted that if those conditions formed part of the charter of incorporation, they would strike a deadly blow at the growth and prosperity of the North-West Territories, and the Hon. Edward Blake never uttered a truer sentence than that. It is true, the hon. gentleman referred to disclosures being made in the Province of Quebec. I know nothing about those disclosures; I care nothing about them, except as a Canadian desirous that his country shall be pure and honest. We have enough to do at home, and the Minister of Finance will do well, before he makes observations with regard to charges pending elsewhere, to look about him, behind him, to the right of him, and to the left of him. Now, Sir, there is no thoughtful man in the Parliament of Canada to-day, there is no thoughtful man out of Parliament to-day, but must deplore the results as they are presented by the census returns laid on the Table of the House not long ago. There is no thoughtful Canadian in Parliament or out of Parliament that will not do more than the Minister of Finance did, or than his follower from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) did—pause and consider with care and deliberation what the causes of this deplorable condition are. There is not a thoughtful, honest, upright Canadian to-night who will not only feel disposed to pause and consider what the causes are, and whether remedies for that condition can be suggested. Sir, it is well for us that the facts are plain, and that the Minister of Finance admitted the facts: he could not do otherwise. He deplored the results; he could not well do otherwise. But admitting the facts, it is well for thoughtful Canadians, desirous for the progress, prosperity and welfare of the country, to pause for a moment and consider the reasons why Canada has not made the strides forward that Canada ought to have made, and if possible to suggest remedies for the admitted evils. Has our expenditure anything to do with the matter? Has the increase of our annual expenditure from $15,000,000 in 1871 to $37,000,000 or thereabouts in 1891 had anything to do with it? Has the increase of our national debt from $78,000,000 in 1871 to $237,000,000 or thereabouts in 1891 had anything to do with it? Has our expenditure which is now out of all proportion to the wants and necessities of the country, anything to do with it? Has our national debt, which is out of all proportion to the necessities of a new country like Canada, anything to do with it? From the observations of the Finance Minister one would conclude that he is of the opinion that the increase of the national debt and the increase of the annual expenditure being good things, are in no way accountable for the deplorable results revealed by the census returns. Sir, not only has our national debt and our annual expenditure increased out of all proportion to the wants and necessities of the country, but if the national debt and the annual expenditure had been devoted to proper and legitimate purposes, one would have little ground of complaint. But, Sir, there is something more than a national debt and an annual expenditure. There has been mismanagement and maladministration, there has been peculation, there has been jobbery, there has been contract broking, there has been plundering, there has been stealing from the public treasury, and hon. gentlemen know it. It is useless for them to attempt to stop their ears and close their eyes. Nobody knows better than the Minister of Justice that the history of Canada for the last ten years is a history of Government by corruption, a history of fraud, a history of peculation, a history of stealing, a history of contract broking and contract jobbing. The record is a long record, it is a black record; but as I believe it is one of the main causes of the deplorable results shown by the census returns, I shall venture to submit to Parliament, long and black as the list is, some facts which I think ought to convince even members of the Conservative party that the present condition of the country, and the decrease in the population of the country, are more attributable to the misgovernment and the mismanagement of our public affairs, and to the rank corruption which has permeated every branch of the public service, than anything else, during the last ten years. Will the Minister of Finance, or any other member of the Government, deny that in the construction of the Esquimalt graving dock and the Quebec harbour improvement works, there was a clear steal from the public purse of this Dominion, of well on to one million of money, a large portion of which was grabbed by a member of Parliament, and some it is alleged by a Minister of the Crown? Will anybody deny that it has been proven before the Parliament of Canada and before a Committee of the Parliament of Canada that in connection with the construction of the graving dock at Kingston there was a steal from the public purse of this Dominion of $190,000?

Mr. TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. The hon. gentleman has now proceeded to discuss the evidence given before a Committee of this House previous to the reception of the report. I have no doubt that the subject will be discussed when the report is received, but until then it is out of order.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The hon. gentleman knows that I am not discussing what took place in the Committee. I do not propose to touch what took place in the Committee.

Mr. AMYOT. On the question of order, I will say this, and it is very simple. We had a discussion this afternoon on evidence received in the Senate which has not yet been reported to this House; and if I rise on the question of order, it is because I intend answering the allusions made to that enquete by the Minister of Finance. I suppose the principle laid down by the Government in this discussion will not be changed during the very discussion itself, when it is used by hon. gentlemen on this side.

Mr. TUPPER. That does not make the case any better. The hon. gentleman may say that he proposes to violate the rule of order, but that does not put the hon. member for Huron in order. I raised the question, and it is for the Speaker to decide.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I hope the hon. gentleman will not allude to anything which has passed in a Committee, but will try to confine himself as much as possible to the question before the House.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I think I know the rules of the House as well as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and when I transgress the rules I am willing to be called to order. I have a right to refer to a matter discussed on the floor of Parliament and in the public press. I pointed out, in connection with the Kingston graving dock, that it was proved there was a clear steal in that matter from the public treasury of $190,000. I believe it will be proved, when the proper time comes, that, in connection with the construction of the Langevin block in this city, we have already paid $385,000 more than the contract price, and that before the end is reached we shall have paid $657,000 more than the contract price. I know these are delicate subjects with hon. gentlemen opposite. I know they touch them on the raw, but they furnish the true reason why the population of this country has not grown. Am I out of order in drawing the attention of Parliament to the fact that, in the construction of the Tay Canal, constructed, as I believe it was, for the benefit of the Postmaster General, there was a steal of at least a quarter of a million? Is it any wonder that, in the face of these things, we cannot retain our population, and that any immigrants we do receive flee from our country as if it were a plague-stricken spot? Am I out of order in drawing the attention of Parliament to the fact that you will find in the public press of this country the statement that a Minister of the Crown secured from a public contractor $25,000 to bonus a newspaper, his own organ? Am I out of order in saying that it is stated in the public press that the Minister's son-in-law received $3,000 for a newspaper he controlled? The evidence taken and submitted to Parliament and now in my desk shows that the Department of the Interior is reeking with corruption. The evidence taken before a Committee of this House, portions of which are submitted to Parliament, all of which is published in the public press, shows that the Department of the Secretary of State is a sink of the vilest fraud. We have one of the trusted employés of a Minister of the Crown peculating nearly $50,000; we have another employé stealing, for it is nothing else but stealing, from the plundered treasury, sums varying from $1,000 to $5,000. Where is Mr. Bronskill? Will the Minister tell us? Will he tell us the whereabouts of Mr. Senécal? Will he tell us the whereabouts of Uncle Thomas? Will he tell us the whereabouts of these men who have left their country for their country's good. These things are matters of notoriety; they have been matters of notoriety for years. Rumours of them were abroad in Canada, rumours of them go across the international boundary line, and rumours were abroad in the mother country. Is it any wonder that with these extraordinary facts published abroad the tide of immigration should be very narrow and should remain here but a very short time? Everybody knows that the Department of the Postmaster General is notorious from one end of Canada to the other—so notorious that it has been the subject of discussion in the public press? So notorious that it has been the object of denunciation from almost every pulpit in the land. The Postmaster General, a Minister of the Crown, charged with these offences, remains silent and dumb. If these Ministers of the Crown had the instincts of men and statesmen, they would bring their slanderers, if slanderers they are, before the tribunals of the country. They would there meet their accusers face to face and make them prove that the charges are true, or otherwise stand convicted of uttering vile slanders in the public press. So far, the first step has not been taken; so far these hon. gentlemen have done nothing to vindicate their characters, if their characters can be vindicated. Is it not notorious? Am I out of order in drawing the attention of Parliament to it? Am I out of order in drawing attention to the fact that the Department of Public Works is noted, throughout the length and breadth of the country, as the very sink, the very cesspool, from the highest to the lowest, of gross jobbery? While the master takes his share of loot in solid silver plate, garnished with $22,000 current coin of the realm, the understrappers of the department get their share of the loot in pleasure yachts, brass dogs and diamonds, and their family groceries and linen through one of the public departments, paid for out of the public purse, is it any wonder that in this condition of affairs, known and notorious everywhere, we cannot retain in the country the immigrants we do receive or even the natural increase in our own population? Is it not known, was it not charged in Parliament years ago, that a member of this House received from the Government he was supporting a bonus for a railway which was practically an insolvent concern, on the strength of which there was borrowed on the English market ninety thousand pounds sterling, not a farthing of which will ever be seen by the lenders? That was notorious in the Canadian and the English press. Is it not notorious that a year and a half ago Parliament substantially expelled a Conservative member of Parliament for public plunder? Is it not known that another Conservative member of Parliament was practically expelled this session for having been engaged in contract jobbing, and that, charged with public stealing, he is now a fugitive from justice? Is it not known that this Government pledged itself to a wild-cat scheme called the Chignecto Ship Railway, involving an expenditure of $3,000,000 or $4,000,000, pronounced by experts to be useless if not almost impracticable? Is it not known by everybody that the Minister of Finance, aye, the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule), the future Minister of Agriculture, has driven the Minister of Finance out of Parliament by his speech, and he has not been here for half an hour? Is it not known that the Minister of Finance has been spending some $60,000 a year in bonussing vessels with the view of developing trade with the British West India Islands and the Spanish West India Islands, knowing all the time that the export trade of those Islands had fallen off $337,000 from 1878 to 1889? I expect next to hear of the Minister of Finance gathering up his travelling traps, taking in hand his grip sack, and rushing off to the great republic of Liberia, with the object of opening up trade relations with that important country. I commend the mission to him. I find that last year that republic exported to the United States 100 parrots, 25 snakes, and 150 monkeys. Why does not the Minister of Finance set to work to secure that important trade? He may acquire in that way the distinction which he has long had in view, the Grand Cross of St. Michael and St. George, and I recommend him to take with him one of his colleagues who has for some years had his longing eyes cast in that direction, the Secretary of State. That hon. gentleman has earned it now. The disclosures of the department show that he is eminently qualified for that distinguished honour. Is it not known—was it not charged in Parliament six years ago—that three Ministers of the Crown, two of whom are still Ministers of the Crown, had secured from the Government enormous bonuses for railways in which they had, if not a controlling, at all events a large pecuniary interest? That statement was scattered abroad from one end of the country to the other. Is it not known that two other Ministers have been charged with dabbling in the public domain, and one of them charged by a Conservative member of Parliament? Is it not known—I know it and everyone knows it—that by the criminal negligence, carelessness and indifference of an incompetent and imbecile Government, the people in the North-West Territories were forced into rebellion at a cost to this country of eight millions of money, the loss of two hundred precious lives, the entailment upon the people of a long pension list, and the decimation of the homes of the Half-breeds in the North-West Territories; and all that Canada got for it was the honour of having the Minister of War of this Dominion made a Knight of St. Michael and St. George, and the commander of the expedition also made a knight of the same order, with a bonus of $20,000 and the capture of Bremner's furs? Sir, is anyone surprised that this condition of things, existing and known to exist for the last ten years, known here and known elsewhere, known in Canada, known in the United States, known in England, notwithstanding what the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Finance say, the name of Canada should be to-day a by-word and a reproach, and that the tide of immigration from the mother country and the continent should have passed by Canada, and that we could not hold our own natural increase in this Dominion? The Public Accounts will show you, and the report of the Auditor General will show you that we have been spending, year in and year out, over $250,000 for contingencies, that we have been spending $16,000 for telegrams, that we have been spending $50,000 for extra clerks, that we spent last year $219 for luncheons for Ministers of the Crown. Let them pay for their own luncheons. They are well enough paid for what they do. Is it not known that we have been spending sums ranging from $180,000 to $200,000 to fee and keep alive and keep in existence the subsidized press of hon. gentlemen opposite? They live, they move and they have their being almost entirely from these subsidies of the Government. Will anyone tell me that without the enormous subvention that this Government hands over to the little daily published in Moncton it would live for 24 hours? No one who knows anything about the paper, its proprietorship and its necessities would venture to say that it would. We have been paying over $100,000 to fee Conservative lawyers to do Conservative work for a Conservative Government, and yet we have a Minister of Justice at our doors with a staff of employés who ought to be able to do this work. This condition of things is known to have existed for ten years, and I believe that the shocking way in which our affairs have been managed during that time has done as much if not more to deprive us of our population than almost anything else that has happened. We now see the effect of the policy of hon. gentlemen. We feel it to-day; we see it in the census returns which have been submitted to Parliament. Under these circumstances, would anyone be surprised that the vigorous, young, hale, hearty, intelligent, shrewd, level-headed Canadians will not live in a country which has been cursed for twelve years with such a Government as this is, and with which, judging by the vote of the electors at the last election, they may be cursed for four years more? To a thoughtful man, to an honest Canadian desirous of the progress, the well-being and the prosperity of his country, the condition of affairs is serious and grave. It is practically admitted that in every department of the public service we have corruption the most appalling, we have waste the most shocking, and we have extravagance the most startling that ever marked the pages of the history of any country in the known world. I have said that to thoughtful Canadians it is a matter of regret, but it is also a matter for reflection. To patriotic Canadians it is a matter of serious enquiry whether or not there is a remedy for all these grievances and all these wrongs. There is one thing which is proved in my judgment beyond a peradventure, and that is that the trade policy which hon. gentlemen have kept on the Statute-book for twelve years has proved a complete and thorough failure. The census returns show that your policy is one which has not brought peace and prosperity to this great country of ours. It shows further, and it shows so plainly that he who runs may read, that you cannot, at the end of the nineteenth century, successfully adopt and carry out a trade policy obsolete in the mother country 50 years ago; it shows that you cannot keep successfully in commercial and political slavery, free Canadians living in a free land; it shows further that every pledge, that every promise that you made to the people of Canada, when you introduced the National Policy, and every assurance you gave them subsequently to the introduction of the National Policy, have been violated, grossly violated, by you. Your late chief promised, on the introduction of the National Policy, that by putting on a substantial tariff we could encourage every industry, whether agricultural, mining or manufacturing. Your encouragement to the agriculturists of Canada, and especially of the Province of Ontario, is shown by the fact that your policy has had the effect of depreciating the value of farm lands by at least 25 per cent.; your encouragement to the agriculturists of the Dominion of Canada, and notably in the Province of Ontario, is shown by the fact that of the farms in that province, 75 per cent. are mortgaged. I know this statement was made in Parliament before, I know it was denied upon the floor of Parliament before, and I propose to put the question beyond doubt by giving official information upon the subject. I hold in my hand a certificate from the registrar of one of the best counties in Western Ontario. He selected three of the best townships in the county of which he is registrar, and at the beginning of this year he wrote the following letter :—

"BARRIE, 25th Feb., 1891.

"DEAR SIR,—It would not be possible for me to give you an exact or very reliable statement of the amount of mortgage indebtedness against lands in this county from the books of this office, as I have no means of knowing what has been paid on the mortgages.

"I have, therefore, not attempted such a statement, but merely send you a statement of the number of farm lots or parcels into which the townships are divided (exclusive of towns or villages), together with the number and percentage that appear to be held under mortgage.

"The mortgages range from $300 to $7,000 or $8,000; the probable average would be $1,000.

"The three townships you have selected are the richest and most prosperous in the three ridings of the county, and are almost wholly settled and owned by resident farmers.

"Yours truly,
(Signed) "SAM. LOUNT.

"COUNTY OF SIMCOE REGISTRY OFFICE,
"BARRIE, 25th Feb., 1891.

"The books of this office show:

"(1) That the Township of Tecumseh is divided into about 647 parcels or lots, as held under patents from the Crown. Of these 647 lots 432 are mortgaged and 215 are unencumbered, or 67 per cent. mortgaged.

"(2) That the Township of Nottawasaga is divided into about 623 patented parcels. Of these 490 are mortgaged and 133 are not mortgaged, or 78 per cent. mortgaged.

"(3) That the Township of Oro is divided into about 569 patented lots. Of these 399 are mortgaged and 170 are not mortgaged, or 70 per cent. under mortgage.

(Signed) "SAM. LOUNT,
"Registrar."

I think that certificate, from an official, showing the condition of the farm lands in the Province of Ontario, ought to satisfy hon. gentlemen opposite, —I know it does the people of this country—that not a single promise, not a single pledge made to the people of Canada by the Government on the introduction of the National Policy, so far as the farmers are concerned, have been redeemed. Is it any wonder, then, that men should desire to get rid of their encumbered farms, and leave their old homesteads and seek other homes elsewhere? You did more than that; you deceived the people of this country in many ways, and I propose to prove that you deceived them in two or three ways. Your late chief said the moment that policy was adopted, the effect of which was to keep Canada for the Canadians, prosperity would return. How did you keep that promise to the Canadian people? Do prosperity and progress reign in this country now? No, Sir. The farmers of Canada, in their despair, appealed not long ago to hon. gentlemen opposite. Their appeals were unheeded; hon. gentlemen who pledged themselves to do wonders for the Canadian farmer and the Canadian producer, turned a deaf ear to the appeals of the farmer. The Central Farmers' Institute of Ontario passed the following resolution and memorialized the Dominion Government to this effect :—

"Whereas we consider the present high tariff is very injurious to the agricultural interests, making what we buy proportionately dearer than the products we sell; and whereas the present high tariff has given us to the combine system, by which competition is to a great extent prevented; and whereas the agricultural interest is suffering under serious depression and unable to bear the strain occasioned by the tariff and the combine system aforesaid, and as the agricultural interests represent the large majority of the population: that,

"Therefore, this, the Central Institute, do respectfully ask the Government to reduce the tariff on articles of prime necessity to the farmer, such as iron, steel, coal, cottons, woollens, rubbers, sugars, corn and salt, to such an extent as to relieve the agriculturist of the unequal burden under which he is now labouring."

Your friendship, your generosity, and your liberality to the farmers were shown in the reduction of the salt duties and the reduction in the sugar duties, still leaving the farmer handicapped even in that respect. You kept your promise to the business men of this country, to the traders, when you promised them that the moment that policy was adopted prosperity would return, by driving into bankruptcy more men during the eleven years of your policy than became insolvent during the preceding twenty-two years. I have in my hand, certified as correct, the report of Dun Wiman & Co., giving the number of insolvents, together with the amount involved in every case for the last eleven years. It is important reading for the House, and although figures are tiresome, I shall venture to read the statement that has been placed in my hands to the Parliament of my country :

Years.	Number.	Amount.
1880	902	$7,449,063
1881	631	5,675,807
1882	787	8,587,000
1883	1,384	15,872,000
1884	1,308	18,939,770
1885	1,247	8,743,049
1886	1,233	10,171,384
1887	1,366	16,070,595
1888	1,667	13,974,787
1889	1,747	14,528,884
1890	1,828	17,856,017
1891 (3 months)	575	6,048,234
	14,875	$143,916,590

Thus we see that in the last year, just before the general elections, and when hon. gentlemen opposite were telling us from the stump, the platform, and the school-house, that prosperity and progress followed the introduction of the National Policy, the number of insolvents had gone up to 1,828, and the capital involved to $17,856,000. For the first three months of this year the number had gone up to 575 and the capital invested to $6,048,234, and taking the same ratio for the remaining portion of the year the amount involved would have been $24,000,000. Is it any wonder that in the face of these startling and extraordinary facts, culled from official documents and placed in my hands by the authorities already mentioned, that the tide of immigration is not directed towards Canada, and we have not been able to maintain our own natural growth? Sir, the disclosure is shocking, it is startling, it is enough to make thoughtful men pause and consider. It shows clearly to hon. gentlemen opposite that the National Policy has been a complete failure, that it has no friends in this country except the protected manufacturers, that it has not advanced the growth or prosperity of Canada. If you want to retain Canada for the Canadians, if you want to encourage and increase the population, abolish your National Policy altogether, and carry out a broader, more liberal, and more comprehensive commercial policy than you have had in force for the last twelve years. For five years you have been hoping against hope. The Minister of Finance, as anybody could see, has been whistling to keep his courage up. For five years you have been playing the part of the political bully and braggart, endeavouring to inspire your followers with the courage you did not feel yourselves. The census returns placed on the Table the other night leave you in a hopeless muddle, leave you in the mud, unable to extricate yourself. Your late chief told us not long before his death that "this policy of protection has been so successful that former hamlets were now large villages, villages towns, and towns were claiming to be cities." The moment the National Policy was introduced, you knew then and you know now, people fled from the land. You know it now, you knew it then, that when the National Policy had been on the Statute-book for three years, people in the far east and far west left Canada as if it were a plague-stricken country. The Port Huron Times, three years after the National Policy was introduced, published the following :—

"Some idea may be gained of the manner in which immigration to this country is increasing, by the fact that for the quarter ending 31st December, 1879, the total number of immigrants entering this port was 22,600, an increase of 15,284 over a corresponding period in 1878. Of this number 14,937 were males and 7,663 were females. The number of children under five years of age was 1,808 females. The nativity of these immigrants was as follows :—

England	480
Ireland	81
Scotland	58
Germany	163
Sweden	30
Norway	64
Denmark	60
France	102
Russia	17
Quebec and Ontario	21,336
Nova Scotia	157
New Brunswick	52

"Of this number 176 were cabinet-makers, 741 carpenters 2,804 farmers, 482 farm labourers, 7,505 labourers, and 134 shoemakers. Nearly all of these immigrants brought with them enough money to give them a start in the new world to which they have come."

A Michigan paper published in Detroit said :

"The new tariff is discouraging the Canadians with their country, and they are flocking by thousands to this."

A paper in Liverpool, N.S., said :

"It is estimated that 260 farmers with their families left Liverpool a few days ago to take up land in Texas. Most of them were fairly provided with means."

A newspaper published in Prince Edward Island said :

"It is estimated that over 300 people have left Summerside within the last 8 months, and only 7 new immigrants have come to it. The National Policy has not helped Prince Edward Island or Summerside so far."

The moment your policy was introduced that was the result. It had not been in force for more than three years until the people were flocking from the country. They have continued to leave since, annually, by thousands, as is shown by the returns placed on the Table of the House. I was glad to see some sign of feeling on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite when these returns reached the House. It is a sign of improvement, a satisfactory sign of the times to find hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches touched by the terrible disclosures made in their own census returns. The jaded and faded face of the Minister of Finance after the census returns were placed on the Table the other night, challenged the sympathy of every Liberal on this side of the House. For the remainder of the session he could not maintain a perpendicular for five minutes. Questions showered across the House at the hon. gentleman were answered by him from his comfortable seat on the Treasury benches. Hamlets have grown into villages, villages into towns, towns into cities! Have they really? Are these mere words used by Sir John Macdonald, or are they realities? Let us consult the record and see who is right, and whether the statement made by Sir John Macdonald to his followers is shown by the census to be true. I find the following villages and towns, some of them in Nova Scotia and some in my own province, show a falling off in population during the last 10 years. The first of these is Pictou, the shire town of the county represented by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Is it possible that there is a falling off in population there? Is that the town in whose interest the Government spent $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 to construct a railway to save a distance of 40 miles, when it only saved 4? Yet the population of that town has fallen from 3,403 to 2,999. The list is as follows :—

	1881.	1891.	Loss.
Pictou	3,403	2,999	404
Dundas	3,709	3,546	163
Lauzon	3,556	3,551	5

Listowell	2,688	2,587	101
Thorold	2,456	2,273	183
Amherstburg	2,672	2,279	393

St. Catharines	9,631	9,170	461
Three Rivers	8,670	8,334	336
Lévis	7,597	7,301	296
Port Hope	5,581	5,042	539

In every one of these twenty-seven villages and towns there has been a falling off in population. The natural increase is gone, the immigration is gone, as well as a considerable portion of the population that they held in the year 1881. What is the cause of all this? Will the hon. gentleman point me to a single cause except the vicious commercial policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, as well as the still more vicious administration of the public affairs of this country by the Government for the last ten years? If the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, and the administration of our public affairs by hon. gentlemen opposite has been ruinous to the hamlets, the villages, and the towns, it has been disastrous to the rural constituencies. I shall not trouble the House with a long list of rural constituencies. I shall refer to three counties, formerly united counties, and I venture to say without fear of successful contradiction, that they are three of the best counties agriculturally in the wide Dominion of Canada ; three counties in which there is hardly a hundred acres of land that might be called waste land ; three counties in which the population is intelligent, vigorous, active, thrifty and industrious ; and in these three counties the condition of affairs is simply astonishing. Bruce, in 1881, had a population of 65,218, and in 1891, 64,604, being a loss of 614 ; Perth, in 1881, had a population of 48,146, and in 1891, 46,311, being a loss of 1,835 ; Huron, in 1881, had a population of 67,223, and in 1891, 58,172, being a loss of 9,051. This loss is a direct result, according to my humble judgment, of the commercial policy of the Administration and their vicious management of our public affairs. The loss in these three counties alone, besides the loss of the natural increase and the loss of immigration, amounts to 11,500. In other words the Counties of Huron, Perth and Bruce, taking the natural increase at only 7 per cent. in ten years instead of 14 per cent., loses 12,641, and taking the immigration at 5 per cent. instead of 10 per cent. the loss is 9,029. We lose in immigration and in natural increase 21,670, and we lose, of the old population, 11,500, making a total loss of 33,170 in these three counties. Such are the effects of your maladministration of the public affairs of this country, such are the results of twelve years of a vicious trade policy, such are the results of twelve years of contract-jobbing, stealing, peculation and robbery from the public treasury. Sir, there is a sovereign remedy for all this. That sovereign remedy does not consist of annexation to the United States of America. It does not consist of commercial union with the United States of America. It does not consist of the independence of Canada. It is a much more speedy, a much more effectual, and a much more drastic remedy than any or all of these. The remedy I propose is : Remove the present incompetent Administration, dismiss the present thoroughly corrupt Government and replace them by men that are purer and more honest, and you will have an end to the days of boodling, corruption, fraud, contract-jobbing and forgery, and all the other crimes known to have been perpetrated by this Government. Sir, there is only one man in all Canada who can do this, and that man is the leader of the Liberal Party. A man strong and resolute in his convictions, honest and pure in his everyday life : a man who to-day is the idol of the Canadian people : a man who to-day is encouraged by the masses and rejected only by the classes : a man who in the country is supported by a powerful and unbroken army of prominent Liberals, and a man who in Parliament is aided by as devoted and united a band of men as ever followed a leader. The hon. gentleman shall succeed, the hon. gentleman will succeed, the hon. gentleman must succeed, and to-night, the prayer of every honest Canadian is that success may soon crown his patriotic efforts.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to ; and House adjourned at 11.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 3rd September, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SUPPLY—THE CENSUS.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster : That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go again into Committee of Supply ; and the motion of Sir Richard Cartwright in amendment thereto.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. In moving the adjournment of the debate last night, I did so for two reasons. First, the late hour, and secondly, that the House might have an opportunity to recover from the flood of political Billingsgate and vituperation which the hon. member for Huron let loose upon us last night. That hon. gentleman's speech was notable solely for irrelevance and lack of logic. Had he instead delivered a relevant and sincere speech, I am sure it would have had its influence both within and without these walls. He began by an attack upon the members of the Administration for not having named a Minister to reply on behalf of their colleague the Minister of Finance. But that hon. gentleman had no reason to ask a colleague to stand up and defend him, since he delivered a logical and able speech, one which commended itself not only to this side of the House, but to the other side as well. We, as Canadians, owe a duty to our country as well as to our party. We owe a duty to the people outside these walls as well as to members who have their seats in these precincts. That duty is ill discharged when for hours we stand here attacking and vilifying one another, indulging in abuse and insult, thus leading the people to believe there is a better class outside than inside the walls of Parliament. To my mind, the speech of the hon. gentleman was more like a Kentucky hoe-down than a political deliverance. It was a speech in which he ran the whole gamut of political abuse and vituperation, although the object was one which called for serious, well-considered effort, and although the occasion was a solemn one, when every man, be he Liberal or Conservative, should calmly consider the position Canada occupies to-day. The hon. gentleman appeared to have been drilling for a great field-day of abuse : he attacked every committee of the House and every department, and never said anything at all about the census, concerning which the hon. member for South Oxford moved his motion. We must regret that the census does not show as large a population as we anticipated, but it demonstrates what this country, with its population under 5,000,000, is able to do : it shows that this small number of people have built up the country we see to-day and made contentment reign throughout the land. The hon. gentleman attacked the Postmaster General, the Minister of the Interior, and nearly every hon. Minister present, and then said what was wanted to save the country was a change of Administration. There was a change of Administration on one occasion, when we had a Liberal Government in power, from 1873 to 1878, and the hon. gentleman knows the result. He knows that the people condemned the policy of that Government and approved that of their opponents. He knows that, election after election, the people approved of the policy of the Conservative party, and yet he tells the House that what the country wants is a change of Administration. The hon. gentleman made me think of a little couplet, as he indulged in unstinted abuse of hon. gentlemen on this side:

"In a crowd of rogues, the thief
Is he who loudest calls 'stop thief.'"

The hon. gentleman did not give fair-play to his opponents, nor do we ask it, but we ask that public questions should be discussed on public grounds, free from personal attack and vituperation. The hon. gentleman offered a most peculiar reason why our population has not reached the estimate made by the hon. member for South Oxford, of six millions and more. He said that Senécal had been guilty of peculation. Although the census had been taken and we had all the figures before these peculations were discovered, he asked this House to believe that because there had been irregularities in a department, the falling off in the census was caused by these transactions. That was the only reason he gave, save that what was wanted in this country was a pure Government. I will not discuss that subject; I will not go back to 1874, I will not go back to the time when a pure party was in power; I will not go into their record so far as the chronicles of the country and the records of this House show; but I will say, that so far as this Government is concerned, having remained in power for years, it is not to be wondered that some irregularities should have occurred, when we know that they equally occurred during the five years the Mackenzie Government was in office. That Government was not altogether to blame, nor is the present Government responsible for the irregularities. The only thing the Government can do is to purify the departments, and the one thing hon. gentlemen opposite can do, if they are honest, patriotic, and sincere, is to assist the Government in carrying out that policy of purification. The hon. gentleman pointed to the fact that there was a Liberal-Conservative Government in power therefore there was a falling off in the population, that in consequence of this there was a disappointment in the amount of the anticipated increase. The hon. gentleman appeared to forget that, in regard to domestic legislation, the Local Legislatures in every province are concerned, and that there are six of the provinces which have Liberal Governments. There are Liberal Governments in Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Manitoba and Ontario, and it would be as reasonable to say that the shortage in the population has resulted from the policy of those Governments as to say that it is consequent upon the policy of the Dominion Government. This has not been done. We did not attack the Local Governments, although hon. gentlemen opposite know that some of those Provincial Governments have done all they possibly could to injure the Federal Administration, to spread disunion among the different provinces, to favour repeal and prompt some to believe in annexation to the United States; yet we on this side have not used this as an argument in the discussion or in any other discussion this session. The hon. gentleman challenged us to say that Mr. Blake at any time opposed the Canadian Pacific Railway. We are not here to discuss what the Hon. Edward Blake may have said,——

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKINTOSH—but I assert that I could prove, if important, that Mr. Blake not only called British Columbia a sea of mountains, repeating the expression once used by another, but that he contended for the building of the railway through the prairie country alone and not from ocean to ocean. But, in considering Mr. Blake's record, we forget the mistakes he once made when contemplating the great right he did when he left his party in 1891. We have now faith in Mr. Blake's fealty to his country, and only hope that there are some other hon. gentlemen who may be actuated by the same patriotic instincts. The hon. gentleman said that Canadians were fleeing from Canada as if it were plague-stricken; but immediately turned and asserted that the Government ought to have brought a larger population into Canada. As an illustration, let hon. gentlemen opposite take the prices of Dominion securities in 1878 and compare them with the prices in 1890, and see whether the capitalists of Europe look upon this country as a plague-stricken spot. The hon. gentleman selects certain expenditures making comparisons between the course of the two Governments. It must be remembered that when the Liberal party were in power there was no Auditor General, and it was proved that thousands of dollars were expended upon the simple certificate of Ministers of departments. More than that, when the hon. gentleman attacks the Government on the management of the Printing Bureau, he forgets that certain contractors got a judgment amounting to more than $100,000 against this country for printing which was given out by hon. gentlemen opposite to outside parties when they were in power. He forgets, when he mentions the sum of $250,000 as having been expended by this Government for contingencies, and holds up his hands in holy horror and asks why another Government should not be put in power to change such a state of affairs, that the Public Accounts of 1873 show that for extra clerks the Government expended $13,704, and that in 1876, when the hon. gentlemen were in power, the amount expended was $31,751. He forgets that, while in 1873 the total departmental expenditure on contingencies was $231,717, in 1876 it was $301,602. That was at a time when the nation was depressed and suffering, but the party men received their rewards, not out of the pockets of hon. gentlemen opposite, but from the public treasury. The hon. gentleman boldly asserted that the Conservative party never fulfilled a pledge they had made, that the lamented chieftain who led that party but has now gone to his long rest, did not fulfil his promises. The hon. gentleman may slander the dead, but he cannot do it before the living, who knew him so well. We are here to defend Sir John Macdonald and his acts, and Canada understands well what he accomplished. Now, Sir, I ask any hon. gentleman to rise and state a solitary case in which the Liberal party, as a party, carried out one pledge they made before they came into power. I ask any hon. gentleman to stand up now and mention one great reform in administration which that party carried out after all the promises they made. The reason why they have remained in Opposition so long is that the people discovered their weakness and knew they were not in earnest, and preferred keeping in power a Government which did not profess to be immaculate, a party which was human and did not live on promises, than trust a party which was always promising but never performing what it professed. The people of Canada, election after election, have shown that they cannot endorse hon. gentlemen opposite, and, while they challenge the purity and the honesty, and the integrity and the patriotism of gentlemen on this side, they should go back and look at their own record, say they are sorry for their sins, that they are contrite and penitent, and then, perhaps, hon. gentlemen on this side will not be sorry to see them occupy the Treasury benches. The policy of hon. gentlemen opposite is one which they have pursued for years, one which defeated them at the last election, namely, a policy of maligning the farmers of this country. I attended a meeting which was held at Lakefield during the last general election. An old gentleman eighty-two years of age was the chairman. A Liberal speaker declared that Liberal hearts were bleeding for the poor farmer, and the chairman of the meeting got up and said that every word was untrue, that he admitted there were mortgages on the farms, but he said those mortgages were for the purpose of improving farms; that he had six sons, every one of them occupying a farm of 100 acres and doing well, not one farthing of a mortgage on them; and it is needless to say that they sent my hon. friend Mr. Burnham to represent East Peterborough. My hon. friend from Huron (Mr. Cameron) spoke of the insolvencies which had taken place in this country. I would like hon. gentlemen to look over the insolvencies from 1878 to 1891, to look over the list published by Dun, Wiman & Co. They will find that, from the day Mr. Wiman became the advocate of commercial union or unrestricted reciprocity, the figures in regard to insolvencies in Canada were 20 per cent. higher than those given by Bradstreet. More than that, according to Mr. Wiman, in 1878 the amount of failures represented $23,908,000: and according to Bradstreet last year, the amount was $12,482,000, or only one-half. Now, I find in Wiman's report figures representing $18,000,000 instead of $12,482,000. Perhaps some hon. gentleman can explain the discrepancy. I have thus briefly dealt, Sir, with all the salient points discussed by the hon. member in his address last night, save and except the abuse and vilification that he indulged in. But, Sir, there is another hon. gentleman, the financial leader of the party, who, I think, should exercise a little more discretion in the assertions he makes regarding Canada, for there are thousands of people in this country who look upon him as a financial authority, and every word he speaks detrimental to the interests of Canada, strikes a blow at our immigration policy, for those words of his are sent broadcast by rivals throughout Europe. I have seen, in documents and pamphlets of the Northern Pacific Railway, quotations from the remarks of Sir Richard Cartwright, and from other hon. gentlemen opposite, and from articles in the Toronto Globe, praising Kansas, Dakota and other states and territories of the United States. Sir, he gave us yesterday a resolution in which he proceeded to perform the national obsequies, as though the ceremony were really funereal in all its details. Everything was dark, everything gloomy, everything despondent. He told us that he had prophesied all this, and the Finance Minister naturally criticised his jubilation over making one prophetic bull's-eye out of about 5,000. He told us in 1879 that Canada would be ruined by the National Policy; he talked about national misery in 1882, but on both occasions the people, by an immense majority, supported the policy of the Government. In 1891, we were again told that this policy would be the utter annihilation of Canada. They had had an opportunity of scattering their pamphlets throughout the country, and many people believed a great deal of what they said, but the young men of the country, the thinking farmers of the country, and the artizans of the country, in one strong combination, kept them out of power and declared that they believed in the policy of Sir John Macdonald, and that they believed in the honesty of the representatives of the Conservative party sitting behind that great statesman. But the hon. gentleman was answered in 1891. Then he came back to this House, after preaching despondency with all his power, after endeavouring to intimidate the people, after endeavouring to make Canadians despise their native land, and was met by a surplus of $4,000,000 and a prosperous country, and turning, took another tack. He commenced on the census, and seized that as a choice morsel for a party banquet. Hon. gentlemen opposite must then see the unfairness of the comparisons which the hon. member makes. We have as yet none of the commercial statistics, we have none of the comparative statements, we have only a skeleton to work upon, therefore can well imagine the position hon. gentlemen opposite will be in when the whole body of the census is brought down to this House? Hon. gentlemen know that in point of wealth, in point of prosperity, in point of contentment, the census returns will show Canada to be in as good a position as any country in the world. If hon. gentlemen will go through the census returns for 1890 of the New England States, they will find that there has only been an increase of 2 per cent. in the farming population of those states: they will find that many people from the country districts gravitate towards the large cities where there is work for the artizan, and where the consumer toils to sustain the farmer. The hon. member for South Oxford spoke of press subsidies. Well, he may be a better authority on that subject now that he has become somewhat of a journalistic gentleman himself. He has invested in a large and very prominent and influential organ, and no doubt may see how much money gentlemen who have stock in newspapers get out of a Government. Well, I can say at any rate that any one who depends upon this Government to get wealthy from press subsidies, will die a very poor man. Now, the hon. gentleman talked about a reptile press. Does the hon. gentleman not know that here in Canada the journalists are as free, are as independent, are as honest and fearless as the men of any other profession? Those gentlemen who sit in the gallery, as I sat in it at one time, are as honest as the journalists of any other country. I have learned from intercourse with them that they are as honest, as plain-spoken as much above reproach, and as unapproachable by bribes, as the journalists of any other country, or as any other men whom you will find in Canada to-day. I consider it unjust for the hon. gentleman from South Oxford to stand here and slander the press, and call it a reptile press, and ask the Minister of Justice to introduce a change in the Joint Stock Companies Act. The hon. gentleman knows that he himself countenanced a change in the law respecting members of Parliament holding interests in newspapers. The hon. gentleman will remember when his friends Mr. Vail and Mr. Jones were in trouble, and when the case of Mr. Anglin occurred. He knows that when the case of Mr. Vail was spoken of, when the case of Mr. Jones was spoken of, in Parliament, they were in danger of losing their seats because their paper had received $25,000 of what the hon. gentleman calls a reptile subsidy. And what did we see? They were sent back to their constituents. Mr. Vail was beaten, but we find a change was made in the Independence of Parliament Act to suit the interest of the pure, and honest, and elevated Liberal party. I will quote from the Independence of Parliament Act of 1878, 41 Victoria, chapter 5:

"This Act shall not extend to disqualify any person as a member of the House of Commons, by reason of his being a shareholder in any incorporated company having a contract or agreement with the Government of Canada, except companies undertaking the contract for the building of public works, and any company incorporated for the construction or working of any part of the Canadian Pacific Railway."

So after all, it was members of the Liberal party who were charged with being in joint stock companies, and it was the hon. gentlemen opposite who put a clause on the Statute-book protecting these stockholders, and the member for South Oxford was the Finance Minister in that Administration. Sir, what is the object of this discussion on the census returns at present? Why does the hon. member introduce his resolution now? Simply because he knows that the Government in October next is to negotiate with the authorities at Washington: he knows well these negotiations must proceed, and he takes advantage of the census to attack and discredit the Government and the country; he proceeds to taunt Conservatives for not having adopted unrestricted reciprocity; he proceeds to say that the only way out of our difficulties—if there be difficulties, which I very much question—is for this Government to bend the knee at Washington and admit that the country is ruined; he virtually proceeds to tell the people at Washington that there is only one way of salvation for Canada; when these gentlemen go to Washington, if the Washington Government will put the screws upon them, our Government will have to succumb. Sir, is that the language of a Canadian patriot? Is that the language of a statesman feeling an honest interest in the progress of this country? Sir, I believe that throughout the length and breadth of Canada the language of the hon. gentleman opposite in lauding the United States and belittling our own country, will meet with a stern rebuke from the people. When those hon. gentlemen complain that we have not enough population in Canada, I ask them what they have done to assist the Government in promoting the interests of Canada? When in 1879 Sir Charles Tupper, the present High Commissioner, moved in this House a series of resolutions asking that one hundred millions of acres of land be granted to a Canadian Pacific Railway Company to assist in building the road, did not the hon. gentlemen opposite denounce the project? When the contract was let, did they not denounce the Government and denounce the company in almost every newspaper belonging to that party? Did they not proceed to belittle the country, and did they not say that a reign of terror virtually existed in Canada? The remarks of the hon. member for South Oxford were copied in various newspapers; and still hon. gentlemen will say that that is a proper and righteous thing to do. Then the hon. gentleman said we were turning our backs on England by the National Policy. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) bows responsive to that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We say so still.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. But the hon. gentleman forgets that Great Britain has not complained, and it has been proved that we buy largely of the manufactures of Great Britain. The hon. gentleman knows that instead of sustaining us in that policy, he and his friends proceeded to work with Mr. Wiman and his friends in Washington. Now, the hon. gentleman from South Oxford said in 1879 that he stood by Great Britain. He said:

"We have had renegade Englishmen supporting the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite."

I do not know who the renegade Englishman was. It may have been Mr. Phipps, who is now a friend of the hon. gentlemen, because they are in favour of unrestricted reciprocity; or it may be Mr. Goldwin Smith, who is also their friend, so far as their policy is concerned. He goes on to say:

"Not because, as they avowed, they thought it wise or good; but because they believed it would speedily render the position of Canada intolerable, so that we should soon be forced to seek refuge from the position we had brought ourselves into, in annexation to the United States."

That this policy was going to end in annexation with the United States. Then the hon. gentleman further said:

"But a few weeks have passed since both sides of the House were united in expressing their gratitude to Her Majesty for having confided her child to our care. If that illustrious lady should return to England, I am afraid she will be obliged to tell her royal mother that the practical outcome of all this loud-lip loyalty was a policy directly antagonistic to the interests of Great Britain, a policy which, whatever may be the intentions of the hon. the Minister of Finance and his colleagues, in its practical results, especially designed to injure British interests and hamper British trade."

Now the hon. gentleman says that is correct. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) said on that occasion:

"It was an insult to Great Britain in 1879. When Sir Charles Tupper's resolution in favour of setting apart 100,000,000 acres of land for the Canadian Pacific Railway, the then leader of the Opposition earnestly denounced the tariff legislation and charged the Government with having legislated wholly against Great Britain and in favour of the United States, such legislation being a direct insult to the mother country, an insult thrown in the face of British statesmen and the British people and a defiance; and that were he a British statesman, acting in the interests of British commerce and British workmen, it would be impossible for him to extend a particle of consideration to the proposal of the Canadian Government."

Time wore on, the interests of the country prospered, and the nation progressed. Sir Leonard Tilley was able to say in 1882:

"To-day we stand here, not with any doubt of the tariff's revenue-producing power, but with evidence of the last year before us, with the public accounts and statements on the Table of the House, showing not only no deficit, but instead of an estimated surplus of $2,000,000, there is a surplus of $4,132,743 in the Treasury!"

The following taxes were taken off: Tax on tea and coffee, $1,000,000; tax on stamps, $200,000; tax on newspapers, $45,000; articles placed on free list, $100,000. The hon. gentleman will see the effect of the policy. But he does not wish to see it. He wishes to delude the people, as the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) attempted to delude them last night in regard to the receipts from Customs. He did not tell the House that the people had not money with which to buy goods, and that the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) had added $3,000,000 to the taxation, and had declared that if there was any possible way of levying another tax he would do it in a more direct manner. Despite the fact of the admirable showing made by Sir Leonard Tilley, the member for South Oxford said in reply:

"Why, Sir, I tell them to-day that Canada is a country in which no man is free to buy or sell, to eat or drink, to travel or to stand still, without paying toll to some extortioner or another."

When Sir Leonard Tilley proclaimed that Canada was prospering, when the Canadian Pacific Railway was being built, and when the Minister of Finance was able to remit $1,325,000 of taxes, the hon. member for South Oxford declared that Canada was a place where a man was not free to travel or to stand still without paying toll to some extortioner or other. Hon. gentlemen opposite tell us to-day that the increase in population has not been so large as was anticipated. I ask if language, coming from hon. gentlemen opposite, such as that quoted, is likely to induce people to come to Canada and settle here? All remember that in 1885, we sat during the summer months expecting every moment to hear that some of the best and bravest in the land had fallen, and the member for East Durham, Col. Williams, died, performing his duties in the North-West. When we required every patriot to be true to his country, to British institutions and the British flag, while law and order had to be maintained, what took place? An official of the Mowat Government wrote to Mr. Scholes, also an Ontario Government official, at Manchester. The letter appeared in the Manchester Guardian, as follows:—

"TORONTO, 13th April, 1885.

"DEAR SIR,—....The snow keeps coming down to date. The ice is solid in our inland waters, and has not even as yet shown any perceptible sign of loosening its frigid grasp on the harbour of Toronto, so that the opening of navigation in Canada is, so far, a thing of the future. The situation as respects business generally, and as respects the labour market in particular, shows but little, if any, change from that of the past winter, nor is there any likelihood of any material change for the better for some time to come. And as if to add to the gravity of the situation, the present serious rebellion in our North-West has paralyzed the chances of that unfortunate country as a field for immigrants, either from the older Canada or Great Britain, for years. When the Indians of Canada have gone so far as to murder those whom in the long past they have revered, in the persons of Roman Catholic priests, it lies not in the mouth of any person (even though he be a Government or a steamship agent, and such persons can elongate the truth considerably) to say that this trouble is not much more than serious. Bearing this in mind respecting this North-West, of long and lonely distances without railway communication of any extent; sparse population; hostile Indians and semi-savages, none other than the most gullible of innocent mortals will venture under any pretense to emigrate thereto at the present time, with the intent of making it a home.

(Signed) "D. J. O'DONOGHUE."

This gentleman was receiving payment, year after year as a sessional clerk of the Mowat Government, and this letter was addressed to an official of the Ontario Government in Manchester. I will ask hon. gentlemen opposite if they consider that this letter was a proper one, and I could repeat page after page from various newspapers from 1884 to 1887 containing statements detrimental to the interests of Canada, and when the journalists gave up, I will not call them journalistic reptiles, then some hon. members in this House proceeded to furnish further information for the benefit of Canada and in order to increase the population. At that very time Sir Charles Tupper, as High Commissioner, had written to the Canadian Government. Hon. gentlemen opposite can see there a protest by a high official in the Canadian service in these terms:

"It is right, I should say, that there is no person so timid as an intending emigrant, and a portion of the decreased emigration may, perhaps, be attributed to some injudicious and incorrect newspaper articles that have from time to time appeared in Canada, and subsequently republished here, and to statements made through other channels, which are eagerly seized upon by the detractors of the Dominion, in support of their misrepresentations."

The English newspapers spoke out on the question, as will be seen by the following press opinions:—

"Those who have tried Canadian winters, tell us no more than the truth when they say that the variations of the English climate are more to be dreaded than the equable lowness of the temperature in the Dominion."—The Times.

"We believe that, as a rule, the probabilities of emigrants getting on are in favour of British Colonies. * * The immense reach of fertile and unoccupied land awaiting the plough, between Red River and the Rocky Mountains, ought to be sufficiently inviting to all Welsh as well as English subjects seeking a home abroad."—Daily Telegraph.

"It is astonishing to see the ignorance of Englishmen generally respecting the true character and resources of this splendid colony. In each of the farms is a mine of wealth, and it only needs strong arms and clear heads to develop it."—Daily News.

"It certainly is pleasing to reflect that thousands of families have found independence, if not comparative wealth, in our Canadian possessions, who, had they remained at home, might still find difficulty in procuring the means of living. A large and still augmenting class of farmers have here attained to competence and ease."—Morning Advertiser.

The English press fought our battles then while hon. gentlemen opposite were inducing their newspapers to oppose the Government and injure our national interests, and we had to look to the mother land, as we have had to look before in times of tribulation, for protection and salvation. We vainly appealed to hon. gentlemen to stand by the country as true Canadians and to act as patriots. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) just declared that the policy of the Government was inimical to Great Britain. At one period, I was tempted to believe there was some truth in the assertion, but, like all their assertions, when examined closely, this also proved utterly inaccurate. If the hon. gentleman does not believe me, let him turn to the London (England) Observer of January, 1890, which says, dealing with Dominion Trade and Navigation Returns for 1890:

"Adding together the values of the goods which Canada is obliged largely to procure from the United States, it will be seen that they amount to $29,543,342, as against $2,378,506 from Great Britain. Deducting these sums from the gross imports from the two countries, the balances are $22,748,631 and $41,011,645 respectively, or $18,263,014 in favour of Great Britain. An interesting feature of the returns is the indication that they give that the shipment of American produce, by way of Canadian ports to Europe, is a business which is continually growing. The value of such produce in 1886 was $5,745,606, while in 1890 it was $12,714,705. This growth has not been spasmodic, but each year has shown a considerable increase over its predecessor. The articles so exported consist largely of cheese, butter, wheat, flour, and canned meats. It is in itself a tribute to the facilities offered by the Canadian route; but in part it possibly arises from an endeavour on the part of some of the United States' shippers to get their wares into the European markets as Canadian produce, especially when, as in the case of cheese, the Canadian product brings a higher price."

Still the hon. gentleman says our policy is inimical to Great Britain, while an English trade journal which knows more about the subject, as it affects the British market and British trade with Canada, than the hon. gentleman does, gives the very opposite opinion. The Manchester Courier of January, reviewing the fiscal policy of Canada, says:

"There is a feeling in some quarters that the fiscal policy of Canada had been detrimental to British trade, as compared with that of the United States. The discussion on the McKinley tariff, however, led to an examination of the Canadian returns, and the analysis made did not bear out that view. At first sight the figures are not at all encouraging, but a closer investigation reveals them in a different light. The following table shows the imports into Canada, from Great Britain and the United States respectively, under the low tariff in operation from 1874 to 1878, and under what is called the 'National Policy,' which was inaugurated by legislation in 1879:

	Great Britain.	United States.
1873	$68,522,000	$47,735,000
1879	30,993,000	43,739,000
1889	42,317,000	50,537,000

"It will be seen that between 1873 and the time the present tariff was inaugurated, the imports from Great Britain declined about $37,500,000, and those from the United States about $4,000,000; and that, under the higher duties, the imports from Great Britain have augmented, since 1879, to the extent of $11,300,000, as against $7,000,000 in the case of the United States. Coming to the great manufactures, Great Britain easily puts the United States in the shade, as the following tables will show:—

	Great Britain.		United States.
	1888.	1889.	1888.	1889.
	$	$	$	$
Cotton manufactures	3,326,324	3,457,846	761,623	672,146
Woollen	9,140,940	9,557,569	142,370	131,216
Silk	2,448,075	2,606,994	142,818	121,192
Fancy goods	1,247,415	1,298,172	240,351	250,158
Flax, hemp, and jute manufactures	1,304,280	1,415,415	31,189	48,743

"These figures demonstrate that the importation of British manufactures into Canada is increasing, while those of the United States are decreasing—a slight increase being shown only in fancy goods, and flax, hemp, and jute manufactures from the latter country."

Now, while the British trade journals state distinctly that the policy is not detrimental to Great Britain, and is not an insult to Great Britain, and does not justify the antagonism of British manufacturers, the hon. gentleman would have us believe that of his own knowledge he can prove that it is detrimental, simply because for party purposes he desires to make the country believe so. The hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition issued a manifesto during the general election, and did not scruple to tell the people of the Province of Quebec in that manifesto that the country was rapidly decaying. He said:

"Sir John asserts, and seems seriously to assert, that the National Policy has made the country prosperous; that the manufacturing industries of our great centres have revived and multiplied; that the farmer has found a market, artizan and labourer employment and good wages. I take issue with the Prime Minister upon such statements. I characterize them as false in every particular."

Yet, gentlemen opposite assert, when the census comes down, that the effect of that policy is to crowd the cities; and why is it crowding the cities? Simply because the artizans are going to the centres of production and are becoming consumers in the city, thus assisting in utilizing the products of the farm and of the farm yard. The hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) said that to declare the National Policy a success was false in every particular, while he had before his face the banking returns for 1890, while he had before his face the enormously increased deposits in the banks, while he had before his face the enlarged local markets by reason of the National Policy, and while at the same time, he has now, and the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has now, the more than suggestive and significant fact that the great artizan vote of the country went for Sir John Macdonald's Government and the Conservative party in March last.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. The hon. gentleman says "hear, hear," but his leader went further than that. His leader said:

"It cannot be expected: it were folly to expect that the interests of a colony will always be identical with the interests of the mother land."

Granted; but it altogether depends upon what interests are to be sacrificed—what interests involved. Well, the hon. gentleman has forced this question upon the House. He has asked us to discuss somewhat irrelevant matters, because in debating the census returns he has distinctly pointed out to us as the only remedy, Washington and the people of the States, and unrestricted reciprocity with the States.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is your remedy?

Mr. MACKINTOSH. My remedy is that the very best minds of the country should stand by Canada; my remedy is to ask every man, be he Liberal or Conservative, to forget that he is in Opposition or in power and to rally around a policy which is for the good of the country, and which every man with the heart of a man, and the soul of a Canadian, should help to make successful and permanent. The hon. gentleman opposite formulates a policy, but the hon. gentleman's policy is office, while that of Conservatives is to make Canada progressive. When the member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) issued the manifesto I referred to, he must have known at that time that unless he gave the Americans control of our tariff, it was impossible to have reasonable reciprocity with them. He knew that during that election Mr. Wiman was forced by his inspirers in the United States to issue a letter, which appeared in the New York Independent a few weeks before the election, and which was headed: "The conflict in Canada." Mr. Wiman states in that letter:

"True, it is proposed to keep up the Custom houses along the border, in order that smuggling from outside should not be permitted, and especially that Canada should not be the back door by which foreign goods could be brought into the United States free of duty. But the tariff of Canada must necessarily be as high as that of this country, against the outside world, for by the free admission of American goods (even now with a heavy duty, now half her imports) her revenues from Customs would be so reduced that as against foreign goods the rates must continue fully as high as those in the United States. Indeed, the condition of equality of tariffs must always prevail, else there would be no safety for the revenues of either country."

And he went on to say:

"But aside from this tariff, as against the rest of the world, there will, under unrestricted reciprocity, be to trade no impediment whatever on the whole continent of North America. Practically, the Customs line that now cuts the continent in two will be lifted up, and placed right around the continent."

Remember, gentlemen, the McKinley tariff must be placed around the continent, a girdle of extreme protection, and hon. gentlemen opposite, professed free traders, were willing to support the McKinley tariff. But they were going to do more. Mr. Farrer wrote to Mr. Wiman at that time :

"Whatever course the United States may see fit to adopt, it is plain that Sir John's disappearance from the stage is to be the signal for a movement towards annexation."

Mr. Speaker, we are of those who believed in Sir John Macdonald ; we are of those who knew him to be a patriot ; we are of those who knew that he devoted his life to the interest of his country ; and while like every human being he had his weaknesses, Canada and the British Empire were ever in his heart. Therefore, we had confidence in him ; and though he has disappeared, though the banner has fallen from the hands of our dead chieftain, we who loved him well have enlisted beneath it, and will continue to bear it proudly towards national supremacy ; and if we cannot achieve victory under it, we will never disgrace it ; never submit to an ignominious capitulation. Therefore, when hon. gentlemen talk of discrimination, we can point to the splendid record of Sir John Macdonald, the patriot Conservative statesman, the link between Canada and the British Empire on this continent, the influence of whose life, I trust, will shield us from the infamy of jeopardizing the Dominion or trifling with national autonomy. The hon. member for South Oxford made an assertion that is not borne out by facts, and boldly asks this House to do violence to all that is fair and reasonable by endorsing it. In his resolution he declared :

"That during the last ten years the actual taxation of the people of Canada has been enormously increased under the operation of the existing tariff.

"That the deplorable state of things disclosed by the above-mentioned returns imperatively commands a radical change in the policy and methods of government followed by the Administration."

As that assertion has been made over and over again, and as it should not go to the country uncontradicted, I would ask hon. gentlemen to look at the Public Accounts, while I make a comparison from them of the taxation from Customs, Excise and stamps when hon. gentlemen were in power, as against the taxation under the present Government, and see the result. Under the Liberal regime from 1874-75 to 1878-79 this taxation was as follows :—

1875-76	18,614,415
1876-77	17,697,925
1877-78	17,841,938
1878-79	18,476,613
Making a total of	$93,295,770
Add the deficits during those years, amounting to	5,491,270
Making a total actual taxation of	$98,787,040
An average yearly taxation of	$19,757,408

Or an average taxation per head on a population of 4,100,000 of $4.82. The deficits may fairly be added, because those in power should have collected the money instead of leaving it to their successors to collect. I now come to Conservative taxation, from Customs and Excise—stamp duties having been struck off in 1882—which was as follows :—

1879-80	$ 18,479,576
1880-81	23,942,139
1881-82	27,549,046
1882-83	29,269,689
1883-84	25,483,199
1884-85	25,384,529
1885-86	25,226,456
1886-87	28,687,002
1887-88	28,177,413
1888-89	30,613,523
1889-90	31,587,072
Making a total of	$294,399,654

Permit me to add a statement showing the receipts and expenditure under eleven years of Conservative administration :

Year.	Total Receipts.	Total Expenditure.
1879-80	$ 23,307,407	$ 24,850,634
1880-81	29,635,298	25,502,554
1881-82	33,383,456	27,067,104
1882-83	35,794,650	28,730,157
1883-84	31,861,962	31,107,706
1884-85	32,797,001	35,037,060
1885-86	33,177,040	39,011,612
1886-87	35,754,993	35,057,680
1887-88	35,908,464	36,718,495
1888-89	38,782,870	36,917,835
1889-90	39,879,925	35,994,031
	$ 370,283,066	$ 356,594,868
	356,594,868
Surplus	$ 13,688,198
Total taxation as above for 11 years		$ 294,399,654
Less surplus as above		13,688,198
Yearly average of the 11 years		$ 25,519,223

An average yearly taxation per head on a population of 4,829,000 of $5.28 ; or an excess of 46 cents per head over that which existed during the time of hon. gentlemen opposite, when people were starving or working half time, and when depression and misery prevailed throughout the country.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Not so. You are slandering the country now.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I am not slandering the country. I am speaking of the country as it was, and I can now speak in a different tone of the country that is.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. Hon. gentlemen opposite in this House and on public platforms say that there is a largely increased taxation, and the hon. member for South Oxford asks this House solemnly to endorse that statement. But giving those hon. gentlemen every advantage, they can only show an excess of 46 cents a head, and for that we have a splendid canal system, magnificent public works and public buildings, and an enormous amount of capital expenditure paid out of revenue. Then, let us consider the public debt. The hon. gentleman says that by adding to the public debt and the interest charge, the Conservative party have almost ruined Canada. I ask hon. gentlemen to consider these figures taken from the Public Accounts :—

Net liabilities, 1st July, 1874	$108,324,964
do do 1879	142,990,187
Increase in 5 years	$ 34,665,223
Net liabilities, 1st July, 1890	$237,533,212
do do 1879	142,990,187
Conservative increase in 11 years	$ 94,543,025
Liberal expenditure on capital account for 5 years, 1875-79	$ 33,982,568
Liberal increase of debt as above	34,665,223
Conservative expenditure on capital account for 11 years, 1880-90	$102,108,981
Conservative increase of debt as above	94,543,024

Yet there are hon. members of this House who tell the farmers and artizans of this country that the Conservative party have increased the debt, and that we would have no debt at all if we had not a Conservative party. Well, if we had not a Conservative party, we would have had no debt because we would have had no country. Now, there is no better criterion to judge our debt by than the interest the country is paying. and it must be borne in mind that the provincial subsidies are a fixed charge on either party. I will ask hon. gentlemen to bear with me for a moment while I make a statement in respect to our interest account. The hon. member for South Oxford forgets that loss on loans which he made in Great Britain on two occasions, by which we were supposed to have sacrificed a large amount, should be charged against his Administration; but I do not take account of this. Now, the average net debt bearing interest in 1874, 1879 and 1890 respectively was as follows:—

	Debt bearing Interest.	Interest Charges.
1874	$117,311,167	$ 6,122,844
1879	156,616,536	7,281,018
1890	269,521,806	10,566,352
Average interest on net debt, 1879		$4 52
do do do 1890		3 75

The net debt in 1879 was $142,990,187, on which the net interest charged was $6,664,253, or an average of 4·52 per cent. The net debt in 1890 was $237,533,212, and the net interest charged was $8,904,945, or only 3·75 per cent., showing that, while the net debt has increased more than 66 per cent., the net interest paid increased less than 34 per cent. Now, this is a question which any hon. gentleman can investigate for himself; these are figures which any hon. gentleman can work out; and, if I am mistaken, I shall be glad to learn it, because I may use these statements on other occasions, and do not wish ever to deceive an audience, for rely upon it, among the people there are always some who know the facts as well as the speaker who addresses them. One of the hon. gentlemen pointed last night to the fact that the Conservatives were spending a large amount of money in collecting revenue. But if hon. gentlemen opposite, not for the sake of curiosity, not for the sake of change, not for the sake of sympathizing with the Conservative party, not for the sake of forgiving the present Administration any small efforts that were unsuccessful, would take the figures of revenue and cost of collection under the Liberal regime and under Conservative rule, they would find material for wholesome reflection. If we take the last fiscal year 1878-79, when hon. gentlemen opposite were responsible for estimates, we find that the Customs revenue collected amounted to $12,900,659, and that the cost of collection was $719,711, or 5·56 per cent. In the last fiscal year, 1889-90, the amount of Customs revenue collected was $25,968,953 and the cost of collecting it $873,400, or less than 3·63 per cent. And yet this is the Government which is charged with extravagance and corruption, this is the Government which is responsible for our not having a larger population. If hon. gentlemen will draw a comparison between these figures and submit it to the country at large, the people will soon tell them that it is not the Conservative party nor the expenditure of the Government, but the false and partizan statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite regarding the progress of Canada and its institutions which account for our not having a larger population. At the same rate of expenditure as that of 1879 it would have cost us $1,135,229 to collect last year's Customs revenue, had a Liberal Government been in power. You will see, therefore, how wise the people were in their generation when refusing to let those hon. gentlemen collect the revenue. It would have cost $461,829 per year more than it actually cost if the Liberals had continued in power and maintained their old policy. The cost of collecting the Customs duties since 1879, which amounted to $241,685,747, would have been $13,437,728 instead of $8,713,617, the actual figures, showing a difference of $4,724,111 in favour of the present Administration. During the five years under Liberal regime we had one surplus amounting to $935,644, and four deficits amounting to $6,426,959, showing an excess of deficits over surplus of $5,491,315. During the eleven years the Conservative party have been in power we have had seven surpluses, amounting to $24,116,085, and four deficits amounting to $10,427,829, or an excess of surpluses over deficits of $13,688,196. Now, I ask hon. gentlemen opposite, in all fairness, if that is a statement likely to keep people from coming to this country? Let hon. gentlemen opposite discuss squarely and above board the showing of the Public Accounts, and prove where I am wrong, and where the policy of the Government has been wrong, not only with regard to taxation, but the collection of the revenue. Another cause why people have not come to this country is the warning sent out by hon. gentlemen opposite that this is not only a highly-taxed country, but that it is taxed doubly as high as Great Britain or the United States. My hon. friend from Bothwell seems to acquiesce in that statement, but I think I will prove the very opposite. You will remember, Sir, when the hon. member for South Oxford was Minister of Finance. At that time, in spite of the depression and gloom throughout the country, he came up smiling every session and said that the worst was over, but he would never admit that Canada was taxed as heavily as the United States. He would point to the federal debt, the state debt, and the municipal debt, and show that the debt of New York alone was more than the entire debt of Canada. The hon. gentleman did not deplore the condition of Canada then. He said, in his Budget speech of the 20th February, 1877:

"Now, comparing the result of our fiscal policy with the result of the American fiscal policy, I say boldly, that so far as these figures show, and so far as the facts are known to us they show we have no cause to dread a comparison. As for the home market, I have said before, and I now repeat, that the number of persons employed in manufactures in the United States is not greater relatively to population, if indeed so great, than the number employed in Canada."

And these unfortunate men were working at 50 cents to 60 cents per day.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. The hon. gentleman says "no." I was Mayor at the Capital in 1879, and know, that men were then willing to work at 60 cents per day. Carpenters were glad to get 75 cents per day and bricklayers $1.25 per day, and shanty men were only getting $7 per month and their board. If the hon. gentleman denies this, let him enquire at the lumber mills, let him go to the City Hall and see the prices that were then paid the labouring classes. I will give him proof from a Liberal friend of his, a gentleman who was his candidate in 1878 for this city, Mayor Bangs. When that gentleman was running as a candidate of the Liberal party, he said:

"Every morning when I came down to the City Hall, I found from 20 to 100 men seeking assistance—men who were willing to work, but who had families starving at home. I distributed tickets amongst them. Some of them were not able to earn 25 cents per day, but still I sent them up to Mr. Henderson, the Superintendent of Works. Mr. Henderson would come down and say: 'Don't send another crowd that can't do anything.' I replied: 'These men are starving and may as well be supported by the Government as by the city.' I had gone afterwards with Mr. Goodwin and asked Mr. Mackenzie that some work be started in Grenville. Mr. Mackenzie replied that there was no appropriation, but I told him that, notwithstanding this, the country would bear him out in it, and that there must be something done, or else there would be trouble and even riots in the city."

The hon. member for South Oxford went further in his defence of his policy of free trade and remaining in office. He said:

"And not only do they not employ more men, but they do not, at present at any rate, pay them one whit more. Indeed, I doubt much whether the purchasing power of wages in the United States is at all as great as that of similar wages in Canada; while as to the condition of the general labour market, it must be a matter of common notoriety to every hon. gentleman in this House, that if there is (as there unfortunately is) depression in Canada, there is still greater depression in the United States; and if there are, unfortunately, men now unemployed in our large cities, in New York alone, on the other hand, it is reported that something like one-fifth or one-sixth of the entire adult male population are unemployed and clamouring for employment at the public expense."

That was the picture the hon. gentleman drew of the United States when he was in power and the people were starving. What does he say now? He tells us we ought to encourage unrestricted reciprocity with the United States, a reciprocity so undefined and indefinable, that I challenge any hon. gentleman to state what it is, where it is, or whence it came. At that time, when the hon. member for South Oxford spoke, Canada was being made a slaughter market for the people of the United States. We saw our workingmen walking about with their hands in their pockets while the bloated monopolists of the United States were sending us their surplus goods, which they sacrificed here for hard cash, and then turned that cash into goods to suit their own market, and thus saved themselves from any loss. The hon. gentleman went further. He said in a speech at Simcoe in 1877:

"I find that in Ontario during the last year the people paid about $5,500,000 for municipal purposes; and knowing as we do how much the wealth of Ontario exceeds that of the other provinces taken collectively, how much more perfectly your municipal system has been carried out, I think I am perfectly safe in saying that the sum total levied elsewhere in the Dominion cannot by any possibility exceed the sum the people of Ontario are paying: and that, therefore, if to the $23,000,000 paid into the Dominion exchequer you add for the whole Dominion the sum of $11,000,000 you will have fully covered, if not more than covered, the sum total of the taxation levied on our four millions of people. I say, taking all these into account, by no possibility can the burden of the people of the United States be less than $800,000,000 a year, and I can well believe that it largely exceeds $1,000,000,000. The greatest curses of the United States are their municipal extravagance and their perverted fiscal system, which together have inflicted such burdens on them, that almost every American family at this moment is obliged to contribute in one form or another something like $125 in taxes, or at the lowest estimate $100."

No change has taken place except to the advantage of Canada, except that our factories have been developed, our industries are flourishing, our farmers have large crops and are happy and contented; but despite all this, the hon. gentleman said that in a time of commercial depression we would do far better to endanger our capital by opening our markets to the United States. Then the hon. gentleman, in a speech delivered in this House—and I am only dealing with this matter because the hon. gentleman has deliberately introduced questions which had no relation to the main question at issue in regard to the census, because he took advantage of the opportunity to send these statements to the country, and because we hope to send the other side of the question—said, on the 22nd February, 1878:

"The taxation for all purposes borne by the people of the Dominion of Canada is probably barely one-third of the taxation inflicted on the people of the United States under the operation of their municipal system and of their tariff, and in any case is barely one-half of the sum which we know to be paid by them in hard cash; while as compared with the British Islands with their present estimated population of about 33,000,000, paying in what are known as the Queen's taxes about $330,000,000, our taxation may be fairly computed as barely one-half."

The hon. gentleman at that time solemnly stated that our taxes were barely one-half. I want to call attention to the sudden change in the views of the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), when he was in Opposition. In 1888, he again referred to Great Britain, and this is what he said:

"We in Canada, a young nation, and by no means as wealthy a nation as the United States or England, for those controllable services which are under the special charge of the Government and Parliament, and in which economy can be exercised, require to-day per head about three times as much as is needed in England or the United States."

If the hon. gentleman desires to give information to the House, he should have gone further and should have stated that there are laws in Great Britain dealing with municipal taxation. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is no doubt aware of that fact. If you turn to a work on "Local Government and Taxation," published by Mr. Rathbone, M.P., and Mr. Pell, M.P., you will find the following statement:—

"The total of local indebtedness was, at the close of the year 1879-80, $684,680,000, and at the close of the year 1876-77, $530,255,000. So that in the latest period of six years, for which the figures can be accurately ascertained, the apparent increase in our local debts was no less than $215,500,000, which supposes an average annual increase of $36,000,000. In times of profound peace and economic Government, we have been able to reduce the national debt by about $40,000,000 a year; but taking one year with another, our seasons of peril and our fits of extravagance, along with our intervals of security and endeavours after thrift, we do not diminish our national debt by anything like the sums which we add to our local debts."

We find the same admission laid down in an article in the London Times on the growth of local indebtedness, dated 18th May, 1891 :

"For many more novelties we are prepared; and most of us lately learned without much surprise that the entire local debt had risen to £195,400,000, or about a fourth of the national debt."

Hon. gentlemen do not tell us anything as to the local debts in the parishes and towns of Great Britain, which have to be met by taxation on the people, and the London Times shows that that taxation in England for local purposes amounts to nearly one-fourth of the national debt. The hon. gentleman has pointed to the fact that our natural market is in the United States. I think, if the hon. gentleman opposite desires to deal with the whole question, before asking Canadians to say that this country has not progressed, he should show us his reasons. He says we would have progressed more rapidly if we had reciprocity with the United States. I wonder whether Mr. Harrison, the President of the United States, should not be preferred as an authority on that point to the hon. member for South Oxford. In his last message to Congress, on page 19, Mr. Harrison says :

"From the time of my induction into office the duty of using every power and influence given by law to the executive department for the development of larger markets for our products, especially our farm products, has been kept constantly in mind, and no effort has been or will be spared to promote that end. We are under no disadvantage in any foreign market, except that we pay our workmen and workwomen better wages than are paid elsewhere—better abstractly, better relatively to the cost of the necessaries of life. I do not doubt that a very largely increased foreign trade is accessible to us without bartering for it either our home market for such products of the farm and shop as our own people can supply, or the wages of our working people."

The hon. gentleman will see that the President of the United States says he will not sacrifice the products of the western farmers and of the eastern manufacturers, and I hope he does not expect that we should blindly condemn this Government for not having obtained what it is evident is not contemplated by the President of the United States.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Will the hon. gentleman say what they are going to Washington at all for, under these circumstances ?

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I can understand that the negotiations going on, which were commenced by the United States——

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. If hon. gentlemen will allow me, I was going to say that the United States has been negotiating treaties with other countries, with the West Indies and other Governments in the south. When certain disputes arose between the Imperial Government and Canada as against the United States, was it not natural that diplomatic efforts should be made by those interested to settle the whole question ? Then commissioners were sent to Washington.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But you quote President Harrison to show that their mission cannot succeed.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. If it depends on the sacrifice of the Canadian producer or the Canadian farmer, in order to get reciprocity with the United States, then we will leave the United States out and fight for national interests. President Harrison said :

"The value of our exports of domestic merchandize during the last year was over $115,000,000 greater than the preceding year, and was only exceeded once in our history. About one hundred millions of this excess was in agricultural products."

That being the case, does not the hon. gentleman see that the Government require the aid of every man in this House if they are going to succeed in securing a reasonable treaty ? If hon. gentlemen are anxious to get a reciprocity treaty, why do they state that the Government made a failure ? Why do they, by their actions, weaken the hands of the Administration ? Why do they not say : We will work with you, we will go hand in hand with you, and do all we can ? I remember another reciprocity treaty, when the hon. gentleman was supporting the Government of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) ; I remember when every hon. gentlemen opposite stood up and said : "Yes, we have sent the Hon. George Brown to Washington, he has met an Imperial official, but not one solitary thing shall be done detrimental to the interest of Great Britain. Every word of that treaty must provide for the same fair trade towards Great Britain that is given to the United States ; there must be no discrimination against Great Britain." Hon. gentlemen opposite know that while the Conservative party was willing to assist in negotiating a treaty—the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills, Bothwell) shakes his head. Had I not already spoken so long I would prove that what I say is correct. The hon. gentleman knows that Sir John Macdonald expressed a hope, when the address was being debated, that the treaty would be a success. But who were the gentlemen who opposed that treaty ? Did not every Board of Trade, with exceptions, oppose it ? One of the leading merchants of Canada, a man who was honoured wherever he was known, a man who occupied a high position in this House, and became afterwards a Senator—I refer to the late John Macdonald, sounded the loudest note of alarm. Mr. Macdonald issued a circular in which he said :

"It needs but little reasoning to prove what the results will be when the American goods referred to are admitted duty free into our country. To the Canadian manufacturer—Ruin. To the Canadian dealer—Loss. To every projected manufacturing interest—Stoppage. To the Canadian consumer—Direct taxation. To the entire trade of the country—Disturbance, uneasiness and uncertainty. The flooding of our own country with American goods—the building up and enrichment of American manufacturers and jobbers. If the legislation of a country is intended for the protection and benefit of its subjects, for the fostering and development of its industries, the treaty as it now stands cannot pass. Nor will the attempt be made, we think, when it is found that its workings are so ruinous to the men who have accomplished so much in making Canada the manufacturing country which it is to-day."

But there was another gentleman, also a member of the Liberal party and also a Senator, Mr. Reesor, who, on the 25th of February, 1875, said :

"If they had a market for American produce, surely they must have one for their own. All this had been done without the benefit of free trade with the United States. Our duties had been taken off western products in order to allow people to avail themselves of this market. They evidently were not taken off to benefit the American. He was perfectly satisfied that we reaped a large profit from this trade. If the Americans wanted to act in like manner with our trade, let them do so. For his own part he thought we were in a prosperous condition, and that there was no need at all of the proposed treaty."

So I tell the hon. gentleman that those who opposed the treaty were his Liberal friends and supporters. Every Conservative said : As long as Great Britain is not discriminated against and Canadian rights are maintained we will support the treaty. As I have said, the hon. gentleman knows that every board of trade in the Dominion of Canada denounced that treaty. The hon. gentleman knows that the Hon. George Brown would not support that treaty if it discriminated against Great Britain. More than this, hon. gentlemen must know, that under that proposed arrangement, it was agreed that nearly $5,000,000 which Canada afterwards received from the Washington Treaty arbitration was to have been surrendered; they must know, that, after Sir John Macdonald was condemned for agreeing to that treaty, four or five of those who voted for it, were taken into a Liberal Government and became the colleagues of the hon. gentlemen who had asserted that by it Canada's interests were sacrificed. The hon. gentleman knows that the hon. member for East York, then the head of the Government, stated in the House of Commons that instructions were given to Mr. Brown, as follows:—

"It is, however, understood that no proposition affecting the introduction of manufactured goods shall be finally determined upon prior to reference to the Imperial and Dominion Governments. As a natural production, salt may be added to the former free list. * * * Mr. Brown will communicate this view to Sir Edward Thornton, accompanied with the representation that the Government of Canada do not propose any modification in matters of trade and commerce which would in any way injuriously affect Imperial interests."

Yet the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier), in issuing his manifesto to the people of this country, said that we must not be hampered by the mother country's interest. The member for South Oxford said the same thing. When the Liberal Government were in power they said they were opposed to anything like discrimination against Great Britain, but now they say that Canada must look out for herself, and Great Britain must take care of herself. I can say that many leading men in the United States, who were not bitter partizans, stated that the treaty had been immensely beneficial to the United States, and hon. gentlemen know that all they did was to express a willingness to admit a few articles free and to surrender the four or five million dollars that we were to get under the Washington Treaty. When the hon. gentleman interrupted me and asked something regarding the reciprocity treaty, which I did not intend to refer to, I was about to show how unfair it was that hon. gentlemen opposite did not assist the Government in solving the problem of new markets, where the Canadian farmers and manufacturers could sell their goods at a profit. Looking over the British Trade and Navigation Returns, I find that in foreign countries the following goods are in demand and purchased every year, to a noticeable extent: As regards cheese, the United States and Canada supplied a value of nearly $20,000,000, as follows:—United States, $10,407,730; Canada, $9,571,160, out of a total of $24,876,170. Hon. gentlemen know that our cheese is sent from Canada to Great Britain, and even American cheese is branded as Canadian and sent to the English market, such is the demand for the Canadian product. Yet, hon. gentlemen opposite say that our farmers cannot compete with the farmers of the United States. Take the demand for eggs. From the Trade and Navigation Returns it appears that England imported eggs as follows:—Germany, $4,343,275; Belgium, $2,925,160; France, $6,350,460; other countries, $3,525,115—total, $17,144,010. Canada has not hitherto exceeded a few hundred dollars per annum. Did time permit, I could show from the records recently published by the Montreal Bulletin that Canadian eggs stand next to French eggs in the English market, realizing 7 shillings as compared with 7 shillings and sixpence for French eggs per great hundreds. The result is that the following are required by Great Britain:—Butter, $53,034,240; cheese, $24,876,170; eggs, $17,144,010—total, $95,054,420, out of which trade Canada has only secured business not exceeding $11,000,000. Does the hon. gentleman tell me that by the application of a strong and vigorous policy, a policy endorsed by the Opposition, a policy which hon. gentlemen opposite assist the Government in framing, we cannot find a market in England for our goods and arrive at a decision as to the best products to be sent to that market? Do hon. gentlemen tell me that we must surrender to the United States farmer and make no further effort? Then I tell hon. gentlemen opposite that there are other products they should look at. Take butter: England received from Sweden, $5,868,610 worth; Denmark, $22,012,275; Germany, $2,722,355; Holland $4,363,930; France, $14,235,720; Canada, $303,965; United States, $1,511,925; other countries, $2,167,720—total, $53,034,240; out of which Canada supplied only $303,695 in value. Do hon. gentlemen mean to say that if they would devote themselves in assisting the Government in formulating a policy, instead of wasting their time in hampering every industry in the country, we could not enlarge the Canadian market? Do they fail to realize that as statesmen they are bound to do so? Do not hon. gentlemen opposite see that there is a land there that we can enter and occupy, and find a market for our products? Why, Sir, look at little Denmark, with a population of 2,200,000—supplying the English market with over $20,000,0000 worth of butter. Every Canadian, seeing these figures, should at once say that before we try experimental legislation, before we submit even to a partial sacrifice at Washington, if the Americans will not grant us our rights, we ought not first to see what Canada is capable. To throw responsibility on the Government, in view of all facts, is unjust, unfair and dangerous. Conservatives have always had faith in Canada and Canadian possibilities. We have 14,000 miles of railway, magnificent canals, a rich soil, healthy climate, and a hardy and industrious population; and with these need we fear any nation of the world? I say no. Then there are other products sent to the English markets by the United States. Look at some of these: Bacon—the United States sends $24,500,000; fresh beef, $18,000,000; hams, $12,500,000; preserved beef, $7,000,000; and in fresh mutton even Australasia ships over $9,000,000. Horses, Great Britain purchases annually a number of horses. In 1890 she brought from various countries the following:—Stallions, $275,370; mares, $358,750; geldings, $1,044,360—total, $1,678,480. Live animals: Great Britain, total living animals in 1890, including oxen, bulls, cows, calves, sheep and lambs, over $55,000,000. Recapitulation: Butter, cheese and eggs, $95,054,420; meats, bacon, &c., $69,000,000; horses, $1,678,000; living animals, $55,000,000; corn and wheat, $117,000,000; barley, oats, pease and Indian corn, $96,000,000—grand total, $433,732,420. And yet the hon. member for South Oxford says there is no future for Canada. The hon. member for South Oxford said we are asked to be content, and to do nothing more. Perhaps there is too much of that in Canada. Perhaps, relying on the past, we may not have been sufficiently careful to provide for the future. I have confidence that the Government are alive to the circumstances of the country, and so long as we have a progressive policy Canada need fear no danger. On the question of immigration, the hon. member pointed to the census and said that the population is not so large as it should have been. What has been the immigration policy? It has been to exclude artizans and practically the labouring class. The consequence is that thousands did not come into the Dominion. But, at the same time, our population is more thrifty, the wealth is larger, the country is more progressive, and we will see what the future has in store for us if we study the future of Canada as we should. I think, so far as immigration has a bearing on the census, it is the duty of the Government to do all they possibly can to develop the North-West. I believe that Canada's future is dependent, to a great extent, upon the future of the North-West. But, when we rise in our places and say so, as we did some years ago, what is the result? We are charged with doing everything for the North-West. I call to mind what the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), when this question came up on 24th June, 1885, said, as reported in the Official Debates:

"The circumstances of the Maritime Provinces are such that they require the special attention of the Minister (of Agriculture), and the same remark applies to Ontario and Quebec in some measure. While the money of the people in these provinces is being expended, and a large portion of it squandered in immigration, these provinces do not receive any attention, all the attention being given to the North-West."

I ask hon. gentlemen if that is the Canadian spirit, if that is the Canadian idea? If we build a railway in any of the provinces, we believe it will be not only sectionally, but nationally, advantageous to Canada. More than this, is it Canadian, is it patriotic, is it wise, to endeavour to impress upon rival countries the idea that we are not a united people? Take the language of the leader of the Opposition in this House, 5th April, 1888:

"Twenty years ago we united the British provinces on this continent with the view of making them a new nationality and with the view of making them a nation. It was then a union on paper. It was expected that it would be a real union. The union has lasted 20 years and what is the result to-day? What have we achieved during those 20 years? I say that to-day, after 20 years, the union, which, in 1867, was a mere union on paper, is to-day still a mere union on paper. The hearts of the people by the sea are not in the union!"

The hon. gentleman said the hearts of the people of the Maritime Provinces are not in the Union. The people of the Maritime Provinces, however, showed in the last contest conducted by the late chief of the Conservative party, that their hearts are in the Union, and they are represented here by a solid phalanx, to support, not a sectional, but a national policy. The United States are looking to Canada for a market, but are not dealing fairly with us. Unless they can get control of Canada, I am convinced they will, as much as possible, avoid entering into any treaty arrangement with Canada. I say this because Canadians will agree to no sacrifice and desire that their country shall not be compromised by those who go as ambassadors or negotiators to Washington. When the Minister of Finance went to the West Indies, he was sneered at by the American press. The New York Tribune of 11th July, 1891, published an article entitled: "A Reciprocity Study," with comments upon Canadian assurance, as follows:—

"The light-fingered Canadian gamblers who have been seeking to draw the British West Indies into a quiet little reciprocity game of their own, wherein they would have all the aces, kings and knaves in their sleeves, have been greatly demoralized this week by the announcement of the successful negotiation of a treaty between the United States and Spain. This treaty confers upon Cuba and Porto Rico the advantage of a permanent free market for their sugar. The question which British West Indian planters are now asking is whether they can afford to be deprived of the free market for their sugar by the operation of the retaliatory clause of the reciprocity amendment. They are selling $13,235,500 of their sugar in the United States, to say nothing of coffee and hides."

Light-fingered Canadian gamblers, indeed, because we as Canadians endeavour to enlarge our trade relations! Again:

"Mr. Foster, when he was in the West Indies, offered on the part of Canada to establish two steam lines—one a monthly service between St. John and Demerara, touching at the principal Leeward and Windward Islands, and the other a monthly service between Halifax and Kingston. These lines will undoubtedly enlarge the trade between Canada and the West Indies, but the service will not be better than that already existing between the Islands and New York, although that ought to be improved. Even with these new transportation facilities, for which subsidies will be paid at both ends, 5,000,000 Canadians cannot hope to compete with 63,000,000 Americans."

Hon. gentlemen will see that while the United States are looking for other markets they are doing everything possible to injure and belittle the Dominion, and it is the bounden duty of every Canadian to also seek other markets than the United States, and to ask himself if, failing to make reciprocal arrangements with the United States, we cannot find some other means and methods of disposing of our products. The New York Tribune, editorially, on 11th July, said:

"It is not a market, however, that suffices for the industrial requirements of a population of over 63,0000,000, comprising the best working stock in the world. On this continent alone there are hives of population, nearly equal in numbers to our own, as is shown in the following table:

SOUTHERN COUNTRIES.

Does this not prove that the authorities at Washington desire to drive a hard bargain with the Dominion, and will only yield to firmness and the necessities of the occasion? I have referred to the desirability of finding other markets and have shown where they can be found, if we possess sufficient self-reliance to secure them. I now desire to refer briefly to the wholesale denunciation by the hon. member for South Oxford of land and money subsidies to railways which he dwelt upon at some length last evening. The hon. member for Bothwell knows, for he was a member of the late Liberal Government, that the system was one adopted by the Administration of which he was a member. He knows that one hon. gentleman rose in my hearing, for I was then in the press gallery of the House, and told the Mackenzie Government that unless he could get old rails enough to rail a certain railway he would not support the Administration. That was the language of Mr. Ferries, then member for Queen's. The hon. gentleman knows more. I think the hon. gentleman will remember that a Bill was introduced by him as Minister of the Interior on 27th February, 1878, a colonization railway Bill. Now, the hon. gentleman knows that in the provisions of that proposed amendment was laid the foundation of the railway subsidy policy, and the present Government coming into power after the lapse of a few years, said: Rather than give rails and have the rails laid on the track we will have an inspector, and we will give these roads money enough to buy new rails. The hon. gentleman knows that at that time he was willing to honeycomb the North-West with railways having rails of 56 lbs., iron or steel. He knows that he offered to each railway five miles of land on each side of the track, and he made provision for twenty miles, so long as it ran from the Peace River to the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which was not then built. The hon. gentleman knows also that if he allowed these companies to be formed, 10 per cent. only being required to be deposited to entitle them to form a company, he knew that the Americans having an interest in that country would have prevented the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway by honeycombing that country with railways, and he withdrew that Bill, happily for him and happily for the country. We have never been told why the Bill was withdrawn, but we know that the Bill was hurriedly withdrawn after a speech made by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). Section 6 of that Bill says:

"Sec. 6. Such articles of association shall not be filed and recorded in the Department of the Minister of the Interior until at least fifty per cent. of the stock required shall have been subscribed in good faith, and ten per cent. of the amount so subscribed paid to the Receiver General, and there is endorsed thereon, or annexed thereto, an affidavit made by at least three of the directors named in the said articles of association, that the amount of stock required by this section has been subscribed in good faith, and ten per cent. paid, in cash, as aforesaid, and that it is intended, in good faith, to construct, maintain and operate the road mentioned in such articles of association."

The hon. gentleman knows that the member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) fully approved of the Government policy of land grants to branch railways. He may remember an interview which the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) gave, when the Canadian Pacific Railway was almost built, and which appeared in the Toronto Globe, and in which that hon. gentleman strongly approved of the policy of aiding branch lines by land subsidies. The member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) said, in reply to a reporter of the Toronto Globe:

"Q. What do you think of the late announcement by the Government, that they will give land grants to the branch railways?

"A. While in the territory I expressed myself at a public meeting favourable to making grants absolute instead of merely making a sale at a reduced rate, where the roads are eventually to be of public service in settling the country. At present several companies have obtained grants of 6,400 acres per mile at a nominal price of one dollar per acre. The removal of that price, granting the land free, would have the immediate effect of facilitating the construction of roads now much wanted. It may be that the Government in the new announcement mean to carry out this plan."

The Government carried out that plan so approved of, but now the hon. gentlemen opposite denounce the Government because they desire the Government to state what price shall be put upon the lands; that is one of their points. They must admit, however, that the general policy of the Government with regard to subsidizing railways was never denounced by them when it was initiated; but to-day they have changed their policy. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), in the course of a speech delivered in 1878, stated distinctly that it would pay to give away half the lands of that country, or at least a large portion of them, for building railways. I need not quote the speech, if the hon. gentleman will admit it, but it may be as well to let the House know what he then said:

"They were told these railway claims were going to absorb the whole of the North-West. Under no circumstances could they absorb more than half of it, even were parallel lines to run so close to each other that these grants joined, for in that case even the Government would still have each alternate section."

They were then willing to give away one-half the lands of the North-West, and to-day they denounce the Government—the Canadian Pacific Railway having been built, and no danger to be feared from that quarter—for endeavouring to open up the entire country in the North-West by subsidizing railways. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) said at that time:

"It would be found that the progress of any state had in no way interfered with the progress of settlement of another. He had no doubt whatever that if our territories in the North-West were opened up to the people, free to go in any direction they chose, settlements would rapidly grow in extent, which would form a nucleus for the development of all the provinces. The only effect of undertaking to prevent people from settling where they chose, to confine them to particular localities, would be to exclude a large population from the territories which would, no doubt, under different circumstances settle there."

While the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) as well as the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) was anxious that half the lands of the North-West would be given away, while he was willing to have railways built and to endorse the subsidy policy, he also said that the only way to build up the North-West and to make it progressive and prosperous was to aid these lines by large subsidies, while at the same time the people who might form these companies might have formed 500 companies if they liked, for there was nothing to prevent them in the Act, as any fifteen men could form a company. That policy might have prevented the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and United States railways, by forming small companies, might have had a monopoly of the North-West; but that policy undoubtedly meant dropping the Canadian Pacific Railway, except through the prairie sections. That seemed the principal object of the Bill. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) withdrew his Bill; but it does not lie in his mouth now to denounce the policy of the Government, nor does it lie in the mouth of my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr.

Charlton) to denounce the Government for subsidizing railways either by land or money, when he agreed that so far as he was concerned the Government might sell the land so long as the companies received out of the grant $10,000 a mile for it. The hon. gentleman will, I think, admit that I am correct in that. I have enlarged on the subject simply for the reason that hon. gentlemen opposite have introduced issues into this debate that do not properly belong to it. Hence I shall answer these points that I think more salient and more important that the country should know precisely the record of either party, and when a reply comes I shall be very glad to hear it. Hon. gentlemen opposite have sneered at the National Policy, and said that it was a mischievous policy, and detrimental to the interest of the country. Well, it is a farmer's policy. The hon. gentlemen know, just as well as I do, that when they were in power they were implored to introduce that policy by the farmers of this country: that the farmers told them that their tariff arrangements, so far as the United States were concerned, were utterly suicidal and destructive to their interests. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) shakes his head, but does he remember what Mr. Hill, master of the Dominion Grange, testified before a committee of Parliament, when asked the following question:—

"Question: Do you think that the farmers would be benefited were the Canadian Government to impose upon the United States farm produce entering Canada for consumption, a duty corresponding to the duty levied by the United States Government upon Canadian farm produce exported into that country? Answer: I do."

Yet hon. gentlemen opposite point to a petition which has been sent by the farmers, stating that they have been injured by a policy which they themselves endorsed and asked for. In 1876, when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, they will remember that Parliament also received a petition, and that the Dominion Grange Association, in a document sent to this House, stated as follows:—

"That whereas agriculture is a prominent interest in this Dominion, and the prosperity of all classes largely depends upon the success of the farmers, it is desirable to enact such laws as shall ensure that success. As practical farmers we cannot but view with regret our markets filled with American produce, free of duty, while Canadian produce is heavily taxed when sent to the United States. Your petitioners respectfully pray for such protection as will secure the home market for the home producer, &c."

Hon. H. G. Joly, then Premier of Quebec, in answer to the question as to whether it was wise to admit American produce free while Canadian producers paid duty, replied:

"Answer: No, it is against the interest of Canada. I humbly think we should not admit anything free of duty except the raw material required for our manufactures."

The hon. member for South Oxford did not believe in that policy; he was perfectly candid about it: he never made any reservation. He told the people that they did not clearly understand the question, and that he as Finance Minister was legislating in the best interest of the country. At the same time, the hon. gentleman knows that the farmers of this country asked for this policy, and they got it: they endorsed that policy in 1878, they endorsed it in 1882, they endorsed it in 1887, and they again endorsed it in 1891. The hon. gentleman knows that, yet why does he declare that the farmers of this country are opposed to the National Policy? He produces nothing to show it, except a petition which he mentions. Well, we have heard a great deal about the mortgages resting on the poor farmers in Canada. Hon. gentlemen will remember that in 1880 Kansas was an Eldorado and Dakota a paradise, in the opinion of the party opposite. We were told in this House that we could not hope to compete with those States. Well, what is the fact? The other day, reading an interview with a mortgaged Kansas farmer, in the Cincinnati Star, I found him speaking to the reporter in the following way:—

"Eastern people can say what they please about the kick now being made against the two old parties. If they had the same conditions to face that we have they would kick, too. Now, let me give a few facts. The State of Kansas is composed of farms, towns and cities, of course, and nearly every inch of it is mortgaged for more than it is worth at present. The indebtedness is $707 for every voter, so you can see at present the position the people are in. Interest and taxes and the necessities of life are grinding us into the earth, and where was once a prosperous and flourishing people is now a half-starved crowd of broken-hearted wretches who can hardly be recognized as the same people who lived in that country a few years ago. * * * But now look at the effect of the boom. My own experience is an example of what that did for us. In 1880 I bought a farm of 400 acres for $8,000. I had $4,000 to invest and gave a mortgage for the balance. The first year my crops were a total failure, and I mortgaged my chattels to live on. This was a fatal step, but I had a family, and what else could I do? I struggled along, and at last the mortgage was closed on me and my farm was sold for $4,000. I had nothing left. The boom had met me and passed on. * * * In our state there is no law that provides for stay of execution. This is extreme cruelty, and already one-fourth of the farms have been sold for debt and two-thirds of the remainder are ready to be sold. In Pratt county, where I live, the April term of court just ended sold 172 farms at forced sale. Now, when you consider that this is only one county, you can form some estimate of the position the people are in."

That is a portion of a paradise to which hon. gentlemen opposite used to point. They painted the prosperity of the United States in the brighest colours, and dwelt upon the number of Canada here; and their speeches were printed in pamphlet form and sent abroad all through that land of promise. To-day they see Canada flourishing and prosperous, while Kansas is mortgaged to death, and the people are fleeing from Dakota; and yet they have not one word to say on behalf of the young giant of the North which is fighting here a good and brave battle for national life; they have not a word to say in the interest of Canada, but they have everything to say in the interest of the United States. Let us look also at the cities of the United States. We see no misery in our cities. Take Chicago, for instance, the Mayor of which the other day issued a circular, in which he said:

"The fear that the deplorable experience (of workingmen in Philadelphia in 1870) will be repeated in Chicago prompts the issue of this warning. A workingman without work and without money will starve to death in Chicago as quickly as elsewhere. Our private and public charities are now unable to relieve the destitute who are now resident here. Hence, others coming here without means of self-support may expect no help."

Then look at what the Toronto Globe says; I do not know whether it is one of the journalistic reptiles to which the hon. member for South Oxford referred; but at the same time I will take his opinion in good faith. A telegram appears in that paper on the 30th May, 1891, as follows:—

"Dakota bankers and other business men are so greatly alarmed at the prospective exodus of farmers from that state to Manitoba and the North-West that they are circulating pamphlets depicting this country as a waste of snow and ice, and drawing equally ridiculous and exaggerated pictures of the condition of things here. In contradistinction to this it may be stated that four or five business men who came over to have a look at the country were so pleased with the general appearance of prosperity and bright prospects of the country that they have decided to follow their agricultural brethren who have immigrated and taken up land. There are at present a considerable number of delegates and prospectors in this country spying out the land, and these publicly announce their complete satisfaction with the country."

We hear no such statements from hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. member for West Huron states distinctly from his place in Parliament that the people are fleeing from the country as if it were a plague spot: but the fact which I have just read is the reply to his assertion. The hon. gentleman does not send forth to the people of Canada the message: "Look up; be of good hope, and take courage;" but for party purposes he defames and depreciates his own country. Then, I find a North Dakotan correspondent of the Seaforth Expositor, writing in the endeavour to prove that there has been no exodus from that state, and yet saying this:

"Of course, we must admit that Manitoba has a good deal lower taxes than we have at the present time, and I believe they have a better market for their stock."

We do not see such statements as this in many Liberal papers, and we never hear them quoted by hon. gentlemen opposite, and I suppose we would never hear them quoted if it were not by members on this side; I suppose that is one of the reasons why we are sent here. Now, the hon. gentleman, in speaking of the census, has pointed to the fact that the towns and cities are growing. I was very much struck by an admission which appeared in the Toronto Globe the other day in regard to the great prosperity achieved by the towns and villages near Toronto. On the 25th of July last that paper contained the following:—

"Toronto Junction is the name by which Canada's most enterprising town is known. Where now stands a substantially built town of upwards of 5,000 population but eight years ago was only a race-track. In the very places used as cow pastures less than half a decade ago mammoth factories now stand and the hum of machinery heard on every hand makes it hard to realize that Toronto Junction is but a 'new' place; but it is not alone as a railway centre that Toronto is distinguished. As a manufacturing town it already has an enviable record. At the present time there are no less than fifteen factories in active operation employing an aggregate of 661 hands, as follows:—

Wilkinson Plough Works	75
Dodge Wood Split Pulley	50
Canada Wire Mattrass	30
Auston Lace Works	30
Dominion Show Case Co.	75
Heintzman & Co.	150
Hess Manufacturing Co.	40
Wagner Planing Factory	15
Stewart's Planing Factory	8
Grant's Planing Factory	6
Attwood's Brass Foundry	12
Strachan Boot and Shoe Wooks	40
Vermilyea Corset Factory	60
Hat Works	20
Barnum Wire Works	50

The brick yards give employment to over 200 additional men. This is not taking into account the large number of men employed in connection with the railways and otherwise."

Now, what does that mean? Simply an expenditure of at least $250,000 per annum by those workmen, who consume the products of the farm—the field and the factory going hand in hand, each performing its function of adding to the prosperity and promoting the interests of Canada. But we have not heard these statements quoted by hon. gentlemen opposite. They make assertions and give no proof. They make assertions, in the hope of defeating the present Government, forgetting how exceedingly detrimental to them and their interests such gross and extravagant statements are. They know that the necessities of Government must be provided for; they know that the public works and railways must be built: they know that they must make the people progressive; they know that they must give employment to a certain number; yet they seek to weaken confidence in the country, though happily they cannot do it. If these hon. gentlemen got into power, in that deplorable period they would find the people becoming hopeless and without confidence in their own country; and in a very few years the electors would ask them to return again to the Opposition benches. Sir, it seems incredible that hon. gentlemen opposite, continue such a policy, when contrary evidence confronts them at every step. We have this record of the growth of Toronto, taken from one of the Toronto papers:

"The amount of building that has been done in Toronto during the last 8 months is almost phenomenal. The following figures show an increase of $2,132,783 over the value of the buildings for which permits were taken out during the corresponding period last year:—

January	$226,950	$ 59,500
February	144,600	105,450
March	236,440	172,625
April	769,680	167,000
May	692,600	212,625
June	446,275	161,225
July	500,060	138,925
August	273,400	145,075
	$3,290,005	$1,157,225

Yet hon. gentlemen say this country is rapidly declining. I have referred to Dakota, of which hon. gentlemen opposite have spoken as a place destined to be a paradise.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). When was that said about Dakota?

Mr. MACKINTOSH. In 1882 it was said by members of this House.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Eleven years ago.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. Precisely, I refer to it to show what false prophets these gentlemen are. They painted that country as a paradise, as an Eldorado, as a land of promise, and said that we could never expect our North-West to equal it. I am well aware that the hon. member for Bothwell has been more liberal in his views of our great North-West. That hon. gentleman, I must admit, is usually logical and reasonable in his remarks during debate, because he realizes what it is to be a Minister of the Crown; but I am afraid some of the hon. gentlemen behind him will never realize that, if they continue to act as they do. I am not finding fault with the hon. member for Bothwell, but with the general policy of the party which strives to make Canadians imagine that far away fields are green, and that we will never find a panacea for our troubles except in closer connection with the United States. I have read the hon. gentleman's speeches, and know that when a cry was raised against the importation of labourers and artizans he pointed out that such a policy was dangerous, and no doubt that policy had the effect of keeping many workingmen out of the country and thus reducing the population we would have had otherwise.

Mr. AMYOT. What are the names of the members who said that in this House?

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I think Mr. Blake spoke of Kansas, and the hon. member for East York spoke of Dakota, and pointed out the immense tracts of land to be had there. I have referred to 1879, when Sir Charles Tupper introduced his resolution.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman is mistaken. He will find no such sentiments as he has attributed to the hon. member for East York and the former member for West Durham in those speeches to which he has referred. The hon. gentleman's friends have read those sentiments into the speeches, but they are not in them.

Mr. AMYOT. If they are not there, will the hon. gentleman tell us where we can find them? I would like to ascertain these facts.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. Being only human, I may err; but my impression is, I will not only be able to produce the speeches of the hon. member for West Durham, but the other speeches which the hon. member for Bellechasse, in such a refined and gentlemanly manner, asked me to produce. I know the hon. gentleman is anxious to have the information, and I will get it for him.

Mr. AMYOT. I want no false information, but true information.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I will give the hon. gentleman two copies when I get them. I have not failed to realize how anxious the hon. gentleman is to do justice under all circumstances. I assure the hon. member for Bothwell I did not purposely misrepresent the matter, but I have seen the Kansas speech, and the hon. gentleman knows that in 1884 a speech taken from Hansard of 1880, was published by some land company with the Hon. Edward Blake's likeness upon it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Published by Belford, at Toronto.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I do not know who the land agent was, but I know when I was up in Lennox and other counties you could see it in almost every shop window, and find an impress of the likeness on every stick of taffy and every pound of lard. I am quite positive about the Kansas speech in 1880, but am not so positive about the Dakota speech; however, it must be a relief to hon. gentlemen opposite to imagine it was not said. I would call attention to a copy of the testimonial, signed by numbers of farmers in Dakota, who, having been unsuccessful there, left recently for our North-West:

"YORKTON, N. W. T., May 12, 1891.

"We, the undersigned, formerly residents of the State of South Dakota, and now located in townships 30 and 31, ranges 9, 10, 11 and 12, west of the 2nd Principal Meridian, being what is known as the Touchwood District, hereby certify that the representations made by Agents W. A. Webster, Alfred F. Holmes and E. E. Pettit, have been carried out in every particular. That we find the land and location to be better than represented, in that there is more timber, better water and finer soil.

"And we hereby express our thanks to the Canadian Settlers' Loan and Trust Company for the facilities given by them to enable us to get to this country. Also to the Canadian Pacific Railroad Company, and the Manitoba and North-Western Railroad officials, for the courtesy and assistance given us to Yorkton from the boundary. And the same to Mr. G. H. Campbell, Dominion immigration agent, for his kindness to our wives and children in Winnipeg.

"And we desire that this testimonial may be printed and circulated among our former neighbours in Brown, Macpherson, Edmunds and Marshall counties, in South Dakota, and we confidently recommend that they can have the utmost confidence in the representations made to them by Agents Webster, Holmes and Pettit, as we have found them more than borne out by the facts in every particular.

"Taxes are only for school purposes, and do not exceed four dollars per quarter section, and money can be had at 8 per cent. per annum. The present address of the undersigned is Yorkton, Assiniboia."

I need not take up the time of the House by reading all the signatures. Mr. Alex Smith, Manitoba Government immigration agent at Winnipeg, reports as follows:—

"The arrivals of immigrants and effects in Manitoba during 1890, up to June 30, were:

	Settlers.	Cars of Effects.
Via Port Arthur.....	6,870	418
" Gretna.....	324	..
Total.....	7,194	418

"During March, April and part of May the arrivals were mostly from Ontario, since which time the majority have been from Great Britain and Europe, all of them being of a good class. Among them were several parties of young men, desiring to learn farming, many of whom have been sent through this office to good farmers throughout the province. The French and Belgians have mostly settled at Cypress River, Treherne, St. Laurent and Oak Lake. The Scandinavians and Germans have settled along the Manitoba and North-Western Railway lands. The settlers from Ontario and Great Britain are pretty evenly scattered throughout the province."

That was the testimony of those gentlemen who came from South and North Dakotas. But I have detained the House too long, and must close by very brief reference to other subjects. I am desirous of impressing upon the Government as well as the Opposition the necessity of more united action with regard to peopling our North-West and Canada generally. I believe that in reducing the expenditure on immigration every year, in consequence of objections made by members of the Opposition and even on this side, we committed a fatal mistake. The duty of the Government is to consider the policy of fast sailing facilities by ocean, and a board of immigration and commerce in England, if necessary, to work in concert with our High Commissioner and Mr. Dyke, so that our North-West may be peopled, and that we will not only find markets for our products but find consumers in the North-West for the manufactures of eastern Canada. The saving in immigration expenditure is a penny-wise-and-pound-foolish policy. We have no organization such as should exist, and so long as the Government allow public opinion to sway them against such expenditure, the results will be disappointing. To be effective, it must be systematic, self-reliant and aggressive. I believe the North-West will yet be the right arm of the British Empire. I believe we will have to look there for our supplies, and if we fill that country up with immigrants, we will make Eastern Canada also prosperous from a manufacturing point of view as the North-West will be from an agricultural point of view. I regret to have kept the House so long, but could not speak more earnestly in the interests of Canada than I desire. I wish to impress upon the Government that we cannot remain still and live on the past. The member for South Oxford has said that we must advance or there will be a retrograde movement. In this I agree with him. It is our duty to work in the direction of progress, thus promoting the interests of Canada at large without any idea of sectionalism. I have faith in Canada's possibilities, faith in her present, and faith in her future, and an undying belief in the fealty of all classes to the British Empire, coupled with confidence in the capabilities of their native country.

Mr. AMYOT. I must congratulate the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Mackintosh) upon his imagination and upon his resources. He has been occupying two hours and a half of the time of this House in order to explain why the population of this country is not increasing in the normal proportion that it should increase. He has occupied that time trying to find some means to enable us to hope in the future, and what is the explanation after all? We have the explanation that the population is not increasing because we on this side of the House prefer annexation.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I never said a word of the kind. The hon. gentleman must not make my speech for me.

Mr. AMYOT. If the hon. gentleman has not done so, I am ready to wait for his explanation. What is the question before the House? The question is, that it appears by the census that the population of Canada is not increasing at the rate it should increase, that we do not keep the number of immigrants that arrive here. The motion states that, if we had increased by the ordinary increase of population, we would have a million more of people in this country, and it states that the policy of the Government should be changed so as to obtain better results for the next census. If the hon. gentleman has only to lay before the House the speech he desired to make on a previous question, he cannot complain if it should be criticised, and it amounts to this, that we are not increasing in population because he now admires Mr. Blake, we are not increasing in our normal proportion because the next census will show great prosperity, we are not increasing because we have had four millions of a surplus, we are not increasing because the people are prosperous, because the journalists are honest, and because the Government are going to negotiate a reciprocity treaty; we are not increasing because of the rebellion of 1885, because Sir John was a great man, because we have a small taxation, because we had, some years ago, soup kitchens, because the Hon. George Brown would not discriminate against England in 1884. These are the reasons given by the hon. gentleman why the population of Canada is not increasing in its proper proportion. This is the greatest avowal of the adoption of a wrong policy on the part of the Government that could be made by one of its most able and ardent supporters. I do not intend to follow the hon. gentleman in every word he uttered. The acoustics of this House are bad, and I am not capable of understanding the English language perfectly, so that I could not follow him exactly; but the principal object of my few remarks will be to say a few words in answer to the Minister of Finance in what he said last night. The hon. gentleman from Ottawa gave us the history of an old man of 80 years of age who presided at one of his meetings, and explained that he had six sons who were all farmers, and they were all happy. I congratulate him. I saw an old man of 85 years of age whom we made president of a meeting, and he said that, since the treaty with the Americans had ceased, his children had gone first to the cities to earn some money, and, when the manufacturers could not employ them, when they were so filled up with goods that they could not sell them, they had to go to the States; and, said he, if you could obtain a new treaty with the States you would see the American money in this country again, and farming would pay, and I would have a chance to see my children once more. That is the history of three-fourths of the people in this country. They tell us—these great loyalists—that we prefer annexation. We say that those who are disloyal are those who ruin the country, those who steal from the country, those who chase away the population from this country, those are disloyal, while those who want to purify the political atmosphere and to have a natural commerce with our neighbours are loyal to the Crown and are the true citizens of the country. In practice we must decide that Canadian interests must prevail first, and we say that Canadian interests demand that we should have a market near to the production of the soil. It is very well to have big titles and to say that we want to sell our country to the Americans. No, we do not. We want to be able to live under the British flag, but we want our money to be saved from the rotten contracts which are given by Governments, we want something better than the system of corruption which throws millions in the hands of a few individuals in order to buy a majority of the electorate. This accusation that we want to adopt annexation I repulse with contempt as it deserves. The hon. gentleman says that he admires Mr. Blake, who has proved himself a patriotic man and a good citizen in the last open letter which he published. Will the hon. gentleman make a bargain with me and take the opinion of Mr. Blake on the existing state of things and stand by his decision, if he were asked whether the existing corruption should be maintained or whether the existing Administration should not be changed at once? Will hon. gentlemen opposite stand by Mr. Blake's judgment in regard to the actual politics of the Government? Then I will be willing to abide by Mr. Blake's decision; but you take an isolated part of one of his letters which perhaps you do not fully understand, and you put that in contradiction with the whole of his life. That is not the proper way to treat a man or to treat his words. The Hon. Mr. Blake, who is a glory to this country, who is pure, who has no stain on his past record, equal in that respect to our present worthy leader—the Hon. Mr. Blake would tell you that the present state of things, if endured much longer, will corrupt our population to the very bones; he would tell you that it is time, if you do not want to demoralize the population of Canada completely and for long generations, it is time to do away with the entire administrative system as at present conducted, so as to cut the corrupt tie that exists between the heads of the departments and the officers of the departments; he would tell you that it is time to pass the sponge everywhere, to put in high places new men with new principles; and he would tell you that under our system of constitutional government it is not good for any country that the same party should remain too long in power, and recent events have fully exemplified that principle. The Hon. Mr. Blake would tell you that you carried the last general election through fraud and misrepresentation, saying to the people in one portion of the country that you were opposed to reciprocity, that you were going to continue the protective policy, and in other parts of the country telling the people that you would give reciprocity to the farmers; in one section of the country saying that you had been invited by the Washington authorities to go down there and negotiate a treaty, which was not the case. He would tell you that you have abused your high position to deceive the people of Canada, to state as fact what was untrue, and he would tell you that you have been the cause of Canada's public men being snubbed in Washington by the Government of a neighbouring power. The Hon. Mr. Blake would tell you that during the whole of your administration, and in all your electoral organizations, you aim, not to enlighten the people, but to deceive people by false promises, and to stifle their conscience with rotten money and corruption. You invoke his name. I wish he were here to help us; I wish he would come fresh from the country and tell us what the people think of you, tell us what is the public opinion in Ontario regarding the scandalous developments that have recently taken place. You appeal to him; perhaps your voice will be heard, and he may answer you. You want to take him as a judge. For my part, I would take his decision with the greatest pleasure. The hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Mackintosh) says that we are rich because we have a surplus of $4,000,000, and the people are prosperous. Mr. Speaker, what is this surplus? It is the balance unexpended of the money that is paid into the treasury by the people, that is the surplus. Does that prove that the people are prosperous? I know that in my section of the country the people are not prosperous. I represent a rural constituency, and I know that a great many houses are closed and their owners have gone to the States. Look at the City of Quebec, where I live. Quebec West has diminished in population, and the two other divisions of the city have very slightly increased. Is that a sign of prosperity? Is it because a few contractors receive public money, is it because a few hundreds of manufacturers make millions of money? Is it because some of the public employés supplement their salaries with large bonuses, and testimonials, and presents of all kinds—is that the reason that the people are prosperous? Surely you will not pretend that the million of people who have left this country are all fools, and that if they had been prosperous here they would not have remained. Here is a fact that confounds you at first glance. The census returns prepared by the officials of the Government prove to us that over a million of people have left this country. And why? Is it not because they could not live here during the ten years just passed when the hon. gentlemen have been telling us: We are happy, we are prosperous, Canada is rich, Canada is increasing in wealth and in population? The contrary has been proved to us. We can prove, not only by the statistics of the registration offices, and by the amount of mortgages on farm property, but we can prove by their own figures, that over a million of people have gone away, and if we go on at that rate much longer a majority of the people of Canada will be in the United States. Very soon, before twenty-five years, if the people do not help us to bring about a change, there will be more Canadians in the States than there are in Canada—yet they come and tell us that we are prosperous! During the last ten years they have been telling us that, they had the boldness to affirm whatever they pleased, but to-day they have their own census which proves the contrary. Still, they are bold enough to come and say: We are prosperous. Even though the sheriff were to raise his flag at the door of every house in the country, still they will say: We are prosperous.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Probably some of them are prosperous.

Mr. AMYOT. No doubt; some of them like power, some of them like to sit near the highly-favoured Treasury benches, some of them like to have the ear of a Minister, some of them like to know when a contract will be given—not for themselves, they are too good, too pure, but for their friends: and as long as their friends surround them with millions at their disposal, they will say: We are prosperous. And that word "we" means whom? Themselves. Let the people emigrate, let the people go to the States, let the people suffer; never mind, we are prosperous, because our friends are ready, whenever we want a cheque—not for us, but for our friends—to give it. That is the prosperity they mean, for there is no other. The hon. member for Ottawa City dares to tell us that we are prosperous. Why, Sir, he sits next to Ministers who will not dare to appeal to the country now, because, in their own provinces, they will have to admit that the great prosperity they have been telling us about has driven away so many of the people of those provinces that they will have to be represented by four members less; and still they talk of prosperity. Well, they will go on saying that for a few days, a few months, a few years, until the next census, if they remain there, but they will not. They would go on, if they remained there, saying: We are prosperous. But the cold fact is known now that the policy followed by the Administration has been fallacious, it has been proved beyond the shadow of a doubt. Suppose I was walking along the street with one of those hon. gentlemen, and he should say to me: "Look at that tree; it is an apple tree." I would say, "No; those are strawberries." He replies: "Never mind; it is an apple tree." I would say: "No; it must be a strawberry plant, because it bears strawberry fruits." Thus we judge a tree by its fruit; we judge of the policy of the Administration by its results, and what has been the result of the policy of this Administration? And what have been the results accomplished by the Administration? I have heard theories very long, very powerful, very learned, accompanied by statistical statements of all kinds. I am not a statistician. I take the census, and I say those were right who said the present policy would bring ruin to the country, and those were wrong who said it would bring prosperity. This is the matter in a nutshell. All the calculations in the world, all the results of prosperity elsewhere, all the details are useless as compared with that brief statement. When a young country like Canada is prosperous, the population increases. If in a young country like this the population decreases, it is absolute proof that the country is not prosperous. And if the country is not prosperous, it must be so because the fiscal policy is wrong. Will hon. gentlemen opposite pretend today that the Government cannot assist the prosperity of a country? I am at liberty to speak freely on these questions. Do they remember how much they spoke about the "fly on the wheel," and what long and brilliant speeches they delivered on that subject? Will they pretend to say that this Government is the "fly on the wheel" and cannot help the prosperity of this country? If they pretend that, I tell them then: You are of no further use; you are of no further use if you cannot prevent money from being lavishly expended; you had better go out of office and give an opportunity to others. We are told that our population has been increasing sufficiently. Are we answered? I do not know exactly what the member for Ottawa (Mr. Mackintosh) meant by the expression that journalists are honest in this country. I suppose that remark applied to journalists on both sides. Let us put their honesty aside. They become mere helps to the chiefs of the parties; one set declare a thing is black and the other that it is white. They express opinions on different sides, and who is right and who is wrong, admitting that all are honest? Those who contend with us that we should have reciprocity with the United States and a wide market for our products are right, and those who support the Government, who say that in order to be happy and prosperous we should support the manufacturers, are wrong. That is an answer to the question. I do not see what help it can be to the Government that the press is honest. We may thank God that if the press supporting the party to the right of the Speaker has remained honest during this storm of scandals—it is very lucky for them. I do not exactly understand the position taken by the member for Ottawa (Mr. Mackintosh) with respect to the negotiations of this Government this fall. What does he mean? Is a treaty with the United States good or ill? The hon. gentleman pretends that the United States will not grant a treaty. Then, why go there? Why try to obtain a treaty? What is the Government's policy in regard to this question? They stated before the people in certain parts of the Dominion that they did not want reciprocity. Why, then, are the Government going to Washington? In other parts of the country they said they wanted reciprocity. Why do they not admit it to-day, and declare before this House and the country—that we on this side of the House are right in asking reciprocity with the United States? There must be some logic on their part as well as on ours. I cannot understand their arguments on this point. Then the hon. gentleman said if, as shown by the census, the population has not increased sufficiently, that is due to the rebellion in 1885. Mr. Speaker, you are a most intelligent man, and I wish you would try and get me out of the difficulty. What has the rebellion in 1885 to do with the population? I admit there were over 200 men killed. There might have been in the country those 200 men and 400 or 500 more children. But what has the rebellion to do with the census? I admit we had a rebellion; but hon. gentlemen opposite should never speak of it. They should remember that if we had a rebellion it was due to their maladministration, to the tyranny of their officials in the North-West, to the persecution of the poor half-breeds. We do not know yet perhaps all the troubles and hardships to which they were exposed through those officials. They should know that there never would have been a rebellion by those quiet, peaceful and honest men, the children of the prairie, but for the tyrannical conduct of those officials. They know another fact, which is already historical, and it is this, that if there was any blood shed, that if there was a gun fired it was due to our not sending forward a friend with the white flag to try and induce those poor children of the prairie to return to their homes. But we sent our mounted police. Our police went there and the half-breeds assembled; but they were quietly assembled. Who fired first? Even before reading the Riot Act the Mounted Police fired; and we became murderers of the half-breeds there. We went into the war without necessity to satisfy, I will not say what sentiment, although I suspect it; and when we were there with an army we went there to satisfy the glory of one man, the general, and we worked for the glory of another man who was quietly sitting here seeing that millions were spent. That war could have been stopped very easily. One intelligent man inspired with good-will, by going into that country, could have prevented it. No, it was necessary; somebody in this country wanted to destroy that little body of people. They hoped to destroy them. They pushed those people to rebellion. They harassed them so much that at last they sent for whom? For a poor fool, who had been half his life in an asylum, but who was the son of a patriot, and who, when in his right mind, was a patriot himself. His father had helped those people against the exactions of a large and powerful company, and they knew he held the same sentiments, and they sent for him. We were the provokers and fired the first shot and entered upon the war.

An hon. MEMBER. Question.

Mr. AMYOT. Who says "question?" I will send that hon. gentleman to Texas at once, but I will remain in this country. If the debate has taken this turn, it is not my fault. Who spoke of the rebellion of 1885? Did the hon. gentleman shout "question" when his friend spoke. It is quite right for hon. gentlemen opposite to say what they please, but when we speak they cry "question," "order," "do not speak of that question." I am answering the hon. gentleman who preceded me. If the hon. gentleman who interrupted me is not pleased, he knows where the smoking room is.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. AMYOT. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Mackintosh) asked us in a very solemn way: What the members of the Opposition in this House had done to help the Government to promote the interests of Canada? I was rather surprised at that question. Surely, the Government cannot hope that we will assist them in a policy which we do not find conducive to the public good, and in a policy which will not ensure the future prosperity of this country. They cannot hope that we will support them in their wrong and foolish administration. We give them the general features of a policy which in our minds is destined to develop all our resources, and to help the farmers, without destroying the manufacturing interests. I will go a step further than that. Those hon.

gentlemen opposite must remember that some years ago Sir Charles Tupper, the representative of Canada in England, went to France and obtained from that great country her consent to give to Canada a treaty which would include us in the privileges secured to the most favoured nations. Sir Charles Tupper succeeded in his mission to France in this respect, and when he returned to England, England consented at once that Canada should be included in the benefits of the treaty already existing between France and England. When the question came to Ottawa, who refused to accept this privilege, and who said "no," to this concession made by France? Who said that Canada should not be benefited by a treaty with France, and who was the obstacle to our obtaining the markets of France, if not the late Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald? I told that to the hon. gentleman himself in this honourable House, and nobody dare to contradict my statement then. Let me point out to the House that we are spending hundreds of thousand of dollars to open up new markets for Canada that we are going everywhere to countries beyond the seas to try and obtain their markets, but that at the same time, we are refusing the immense markets at our very doors, and that we have refused the market offered to us by France; that nation which keeps in the front ranks amongst the greatest commercial and industrial nations of the world. France was ready and had consented to trade with us, and it was the present Government of Canada, and the Ministers now sitting on the Treasury benches, and their late chief, who refused that great boon that we could have so easily obtained. They declined that offer from France in spite of our protests on this side of the House. How, then, can the Ministry say to-day that we do not help them to advance the prosperity of the country? They have no justification for so saying, because it is the present Tory party who is responsible if we cannot now send our goods to the French market. I am informed that our Canadian cheese is to-day sent to England, and that the Canadian trade mark is taken from it there and replaced by the English trade mark, to be sent to France and to benefit the pockets of the English merchants. That is due to the fact that this Government has refused the French market, and what excuse can they offer for that? I hope that some of the hon. members on the Government benches will find at least a kind of excuse for their action in this regard. Now, Mr. Speaker, our worthy leader of the Opposition has been asking for many years that we should obtain the right to make our own treaties with other nations; and who refused to look for that privilege? Who desires to keep this country as it were in a state of infancy, and to proclaim to the world that we are not intelligent enough to transact our own affairs with other countries and without the interference of an office in London, in which our letters sometimes remain for years without being answered, who is responsible for that except the Tory party of Canada? Hon. gentlemen opposite say that we have done nothing to help them. We have suggested many ideas, we have given them the key of the situation, but they have refused to use it. If Canada has to transact business to-day with the United States, we have first to seek the English Ambassador at Washington, and this plenipotentiary has to telegraph and to write to London to receive his instructions. We have three intermediaries for any negotiations between the United States and ourselves, and the consequence is that often we lose our chances to make beneficial arrangements for ourselves and for our trade with the United States. What care does England take of our interests in her treaties with other nations? When has she taken care that the interests of the Canadian people should be looked after, when we are ready to overlook our commercial interests for her sake? What care has she ever taken that we should benefit by her treaties with other nations? What right have gentlemen opposite to tell us that we do not help them when we have told them that we are ready to join hand in hand with them so as to obtain from England the privilege and the right which we are entitled to—knowing our interests as we do, and knowing our strength as we do—to make our own treaties? We are ready to help the Government in that, but the Government refuse to benefit by our aid. Let them give us some good reason why they refuse this offer; but in the meantime let them not throw out the insinuation that we do not help them. Let the Government propose some good measure upon any subject whatever, and they will find us ready and willing to extend them our aid. But we cannot help them in maintaining a policy which consists in keeping this country depopulated, and in keeping it in poverty, so that it may be bought easier at election times with what remains of the public money in the public chest. Hon. gentlemen opposite are very fond of telling us about the soup kitchens in 1877. Are the hon. gentlemen sure that at the bottom of these demonstrations there was not some help and some advice given by certain members of their party? Are they sure that some prominent members of their party were not exciting the people of Ottawa, and inducing then to come to the gates of this Parliament House to ask for bread? Was it not a political dodge organized by some of their party? I think I heard something about it then, I think I heard somebody boasting of the good trick they had played upon Mr. Mackenzie. It is always very easy in a city to tell some roughs to join in a demonstration of that kind; and to say to them: We will give you a glass of whiskey. It is very easy to tell a crowd to come to the gates of the House of Commons and to say that they are starving for bread and that they want work. That may be done by some people in any city of this Dominion. They may gather a crowd of 200 or 500 or 1,000 people to go to the Government and say: We want bread or we will starve; but that is no evidence whatever that there is distress in the country. At all events it is no answer to the deplorable results of the census of 1891, to say that in 1877 some shops were closed in Ottawa and some people were asking for money and bread. We are told also, that if, as proven by the census, the population has decreased, it is due to the fact that the late George Brown when he went to the States to obtain a reciprocity treaty had instructions not to discriminate against English goods. What was the cry in the last elections, Mr. Speaker? The cry of the Government and their supporters was that if the Liberal party obtained power immediately, they would pass legislation which would discriminate against England and which would be disloyal to Canada and to the mother land. We tell them that since we have seen the development of their policy, it has been understood by the country at large that the first interest we must observe is the Canadian interest. In spite of that, they say that they will not discriminate; that is, they will protect England, whilst England refuses to protect us in other countries. Well, that principle, though laid down in the elections, was not fully understood everywhere, but it will be soon understood so well that it will be impossible for hon. gentlemen opposite to derive any benefit from it. With regard to the press, I speak in my own behalf, without binding anyone, when I say that I see no harm in the press of this young country, where the population is small, being encouraged—not in a corrupt way or by undue favours, but by having access to public contracts, duly advertised and given to the highest tenderer. I do not approve of the principle of having a national printing establishment, and taking away from private enterprise the printing work of the country. It is a wrong principle; it is putting into the hands of the Government too much patronage; it is taking away from the courageous men of the printing industry a source of revenue which ought to belong to them. We have seen with what terrible results the working of the Printing Bureau in Ottawa has been accompanied. I would prefer that the printing of the public documents should be done by tender by the ordinary printing establishments. Besides, the press of the country deserves to be encouraged. We have seen during this session what an immense amount of expense must have been incurred by the press in sending long telegraphic reports of sittings of the House lasting for many hours, and during a session lasting over four months. Can we expect that the proprietors of those papers will not find their resources exhausted? Why not, if we may do it honestly, grant them some help by giving them a share of those revenues which accrue from honest contracts? They have to keep here a staff of intelligent and hard-working men; they have to pay for the editors who receive those reports and superintend the composition; they have to pay immense sums to the telegraph companies. Then, where is the harm that a little of the public money should reach them? It would be much preferable to seeing thousands of dollars going fraudulently into the hands of the chiefs of those bureaus which have been created against the public interest. If we find a way of giving honest help to the press, we should do it. What we complain of, is that a certain press receive preferences without tender, for the purchase of their influence. The press that receives that cannot be independent, cannot have that freedom of action and thought necessary in dealing with the powers of the state. I only said these few words in answer to the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Mackintosh). I rose more especially to answer a few words which were delivered last night by the hon. Minister of Finance, who I regret to see is not in his seat, though I declared from my place that I would refer to his remarks. I was not here when he delivered that speech. I was enjoying the hospitality of our ex-Speaker, one of our worthy military men, and admiring the rifle range at Ottawa and the gallant officers and men who were there exercising themselves in the art of shooting. While there, I could not avoid thinking of our poor target in Quebec, which is closed by the stubborn action of the Minister of Militia. I saw how well it was to encourage those men who gave so much of their time and money to promote the militia of the country, and who are prepared to fight the fights of the country whenever they are called upon. But I regretted to find that while I was there the Minister of Finance had made a most extraordinary attack upon a Government of which no member was present in this House, a Government which in no way forms a branch of this Parliament. I will first read what he said:

"Sir Richard might have a high notion of punishing boodlers and putting down demoralization. Surely the leader of the Opposition might find a very convenient field for the operation of this policy with the Government of his friend in a province that was very close to him at that moment. (Cheers.) Sir Richard had deplored that the present Government was ruled by virtue of the Red Parlour and contributions taken from manufacturers, but it had not been shown that any other than one Government so legislated and so worked their plans by using notes in the bank as to take $100,000 of the people's money in order to protest elections in the Province of Quebec and assist the hon. leader of the Opposition in this House. (Liberal groans and Ministerial cheers.) Sir Richard had better look at the Langeliers and Merciers and Pacauds who lined the skirts of his own party and remember that if his policy had been successful in the last election these men would have been in high places instead of being mere side shows in a great spectacular drama. (Cheers.)"

Mr. Speaker, these words involve four principles. The first one is that we have a mission and jurisdiction to investigate and pass judgment upon the policy and administration of the Local Legislatures.

An hon. MEMBER. That is true.

Mr. AMYOT. Who is the member that says "that is true"? I would like to know him. Is it Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn)? Well, he did not make a good bull's-eye centre there. He is a great man, that we know; he has a right, with his bright intelligence, to pass judgment on anything in this land. He will go to the United States, to Europe, to Africa, and everywhere else, and dominate at the height of his genius. I congratulate him on the talents which Providence has bestowed upon him; but he had better wait and hear what I have to say, so as to understand the question. The second principle involved is that we approve of the action of the Senate in holding an investigation on the mode adopted by the Local Legislature of employing and applying its moneys. The third principle is that this House should take cognizance of investigations held before a Committee of the Senate, even before that Committee has reported the evidence, and before its conclusions have been adopted by the Senate itself. Fourth, that it is not fair and loyal to pass judgment ex parte upon persons not even invited to appear, not accused juridically, not put upon their defence. Mr. Speaker, I deny the soundness and the propriety of every one of those four propositions. Each Parliament is supreme within the limits of its jurisdiction. No one should encroach upon the other, and no encroachment can be productive of good. Forsooth, each has quite enough to occupy the whole of its time and to strain the whole of its energy. We will not have here one-quarter of the time required to unearth the scandals, embezzlements, misappropriations, prevarications, thefts, forgeries and other crimes being daily brought to light, and by means of which the past and present Administrations have been maintained in power, if we may judge by the events which have been discovered recently. It is, besides, grossly improper and indelicate to pass judgment against another power in the state quite as legally existing as the Federal Government itself. Among the divers Parliaments of Canada, the laws of nations should prevail. What would be said if the Government of Russia were to pass judgment upon the Government of England? Or if the American Congress were to declare that the Dominion Administration was rotten to the bone and following a ruinous fiscal policy, and unworthy of individual or collective respect? Does he not know that, as between power and power, the greatest courtesy is necessary? Men may be in a wider field, but they remain human, and the principles which apply to a large number of men aggregated under the law apply equally to a smaller number of men so aggregated. We have no jurisdiction to judge the Administration of a province, and we commit a gross impropriety when we do so. If such an abuse should be often resorted to between the divers provinces of Confederation our union would be soon shaken. We would injure Confederation itself. Besides, there are two other reasons why we should not approve of the action of the Senate in the enquete held by its Committee upon the Administration of the Province of Quebec. The first reason is that the Senate has no more right than we have ourselves.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. AMYOT. I am called to order. Why did the hon. Minister of Finance base his argument upon an enquete held by the Senate?

Mr. SPEAKER. I did not understand the Minister of Finance to refer to anything that took place in the Senate. But the gentleman is referring directly to what took place in the Senate.

Mr. AMYOT. I am speaking of the rights of this House. I contend that we have no right to approve or to blame the action of the Senate. I hold, as a conclusion from the same principle, that neither this House nor the Senate has the right to enquire into the administration of another Government.

Mr. SPEAKER. A member of this House mus not refer to what took place in another branch of the legislature in disparaging terms, respecting the action of that branch.

Mr. AMYOT. Very well, I will say this: The Senate believe they have the right to investigate into the administration of the Quebec Government. They have all the rights we have, and I say we have no right to investigate facts which concern another Government. I understood the Minister of Finance to have approved the action of the Senate, and I say he had no right to do so, because if he had the right to approve their action he would have equally the right to condemn it, and he has no such right. Now, if we had the right to approve or condemn the action of the Senate, what would be the consequence? We might go on criticising their actions, some bitter feelings might ensue, we might quarrel with them about their doings, and they would retaliate and condemn our acts, and the time of each body would be spent in discussing the words and actions of the members of the other, and in that case what would become of the public interest? Our time, which costs so much to the country, would be entirely taken up by such recriminations. If we have no right to discuss the acts of the Senate, a fortiori we have no right to discuss the actions of other Governments. This is a most serious question, and I was astonished to see the stand then taken by a Minister of the Crown, who is supposed to represent the views of Her Majesty, and Her Majesty is equally supposed to dictate the actions and words of Ministers of the Crown in a province as well as in the Dominion. I say it is too early to judge the merits of the enquete taken by the Senate. Would it not be decent to wait until the final report of the Senate investigation is submitted to us? What would we say of a court that would pronounce judgment on an incomplete record? Is it worthy of this House to disgrace its record by bitterly attacking and censuring absentees, who were not called upon to present their statements of facts and the evidence in support of the same?

Mr. TAYLOR. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is reading his speech.

Mr. AMYOT. (Translation.) Well, Mr. Speaker, I am going to speak in French without reading my notes, since, in the hopes of cutting the thread of my speech, some one has the indelicacy of refusing me the indulgence of reading a few notes which I have made. Owing to the importance of the subject, I will resort to the right that I have here, the right given me by the constitution, I will speak in French, and take all the time necessary for my purpose. These petty means, which are unworthy of a strong party, will not succeed in dislodging me from my position, nor make that party right. In my own language I have no need to prepare my speeches in writing. I can express my humble thoughts as I please, and at great enough length to annoy some of the hon. members, and you will be none the richer. But it will be known to my countrymen, that before coming to Ottawa, to the centre of this confederation, into which we have been dragged under false pretenses, one has to learn English; that otherwise one is not equal to the situation. You want to take advantage of us on the knowledge of the English language. And yet you will not be able to come amongst us and defend yourself when we tell of your conduct, while if you undertake to attack us we will be capable of meeting you and unmasking you.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must address himself to the Chair.

Mr. AMYOT. (Translation.) Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is what I am doing; I am telling, through you, to the hon. member that no one in this House will prevent me from expressing my views, on account of my want of proficiency in English. I know what are the rules of the House, and I know what is a question of order. These means will no longer take. When you are through scraping your desks with your feet, which are worth more than your heads, I shall proceed with my speech. Mr. Speaker, since I am not allowed to speak in English, as I am able to, I will ask you in French, to secure for me the same silence you obtain when Englishmen are speaking. I will demand, since we are forced to speak French in this House, that we are respected. Through deference for the majority we make efforts to speak English, notwithstanding our lack of proficiency. But if this is not acceptable and we are forced to speak in French, why, then, we must require that we are listened to.

Mr. SPEAKER. As an old parliamentarian, the hon. gentleman knows he must not read his speech; but he may refer to his notes.

Mr. AMYOT. I will bow to your decision, Sir, and will express my admiration for the liberality of my hon. friends opposite. I do not usually read even my notes, but this point is so very important that I would not like to risk giving it in any language other than my own without notes, because I understand that the question we have to deal with here is a most important one, concerning, as it does, the relations and intercourse between two Governments of this Dominion. I regret that the judgment passed and the words uttered by the Minister of Finance received such hearty applause from his party. His words are fraught with danger and are a precedent which at any moment may be evoked to justify very unfair, and unpatriotic, and obnoxious interferences; and I fear for a party which does not understand these principles; I fear for the country which would support that party, when it was properly informed. Now, I come to the facts of the case. The hon. Minister has gone into questions of fact, and I am bound to follow him, with the evidence which I could gather. I have no official mission to do so; I have no personal interest in doing so; but I have the right to do so because the right of attack implies the right of defence, and I have more right even than the Minister, because I belong to the province which he has attacked, and he does not. We do not apply the same laws in our province that he does in his as to morals and civil obligations. I respect his convictions, though they could not be mine. I will speak freely, because I will speak in my own personal name without binding anyone, but I know that my views are the views of a great number, and will be supported by the people at large. The hon. Minister invited my worthy leader to occupy himself with the punishment of local boodlers. That course would be in a line with the course of encroachment on the provinces which prevails on the other side of the House, but, suppose there would be something to punish, it would not agree with those who, for the sake of Confederation, are autonomists and who believe in the principle of wisdom which says: Mind your own business. The hon. Minister has qualified as boodle the obtaining of $100,000 to contest certain elections, and he has associated with that act the names of Messrs. Pacaud, Langelier and Mercier. I may state here that, if any corrupt act has been committed, proper justice will be applied. The National party of Quebec, formed of the best elements of the old Conservative and Liberal parties, will shirk no enquiry, will shield nobody, they will not soil their flag nor punish the small to save the big, they will apply equal justice to all, they will employ no lawyer to try to induce the witnesses not to speak or to refuse to give access to their books. Allow me here to remind the hon. gentleman that, if any corrupt act has been committed, we have the right to bring his friends, his colleagues, his party en garantie, to tell them: You have so much demoralized the public at large by your policy since 1882 that some persons may have been led astray, may have been induced to look upon public property as res nullius, as being lost properly belonging to the first occupant. If some wrong has been done at Quebec, which we do not know yet, I say to my hon. friends opposite, be fair and just, consider in what state you have put our people at large, consider the hundreds of thousands of dollars, even the millions, which you have taken from the public treasury to corruptly give to your chief organizers. You have corrupted the public mind, you have induced the people, or a great many of them, to believe that it was fair and just to steal the property of the public, and you are responsible for the state of the public mind in that regard; but is there anything to warrant us in declaring that there has been such boodling, such demoralization, such misapplication of public money, such corrupt bargains as far as Messrs. Langelier, Pacaud and Mercier are concerned? What are the facts? As far as we have had communication of the facts, they are the following:—There is a railway called the Baie des Chaleurs. It was formed by members of this House. Since its formation, one of them, then a member of this House, has withdrawn from politics, another was appointed Lieutenant Governor and is now in the next House, for whom I have such a deep respect, and another still belongs to this House—no, I mistake—a few days ago he sent in his resignation. But the three were ardent supporters of the Government, and they obtained subsidies from the Government. The hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) is there, and will correct me if I am wrong. They obtained subsidies from the Federal Government first, and then from the Local Government. Those devoted gentlemen who organized that company subscribed each of them the immense sum of—nothing at all.

Mr. LANGELIER. And paid it.

Mr. AMYOT. Yes; they paid nothing at all. Those organizers got some contractors—we will have a few words about that very soon coming from another Committee. But there was a sham beginning, they received subsidies for the first 60 miles, that is the first 20 miles, and then the 40 miles, of about $900,000, an amount sufficient to pay over $15,000 per mile. According to the engineers, the total cost of construction would be about $15,000 per mile. But, Sir, when they had received enough to pay for the whole construction, what do we find? We find that they owed to Mr. Macfarlane $190,000 for work done, and they owed Mr. Armstrong $298,000. It would require to complete the road something like $60,000, making in all $548,000. Where has that money gone? They have received enough to pay over $15,000 per mile, and they still owe $548,000. Where is it? There is no Local Government boodling here. It is not Langelier boodling, it is not Pacaud boodling. Where is the money? Oh, you watchful guardians of public property, now is your time! Now, apply your knowledge, your intelligence, to find out where is that $548,000.

Mr. COCKBURN. Is the hon. gentleman asking me the question?

Mr. AMYOT. No.

Mr. COCKBURN. If he is, I will suggest that he ask Mr. Mercier.

Mr. AMYOT. I hope the hon. gentleman will give us the pleasure of an answer.

Mr. LISTER. He is as sharp as a razor.

Mr. AMYOT. Yes, now is your time. When we are trying to find out where the public money has gone, here are millions abstracted from the public purse—where has it gone? It has not been put into the road. The Government has paid for all the work that has been done, but the road is not built—where has the money gone? I was not a party to that investigation. I find that I am a most humble member of this House, perhaps I am not worthy to take part in that enquete, but there were some members of this House who were more highly favoured; they were there, and they used their influence, they had the ear of the Senators, they could be understood by your press. What became of the money? I am not speaking under oath, but I think that the oath of others has elicited the facts I now give. I want to find out where is that money. That is the question. If this House, which has the same rights as the other House, may enquire into the money voted by this Parliament, and if in doing so it has to find out about the money voted by the Local Parliament, then so much the better for the truth. I know that if an enquete had been held by this House—because I am not allowed to speak about the Senate—we would not have limited our investigation to the $100,000 of the Government of the Province of Quebec: we would have gone further, and we would have insisted to know what became of the rest of the money voted by this Parliament. Now, when the Government of the Province of Quebec shall be impeached by the Opposition, when a declaration is made by some member of the Opposition questioning the honesty of the Government, and when they have an investigation, if their money has been mixed up with the money of Ottawa, they will be obliged to do what we should be obliged to do, if we were holding that enquete, that is, to enquire about all the facts. Well, they have a chance to find out the truth about the whole concern. At all events, this is the first transaction. Of the $900,000 voted by the two Governments, a great part has disappeared. The Government of the Province of Quebec adopted the policy of favouring the construction of railways. The Mercier Government decided to help the Baie des Chaleurs Railway. They began by paying the poor workingmen, those who had dug the earth and opened the ditches to make the roadbed. These were not paid, and the Mercier Government began by paying them. Then, they decided to grant a sum of over $200,000. But they said to themselves: The present Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company is not a serious one, not a genuine company, they have not put one cent into the enterprise, we do not know what became of the money, the labourers are not paid, the sub-contractors are not paid; we want a new company because we want the road. Then they said: We will give so much to a new company, composed of sound and solvent men, who will undertake to build the road. A new company was formed. Mr. Thom, of Montreal, was the secretary of that company, composed of solid men. Mr. Thom said: Our company will undertake to build the road provided we can get rid of Mr. Amstrong, or at all events we want to get possession of the road without any claims upon it. Then begins the transaction against which the Finance Minister makes his charge. Well, what occurred? Mr. Armstrong asked Mr. Thom to pay him his claim of $298,000. Mr. Thom and Mr. Amstrong together, without the interference of anyone else, figured Armstrong's claim at $175,000. Mr. Amstrong's claim was certified to by the engineer of the company, by the officers of the old company and by the engineer of the new company itself. So the claim existed, it was a legal one and an accepted one by the old company. Mr. Thom obtains a reduction, as I said, of Armstrong's claim to $175,000. Then Mr. Thom goes to the Government of the Province of Quebec; he goes to New York to meet two Ministers who were on their way to the Southern States. I suppose there is no Minister in this House who believes that a trip to the Southern States is wrong. They were going there, after the session, for their health. Well, Mr. Thom meets Mr. Langelier and Mr. Robidoux in New York, and they exchange a few words, but nothing is done. When they returned from the Southern States they go to Quebec, and there Mr. Thom meets the Executive in the room where the Executive holds its sessions. Is Mr. Pacaud there? No. Is Mr. Armstrong there? No. Is it done at once as an affair settled beforehand? No. Many sittings and many interviews take place. The thing is discussed, proposals are made, and finally Mr. Thom and the Ministers come to an understanding, and, upon that understanding, Mr. Thom writes an official letter as a proposal, which is accepted by the Government, and the Government pay to Mr. Thom $175,000 out of the subsidies voted by the people. Where is the boodling in that? I ask it of any impartial man. I do not see there was any boodling in the transaction, and I say there was nothing to justify such a charge. Up to the present we know that between Mr. Thom and the Local Government there was a straightforward contract for the payment of the subsidies voted by the people. Between Mr. Thom and Mr. Armstrong I do not see there was any boodling. What occurred? Mr. Armstrong goes to Mr. Thom and says that he wants a cheque accepted, because he wants to pay a certain amount which has been borrowed with the guarantee of Mr. Pacaud. Later on, we see that Mr. Thom pays to Mr. Armstrong the amount of $100,000 on the reduced claim of $175,000. What occurred after that between Mr. Armstrong and Mr. Pacaud? What do we know about it? Mr. Pacaud was not here to defend himself. But there was a letter from the Prime Minister of the Province of Quebec stating that he had told Mr Pacaud: Go, deny the jurisdiction, but state everything that occurred. If Mr. Pacaud had thought that the Senate were encroaching upon the jurisdiction of the Local House, and if he would not postpone his contemplated trip to Europe, that is his own lookout, and he must account for it. I am not here to defend him or to approve of his actions. But I say that up to the present time we only know what I have indicated. We know that the transaction was as follows:—A payment was made by the Government of the Province of Quebec to Mr. Thom, according to the statute, without any undue interference, and after a prolonged discussion between Mr. Thom and the members of the Executive. This is the first part. Where is the justification for a Minister of the Crown, relying on that evidence, taxing Mr. Mercier and Mr. Langelier with boodling? It is all very fine for him at this moment to do so, and he was cheered by his party; but the matter is not over. It will come before the people and another judgment will be passed, and if the enquete turns against his pretensions, if the enquete should prove that Mr. Thom told the truth, where will he be? He will be in the position of a foul calumniator, who, without evidence, throws out all sorts of accusations contrary to the facts. That will be his position. What was the second transaction? Mr. Thom got Mr. Armstrong to reduce his claim from $298,000 to $175,000. It was a bonâ fide claim. He paid Mr. Armstrong $100,000 out of that. Where is the harm? Is there any Pacaud or Langelier or Mercier interference? No. Where is the harm? He had received that money specially to make that payment, and he made it. What right did it give the Minister to say that a Minister was boodling when Mr. Thom was paying Mr. Armstrong a legitimate claim and paying according to the purpose for which he had received the money. We must be careful when we speak of the position of a Minister or a Cabinet in view of the intercourse between the two Governments. The hon. gentleman has evidently forgotten his dignity and his responsibility. He had judged that the enquete was over, that it was complete, that the parties had been put on their trial and had given their evidence. He had decided the case beforehand. The position of hon. gentlemen opposite must be terrible if they have to resort to such means as that: it must be desperate indeed. They must be at a loss for arguments with which to answer the charges that we fairly make in the public interest when they resort to an attack on mere rumour. The House will remember that if I go into these details it is to answer the charge made by the Minister in a few words. It is very easy to say "you are a boodler." It forces us to face public opinion, to enter into details, and to show it is false even from the data which we have before us. We have to do it. I throw the blame on the hon. gentlemen, if I have to go into details. I do not admit our jurisdiction, but I want to prove not only that the case is beyond our jurisdiction but that the statement of the Minister was contrary to the facts, and that he gratuitously insulted the Prime Minister of another Government who was not here to defend himself. Well, then, what occurred between Mr. Pacaud and Mr. Armstrong? As I have said, we do not know yet; but I deny that it is possible to find any crime in the transaction up to now, or that an indictment could be based on the facts we possess. Can we find any corrupt bargain in what has been done? I should like to know what is a corrupt bargain in the mind of the hon. gentleman opposite. Surely, he would not associate himself with colleagues and would not fight under a chief guilty of corrupt bargains? In order to find out exactly what he understands by a corrupt bargain, we will proceed by analogy and by comparison. I have been brought up in the Conservative school, as has the district of Quebec. The vigour of my youth was devoted to Conservative interests. I had unlimited faith in my chiefs, in Taché, in Cartier, Belleau, and in Langevin, who put on Cartier's mantle the very day of his funeral, when his ashes were still warm. It did not then occur to me that my chiefs could prevaricate. The Pacific transaction sprang up in the midst of my most complete and enthusiastic admiration for my chiefs. I hardly conceived there could be any such doings on the part of those worthy men as would justify the appellation "scandal." What, then, was the Pacific affair? It is important to recall the facts to our memory so as to apply the facts occurring to-day to the principles laid down then. I will give these facts, not to blame this present Administration, but to remind them of the rules laid down by themselves, and which they must apply to themselves if they want to be fair and just, if they want to be looked upon as sincere. I will read first a letter dated 30th July, 1872, sent from Montreal. Unfortunately it is "private and confidential," but, as I said the other day, the principle is now admitted that when a letter is marked "private and confidential" it is to be published at once, wrongly and incomplete, if necessary. The letter is as follows:—

"MONTREAL, 30th July, 1872.

"(Private and confidential.)

"DEAR SIR HUGH,—The friends of the Government will expect to be assisted with funds in the pending elections, and any amount which you or your company shall advance for that purpose shall be recouped to you. A memorandum of immediate requirements is below."

"GEORGE E. CARTIER."

Here is the memorandum of the sums required:

"NOW WANTED.

Sir John A. Macdonald	$25,000
Mr. Langevin	15,000
Sir G. E. C.	20,000
Sir J. A. (additional)	10,000
Mr. Langevin	10,000
Sir G. E. C.	30,000

But now we have the evidence of Sir Hugh Allan, given a few months afterwards, who says in making up what he paid it amounted to:

To Sir G. E. Cartier's committee	$85,000
To Sir John Macdonald, towards election expenses in Ontario	45,000
To Mr. Langevin, towards election expenses in Quebec	32,600
	$162,600

I thought there was nothing paid for elections in Ontario, but they got more than Quebec. That does not look to be fair. Sir Hugh added:

"I also paid for the assistance of other friends of my own, in connection with the elections, between $16,000 and $17,000. These sums with the preliminary expenses on the Pacific and various railroads in which I was engaged, more or less directly connected with the Pacific enterprise, made up the amount of my advances to about $350,000."

So, if we take Sir Hugh Allan's evidence the whole of the subscriptions amounted to about $350,000; but let us go on. We have got the evidence of a man against whom I have never said one word, a man who must be respected by any one of my hon. friends to your right, Mr. Speaker, a man of talent, of energy, of ability, and a most honourable man. Let us see what he said then. Let us see what he understood by a corrupt bargain and what is not a corrupt bargain, for I want to exactly understand the ideas of my hon. friends opposite, to be able to judge the actual facts. With the utmost admiration for the man whose words I will quote I will proceed. I suppose my hon. friends have already anticipated that there is only one man in the country who could have so much admiration on my part, and that is Mr. Abbott. On 30th July, he said:

"We then rose to leave and were leaving the room when Sir George addressed Sir Hugh on the subject of money in the manner which Sir Hugh has described. He said in an off-hand kind of way, 'Are you not going to help us with our elections?' Sir Hugh said he would, or words to that effect, and said, 'How much do you want?' or 'How much do you require?' or something like that. I understood Sir George to say that there would be a considerable sum required, as there was so much opposition on various grounds. Sir Hugh said, as far as I can recollect: 'Well, write down what you want.' Sir George said very rapidly: 'You know you won't lose it all. Our party will make up the greater part of what you give, but we want it now,' or something like that. My memory is very imperfect as to the exact phrases used, as I never endeavoured to recollect them until lately, when the matter became the subject of conversation. Sir George then said: 'Very well, come back this afternoon. Let Mr. Abbott write a note requesting you to advance this money and telling you that I will see that you are repaid, and come back this afternoon at such an hour and we will close the whole matter up.' We left upon that."

Mr. SPEAKER. I hope my hon. friend can see the relevancy of the remarks which he is making, but for my own part, I confess I cannot see what bearing they have on the motion before the House.

Mr. AMYOT. The relevancy according to me is to apply the principles necessary to qualify the bargain to see whether it is corrupt or not. I am comparing the bargain made in 1872 by the then Administration, with the bargain which Mr. Pacaud and Mr. Mercier are accused by the hon. Minister of Finance to have made in Quebec. I want to show by comparison, that if one is not corrupt, the other should not be corrupt either; and if the other is corrupt, then the present Government do not properly apply the right principle. I want to guide myself, because I may have been led astray since I left the other side of the House as to my views, and I want to recall to mind the principles of the hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. SPEAKER. I call the attention of the hon. member to the motion under discussion. In the first place the motion declares:

That it appears from the official returns recently laid on the Table of this House, that the total population of the Dominion of Canada on or about the 1st day of April, 1891, was 4,829,344.

And it goes on to say:

That during the last ten years the actual taxation of the people of Canada has been enormously increased under the operation of the existing tariff.

That the deplorable state of things disclosed by the above-mentioned returns imperatively commands a radical change in the policy and methods of government followed by the Administration.

Mr. AYMOT. I am very thankful to the hon. Speaker for having read the motion to me, but I happen to know it, because I translated it for a newspaper last night. I am trying to prove that the statement made by the Finance Minister yesterday, from his seat in this House, qualifying as boodle the transaction in the Province of Quebec was wrongly called boodling by him. The arguments I bring forward would have no weight if they were my own arguments, or my own way of applying the principles to facts. I dare not do that before this honourable House, but I am taking the principles of the Government themselves, the principles by which they stood in 1872 and ever since, and I think I must be allowed to do that. If I am travelling beyond the question before the House I think it is too late to find that out. It should have been found out when the hon. Minister of Finance himself went beyond the question. I admit that he was not speaking to the question, and I know that he had no right to say what he said, and that it was not fair for him to say so; but, as he has done so, the right of attack means the right of defence, and I feel that I am bound to prove that he is wrong. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will not be long now. There is a nice little part to come and it would be better to let me give it to the House. I will make it as short as possible. If I were blaming the Government I know it would not please my honourable adversaries, but I am not blaming the Government. I am only stating their own principles so as to apply them, and nothing else. It is a compliment which I pay them and they cannot blame me. I say: Gentlemen, here is a mirror of your virtues, look at them. It goes on to say:

"I had a conversation early in the session with Mr. Langevin about the expenses incurred in the elections at Quebec. Mr. Langevin mentioned to me that at the previous general election he had been obliged to expend a very considerable sum of money, not very large in itself, but large comparatively, and he said he did not think it fair that the burden of these elections should rest entirely on him. He said he thought he ought to have a share of any funds subscribed in Montreal for election purposes to assist in Quebec, which he had not had in previous elections, and that they could not expect much of a subscription from Quebec to help the Government. I agreed with him in thinking that it was unfair that he should bear the burden of the Quebec elections, and I told him that in so far as I could have any influence in the matter I would try that he should have a portion of any fund which might be got up in Montreal for general election purposes."

Then the following questioning took place:—

"Q. You were acting as confidential agent to Sir Hugh Allan with respect to the money?

"A. No: I don't think I was. Sir Hugh asked me to assist him in this affair. I think the preponderance of his motive was that my professional practice had led me in the direction of this kind of business—the organization of companies. I also took an interest as a public man in this particular railway, but I considered I was acting more as the solicitor of Sir Hugh than in any other capacity I can describe. I never was in any sense his agent.

"Q. I think you were made the medium through which the moneys were paid for election purposes?

"A. Only while Sir Hugh was in Newfoundland. I never had anything further to do with the moneys than this. I was present when those letters which I have described were talked about, and signed, and when Sir Hugh left for Newfoundland I was made the medium of communication with him with respect to three or four transactions."

He declares here that he had asked some receipt from Mr. Langevin but he was refused. The hon. Minister of Public Works was very prudent. It is always easier to deny anything when there is no receipt given, and he did not give any receipt, but we have incontrovertible evidence that he received the money. Let us go on:

"To my own mind Sir Hugh Allan's motives as described by him are perfectly clear. He is interested in the carrying trade to an enormous extent. About $3,000,000 of his fortune is invested in the carrying trade alone. I mean in sea-going steamers alone. He has also a large amount of money invested in the inland carrying trade. He was forced, as he imagined, and not unwillingly perhaps, to enter into an organization for an extensive series of railways providing for a second communication between the sea-board and the interior of the country. He had taken up with a vast deal of energy and enthusiasm this Pacific Railway scheme. He had been himself a member of the canal commission, if not the chairman of it, and had taken a great interest in that. On every one of these subjects the Government had a policy which was favourable to his views, and in my opinion three times the sum would have been well spent if it had been necessary to keep the Government in power which had, according to his views, and my own too, the improvement of the country so deeply at heart as this Government appeared to have."

These, Mr. Speaker, are the views of the hon. leader of this Government, whom we are so sorry not to see amidst us in this honourable House. If I had time I would go on with those quotations; but I will leave this ancient history, and I will come to more recent events. But at all events you will remember this: The principle laid down by the Hon. Mr. Abbott is this, when the Government have a good object in view, a good policy, it is right for them to say to a man give us $350,000 to help us in our elections, to enable us to corrupt the people, to buy the majority, and we will repay you with public money under the form of a public contract. This is the principle applied by the hon. gentleman; and is there a man on your right, Mr. Speaker, who will dare to get up in his seat and condemn the views of his chief? Is there a man on your right who will say that the Hon. Mr. Abbott, the chief of this wise, pure, honest Government, has badly interpreted the common law and the common sense in regard to contracts? He says that when the Government have a good object in view, it is right to sell a contract, to make a corrupt bargain with contractors. He lays it down most distinctly. We do not know what Mr. Pacaud has done. The only thing we can suspect is that he shared money with Mr. Armstrong—not corruptly, not in bargaining for a contract with the Government. While those gentlemen in 1872 and 1873 found that there was no harm in selling public contracts provided they could by that means sustain themselves in power, how can they throw blame and censure upon Mr. Pacaud to-day? Equally without proof they cast censure, and insults, and blame upon the Local Government of the Province of Quebec, who, according to the evidence given up to the present time, are in no way concerned in the transactions between Armstrong and Pacaud, who only had to deal with Mr. Thom, and not between Mr. Thom and Mr. Armstrong. But, Mr. Speaker, if this is ancient history, I will come to more recent events, I will read from the Empire of yesterday. What do we find there? I find the continuation of an examination of a gentleman who is well known, Mr. Rolland, of Montreal:

"The examination of Mr. Rolland was then resumed. In answer to Mr. Lister, he said he knew Mr. C. A. Dansereau, of Montreal, but he denied that he had ever paid him any money personally, except for election funds."

Here is a large paper manufacturer who furnishes paper to this Government to the value of, perhaps, $40,000 a year, and who admits having furnished funds for the elections. But let us go on, and we will see what principle is applied to that transaction by the Minister who gets so indignant when Mr. Pacaud's name is mentioned. There was an objection, one of the Ministers contending that the Committee had nothing to do with subscriptions to election funds:

"Witness, continuing, said that he might have paid money to Mr. Dansereau as a representative of the Conservative Association of Montreal, but he had never paid him any sums for himself."

And further on I read:

"Hon. Mr. Chapleau said that Mr. Rolland's explanation was perfectly satisfactory. He was not ashamed of his intimate friendship with Mr. Dansereau. He was a man anybody might be proud to know. If Mr. Lister asks if Mr. Dansereau has received anything since he has been in the public service, it will be enquired into. He admitted having himself asked Mr. Rolland for a subscription to the election fund last spring. He was not ashamed of it."

Here is the principle laid down not later than yesterday or the day before, that it is right for Ministers of the Crown to ask for subscriptions from contractors who furnish paper or any other things to the Government of this country. There is no danger that the Ministers will think of recouping those subscribers, as was promised in the Pacific affair. They do not think of that danger at all. They do not think that public money may be wasted through gratitude towards those generous subscribers. At any rate, this is the modern idea which this Government applies, and I am sure that no hon. Minister will get up in this House and say to the hon. Secretary of State: If you are not ashamed of doing that, we are ashamed of you. None of them will do that. These are their principles. Well, there is another one. We spoke a moment ago about the transactions in connection with the Baie des Chaleurs. Let us take some recent actions in connection with that affair. I read from the Citizen, which is a good paper, I suppose—a sound paper, which never departs from the truth:

"In regard to purchasing Mr. McGreevy's stock in the road, witness said that he paid him $10,000 in cash and $32,000 out of the subsidies, and still owed him $8,000."

What? A member of this Parliament, not even through the medium of Mr. Thom or Mr. Armstrong, but directly from the subsidies of the Government, received $42,000, and expects $8,000 more, though he has not furnished one cent! And this is fair, and honest, and right; while because Mr. Pacaud is supposed to have had some monetary dealings with Mr. Armstrong, that fact is sufficient ground for a Minister of the Crown to stand in his place in this House and say that Mercier, Pacaud and Langelier are boodlers, and you, Mr. Laurier, should spend your time in punishing boodlers. These are extraordinary principles to be applied on one side and denied on the other. Now, let us see another gentleman. All that Mr. Robitaille got was $24,000 from the new company. $24,000 was all that senator got, who did not put a cent in it. I admit he worked for the road; but when a political man works for his country and has gained the gratitude of his people he has all the reward his heart can desire. Surely, he does not expect to be paid in money besides, but all he received was $24,000; and that must have been paid him out of the Government subsidies, because outside the Governments of Quebec and this Dominion no one put any money in that enterprise. But we do not hear a word against Mr. Robitaille. No; they say you are an honourable man; we will respect you; just as they said to Mr. McGreevy: you are an honorable man, we will respect you. You belong to us and we will lay down in your favour the principles we applied in the case of the Pacific scandal. But when they come to deal with the Pacauds, the Merciers and the Langeliers, they apply another principle. They say you do not belong to our party, we will apply other principles to you; and without evidence, against evidence, we will tax you with being corrupt, and we will call on the chief of the Liberal party, whose energies are all taken up in finding out our own corruption, to exert his energy in punishing those boodlers, who do not exist in fact.

An hon. MEMBER. Question.

Mr. AMYOT. I suppose the hon. gentleman who says "question" finds I am rather far from the census. That is true, but I have been driven from it. These hon. gentlemen should have called "question" when the Minister of Finance took up that subject. He thought his statements would be circulated in the press of the country without being challenged, and now it is too late to call "question." It should have been called yesterday, and then my remarks would not have been rendered necessary by the improper speech of one of the Ministers of the Crown. But perhaps those who call "question" are afraid that I am going to speak of the iniquities in East Northumberland. However, I will not go into that question, except to assert that the same principle has been applied there by hon. gentlemen opposite as they have applied elsewhere. It was understood in that county, if we can believe the witnesses, that public offices, paid out of public money, belong to the friends of the Administration.

Mr. DENISON. I rise to a point of order. I wish to ask whether the hon. gentleman is in order in referring to a matter which is before a Committee.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member must know that he has no right to refer to proceedings before a Committee of this House.

Mr. AMYOT. I only refer to the press which supports them. Now, I want to know who are the hon. gentlemen who attack us in that way? We have seen their participation and the participation of their hon. chief in the Pacific scandal. I do not refer now, because I do not want to refer to the sittings of a Committee which has not yet reported to this House, to the graving dock at Lévis, and the cross-wall, and the dredging contract, and the thirty-five cent contract, and the Esquimalt contract. I will not say that the accountants appointed by the Committee have found that a profit of about $1,000,000 was made on a work costing $2,000,000. I will not go into that, but I will say that it has been proved before this House that the Intercolonial Railway, under the management of hon. gentlemen opposite, is used to qualify the same electors in many counties, and to carry them gratuitously from one county to another on election day. It has been proved before this House that the Public Works Department grants contracts to fictitious persons, and that the Government, by means of the votes of its supporters in this House, has declared to the people that it is right to forge the name of another party or a party not existing. I find that principle laid down by this same Government which brings in a statute declaring forgery to be an infamous crime deserving the penitentiary. I will say it has been decided by the majority of this House that it is right in this Dominion, under the British flag, for any one to say: I will take a contract under the name of another; give it to me, as otherwise if I did not use the false name of another, my tender would be higher. I will take it at a lower rate, but understand you will give me some large extras sufficient to make up the difference. Then the other party says: But the money you promised me for the elections, hand it over now, and the money will come very soon. Then without referring to the committees which have not reported to this House, without referring to the contracts of the printing department, I might speak of that paper Le Monde which, according to the statement of one hon. member of this House, has cost $80,000 of public money. This is not the regular aiding of the press, but it is a wrong and corrupt use of public money to create and sustain a paper which has no other raison d'être than to deceive the people. It is simply the using of public money to corrupt the public mind. I might speak of the contractors who are so useful in election times, and the subsidies to steamers, and the superannuations made in order to place political friends whom the Government desire to reward. I might speak of the subsidies to railways increased during election times. I might speak of the revising officers, of the manufacturers, of the officials of all the departments, used to influence directly and unfairly the electorate of this Dominion; and the men who practise this system are the pure men who go out of their road to look into the affairs of those with whom they have nothing to do and accuse and condemn them without evidence and against the evidence. And whom do they accuse? That Local Cabinet which is their bête noire is composed of Mr. Mercier, who was absent and concerning whom not one word of proof is brought to show that he knew anything of the whole transaction. And it is under those circumstances that a Minister of the Crown here comes forward and says he is a boodler. What respect does that Minister think we can have for his word? Is there one word of truth in his statement? Then there is the Hon. Mr. Ross. Who does not know this respectable citizen? He is universally esteemed, not only by the people of Quebec, but in all the places of this Dominion where he is known, he is looked upon as the most honourable citizen that Canada has ever produced. Then there is the Hon. Mr. Garneau. Where is the spot on his reputation? Is he not one of our leading citizens, who sacrifices his time and energies to foster our industries in the City of Quebec? Then there is the Hon. Mr. Duhamel, a young man of much talent, a self-made man, who was bright at the bar when public confidence called him to the Executive of his province. And the Hon. Mr. Robidoux and Mr. Boyer—what have they to say against them? Do these hon. gentlemen opposite think that they have the monopoly of purity and political virtue and capacity? What right have they to insult gratuitously these gentlemen? Then they have the Hon. Charles Langelier. He was one of our colleagues here. Would the hon. gentleman have dared to say in his presence what he said when he was not here? I am sure he would not, but he knows that Mr. Langelier is far away, and it serves his purpose to attack and condemn him from afar. There was no jurisdiction, no justification, no wisdom, and there was the greatest possible impropriety in that gratuitous charge and accusation and condemnation, which was not called for, coming from the hon. Minister, and he should apologize to the country for it, and he should at least regret it in his heart, and I hope my humble remarks will call him back to the sense of dignity and honour which must be maintained in this House. I know that the object of this sudden and uncalled for attack is to divert public attention from those enquetes which hon. gentlemen are so much afraid we will speak of. It is to call public attention to another scene. They hope that, by saying that in the Province of Quebec there is the Pacaud-Langelier-Mercier boodling, the public of the Dominion will have its mind driven away from the enquete, the result of which will soon be reported to this House. They are mistaken. The people of this Dominion have their eyes wide open. When these matters in the Province of Quebec come up, the Legislature of that province will pass judgment upon them without fear or reproach, but this Parliament will pass judgment in regard to the enquete which it ordered, and in regard to which it has jurisdiction. The hon. Minister has found fault with the statement that this $100,000 has served for deposits for election protests. Where is his evidence of that? How can he justify that statement? I go a step further. Where is the harm? The Government of the Province of Quebec is ordered by the Parliament of Quebec to spend $200,000 odd. Within the limits of their obligation and duty they paid $175,000 to Thom. That is their transaction. Thom pays out of that, $100,000 to Armstrong. Armstrong repays Pacaud, or lends him, or gives him money—I do not know which—and part of that serves to contest certain elections. What is the harm? I do not see anything which we can reproach any one with in that. This may be given by Mr. Pacaud or Mr. Armstrong, who I am told is a Conservative, and I will not be afraid to face that before any public meeting in the Dominion. I say that after those untimely elections were imposed upon us during the winter in spite of the solemn promise of the Government, exhausted as we were in protracted sessions, the party had a right to expect that those who had some money would give them some help to contest the elections of our adversaries who had used all sorts of tricks in order to postpone the contestation of our elections to a later date than theirs. We had a right to contest their elections and to show that, if the Opposition were not in power, it was due to corruption, the same system which has been applied here, having been applied to the people at large. Besides, in the district of Quebec all the elections which have been contested by the Conservative party have been contested, with the deposit of $1,000 in each case, by the same man, a notary in Quebec who was a poor man when he came there, and is supposed to be a poor man still. Where has he got the money? Give us the enquete, and I believe we can prove that the money comes from the immense boodling which comes from Ottawa. And yet these are the men who attack us because this money was given to contest their elections. I now conclude my remarks.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. AMYOT. If the hon. gentlemen are not satisfied, I have some more notes, and I can go on, but I will take that "hear, hear" as an approbation of all my remarks and I will thank them for it. Having explained the true principles of the Tory party and the circumstances of the case in regard to the Province of Quebec, I expect that the object of the hon. the Minister of Finance in throwing these gratuitous accusations ard condemnations against that province will not attain its end.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I have listened attentively to the remarks of my hon. friend the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), and, like yourself, I have failed to find any relation between them and the motion before the House. We must be thankful, however, to the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) for having giving the House, through his motion, an opportunity of discussing the census figures. The question of the population of the country, is important from the standpoint of the country's advancement; as without increase of population—for all our country may have increased in wealth, and the individuals advanced in welfare—the prosperity of the country is not complete. If the population of the country does not increase in proportion to its territory, the country cannot be considered as prosperous. The arguments offered by the hon. member for South Oxford, and the other hon. members of the Opposition, are altogether false, inasmuch as they throw upon the fiscal policy of the present Government the whole responsibility for the disappointment consequent upon the fact that the population has not increased according to our wishes. We believe that the protection given to our agriculture and our national industries has been the cornucopia which has proved our prosperity over the country. It has permitted this Government to develop our great natural resources, and the railway enterprises which have opened up the immense territories of the North-West, and made possible an influx of an intelligent population, which, in the near future, will turn these territories into rich and prosperous provinces. In the opinion of the hon. members of the left, the protective system is no more nor less than the equivalent of the plagues of Egypt. It is Pandora's box from which came out innumerable evils which desolated the country, while nothing remained in the box but the hope for the country of having one day at the head of its Government the hon. leader of the Opposition and his faithful Achates, the hon. member for South Oxford, and his other companions in misfortune. But, Mr. Speaker, I consider that the increase of population in this country, or rather the lack of increase in the population of this country, does not rest solely with the Governments of the Dominion. We have not merely one Government in this country. We must not forget that we have a Local Government for every province of the Confederation, and that these Local Governments have a share of responsibility in the development of our material resources and the progressive march of our population. In fact, Mr. Speaker, under the control of the Federal Government are all matters concerning commerce and industry, and all those concerning the rural community are in the hands of the Local Legislatures. None of the hon. members of the Opposition have shown this House that with their policy of 1878, or their improved policy of 1891, unrestricted reciprocity, no one, I say, has offered any argument tending to prove that with their policy our population would have increased more during the last decade. Mr. Speaker, it is to be noted that in the older provinces it is principally in the rural districts that the population has failed to increase. It is the agricultural population which has moved to the towns, which has migrated to the North-West, to secure lands more fertile and of easier cultivation. To what is the migration to the cities due? Where does the responsibility rest? Has not the Federal Government done its duty towards the development of our national industry, towards the development of our inter-provincial commerce and our foreign trade? The hon. members find that the Government has given too much protection to our national industries. They find that we have too much of a market, for they complain of the protection which we have given to the industrial classes. Mr. Speaker, the industrial classes are the very ones which make agriculture remunerative by consuming its products, thus saving it the trouble of seeking distant foreign markets. Therefore, the Federal Government and the Conservative party have done more to favour the farmers, by creating a local market for their products, than the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) would have done if they had put into effect their free trade policy, which would have driven our working classes to foreign countries. Mr. Speaker, the Government has done what was in its power to increase the local market, to develop its importance and to enlarge the number of consumers. What more could it do? As I said before the Local Governments have their share of responsibility in the development of our population and in the administration of our territorial domain. The Local Governments have the absolute control of the real estate in their respective provinces, the Local Governments have absolute control of public instruction in their respective provinces, the Local Governments have the control, it may be said, of the intellectual progress as well as of the material progress of the provinces that they govern, by the fact that, in the first place, all the civil rights are within their jurisdiction. They regulate the land rights. And then to them it is that belongs the mission of giving the people the instruction and education which enable it to carry out profitably its trades or its arts. I say that if our rural population has decreased in the old provinces it is not fair to lay the whole responsibility of it upon the Federal Government, which has, so to speak, no land control, which can do nothing to increase land value, and which has no power to do anything in the way of legislation, in the matter of civil rights, to better the condition of the citizens of those provinces. Mr. Speaker, I say that if the Local Governments had done their duty, if they had had at heart their misssion and done as the Federal Government strove to do in its sphere by developing commerce and industry, if, on their part, the Local Governments had given the same care to what was under their absolute control: land rights, public instruction, agricultural instruction, I say that, perhaps, instead of having diminished in certain rural districts, our population would have largely increased, that we would have kept our people at home in their respective provinces. I say, further, that if the population turns away from agriculture to-day it is due to its lack of instruction and to the lack of effort on the part of Local Governments to teach the art of agriculture. Mr. Speaker, our rural districts cannot be thickly populated unless the people are sufficiently enlightened and capable of preventing the depreciation of the soil that they live on. For that they have to work it rationally, intelligently and increase its fertility. To do this they should be instructed in the art of agriculture. The Local Governments have not fulfilled their mission in this respect. They have taken no interest in developing in the community the taste and affection for this noble art of agriculture, which all educated men should strive to foster. Mr. Speaker, I believe that if the Local Governments had done their duty by giving the people new agricultural knowledge, by keeping them constantly informed of all the agricultural improvements, by means of lectures and by agricultural education systematically popularized, we would not to-day have to deplore this abandoning of the farms in the old provinces. And why is land so deserted? Because the economic means of improving the soil are not known, because the kind of cultivation to be adopted is not already understood. The farmer does not know by what particular cultivation he can make his land remunerative and better. Mr. Speaker, those who now exert themselves to find that the cause of the desertion of the soil in the older provinces comes from our mode of taxation here in Ottawa, commit a grave error. I even believe that they have not reflected at all, and that they are inclined to adopt such a view only through the mere desire of serving political passion. That is the reason why they blame our mode of taxation. They do not dare go to the root of the evil. And why, Mr. Speaker? Because at this moment, the Local Governments are all in the hands of the friends of the hon. members of the Opposition. I verily believe that if these provinces had been under the control of the Conservative party, my hon. friends of the left would have taken the trouble of reflecting, and they would have involved the Local Governments in their motion of condemnation of the policy of the Conservative party in the House of Commons. Now, Mr. Speaker, to be a good farmer, to love agriculture, one has to know agriculture. And in order that agriculture be known, agricultural instruction has to be vulgarized and spread amongst the farming classes, by the efforts of the Local Governments, who alone under our constitution, have the power of diffusing it. I say that the depopulation of our rural districts, the lack of increase of population in our rural districts, is due to a want of agricultural instruction. The farming community, in Ontario as elsewhere, has not been taught to love the art of agriculture. I say that the Local Governments have not spent enough money in that direction, while they have spent too much in building railways and opening up of commerce, when railways and means of commerce were within the sphere of federal action. Mr. Speaker, I invite my hon. friends of the Opposition to study the question more seriously than they have done, to discuss it from another standpoint and to ask themselves if the Conservative party at Ottawa have not greatly favoured the farming classes by protecting national industry, by developing our commerce, by enlarging our centres of consumption, and by giving the farmer the means of selling at a high price the large quantities of produce that he can put on the markets. The hon. members of the left insist that our prosperity must depend solely on our commercial relations with the neighbouring republic. I differ from them. I even differ a little in this respect from the Government which I support. I am still much of the opinion expressed by my hon. friend the member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil), in his famous pamphlet of 1872. I believe that before thinking of the Americans or the English we must think of Canadians, and make a tariff which will suit ourselves. What would we gain by unrestricted reciprocity with the United States? First, it has been proven, until evident to the fullest degree, during the debate which took place in this House, by my colleagues who took part in the discussion, that our industry would inevitably perish under the shock of the competition of the American industry, which is stronger and more powerful than ours. We would then lose our consumers, and our workingmen would take the road to exile. Then my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) could indeed and sincerely weep, he who has so much affection for the agricultural classes. I will tell my hon. friend that he brought upon himself a share of the responsibility for the scandals of the Government of Quebec. He has shown, until evident to the fullest degree, the solidarity of a large number of his political friends, and perhaps of himself, with the boodlers of Quebec. He has shown his solidarity with them by putting in all his time defending them this evening, while the question he had to deal with before this House was that of the increase or decrease of our population. My hon. friend has thought fit to make a diversion and speak exclusively of matters which took place before a committee which, while holding of Parliament does not hold of our House, in order to try and justify the boodlers of the Quebec Government. In spite of all my hon. friend could say, in spite of all his energetic efforts to put public opinion off the question, authentic evidence, found in the press of the country, evidence given under oath by honourable men is there to establish that the Quebec boodlers have committed acts of plunder, the most scandalous that have ever been perpetrated in this country. My hon. friend has thought fit to divert the attention of the House, and treated almost exclusively of this subject, although it had nothing to do with the motion before the House. I say that my hon. friend, by taking with such ardour the defence of these boodlers, who can only be defended by those who have participated in their plunder, or by those who glory in such rapine, has established a solidarity of his friends with them. My hon. friend's virtue seemed indignant at the sight of boodlers in the Conservative camp. Let my hon. friend keep his indignation and his vigour for the chastisement of those who are nearer to him than his political opponents. Mr. Speaker, I will pass over the mass of figures given by the hon. member for Bellechasse, in connection with the affair of the Baie des Chaleurs Company. I believe, as he does, that this affair will be ventilated in another place than this, in a proper place, before persons who will have complete authority to condemn the guilty. Here we have no interest in the matter, and if the affair came before Parliament, it was only incidently, in connection with another matter. But in this House, or in the other House, when the question comes of adopting a Bill, and the Bill meets with opposition, I contend that this opposition should be heard and that the motives which dictate it should be made known before the committee of the House, or before the House itself. That is what has been done in this matter of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, and that is what so sorely vexes my hon. friend for Bellechasse and the companions of his misfortune who sit by his side. Mr. Speaker, let us put aside all these questions foreign to that which should occupy us exclusively now, namely—the increase or decrease of our population, the increase of our population to a figure which may be satisfactory and testify to the prosperity and advancement of our country. Let us speak of this question only, and let us continue to establish our share of responsibility in the matter, and to seek means, for the next decade, to ensure rapid progress in population as well as in industrial and agricultural prosperity. I say, Mr. Speaker, that by diffusing agricultural instruction, that by fostering with the population the love it should have for an art as noble as that of agriculture, farming will be made remunerative. By developing knowledge, and giving the farmers the means and the necessary light by which to improve the soil, the aim will be reached. I believe that my hon. friend for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil) shares my views in this respect. I heard him say the other day that in order to improve our worn-out lands, it is important to foster the growing of the sugar beet, and to establish the beet-root sugar industry in this country. For, he said, with the refuse of the sugar manufactories, we will be able to fatten quantities of cattle, which will give our farmers the necessary fertilizer to bring back their impoverished lands to their original fertility. What is wanting with most of our farmers is knowledge, it is the means of knowing which product will sell best. I know of no industry just now which can pay better than dairy farming, and the production of meat for local consumption and export to the English market. Mr. Speaker, with the system of unrestricted reciprocity, what shall we gain for the farmers? Let us study what is wanted for our agriculture in the older provinces. Let us glance over and find the system which should be adopted to make farming a paying business, to give our lands, which in many places are worn out now, their primitive fertility, and if this mode of cultivation is about the only reasonable, the only remunerative and the only practical one, let us adopt it. If unrestricted reciprocity is calculated to injure such a system of farming we must not adopt it, it being injurious to the interest of agriculture, and consequently injurious to the interests of the country at large. What system of farming is suited to impoverished lands? For a long while, in the press, in Parliament, in the Legislatures, in the agricultural societies, in the great agricultural conventions and meetings, it has been mooted that our lands are growing poor, but no remedy is offered for this state of things, which must inevitably result in the depopulation of our rural parts. The evil is complained of, but no remedy is suggested. Mr. Speaker, after having conferred upon the matter with distinguished agriculturists of our Province of Quebec, I will make bold to say that, in the present state of the markets, we can only compete with the western provinces in the manufacture of cheese and of butter, in the production of beef and pork, the raising of horses, cattle, sheep and fowl. These industries are the only ones which will give impoverished lands the fertilizers that may restore them to their original fertility. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the members of the Local Legislatures to this important point. We must give back to the soil of the older provinces its virgin fertility by inducing our farmers to give their whole attention to the manufacture of butter and cheese and to the raising of cattle, sheep and horses. I say that by the cultivation of grain and the exportation of hay we simply export the fertility of our lands. Learned agriculturists have proven that when you export $1,000,000 worth of wheat, you remove from your soil $240,000 worth of its fertility. That is to say, in order to give back to the soil its fertility you would have to buy artificial fertilizers to an amount of $240,000. On the other hand, when you export $1,000,000 worth of cheese, butter or meat, you only export $240 worth of the fertility of the soil on which you have produced this butter or cheese or raised the cattle. There is a difference of 1 to 1,000 in the impoverishment of the land by the two systems of husbandry which I have mentioned. I say that the choice is easy to make. I draw to the matter the attention of my colleagues in this Parliament as well as of the members of the Local Legislatures. Now, Mr. Speaker, in what position will the farmers of the older provinces be, who manufacture butter and cheese and export cattle, if you put them in competition with the Americans of the Western States? The answer is simple, it is clear, and evident, known beforehand. We shall be no longer able to furnish pork and beef to our own markets, at our very doors. Meat will come from the Western States at such low prices that our farmers can no longer produce the meat which our workmen will consume, as they cannot afford it. Take, for instance, pork, which in Chicago sells for $3 or $4, and which can be put on our markets for $4.50. Take beef, which can be sold for one or two cents per pound, according to quality. Is there in Quebec or Ontario, one farmer capable of meeting such competition? On the other hand, would our farmers, with their impoverished lands, be able to compete with the western American farmer? I say no, Mr. Speaker, and I say that the only way of increasing the population of the older provinces is to restore to the soil its fertility, to improve it. And this will only be done when the population knows more than it does, and that will only be when means are given it of acquiring knowledge. Those who advise unrestricted reciprocity in the interest of the farmers make an enormous mistake. They bring upon them American competition. It is easy to see what happens in the States of New England. Many times in this House it has been shown that farming in those states has been ruined by western competition. Well, the facts which we find in the New England States, in the empire state of New York, we shall find in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and in the Maritime Provinces as well. We shall have the same competition to face, that is the competition from the Western States, the soil of which needs no improvement, as it is still virgin soil of greatest fertility. It is said that we shall be able to sell to the United States, certain articles which we do not sell to-day, or have to sell cheaper. But all these questions have been discussed, and so well discussed in this House already, that I do not intend to re-open the debate on these points. I only wish to observe that in the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario, we have a great interest in the improvement of the soil if we wish to see an increase in our rural population; for it is proven beyond doubt that hundreds of acres of well improved land are worth hundreds of acres of land unimproved. Now, if the Local Governments spread agricultural instruction which will enable our farmers to improve their lands, to cultivate them in a profitable way, of all necessity shall our rural population increase, for it will no longer take one or two hundred acres of land for a family to live on, but the same family will easily find a living on much less ground. Now, Mr. Speaker, with the National Policy, with the protection of our industries and the development of our manufactories in proportion to the increase of our rural population, we have the means of keeping the owners of the soil in the country, we have the means of developing the resources of our older provinces. Let us hope for the day when the Local Governments—at present all Liberal Governments, by the way—will go to work and do their duty by the people instead of banding together as they do to overthrow the central Government. They will end by studying better the means of fulfilling the mission given them by the constitution, to develop the intellectual resources of the population. For developed intelligence is worth more than mere material force. If our people are allowed to remain ignorant of the progress attained around them in the foreign countries, in the United States and Europe, it is easy to conceive that from day to day it will become harder to fight our enlightened neighbours and beat them in the foreign markets. The only way to cope with them to advantage is to educate our farmers so that they will know how to produce what is wanted in the countries we are to deal with. Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Bellechasse has not only taken up time in defending the Quebec boodlers, as they have been called and as they are now known in the country, but he has exhibited all his virtuous indignation against what he called the corruption of the Conservative party. There was a time, Mr. Speaker, when my hon. friend and I were fighting for the same principles, were fighting for the same men, were fighting for the same protective system which he berates to-day. And when the Pacific scandal came out, when the hon. leader of the Opposition at the time, together with those who formed the Liberal party, succeeded in taking the place of the Macdonald-Cartier Government, we had the hon. member for Bellechase in our ranks. He did not then find cause for indignation in what he now calls the Pacific scandal, but what he then called, as we did, the great Pacific conspiracy against the Conservative party. My hon. friend has changed, he has cast aside his old opinions: but I do not despair of him. My hon. friend makes his evolutions with so much supleness that I do not yet despair of seeing him come back to his first love, and defend again, some day, the old Conservative flag, which he often fought for with so much frenzy. Mr. Speaker, we are harangued about corruption. I heard the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) attack the hon. members of the Government, throw insult in the face of the Conservative party, and pose as a champion of virtue and morality before this House and the country. Surely, I said to myself, this member for West Huron must be an exceedingly scrupulous man, and his career must be pure from his birth. However, to my great disappointment, on that very day, I read in a newspaper that the hon. member had himself confessed before a court of justice to having spent $14,000 in a little electoral district of Ontario, and that he had been guilty of the most shameless corruption. Here, Mr. Speaker, are those apostles of virtue. Here are the men who grow wrathful over the least peccadillo of their political opponents. Those gentlemen who do not mind wading in corruption up to their lips, steeping themselves in it, are those who here show the most scrupulous, the most fanatical in that respect.

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) What paper said that?

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) The Empire. It seems to be recorded elsewhere too. But the Empire mentions one of the civil courts of Ontario, where the case of the hon. member for West Huron was tried, in which the hon. member declared, under oath, that he had spent $14,000 towards moralizing the electors of his electoral division. But there is more, Mr. Speaker, if we want to speak of corruption, if we want to speak of money spent in elections, it is only necessary to recall the past of the Liberal party, the new allies of the member for Bellechasse, in the Province of Quebec. We will see that, in many instances, they chose millionaires to fight the Conservative candidates in Montreal and elsewhere. The Liberal appetite was so modest that it did not take long to ruin these millionaires. One may mention Mr. Jodoin, who, in the County of Chambly, spent hundreds of thousands of dollars for the Liberal party, and threw into that county from twenty to thirty thousand dollars in every election. Mr. Jodoin himself finally went under, and ended his career by being disqualified in the courts. In 1874 the hon. members of the left in this House got hold of the reins of Government by hoodwinking public opinion, by promising the people a prosperity which they took good care not to give. Such are the means which they employed all over the country to ensure the purity of elections. We have seen in this House a Major Walker, full of indignation against the corruption of the Tories of Ontario and of the whole Dominion; and before the session was over, I am told, Major Walker, whose election was protested, was himself convicted of personal corruption and disqualified. It appears that he had spent $3,000 or $4,000 to moralize the city of London, Ontario. Such is the morality of the Grits and Liberals when they are in power. They are in power in the Province of Quebec. I know that the Liberals here do not like to hear mentioned the policy and the corruption of their party apart from that practised to reach this House. But, Mr. Speaker, how have the hon. members reached power, how could they overthrow the Conservative party and come to be the rulers in the Local Legislatures? By fallacious promises. Here they say to us: Give us the power and we will reduce the public debt, we will reduce the taxes. In the Province of Quebec, in order that Mr. Mercier should secure power, we were promised all that. My hon. friend, the member for Bellechasse, was one of the promisers. They were to reduce the taxes, they were to reduce the public debt, which, according to Mr. Mercier, were taking proportions enormous, alarming for the province. And yet the public debt of the Province of Quebec has reached a figure which I do not like to qualify, and on which I do not wish to pass an opinion, but I call it a dangerous figure for the country. I say that instead of keeping the promises which the Liberal party had made, of reducing the public debt and the taxes of Quebec, of putting an end to corruption in elections, the Quebec Government openly, audaciously, violated all laws of morality, and bought electoral districts wholesale by remitting the municipal loans. It remitted nearly $700,000 to secure the election of one of its friends in a county of that province—Shefford—which adjoins the one which I have the honour to represent. And the same corruption was practised elsewhere. When a county could not be carried by the purchase of individuals, they would try to buy en masse the poorer classes of electors, by voting grants for public works and employing everybody. I am grieved, Mr. Speaker, that the members for the Province of Quebec should have raised these accusations against the Conservative party in this House. I would fain not have exhibited here the sores that eat us up in our Local Legislature. If I was forced to do it, it was to justify myself and my Conservative friends who are dishonestly accused by members who have played such a sorrowful rôle in order to gain power for a Government which has given the measure of its audacity, its effrontery, its corruption and its power for evil in electoral matters and otherwise. I say that all these charges that I bring rest upon testimonies given under oath,——

Mr. AMYOT. (Translation.) Gossips.

Mr. DUPONT (Translation)—testimonies from friends of the hon. members of the left, from bank cashiers, men enjoying high credit and responsibility, who came here and established, under oath, that a shameful traffic had been done in the Province of Quebec, with grants voted by the House for the building of railways. And if I wanted to cast upon the Quebec Legislature injurious suspicions, I would say that we have here, in the Baie des Chaleurs affair, a sorrowful example of how the friends of the hon. member for Bellechasse and of the hon. leader of the Opposition conduct the affairs of the Province of Quebec. It would be fine, to-day, to see these gentlemen repudiate all solidarity with these parties, but they do not do it. We see my hon. friend, the member for Bellechasse, here, not as a serious man, not as a man who has studied the documents which have been published in the whole press of the country and the testimonies which have been given and of which he cannot be ignorant of, we see my hon. friend from Bellechasse, I say, with a levity unpardonable in a lawyer and a man of his position, come and tell us that the Quebec Ministers have not been heard, that the enquiry was an ex parte enquiry, made in order to condemn them, in order to convict them at any price, and that they have not had the advantage of defending themselves. Why did not my hon. friend say that his friends were shunning justice? Why did he not say that the Quebec boodlers, in their anxiety to put themselves out of reach, thought it was not enough to run to the United States, and wanted to make sure of their safety by taking steamers to Europe, and putting between themselves, in their newly adopted land, and the justice of their country, an ocean of thirteen hundred leagues? When summoned before a committee of the other House, if we are to believe the papers, why did the Quebec Ministers refuse to answer the summons? Why did they refuse to come and justify themselves? The public will believe that the reason was that their conduct could not be justified. Such is the public sentiment, and all the noise which my hon. friend may make to show that this case was carried on ex parte is of no avail. It was ex parte because the accused had caused the witness for the prosecution to escape.

Mr. AMYOT. (Translation.) Who caused him to go?

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) It is Mr. Mercier who gave him permission to go. It is Mr. Laurier, who, in a letter published by the papers, said that, at the time, he had given Mr. Pacaud permission to go to Europe.

Mr. AMYOT. (Translation.) Now, these are two misstatements of facts.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) The letter of the hon. leader of the Opposition was published in the press. He made excuses. He said that at the time he did not know the enquiry was taking place. And the investigation had been going on for several days.

Mr. AMYOT. No, no.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) Wait now, Mr. Member for Bellechasse. Do not be too tickled. You will see that my sentence was correct, and my thought also. The investigation had been going on for several days, Mr. Pacaud was in New York. Since the leader of the Opposition had so much power over Mr. Pacaud that the latter could not leave the country without his consent, why did not Mr. Laurier cause Mr. Pacaud to come back? No, Mr. Speaker, let us leave Mr. Pacaud's affairs aside. We have only spoken to him because the hon. member for Bellechasse spoke of him with so much bitterness. He did not speak of the responsibilities of the Local Government regarding the small increase of the population in their respective provinces. He preferred a subject foreign to the debate. The burden of his speech—which proved the complicity of the Liberal party—was the justification of the Quebec boodlers. Was he also under instructions from the hon. leader of the Opposition in attempting this diversion and in this effort? Was he in the same position as Mr. Pacaud? Was he under instructions? I do not know. But, at all events, my hon. friend from Bellechasse made a single sentence of the hon. Minister of Finance the occasion for a whole speech, in which he ignores the motion by the finance guardian of the Opposition, which yet deserved all his attention.

Mr. AMYOT. (Translation.) I treated the question for a whole hour. If you were absent, it is not my fault.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) Well, Mr. Speaker, I say that my hon. friend from Bellechasse, and all the other scrupulous ones of his kind, in spite of their clamours, will not have, in the public's opinion, the weight and the authority of the men whom they accuse. For their past, their contradictions, their own scandals—old or new—are so glaring that it does not behoove them to accuse anyone. When people live in glass houses, as they do, they should not throw stones at their neighbours, because of the risk they incur for their own houses.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I rise for the purpose of making a few observations in reference to what was said at an earlier portion of this debate by the Minister of Finance, and to-day by the hon. member for the City of Ottawa (Mr. Mackintosh). The hon. member for the City of Ottawa addressed to this House a speech indicating a great deal of research and of labour, but it seemed to me that it had not a great deal of relevancy to the subject under discussion. His speech seemed to have been prepared with a view to another resolution, and to a debate that transpired some time ago. So there is a great deal contained in the speech of the hon. gentleman which might have called for an answer if it had been addressed to the House on another occasion; therefore, it is scarcely necessary to revert to it on this occasion. However, the hon. gentleman stated, or rather, in my view, misstated, facts upon which it will be necessary to animadvert. The Minister of Finance admitted, in the speech which he addressed to the House, that the census figures were not altogether satisfactory. The hon. gentleman could not very well have said less. He admits that there are something like ten or twelve hundred thousand people in the Dominion less than there ought to be, having due regard to the natural increase of population and to immigration from abroad. But the hon. gentleman states that notwithstanding this condition of things, the country is in a highly prosperous, in a highly satisfactory state, that the National Policy had accomplished for us all that he, at all events, had expected from it. One would suppose, from the observations of the Minister of Finance, that a large majority of those who had gone abroad had grown wealthy, that they had gone abroad to enjoy travel, to acquire information, and to learn something more about the world than they could have known if they had remained at home. So I would infer from his observations yesterday that he expected a large number of these would return. Well, Sir, the speech of the hon. gentleman was, as all his speeches have been this session, composed largely of great expectations. Yet the hon. gentleman admitted that there was a very great disappointment felt even by hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches, at the result of the census. The numbers were not at all as large as the hon. gentleman supposed they would be. But he assured us, however, that he had a great deal of consolation in the fact that there was a people to the south of us who were in a position not much better than we were. The hon. gentleman says it is true that we expected that the census would have disclosed a very much larger population, but it is equally true that our neighbours across the border have also been disappointed in that they expected to find a very much larger population than is shown by their census. The hon. gentleman says they expected 18,000,000 of an addition to the population, and they only had 12,000,000. Well, Sir, we ought to have had something like 1,700,000 of an addition to our population, and we have about 500,000. So the hon. gentleman will see that our disappointment is very much greater in proportion to our population than theirs. Now, the hon. gentleman also ignored the very important fact that the population of the United States is about what those who have given most attention to that subject expected it would be. The coloured population of the south, according to the census of 1880, was reported as very much larger than it actually was. When due allowance is made for the mistakes in reference to the coloured population in the south, and looking at the large increase that has taken place in the population of the country, the present census of the United States discloses a population about the same as a proper estimate would have given. But the hon. gentleman will see that while their census, for the last decade, disclose an increase of something more than one to four and a half, ours disclose an increase of something less than one to nine; so that we have made less than half the progress in proportion to our population that our neighbours have made. Now, the hon. gentleman has undertaken to find a reason for this disappointment. He has undertaken to explain to the House why it is that the population of this country is not as large as the Government were entitled to expect. The hon. gentleman began by telling us that the tendency in modern times is from the rural districts to the cities, that there is a diminution of population in the rural districts and an increase in towns and cities. He says that this is not due to the fiscal policy of the Administration; he says that the same tendency exists in England where there is free trade, and there is the same tendency in the United States, where they have protection to a very much higher extent than we have here in Canada, and we have this tendency in Canada. So he tells us that it is one of the unsolved problems in modern political economy and in sociology—this disposition of the people in our day to desert the rural districts and flock to the towns. It is a problem that economists have not yet solved, it is one of these things which, as Lord Dundreary would say: "No fellah can understand." Now, I do not agree with that view; I do not think it is an unsolved problem, I think that the causes which are in operation both in the United Kingdom, in the United States and in Canada, are such as may be well understood. We understand the tendency in the United Kingdom, because there the people are most profitably employed in the manufacturing industries of the cities. There is an illimitable field for manufactures, whereas the field for agricultural pursuits is limited. The population will remain in the rural districts to cultivate the soil to the utmost extent, looking to the present condition of rural estates, that it is probably capable of. But, Sir, in the towns and cities manufacturing industries continue to grow. The English market is constantly increasing, new industries are being established, new appliances are employed, new markets are being opened, and the products of English industry, and English enterprise, and English capital are finding their way into districts more and more remote, in the centre of Africa and in the central regions of Asia; so that if you are to give employment to people profitably in the United Kingdom, and employment to capital, you must give that employment in those industries and those pursuits for the products of which a market may be found. When we come to this side of the Atlantic we see that it is not the natural tendency here as it is in the United Kingdom. The causes which are in operation there are perfectly obvious. But I would ask any hon. gentleman on the Treasury benches, or behind them, whether he thinks, if you were to withdraw protection, if you were to establish the principle of freedom of trade, if you were to allow every man to engage in whatever business he thought best, and to find a market wherever he pleases—whether he thinks there would be a tendency of the population to the cities and a desertion of the rural districts? The question is here, as there, in what respect capital can be most profitably employed; and if you undertake to burden one kind of industry and to give premiums or bonuses to another industry, of course you will divert capital from the one and bestow it upon the other; you will change the direction of industry. There can be no doubt whatever in regard to that, and the extent to which you do that shows the extent to which your efforts have been successful. Now, I say that in this country, by the imposition of great burdens upon the agricultural population, upon the ordinary agricultural operatives, by the premiums you have bestowed, in high taxes and in other ways, upon those engaged in manufacturing pursuits, you have diverted capital from agricultural pursuits, and you have secured its investment in manufacturing enterprises. You have made that, by artificial means, profitable which, under ordinary circumstances, would not have been profitable. You have secured an investment for capital in certain industries far beyond the market you can find for the products, and so you helped the cities far less than you have hurt the rural sections; and so, too, you have seriously affected the income of the population, the aggregate income is less, you have diminished the income of tens of thousands, and increased the income of a few hundreds of the people. The forces which are at work increasing the population of the cities at the expense of the rural districts, which ought not to be in a new country, are perfectly obvious; they are plain to anyone who will give ten minutes' study to the subject, and the same influences are operating on the people of the United States. A few years ago an American economist pointed out that, if you draw a line south of Pittsburg, down to 1865 the progress of wealth east of that line was as to the progress of wealth west of that line in the proportion of 1 to 2½. The growth of wealth by investment in agriculture, by the number of people settled on the lands, converted waste districts into farms yielding a moderate income to those who took possession of them. Since 1865, when the protective policy came into operation, which led to the establishment of manufacturing industries, which led to the watering of the stock invested in various industrial pursuits, the growth of wealth east of that line is as to the growth of wealth west as 2½ is to 1. The very reverse of what was true during the first 80 years of the growth of the American republic is true from 1865 to the present time. The hon. gentleman said that part of our disappointment is due to the change in farming operations. I deny that. It is true that in the United States, before the war, the mechanical appliances for carrying on agricultural operations were nothing like so efficient as they have been since. Hundreds and thousands of those engaged in agricultural pursuits were withdrawn to constitute the armies of the north and south; then those who remained behind were obliged to exercise their ingenuity for the purpose of accomplishing the same result with a smaller population than had accomplished it before. That did not prevent as large a number being employed as before. It merely enabled them to produce the same result with a smaller population. But the unfailing genius that secured that result in agriculture would secure that result as regards manufacturing industries in this country, if they were left free to fight for their own existence. It has been well observed by a writer in a scientific work that the improved appliances employed in manufacturing boots and shoes had increased the practical power of labour in a year 55 per cent., and so if you were to retain a tariff which would prevent that stimulus sending its products into your market you would require a 55 per cent. tariff to do so, or to enable you to compete with a country which introduced those new appliances. So you are simply fighting against an advance in industrial appliances when you undertake to establish a protective system, which will continue old appliances, which will always allow the energy of the people to go to sleep and to secure profits which only ought to be secured by keeping abreast with the progress of the times. The hon.

gentleman said farming has been less remunerative than formerly. If you have improved appliances to carry on agricultural operations, if you are able to accomplish the same results with far less labour, then agricultural employment ought to be more remunerative than before. Why, then, is it not more profitable? The hon. gentleman talks as if there had not been a very great falling off in prices. Prices, he told us, were made better by this process of protection. Why, then, is farming less profitable when the appliances are more efficient than they were before? They are less profitable because the agriculturist has had taken from him a part of his profits, which were bestowed without any compensation on some one else. That is the cause, and it is the very same cause which has led some agriculturists to desert the rural districts and seek employment in towns and cities, and has induced thousands of others to leave this country and engage in agricultural pursuits where labour is more remunerative than it has been here. The hon. gentleman says it is true we are losing our rural population, but they are losing their rural population in the United States. When did they begin to lose their rural population in the United States? The hon. gentleman speaks as though there was a coincidence in point of time between the changes in the United States and here. That is not so; the census shows it is not so. Look at the census for the decade between 1870 and 1880, and what do we find? You find several of the New England States absolutely declining in population, to say nothing about rural districts—they all declined in that decade. Did they decline in Canada? No; because the system of protection had not been applied in Canada, though it had been applied in the United States. So the change in the condition of things in the United States dates from the introduction of the protective system, and the change in the condition in Canada dates from the introduction of the present protective system here? You introduced it later, and the results appear here later, and you have them travelling together as the shadow travels along with the substance. The hon. gentleman has said we have been preaching blue ruin. What does the census of this country preach at the present time? Does it proclaim the prosperity of the country, that this is a country where men can receive large rewards for their industry? Does it mean that all classes of the population stand on a footing of equality in these respects? Not at all. We have lost our population. Men do not leave the country where large sums of money are being made. The thousands and tens of thousands who went to the gold fields, did so to make fortunes quickly—in a shorter time than they could be acquired in industries elsewhere. The same influences that will lead men into the mining field will draw them into agricultural districts, if our agricultural industries are as profitable in this country as elsewhere. The hon. gentleman says we have preached blue ruin. I am not perfectly cognizant as to the colour. I do not care whether the hon. gentleman calls it blue or red, whether he looks up or down for the colour he has discovered. But I say we have preached the truth, which is an important thing which the people require to know. No people are ever injured by knowing what is true with respect to their position. It is a false idea of life to pretend to be more wealthy and prosperous than other people, when you are less wealthy and prosperous: to say you need nothing, when the people are leaving the country to escape the condition they find prevailing here. The hon. gentleman says: It is true we have lost 1,200,000 people in ten years, but what does that signify when we have spent $140,000,000 of money, and we have railways to every man's door throughout the whole territories of Canada? Well, Sir, what good is a railway in a solitude; what advantage are hundreds of miles of railway built in this country along which no settlers are found? Of what advantage is it to expend millions of money to increase the burdens of the people of this country and to diminish the value of property for the construction of railways, when the construction of these railways does not secure to you a population? I ask the hon. gentlemen who sit on the Treasury benches to consider this: You have built railways, you have furnished appliances for the settlement of the county, and why do not the settlers come? Is your climate against you, is the soil incapable of sustaining the population, or what is the matter? Everybody admits that there is nothing wrong with the country and that it is capable of sustaining a large population; and why, then, have you been unable with all this expenditure to retain even the people that were born in this country during the past ten years? How is it that you have lost the whole of that population, and 300,000 of those who have come from abroad? How do you explain that fact? Why, Sir, it cannot be explained on any other theory than that the policy of the Administration has not been favourable to the progress and settlement of the country; and that policy and that system should be changed. Is not ten years long enough to try the experiment? You have tried it for ten years and with what result? Look at what you have promised and what you have performed. Look at the condition of the country at this moment, and I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that there is no country where there is parliamentary government, or where there are free institutions, where the condition of the people is less hopeful than it is in Canada at the present time. It is not a question of ruin, blue or red; it is a question of fact. There is your own census, there is what your officers have reported to you. They state to you that the population of Canada has increased half a million instead of 1,800,000. Where are the rest of our population? Why, Sir, they are like the Blue Bonnets, they are over the border. How came they there? They are driven there by the policy which you have adopted and which you have eulogized this session. You tell us that we have preached the people out of the country, but what have the gentlemen on the Treasury benches been doing? Who preached them out of the country from 1873 to 1878? Who was it that talked about soup kitchens and about unemployed people? If the people of this country were unemployed between 1873 and 1878, why did they not go away? The Minister of Finance told us that that was the period when we lost the population, but why did not the census of 1881 show it. Compare the progress of the country in population from 1871 to 1881 with the progress from 1881 to 1891, and which is the more favourable? In which is there the largest increase in population? Can there be any doubt as to when the population was lost? The returns of the United States, which have been verified in a variety of ways by examinations here, show that you lost in one year since you adopted this policy, a larger number of people than were lost during the five years of Mr. Mackenzie's regime.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman says "no," but I say "yes." I say that during the five years that we were in office 123,000 people left this country for the United States, and I say that in the year 1882 there were 125,000 left this country to live in the United States. There were 2,000 more in 1882 than during the whole five years of Mr. Mackenzie's Administration.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). If the hon. gentleman would allow me, I would like to say this: An examination was made by officers of the Canadian Government into the American statistics, and the result of the examination was sent to Washington. So satisfied was the American Government that the American statistics were inaccurate, that since 1885 the American returns have ceased to include the immigration from Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentlemen may cheer that statement but it would be of far more consequence to them, and of far more consequence to the country if they would undertake to ascertain its accuracy. I have looked into this question with a great deal of care, and so did the late member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), and it is perfectly obvious, when you take the census of 1870 of the United States, and take the census of 1880 of the United States, and make the ordinary allowance for deaths, you have a number very nearly corresponding to the representations of the Bureau of Statistics at Washington. I do not care where they got across the border. I state the fact that they have crossed the border and they have settled in the United States. Now, Sir, let me state another thing. The Deputy Minister of Agriculture was called here before a Committee to contradict the American statistics with regard to the number of persons who immigrated from Canada to the United States, and that gentleman did contradict these statistics, and he stated that that population went into the North-West Territories, and that they had settled there. His report showed that there ought to have been 183,000 people there, when there were 120,000 odd short of the number when the census was taken in 1885. That statement of the number of immigrants settled in Canada compared with the census which has just been takens hows how utterly worthless are the statistics of that department taken under its present deputy. I say that the whole thing brings discredit upon the administrative action of the Government in that department. The hon. gentleman said that the people have not left Canada on account of the tariff. He said: We know that because the tariff of the United States is twice as high as the tariff tax in Canada, and it is preposterous to suppose that the people would leave Canada on account of the burdens of taxation, and go to a country where the taxation is so much higher. That was the argument of the hon. Minister of Finance. Well, the hon. gentleman has had pointed out to him again and again that the United States extend from the tropical regions into the high northern latitudes; that east and west, north and south, you have almost all the various natural products of the world embraced within the republic: that altogether you have a high tax against all the rest of the world, you have absolute free trade between forty nations, and the principles of free trade have operated very largely to neutralize the mischiefs that would otherwise flow from the policy of protection. Then again, they have active competition in most of their manufacturing industries. Their institutions are old, they are competitors with each other, and so far as these articles are concerned which are likely to be seriously affected by taxation, there are causes operating which tend to give them in a large degree the advantages that flow from the principles of free trade. The hon. gentleman persists in a policy of taxing the masses for the benefit of the few, and my hon. friend from South Oxford spoke about those who favoured this system of taxation, and for whose benefit it has been established, as knaves. Well, Sir, I am not going to use that expression. I say this, that knowing what we do of human nature, one refuses to see anything wrong in those things which largely benefit one's self. There is no doubt that many good men were slave-holders in the south and upheld slavery, regarding it as a system right and proper in itself; and the experience of the United States with regard to that matter, as well as the experience of every country which imposes high taxes and bestows for the time being large profits on particular industries, is that this prevents them seeing anything particularly wrong in the matter. Men do not read the moral law with any very great clearness through a profit of 40 per cent., and knowing that that is the case I opposed the introduction of this policy. I am satisfied that it is much easier to produce mischief than to get rid of it. I feel that men will much more certainly resist wrong which does not affect them personally than they will wrong in which they have a very deep financial interest; and so I think it was greatly to the interest of this country that that policy which the hon. gentleman and his friends have eulogized should never have been introduced into this country. The hon. gentleman said that there is nothing impure in the introduction of this policy; that the methods which have been adopted to raise money for election purposes are legitimate; that there is nothing improper, nothing wrong; that the wrong that was done was done long ago. Well, Sir, I am not going to discuss this question to-night. It is too large a question to discuss incidentally in connection with a consideration of the census. The hon. gentleman says: We are pure now, but public opinion and public men were not pure in your day. Why, he says, look at your Speaker, Mr. Anglin, he was a boodler; he was corrupted by a contract that was bestowed upon him by the Post Office Department. Well, Sir, the hon. gentleman could have asked the Minister of Customs, and he would have told him that he had been tainted in the same way—that under a Government which existed from 1867 to 1873 he had published in his paper advertisements for the Government, to the value of several hundred dollars, and that he was sitting in Parliament at the same time. He could have told him that Mr. James Beaty, who was the proprietor of the Leader, was an extensive publisher of Government advertisements and that he received several thousand dollars from the public treasury while he sat on the floor of Parliament. He could have told him that Mr. Rufus Stephenson, who was for many years the member for Kent, also had entered into printing contracts with the Government while he was a member of Parliament. He might have gone further, and he could have told the hon. gentleman that years ago, when Sir John Rose was a member of this House, a Mr. Bell had been elected for Russell, that Mr. Bell had a printing contract with the Government, that his seat was contested on that ground, and that Sir John Rose and others, who constituted the committee, reported that that contract was an exception to the independence of Parliament, that it did not come within the purview of the Independence of Parliament Act, and that Mr. Bell was allowed to retain his seat. When Mr. Anglin accepted a contract from the Post Office Department, he accepted it with these facts before him. He knew that Mr. Rufus Stephenson, Mr. Mackenzie Bowell, and Mr. James Beaty had all been contractors under the former Administration, and that they had sat in Parliament at the same time; and he knew also that when a Government was in office, of which Sir John Macdonald and Sir George Cartier were the chiefs, Mr. Bell, a supporter of the Administration, had his seat attacked in this House on that ground and nevertheless held his seat; and so Mr. Anglin, in accepting the contract, if he made a mistake, was misled by what had been done, and what had been decided by the leader of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Will the hon. gentleman allow me to put one question to him? Does he think that the conduct of Mr. Anglin in accepting that contract was proper?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I say that according to the rule that had been laid down and observed for a long series of years, the conduct of Mr. Anglin was proper.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I ask the hon. gentleman——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I recognize that I speak only by courtesy.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Mr. Anglin resigned his seat.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He could not help it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes, because the very gentlemen who had whitewashed Mr. Bell, notwithstanding his contract, the very men who gave contracts to Mr. Mackenzie Bowell, Mr. Rufus Stephenson, and Mr. James Beaty, all of whom were supporters of the Administration, were the men who said that their former ruling was all wrong, and that Mr. Anglin did come within the purview of the Independence of Parliament Act.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I suppose you thought it was all right?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Certainly, I think the law ought to be as it was; but, I think, Mr. Anglin was justified in looking at the law as he saw it had been settled, and in accepting the contract at that time. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to call his attention to another thing? He thinks Mr. Anglin ought to have vacated his seat, and gone back to be elected. Did Mr. Bowell go back? Did Mr. Stephenson go back? Did Mr. James Beaty go back? Did any hon. gentleman on that side of the House urge these men to resign, or point out the propriety of their resigning at that time? No, Sir; hon. gentlemen opposite have a different rule of morals and a different rule with regard to the independence of Parliament, to be applied to that side of the House, and as applied to this. Let me take another case. There was an hon. gentleman, a member of this House, who accepted an office of emolument. Afterwards he said: I will not take the salary; but, every hon. gentleman in this House knew that he had vacated his seat by accepting that office, the moment he accepted it. Did he go back for election? Did he say: By accepting the office of High Commissioner while I was a member of this House, I ought to recognize the fact that my seat was vacated, and go back for election? Not at all. What did hon. gentlemen opposite do then? They introduced a Bill by which they declared that in spite of the law he should hold his seat. They gave him the seat. He was not elected to this House by the people of Cumberland, he was elected by the vote of this House—by an Act of Parliament which received the sanction of the Crown. That is the way hon. gentlemen opposite undertake to apply the law with regard to the independence of Parliament. Then, Sir, I think there are gentlemen in this House who are in a worse position than Mr. Anglin was. I understand there is one hon. gentleman here, a supporter of this Administration, who organized a company to escape the independence of Parliament Act; but he has $5 of stock subscribed outside of himself, and he has received some $20,000 from the public treasury while being a member of this House. Do hon. gentlemen think that that complies with the law? Do they think that a fraud of that sort is a compliance with the Independence of Parliament Act? And what is the position of the Gazette newspaper? The hon. gentleman is no more independent with large printing contracts with the Government for ten years, because there are a few stockholders real or nominal connected with the Gazette besides the hon. gentleman himself, who has a seat in this House. Well, I am not going to discuss that subject further. There will be a more appropriate occasion for its discussion. But I say to the Minister of Finance that he travelled outside of the record, when he discussed what he called the boodle propensities of the Merciers, the Pacauds and the Langeliers. The hon. gentleman ought to remember the rule, that he who does not govern his own house well denies the faith and is worse than an infidel. Why does he undertake to regulate the affairs of Quebec, when he has so much to occupy his attention at home? I am inclined to think that the hon. gentleman's own conduct might be vastly improved. Does the hon. gentleman think it is quite in accordance with the law of Parliament and with his duties as Minister of the Crown to enter into a solemn contract with a party to do certain work for the Government for $4,100, and then turn round and pay to the same party $6,150. Is that a square transaction? Is there no boodling connected with that?

Mr. FOSTER. Will you take the responsibility of affirming that there is?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I tell the hon. gentleman that I do not believe that is an honest transaction.

Mr. FOSTER. Will you make a charge?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell) I do not believe that is an honest transaction.

Mr. FOSTER. Make your charge and prove it. The man who does not do that is a coward.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And the man who did it is guilty of a breach of public trust.

Mr. FOSTER. Could you prove that I did it? Will you dare attempt to prove that I did it?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman paid out of the public treasury $2,050 for each round voyage which he had no more right to pay than I had.

Mr. FOSTER. You are a mean insinuator.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; take it back.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is that to be allowed in parliamentary life? I rise to a point of order. Is this House to understand that you, Sir, will allow language such as that to be used against any hon. member?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I wish to ask you, Sir, and it is not necessary that I should strike the desk to do it, whether it is in order for an hon. member to accuse another of having taken dishonestly $2,000 out of the public treasury?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I did not say so.

Mr. FOSTER. He did in his mean way.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is no necessity for an hon. member to strike his desk. I am here to keep order and see that the rules of the House are observed. No doubt the hon. member for Bothwell has gone a little too far in casting insinuations, which I do not think he should have cast. On the other side, the hon. Minister of Finance has used very strong language, and I think, therefore, both hon. gentlemen were a little out of order. An hon. member addressing the House should not make insinuations. I trust the hon. member for Bothwell will not make further insinuations—I hope he will not criticise in advance my decision, but listen to it—and that he will limit himself to discussing the question now before the House.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am not going to criticise your decision, Sir, but I am stating a fact of very great public importance. I say that the hon. Minister of Finance saw fit to charge members outside of this House, representatives of the Crown in another Legislature over whom we have no control, and over whose conduct we have no jurisdiction, who are responsible to another body, with being boodlers and with having misappropriated public funds. I say we have to deal here with the public moneys of this Dominion of which the hon. gentleman is a trustee, and I say that he came to this House and asked for $60,000, for four services, that he entered into contracts for three, and that he did this in a most irregular and in my opinion improper manner.

Mr. FOSTER. Order.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I say in my opinion. I entertain that opinion and shall ask the judgment of the House on the matter at a later period. And I say the hon. gentleman had made a contract with certain parties, by which the Government agreed to pay them a certain sum for certain services which were to begin in the one case on the 15th of November and in the other on the 25th of December, and he paid out, contrary to law and the provisions of the contract, $15,000 for services performed by these people voluntarily, not included in the contract, and which this House was under no obligation to pay, which he as trustee of this House had no right to pay out of the public money: and I charge him with applying that money to the payment of obligations that have no existence, so far as this House is concerned.

Mr. FOSTER. You do not go quite so far this time as you did before.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman may say that he paid that money to those parties.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It may be that he did, or it may be also that he did not. We do not know and we have a right to know.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman, who is an old parliamentarian, must know that he is out of order, and that he is not at all dealing with the question before the House. A moment ago he stated that this question would come up by-and-bye when the accused would have an occasion to defend themselves. I hope, therefore, he will, as much as possible, keep to the question before the House.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I was answering the hon. gentleman. He charged the Government of which I was a member with improper and dishonest conduct. I threw that charge back in his face, and told him that his own conduct was far from being, not only above suspicion, but above reproach. That is my right, and I am confining myself to my parliamentary rights in answering the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman had no right to speak of a former Administration as he did. That Administration was open to the criticism of those who sat in Parliament while it was in existence. He is the responsible party now and to this House he is responsible. I am calling his attention to the fact that he is not in a position to bring insinuations against his predecessors in office in this House, and much less is he in a position to bring charges against a Government that cannot constitutionally answer here the charges he brings against them. The Legislature of Quebec is the guardian of the public moneys of Quebec. It is that body which will have the right to investigate the wrongdoings of that Government if any wrongs have been done. That Government is responsible to that Legislature and not to us. I am not defending it, but I am defending the constitution of this country. I say that the constitution of this country ought not to be prostituted to any such purpose as the investigation of charges against Mr. Mowat, or Mr. Greenway, or Mr. Mercier, or any other person outside our jurisdiction. It is the business of this Parliament to investigate charges against this Administration, to take care of its own affairs, to guard its own money and protect its own interests. The hon. gentleman is not going to divert public attention away from the conduct of the Government here to the conduct of a Government somewhere else. I apprehend that the people of Quebec, as the people of the other provinces, are capable of self-government, and will take care of themselves. We are for certain purposes one people, we have a common fund as one people, and it is our business here to look after the expenditure of that fund and to leave other legislatures to discharge their own duties and assume their own responsibilities in precisely the same way. The hon. gentleman told us that the country needed diversified industries, and so he was going by a high protective tariff to secure a diversification of the industries of Canada. I want to know whether the industries of Canada will not be diversified without Government interference. Look at the condition of things. Were there no blacksmiths in Canada, no waggon makers, no shoemakers or carpenters until the National Policy called them into existence? Is it necessary to call these industries into existence by the imposition of high taxes? I say there is no more necessity to do that in the case of a cotton manufacturer than in the case of a blacksmith or a shoemaker. They are all on an equality. The hon. gentleman cannot point to a new industry which has been called into existence since 1879 by the policy he advocates. We had cotton mills before 1879, and we had woollen mills, and we had manufactories of agricultural implements. There is not any class of manufactures brought into existence which was not in existence before 1879. The hon. gentleman admits that we have a good country, but he cannot deny that we have a very sparse population in that country. How is it that these people from abroad do not come here, or that those who do come here do not remain? How is it that we lose so many of our own people? It is simply because the hon. gentleman and those associated with him have misgoverned this country. The hon. gentleman and his colleagues produced a rebellion in the North-West and wasted eight millions of the resources of the people of Canada in putting an end to that rebellion. They goaded the half-breeds into rebellion, and then they say: You have kept the people out of the North-West Territories, when the people were kept out for a number of years in consequence of the course the Government took on that occasion. The hon. gentleman says we have a larger increase of population than we suppose, because our former census was very inaccurate. Ten years hence, if the hon. gentleman is then in power, he may tell us the same story. Who took the previous census? Under whose auspices was it taken? Under the auspices of hon. gentlemen who are now on the Treasury benches. Were they new to the business? Why, they took the census of 1871 as well as the census of 1881, and there is not an argument that can be used to show that the census of 1891 is accurate that will not apply to the census taken on the two previous occasions. We require a change of policy. The hon. gentleman reminds me of a story told by Disraeli that, when you want to travel on a new road, you had better not employ your old coach horses because they are sure to get off into the old track; but the hon. gentlemen have not proposed to take a new road, but they take the road they have been travelling for the last thirteen years. It has been pointed out to them that they have been driving the population from Canada, but they have not changed. They are going to adhere to their policy, as the doctor in "Gil Blas" adhered to his policy, which was that of bleeding every one of his patients though he might kill them in the operation. So they are going to adhere to the National Policy no matter what disasters it may bring on the country. The hon. gentleman has said that the course taken by the Opposition has led to the large exodus from Canada. It is not the Government who are to blame; it is the Opposition: and so the hon. gentleman would have the country believe that the Opposition exercise a far more powerful influence and are more trusted than the Government. That may be, but the Opposition have not proclaimed the propriety of the people leaving Canada. They have proclaimed the propriety of getting rid of the Administration, not because hon. gentlemen on this side of the House are anxious to occupy the Treasury benches——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Here are ninety members on this side. They do not all expect to get into the Government, but they are all anxious that the hon. gentlemen opposite should leave the Treasury benches, and that is because those hon. gentlemen have shown themselves utterly incapable of governing this country aright. They have had a trial over and over again. They have been given every possible opportunity of vindicating their policy and redeeming their pledges, and they have egregiously failed, both with regard to their policy and with regard to the pledges they have given. They assured the people that they would give them economical government, and they have added to the cost of governing this country over fifteen millions of dollars, for the hon. gentlemen have charged year by year large sums to capital account which should appear in the ordinary expenditure of the country. The hon. gentlemen have told us that they were in favour of closer trade relations with the United Kingdom, and they say they have not discriminated against the people of Great Britain and in favour of the people of the United States; and what evidence do they undertake to give to the House to establish the proposition they lay down? They say our trade with England was smaller in 1876, 1877 and 1878 relatively, as compared with the trade with the United States, than it is to-day, and that, therefore, it is evident that they have not discriminated against Great Britain. That is no evidence of anything of the sort. No such proposition can be established by such proof. The truth is that, in 1877 and 1878, the manufacturers of the United States were harder up than the manufacturers of the United Kingdom, and so they cut down the prices of their goods, and a larger amount of American goods came into Canada because the manufactures of the United States were more depressed than those in the United Kingdom. When prosperity was restored, a change began to take place, and it was a proof of the difference in the prosperity of the manufacturers in the two countries from which we imported our goods, and not any proof of the effect of the tariff imposed by us upon American and English goods. Take English goods. English blankets pay a higher tax than American blankets. English shoddy goods pay a higher tax than the lighter goods which we get from the United States. Sir Francis Hincks, who was thoroughly conversant with our tariff, pointed out again and again, when he was editor of the Journal of Commerce, that the tax upon English goods under our tariff was necessarily higher than that upon American goods nominally of the same class. That is true, and it is as true to-day as it was in 1879, and in 1881-82, when Sir Francis Hincks discussed the question. I shall not weary the House by discussing all the various propositions that were enunciated by the hon. member for Ottawa. He said there were thousands of people leaving Dakota and going into the North-West Territory. I should be glad if that were so: but I remember this, that Dakota and the North-West Territories and Manitoba began their settlement about the same time; that in 1870 there were about 13,000 people in each; that to-day Dakota consists of two states, and that the northernmost of those states has something like half a million people at the present time. Now, it is said that those states have a larger population to draw from than Canada has. That is a mistake. If these were the only states that are being settled there might be some force in that argument, but settlement is going on in Kansas, in Nebraska, in Texas, in California, in Wyoming Territory, in Montana, as well as in North and South Dakota. In Minnesota and Wisconsin there is a rapid progress in settlement, and if you take any one of them and compare it with the progress of settlement in our territories you will see that an incomparably greater progress has been made in population in any of these than there has been in the North-West Territories or in Manitoba. So I say that the progress of this country has not been at all satisfactory. Hon. gentlemen admit that, and I asked this House now seriously to consider the causes of this stationary condition of our country. I say that that cause is largely due to the tariff that the Government has imposed upon the people of this country. You have undertaken, by highly artificial means, to stimulate branches of industry that do not require your stimulus, or if they need it, they were unsuited to the country. You have undertaken to apply to a number of provinces that lie in the same latitude, that have the same products, a policy that the United States have undertaken to apply to a territory embracing almost every variety of climates and every variety of natural productions. The policy which is sufferable there, which is not advantageous anywhere, but which is less mischievous there, than, perhaps, in any other country in christendom where it could be tried, is wholly inapplicable to Canada. You require to change your policy, to reduce your taxation, to enlarge your trade with the neighbouring republic, to minimize your expenditure, to dismiss a large number of your officials, to quit your boodling operations, to quit your contract business, out of which these boodling operations spring, before you will secure the confidence of the people of this country and secure population from abroad. As long as this policy which you at present pursue, out of which so much evil must necessarily spring, is continued, just so long will there be serious mischiefs connected with the government of this country, and just so long will you fail to secure settlers in the rural district which now require occupation. You admit that thousands of miles of railway have been built in tracts of country where there are no settlers. How are you going to secure the settlement of that country? There is an amount of capital that is latent to-day; there are hundreds of millions of capital existing by nature in the soil of this country. Why not, then, permit it to be utilized? Why undertake to burden all those who undertake to settle that territory, in the interest of a few people who go to the towns and cities of Canada? If we had in Canada to-day a population of eight or ten millions in our rural districts our towns and cities would be larger, they would be more prosperous, you would produce a natural prosperity, you would have a natural as opposed to an artificial growth, and you would have a very much healthier condition of things than you have at the present moment. Let your towns be the emanation from the wants and necessities of the rural districts. But you have kept your rural districts a solitude; you have, by a series of burdens upon the people of this country, sought to stimulate the growth of population in the towns and cities. I say that is a most unsatisfactory condition of things and I shall support cordially the resolution of my hon. friend from South Oxford, because that resolution points to a policy preferable to that which is pursued. Hon. gentlemen opposite smile complacently, as if they possessed all the wisdom of christendom. Sir, hon. gentlemen might do that after a boom, such as existed in 1882, when you imposed, by your boasting, upon the unthinking portion of the population of this country. But during the past eight years can hon. gentlemen say that the National Policy has been a success? Look at the condition of the North-West, look at the value of real estate, look at the present pecuniary or financial condition of the agricultural population of this country, and say whether the policy you have pursued is one that is satisfactory or not. Sir, the people of this country have no confidence in the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches. They have pronounced against the so-called National Policy.

An hon. MEMBER. When?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). They pronounced against it in 1891. In the last election campaign the hon. gentlemen were obliged to talk reciprocity: they were frightened into talking reciprocity: they misstated the relations between Canada and the United States upon that question. They sent a deputation to Washington that remained there five minutes and then returned, and they promised a deputation in October. The hon. member for the City of Ottawa says that deputation will not succeed, that it cannot succeed, that, if it were to succeed, it could only do so by ruining the agricultural interests of this country, and by seriously and injuriously affecting the manufacturing interests. And so I ask: What are the hon. gentlemen going to Washington for? Are they going down to say that they do not want a treaty? Why, Sir, they got Mr. Van Horne to say, last winter, that a treaty would be a very disastrous thing, that reciprocity would be a very disastrous thing for everybody but a powerful railway corporation. I think that it is an advantage to a railway corporation to have trade with the United States, and I think that what is good for a railway corporation would be good for every person in this country. So we say that the occupants of the Treasury benches ought to be dismissed; they have been weighed in the balance and found wanting; they have proved themselves "flies on the wheel," utterly incapable of governing this country, utterly incapable of managing the affairs of this country. Why, Sir, according to their own representation, the administrative business of this country is run by men in the public departments over whom they have no control, for whose conduct they are not responsible. Now, the people of this country want a Government that will be responsible for those who are serving under them, and such a Government the people of this country are entitled to have.

Mr. CRAIG. I have no intention of talking long at this hour of the night, and at this stage of the discussion. We have listened to several very long speeches, which have wandered in a great many directions and covered a great deal of ground. I will here express the opinion that I consider it very unfortunate that we cannot discuss a question of this kind without so great a display of party feeling. I regret exceedingly the scene which occurred a few moments ago, and consider it was quite unnecessary. I will endeavour, in the short time I shall address the House, to confine myself strictly to the subject under discussion. I do not suppose I can say anything new on the subject; I do not pretend I can suggest anything very original, but I do intend to confine my remarks and any suggestions that have occurred to me as to the cause of this small increase in our population to the question under consideration. In considering the matter at this stage of the debate, the question has occurred to my mind, what is the object of the Opposition in raising this question? One might expect that in the House of Commons both parties on a matter of this importance, on a subject that concerns the whole country, might join together and consider seriously the cause of the small increase in the population of the country. But, unfortunately, it is too evident that the object of the Opposition in raising this question is not to find out the cause I have referred to, but it is to create a feeling in the country against the Government in power. This, perhaps, is what we might expect; but at the same time I think it is rather unfortunate on an occasion of this kind. What reason has been given by hon. gentlemen opposite when discussing this question for the small increase in the population? We have had one reason given, and one only, and that is the bad government of this country by the Conservative party. We have had the National Policy held up to ridicule; we have heard a great deal about boodling, about corruption. But I maintain this view is entirely one-sided, and when the National Policy is assailed, and when its ill-effects are depicted, and when the small increase of population is attributed entirely or almost entirely to that policy, I maintain that it is entirely an assumption on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite. If they could prove this they would have accomplished something. But they have no proof. I admit they would have some ground for this assertion if under their regime the times had been better then they are under ours. But what are the facts of the case? Were they better? We all admit they were worse. We can assume with much more reason that, except for the National Policy, our population would not have increased as much as it has increased. We heard a good deal about cities and towns attracting population from the country. I am very glad our cities and towns have increased their population, and I think the Minister of Finance was perfectly correct when he said that in this age there is a tendency to go to cities. This is the age of cities. We find it so in all the countries of the world. I am not surprised at this. We all know what attractions cities offer to young men of enterprise and to young women who want to go out and see the world. There they find interest and excitement, and they learn about great fortunes being accumulated. A great many men who have gone to cities would have done better to have stayed away from them. Many think that they too would accumulate large fortunes. They find to their disappointment that such are only accumulated by very few. But at the same time these things tend to draw away from the farm and from the smaller towns a large portion of our population. I said I intended to speak very briefly, and so I will not discuss at length any points I may raise. We have heard about the United States attracting the population of this country. I am not surprised at that, and I hold one of the great obstacles in the way of an increase of population in this country is the very fact that lying alongside of this Dominion is a country like the United States. It is a great country. We all admit that. It has an enterprising people; it possesses large cities about which we hear a great deal; not only so, but their advantages are much exaggerated by those who live there. We in this country find some of our newspapers and some of our public men decrying our country. But I think we would look in vain over the whole of the United States to find any man or any newspaper decrying their country. They all unite in praising the country; they say it is the greatest country under the sun, and while a great deal they say is true, a great deal is exaggeration; but at the same time this exaggeration has its effect on the young men and women and they are drawn there, and when they get there a great many stay there. But while a great many young men have left this country and gone to the country south of us, I hold a great many more would have gone and been compelled to go had it not been for the policy of the Liberal-Conservative party. I do not see how that admits of any contradiction or of any arguments. I look back a few years before the National Policy was inaugurated, and what do I find? I find depression existing on every hand. We have had reference made to the failures recorded by Dun, Wiman & Co. I was in business at that time, and was almost afraid to open any circular that might come from Dun, Wiman & Co. on account of the number of failures that were occurring, and almost every business man found some of his debtors failing from day to day. I will say here that while the United States possess great advantages, and while a great many young men who go there succeed remarkably well, and I am proud of the fact that Canadians who go there succeed well, at the same time I wish to say that from my observation and experience those who go there work a great deal harder than they did in this country. I have heard it stated by many who have lived there that if our young men worked as hard as they do there they would do about as well here as there. While I do not admit that the National Policy is the cause of this small increase of population, there are some reasons which may be given for this small increase. We have already heard the reason given that the census was taken this time in a different manner from 1881. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has said that we say that the census was not taken accurately in 1881. That is not our contention; but we say the census then taken was taken on a much more liberal basis than in 1891, and, therefore, a large part of the decrease is due to that fact. But there are other reasons why our population has not increased more rapidly. We all know there has been a great emigration to South America. The Argentine Republic has been talked up exceedingly, and a few years ago emigration was directed largely in that direction. We know the efforts made by Australia to secure emigrants from the old country, and the unrestrained efforts put forward by the immigration agents of the United States. Those agents depreciated Canada; they talked about its climate, and they represented that there was nothing but winter all the year round. I remember a few years ago visiting New York—I was living in Toronto at that time—and some merchants who had never visited Canada asked me how deep the snow was in Toronto, imagining it was seven or eight feet all through the season. When I told him that there was no more snow in Toronto than in New York they did not believe my statement. The people when they are leaving the old country are met by these agents and are told that Canada is a country with a very severe winter, and that they could not live there. I regret to say, Mr. Speaker, that in many cases they are able to back up their statements as to Canada being a poor country by the speeches and writings of hon. gentlemen opposite and their party on this country. I know that these hon. gentlemen disclaim this, but to my mind it is perfectly clear that the speeches made by hon. gentlemen opposite—I will not say all of them—and that some of the articles written in their organs, have a tendency to keep people from this country. I am quite satisfied that if I were in the old country and read some of these Liberal speeches, and the articles published in the Liberal newspapers, this would be the last country I would come to. Another reason why our population has not increased more rapidly is that desirable immigration is falling off even to the United States. A short time ago I read a magazine article which stated that the desirable immigration has very much fallen off for the last few years and that the undesirable immigration has largely increased, and in the United States they are considering the desirability of excluding that class of immigrants altogether. I am not surprised, therefore, that there has not been a larger immigration to this country. Sir, I regret as much as hon. gentlemen opposite can do that our population has not made a greater increase, but at the same time I think we ought to rejoice that it has increased as much as it has, under all the difficulties this country has had to contend with. I cannot vote for the resolution of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), because I do not believe that our policy has had the slightest effect on our small increase. In fact, I believe the very opposite. I find that there are fifteen towns and cities in Ontario which have made an increase in their population of 2,000 and over during the last ten years, amounting to an aggregate increase of 150,000; and, Sir, the thought occurred to my mind that the National Policy was in a great measure the cause of the increase in these fifteen cities and towns. In these fifteen cities and towns, as I have said, there has been an increase of 150,000, and it appears to me that this constitutes a very good home market. That amount at the very lowest estimate would represent a consumption of about $200,000 worth of food a week, or we might say $10,000,000 a year, which is an increase of $10,000,000 a year in our own market in the Province of Ontario during the last ten years. I do not think that is a very bad testimony as to the effects of the National Policy. I object to unrestricted reciprocity, the policy of the hon. gentlemen opposite, because I believe firmly that unrestricted reciprocity would destroy this home market. If the United States make a treaty of that kind they would make it for one reason, and one reason only. What they are looking for is an outlet for their manufactures, and I am informed that in the United States they can make enough boots and shoes in six months to last a whole year. While we hear that country puffed up a great deal, and while we hear it said that protection enriches the few at the expense of the many, I wish to say in reference to that large and important industry in the United States, that it is said by an excellent authority that if the manufacturers come out this year with undiminished capital they will be doing very well. I regretted very much to hear the remarks of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), who stated that the Civil Service is all corrupt. I think it is most unfortunate that such a statement should be made, because I consider that this statement is unfounded, uncalled for and unjust. There are in the Civil Service many honourable men. I may say more than that: the most of the civil servants are honourable men. We admit that there have been some cases of which we are ashamed; but, I for one, am determined that I will not defend any wrong-doing wherever I find it. At the same time, Sir, I am determined as well, that I will not condemn without proof. Why, even a murderer has that chance; he is not condemned without proof, and are we to condemn the whole Civil Service because a few have been found guilty? I repudiate such a doctrine, and I will maintain the Government in their expressed determination to have the country governed under business principles. I am glad to see that the Premier stated that this was his intention, for I believe it is the true way to govern this country; but I must condemn, and I think every member in this House ought to condemn such wholesale charges of corruption as are made for party purposes and without the least foundation. Now, Sir, what is the remedy offered by hon. gentlemen opposite, and how do they say the population of this country would be increased? Their remedy is very simple. They say: Put us in power and everything will be right. If we had a guarantee that this would be so we might be quite willing to take them at their word and put them in power; but, Sir, we have no such guarantee. Our opinion is directly opposite, and judging by the past we have a right to form that opinion. What is the policy of the present Government? Their policy is moderate protection for all classes. We not only protect the manufacturers of the country, but we also protect our farmers to a very large degree. The policy of this Government is the encouragement of the agricultural industry, and the Government of the country deserves credit for what they are doing in this respect. Our policy is also honest and economical government. I know that some hon. gentlemen opposite will say that they have not seen much signs of that; but, Sir, I am satisfied from what I have seen that we will have an honest and an economical government, and so far as reciprocity goes, we are willing to have reciprocity with the United States, to the extent that it is advantageous to both countries. To hear some hon. gentlemen opposite talk about free trade with the United States, one would think that this country had a McKinley tariff. I regret that the United States saw fit to adopt such a tariff; but I believe that in a very short time the people of the United States will see it to their interest to reduce that tariff, and to make it correspond more nearly with our own. Although our population has not increased to a greater extent I do not despair of the future of this country, but on the contrary, I look with hope to the future. We have a great country. I believe, Sir, that Canada is the best country in this world. I believe that the people of this country are as comfortable as any people on the face of the earth. I believe that taking the people of this country as a whole, in our cities, in our towns, and upon our farms, they are more comfortable than any other people in the world. If we want to find distress we must go to New York, or Chicago, or Kansas, or Dakota, but we cannot find it in this country. Hon. gentlemen opposite sometimes try to make people believe that this country is on the road to ruin, but they cannot succeed in that: because while people are in the enjoyment of comfortable homes, and are making a comfortable living, it is very hard to make them believe any such doctrine. I believe, Sir, that the advantages of this country will soon be recognized. It is only within a few years that we have had a highway to the North-West. Before that, immigrants had to go to the Western States, but we find now that the emigration of our farmers, and farmers' sons, from the older provinces, is largely to our own North-West. This North-West will gradually fill up, and the best immigration agents in the world are men in the North-West who do well, and who write to their friends in the old country to come out and do as they have done, and I anticipate from the bountiful crop which the North-West is producing this year a large immigration in the next year or two, and I am satisfied that we shall see it. Mr. Speaker, I would like to see the people of this country imitate the people to the south of us. Let us not be ashamed to praise our country. Sometimes I think they are given to braggadocio and boasting; sometimes I think they have too much spread-eagleism; but, on the other hand, I think that in this country there is too little of that sort of thing. In this country we are too modest; we are ashamed of ourselves, I do not know why. Let us not be ashamed to praise our country wherever we go, and tell its virtues and advantages; let us have faith in its future; and I believe that those who live to see another census will have cause to rejoice in the country's progress.

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) Before entering upon the discussion of the question under consideration, I wish to congratulate the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Craig) on the moderation with which he addressed the House. I really believe this important question of the decrease of population, which we have to consider, should, as the last speaker said, be discussed without any party spirit. But, unfortunately, if we have witnessed in this debate a little more heat than there should have been; if personalities were brought in to the discussion the hon. member must especially attribute it to his own friends, and not to the members on this side of the House. Now, Mr. Speaker, we come to the House with a motion blaming the Government for the fact that the population of the country has not increased in a rational and reasonable manner, and stating that the Government is responsible for it. To this, instead of answering in a straightforward manner, instead of explaining away the figures that were submitted, the hon. Minister of Finance contented himself with saying that the Quebec Government was only composed of boodlers. I ask, Mr. Speaker, if that was a proper answer to the accusations that had been brought against the Government? Therefore, if we have had a somewhat acrimonious discussion, if party spirit has sprung up in this debate, it is due to hon. members on the other side of the House, and especially to the hon. Minister of Finance, who began by launching accusations against our friends. I think I ought, just here, answer a charge which has been brought against the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) by the member for Bagot (Mr. Dupont). Here is another man, who, instead of debating the question in a serious manner, has made it his mission to fling the most unfounded personal accusations right and left. The member for Bagot told us that the member for West Huron, who had spoken of corruption, was perhaps more corrupt than those he accused, because it had been found in a trial that he had spent $1,400 to get elected. And the hon. member for Bagot pretended having taken this information from a newspaper, which he said was the Empire. Well, Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand the Montreal Gazette. The Empire and the Gazette are two papers that get from the same source their inspirations and the information they serve to their readers. Now, the Gazette had published a few days before that very accusation brought out against the hon. member for West Huron by the hon. member for Bagot. And what do I find in the Gazette of the 1st inst.? The Gazette is obliged to retract, to say that it published an untruth, and that what it had written against the hon. member for West Huron was wholly unfounded. And yet, in face of this, we see the hon. member for Bagot renewing this charge against the hon. member for West Huron, when the very newspapers where he had found his information were obliged to take back the filth they had thrown at the hon. member. Here are the words of the Montreal Gazette on the subject:

"On the 24th ultimo there appeared in the Gazette a letter signed "Ex-Huronite," asking if Mr. M. C. Cameron, M.P., was the man who, in the days when the Liberals undertook to elevate the standard of public morality, 'spent $20,000 corrupting his constituents, was unseated and disqualified and afterwards whitewashed by the Mackenzie Government,' and concluding with the assertion that, if Mr. Cameron was this man, 'a more corrupt man does not disgrace the House of Commons.' As a matter of fact, it has not been established that Mr. Cameron spent $20,000 corrupting his constituents; he has not been disqualified, and, of course, did not need to be whitewashed. The expressed belief that he is 'one of the most corrupt men in the House of Commons,' was, also, of course, uncalled for. The letter should not have been printed."

Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is useless for me to insist any further upon this point. I quote this article to show the hon. member who has just taken his seat that he should have listened to his friends, that he should have heard what was said by the hon. Minister of Finance first, and then by the hon.

member for Ottawa (Mr. Mackintosh), and the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Dupont), before accusing us of throwing party spirit into the debate. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that our population has not increased as it should have. There is no doubt that in that respect we have been considerably disappointed. This has been admitted on both sides of the House. The question now is to find out what the cause of the evil is. The question is to find out what causes have brought about this decrease of population. We had in 1881 a population of about 4,300,000. This year the census gives us a total of 4,800,000—that is to say, an increase of 500,000 merely. There is no doubt, that from the reckonings of all the authors on political economy, and from the record of the past in our country, such a small increase should be a great disappointment. Instead of a paltry increase, the population should be almost double what it was in 1881. I will only quote one author, who corroborates his own opinion by the opinions of three other authorities, to show that the increase of the last ten years is not normal. Mr. Garnier, quoting the opinion of J. B. Say, of James Mill and of Rossi, contends that the increase in population of a country should triple itself every twenty-six years. Here are his words:

"Experience teaches us that about half of the human beings perish before the age of twenty-six. * * * This shows that if every couple cannot bring up twelve children, able to reproduce themselves, they can bring up six who are capable of populating as much as the first couple did; from which it may be concluded, that, where there is no obstacle to this multiplication, the population of a given country would triple itself in twenty-six years."

And this opinion, Mr. Speaker, admitted by all authors on political economy, agrees with that advanced yesterday by the hon. member from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), that is to say, that our population should have increased 2½ per cent. per annum. Well, instead of that, what do we see? Instead of an increase of 2½ per cent. a year we barely have an increase of 500,000 in the period of ten years; therefore, we find ourselves considerably short of the reckonings of all the political economists and all the persons who in their own country are interested in these matters. We must, then, look for the cause of this depopulation, and find a remedy for the evil. It is the important question which imposes itself now, and it is the only one that I intend to deal with. There is no doubt that there is an evil, and that it should be remedied. What is the evil, and where does it exist? Is it in the decrease of births? Is it to be found in a large emigration? Or does it rest in the financial administration of the country? I believe that we must look for the cause of our disappointment more especially in the two last propositions. The hon. member from Bagot has contended that we should not look only to the Federal Government for the responsibility of this state of things. Let us take note, Mr. Speaker, of this important admission from a Conservative. He holds that the Federal Government is, to a certain degree, responsible for the small increase of our population, since he says that we must not hold the Federal Government totally responsible for it, but also the Local Governments. Here is an indication of admission—I may say a complete admission—coming from a Conservative fully devoted to his friends, and who is forced to admit that if our population decreases we must attribute it partly to the Central Government. I do not need to enter into the question of what is the cause, in the Central Administration, which has brought about this decrease of population. This suffers no doubt, and has been many times asserted. We owe it to the famous National Policy, inaugurated in 1878, a policy which was to bring us prosperity, and which was to protect the farmer as well as the manufacturer, as the hon. member for Durham just said, but which, after all, has only protected a few monopolists at the expense of the public at large. This is the cause which is responsible for this decrease of population. Let us examine a moment the proposition of the hon. member for Bagot, who contends that the Local Governments, and particularly that of the Province of Quebec, should be held responsible to a certain extent for this decrease, or rather for the small increase of the population during the last decade. Mr. Speaker, I fail to see what influence a Provincial Administration could have on the population. The hon. member for Bagot said that it is the Local Governments which control matters of property, of civil rights, and of public instruction, and that consequently they should be held responsible for the decrease of population. Well, I ask, was such an absurd proposition ever heard of? Because the Local Governments have control of the rights of ownership, they should be responsible for the decrease of the population! But what bad laws have they passed touching property which must have had this result? He mentions none, and yet it seems that if he wants to show the responsibility of the Local Governments on that ground he should mention where lay their faults. And he did nothing of the kind. Let us now examine the other point. The hon. member says that the Local Government, in their administration of public education, have failed to spread instruction sufficiently among the people. The people have not been taught enough, and that is why the population has decreased. Well, I challenge my hon. friend to find in any treaty on political economy a theory so absurd. The instruction given the people can in no way influence the increase or decrease of population. No fact, no figure can be called to service and prop up such a theory as this. But will my hon. friend deny that the system of public instruction which we have in the Province of Quebec has, to a great extent, been organized by his friends while they were in power? Does he not know that the fundamental law of public instruction, in the Province of Quebec, was passed in 1874, when his political friends were at the head of affairs, and he himself was, I believe, a member of the Quebec Legislature? Is the law which obtains now not due to the Conservative party, and not the work of a Government counting the hon. Secretary of State as one of its members? Well, Mr. Speaker, if public instruction is defective in the Province of Quebec, if it was defective until the time the Mercier Government came into power, we owe that entirely to the Conservatives who were in power at that time. But we are told the Local Governments do nothing to spread public instruction. Well, we only have to examine what the Mercier Government did since 1887 to convince ourselves that there never was in that province a Government which did as much for the diffusion of public instruction. What has the Mercier Government done? First, he opened night schools in order to allow the workingmen of the cities to get instruction. Then, he also opened, in agricultural centres, in country parishes, night schools where the farmers can go and get instruction. These schools are free, and any who wish to learn may attend them. Can it be said after that that the Mercier Government did not do as much as it was possible to do to spread education? But I find supremely ridiculous the position taken by the hon. member, when he says the farmers of our province are blockheads, incapable of knowing the requirements of agriculture. I must resent this gratuitous insult flung in the face of our farmers. I assert that they are altogether as intelligent, as capable, as well educated as they could be desired to be under the economical conditions of our country. One must be at his wit's end to say such things. And the one who says that is a representative of farmers in this House. It is the hon. member for Bagot, the mandatory of those farmers, who has the audacity of declaring in the face of this House that his constituents are imbeciles, that they are incapable of understanding agricultural interests. The hon. member for Bagot contends that the reciprocity advocated by the Liberal party cannot be expected to remedy the present situation by increasing our population. He contended further that the present Federal Government has done all in its power to reopen commercial relations with the United States. Well, I would like to know where is a proof to be found of this assertion. Did that take place in 1878, when the Government imposed on goods coming from the United States such high duties as to render it impossible for the Americans to export anything into this country? Was it when it raised between Canada and the United States a Chinese wall which is still standing to-day. Was it, then, that the Government tried to establish commercial relations with the United States? Could this Government hope for any favours from the Government of the United States when it treated our neighbors as it did? Is it possible for this Government to renew a treaty, to reopen commercial relations with the neighbouring republic, when insults and libels are constantly hurled at the United States, as they were by Sir Charles Tupper and the principal Conservative chiefs during the last election? Was it by such a conduct that the Conservative party shows its intention to renew commercial relations? For my part, I fail to see in this any proof of the statements of the hon. member for Bagot. Mr. Speaker, it is contended that the effect of reciprocity would be to ruin industry. I am far from believing in that. On the contrary, I believe that if we had reciprocity this day, instead of seeing the manufacturing industry ruined we should see it developing. And this is the reason why: We know that the manufacturing industry is declining, that in a few years the industries that have not lived exclusively on monopolies, the industries that have not subsisted on the people's money, shall have mostly disappeared, and poverty, the most dire that we have ever witnessed, shall spread over the country. I need no other proof of this than a short dispatch which I clipped this morning from the Montreal Gazette, a Conservative paper, whose mission it is to favour as much as possible the interests of our opponents. This dispatch refers to a cotton factory at Dundas, in the Province of Ontario. I believe that this manufactory is not very far from the place of residence of the hon. member who has just spoken, and he ought, before having taken his seat, to have given us some information about it. Here is the dispatch:

"Yesterday afternoon the Dundas Cotton Mills were sold by auction for $150,200 to Mr. Thompson, of the law firm of Thompson, Henderson & Bell, Toronto. The mill cost $800,000 originally."

Now, it is contended that the cotton industry, which is protected by our opponents, is prosperous. And here is a cotton mill, having cost $800,000, being sold for a paltry $150,000; and this is called a prosperous country; and industry is represented as prosperous. Well, Mr. Speaker, with such eloquent figures as these under our eyes I cannot conceive how such conclusions can be reached. I was just saying that industry is not only declining, but it will be completely ruined in a short time. Under what condition do we find it now? It has to meet serious competition, a competition which it certainly could not resist. For instance, in the county next to mine, in Chambly, there is a manufactory, which at first made much money, but which competition has caused to sustain considerable losses during these last years. Large manufactories have now been inaugurated through the country, and they can find no outlet for their goods. There is an excess of production, and the manufacturers are obliged to sacrifice their goods or keep them on hand. This latter alternative is not very favourable, I well understand, but the former is no better. The consequence is, that far from being prosperous, the manufacturing industry is in a precarious position. It is imperative that we should improve the situation and restore healthy conditions of trade. And what is to be done? Only one remedy exists, and this remedy is in the policy advocated by the hon. leader of the Opposition, in unrestricted reciprocity. With unrestricted reciprocity, Mr. Speaker, we will have markets where to send our surplus of production, where to send what now remains on our hands. While if we remain in the position in which we now are the farmers shall be ruined, the manufacturers shall be ruined, as I have shown, and most of us will be forced to emigrate to the United States to earn a living. I have much pleasure in endorsing the views expressed by the hon. member for Bagot in respect to encouraging sugar beet growing. I understand that this industry can give the Province of Quebec most important returns. I understand from the investigations made by the Mercier Government that the Province of Quebec is certainly one of the countries the best suited for the satisfactory production of the beet. And since, owing to the policy of the present Government, we cannot have a market, since we cannot export our hay to the United States, I will understand that we should try to remedy this state of things and find something to take the place of the growing of hay. The growing of the beet is the one which offers itself most favourably. The best hay lands are also those which can best be turned to beet growing; and it is to be noted that in France and Belgium the land given to the growing of the sugar beet is for the most part the land which was formerly given to the raising of hay. Why should we not profit by the example? Why should we not adopt the policy of the Mercier Government, which consists in encouraging the cultivation of the beet? I see that the Government has this year consented to give for two years to the beet a premium equivalent to the protection which it formerly had as a raw sugar material. As was observed the other day by the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil), it was a step in the right direction, but it was an insufficient one. We know that the Government is opposed to the growing of the beet, as the hon. Minister of Finance showed in his Budget speech. But why would farmers not be protected? Don't we give premiums to fishermen? And is not iron also favoured with a premium? True, the latter is only intended to protect Sir Charles Tupper, but anyhow iron is protected. Well, I repeat it, why could not beet growing be protected? Why could not the farmer be protected, so that he might emerge from the perilous position in which he finds himself now? Here is the census, which shows that our farmers emigrate to the United States in large numbers. We must then look for the means of preventing this emigration. We must keep our people here; and to do that we must grant this premium to our farmers. I believe they certainly deserve it as much as the fishermen, if not more, owing to the sacrifices they make. I believe that the hon. member for Bagot, after having declared himself in favour of limited reciprocity, now attempts to argue that if we had reciprocity, even limited reciprocity, the cattle trade would suffer. He contends that if we had unrestricted reciprocity the Americans would be dangerous competitors to the farmers. Now, it seems to me that if we had reciprocity, limited to agricultural products, the Americans would make us the same competition, for they could export their cattle as well as we. Therefore, by pronouncing against the importation of American cattle the hon. member for Bagot pronounces against limited reciprocity, such as he has preached and still advocates, as well as his party. I would not like to enter into the discussion of the question of scandals, which was raised with so much acrimony by the hon. member for Bagot. I do not mean to follow him on that ground, nor to bring into this debate matters which should remain strange to it. This is not the place to discuss the doings of the Quebec Government. I believe that our own stock for discussion is large enough here. We have enough of a supply of boodlers here without importing any from the outside. And I believe that instead of speaking of Quebec boodlers the hon. member for Bagot might well have said a word regarding those we have here in Ottawa. He could have spoken of the Kingston graving dock, the Point Lévis graving dock, the Esquimalt graving dock; he could have spoken of Bancrofts, of Arnoldis, of Bronskills, of Senécals. It would certainly have been more in his province. Instead of speaking of Pacaud's voyage to Europe, he might have explained the flight of Bronskill, of Senécal and of McGreevy. He might have told us why it is that the latter does not dare declare here what he did with the money he received—whether he gave any to Ministers or not. He might have told us why it is Mr. Senécal does not want to come here and say whether he gave any money to the Secretary of State or not. It would be better to bring these people before the Committees of this House and make them unbosom themselves. I believe that the disappearance of these boodlers shows that behind them were guilty ones of higher ranks who probably ordered their flight to save their own heads from the steel of public reprobation. But let us examine this so-called Quebec scandal. What was the great crime committed? Was there any embezzlement? Has the Province of Quebec lost a single cent, Mr. Speaker? There was a vote of $280,000 to a responsible company which would undertake to build the Baie des Chaleurs Railway. A responsible company was formed, a company composed of friends of the Federal Government, and this company undertook to build and complete the road. What did the Quebec Government do? It turned over the $280,000 which had been voted into the hands of this company. And why was it that the Quebec Government had to demand the formation of a new company? It was because there were boodlers among the old shareholders, boodlers of whom some are to be found in the Senate and some had a seat in the House of Commons. There were Robitailles, Riopels, McGreevys, who had pocketed $700,000 of the Government money without proper consideration, and the Provincial Government wanted such robberies and such misappropriations to stop. That is what the Quebec Government did, Mr. Speaker. It handed over to this new company what it was obliged to give it, and the company used it as it chose. If the company gave money to Armstrong and to Pacaud it was money that belonged to it. If anybody lost anything it was that company. I regret to have to enter into those details. I know they are not the subject-matter of this debate, but we have been led to do so by the hon. Minister of Finance and his friends, who followed in his footsteps. Mr. Speaker, I do not know to whom the hon. member for Bagot referred when he said that former members of the Quebec Legislature came to launch charges at random in this House. Did he refer, perchance, to the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Tarte), and to the charges brought out by this fearless member, who could be cowed neither by high personages nor by powerful political influence, and who pledged his seat to denounce the guilty, and reveal the robberies which for years have been committed to the detriment of the public chest? If he referred to that hon. member, he must know that the charges which this member brought, instead of being frivolous, and instead of being brought at random, were well founded. He must have been made aware of it by the disappearance from the political field of the two principal personages implicated in these scandals, namely, the Minister of Public Works and the former member for Quebec West (Mr. McGreevy). Mr. Speaker, I cannot conclude these few remarks without drawing the attention of the House to the fact that the county which I have the honour to represent is the one, I believe, in which the population has decreased the most during the last ten years. The County of Rouville is wholly composed of farmers; the population is exclusively agricultural; and if we now have to find, after ten years, a decrease of 2,500 people in the county, we owe it wholly to the fiscal policy of the present Government, who would not give our farmers the markets they needed for their hay and their other products. There is no doubt that this is the only cause of the evil, and that we can assign to no other reason this decrease of population which we find in almost all the agricultural counties of Quebec and Ontario. I think the hon. member for East Grey stated that the only counties which have experienced a decrease of population are counties which are represented by Liberals. Well, he should remember that the County of Rouville was, for the last twelve years, represented by a Conservative—a rather uncertain kind of a Conservative at times, but a very decided one during the last few years. It is to be noted that although represented by a Conservative, the county was none the less reduced by 2,500 in its population. I do not know whether the presence of this Conservative member went for anything in the decrease of the population of his own parish, but I find that in that parish the population, which was 4,000, has been reduced by 1,700. When the hon. member for East Grey gets to looking for examples of decrease of population in counties represented by Conservative members during the last decade he can turn his eyes on Rouville. I do not want to uselessly occupy the time of the House. I think I have disposed of the charges brought against us by the member for Bagot. Much more might be said about the Quebec Government; but, as I said before, this is not the trial of the Quebec Government. We would not be afraid of such a trial, however, and we could stand it to advantage, as no other Government ever contributed so much as the Mercier Government to the prosperity of the Province of Quebec. No other Government ever developed to such a degree its mining, agricultural and lumber industries. And had it not been for the deplorable policy of the Federal Government the Province of Quebec would enjoy greater prosperity than it does now. I wish to mention but one example of the degree to which the Quebec Government favours the agricultural classes. While the Ottawa Government wanted the disappearance of the beet-root sugar manufactories; while they wanted that the farmers who realized anything out of this industry should get no protection, what was the position of the Government of Quebec on this question? They sent to France and Belgium practical farmers along with the Prime Minister, to enquire into the best means of implanting this industry into the country, in order to remedy the bad effects of the policy of the Federal Government. There, we see the Quebec Government trying to protect an industry which should be protected by the Ottawa Government. There, we see the Quebec Government trying to protect, in the interest of the farmers, an industry which the Ottawa Government wants to ruin. But there is an interesting detail to note in connection with what the Quebec Government did for agriculture, and it will show what degree of interest these Conservatives take in the farmers. When the Mercier Government appointed that commission to go to Europe and study the question of the beet growing, they asked the co-operation of the Conservatives. The Government asked among others the member for Bagot, in the Local Legislature, to go to Europe and study this question. But what did these people do who now wish to appear so devoted to the farmers' interests? What did Mr. McDonald do, the local member for Bagot, the political godson of the hon. member for Bagot in this House? He refused to co-operate with the Liberals, and that, no doubt, with the consent, if not under the direction of my hon. friend for Bagot. These are the gentlemen who claim to protect the farmers. These are the gentlemen who profess devotion to the interests of the farming community. There is only one Government that has worked for the agricultural classes, and it is the Mercier Government. On the other hand, there is a Government which has always worked for the ruin of the farmer, which has always refused and still refuses to do justice to him: it is the Ottawa Government, and it is that Government which is responsible for the decrease of population which we find to-day.

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Speaker, at this early hour of the morning I would not inflict a speech upon the House, but that as the representative of the Agriculture Department here I thought I had better, perhaps, make for myself and partially for the department a statement in reference to the motion which the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has moved in amendment to going into Supply. Especially I want to take the earliest opportunity of replying to some remarks which the hon. gentleman addressed to the House yesterday evening. In the first place, I wish to criticise the amendment which he moved, in which he states that the population of this country in 1881 was 4,324,810. Then he goes on to state that it further appears from the report of the Department of Agriculture for the year 1890 that the total number of immigrants stated by the department to have come into Canada was in the neighbourhood of 866,171. Later in my remarks I will deal with that. The next statement of the hon. gentleman is, that the total increase of the population of Canada in the ten years now past was 504,534. That part of his assertion was perfectly correct; but the next portion of it is that at the rate of 2¼ per cent. per annum the natural increase of the population of Canada during the last ten years would amount to 1,077,531. His figures are perfectly correct, but how he arrived at 2¼ per cent. per annum as the natural rate of increase in the population I do not know. The hon. gentleman had the means of ascertaining accurately what the natural increase of the population of this country was. If he had taken the deaths in the country in 1881, and the births, and deducted one from the other, by a simple calculation he could have ascertained the percentage of natural increment in the population of the country. According to the calculation which I have possessed myself of, I find that the total births of 1881 were 138,347, and the deaths, 63,413; deduct the deaths from the births, and the product is 74,934, which represents the natural increase; and the annual percentage of increase in the population of the country, according to that data, is 1·7 per cent. Mr. Taché, who took the census at that time, showed that the figures were incorrect, because he was not fully informed of the death rate of the country; and I am informed by the statistician of the Department of Agriculture that the natural increase of this country now is in the neighbourhood of 1·12 per cent., or very nearly the same as the natural increase of the population of the United States, as shown by the census taken last year. We all know that the increment of population decreases as the population increases, and the natural result would be that the increase of the population for the decade just past would be less than the increase of the decade of 1881. The census returns of the United States prove that; and the statistician, attached to the department, by a careful calculation shows that the only natural increase of the country upon which we can depend is in the neighbourhood of 1·12 per cent. per annum. This is much higher than the natural increase of the European populations. Taking that, then, as the basis of calculation, the natural increase would give a population in Canada in 1891 of 4,836,849, or an increase in ten years of 512,039. So that you will see we have retained in this country the natural increase of population and no more. This brings us to consider what has become of the immigration into this country. According to the agricultural returns it amounted to 578,846. There is in addition to this number 307,331 entered in the Customs' returns. But we all know that there can be no reliance placed in the Customs' returns as indicating the increase of the population of the country. These may have been returned Canadians who had been in the country when the last decennial census was taken, and who had gone to the United States and returned. They may have been entered in the returns two or three times, and we may strike off altogether from the estimate the increase in the population of the country of the 307,331 which were supposed, according to the Customs' returns, to have come into this country. We have no means, as the hon. gentleman who interrupted said, of knowing what the actual exodus is from the country. The United States authorities in 1885 found that the statements of people going into that country were so incorrect that they stopped altogether taking any count of the people going from Canada into the United States. We have nothing to show what the exodus was from this country from 1881 to 1891. Then we have only to account for the immigration which is supposed to have come into this country, numbering 578,846. Every one who has lived for years in this country knows that a large portion of the increase in our population have been in the habit of going to the United States. I well remember those who departed from my section, in my boyhood, to settle in some portions of New York, and afterwards many of them went to Indiana, Ohio, Illinois, Minnesota, Kansas, Dakota and many other portions of the United States. A great many also went and settled in our own section of country. The history of this country, ever since it has come under British rule, has shown that 30 per cent. of our increase of population by immigrants coming into the country have departed for the country to the south of us. Now, what showing have we? We have retained from 1881 to 1891 the natural increase of population. By what means have we retained that increase? We have retained it by the policy adopted by this Government, and the figures show it. I am astonished that any hon. gentleman on the other side would get up and deny the figures. Do they not show that our urban population has increased 33 per cent. ? There is where we retain the surplus, the increment of our population. Would not the exodus have been as great if the population of our cities had not increased? Do not statistics show that in nearly every state of the union there has been a decrease in the agricultural population, except in the newly settled states? The hon. member for North Norfolk, who is so fond of quoting statistics from the other side of the line, ought to study those of the statistician in charge of the census of the United States, and these figures will prove conclusively why it is that in settled provinces like Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island our population has not increased more. He will find that in the New England States, in Maine, there is no increase in the population, that Vermont has not increased in population, that the agricultural portions of Massachusetts have decreased in population, that the agricultural portions of every one of the New England States have decreased in population, and that any increment they have had since 1881 is caused by the increase of population in the cities. Let me show hon. gentlemen a map which was published by the census commissioners of the United States, showing in what portion of the population there has been an increase. If he looks over it, he will see that in the agricultural portions of New York there is a decrease in population. He will see that in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Michigan and Indiana there is a decrease in the agricultural portions, and he will see that only in the new states, such as Kansas, Minnesota, Dakota and other purely agricultural states, is there a large increase in the agricultural population. There is a decrease in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin and Iowa, in all the agricultural portions of those states; and if he will read this pamphlet, he will see the reason of the increase and decrease of population of these states. It says:

"Commencing with the pastoral stage, where the population is widely scattered, it passes through the agricultural stage, where the population though still scattered, is much denser, to communities engaged in manufacturing and commercial pursuits, in which the population is in the main congregated in towns and cities.

"The change from the first to the second of these stages of growth of this country has been accomplished quietly and without other symptoms than the accompanying increase in density of population. The change from the second to the third stage, on the contrary, is frequently a forced change, produced by the competition of other agricultural regions. The first symptom of approaching change, consists in a reduction of the rate of increase, or it may be an absolute decrease of population. This is followed or accompanied by an aggregation of the people in cities, and, finally, as manufactures and commerce become established, by an increase of population at an accelerating rate.

"Southern New England, together with most of New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey, have passed through these stages, and have now reached that stage in which commerce and manufactures are thoroughly established and constitute the leading industries. The people to a large extent have withdrawn from the country and are grouped in cities and towns. The population which two or three decades ago was almost at a stand-still, is now increasing rapidly under the stimulus of profitable occupations. The central parts of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and New York, however, are still in the transition stage, and are not gaining in population.

"In the upper Mississippi Valley and in Virginia, where the map shows great areas of losses, the community is in a transition stage from agricultural to manufacturing industries. The rich lands of the farther western states are drawing their farmers away to reap larger profits, while other industries have not yet attained such a footing as to attract or retain population in their place. The condition of things now prevailing in these states was suggested by the census of 1880, when Ohio was seen to be in this transition stage. Since then this transition wave has extended westward across Indiana, Illinois and well into Iowa."

In Canada, by the adoption of the National Policy, we have retained our manufactories. Does the hon. member mean to say that there would have been an increase of 33 per cent. in the cities if it were not for that policy, if the manufactured goods which we consume in this country came from the United States and Great Britain, and would there not have been more of a decrease in the agricultural population of the country? It need only be stated to be understood. Yet the hon. gentlemen state that if they ruled the destinies of the country, they would make such a change as would keep the agricultural population at home, by making a commercial union or closer trade arrangements with the people to the south of us. The effect of that would be that our manufactures would altogether go to the south, and we would be left with no manufacturing people in the country. They say the system of protection is an old fad which has been exploded long ago, but the panacea which they propose is not to keep a 25 per cent. tariff, but to adopt the United States tariff, which is about double that. The United States have thrived and prospered under a protective tariff, and why should hon. gentlemen opposite use the argument against us that such a tariff is ruining this country? They saw the fallacy of that argument, but they say that there is no country in which protection would thrive better than in the United States because of the character of its population and climate. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) says that if the United States has adopted the policy now in vogue in Great Britain, they would have thrived better; but he says that the policy of protection is not applicable to the people living on the north of the St. Lawrence. Where is the distinction? Why cannot it apply equally well here as there? Why is it a panacea to keep the population in the country here to adopt a tariff double that from which we are now, according to those hon. gentlemen, suffering? The argument is an absurd one. If double the amount of protection is a benefit to the people to the south of us, why would not half the amount of protection prove to be half the benefit to us? As to the exodus from this country, every child knows that, from the day when the first Governor of British North America wrote his celebrated despatch in which he stated the reasons why the people went to the south, why they went to those fertile agricultural fields which they could cultivate with a smaller expenditure of capital, down to recent times, it was natural for people to go to those fields which they could make available with a smaller expenditure than they could in old Canada. You find the same thing existing in the States of Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and New York. From those states a larger proportion go west than from Ontario. The dividing line, the love for our country and the love for the flag under which we live, keeps 10 per cent. more of our people at home than of the people of those states. It is true, that the increase of our population is not as much as we would wish, but we have retained by our policy the manufactories of the country; we have increased the urban population by 33 per cent., and we have sent 173,000 of the young men of our country to the North-West. In the next ten years we hope to divert the population which for the last fifty years has been moving to the south; we expect by the policy of this Government, by the building of railways and the increased prosperity of this country, to divert that population to Canada. Any person has only to open his eyes in order to see the increase in wealth and prosperity in this country during the last decade. Look at the increase of the deposits in the banks, look at the amounts deposited in our savings banks, look at the new enterprises in which we are engaged, look at the increase in our manufacturing industries, look at the amount of tonnage which we move on our railways, look at the interprovincial trade which we have developed while keeping up our trade with foreign countries, and no man can make the people of Canada believe that, though the population has not increased to the extent we desire, the prosperity of the individuals of the country has not greatly increased. That is patent to everyone, and everyone knows that our country is prosperous and progressive, and that we are opening up a field for the surplus population of this country, and that the prospect is that in a few years we will see one of the finest and greatest nations in the world established here. Yet these hon. gentlemen offer us a panacea and a cure for the movement of our population, and that is to obtain reciprocity with the United States, to give up the manufactures of this country to the people to the south, and to fling us back into the position of being simply an agricultural country, which all over the world is known to be a poor country. We were forced to adopt the policy of the people to the south of us in order to retain our own people within our own borders.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But you have not done it.

Mr. HAGGART. We have kept within our own borders the natural increase of our population. We intend after this to increase the percentage year by year, and to see that not only the natural increment, but also the result of immigration, shall be kept in the country. Perhaps I have said enough on that subject, because the hour is late and I intended my remarks to be principally devoted to a speech of the hon, member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan). I might reply to an unjustifiable attack made by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) on the Finance Minister. He almost accused him of making a contract with certain parties, and making an increase from $4,000 to $6,000 without any authority from Parliament or any authority from his colleagues.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). His colleagues could not give him authority.

Mr. HAGGART. The inference he desired us to draw was that this was for the Minister's own benefit. He said this in reply to an accusation made against him by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) in reference to the boodling newspapers of the country, and he replied that there were other boodlers than the newspapers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No doubt.

Mr. HAGGART. In reply to that charge and in his desire to defend his own colleague, he arose to defend Mr. Anglin, and why? Because a colleague of mine, the Minister of Customs, had a similar contract, is that a justification for boodling? If it is a justification for boodling, it is a justification for all the charges made against the hon. member.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That was not my argument. My argument was this: There was a certain interpretation put upon the Independence of Parliament Act in the case of Mr. Bell, of Russell, by a committee of which Sir John Rose was chairman, that was followed and recognized as law, and I referred to the case of the Minister of Customs, and

Mr. Beaty, who represented Toronto, and Mr. Stephenson, who represented Kent, to all of whom contracts for printing had been given before the contract was given to Mr. Anglin, and all sat in this House.

Mr. HAGGART. Because there was an improper decision given, as hon. gentlemen must admit it was, in certain cases, it justified Mr. Anglin. At least these parties took contracts in their own name, but Mr. Anglin farmed his out. The hon. gentleman should not have replied so warmly to the Minister of Finance, because the Minister was only instancing that if it was wrong in the case of parties who received money from the Government for the purpose of doing work which they honestly performed, and which we believe in every case they gave full value for, it was wrong for him to retort and say that the hon. gentleman had appointed a Speaker in the House who did the same things, and perhaps worse. But I intend to answer the accusations which have been levelled at this Government, in respect to the public debt, as being one of the causes which keep immigrants from coming to this country. Now, let me ask who is responsible for that debt? The debt of this country consists of about $237,000,000. The total provincial debts assumed were $109,000,000. Is not every hon. gentleman opposite as responsible for that as the Conservative party are? When we entered Confederation it was one of the conditions of the Union that the Dominion Government should assume all the provincial debts, amounting, as I say, to $109,000,000. Is not every man on this side of the House, is not every Reformer in the country, as responsible for that sum as any Conservative that stands in this House? Again, one of the conditions upon which Nova Scotia and New Brunswick entered Confederation was the building of the Intercolonial Railway. The expenditure upon that is somewhat over $40,000,000, which added to the provincial debts assumed, makes $149,000,000. Was not every member of the Reform party just as responsible for that expenditure, and did it not accept the responsibility as well as the Conservative party, for the building of that road? Then, there are $32,000,000 expended on the canals of this country. Was there ever a voice raised by those hon. gentlemen against that expenditure? Did they not build the canals themselves? Did they not make extensions to the canals? Add that $32,000,000 to the last total, and we have $181,000,000. Is not every hon. gentleman opposite responsible for that just as much as we are? Do they say that they are not responsible for the expenditure on the Canadian Pacific Railway? Sir, if they had an opportunity, would they not have expended the money for the purpose of completing that magnificent enterprise? Does any hon. gentleman opposite say that that money was ill-spent, or if they had an opportunity of building the road themselves, they would not have done so? Add $60,000,000 to the last total, and it makes more than the entire debt of the country. We will say nothing of the expenditure on capital account for the purpose of other improvements, for the building of the Prince Edward Island Railway, or what was expended on capital account for the acquisition of the North-West, that was expended on Dominion lands, expended on public works throughout the country, but confine ourselves simply to the canals, to the Intercolonial Railway, to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and to the debts of the provinces, and you still have more than the entire net debt of the country at this time. Yet they get up on the stump throughout the country, as I have heard them again and again, and as they do in this House, and say that the Conservative Government are responsible for the increase in the debt of this country, and not one of them would dare to get up and say that the expenditure was not a proper one, that these different undertakings ought not to have been gone into. Have they shown, with the exception of two or three millions, how they could reduce the amount of money which we levy for the purpose of carrying on the business of the country? Not one of them. I have heard the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) endeavour to show how it could be reduced two or three million dollars, yet they say that the taxes imposed upon the people by an unscrupulous and incompetent Government are a reason why the population has not grown faster. They may talk in that line as long as they like, but the figures are too clear, too well known by the people, for the latter to be imposed upon by any such argument. Everyone in this country is responsible, the one as well as the other, for the debt of the country. I admit that the expenditure may possibly be decreased, and the Minister of Finance is doing his best to economize in the expenditure of the country, and I hope he will succeed; still, it can only be decreased by a small amount, and the expenditure of this country must continue to be in the neighbourhood of what it is at present. Now, last night the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) charged the Government with corruption. I think that hon. gentleman must have a fellow-feeling for everyone who is guilty of corruption, and he should not be so anxious to parade before the people the disgrace of his country, if the facts are as he stated. Now, what would they do in England under a similar condition of things? If there were corrupt contracts made, if there was peculation, if parties were receiving commissions, would the Opposition of that country get up and hound the Government as corrupt and incompetent? It has occurred again and again in England, but no such charges were made against the Administration. All the efforts made by the Opposition in the English House of Commons were not in the direction taken by hon. gentlemen opposite, they were in the other direction, for the purpose of assisting the Government; they deplored the crimes which brought mutual disgrace upon the people of the country. Every effort made by the Opposition in the British House of Commons was in that direction, and there was no charge made such as the hon. gentleman hurled across the floor of this House against the Ministry of the day. Let me quote some of the statements made by the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. Cameron) in his remarks the other evening. Some of his remarks were in regard to a question that is before a Committee of this House, and I will not transgress the rules by adverting to it this evening. I believe the whole of his remarks during that debate were not pertinent to the question, but I may be permitted, as the hon. gentleman was permitted the other evening, to refer to this subject. He said that events were transpiring in this country and were at present being brought to light, which caused immigration to shun the shores of this Dominion. In regard to the Kingston dock, he stated:

"I pointed out, in connection with the Kingston graving dock, that it was proved there was a clear steal in that matter from the public treasury of $190,000."

I remember the pleasure with which he rolled out "steal from the public treasury of $190,000." Where did he find his facts? Where can he adduce a single proof in support of his assertion? The statement is false. The amount of the contract is well known, and every hon. gentleman on the other side knows what the amount of the contract was. It was let to the lowest tenderer, although the hon. member for Bellechasse may say it was a forged tender or anything else. The amount of extras for increasing the capacity of the dock was only $30,000. Where does he find that the amount of the contract price has been exceeded beyond the extra amount which the Order in Council gave authority to expend—$30,000? Where does he get $190,000? Only out of his imagination. There is not a word of truth advanced in support of the charge. I have the figures here, and I read them the other evening. I will, however, give them again, and I should like to hear any hon. gentleman opposite deny the statement. The original contract price was $260,000, and the amount of the expenditure for enlarging it was $31,000. Let me give the amount expended up to date. The amount paid to Bancroft & Connolly on account of the work was $256,000. The total amount estimated was $401,844. The total expenditure was $450,000 or $456,000. The extra expenditure is made up as follows:—

Valves—paid at contract prices—so much per pound of iron, $3,000; caisson—under separate contract—Dominion Bridge Company, $18,000; hauling gear—paid contract prices, $2,000; pumping plant—separate contract, John Inglis & Sons, $23,300; engine and boiler house, &c., separate contract, P. Navin, $11,000; shop tools, $2,500; coal shed, $1,000; fencing and gates, $2,500; shores, wedges, bilge blocks, $2,500; blocks, storehouse, &c., $2,500; residence for dock master and engineer and dock office, $5,000; electric plant, $2,500; expenditure, 1888-89, for site, preliminary work, &c., $33,763.

Yet that hon. gentleman rises in this House and says there was a steal of $190,000. How long are charges like that to be made in this House and rung through the country? Is there not honour enough among hon. gentlemen opposite to lead some of them to rise and deplore that such statements as that are made by any hon. gentleman? Is he to vilify public men and to state in his own manner across the floor of the House that there was a steal of $190,000? Then he said in the next place:

"Am I out of order in drawing the attention of Parliament to the fact that, in the construction of the Tay Canal, constructed, as I believe it was, for the benefit of the Postmaster General, there was a steal of at least a quarter of a million? Is it any wonder that, in the face of these things, we cannot retain our population, and that any immigrants we do receive flee from our country as if it were a plague-stricken spot?"

What does he mean by a steal of $250,000? He almost insinuated that I had some interest in it. I may state, and I do not know what effect it will have on the hon. gentlemen opposite, that neither directly nor indirectly did I receive a copper for any political purpose or on any pretext whatever, nor did I have any dealings whatever with any contractor on the Tay Canal, nor in any manner or way did I ever use my influence for the purpose of getting any man work on the canal. Yet that party will rise and say there was a steal of $250,000. The estimate of the prices for the work completed may have been underestimated by the engineer; yet the hon. gentleman rises in his place and makes that statement; and I ask hon. gentlemen opposite if they will associate with a party who rises and declares without having a single tittle of evidence to support his statement, that there was a steal of $250,000. Then he said:

"Rumours were abroad in Canada, rumours were abroad across the international boundary line, rumours were abroad in the mother country. Is it any wonder that with these extraordinary facts published abroad the tide of immigration should be very narrow and should remain here but a very short time? Does everybody not know that the Department of the Postmaster General is notorious from one end of Canada to the other—so notorious that it has been the subject of discussion in the public press? So notorious has it become that it has been the object of denunciation from almost every pulpit in the land. The Postmaster-General, a Minister of the Crown, charged with these crimes, remains silent and dumb."

Who is my accuser in a case of this kind? Who is the gentleman who rises on the floor of this House and accuses me? I almost feel like Cicero who was accused by Clodius before his peers in Rome, and can say: Clodius me accusat. He was a man guilty of all the crimes in the calendar and who yet brought Cicero before his peers. This same gentleman with whom I have been in the House for a number of years must remember the celebrated Tuckersmith Bill. Did he not, after the decennial census, when a measure was introduced of gerrymandering the constituencies, come into this House and because he had a Liberal majority at his back, when his election was protested on his return for the riding he represented by a majority of only 81 when the riding was nearly equally divided as to population, there being very little difference between the divisions, seek to get Tuckersmith added with its Liberal majority of 206, when he was turned out by the courts? He did not present himself for election, Tuckersmith was not added, the Senate stood by us and struck out the Bill. Is that the gentleman who in the courts of this country had personal charges of bribery and corruption and debauching his constituency brought against him, and who had to admit that he spent from $14,000 to $16,000 in the election? Is that the gentleman of which the Court of Appeal of the country said, that if the judge in the first instance had only reported him for personal bribery, there was enough evidence to disqualify him, and that they would have disqualified him? That is the gentleman who gets up in this House and accuses me of crimes, on which I will say something hereafter, and on which I will say something now in so far as they affect this question. That is the party who gets up in this House of Commons of Canada with a clear record and accuses me of the atrocious crimes which have been heralded from one end of the country to the other. That is the same gentleman who speaks of the Liberal party of this country as the pure party of the country, who have an immense following in this House of nearly ninety members, and in their name, he tenders to the moral leader of the Opposition the support of the moral and well-behaving people of Canada. I have no innuendo to make against the leader of the Opposition in this House. I know nothing of his character, either moral or otherwise, but the idea of the member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) getting up in this House and tendering him the moral support of the country, is something astonishing. What crime have I been guilty of? Of no crime that I know of have I ever been guilty. I know the innuendoes and the insinuations which have been spread broadcast from one end of the country to the other, and from my place in Parliament now I deny them. They are as false as the parties who make them; they are as false as the parties who give them circulation. Is there any manliness or honour left in the slanderers? Is there any manliness or sense of decency left in the individual who will charge a number of innocent ladies, many of them supporting perhaps a sister or a mother and who have no other means of support than working in my department? I do not know most of them, I never had any conversation with them, and with none of them have I ever passed an unchaste word. Are they to be charged for the purpose of making political capital against the Postmaster General of this country? I defy the men who make these vile charges. I have been accustomed to accusations of that kind from my boyhood upwards. I am able to take my own part in this House or anywhere else, but is it a satisfaction to those men that poor, innocent, guiltless ladies throughout the country, should have charges hurled against them, in which there is not a word of truth? Talk about honour; if these slanderers have no honour, at least humanity should be in the breasts of some of them. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say nothing more upon that question, further than to again give it a most indignant denial, and to all the statements which these men have made to that effect, here from my place in this House of Commons I state that they are utterly false and incapable of proof. I have trespassed on your time and on the time of the House, Mr. Speaker, but I have felt it necessary that I should make this reply. I have made no personal or private attack on the hon. gentleman who is opposed to me. I know him from his boyhood upwards. If I know anything about his character, privately, I am above making any accusation against him. I shall not take advantage of anything against him, nor shall I descend to any such tactics here. It would neither benefit me nor injure me. He may make those charges against me if it so suits him, and I shall suffer as well as I can, but I shall not revenge myself by making any charge against him or making any accusation against him, and he should remember that perhaps I feel these slanders as keenly as he would if the same statements were made about himself. Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the patient hearing you have given me at this late, or rather early hour of the morning, and I am sorry that I should have been compelled to make such an explanation to the House.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Mr. Speaker, I do not trouble the House very frequently——

An hon. MEMBER. Do not apologize.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I do not apologize, but I merely say that I do not trouble the House very frequently, and this being a very important question I hope the hon. members will do—as they usually do when I speak—give me a patient hearing.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question; call in the members.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I am sure that you are all weary just as well as I am. I am sure you are anxious we should come to a vote just as well as I am, and I will not detain you very long, after the many speeches we have heard to-day.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). The more noise that will be made by these ungentlemanly men, for I cannot call them anything else, the longer I will be detained. I think that a member of Parliament when he comes to represent a constituency should have sense enough to behave himself when an hon. gentleman is addressing them in a respectful way upon the issues of the day, and any gentleman who has not sufficient respect for himself cannot expect that others will have respect for him. I want to draw the attention of the House to some very serious and untruthful remarks made by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat in reference to my hon. friend to my right (Mr. Cameron). He says that the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) acknowledged in a court of law that he expended from $14,000 to $15,000 in an election that was contested at that time.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). That was a lie.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). The hon. gentleman saves me from telling the truth on that, for he has characterized that statement as a lie, and the hon. gentleman who made that statement, if he wished to confine himself to the truth, should have looked at the record of the court which I now hold in my hand, and from which he could obtain the real facts. That shows that he did not intend to express the truth on that particular question. I say that when an hon. gentleman stands up on the floor of this House and casts reflections upon hon. members in such a way as that, he should not be believed further in anything he says upon the question. The hon. gentleman knows just as well as any person in the country knows, that there have been irregularities in regard to his department. He knows very well that sums of money were paid to parties represented to be sick for several months in succession, when there was no guarantee that the party was sick.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Do not get uneasy, gentlemen. Every hon. gentleman in the House knows that nearly every department of the Government that we had the opportunity of investigating has been proven guilty of the charges brought against it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question; question.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). And these gentlemen will get up and state that only a very few belonging to the various departments have been accused and found guilty. Certainly not; but had we the time and opportunity to go through the various departments from the first to the last, I believe we would find among them a very large percentage of irregularities; and, Sir, this country to-day blushes in shame when the scandals are carried on the wings of the journals throughout this country. Many Conservatives as well as Reformers say that there is a sink of corruption in Ottawa that should be removed, and those who preside over these departments, if they did not know what was going on, were unfit to fill the positions to which they were appointed. Will you tell me that a person at the head of a department should not be close enough in contact with the business and the details of that department to prevent such irregularities, scandals, boodlings, and hookings of money as have been proven during the last two or three months? Hon. gentlemen know, as well as I know, and in their sober moments, talking among themselves, they admit that there has been great dishonesty in the different departments.

Mr. FOSTER. Question; question.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). The hon. Minister of Finance, who calls "question," devoted nearly half his speech to matters that did not pertain to this House at all. He spoke in regard to the business of another Government, entirely apart from this Government, and now he is the first to call "question." The first speaker this afternoon, during his hour and a half speech, did not speak five minutes upon the question before the House.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. Does the hon. gentleman refer to the member for Ottawa? He is talking so fast that I cannot hear what he says.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I merely stated that the hon. member spoke an hour and a-half or two hours this afternoon, and that during that time he scarcely spoke ten minutes in reference to the question before the House; the hon. gentleman knows it to be true; and while he went from Dan to Bersheebah and around by Australia and returned by New Zealand, speaking on every question he had ever read upon, the Speaker never called him to order; but as soon as hon. gentlemen on this side diverge to the right or the left of the main question, they are frequently called to order.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. Does the hon. gentleman say that I spoke beyond the limits of order to-day? I do not understand his English, if it is English.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I think the hon. gentleman spoke so much this afternoon that he got muddled, and he hardly knows what position he was in. Now, with regard to the exodus, it is a very serious matter for this country. Hon. gentlemen may talk about the want of increase in our population as lightly as they please; but I tell you that we have been fighting the battles of this country for so many years that every one of us, without a single exception, should feel sadly disappointed at the results shown by the census returns which have been placed on the Table. But we are told in language eloquent and emphatic, that the Liberal party have been the cause of this want of increase, that they have belied this country and decried it, that they have run this country down during the last ten years on public platforms and in their places on the floor of Parliament. Sir, every single speaker on the other side who spoke in this debate said that this party had decried the country; but not one single line from any member of the Liberal party has been quoted to show wherein they decried the country. I deny it in toto. There is no party in this country, there never was a party in this country, that stood so manfully for the interests of Canada as the grand Liberal party, which now stands just where it stood before. It is true we have pointed out the deficiencies of the Government and the flaws in their policy; we have argued from day to day against their large expenditures of money, and against the fiscal policy which they have established. But while we were pointing out their iniquitous effects and their influence for evil, never did we decry the noble country of which we are the inhabitants. This is one of the most glorious countries on the continent of America. It has grand natural resources, it has an intelligent, enterprising and pushing people, and it has large and increasing facilities for trade. But what we ask is, why in the face of that greatness, people will not come and live among us as they do among those adjoining us? I think it was the Finance Minister who said yesterday that the United States received a larger proportion of immigration during the last decade than we did. That is not so. They received 5,500,000, which is only 10 per cent. of their population of 1880, whereas we received 866,000, which is 20½ per cent. of our population of 1881.

Mr. FOSTER. It is all very well to make your argument.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). The hon. gentleman knows that on that basis all calculations are made in reference to the census. Suppose that in one place there was only one individual this year, and two in the following year, that would be an increase of 100 per cent. Do they not count the increase in the smaller provinces on that basis? The Postmaster General said that the highest natural increase is about 1·1 per cent. annually. Sir, in the last census of the United States, the natural increase is put at 1·04 per cent. per annum, or 14 per cent. in the ten years, which has been fully realized. Calculating our increase on that basis, we should have had an increase of 605,000, without any immigration. 886,000 immigrants came to Canada during the last decade, who expressed their intention of making Canada their permanent home. Now, the natural increase and the immigration would give us 1,491,000 of an increase instead of 504,000 as the census returns show. Our population on this basis should be 5,816,000 instead of 4,830,000 as the census returns make it, or 986,000 less than we had reason to expect under the usual increase. We were told to-day that the National Policy came from the people. The National Policy never came from the people, but was devised in one of the secret chambers of this House, and was brought before the people in 1878 under false pretenses, and the people were deluded by the promises then made. They were told at the end of the great depression which had passed, not only over Canada, but over every country in the world, that the Liberal party were responsible, that they were "flies on the wheel," and incapable of coping with the difficulties. They were told that the National Policy would bring higher prices to the farmer for his products, and these promises were held out by Government agents who went round as buyers of cattle and sheep.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). You tried that game last election.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). In 1882 they came before the country not upon the merits of the National Policy. No, but they gerrymandered this country almost beyond recognition, knowing that if they left the constituencies as they were in 1878, they would not have had a ghost of a chance to be returned to power. By manipulating the various constituencies to suit themselves, they succeeded in being re-elected, solely through their iniquitous system of gerrymander. In 1887, did the people vote upon the merits of the National Policy? They did not. In 1885, the Government passed the most iniquitous Bill ever put on the statutes of Canada called the Franchise Act, for the purpose of placing in the hands of their own partizans, the revising barristers, the control of the lists. I know it to be a fact in my county that hundreds of names have been left out, and I have no doubt that partizan revising barristers acted in the same way in other counties. It was on these lists that the Government carried the country in 1887. What was done in 1891? Hon. gentlemen opposite were afraid of the National Policy that year. And the Finance Minister and the Minister of Justice, and one or two others were sent direct to Toronto to open the campaign by announcing the policy of the Government, and there upon the public platform, they declared in favour of negotiating a treaty of reciprocity along the lines of 1854. But Sir John Macdonald was soon made to know that such a policy, however acceptable to the people, would not suit the manufacturers, and what did he do to counteract the speeches made by his lieutenants at Toronto? He issued an open letter to the electorate of Canada, in which he said that the National Policy was still the policy of the Government, and not one word did he say with regard to trade relations between Canada and the United States. Ask those gentlemen who came from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to support the Government, on what ground they were elected? They went to the country, not purely upon the National Policy, but upon reciprocity with the United States in natural products. Had the National Policy acquired the strength they claimed for it, they would not have required to advocate reciprocity in any shape or form. But passing from that I will make a few comparisons between the increase of population in Canada and the northern fringe of states of the American union. The conditions and circumstances of the provinces and states are very similar, and therefore admit of a fair comparison. Take the four states, Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont. We have heard a great deal about the infertility of Vermont and New Hampshire. We were told last year by the President of the Council in a very able speech that Vermont was one of the most depressed states in the American union, that you could buy a 100-acre farm there for $300 to $500, with fair buildings and the fences thereon, and that many farmers were leaving their farm which they could not sell. We were told that New Hampshire was in a very wretched state, and that the farms there were mortgaged to a great extent. Maine we were told was no better than New Brunswick in any particular. And yet we find that in those four states the population has increased 9 per cent. in the last decade, whereas in the Provinces of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Quebec, it only increased 3 per cent. What reason do hon. gentlemen give for this? Do they suppose that, if New Brunswick had free access to the states to the south for the articles it produces, manufactured and raw, it would only have increased by 61 individuals? Nova Scotia is comparatively a good province. Large portions of it are fine arable land. Its largest city is Halifax, which is one of the best ports on the Atlantic coast. Halifax is supplied very largely with railways built at the expense of the Government. It has a subsidized line of steamers running to Liverpool and another running to the West Indies. And yet with these advantages the population only increased in the decade 9,900, or 6·8 per cent. About 100 miles down the Atlantic coast is the City of Portland, having no special advantages, and yet it has increased in population from 1880 to 1890 nearly 8 per cent. I ask any hon. gentleman looking at the two cities and the advantages possessed by each, to give any reason for this difference, except that the one city is shut out from reciprocity with its neighbours, or is it because the Reformers have said something in reference to the policy of the Government? The City of St. John has 4,000 less of a population than it had twenty years ago. What do the members for St. John think of that? They have been putting forth their energies to establish a large import and export trade at that city, aided largely by Government subsidies. The reduction of 2,000 between 1871 and 1881 was in part owing to the great fire, but since that time St. John has had no backset, and yet has not the population which it had twenty years ago. The City of Montreal occupies the most commanding position of any city in America. It is at the head of deep-water navigation on the one hand and is the city to which converges the river and lake trade of the west, thus constituting a great distributing centre superior to any on the continent. Compare the increase of population in Montreal with that of Rochester on the other side, which has not the natural advantages or the central position that Montreal has, and you will find it has increased 10 per cent. more than the City of Montreal.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No, it has not.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). It has. Montreal has increased 40 per cent. and Rochester has increased 50 per cent.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. You said Rochester had increased 50 per cent. more than Montreal.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Rochester did increase 50 per cent. and Montreal 40 per cent., the difference is 10 per cent. in favour of Rochester. Everyone knows that a large portion of the trade which naturally belongs to Rochester, is cut off by the railways which centre in New York and Boston, and it has not the advantage of position such as Montreal possesses. Then, compare Toronto and Buffalo. Toronto has probably increased more than any other city on the continent of America, except two or three, but that has been owing to the withdrawals from the surrounding towns and rural sections of the country, and you will find that other towns both in the west and east have suffered by Toronto absorbing the population. Compare Hamilton with Cleveland. Hamilton has a central position, it receives the trade of the west, it has the advantages of the lake, and yet Cleveland has increased nearly twice as much as Hamilton. Hamilton has increased by 36 per cent. and Cleveland by 63 per cent., and Detroit by 77 per cent. To illustrate this more fully and show the falsity of some of the arguments which have been used this afternoon, I will take ten of the most prosperous inland cities of the Province of Ontario and compare them with ten cities taken at random from the adjoining states and see which has made the greatest increase in population. I take Ottawa which has a central position and is the seat of Government, where $500,000 of the public money is spent every year. It possesses the largest lumbering interest in the country. This industry is of immense value to Ottawa. London is one of the most central cities of the west, surrounded by the best agricultural country of the Dominion. St. Thomas is another city which is a central distributing point. Guelph is another good distributing point. Stratford has very large railway repair shops, employing 300 or 400 men. It is a good distributing centre and surrounded by a magnificent country. Brantford is one of the manufacturing cities of Ontario, and so is Cornwall. Galt, the Sheffield of Ontario, is turning out some very fine work. Peterborough is a very prosperous city, and Owen Sound is a flourishing centre, the coming city of the north. In 1881 the population of these ten cities amounted to 114,540, and by the last census the population was 150,668 of the most prosperous cities and towns in Ontario, showing an increase of only 31½ per cent. I suppose the statement as to the increase by 40 per cent., as stated by the returns as being the increase of Canadian cities, include the larger cities as Toronto and Montreal, and some of the cities in the newer districts, as Victoria and Vancouver, which have greatly increased. Now, let me take another group of cities. I will take them in any state you please—take them in Michigan. The Province of Ontario is one generation older than Michigan: that province was partly settled when there was not a living soul in Michigan. Ontario has better lands than Michigan, has minerals of vast wealth, more than comparable to the minerals of Michigan. Take the following cities of Michigan:—Grand Rapids, Muskeegon, Lansing, Manistee, Saginaw, Alpena, Ann Arbor, Bay City, Marquette and Menomonee. Those cities increased 70 per cent. as compared with 31½ per cent. in the best Canadian cities, and those are taken at random from the cities of similar size in Michigan. Take another group of ten cities in Indiana, and the increase was 48 per cent. as compared with the increase of 31½ per cent. in Ontario. Take another group of cities in New York, which embraced a population of 153,000 in 1880, and in 1890 they had a population of 215,971, or an increase of 40 per cent. as compared with 31½ per cent. increase in Ontario. Take another group in Ohio, where ten cities had an average population in 1880 of 14,957, and they have increased to an average of 23,890, or an increase of 60 per cent. Now, I would ask: What is the reason that the cities on the other side increase so much more rapidly than the most progressive cities in Ontario? Can any hon. member recall any city in Canada more progressive than the ten I have mentioned? I first put in St. Catharines, but when I found that St. Catharines had gone back, I threw it out and took in Owen Sound, which has increased more than any other during the last decade, namely, 69 per cent., one of the smartest towns in the Province of Ontario, and I hope to live long enough to see it one of the best cities of the land. Now, I will compare some of the western provinces with the western states and territories of the republic. We have been accused of running down Manitoba. I say that Manitoba is one of the finest provinces of the Dominion, and I challenge any person to prove that I have ever said anything derogatory to that province. I say, that Manitoba is far more excellent in many ways than Dakota. First, it has better land than Dakota, it has a better climate, it is not so liable to frost, it has not so many blizzards in the winter time as Dakota. Now, while Manitoba has increased 148 per cent., Dakota has increased 277 per cent.; and remember that settlement in the two countries commenced about the same time. An hon. gentleman speaking yesterday said that that was owing to Dakota having a better market than Manitoba. Some years ago we were discussing the question here and we were showing that the people in Dakota were getting two or three cents a bushel more for their wheat than they were getting in Manitoba, and that very hon. gentleman said that nothing of the kind ever happened, that they were paying as high a price in Manitoba as in Dakota. The hon. member for the City of Ottawa (Mr. Mackintosh) who is not in his seat just now, stated that Manitoba had the best market, that it far exceeded the market of Dakota. So one hon. gentlemen says that Manitoba has a better market than Dakota and the other says it has a worse market; I will let them settle that between themselves. But if Dakota is incomparably poorer in many respects than Manitoba, will hon. gentlemen explain how it is, notwithstanding its poverty, both in soil and climate, that its population has increased 277 per cent. while the population of Manitoba has only increased 148 per cent.? Take the North-West Territories and compare them with Montana to the south; while they increased 141 per cent. Montana increased 236 per cent.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The mineral wealth of Montana has something to do with it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). No: they have mineral wealth that Montana has not. We have coal in the North-West Territories, and they have none in Montana, and if we had free trade Montana would become a natural market for our coal for the purpose of smelting the minerals that they have in Montana, and thus a mutual benefit to both countries would accrue by the trade policy of the Liberals. Now, take British Columbia. British Columbia is one of the richest provinces in the whole Dominion. In its coal there is none that can be compared with it west of the Rockies. It has the finest coal on the Pacific coast. It exported last year to the United States no less than 500,000 tons, giving employment to a large number of men. It has gold, it has copper, it has lead and it has iron, all giving British Columbia a prominent position. Now, will the Minister of Finance say how it is that British Columbia only increased 88 per cent., while the adjoining State of Washington increased 366 per cent.? Seattle and Tacoma increased far beyond any city or town in British Columbia. Hon. gentlemen charge us with decrying our country and preventing people from coming into it, but according to their own evidence 886,000 immigrants came into this country during the last ten years, but we failed to retain them. We not only lost as many as came from foreign countries, at an expense to the country of nearly $3,000,000, but we lost in addition to that number at least 100,000. Now, Sir, I have a few things to place upon Hansard, some statements made by the leaders of the Tory party decrying their country, and I challenge any hon. gentleman to find a similar number of statements derogatory to the interests of Canada, made by any Liberal in the land.

It may have been their remarks that prevented the people from coming into the country.

"The Dominion is suffering from unexampled commercial depression."

Surely that was very disloyal. Who said that? A very loyal man, Sir David Macpherson.—

"We have no work people, they are to be found employed in the United States. Our people are adding strength to a foreign nation."

Who made that statement upon the public platforms of this country? The late leader of the Conservative party.—

"No less than 10,000 immigrants left in one year from the North-West for the United States. They passed through British Columbia to find work in the states and territories adjoining British Columbia, and they found employment in the various cities there, Seattle, Tacoma, and other places."

Who in the world uttered so disloyal a sentiment as to say that our people were leaving to go into the United States by the thousand? That disloyal man was a paid servant of the present Government, and that statement is to be found in his report; and hon. gentlemen opposite were so disloyal as to publish that statement in his report and spread it to the world, and yet if a Liberal makes a statement something similar it is considered disloyal on his part. "Loan societies and official assignees are the only prosperous classes in this country." Who said that? It might have been the hon. member for South Oxford.

Mr. FOSTER. It is too mild.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). But it was not the hon. member for South Oxford, neither was it the hon. member for North Norfolk, but it was an hon. gentleman on whom Her Majesty bestowed a high honour, Sir David Macpherson. "Farmers have to import corn for provender." That will be good immigration literature to send to the old country. "Farmers in some districts have had to import wheat for food.' The gentleman who made those statements was the same person. And here is another statement from a leader of their party:

"We have depreciated values. We have small dividends. We have limited markets. We have low prices."

The hon. gentleman who had been disloyal enough to make such utterances on a public platform and on the floor of Parliament was the Lieutenant Governor of New Brunswick, one of the late Finance Ministers of the Tory Government. Here is another precious sample of the literature of the Tory party:

"There is a loss of confidence. There is great distrust. There is a long string of insolvencies. Labourers are asking leave to work. Our workingmen are beggars. Our people are drifting to the United States."

Who was the man who would stand on public platforms and make those statements before this country? Surely neither the Minister of Finance, nor the Secretary of State, nor the Minister of Justice; no, it was none less than the leader of the Conservative party, who built up the party and stuck to it, and they to him, till he was taken away by a kind Providence at a time when it was a blessing for him to leave this world. He could not have lived through the disclosure of the last three or four months. No doubt, the scandals and corruptions brought on prematurely the disease from which he died. Had he lived, I am satisfied he would have felt deeply the disclosures that have been made, as he, no doubt, believed that the departments were under the supervision of men whom he thought capable of discharging the duties devolving upon them. I thank hon. members for the attention given me, and I hope we will consider the question more thoroughly as to how to increase the population of our country. We all admit that in the discussion of these subjects perhaps too much political feeling is introduced; but this is a question to which all intelligent men should apply themselves in order to ascertain if the small increase of population is not due to the National Policy, to which, I believe, it is largely due; and if such is not the case, we should ascertain to what cause it is due, and having ascertained the cause, let us then apply ourselves as men, be the cause the National Policy or anything else, to securing the establishment of a policy more in harmony and accord with the general interests and prosperity of our country.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Montreal West (Sir Donald Smith) has not voted.

Sir DONALD SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie).

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER. Had we not better take another item ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will not consent to that at half-past three in the morning.

Mr. FOSTER. Better take another one.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman does not consent to that, I must tell him that we will be under the necessity of keeping him here a very long time.

Mr. FOSTER. We might as well stay here until six o'clock now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will not consent to that. I object to any other item being taken. I move that the Committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. FOSTER. The Committee will not rise unless I make the motion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, do it then.

Mr. FOSTER. I move the Committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron).

Motion agreed to ; Committee rose and reported progress.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to ; and House adjourned at 3.30 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 4th September, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

RATHBUN COMPANY.

Mr. TAYLOR presented the Thirteenth Report of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a proposal, as I understand, to suspend all rules in favour of a private Bill. The thing has, no doubt, been done before and it is not my purpose to oppose this particular case, but I think no action of that kind should be taken without the concurrence of the Government in general and the Minister of Justice in particular, and that they should be held responsible by the House for any deviation from our rules of legislation such as this which is proposed.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This is not a motion, but I may state that I will object to the suspension of the rule which requires the Bill to proceed regularly by stages. I have not heard any reason given why this Bill should not have been introduced at an earlier stage of the session, which has lasted four months. However, the Bill may be allowed to be introduced, but it must proceed day by day, according to the rule.

Mr. O'BRIEN. As a member of that Committee, I may say that it was understood that there were no private rights affected.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think there is anything in itself objectionable in the Bill, but I am simply referring to the practice, and I think, if this is done at all, it must be after the Government have taken the responsibility of saying there is nothing objectionable in the proceeding.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK moved that Rules 49, 51 and 60 be suspended in relation to the Bill respecting the Rathbun Company, in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders, as contained in their thirteenth report. He said: I may state that the reason that this Bill is asked for in this unusual way is that a public Bill was introduced here this session by the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood) to amend the general Act so as to give this company and all other companies the powers herein mentioned. That Bill was before the House during the earlier part of the session, but, when it went before the Committee on Railways, it was stated that it would be more advisable to have a separate Bill for each company than that the general Act should be amended in that respect. That is the reason why this company now come to the House.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I would suggest that there is no real necessity for the suspension of the 60th Rule as to the posting. There will be abundance of time.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I understood you were to prorogue within ten days.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Oh, no.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There will be no such good luck, I fear.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Make it that the posting be limited to three days, instead of following Rule 60.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 171) respecting the Rathbun Company. —(Mr. Kirkpatrick.)

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE — PAYMENTS MADE TO W. I. BRADLEY.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland) moved:

That all accounts, cheques and vouchers, for payments to W. I. Bradley, clerk in the Department of Railways and Canals, from 1st July, 1884, to 31st December, 1885, as found on page 210, part II of the Reports of the Auditor General on Appropriation Accounts for the years ended 30th June, 1884-85 and 1885-86, and also the attendance books of the said department for the period specified, be forthwith produced for the use of the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the Twenty-second Report of the said Committee.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE—PRINTING OF EVIDENCE.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland) moved:

That the evidence now being taken by the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts respecting certain payments made in the Audit Office, and also the evidence being taken in connection with certain accounts now before that Committee, for supplies furnished to the Department of Public Works in 1883-84, 1884-85 and 1885-86, be printed for the use of the members of the said Committee, and that Rule 94 be suspended in relation thereto, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the Twenty-third Report of the said Committee.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE — CONTRACTS FOR TORONTO HARBOUR.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland) moved:

That all accounts and vouchers for payments made in connection with the contracts of Murray & Cleveland, contractors for work in Toronto Harbour; also all advertisements for tenders, plans, specifications, tenders elaborations, extensions and moneyings out of all such tenders; and all correspondence whether by letter, telegram or otherwise touching said works, tenders and contracts from any engineers, inspectors or other officers at any time connected with said works, together with any letters, papers or other documents from any persons whomsoever to the Department of Public Works or any member of the Government in regard to such works; also all reports from any engineer, inspector or other officer at any time employed on such work; also all orders, authorizations or instructions, from the Government or any officer thereof, touching the said works or any modifications thereof or additions thereto, and all receipts for all payments made on account of the said works, be forthwith produced for the use of the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the Twenty-fourth Report of the said Committee.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland) moved, That leave be granted to the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts to sit during the time that the House is in session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does that mean the whole Committee, or a select Committee?

Mr. FOSTER. The whole Committee. That was chiefly to meet the difficulty which has arisen in this way: The Keewatin matter is to be taken up and the officials who ought to be away on duty at the present time, are here, and we do not wish to keep them any longer than we can possibly help.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not going to object, but in the case of the Public Accounts Committee the Minister will see that grave inconvenience might arise, as neither he nor I can very well be absent from the House while the House is in Supply, and we both ought to be on that Committee.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not proposed to make these meetings stated meetings. It is merely for to-day, and for this special purpose.

Motion agreed to.

SEAT FOR QUEBEC WEST.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have issued a warrant of Supersedeas to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to stay all proceedings in relation to the issue of a new Writ of election, under a Warrant issued by me on the 18th of August last, for the Electoral District of Quebec West, until such time as a new Warrant may issue.

PUBLIC WORKS IN JACQUES CARTIER COUNTY.

Mr. BRODEUR. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to remind the Minister of Justice that on Monday last I put a question to know whether the Government had received a petition from the corporation of the parish of Isle Bizard, concerning the erection of an iron bridge on the river separating the parish of Isle Bizard from the parish of St. Geneviève. I understood the Minister of Justice to say that he would give me the information in a few days. I would like to know if he is in a position to do so now?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I was not able to answer the question fully. The petition has been received, and I was under the impression that the matter was about being finally disposed of. I will be able to answer that point by Monday, if the hon. gentleman will be kind enough to put the question then.

SUPPLY—COPYRIGHT.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House do again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, I desire, before the House resolves itself into Committee of Supply, to briefly direct attention to the extraordinary position which the House, and I may say Parliament, and I should think the Government too, finds itself in connection with the copyright legislation which the Canadian Parliament passed in 1889. A very important and very fair Act was passed unanimously by this Parliament in that year to give a fair measure of relief to the publishers and to the reading public of Canada. That Act, however, was not to come into force until a proclamation should issue from the Canadian Government to bring it into force. We have been waiting more than two years, and no proclamation has yet been issued. I think before this session terminates we ought to know why the proclamation is not yet issued. We have had explanations already from the Government on that point. We know quite well that the Minister of Justice, who introduced that legislation, is strongly in favour of its going into effect. We know that he has strongly pressed those views upon the Imperial Government, and I should like to learn from him what the final results are of all his efforts with the Imperial Government. The other day only we had a few papers brought down by the Government in return to an address which I moved for, showing the state of the correspondence with the Imperial Government on that subject; but it seems, so far as I can make out, still to leave the question very much where it was two years ago, only I consider in a rather worse position than it was then. So far as we can see by the correspondence that has been laid before the House this session, and formerly, this legislation is simply blocked by Downing Street; and how long we will allow that condition of affairs to continue without some very strong remonstrance being made, I should like to know. What obstacles are supposed to exist to this legislation? One which has been until perhaps very recently, the most serious obstacle was the action of the English Copyright Association. Then we had the Berne Convention, the International copyright treaty arranged at Berne some years ago between England, France, Germany and Italy, and three or four smaller powers. Then we had one other excuse for delay sent to us from the other side of the water, that the United States were going to introduce an international Copyright Act. More important than all was the objection raised by the Colonial Office that it was unconstitutional for this Parliament to pass such an Act. As regards the English Copyright Association, I think that merely the statement that they have been in the way of our legislation is a sufficient answer to that difficulty, because certainly, without reference to any Imperial or any other association, this Parliament must be allowed to know what is best in regard to legislation for this country. Then as to the Berne Convention, a matter of considerable importance. By that treaty it is provided that the British possessions should be subject to its provisions. I do not know whether the Canadian Government suggested that or assented to it, and I am not going to say that they did wrong, because coupled with that was a provision in the protocol affecting the subject that the British Government should have the right to give notice of the denunciation of that treaty as regards British possessions, Canada being specially named among them, just the same as if they were separate nations and parties to that treaty. So that the difficulty, if a difficulty did exist, could be removed by the machinery provided by that treaty. It has been said, the Minister of Justice has told us in a State paper dated August, 1889, that great difficulty existed in the way of getting our own legislation on account of the Berne Treaty, and he told us in that State paper that the Canadian Government had requested, early in August, 1889, the Imperial Government to give notice for the denunciation of that treaty on behalf of Canada, so that the difficulty might be removed. The public, and the members of this House also, only heard a few weeks ago that that notice which the Canadian Government gave to the Imperial Government had been ignored. The Minister of Justice, in answer to a question which I put in the House on this subject, told us that the treaty had not been denounced by the Imperial Government on behalf of Canada. There exists, therefore, a very extraordinary state of affairs. When a self-governing colony like ours has important legislation of its own delayed and thwarted by an Imperial treaty, and when in that Imperial treaty there is the right to leave Canada out of it, and when the Canadian Government two years ago made a request to the Imperial Government to do that thing and relieve us from the difficulty that arose out of that treaty, we find that now, after two years, the notice for the denunciation of that treaty has not been given, and it requires one year after notice of denunciation has been given by Great Britain before the treaty can come to an end. If that treaty is held to be such a serious objection, as it has hitherto been by the Imperial Government, there is no possibility of their assenting to our legislation going into force for more than one year, even if they give notice now to denounce the Berne Convention, because the notice would not have effect for a year. That is a very extraordinary position for Canada to be placed in. I do not know how the Government like treatment of that kind, I do not think Parliament will like it, and I do not think the country will like it, when the people understand it and know their position. Another objection that was raised from the other side of the water was, that we should wait to see what the United States Congress would do as to an international treaty. Well, they have acted. I do not think that their legislation does anything to help Canada, but I do think, on the contrary, that it works a practical injury to Canada, and in this way: It will allow British authors to copyright their books, on certain conditions as to printing, in the United States. When that is done Americans cannot reprint them there, and therefore the reading public in Canada will lose the advantage which they had of being able to purchase American reprints of British copyright works, and at the same time our Canadian publishers have no right to reprint them. The Canadian publishers are not benefited in consequence of that in any way that I can see, but the Canadian reading public is very much injured indeed. I know that the Minister of Justice himself in some of his papers has come to the conclusion that such legislation as they have passed at Washington does not in any way interfere with our own legislation, or should not be allowed to interfere at any rate. Then there comes the constitutional difficulty. The British North America Act, section 91, of course gives Canada the right to legislate upon the subject of copyright, just in as distinct terms as it has given Canada the right to legislate upon bills of exchange, promissory notes, or upon patents of invention. I shall not waste the time of the House in arguing in favour of the view that we have an absolute constitutional right to pass that legislation under the British North America Act. I would refer any one who is doubtful upon that point to the very able arguments which were presented by the Minister of Justice in State papers which are before the House, and I will only quote the conclusion that the Minister drew from his own arguments. His conclusion was this :

"That the people of Canada would hold him culpable if he failed to assert, that was the only interpretation under which they received the constitution and under which they are willing to be content with that constitution."

That being the position of affairs, what remedy has the Canadian Government and the Parliament of Canada? Well, Sir, early in this session we were promised by the Minister of Justice across the House, in reply to some remarks that I had made on the subject, as I understood him, that unless the Imperial Government during the then present session passed some legislation which would remove any difficulties which they felt on the constitutional point, and would make the way free for our own legislation to go into effect; then, that this Government would this session assent to the proposal which I had suggested, namely, that this Parliament should pass a strong address to the Queen urging our rights in the premises. Now, Sir, I shall expect to hear from the Minister of Justice to-day that he will do that. The Imperial Parliament has been prorogued without any such legislation. No papers have been brought down to this House to show that anything else has transpired to improve our position, and, Sir, I would call upon the Minister of Justice to take this House, and to take Parliament entirely into his confidence on that matter; and ask us to back up the remonstrances which the Government have made, and especially in our address to remonstrate against the inaction of the Imperial Parliament in not denouncing the Berne Convention, when called upon by the Canadian Government formally to do so two years ago. That is one way of doing it, but I think the more straightforward and manly way for the Canadian Government to treat this matter would be to put in the Canada Gazette a proclamation bringing that Act into force. It cannot be disallowed; it will be allowed, and to make the Act law would, I think, be the more straightforward course. I think we have waited long enough to see what they will do in England, and I think we should now take our own line of conduct in the matter.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not quite agree with the hon. member, that the subject is not in a better position, but rather in a worse one than it was formerly. I think we have got it to such a point that it requires simply insistence and patience on the part of this Parliament to acquire the right, which it is absurd we should not possess. I confess that I am surprised and disappointed after what has transpired, and considering what is within my own knowledge as regards the negotiations of last summer, to find that the session of the Imperial Parliament closed without an enactment on this subject being brought forward. Her Majesty's Government, I may say, have declined so far to adopt the view, to its full extent, which we urged upon them, that the legislation of 1889 was entirely within our powers. They rather incline to doubt that, in view of previous opinions which had been given by law officers; although I thought that the decisions which have been arrived at in interpreting the British North America Act were amply sufficient to justify the conclusion that the statute was within our powers. However, entertaining some doubt upon that subject, obviously the best course was, that all doubt on the subject should be removed by the adoption of an Imperial statute, so that we should not simply proclaim the Act and have litigation afterwards as to its validity, when it would affect such very important interests in our own country. I do not want to say much about what transpired last summer beyond this: That I had every reason to expect that our statute would have received approval before this. Acquainted as we are with the many difficulties which attend the transaction of public business in the mother country, and especially public business which requires the action of the Imperial Parliament, one can easily understand that delay and disappointment will occasionally occur in the progress of a matter like that. I have this to say further on the subject: That we have not in the slightest degree receded from the position we have taken on this question. There is not a word in the strong language which the hon. gentleman has quoted from me which I am disposed to withdraw. I think it most unreasonable that the people of Canada should not enjoy the full right of legislating upon this question for themselves. I believe they do enjoy that right, but the denial of it, or the doubting of it by any authority in the mother country, is an ample reason why we have the right to expect prompt legislation there to remove any doubt of that kind. I have not the slightest doubt that that legislation will be given. It is simply a subject of regret that it has not been given before; but in a matter so clearly within our rights as a self-governing people, I cannot imagine the authorities in the mother country continuing to withhold it from us after the difficulties are removed which occur in connection with all legislation there, in relation to the press of very important Imperial business before the British Parliament. I do not see that the existence of the Berne Convention is a practical difficulty in the way of our measure of 1889 being either assented to now or being ratified by an Imperial statute. I think I am correct in saying that that has not of late been put forward by the Imperial Government as a reason why our Act of 1889 should not be put in force; and I am strongly inclined to think that others connected with the Berne Convention, who are entitled to speak as representing the contracting powers, do not now regard Canada as within the limits of the Berne Convention.

Mr. EDGAR. Canada is within the terms, though.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Quite so. But what I mean is this: That while Canada is included within the terms of the Berne Convention, it would be necessary, in order to give that convention effect in this country, that our copyright system should be changed in some important features, and our statute modified in relation to those particulars. That has not been done, and the Berne Office has taken the view that Canada has practically to adopt legislation in order to give the Berne Convention effect in this country. Of course, I do not wish to doubt for a moment the overmastering effect of the Imperial statute which includes us in that convention; but that has never been, and cannot be, worked out until legislation takes place here, and that is practically the reason why the existence of the Berne Convention has not been put forward as a reason why our Act of 1889 should not be put in force. I fancy there would be no difficulty arising from any objection on the part of the contracting parties to our legislation. The question relating to the American copyright enactment is, to my mind, altogether removed from the discussion, and, indeed, was never anything more than a poor pretext for delay. That pretext, which was put forward from time to time as a reason why the Canadian legislation should not go into effect, pointed to the possibility that a measure of wider liberality in which we could concur, would be adopted by the United States, and that in the meantime legislation in favour of the production of works in our own country might tend to induce the United States Congress to pass a less liberal measure than they would otherwise adopt. That difficulty is already solved by the passage of an Act which contains provisions on this subject which the Canadian Copyright Act had; and it seems to me, therefore, that the existence of American legislation on the subject is quite irrelevant in the present state of the case. I just sum up all I have to say in these words: We stand upon the position we have taken; we intend to insist, in every possible way, upon that view being adopted; and, I think, there is not the slightest doubt that it will be adopted in a very short time. It may be that this House, and the Senate likewise, will be asked before the close of the present session to concur in an address to Her Majesty on this subject. I have thought it undesirable that that course should be adopted down to the present time, at any rate, down to the time when the Imperial Parliament was prorogued; because, it seemed to me, that the passage unanimously by both Houses of our Parliament, of the statute relating to this subject, was a sufficient address of both Houses to Her Majesty to give effect to that statute, by instructing that it be brought into operation. I had reason to suppose that would be quite sufficient in itself, until the prorogation took place. Now, I think it will be a matter for consideration whether we should adopt an address on the subject this session, or whether we should defer it until next session; but I certainly think that unless some prompt action is taken by the Imperial authorities next session, we should then ask Parliament to express its insistence on the measure we adopted in 1889 being brought into operation; and one can hardly suppose that a joint address of both Houses would fail to be effective in inducing the assent which is so much desired. There are reasons which it would not be expedient for me to communicate at this moment, why it would not be wise to adopt the suggestion of the hon. member as to proclaiming the Act—reasons which, I think, would commend themselves to his judgment, and which may be stated in due time. Possibly the adoption of an address on the subject by both Houses next session would be in time, considering that it will be late in the year before the Imperial Parliament begins another session, and considering that by the time we meet again there will be ample time to press the subject before the session of the Imperial Parliament reaches such a stage as to make it inconvenient to introduce new measures. But, on the other hand, some reasons may be presented why Parliament should, before it rises here, be asked this session to adopt an address on the subject, and I shall be in a position to make a statement in regard to that in the course of a day or two.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Mr. LAURIER. The House, I think, will be sorry to hear that the hon. gentleman has somewhat receded from the position he took on a former occasion during the present session. When this subject was up before, as far back as the early part of the month of June, the hon. gentleman spoke with regard to the deferred action of the British Parliament on the subject as follows:—

"If I should be disappointed in that hope——"

That was the hope that Parliament would legislate during the pending session——

——"and should find reason to believe that we shall not have legislation in the Imperial Parliament during this session, I shall take steps to bring about an address from both Houses of this Parliament in favour of the ratification of that Act taking place, and its being brought into force by proclamation."

The hon. gentleman now, if I understand him aright, is not quite certain whether it would be advisable to pass an address during the present session or wait until another session.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I quite agree that it would be advisable and proper. The only question is whether in view of the late stage of our business, it would not be in time next session.

Mr. LAURIER. If that be the only objection, I should say that in a matter of this kind, in which there is such a universal consensus of opinion that the address would be passed unanimously, the objection of the hon. gentleman would hardly apply; and, moreover, it seems to me that our remonstrance should be sent as soon as possible to the Imperial Government, so that they may have time to deal with the question, instead of receiving our remonstrance when perhaps they would be themselves in the midst of the session, which in England is always an arduous one, and when there would scarcely be time to prepare legislation for that session. It seems to me that all the reasons would be in favour of immediate action, because then the Government would be prepared at the very opening of next session to lay before the House the legislation which would be necessary. If that be the only objection the hon. gentleman has, I believe on all sides would be urged on him the advisability of his continuing in the mind in which he was some time ago and having the matter brought up before we separate.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before you leave the Chair, Sir, I want to make a short statement with respect to certain facts having reference to the census of 1871 to 1881, to which I will call your attention, and also the attention specially of the Minister who represents the Department of Agriculture in this House. On examining the records of the census of 1871, I find that in the five old provinces of Canada there were reported to be at that date 2,980,000 people born in Canada, belonging to those provinces. In British Columbia, Manitoba and the Territories, no absolutely accurate statement is possible, but, according to the estimate submitted, something like 80,000 persons born in the Dominion appear to have resided in these sections. These I do not propose to include, as no accurate statement is possible, although to include them would make all the more evident the conclusion to which I have come. I find that in 1881, in the five older Provinces of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario and Quebec, the census returns declare there were 3,605,000 persons born in those provinces then in the Dominion. In British Columbia, Manitoba and the Territories there were 110,000; but, as I have said, I do not propose to include these for the reason I have given. It follows from that statement that, in 1881, there were in the five older provinces alone, not including the Territories, British Columbia and Manitoba, no less than 625,000 native-born Canadians more than had been there in 1871. If you turn to the United States census of 1870, you will find it there stated that there were of native-born Canadians in the United States in 1870, 490,041. In their census for 1880, there were, I regret to say, said to be 712,368 native-born Canadians in the United States. That makes an addition of 222,327 native-born Canadians found in the United States in 1881, to whom you must add the number requisite to make up the death rate accruing in ten years on the 490,041 who were there in the year 1870, which I place at 97,510, showing this total result, that, according to the United States census returns, there were 319,837 native-born Canadians more in the United States in 1880 than were found there in 1870. Now, I would call the attention of the House to the fact that if you want to ascertain the net increase which took place in Canada from 1871 to 1881, you must add to the 625,000 whom our own census returns show to have been added to the roll of native-born Canadians the 318,837 whom the United States census returns show to have gone during that decade from Canada to the United States. That, I think, would be obvious to everybody. That gives, in all, a net increase in the decade of no less than 944,837 persons, and as our total population in 1871 is computed by the census authorities to have been 3,685,586, it is clear that the percentage of natural increase would have amounted in those ten years, if those figures be accurate, to no less than $25\frac{6}{10}$ per cent. That is taking the whole population, which is too large a divisor, but taking the population of the five older provinces, which amounted to 3,580,000, you will find those five provinces appear to have had a natural increase of $27\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. during the ten years from 1871 to 1881. Now, I have by no means taken the most favourable estimate for my position in making that estimate, because it is notorious that the emigration to the United States was heavier from Canada between April, 1880, and April, 1881, than between April, 1870, and April, 1871, as 1880-81 was not a prosperous year for us while 1870-71 was.

Mr. HAGGART. Will you allow me to show how your figures are incorrect? The whole increase of immigration that comes into the country is included in that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman is wholly in error and has not listened to what I said, or has failed to comprehend it. I referred simply to the native-born population in each decade.

Mr. HAGGART. Would not the hon. gentleman consider a native-born person to mean one born in the country of immigrants?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Certainly.

Mr. HAGGART. Would that be a natural increase?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman had examined the matter with a little care he would have known that there is a very considerable reduction in the number of immigrants who came into Canada.

Mr. HAGGART. But all those enter into your calculation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not a bit of it. The immigrants who came to the older provinces show a total by many thousands less in 1881 as against the number who were there in 1871. Now, all that could by any possibility be credited would be the percentage of natural increase upon the small proportion of immigrants that were shown to have settled in Canada between 1871 and 1881. Does the hon. gentleman know what that would have been? It would have amounted perhaps to 10,000 or 15,000, and, as against that, I have deliberately omitted our loss of the natural increase from the huge number of emigrants who have settled in the United States from Canada. I say this: If in 1871 there were in our five old provinces 2,980,000 souls born in Canada, if in 1881 there were 3,605,000 natives of those same older provinces in Canada, the difference between these two figures shows that portion of the natural increase which stayed in Canada, and to that you must add the 319,000 emigrants whom the United States statistics show to have gone from Canada in that decade and settled in the United States. I say, Sir, if you want to get the percentage you get it by adding those two figures together, and if you add them together you get precisely the result I have intimated, only that I rather underestimated the natural increase.

Mr. HAGGART. The figures I took last night and the statements I made to the House were made upon as accurate a basis as could possibly be obtained. I took the number of deaths during the year 1881 and the number of births during that year, I separated the deaths from the births and took the year 1881 as an average. Upon that it showed that the natural increase was 1·07 per cent. I made the statement that Dr. Taché, the person who took the census that year, showed it was impossible, showed how it was that the death rate did not show up as much as it would be, and I made the comparison with the United States. There has been an accurate estimate of the natural increase of population in the United States. It is made by the statistician in the census returns of 1890, and it is less than 14 per cent. I made the calculation of what I thought the increase would be from statistics furnished me by Mr. Lowe, and I arrived at the conclusion that the increase would be 1·12 per annum. Taking a logarithmic proportion, that would show about 13 or 14 per cent., an average percentage of natural increase about the same as that in the United States. I do not know whether I am correct or not, or whether my information is correct or not, but the information I gave to the House was the information furnished to me by the department on the subject.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman gave an accurate statement to the House of the information he had got. It is not my object to prolong or provoke a discussion. I give these facts for the express information of the House and the country. It will be easy for the hon. gentleman, when he has got them, to see if they are inaccurate. They refer to the period between 1871 and 1881. We cannot as yet test the accuracy of my statements as to the last decade, because, at the ordinary rate of progress, some time must elapse before you will get a return of the native-born population of Canada in 1891, and it may be some time before you will get the returns of the Canadian population in the United States. When you get those returns, we will be in a position, without controversy on either side, to gauge by actually ascertained facts whether or not I have been correct, not as to what the natural increase ought to be, but as to what it actually is. I have never contended, looking at the enormous loss of our youthful population, that our natural increase would be maintained. My contention was that, if we kept our people here, the natural increase would amount to 2¼ per cent. Until the facts I have given are refuted, it seems to me that there is no reply to the deductions I have drawn from the returns of the census of 1871 and 1881.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Collection of Revenues — Customs, Nova Scotia..... $117,675

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is some small increase here which you might explain.

Mr. BOWELL. There is an increase in Digby of $470, necessitated by the appointment of an additional officer and boat man. This arises from the extra work in connection with the steamers running from Digby to Annapolis. In Halifax three officers have been removed from the temporary staff to the permanent staff, and the other increases arise from the extra work in the ordinary service when the steamers arrive from Europe. In Kentville there is an increase of $50. In Lunenburg an additional clerk had to be appointed in consequence of the additional work there; and in Port Hawkesbury there is an additional $60 for extra work. In Pictou it is proposed to increase the salary of the collector of the outport of New Glasgow, in consequence of the extra work constantly occurring at that outport. New Glasgow now collects about one and a-half more revenue than the port of Pictou itself, and it is conducted by a sub-collector and a landing waiter. At Weymouth there is an additional expenditure of $200 caused by the fact that an old man 80 years of age has been retired, and in appointing the new officer we had to pay $300 instead of $100. There has been a decrease at Annapolis of $85, and at Windsor of $150, owing to the death of one of the preventive officers, which has not been filled. The net increase in the Province of Nova Scotia is $2,515.

Collection of Revenues—Customs, New Brunswick..... $90,060

Mr. BOWELL. There is a decrease in this province. The expenditure at Chatham has apparently increased by $2,260, but that is because we have abolished the port of Richibucto, making it an outport of Chatham. In Dalhousie there is an increase of $60 on contingencies. There is an increase in the payment to one of the collectors amounting to $100. The total increase apparently in New Brunswick is $2,635. The decreases are $150 at Bathurst, where Haley's place has not been filled, and $100 at Dorchester, where the place of Bilodeau, the preventive officer, has not been filled. There is a reduction of $2,260 at Richibucto to which I have already referred, and at St. John there is a decrease of $1,200 owing to the death, dismissal or superannuation of some of the higher class officers and the appointment of officers of a lower class at salaries of $500 or $600 each. The total decrease in New Brunswick is $1,075.

Collection of Revenues—Customs, Prince Edward Island..... $19,885

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I want to bring to the attention of the Minister of Customs representations which have been made to me respecting the payment of the Customs officials in Charlottetown. The general belief exists among them—a belief which I suppose is apt to prevail among all officials—that they are not fairly treated in regard to their pay. They have called my attention to this fact, that the same rules which apply to the increase of salaries in the Inland Revenue Department and the Post Office Department do not apply to the officials of the Customs Department, and therein they think a serious grievance lies. They stated—and I must say that when the fact was stated to me it did appear to commend itself as not unreasonable—that in the Post Office Department a third class clerk is appointed at a salary of $400 a year, and he has a yearly increase of $40 until his salary reaches $800; a second class clerk is appointed at $900, and his salary is increased at the rate of $50 a year until it reaches $1,200, and a first class clerk in a similar proportion. Now, I am not in a position to say whether that rule is just or unjust, but assuming it to be based upon justice, and to continue in practice in the two departments I have referred to, it does appear to me to be unjust that another department, officered and paid from the same exchequer, should be placed in a different position. I understand that in the outside service of the Customs Department, the chief clerks and the appraisers, the cashiers and other officers have a salary which is fixed at a certain sum and does not increase from year to year as do the officials I have referred to in the other departments. Now, in the City of Charlottetown the collector gets $1,800. I have never heard him complain about his salary, although he may have done so. The other officials are a chief clerk at $1,200, and appraiser at $1,000, the other clerks get $600, and the cashier $700. It is difficult to determine with relation to other Customs ports, whether the salaries are above or below the average, because I suppose, to some extent, the amount of the salary is regulated by the work at the port, and there is no doubt that should be an element in determining the amount of salaries to be paid—nobody will doubt that. But it should not be the sole element, and I am not quite sure that it should be the controlling element. It has been pointed out, and there seems to be something in it, that the officials in Charlottetown —and the same argument, of course, applies to other ports similarly situated—although in the winter time they have very little work to do from the nature of the case, the port being frozen up, are obliged to attend from 9 o'clock in the morning until 5 o'clock, or whatever hour the office is closed, ready to do the work if the work is there for them; and they are not permitted by the rules of the department, which, no doubt, are based upon justice and necessity, to engage in any kind of commercial business whatever. That, I suppose, is an absolute necessity in the Customs Department. Therefore these men, nearly all of whom, I may say, are married men, receive a fixed salary, with no hope of increase such as exists in the other departments, and a salary placed at a sum upon which I do not see myself very well how they manage to maintain their families. As I say, they are prevented from engaging in any commercial enterprise outside, and of that I make no complaint; they are bound to be in their place all the year round; and although it may be urged that for a portion of the year they have not got much work to do, still that is not their fault, nor are they to be blamed. Then the salaries, of course, are very much smaller than the salaries paid to the officials in St. John and Halifax; and while I would be the last one to contend that the salaries should be placed upon the same footing, still I think the discrepancies are so very great that the matter should receive the attention of the Minister. I know that an impression prevailed—and perhaps that existed in the mind of the Minister when he fixed their salaries—that the cost of living in Charlottetown is very much less than in these other cities. There was a period in the history of Charlottetown when that was true, but that period has gone by, because the cost of living is just as great there now as it is in Halifax, or in St. John, or in any other port of the Maritime Provinces. The taxes are high, and the cost of living in every respect is just as high as elsewhere. Looking, therefore, at the several facts I have mentioned—that these officials do not occupy as good a position as the officers in the Inland Revenue and the Post Office Departments, in that they do not receive any increase as the other officials do; looking at the fact that they are not permitted, for good reason, to engage in any business outside their official business, and therefore cannot augment their salaries from any private source; looking at the fact that they are married men with families, I think that the amount paid to them is so small as to deserve the favourable consideration of the Minister to receive a small increase. Now, the hon. gentleman is aware of the character of these officials. Mr. Bremner, the chief clerk, has been in that office, I think, a quarter of a century, at least. He is a man of very high character, and I know discharges his duties well. Mr. Hogg, the appraiser, has filled the position, I think, for the last ten or twelve years. I never heard any complaint about the manner in which he discharges his duties. He seems to be faithful and efficient, so far as one can judge from seeing him at his post all the time. I have never heard anything said of him except in commendation. The clerks all bear excellent characters. I thought, after looking the matter over, and thinking it over to see whether I would be justified in bringing it before the House, that a fairly good case was made out for the consideration of the Minister, I would therefore present it to him for consideration, trusting that if he sees the public interests will permit it, these gentlemen may receive a reasonable and fair increase for their services.

Mr. BOWELL. The question brought before the Committee by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) is not a new one. It has been brought under my notice a number of times, and I came to the conclusion that to adopt the system which prevails in the Inland Revenue and Post Office Departments would entail an enormous increase in the expenditure for the collection of the revenues of the country. When you consider that there are nearly a thousand officials in the whole Dominion, you, by adding only $10 to the salaries of each one of them, increase the demand upon the revenue by $10,000 a year. Many persons urge that the increase of $50 a year in the salaries, as in other departments, is a mere bagatelle, still that entails a charge of $50,000 a year, and so in proportion to the increase made, until they reach the maximum. It has not been deemed advisable to adopt that principle in connection with this department. When the Civil Service Act was passed a scale of salaries was adopted which was believed to be commensurate with the work to be performed by the gentlemen appointed to fill the different positions. If the hon. gentleman will look at the schedule of the Customs in the Civil Service Act, he will find that the salaries of inspectors range from $1,600 to $2,500 per annum. Collectors' salaries range from $400 to $4,000; there are only two ports in the Dominion at which a salary of $4,000 is paid, Toronto and Montreal. I am not prepared to say that the salary at Montreal, considering the amount of responsibility connected with the collection of the revenue, which amounted for the last two or three years to about $9,000,000 annually, should not range higher than the salary at Toronto, which, I may remark, has increased during the last ten years from between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000 to nearly $5,000,000 annually. Gradually the trade is going westward. That arises from the facilities which are given to carry goods direct to the merchants who import them. Then we come to the surveyors, whose salaries range from $1,200 to $2,500. I have adopted the principle of having as few surveyors as possible except in large ports, where some one is required to supervise the officers. Chief clerks range from $1,200 to $2,000, and other officers in proportion downwards. If the hon. gentleman will take the trouble to compare the salaries paid at St. John, which, of course, is admittedly a much more important port than Charlottetown, he will find that as fair salaries are paid at the latter port. Both Halifax and St. John are open ports the year round; hence there is really more work in the Customs Department there at certain periods of the year than there is at Montreal or Quebec. If the hon. member for Queen's will take the trouble to compare the salaries of the officials at Charlottetown with those at St. John, he will find there is very little difference, except in the higher positions, where the work is more onerous and the responsibilities greater. The chief clerk at Charlottetown receives $1,200 a year. The hon. gentleman did not speak too highly of that officer, so far as I have known that port for the last 12 years. At St. John, the chief clerk is paid $1,500. At Montreal he is paid $2,000, and the officers are paid, as far as possible, on the principle of equity in proportion to the labour and responsibility devolving upon them. In the lower grades, tide waiters and landing waiters, there is very little difference. They enter at $500 at St. John and Halifax, and they advance as the department thinks they merit advancement until they reach the maximum. That, I admit, rests solely with the department and the Minister, and when applications for increases are made, and they occur very frequently, application is made to the collector for a report as to the character of the officer making the application. Unless the House desires to establish a principle which will add to the expenditure for the collection of revenue from $10,000 to $50,000 annually, the present system is the best one to pursue. Another point that must be remembered in connection with this subject is this, as to how many of the men occupying positions as tide waiters and landing waiters would earn elsewhere more than they receive in the Customs Department. Take mechanics and artizans. They earn $1.50, $2 or $2.50 per day, and $3 is high wages the year round. If a mechanic, in consequence of a rain storm or from sickness, is absent from work he receives no pay. In the Civil Service, as has been brought very prominently before the notice of members during recent examinations before the Public Accounts Committee, an officer may be absent one, two or even twelve months, and his salary continues, and at the same time provision is made for those officers if they become unfit for duty and reach a certain age, being superannuated. I know there is much force in the suggestion made by the hon. member for Queen's, but when we consider the classes of men who obtain these positions, and the positions they occupied before they entered the Civil Service, the advantages that arise to them from the positions being permanent and from receiving pay under all circumstances, we must come to the conclusion that, as a whole, more particularly remembering the number of hours they have to labour, they are as well paid as are the same classes of men occupying other positions. There may be and are individual cases deserving consideration: such probably is the case of Mr. Bremner. With the ability he possesses and the aptitude for the work he performs, he would be worth $1,500, $1,600, or $2,000, if he were in Montreal, and no doubt he would get it. But considering the revenue of the port of Charlottetown, and that his work continues only six or seven months of the year, in receiving $1,200 per annum he is tolerably well paid. Still that is a question, particularly with respect to that officer, which deserves the consideration of the department. The same observations apply to the appraisers. Take the port of Montreal. The work of the appraisers there is enormous; they are constantly busy and are brought into contact with hundreds of merchants and thousands of different classes of importations, and from the enormous responsibility devolving upon them, we have to pay them higher salaries, especially as their duties continue from 1st January to 31st December. I shall be very glad in the administration of the department to accept any suggestion I think equitable, affecting any individual case, or as a general principle. I may say that I proposed at one time to adopt the system suggested by the hon. member for Queen's; but when I considered the whole question, the work to perform, and the enormous increase that the adoption of such a system would make to the expenditure of the department every year, I thought the better way was to adopt the principle which is laid down in the Civil Service Act, of establishing a minimum and maximum salary and treating each case on its merits as it was brought before the head of the department.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman has stated the case very well, very fairly and very strongly. He misunderstood me if he thought I desired the system to be changed, and the Inland Revenue and Post Office systems to be applied to Customs. I did not so desire. I have not a sufficient knowledge of the facts to enable me to arrive at a judgment in the matter.

Mr. BOWELL. That is what I understood was your contention.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I was prepared to accept the hon. gentleman's judgment in the matter, and to assume that the system which he has adopted is the better one. I merely referred to the system which is in vogue in the other departments, by reason of which employés get increases from time to time, as an incident in the argument I was advancing. The argument I was advancing was this: Granted that the system is a good one with a minimum or maximum rate, and with a discretion in the Minister to increase the salary in those cases where he thought the service was meritorious, my desire was to appeal to that discretion and I submitted certain individual cases for his judgment. Take the case of Mr. Bremner. He is a gentleman of very superior abilities as an accountant; he has been twenty-five years in the department discharging duties responsible and heavy at certain seasons of the year, and he is at the lowest grade of $1,200. It struck me that considering his length of service, his abilities and his excellent character, his was a case that might be considered by the Minister with respect to an increase of salary. I did not bring this matter hurriedly before the hon. gentleman, for it has been pressed upon me for some years. I am the last man in the House to advocate extravagance, and I can see a good deal of force in what the hon. gentleman says, that it would be absurd for officials of the smaller ports to expect to have their pay fixed at a sum at all in relation to the pay of officers in very large ports like Montreal and Toronto where there are enormous responsibilities and very heavy work. But I was presenting the individual cases on their merits. Take the appraiser's case. He has been there since 1879, I think, and, live economically as he will, I fancy a man with a large family will find it hard work to make both ends meet. Of course this is not a conclusive argument that the pay should be increased, but I think it is a case that deserves the favourable consideration of the Minister. Then the clerks of the department are at a minimum of $600. One of them, Mr. Edwin White, has been there fourteen or fifteen years, and the other two, Mr. McNeil and Mr. Moran, have been there, I think, for ten years. They are very good accountants, and, with one exception, I believe, married men with families. They are not drawn from the class the hon. gentleman represents that tide waiters and preventive officers are largely drawn, and who cannot complain if in their official position they get as large a salary as they could hope to have made if they continued in private life. These gentlemen are not receiving anything like the sum which men of similar qualifications receive in banks and other institutions of that kind, who discharge somewhat analogous duties. I may say that the cashier, Mr. McLeod, stands in the same position. I thought, therefore, that comparing their pay with the pay received by similar officers in other ports, they had fair grounds for submitting with some confidence their case to the Minister and asking that a reasonable increase would be made. I do not press for anything large or excessive or extravagant. I would be the first man to oppose it if anything of the kind were proposed, but I think their cases are fairly well justified to the favourable consideration of the Minister. I know that the hon. gentleman has had reports from his inspector on the capacity and qualifications of these men, and he is in an excellent position to judge of their claim, and in judging that he has to consider the claim of officers in other ports than the one I am bringing to his immediate attention. But taking it all in all, I do think there are special circumstances here which would justify the Minister in increasing the pay of these gentlemen to a reasonable sum.

Mr. INNES. In connection with this matter which the hon. gentleman has just referred to, I would ask the Minister if in all cases the salaries of officers are graded in accordance with the receipts of fees as well as the length of service? Take the case of the collector at Guelph, for instance. The Minister knows perfectly well that Mr. Heffernan has served for quite a number of years, and has discharged his duties faithfully and efficiently. I do not think, from the first day of his appointment until now, any increase has been made in his salary.

Mr. BOWELL. We cannot adopt the principle suggested by the member for South Wellington (Mr. Innes) and do justice to the ports, because there are some outports which collect a much larger sum of money than the ports, but the only responsibility they have is the amount of money collected: while the collector has the management of not only the port over which he presides, but of all the outports. Take the instance to which I referred a few moments ago: New Glasgow, an outport of Pictou, in Nova Scotia. In New Glasgow, the sub-collector receives $1,000 per annum, and he has one landing waiter under him. He collects $51,282.24, while the port of Pictou itself, which has four or five officers, collects only $21,967.76. The disparity in the collection of revenue is no indication of the amount of work which the collector or officer in charge of a port has to perform. There are many ports and outports where the officer is engaged nearly the whole year round, and the collections very small, but they are more preventive stations than collecting stations. There are other stations which are inland that collect a very large amount of revenue, but where the officers have nothing to do further than to receive entries, examine the goods and enter them upon the books. I think the hon. gentleman is in error about what he said in reference to Mr. Heffernan: that he did not receive an increase of salary since he was appointed. My impression is that he received $50 last year. I know he is asking for more, but the principle of Oliver Twist governs every official in the department. The first principle is, get in, and then never cease asking for more salary.

Mr. INNES. As the Minister says, there may be a slight increase in Mr. Heffernan's salary, but he is also aware that there are several outports which report to Guelph.

Mr. BOWELL. Quite right.

Mr. INNES. Not only is there a large amount of money collected at the port of Guelph, but the collector has charge of several outports, and additional responsibility in that respect.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The House seems to be under the impression that in some of the departments, especially the Department of Inland Revenue, the system of regulating salaries involves an unnecessarily large expenditure to the country. I would not like the House to remain under that impression, and I wish to say a few words to explain that the system of the Inland Revenue Department in fixing salaries is one in the interest of economy. The Civil Service Act provides that the first, second and third class of excisemen shall be paid from $500 to $1,000 salary, leaving it optional to pay any of these officers any amount within these two sums named. My impression was, seeing that this was the state of the law, that the tendency would be for the Excise officers to get as nearly the maximum salary as possible and as speedily as possible, and a regulation was adopted in the department over which I preside, by which the maximum salary of a third class exciseman is $750, beyond which he cannot reach if he was to serve twenty years in the department. He would remain at $750 unless he passed such a promotion examination as no other officer in any other department has to pass, and then he would increase by $30 a year until he reached the salary of $850, after that he would remain at $850 until he died in the service, if he could not pass the other promotion examination which would make him eligible for the first class. During the whole of this progress he would only increase at the rate of $30 per year after passing the examinations necessary. I hold that this increase of $30 a year to these men, who must come in at the minimum salary of $500, is more in the direction of economy than if I were to appoint one at $800; and I can take the Civil Service list and show that excisemen used to be brought in at a maximum of $1,000 at their first appointment. The system adopted in the Inland Revenue Department is one which tends to great economy, and I wish the House to understand it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not make a complaint of either system, as I have not the knowledge to enable me to judge which is the better. Perhaps they would both be good as applied to the respective departments to which they belong. My remarks were only addressed to the discretion which the Minister has under the system which exists in his department, and to the application of that discretion to particular cases. Whether my case is a good one or not, it will be for him to determine, after consideration, which I have no doubt will be fairly given to it.

Customs—Province of Quebec..... $227,370

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that there is quite a large increase. Will the Minister explain what is the reason for that?

Mr. BOWELL. It arises from various causes, which I will point out to the hon. gentleman. The completion and opening of the railway running through the Eastern Townships connecting with the Short Line at Cookshire, in the County of Compton, made it necessary to establish a new port at that place, and Mr. Bean, formerly sub-collector under Coaticook, is attached to that new port. The contingencies of that port are $100, and the officer appointed receives $600, which makes that port cost to the country $1,150, a portion of which, however, will be deducted from the expenses of Coaticook because of the transfer. The apparent increase in the City of Montreal is in consequence of adding to the permanent staff, and in consequence of a number of increases which have occurred much in the line of the suggestions made by the hon. member for Queen's, amounting to $3,350. But from the investigation which has taken place, and to which I have alluded before, I am quite satisfied that the increase will not be required during this year, but that on the contrary there will be a large reduction. These estimates were based on the expenditure of last year, and before the investigation to which I have alluded took place. I propose to make an equally searching investigation into other ports to see whether the expenditure cannot be reduced without interfering with the efficiency of the service. The port of Magdalen Islands, which cost some $1,300, has been abolished, and it has been made an outport of the City of Quebec, causing an apparent increase in that port of $1,250. Of course, the receipts at the Magdalen Islands do not amount to more than a few hundred dollars; but still it is necessary to have officials there to prevent those islands being made a rendezvous for smugglers from which they could distribute liquor and other dutiable goods throughout the country. In St. John's there is an increase of $550 by the appointment of a new man, owing to increase of work arising from its being a railway centre. In Stanstead there is an increase of $420 arising from extra services, and an increase of $50 to one of the officers. Magog has been made an outport of Coaticook for the accommodation of importers in that section, which adds $500 to the expenditure of that port. In Three Rivers it is proposed to give the collector a small increase in his salary. That makes a total increase of $7,775, including, of course, that large increase in Montreal, which I hope to have reduced. With regard to the decreases, Mr. Bean is transferred from Coaticook to Cookshire, making an apparent decrease of $550. There is a decrease of $1,300 at the Magdalen Islands, owing to the transfer to the port of Quebec. In Sherbrooke, Mr. Barry, formerly subcollector at Richmond, was transferred from Montreal to that port by my predecessor. He had a salary of $1,200, much larger than the port justified; but the hon. gentleman knows that, when a man is once in the service, it is very difficult to reduce his salary, no matter where you send him. He is since deceased, and his successor has been appointed at $600. At Sutton there is a decrease of $200, owing to the death of Mr. Langlois. The total decrease is $2,650, and the total increase $7,775, making the net increase, $5,125.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am very glad to have this explanation from the hon. gentleman. I was very glad to hear him announce the other evening that he had without any inconvenience superannuated no less than four officers in the Montreal office, and that he did not think it would be necessary to replace them by new appointments.

Mr. BOWELL. None of those positions have been filled, nor is it the intention to fill them.

Mr. McMULLEN. I understood that he expected to be able to get along without making new appointments. That statement surprised me, because if the staff was reduced by four without any inconvenience——

Mr. BOWELL. There are two others, making six.

Mr. McMULLEN. It appears to me that there must be a good deal of looseness in connection with the management of our officials in the different ports. The hon. gentleman also stated in reply to a question that there were 150 officials at the port of Montreal. That is a very large staff. I know that a large amount of revenue is collected at that port and a large staff is necessary. At the same time I think that with a thorough and careful revision of the whole staff there, as well as at other points, we ought to be able to reduce the amount of expenditure in connection with the Customs offices throughout the Dominion, seeing that the revenue collected from imports is not running up, but is rather lower than it was some years ago. If the amount we pay is to be proportionate to the amount of revenue we collect, we should be reducing rather than increasing. That was the reason I asked the hon. Minister to explain the proposed increase in connection with the Province of Quebec. There have been some new appointments made in Montreal within the last year. Could the hon. gentleman give me the names?

Mr. BOWELL. I have no recollection of any new appointments being made in Montreal, other than placing some temporary men, who are termed, in Customs parlance, "temporary-permanent," on the permanent staff. They are those who were there before 1882, who may be put on the permanent list without examination, if the collector reports that they are efficient. There may have been some new appointments, but I have no recollection of any at present. I desire to say, however, that I am not prepared to admit that there is, as the hon. gentleman says, a great deal of looseness in the department because certain men were on the staff who were found not to be required. I explained to the leader of the Opposition, when this question was up before, that there are men who have grown grey in the service and have become comparatively useless, and that as they grow old and unable to perform their full duties, younger men are appointed to aid them in doing their work. It is always a painful duty and a difficult duty to turn these men out, and even to put them on the superannuation list. I have a case in my mind as an illustration—that of a very respectable man who had been fourteen or fifteen years in the service, and had been receiving a salary of $1,800 per year. He was compelled to retire on an allowance of $500 or $600, and I have received from him a most pitiful letter saying that he cannot support his family on that allowance. I assure the hon. gentleman that if he has ever the misfortune to occupy the position I do, with a thousand men under his charge, he will find it exceedingly difficult to manage, because, as soon as he attempts to superannuate a man who has become unfit from age to do the work properly, he will be assailed by importunities from all that man's friends and from his own supporters to keep him on in the service; and if the appointment had been made by the opposite party he will be charged with having superannuated the officer because he owed his appointment to an opponent.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the hon. gentleman understood me to mean that I charged his administration with looseness, I beg to assure him that I did not intend to convey anything of the kind. I only rose because, in my humble opinion, since there have been four superannuations in a very short time, we seem to be overloaded at some points with officials who could very well be dispensed with.

Mr. BOWELL. Quite right.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can quite understand it is hard, when a man has been a long time in the public service, to dismiss him or treat him harshly, but I think that greater care should be exercised in making new appointments, and that no new appointment should be made except when absolutely necessary. In this way we would prevent considerable increases in the staff. I can well understand that members of Parliament bring strong pressure to bear on Ministers to secure appointments, and no doubt the hon. gentleman has had considerable difficulty in trying to relieve himself of such pressure. I honestly believe, however, that he makes the best efforts he can to administer the affairs of his department, and that his department is as well, perhaps better administered than that of any other member of the Government: but I believe that, through pressure brought to bear on him, appointments are made which otherwise would not have been made. I would ask if it has been the custom in the past to collect and levy on fresh fruit coming into port?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is that changed now?

Mr. BOWELL. There has been no change in the law, but in the manner of collecting. For some time past, in the port of Montreal, the custom has been for one of the appraisers to go to the station and make entries before and after official hours, charging the merchant a fee of 25 cents or 50 cents. The inspectors have suggested a mode by which the entries can be made and the importers relieved of this extra tax, but the law has not been changed with reference to the collection of duties. When fruits arrive in the morning before hours, or in the evening after hours, it is necessary that delivery should be made at once as they are perishable articles, and the merchants were willing to pay the extra fees rather than have delivery delayed until the official hours.

Mr. McMULLEN. Do the officers appropriate these fees for their own benefit?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; the fees go to the officers who perform the work, in the same way as do the extra fees paid annually by the steamboat owners and railway officials for certain work performed by the Customs officials after hours. That, of course, goes to the officers. Some get $10 a month and some $15 a month extra.

Mr. LANGELIER. The Minister stated a few moments ago that he intended to keep the Customs officer on in order to prevent smuggling, and not on account of the receipts from that office. I think that is a very proper thing to do; but I take this opportunity to ask what steps the Minister intends to take to put an end to the immense amount of smuggling which has been going on? As a matter of fact, it has become a regular pest all over the south coast of the St. Lawrence down to Gaspé.

Mr. BOWELL. And on the north coast as well.

Mr. LANGELIER. And also on the islands. Smuggling is going on notwithstanding all the efforts of the officers. I do not complain of the efforts of the officers; and, with their present appliances, I think it is impossible for them to put an end to the smuggling. It has been stated to me by some of our merchants that the Department of Customs has been losing half a million a year by this smuggling. That may be exaggerated. I am not able to say whether it is or not; but it is admitted that smuggling is going on and is increasing every year, and especially the smuggling of liquors, on which the duties are very high. It is not only in regard to whiskey as it was formerly, but the methods have been improved. Even champagne is smuggled into the country. Last winter, during the elections, I had several opportunities of going through that country on the south coast of the St. Lawrence, and in almost every house you could have champagne, brandy, whiskey, port wine, almost every sort of intoxicating liquor.

Mr. BOWELL. Did they treat you kindly?

Mr. LANGELIER. I do not say that, but I was told that you could get liquors of that kind in almost every parish on the south coast of the St. Lawrence, upon which no duties had been paid, and all the clergy and those who have at heart the morality of the people complain very bitterly of that state of things. Demoralization is going on in consequence of the drunkenness which is brought about by that immense amount of smuggling, not to speak of the loss of revenue. The general opinion at Quebec seems to be that, unless a very swift steamer is put at the disposal of the officers of Customs, it will be almost impossible for them to struggle with the smugglers. They have swift schooners and small steam yachts, and, when they know the officers of the Customs are at one place they hasten to another place, and land large quantities of whiskey. Last year the Minister may remember that I told him privately of an occurrence which had been reported to me showing the exceedingly perfect system of smuggling which is in existence. Some people got an old rotten schooner for which they paid $50. Then they would put a few barrels of whiskey on board that schooner with three-quarters of water in the whiskey, and would show themselves in that place and commit some calculated indiscretion in order to bring the attention of the officers of Customs to them. The officers pounced on the little schooner and confiscated the whiskey for a few dollars of duty, and during the time these men were apparently fighting with the officers another schooner loaded with hundreds of barrels of whiskey was unloading at a spot not far away. It is impossible for the officers of Customs to put an end to this smuggling unless they have swift steamers to catch those who are smuggling all the time. I should like to know if the department intend to adopt some means of that kind to put an end to that smuggling, which has assumed such large proportions that it is a real pest in the Province of Quebec.

Mr. BOWELL. I am sorry to say there is too much truth in what has been said by the hon.

member for Quebec Centre (Mr. Langelier). This has been brought to the attention of the department by many of the clergy of that section of the country. My hon. friend seems to understand pretty well how the smuggling is done, but we have failed in the past to find any of the kind of whiskey referred to. What we have seized has not been half water. The whiskey which we have tested has ranged from 30 to 40 and even 60 above proof. The way in which it is done, as a rule, is by the schooners to which he refers sailing from St. Pierre-Miquelon, which, as he knows, are French islands, where the liquor is almost free, the duty being only 3 or 4 per cent. They get behind some island in the St. Lawrence and transfer their liquors into the poor class of vessels to which he has referred, and when they are seized, many of these vessels, when put up at auction, would bring $50 or $75, so that rather than sell them we have often allowed them to rot on the shores. It is the intention of the Government to take energetic steps in this matter. We have invested the officers in command of the vessels belonging to the Marine Department with the powers of preventive officers, so as to enable them to capture, if possible, just such vessels as the hon. gentleman has spoken of.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. How would the Joe do?

Mr. BOWELL. It would do very well if my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Somerville) will agree to go in her to the lower ports as mate or captain. In such an event it would be a relief to the Public Accounts Committee after the first storm, but I would not like to dispose of my hon. friend in that way, and so I would not like to ask him to take the Joe down to the Lower St. Lawrence. We will have to procure a vessel costing from $30,000 to $50,000 for this purpose. In the meantime we have adopted the principle of making every captain on a fishing cruiser a preventive officer, with full power to act in case he comes in contact with these smuggling vessels, and I hope we may be able to put a vessel on those waters exclusively for that purpose during this fall. It will cost money, but I am sure the revenue will be more than recouped by preventing the illicit traffic which is going on. The most important point is to put an end, if possible, to the demoralization which this illicit traffic is creating both on the north shore and on the south shore by the people drinking a poisonous stuff 50 and 60 over proof—in fact, high wines—instead of the matured whiskey which they would get under the regulations of the Inland Revenue Department.

Mr. McMULLEN. Coming back to the question which was under discussion, as to the fees collected on fresh fruit, I wanted to find out definitely from the Minister, if possible, what were the arrangements at the present moment. In the past I understand the arrangements were that the officer of the port—I do not know whether more than one officer or not—who performed those duties collected the fees and appropriated them to his own use, but the duty of course was properly returned. Can the Minister give us any idea of what these fees amount to per day or per week?

Mr. BOWELL. No, I could not. I have heard that they run up to hundreds of dollars through the season. I made enquiry once, and if my recollection serves me aright, I found that one officer had collected, in addition to his salary, fees running from $400 to $600, but I would not say positively. I know that in one case it was a very large addition to his salary. There has been more than one officer to perform this work, but there was one of the appraisers particularly who did a very large amount of this work, and received a large remuneration for it. That officer, instead of being assistant appraiser, has now taken the place of the appraiser, who has been superannuated, and he has been deprived of any of the fees to which the hon. gentleman has alluded. I will be better able at another stage to inform the Committee of the exact system which prevails now.

Mr. McMULLEN. I understand there has been an Order in Council passed doing away with the collection of those fees.

Mr. BOWELL. I have told the hon. gentleman three times already that the inspectors had reported that they had adopted a system by which the importers could be relieved of these fees. It is purely a departmental regulation. There is no Order in Council at all.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think it was Mr. Hatchett who collected these fees: I understand he collected a considerable amount annually in this way. Now, has there been an addition made to the staff recently for the purpose of attending to this particular duty?

Mr. BOWELL. No; there may have been a clerk or landing waiter on the staff relegated to that duty, but there has been no new appointment.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is there such a person as William Patterson upon this staff?

Mr. BOWELL. Not that I am aware of. A Mr. Patterson has been for years a constant applicant for the position, who, I should judge, from his own opinion of himself, is fit for any position from that of Archbishop of Canterbury down to collector of the duties upon fruit. But he has never been appointed, unless temporarily for unloading fruit.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have been looking over the list of the staff published in the Auditor General's Report, page C—25, and as I stated to the House some time ago, there were about 150 altogether. I see there are only about 115 names enumerated.

Mr. BOWELL. That is the permanent staff. Then there are 30 or 40, and sometimes as high as 50, temporary men who are employed during summer, and some of them during the winter, but they are not upon the staff, consequently they do not appear here except as being paid extra.

Mr. McMULLEN. Could the Minister say whether he has on the temporary staff a person named Michael Costello?

Mr. BOWELL. I could not say.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) has a son who is in the Custom house at Montreal. What position does he occupy?

Mr. BOWELL. Either a landing waitership, or clerkship. He receives $600 a year.

Mr. McMULLEN. When was the appointment made?

Mr. BOWELL. I could not say. It may have been made this year, but he has been on the temporary staff for some time, and then put upon the permanent staff, being qualified under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not notice his name on the list. Under the report that has been made to the Minister of the investigation that was recently held, have there been any dismissals made from the staff in Montreal?

Mr. BOWELL. There was a dismissal made of a man named Campbell, whose name I have mentioned to the House two or three times before. Some others have been removed, or will be. We now have under consideration a report providing for the removal—I do not know whether I can say dismissals—of a number of temporary men who are upon the staff. We think they are not necessary, and there may be some others whose services it may be necessary to dispense with, either by way of gratuity for those who are not eligible for superannuation, or by superannuation. I cannot give the Committee full information on that point just now, as it is only within a week or ten days that I have received the report. It is very voluminous, and I have not had time to give it full attention.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have no doubt the Minister will do his best, under the report of this investigation, thoroughly to purge the department of any irregularities that may have passed. Now, with regard to this enormous amount for cartage done at the Montreal Customs house, for which $5,900 is paid, can the Minister say whether there is a standing contract for this work being done, and who has it?

Mr. BOWELL. I cannot remember the names. The same contractors have had the work for a number of years; it was given to them by tender some years ago, and they receive so much for each parcel they bring from the station to the examining warehouse. I may inform the hon. gentleman that this custom was imposed upon the department by his friend, and my predecessor. Formerly the merchants were compelled to pay for the cartage. I may inform him, also, that the fact of this system having been inaugurated in Montreal has compelled me to extend it to other cities. The Cities of Toronto, Hamilton and others claim very properly that they should not be taxed for cartage while the department pays it in Montreal. The cartage is a necessary expense, and from what I have learned, and I have made a number of enquiries within the last six months, I believe the contractors have performed their work very well, and they are not overpaid for what they are doing. I think it is 10 cents, but I am not certain. These are little items that I cannot remember.

Mr. McMULLEN. I understood it was 20.

Mr. BOWELL. No; I am quite satisfied it is not.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is the name of the contractor, Kennedy?

Mr. BOWELL. I do not know; I will make enquiry.

Mr. McMULLEN. I must say, whoever inaugurated the system, that I think it was a mistake, because I think the owners of goods should be willing to comply with the Customs regulations of any port in the matter of removing their goods to the examining warehouse, without the country being put to the expense of paying such an enormous amount for cartage. I think the merchants should be required to pay for their own carting. Besides, there are a great many people in the cities who would be glad to have an opportunity of doing it. However, if it is necessary to continue that expenditure in Montreal, I should fancy it would be cheaper to secure one or two Government drays to do the entire work, or even three or four. Certainly, it would not cost $6,000 a year to keep them up. My attention was directed to this by a person in the Customs business, and he was inclined to think that the fees paid to this individual were pretty large for the work done. In a large city like Montreal, where it is difficult to keep a keen eye on the work performed, it is impossible to judge of the actual value of the work done. I desire to know whether the sum paid is increasing or is about stationary? I suppose the work depends on the imports; the larger the imports the greater the amount of cartage required. What are the provisions of the contract, and how is payment made?

Mr. BOWELL. I have told the hon. gentleman that he is paid by the parcel, whether large or small. It never would do to trust the carrying of goods to every carter a merchant might think to employ. The carters must be responsible to the Customs directly, and be not only qualified to do the work but be responsible men, because they are held responsible for any parcel, should any be lost, and they carry very valuable goods occasionally. The amount received by the carters depends on the imports, as the amount of work depends on the imports. I made a note of what the hon. gentleman wishes, and I will endeavour to obtain the information.

Mr. McMULLEN. Do they take goods from the wharf to the bonded warehouse?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. Do they remove them from the bonded warehouse?

Mr. BOWELL. They may remove them to the examining warehouse. The merchants constantly urge that the goods should be taken to their stores, but I have steadily refused to do so in all parts of the Dominion. In Winnipeg we have to pay nearly double the rate we pay in Montreal from the railway station to the examining warehouse.

Mr. McMULLEN. Did the Customs Department remove all the sugar in bond to the bonding warehouses or refineries?

Mr. BOWELL. The importations of sugar were landed from the canal bank and placed in the bonding warehouses at the sugar refineries.

Mr. McMULLEN. With respect to the question raised by the hon. member for Quebec Centre, I fail to understand how the Minister is going to stop all the smuggling that is being done. This smuggling is also carried on in Ontario. The Minister will find very great difficulty in preventing goods being brought in from the United States, and this smuggling I am afraid is growing. It occurs also in Quebec and in the Lower Provinces, and especially prevails near the railway border. If the Minister desires a sufficient staff to watch our frontier against smuggling, an enormous increase must be made to the staff. I am aware from knowledge received by a person employed in Buffalo, that the smuggling of articles in every day use is something enormous. People go there and make purchases and have means of hiding the fact, and of getting them across into Canada, avoiding the duty. No doubt the Minister will do everything possible to stop the smuggling in the interests of the revenue, but in view of our present relations with the United States, this becomes a very serious problem. Some years ago, the United States had to face this difficulty themselves. We remained quiet, and had not to pay any expenses, because goods were cheaper in Canada than on the other side of the line: but the tide has turned, and the difficulty now presents itself to us.

Mr. BOWELL. It is on account of their high protective tariff.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman will not deny that such is the fact. Many commodities are cheaper there than in Canada, and as a result a system of smuggling has been inaugurated and is being carried on to a very large extent along our entire boundary. If the condition of trade continues as at present, and if our goods should continue to increase in price here while they fall in price across the line, I cannot see how he will be able to support the enormous staff of preventive officers necessary to suppress smuggling. The hon. member for Quebec Centre has pointed to the system in his province. With respect to Ontario, I can give the Minister some hints as to how it is carried on in our province. I wish to know what steps the Minister has taken to stop this system, which is growing?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Another small matter to which I wish to ask the attention of the Minister is with respect to entering goods. Is it the duty of the collector to make out entry papers?

Mr. BOWELL. No; there is a positive order that he shall not do it. The reason for that order is, that if any blunder is made designedly or otherwise by the importer it would be attributed to the collector or other official. I know that this work has been done by collectors in some small places, and a quarter charged for each entry. When the department's attention has been called to it, they have been instructed to stop the practice, because the entries must be made by brokers or the importers.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I know a certain collector who has been for a number of years making out the entry papers and charging 25 cents which went directly into his own pocket. The inspector some few months ago found it out and he put a stop to it, but now the way they work it is, that the collector simply has an outside person to make out the entry papers and he charges 25 cents for it.

Mr. WELSH. That is quite right.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not think it is right. I think that the collector of Customs should be able to furnish the importers with the necessary blanks. There are a great many importers in my part of the country who import articles of very small value, and yet they have to pay 25 cents for each entry, which is a heavy tax on them. If the collector of Customs was in a position to furnish them with the necessary blanks so that they could make out the entries themselves, this expense would be saved. I am informed that every obstacle is put in the way of importers against making out their own papers so that they will be forced to go to the broker and pay him 25 cents. That is quite a serious matter for some of these people. If the collector of Customs was obliged to keep a stock of the blanks so that importers could get them, it would be quite a saving to business people who have every day to import articles of small value in their business. In my opinion the department ought to furnish the collector of Customs with these blanks and ought to oblige him to furnish them free of charge if he is asked for them.

Mr. WELSH. I do not think there can be any improvement suggested in the mode of conducting the business of the Custom houses of this country. I know that in England, Ireland and Scotland and every country I have visited, or had ships to go to, we have always had to employ a broker to enter that ship at Customs. My experience is that if you go to the Customs officers and ask them for a blank entry they will always be happy to give it to you. But if you are not able to make the entry yourself, or have not a clerk in your office that is able to make the entry, you go to a broker and get him to make it for you, I think that system is as fair as it can be and that it does not require any improvement. I have been in a good many ports in the world and have had a good deal to do with Customs, and I cannot suggest any improvement in the mode of entering goods as far as Custom house brokers ars concerned. However, I would certainly object to the collector making the entry himself, as my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Campbell) has said. I do not think it is justice to the Customs Department for the collector to do so, but the Minister of Customs has already said that there are decided orders that the collector shall not make these entries. Whenever I went to a Customs house in Canada I have always been accommodated with that blank form whether for an entry or anything else. It may be that some persons may have been refused them, but I never heard anything about it.

Mr. BOWELL. I may say that what the member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) suggested is now the practice. No man need pay a single cent for making an entry unless he chooses. All he has to do is to go to Mr. Pennefather, if that is the officer he refers to, and say he wants a blank and he will get it. The Customs Department furnishes every Customs officers in the country with the blanks. I think they charge 5 cents for a duplicate, to cover the amount of printing, and then the importer can make out the entry for himself. The hon. gentleman says obstacles and difficulties are thrown in the way of the importers in order to compel them to go to a broker; if that were brought to the notice of the department, the officer would be reprimanded at once. My hon. friend can go to the Customs house and he can get a duplicate entry paper for 5 cents and make the entry out himself.

Mr. FLINT. When the value of the article is $1 should there be some regulation by which the importer can get assistance from the Customs officer to make out his entry without being obliged to go to a broker.

Mr. WELSH. If it is under $1 let him smuggle it.

Mr. BOWELL. Oh, no; if you do that you open the door too wide for illicit traffic.

Mr. McGREGOR. I live in a frontier town and the order is there, that anything under $5 is allowed to go without making out a regular bill. The duplicates are always on hand in the Customs office for 5 cents, and you do not require to use a broker unless you feel so disposed. As to the remarks of my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) I simply say this: that I am persuaded that there are as many goods smuggled from Canada over to the United States as there are from the United States to Canada. Imported goods from England and Germany and other countries come into our country at a lower rate than they do into the United States, and so they buy the goods here and smuggle them back to the United States. There are a few articles made over there in the way of cotton and light goods that are smuggled from the United States to Canada, but the amount is not large. In former days, when there was a considerable difference between our sugar tariffs, they used to smuggle sugar and sometimes tea into Canada. I think the smuggling now would be about even between the two countries; in fact, I am inclined to think that we get a little the best of it, and that there are more goods smuggled from Canada into the United States than the other way.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you speak from experience?

Mr. McGREGOR. That is my experience. I believe there is some smuggling from the United States into Canada in alcohol, and I have no doubt that the distillers in this country feel the effects of it to some extent. The smuggling of this article is for the reason that alcohol imported into Canada is fresh and sold cheap, and when received into this country it is put on the market to compete against the old liquor which has to be kept for two years in Canada, which no doubt affects the distillers in this country to some extent. As to smuggling generally, I think we are on a par.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman comes from a border county and is no doubt able to speak with experience of his locality. From the information I have received I understood that smuggling was practised to a considerable extent, although it may not be in the place whence my hon. friend comes. I know from a young man who was a clerk with me for many years, and who now lives in the City of Buffalo—if the statements made by him are true, and I believe they are—that there is very considerable smuggling carried on across the border. Might I ask the hon. Minister—and I may say I have had a letter recently asking me for this information—what percentage is allowed to a person who gives information with regard to a cargo or quantity of goods having been smuggled in, the person giving such information having secured the discovery of the smuggler? What percentage is he paid?

Mr. BOWELL. Under an Order in Council passed in the year 1876, under authority of the Customs Act, the informer is entitled to one-third of the proceeds of all seizures. The other one-third goes to the officer, and the remaining one-third goes to the revenue.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is not necessary that the informer should be an employé of the Government?

Mr. BOWELL. Oh, no; quite the contrary. Nineteen times out of twenty they are men who are not engaged by the Customs Department. By way of illustration, I may say that one of the steamships coming from Germany to Montreal smuggled some brandy. They got it off the vessel; the saloon keeper who purchased it tried to cheat the carter by giving him a counterfeit half-dollar to pay for it, at which the carter got angry, and went and complained against him; the liquor was seized, and the steamship was fined in addition to the confiscation of the liquor. The carter should perhaps have been punished as a smuggler too, yet he would be entitled under the Order in Council to the fees, whatever they might be.

Committee rose; and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Customs—Ontario..... $293,905

Mr. CHARLTON. I see that there is a considerable increase in this item.

Mr. BOWELL. The total increase is $7,975. It is made up in this way: There is an increase at Amherstburg of $250 in salaries, an additional preventive officer, and $80 in contingencies. In Brantford it is proposed to give the collector an increase of $100 on account of increased work, and the contingencies are increased by $25. In Brockville there is an increase of $100 to Stewart, a man who was appointed at a lower salary than the previous officer who died, and who has proved to be a good officer; and the contingencies will be $40 additional. Cobourg has an apparent increase of $600 in contingencies, but that is really not an increase, because the port of Brighton is reduced to an outport of Cobourg. I may mention to the Committee that I am, as far as practicable, reducing ports and making them outports attached to larger ports. By doing that the aggregation of statistics for these places is done at the port by the officers without any additional help, and this relieves the head office of that work, besides decreasing the expenditure to the extent of a full set of books, which would otherwise have to be sent to the port. The outport simply takes the entry, makes a statement and sends it to the port, where the aggregation of statistics takes place. I know that it is an unpopular thing to do, because people think that it is degrading their port, when, in fact, they are not deprived of a single privilege that is enjoyed by any large port. Port Colborne is also reduced to an outport and attached to St. Catharines, causing an apparent increase of $780 in St. Catharines. In Collingwood there is an increase of salaries of $100. In Dover I propose to increase the salary of the subcollector by $100; he receives now only $200. His name is Mr. Backhouse; he takes the place of Mr. Dunham, who was removed to St. Thomas. Dundas has been made an outport and attached to Hamilton, which adds apparently to the Hamilton expenditure of $1,275. At Fort Erie there is an additional officer, named Schofield, put on the permanent list; he is to receive $600. He has been employed there for some time as a preventive officer, has passed the necessary examination, and was put on the permanent list last year; and the extra pay there is increased $50, arising from the fact that there is a continued increase in the trade between Buffalo and Port Erie. In Galt there is an extra charge of $250. The outport of Clinton has been taken from London and attached to Goderich, where, consequently, there is an apparent increase of $600. Oakville, with the expenditure of $1,250, has been reduced to an outport and attached to Hamilton; there is an additional officer at Hamilton at $600, and a proposed increase to some officers' salaries amounting to $200. In Kingston there is an increase by a new appointment. In Peterborough the collector died and another was appointed at the same salary. No additional officer has yet been appointed, but a temporary man has been put on at $1.50 per day. At Port Arthur there is a reduction of $200. At St. Catharines and Colborne there is an addition of $550, as I have already explained, with an additional officer, Mr. Ramsdell, at $300, who attends to the Customs duties in connection with the duties he has to perform on the canal. In Sarnia, by the transfer of an officer, Mr. Heath, to Brantford, and Mr. Ostrom to Sarnia, there is an addition of $100. At Sault Ste. Marie there is an increase to the collector of $100, and contingencies $150. Stratford, contingencies, $50; the same as before. At Toronto there is a general increase. In all these larger ports, as the business increases, we have to add to the staff either temporarily or permanently, and to carry out the principle advocated by the hon. member for Queen's, we increase their salaries $50 and sometimes $100, but usually only $50 per annum, that is, those of the better class. The extra pay at Windsor arises from the extra railway work continually growing there, more particularly since the Canadian Pacific Railway has been opened. At Woodstock, which is one of the most thriving places, where the collections are very large, and where, until this year, the work has been done by one officer, there is an additional officer at $500. The net increase is about $7,000.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not suppose that the charge could be brought against the Customs Department that the increase of expenditure is at all extravagant. The management of that department, so far as my judgment goes, is, I must say, characterized by economy in the matter of increases. Of course, as business increases, certain classes of officials are entitled to increased pay. It occurs to me, however, that it might be possible to effect a saving by reducing the number of small outports along the lines of railways, many of which might be dispensed with. Upon the line of the Canada Southern and Air Line Railways, there are Hagarsville, Tilsonburg, Simcoe, Dunnville, and three miles from Dunnville, Maitland, at which small points the business, in many instances, is not sufficient to pay the expenses of the officers in charge, and the entries might be made at the frontier or at stations comparatively near, such as St. Thomas, and the Government might, without detriment to the service, effect quite a saving by closing some of these little outports. I may be mistaken as to the position I take in the matter, but I certainly think the number of these small outports is in excess of our requirements.

Mr. BOWELL. The suggestion of the hon. gentleman has not escaped the notice of the Government; and if I had my own way, to speak frankly, I would close a very large number of these small ports. But once they are established and the people have the advantage of them, it is very difficult to carry out the hon. gentleman's suggestion, more especially as there are continual demands for others. Tilsonburg, however, is one of those places to which I think perhaps the hon. gentleman's remarks do not apply with any great force, because that is increasing rapidly. The collections at Tilsonburg exceed those of Simcoe, and Simcoe really should be, I suppose, the port, being the county town, but it is only an outport of Dover, which, having been one of the lake ports in the older days, was the important importing point of entry for that whole section; but Dover has gone down and Simcoe has grown up, and Tilsonburg has taken the lead of even Simcoe, the county town. With reference to the other places there is a great deal of force in what the hon. gentleman has said.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the amount of business at these places?

Mr. BOWELL. At Hagarsville the amount collected was $1,413; at Dunnville, $3,002; at Port Rowan, $361; at Simcoe, $4,879; at Tilsonburg, $7,837.

Mr. CHARLTON. At Port Rowan, which used to be a point of some consequence, the officer might be dispensed with, judging by the receipts.

Mr. BOWELL. These are preventive stations where they make small collections, but where it is absolutely necessary to have an officer.

Mr. TRUAX. What is the amount collected at Walkerton, and the salary paid the collector?

Mr. BOWELL. Last year we collected $2,657.62, and the amount paid to Mr. McNamara is $600 per annum.

Mr. TRUAX. I notice, in the Auditor General's Report, that Mr. McNamara, a sub-collector, was paid $590.56; fuel, $15.61; stove, &c., $16.10; cleaning, $48.25; telegrams, $56.25. I was not aware that Mr. McNamara had to keep an office open to the public, and cannot understand how it is he is paid $48.25 for cleaning office.

Mr. BOWELL. Is there not a public building in Walkerton?

Mr. TRUAX. That building is not yet completed, and Mr. McNamara simply occupies the telegraph office.

Mr. BOWELL. Does he not keep an office?

Mr. TRUAX. He does, at the Montreal Telegraph Office.

Mr. BOWELL. I cannot give you any other explanation. If he put in a bill for cleaning, it was paid. Where there is an office, we allow a certain sum for cleaning during the year, sometimes $25, sometimes $30 and $40. I will make enquiry and let the hon. gentleman know.

Mr. TRUAX. I do not think the amount paid him is too much, unless he received it as salary.

Mr. BOWELL. We pay a salary, and if any officer has to rent a building we pay the rent and the cleaning, and pay for the furniture, if he requires to furnish it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I wish to bring to the attention of the House the case of a seizure in the town of Durham, in the riding I have the honour to represent. It appears Mr. Cliff and his sons were engaged in woollen manufactures, and in 1886 they purchased a carding mill in the United States. I am informed it was a second-hand carding mill, old-fashioned, out of use and idle, and they got it at a very low rate. I am also informed that they paid duty on the price for which they purchased that machine. In 1887 Mr. Cliff failed in business and made an assignment to Mr. Harris. The building was sold by the assignee at public auction to Mr. Grant of Durham and the machinery to Mr. Hunter. In 1888, I am informed, the Custom house officers came up and were about to seize the machine, stating that it was entered at an under-valuation, and as it was being used by Mr. Hunter in the carding mill and he did not desire to have it sold, he deposited $1,000. I understand that this has not been returned to him. Mr. Hunter had nothing to do with the importation at all. He went to the public auction and bought the machine and paid for it, and was in no way connected with the original purchase of the machinery. It is difficult to understand how it happens that three years afterwards, when it has passed from the possession of the Messrs. Cliff, the officers should attempt to seize the machine. I would ask the Minister if he thinks Mr. Hunter should lose any portion of this money which he deposited in order to prevent the mill from standing still? It looks very peculiar.

Mr. BOWELL. The only explanation I can give the hon. gentleman is that the machinery was originally entered at an under-valuation. An information was lodged, I presume, in regard to the under-valuation and the machinery was seized, and the result was, I have no doubt, as the member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin) has represented it. Very likely the penalty imposed was the confiscation of an amount equal to the under-valuation. I know that at that time there were a large number of these machines coming from a particular house in the United States, and in many cases they were seized and all were dealt with alike. It is the practice of some American manufacturers, of late years, to give the appearance of second-hand machinery to what are really new machines. They make the machine and they put it up and test it in their own factory, get it dirty and ship it in that shape so that it has the appearance of machinery which has been in use for years, when in fact it is absolutely new, has only been tested, and instead of being re-cleaned is sent here as a second-hand machine. There are many cases of this kind, though I do not know that this was one of them. There are scores of other means by which attempts are made to enter goods at an under-valuation, and when they are seized the party who holds them has to suffer the consequence. The Customs law does not consider, except from an equitable standpoint, the party who owns the article at the time the seizure is made. If anyone stole a horse from the hon. gentleman, he might sell it to some one who would buy it innocently, and he might innocently sell it to me, but the hon. gentleman, if he found it in my possession, would come and take it. There are many cases on the frontier where horses and various articles are smuggled and sold to third parties. In these cases we exercise an equitable jurisdiction as far as the law permits by insisting on the payment of the duty and expenses, where there is no evidence of collusion between the party in whose possession the article is found and the one who smuggled it. The fact of two years having elapsed before seizure does not imply any lack of vigilance on the part of the officers or that the seizure was improper, because it often happens that the facts do not come to the knowledge of the officials until some time after the smuggling has taken place. Often a man will import an article and enter it at a certain value, and a year afterwards another importer may enter a similar article honestly at its market value in the United States. The officer seeing that, and he remembering that another man imported a similar article and entered it at a much lower price, and finding the first entry a fraudulent one, he seizes the article. I give this as an illustration of what may have occurred in this case. I do not remember all the circumstances now, but very many cases of that character occur, where a seizure does not take place till two or three years after the importation, when the fraud is discovered.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Has any portion of that amount been refunded?

Mr. BOWELL. I cannot say; but from what the hon. gentleman has stated I should judge that nothing was refunded. Probably, after an investigation, the officers found their supposition was correct, and that that would be the penalty which would have to be paid.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I will read the statement which I received from Mr. Harris, the assignee:

"Some time in the year 1886, C. F. Cliff & Sons, woollen mill men, purchased in the United States and imported into Canada a quantity of second-hand woollen machinery, which was entered for importation and the duty paid thereon at the actual cost or the price paid therefor. In the latter part of the year 1887 the Messrs. Cliff assigned their estate to me. The equity of redemption in the real estate was purchased by C. F. Grant and the machinery and stock by the late J. H. Hunter. Among the machinery purchased by Mr. Hunter was the second-hand lot imported by the Messrs. Cliff. This purchase was made by Mr. Hunter at public auction in January, 1888. Customs Officers J. Hamilton, of Stratford, and Hutton, of Guelph, called upon Mr. Hunter and claimed one thousand dollars ($1,000) for fraudulent entry of machinery, claiming that the goods had been undervalued. Rather than allow a seizure the money was paid. If there was any fraud upon the Customs, Mr. Hunter was most certainly not a party thereto. But the duty was paid on the actual amount paid for the machinery. No doubt the goods were purchased at a very low price, but the machinery was old-fashioned, out of repair, dirty and idle, and the terms of the purchase were that the lot was to cost so much. In addition to the goods, the seller was to clean, repaint and furnish all necessary repairs; this was done, but at no additional cost to Cliff. If there is any further information required I will be happy to furnish you with it.

"Yours faithfully,

"THOMAS A. HARRIS."

Now, if it were in the public interest to make the seizure, why should Mr. Hunter suffer all the penalty? Mr. Hunter is now dead, but I certainly think his heirs have a claim, and if it were in the public interest to make this seizure, they should not suffer all the loss that is required by the Government. In the Agriculture Department, for instance, when it is necessary to slaughter diseased cattle in the public interest, the owner of the cattle does not sustain all the loss, but the Government sustain a part of it. In a matter of this kind, I think the department would scarcely be justified unless they saw that this claim of Mr. Hunter was paid back in full. I think the people of this country would demand that Mr. Hunter should not be made the victim in the public interest. He did it purely as a matter of business, he did it honestly, as an honest man, he acted as a straightforward man without any collusion. And I would say the same of the Messrs. Cliff: so far as I know them they have a very good reputation, and I do not believe they would be guilty of doing wrong either. I believe that what they say in this matter is correct, and I hope the Minister will consider this case, because it seems to me too much to ask that one person who was entirely innocent should suffer all the loss. I hope he will look into it, because I think it would be terrible to allow the heirs of Mr. Hunter to suffer this loss. I am asking for nothing but what is fair and just, and I think every member of this House will agree with me.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Will the Minister of Customs say under what section of the Act he claims the right to confiscate the goods?

Mr. BOWELL. According to the Act the moment a violation of the law takes place, the goods become de facto the property of the Crown, and you can take them when and where you please. It does not require an action at law, but the moment the Customs Act is violated by the improper importation of an article, it becomes de facto confiscated.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But the hon. gentleman will see that if the article has been entered at the price that was actually and bonâ fide paid, he could hardly say that the appraiser's value, which might differ from the price which was actually paid, and which is not given for two years afterwards, will have a retroactive effect and relate back to the time the importation took place, to make the goods the property of the Government.

Mr. BOWELL. It is, I say most distinctly, because the law provides that the article must be entered at the marketable value in the country in which it is purchased, not the price that is actually paid for it. Consequently, if a man sold this machinery, to which the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin) has called attention, at an under-valuation, say $500 below the price at which it would be sold in the market in which it was produced, and was so entered, though he only paid the amount at which he entered it, it is absolutely forfeited under the Customs Act. No one enforced that view of the law stronger than my predecessor in the hon. gentleman's Government; he will remember I produced to this House some years ago a volume to show the number of circulars which had been issued by the Liberal Government in order to enforce strictly that provision of the Act, to prevent what is termed under-valuation and slaughtering in the market.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Supposing this machinery was bought at sheriff's sale; would not that be conclusive as to its market value?

Mr. BOWELL. No, that is not conclusive, and the law makes special provisions upon that point; an article might be bought at a bankrupt sale, but that might not be its fair market value. The law says the value of an article for duty shall be the fair market value of that article in the principal markets of the country in which it is produced. Now, it is not the fair market value of the article if it is sold at a sacrifice at auction sale.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You have no better way of ascertaining the price, than where men are bidding with each other and putting up the price until it is knocked down to the highest bidder.

Mr. BOWELL. No. If you refer to another clause of the Customs Act in the tariff, you will find it is distinctly stated that sales by auction, or sacrifice sales, shall not be accepted as the fair market value for duty.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Can the Minister tell me how it was discovered that the machine was entered at an under-valuation?

Mr. BOWELL. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman thinks that I am an encyclopædia, or that it is possible for me to carry in my head the reasons for the thousands of seizures that have been made. When he calls my attention to a seizure that took place two or three years ago, he must not be surprised if I am not in a position to give him full information. But if he had told me that he intended to bring this case before the House, I would have furnished the whole information. I have spoken to the officials of the department and have asked for full explanations to give to the hon. gentleman, so far as the reasons for the seizure are concerned, and the action of the Government thereon. I submit to the Committee whether it is fair for hon. gentlemen, in criticising the Estimates, to rise and ask for all the minutiæ in a particular seizure, when hundreds of them come under the notice of the Minister annually. I will give all the information I possibly can.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would be very sorry to think here were hundreds of seizures made under circumstances similar to this one, because it is a great hardship indeed.

Mr. BOWELL. You do not know the facts.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think the facts of the case have been brought clearly before the Minister. Mr. Harris, who gives me this information, is a reputable man, and has an intimate knowledge of the business of the firm, and these statements that he makes over his own signature, are something that the Minister cannot ignore. I have an idea that the Minister would want to do what is right in this matter, and if he lets his officers seize that, I would like to know where the money has gone?

Mr. BOWELL. Gone into the treasury, I fancy, some portion of it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Did the informer receive it?

Mr. BOWELL. I cannot tell you what became of it. I will tell you that to-morrow, if you will give me time.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think it is necessary I should know. I suppose that to a certain extent I am responsible for the expenditure of public money, and if any money has been taken away wrongfully from any of my constituents, I will make it as hot as I can for the Ministers and everybody else concerned.

Mr. BOWELL. All right, I will try and get a cake of ice to sit on while you are making it hot.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I do not want to see money taken from my constituents improperly. I want to see them act squarely and fairly with the department, and I want to see the department act fairly with them. I think the Minister of Justice should look into this case, for I do not think he would desire to see the heirs of this estate wronged out of this money. The Minister, I am very glad to learn, promised to lay the matter before the House.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not say so; I said I would furnish the facts.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am rather surprised to learn that such an incident should have occurred. I knew Mr. Hunter, who was a highly respectable man. His health became very poor, and I suppose he was not disposed to carry through litigation with the Dominion Government in order to recover what he felt was his own. Since the matter occurred, he has died. Notwithstanding that fact, and more so under the present circumstances, if an injustice has taken place, the heirs of the deceased should be recouped. I do not say the action may not have been proper on the part of the officer in taking the machinery, for there must have been reasonable grounds on which to have proceeded. But, after careful investigation of the whole circumstances, I earnestly hope the heirs of the deceased will be granted a refund of the money if there are reasonable grounds on which it can be made. No doubt the Minister of Justice will give it his careful and impartial consideration. The member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) was quite right in bringing the matter forward, seeing he was not aware of the facts until a few days ago when he received the letter. It is a very important matter, and I am sure the Minister of Customs will give it his consideration, and if there is any ground on which the Government can refund the money, I am satisfied he is disposed to do what is right. All we want is a full investigation.

Mr. FRASER. I agree with the Minister of Customs that not having all the facts we cannot discuss this special case. In regard to the general principle laid down, I do not think it is as broad as he stated it. The best criterion of the value of an article is the amount for which it sells. You are not to suppose that a man who is selling an article is selling it under price. No valuator can give the value of an article as well as the business man who sells it. He is not going to sell it here for less than he can sell it elsewhere. So far as this article is concerned, it having passed from hand to hand is in the position of an article sold on the market. If the bill was attached to the affidavit made by the importer showing its price, and there was no collusion, you could scarcely obtain evidence strong enough to show there should be another trial. The second sale should regulate the matter, the amount for which it was sold by the assignee.

Mr. BOWELL. You would not fix the price of an article sold in Canada as value for duty.

Mr. FRASER. It would be an indication of the value of the article when an article was sold by an assignee after being imported. But it is the general principle to which I wish to address myself. A wrong would be done to very many purchasers if a criterion of the value was laid down by an officer, who cannot have all the facts. If it was a regular business transaction, if the goods were purchased in England or in the United States, even at very low prices, it would be a dangerous principle to lay down that you must put the value up to what this man or the other man may place it, except the seller. The seller carries on business to make money and he is the best judge of the value. There was a case to which I called the attention of the Minister a short time ago of a similar character. An ex-member of this House, some time ago, I think previous to Confederation, made a certain importation.

Mr. BOWELL. The duty never was paid on it.

Mr. FRASER. I understand the duty was paid on it. If the importation of the article was regular, if the purchase was made in trade, it was a dangerous principle to apply that an official authorized by the Customs shall say what the value is, from whose decision there is no appeal, for he may place that value higher than that given in open market in a fair business transaction. I think the principle as stated by the Minister of Customs is too broad and must lead to great wrongs being committed towards many importers.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not think this is a time to discuss this question. I am quite satisfied that if the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), who is a lawyer, will read the Customs Act from the 58th to the 66th or 69th section he will find I place no strained construction on the law. I am not going to discuss the reasons why Parliament, in its wisdom, thought proper to pass an Act which in its character is materially different from the general principles laid down in the administration of law. There are reasons with which I could convince the hon. gentleman why the law is strictly correct, and why it is absolutely necessary to have unusual powers in order to enforce the Customs Act and prevent frauds on the revenue.

Mr. FRASER. I am not complaining of the law.

Mr. BOWELL. The statement made by the hon. gentleman has been made by a great many others, who have declared that the Customs Act provides no appeal. The hon. gentleman is quite wrong. If the appraiser, whose sworn duty it is to ascertain as near as possible the value of an article, places that value too high, the importer has a right to appeal to merchant appraisers in order to have a thorough investigation on that point, and to prove before those arbitrators, his own peers, the inaccuracy of the appraiser's valuation. If he does not desire to take that course, he can appeal from the decision of the department and take the matter to the Exchequer Court.

Mr. CHARLTON. Might I ask the Minister whether a Customs office has been established at Little Current, which is now the principal business centre in Manitoulin Island?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, one has been established.

Mr. CHARLTON. Has it been removed from Manitoulin?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes. At the hon. gentleman's suggestion that the business of that section of the Island was done at Little Current and not at Manitoulin, I ordered the removal of the officer to that point.

Mr. CHARLTON. That puts the matter in proper shape.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that the Customs house in Montreal costs $147,300 while the Customs house at Toronto costs only $60,000. If the cost is generally in proportion to the amount collected might I ask what is collected at these ports?

Mr. BOWELL. For the year ending 30th June, 1890, at Toronto $4,322,318.28, and at Montreal $8,801,117.95.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is a very serious difference between the cost of the two offices, and I presume the Minister will be able to explain why it is.

Mr. BOWELL. The cost at a port arises not only from the amount of duty collected but from various reasons. In Montreal the constant arrival of steamers necessitates the employment of a much larger number of men than in Toronto, and in proportion as these cities become railway centres so do the expenses increase. A new railway entering a city requires three or four additional men to receive the goods when they arrive. In Montreal, as the hon. gentleman knows, there has been three or four new roads constructed, and a certain number of men have to be at the depots to examine goods or baggage in bond. It is the same way in Toronto. The hon. gentleman knows that city has grown very rapidly and that new railways constantly find an entrance there. As I explained before, the amount of collections do not in any way indicate the total amount of work there is to perform. No one knows better than the gentleman who asked the question that it is no more trouble to make an entry in which you give a cheque for $10,000 duty than it is for $10. The only difference is that there is a larger amount of work in the appraisers' and warehouse departments in examining the goods.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then we are to understand that the goods which arrive in Montreal by the Allan or Dominion line of steamers, and that are going through to Toronto or other places in bond, have to pass through the hands of the Customs at Montreal?

Mr. BOWELL. Every package that arrives by an ocean steamer has to be landed under the supervision of a Customs officer, transferred to the bonded car, sealed by him, and the manifest sent wherever the car is going. When that manifest arrives at its destination, it is compared with the goods in the car, and if the goods do not agree with the manifest, then the railway is held responsible for anything that is missed.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can understand now, from the explanation given by the Minister, why it is that the port of Montreal is more expensive than Toronto, because of course Montreal is the distributing point for the whole Dominion.

Customs—British Columbia.. ..... $48,845

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice there is an increase here.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; and necessarily so. In New Westminster alone there is an increase of $2,000 for additional salaries and extra pay. There are two railways now crossing the border, one at a place called Blaine and another at Huntingdon, and it is necessary to have officers there. There is an addition in Nanaimo of $50. I may say in reference to New Westminster that within the last few years the population has more than doubled, and the collections of revenue have more than doubled also. Last year the revenue was $61,000; ten years ago it was about $4,000. In Nanaimo $51,000 was collected. In Vancouver, which is a new port, comparatively, $210,515.97 was collected; and the fact of this port being the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers from Japan, as well as other vessels, necessitates the employment of a larger number of extra men to supervise the landing of all the goods. In Victoria there is an increase of $930, but the revenue of Victoria has also increased to no less a sum than $820,930. On the frontier service of the province there is a reduction of some $1,500.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the salary of the collector at Victoria?

Mr. BOWELL. $3,000. The old salary was higher than that, because when British Columbia came into the Union one of the agreements with the British Government was that the salaries paid to the old Imperial officials should not be interfered with, and that they should be superannuated on the full amount of their salaries.

Salaries and Travelling Expenses of Inspectors of Ports..... ..... $18,000

Mr. McMULLEN. How many inspectors are there altogether?

Mr. BOWELL. There are five divisions—one for Nova Scotia; one for New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island; one for Quebec; one for Ontario; one in Winnipeg; and one in British Columbia. But in British Columbia, I have combined the inspectorship at present with the collectorship of New Westminster. Mr. Clute, who is a very efficient officer, I made inspector of the province with a slight increase of salary, and he performs both duties now.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that there is a good deal charged for boarding and travelling expenses and board allowance. For instance, W. H. Hill, inspector, has received $288 for travelling expenses and $472.50 for board allowance for 135 days. H. Kavanaugh, inspector, has received $532.16 for travelling expenses. Mr. Mewburn has a salary of $2,000, and receives $326 for travelling expenses and $998 for board allowance for 281 days. J. McLean, inspector, has a salary of $2,000, besides $686 for 196 days. S. W. McMichael has a salary of $1,600 and a board allowance of $437. In what way are these allowances regulated? Do the officers produce vouchers?

Mr. BOWELL. I am surprised at the sums which the hon. gentleman has named being so small as they are. An inspector is supposed to be on the road all the time. He goes from port to port constantly, and he is allowed by Order in Council $3.50 per diem for board allowance, in addition to travelling expenses. Mr. Mewburn has a very large territory, including nearly the whole of Ontario as far as the Manitoulin Islands, and until lately as far as Port Arthur, which recently I have added to the Winnipeg inspection district. The inspectors have to give a detailed account to us, and through us to the Auditor General, of the amounts paid for travelling. I know that the inspectors apparently cost a good deal of money; but, if they did not travel, there would be no use in having them appointed. Mr. McMichael is what we term a financial inspector. If there are any financial difficulties, and we desire the books and accounts of any port examined, we send him. Mr. O'Meara, the new inspector of the Province of Quebec, in place of Mr. Kavanaugh, who has been superannuated, being over 70 years of age, has been associated with Mr. Mc

Michael for some time. He spent over two months in the port of Montreal, during the whole of which time he received $3.50 per diem for board allowance, in addition to travelling expenses going to and from that port. The same statement would apply to all the ports which the inspectors visit. Mr. Clute, for instance, has an immense territory over which to travel in order to reach a single port. It costs a great deal of money for travelling expenses in British Columbia, because the inspector has to travel long distances on horseback; yet many places there are growing so rapidly that it is necessary for him to visit them in order to see that the work is properly done. The expenses in a country like ours will always necessarily be very large.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that some officers received more for travelling expenses than others. Are there any vouchers produced by any of these men setting forth clearly and distinctly the number of days and the actual outlays? I do not wish to make the slightest insinuation with regard to the inspectors, who no doubt are all honest, honourable men, but I would like to know whether there is any way by which the expenses claimed as travelling expenses are checked or certified to.

Mr. BOWELL. Of course, just as long as human nature is inclined to be dishonest, those who are dishonest will find means to evade the law. When an inspector goes away for a week, he is the only person who can vouch for the expenses he made during that time. He is entitled to $3.50 per day all the time he is away. He shows what places he has visited and charges his railway fare. I am not sure, but I think he makes an affidavit. Then the account is sent to the Auditor General, who checks it. Every precaution is taken, and I am glad to know that the inspectors of Customs are men who are, I believe, above committing anything of that kind.

Board of Customs and Outside Detective Service—To meet expenditure in connection therewith, including $800, salary of Commissioner of Customs as Chairman of the Board $17,550

Mr. BOWELL. There is an increase of $1,600. In the first place, we had to employ an additional clerk at $450, and he is now receiving $500. Then there is an amount for travelling expenses, and there are various other items which bring the increase up to the figure I have mentioned. If we send one of the Dominion appraisers, or anyone connected with the Board, to investigate or to supervise the appraiser's department at any port, we have to pay his expenses. There is a decrease in the inspection staff of $3,200, which more than offsets the increase. The decrease arises from the fact that Mr. Wolff, who died a year ago, has not been replaced. His duties are being performed by Mr. McMichael without any increase of pay.

Mr. McMULLEN. I understand that in the North-West, along the boundary, the Mounted Police render good service in the prevention of smuggling. I suppose the hon. gentleman depends almost entirely on them.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; with the exception of a few outports at some places along the border of Manitoba, such as Deloraine, Killarney and Gretna, and coming down to Emerson these are outports. The Mounted Police are utilized along the whole border from the Rocky Mountains to Winnipeg, and they cost very little more than if they were located in barracks. There is a patrol from the Rocky Mountains to Emerson twice a week, on that whole length, from 1,000 to 1,200 miles. This preventive service, which is admirably performed by the force without additional cost, would otherwise probably cost the Government $10,000 to $20,000 a year.

Customs Laboratory—To meet expenditure in connection with the testing of sugars, &c., including pay of officers appointed or employed for that purpose $6,000

Mr. BOWELL. I shall probably not require the whole of this item, as I may be able to dispense with one or two of those formerly employed. We have, however, to keep the laboratory in existence, because we have to test vinegars, liquors and molasses still. I may retain one of the young ladies in the department for the purpose of taking charge of the Chinese work which is rapidly increasing.

Mr. KENNY. I desire to call the attention of the Committee to the very satisfactory manner in which the work is performed by the laboratory, and I hope that now, when we collect revenue on sugars by the Dutch standard, instead of the polariscope, the Minister may see his way clear, if he cannot continue the polariscopic test, to have all sugars graded uniformly at Ottawa as they have been formerly tested uniformly at Ottawa, by the polariscope. He will recognize that at the many outports it is impossible all the collectors can be accurate judges of sugars, or tell the difference of one point in the different grades of sugar. It seems to me that it is in the public interest that the greatest possible uniformity should exist in the collection of revenue, and I would suggest it would be advisable that all the sugars imported into Canada, if we abandon entirely the polariscopic test, should be graded here. It would be more satisfactory to the trade, and more beneficial to the revenue if that were done here by the same officers who have performed the work of testing sugar so satisfactorily during the past few years. I think this matter is of so much consequence that I desire formally to call the attention of the Minister to it, and hope he will give it his favourable consideration.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not know that it would be wise to go to that expense, and it appears to me it would be injurious rather than beneficial to the consumers. It might possibly be an advantage to the refiners, but I do not think it would be to the consumers that such an inspection should take place.

Mr. BOWELL. It certainly would not be an advantage to the refiners, but the contrary. Sugar now is judged by the colour, or what we call the Dutch standard. If the refiners could get in sugar over sixteen free, they might sell it in competition with the merchants who import the same article and pay the duty. The great objection the trade would have to the adoption of that policy would be the delay that would arise from sending the sugars from the extreme parts of this country to the laboratory in Ottawa to be tested as to whether it was fourteen, fifteen or sixteen. Formerly the test as to the strength of sugar was confined to that which was imported for refining purposes, and not to sugars which were over 14 Dutch standard. It is a matter of gratification to me, however, and I frankly confess it, to know that the merchants have come to the conclusion that the policy was correct which was adopted by the department of compelling all sugars that were imported for refining to be sent to Ottawa for the purpose of being tested as to their strength. My hon. friend knows how the Boards of Trade protested against that plan being adopted, and that it was with no little difficulty that, as head of the department, I had to insist upon a year's trial being given to it. No one objected to it more strongly than my hon. friend's late colleague, and I am pleased to know that he subsequently was not only satisfied with the system which was adopted, but I received a letter from him recently strongly urging the adoption of the system which has been suggested by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) to-day. The importers have urged a continuance of the test of these sugars in Ottawa, and say they will pay the expenses of the officers at headquarters, and further they say they will pay at Halifax, and other important centres, the expenses of Customs officials to test sugars and weigh them at those ports. The objection I have to that is that the Government would put themselves in the position of being responsible for all difficulties and errors arising in connection with the weights and qualities of sugars between the exporter and the importer. I think the department of the Government should hold itself, as far as possible, free from all complications that might arise between business men, and that is one of the reasons why I have not given my consent to the proposition suggested by the member for Halifax, and by the Board of Trade of Halifax, and which has been indicated by my hon. friend who has spoken. I think those who have had experience in the management of public affairs of that kind will conclude that the best course to pursue is for the Government to assume the smallest responsibility they possibly can so far as any interference with the trade of the country is concerned beyond the absolute requirements of the tariff.

Mr. KENNY. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs has stated that one of his objections to acceding to the wishes of the importers of sugars in Halifax is that the distance is so great. The distance is no greater now than it was when we used the polariscope, and the Minister knows that in every cargo of West India sugar there will be in all probability a certain percentage which will grade higher than the 14 Dutch standard. I am quite sure my hon. friend the Minister of Customs need not be afraid that his revenue will suffer at the port of Halifax because there he has efficient officers and experts, but he knows that at many of the outports in the Maritime Provinces and other parts of the Dominion, the officers of the Customs Department are not experts in the matter of sugar, and that it requires an expert to decide accurately whether the sugar is the Dutch 14 or whether it slightly exceeds it, and there might be on the part of the importers at the port of Montreal or the port of Halifax, an impression that the duty had not been fairly collected at the other ports. All that might be prevented and perhaps better protection might be secured to the revenue, if the Minister would have this sugar graded, if it is not tested by the polariscope. My only object is to have the greatest uniformity adopted in the collection of revenue.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You will have to provide that your Customs officials are not colour-blind.

Mr. BOWELL. I think so. Of course, we would have to furnish samples, such as I produced in the House, to all the officers, and we would also have to see that they were not colour-blind.

Administration of the Chinese Immigration Act, including remuneration to Customs officers..... $2,000

Mr. McMULLEN. What was spent in connection with this service last year?

Mr. BOWELL. I think I can satisfy the hon. gentleman that this is the most economically administered part of the whole Government service. The amount voted last year was $2,000. The expenditure for the year 1889-90, which is the year we are now considering, was $1,634.99.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What were the receipts for Chinese immigrants?

Mr. BOWELL. The expenditure for the present year will probably be $1,700. We have been in the habit of taking a vote of $2,000 because the expenditure varies. The reason for the small expenditure is that I have utilized the Customs collectors in the different ports to perform the duties of controllers of Chinese immigration without extra pay, except where we have had to add an additional officer. The revenue was increased over that of the former year, and this year it will exceed $80,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. From Chinese immigration?

Mr. BOWELL. From Chinese immigration. This is for the year ending the 30th June. It will be more this year. Yet, strange to say, as far as we can learn, we have no more Chinese in this country now than we had before. I do not say where they go, but I know the American Government has been communicating with the Imperial Government and requesting them to ask Canada to assist in enforcing the American laws of prohibition against the Chinese.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is their present law?

Mr. BOWELL. Total prohibition.

Mr. INNES. Is it not true that many Chinese come into Canada from Washington and Oregon without paying duty?

Mr. BOWELL. I am not aware of it. I think it is rather the other way, though, no doubt, some do come in.

Mr. FRASER. Does not the Minister think it would be well to repeal that Act? As we cannot get population to come into this country, why should we not allow the Chinese to come in as well as anybody else?

Mr. BOWELL. I do not think it would be profitable for the Committee to enter into a discussion of that question now.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who is the officer at Victoria that the Minister says he is utilizing for this work?

Mr. BOWELL. The collector, Mr. Milne. I will give the hon. gentleman the details. The chief controller is Mr. Parmalee here at headquarters, who supervises the whole work and receives $400. Yip Yun, interpreter at Vancouver, $360 a year; Mongkow, of Victoria, also an interpreter, receives $177.50; J. Saunders, who is also an interpreter although of English name, received $2.50; Ah Wing, $2.50 as interpreter of Chinese invoices. The salary of G. L. Webster, at Vancouver, who attends to this business in connection with the Customs, was $281.72. He was appointed in the double capacity of landing waiter and in connection with the Chinese Act, half the salary being charged to the Chinese fund, and half to the Customs. Mr. Brooks, for services rendered, received $28.50; W. Dunstan, $2.50; G. Winne, caretaker at Victoria, $60; legal services, Drake, Jackson & Co,, $86.37; travelling expenses of inspector, G. H. Young, $159.85; postages and telegram, $105; Queen's Printer, for printing certificates and other things, $72.50, making a total of $1,634.99. The collectors at Vancouver, Victoria and New Westminster, in addition to being collectors of Customs, are controllers of the Chinese Immigration Act, without extra pay.

Mr. CHARLTON. Would the Minister say what the feeling of the public is in British Columbia regarding Chinese immigration, whether the prejudice that existed with regard to the Mongolians some time ago, has to any extent diminished, or whether it still continues on the part of the Anglo-Saxon population of the province?

Mr. BOWELL. I think in some respects it has increased, in others it has decreased. The prejudice against the introduction of the Mongolian race into that province has decreased among that class of people who desire to have greater facilities for obtaining servants. Among the labouring classes, the workingmen, and the artizan, I suppose the feeling against the Chinese has increased. So far has that feeling manifested itself that the Executive Council of British Columbia have passed an Order in Council asking the Dominion Government to make the law still more rigid, which fact would indicate that the feeling had increased against the introduction of the Mongolian race into British Columbia.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have noticed in California on two or three occasions, and also in British Columbia, that the popular feeling with regard to Mongolian immigration was very strongly opposed to it. Although it is customary to indulge in criticisms upon the policy of the Government in throwing impediments in the way of that immigration by a tax of $50 per head, yet I am unable, in view of all the circumstances, to say that the policy is an unwise one. I think the Government have acted wisely in the matter. There certainly must be good reasons for the prejudice that exists against this class of the population, among the white people. That prejudice is universal in Washington, in Oregon and California, as well as in British Columbia so far as my observation and enquiries have gone. The employer of labour, no doubt, who wants cheap labour, would naturally look with favour upon the introduction of that race, but we must remember that the Pacific coast lies very convenient to China, and that if no impediments were placed in the way of immigration, we would have a swarm of Mongolians coming to our shores. I must express my opinion that the policy of the Government on this matter is justified by the circumstances, and that to admit the Chinese without let or hindrance—to invite them, in fact, as we would do by placing no impediments in the way of their immigration—would probably be an unwise policy.

Mr. TROW. During the trip that I took a few years ago to British Columbia, I had conversation with a good many of the leading citizens of Victoria in regard to the Chinese. I remember that the landlord of the largest hotel in the city, the "Driard," where they employ some 20 of these Mongolian servants, all males, informed me that there was no possibility of getting white labour, or labour of any kind, other than Chinese, who were honest and industrious. He said they made the very best of servants, and it was almost impossible to get along without their assistance. He was surprised that the Dominion Government should adopt such a rigid law to prevent them from coming into this country. In fact he said that the Canadian Pacific Railway would not be the accomplished fact that it was at that day, that it could not have been constructed in the brief time that it was constructed, had it not been for Chinese labour.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think it is easy to see that if you allow Chinamen to come in at all, you necessarily make white labour very scarce, because no white labourers can exist where there are any Chinamen. Now, if there were no Mongolians in British Columbia at all, there would be no doubt an abundant supply of white labour, because then white men would get better wages and they would go there to live. But as soon as you allow the Chinamen to come in, they cut down wages so that no white man can live at all. Then they are no good to the country, they do not become naturalized, they simply remain and make a little money and then they go back home and carry it with them. In the Western States and California, especially, where I have had some knowledge of them, they have their Chinese stores, and they bring all their goods, and wearing apparel and everything that they use, from China; they do not patronize European houses at all. I think they are of no use at all in the country. They do not develop the resources of this country, they do not build up the country, and I believe that we should put all the impediments we can in the way of their coming here.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have had a little experience with this question myself in the western countries, and I can confirm the statement made by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Trow), with regard to the usefulness of the Chinese as labourers. At the time the Union Pacific was being built, I was crossing upon that line, and after making enquiries into the question of Chinese labour, I was informed that the men who worked in the machine shops, under a white foreman, were all Chinamen. In conversation with railway men they told me that if it had not been for Chinese labour they could not have built the road at all. In the western country where there are mining settlements, they cannot keep white men at all, they rush off like sheep, one after another; but when they have Chinamen they can depend upon them to carry out the work. There is also a strong feeling amongst the people who employ servants in the western country, that they cannot get along without Chinese labour. A few years ago, owing to same difficulty with the leading Chinese in the City of Victoria, the Chinese believing they were harshly treated, all struck work, and every Chinese servant in the City of Victoria left. They remained out for some months, and the people endeavoured to get white labour by sending to California, but they were finally obliged to throw up the sponge and give in to the Chinese. They took back their Chinese servants, who have remained ever since. In fact, 99 out of every 100 servants in the western country are Chinese, and the people are able to get no others. On the other hand, there is no doubt that the Chinese tend to bring down the wages of white labour, and that is a difficulty we shall always have to face. At the same time, if the Chinese were excluded to-day in that western country, there would be a great deal of suffering and inconvenience among the employers of labour.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not doubt that is true. I do not doubt also that this is a very thorny question with rather more than two sides to it. Still, for all that, it appears to me although it may be that this practice of taxing Chinamen is opposed to British practice, I take it that to a very considerable extent that instinctive feeling which prevails in California and also in British Columbia has its origin in a wholesome feeling of self-preservation.

Mr. DEWDNEY. No doubt of it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Looking at the enormous mass of people in China, who might at a very short notice be poured upon the shores of North America, and looking at the fact that they most assuredly will not alter their own civilization for ours, and as we perfectly well know it is an immigration of men pure and simple, they never bringing any respectable Chinese women over——

Mr. DEWDNEY. Very few.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT,—we are not in a position to depart from the regulation which the Government has laid down. I cannot say I like it, but I am afraid, as I have said, it is absolutely necessary for the preservation of our white civilization that some considerable restriction should be placed upon this immigration.

Indians, New Brunswick..... $6,200

Mr. DEWDNEY. This item was allowed to stand in order that I might make some enquiry into the question of missionaries. I referred to my deputy, who writes as follows :—

"The missionaries referred to on page 13 part 2 of the departmental report are the successors to similar appointees of the Imperial Government. When Indian affairs came under our management we still continue the salaries of the missionaries at those points."

So the practice has been going on for many years, as I suspect.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That may be ; but it does not meet the question to which I called the attention of the Government, and which I must repeat. The payment by the people of Canada of salaries to missionaries is, as I stated, a thing to be very seriously considered. I think we have a right to know whether the Government have any policy on this subject. If we are going to pay missionaries in New Brunswick for their services as missionaries to the Indians, I do not see how the Government can refuse to pay other clerical gentlemen in other parts of the Dominion who may be rendering similar services to Indian bands. That is a question which requires to be seriously considered before we engage in it. I am perfectly well aware that a great many of the clerical bodies, a great many of the clergy in various parts of the Dominion who have been brought into contact with the Indians have sacrificed a great deal for them, and have devoted themselves to the Indians, and may be have rendered them much better services than a considerable number of the persons whom we may pay nominally to look after the welfare of the Indians. But, all the same, this question of paying salaries to the clergy for their clerical service, is wholly and entirely apart from our custom, and wholly and entirely apart from our previous habit in dealing with Indian tribes or anyone else. I do not myself see that the mere fact that this is a legacy handed down from the British Government at all affects the question as to how we shall deal with it in the future. It is quite obvious that this item has heretofore escaped discussion because the House did not know anything about it. Now, the Government, in my judgment, will find it impossible to continue to pay the missionaries to Indians in one province. I take it that in the North-West and British Columbia and in other provinces you will be exceedingly likely, this item now having attracted attention, to have demands made on you to pay missionaries who allege, rightly, I dare say, that they are occupying themselves for the welfare of the Indians. The item, though small in itself, may come to involve serious consequences, and it certainly does involve the policy I have stated. I, therefore, wish to know what the Government propose to do, and if they intend to continue this payment ?

Mr. DEWDNEY. In looking into this matter I found that there are eight missionaries paid in the same way in the Province of Quebec, four Protestant and four Roman Catholic.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As missionaries ?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes, as missionaries. They have been paid for some years.

Mr. CHARLTON. How many missionaries are paid in the Province of Quebec ?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Eight.

Mr. CHARLTON. And how many in New Brunswick ?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Eight.

Mr. CHARLTON. To which denomination do these sixteen missionaries belong ?

Mr. DEWDNEY. In Quebec there are four Protestant and four Roman Catholic, and in New Brunswick all Roman Catholic, and all Roman Catholic Indians.

Mr. CHARLTON. The system will lead to wrangling, bad feeling and difficulty. If the Government are to adopt the system of making grants to missionaries belonging to the different religious bodies for the purpose of enabling them to prosecute their work of teaching the Indians, the various religious bodies will naturally begin to enquire as to which has received an undue proportion for this end. The position of the matter is that the Roman Catholics are receiving three-fourths and the Protestants one-fourth. It is a matter of no very great consequence at present. But if the amount paid to the missionaries becomes larger, public attention will be drawn to the matter and the Government will find on its hands a question which will be a source of trouble and irritation. I do not believe, on thinking the matter over, that it is a prudent policy for the Government to pursue to make appropriations for the purpose of furnishing religious instruction to any class of people in this Dominion. They had better refrain from it. If they wish to use public money for the instruction of the Indians let it be used and appropriated by the Government themselves; let the work be done under their supervision and let them take the matter into their own hands. I am quite sure that while there is nothing serious involved, yet we have here the germs of serious difficulties. We are not going to satisfy all the denominations in regard to the appropriations made; some one of them will be very likely to claim that others receive more than their proper share. I repeat I do not believe the principle is a correct one anyway. I do not believe it is the business of this Government, or any other Government, to enter into the field and subvent religious institutions in any way in the prosecution of their religious work. Let them carry on that work by their own methods voluntarily.

Mr. FRASER. How many Indians in New Brunswick and how many in Nova Scotia?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There are 1,574 in New Brunswick and 2,059 in Nova Scotia.

Mr. FRASER. Therefore, in Nova Scotia we have more Indians than in New Brunswick, and there are no payments made to missionaries in Nova Scotia. In the counties of Pictou and Antigonish, the Indians all belong to the Roman Catholic church, and the denomination has built them a church in each county, and that religious body looks after the Indians and gets nothing from the Government. In the Province of New Brunswick, where they only have 1,500 Indians there are eight agents paid by the Government, whereas the Indians in Nova Scotia have to be looked after by the religious denominations themselves. It is a piece of unfairness that should be ended at once by the Government.

Mr. DEWDNEY. There are agents in Nova Scotia.

Mr. FRASER. But there are no paid missionaries.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes, there are eight, but they act as agents; and in New Brunswick there are only two agents and eight missionaries.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You do appear to be mixing up State and Church in a remarkable fashion.

Mr. FRASER. In New Brunswick they are simply missionaries and do no agent's work, but in Nova Scotia they are agents.

Mr. DEWDNEY. They do a certain amount of missionary work as well.

Mr. FRASER. I am opposed to this system because it is no part of the functions of Government to pay anything to any clergyman of any denomination. It is not the business of this Government to enter the field as an educator in matters of religion. That is a matter for the people themselves, and the Government have no more business to interfere in it than in a matter outside their jurisdiction altogether. I do not care what denomination the man belongs to who receives public funds, this Government have no right to give him any money in order to educate people in any particular precepts. That is a matter that should be left to the religious zeal and enthusiasm of the religious bodies. Look at what the various Christian denominations of this Dominion are doing for the Indians in the North-West. There, the various churches are paying towards the education of the Indians. What right have the Government to pay money out of the public funds to any religious denomination, no matter what it be, to educate the Indians or any other class of the population? I think the Government should at once stop this, because it is wrong in principle, and unfair to the province which does not receive any money for purposes of this kind. The Government is laying the foundation of what will be a troublesome matter, and the sooner they cut off these excrescences of a by-gone age by which the State gives money to the Church the better for the future of this Dominion. I believe that good work is done by these men. I believe there is not a dollar expended by the Government on these missionaries that is not well repaid in the civilization of the Indians. I know that by the work of these men the Indians have been raised to a better condition than they were before; but that is not the point I am raising. I say that the Government is wrong in carrying out this principle and the sooner they stop it the better. There is no justification for the Government doing this and it will only lead to continual trouble.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know what the Government proposes to do with respect to this?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I would not like, on my own responsibility, to express any opinion about it, but I think it is a matter worthy of consideration and I shall bring it before my colleagues at an early day, and endeavour to get an expression of opinion as to whether a change should be made.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How long has that been going on?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It has been going on since the Imperial Government had the handling of the Indians.

Mr. CHARLTON. That is prior to Confederation?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. FRASER. I think the Government might apply the same principle here as they do to postmasters and other officials appointed prior to Confederation. They might, in case of vacancy in an office, not make a new appointment.

Mr. KENNY. In the Province of Nova Scotia I think these are not considered as salaries, but the small amount allowed is used in travelling expenses incidental to the discharge of the duties of these gentlemen as agents.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As regards Nova Scotia, I understand that no payment is made to the men as missionaries, but that the payment is made to them as Indian agents. I am not disposed to be too rigorous, although it might look like evading the principle; but here you have got, in the Auditor General's Report, a distinct statement that we are paying the salaries of eight or nine gentlemen as missionaries, and upon that point I say that some decision will have to be come to by the Government. The thing was never known to me, and I do not think it was ever known to my hon. friend.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I understood that these sums were paid to the missionaries, not so much to themselves as in trust for the relief of the poor and the distressed amongst the Indian population. That is my recollection of the former condition in these particular cases.

Mr. GILLMOR. That is my recollection of the matter. I have been a long time in public life, and I never understood that clergymen were getting public money as missionaries. So far as I have known, they have looked after the poor and provided medical attendance. I have never known of money being paid to them for religious purposes; but I have known for many years both before and since Confederation that clergymen have been employed as agents to look after the poor among the Indians.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is just about what they are now. In the Province of Nova Scotia the agents are organized, and there are sixteen of them, with regular agents. These clergymen look after the wants of the Indians, providing them with the attendance of physicians and medicines, and distributing the bounty given to the Indians; and they do all this work under the organization of agencies. In the Province of New Brunswick these agents are called missionaries; but it is quite evident that they do the kind of work the hon. member for Charlotte describes, though the work of looking after the Indians there is not organized into agencies, because there are only two in the entire province, and it would be out of the question to consider two agencies as a sufficient organization. It would be better, of course, for appearance sake, that there should be organized the same kind of agencies that exists in the other provinces; but there is no difference in reality, it amounts to the same thing.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It may amount to the same thing, but nobody will see more clearly than the Minister of Justice that it makes a great difference whether we are placing in the hands of these gentlemen—who I dare say probably devote all they receive to relieving the temporary wants of the Indians—money to be used by them as almoners of this Dominion, or whether we are paying them salaries as clergymen, as stated here. I do not think we can consent to pay sums of money to any body of clergymen in their capacity as clergymen.

Mr. FORBES. Will the hon. Minister inform me whether there are regularly appointed physicians to attend upon the Indians, or whether various medical men are subject to the call of the agent?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I gave that information the other night. I have not my memorandum here; but the agent employs the doctor, and I think there are one or two in New Brunswick regularly appointed and paid $200 a year.

Mr. FORBES. Has the agent authority to employ physicians and obtain provisions for other Indians than those especially on the reserve?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No, he has not, without special authority from the department. We have before us now some applications for payment from physicians for attending Indians who were off their reserve. I think there are one or two now under the consideration of the department, which have been refused payment because the services were given without the authorization of the agent, and because the Indians were off their reserve.

Mr. FORBES. Do I understand the Minister to say that they are still under consideration, although they have been refused payment?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; one or two are still under consideration.

Mr. FORBES. Does the Minister know the case I refer to, that of Doctor Calder, of Bridgewater, from the agent T. J. Butler?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think I wrote to the hon. gentleman in relation to that. It may, perhaps, be decided.

Mr. FORBES. I want to call the hon. gentleman's attention to that case. It seems strange that the agent should give orders to wholesale or retail dealers to supply these Indians when they are not on the reserve, and that the department should pay the bills for those supplies, and yet should refuse to pay the bill of Dr. Calder. The agent, the Rev. Father Butler, lives 30 miles from the Indians, and the doctor whom he claims to have appointed to wait upon the Indians, lives 11 miles from the reserve in the other direction, so that the distance between the agent and the doctor is 41 miles. The doctor appointed by the agent is Dr. Gray of Mahone Bay. Dr. Calder, feeling it his duty as a medical man to wait upon the poor when they require his services, has for the past 12 years waited on the Indians who live in his vicinity, and he has rendered to the department a moderate bill in detail, amounting to $64.85. For three years he has been unable to get any satisfaction from the department, and it is only within a short time that he has been informed that because the Indians were not on the reserve, the bill was refused payment. I am simply desirous of informing the department of the irregularity of the proceedings of the Rev. Mr. Butler, as regards this particular transaction. I will not attribute to the agent the fact that he reported adversely to the bill because Dr. Calder is a Liberal in politics, but he may have so reported to the department, and it does seem curious that the department should pay the bills for supplies to these Indians, although they are not on their reserves, when the supplies are ordered by the agent. The sole objection given by the department, is the letter to which the Minister has referred, in which he says:

"It has always been the rule of the department to refuse the payment of doctors' accounts for services to the Indians not on their reserves, and it will be impossible, under the circumstances, to pay Dr. Calder for the services he has rendered the Indians. I regret this very much in view of your strong opinions on the matter, but similar applications have invariably been refused."

This letter was addressed to me, and I would call the attention of the Minister to the fact that he should make better provisions for the Indians, as otherwise this doctor and others would be perfectly justified in refusing these poor wards of the Government their attendance. In that neighbourhood Dr. Calder has the reputation of being one of the very best physicians. He has given his time to the Indians and has spent his money for medicines for them, and he is certainly entitled to be repaid by the Government.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I can tell the hon. gentleman that I know nothing of the politics of a single doctor attending the Indians in the Maritime Provinces, and I do not believe their politics would make the slightest difference, so far as my deputy is concerned. If we were to pay the bills of every doctor who attends Indians who are not on the reserves, we would have to ask Parliament for three times the amount we now require for medical services.

Mr. KAULBACH. I may relieve my hon. friend of a little of the dissatisfaction he appears to feel with regard to the position the Government have assumed when bills in this connection were presented, of which I have a knowledge, by stating that they have not shown any discrimination between Conservatives and Liberals in their refusal to pay for medical attendance on the Indians who are off the reserves. I had occasion to make the other day application to the Indian Department for the payment of a bill sent me by a political friend for medical services to the Indians.

Mr. FORBES. Who was he?

Mr. KAULBACH. Dr. Mack of the firm o Mack & Foster. And although I urged the claim as strongly as I could, I was told that the bill, not having been authorized by the agent (the Rev. Mr. Butler) and the doctor for the county, which was Grey, not having been called in to render his services, the department could not favourably entertain the request for the payment of the bill.

Mr. FORBES. Of what politics is Dr. Mack?

Mr. KAULBACH. He is a Conservative, I believe, as he supported me.

Mr. FORBES. That does not follow. I know he is a warm and good Liberal in principle, and an absolute free trader.

Mr. FRASER. There are methods and methods. I will not say that the agent acted at the bidding of the department, but he finds it very convenient just to employ the doctor who happens to suit, from a political point of view, at the particular time. In the county I represent and the adjoining county there were two doctors who did all the work required, Dr. Caddigan and Dr. McKinnon, and the whole amount paid during the year was about $90; but the services of these gentlemen have been dispensed with and the bill has gone up to over $200, I do not say the expense increased because a new doctor was employed as there may have been some other reason, but I mention this as showing that a doctor may be employed just to suit the political complexion of the party in power. If a doctor has been in attendance on the Indians for twelve years, he ought not to be removed without good reasons, for these people have their preferences as well as white, and to remove one in whom they have confidence in order to replace him by another who is in political sympathy with the Government, is not the best way of treating the Indians.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Indians only asserted the preference of the greater portion of the white people in the place of preferring the services of the gentlemen who now do the work.

Mr. FRASER. I would not draw a comparison, but I am bound to say that where they are both known, Dr. McKinnon is considered just as good a medical man as the other.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have not heard that opinion pronounced by others in the county, and I have not been so unfortunate as to have required the treatment of either, but if both be of equal standing that is sufficient to show the preference is not on account of politics.

Mr. FRASER. In the country parts party politics are apt to decide the respective merits of doctors as they do of lawyers, and no doubt the hon. gentleman has not had the opportunity of coming into contact with the friends of Dr. McKinnon or he would have learnt in what high reputation he is held.

Government of the North-West Territories..... $217,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think it will be possible to sit very late to-night, and I suppose, if the hon. gentleman gets through this item, he will seek his virtuous couch?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Probable cost of elections, North-West Territories..... $10,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is not $10,000 for elections a heavy figure?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think it cost that last year.

Clerical assistance, North-West Territories..... $9,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does not $9,000 for clerical assistance seem to be an extremely large sum? It appears to be all frill and no shirt in this expenditure. There is an extremely large expenditure for the Government, and very little money is expended for the benefit of the community except in the matter of schools. Why should we pay $9,000 for clerical assistance to administer an expenditure of $217,000 of the public money? I had a good deal to do in past days with the reorganization of the Government of Manitoba, and I found that they were spending more than half the money they got from us in printers' bills and on the Legislative Assembly. It appears that very much of the same kind of thing is going on here.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Last year the expenditure was $8,328.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes; but why did they spend that amount?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There is an accountant and an assistant accountant who attends to the issue of the permits, seven clerks at salaries varying from $600 to $900, the private secretary of the Governor, the secretary of the Board of Education, a clerk in charge of public works, and three messengers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You have a special bill for messengers besides.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Including the messengers and these officers, the expenditure amounts to $13,470. These were all appointed by Order in Council here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So I have heard; but it appears to me that an immense amount of the money which is voted to the North-West goes to pay salaries, and these appear to be multiplied without rhyme or reason.

Mr. DEWDNEY. We have to vote these Estimates in this manner this time, but I think it will be the last time. There is no Legislature there now. The elections will be held in a month or six weeks, and the Assembly will not meet probably until November, so that the money has to be voted now; but when the Legislature meets, they will have power to cut down the clerical force if they think it necessary. Heretofore it has been in the hands of the Lieutenant Governor.

Mr. FLINT. Is it contemplated, under the new Bill in regard to the North-West Territories, that the Assembly itself shall regulate its clerkships and incidental expenses?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. FLINT. And this Parliament will be relieved of that expenditure?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. FLINT. That is a very good idea.

Subscriptions to Newspapers..... $500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see you have cut down the fourth estate from $2,000 to $500.

Mr. DEWDNEY. We have been doing that in every department.

Caretakers and messengers, Legislative Hall and Government House..... $3,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here again there seems to be more spent for messengers and for keeping up the pomp and dignity of the Governor than is desirable.

Mr. FLINT. I presume that this item also will disappear under the new regime, and that they will regulate this matter themselves in the North-West Assembly?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Does this include the cost of the Governor's personal attendants, his man-servants and his maid-servants, because I find some very extraordinary charges in the Auditor General's Report respecting some of the employés of the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There is a gardener——

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I am not referring to the gardener. There is a much more important employé, a much more dignified employé than the gardener. I see the Lieutenant Governor finds it necessary to employ a page who attends the Lieutenant Governor at Government house.

Mr. DEWDNEY. No.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Yes.

Mr. DEWDNEY. He does not. I think I know more about it than the hon. gentleman. He does not go to Government house at all.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Where is he?

Mr. DEWDNEY. He stays down town with his family, and during the session he is in the hall of the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Is he employed for the session as we employ our pages here?

Mr. DEWDNEY. He is employed all the year round. He is in the Legislative Hall.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Why should we require to vote for cuffs for a page?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I cannot prevent the Lieutenant Governor putting on frill if he is inclined to do so.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). But you might prevent our paying money to enable him to do it. I find we are charged for six pairs of cuffs for a page, two pairs of hose for a page, a pair of knee-breeches for a page. I think this is one of the most scandalous expenditures I have heard of. Kid slippers for the page, ties for the page—all this is in the Auditor General's Report. Now, the Minister is clearly mistaken. It is not at all likely that the members of the North West Assembly would require a page with all this paraphernalia, knee-breeches and slippers. Did the hon. gentleman have a page like that when he was Lieutenant Governor of the North-West?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No, I did not; but my messengers used to wear breeches.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). It is out of all character and all reason. I think these accounts should be certified to as correct by the Minister. Has the Minister seen them?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; I have seen them.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Then the Minister ought not to sanction anything of that kind. Governor Royal was not accustomed to that sort of luxury in the province from which he came, and there is no reason why the Governors of the North-West Territories should start out with pages.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I can assure the hon. gentleman that he is mistaken. That boy goes to the office, he is the only messenger they have got in the legislative offices. He goes there at nine or ten o'clock in the morning and remains there all day. I do not believe that boy has been in the Governor's house half a dozen times in his lifetime. He is a little boy about the size of the pages in this House. I left him there when I left the office, and he is doing the same work now that he was doing when I left.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). If that is what he is doing, why does he require knee-breeches and kid slippers?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I presume they wanted to put him in a little livery during the session.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). We do not put our boys in knee-breeches and kid slippers.

Mr. DEWDNEY. He is dressed like our boys.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Our boys are not dressed in knee-beeches and kid slippers.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Oh, yes, they are. Stand up here, boy.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I have not examined their shoes, but I think they wear neither kid slippers, knee-breeches nor ties. There are other items here of an equally absurd character, charges which are scandalous, so much so that the Auditor General has drawn the attention of the Lieutenant Governor to them. Calendars, cards for programmes, menu cards, pencils. Now, if the Lieutenant Governor sees fit to give an entertainment why should the people of this country have to pay for his menu cards? Then I find an item of $63 for portraits of all the distinguished men in Canada, except the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Oh, I am there; at least I was told so the other day.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). There is a charge for framing portraits of the distinguished men of Canada, except the Minister of the Interior. He should strike that out.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I thought I was there.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). It is an insult to the late Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories that he should be left out. We find Speaker Allan, Mr. Blake, Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. Bowell, the Hon. John Carling, Sir Adolphe Caron, Sir George Cartier, Mr. Chapleau, the Hon. John Costigan, G. E. Foster. Now, when the Minister of Finance is there, surely the Minister of the Interior ought to be there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is another item here: portraits from Topley's Studio, among which is the Hon. E. Dewdney, $15.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The hon. gentleman ought to have his name amongst the other distinguished gentlemen whose names are mentioned here. Now, I would like to have some explanation why we should be called upon to pay such charges as these. They are not charges that we pay for any other Lieutenant Governor in any other portion of the Dominion. Now, here is a sewing machine. Are the tax-payers of this country expected to pay for the Lieutenant Governor's sewing machine? Who uses the sewing machine? Does the Lieutenant Governor use it to while away a weary hour? We have got to pay $60 for a sewing machine. Did the hon. gentleman get a sewing machine at the public expense when he was Lieutenant Governor?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Then there are China ornaments, a claret bowl. Is the hon. gentleman to sanction the payment of a claret bowl for the Lieutenant Governor? Cream jug, cup and saucer, decanters, champagne glasses, claret glasses, flint glasses, port glasses, sherry glasses, wine glasses, a two-gallon jug — I suppose that is for the whiskey——

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is for the permits.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Now, it is no laughing matter. Although the items are not large, it is the principle that is involved. Why should we pay for the wine glasses, or glasses of any description, for the Lieutenant Governor? Are they left there when he leaves the office? Or are they carried off with him as part of his perquisites? If we select a temperance Lieutenant Governor what use will he have for wine glasses, claret glasses, champagne glasses, and two-gallon jugs? The hon. gentleman must see that such a thing cannot be justified in this country.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; I will justify it.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Then you will do a great deal more than I expected you would. Surely, that the people of this country should be called upon to pay for these things, is out of all reason. I suppose we have to furnish the Lieutenant Governor's house there, but we are not bound to furnish sewing machines and wine glasses; we are not bound to furnish piano scarfs and cords; we are under no obligation to furnish things of that kind. There are things there for which no justification can be urged.

Mr. DEWDNEY. There may be two or three items. You must recollect that when Mr. Laird was appointed Lieutenant Governor his house was built and furnished for him.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I do not object to the furniture of the house.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The furniture was bought at St. Louis and taken up to Red River, and from there to Battleford. It was excellent furniture, better than that used by the late Lieutenant Governor. When Mr. Laird left, the furniture was brought and put into the Government house at Regina. I happened to have many articles of furniture which I brought from British Columbia, such as dinner-services, knives, forks and spoons, plates, &c., so there was no occasion to expend money on that account, and I did not expend money for more than some small necessary items. When I left I took away those things which belonged to me, and the house was very bare when Governor Royal came there. I hope the hon. gentleman did not mean to insinuate anything when he remarked just now: Does the Governor take them away?

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). No; I had no reference to you.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Because I can assure the hon. gentleman there was a strict inventory of the goods taken from Mr. Laird, and as strict an inventory of the goods left for Mr. Royal. But the house was left very bare. I had my own pictures, which I took away. Governor Royal, in order to decorate the walls, appears to have chosen pictures of the public men of Canada, rather than other subjects. There are some items which are peculiar. I do not think I would have purchased the articles, and I would not have seen the necessity for them; but we have not all the same ideas and the same views with respect to those matters. With respect to the sewing machine, that is a most necessary article in a house. There is a certain quantity of household sewing to be done, and in the end probably money will be saved by having bought it for the house.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Looking at the Auditor General's Report I find a letter protesting against these items being paid out of the public money. And yet the Minister of the Interior I fear justifies them and intends to certify to them and have them paid. A letter from the Auditor General dated 13th June, 1890, requires the attention of the Minister of the Interior. The Lieutenant Governor appears to have been absent 100 days in one year. I understand that the practice is that cheques must be signed by the Lieutenant Governor.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; by the Lieutenant Governor, and counter-signed by some other official.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The attention of the Minister of the Interior is directed to the fact that while absent cheques were signed in the Lieutenant Governor's name. He must have left blank cheques to be filled out.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That was explained.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The explanation was not given by the Lieutenant Governor but by some one else. The Lieutenant Governor does not explain it in any way. He was apparently absent 100 days in one year. Do we have to furnish the Lieutenant Governor with horses and sleighs, and everything of that kind?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not think the Governor has a Government horse.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I do not care whether he has a Government horse or not. If he has, he has no business to have a horse for which the country pays. There are charges for repairs to a sleigh, and exchange on pony, $35. Why should we be charged for that item? Exchange on sleigh, $17; express sleigh, $35, and so on. These are all items for which there is no justification. If the Lieutenant Governor must have these articles, he must pay for them out of the salary given him by the Dominion Government. As to the house, I observed before and I repeat that I have no objection that a suitable residence should be provided for the Lieutenant Governor and that it should be suitably furnished, but I object that any absurd trappings should be paid for by the people of the country. If the hon. gentleman left the furniture, as no doubt he did from what he says, then Lieutenant Governor Royal's notions of the dignified position he occupies there are much greater than those of the hon. gentleman, for I find there are no less than three columns of the Auditor General's Report filled with items of articles procured for the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories. Almost every conceivable thing that a gentleman could want is there, and some things which it is inconceivable he should require are there, articles which no man, be he Lieutenant Governor or otherwise, would require in his house. The sooner this sort of thing is put a stop to the better, and the sooner the Lieutenant Governor is told that the tax-payers of this country will not submit to pay for such items the better. I trust before very long the North-West Territories will be constituted into a responsible government, where payments of this kind will be properly checked.

Mr. DEWDNEY. After this.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). After this, according to a Bill which has been brought in. I have always been in favour of the Government going a step further and giving the people of the North-West Territories not only representative but responsible government, when items of the kind spoken of here would receive the strictest scrutiny from the representatives of the people of the territories. Down here, a thousand miles from the scene where these things occur, one is not in such a good position to criticise and discuss them as are the people who live in the locality. Here items go before the Minister and he passes them, and that is the end. But I trust hereafter the Minister will be more careful in seeing that items of this kind are not paid by the Canadian tax-payers.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron).

Manitoba Insane Asylum.....$8,400

Mr. WATSON. How many patients have been transferred to Manitoba?

Mr. DEWDNEY. From 35 to 40.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I draw the attention of the leader of the Government to the fact that there is not a quorum of members present.

North-West Territories Government House—Light and fuel..... $1,400

Mr. WATSON. I notice there are 217 gallons of coal oil, at 50 cents a gallon. Is that not a high price at Regina?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; about the usual price.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I draw the attention of the Minister, in connection with items under the head of Indians in the North-West, to these extraordinary charges for coal oil. When was the contract made, and how long did it continue? We are paying on Indian reserves, within a very short distance of the railway, even only 20 miles from Regina, 66 and 67 cents for coal oil. Is the hon. gentleman sure that tenders are called for?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; you will see it in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Are they called for every year?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; every year.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I may tell the hon. gentleman that coal oil can be bought in Ontario for 12 cents per gallon. Taking the average price of coal oil charged at 62 cents, that allows 50 cents per gallon for carrying from, say Toronto to Regina or Calgary, or some other western town. There are about 42 gallons in a barrel, and this would give about $20 a barrel for carrying it. There is something radically wrong about the matter, and it requires investigation.

Mr. FLINT. What kind of coal is that for which $15.50 per ton is charged?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; that is the price of anthracite coal there. When the question was asked before during the session I enquired into the reason of the difference between the prices paid by the North-West Mounted Police and the North-West Governmnet, and the Comptroller of the Mounted Police told me that the coal was contracted for by the North-West Government to be delivered into their bins, and that the Indian Department and Mounted Police took their coal from the cars. The coal was purchased by contract, and as they considered the price too high they endeavoured to get it from Winnipeg direct, but they were told that they would have to purchase their coal through the agents.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Has the hon. gentleman got any information as to why the price of coal oil is so enormously high?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The coal oil is bought by contract, and they put it up in tin boxes enclosed in wood, so that I suppose that makes a difference.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). It would be better for the Government to buy it at Ottawa and send it up.

Mr. WATSON. I see that some coal is bought here at $15.49 a ton, and soft coal at $8.50. I suppose that is Galt coal. Has the hon. gentleman ever entered into a calculation as to whether it would be better to burn the Galt coal at $8.50 than the other coal at $15 per ton?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think one ton of anthracite will go about as far as two tons of soft coal. The stoves in the old buildings are base-burners, and hard coal has to be used. There is no doubt that the combinations keep up the price of anthracite coal.

Mr. WATSON. I have no doubt of that, and I have no doubt that the combination keeps up the price of the soft coal as well, because soft coal is sold at $8.50 a ton at Regina, and you can buy that same coal in Winnipeg for $7 a ton, although it is carried 365 miles further from the mines. Of course, that is simply because the freight has to be paid on the hard coal going west to Regina, and it meets with competition there. The hon. gentleman should remember that it is these combinations that keep up the price of coal, and he ought do all in his power to provide that combinations should not be formed. I state this as another argument why he should accept the motion I made the other night when he brings this Bill before the House again.

Management of well-boring machines.. $3,000

Mr. WATSON. Can any of these machines be got in Manitoba?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not think so.

Mr. WATSON. Why make a difference between Manitoba and the North-West?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Local Government can look after that in Manitoba.

Mr. WATSON. There are certain sections of Manitoba where the Dominion Government owns the land, and where it is necessary to get water. The Dominion Government ought to have the same interest in Manitoba as in the North-West, so far as work of that kind is concerned.

Mr. DEWDNEY. There is not the same difficulty in getting water in Manitoba as in the North-West. These machines have been sent to the North-West as an experiment, so that in a dry district it can be seen how far a farmer has to go for water. Southern Manitoba has no reason to complain, because we have spent a good deal of money in one well there.

Mr. WATSON. How are they succeeding with that well?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They have gone 1,800 feet, and they expect every day to get water, as soon as they bore through the layer where the experts agree in saying that the water is underneath.

Resolutions reported.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 11.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 7th September, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE EX-MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Before the Orders of the Day are entered upon, I want to make a short statement to the House as to the position of the late Minister of Public Works. I might remind the House of the time and of the occurrence when the resignation of the Minister of Public Works was announced to the House, and when the House was informed that another Minister had taken charge of the Department of Public Works in consequence of the resignation of our late colleague. I was somewhat surprised, two or three weeks afterwards, at a question being put across the House as to the position occupied by the late Minister, because it indicated that a misapprehension existed as to the position of the hon. member for Three Rivers, which was not anticipated at the time the resignation was announced. I made the statement then to the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier), that the resignation did not require to be accepted, because my view was entertained by the Minister himself and our colleagues, that he had renounced his office in placing his resignation in the hands of the person qualified to receive it, and that unless his resignation was declined, it took effect as a matter of course. But I judge from the fact of the question being put in that way, that the hon. gentleman who put it was under the impression, and that, perhaps, some other members of the House were under the impression, that while resigning his position as Minister of Public Works he continued to take part in the deliberations of the Council and to act otherwise as a member of the Government. It would have been obviously unfair to leave the House under the impression that the hon. member for Three Rivers, our late colleague, was sharing the responsibilities of advice at a time when he was not so sharing them, and I presumed that my answer to the question removed any ambiguity that remained on the subject. But a day or two ago the question was repeated in the Senate, and the hon. gentleman himself feels that it is due to himself that any ambiguity on the subject which may exist in the public mind, or in the minds of members of Parliament, should no longer exist; and he, therefore, addressed the Prime Minister in the following letter:—

"OTTAWA, 7th September, 1891.

"MY DEAR PRIME MINISTER,—I see that, at the last meeting of the Senate, a question was put to you by one of the Senators to know whether my resignation as Minister of Public Works has been accepted. This question, coming after a similar one in the House of Commons, makes me perceive that there is some misunderstanding about my position; and, in order to put an end to it, I wish, as intended by me, to ask you that my resignation may be accepted without further delay.

"I remain, my dear Prime Minister,

"Yours very truly,

"HECTOR L. LANGEVIN.

"Hon. J. J. C. ABBOTT,
"Prime Minister,
"Ottawa."

The Prime Minister has written as follows:—

"PRIVY COUNCIL OFFICE,
"OTTAWA, 7th September, 1891.

"DEAR SIR HECTOR LANGEVIN,—I have to acknowledge your letter of this morning, requesting that your resignation may be accepted without further delay, and to say that in accordance with your request I shall regard your resignation as final, and shall lay it before His Excellency immediately.

"I remain, dear Sir Hector,
"Yours very truly,
"J. J. C. ABBOTT."

Mr. LAURIER. The statement just made by the Minister of Justice shows that, after all, there was some reason for the anxiety that existed in the public mind as to the position occupied by the present member for Three Rivers. Some time ago the Minister stated, in answer to a question put by myself, that the resignation of the hon. gentleman did not need to be accepted. In point of law, perhaps it might be so, because no one can be compelled to serve unless he is willing to do so, and the moment the hon. gentleman tendered his resignation, if the Prime Minister did not decline to accept it, of course from that moment we had a right to understand that it was accepted. Now, however, the position has been cleared up, and we understand that from the time the hon. gentleman placed his resignation in the hands of the Prime Minister, he ceased to be an adviser of His Excellency.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 171) respecting the Rathbun Company.—(Mr. Kirkpatrick.)

IMMIGRATION INTO CANADA.

Mr. RINFRET (for Mr. AMYOT) asked, 1. What is the total number of immigrants who arrived in Canada, during the decade which ended at the taking of the census of 1891? 2. In the case of how many of these immigrants has the Government of Canada contributed towards the cost of transport? 3. How many of these immigrants have taken up their residence in Canada? 4. What is the total amount expended by Canada for immigration purposes; in direct subsidies to the steamship companies, to the railway companies, or to the immigrants themselves, or to agencies or otherwise during the said decade?

Mr. HAGGART. The returns of the census are not yet sufficiently advanced to enable us to give the information the hon. gentleman asks for. In the case of the other question, it involves a good deal of work in getting up the information, and perhaps the question had better stand as a notice of motion.

Mr. LANGELIER. Till next session.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not think the information will be ready during this session.

BAIE DES CHALEURS RAILWAY.

Mr. RINFRET (for Mr. AMYOT) asked, What is the total amount of the subsidies paid to the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, up to the present date?

Mr. FOSTER. $524,175.
Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

JUDGES IN THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

Mr. RINFRET (for Mr. DELISLE) asked, Whether the position of judge is conferred on members of the legal profession as a reward for political services, or as the crowning of their success in their professional career? How does it happen that, since 1878, no judge has been selected, in the Province of Quebec, from amongst the advocates belonging to the Liberal party? Are the Government not convinced that it would be better, for the public interest, that the administration of justice should be entrusted to men selected from both political parties?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The reasons which justify the appointment of a judge are not satisfactorily expressed by either of the propositions contained in the first question. The second question, I think, is not according to the rules of the House, inasmuch as it assumes a fact of which I have no knowledge whatever. As to the third question, the administration of justice is entrusted to men selected from both political parties.

GEORGE M. ELLIOTT, GAS INSPECTOR.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. ALLISON) asked, Is George M. Elliott Government gas inspector for the town of Napanee? When was he appointed? What amount has he been paid since his appointment to this date? Is he also collector of Customs for the same place, and what salary has he received as such collector a year? When was he appointed such collector, and how much has he been paid to date?

Mr. FOSTER. George M. Elliott was appointed gas inspector at Napanee, at a salary of $100 per year, on the 24th April, 1890. He was paid $131.99 up to 31st August. He was appointed collector of Customs at Napanee on the 1st of February, 1884. His present salary is $900 a year. Total amount paid him up to 1st of September, $6,825.

JOHN CONNELL.

Mr. RINFRET (for Mr. BEAUSOLEIL) asked, Is there a person named John Connell employed by the Sorel Harbour Board? If so, what is the date of his appointment? What pay does he receive, and what duties is he supposed to perform? Is the Government informed as to the manner in which the said Connell discharges his duties?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. 1. There is a person named John Connell employed at the ship channel works at Sorel, 2. 1st January, 1889. 3. $60 per month as checking clerk, and to attend to French and English correspondence in the superintendent's office at Sorel. 4. Connell has always discharged his duties to the entire satisfaction of Mr. Howden, the superintendent.

THOMAS JOCKES AND JOHN B. DELORIMIER.

Mr. RINFRET (for Mr. BEAUSOLEIL) asked, Have Messrs. Thomas Jockes and John B. Delorimier, the Caughnawaga stone contractors, paid the arrears of royalty owing by them to the Government, in 1890, amounting to $3,909.01? If so, have they paid in full, or only in part? Were they prosecuted? Did the Government accept a sum less than the debt, and if so, what sum? At what date was the settlement made? Through whose intervention was the compromise effected? Are Messrs. Jockes and Delorimier still the Caughnawaga stone contractors? If so, what are the terms of their contract? Are they still indebted to the Government, and if so, to what amount?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Department of Indian Affairs claimed a balance to be due by Messrs. Jockes and Delorimier of $3,918.48, exclusive of interest. Upon consideration of all the facts the solicitors of the Government advised that $3,007 should be accepted in settlement of this claim, and that Messrs. Jockes and Delorimier should pay all costs of prosecution. Part of the above sum has been paid. There is a balance of $1,225 still outstanding. The date on which the settlement was made on the above basis was May 13, 1891. The solicitors of the Government advised such settlement. Messrs. Jockes and Delorimier are still the Caughnawaga stone contractors. The terms of their contracts are $1.50 per toise for large stone, and $1 per toise for rubble. Besides the amount shown above to be still due on their old account, Messrs. Jockes and Delorimier owe $23.28 for stone quarried in July last.

SOREL HARBOUR WORKS.

Mr. RINFRET (for Mr. BEAUSOLEIL) asked, What was the number of men employed on the 1st June last, at the Sorel Harbour works? What was the number so employed on the 1st September instant? How many officials were employed at the office of the Sorel Harbour Board on the 1st June last, and on the 1st September instant?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The number of men employed on 1st June last at the Sorel Harbour works was 50, as follows: Shipyard, 20; machine, boiler and blacksmith shops, 22; office and stores, 8. The number employed on 1st September last was 55, as follows: Shipyard, 21; machine, boiler and blacksmith shops, 27; office and stores, 7. Four officials were employed at the office of the ship channel works on 1st June last and on 1st September, namely, superintendent, storekeeper, engineer, clerk. In addition to the officials and men employed at the Sorel works proper, there were employed on 1st June last on dredges, stonelifters, tugs, and barges, 79 men, and on 1st September instant, 57 men.

POST OFFICE SERVICE.

Mr. RINFRET (for Mr. BEAUSOLEIL) asked, What are the names and places of residence of the parties holding contracts for carrying the mail between Montreal and Mile End, Côteau St. Louis, Côte Visitation and Villeneuve? For what period were the said contracts made? What are the prices paid? Were tenders asked for? If so, were the contracts awarded to the lowest tenderers? If not, why not?

Mr. HAGGART. 1. The offices mentioned are served with mails by the routes between Montreal and Côte St. Louis, and Montreal and St. Léonard de Port Maurice. The contractors are, for the former service, Napoléon Lachance, of Montreal; for the latter, Joseph Gervais, of St. Léonard de Port Maurice. 2. In each case three years and eleven months. For the former service $420 per annum. For the latter service $306 per annum. 4. Yes, tenders were asked. 5. The contracts were in each case awarded to the lowest bidders.

EXCISE COLLECTOR AT STRATFORD.

Mr. TRUAX asked, Is A. Caven Excise collector at Stratford? What is his salary? Did he receive any allowance for seizures during the years 1886-87-88-89-90 and 1891? If so, what amount was paid to him on this account and for what services during those years respectively? Is it his duty to take active steps to prosecute those engaged in illicit distilling, on receiving representations from responsible parties?

Mr. COSTIGAN. 1. A. Caven is Excise collector at Stratford. 2. His salary is $1,600. 3. He was paid no allowance for making seizures during the years 1886-87-88-89-90 and 1891. 4. He was paid an additional $100 for one or two of the years named for extra work. 5. It is his duty to take steps to prosecute those engaged in illicit distilling on receiving information from responsible persons, and he has discharged his duty in this respect most energetically and successfully within his division.

MR. J. G. HEARN.

Mr. MOUSSEAU (Translation), asked, 1st. Is Mr. J. G. Hearn an employé of the Militia Department, attached to the staff of the Cartridge Factory in Quebec? 2nd. How long has he been so employed, and what salary is he in receipt of? 3rd. Is the department aware of the fact that he absented himself without permission for a period of one year or thereabouts, between the dates of 15th August, 1889, and 15th September, 1890? 4th. When and by whom was he reinstated? 5th. Was not the said John G. Hearn paid in full the amount of his salary for the year in question? If not paid to himself personally, to whom was the amount paid?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. (Translation.) In answer to the hon. member, I have the honour to state: That Mr. John Hearn is employed as Government assistant superintendent at the Cartridge Factory in Quebec. He has been so employed since 31st March, 1885. His salary was at first $700, but was, by an Order in Council of the 29th of January, 1887, raised to the sum of $1,200. The department is aware of the fact that Mr. Hearn absented himself without permission for a period of one year or thereabouts, from 15th August, 1889, but during that period Mr. Hearn received no part of his salary. Mr. Hearn was reinstated by authority of the Minister of Militia on 20th August, 1890. Mr. John Hearn was neither in full nor partly paid during the time of his absence. No amount was paid to him personally or to anyone else.

INSTRUCTIONS TO REVISING OFFICERS.

Mr. EDGAR. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the Minister of Justice whether the Government took occasion to notify the revising officers throughout the country of the extension in the time for putting in declarations? I ask that because I am informed that in the County of Muskoka the revision officer closed the preliminary lists and had them printed on the 1st August, and has gone on to hold his final courts. I suppose that the revising officers are understood to know what the law is, but I should think that in a case like this when an Act is passed just before it comes into force in the middle of a session the Government should have taken every possible step to inform the revising officers. I cannot believe that Mr. Mahaffey, the revising officer, would have done this had he been aware.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The revising officers have always been communicated with by the Department of the Secretary of State. The Minister told me that they were all notified by telegraph on the day that the Bill was assented to, and that was before the 15th August.

SUPREME COURT AMENDMENT ACT.

House proceeded to consider amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 138) to amend Chapter 135 of the Revised Statutes, respecting the Supreme and Exchequer Courts.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The House will remember that one clause of the Bill fixed the term of the Supreme Court to commence on the first Tuesday of October, instead of the fourth Tuesday. As the session of Parliament is continued so late, and as there is not an opportunity to get the Bill assented to at an earlier time, on the representations of the bar of Ontario this change is made applicable, not to the present year, but only to future years. The next amendment is one of more substantial importance. It is an amendment to that portion of the Supreme Court Act which provides for appellate jurisdiction being exercised with regard to matters in the Province of Quebec. The section reads:

"Where the matter in controversy involves any such question, or relates to any such fee of office, duty, rent, revenue or sum of money payable to Her Majesty, or to any such title to lands or tenements, annual rents or such like matters or things where the rights in future might be bound, or amounts to or exceeds the sum or value of two thousand dollars, there shall be an appeal from judgments rendered in the said province, although such action, suit, cause, matter or judicial proceeding may not have been originally instituted in the Superior Court:

"Provided that such appeals shall lie only from the Court of Queen's Bench."

It is proposed by the Senate to add:

"Or from the Superior Court in review, in cases where and so long as no appeal lies from the judgment of that court, when it confirms the judgment rendered in the court appealed from. Whenever the right to appeal is dependent upon the amount in dispute, such amount shall be understood to be that demanded, and not that recovered, if they are different."

Mr. LAURIER. This is a very serious amendment, it is one which is at total variance with the law of the Province of Quebec, and one which I hope will not commend itself to the Minister of Justice. The law of the Province of Quebec is this: Cases are instituted at first in the Superior Court, and then after the trial judgment has been rendered by the Superior Court, which is presided over by one judge and is a judgment on the law and facts as well, the case can be inscribed in review before three judges. That is simply a re-hearing of the case upon the evidence as it appears in the record. If the judgment is confirmed, there is no appeal to the Court of Queen's Bench, which is the court of final resort in the province; but if the judgment is reversed, then there is an appeal, from the Court of Review to the Court of Appeals. That is to say, that if there is such variance of opinion between the judge who hears the case in the first instance, and the three judges who hear the case in the second instance, then the law allows an appeal to the final tribunal, the Court of Queen's Bench in Appeal. But if the judgment of the first instance is confirmed by the Court of Review, then, in such case, the unanimous judgment of four judges being had upon the question, the law of the province is, that there can be no further appeal, and that the judgment of the Court of Review is to be conclusive. After the judgment has been rendered in the Superior Court, it is optional to the party who is dissatisfied with the judgment, either to appeal it to the Court of Review or to go to the Court of Appeal direct. If he chooses to go to the Court of Review, and that court confirms the judgment of the court below, according to the law of the province, the preponderance of judicial opinion is against him, and he is denied another appeal to the Court of Queen's Bench. The hon. gentleman will see that the provision now introduced is tantamount to superseding altogether the law of the province, and ignoring the jurisdiction of the Court of Queen's Bench, by giving a jurisdiction to the Supreme Court which is denied to the Court of Queen's Bench. It seems to me that this is a serious step, which ought not to be taken at this stage of the session, at all events without the question being debated more than it has been debated already. I have received from one or two members of the Montreal bar some complaint that the amendment which was introduced a few weeks ago by the hon. gentleman, had taken the bar by surprise; but I believe that on the whole it is in line with the general law of the province, which affirms that any matter of litigation, though for an insignificant amount, may, if it involves future rights, be a matter of appeal to the Court of Queen's Bench; and by parity of reasoning it may be right and proper to give the supreme jurisdiction to the Supreme Court. But in this matter I hope he will agree with me that to ignore altogether the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal, and to give an appeal to the Supreme Court which is denied to the Court of Queen's Bench, is not sound doctrine. Therefore, I hope the hon. gentleman will not confirm that provision. If it should be my misfortune to fail in impressing him with my views upon the subject, I think I should have to test the sense of the House upon it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think what the hon. gentleman says requires to be very carefully considered before I press the amendments, and with your permission I will move that the further consideration of these amendments be postponed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Before the motion is carried, I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Justice and your attention, Sir, to the very great inconvenience under which the members of this House labour when these amendments come from the Senate to any Bill that has passed through this end of the Legislature. An important Bill like this, affecting the constitution of the Supreme Court, is generally very carefully considered by this House; then the Bill leaves this House and goes to the Senate, where amendments of a more or less important character are made ; and when it returns here, there is not a member of this House who knows what those amendments are, or is capable of grasping their full effect. Some plan should be devised for reprinting the amended clauses with the amendments put in italics, so that the members of this House may have some idea of what we are doing. Of course the hon. Minister of Justice has an idea ; but I doubt if any other member of the House understands the import and purport of these amendments. Some improvement has been made by publishing the amendments in the Votes and Proceedings, but in that form they are quite unintelligible. I have tried to compare them with the Bill, and I have been unable to make them out. The only copy of the Bill which I have on fyle, is the copy as it was originally introduced. True, I may get the Bill from the Senate, but I have not got it. I am speaking of matters as they are, not as they should be. I would suggest that some such mode be adopted, of meeting these objections, which are of a serious character.

Motion agreed to, and further consideration of amendments postponed.

NORTH SHORE RAILWAY BONDS--CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Bill (No. 170) respecting the North Shore section of the Canadian Pacific Railway was read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. LAURIER. I complained the other day that this measure was of a very grave character, leaving everything to the decision of the Governor in Council. It seems to me that before the next stage an amendment should be prepared setting a limit of time and conditions which the Government ought to exact as to what shall guide them in their relations with the company in carrying out this Bill.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Expenses in connection with the distribution of parliamentary documents.....$600

Mr. McMULLEN. I think some steps should be taken in the direction of cutting down the expense of printing and distributing the enormous amount of blue-books, the greater portion of which is virtually wasted. I have seen these books corded away in different offices and never used. Some members may make some little use of the large amount of parliamentary documents they get ; but judging by the amount I have received, and I presume other members received similar amounts, if a man had nothing else to do but study these different documents, that would occupy his time the whole year round. No doubt a good many of the papers distributed are valuable and necessary, but a great many are really worthless, and the cost of printing them is something enormous. I fancy these documents are distributed to the different papers, mechanics' institutes, &c., throughout the Dominion, and wherever they serve a good purpose they should be sent, but there is a large anount of trash published and distributed which only finds its way to the waste paper basket. I was in one member's office, and I believe I saw there a cord of this material piled away, not even the strings having been touched. It seems to me that either the Government or the Printing Committee ought to carefully examine into the whole business and suggest some means of reducing this enormous expense.

Mr. TROW. I rather disagree with the hon. gentleman. I know that I have not sufficient for my own constituents, and I only wish the department would publish more, especially if they would only publish a better collection of pamphlets. The documents the hon. gentleman referred to in my office are books that came during recess, and which I had not time to send to my constituents. Any books I get here I send direct, but those I get during recess it is a little inconvenient for me to get them ready and addressed to my constituents. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman says he has a ton of these documents in his office. It seems to me either that his constituents do not read, or that he is very negligent in his duties in regard to his constituents.

Mr. McMULLEN. I did not refer to pamphlets which are sent out for circulation, but to parliamentary papers which are brought down for the use of members themselves. I generally circulate all the papers I receive. I do not care of what particular political complexion they are, but many of the other documents which are printed are worthless.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid that my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) would find it very difficult to tell what documents would be useful and what would not be useful. Some parliamentary reports would be useful to one set of members to whom the others would not be of any use. For instance, I suppose my hon. friend does not care much about reports affecting the Department of Marine and Fisheries, but he is interested in the report of the Department of Agriculture and in the Trade and Navigation Returns.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). And the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, as my hon. friend suggests, and the Auditor General's Report. Just in the same way, in the Maritime Provinces, they would be interested in the report of the Marine and Fisheries Department. In regard to these returns to which the hon. gentleman has referred, the Printing Committee are charged with the duty of determining which of the returns brought down shall be printed and which shall not, and I have no doubt, from the record for economy which characterizes the leading members of that Committee, that they determine to print only such returns as will be interesting to the general public and to the members themselves. Although there is a great deal of truth in what the hon. gentleman has said in regard to some of these reports lying around our offices, still I think he will agree with me that in many cases where information is necessary in regard to political matters, some of these reports which may be disregarded for years will be found very useful on some occasions. I remember during the general elections of 1887, in my own case, where an allegation was made charging the political party with which I was then connected.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course my hon. friends will understand that I do not belong to any political party now. At that time I found it necessary to go back some years in order to find how the expenditure of the then Government compared with that of their predecessors, and I think my hon. friend will find it useful to have these reports kept in his library.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think it would be false economy to limit this expenditure on reports. The only question is whether it is well to publish these returns in this way and so to allow every member to obtain these expensive returns, in regard to which I think the hon. member for North Wellington puts the Government and the country to as much expense as any one. If the hon. gentleman would do what members on this side of the House do, and would hunt up the information for himself from the printed reports, then the information could be more cheaply obtained than it is by the production of these returns which he so often calls for.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am only referring to what is printed. All these matters go before the Printing Committee, and they are not printed unless that Committee thinks them of sufficient importance to print them. It is a matter of choice with the Printing Committee whether these returns should be printed or not, and if they are printed it is because the Committee considers them sufficiently important, and the member who moves for them is not responsible. The member may want the return for his own personal convenience and information, but the printing is in the hands of the Committee, and if the hon. gentleman thinks that when returns are ordered to be printed, the member who moves for them is responsible, the hon. gentleman is mistaken and he should apply himself to study and ascertain the rules of Parliament before he makes such a statement.

Mr. BAIN. I have discussed this question before. I have always felt that we were expending large sums of money in this way. Perhaps formerly we were more derelict in that matter than we are now, especially as to the documents which were printed for circulation. We have improved a little, but sometimes I look aghast at the expenditure we have made for printing reports. I confess that there is this difficulty to be considered. It is desirable to have the utmost publicity given in regard to every department of the public service, and if we drop printing these reports, we will inevitably tend to facilitate a condition of affairs in these departments which we will all regret. What would my hon. friend do without the Public Accounts Committee, or what would they do without him? I, therefore, say that my hon. friend deserves credit for the way in which he has brought to our attention many items in the Public Accounts, many of which we never would have had brought to our attention but for him, and, considering the expenditure of the various departments, I do not know but that on the whole we had better go on and submit to the large bills for printing and make the best we can in regard to it.

Mr. SPEAKER.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think there is a loss to the country in the distribution of immigration pamphlets throughout Ontario. I notice that pamphlets intended for immigrants from the old country are distributed throughout Ontario. That is one branch of expenditure that we might stop. There is another matter which I think it might be useful to consider. We ought to have more copies of the Auditor General's Report, and the Public Accounts Report, and the Trade and Navigation Returns. We might be able to increase the circulation of these reports which are useful to all classes of the people, and, if you put the Auditor General's Report in the hands of the people, they will be able to discuss these matters properly.

Classification of Old Records..... $1,000

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that last year $9,783 was spent in the collection of Orders in Council. How was that necessary?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It has no connection with this. It was the printing and binding of the volume containing the consolidated accounts relating to all the departments, which was issued as a completion of the series of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a decrease in this vote, because the expenditure has been less than the vote taken; so we reduce it by $5,000.

Commutation in lieu of remission of duties on articles Imported for the use of the army and navy..... $2,000

Mr. McMULLEN. What kind of articles are these? In the investigation that took place some time ago in regard to clothing, I think it was then understood that there was no rebate or commutation of duties charged upon clothing.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. This is for the Imperial service, the navy and the Imperial army stationed at Halifax and elsewhere.

For the expenses of the Government in the District of Keewatin..... $2,000

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that we expended last year a very large amount of money. It appears to me that with a careful investigation of the expenditure in connection with this item, a great reduction could be made.

Mr. FOSTER. The item is reduced by $2,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. How much did the Lieutenant Governor receive last year for all services in connection with this?

Mr. FOSTER. $1,697. My hon. friend will find in the Auditor General's Report that this expenditure was for the private secretary, for a clerk and stenographer for part of the time; and the expenses for the usual trips when they visited the district of Keewatin along the line of the lakes.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who is supposed to discharge the duty of Lieutenant Governor there?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba. By special Act, Keewatin is attached to his jurisdiction.

Mr. HYMAN. Are all the payments made to the Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. HYMAN. Are his receipts accepted as vouchers?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The vouchers are sent down in the same way as other accounts from the West, they are all audited by the Auditor General, and the accounts are receipted by the parties who receive the money.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is it in connection with this service that the boat Keewatin was built?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; for the preventive service on Lake Manitoba. She is still in the service of the Government, and has just come back from a trip. She is owned by the Government.

Mr. HYMAN. What amount was paid for her?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think $500 or $600.

Mr. WATSON. That information is surely wrong; that boat was never worth $500 or $600.

Mr. DEWDNEY. It will be in the Auditor General's Report for the last year. I do not recollect at the moment what it was.

Mr. WATSON. I believe Governor Schultz paid $250 for building the boat.

Mr. FOSTER. We did not buy her for Governor Schultz; we simply paid the bill which she cost.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I am not sure how many trips she has made from Selkirk up.

Mr. WATSON. I believe she has made three trips and has drowned three men by upsetting.

Maintenance of Keewatin and other lunatics—chargeable to Keewatin.. $4,000

Mr. WATSON. Where are these lunatics confined?

Mr. DEWDNEY. In the Manitoba penitentiary at the present time. There may be some few in the asylum, but I think they have all been removed.

Mr. WATSON. Are they all Indians?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not think there are any Indians at all. They come, not only from Keewatin, but also from the disputed territory, and there was an interview between the Minister of Justice and Mr. Mowat with reference to paying the cost of the lunatics from the disputed territory. Mr. Mowat explained the position, and said that they had to take charge of lunatics from other countries, and would not accept any obligation with regard to those in the penitentiary at Manitoba. The Government came to the conclusion that Mr. Mowat was correct; they are brought there, and we have to look after them.

Mr. WATSON. How is this large increase of $3,000?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The amount has increased both in Keewatin and also in the North-West Territories. For the 10 months from the 30th of April, the cost of that asylum was $2,784. We want the whole of that money.

Mr. WATSON. How many lunatics from Keewatin have been confined during the last year?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The number varies every month. Some come in and others go out.

Mr. WATSON. According to the Auditor General's Report last year, the maintenance of the insane in Manitoba penitentiary cost $3,915. Is that the amount that was paid last year?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I presume it appears in the Auditor General's Report. From November, 1888, to 30th June, 1889, there were 40 patients; from 1st July, 1889, to 30th June, 1890, there were 42; and from the last date up to the 31st of March, 1891, there were 46 patients. The cost is $1.02 per day per patient.

Canada Temperance Act..... $2,500

Mr. McMULLEN. Are there some items not settled yet?

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose some of the counties now having the Scott Act petitioned for its repeal, this amount is required to have a vote taken. If any county petitions to have the Act brought into force there, an expenditure may be required.

Mr. WATSON. In how many counties is the Scott Act in force?

Mr. FOSTER. The Scott Act is not in force in any counties outside of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. I cannot tell the number of counties, but they form the larger proportion of those provinces.

Compensation to Members of the North-West Mounted Police..... $2,000

Mr. WATSON. What is the nature of the injuries for which compensation is given by the Government?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Ordinary accidents in the discharge of duties. $2,000 has been voted for many years, but not more than $1,000 has been expended. Last year $649 were expended. It is given as compensation after the man has left the force.

Hector Fabre, salary and contingencies of Office..... $3,500

Mr. TROW. Is this the agent who in 1889 sent out one emigrant for his salary? How many emigrants did he send out last year?

Mr. McMULLEN. Where shall we find a report from Mr. Fabre?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know whether it is included in the report of the Minister of Agriculture or not. I have seen his report printed, not this year's report but that of previous years, in pamphlet form for the use of members; and I supposed that, probably, it was included in the Agricultural report.

Mr. LAURIER. Was there anything to report last year?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, and it is a very interesting report. The duties of the representative of Canada at Paris, as most hon. members will admit, are not limited to sending out emigrants. We all know that the French people, as a people, are not fond of leaving their beautiful country to go to other countries. However, the services rendered by Mr. Fabre in Paris, all those Canadians who frequent the great capital of the French republic and take an interest in matters connected with the commercial relations between France and Canada, will admit that we have a most energetic representative in the person of Mr. Fabre. So far as his reports are concerned, they have been most interesting reading to me. Some hon. members, I am afraid, overlook these reports because they are published in French; but I can tell hon. gentlemen that all those Canadians who visit France give testimony to the energy, skill and experience which Mr. Fabre has acquired among the public men of France.

Mr. TROW. What are his duties? Are they confined to entertaining Canadian Ministers when they take a trip to Paris, or receive Canadians when they happen to go there?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The Government owe this Committee full explanations with regard to this expenditure which has been voted year after year. It costs about $4,000 to keep this man in Paris. Ever since I have been in this House I believe this man has occupied that position, and I have noticed that every year the Opposition have asked for information with respect to Mr. Fabre's duties, and what he did for this money, and never yet have they obtained the slightest information, except on one occasion the Minister stated that one emigrant had been sent out by this agent in Paris. It is high time the Government should either tell this Committee the purpose for which this money is spent, and show that it is wisely spent, or drop the item. I do not see that the explanation of the Minister of Militia has any bearing on the question. He says that when Canadians go over there this gentleman, who is no doubt very polite and entertaining in his manner, delights them with his attentions. Can this country afford to keep a man in Paris to show about Canadian tourists who visit the French Capital? It may be very well for the Minister of Militia, or the Secretary of State, and other members of the Government to have some man like Mr. Fabre who can tell them how to see the sights of that beautiful city. That may be very well, but if the Ministers of the Crown desire to have a man to introduce them to Parisian society, they should pay the man out of their own pockets and not tax the people $3,500 to $4,000 for the purpose. I do not know that Mr. Fabre has ever done any good in his position. The Government have failed time and again to explain why this expenditure has been incurred, and if they cannot give some satisfactory explanation as to the value received by this country for this expenditure, they should drop this item and recall this agent from Paris. The Minister of Militia tells us that Mr. Fabre performs certain duties. Is he in Paris, as Sir Charles Tupper is in London, as High Commissioner? He has, at all events, the salary of a High Commissioner. The Minister in charge should be required to give some report of the duties required of him and to show the Committee what value he renders to the country year after year. I do not know whose favourite pet he is; he must be the pet of some member of the Government. I say without hesitation that he has been kept in Paris eight or ten years at the expense of the people without rendering to this country one dollar's worth of service. It is high time a stand was taken on this item, and if the Government cannot explain the way in which this money is expended, the Opposition should insist that this item, which is of no value, should be dropped from the Estimates.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have carefully watched the reports which Mr. Fabre has sent during several years. I well remember reading these reports, and with what confidence this French agent pointed out, and in what hopeful utterance he declared, that we were on the brink of receiving a large flow of emigration from that country of French origin. As my hon. friend from Perth (Mr. Trow) pointed out, Mr. Fabre reported in the year 1889 that he had sent one immigrant to this country. That was the first instalment of the grand flow of immigration that he expected would come from France to Canada. That one person was a woman, I believe, and we are glad to have a woman immigrant, when we cannot get men to come here. I think it is time that this item should be dropped. This gentleman gets $2,500 a year salary, and $1,000 a year for incidental expenses without any detailed statement as to what these expenses are for. I do not think it is right that this House should be asked to vote $3,500 until the Minister is prepared to lay before the Committee a report of the gentleman's duties for last year. I can find nothing about the work of Mr. Fabre, in either the report of the Minister of Agriculture, or that of the High Commissioner in London, who is supposed to supervise the duties of our agents in Europe. I dare say Mr. Fabre dances around and pays a great deal of attention to the High Commissioner and members of the Government when they go to Paris. As my hon. friend said, he is able to show them the different sights and the different ways in which they can spend a pleasant evening and that kind of thing, but it is quite an item for the people of this country to be called upon to pay $3,500 a year for the purpose of having Mr. Fabre to dance around and hobnob with every dandy we send over to that country, that may happen to be a Minister of the Crown or a High Commissioner. I may say that our High Commissioner in England gives us a very poor return for the enormous amount he costs us. Any person who carefully scans his report will see that the services rendered to this country are a miserable pittance compared with the expenses to maintain that office. The payment to Mr. Fabre appears to be as bad if not worse. We are asked to swallow this item and to vote $1,000 in a lump sum without having details as to what it is for. I respectfully suggest that we should not be asked to vote this item, and that it is not courteous to the House to ask them to vote it, until we are given some idea of the duties which Mr. Fabre performed in 1889.

Mr. TROW. The defence offered by the Minister of Militia was a very lame one indeed. He seemed to state that Mr. Fabre was not there for the purpose of inducing emigrants to come from France, because he said as a rule the French people do not emigrate. That was a very lame excuse for the expenditure of between $3,000 and $4,000 per annum. If Mr. Fabre is a special favourite of the Government and they want to give him a position, why not remove him over to some of the Eastern States or send him to Massachusetts or New York, where you will find thousands of French Canadians who have left Quebec, and who are now residing in the States, and whom you might induce to return here. Mr. Fabre might be of some use there, but he certainly is of no use in France.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is no doubt at all that the office this gentleman fills is a sinecure, and the payment and the voting of this money is indefensible. Members on both sides of the House know that, and if there was any doubt about it before, it is painfully evident now from the lame excuse offered by the Minister of Militia. Years ago the propriety of voting this money was severely challenged by gentlemen on this side of the House, and explanations were attempted to be given then that Mr. Fabre was fulfilling the duties of emigration agent, in some way or other, but it was then pointed out that he had only sent one man over here.

An hon. MEMBER One woman.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) The answer was given that he was engaged in immigration work, and that the result would appear some years afterwards. We have been going on voting this money year after year, but the results are nil, and the Government refuses to tell the House what the duties of the agent are. I say that the representatives of the people are not justified in voting $3,500 a year for a gentleman whose duties they knew nothing about. There are hundreds of hard-worked officials in the outlying parts of the country who have not got salaries enough to maintain their families properly, and when applications are made from time to time for a small increase for meritorious officers we are told that the finances of the country will not permit of it and that we must go along on an economical line. If this economical rule is to prevail, and I shall do all I can to cause it to prevail, I shall protest against $3,500 being paid out year after year for an office which gentlemen on both sides of the House known is of no value to the country and which is simply a sinecure.

Mr. FRASER. I think perhaps that hon. gentlemen are expecting too much from this office. They should give it time.

An hon. MEMBER. It has been given ten years.

Mr. FRASER. What is ten years? The explanation of the Minister of Militia reminds me somewhat of the letters which come from the missionaries in the South Seas and other such countries. They are not doing very much, but they are expecting great things. I understand from the Minister of Militia that the French population are loth to leave France, but it has been pointed out that Mr. Fabre induced one of them to come over here, and in a few years he may induce some more. He is doing a kind of missionary work in Paris, and with his help, and the assistance of some of the brilliant members of this Government who go over to Paris occasionally, I have no doubt that some of the people of France will be induced after awhile to immigrate to this country. We should pass this vote without a word. Why should we not have an official in Paris when we learn that he is of such great service to gentlemen who go there on a visit of pleasure? We have a man in London, and why not have one in Paris to show the people around that beautiful city. I can understand how glad this country should be, for example, when the Minister of Militia or any other gentleman like him should go over to Paris and see this agent of ours driving along the Tuilleries, and visiting the sights of Paris, and mutually admiring each other, making introductions: This is our agent, and this is our Minister from Canada. The marvel to me is that there has not been an exodus from France to this country, when we have a man like that over there to show around some of our brilliant gentlemen who go from this country to Paris. There surely must be some mistake in the census figures brought down when we have not got more people from France into this country.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It is not the filling up of this country; it is the filling up of the men who go to visit there.

Mr. FRASER. Be that as it may, I think that hon. gentlemen on this side of the House should not seriously offer opposition to this vote. Life does not altogether consist of dry facts. What does it matter to the Government whether we get a return or not for this money, when we have an agent in Paris who is able to show these hon. gentlemen around the city when they pay him a visit over there? Our friends opposite will return with large ideas about the world; their gigantic intellects will be educated by the experience which they gain in that beautiful city; and will anyone say that $3,000 or $4,000 a year is too much to pay to a man who assists them in gaining that experience? I have no doubt that hon. gentlemen opposite can learn a great deal in Paris, and that when they return here they will bring back to this Parliament of Canada all those graces and charms which make the average life in Paris all that it is and all that it is reputed to be. If we can introduce that Parisian spirit here I have no doubt that it would be of immense benefit to this Parliament.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What spirit?

Mr. FRASER. Numbers of spirits, and bring them here. I am sure that this investment of $3,000 or $4,000 is well made, and nothing should be said against it. It is true, the return of immigrants is not as large as we might wish it to be; but we were assured a few evenings ago that for the last ten or twelve years we have been laying the foundation, and are now ready to make a start. We are laying the foundation in Paris, and I am sure that we should be derelict in our duty if we failed to have an agent there to sound our praises, and to help our people, when they go there, to understand the inner life of that city, so that when they return to this country they will bring back something of that life which makes Paris so brilliant and attractive. I object to hon. gentlemen raising any objection to this vote. I might go on for hours to show that it is one against which nothing should be said, in view of the good results from it which the hon. Minister of Militia has demonstrated.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I should be very sorry to detract from the great merit of the speech which the hon. gentleman has delivered. He has spoken as usual in a most remarkable and eloquent manner; but he has spoken on a text very different from the one which I humbly submitted to the House when I made a few remarks with regard to the agent of Canada in Paris. I stated that business men going to Paris on commercial matters were very happy, indeed, to find a gentleman of the intelligence of Mr. Fabre, who was thoroughly au fait with the commercial enterprises connecting Canada with France, and that he was of use to those gentlemen in that particular business. What I stated I repeat. The hon. gentleman may know a great deal about the other portions of the commercial interests of Canada, but others have taken an interest in the development of commercial intercourse between France and Canada. I can tell the hon. gentleman that even at this particular moment parties representing wealth and great commercial interests are attempting to procure a new line of steamers to sail between Canada and France. Well, Sir, if it be admitted that that kind of commercial intercourse may exist between the two countries it does not require all the brilliant imagination of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat to find out that an agent of Canada in a country so intimately connected with Canada as France is may be of advantage to our commercial community. This is all I intended to say, and I am perfectly certain that the hon. gentlemen will recollect that, if we have made a mistake at all, it has been in selecting as our agent in France one of the friends of his own party, who had been appointed by the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, the leader of the late Government, as one of the members of the Senate.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I repent.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman may repent, but I think he had no reason to repent of what he did, and we have been following in the wake of the leader of the Government in sending Mr. Fabre to France.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think the explanation of this expenditure thus far given is an absurd explanation for any Minister of the Crown to give. He gives us no details; he tells us nothing whatever that this man has done. In his first speech he did not refer, if I remember rightly, to any commercial men at all, but spoke of visitors who went to Paris to see the sights, whom he was instrumental in showing around. Now he says that this man is influential in commercial matters. I would like him to tell us any single way in which he has advanced the commercial interests of this country during the many years that he has been there receiving $3,000 or $4,000 a year. If the Minister of Militia has stated what is the fact, then he must be in possession of some information which will back up his assertion. We want some better proof than the mere assertion of the Minister of Militia that this man is of some benefit to the commercial men who go to Paris to do business. But I contend that this Government has nothing to do with attending to the interests of the commercial men who go to Paris to do business. The commercial men of this country are capable of attending to their own business, without our paying a man $4,000 a year to introduce them to Parisian society. There is no defence for this vote. The hon. Minister does not say that Mr. Fabre has tried to secure any commercial treaties with European countries. We have been told year after year that Sir Charles Tupper has gone to Spain, I do not know how many times, to secure a commercial treaty with that country; but Mr. Fabre has always failed to do anything for the commercial interests of this country. If we are going to establish agents all over the world to influence business in favour of our commercial men, why confine ourselves to Paris? We ought to have agents in other large cities of Europe, South America and other countries. But I understand from a debate that took place here some time ago that the British Consuls help our commercial men when they visit foreign countries. Now, I contend that we have been paying out this money long enough. This country cannot afford to squander money. The revelations which have taken place this session, showing that hundreds of thousands of dollars of the people's money have been illegitimately squandered, shows that we must commence cutting off useless expenditures even in small matters, in order that the gross total of the public expenditure of this country may be reduced. The people of this country demand intelligent economy in the administration of our affairs, and we may as well commence at an item like this, which we know cannot be defended, which has not been defended for years past in this House, and which no member of the Government attempts to defend to-day. I say there is no defence for it. If the Government wish to make a pet of Mr. Fabre they should put their hands in their own pockets and pay for his keep, if they want to have him in Paris to show them around when they visit that city. The Minister of Militia tries to draw a red herring across the track by saying that Mr. Fabre was advanced by the Liberal Administration. What was the response made by the venerable gentleman who administered the affairs of this country so well when he was its Premier? He said he regretted it, if he did advance that man; but he did not advance him to the position he now occupies. Year after year no defence has been offered or can be offered of this expenditure, and this Committee ought to insist that the Government shall show that this expenditure is justifiable, or else we should sit here until we compel them to strike it from the Estimates. There is no justification for it, and the people of this country must have some justification for the expenditure of public money, even if it is only $3,500 or $4,000 a year.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Fabre is not only personally familiar to many of us amongst the older members, but he forms a very familiar item in the Public Accounts. Year after year we are voting money for him; year after year we are asking what he has done; year after year we get nothing but the same vague general statement which has been made to-day. Now, Sir, I am sure there is nobody in this House who would grudge this amount or even more to Mr. Fabre if any results appeared in the shape of increased intercourse with France, increased immigration from that country, or increased commercial dealings with it. We are all anxious to do as much business with France as possible. We should all be glad to see thousands of French emigrating to this country and occupying our land, but we do begrudge an amount of $4,000 a year, expended in keeping up an ornamental man in an ornamental position. The fact that he has secured no immigration from France has been often pointed out. It has been asserted to-day that he has been of use to commercial men; but, as my hon. friend from North Brant has said very truly, commercial men do not need any introduction from him. If they have anything to sell they know where to go to dispose of their goods, and Mr. Fabre's introduction will not be of the slightest use to them in that respect; and if they want to buy they can do so just as well without his assistance. Even if it were possible for him to help commercial men, it has not been shown in what respect he has been of any assistance to them, and we must come to the conclusion that he is purely ornamental. Mr. Fabre no doubt is a clever literary man, and a very pleasant, genial gentleman, who produces a good impression in Parisian society and has a very good time, and the country pays him very handsomely for it. In the past ten years we have paid him something like $40,000. The Minister of Militia says that as he was appointed to the Senate by the leader of a former Government he must be well fitted to represent us in France. I do not think it would be safe to lay down the general principle that every man who has been made a senator, even by hon. gentlemen opposite, is qualified to represent us at a foreign court and to draw streams of immigration and commerce from France to Canada. But Mr. Fabre was not appointed agent at Paris for the same reasons for which he was appointed senator. If he had not made a diametrical change in his views and in the line taken by his newspaper at Quebec, if he had not deserted those who put him in the Senate, he would never have been given the office he now holds. He owes that office simply to his desertion of his party. It is not because he uses influence in Paris to help Canada, but because he still uses influence in Quebec to help the Conservative party, that he is retained in office. When Mr. Fabre was appointed a senator he had been a consistent Liberal, but on obtaining his present position he became an active supporter of the Government, in contravention of the views he had always expressed and of the gratitude and loyalty he owed the chiefs of his own party. It is too much to expect us, knowing what we do of Government methods, to agree to the payment of $4,000 to a gentleman nominally our representative, but who is virtually an election agent for the Conservative party.

Mr. LARIVIÈRE. I am disappointed at the direction the discussion on this item has taken. Mr. Fabre happens to be located in Paris, but if he had been in Berlin or some other city perhaps so much would not be said about him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No ; that is nonsense.

Mr. LARIVIÈRE. He happens to be located in the City of Paris, I may say the capital of the world, and in that capacity he has been in a position to render good service to his country.

Mr. McMULLEN. Show us his report.

Mr. LARIVIÈRE. I have listened with a great deal of attention to the hon. gentleman and would ask him not to interrupt. Some of the returns which perhaps are not in the hon. gentleman's mind or within his knowledge are these, that he has been the means of inducing a large number, not only of French people, but of Belgians to emigrate to Manitoba.

Mr. McMULLEN. No.

Mr. LARIVIÈRE. That is a fact. Mr. Fabre is just as much in Brussels as in Paris, and there is not a meeting of the Geographical or any other society, which takes an interest in the knowledge of the world, which Mr. Fabre does not attend, and on many occasions he has addressed public meetings in Paris, and in other cities in France, as well as in Belgium, and anyone who reads the weekly French paper which he publishes in Paris, called the Paris-Canada, must be aware of the good he is doing for Canada. The paper Mr. Fabre publishes in Paris is a Canadian paper, and there is not a day in which some leading article in that paper is not reproduced in the leading papers, not only of France, but of Belgium and other countries. I may say I have also read in it some interesting sketches of public men of Canada. Even the leader of the Opposition has been well written up in that paper, and I was proud of the way in which that subject was treated, because I believe it was a deserving one. Mr. Fabre does not write from any political standpoint. The fact that he has been acting as the mentor, I may say, of Mr. Mercier, when Mr. Mercier last visited Paris, shows he does not look upon his position as a political one.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What does he say about the scandals in his paper ?

Mr. LARIVIÈRE. The hon. gentleman can find that out for himself. During the last few years Mr. Fabre has been the means of inducing a large number of people to come to Manitoba. They may be counted by hundreds, and not only by one as has been stated. Everyone who reads the weekly Paris-Canada will see that every week from ten to twenty people coming from Canada call at his office in Paris, No. 10, rue de Rome. With this information before us, I believe we cannot hesitate one moment to vote the paltry sum of $3,500 for the services which that gentleman is called upon to perform.

Mr. LAURIER. The House will be sorry, I am sure, that the hon. gentleman should have thought fit to make such insinuations as he has in regard to this item. The remarks he has made are totally uncalled for. There is not the shadow of a pretense to show that there is any attack upon Mr. Fabre because he is in Paris instead of being in Berlin. The reason why this item has been attacked time and time again is not, as the hon. gentleman insinuates but dare not assert, that Mr. Fabre is stationed in Paris, but he tries to raise national prejudice, of which we have altogether too much in this House. If this item has been challenged it is because, as the Government themselves know, they dare not defend it upon its merits upon the floor of this House. Why is this agent retained in Paris ? What is his title, and what are his functions ? His official title is that of an emigration agent, and the functions of an emigration agent are supposed to be his ; but everybody knows, and the Minister of Militia has intimated, that the French do not emigrate, that it is useless to keep emigration agents in France for that reason.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I was answering the attack which had been made because a larger number had not come out.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the answer worth, if you admit, and the Government are forced to admit, that the French are not an emigrating race ? There may be justification for emigration agents in the British Isles, in Germany or in Scandinavia, because we know that we can obtain emigrants from those places ; but, as the hon. gentleman says, the French do not like to leave their beautiful country ; and, although there may be stray wanderers from France to Manitoba or the Province of Quebec, there are not enough to speak of immigrants from France. Although Mr. Fabre is spoken of in the official report as an emigration agent, that is not the title by which he is known in Paris. The title he is given in France appears to be that of High Commissioner for Canada. In Le Paris-Canada we find:

"Inscrits au commissariat-général du gouvernement du Canada."

Inscribed in the office of the Commissioner General of Canada. Is Mr. Fabre the High Commissioner of Canada in France? If that is so, let us say so. If you believe that we can have a consular service and a High Commissioner not only in London, but in Paris, with advantage to this country, let us say so. I do not say that the time may not come when we should have more High Commissioners in foreign countries than we have to-day, but I do say that, during the ten years or more that Mr. Fabre has been an emigration agent in France, there has not been one year in which the House has been honestly dealt with by the Government in regard to this matter. If he is anything at all, he is not an emigration agent. We have not had any report from him this year, and for the obvious reason that he has nothing to report. If he is anything, he is what he tries to make himself out to be, the Commissioner General of Canada. Let the Government come out with their policy on that question and we can discuss it, but there is not the slightest ground for calling him an emigration agent. The hon. gentleman said that we on this side should not object to this vote because Mr. Fabre was appointed a senator by the Liberal Government. I do not know if that was the reason why he was selected for this office. Mr. Fabre was always a friend of mine, even after his appointment to this office, but you cannot justify this vote for him on the ground that he is an emigration agent in Paris.

Mr. BAIN. I confess that the last statement of the Minister of Militia may be taken as a fresh reason to retain Mr. Fabre as our representative in Paris. My associations with him when I was there showed that he was a man who occupied a tony position in Paris at our expense. Now the Minister of Militia says he represents our commercial interests there. That statement is one which demands our attention. This Government allege that the National Policy was going to develop our commercial interests in foreign countries, and it cannot be doubted that our interests in that respect are not always advanced in the best manner by the British consuls in foreign ports. In the performance of their duties they feel that they are first due to the British manufacturer and secondly to the colonies, and if our manufacturing interests are to be successfully represented they must be represented by others than the British consuls. On the other hand, if we find by our trade returns that our interests have not been successfully promoted it is time to appoint some one else than Mr. Fabre to look after them. Our exports to France in 1879 were over $700,000 worth, and in 1880 they were over $800,000 worth, but afterwards, whether in consequence of Mr. Fabre taking charge of our commercial interests there, as he did about that time, or for any other reason, they have gradually dwindled down, until the last returns show that they only amounted to $278,000. I submit that it is obvious that Mr. Fabre is a conspicuous failure in regard to taking charge of our commercial interests, and that the record contained in the Government returns is reason enough for dispensing with his services. If he keeps that position on for a few years he may probably wipe out our trade with France altogether, and then we will not have even the beggarly excuse that he is there to take charge of our commercial interests. I think the Frenchmen know enough to introduce their goods into Canada if they desire to do so, so that we need not care about that; but we should look after the exports from Canada to France and to other foreign countries, and I think it is evident that our High Commissioner, or whatever he calls himself, has been of no use in the development of those interests. Turning to the statement made by my hon. friend from Manitoba (Mr. LaRivière) as to Mr. Fabre's value as an emigration agent, it has been correctly remarked by the Minister of Militia that the Frenchmen are unwilling to leave their beautiful country, and that they have ties that bind them to their homes. I think it has been shown after a long series of years, from this gentleman's efforts and the other efforts that have been put forth in that direction, that we can scarcely hope to attract to our shores any large proportion of the French population. I think it is a matter of regret to us, because I feel they have many qualities that would make them a very desirable population to mix with our own population in this country in developing our North-West. But we have got the stubborn record of the fact that last year he succeeded in bringing out only one French immigrant to this country. Now, my hon. friend says that he is half of the time in Brussels, and that he promotes our interest by inducing Belgians to come to our country. Here, again, I must say that his record as immigration agent is exceedingly unfortunate. If you turn to the official records of the French and Belgian immigration to this country, as presented to us in the report of the Department of Agriculture, you will find that for the last ten years it has fluctuated from 150 to 300 per annum. Then there is this remarkable fact that for the last three years the migration from Belgium and France to Canada combined has steadily decreased. Last year the whole immigration from these two countries combined, according to the official returns, was only 147. Now, I submit under these circumstances that in both these respects our High Commissioner, or whatever high title you apply to him, in Paris, is a conspicuous failure. I think that we should pursue the same course in administering public affairs that we would in our private affairs; and if any man occupying that position, for any one of us, as business agent for a series of years, could only show those results, we would simply say that his usefulness was gone, that his salary was not being earned, and we would dispense with his services. Now, I say that from both these standpoints our commissioner in Paris is an utter and absolute failure, and the sooner we recognize the fact the better. If he is worth $3,500 a year to us for the purpose of writing biographical sketches in a nice style—and I have no doubt they are beautifully written—of the public men of Canada, and introducing them to the notice of Frenchmen, let us understand it. If he is paid this salary for this purpose, let us occasionally have a sketch translated, so that we can know what kind of characters our public men are displaying to the public eye in Paris through our agent there. But after all, if that is all the actual work he does for his salary I submit that the people of Canada, from a business standpoint, should decline to endorse the action of the Government in maintaining a representative at Paris with this high salary.

Mr. DAVIN. I did not understand from the leader of the Opposition whether, if he came into power, he would dispense with the office of High Commissioner, or whatever other little title he applies to Mr. Fabre, and from the tone the debate has taken we ought to know that.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Wait till we get there.

Mr. DAVIN. Hon. gentlemen frequently ask us to wait till they get there. But we know the old distich about the Whigs, which ran something in this way: that when in opposition they were loud enough in their cries for economy, but once in office they grew dumb. Now, I want to know, because I am interested in French immigration. I listened carefully to what fell from the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Laurier), and there was not a single promise, in tone or sentence, or word, to give us the impression that if he had power to-morrow he would dispense with that office. He might get rid of Mr. Fabre; he might resent the fact that Mr. Fabre had left one side of politics for the other; but there is no evidence, and no definite promise, that this money would be saved and that this sinecure office, as the hon. member for Queen's calls it, would be dispensed with.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). And put Pacaud in his place.

Mr. DAVIN. Now, I happen to know something about this office. I know a good deal about Paris. I have visited Paris often; I have visited Paris since Mr. Fabre has been there. I made it a point to go to the office. I went to the office actually to see what was being done of a business character; and I found a regular office there; I found a clerk of Mr. Fabre's there; I found precisely what you would expect from a business man carrying on the emigration business of a country in Paris.

Mr. INNES. Did you find Mr. Fabre there?

Mr. DAVIN. I found Mr. Fabre there.

Mr. INNES. Running his newspaper?

Mr. DAVIN. The newspaper, Mr. Chairman, is not a paper of Mr. Fabre's, but a paper run wholly in the interest of Canada; and the question is this: Whether it is desirable—I am ready to discuss that question—perhaps I have my own ideas upon it—the question is whether it is desirable to make Canada known in France? I gather, even from what fell from the leader of the Opposition, that he, like many of my friends around me, is of the opinion that there is no necessity for ventilating the advantages of this country in La Belle France. I gather that if that be so he would get rid of that office. But I may say that, notwithstanding the fact that the fruits of this office are not what they were expected to be, we have in Eastern Assiniboia some of the best settlers in the whole North-West who are from old France. We have men who came there with means, and who, before we had the experimental farms, which have been established by my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture, and which are now educating the people of Canada into the higher agriculture—those men have actually performed the achievements of that farm, and by their exhibits at our agricultural fairs from 1882 onward they have shown what the North-West could do in producing, not merely the ordinary garden fruits and farm products, but they have actually demonstrated that in that country, which is supposed to be a semi-arctic country, they could produce some of the choicest fruits and products which are native to the south of France. Now, I do not know whether Mr. Fabre was instrumental in bringing this gentleman out——

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It was a woman, it appears.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend is more interested in the women than he is in the men. I do not know whether the women will return him the compliment. But I know that, notwithstanding that during some generations France showed a splendid spirit of colonization, and that there was afterwards a complete stagnation in her colonizing energy, there still appears to be a class very like the class we have now in Ireland in consequence of the Home Rule movement, a class of gentlemen who have no longer the same hold on the old populations and old retainers that they had formerly, and who are getting discontented with their position, partly owing to the decay of the feudal ideas and partly owing to the impoverishment of their estates; and these people, I am told, are on the wing, and if they are on the wing, judging by what came to the North-West, we may as well get them as any other country, because there cannot be the least doubt that these gentlemen, of whom I speak, are some of our choicest settlers. Now, if, conjointly with the functions of his emigration agency, if emigration agency it be, he can attract the attention of these people to Canada, I do not know that that is a thing we should deplore. I am not sure it is not a thing we should welcome, because, athough I will not go so far as saying that to-day, as the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. LaRivière) said, Paris is the capital of the world, it is after all the capital of the know-how-to-live of the world. I am translating the phrase that would at once occur to me, but I think it is better to translate it at first rather than at last, for some hon. gentlemen would be sure to have cried out "translate." It is in that respect a capital of the world; it is a capital of refinement; it is thus what you can hardly say of any other city; it is positively an education in artistic feeling not merely to visit its galleries but to walk through its streets. You cannot walk through the streets of Paris without feeling that this splendid city which is around and above you and through whose streets you march is itself a temple of art. Under these circumstances, I do not think it is a thing we should resent. I rather think it is a thing we should welcome, if the wayfarers of this country, who were described by Goldwin Smith at one time as "rough, raw and democratic," should be able to obtain the service of a man representing Canada, who would be able to tell them how best they might put in their time if they wished to spend a week or fortnight in Paris. For to see Paris, to see all that Paris has to show in the way of intellectual and artistic significance, would take you months instead of weeks: and I am bound to say that, even taking the suggestion of the Minister of Militia, I would not be inclined to resent it very much if some part of the time of Mr. Fabre were given in that direction. As I heard the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), and the member for North Brant (Mr.

Somerville), and others speaking about a gentleman showing gentlemen round, I well remember what a friend of mine told me, who was not born in the purple but had risen from a very humble position, and had made money and had taken it into his head to go to Paris. I met him afterwards, and said: "Well, Tom, how did you enjoy yourself in Paris?" "Oh, Mr. Davin," he said "I never could tell you, but if I had only some one to show me the 'Tuile-yards and Boule-erilles' I would be perfectly happy." I could not help thinking that it would not have been amiss if some of our friends who have been there had had an artistic eye to guide them around "the Tuile-yards and the Boule-erilles." I want to discuss this vote as an immigration vote. It is palpable to me that it is given for immigration purposes. I want to say this, that nothing can be fairer, nothing can be more fit than that hon. gentlemen should canvass it as it has been canvassed here; it ought to be questioned; we ought not to pass an item unless it is an item we can conscientiously support. I admit that the test that hon. gentlemen apply to it is a proper test, that is to say, the test of results. After all, the greatest voice heard in this world, when he came to a barren fig tree, said: "Cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground?" If we come to the conclusion that this is a barren vote, my voice will be raised just as high as that of any one here: "Cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground." My hon. friend near me, with an egotism that I will not emulate, says there is always a "but" when I am speaking; and I may say—I do not mean to be personal—he gives a beautiful countenance to the proposition. Before I can come to vote for the excision of this item from the Estimates I must come to the conclusion that we should not keep any one in Paris to represent us, that there should be nobody in Paris to lay before probable as I am informed—possible, as even the leader of the Opposition will not deny, French emigrants. If at one time, and this country by its dual language attests it was so, the French people, the very same race that at present inhabits France, was one of the most forward of the colonization races, and there is no chapter in the history of heroism that will surpass the history of their early efforts at colonizing, why should they not again become a colonization people, why should they not again find the bounds of France too narrow for them, and spreading their wings cross the broad Atlantic throw in their lot with the children of the West?

An hon. MEMBER. Ah, why?

Mr. DAVIN. Ah, why? It was something between an articular expression and a grunt, but nevertheless it conveyed the hon. gentleman's idea to me, such as it was. I will tell you why. Because I do not think dry rot has entered into that race. I suppose I have more faith perhaps in the race than even the leader of the Opposition. I have lived in France; I know the French people; I know what is their character; and I know what is the charm of their character. I know this, that there is not a race on the continent of Europe with a finer physique than the people of old France. Why, then, should not these people grow too big for their surroundings, for their country, as the Germans are growing too big, as the Austrians are growing too big, as the Italians are growing too big? My hon. friend near me says they are like me, they are not producing. But my wife is my country. If you come to the conclusion that that race has been stricken with an incapacity of expansiveness, then you may possibly excise this vote. The leader of the Opposition will have read probably one of the greatest books that France has produced in modern times, La France Nouvelle, by Provost Paradol. It is one of the most delightful books ever written, it is one of the most suggestive; it is in some respects one of the saddest books ever written, especially when we remember the disastrous fate of that great man. Even he, although at times he doubts as he goes with a rigid analysis into the laws that would inevitably lead to the Sedan he never saw, still holds out the belief and the hope that the race still had expansion in it, such an expansion as would lead to the founding, if necessary, of a new France on the shores of Africa. I say you must, to excise this vote, come to the conclusion that it is vain to hope that ever again we shall see emigration from France. If you come to that conclusion I, for my part, will go in for its excision. I grant that this office has been in existence for some years; I grant it has not produced the results we looked for; I grant it is a thing for the Government to seriously enquire into as to why this is the case; and I grant this further, that if it should happen that year after year the same phenomena as to colonization and emigration appear in France, it may then be a question whether you should not abolish this office as an emigration agency. Even then, might it not be desirable to have somebody there to represent us? Have we not risen to a position far higher than many nations that support consuls, and I must say, looking at the cost of that office, if we were to regard him as a consul at one of the great capitals of Europe the sum seems to me very small.

Mr. LAURIER. Insignificant.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes. Qualifying my vote with these remarks, I have to say that I intend to vote with the Government, if it should come to a vote, for the retention of this office, but at the same time I say that it is a matter for fair criticism.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Chairman, as the hon. gentleman has made an appeal to me, I think I owe it to myself and to himself also to give him an answer to the questions that he has addressed to me directly. In the first place, I cannot say that I am surprised to hear that he will vote with the Government upon this question, apart from his general conduct, but particularly from the premises which he has laid down as well. The hon. gentleman asked me what the policy of the Liberal party would be upon this point if they came into power? We are in the cold shades of Opposition at the present time and we do not give promises. The only policy which we avow is that we are in favour of unrestricted reciprocity with our neighbours, but as to details of this nature we will await until we are on the Treasury benches to see what we shall do. Notwithstanding that the hon. gentleman has reminded me of a matter on which he had no reason to remind me, that is, that I am of French origin, I have at all events no hesitation in saying that I do not see what is the usefulness of this vote if it is to bring immigrants from France. My hon. friend has asked how, if it can be avowed on the floor of this Parliament, that the great French nation which in the 16th and 17th, centuries did do much for colonization, has ceased its power of colonization for ever? Sir, it is not because the French race has retrograded that there is no immigration from France to-day, but the reason is very obvious: it is because France to-day has to give every year the flower of its youth to the Minotaur of Militarism, it is because the French nation to-day has to give the best of its blood, the best of its strength and the best of its young men every year to the army of 1,000,000 men and more which she has to maintain in order to keep up her position in Europe. Let this evil be wiped out, let France come back to the position which she occupied in the 16th and 17th centuries, when, although a military nation, it was not such a military power as it is now, and when she had at that time the same system which England has to-day of a voluntary army, if I may so call it. Then, Sir, France will be able to resume her position also with respect to colonization as she did in these times. It has been said also that Germans are also subject to conscription, but that they emigrate. The hon. gentleman has pointed out that although many Germans immigrate to avoid conscription there is not a Frenchman—with but very few exceptions—who ever leaves his country to avoid conscription. On the other hand, if a Frenchman goes abroad he will go back to his country simply to draw his lot and pay the tribute of blood to his country. Until such times as France has got rid of militaryism I say it is of no use whatever to have an immigration agent sent to France. What has been the history of France since the present republic has been established? The French Government have attempted again and again, not only to revive their colony of Algeria, but to found a military colony in Tonquin; but so far as I can see, not even in Algiers, not even in Tonquin, have their efforts been crowned with any success whatever. It is not because the race is devoid of virility; on the contrary, every man must admit that the French nation since the war has shown immense power of recuperation. They have shown themselves a marvellously great people in that respect, and no nation ever retrieved disaster as the French have done since 1870. At all events, that may be another reason why immigration will not be successful in France, because all the energies of of France have been concentrated towards building up her power and strength. Now, that is a very different question from the question as to whether we should have an immigration agent or not, or whether we shall have a consul or not in Paris. That is a question which it is open to the Government to discuss, and if they bring a proposal in favour of having a consul or a commissioner general, or something of that kind in France, we will debate that question. I have no hesitation, however, in saying that to keep this vote in the Estimates, simply with a view of bringing French immigration to this country, is altogether illusory.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has given us one reason which appears to weigh with him considerably in reference to this vote. He has told us very truly that it takes a long time to get thoroughly acquainted with the city of Paris, to find out all its beauties and to appreciate all its art treasures, and he thinks that with a view of perfecting Mr. Fabre's education he ought to be left there a little longer. I beg to differ from him a little in this respect. Mr. Fabre has had ten years of it, and if he is not capable of knowing his Paris thoroughly in that time he ought to be recalled and somebody else ought to be given a chance. I would suggest, for instance, that the office be passed around amongst those members of the Government who want a little holiday; that the Minister of Militia and the Postmaster General and anybody else you choose to to name should be afforded an opportunity of spending a few months of the year at Paris, which would not increase the expense of the office as now constituted, and would give to the Government the vast advantages of culture and instruction which Paris affords. I think that this proposition would be more useful than the present one, and that it would result in the country being equally well represented in Paris. The hon. member from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) compares Mr. Fabre to a barren fig tree, and, although he has borne no fruit for ten years, he is still unwilling to cut him down and have him thrown on the brush-heap. He would rather dig about him, and cultivate him, and supply him with proper nourishment for a few years more, to see if some fruit might not be found from his boughs. He makes bows enough, no doubt, but there is no fruit from them. But, in spite of Mr. Fabre's culture and literary ability, even the excuse that he is making Canada more widely known in Paris and France does not seem to me to apply. If there is any credit due to anybody for making Canada known in France it is not due to our agent general, or whatever he may be called. It is due to the unaided genius and enterprise of our own people of Canada. It is due much more largely to a Fréchette than to a Fabre—to the young native Canadian who has not only taken his stand amongst the literary men of France, but has shown himself at the head of the rising generation of French men of letters. The one fact that Mr. Fréchette took the great prize for poetry at Paris, some time ago, has done more to advance Canada in France than all that has been done by Mr. Hector Fabre and the $40,000 that he has cost. But to come to other Government emissaries: I venture to say that the late lamented Curé Labelle did more to advertise Canada in France than Mr. Fabre has done. One visit of the Curé Labelle or one visit of the present Premier of Quebec has done more to advance Canada there than all the agencies of this Government. If you doubt it, look at the French papers, and you will see that the names of those gentlemen are well known in France. They have made the rounds of both France and Belgium, and have not only advanced the country, but have taken every possible means to obtain information in Belgium and France that might be useful to the farmers of this country. They have thoroughly investigated the sugar beet industry, for instance, and brought home a large amount of information in regard to that. I am glad to learn from the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) that the climate there so much resembles that of the south of France and that, strangely enough, farmers of Belgium have not only been able to instruct the settlers of Assiniboia as to the modes of agriculture especially fitted to that climate, but have also been able to introduce the fruits of the south of France. That is an item of information which it must be very pleasant for the House to hear amongst so much of the dry rot which the hon. gentleman has referred to as having been talked on this question.

He tells us that this dry rot has not yet invaded the French race. I am glad to hear it. It is very gratifying to find that Mr. Fabre does not circulate any of the hon. gentleman's speeches amongst the intending emigrants of that country. But, putting aside all chaff, I wish to make these points seriously. Mr. Fabre has shown no results. Whether the place be abolished or not, it is quite certain that Mr. Fabre should be abolished. It may be necessary to have an agent at Paris, but it is quite evident that Mr. Fabre is not the man, if any man could be of use. It is either useless to send an emigration agent there at all, or it is useless to send Mr. Fabre. Now, it is quite certain that it is useless to send Mr. Fabre; it is not certain that it would be useless to send anybody else. In the next place, this country has been advanced by other agencies much better than by the Dominion agent there—by the genius of young Canadians and the efforts of the Local Government and its representatives in Paris.

Mr. FOSTER. We have spent now a fairly generous proportion of time over this vote, and it has been pretty thoroughly canvassed. We are possessed of the information supplied by a large number of gentlemen on the opposite side, and we are indebted to this discussion for some very interesting dissertations on the genius and spirit of the French race and the prospects of the French nationality. I did not understand my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition to dissent at all from the view that it would be, as a matter of policy, fairly debatable, and that a great deal might be said in its favour, that our commercial agencies or semi-consulships, so to speak, should rather be enlarged than diminished. I think myself that there is a great deal to be said in favour of that policy. Not only as regards Paris, but as regards other commercial centres of the world, a reasonable and well-digested system of commercial agents or semi-consular agents representing Canada would be of very great service to us as a people and to our commerce as well. A good deal has been said as to Mr. Fabre's designation. He is really a Canadian agent in Paris. Whatever he can do in spreading information which tends towards emigration, Mr. Fabre does, and does this not only through the documents distributed by him, but very effectually in the little weekly paper, Paris-Canada, which has a fairly large circulation, and in which Canadian subjects are every week more or less treated. There is another point, too, in which it is useful to have a gentleman like Mr. Fabre in Paris. There are a great many influences at work there which are not seen upon the surface, and I know that numerous enquiries are made of Mr. Fabre, known as the Canadian representative in Paris, with reference to commercial and agricultural and manufacturing prospects in this country; and that Frenchmen of means, and those who have projects of one kind or another in these lines, have had conversation with him and got information from him, which have to a certain extent already resulted in their making connections in this country, which, though of slow growth, may ultimately expand into giving us what hon. gentlemen opposite seem to desire, the representative results of the expenditure we make. Then, as has been said, Mr. Fabre visits Belgium and expends his energies, not only as a journalist, but also as a lecturer and speaker, before bodies which are largely representative, where he never fails to give very interesting and useful information in regard to this country. Well, now, is it best for us, at this particular time, after we have secured a name and a place in Paris as being represented there, and after certain affiliations and connections have been formed, immediately to blot these out, more especially at this time when we might, judging from the speech of the hon. leader of the Opposition, come to the conclusion that France is getting into a position to be better able to take advantage of foreign countries in the way of emigration and colonization than she has done heretofore. The great drain on France, in order to make up the losses of the Franco-Prussian war and the indemnities that had to be paid, has been so heroically met, and France has supported so many burdens in past years, and has been so successful in throwing them off in the last few years, that she is now better able to devote her energies to colonization and emigration. If we wait until the rule of militarism has passed away in Europe, I fear we may have to wait a great many years. It does not seem to me that the prospects are favourable at present for the French people laying down their military system and introducing a volunteer system like that of Great Britain. It is certainly not to my mind wisest and best for us, after having created a certain centre of influence in France, now immediately to uproot that. My hon. friend who spoke so eloquently in reference to the French people and introduced the Scriptural incident called to my mind that at that time the proposition was made in reference to that fig tree, that it might well be spared for another year, that it might be dug about and trenched about and that fruits would probably appear. Now, we have gone through pretty nearly half the year. I do not suppose anyone wishes to oust Mr. Fabre, after such a length of time has passed, and send him from his place at short notice. Three or four months of the year have already gone, and Mr. Fabre had a perfect right to assume that his services would be retained for the balance of the year. What we might do is this: After this discussion, more or less pertinent and very interesting in parts, to which the Government have paid much attention, I think I may promise for the Government that they will carefully consider this question during recess, and be prepared next session either to abolish the office or give good grounds for its maintenance. With that understanding, and knowing each other's opinions, it would be better for us to pass the vote, and next session we will be prepared to discuss the policy which will guide us in the future and to which this Parliament will be asked to give its adhesion.

Mr. McMULLEN. We would on this side be willing to accept the suggestion of the hon. Minister if we had not similar promises made to us in the past, with the result that the vote is still before us. When discussing this item last session I am quite certain that the Committee were led to understand either that more labour would be exacted from Mr. Fabre or that we would be given some evidence that he was earning his money. I would ask the Minister of Finance what he has to say in reply to the remarks of the hon. member for North Wentworth (Mr. Bain), who has shown us that instead of the exports from Canada to France increasing they have decreased, so that if Mr. Fabre is there for the purpose of encouraging trade, his efforts have evidently had the contrary effect. We have been told that Mr. Fabre exercises very desirable influence in the direction of promoting emigration from France to this country. Will the hon. Minister lay before the Committee Mr. Fabre's report on that point?

Mr. FOSTER. I will bring down everything.

Mr. McMULLEN. We want his written report. Surely, as agent of Canada, he must have prepared a report to lay before Parliament, showing what work he has done; and I would like to compare that report with our Trade and Navigation Returns, so that I might be able to find ground for our paying $3,000 to $5,000 to continue Mr. Fabre in office. The Finance Minister says he has been there four months of this year, and asks if he is to be turned out on the street penniless? No one desires that he should be sent adrift penniless. We are willing to pay him up to the last moment, but we do not want to continue him in an office in which it has been proved he is utterly useless to this country. It is by items of this kind that we are continually adding to the annual expenditure of the people until it has come up to $38,000,000; and it is the duty of every member of this House, I care not whether he be Conservative or Reformer, to resist such votes at this. I believe there are members on the opposite side who would be willing to wipe out such items if the Government were not in danger. We should act firmly and promptly, independent of politics, in putting a stop to this system of keeping men dancing round at the cost of the country in foreign lands, We cannot afford it. The Trade and Navigation Returns show we cannot. The people of the country cannot stand being bled in that way.

Committee rose; and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committe.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McMULLEN. Before six o'clock we were discussing the item of expenses of Mr. Fabre's agency in Paris. Last year no report was submitted to Parliament by him. Mr. Wilson, then member for Middlesex, said: "I think we should have some explanation of what he is doing, whether he is succeeding in sending us out any emigrants." To this Mr. Foster replied: "He is sowing the seed for future results; it takes time." Mr. Wilson added: "We ought to have some report from this gentleman." And Mr. Foster said: "I acknowledge there ought to be a report. I think there is one, but the Secretary of State is not in his place." Then Mr. Davies, of Prince Edward Island, moved that the item be struck out, and on a division the item was carried, and the Minister of Finance said he would lay the report on the Table. If there is a report, we ought to have it now, or we should let the item stand until we have it.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not mean to leave the House to suppose that there was a report, upon my authority, because I am rather inclined to believe there is no report. I said I would enquire, and if there was I would have it brought down.

Mr. McMULLEN. Everyone of the other emigration agents we have furnish us with a report, and so does the High Commissioner; and it is very extraordinary that the Government should allow this man to live in Paris at our expense and have no account from him as to what he is doing. How many years has he been there?

Mr. FOSTER. I think ten years. The hon. gentleman had better let the matter go as I suggested. I do not think it would change the opinions of any to waste more time.

Mr. McMULLEN. What did the hon. gentleman say he was going to do?

Mr. FOSTER. I said we were now far advanced into the year, and I did not think it would be advisable to break up the establishment of Mr. Fabre in the beginning of the year, after he had made all his arrangements and rented his office. I added that during recess the Government, having heard the expressions of opinion of hon. gentlemen, would carefully consider the matter and be prepared either to give good reasons for retaining the agency or adopt the opposite course and do away with it.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Then, we are to understand that the Government admit they have not given any good reasons this or any previous session for keeping him there?

Mr. FOSTER. I said we would then be better able to decide what policy to adopt for the future.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I understood the Minister of Finance to say that, if we waited till next session, the Government would be prepared to give good reasons for keeping him there.

Mr. FOSTER. Or the opposite.

Mr. LAURIER. I am sure the hon. gentleman will admit that his explanation is not at all satisfactory. Still, I understand it is the best he can give. At all events, apart from the question of policy, in regard to which it seems to me there cannot be two different opinions, it is evident that this office is altogether uncalled for. There is no use for an emigration office in France, because it is barren of results and cannot produce any results. Apart from that, however, if you have an officer there who is paid to look after that office, you should at least have a report from him of what he has been doing.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no doubt of that.

Mr. LAURIER. But for two years he has not made any report. I understand that Mr. Fabre, who is, as we all know, a very clever man, may have found himself embarrassed in making a report because he has nothing to report. If he could say that many hundreds of emigrants had been sent out from France I am sure he would be glad to do so. I believe he once made a report showing that one emigrant had come out here, and if he could show an increase of 100 per cent. on that he would be glad to do it. Therefore, the hon. gentleman must see that there is no reason for continuing that office.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It might be possible for an agent to be employed there in commercial interests if he understood trade and commerce, but I understand that Mr. Fabre has not been engaged in business, and would not be the kind of agent employed in that capacity. If he was employed for commercial reasons, the object has signally failed, because our exports to France have been diminishing almost every year since he has been there. In 1873 our exports to France amounted to $631,000; in 1876 to $553,000; in 1879 to $741,000; in 1880 to $812,000; in 1882 to $822,000, but they have been declining since that time, and last year our total export trade with France was $278,552. If we desire to have an export trade with France we had better abolish that agency, and I think it would be just as well to have that office closed. A treaty has been recently made between England and France which discriminates against our products going into France, and I should like to know what is the use of keeping an agent there when our export trade has been falling off almost every year. This has been going on for ten years, with the result that one emigrant came out. I think this item should be dropped.

To meet cost of litigated matters.....$ 5,000

Mr. McMULLEN. How is it that so much is asked this year? Only $1,600 was paid last year.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That was the year before last. Last year's grant was not enough. This vote is intended to cover the cost of litigated matters not elsewhere provided for.

Payments to extra clerks for services rendered in preparation of Returns ordered by Parliament.....$5,000

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What check have the Government on the expenditure for services of this kind in making returns for the House of Commons. I understand that a great number of the irregularities that have occurred in the various departments, as to the payment of money for extra services for returns to the House of Commons, have arisen from the system adopted as to the preparation of those returns. I have been informed—and I believe my information is correct—that a very large amount of money is squandered every year in preparing these returns, and that it is from this fund that a large proportion of the amount expended is obtained to pay extra clerks, and that in many cases they are paid for services which are not rendered.

Mr. FOSTER. The Government have the same check on this expenditure as they have on any other expenditure for extra work done by extra clerks. My hon. friend says he is informed that there is a great deal of fraud in these payments, and that work which has not been done is paid for. That can hardly be. It is not a very huge sum. The whole expenditure last year was only $2,000.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It was smaller last year than usual.

Mr. FOSTER. Because not so many returns were asked for. This expenditure depends upon the voracity displayed by Parliament, and especially by hon. gentlemen opposite, in regard to returns. The work is given out by a responsible officer, and is paid for by folio or by hour, and I do not think there is any abuse existing in regard to this.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think if the Government employ a greater number of clerks than usual they should be able at all events to bring down the returns. I think one clerk could bring out some of the returns to which I refer. We should have the satisfaction of getting the returns in proper time, or they are of no value to the House or to the country.

Mr. LANDERKIN.

Commercial Agencies..... $5,000

Mr. McMULLEN. What is this for?

Mr. FOSTER. Formerly the vote for this was $10,000, but I thought it was rather large, and last year I reduced it to $5,000. If we desire to send anyone to a foreign country for commercial purposes, this is the vote out of which we take the expense.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Who was employed on that last year?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think anyone was employed last year. There was $5,000 voted, but I do not think there was any expended.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What is the use of voting it if it is not expended?

Mr. FOSTER. It would be well to have it if we wished to expend it.

Survey, construction of roads, bridges and other necessary works in connection with the Hot Springs reservation, near Banff Station, N. W. T.... $10,000

Mr. McMULLEN. It appears to, me from the evidence we have made before Parliament this session, that this is another sink of expenditure. Every year money is virtually sunk, and we do not appear to have any returns whatever. I put the question in regard to this matter on the 17th of August, and the reply I got was as follows:—

	Expenses.	Receipts.
1885-86.....	$ 4,300 00
1886-87.....	36,170 97
1887-88	36,612 48	$2,951 58
1888-89.....	24,684 20	2,528 73
1889-90.....	19,286 61	1,094 37
1890-91.....	16,999 84	2,347 35
	$141,254 10	$8,922 03

From the answer given to my question with regard to the expenditures and receipts, it is nothing short of folly to go on spending enormous amounts of money on Banff Park. It may be a very nice and pleasant place for those to go to who can afford to take a trip over the railway and spend a few days at a fancy hotel, or to stop at Banff Park as a kind of half-way-station between ocean and ocean. But I say it is unreasonable to ask the people of this country to spend $10,000 more in addition to the amount we have already expended, which will make a total of $150,000. That sum, placed at interest at 4 per cent, would give $6,000 a year. Then we have the annual expenditure connected with it. Last year there were expended on the Hot Springs $19,767.83. Mr. Stewart, Superintendent of the Park, 12 months, $1,800, and we pay him travelling expenses, $48.35. Then we have Jacob Smith, draughtsman, 365 days at $4 a day, and it appears the work is so urgent that we keep him busy Sundays as well as every other day. He gets $1,400 a year. We pay the keep of a horse for Mr. J. Connor, 13 months and 14 days, $161.20. We bought him a cutter, $55, and we paid his horse-shoeing, $12. Now, I think it is carrying matters too far to ask the Committee to consent to a still further expenditure of $10,000 on the same line. It is quite clear, from the number of men here, that they put in their time very comfortably and draw respectable salaries for virtually doing nothing. I see here that Connor is forest ranger, for which he gets $900 a year, on the reserve of Banff Park. We have a draughtsman at $1,400, and a superintendent at $1,800. Then we have a caretaker, J. Moir, 11 months, $600, and a nurseryman, and so on. I would like to know from the Minister if it is the intention to keep all those men employed?

Mr. DEWDNEY. In the first place, I think John Connor has been dead twelve months. The accounts the hon. gentleman has been reading are eighteen months old. Jacob Smith, who was the surveyor, has moved away. It was necessary to have a surveyor during the laying out of the park. The only salaried officials we have there now is the superintendent, who draws $150 a month; and the caretaker of the cove and basin. The hon. gentleman has been there probably, and has seen where the public take their baths and pay for them. The caretaker gets $60 a month. Then Moiris no longer there. But there is a caretaker named Cobbs, who looks after the office of the Superintendent General, and looks after the hot springs, that is, where the water is taken away into the pipes, and which point has to be continually looked after and inspected. He gets $15 a month for one, and $10 for the other, that is, $25 a month. So that the only salaries we pay out at the park are $1,235. This sum is asked for to complete the road which has been in contemplation for some time. I think I explained that last year, saying that these were driving roads round the mountain to different points of interest in the park. The expenditure asked for this year will build all the work that we think will be required.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the annual rent received for sites for buildings?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is hard to say. The receipts from the rent of the different town lots have been unsatisfactory, on account of the different opinions of the people who lease those lots. The first contention was that the leases were not long enough when we made them twenty-one years. Eighteen months ago a deputation came here asking that the leases might be extended, and we gave way in that regard, and made the leases forty-two years instead of twenty-one. I was under the impression that everything was satisfactory then. Subsequently, we are asked that these lots might be sold out in fee-simple. This, of course, I am unable to do, because the Act of Parliament says that the lots shall only be leased, and we have remaining in abeyance an amount of over $6,000 owing to those leased lots. Parties owning them first pressed for an extension of the lease, and next pressed that the lots might be sold out and out.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is this Mr. Stewart a professional man?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes, an engineer. A professional man's services will not be required, however, after the present year, as the extensive works will be completed.

Mr. BAIN. What is the scale of rentals for the lots?

Mr. DEWDNEY. $30 a year. That is what the lots lease for.

Mr. TROW. Have not some lots been sold absolutely?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman says no lots have been sold absolutely. I do not know what are the instructions of the department with respect to this matter; but I can convince the hon. gentleman that lots have been sold absolutely, and I can understand, from the document placed in my hands, there has been quite a feeling of discontent created among settlers at Banff, because they think the Government have not kept faith with those who purchased lots absolutely. I have a communication from Banff, in which this is stated:

"In the winter of 1886 and the spring of 1887, the Government offered the lots in Banff town site for sale; a large number of these were sold, part payment being made, until the deeds for the same should be issued. The Government subsequently withdrew these lots from sale, and through intimidation and compulsion induced several of the said purchasers to accept leases, and now have the hardihood to deny that they ever offered the said lots for sale. Several of the parties who so purchased did not and will not accept leases: consequently the Government is now adopting coercive measures, threatening eviction and forfeiture of improvements, &c., and have recently re-let two lots to parties upon the payment of back rent. The said lots have good houses upon them, the value of which is far above the amount due for rent. This was done without being advertised."

The hon. gentleman may tell me that this is simply the statement of one individual. But I hold in my hand two receipts which speak for themselves, and which show conclusively that these lots were sold absolutely. The first reads:

"BANFF, May 10, 1887.

"Received from Patrick Carr, Esq., the sum of $5 as first payment on lot 13, in block 6, of Government town site.

"F. M. STEWART."

This gentleman is the Government agent. This first receipt is dated 10th May. Here is another:

"BANFF, May 14, 1887.

"Received from Patrick Carr $10, being the second payment on lots 12 and 13, block 6, of Government town site.

"F. M. STEWART."

And to this is appended an affidavit from Mr. Carr as follows:—

"N. W. T.
"District of Alberta,
"In the matter of Lots (12) twelve and (13) thirteen, block "(6) six, town site of Banff.
"To WIT:—
"I, Patrick Carr, of the town of Lethbridge, in the district of Alberta, tailor, do solemnly declare:
"That the document hereunto annexed, marked Exhibit A, contains true copies of two certain receipts given to me by F. M. Stewart while acting in the capacity of Dominion Government land agent at Banff, for payments made by me on account of two lots or parcels of land known as lots twelve (12) and thirteen (13) in block six, in the town plot of Banff, according to the Dominion Government survey thereof.
"And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the Act respecting extra judicial oaths.

(Sgd.) "P. CARR.

"Declared before me at the Town of Lethbridge, in the District of Alberta, this 9th day of April, 1891.

(Sgd.) "CHAS. F. P. CONYBEAR,
"A Commissioner in B. R. and C."

Here is a case, therefore, in which the agent of the Government received two different instalments for the purchase of certain lots, and although, as I am informed, this man has been ready to pay the balance of the money he agreed to pay, he has been unable to do so.

Mr. DEWDNEY. In what year was it?

Mr. LAURIER. May 10, 1887.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Act prohibiting the sale was passed 6 months afterwards.

Mr. LAURIER. That may be, and it is that of which this man complains. The hon. gentleman must understand that it is no defence, in the case of this man who had purchased these lots, to say that an Act was subsequently passed prohibiting the sale. The propriety of passing such an Act is a question of policy on the part of the Government and those interested; but so far as this man is concerned, his rights cannot be affected in any way by the Act passed subsequently, and it is a denial of justice to this man to tell him now, when the Government have accepted his money, that an Act has been passed subsequently prohibiting the sale, and that he cannot have his deed. You must admit that as regards all those who are in the same position as Carr, who purchased lots from the Government and whose money has been accepted by the Government, that their position cannot be affected in any way by any legislation passed afterwards. I hope the hon. gentleman will agree to that proposition, and give an answer to these men in that sense.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I will be able to show that the money was not paid in part payment of lots purchased, but as a deposit in order to get the first opportunity of securing lots in the event of their being sold, because it was uncertain whether they would be sold or leased. There are no less than 45 others in the same position as Carr, who paid in a certain sum—because $5 would not have been the proportion of the first payment on the two lots alleged to have been sold to Carr—some persons paying in $10 and some $5. I have not Patrick Carr on the list, but I have Joseph Carr, who paid $10. I cannot find anyone down for lots 12 and 13 of block 6, or that those lots have been dealt with in any way. But there were 45 applicants when the first plan was prepared and was only in pencil, before it was submitted to Ottawa. They applied to be allowed to register names and pay a small sum, in order that when the land was put on the market they would be the first applicants to purchase. Some of them, on the strength of having made the deposits, commenced speculating in the lots, and within 24 hours had transferred them to other parties at large advances. Out of the 45 parties who endeavoured to secure these lots, one party of the name of Blackwood and his friends secured not less than 20 out of the 45 lots. In the summer of 1888 a survey of the town site was made. During that period several persons applied to purchase lots. Mr. Stewart informs me that in the summer of 1886 the survey of the town site was made, and during that period several persons applied to him to purchase lots. "At the time of these applications the survey had not been completed nor had any plan been made, except the rough draft plan used by the surveyor as his guide in laying out the lots and streets. A copy of this plan however had been forwarded to the head office, Ottawa, for the approval of the Minister, as to the mode of laying out the lots and the streets. Between then and the final completion of the plan in 1888 several changes were made, particularly as to the extent and limits of the town site. Immediately after the posts were put down defining the size and position of the lots, several persons applied to purchase lots, as it was then understood that they would be either leased or sold on the town site. It was explained to these applicants that the final plan was not yet completed and that alterations would probably be made. However, they wished to secure the first choice of lots and their names were noted down as a memorandum simply. No land books were opened or entries made of these transactions. After making these applications some of the parties disposed of their lots at greatly advanced prices. Returns were made to the head office of these applications, and are generally called 'sold lots,' to distinguish them from 'leased lots,' and I am certain that the Minister did not consider these applications as a bargain binding on either party. The prices at which the lots should be sold had been fixed but not the terms, although it was suggested by the late Minister that he would prefer that the whole purchase money should be paid down at the time of the purchase. As regards the deposits which were paid in by the applicants (and for which I gave a receipt), it was quite optional with them to do so, and the greater number of them paid no deposit at all, but those that did were persons who lived at a distance from Banff, and had selected choice lots and thought that by paying a deposit the lots would be held for them till the sale took place. In the case of land sales generally, the whole of the purchase money, or a first instalment, is paid when the sale is made, and the other instalments follow according to the terms, but in the case of these applications, the terms were not even spoken of nor were they decided on by the Minister, and the deposit consisted of such an amount as the applicant thought fit to pay. With respect to the remarks made by the late Minister and Sir John A. Macdonald during the debate on the park expenditure in 1887, I cannot see anything to lead one to believe that they considered the transactions connected with these lots up to the time of the debate as anything more than applications, and not such a transaction as was binding on either party. These references in the debate are on page 194 of Hansard, when Mr. White says that $15,000 had been applied for, and Sir John A. Macdonald refers to the same on page 245. There could be no intention on the part of the Government to treat the mere application of these parties for lots as an actual sale, as the Park Act was not at that time passed, nor for six months afterwards, which Act authorized the Minister for the first time to dispose of the lots in any way. It is evident that I did not look upon the application for these lots as a binding sale on the part of the Government, from the fact that I had not received official notice from the Minister as to the terms of the sale, and could not and did not state to any of the applicants what the terms would be. I append hereto a schedule of the lots applied for by persons who paid deposits; the amount of deposit and the date of the application." Then follows a schedule attached containing the names of the parties. There were forty-five applicants, twenty of which were purchased by Blackwood Bros. Fifteen of them refunded the money when they found the sales were not to be made and one or two of them had it applied on the rent of their lots. These are the circumstances connected with the lots in question.

Mr. TROW. I can confirm the statement of the hon. the leader of the Opposition in his advocacy of those parties who had made the purchase absolutely of these lots. I am not acquainted with the parties, but I have heard conversations from one and the other during my visit to that place in 1887. I was then offered several lots myself for cash value, and I examined with Mr. Stewart several lots that I felt inclined to purchase. I had no idea that they were not in the market and at open sale. I was prepared to pay for them, and Mr. Stewart was prepared to sell them to me. I selected my lots and I told him on my return from the coast that in all likelihood I would confirm the bargain for four different lots, in a very eligible position, between the Sanitarium and the Canadian Pacific Railway Hotel. I think it is a mistake that they were withdrawn from the markets. I think there is a large tract of good lands that can be sold in that locality at remunerative figures. At that time they could be well sold at all events, and I have no doubt they could be sold to advantage now if they were put on the market. Very few people will erect permanent buildings on the uncertainty of a lease for a certain number of years, because every person would be inclined to have a deed in fee-simple from the Government as some security that the property was theirs and nobody else's. Mr. Stewart gave no intimation to me that I was to have a lease. It was to be a permanent deed absolutely, and under this impression I think others were purchasing at the same time. I am aware that since that there has been an alteration, and that they were leasing the property, but I think it is a great mistake on the part of the Government. The land should be sold. You have there a park twelve miles by twenty-four miles, and the place is well selected. I do not know any better on the continent, and I question in my mind whether it is not in some respects superior to that of the Yellowstone Park. However, I think that the Government is somewhat extravagant just now in their expenditure there. I can understand that a few years ago when they were opening new roads and putting up buildings over the caves that there was considerable expenditure necessary, but I do not see why it is necessary to employ so many men there now. I would like to know from the Minister whether the Canadian Pacific Railway or the proprietor of the sanitarium pay any rent for the use of the water from the hot springs?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Oh, yes; they all pay rent for the water. They pay so much for every bath and so much for every plunge bath. The Canadian Pacific Railway has a large plunge bath, and I think the sanitarium has two. They all pay for the water.

Mr. McMULLEN. How much?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have not got the scale of prices here, but they are fixed by Order in Council.

Mr. LAURIER. I am sorry that in reference to the question which I have just raised that the hon. gentleman has given me such an answer, because if he will look at the case again he will find that the attitude which he is now pursuing is an absolute denial of justice to the parties who purchased those lands. The hon. gentleman says that the agent simply received their money and did not enter into a contract with them, but simply took their money, reserving whether or not he would be in a position to sell or not to sell. The hon. gentleman referred me and referred the House to the opinion of the late Hon. Mr. White, the Minister of the Interior of that day. He pretends that the language then used by Mr. White will confirm his view of the case. The language of Mr. White is quite the reverse, and it says in so many words that these lands at the time he spoke, which was on the 29th April, 1887, were open not for lease but for purchase. Here is the language which is to be found, as stated by the hon. gentleman, at page 194 of Hansard:

"There is no exclusive property in the springs given to any one. On the other side of Bow River there is a town site. The Government have already surveyed it and laid it out, and are selling lots ——,

Mark you not "leasing" but "selling"—

—"and I am told by the secretary of the department, who has recently been up there with a view to making a report as to the progress of matters and to determine the conditions on which sales should be made, that $15,000 worth of lots have already been applied for."

Now, Mr. Chairman, nothing could be more positive than that, and it absolutely confirms the statement I have made. That language was spoken on the 29th April, 1887, and on the 10th May, about a week after that, the agent received from Patrick Carr $5, not for the lease but as first payment on lots 12 and 13 Government town site. Four days afterwards, on the 14th May, the Government received from Patrick Carr $10, being second payment for lots 12 and 13. At that time, we have in the language of Mr. White, that the Government did not determine the price at which they should sell, but the Minister then said positively that they were selling, and these men have purchased. It is preposterous to pretend, in the face of the receipt which was given by the agent, that he was receiving the money for a lease and not for a sale. If he had given the receipt for a lease he would have so stated; but he received the first and the second instalments of the selling price. At that time the lands were open for sale. It is true the Government afterwards withdrew them from sale, and with regard to any transactions which took place afterwards I have nothing to say; but as to what took place in the months of April and May, 1887, it is manifest that these men purchased, that they intended to purchase, and that the Government intended to sell; and if at the present time they do not receive their deeds of sale, let the Minister say what he will, it is a breach of faith. These men cannot be affected by any legislation which took place afterwards, in the face of the fact that the Minister of the Interior of that day stated that the lands were open for sale at the very moment that this receipt was given. It is preposterous to say at the present day that the land was not sold, but leased. It was sold, and this is only a repetition of what we have seen on other occasions, that faith is not kept with the settlers of the North-West; faith is broken every day with them. You invite people to come from Europe to settle in the North-West, and if after they come it does not suit your caprice to keep your agreement with them, you break it. Under such circumstances, it is a denial of justice to these people, and I hope that the House will force the hands of the Government in this matter, and see that justice is done to these people.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This is not a question of settlers in the North-West at all. On the one side the facts set up here these: That when the Government proposed to make a very important public improvement, in the shape of a national park in a portion of the Rocky Mountains, certain speculators, although these lands were not open for sale at all, sought to compel the Government to sell them, and sought to obtain an advantage over the public by depositing sums of money with a person who had no more authority to sell them than one of the pages on the floor of the House. The question of these lands being open for sale did not depend on what was said by Mr. White in the House: but it depended on the possession of authority by the Minister and his agent at that time to sell them. On the facts set forth by the hon. Minister of the Interior, the Minister at that time had no power to sell these lands or to recommend them for sale to A, B or C. They were absolutely withdrawn from sale; and neither the Minister nor the department had a right to receive an application for their purchase. But the persons who sought to jump those lands, by paying a deposit, in the hope of selling them to other parties afterwards, no doubt thought they did a very clever thing; and now the plea is set up that we are doing an injustice to the settlers in the North-West if these jumpers do not receive the lands. If the set of facts alleged by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Laurier) are correct, namely, that the lands under the statute as it then existed were open for sale, and that these men applied to purchase them under the law as it then stood, the law which was passed afterwards would not stand in their way. But until we settle the facts it is vain to talk of breach of faith to the settlers in the North-West, or to instance this as a case of it. The facts are in dispute, and if they are as understood by the hon. Minister of the Interior it would be an outrage to give these claimants the lands, and they will not get them unless by process of law.

Mr. LAURIER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman has an advantage over me. I do not know what the law was at the time, but I know what the language of the Minister was. The hon. gentleman says it does not matter what Mr. White said at that time. If this is the doctrine laid down by the Minister of Justice, that the word of a Minister of the Crown on the floor of Parliament has no weight or value, that the people are not to rely upon it, that if they do they do it at their peril, and that if the Minister is wrong he will not suffer, but they will suffer, it is a new doctrine which we ought to understand in this country. But be the law right or wrong, if the Minister gives a permission to the people to buy lands which he has no right to give it is he who should suffer and not the people. The Minister used these words:

"The Government have already surveyed it and laid it out and are selling lots."

What the facts at that time were I do not know, and I suppose the hon. gentleman does not know; but I say this, that if the Minister of the Interior in 1887 was selling lots and had no authority to sell them, the blame is not to fall on the people who acted upon his word, but the blame is to fall upon the Government, who acted without authority; and whether they had authority or not, it seems to me it is a monstrous doctrine to utter on the floor of Parliament that the settlers in the North-West can be deceived by the word of a Minister.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman cannot pretend that these lands were purchased on the word of the Minister. The Minister was making a statement as to the intention of the Government with regard to the public property there. It was quite immaterial whether the language he used had reference to selling or leasing. He was simply explaining to the House the policy of the Government as to not holding in their possession certain tracts of land. He might have used the word "sell" or "lease"; but it was not on the authority of those expressions that these men proceeded. When they went to the land office to buy these lands they did not go on the authority of Hansard. These purchases were not made on the explanation of the Minister given in this House, but on the provisions of the law as it then stood; and any person going to the agent would not go with Hansard in his hands, but with the law as to whether the lands were open for sale or not. The statement of the hon. Minister of the Interior is that the agent had no power to sell, but that he said he was willing to receive the deposit of $5 in case the policy should afterwards be adopted to sell them; and I am told, notwithstanding this fuss about the word of the Minister, that these deposits and applications had actually been made before the Minister spoke.

Mr. FRASER. But we must not forget this one fact, that the conditions of sale are in the receipt. Who ever heard of making a second payment on a lease before the lease was executed?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It does not make any difference.

Mr. FRASER. Surely, if the settler is to pay money, and if a subsequent Government puts a different interpretation on words which are as plain as words can be, what security has a purchaser, if an agent sells property, following the words of the Minister?

Mr. FOSTER. This was the year before the Minister spoke.

Mr. FRASER. The same year. Are we to understand that the agent of the Government at that place gives a receipt for money paid on a sale, and then turns around and says: I told him that if a sale were afterwards to be made the terms would be so-and-so? Are we to understand that an agent of the Government knows no more about a conditional sale or a direct sale than that? He had, at least, the authority of the Minister, and the presumption is very strong that he acted according to what the Minister said or understood. I am sure that no settler who receives a receipt for money paid upon a sale, or upon a promise of sale, ought to be told afterwards that the transaction was only to be held good in case the land should be for sale, and that the Government, if they liked, need not complete the sale at all. I must object to the statement that the word of a Minister of the Crown is to be questioned afterwards and his authority to give his word questioned. It will not do to plead that he did it in ignorance, for even if he did the Government are bound by his statement. In this case he did not do it in ignorance, but with a full knowledge of the facts, but subsequently it suited the Government to act differently. It will not do for the Government to say now that the Minister acted in one way when it was proved he acted directly the opposite, in order to put a construction on a statement of the Minister years ago to suit the policy of the Government to-day. There is no denying the fact that that man bought the land and that he made a payment on account. The Minister says he can go into court. Is that the proper way to treat a man who has made a purchase from the Government, on the faith of the word of a Minister of the Crown and a written receipt for money paid? Lawyers may like that way of proceeding, but it does not suit settlers.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. member for Guysborough and I will not disagree in the slightest about this case when we agree on the facts. He differs from me as to what ought to be done and what has been done simply because he has not, I think, fully informed himself as to the facts. He perhaps did not hear what I said a few minutes ago as to some of the points in dispute; and moreover he has not taken into account the position in which Dominion lands stand in the North-West and everywhere else. He looks upon the case as he would one between private parties. I do not say that the same faith should not be observed by the Government in its dealing as would be by private parties, but the lands of the Government are not in the same position as the lands of private parties—that is, they cannot be sold by an agent here and there, or on the word of a Minister here and there, contrary to the statute, but must be dealt with as provided by the statute governing them, and no title can be given except under the provisions of such statute. In accordance with those provisions, these lands were not Dominion lands for sale or settlement at all, but lands comprised in a reservation set apart for the purpose of a national park, on which nobody had a right to settle, and which no agent was entitled to sell or lease or deal with in any way. The agent there had only the right to sell lands outside the reservation; and when Kerr came and deposited money with the view of securing land inside the reservation—lands which would be greatly enhanced in value the moment the Government converted the reservation into a park and spent money in improving and beautifying it—he knew the lands were not for sale, he knew that the statute did not authorize them to be sold, he was told by the agent that they could not be sold until the policy of the Government was settled as to whether they should be sold or leased or retained; and under such circumstances he understood, on his money being received and a receipt given therefor, expressing what the terms of the sale would be if there was a sale at all, that the transaction gave him no right or title in the land. Subsequently, on the matter coming before this Parliament, because all this took place a year before the Minister was alleged to have opened his lips about it——

Mr. LAURIER. The same year.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am told the year before. Subsequently, Parliament was consulted. The Minister had no power to sell, the Government had no power to sell. I admit however again, if the Government or Minister had made an agreement or given authority to the agent to make an agreement the Government ought to have asked the authority of Parliament to carry out that agreement; but nothing more is alleged than that this man, having been warned that the Government had no power to sell to him under the statute, yet insisted upon paying his money and took the risk as to what the policy of the Government and Parliament would be. These are the facts on the one side. The leader of the Opposition says, rightly, that I did not look into the matter very carefully, but we will look into it; but what I do take exception to is, that until the facts are shown to be other than what the Minister has stated them to be no charge should be made against him as to bad faith.

Mr. LAURIER. I am glad the hon. gentleman takes this view of the case. The facts are these: In the year 1887 the statute had not yet been passed creating the Banff Park. Parties had gone on the land and made application for lots. The question is, whether they made their applications for sale or for lease. That matter was in abeyance; but the point to which I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Justice is, that the officer of the department in charge had gone there and authorized the agent to receive applications for sale.

Mr. DEWDNEY. No.

Mr. LAURIER. On the 29th of April, 1887, Mr. White moved the second reading of the Bill respecting the Banff National Park, and he said:

"There is no exclusive property in the springs given to any one. On the other side of Bow River there is a town site. The Government have already surveyed it, and laid out and are selling lots."

That is plain. The Bill had not been introduced then and the Government were selling lots. That was in April, 1887. Mr. White continued:

"And I am told by the secretary of the department, who has recently been up there with a view to making a report as to the progress of matters, and to determine the conditions on which sales should be made, that $15,000 worth of lots have already been applied for."

Nothing more certain than that the secretary of the department had been at Banff, had authorized the agent to receive applications for sale, that the price of land had not been determined, but that $15,000 worth of lots had been applied for. On the 10th of May, 1887, less than fifteen days afterwards, this man, Patrick Carr, made his application to the agent and deposited his money, which was accepted as a first settlement. Four days afterwards he deposited another amount, which was accepted as second settlement. Under the circumstances, authority or no authority, it is manifest the agent acted according to instructions from the department, that this man acted under the belief he was purchasing, and the agent acted under the belief that he could sell. If there was no authority of the kind there may be another remedy to give that man, but he is entitled to his remedy, because the agent acted under the authority of the department and the dates show it.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The secretary of the department went there to meet the agent with regard to the park and report. He gave no instructions to Mr. Stewart to receive money for lease or sale, but to report to the Minister how many lots had been applied for, and the Minister would decide on the price if they were to be sold.

Mr. LAURIER. The Minister says the secretary of the department had no authority to do this or that. This is what he did, according to the language of Mr. White:

"I am told by the secretary of the department, who has recently been up there, with a view to making a report as to the progress of matters and to determine the conditions on which sales should be made."

That was his mission. He was authorized to go and report on "the conditions on which sales should be made." Was that in regard to leases?

Mr. HAGGART. If the hon. gentleman will follow the debate on 3rd May he will see that the Minister of the Interior was perfectly clear in what he said, and he will find further on that Sir Richard Cartwright and Sir John Macdonald's speeches will leave no doubt with him as to the intention of the Minister of the Interior. On 3rd May, when the Bill came up for a third reading, Mr. White said:

"Then, as to the town site on the other side of the Bow River which has been laid out, and the cost of survey of which is part of the expenditure made, we have offers in two ways, either to sell or lease the town lots. The plans have only been got out within the last day or two, but my own feeling is strongly in favour of leasing, in order to retain absolute control of the character of the buildings erected and the general conduct of affairs near the park."

Then he will find that Sir Richard Cartwright says:

"I think a limit of time ought to be fixed for these leases."

And Sir John Macdonald says:

"There is an objection to fixing a limit. As I understand, a portion of the park offers some beautiful sites for villas, and I believe the plan of the architect lays these out to be leased to people of wealth, who will erect handsome villas upon them."

Further on he says that twenty-one years may be too small a time, and that the leases should be made for a longer period. The hon. gentleman will see that the whole tenor of the debate was that hese properties were to be leased.

Mr. LAURIER. No; the whole tenor of the debate shows that it was not decided whether they should be leased or sold, but that the secretary was engaged in arranging for sales.

Mr. TROW. There was no Minister more guarded in his utterances than the late lamented Thomas White, and you cannot place any other construction on his utterances than that the lands were for sale; and the agent must have received such instructions, because he offered me the lands for sale. I did not approach him on the subject respecting the leasing of land, but for the purchase, but I thought and do still think a great deal of the place. I had something to do with advising the Government to reserve that park. I think I was the first to telegraph to Sir Charles Tupper and the late Sir John Macdonald in regard to it. There were certain parties who were intending to reserve that land for themselves—Mr. Woodworth for one—and we had considerable difficulty in advising the Government to reserve that park. I was satisfied, however, that the land was for sale, and in September, 1887, the agent offered me a sale and I made my selection. The understanding was that I was to pay the cash before I left there.

Mr. BAIN. The last report of the auditor shows simply the items for labour $6,500, and $1,500 for teaming. The Minister said the appropriations this year would complete the original construction of the drives through the park. Has he any report later than that in the possession of the House, indicating what will be the actual cost of the maintenance of the walks and drives after the first construction? I would also ask him what the mileage will be when the work is completed?

Mr. DEWDNEY. My impression is that $1,000 a year will be sufficient to keep all the roads which will be completed at the end of this year in proper shape. There is also some expenditure in removing the fir timber and burning it. The dry timber is collected in the summer season and burnt when the snow is on the ground. We will have that to do in the future. But these are small items. In the management of the park, if we find that after this year the superintendent need not be a professional man, the cost would be decreased by one-third. We now pay $1,800, and I think a superintendent could be obtained for $1,000. Then there is the caretaker at the basin at $60 a month, and that basin of course is one of the largest sources of revenue. Then there is a small amount for looking after the pipes from the springs to the different hotels. The cost of maintenance will be very small when the work of making the roads is completed this year. As to the mileage, I can only give it roughly. There will be from 16 to 18 miles of driving roads, besides some bridle paths—perhaps twenty miles altogether.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not intend to re-awaken the discussion on this question, but I was asked by some friends in the district to watch certain interests on their behalf. Banff is not in my constituency, and my colleague from the North-West, the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Davis), was fully charged with this question. I asked him a few days ago when we expected this item to come up, whether he was fully satisfied. I do not see him here now, and I would ask the Minister of the Interior if certain moral claims, as they are called, made by Dr. Brett and his friends, have been considered and assented to by the Government.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is the question we have just had up.

Mr. DAVIN. No; not that question fully. The question we have had up is a question of right. The hon. the leader of the Opposition asserts that certain gentlemen went into Banff, that they took up locations there, that they had a right to take those locations up, and in fact he contends that the state of the law was such that they would have a remedy in a court of law. I think he is mistaken in that. The position as I understand it was that Banff had not been surveyed at all, that even when Mr. Stewart was appointed—I happened to be up there at the time—Banff was not surveyed, for it was being surveyed by him, but it was not actually surveyed with a view to sale.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. White said it was.

Mr. DAVIN. I have what Mr. White said before me, but that was subsequent to what I am referring to. At that time there were certain persons squatting on the Banff property, and the main right they would have would be what is called squatters' rights; and, when you come to discuss that, it would be a moral rather than a legal claim. But Mr. Brett, as the Minister well knows, asks, as a favour, that the Government should put certain parties in a favourable position. He quotes Mr. White, he quotes Sir John A. Macdonald, and what he urges is that a few persons—himself I think amongst the number—should have deeds, and he urges that, under the circumstances, Banff Park might be as well managed. Now, as I say, my hon. colleague told me a few days ago that things were settled satisfactorily to him. This is not in my constituency, but I was asked by certain friends to look into this matter, and I think certainly that these people have a moral claim. Now, may I ask, is there not an anthracite coal section deeded within this very property?

Mr. DEWDNEY. That was before the park was laid out at all.

Mr. WATSON. When was the park laid out?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think it was in 1885 or 1886.

Mr. DAVIN. As I say, it is enough for me that I have done my duty. I did watch it; I asked my hon. colleague whether he was satisfied, and he told me he was: and if he is satisfied, I suppose his constituents are, because he has been in communication with them. I was very glad to hear, in the course of this discussion, the utterance of the hon. Minister of Justice as he laid down very properly the principle that he saw no difference whatever between a contract between a Government and an individual, and a contract between two private individuals; and I hope before the session closes he will apply that doctrine to the second homestead question. I do not think that I am guilty of any impropriety if I say that the hon. and learned gentleman has given me a very strong impression that he agrees with my contention on the second homestead question.

Mr. WATSON. Has he got a "but" like yours?

Mr. DAVIN. I do not suppose there is any "but" in his case. I believe that before the House rises he will place my Bill on the Government Orders, or will make a statement in regard to it that will be of the same value. Now, I will say about the park, that I think it is very important that the park should be reserved for the public generally; at the same time, if any wrong was being done to any individual, I would certainly contend against it. I will say that I do not think that these persons who make the claims are exactly in the same position, for instance, as a homesteader would be. If a homesteader went to a land office and entered for a homestead he is in a position very different, in my opinion, from what these people were; although, looking at the debate, it is open to question as to whether, at the time the debate took place in May, it was decided to lease it or sell it. However, I rose to say that I think there is a stronger prospect of carrying the second homestead this session than there was before.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not know as I understood the Minister aright a moment ago, but I understood him to say that the anthracite coal mine had been disposed of before the lands were surveyed.

Mr. DEWDNEY. They had obtained a right before it was thought of establishing a national park there at all.

Mr. LAURIER. The lands were not surveyed at all at that time?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The park was not surveyed at that time.

Mr. LAURIER. Therefore they had acquired rights. That supports my contention that the parties who, after the land was surveyed, made their application in good faith to purchase, ought to have their titles as well as the parties who applied and got the coal mines. But there is a question of policy as to this, and it has been represented to me that the best policy would be for the Government not to lease the lands but sell them absolutely, and here is a reason which has been given in respect to that view:

"Now, as the success of the park mainly depends upon its being made an attractive and comfortable resort for tourists and invalids our experience of the management for the last four years certainly does not warrant our saying that it has been made so, nor is it likely ever to become so, as long as the same continues. The residents of the park have frequently petitioned the Government to place the lots in the town site again for sale, as the holders of the same will not be and are not warranted in expending money and improving and beautifying their property under a lease. Many visitors also have expressed a wish to obtain a lot and build a residence thereon, but finding they could only obtain a lease for the same they declined to do so."

Now, I am not sufficiently familiar with the place to venture any opinion, but I offer this suggestion to the hon. gentleman—it comes from a resident of the place—and it seems to me at first blush that there is reason in it. It is, that this park is intended to be set apart as a resort for tourists and invalids, and if parties cannot buy the land they would not put upon it the same amount of money for beautifying their residences as they would if they had it in fee-simple. It seems to me this reasoning is beyond the possibility of successful contradiction. There is another grievance which I was asked to bring to the attention of the Minister. At a meeting of citizens it was resolved:

"That this meeting is of the opinion that section 35 of the Regulations of the Rocky Mountain Park which says that no other than the superintendent of the park or officer of the Mounted Police shall act as justice of the peace or adjudicate on matters concerning the regulations of the park, is not conducive to the ends of justice."

Mr. DEWDNEY. With reference to the first portion of the hon. gentleman's remarks, I may say that the experience of the United States with regard to their parks, has not been such as to warrant their making any sales of the property in them. In fact, the Yellowstone Park cost the Government a great deal of money to buy out the old proprietary rights, and there is no land in that park that is sold. If we allow the sale of the property within the park, then we cannot control the buildings, we cannot control the business. When it was known that a sanitarium was going to be built in Banff Park, and that $30,000 or $40,000 were going to be expended in the improvement of the park, there was great excitement among a number of people, who rushed in there and wanted to settle in the park; that is one reason why Parliament agreed that the property should be leased and not sold. In reference to one of the regulations of the park, which states that no justice of the peace shall have any jurisdiction in the park except the superintendent and the North-West Police Magistrate, of course that can be very easily corrected. There are gentlemen in the park who would be well able to fill the office of magistrate, and I see no objection to an extension to them.

Mr. TROW. Why does the Government require to keep control? They sell lots to individuals, and the individuals can control their own lots. You have a superintendent in the park, and if there is fish or game to be protected, he can see it is protected, and you can enact laws as is done in other civilized communities. I am aware that at the time I visited Tacoma and Seattle there were scores of people who would have come to Banff and purchased lots for summer residences if the Government would open the lands for sale.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. Minister says he expects to cut down the expenditure very materially in coming years. The highest sum ever received from fees and rents was in 1887-88 when it reached $2,900. The hon. gentleman will observe that we have now expended $150,000 on this park. At 4 per cent. this would amount to $6,000 a year. Suppose the cost is placed at $2,000, and I question whether the Minister will be able to reduce the expenses even to $3,000, but suppose the interest and all amount to $10,000. $6,000 for interest and $4,000 for annual expenses, how long does he expect it will be before the country will realize $10,000 a year from this park ?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is impossible to make a calculation. The revenue is increasing, it amounting in June to nearly $400. The number of visitors is also largely increasing, and it must always be remembered that the park is only a year or two old. It must be decided whether the properties must be leased or sold. If we sell, we should throw the park open ; and in that event I will certainly advocate that plan. If it is to be kept as a park, it is necessary we should keep control of the land. If that is understood, there will be no difficulty in getting the leaseholders to pay their rentals. There was an agitation to have the leases extended from 21 to 42 years, on the ground that if that were done better buildings would be erected as more money could be borrowed. We did that, and then an agitation was again aroused as to the sale of the lots, which I understood was then settled. If we let the leaseholders understand that they have obtained all which they can expect, we will obtain a revenue which will soon increase to $10,000 a year.

Mr. McMULLEN. What rent is paid by Dr. Brett ?

Mr. DEWDNEY. For the sanitarium Dr. Brett pays $300 a year ; the Canadian Pacific Railway Company pay $500 a year as ground rent for the land on which their establishment is placed. They also pay for the water for their baths.

Mr. BAIN. How large is the area covered by Dr. Brett's claim ?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Three or 4 acres. The Canadian Pacific Railway about the same.

Mr. WATSON. Is the Government considering the advisability of giving a patent to Dr. Brett for the 4 acres ?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There is no chance of a patent being given to Dr. Brett. It is not on the side of the river in which those lots are situated in regard to which the right to purchase is claimed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the Canadian Pacific Railway possess a title in fee-simple ?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No ; only a lease.

To assist in publication of proceedings of Royal Society $5,000

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Now that the Government has a Printing Bureau of its own, the printing of the proceedings of the Royal Society might be done more cheaply there than elsewhere. The printing and publishing of the report cannot cost $5,000. Each member receives a copy annually, and I am satisfied it does not cost that sum.

Mr. FOSTER. This is an amount we have given for several years to this association. It is to assist them in the publishing and printing of their proceedings. We never take a note whether it costs $5,000 to print their proceedings or not, and we do not propose, so long as this vote is given, to bring it down to the simple printing expense. It is a gift from the country of $5,000 to this association. It is the only amount we give by way of helping that class of scientific and literary endeavour in the country.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Why not change the wording of the vote ?

Mr. FOSTER. It does not say simply printing. It is to assist in publishing and printing, and you cannot publish until you at first obtain the articles.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Why not put it in the Estimates as aid to the Royal Society ?

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman is captious, I will put it in this way.

Mr. BAIN. I suppose no account is rendered to the Government ?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Classification of Old Records..... $2,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What kind of records are these ?

Mr. FOSTER. They are records of the old Province of Canada, entirely historical.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does that mean commencing from 1840-41, when the two old provinces were united, or does it go back over the early periods embracing the periods since the conquest of Canada ; or even earlier dates ? What is proposed to be done ?

Mr. FOSTER. It has the widest signification. I will see that the hon. gentleman obtains all the information in regard to it.

Mr. FLINT. There might be a catalogue printed as to what these documents are ?

Mr. FOSTER. Such an index could be given easily.

Classification of Old Records of Canada in Office of the Privy Council..... $1,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who is doing this work ?

Mr. FOSTER. It is done under the supervision of the Clerk of the Privy Council.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is this work done by the regular officers of the department ?

Mr. FOSTER. No ; it is done by extra work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Would it not appear that those records, if they belonged to the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario, would go to the custody of the Local Governments ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. A large number of documents properly relating to provincial affairs, such as registration of titles, and births, deaths and marriages have been returned to the Provincial Governments, but those matters bearing on Federal affairs are classified and kept.

Mr. McMULLEN. Do I understand that John J. McGee, Clerk of the Privy Council, collects these records and gets this money for himself in addition to his salary ?

Mr. FOSTER. He gets no part of the pay himself. The work is done by clerks under his supervision.

Collection of Revenue—Salaries of officers, and Inspectors of Excise.. $391,300

Mr. McMULLEN. I see there is a large increase here and we want some explanation.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The total increase is $11,023.75. The increase is made up in this way: Annual increments, $4,098.75; new appointments, $18,880; promotions, $2,543.75; unprovided for $1,976.25. Total increase in estimates $27,498.75. Then you deduct from that the total decreases as follows:—Superannuations, $9,412.50; over-estimated, $57.50; voted but not applied, $205; dropped, $4,800, that was in last year's estimate to provide for new appointments; for promotion examination, $2,000; total, $16,475, which taken from the $27,498.75, leaves a net increase of $11,023.75.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is it a fact that some of the employés recently discharged from the Interior Department on account of being over age, are now employed in the Excise Department.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not know of anyone employed in the Excise Department who was discharged from the Interior, or any other department?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. There were a number of clerks discharged from the Interior Department lately, and I understand that some of these clerks are now in the Inland Revenue Department.

Mr. COSTIGAN. There is one man, perhaps.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. If it was contrary to the regulations of the Civil Service Act that he should work in the Interior Department, does not the Civil Service Act apply to your department as well?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Oh, yes; and we try to live up to the terms of the Civil Service Act as well as possible. The law provides that each department has the power to employ a temporary clerk when there is a press of work for a period not exceeding a month. If it exceeds a month then you have got to get an Order in Council, and to see that the terms of the Civil Service Act are complied with. There is the case of one man who was employed for three weeks, a period of less than a month, and I think he was one of the men formerly in the Department of the Interior. He was engaged for three weeks for special work.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is he still employed?

Mr. COSTIGAN. If his three weeks are up he is no longer in the employ of the department.

Mr. McMULLEN. I understand the hon. gentleman to say that there were a number of superannuations in his department last year. Under what circumstances were these superannuations made?

Mr. COSTIGAN. In all cases the superannuations that have taken place in the Department of Inland Revenue have taken place on the report of the chief officer of the district in which the officers are located. It must be on a report that they are past the age of 60 and are incapacitated from performing their duties. I do not remember any case of superannuation under that age. Of course, the law provides that under that age, after a term of service of ten years, an officer may be superannuated on a medical certificate that he is incapacitated for service. The last case of superannuation I remember is that of a man who is nearly 80 years of age, an exciseman, who was continued until he was reported to be no longer fit to perform the duties, and he has been retired.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that the hon. gentleman superannuated A. B. Macdonald, deputy collector, who received $1,300 a year, who served 24 years, who had five years added to his time, and who gets a superannuation allowance of $721.80.

Mr. COSTIGAN. There were special circumstances which, I think, justified the addition of the five years in Mr. Macdonald's case. When I say the addition of five years, I may assure the House that any department must make a pretty good case to recommend the addition of even one year to the term of any officer's service. This man served more than the number of years I have stated. He was in the public service for a term that would place him beyond the maximum term of 35 years, but his service as deputy collector did not cover the 35 years. He was an assistant inspector of licenses for a number of years when that branch was a part of the Inland Revenue office; but those years were not counted to him, but in lieu of them we took account of the fact that his record was a good one, that he was appointed deputy collector many years ago at Toronto, and that for a great proportion of his time his salary was much below the salary fixed in the schedule for officers of the same rank.

Mr. McMULLEN. $1,300 a year is a fairly good salary for an assistant official of this kind. I can understand that in the case of the abolition of an office, there might be some ground for adding to the term of service; but when a man receives the good round sum of $1,300 a year for a number of years, I cannot see the justice of adding five years to his service. The hon. gentleman must remember that during the last year the increased drain on the superannuation fund is over $20,000, and I fancy that the aim of the Government ought to be in the direction of making that fund self-sustaining, instead of increasing it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in saying that this man was getting this round salary for a number of years. It was only the last two or three years that he got the full benefit of the salary. His claim was for the 35 years on the score of service, and he produced certificates to show where he had been employed. We did not recognize his claim, and he feels very sore about it, and he and his friends brought the case before the Treasury Board.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can easily understand him and his friends pressing his case. The hon. Minister says that he only got the full salary of $1,300 for the last two years. It must have been more than that, because the superannuation allowance must be based upon the average salary of the last three years.

Mr. COSTIGAN. He must have been receiving it for three years, but it was not more than three years.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I wish to ask the Minister if he applies the same rule in all cases? Mr. Samuel Grey, of Hamilton, was superannuated, I think, some time in July. He had no addition made to his term. He had served 25 years, while this man had only served 24 years.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The same rule applies, but the different cases have to be dealt with according to the circumstances. Mr. Grey did serve as long as Mr. Macdonald, but Mr. Grey had the highest salary he could get under the law from the date he entered the service until he left it. There was no special case to recommend additional years to him. If the hon. gentleman will go back, he will find that several superannuations have taken place. There is one later than that, the superannuation of a man who served longer than either of them, and does not get one year's increase.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Why was Mr. Grey superannuated?

Mr. COSTIGAN. On the report of the chief officer of that district that he was too old and physically unable to discharge his duties. He was long past the age.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What is the age?

Mr. COSTIGAN. At sixty, having served ten years, an officer is entitled to ask for superannuation, but he may pass sixty or seventy and not be superannuated. We have several men over seventy who are efficiently discharging their duties. They have not asked for superannuation, and we do not force it upon them so long as they continue to do their duty.

Mr. McMULLEN. Do I understand the Minister to say that at the age of sixty, with ten years' service, an officer is entitled to superannuation? As I understand the Act, it is only for ill-health or incapacity that he is entitled to superannuation at that age.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It may be granted or not, but he could not ask it before sixty.

Mr. FOSTER. It must be under the certificate of a doctor that he is not able to serve any longer.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is it not a fact that sometimes officials are appointed to the service far beyond the age when they might be superannuated?

Mr. COSTIGAN. From memory I could not state a case. I can only discuss my own department, and I do not think any man would be appointed to a position there after sixty years of age.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I rather think the worthy and esteemed friend of ours formerly a colleague, Mr. Ryan, must have been well over sixty when appointed collector of Customs at the port of Montreal.

Mr. COSTIGAN. He might have been.

Mr. FLINT. I am not able to find in the Inland Revenue Report the amount of revenue collected at some of the outports or districts included in the general district of Halifax. Are there not several of these ports in which more than the amount collected is paid in salaries, and would it not be advisable, if such be the case, and if it can be done without injury to the individuals at present in office, to so arrange that the duties at these outports should be performed by some other officials at a less cost?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Of course the report does not show the revenue in the different localities. It may occur that in some of the minor cases the salaries of the officers amount to more than the receipts, but some years ago, I did the best I could to meet that by introducing a section in the Inland Revenue Act giving us power in small places—and of course not only the collection of revenue but the convenience of the public has to be considered—where application is made for a bonded or excise warehouse, instead of appointing a special man to take charge, which would cost at least $500 per year, to appoint a public officer, usually an officer of Customs, and give him 5 per cent. on the collections up to a certain amount, and a smaller percentage when over that amount.

Mr. CASEY. Are the salaries of officers and inspectors fixed on any general principle as in the post office? Do they bear any definite relation to the amount of revenue collected? I notice that the salaries of collectors at some very important points differ very considerably. For instance, the collector at Winnipeg gets more than the collector at Halifax. I notice with regard to deputy collectors and others, that there are great differences in the sums paid, leading one to suppose there was some relation between the salaries and the amounts collected.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That would not be a fair basis on which to fix the salaries.

Mr. CASEY. I do not say it would, I was merely asking for information.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The whole Dominion is laid out in inspection districts, and these are sub-divided into divisions for collection, and the divisions are classified in seven different grades. One of the considerations is the amount of revenue, another is the extent of territory embraced, another the number of manufacturing establishments to be superintended. Montreal is fixed as class one and so is Winnipeg. The business in the Winnipeg division is very large, as it embraces the whole of Manitoba and the North-West Territories. An officer appointed in class one division would get the fixed minimum salary on appointment and the annual increment until he reached the maximum salary.

Mr. CASEY. What is the fixed minimum?

Mr. COSTIGAN. A collector in class one gets $1,800 to begin with; he gets lower in class two and still lower in class three; and the maximum is in the same proportion.

Mr. CASEY. I understand the Minister to say that the Winnipeg collector has authority over all Manitoba and the North-West Territories.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The inspector has authority, and the collector is collector for Manitoba and the North-West Territories.

Mr. CASEY. The inspector has no other office to inspect but one?

Mr. COSTIGAN. What is the hon. gentleman trying to make out? He must know that in Manitoba and the North-West Territories there must be more than one office. Collections take place at Brandon and Portage la Prairie. The breweries at Portage la Prairie have to be inspected. Then there are the weights and measures, and the officers under the Act to prevent adulteration of food and drugs.

Mr. CASEY. In what class is Halifax?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Second class.

Mr. CASEY. And Victoria, B.C.?

Mr. COSTIGAN. About the third class.

Mr. CASEY. Last year Mr. Jones, collector at Victoria, was only paid $800, while $1,600 was paid to Mr. Grant, the collector at Halifax, and $1,800 to Mr. Costigan, the collector at Winnipeg, and something over $2,000 to the collectors at Toronto and Montreal. At the same place, Victoria, the excisemen were paid $1,000 and the deputy collector was paid $1,200, or more than the collector.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. Jones is getting $800 for that service, but he is also paid as gas inspector, and also as weights and measures inspector, for each of which he receives additional pay.

Mr. CASEY. Oh, yes; I see he gets $1,600 altogether.

Mr. McMULLEN. How many excisemen are there in the Stratford division? I see there are Brown, and Cavan, and Nichols.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Officer Brown is not at Stratford but at Goderich. Excisemen are appointed for the Dominion, but if we send an excise officer into one province we do it as a matter of exchange and bring another from that province in his place. If an exciseman is appointed for the province he is utilzed wherever he is required. Mr. Brown may have been at Stratford, but he has been stationed at Goderich for some time past.

Mr. McMULLEN. What officers are stationed at Palmerston, where there is a malthouse and a brewery? I understand Mr. J. T. Nichols is there.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think Nichols is the only officer at Palmerston.

Mr. McMULLEN. There were two there, and I understood Mr. Nichols was in charge of the brewery.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think so, because he is deputy collector in that portion of the division, and I presume he is in charge.

Mr. McMULLEN. Perhaps the Minister is not aware that the brewery has been shut up for over eight months, and the officer is still there drawing his pay?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I cannot imagine that any of my officers would allow such a condition of affairs to exist, that a man should be in charge of a brewery which had been closed for eight months, without reporting it, unless the officer had some other duties to perform.

Mr. ALLISON. Is there any excise officer at Napanee?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. Elliott is the Customs inspector there, and, instead of appointing a special officer there to inspect gas, we allow him $100 for that purpose, and whatever Excise collections he makes he receives 5 per cent. for.

Mr. ALLISON. I see there is an appropriation of $1,000 for that officer.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is not an appropriation. I think that is in the Civil Service List, but that is a misprint.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Does the same system prevail in the Excise Department with regard to seizures and the payment of fees to officers as prevails in the Customs Department? The Auditor General's Report shows the list of seizures.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The general policy is about the same, I presume, in both departments; in working it out in matters of detail, there may be a little difference. There is this difference, that no officer in the Inland Revenue service above the rank of special class exciseman can participate in the proceeds of any seizure; no man in the position of deputy clerk or collector, or inspector, or any higher grade officer, can have any personal interest in any seizure. As for the minor officers, we allow a certain proportion to go to them when they make the seizure, and a certain amount to go to the informant, and the balance goes to the treasury.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The result is, that the higher officers never make seizures; the junior officers are allowed to make all the seizures in order to get the fees.

Mr. COSTIGAN. My reason for making that change was not at all to produce the effect the hon. gentleman supposes. I am satisfied from my experience that the practice works well. The higher grade officers are supposed to be men of integrity, having an interest in the service, sworn to do their duty, and they are paid fair salaries therefor. They do take an interest, and their record shows they have taken an interest in such matters, to see that the law is obeyed in their divisions. But the minor officers, the men sent out, and who do most of the work, receive small salaries; they occupy minor positions in the service, and can well receive a portion of the proceeds of such seizures without prejudice to the service, or to the public officers of higher grade, who receive very good salaries and require no special inducements. They are, therefore, men of more independence, and better able to give a decision as between the public and the revenue, than those who have an interest in the seizure.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Do the higher officers decide in regard to the seizure?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Very often they have to. They would have to report to headquarters if any question came up, and their report would have a great deal of influence with the department. They, being paid their salaries, being sworn to do their duty and protect the revenue, having regard also for the interest of the party seized, would have no other interest than to see that the law was carried out, and that the goods, if properly seized, should be forfeited to the Crown, or if improperly seized, through the interest the lower officer might have, they would see that the seizure was improperly made, perhaps made too hastily, or without sufficient grounds, and they would be in a more independent position to report to the head of the department.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think the Minister is right, and if this course is pursued, as the Minister says, the higher officer has to act as judge with regard to these matters.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to remind the Minister that one of his officers, Mr. Craig, died suddenly the other day at Peterborough. Is any gratuity to be allowed to his family?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The law gives us power to give to the widow or family of any officer dying in the service, a gratuity not to exceed two months' salary. It is done in all cases. It will be done in this case; I think it has passed the Council now.

Mr. CASEY. Can the Minister assure us that this large item for salaries includes all the salaries that are paid this year?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. It appears that last year some very important salaries that should have been provided for in the Estimates, were paid out of general excise contingencies. Salary of chief inspector, H. Godson, $2,800, was paid out of general excise contingencies; also the salary of John Davis, inspector of distilleries, $2,800, with travelling expenses, $1,315; also salary of W. J. Gerald, inspector of tobacco factories, was paid out of this fund, along with a lot of other items, including the British American Bank Note Company for stamps.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman is giving me information. I do not know where he gets it.

Mr. CASEY. I get it from the Auditor General's Report, page 269—C, under the heading of General Excise Contingencies.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The inspector is on the regular staff, of course.

Mr. CASEY. You will find it under the heading "General Excise Contingencies."

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is not salary at all, that is contingencies.

Mr. CASEY. It is marked salary here.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is a mistake in the report.

Mr. CASEY. This is our official document.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Oh, well, you may find an error in any document. I tell the hon. gentleman, if he well looked at the accounts in the Estimates of last year, he will find that Godson's salary, and the other salaries named there, are provided in the bulk sum of salaries for last year. The question asked by the hon. gentleman, in voting this bulk sum is does it cover all salaries? I say it does, and the salaries that are mentioned there have never been paid out of contingencies. The sum asked here covers Mr. Godson's salary, and he has not been paid out of contingencies, nor will he be paid out of contingencies. It is simply a mistake.

Mr. CASEY. I think this is very unlikely to be a mistake.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am sorry the hon. gentleman cannot accept my statement.

Mr. CASEY. We find all the other salaries under their proper headings. The salaries of the different collecting districts are put down in their proper places. Here, under General Excise Contingencies, we find these salaries and a lot of small matters about law costs, and a very big item which I cannot very well refer to under this heading. It would appear as if the vote last year for salaries had been exhausted.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I tell the hon. gentleman it is a mistake, it must be a mistake. These men have been paid in the regular way out of the money voted by Parliament, and I take the responsibility of asserting that here in my place as head of the department. I will have an assurance from the Auditor General for to-morrow that I am right in this.

Mr. CASEY. If a mistake of that kind is possible in the Auditor General's account, the matter should certainly be brought to his attention.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will do so.

Mr. CASEY. He could explain how it came to be so charged. I do not doubt for a moment that the Minister is stating what he believes to be true about the matter, but it appears to me that the Auditor, who has been through the accounts, would be better informed than the Minister who has no personal knowledge about these accounts. As I do not see elsewhere reference to Excise Contingencies I may now refer to them, especially to the large amount paid to the British American Bank Note Company for stamps, $22,800. Surely, the department should be able to estimate more closely than that the quantity of stamps required during the year. An unexpected expenditure must come under the head of contingencies, but not such an item as this.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The question of printing is regulated by contract with the different departments. On one or two occasions we have had increased expenditure, on account of changes involved in amending the law. This work is done by contract, and the contract will expire very shortly.

Mr. CASEY. How did it happen that in 1890 we required $22,000 odd more stamps than the department had estimated?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Simply because the estimate was reduced to the lowest possible amount and it was not found sufficient to cover the expenditure under the contract. We have a contract at fixed prices and we have the power to regulate or reduce the prices, and a reduction took place in two of the departments a few years ago, so we are obtaining the stamps at the lowest possible rate. During last year the amount of stamps actually used was larger than was provided in the estimate.

Mr. CASEY. This is the only payment I find for stamps from the Bank Note Company.

Mr. COSTIGAN. No; there is a general appropriation for stamps. This was a special case.

Mr. CASEY. I do not find them anywhere except under the head of contingencies.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes; there is an annual appropriation.

Mr. CASEY. Then this is only an excess of the cost above what was estimated?

Mr. COSTIGAN. An excess of quantity above the estimate.

Mr. CASEY. You do not bind yourselves to take any fixed quantity?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No.

Mr. CASEY. Then a great many more stamps were required than was expected. Can the Minister explain to what circumstances this increased issue is due?

Mr. COSTIGAN. To a change in the Act, I presume. On making enquiries, I find it is due to a re-arrangement of the item. A lump sum of $70,000 was placed in the Estimates for rent, fuel, travelling expenses and stamps. This was objected to by the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) and this year the items were separated, something over $20,000 being put down for stamps and $50,000 for rent, fuel and travelling expenses.

Mr. CASEY. Then there should be a reduction under the head of travelling expenses, rent and fuel, of the amount of the stamps now estimated by themselves. Is that the case?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes; and there is a decrease of $5,000.

Mr. CASEY. This is the whole amount paid for stamps, and the Minister was mistaken in supposing it to be an extra amount.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I said it was an extra amount and caused in the way I stated.

Mr. CASEY. So that last year the amount under the head of contingencies included rent, travelling expenses, stamps, &c. I see a reduction has been made in the amount for rent, fuel, &c. The Minister having been mistaken in regard to the stamps, he may possibly be mistaken in regard to the salaries, and I think he will find that such is the case. This leads me to the general question of contingencies, and to point out that too much is left under the head of contingencies. The amount in this case was $44,000. Under that item we find stamps and salaries of permanent officers. This system allows a latitude to the Minister that it is not intended he should possess, because it always gives rise to adverse criticism. He is following the right course in having stamps separated. I hope he will see that nothing but contingencies are paid out of this vote during the present year.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What is the reason that no tabulated statement showing the consumption of liquor per capita in the various provinces has been published this year? There is merely a statement for the whole Dominion, but it used to be given by provinces. Why has the change been made?

Mr. COSTIGAN. My attention was called to the fact by the Commissioner, and I agreed with him that it would be better not to continue that set of figures, for the reason that information is only valuable if it is correct. It would be impossible to get correct information from returns made up in that way, because it would show a greater consumption in some provinces than actually took place, and as you cannot get the correct figures it is better not to undertake to get the details. Our means of knowing what is consumed in the provinces is by ascertaining where the duty is paid. In Montreal, for instance, the liquor business is on a large scale, and the compounders and manufacturers send the liquor to Ontario and Quebec, while the duty being paid in Montreal it would be entered as being consumed in the Province of Quebec. That would give no accurate idea of the consumption in the Province of Quebec, and we discontinued this table as there was nothing in the law to bind us to give other than the fullest information possible.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. That system has been followed ever since Confederation.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If the system was imperfect that would be no reason for continuing it. If the hon. gentleman agrees with me in the reasons I have given he will see that the information could not be correct.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It is doing an injustice to the parts of the Dominion which have the Scott Act in force. You classify the Scott Act districts with other portions of the Dominion, and consequently the consumption per capita is reduced all over the Dominion to the disadvantage, in comparison, of the Scott Act districts where they do not consume the liquor at all.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is taken for granted that liquor is not consumed in Scott Act districts.

Mr. CASEY. The same remark applies to the collection of Customs. We know that the goods entered at Montreal are consumed in other portions of the Dominion, but yet, we very properly I think have a statement of the goods entered at Montreal. There is no reason why the same figures should not be given in the case of the Excise.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The cases are different.

Mr. CASEY. I quite agree with the hon. Minister that it would not be fair to give percentages for each province on the basis of the amount of liquor entered for consumption in that province, but it is necessary in order to our correct comprehension of where the revenue comes from, that we should have a full statement of the quantity of liquors entered at Excise in each port of the Dominion. If the figures are necessary to show the amount of Customs collected at each port, it is equally so with regard to Excise.

Mr. COSTIGAN. They are two different things.

Mr. CASEY. I cannot see that they are different.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If the hon. gentleman cannot see it I do.

Mr. CASEY. They are the two most important matters in our revenue, and we have a perfect right to know the amount collected at each port. Unless you show the quantity entered you cannot tell whether the proper amount of duty is collected upon it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. We can tell that very easily. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to put the case in this way? He says there is no reason why this table should not be issued, because the Customs Department issues it, but the Customs Department does not issue anything of the kind. They show exactly what our department shows, but the Customs statistics do not show the proportion of the different articles entered which are consumed in each province. It shows the collection of revenue, but it does not show where the articles are consumed, and we do not undertake to say that a certain percentage was consumed in this province or in another province.

Mr. CASEY. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman as to the percentages.

Mr. FLINT. The matter under discussion leads me to make a remark, although I do not see precisely under what head the remark, perhaps, would be technically proper. The report is very interesting, and for many years I have made a point of studying it with some care; but I think it would be improved if the department would insert in it a table of the receipts at each point where there is a collector or a deputy collector. In order to ascertain what is going on at any particular point, the enquirer has to go over a great many items and pages, and even then it is impossible, without communication with the department, to get at the items of revenue and expenditure at all the different points. Some such table, which would not cost much, would be of great value to students of these matters throughout the country. I had some correspondence with the department in regard to the matter mentioned by the hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville), and I must say that I was impressed by the position taken by the Minister, and I am inclined to agree with him that it was scarcely fair to some communities to charge them with a greater consumption of liquor than it would be reasonable to suppose them likely to consume, and it might also be flattering to other communities to have their consumption appear unduly light. I cannot see how the department could give accurate figures in that respect. The same argument would apply to the receipt of goods at certain ports for Customs. A great deal of ingenuity has been displayed by statisticians and others in the endeavour to ascertain the consumption of duty-paid goods in different provinces in the Dominion. I believe it to be a problem almost beyond correct solution, and I think it is perhaps as well that the department dropped those statistics unless they are prepared to guarantee their substantial correctness. I would urge on the Minister that, if convenient, in the next report a table be given of the points at which revenue is paid, carrying out the details across the page as to the quantities received or entered at that port, and the amount of duty paid. I think it would be very interesting, valuable and helpful to the members of this House and to students of the Act throughout the country.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think the suggestion of the hon. gentleman is worthy of serious consideration, and it will receive it.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. At page E—28 of the Auditor General's Report, a man named C. Curless is credited with receiving for his share of the seizures $1,101.99, more than half of the total amount paid to all the officers for seizures, and his place of residence is not mentioned at all. How does that come? What port does he belong to?

Mr. COSTIGAN. He is not attached to any port. He is one of the most energetic preventive officers we have, and if he receives more than half the total amount, it is because he makes more than half the seizures. He is sent to many difficult places where few men would go at the risk of their lives. He is a very trustworthy man, who discharges his duty fairly and moderately but determinedly, and he has made more seizures than any officers we have. If, for instance, there are reports of illicit distilling in the North-West he goes there, and he also goes to the Maritime Provinces. His home is in New Brunswick. He is the chief preventive officer who is employed continuously.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is he an officer in the department here?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No; he has nothing to do with the department here.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Where does he draw his regular salary?

Mr. COSTIGAN. His salary is forwarded to him wherever he happens to be at work. He is not stationed anywhere. He is sent from one point to another according to the information received at the department.

Mr. CASEY. I regret that I made a mistake in reading a letter addressed to the Customs Department instead of the Excise, by the Auditor General. The terms are so similar that I made the mistake. It appears that on 29th April the Auditor General wrote to the Department of Inland Revenue requiring that each officer in receipt of public moneys from that department should furnish regularly to the department a certified copy of his cash book, showing in detail the several amounts received by him and the deposits made in acquittance, and stating that these returns after having been examined and certified by the department, should be forwarded to the Auditor General, accompanied by a certified summary; and he points out that he had written on the 5th of March, 1889, submitting observations in connection with the audit and examination of Excise revenue, to which he says, "I have not had any official reply." On 17th September, 1890, he writes again, referring to the previous letters and enclosing a copy of a Treasury Minute on the subject. There is an answer on 21st October, 1890, from Wm. Himsworth, secretary, referring to the request for a statement of arrears, and saying that there were no arrears; but I find no answer at all to the two communications from the Auditor General to which I have referred. Again on 17th November, the Auditor General wrote enclosing a statement of the receipts and expenditures on account of seizures, and he says:

"In some cases the expenditure of a district is in excess of the receipts, in other cases there is expenditure without any receipts, and the total expenditure exceeds the total receipts. To avoid misconceptions I have to ask you to explain how this arises, and I will publish your reply with the statement."

As there is no reply published here with the statement, I presume there was no reply given. Mr. Miall wrote, however, on 20th November pointing out with regard to seizures alone that sometimes seizures made in one year were not realized upon until the next. That was no answer to the question how the general expenditures of a district came to be in excess of the receipts, and I give the Minister an opportunity of explaining that.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The only explanation I can give is that we are bound to make the seizures, and sometimes the cost of making them amounts to more than the revenue collected. We try to prevent illicit distilling or the infraction of the law in any way, though we may not be able to recover one dollar of the penalty imposed by the courts. It is easy to account for the expenditure exceeding the receipts.

Mr. CASEY. With regard to the other points.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I cannot give particulars from memory, but will give the information later on.

Mr. CASEY. Will the Minister have explanations from the Auditor General, when we next go into Supply, about salaries charged to general contingencies?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

To provide for extra duty-pay of officers at large distilleries and factories....$5,000

Mr. McMULLEN. The Excise officers at these large places are paid very respectable salaries, from $1,200 to $1,600 a year, and I do not see why it should be necessary to spend this money on extra services.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The salaries alluded to now are to officers of the higher rank, but we pay—and Parliament has accepted the reasons given for it—an additional amount to the officers connected with these distilleries on account of the fact that they work late and early at these places. They work longer hours than any other officers in any other branch of the service. As for the salaries, I think they are very low indeed, as regards the chief officers connected with the distilleries. You may say what you like, but the department has really but little control. Parliament may say how much duty shall be charged, but one of these officers has it within his power to defraud the Government to an enormous extent, and I think it good policy to give fair salaries, even larger than are usually given, in order to lessen the prospect of temptation. Parliament may fix the duty, but they measure the gallons and determine on how many duty shall be paid, so that it is in their power to defraud the Government, if they could be tempted or if the men in business would tempt them. Fortunately, we have had no accusations made, or reasons to suspect anything of the kind.

Mr. CASEY. It would be hard to find out if any fraud were committed, so much depends on the honesty of the officer.

Mr. COSTIGAN. There were two or three found out some years ago.

Mr. CASEY. I agree that the salaries of the men directly in charge of distilleries should be such that they will not be easily tempted, because temptation, no doubt, will come in their way. What bonds are required of them?

Mr. COSTIGAN. $2,000 and sureties for an equal amount.

Mr. CASEY. This is hardly enough. In financial institutions, officers controlling perhaps not more than $100,000 a year or $200,000 have to give bonds from $10,000 to $30,000, and these men in charge of the distilleries could defraud to a much greater extent than that. It would be better that their bonds should be increased, and it would pay the Government to give them a little, perhaps a good deal, more salary.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will promise to look into the increase of the bonds, but not into the increase of the salaries, and I am glad to have had the hon. gentleman's suggestion.

To pay Collectors of Customs allowance on duties collected by them.....$3,500

Mr. McMULLEN. I must say this is an item which, in my humble opinion, we ought not to pay. Where you have collectors of Customs drawing salaries of $1,200 to $1,500 a year, they should be required to perform any little duties in connection with the Inland Revenue, or any other department, without extra pay. I cannot understand why men engaged by the country should, because you ask them to step outside their little sphere of duty, demand increased pay. This system has not been inaugurated very long, but the civil servants appear to be getting aware of it, and a number of them are making demands. I do not think we should encourage this system. Last year there were 480 claims allowed for extra pay and this year there are over 600. We are paying about $120,000 to $130,000, for extra services to men already well salaried.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Before the Act was amended, when we required the services of an officer we were obliged to appoint one, and you could not appoint a man as Excise officer at less than $500. I had the law amended by taking the power, in small places where it was necessary to have some duties performed, instead of appointing an officer with a salary, to impose the duties on a Customs officer and give him 5 per cent. Theoretically speaking, it is very fine to say that we might impose these duties on the collectors at those places. The collector would reply that he had his work to attend to and could not leave his office, but when we give him the additional 5 per cent. he will undertake to do the two duties, and the country is the gainer.

To enable the department to supply methylated spirits to manufactories, the cost of which will be recouped by the manufacturers to whom they are supplied.....$5,000

Mr. FLINT. Does the department undertake to manufacture methylated spirits, and if so, where

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes; here in Ottawa.

Mr. FLINT. Are private parties allowed to import methylated spirits, from the United States, for instance?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The manufacture of methylated spirits was formerly allowed, but it became an abuse. They are manufactured from wood alcohol mixed with ordinary spirits. We found that by allowing them to be manufactured indiscriminately, we were losing control of the manufacture, and that it was to a large extent replacing potable spirits. Still, scientific institutions required methylated spirits, and we undertook to import the wood alcohols, and buy the spirits and manufacture it ourselves, and distribute it to the manufactories. We have made such a large profit on this that we are now bound to reduce the price, as we have no desire to make a profit on it, but I promised Parliament at the time I introduced the measure that the country should not suffer from any deficit.

Mr. FLINT. I received my information from a trader who had evidently undertaken to import methylated spirits, and he said he was not allowed to have them, even if he paid the duty.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Methylated spirits could not be imported from the United States, because they do not make them there, but they could be imported from England if it were not that the duty is so high that they could not compete with us, as we sell them for the cost and charges.

Mr. SPROULE. It became common some time ago for druggists to use methylated spirits instead of proof spirits, but now it is not legal for them to keep methylated spirits.

Resolutions reported.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 11.25 p. m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 8th September, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FEMALE OFFENDERS IN NOVA SCOTIA.

Bill (No. 143) respecting certain female offenders in the Province of Nova Scotia was again considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

DUTIES OF CUSTOMS.

Mr. FOSTER moved that it be an instruction to the Committee on Bill (No. 155) to amend the Acts respecting the Duties of Customs, that they have power to make provision therein in accordance with the resolutions adopted by the House on the 24th August last, in reference to Customs duties on ale, beer, and porter.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would ask the hon. gentleman that as it is arranged that we shall have a day's notice for the third reading, I would like to say Thursday next if it is convenient.

Mr. FOSTER. We will put it through Committee to-day and let it stand for the third reading on Thursday.

Bill considered in Committee and reported.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 146) further to amend the Dominion Elections Act.—(Sir John Thompson.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). This clause of the Bill I had the honour to introduce in a separate Bill at the beginning of the session. Its sole object was to prevent frauds such as were perpetrated under the law as it formerly stood. Under the provision allowing an agent to vote in another polling sub-division than the one where the qualifying property was situated, it was found that numerous frauds were perpetrated. There was no special form of oath that the returning officer could administer to him. The voters' list could not be shown to him, and he could not therefore be asked if that was his name on the list. To get over the difficulty, so as to compel agents, deputy returning officers and poll clerks to give an honest vote, I proposed to amend that section by making it compulsory upon them to take the ordinary form of oath before they could get the certificate from the returning officer of their right to vote in a polling sub-division other than that where the property qualification lay. I am sorry that the hon. Minister of Justice has not adopted the form of oath which I appended to my section of Bill No. 9—the hon. gentleman has eliminated that, and introduced a new form of oath which does not seem to me to cover the difficulty at all. Thus the Minister of Justice requires the agent to take an oath that he is actually entitled to vote. I say that is not particular or specific enough. His name may be upon the voters' list, and yet he may not have the right to vote. He may be a minor, an alien, he may have been bribed; and in any of these cases, under this form of oath, he could take it with impunity. I can see no good reason for the change the Minister of Justice has made. I can see no reason why the form of oath the ordinary voter has to take should not form part of this section, and be a condition to the agent obtaining from the returning officer a certificate enabling him to vote elsewhere than where his property qualification lies. I trust the Minister of Justice will still go back to the form of oath appended to section 2 of the Bill I had the honour to introduce, Bill No. 9 I made the voter swear he was a bonâ fide voter. The hon. gentleman has changed that into "actually entitled to vote." He may have changed that because a great many people would not understand what bonâ fide voter means. So much the better; it will be more terrifying. The use of words, Latin, French, Greek, or German, strikes terror into them. They think there is something terrible behind, and I think, upon the whole, it would be better to leave the oath as I worded it. It is the form of the words in the old oath, and I can see no reason for changing it. In one of the polling divisions of my election in 1887, six votes were polled by agents, only one of whom had a right to vote, but under the mode of swearing they were at liberty to put in their votes. This oath is an improvement on the law as it stood, but it is not sufficiently distinct and specific.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. What I propose in regard to section 2 is this: The long first sub-section is a repetition of the present law except the last words.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The whole of section 44?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Section 44 is repeated here with the addition that a man shall not have the right to vote at a polling station other than where he is entitled to vote, unless he has been actually engaged as deputy returning officer, poll clerk, or agent, as the case may be. What I propose is that we shall not repeat that section at all, but that we shall say at section 2: Section 44 of the said Act, as amended by the Act 51 Victoria, chapter 11, is amended by adding thereto the following sub-section; and then come down to sub-section number 2, leaving out the paragraph which is numbered 44. The reason is this: The only object of re-enacting that paragraph is to provide this test, that he shall have been actually engaged as deputy returning officer, &c., before he shall have the right to vote. Under that clause, as it is framed, even the oath itself would not suffice, for a man would actually have no right to vote unless he could prove the fact that he had been so engaged. Of course he cannot prove that at the beginning of the poll, and that is the time when these officers generally vote; that is to say, the poll clerk and the deputy returning officers, and, generally speaking, the agents too. It does not seem to me we ought to establish that test. As to the reason why I did not follow the hon. gentleman's draft of oath, I found it too cumbersome and obscure. The hon. gentleman says that the Latin it contains has terrors for the evil-doers, but I do not think so. I think it is for the innocent and conscientious voter that obscure language in an oath has terrors, and we ought not to prevent their voting. The wrong-doer will swallow the words, whether he understands them or not. The hon. gentleman's form of oath runs thus:

"I., A. B., of &c. (deputy returning officer or poll clerk or agent, as the case may be) for C. D., one of the candidates at the election for the House of Commons for the electoral district of , do solemnly swear that I am a bonâ fide voter, and by law entitled to vote for a member for the said House of Commons for the said electoral district at the present election.

"That I have been duly and bonâ fide appointed such (deputy returning officer, poll clerk or agent, as the case may be), and not merely for the purpose of enabling me to vote at a polling station other than the one where I am entitled to vote.

"That I intend to act, and will act at the present election as such (deputy returning officer, poll clerk or agent)."

My objection, besides the words bonâ fide, are these: He has to swear that he is a bonâ fide voter and by law entitled to vote for a member of the House of Commons. But the returning officer settles that when he gives him a certificate. He ascertains where he is entitled to vote, and if his name is on the list he is surely entitled to vote. You make him say further that he has been duly and bonâ fide appointed. Many of these persons do not get their appointments directly from the candidate but from the candidate's agent or the secretary of the organization, as the case may be, and know nothing whatever of the appointment except that they receive it in good faith and act upon it. If you make them swear that they have been appointed bonâ fide by the candidate, you virtually make them swear to the bonâ fides of another man, which is very unreasonable. Then, again, he must swear that he has been appointed, not merely for the purpose of enabling him to vote at that poll. So that he has to declare on oath the intention of the man who appointed him. It seems to me we ought to leave sub-section 2 as I have said, and sub-section 3 ought to read:

"Every person so appointed deputy returning officer, poll clerk or agent, entitled to vote by virtue of such certificate, shall before voting take oath to the following effect:—I do swear that I am actually entitled to vote for a member of the House of Commons for this electoral district at the present election."

That gives the requirements which the hon. gentleman wants as to qualification and so on, and covers his bonâ fides and so on. We ought not to require him to swear, for instance, that he has acted, or, as the hon. gentleman says, that he intends to act and will act. If you take the hon. gentleman's clause as a whole, you will find that he requires as a test of eligibility to vote on the part of the persons holding these certificates, that they have been bonâ fide appointed, that they intend to act, that they will act, and that they have acted. One class of the provisions prevents the officer from voting at the opening of the poll because he cannot swear that he has acted, and the oath prevents him from voting at the close of the poll because he has to swear he will act. I think we ought to have it as simple as possible, and it is sufficient if we make him swear that he has the qualifications of a voter.

Mr. LAURIER. It seems to me the amendment of the hon. gentleman meets the case. Perhaps it would remove many difficulties if it were provided that this oath would not prevent a man from being subjected to the ordinary oath of the voter, because though on the list he may not be qualified as a voter.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have no objection to add: "In addition to any other oaths he may be required to take."

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). He cannot be required to take any other oath. You will have to change the form of oath in the Election Act. At present the person has to swear that his name is that which appears on the voters' list shown to him, but an agent voting in another polling place than that in which he is registered would not be shown the list on which his name appeared. You can get out of that by adding another section providing an oath of a suitable character.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. What we are requiring is that these persons shall take this oath in addition to any other oath which may be required by the law. The certificate shows from what division the voter is transferred.

Mr. SPEAKER. The certificate given to an agent, or a deputy returning officer, or a polling clerk entitling him to vote in a sub-division other than the one in which he appears on the voters' list contains the number of the sub-division in which he is entitled to vote, and I think that certificate becomes part of the list in the polling sub-division where he does vote.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). There is no form of oath provided for that case.

Mr. SPEAKER. He has to take the same form of oath as the others.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Act prescribes that the voter may be called upon to take this oath, but he may also take the other oaths mentioned in the Act.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). There is no doubt about that in the case where the voter lives in the polling sub-division, but, if the hon. gentleman's argument is correct, his amendment is unnecessary, because that is the law at present. In 1887, when I was defeated, there were agents at three sub-divisions who voted. My agent required them to be sworn, but the deputy returning officer declared, and he was sustained in that, that he had no power to swear them under those circumstances. I intended to take proceedings, but I consulted some of the most able lawyers in the province. There is no form that was applicable to that case, hence the necessity for this amendment. If the hon. gentleman's construction of the law is correct there is no necessity for it at all, and we ought not to make the amendment simply because the amendment is asked for.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I agree that it is not necessary. I have seen these oaths put time and again to agents, and I have known agents to refuse to take them, and because they could not take them their votes were rejected. But the hon. gentleman tells me that others hold a different view, and for that reason I am putting in this Act that they shall take oaths which could not be put to an ordinary elector.

Mr. BARRON. So far as I understand, the only point of difference is this: That the oath proposed by the Minister of Justice is applicable to a man who presents himself as an agent, for the reason that his name is not on the list of voters with regard to which list that affidavit applies. Now he is asked to swear that he is the man whose name is on that list of voters.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No, on the list of voters for the polling district. He may be voting in No. 1, and he is on the list of No. 100, and he will swear that he is on the list of voters for No. 100.

Mr. BARRON. But the hon. gentleman must concede that the deputy returning officer only has power to administer the oath in regard to the particular list of voters which he has in hand, and in regard to which list he is empowered to have jurisdiction as deputy returning officer, as the one authorized to have jurisdiction in regard to that particular polling division.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is nothing of the kind in the Act.

Mr. BARRON. It seems to me that is so. I think the Minister refers particularly to the list of voters in addition to the list where he is empowered to act. He has no power to act in regard to a polling division 160 miles away; he has only power to act in polling division No. 1, but the deputy administers the oath, and he cannot ask him if he is on the list of voters of polling division No. 1 at all, because he has no power in regard to that. Now, this is a serious matter, because I know of my own knowledge that men have presented themselves as agents in polling division No. 1, for instance, which is 60 miles away from another polling division, No. 100, and they vote. It seems to me the difficulty is this: The deputy returning officer has no power to administer that particular oath to the agent who votes in another polling division, and in regard to the list of which other division he has no authority over.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). If the hon. gentleman is correct—and I do not think he is—I see no objection to putting in, in addition to the affidavit he now proposes, a second clause compelling the voter who proposes to vote at a polling sub-division other than where his qualification is to take an oath that he is duly qualified for his own sub-division.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have no objection in doing that. It is exactly what I thought I was doing. But if the hon. gentleman thinks it can be done in a better form, I will accept it. I ask that sub-section 56 of section 2 be amended by striking out all the words after "parcels" in the 8th line and substituting the following words:—

Shall be endorsed so as to indicate their contents, and shall be sealed by the deputy returning officer, and shall be initialled with the initials of any agents present in the booth, who are willing so to do, across the flap thereof, and shall then be put back in the ballot box.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). If the object is to prevent tampering with the envelope, I fear this will not be secured by using ordinary mucilage. If this is used, an envelope can be easily opened and closed without discovery. If it was stated that wax should be used, that would afford some protection. The amendment is a capital one and affords some protection for honesty in dealing with the ballots.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is very important that the envelopes should be sealed with wax. In the case of the ballot stuffing that occurred in South Grey, during the examination before the judge it was found that those envelopes sealed with wax were not opened, while those sealed with simple mucilage had been opened and tampered with. I hope, moreover, that indelible pencils will not be used, but that the ordinary pencil will be substituted. The reason is that if indelible pencil is used it makes a double mark, one mark being opposite the other candidate's name. So it appears as if the elector had voted for both candidates. No doubt the writing of the names of the scrutineers across the envelopes will be a protection, and I hope the suggestion in these other two particulars will be adopted.

Mr. BARRON. This amendment is a very proper one. If I remember rightly, it is practically the amendment I suggested myself; but the Minister will see that I provided that the envelopes should be sealed with wax.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. BARRON. I was criticised a good deal because I proposed to give the returning officer so much trouble. As sealing wax is given to the officers, it would be very little trouble to seal the envelopes with it, and also to use a stamp if they have one.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Without insisting on the use of sealing wax, we will undoubtedly prevent fraud by having five or six persons write their names across the envelope, for it will be absolutely impossible to open such an envelope without detection. The difficulty of absolutely acquiring sealing wax is that these duties would have to be performed by a great many persons who do not use sealing wax from one end of their lives to the other. If we may say that "he shall seal it," it enables him to use sealing wax, and if any of the agents insist on that and give him sealing wax, it can be used. That can be left to the candidates themselves.

Mr. BARRON. I think the suggestion of the Minister of Justice, to enable the agents to insist on the using sealing wax if it is there, is a good one. If you insist on an officer doing a thing by statute, and if innocently he should not do it, it leaves everything open to suspicion.

Mr. CASEY. I cannot quite agree with my hon. friend in that. I think that sealing wax should be provided and its use made obligatory, as in the case of the provincial elections in Ontario, where I am not aware that any returning officer has been found incapable of using the sealing wax. If he is not accustomed to use sealing wax himself, there would no doubt be somebody present who would show him how. I would also suggest that a small stamp with some plain device, such perhaps as the outlines of a Crown which is used by members here might be supplied with which to make an impression on the seal. It is quite possible to break a plain seal and replace it with another daub of wax which would have practically the same appearance, but if the stamp were provided it would be a great improvement. The writing of the name across the flap of the envelope is in itself no protection. It might serve to deter people from trying to experiment on opening the envelope, but once it was opened there would be no difficulty in closing it again so that the different portions of the name would match just as originally written. I would strongly urge on the Minister the necessity of making it imperative that sealing wax should be used, and that the wax should be stamped, which is the only absolute security that we can have. As to the argument that requiring things that would not be done would leave it open to suspicion, I think that the proposal to leave it optional with the agent to insist on sealing wax being used would much more tend to complicate matters. I think the only safe plan is to make the use of sealing wax and a stamp obligatory.

Mr. LANDERKIN. There is another matter of paramount importance to this. When the deputy returning officers have placed the ballots of the respective candidates in their respective envelopes, they seal them and they are then taken to the returning officer. The returning officer, the day appointed, counts the statements for the respective candidates and declares whoever has the majority elected, but it is just as important then that the envelope should be sealed with wax, if not sealed already, because, between the declaration and the recount, if a recount is asked for, these envelopes may be opened and the ballots tampered with. Ballots may be stolen and forged, and the results changed, and when it goes before a judge he is in a dilemma, because it is almost impossible for him to diagnose between the fraudulent and genuine ballots. It is quite as necessary after the returning officer has made his declaration that all precaution should be taken.

Mr. TROW. The hon. gentleman is entirely wrong in reference to the returning officer opening the ballots. He has nothing to do with that, as he only takes the certificate of the deputy returning officers. The hon. gentleman is entirely astray in his calculation.

Mr. LANDERKIN. In case some of them come to him without being sealed, it should be imperative on the returning officer that they should be sealed, so that no difficulty would arise. I quite understand the duties of a returning officer as well as my hon. friend.

Mr. TROW. You did not say so.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am speaking of those envelopes that are not sealed when they are sent to the returning officer. If the sealing is neglected in the first instance, they should be sealed by the returning officer, and he should understand how to use sealing wax. The difficulty may arise with the ballots, after the declaration, and between that and the time of a recount, if a recount is demanded.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). There is no doubt there is a good deal in what the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) says in reference to the subject we are discussing now. I believe that the law ought to be more specific and more stringent with respect to the ballots in the boxes after the poll is closed, and I believe that the law should be far more stringent with respect not only to the ballots in the boxes, but to the ballot boxes themselves up to the last moment. What we are discussing now is, how best to protect the ballots that are closed in the envelopes put into the ballot boxes. The Minister of Justice admits by his amendment that the law requires to be more stringent than it is now, and admitting that, it is his duty, and the duty of Parliament, to surround these ballots with every protection that the law can possibly surround them with. I submit for his consideration whether or not enclosing them in an ordinary common envelope with the ordinary mucilage is the kind of protection that the hon. gentleman desires to have. The hon. gentleman thinks that permitting the agents of the respective candidates to write their names across the envelopes sufficient protection, but I venture to say that if the hon. gentleman will write his name across an envelope he will find that the envelope can be opened and sealed again without leaving any trace whatever of its having been tampered with. This is not a question of politics. This is a question that affects everybody, and what may benefit one side to-day may be a benefit to the other side to-morrow. The object of all ought to be to protect these envelopes inviolate from the inroads of men who disregard the law. I believe, so far as I have been able to see, that the best way is to make it compulsory that the deputy returning officer shall seal the envelopes with sealing wax. I do not believe in what my hon. friend (Mr. Casey) says about using some device or seal, because that goes into the possession of the deputy returning officer and if he desires to act a fraudulent part he can again easily open the envelope and use the same device, thus concealing the evidence of his own fraud. I would sooner that the deputy returning officer would seal it with his thumb than with a device, because we might have some guarantee then that the seal was not tampered with.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He would not be likely to do it again.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). That would depend on how hot the sealing wax was. In any event the sealing of the letter with sealing wax is a much greater guarantee of safety than the sealing in the ordinary way with mucilage. I think the Minister of Justice will see the necessity of devising some scheme by which the envelope cannot be tampered with without it being known. The hon. gentleman must realize thoroughly the necessity of this. The disclosures that were made at the last general election in two or three counties were simply shocking. Envelopes were opened and ballot boxes were tampered with to the injury of somebody, and it is not creditable to the statesmen of Canada that they cannot devise some mode by which not only the ballots themselves, but the boxes in which the ballots are contained shall remain safe until the last moment they are required to remain safe.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that there would be no more safety in sealing with sealing wax than there would be in sealing with the ordinary mucilage. The hon. gentleman says that he does not wish them to use any distinct seal for a stamp, because the deputy returning officer, if so disposed, might open the envelope. What is to hinder the opening of an envelope that is sealed with sealing wax if no stamp is used, and then closing it and sealing it with more sealing wax? There is no more difficulty than taking the wrapper off a newspaper. I think there is more protection in writing the name across the envelope than the hon. gentleman supposes. It is contended that if the envelope is sealed with mucilage and the name is written across, it would be more likely to be opened. I think the only way in which you could open an envelope sealed with mucilage is by heat and moisture, and if you applied moisture the ink would commence to run and it would be plainly noticed. Therefore, I think there would be greater protection in sealing with mucilage and writing the name across than in sealing with sealing wax. Then, I think with the hon. Minister of Justice, that if we provided that the envelope must be sealed with sealing wax, we would have to go further and provide a seal for every returning officer, and the requirements would be multiplied so much that there would be a greater probability of mistakes than there is at present.

On section 3,

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think this clause should not be adopted in its present form. One of the causes of fraud in elections is the delay in making the declaration. In four elections which I have had previous to 1887, two under a Conservative Government and two under a Reform Government, the declarations were invariably made on the second day after the elections. In 1887 a change was made. The declaration was to have been made, I think, on the following Monday, that is, four days afterwards, the reason assigned being that they could not collect their ballot boxes; but the time was enlarged continuously, so that the declaration did not take place until 18 days after the election, that is, on the 12th of March. In the last election, which was held on the 5th of March, the declaration was to have been made a week afterwards, but it was again enlarged until the 16th, just two days after the hon. member for East Grey, the hon. member for North Grey and the hon. member for North Bruce were gazetted. Now, there should be something done to prevent this. There is no reason why in South Grey the declaration cannot always be made on the second day. In the local election last summer the declaration was made on the following day, and in all the elections that I have had except the last two the declarations were made on the second day after the elections; and I do not think that anybody can contend that what has been done in four successive elections cannot be done again. To permit this delay in making this declaration is to offer a temptation to men to commit fraud. In the election of 1887 a good many of my friends believed that the ballots were stuffed, and at the last hour their courage oozed out, and they were afraid to have a recount. In the last election the ballots were stuffed, and 51 ballots were changed either between the time the ballot boxes were returned and the time of the declaration, or between the declaration and the recount. Now, it is not to the credit of a Government that claims to be progressive, that delays of this kind should take place, because it certainly is a temptation to men to do wrong. In the case of South Grey, the returning officer informed us that he kept the ballot boxes in his own house until the day of the declaration, and after the declaration he had them taken to his office. After the declaration he went away from the riding, leaving the ballot boxes in his office and the keys in the ballot boxes, and when they were opened it was found, on examination of the envelopes, that they had been tampered with in ten divisions, and I will show you how they changed the final result. In division No. 1, the deputy returning officer declared that my opponent, Mr. Blyth, had seventy-five votes, and that I had eighty-eight. When we came to examine the envelopes, we found in those marked for my opponent seventy-five ballots, but in those supposed to contain my eighty-eight ballots, eighty-four were found for me and four for Mr. Blyth. In division No. 2, we found that seventy-seven had been declared by the deputy returning officer for Mr. Blyth, and fifty-five for me; and when we opened the envelopes we found that two ballots had been extracted from my number, making it fifty-three, and two added to Mr. Blyth's, making his number seventy-nine. In No. 4, my opponent was declared to have seventy votes, and I eighty-two; but when we came to examine the envelopes it was found that one ballot was marked for Mr. Blyth in my envelope. In No. 10, four were stolen from me and four forged for Mr. Blyth. In No. 16, five were stolen from me and five forged for Mr. Blyth. In No. 13, three were stolen from me and three forged for Mr. Blyth. In No. 18, there were three; in No. 21, there were three; in No. 24, there was one; and in No. 35, two. Now, if you examine these, you will find that they make a total of fifty-one votes, which were changed in that election from the time of the election to the time of recount. Whoever did this business reckoned that if there was no change made by the judge, this would give my opponent a majority of five; and this is what I would call the attention of the Minister of Justice to, because had it not been that I made a gain in the recount to the amount of ten, which, instead of forty-six, gave me really a majority of fifty-six, I would have been counted out by a majority of five, and the will of the majority would have been set aside. It is well that the Minister should understand this, and endeavour, in the amendment he is about to make, to prevent the possibility of a recurrence of such frauds. If he will view the political history of this country, he will find that where the Government have taken to themselves the power of appointing returning officers, fraud has crept in. That has been the history of elections ever since Confederation. In the election of 1872, the Government took the power of appointing their own returning officers, which practically gave them the power of appointing their deputy returning officers also, and we find that the returning officer in West Peterborough returned the man who had the minority of votes. We found the same thing occurring in Muskoka. In 1874, without a change in the law, sheriffs and other public officers were appointed as returning officers, and not a single fraud was perpetrated that I know of. In 1878, the law had been changed, and the sheriffs and registrars throughout the country held the elections, and no frauds were committed. In 1882, the law was changed by the Redistribution Bill, and the Government again took to themselves the power of appointing their own returning officers. What happened then? The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) was disfranchised by a returning officer appointed by the Government, put to great expense, and kept out of his seat during one session. The hon. member for King's, Prince Edward Island, was also kept out of his seat for a whole Parliament by reason of the high-handed act of a returning officer. In 1887, there was the case in New Brunswick, where a candidate elected was kept out of his seat, although the majority was in his favour, because the returning officer declared his opponent elected. At the last elections, there was a widespread system operated by which many members were almost deprived of their seats through the action of the returning officers. If the Government desire to prevent this state of things, they must take a stand and show that they will not connive at the acts of the returning officers, and show these officers that if they commit frauds they will not go unpunished. There is nothing so much calculated as these frauds to stir up bad feeling among people who ought to live together in harmony. If after an election has been fought out you have an officer who will allow the ballot boxes to remain in position where ill-disposed persons can reach and change them, you will have crimes of the worst character committed by persons willing to snatch a verdict, no matter what the means may be. There is a case I may mention, into which the Government should look closely. I find that in the return which was made to this House, the returning officer says:

"I have also to report that at the said recount—(that is the recount which took place in South Grey)—it appears that seven ballot boxes had been tampered with and the ballots altered, but when and by whom I cannot say. Should you desire further information as to the deterioration of the ballots, I will be pleased to give you all in my power.

"LEFROY McCAUL."

When the judge summed up the results, if it had not been for the gains made on my side the majority of forty-six given me by the people would have been converted into a minority by the count. The judge said he wanted to adjourn the court until the next day in order to find a precedent as to whether he could disallow or reject the fraudulent ballots. There was no doubt in his mind as to their fraudulent character, and he so expressed himself, but he was doubtful as to whether the law gave him authority to disallow them. But as I had a majority in any case, I was willing that he should declare me elected by three instead of fifty-six, rather than remain over another day. The law should be so amended as to give the judge power to reject fraudulent ballots when he was satisfied they were fraudulent. I trust the Government will consider this matter, as the same thing might occur in other places; and if these high-handed measures are to be permitted, they will have the effect of destroying every vestige of honour and honesty among candidates and constituents. I may add that the returning officers have all made affidavits, in the case to which I have referred, that where any changes were made in the envelopes and returns of ballots they were made fraudulently. There is another matter which I might mention, as it came up in the recount, and that is as to the initialling of the ballots. In one polling sub-division there was only one ballot initialled and that was rejected, and when we came to have a recount it was found it had been tampered with, and the judge allowed it. None of the other ballots were initialled, although the judge admitted them, according to the rulings of some other judges. I think there ought to be some general rule for this, so that nothing of this kind could take place. In the case to which I refer, the number should have been on the counterfoil and the initials on the ballot, but I fancy the initials and the number were both on the counterfoil. If the bringing of this case before the House will have the effect of directing the attention of the Government to the desirability of having the declaration take place sooner than it does now, it will have a good effect, because no one can tell me that, when a local election takes place, Mr. Mowat can have the declaration made in South Grey the next day, and that there is any reason for this Government to delay the declaration for 18 days. No one can make me believe but that fraud is intended when the declaration is delayed in that way, and my friends believed that fraud was intended in 1887, and asked me to get a committee on that subject, but I went to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and found that the ballots were all destroyed after one year. If this will prevent the long delays which have occurred, it will be of great advantage. When I am told that these delays have to take place from time to time in making the returns, I believe there is a sinister motive at the bottom, as has been shown in this case.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know whether it was the day after the election for the Province of Ontario when the declaration was made in the hon. gentleman's riding, but I know that in Centre Grey some days elapsed between the election and the declaration. In any case, the difference between the time of the declaration in the Provincial and Dominion election is largely due to the fact that in the Provincial elections it is provided that the deputy returning officers shall take the ballot boxes to the returning officer, but in the Dominion the clerk has to collect them. You can easily understand that it takes a long time to bring all these ballot boxes to one centre when collected by one person. That is one reason for the delay. Then, the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) forgets that at the time of the Dominion elections there was a very heavy snow storm, and it was alleged that some of the parties could not get through the roads, that the party which was collecting the ballot boxes could not get them in time, and any hon. member can understand that if it were stated that the declaration was to take place the next day after the voting, and a severe storm occurred, it would be impossible to get the ballot boxes in within the time, so there must be some provision made for adjournment from time to time until the ballot boxes are received. That is exactly what took place in South Grey. I know that the returning officer telegraphed to our polling sub-division for the returns, because, though the ballot box had left some time before, it had not reached the returning officer, but that was not the fault of the returning officer, but of the party who was collecting the ballot boxes. I understand that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin) blamed the returning officer for all that he alleges took place in South Grey, but I understood before that he and his friends believed that the returning officer did his duty, and that the tampering with the ballot box, if there was tampering, was done by some other parties. The law is strict enough as to the care of the ballot boxes until the declaration is made or a recount takes place both in the Dominion and the Provincial elections. The hon. gentleman complains of the appointment of the returning officers by the Dominion Government. In the Provincial elections the Government appoint the returning officers. If the parties named in the Act are not available, they appoint others in their places. The only difference is that the Dominion Government holds the appointment of all the returning officers in its own hands.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is a very big difference.

Mr. SPROULE. In any case, the officers who have to be appointed by the Ontario Government are the registrars and sheriffs, who are the servants of that Government from year to year, so that, if the argument of the hon. gentleman is correct, it would apply with double force to the Ontario Government.

Mr. LANDERKIN. In reference to what the hon. gentleman has said——

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think I may ask that this discussion should be confined to the clause before the Committee.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I was about to make a statement in reference to the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have no objection to the hon. gentleman stating his case.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am glad the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has referred to the snow storm which took place, but he forgets that the snow storm took place after the election.

Mr. SPROULE. The day before.

Mr. LANDERKIN. There was some snow the day before and there was good sleighing on the day of the election, but the snow storm that did the damage took place eight days afterwards, which proves that delays are dangerous. I did not say that I blamed the returning officer or anyone else in the riding, or that I knew who did this. If I knew who it was, I would make a pretty warm corner for him.

Mr. SPROULE. Why did you say: It is the result of the appointment of the officers by the Government?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I say that is the result in a number of cases.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you mean in your case?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I was only speaking of the system, and I desired to give the hon. gentleman some information if he would have listened to me. I do not say whom I blame, but I know that the same returning officer acted on both occasions. The only thing I blame him for was for yielding. I believe he only yielded to the powers that be in that riding; because the candidate who opposed me, although he came to Owen Sound on the day before the recount, during the whole time of the recount he never entered the court room, although he took the trouble to go from his own place to Owen Sound. During the time the recount was going on he never fyled an appearance there. I am not going to say anything about that. I am just giving you the history, and I will let you make your own inferences. I give the Minister of Justice the facts, so that if possible he may prevent, in Heaven's name, the recurrence of these outrages in the South Riding of Grey again. That is the only thing I am anxious for. I am a Canadian, and I do not want this stain to crop up in Canada at every election. I do not see why we should not agree to lay our political contentions aside, and endeavour to have our elections conducted honestly. I believe that is the duty of every man on both sides of the House. I do not think there is anything to cause rejoicing in gaining a victory by fraud of a stupendous character of this kind: I think it would be worse than victory, it would be a disgrace. Now, as the hon. member for East Grey has spoken, in order to show you the advantages of partyism in elections, I will just note this one circumstance: The hon. member for East Grey can reconcile it to the House, he can reconcile it to his constituents, as he pleases. The hon. member's election took place on the same day that my election took place. The hon. member was gazetted on the 14th of March, nine days after the election.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Probably there was no snow storm in that part of the country.

Mr. LANDERKIN. No, but there was in mine, apparently. He was gazetted on the 14th, although there was a snow storm as he tells us, and the time of holding protests is limited to 30 days from that time. The hon. gentleman stood away up in the list, and when the time expired for holding a protest in his riding, the hon. member for East Grey, with characteristic magnanimity, came over to my riding to see if he could not get up a protest. It was very magnanimous, after the snow storm, for him to get gazetted, and then come over to my riding and endeavour to get his friends there to enter a protest. If they had protested against ballot-stuffing, it would have been more creditable to him.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We cannot possibly run these two elections this afternoon and this Bill also.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I wish the hon. gentleman would be good enough to allow me a little latitude, owing to the fact that there was a big snow storm.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I wish to insert a clause before the third section as an amendment to section 58. Section 58 is the clause which provides how ballot boxes shall be collected after the election, and I propose to amend it. We now provide that the ballot box, after being locked and sealed, shall be delivered to the returning officer, or to the election clerk, who shall receive or collect the same. The plan at present is, in some places, that they are kept by the deputy returning officers until the returning officer comes round, but there is no duty laid on the deputies to deliver them. I wish to provide that the ballot box shall be locked and sealed:

And shall be forthwith delivered by the deputy returning officer to the returning officer, or to the election clerk, who shall receive or collect the same, or to one or more persons specially appointed for that purpose by the returning officer, and such person or persons shall, on delivery of the ballot boxes to the returning officer, take the oath in the form of the first schedule of this Act.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. That might imply that the returning officer shall go round and collect them.

Mr. LAURIER. The provision that the returning officer shall receive or collect them, means, I suppose, that if he does not receive them, he shall collect them.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes; to provide for the two cases. If the returning officer does not send round for them immediately, as he may in the vicinity of the town where he lives, then the deputy returning officer is to deliver them to the person whom he sends, but if he does not send anyone to collect them, then the returning officer himself forthwith is to collect them.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I think it should be the duty of the deputy returning officers to deliver these boxes to the returning officer and get their mileage for it. The returning officer now charges his mileage for going round and collecting them, and half the time he does not do it. The deputy returning officers go into the county town, and, as they are desirous of hearing the news about the election, they take the boxes in with them, but they get no mileage for that. I think it would be better to say that the deputy returning officers shall take them in to the returning officers.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is just the object of the amendment. I do not want to say that the deputy shall in all cases take them in. I merely want to provide that forthwith he shall see that they get into the hands of the returning officer, because it may be that the returning officer may go to the deputy more quickly than the deputy can go to him. I want to permit it to be done either way.

Mr. CASEY. If the Minister proposes to permit it to be done either way, then he fails to do what he says he wants to do. He wants to put the duty upon the deputy of bringing them in forthwith; that is the highly proper object of the amendment. But if you leave a duty optional between two persons, you may be sure it will not be done properly by either. You must put it positively upon one or the other. If you make it absolutely obligatory upon the deputy to come in forthwith, personally, and deliver the boxes to the returning officer, then it will be done, and you should allow him his mileage; but if you leave it open to the deputy to suppose that perhaps the returning officer will be round for these boxes in a day or two then the boxes will remain in his hands for a day or two, and the very evil we are trying to avoid will continue.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Under the present system it has only happened in two elections that the returning officer sent out and gathered up the ballot boxes. Before the change that took place in 1887 the deputies always took in the ballot boxes; and if the Minister of Justice were to witness the collection of the ballot boxes under this system, I do not think he would leave it optional whether the deputy carried the boxes to the returning officer, or whether the returning officer himself collected them. I have seen ballot boxes after both those elections gathered up and placed in a sleigh, and left there while the parties went into a tavern, these boxes in the sleigh being left without anyone to guard them. In another instance I was told of the boxes being placed in a shed behind a hotel with no one on guard, these boxes again being in a sleigh. Under the other system, if the deputy returning officer would take the boxes directly to the returning officer there would be no confusion and no disgrace, because I feel it is a disgrace to have ballot boxes containing the people's ballots standing around a hotel unprotected and uncared for, open to any one who saw fit to steal them, and bring on endless confusion. I am very glad to see the clause proposed, and I should like to have it made imperative, so that it shall not be left to the ipse dixit of the returning officer to say whether he shall gather the boxes or not. I do not wish to see an election in Grey when the ballot boxes are allowed to stand for hours at the mercy of anyone. Under the other system the deputy returning officer would gather the ballot boxes in every constituency, with the exception of Algoma, on the next day, barring snow storms, that, according to my hon. friend, occurred a week afterwards.

Mr. SPROULE. If there were fifty deputy returning officers coming in at one time there would be more reason to fear tampering with ballot boxes than if the work was done by one officer. I think hon. gentlemen opposite display a little too much sympathy for fair-play. I can give the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) the names of persons who, under the provincial law, took ballot boxes, stopped with them at hotels, and got drunk there—in fact, stayed there all night, and the ballot boxes were delivered by other persons.

Mr. LANDERKIN. That was in East Grey, and not in South Grey.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman also calls in question my statement as to snow storms. He must know that there were snow storms only two days before the election, when the roads were blocked; and also eight days after the election, when the declaration was made. Such storms, of course, interfere largely with travel in the country.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. What we on both sides of the House desire to attain is the same object, and that is, to prevent the delay of returns by the returning officer sending officials round to collect the boxes. I think the amendment accomplishes this object, because it places the duty on the deputy returning officer of getting the boxes into the hands of the returning officer. The only point at which the amendment stops short is that it does not say he shall travel with it himself, because there may be a more expeditious way of getting in the returns. In my province there never has been any complaint by either side of delay or tampering with the getting in of the boxes, except delay on account of the weather. The two systems are, of course, suited to different localities. In my county the deputy returning officer immediately at the close of the poll takes the ballot box, and, after as little delay as possible, conveys it to the returning officer. There is another county where a stage runs for a distance of 100 miles, and the returning officer being desirous of getting the returns quickly, sends a responsible person on the coach to traverse the whole of the district and get in all the boxes. If you say he shall not do that, but the deputy returning officer shall in every case travel into the shire town, you will have all the deputy returning officers travelling over that route at great expense and increased delay. So all we can safely do, considering the different circumstances of the respective counties, is to impose the duty on the deputy returning officer of sending as speedily as possible the ballot box to the returning officer. And if he can discharge that duty more quickly by sending the box by express, or coach, or other means of communication, as he can do in many cases, I should allow the returning officer to send for them in that way.

Mr. BARRON. The suggestion made the other night by this side of the House was similar to that made by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick). I think the difficulty might be obviated by eliminating the words "or collect."

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have no objection to striking out the words "or collect."

Mr. McGREGOR. I think the deputy returning officer should take the ballot boxes to the returning officer. I live in the County of Essex, and there is no polling place more than six miles from the railway, and yet it took 18 days to collect the ballot boxes at the late election. Some came in by waggon, some by railway, and I believe one box came 17 or 18 days after the election on a freight car. There was no system followed. I called on the returning officer several times, and asked him if it was not possible to have a declaration made. He said he had no power to pay a man to go round, but he would telegraph and send some one after the boxes if it was found necessary. In the local elections the deputy returning officer returned the ballot boxes next day, and we had the returns almost at once. In my county there is no excuse for delay, because the railway stations are close to the polling booths, and we can get the ballot boxes in next day without there being any danger of fraud. At the Dominion election they were allowed to lie around a great many days. Even after they had been gathered, the returning officer allowed them to remain in an isolated office, where mischief could have been done if people wished to do so. So I feel disposed to think that if we had the returns made at once by the returning officer great danger might be obviated that might otherwise crop up in regard to this matter. I am strongly in favour of having the deputy returning officer return the ballot box himself as soon as possible to the returning officer.

Mr. TEMPLE. I have had considerable experience in elections and in ballot boxes. I held elections for 19 years, and I do not recollect any time when the ballot boxes were lost or went astray during that period. I think the Minister of Justice is right in allowing the ballot boxes to be collected either by the sheriff, the returning officer, or his deputy. I have held provincial and also Dominion elections, and the plan I pursued was to send the deputy sheriff to hold a poll, say 60 or 80 miles, wherever the most distant poll was, carry the boxes, distribute them around to the different deputies, and then on his way back that night or the next day return them to the returning officer. I never found any trouble at any time in this mode of procedure. I think the best way is to allow discretionary power to the principal officer to collect the boxes as he sees fit.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister would propose to leave things just as they are.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; I amend the law by imposing on the deputy returning officers the duty of delivering the boxes, whereas the present law imposes the duty on the returning officer of getting the boxes.

Mr. CASEY. I think that persons specially appointed for the purpose should be sworn before they go for the boxes, because it would never do to allow the deputy to delegate the custody of these ballot boxes to persons who are not sworn for the purposes of that election. The object of the law is to keep the ballot boxes in the custody of some sworn official until the ballots are finally counted. Unless you make some provision of that kind the returning officer may send his hired man, or anybody he likes, to get these boxes, and the object of the amendment would be defeated.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The moment he hands in the boxes he has to swear that they were not interfered with, and that they were in his custody all the time, and were handed over in the same condition as when they came into his possession.

Mr. LAURIER. The difficulty is just as has been stated by the Minister of Justice. If all the counties were like small counties, and the polling booths were within 20 miles of the shire town, the proposal made by the member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) would work admirably. But in such counties as the Minister of Justice refers to, where the polling booths may be 50 or 60 miles from the shire town, there might be eight or ten deputy returning officers on the road with their boxes at the same time. It seems to me it should be an instruction to the returning officer to have an officer on the way to collect these boxes immediately after the close of the poll. If there were such a provision in the Act I think it would be satisfactory.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The illustration given by the Minister of Justice is a good one with regard to a few particular counties, but there are some counties that are so situated that it would require a dozen different officers to be sent in a dozen different directions to collect these boxes. It seems to me, from what has been said by the member for Essex (Mr. McGregor) and others, that the delay in bringing in these boxes is due to the fact that the deputy returning officers are not allowed any mileage, and they send them in by freight car, or by stage, or by some irresponsible man who is going that way. The difficulty would be got over if there were a provision in the Act that the deputy returning officers shall be allowed mileage for the number of miles necessarily travelled for the purpose of delivering the ballot boxes to the returning officer or the person authorized to receive them.

Mr. CASEY. I do not think that with all the safeguards you can surround it this plan of having one person go after the ballot boxes is safe. Undoubtedly it would not be safe unless he was sworn previously as well as afterwards. Before he takes charge of the boxes he should be sworn that he will perform that duty faithfully. An unsworn and irresponsible man, say the hired servant of the returning officer, might get possession of these boxes and not bring them to the returning officer at all. He might be careless, or he might get drunk and lose the boxes. The person should be sworn before he is sent out on this duty, and if you provide in the law that the returning officer shall be personally liable for all boxes delivered to the person sent out by him it would go some way to meet the difficulty.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The duty is imposed upon him, and when he appoints the agents he is responsible for them.

Mr. CASEY. That is all very well, but it does not prevent the disappearance of the boxes in the hands of these possibly incompetent or bribable agents. I must insist on my contention, that if persons are to be sent out for the ballot boxes they should be sworn before they undertake the duty as well as after they discharge it. All the arguments urged by the Minister of Justice himself are in favour of the personal protection of the ballot boxes by the deputy returning officer, or the returning officer himself, or his clerk. It is the simpler plan, but the hon. Minister says that it is not the cheaper, because it would involve paying mileage for a large number of people instead of a small number. But no one collector can attend to a whole county; there must be several sent out. Then notice will have to be given to each deputy returning officer of the time that the collector will be there, in order that the deputy may meet him, and the giving of that notice will take time. Two things are quite clear—that the saving of expense will be very little, because several collectors will be necessary, and that the deputies will have to be paid mileage to meet them. There will be almost as much mileage paid, and there will be an undue loss of time. But if one plan is safer than another, the question of expense should not be allowed to stand in the way of its adoption; and it seems to me evident that the safer plan is that the deputy should bring the boxes himself. It seems to me obvious that a man can take better care of one box than he can of ten or twenty. If the Minister really wishes to carry out the reform in the law to which this proposed amendment is directed, and to make it the duty of the deputy returning officer to see that this box is put into the hands of the returning officer himself at the earliest moment, I think he should knock out this alternative plan altogether. Where a duty is divided between two people it will not be as well performed as where it is imposed upon one: and I think that by striking out the word "collector," and not adding these other words about persons sent to collect the same, the Minister will obtain what I know he wants to get at, the prompt delivery of the boxes.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). It seems to me that the amendment proposed by the hon. Minister of Justice meets what we all want. It is the alternative feature of it that commends it to my judgment. It must not be supposed that in every electoral district there is one large town towards which all the deputy returning officers are anxious to go on the night of the elections. In several electoral districts there are several towns of equal importance, in which celebrations are held by the victorious party on the night of the election, and the deputy returning officer in these will not perhaps want to go to the locality where the returning officer resides. In a case of that kind, we might be met with the same difficulty that we have now, of the tardiness of the deputy returning officers to visit the returning officer. It may be that the deputy returning officer will not go in for three or four days.

Mr. CASEY. He is liable for penalties if he does not.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). They have been liable for penalties for a long time, but they risk them. I think it is much better that some officer should be appointed to collect the boxes, just as the Minister proposes. It seems to me to be too clear for argument.

Mr. CASEY. It seems to me to be too clear for argument that by admitting an alternative plan you destroy the object of the proviso. It is not a question of where the deputies want to go, or whether they would go with the boxes or not. What we want to do is to compel them to go in with the boxes forthwith.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). What do you mean by "forthwith"?

Mr. CASEY. Whatever the courts decide it to mean, and it would be a good deal sooner than the boxes could be collected in any other way. If the hon. member for Brockville agrees that delivery by the deputy is a proper way to do it, then the admission of the alternative puts it in the power of any person who does not wish to adopt that course to go outside of the law.

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). The alternative plan is found to work the best in the district which I have the honour to represent. I will give you an idea of the difficulties that would be experienced if it were compulsory on the deputy returning officers to bring in the boxes. The plan adopted there is to send a messenger to gather up the boxes throughout the district, and he is sworn before he departs as well as when he returns with the boxes. If the deputy returning officers were compelled to carry in their boxes each one would have to travel from ten to a thousand miles. The longest distance would be 1,190 miles travelled one way, and the shortest distance ten miles. Say they travel on the average but one-half the distance, we would find eighty deputy returning officers travelling altogether 40,000 miles, which, at 10 cents a mile, would cost $4,000 one way to bring in the ballot boxes in one electoral district. My experience is that it is the hardest work in the world to get men paid at present by the Auditor General for the work they do. If such a cost as this stared the Auditor General in the face, I fancy it would make him go crazy. As it is, he objects to paying 10 cents a mile for the messenger who was actually engaged in gathering up the ballot boxes in that district; he thinks he should only get 7½ cents. If it were compulsory on the deputy returning officers to bring in their ballot boxes, you would find the very same thing operating in smaller constituencies, though in a smaller way.

Mr. CASEY. We cannot make a law just to suit Algoma.

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). There are a number of other constituencies in a similar position—Manitoba constituencies.

Mr. CASEY. There are not a number where the deputy returning officers will have to travel 1,190 miles with the ballot boxes. But suppose there are, it is just as hard for a messenger or collector to go for the boxes and come back again as it is for the deputy returning officer. But suppose Algoma were a hopeless case, why not except Algoma, which is excepted in many other respects? These enormously large counties could easily be excepted.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am very much afraid that the Minister will find that the old practice will be continued under the new law. The deputy returning officers are the servants of the returning officers; and if the returning officer is anxious to earn mileage he will instruct his deputies that they are to deliver the ballot boxes to him.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Has the Minister of Justice come to any conclusion about fixing a limit during which a declaration must be made?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We have not put in any clause fixing a time for the return. I think we could not fix an exact time for all the counties.

Mr. O'BRIEN. A limit of fifteen or twenty days might be fixed to prevent any undue extension of time.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The great difficulty in fixing a limit is that, if by accident or delay it should be exceeded, the election must be gone over again.

Mr. O'BRIEN. In my election the declaration was delayed a month. The returning officer made it his business to collect his own ballot boxes over the whole district, and he encountered the snow storm we have all heard of. The declaration did not take place until nearly a month after the election, and if a limit had been fixed he would have found means to get the ballot boxes in within that limit.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The Bill will not be an improvement unless that is fixed.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Section 59 is amended by adding the following:—

And they shall also forthwith, after the close of the poll, mail to each candidate, at the address stated in each ballot paper, a blank certificate by registered letter.

I propose to add to section 60 the following sub-section:—

The returning officer, upon the receipt by him of each ballot box, shall take every precaution for its safe keeping and for preventing any other person but himself and the election clerk having access thereto; and shall immediately, upon the receipt of the ballot boxes, seal the same under his own seal, in such a way that it cannot be opened without such seal being broken, and this he shall do without effacing or covering the seal of the deputy returning officer.

Amendments agreed to.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I propose to amend section 64 by adding the following sub-section thereto:—

The judge may, at the time of such application or afterwards, direct that the service of the notice aforesaid upon the candidates or their agents may be substitutional, or may be made by mail or by posting, or in any other such manner as he may think fit.

Amendment agreed to.

Culling Timber..... $30,050

Mr. McMULLEN. Is the same staff employed now in this work as formerly?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No; some two years ago I stated that a great reduction would be made, and I made a very large reduction, to which we have adhered.

Mr. O'BRIEN.

Mr. McMULLEN. I remember that some years ago the hon. gentleman stated that there was a considerable shrinkage in the work, and that it was gradually growing less. Is it still growing less?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Not to the same extent. I had made reductions before that, but, as I stated, the work had fallen off as compared with what it was ten or fifteen years ago. I reduced the cullers from fifteen or eighteen down to seven, but I said that, if there was a great output of timber in any one season, we would employ extra cullers and pay them for the time they were occupied. This year I think the output of square timber will be much less, and it will not be necessary to employ any extra cullers.

Mr. McMULLEN. What was the revenue from this source last year?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will get that information. Last night a question came up as to the manner of charging the salaries of some of the principal officers, and I said then I thought there must be some mistake, and that I would get the information from the Auditor General, as his report had been quoted. I asked the Assistant Commissioner for information on the subject, and I will read the letter sent by Mr. McDougall to Mr. Gerald:

"OTTAWA, 8th September, 1891.

"DEAR SIR,—In reply to your letter of this date, in which you inform me that last evening, in the House, the attention of the hon. the Minister was called to the fact that as per statement of the General Excise Contingencies on page C—200 of my Report for 1889-90 it was made to appear that the salaries of Chief Inspector H. Godson and Inspector of Distilleries John Davis were paid from the contingent vote instead of that for salaries.

"I have to state that these salaries were paid from and charged properly to the salaries vote, but as the services are general for the whole Dominion, they are classed as General Contingencies in my Report. I beg to say that there is a separate sub-head in the general vote for Excise to which the salaries were charged. In entering the salaries in our accounts under the head of General Contingencies we were following your classification. (See your last Report, pages 10 and 11, where salaries, travelling expenses and sundries are all charged under the head of General Contingencies.)

"Another year we probably both can make a more approximate heading for salaries.

"I have the honour to be, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

"J. L. McDOUGALL,

"Auditor General."

It was only a confusion in entering it. The important fact is, as he states, that the salaries were paid from salaries' vote, and not from contingencies.

Mr. McMULLEN. There have been no more superannuations made in connection with this staff since the superannuation that took place two or three years ago?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No change.

Contingencies..... $6,000.

Mr. COSTIGAN. There is an increase in this item, for which I am afraid I shall have to hold the Finance Minister responsible. Our contingencies were based, as I stated before, upon the very lowest amount to which we could reduce the work of that office. Although we put our contingencies at what we thought sufficient, Parliament only voted a small amount, and they have overrun that amount by nearly a thousand dollars. Now we are simply asking for the estimate we made before, and for the actual expenses. There is no increase at all in the actual expense.

Salaries of Officers, Inspectors and Assistant Inspectors of Weights and Measures, including Assistant Inspectors at: Charlottetown, P.E.I., $500: Port Arthur, Ont., $500: Edmonton, N.W.T., $500 ..... $56,050

Mr. McMULLEN. When this account was before the House last year I urged, in the interest of the trade, that some change should be made in the system of weights and measures. You may have, perhaps, an efficient staff of inspectors; still, from the fact that a small amount is collected from every one whose weights are inspected, there is a disposition on the part of some poor traders, people that are anxious to save every cent, to put their weights out of the way of the inspector so as to avoid inspection, and they are used afterwards. I am positive such things are done. While I say it is desirable in the interest of the buyer as well as the seller that all weights should be inspected, it is unjust to the seller to compel him to pay, in every instance, the cost of inspecting his weights; because the buyer has just as much interest in correct weights as the seller; both have an equal interest, but you exact from the seller the fees. You may say that the seller will add it to the price of his merchandise: it is one of the items of expenditure in connection with his business. That may be true in a sense, but after all it results in many cases in the weights being used without their being inspected. Now, you may say that a person who refuses to allow his weights to be inspected is subject to have them cancelled or destroyed. So he is, but nobody cares to interfere. For instance, if a poor grocery woman, or a poor man who has a large family, is driving a small business, and he has two sets of weights in his store, he does not care to put up $1 or $1.25 to have them inspected, and he will perhaps put them under his counter until the inspector goes away, and he pays no fee. Now, I make an appeal on behalf of the entire trade, for I think it will be far better that the weights should be inspected free of charge, and that they should be carefully and correctly stamped, so that any person who is buying or selling would see that they are stamped. I would suggest, in connection with the inspection of weights, that a man should be required to keep up, in a conspicuous place in his retail store, we will say, a certificate showing that his weights have been inspected, the certificate being duly signed by the inspector, the same as is done in connection with licenses for hotels or shops under the Ontario License Act, where they have to keep up a notice and show their license, so that it can be viewed by every person. They could easily keep a certificate that the weights were inspected in their shop, posted up with the date, the same as the Ontario License Act requires. This certificate should state that the weights have been duly inspected and pronounced correct, and if any person wished to assure himself that the weights were correct this certificate would be evidence. You should aim at seeing that correct weights are kept so that the buyer and seller, who have an equal interest in the weights being correct, may both stand on an equal footing. When you make it a matter of common interest by taking out of the Dominion treasury the sum necessary to pay the expenses, both buyer and seller will have a common interest in seeing that the weights are correct, and both will get equal justice to a greater extent than the present system affords.

Mr. COSTIGAN. So far as distributing the burden of the fees is concerned, they are now distributed—that is, about one-half is upon the trade and the other half upon the public generally, and, I think, it would prolong the session a great deal if I were to propose that the whole expense should be taken out of the Dominion treasury. That principle has been frequently discussed in the House. The great charge against this branch of the service has always been the deficit every year, and I have been trying to reduce the number of inspectors and chief officers—to reduce the expenses as much as possible. I have brought the branch now to such a condition that the House has taken it for granted that it would only be fair that half the expense should be sustained by the country. I do not think I can undertake to go any further than that. With regard to the idea about the certificate of license, there is no necessity for it, because a certificate is given to every man who has his scales examined and verified. I think it would be a good idea to have it posted up, and I will look into it and see if it can be done.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the salary paid to the inspectors?

Mr. COSTIGAN. $1,000 for inspectors and $500 for assistant inspectors. We have three or four large divisions which show a surplus over expenditure, and the salaries there have gone up to $1,300—Hamilton and Montreal. There the salaries seem to be justified from the receipts being considerable and the district being five times as large as some other districts.

Mr. McMULLEN. I commend one change made during the last few years, that of issuing stamps for every scale inspected and providing that they must be cancelled. It is a very desirable check, not for a moment hinting that there are any dishonest men among the inspectors. Are they allowed travelling expenses in addition to their salaries?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes; they are allowed their actual expenses. We have cut them down very closely. Some men wanted to use their own horses or hire horses. We do not allow an officer to do this, because it is more expensive. We have advised the officers to travel by rail, boat or stage, and they are only permitted to hire horses when the place cannot be reached by these modes of travel.

Mr. McMULLEN. What was the net loss last year?

Mr. COSTIGAN. About $30,000, speaking from memory.

Inspection of Gas..... $13,600

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the cause of the increase?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The increase is due to some increase in the salaries of the officers. The gas inspectors proper and the weights and measures officers are exceptions to the general service; because of the deficit in those branches of the service the officers do not get the same promotion or increases of salary as in other departments. They complain of it, but they know it when they accept the positions. Formerly, Mr. Aubin was inspector of gas at Montreal, and consulting engineer for the whole Dominion, receiving a separate salary for the latter office. After his retirement from age, the office of consulting engineer was abolished, and to save travelling expenses we allow Mr. McPhee, inspector of Hamilton, $200 more salary to do the western portion of the Dominion, and we also allow $200 for same work in the eastern provinces.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is the inspection of gas self-sustaining?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Not yet, but we will hope to make it so, because, by Order in Council, we now have power to fix the rates of Government inspection. Last year I proposed to introduce a Bill respecting gas inspection, but as the electric light was becoming so common it was thought it should be dealt with in any measure respecting gas. I deemed it to be impossible to prepare a measure that would cover the electric light, because it is so complicated: but in the meantime by Order in Council we can regulate the fees paid on gas inspection.

Mr. FLINT. The argument in favour of the country paying any portion of the expenditure for weights and measures inspection could not apply to the case of gas inspection. The department should, on behalf of the population of the country, see that gas inspection paid its own way, because the cases are not parallel.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I never argued they were.

Mr. FLINT. As the Minister says, the use of gas for illuminating purposes is giving way to a large extent, and I presume the department is taking into consideration the changed conditions.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Rent, Fuel, &c., Weights and Measures.. $15,950

Mr. McMULLEN. There is a decrease of $200. Do you allow some of the men to keep horses?

Mr. COSTIGAN. None of them: we have ruled against it. The officers cannot keep a horse of their own, nor are they allowed to hire a horse, unless they are able to show that they are unable to go over the ground by rail, boat or coach.

Mr. McMULLEN. Have you laid down a certain charge for horse-hire?

Mr. COSTIGAN. There are very considerable checks on the accounts. Take Nova Scotia. An assistant inspector does some travelling. On his return he sends in his account. It goes to the Inspector of Inland Revenue. Then it is forwarded here, and goes through the hands of the accountant.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Minister of Inland Revenue has stated that under the present ruling of the department no inspector is allowed to hire horses or use his own horse for the purpose of driving over any portion of the country where the railway can be utilized. I can point out that this system has not, in my opinion, resulted in economy to the department. I can tell the Minister how. In my own county there are certain towns along the line of railway, not very distant from others, perhaps not more than 10 or 12 miles, and in the vicinity of these towns there are other towns where inspections are to be made. I have been informed by the inspector of that particular county that more economy would be secured by the department if he were allowed to take his own horse or hire a horse and drive to these towns along the railway, taking in those in the vicinity of the railway as well as those along the line of the railway itself; because when he is obliged, as now, under the regulation of the department, to use the line of railway, he has first to employ a horse at the station to take his standards from the station to the place where he intends to have his inspection in the towns along the line of railway. In addition to that, when he comes to a town along the line of railway, after he has done his inspection there, he may want to go to a town or village within five or ten miles of the place where he held the inspection, and instead of being allowed to take his own horse and drive from one place to another, he has to employ a horse at this particular station and drive to villages midway between the place where he held the inspection and the next station along the line of railway. As a matter of fact, I believe that the mode which has been adopted within the last two or three years has not resulted in so much economy to the department as the Minister of Inland Revenue thinks it has.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I fully recognize the set of facts alluded to by Mr. Speaker, and I remember the particular case of that district being brought to my notice, where the assistant inspector owned a horse, and he had a good deal of travelling to do in an immense district. I believed that in his case it would have been economy, and I insisted then that the privilege should be allowed him under the circumstances. But it is not for one district that we have to regulate this question, and while it would be economical in this case, it would be quite the reverse in some other, as we know from experience in their sending in the accounts. We found that the privilege was abused to swell their accounts for expenses, and while it might have operated harshly in this district, on the whole it was an economical arrangement.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can endorse the remarks made by Mr. Speaker. I know that in my district the railway runs alongside of an old-travelled road, on which nine-tenths of the trade of the county was done, and if the inspector travelled by rail and had to hire a horse at the different stations in order to reach the small shops, it would entail a great deal more expense. In my own section I believe that if the inspectors were allowed to travel by team or to have a good strong horse sufficient to carry around his goods, he would accomplish his duties more efficiently, and more cheaply, than if he travelled part by rail and part by team.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The inspector can hire a horse in such cases: but we did not recognize the right of an officer to keep a horse of his own. This is not a cast-iron rule, and where the duties can be discharged more efficiently and more cheaply by hiring a horse, or by travelling by stage coach, the inspector can do the best under the circumstances and with the most economy.

Mr. McMULLEN. I know that some time ago the inspector came around in my district and took a rig and driver with him. Of course that was an expensive way, as he had to pay the expenses of the driver, but if he drove the rig himself it would be cheaper than travelling part by rail and part by team.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think it was last session I drew the attention of the Minister to the desirability of considering the expediency of abolishing the fees that are paid by business men for inspection of weights and measures. If it is in the public interest that scales should be inspected, it is pretty hard to make the individuals pay for it. It appears to me that as this is in the general interest of the country the inspection should be free. This is a special tax and it is obnoxious to the business men of the country. I think the time has come when it should be abolished. There was another point which we brought before the Minister, and that was that some years ago all the inspectors and deputy inspectors of weights and measure, with one or two exceptions, were legislated out of office, and it was thought that they were entitled to some compensation or pension. Has the Minister considered the question since last session?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I considered it a long time ago.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Has it resulted in anything being given to these parties?

Mr. COSTIGAN. There is nothing in the Estimates now before us.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Does not the Minister consider they are entitled to some consideration?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think they are entitled to a good deal of sympathy, but voting money is more than that.

Mr. FLINT. I would ask how it is that there are such heavy travelling expenses connected with gas inspection? I could understand this item in connection with the inspection of weights and measures, but the inspection of gas is mostly in towns and cities, and yet there is quite a large amount charged as travelling expenses.

Mr. COSTIGAN. We have two consulting engineers, one of whom travels in the western section of the country to fit up new offices that are established, and there have been a great many so established within the last few years. The one in Montreal looks after the establishment of the offices in the eastern section. Then when any dispute occurs with regard to the quality of gas the officer has to go and investigate that. We have a chief inspector who visits all these establishments at least once a year, and who is also inspector of weights and measures, and I presume a part of his expenses as inspector of weights and measures would be charged to gas. The bulk of this item includes rent and fuel.

Mr. FLINT. I can quite understand the item after that explanation, but the impression from the Auditor General's Report would be that these expenses were incurred in the district, and not by officers travelling from headquarters at Ottawa.

Inspection of Staples..... $3,000

Mr. McMULLEN. How much of this was spent last year?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The same vote has been taken, I believe, since Confederation. Last year there was $2,100 spent.

Mr. McMULLEN. We had it stated here a few evenings ago that some firm in Ottawa got as much as $400 or $500 for inspecting flour tendered for supply to the Indians. In what way was this money spent?

Mr. COSTIGAN. We do not inspect the flour. It is inspected by officers appointed upon the authority of the boards of trade. The samples are purchased through the secretaries of the boards of trade, and they draw on the account here to pay for the purchase of the samples.

Adulteration of Food..... $25,000

Mr. McMULLEN. What portion was spent last year?

Mr. COSTIGAN. $23,259. There is an analyst appointed at each of the following places: Winnipeg, London, Toronto, Ottawa, Quebec, St. John and Halifax. They are appointed by the Government; they get fees for the analyses made by them, and their income depends on the number of analyses they make.

Mr. FRASER. Are they required to make any inspection of the food sold in these various cities, or only to make an analysis?

Mr. COSTIGAN. They have no authority to select the samples; but from information obtained here they are required to send out food inspectors —officers who go around and gather samples of certain classes of food or drugs. These are brought to the analyst of the district, who makes an analysis and reports to headquarters. With this vote we could not undertake to have every article of food and drugs inspected and analysed, but we do all that can be done with this amount.

Mr. FRASER. Certainly; but what information is given in order that the results may be made practical?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Bulletins are published showing the results of the analyses, and the newspapers copy the bulletins and spread the information very generally. The result has shown very great adulteration in some lines of goods, such as baking powders, common black pepper, and coffee, and less in other lines. The law imposes penalties, but until lately we found the law a little lame, and we were non-suited in some cases; but last year the law was amended, and I think we shall hereafter be in a better position to prosecute.

Mr. FRASER. I do not think the Government should depend upon the enterprise of the newspapers to give information of this kind to the public. Such information is of the greatest possible importance to consumers, and if the analyst simply makes the analysis, and then leaves it to the enterprise of the newspapers to publish it, the result will not be of very much service. Should not the Government make reports of that kind as open as possible, and secure the spread of the information by the distribution of the bulletins? What is the use of the bulletins unless there is a method by which any person who wants the information can get it? We all know that bulletins may issue by the thousand, but if they are not practically used, the result will be worthless. I consider this a matter of very great importance to the people of this country, especially now when our cities are growing larger, and the Government should be alive to see that not only the sellers of goods, but all purchasers should have this information; and we should be looking forward to the time when we shall have in this country results such as those achieved in England, so that all purchasers will feel safe in purchasing goods from the data supplied by the Government.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Of course, I cannot undertake to say that I will see that these bulletins are printed and distributed all over the country, which would entail a great expenditure. But I will have a larger number of bulletins printed and distributed amongst the members, so that they may send them to their constituents.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What steps does the hon. gentleman propose to take to punish persons who introduce injurious substances into food?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The law provides that they shall be prosecuted, and punished by fine, and also by imprisonment in some cases. I think that the amendment made in the law last session gives us power to proceed vigorously.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What have you done since last session?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No gross cases have come under my notice since last session. The introduction of substances injurious to health will expose a man to prosecution; or an article of food may be adulterated in the sense of depreciating its value, without its being injurious to health. Or an ingredient may be introduced, necessary for the shipment, that does not affect the quality; but in that case I think it has to be stated. If any adulteration takes place which is injurious to health the parties are liable to prosecution. The analyst has reported in some cases adulteration by substances injurious, but not in a very high degree. We took proceedings in several cases, some years ago, but we were non-suited, and we had the law amended so as to give us the necessary power.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand it is the intention of the Government, and a very proper intention, to proceed rigorously when any case is brought under their notice of adulteration of food in such a way as to render it injurious.

Mr. COSTIGAN. On notice being given, the department is prepared to prosecute. Otherwise, we might as well not have the law.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As regards the other cases, possibly the process of advertising them will bring the parties to their senses, but their names should be always published. I am not sure that that has always been the case.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is being done now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that the chief advertising done by the hon. gentleman was in the Canadian Mining Review, amounting to $234, under the head of adulteration of food. One would think that was hardly the best paper in which to advertise this matter.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Perhaps I have been a little remiss in that. It was not my intention to allow an advertisement of that kind to remain so long, though I must admit it was there through my authority.

Mr. McMULLEN. What advertising was done in the Ottawa Citizen for $75?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Something in the same line, or of weights and measures; I do not know which.

Mr. FRASER. Is it necessary there should be more advertising in Ottawa than elsewhere? Is there more adulteration here than in a city like Montreal?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It was not the analysis that was published: it was the regulations.

Mr. FRASER. That would show it was more necessary to put the Act in operation here than elsewhere.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Perhaps so.

Mr. FRASER. Do I understand there is a worse state of things in Ottawa than elsewhere?

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is the hon. gentleman's interpretation.

Mr. McMULLEN. I really think the results of the analyses should be published in the interests of the consumers, with the names of the parties.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The names are published now in these bulletins, and these are published in the newspapers of every locality. I will try and go a little further, and have a larger number of bulletins published and distributed to the members, who may distribute them in their localities.

Mr. DAVIN. I would suggest that an arrangement might be made with the papers throughout the country to publish the information at a rate that would barely cover the cost of setting the type. Very often these bulletins are thrown aside in the newspaper offices and not considered of sufficient interest to publish, but if the arrangement I suggest were made we would secure their publication at a nominal cost.

Mr. FRASER. I think those newspapers which already receive such a large amount from the Government ought to do that little work without any extra charge. I do not think they should be paid even at the rate mentioned by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin).

Mr. COSTIGAN. We do not propose to pay. It would cost too much.

Mr. FRASER. It is in the interests of the consumers to know where they can get the best food. The Minister has said that the papers publish these bulletins.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I said that they generally do.

Mr. FRASER. Now, I understand from a prominent journalist that is not the case. I am certain I never saw the name published of a single individual who was to be shunned by the purchasers.

Mr. FLINT. This matter is much more difficult than it appears. The papers will not publish this information. In the first place, it is not interesting to the public, and, in the second place, the papers are not anxious to publish the names of individuals in any community, because that would place them in an embarrassing position with regard to their own subscribers and the community. I think that a great deal of consideration should be given to this by the department, if they wish to have this important information distributed generally throughout the country. I am not at present prepared with any suggestion, further than that a larger number of bulletins should be printed and placed in a large number of hands, and, perhaps, sugestions might be asked from persons in regard to this subject. I have always read these bulletins with interest, and have desired to see them in the press; but, as a rule, they do not appear there, for the reasons I have given.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have received some of the bulletins sent out from the analyst's office, and, lately, I have paid some slight attention to them, and I must do the Government the justice to say that the names of the parties who manufacture the articles are appended in the bulletins, but I have never found any one outside of members of Parliament furnished with those bulletins. I read a good many newspapers pretty carefully, and I have never seen the public attention called to the fact that this adulteration is going on. I would ask the Government if they intend to take any steps to punish the fraud of adulteration. I remember last year getting the report of the public analyst on the manufacture of mustard, and it was fearful to see the ingredients that were put in to make up the bulk and the weight. In many cases those ingredients were harmless, but they were utterly worthless; in other cases they were doubtful, and in the other cases they were positively injurious; but I have yet to learn that the Government have taken any steps towards punishing the perpetrators of these frauds. If a farmer were to sell a firkin of butter with a stone in the centre of it, he would be sent to the penitentiary. Is it fair for these manufacturers to put a large percentage of worthless material in a valuable article and sell it as genuine? If I remember aright, I think there was 40 per cent. of worthless matter in some of these samples of mustard. That is a serious matter, and it is the duty of the Government—and it is the only use I can see in having a public analyst—to see that this wrong is rectified, and that the innocent purchasers get the article they desire to purchase. I hope the Government will seriously consider this matter and will give greater publicity to the reports.

Mr. FRASER. When the Government, after the analysis is made, find the article of a first-class character, do they give a certificate or get the manufacturer to put something in his advertisement or on the package to show that it has been analysed by the Government officer?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The manufacturer can have a copy of the result of the analysis on application.

Mr. FRASER. But take mustard, for instance: if the Government find one sample of mustard is good and another not so good, do they compel the manufacturer to state what the character of the manufactured article is, so that any person may know what he is buying?

Mr. COSTIGAN. If the hon. gentleman had been here for two or three sessions he would be aware of the difficulty of dealing with these questions. We cannot compel a man to brand his goods in a particular way, but there is another law which prevents a man from branding any goods as pure if they are not, or canned goods, for instance, as having more in the cans than they actually contain. That would be a fraud, and would be punishable. The hon. member for South Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong) says he is afraid that the Government have not taken steps to punish parties who are shown to have adulterated articles containing ingredients which are injurious to health. We endeavoured to do that, but we were non-suited, because the courts held that there was a defect in the law, and that we could not enforce it until it was amended. The intention is to punish adulteration wherever it occurs, and we mean that this vote of $25,000 shall be expended in the interests of the public. If any frauds are committed it is the duty of my department to see that they are punished, and it is my intention to do so.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that $7,056 is expended for salaries at Ottawa. What is the extent of the staff? Does it include Mr. Code, Mr. Ferguson, Mr. Bowman and others? What is the staff at Ottawa composed of?

Mr. COSTIGAN. There is the chief analyst, Mr. Macfarlane; there are two assistants, one laboratory clerk, and in this district one food inspector. As I have explained before, the food inspector in each district, in the interests of economy, is not selected for that purpose alone, but some officer whose duty is outside is paid a certain proportion out of that vote and the balance out of Excise. The salaries of these men for food inspection are charged in that bulk sum, because they are not otherwise chargeable. That is why the amount swells up to $7,000, because that includes the payments made to all the food inspectors throughout the Dominion.

Mr. McMULLEN. Why is it necessary to keep outside stations? Are not all the samples sent to Ottawa for analysis?

Mr. COSTIGAN. A great many samples are sent to Ottawa, but the outside stations were established before the chief office was established here. It is true that it might all be centred here, but I think it is more in the interest of the public that, where the analysis can be made by a reliable and competent man in the large centres, it is better than to send them here, particularly in warm weather.

Mr. McMULLEN. Of course, there are some cases where, perhaps, in transit, a certain character of stuff might suffer deterioration, but my impression is that if you conducted the entire analyses at Ottawa it would be much better than having it done by these men scattered at outside stations. I think you should either abolish the establishment at Ottawa or these outside offices. I cannot see how you can make them work together. We will suppose that you have an analyst at Toronto who may inspect an article of coffee, and he will give that article a certain character, according to its ingredients. Now, the manufacturer of that coffee may get for that particular brand of coffee something that he would not get if he sent it here to be analysed.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman is speaking without full information. The sample of coffee is sent to the analyst at London for analysis, and the result of that analysis is sent to the department here, and the chief analyst goes through it and examines it to see whether it is a bonâ fide test of the ingredients. The hon. gentleman must not be under the impression that this adds to the expenditure, because the analysts are not salaried officers. They get regular fees on each sample.

Mr. McMULLEN. In the first place, the analyst makes an analysis in London, and then sends the result of his investigation to the head office here, where a test is made by the chief analyist. Now, a fee is paid to the man in London, and at the same time we are keeping an additional staff of officers here further to investigate the results of the analysis that takes place in London.

Mr. COSTIGAN. We have applications from every town in the country, and we are trying to keep down the expense as much as possible.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I do not think the Minister gave any reason why the Canadian Mining Review should be patronized to the extent of $234 a year in advertising. This Review is a monthly paper published in Ottawa; it circulates principally amongst miners and the manufacturers of mining machinery; it has no general circulation amongst the public who are interested in the analysis of food. Why should this paper be selected to receive $234 worth of patronage from this department, when the public are really not benefited at all by these advertisements. You are paying this paper about $20 a month for advertising for that one department alone. I see that the paper is largely patronized by nearly all the departments of the Government—whole half pages of advertisements—the Intercolonial Railway, mining regulations, North-West Mounted Police, money orders, and everything of that kind. Now, it appears to me that the Government do not advertise this branch of the public service in this paper for the purpose of benefiting the public, but for the purpose of sustaining this newspaper—that can be the only reason. Why should that amount of money be spent on this paper? There is no advertisement in any other Canadian newspaper except the Citizen.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I have no objection to state that the item is more than I expected, though it is done with my authority, of course, because my authority had to be given for the insertion of any advertisement. When I gave authority for this advertisement I had no idea it would be used to such a large extent. It has exceeded my expectations. The hon. gentleman is right in calling my attention to it. I will take good care that it is not repeated, and the hon. gentleman will have no reason to complain again. We have had numerous claims from all over the country for advertising without authority. Nearly every paper in the Dominion has inserted that advertisement without any authority, and their claims amount to over $5,000, which, of course, we shall not pay, because they were not authorized.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. This paper did not insert it without authority?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No; I admit it had my authority, but I had no idea the advertising would run up to that amount.

Ordnance Lands.. .... $3,605

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice in that expenditure an unusually large sum appears to have gone for legal expenses; so far as I can see, close on to $3,000 of this amount seems to have gone for legal expenses, as appears by C—275 of the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not recollect to what those items refer in the Auditor General's Report, but I think they are some eighteen months old. Out of this item, I am asking for $2,500 for legal expenses. Whether the cases we have on hand are those the charge refers to I cannot say.

Mr. McMULLEN.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are there no officers here who can give you the information?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They were here all the afternoon, but I don't see them now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister of Justice may possibly know something about it. I find here charges like these: J. S. Hall, $264; Kingsmill, Symons, Torrance & Miller, $1,000; Charles Moss, $200; D. O'Connor, $691.20; C. Robinson, $500; making in all, as I say, nearly $3,000.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The greater part of the expenditure is for services in connection with the claims on the Government by the heirs of the Sparks Estate in the City of Ottawa, where they claim a large tract of ordnance land, and the suit is a very heavy one indeed. For instance, the payment to the firm of Kingsmill, Symons, Torrance & Miller is in connection with the dispute between the Ontario and Federal Governments relating to the chain reserve along the Niagara River. It has always been considered and disposed of as ordnance lands, but it is claimed by the Provincial Government as public lands of the province, and they have sought to eject our tenants from it. A suit is now going on with a view to settle the title.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does the property claimed by the Sparks Estate cover?

Mr. DEWDNEY. All the land outside of 100 feet on each side of the canal.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does it cover any buildings?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There may be buildings on it now; I do not know; I expect there are some buildings on it. It is all the land outside of 100 feet on each side of the canal for its whole length through the Sparks estate. I do not know what the width on each side is.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is not any property in regard to which we have parted with the title?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; it still remains in the Crown.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As I understand it, the Sparks Estate do not claim the land within 100 feet each side of the canal bank, but the excess.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is as I understand it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What have you done with respect to that? Has it been leased?

Mr. DEWDNEY. A very small portion of it is in my department, the bulk of it being under Railways and Canals.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In case the suit should go against the Government, are we likely to be let in for more than the value of the land? Is it a case in which numerous leases have been granted by the Government, which might involve counter litigation on the part of tenants of the Government, or is it simply an attempt to get hold of some vacant land still in the hands of the Government?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am not in a position to answer that question. I will obtain the information.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see there are payments to a person named Wilson, made for commission for collecting certain amounts. How is it this man receives this commission?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Commission is paid to land agents who collect amounts due for ordnance lands.

Mr. McMULLEN. Do you anticipate spending as large an amount for legal expenses next year?

Mr. DEWDNEY. We are asking $2,500. We are also asking $250 for commissions. It is proposed to sell some of the property at Grand Falls, Fort Erie, and elsewhere.

Mr. McMULLEN. The legal expenses are very high.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The cases are very important, and this sum is principally retainers to Mr. Christopher Robinson, in both cases $1,000 each.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Government have an item of $1,000 for survey of Logan's farm, at Montreal. I should like to know what the area of the land is, and what we propose to do with it? Has the land been sub-divided into lots, or what is the policy of the Government with respect to it?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I forget the total acreage, but there are 400 or 500 lots. They have been surveyed and staked out on the ground; $1,000 represents the cost of that survey. A portion of the land has been sold, and the balance will probably be sold this fall.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Are all the sales of ordnance lands made at public auction?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; they have to be so; the law provides for that.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. My information is that some ordnance lands on the Rideau Canal have been sold at private sale.

Mr. DEWDNEY. There is a provision that after lands have been leased for a certain number of years they can be sold at a valuation.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Have any sales of ordnance lands been made on the Rideau Canal lately by private sale?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No sales have been made on the Rideau Canal to my knowledge since I have had charge of the department—yes; I think a sale has been made of a small strip during my time, three or four miles out of town—I think a triangular strip.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Near Billings Bridge?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It was in that direction.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. On what terms was the sale made?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It was made on a valuation at the rate of about $175 per acre.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Who was the purchaser?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think Mr. Wallace.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Mr. Wallace, a member of the House?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. A brother of Mr. Wallace, a member of the House?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not know; he might be.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. My information is that the sale of the property was made to Mr. Wallace, a brother of Mr. Wallace, the member for West York, and that a private sale was made of the property. If this is a fact—I do not say it is a fact, but I am informed it is so—that a valuable strip of land was sold to Mr. Wallace on the Rideau Canal near Billing's Bridge in order that a piece of land he had there might be rendered complete, I think we are entitled to some information with regard to the price paid for the land, and the reason why the Government saw fit to depart from the usual course and make a deed for this ordnance land at a valuation for this Mr. Wallace, and take it out of the ordinary course of business. Why did they not put it up to public competition, as was done with other public lands?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is not an unusual occurrence. I recollect it is a small strip of land, at one end about 150 feet in width, running down to a point, stretching in front of property which had been purchased by this Mr. Wallace from the owner. The owner had leased this little triangular piece between the road and his property. This is the piece which was sold. I do not think there was an acre. There was nothing unusual. Other sales of similar character have been made where long leases have been held.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. How much was contained in the piece, and the price?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not recollect, but I do not think it was an acre. At one end it was 100 odd feet, and at the other end about nothing; what the length was I do not recollect.

Mr. McMULLEN. Surely, the Minister does not pretend to say that $175 is the price of an acre of land at Billings' Bridge, at the boundary of the city, and close to the electric cars.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not know whether the land was at Billings' Bridge, but the price was considered a very fair price.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who made the representation and fixed the price?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Mr. Mills, our agent for ordnance lands.

Mr. McMULLEN. Was there any information given to the parties owning property in that vicinity that the Government desired to sell that particular property?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; it was of value to nobody else except to the owner of the land.

Mr. McMULLEN. It may have been of great value to Mr. Wallace, and no doubt it is, because it bears to his piece of property the same relation that a man's nose does to his face, according to the description the Minister has given, and it was highly desirable that he should have it. It is rather singular that an exception should be made in the case of this particular property, and it being sold to the brother of the sitting member bears rather a suspicious aspect all through. I think we should know the extent of the property and the actual value of it. The Minister says a person from the department made the valuation, but that, in my opinion, would be a one-sided valuation, knowing the fact of Mr. Wallace's interest, and everything connected with it. It would hardly be a satisfactory valuation to the country, anyway.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I can get you the full particulars. There was about three-quarters of an acre in it.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Could the Minister say when the sale was made?

Mr. DEWDNEY. That I do not recollect; but I think it was made last fall.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. That makes the sale a little more noticeable, because you see the electric railway runs quite close to this property now, and it makes the property much more valuable than it was before.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not think it was known that the electric railway was going to be built when this was bought. I did not know it.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The electric railway has been in contemplation for the last year.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not think so.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think if I remember aright negotiations were entered into about a year ago with Mr. Howland, of Toronto, and when he failed to complete the negotiations the present company got it. I think the Minister should bring us down all the particulars with regard to this sale, because it has a very suspicious look. It may be all right, but at the present time it has a very suspicious look.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I will bring all the information down.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Minister says that the ordnance lands can be disposed of in this way, provided they are first put up for sale by auction.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I said that where long leases have been held of property they are sold on valuation.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who held the lease of this land and when did it expire?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The leaseholder, as far as I can recollect, was a man called Williams, and he had it for a good number of years.

Mr. McMULLEN. Had his lease expired?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not know.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is Mr. Wallace in possession of the property now?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not know. I do not know whether the title deeds have been issued.

Mr. McMULLEN. Was it sold subject to the existing lease?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think not, because it was sold out and out.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then there was no person in possession of the property when it was sold.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; Mr. Williams was.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the Minister bring down the information as to whether the lease had expired or not?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Perhaps it may not be in order, but I think it is as well that we should know what the party paid for the adjoining property. No doubt when the Minister arranged to sell this property to Mr. Wallace he made enquiries as to the price of the adjacent property, and this being the closest property to the ordnance land sold to Mr. Wallace, he would no doubt instruct his officer to enquire what Mr. Wallace had paid for this land, so as to fix the price on the ordnance land sold to Mr. Wallace to complete his property. If the Minister has that information I would like him to bring it.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not know anything about the transaction between Mr. Wallace and the party who sold the property adjoining. If I can, I will get the value of the adjacent property, so that you will have a guide in that way.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Could the Minister state if the party who held the lease on the property was given the refusal of it before it was sold?

Mr. DEWDNEY. My recollection is that the leaseholder did not apply to purchase it at any time. However, I will bring down all the information with regard to it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The reason I ask the question is that if there is such a clause in the Act, that ordnance land which has been held under lease can be sold without being submitted to auction, the intention of the Act has evidently been not to disturb those who are in possession of the land, if it can be avoided. That could be the only intention when the Act was passed. In this case it seems that the man who held the lease and was in possession of the land was never given a refusal of the land.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not think he ever asked for it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The chances are nine out of ten that he did not know the land was going to be sold at all, and he, perhaps, was not aware of what the law was in respect to it.

Mr. DEWDNEY. He had a lease of it for thirty years.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That does not alter the condition of the matter in the slightest. The intention of the law evidently is that the man who holds possession of it by lease should have a chance of buying the land, if it is for sale. In this case it was sold to a man who had never held it under lease, and, under the circumstances, it ought to have been put up to auction.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to enlighten the hon. gentleman a little on the point on which he wants information. The man who was the original lessee of the land was offered the land by the Government for one-fourth the money that was actually paid for it later on.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. When?

Mr. WALLACE. I think a few years ago. His statement is that the offer was open up to the time he sold the land, and the offer was about one-quarter of the price that the Government afterwards charged. He did not purchase the land, because it was of no use to him, but he paid a small rental for it each year, and assigned the lease which he held over to the person who purchased the land from him. He assigned his lease from the Government of the land in front that he was offered for one-quarter the amount that the Government valuator placed upon it, and which was paid for it.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Will the member for West York (Mr. Wallace), who seems to know all about the matter, state how much was paid for this strip of land, how much land there was, and what was paid for the adjoining property?

Mr. WALLACE. I think how much was paid for the adjoining property is not any of the hon. gentleman's business.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Probably not.

Mr. WALLACE. I might say that the property that was purchased from the Government is a narrow strip of land, perhaps 500 or 600 feet long, coming to a point at one end and reaching 30 or 40 feet in length at the other. It was not worth a dollar to the Government for any purpose whatever. The Government had offered to sell it to the original owner, Mr. Williams, and he refused to buy it. He had it fenced in, and I think he paid $1 a year, or some nominal rent for it. He refused to buy it, but he says he will make an affidavit that he was offered the land lately by the Government, and the next purchasers who came in proposed to buy that piece. Some parties were appointed to fix the value, and they valued it at about four times the original amount asked for it from the occupant; and that amount was paid for it without question.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I wish to say to the hon. gentleman that I had no ulterior motive in asking the question I did. The reason I wanted to know the price of the adjacent land was to ascertain whether the Government got a fair price for this strip or not. I asked the Minister to give the explanation, and when the hon. member for West York commenced to speak I thought he was going to answer the question. But I think the hon. member might give us a little more information in regard to this matter. He might tell us when the purchase of this strip of ordnance land was made, how much was paid for it, and who valued the property for the Government?

Mr. WALLACE. I understood from the Deputy Minister that he got some competent parties to value the land—I cannot tell whom. That value was paid without question.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What was the amount?

Mr. WALLACE. I cannot just remember the amount; it was not very large, because the quantity of land was not very large. The land was entirely useless, so far as the Government were concerned. It was a narrow strip between this property and the road; it was fenced in, and it had been occupied for thirty or perhaps forty years by the previous owner, Mr. Williams.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It may not have been of great value to the Government, but it may have been of great value to the man who owned the adjacent property. The hon. gentleman knows the price that was paid, and if he does not choose to tell us the Minister will give us the information, and if the Minister does not give us the information we will get it in some other way.

Mr. WALLACE. I say I do not remember the exact amount that was paid. I think it was at the rate of about $125 per acre. Perhaps that is not accurate, but it is very close to it. There was a fractional part of an acre, and it was somewhere about that value.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. member for West York says that the purchaser purchased the right of the lessee as well as the land. Was the right of the lessee purchased before the land or after?

Mr. WALLACE. At the same time, I think. He mentioned that there was a strip inside the fence owned by the Government, of which he had a lease, but of which he had not paid the rental for perhaps three, or four, or five years; but he paid up the rental and transferred the lease and all rights.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Do I understand that this strip of land runs along the canal bank?

Mr. WALLACE. No; it runs between this property and the canal road.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It does not run down to the water?

Mr. WALLACE. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to know from the Minister at what he estimates the value of this Logan's farm property which is now sub-divided, and how much has been realized from the sale that has already taken place?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I gave that information last session, and it is in Hansard. I do not now recollect exactly, but I think it is estimated that the whole property would realize between $60,000 and $70,000. But this triangular piece is only a very small portion of the Logan farm proper.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You are not selling the whole of the Logan farm?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; only this small triangular piece.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe that you are selling at Point Pelee. You had a survey made there.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I understand that at Point Pelee a number of squatters have been on the land for some time and incurred some expenses. There was some difficulty with them, and the deputy went up, taking a surveyor with him, and had the lots surveyed, and came to some understanding with the squatters, but I do not recollect what the result has been.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are you going to sell any of that land?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think some offer was made to those parties that by paying so much for the survey, and so much for each lot, they would get the title, but I do not remember exactly what it was.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not certain of the extent of land which the Government own there; but I should think, unless there are stronger reasons than I have heard or can imagine, that it would be an improvident thing to part with the ownership of that land to these squatters. Give them leases if you like, but I think the ownership should be retained. I would like to know the total extent of the Government property there?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is a small strip along the water.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Was it not held as a protection to the harbour?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It runs out into the lake. I think it is occupied by fishermen. I fancy that it has no special value.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are you sure, because it is not likely the ordnance would have selected it without some special reason? I would not at all object to the Government leasing these lands. That is often done with ordnance property; but, as a rule, where ordnance property of this kind was directed to be reserved, it was for some special reason, either for the purpose of controlling some harbour of refuge or some other reason, and the property is usually of some value, and should not be disposed of without good cause.

Dominion Lands—Commissioner's salary. $5,000

Mr. McMULLEN. I think this question of expenses in connection with Dominion lands wants a complete overhauling and thorough criticism. I knew this expenditure existed when the Minister took office, but he has not made any very decided effort to reduce it. I have always stated that I believe the Land Board at Winnipeg is altogether unnecessary. From our experience with regard to the settlement of claims by that board, when a third party is dissatisfied and appeals the appeal is sent to Ottawa. It is like sending a case from one court to another. I think the salary of $5,000 to Mr. Smith is an extravagant salary. If the hon. gentleman will take up the receipts and expenditures on North-West lands last year he will find that the expenses amounted to $440,000, and the entire receipts to $465,000, including the receipts from ranche grants, coal mines, timber limits, &c. All these receipts have been actually consumed, with the exception of a few thousand dollars, by salaried officers in the North-West, by the Land Board at Winnipeg, by the outside service, and the officers in the City of Ottawa. When we consider the fact that we were promised by the High Commissioner that by the year 1891 we would be receiving something like $58,000,000 from our lands, this result shows a very miserable contrast, and affords a very poor prospect of our ever getting out of the country the money we have expended on the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. SPROULE. I entirely disagree with the hon. gentleman regarding the Land Board at Winnipeg. Every hon. gentleman who has been in this House for a number of years past must know that before that Land Board was established there there was a constant stream of letters coming from that country to members here asking to have claims settled, and owing to the distance and other circumstances it was almost impossible to get a claim finally adjusted. Now that the Land Board has been established we hear no more of these claims, but the people deal directly with the board. There is not one application sent here now for every ten that used to be sent previously. I have not received one for three or four years, whereas before the Land Board was established they came to me by the dozen, and I could get little or no satisfaction. On writing to parties who have had anything to do with the Land Board, I have been told by them that it has given the greatest satisfaction, and that it was the most important change the Government had made in connection with the management of land in that country.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to give a little idea of the expenses in connection with this matter. I hold a statement prepared from the Auditor General's Report, which shows the following expenditures in the year 1889-90:—

Salaries, Interior Department, at Ottawa	$ 77,771.01
Outside service	36,765.56
Contingencies, at Ottawa	17,419.52
Dominion Land Board at Winnipeg, officers of the Crown Timber, Registry officers	152,699.01
Dominion lands—Capital	133,998.45
Banff Springs	19,767.93
	$438,521.48

Adding the Minister's salary of $7,000, makes a total of $445,521.48. The entire receipts from all sources, including sale of lands, timber limits, coal mines, &c., last year, is shown on page E—106 to be $462,322.26. That leaves about $16,800 of a balance to the credit of Dominion lands, and that is a very poor showing when compared with the promises that were made as to the receipts from this department. There are some of these men in registry offices who are not receiving in fees one-fourth of their salary. I observed that there was one man receiving a salary of $1,200, and the entire fees of his office, according to the Auditor General's Report of last year, only amounted to $250. The entire fees collected in the North-West do not anything like pay the expenses of the registry offices. There are a number of officials there that I think could be well done without, and if the Minister would make a thorough investigation of the offices which are filled by people sent up from here I have no doubt he could make a great reduction in the expenditure. That country was described by the leader of the Opposition, some years ago, who is not the leader at present, as a happy hunting ground for friends of the Government who could not find any other resting place for the soles of their feet. I know many who are there virtually doing nothing but drawing their salaries.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I would like to disabuse the hon. gentleman's mind in regard to the amounts received from the registry offices now. It is true that in one of the districts, Battleford, the salary paid is larger than that paid on any of the other districts, but Mr. Scott, who was the original registrar, there and who was the only one in the North-West for a number of years, has had his district reduced in size by the opening of other districts. The receipts for East Saskatchewan were $928.79 in 1889-90, and $2,021.37 in 1890-91; in Assiniboia, $4,657.42 in 1889-90 and $5,353.56 in 1890-91; in North Alberta, $443.86 in 1889-90 and $633.83 in 1890-91; in South Alberta, $4,185.36 in 1889-90, and $5,548.58 in 1890-91.

Mr. McMULLEN. What was the expenditure in North Alberta?

Mr. DEWDNEY. $1,600 for the registrar; that is the total expense there. In South Alberta the expense is $3,060, leaving a balance of over $2,500 there. So the revenue there is increasing, and is very largely in excess of what the office costs. As to the general revenue, there is no douht that it has not come up to our expectation, but there is one reason for that which I can give and for which I am to a certain extent responsible, because it lies more or less within my power to enforce the payments for pre-emptions. The amount now owing for pre-emptions is something over $3,000,000, upon which 6 per cent. is being drawn. For the past two or three years especially very small amounts have been paid upon pre-emptions, and I have not felt justified in forcing the settlers. I have no doubt that, after the crops which we anticipate this year, the returns from that source will astonish even the hon. gentleman himself, because these people are willing to pay if they have the money, and it is understood that, with the good crop we have anticipated this year, they will be called upon to pay without fail. If I had pressed them, no doubt I could have made a better showing, but I thought it better to deal leniently with them, rather than, by closing on them, to drive settlers out of the country.

Mr. McMULLEN. Why is it necessary to give the man at Battleford $2,000, when the others only get $1,200?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Mr. Scott was the first registrar in the North-West, and he was appointed by Mr. Mackenzie's Government at that salary. When we came to divide up the districts he was retained, and we felt that we could not reduce his salary.

Mr. McMULLEN. When he was appointed, I suppose the cost of living was much higher there than it is now. I do not care who appointed him, they gave him too much. Now, I suppose he can live as cheaply there with the railway facilities there as he could anywhere else, and when the duties of the office are reduced his salary should be reduced also to the amount paid to the others.

Mr. FRASER. The question of salaries is a small one compared with the other matter, and I would ask the Minister how much he expects to receive for lands during the year which has just closed?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The revenue will be $454,185.19.

Mr. FRASER. Will that amount be largely on sales made previous to the year just closed?

Mr. DEWDNEY. This is the revenue on account of Dominion lands, including sales of lands and timber dues.

Mr. FRASER. I want to know the revenue from the sale of lands to actual settlers for agricultural purposes?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have got the return here, but I cannot give it without adding it up.

Mr. FRASER. It seems to me that the amount expended for surveys is out of all proportion to the amount of land sold, and the amount of money received. While it may have been necessary to make all these surveys, I am bound to say there appears to have been more attention given to surveys and to paying surveyors than to settling the country. It is a serious question, in view of the census, as to what can be done for people in that vast country. The Minister ought to know whether anything can be done more than has been done. But the amount of money expended in proportion to the results is out of all conscience. There has been an extraordinary amount of surveying for the result. How long is this to go on? How much land is yet to be surveyed? The sum chargeable to income this year is $145,000, and the sum chargeable to capital $100,000, within a fraction of a quarter of million dollars. Are the results commensurate with the expenditure? Are we to look forward to no better results in the future? If the immigration policy has failed, then there should be a curtailing here, until such time as we adopt some better method to get settlers to the North-West. I know it may be a question on which there may be a good deal of difference of opinion as to the methods to be pursued, but there ought to be no difference of opinion as to the amount of money we are now spending for the results. The idea of spending $250,000 when the income is only $400,000, and that upon sales made long ago, is absurd. I suppose the amount actually received from lands sold to bonâ fide settlers does not amount to $250,000. For my part, I think that if there is no other method of peopling the North-West we had better give the lands to anybody and everybody who go there. Bonâ fide settlers are worth more than the money we are receiving to-day. Let the Government throw the whole country open, and invite settlers from every part of the world, and give them the land.

Mr. SPROULE. We have been doing that for a long time.

Mr. DEWDNEY. There are millions of acres waiting now.

Mr. FRASER. Millions that nobody can get, because they are so much tied up by corporations. If the whole country was thrown open settlers would go there.

Mr. TROW. On page D—136 of the Auditor General's Report I notice that the homestead inspection is costing very high. There is J. J. Arsenault, who has a salary of $1,200; living allowance, 266 days, at $1.50; horse, 361 days, at 50 cents, total, $579.50; harness and whip, $24.10; buck-board cushion, $3; horse hire, $8.50, besides many other articles for his office.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Mr. Arsenault is a homestead inspector, and his business keeps him continually on the move; in fact, it is with difficulty that the homestead inspectors we have now are able to keep pace with the work. At one time we allowed them to find their own horses and paid them so much for their keep. Now we provide them with horses, and $1.50 a day for living expenses for the homestead inspector, and 50 cents a day for his horse. After a good deal of experience, we came to the conclusion that that was a very reasonable allowance.

Mr. TROW. I am surprised at the charge of 361 days for the horse. He must have been working over hours, or nights. Or are the years longer out there than here?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I fancy he got in a few days on the previous year.

Mr. WATSON. If the hon. gentleman was acquainted with the facts he would know that this inspector had his own horse, and charged the Government for his keep all the year round.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That might have been the case, but if it had been a Government horse he would have been allowed 50 cents a day for keep, just the same.

Mr. WATSON. Do not some of those inspectors furnish their own horses?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; we find all their horses.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think the expenses incurred by these homestead inspectors are altogether more than is necessary. I know something of the way they act. A homestead inspector in the North-West goes to make inspection of a property; the party that is on it is very glad to see him, and will treat him to the best in the house, and will feed the horse, and all that sort of thing, without its costing the inspector a farthing. They do that in nine cases out of ten, and every inspection they make costs them little or nothing. In my opinion, it is absurd. I know perfectly well that some of them put in the year spending but very little. Their $2 and their salary are almost clear gain, because it does not cost them anything to drive around through the country. The people for whom they inspect land are very glad to see them. I myself, when in the North-West, travelled considerably with one of these inspectors—a very decent, respectable man—but still, I know it was his experience, because I was along with him, and had an opportunity of learning how they got along.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend must be aware that every homestead inspector in the North-West has not a companion so fascinating as my hon. friend. If every homestead inspector was accompanied by a companion such as my hon. friend, I have no doubt he could travel gratis. But he mistakes the North-West settler very much if he thinks that every homestead inspector can go around the country for nothing. I have been looking at these rates here: I know something of the expense of travelling round the country, and I think the rates are moderate. Take this horse, for which we pay him 50 cents a day. I do not see any difficulty in a horse travelling during 361 days of the year. If the men who travel long distances get horses to go around the country at 50 cents per day it is very cheap, because one of the common incidents of our life in the North-West is that of finding your horse, when on the open plain, far away from a veterinary surgeon, with an attack of colic, and you soon find him on his back with his hoofs to the stars. In regard to this item, I think the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is super-hypercritical. Generally he is hypercritical, but he has surpassed himself to-night; his chief fault was that he was too modest, and he did not know the benign influence that made that homestead inspector travel at such a cheap rate.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Speaking of the number of days, there is a lady out there who worked 365 days. She was not paid as well as the horse.

Mr. WATSON. I do not agree entirely with the member for West Assiniboia. The inspector receives $1.50 per day and 50 cents for his horse, and he can make a little money out of that allowance of $2 per day. As a rule, the inspectors are well treated by the settlers in the districts through which they travel, and the allowance is a liberal one. How many inspections were made last year by the inspectors? What are the returns from the inspections? I am aware the inspectors made a charge of $10 for an inspection; it was formerly $5. I have yet to learn that any person has received a receipt for the $10 so paid.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The hon. gentleman does not pretend that the homestead inspectors put the money in their pockets.

Mr. WATSON. I am asking for information.

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is paid into the treasury.

Mr. DAVIN. I think the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) must be mistaken. I should like to ask the Minister, for my own information, if the inspector takes the fee? As I understand it, the fee for the inspection is paid at the office.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The fees all go into the office. The fees have over-paid the inspectors $9,000 this year.

Mr. WATSON. Is the fee not paid to the inspector when he inspects the land?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; and every week he makes a return to the head office.

Mr. WATSON. Are receipts supposed to be given for all moneys paid to the Government?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I suppose so.

Mr. WATSON. I am informed the inspectors do not give a receipt.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Can you give me the name of any?

Mr. WATSON. I think I can. I want to know the system that is followed in regard to this inspection fee.

Mr. DEWDNEY. If the parties go to the office they pay the fee there. If they go to the inspector they pay the fee to him. He accounts for every dollar he gets. I presume no man who asks for an inspection and pays $10 would do so without taking a receipt. If anything of the kind suggested had happened, we would have had it reported, and it would have come under the eyes of the head office.

Mr. WATSON. I do not think it follows that the hon. gentleman would hear of it either from the head office or from individuals. If an inspection was made, and a patent was recommended, the person receiving his patent for his homestead would not care whether he got a receipt or not. My information came by correspondence this session, and the party complained bitterly at the Government exacting $10 instead of $5, the former fee. The hon. Minister has stated that the fees more than pay the cost of inspection, and I would therefore suggest that the fee be reduced to $5 as formerly. I was also asked if I would find out how the returns were made and if the inspector was supposed to give a receipt, because the person communicating with me was under the impression that when the inspector charged $10 instead of $5 he pocketed the $5.

Mr. DEWDNEY. We cannot prevent people having suspicions of that kind. When an inspection is made it is for the purpose of ascertaining if an entry can be given for that particular quarter-section. There is a practical check, because the head office knows if the inspection has been made and the fee paid. The inspection has to be made before the entry can be given.

Mr. WATSON. A person may go to an inspector and invite him to inspect his homestead before communicating with the head office. The inspection is made. The inspector might report the inspection or not. In a good many cases reports were made which were not favourable, and still the fee was charged.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman should know that no result would come from the inspection if no report was made. The object is to make a report to the land agent, who would send to his office the application for a patent. There would be no object in making an inspection, if there was no report made to the land agent. There is a check on the inspectors.

Mr. WATSON. That is what I am complaining of. He pays $10 for his inspection, and his inspection may not be approved of, and he does not get his patent. He probably has to wait two or three years, and, when he wants to know the reason why the patent is not forthcoming, he communicates with the department. Sometimes the settlers are not anxious to get their patents, and they make their application to the inspector when he comes around that way.

Mr. DEWDNEY. They cannot do that. They must make their application to the land agent.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice at page D--135, of the Auditor General's Report, that T. H. Aikman, homestead inspector, gets a salary of $1,200 a year. He also gets living allowance, 264 days at $1.50; horse, 349½ days at 50 cents; two horses, $305; horse hire, $54, and horse feed and stabling, $48.75. How is it that he charges for horse keep, and afterwards for horse hire and stable?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Probably he played out his horse and he had to hire another horse; possibly one horse died and he bought another. I will look up the vouchers to see how that is accounted for.

Mr. McMULLEN. How many homestead inspectors have we?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Seven.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that this man Aikman's expenses come to about $4 a day everything counted. It is a pity he did not play out in place of the horse.

Mr. WATSON. Could the hon. gentleman give us an idea of the number of inspections made by these inspectors?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have not that return here.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to have that information because I know that very serious delays occur to persons who are entitled to their patents on account of the Government requiring a report from their inspector before issuing the patent, and these inspectors are not able to get around. It appears to me that with the facilities for travelling in that country now, seven inspectors ought be able to report more promptly than at present on the claims of the applicants.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Sometimes there is a great pressure of work and the delay is accounted for by the small number of inspectors we have. I know that the inspectors are on the road day and night, and that the inspectors are very hard worked men. Complaints may have been made to the office in Winnipeg, but I know that no complaints have been made to me down here. I have known persons to want inspectors to go out in the winter time when it was impossible for them to do so.

Mr. WATSON. Are inspections made in winter?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; in Southern Manitoba, when there is no snow.

Mr. TROW. I notice that W. H. Allison charges $80 for exchange on a buggy, and that the Government had to pay it. That is the price of a buggy altogether.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I suppose he gave $80 and another buggy in exchange.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think it is right that we should draw to the attention of the Minister the enormous charges for the Land Board at Winnipeg which amounts to over $25,000 altogether. You commence with a janitor at $600 a year; then you have T. R. Burpé, secretary, at $1,800; A. F. Crowe, extra clerk, one year, $850; Dixon, another clerk, $1,050; Dolbear, another extra clerk, 365 days at $3 a day, and the commissioner, H. H. Smith, receiving $5,000 a year. In all you have 26 officials there. Then you have a large sum for contingencies. We have the superintendent of mines, $3,200 a year, and a forestry commissioner, Mr. J. H. Morgan, who gets $2,000 a year.

Mr. DEWDNEY. He has been off for a year, and no person has been appointed in his place.

Mr. McMULLEN. I give the Minister credit for that, and I hope that next year he will report a number more as being off. Is the half-breed commissioner still engaged at $2,190 a year?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; he has a good deal to do yet.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the hon. gentleman agrees to part with his services we will let this item pass now.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That will be hard on the half-breeds. The inspector has a good deal to do yet.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think we have a number of officials there that we could well spare. How many registry offices are there?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Five.

Mr. McMULLEN. You have recently appointed an inspector of registry offices.

Mr. DEWDNEY. He was appointed at the time the Torrens system was put into operation.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is his salary?

Mr. DEWDNEY. He was getting $1,600, and I propose to increase his salary this year to $2,000. He is a first-class officer, his position is a very responsible one, and he has a great deal of work. He not only inspects, but in case of the sickness of a registrar, of which we have had every year more or less, he goes and takes charge of an office, and he is the only person who can do the work of a registrar in case of necessity.

Mr. McMULLEN. I cannot understand how it is necessary to have an inspector of five registry offices. The Minister admitted to-day that some of them do not pay their own expenses, though I admit that others pay considerably more; but it seems absurd to have this official, whose salary started at $1,400 and is afterwards increased to $2,000 a year. Who is he?

Mr. DEWDNEY. P. M. Barker. He comes from Ontario.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think he is a brother-in-law of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy).

Mr. DEWDNEY. I did not know that.

Mr. McMULLEN. Well, I know it. I do not know whether he got the appointment on that ground or not. I see that we paid his travelling expenses from Orangeville to the North-West.

Mr. DAVIN. There is no doubt that this officer is a hard-worked officer. I know him well. He is an energetic and capable officer, and as the Minister has stated, if one of the registrars becomes ill he has to go and take off his coat and do the work: I have known him to do it. The responsibility is very great, and I do not think $2,000 is too much.

Mr. TROW. On page 132—B, I notice a very remarkable item: "Moving safe, $55; freight and charges, $7.86."

Mr. DEWDNEY. If that is for the commissioner's office, it was in the old post office building at the south end of the town and it was removed to the upper story of the new post office. That is only a surmise of mine.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Minister will find at page D—134, the following:—P. M. Barker, instructor of registrars, Orangeville to Regina—packing furniture, $10; cartage of furniture, $13; fares, $51.80; Pullman, $16; board of family, $15; freight, $87.50; balance refunded in October, $86.70; in all, $280. So that we paid not only his own expenses, but those of all his family.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think that is the custom, when officials first go to the North-West to take up their permanent residence in the country.

Mr. WATSON. Could there not be agents secured in that territory, without removing them from Orangeville?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not know. He was appointed three or four years ago, before my time.

Superintendent of Mines' salary..... $3,200

Mr. McMULLEN. Are you going to continue this man in office?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Oh, yes; Mr. Pierce is a very valuable man.

Mr. WATSON. What are his particular duties?

Mr. DEWDNEY. When the appointment was first made the mining strip along the British Columbia railways was administered by us, and he gave his attention to that as well as to the work of the Land Board in the North-West Territories. That is why he was styled superintendent of mines, but he is used for inspections and all classes of difficulties in the North-West. He is now in the Lake La Biche country settling half-breed claims.

Mr. WATSON. I think the term superintendent of mines is a sort of farce in this case. About how much of his time is occupied in inspecting mines?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not know that he has made any inspections of mines last year, nor since we have handed over the property to the British Columbia Government. There are some mines east of the summit of the Rocky Mountains.

Dominion Lands Agents' salaries..... $19,295

Mr. WATSON. Is it the intention to have a land agent in the Lake Dauphin district?

Mr. DEWDNEY. We have sent an officer there from the Minnedosa office, and his place is being taken by a clerk from the Winnipeg office.

Mr. WATSON. I think a permanent agent should be located in the Lake Dauphin district, as it is there the homesteaders are now going. The work done at Minnedosa and Birtle and other points is very much reduced, and it would be well to reduce the expenditure in these old places and establish new offices where they are more required.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have looked into the Lake Dauphin matter and may have a permanent agent there.

Mr. McMULLEN. How comes it that there is an increase in this item of $3,800?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is not a real increase. The salary of Mr. E. F. Stephenson, who was Crown timber agent and is now also land agent at Winnipeg, is included in this. We moved Mr. Whitcher from Winnipeg to the office here to do special work here. He was receiving $2,400 and came down at a salary of $1,700. We amalgamated the land office with the Crown timber office and are charging Stephenson's salary to the land office, whereas last year it was charged to the Crown timber office. Stephenson's salary is $2,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. How many sons has Mr. Rufus Stephenson in the North-West?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I cannot tell. The salary of Mr. Stephenson last year was the same, but it was given him as Crown timber agent only. Mr. Nash, who is attached to the land office at Winnipeg, was appointed Dominion lands agent at Kamloops, and his salary is attached to this vote. Then the salaries of Messrs. Hiam and Stephenson were increased $300 each.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does the hon. gentleman really think that, in the face of the receipts from the North-West and the enormous expenditure, he is justified in increasing the salaries of officials from $1,400 to $2,000 each?

Mr. WATSON. Are Crown timber inspectors entitled to any portion of the fees from people cutting wood and hay without permission on public lands?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; but there were officers of an inferior grade who got very small salaries and were entitled to some of the fees for cutting hay, &c.

Mr. WATSON. I know of one or two cases where settlers complained of having been fined and their hay seized, after cutting on lands that had been actually homesteaded, but the inspector, not knowing the bounds of the locality, seized the hay and inconvenienced the settlers to a great extent. It was some of the Crown timber inspectors who made the seizure, and I understood that when they made a seizure of that description they got a portion of the fees.

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; they do not.

Mr. WATSON. One of the Crown timber agents complains that he has been unfairly treated. If his statement be correct, he has a grievance. Mr. W. B. McLellan, the officer in question, was summoned to give evidence in connection with the St. Catharines milling suit in which the Government were interested. While in the west, on public service, he was paid the regular allowance for travelling expenses, but while residing in Ottawa his claim was refused. Why were his expenses not paid here when he was summoned as a witness, he being a Government officer? Was one of these forest rangers to be summoned here and not to be allowed the fees he would get in the North-West?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He would be entitled simply to witness fees.

Mr. WATSON. These men get $800 or $900 a year and they receive their travelling allowance while they are in the North-West. If they are summoned here, of course their salary would not cease, but why should they not receive their travelling allowance when they are here as witnesses in a case the Government is interested in?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. They are entitled to the witnesses' allowance. A man is subpœnaed in the cause, and his fees are taxed by the officer of the court.

Mr. McMULLEN. Where did Stephenson live before he went to Winnipeg?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not know. I never saw him until he came to Winnipeg.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see we have another Stevenson in Regina.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is an old man of 80 years of age of another family altogether.

Mr. DAVIN. He spells his name with a "v" like Sam Weller.

Crown Timber Agent's salary, New Westminster.....$1,800

Mr. CASEY. In reference to the Dominion lands agent's salary I have something to say.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DENISON). That was carried before the hon. gentleman came into the room. The item now is the Crown timber agent's salary.

Mr. CASEY. I say we are on the other item.

The CHAIRMAN. That was carried before you entered.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister stated that the apparent increase in the Dominion lands agents' salaries was caused by the transfer of an agent from the Crown timber office which would cause a corresponding reduction in the expenditure of that office. Will he explain that?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I gave every item of that before the hon. gentleman was in the House.

Salaries of clerks in outside service, forest rangers and land guide service..... $40,827.50

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understood that the land guide service was to be dispensed with?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; that should be intelligence officers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the intelligence officers?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The only one we have is Robert Doull, of Medicine Hat. He takes settlers around and locates them. As the hon. gentleman knows, there is no land agent between Regina and Calgary.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many members of the local Opposition of Ontario are you paying under this head?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Not any of them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What about my friend Metcalfe?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There are none paid now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you mean to say that this important official has been dispensed with?

Mr. DEWDNEY. He has been, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. SPEAKER. I desire to call the attention of the Minister to the case of Mr. Black, of Minnedosa, who for some time occupied the position of forest ranger, but his services were dispensed with. He writes me that for some time afterwards he made collections for timber cut in that locality and made returns to the department, but he was never paid anything by the department from the time they ceased to recognize him as an officer, though they continued to receive the moneys collected by him, and he claims he is entitled to some consideration for having made those collections. I would be glad if the Minister would look into his case and make him some allowance for his services.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I will look into the matter.

Mr. WATSON. Would not that come under the head of the local gentlemen entitled to a percentage of the fees?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I should think so.

Mr. CASEY. I understood the Minister to say that the land guides had been done away with, and intelligence officers had taken their place, and then that there was only one intelligence officer. How is it that there is no greater reduction after the whole staff of land guides has been dispensed with? How much was paid for the land guides last year?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have not got that. That would be in the Auditor General's Report of last year; but I think there must have been three or four thousand dollars last year.

Mr. CASEY. I see that Mr. Metcalfe, for the six months that he was employed as immigration agent, received $150 a month, making $900; and as intelligence officer, he received $90 a month, evidently for the same period, because the time during which the intelligence officer is employed, is the same time during which the immigration agent is employed. Mr. Metcalfe was not there in the winter months, at any rate, he had other duties elsewhere; but he has received $1,380 for filling two positions which were incompatible with each other if he discharged them properly. An intelligence officer is not supposed to be bound down to one spot. As immigration agent he ought always to be accessible at his office. An intelligence officer or land guide could go around and show people the country, an immigration agent should be at his office to receive fees, make entries, and all that sort of things. Besides that, I find that Mr. Metcalfe received $98.80 for travelling allowance, and $10 for Pullmans, and living allowance, $5. During those five days that he was away from home, he spent $108 on railway fares, making $1,460 that he received for the six months.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In respect to Mr. Metcalfe, were you in the habit of paying his expenses to and from Kingston?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On what principle was that done?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think he went up once or twice for us. I do not know whether his expenses were paid both summers or not.

Mr. CASEY. I object to the Government coming down east to get men to do work up west and paying their travelling expenses. Now, we have got just as good men in Manitoba to occupy positions as Mr. Metcalfe.

Mr. TAYLOR. No.

Mr. WATSON. I say yes; men who would be just as attentive to their duties as Mr. Metcalfe; men who know just as much, and probably more, about the country. I say that the Government should not go to the expense of paying travelling expenses of men from Ottawa or Kingston to fill fat offices in the North-West, when just as good men can be found on the spot. I see Mr. Metcalfe was paid for his trip to Winnipeg, $108; living allowance, $12.50. Now, that is one of the needless expenditures, for which there is no excuse.

Travelling expenses of Inspector of Agencies, Homestead Inspectors and Superintendent of Mines; Contingencies of Superintendent of Mines, Land Board, Dominion Lands and Crown Timber Agents, Inspector of Ranches and at head office; special service account, stationery and printing, and Half-breed Claims Commission—expenses	$42,780

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. These seem to be mixed up in all directions.

Mr. DEWDNEY. This is the estimate: Travelling expenses, inspector of agencies, $1,800; travelling expenses, superintendent of mines, $1,800, same as last year. Then travelling expenses, land board inspectors, $7,000; contingencies of land board, $2,000. Last year it was $2,700. Contingencies Dominion lands agencies, $8,000; last year it was $9,500.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What do you mean by contingencies? What does that cover?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They cover telegrams, stationery and like contingencies. The $1,500 saved in contingencies for Dominion land agencies was on the cost of heating and lighting the land offices in the Department of Public Works. We were in the old post office then, and we had to pay for our own heating. The Public Works Department pays for the heating now in the new post office where we have our offices. Out of this vote it is usual to pay the expenses of transferring clerks from one office to another, according to the volume of business. Travelling expenses are heavy, because our officers are required to be on the move, and they are estimated for separately.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What do you mean by special service accounts?

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is out of this vote for paying the expenses of transferring clerks from one office to another. They are contingencies for Dominion land agencies at New Westminster and Kamloops, in British Columbia, stationery, printing, outside service, Half-breed Claims Commission expenses.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who are sitting on the Half-breed Commission?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There is only one commissioner, Mr. Goulet. He takes affidavits and declarations with regard to any stray ones that come in.

Mr. WATSON. There is an item here for travelling expenses for E. A. Nash, which appears to be a fair sample, from Banff to Winnipeg. Mr. Nash appeared to go back to Kamloops and the total amount of travelling expenses and cost of moving from Banff to Winnipeg and from Winnipeg to Kamloops, was $607.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Mr. Nash was apointed to Banff before I took charge. I found there was very little work for a land agent there, and I moved him back to Winnipeg, where assistance was required. Mr. Bovill had been appointed agent at Kamloops. After receiving the appointment he changed his mind, and when the inspector went over to place him in the office, he refused the position and left the country. Then we sent Mr. Nash, who was one of our old land agents, over to Kamloops.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Bovill was paid $200 expenses to Kamloops, and for 57 days in Ottawa.

Mr. DEWDNEY. He was called here and remained some time to receive instructions. He received his appointment here, and after he went to British Columbia changed his mind.

Mr. CASEY. Was he made to refund the money?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No.

Mr. WATSON. In regard to the inspection of ranches, has the inspector made any report to the effect that some of the ranchmen are not complying with the regulations, and that certain lands held by ranchmen should be thrown open? I am informed that some ranchmen are not complying with the regulations, and are not keeping the full number of cattle on their ranches. In some cases the ranchmen have left the country, and homesteaders are wishing to make entries for some of those lands. When the twenty-one year leases were given, a homesteader wishing to go on some of the lands could not get an entry because he had to get permission of the ranchmen.

Mr. DEWDNEY. All those who do not carry out the conditions have their ranches thrown open for homesteads. I have been continually carrying out this policy, and have been cancelling leases for non-payment of rent, not fulfilling the regulation as regards stock, &c. I have cancelled 30 or 40 leases and thrown the lands open. Settlers are even asking that some of our most important ranches be thrown open. We cannot, however, do an injustice to those men who were induced to come to the country and open up a very valuable and important business, but the whole question of ranches will have to be settled in the near future.

Mr. WATSON, There must be a case which has escaped the hon. gentleman's memory. Within the last three or four weeks I have received a letter from a man who has certainly performed settlement duties—I do not remember the man's name—and he has made repeated applications to the ranchman for permission to make an entry. He is entitled to a patent, I believe, but he cannot get it because the lease has been granted, and the ranchman has left the country. The ranche was taken over, I believe, by another ranching company for a time. Under the lease given to ranchmen during the last few years, at any time a homesteader can take up land on a ranche.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Under a new lease.

Mr. CASEY. This whole item is of such a nature that it is impossible to discuss it properly. It includes travelling expenses of inspector of agencies, homestead inspector and superintendent of mines, contingencies of superintendent of mines, land board, Dominion lands and Crown timber agents, inspector of lands at head office, special service account, stationery and printing and Half-breed Claims Commission expenses. When the Minister was asked to explain these items in some detail, he was not able to make them clear.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I gave every item.

Mr. CASEY. The statement was read in a very indistinct manner, and the explanations were such that they did not explain. Not only is there a mixing of a great many items, but the heads are given in such a way that it is not possible to trace the expenditure in the Auditor General's accounts. There should be separate items for inspector of agencies, for homestead inspection, and so on. The explanation and statement have not been given with the intention of facilitating enquiry into the accounts for last year and making comparison with the Estimates for the present year. The Minister made one item clear. He estimated this year $1,500 for travelling expenses of superintendent of mines. That gentleman only spent $1,020 last year, and he is probably as economical as anyone could be. I do not see any reason for increasing that estimate. This is not an intentional offence on the part of the Minister, but it is an offence against the propriety of asking for money in this way.

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is the same way that the amounts have been voted for years.

Mr. CASEY. This is no excuse. I do not think they were in such a muddled state before. The hon. Minister is supposed to have a special familiarity with the affairs of the North-West, and he no doubt has, and he should be in a position to straighten these matters up and to lay the estimates before the House in a clear and intelligible fashion. It may not be an intentional offence on his part—and I do not think it is—to put an item of this kind before the House, but to ask a large sum of money in this vague way is an evidence of neglect and carelessness.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I gave the information for every single item before you got up to speak.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister seemed to be stuck in the middle of his information and dropped it.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I gave you every item.

Mr. CASEY. We cannot take in all those things spoken across the floor of the House viva voce. These matters should be put in print and under the same headings as the accounts for previous years, so that we can compare the account for two expenditures.

Mr. DEWDNEY. You will notice there is a saving of $5,000.

Mr. CASEY. I think that a man having the acquaintance with the North-West that the hon. gentleman has, should put the estimates in proper shape.

To pay salaries of extra clerks at head office, Ottawa, advertising, copying, &c... ..... $13,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice there is a large reduction there, but at the same time we are spending too much money, even so.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The saving this year is $22,440. I explained that on the Civil Government Estimates.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know there was a considerable addition there, if I mistake not.

Mr. CASEY. There is only a decrease of $14,000 on this item, and not $22,000. If the business of the department in selling lands and so on is increasing so rapidly as to require a large staff of extra clerks, possibly the work could be done more economically by permanently engaging the staff.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The decrease of $22,440 is on the whole item. We are doing away with the extra clerks. There are very few temporary clerks in the department now. There are only about twelve. I think there were about thirteen appointed permanently.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me to have 100 men engaged in the work of the Department of the Interior, is an enormously excessive clerical staff.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That includes the survey branch.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Even so; we are selling very little land now, and, looking at all that we get for it, to have 100 men employed seems an enormous staff.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have reduced the number by 41 since I have taken charge of the department. By using type-writers I have been able to dispense with a number of clerks. We have got rid of our extra clerks. We have kept our best clerks and have got rid of the most worthless ones, and they are all kept at fever heat work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There seems to be a perfect brigade of these people.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a good thing it is perfect.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Judging of certain matters that occurred in another place, a good deal of doubt might arise as to that.

Mr. CASEY. How many of these clerks come under this vote?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There are only thirteen temporary clerks now. Part of this vote is for copying, advertising and so on.

Mr. CASEY. I suppose the hon. gentleman proposes still further to reduce the number by putting some on the permanent staff?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; the change made some time ago has been completed, and all the most worthy of our temporary clerks have been placed on the permanent list, and until vacancies occur we cannot appoint any more.

Mr. WATSON. Is it the intention of the Minister to make any change in the system of paying the temporary clerks, some by the hour and some by the day?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not know that there any work going on at the present time.

Mr. WATSON. Is it the intention to stop that altogether?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No: we cannot stop it altogether, because it is necessary to be done, and if outside persons are employed, there is no fairer method of paying them for copying than by the folio.

Mr. WATSON. Is it the intention of the Minister to adopt any system with the view of preventing irregularities such as those that have lately taken place?

Mr. DEWDNEY. As the hon. gentleman is aware, a committee has been appointed to make an investigation, and we have not yet completed our labours; but the matter is under consideration.

Mr. CASEY. I think it would be preferable that all the necessary officials should be placed upon the permanent staff. Some I know have been employed for five or six years as extra clerks, and some of them would be better to be nominally as well as really on the permanent staff of the department.

Mr. WATSON. The Minister stated just now that a Committee was sitting on the irregularities of the Interior Department. I would like to ask him who compose this Committee?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is a sub-Committee of the Privy Council.

Resolutions reported.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 11.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 9th September, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

ISLE BIZARD BRIDGE.

Mr. BRODEUR. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact that he has not answered the question which I put the other day, as to whether the Government were ready to give to the corporation of Isle Bizard the right to erect a bridge on the river there.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I can state to the hon. gentleman that a decision has been arrived at to comply with the request of the petitioners.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

Mr. LANGELIER. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to a very important fact. The term of the Court of Queen's Bench, for the Province of Quebec, is to commence on the 10th of this month, that is to say, to-morrow, and I wish to know if the Government will have appointed a Chief Justice by that time. Two of the judges are on leave of absence, there is no Chief Justice, and it will be impossible for the court to proceed to business to-morrow unless a Chief Justice is appointed.

Mr. OUIMET. The term opens on the 15th; not on the 10th.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I believe that a Chief Justice will be appointed.

Mr. LANGELIER. For to-morrow?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I was under the impression that the term opened on the 15th. He will be appointed in time for the opening of the term.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 146) to further amend the Dominion Elections Act.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I propose that the Committee should rise now and report the Bill as finished yesterday, without dealing further with the subject which was mentioned just at six o'clock, in reference to the date of declaration. It seems to me that the difficulties are very great in the way of definitely fixing any date for that purpose.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). You now have it fixed two weeks after the polling.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is no date fixed now.

Mr. OUIMET. I beg to bring before the House the amendment of which I gave notice about a month ago. The purpose of the amendment is to declare that it will be a misdemeanour and corrupt practice for any elector to ask for a bribe. The amendment is as follows:—

(f) Every person who, directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person on his behalf, on account of and as payment for his having voted or agreed to vote for any candidate at an election, or on account of and as payment for his having assisted or agreed to assist any candidate at an election, applies to such candidate, or to his agent or agents, for the gift or loan of any money or valuable consideration, or for the promise of the gift or loan of any money or valuable consideration, or for any office, place or employment, or the promise of any office, place or employment.

The law as it stands now provides that it will be a corrupt practice and punishable as such, for any person to offer money or other consideration for the vote of an elector. It is declared now to be a corrupt practice for any candidate or his agent to offer a bribe to an elector. The House will, I hope, agree with me that from a moral point of view it is as bad to offer a bribe as to ask for one. Every one knows that candidates and their agents, anxious as they are to obtain the support of the electors, find themselves in a very awkward predicament, when they find themselves in the alternative of losing a voter who is sure to go against their candidate, if his demand for a bribe is not acceded to. This is often resorted to, because of electors themselves offering their votes or their influence in return for money or other valuable consideration, and during the canvass we very often find an elector refusing absolutely to take part in an election, until some valuable consideration is offered for his support. Besides, this clause will prevent the practice, of which perhaps some of us might testify that they have come very near being the victims, of electors attempting to entrap the candidate or some of his agents, in order to secure the nullity of the election. This is the worst form of blackmail that is now used in elections. A man who is not a supporter of a candidate goes to him and says: "I am willing to work for you if you promise me such a situation, or if you give me such an amount of money;" and all the time he is only acting in the expectation that the candidate may perhaps be tempted to bribe him, so that he will be able to subject him to the penalty of the law. I think it is time this kind of practice should be stopped, because it is not only immoral, but criminal in the extreme. For these reasons, I would propose that the amendment which I have read should be inserted as section 8a of the present Bill.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Would that apply to young professional men going out to assist in an election? The clause is very wide.

Mr. OUIMET. That brings up another point. An elector often comes to the candidate pretending that he has a very large influence over other voters, and in that way attempts to get money from him.

Mr. LAURIER. It seems to me that the difficulty would be met by inserting the words "unduly and illegally," before the word "assisted."

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I quite admit that the whole law in respect to elections requires amendment. I ventured to introduce a Bill during this session codifying that portion of the election law referring to corrupt practices, in which I covered almost everything that could be considered an offence against the purity of elections. My Bill was referred to a select committee, and I was informed that the Government opposed any amendment in relation to corrupt practices being made this session, and proposed themselves dealing with the question next session. I, therefore, agreed very reluctantly to strike out those portions of the Bill referring to corrupt practices. It is a large question, and if this amendment is to be carried, then of course the other amendments ought to be fairly considered by the House. I do not oppose this amendment if it is properly worded; but I doubt very much if, worded as it is, it carries out the hon. gentleman's views. But there are other amendments far more necessary to be made in our election law than this; and if we are going to change the law in that respect, the whole question ought to be dealt with. My Bill proposed some fifteen or twenty amendments on that particular subject. I do not think the Government should have assented to it without giving an opportunity to discuss the question. The Bill was referred to a committee, and I understood the Government would not deal with the question this session and abandoned my Bill. Otherwise I would have forced my Bill upon the attention of Parliament. If the Minister of Justice proposes to deal with the question, I shall have to ask the House to consider the other amendments I proposed in that Bill, which I look upon as far more important.

Mr. McCARTHY. I also would suggest that the matter should not be pressed this session. It appears to me it is not much in keeping with the portion of the Election Act to which the hon. gentleman proposes to add it. It creates an offence in a person asking to have what he claims to be a promise carried out. But suppose a person makes such a promise, and we declare it to be a corrupt practice, in what way does it affect the candidate or the sitting member, or any person at all, except the individual who makes it? It is, therefore, a matter to be added rather to the general criminal law than to be dealt with specifically in the Election Act. The Election Act declares that certain acts are election offences, and it holds the candidate and his agent responsible for such acts. How can you make them responsible because some person approaches them and they reject that corrupt approach? Nothing would follow from the introduction of the clause, although it may be very proper to suppress all these things, so far as the election law is concerned. I trust the matter will not be pressed, especially as the hon. gentleman's subject is to be dealt with next session.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think there is a good deal in what the hon. member for West Huron says, and I would commend it to the consideration of the hon. member for Laval. I did not observe, until he called the attention of the House to it just now, the number of provisions he had on the subject of offences in connection with elections: but I see that his Bill (No. 9), which we did ask should not be pressed, contains provisions to the number of twenty-seven with regard to offences. The clause moved by the hon. member for Laval, I am entirely in favour of, subject to the modification the hon. gentleman suggests himself.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Though personally I would be in favour of a repeal of the whole Act, I am strongly in favour of the principle of the amendment of the hon. member for Laval. I believe, if the Act is ever to have any effect among the electors, this amendment should be adopted. I never could see that the Act would have any good effect unless some such amendment were made. If we are to have an Act which will be effective we should pass this amendment. It will go far towards making elections pure and guarding against bribery and corruption. I believe there is a feeling among the members of this House, from practical experience, that, if this Act is to have any effect, the principle of the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. EDGAR. As there is a likelihood of a good many elections taking place between this and next session, it would be a great pity if the House could not put this Act in force, improved as it can be with very slight change. Because we cannot get the whole loaf we should not refuse to take something. I do not think that the House or anybody else will be taken by surprise if we consider this amendment. As the leader of the Opposition has suggested, the point raised by the Secretary of State would be met if the word "illegally" were inserted.

Mr. OUIMET. With regard to what the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) has said, true it is that the election law has been enacted in order to assist us in arriving at a conclusion as to what constitutes a legal election. That hon. gentleman says that this new corrupt practice will not have the effect of voiding an election, and should not, therefore, be in the Election Act, which only has to do with acts that affect the result of an election. I understand that this would form part of a general penal enactment with relation to the carrying of elections; but since the principle of it seems to meet with the approval of the House, and will have the effect of preventing practices most discreditable in themselves, and which have the effect generally of promoting corruption, the principle embodied in my amendment should be accepted by the House.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Has the Minister of Justice considered the effect of this amendment? If a friend assisted me in an election, there being nothing corrupt about it, and years afterwards he says: I assisted you in your election some years ago and you can give me that office which is vacant; according to this amendment that would be a corrupt act. I go as far as anyone in desiring to make elections pure, but if this clause is adopted the law must be recast. My reading of the section as to its meaning is that any person who, on account of his having assisted at an election, applies for an office, is guilty of a corrupt act.

Mr. McCARTHY. My objection was that, putting this clause in now in the middle of the Bill, one is unable to judge what its effect may be. I agree with what the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) has said. It is not necessary to do this corruptly in order to bring the person within the provisions of this section. Every one who either in person or through an agent, has voted or agreed to vote, or has assisted in an election, and afterwards applies for an office, is guilty of a corrupt offence punishable by fine and imprisonment. Surely we do not propose to enact that. I think what the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet) is driving at is that anyone who tries to exact, under a corrupt promise or the pretense of one, the fulfilment of that corrupt promise is guilty of a corrupt practice. If there is no corrupt promise made, I do not see why we should want to be protected, and if a corrupt promise has been made, it is pretty hard to put the law in such a position that the candidate may say: I promised you an office if you supported me, but, though you supported me, it would be a corrupt practice for me to get you that office. I think we had better be careful before introducing this provision.

Mr. OUIMET. As the amendment stands in English, it does not precisely carry out the meaning I have given to it in the French notice as written by me. Instead of being:

"As payment for his having voted or agreed to vote,"

It should be:

His having voted or agreeing to vote;

And later on it should be:

As payment for his voting or having voted, or for agreeing or having agreed to vote.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). If this is analyzed, you will see the absurdity of it. Every person who, on account of having assisted or agreed to assist a candidate, afterwards applies for an office is made guilty of a corrupt practice. Does the hon. gentleman propose to go so far? Any canvasser or public speaker, or friend, or agent who assists a candidate in an election, and afterwards applies for an office, is liable to be punished under this clause.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The words "having unduly and illegally" have been put in to meet that case.

Mr. McCARTHY. That does not meet the case.

Mr. LAURIER. There are different kinds of assistance. There are cases where a friend may come and speak for the candidate in an election, and that is quite proper; but if some one is engaged to unduly canvass the electors, that is not legal assistance, and that is covered by this amendment.

Mr. FRASER. This moves on the supposition that no man asks for an office. Of course we know that offices are given and not asked for.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think that amendment should go no further than to prevent the making of an agreement previous to an election. The words "having voted or having assisted" are very wide.

Mr. OUIMET. The amendment as I propose it would read thus:

Every person, who, directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person on his behalf, on account of and as payment for voting or having voted, or agreeing or having agreed to vote for any candidate at an election, or on account of and as payment for his having unduly or illegally assisted or agreed to assist any candidate at an election, applies to such candidate, or to his agent or agents, for the gift or loan of any money or valuable consideration, or for the promise of the gift or loan of any money or valuable consideration, or for any office, place or employment, or the promise of any office, place or employment.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the word "unduly" is too vague.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). What difference does it make? It is agreed on all sides that if a man assists properly and within the law no objection can be taken. If he assists illegally, he must violate the election law which is on the Statute-book now.

Mr. CASEY. The punishment is there now for having violated the law, and I understand this is a proposal to punish him further for asking to be paid for that illegal assistance.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). It appears to me this clause does not meet with the sympathy one would expect from the House, especially from some hon. gentlemen who are always introducing Bills of a high degree of stringency, not alone for the enforcement of the law, but regarding what constitutes a violation of the election law. It does seem to me that if there is anything wrong in the wording of this clause, the Committee ought to be able to amend it in such a way as to make it workable. I would suggest to the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet) that the principle applies to any promise for abstaining to vote, as well as for voting.

Mr. McCARTHY. Any corrupt promise.

Mr. CASEY. The object of the proposed amendment is good enough, but I do not think it goes far enough; I think this is only a part of what should be added to the law. I think it should be followed up and continued so as to provide a specific and severe punishment for any candidate or member-elect who enters into such corrupt agreement with any person to procure him employment or to use his influence for the purpose of procuring such office or employment, at any time after the election, and whether such candidate has been elected to Parliament or not; because we know that the defeated candidate who has run in the interest of the Government of the day, still controls the patronage of his county, and will be able to make a corrupt bargain with applicants for office, to use his influence with the Government to get them appointed. He may make such corrupt bargain on the promise from the applicant of his support in future elections, or in consideration of his undue and illegal support in past elections, or in consideration of a cash payment, or some other advantage derived from the applicant by the person having enjoyed it. I think the hon. member will not object to continue his amendment in this strain, and to make it also a penal offence for any man who has been a candidate at an election, whether he be elected or not, to make any corrupt bargain thereafter with any person to use his influence with the Government in favour of an application from that person. I think it is necessary and proper, and it will be shown before this House prorogues to be necessary, to make this addition to the law. There may be means of punishing members who so err now; there does not seem to be any provision for punishing the unsuccessful candidate who still retains the patronage of his county, for making corrupt bargains for the use of his influence. Even as regards members who are successful and have seats in the House, it is not very clear what the effect upon them will be of the disclosure of any such action on their part. But there is no provision for punishing the man who controls the patronage of his county as a defeated Government candidate. I think both these clauses should be included in the hon. gentleman's motion.

Mr. LARIVIÈRE. I wish to ask if there are any provisions in the Act whereby all the clauses regarding corruption have to be published or posted up at the same time as the proclamation before the election? It will be perfectly useless for us to pass the most stringent clauses in the Act, or to amend the Act so as to make it more rigorous than it now is, if the clauses are not known by the parties who are exposed to be prosecuted under the new law for acts which they may not know to be illegal. In some of the provincial laws, the returning officer, at the same time that he sends the proclamation to be posted up in the several electoral divisions, also makes a synopsis of the law containing those clauses referring to corruption, and has it posted up with the proclamation, so that everybody who takes an interest in the election may not only see what their duties are, but may also see what the law is in regard to the exercise of those duties. I believe that if we make any change in the law it should be known by all those who are called upon to exercise their rights under that law. I think such provision does not exist in the Act. I was under the impression it did, but I cannot find it. I think, therefore, that there should be a clause whereby the returning officer would be bound to post up all those provisions regarding bribery and corruption, so that the candidate would not be compelled to tell the voters their duties or the penalties to which they are subjected for violating the law.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is always done. The amendment to section 84 preserves all those penalties for corrupt practices, and they will be embodied in the instructions to the returning officer.

Mr. LARIVIÈRE. Do I understand that it is already provided that these clauses regarding bribery and corruption at elections, are to be published?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will look at it in a moment. That was the intention.

Mr. LARIVIÈRE. If there is no such provision, there should be one. Too much publicity cannot be given to these clauses.

Mr. LAURIER. I would draw the attention of the Minister of Justice to a statement which he made a moment ago, that he wanted to fix a delay within which the declaration should be made. It will follow then, that the subject is left altogether in the hands of the returning officer. He has to judge and act according to circumstances. I see the force of the objection of the hon. gentleman in fixing a delay, because the delay may vary a good deal according to circumstances. If there are no irregularities, and everything goes on smoothly at the polls, and if all the returns are brought in, the declaration will take place at once. But I can conceive that under some circumstances the delay may be extended, because the returning officer may be obliged to hold an investigation, or to find evidence as to the circumstances under which the boxes may have been destroyed or lost, and if there is no evidence at the moment, he is not able to ascertain the result of the polling. But the hon. gentleman will admit that he leaves in the hands of the returning officer a very great power; he leaves him not only quasi but actual judicial powers. The objection to this is that at present there is no qualification whatever required from the returning officer. But we have not been able, so far, to convince the Government that it would be preferable to have permanent returning officers, and the present system is to select returning officers for the occasion. I do not, however, think it is a power which the Government care very much to possess. I rather believe that on every occasion the life of the Minister of Justice must be rather a burden to him from having to answer the numerous applications made by almost every candidate to have a returning officer appointed. I would suggest for the consideration of the hon. Minister that if he will not take any of the officials who are now specified by the law, such as the sheriff, or clerk of the court, or the registrar, whether it would not be advisable to have the returning officers made permanent officials, and selected by the judge of the court and the warden. This principle was adopted some years ago at the time of the liquor licensing Bill introduced by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). The license commissioners were to be appointed by commissioners appointed by the Government and the warden of the county and by another party. I suggest for the consideration of the hon. gentleman that before we come to the third reading, whether it would not be preferable to have permanent returning officers, who would be appointed by the judge of the court, by the warden of the county, and perhaps by another person.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The proposition to have permanent returning officers is one well worthy of consideration, and I shall be very glad to ask my colleagues to consider it. The proposition which the hon. gentleman makes as regards the mode of appointment is, however, somewhat complicated.

Mr. McCARTHY. Perhaps the Minister of Justice before the third reading of the Bill will alter the first sub-section of section 6, in which an appeal is to provide in the Province of Ontario to a judge of the Court of Appeal, and provide that the appeal be made to a judge of the High Court of Justice. The judges of the Court of Appeal are merely appellant judges, and it would be better to take from that court election trials, because they are not judges of first instance, but simply sit as appellant judges.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CASEY. I wish to move an amendment, which I consider a necessary corollary of the amendment that has just been carried. I move the addition of the following sub-section to section 4 as amended :—

Every person who is or has been a candidate at any election for the House of Commons, who agrees to procure or to attempt to procure for any other person any office, place or employment, in case of such voting or such illegal assistance or valuable consideration as suggested in the next preceding sub-section (f).

The amendment just adopted proposes to punish the applicant for a situation who makes a corrupt bargain with any member or candidate. My amendment completes the principle by providing for the punishment of the member or candidate in case he should make such corrupt bargain with the applicant.

Mr. McCARTHY. It is already provided for.

Mr. CASEY. Not in regard to candidates who do not get elected.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The unsuccessful candidate is liable to the law.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman will see that by section 84 every person who directly or indirectly by himself or by any other person in his behalf, gives or procures, or agrees to give or procure any office, place, or employment to or for any voter or any other person in order to induce such person to vote or refrain from voting, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour and shall forfeit $200 to any person who makes the charge.

Mr. CASEY. I am quite aware that such is the law. That applies to any person who during or before an election, offers an inducement to a voter to refrain from voting. What this amendment covers is the case of an unsuccessful candidate who at any time after the election, on the basis of any corrupt or illegal consideration, bargains to procure or attempts to procure an office for any person. The cases covered are quite different.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If the amendment relates to an election it is provided for in the Act now. The section from which I quoted is not limited to offences committed before the election. It is a corrupt act whenever it is completed. For instance, a man may have given a vote at the election in March last on an understanding that he would receive an office now, and it may be corruptly given now. There is ample ground for controverting an election on that score and setting the election aside. If the amendment does not refer to an election, it does not come under this Bill.

Mr. CASEY. It comes under the Act as much as the amendment already made. That amendment proposed that any man who either during or after an election applies to a candidate or member-elect to secure for him some reward on the ground of services previously rendered illegally, shall be punished. That is to say, the applicant shall be punished. My amendment is to punish the other party to the proposed contract, if he should agree to it. I cannot illustrate the matter without referring to matters that would not be in order, except by supposing that after an election, one, two or three months after, some supporter of the member-elect or defeated candidate should come to him and say : I offer you for your own use or for political purposes, or for the payment of old scores, $150 or $200—or he might even propose to give the person in question some live stock—if you will secure for me a position under the Government. Under the amendment just passed, the person making that proposal to the member would be very properly punished. But supposing the application was successful and the person applied to did this act, I want to punish him also, and I do not see that the words of the Election Act, as at present framed, would apply to the case. The Minister of Justice has pointed out truly that the person who bribes or attempts to bribe another is guilty of a misdemeanour, and if a candidate, his election may be voided. But this, although a matter arising out of the election and out of the fact that he, a member or candidate procured for the person applying to him an office, it might not arise during the election itself but afterwards. Besides, there is no provision in the law as it stands now for punishing a defeated candidate who has control of patronage after the election is over. Suppose any member supporting the Government were compelled to go to his constituency again and were defeated, he would still retain the patronage of the county in his hand. He might make any corrupt bargain he chose with any of his supporters or any other person to get him an appointment in exchange for such consideration, and I do not see how you could get at it whether he is a member of this House or not. It seems to me that it comes quite logically and properly under the heading of the election law, and it is certainly quite as much so as the amendment of the member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet) which we have adopted. His amendment relates to the application, and my amendment to the granting of the application.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman is right in saying that it is applicable to the Elections Act, but this is the state of the case : The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet) moved an amendment which we carried a few moments ago, to punish a person who solicits a bribe or an office, but he did that because the present law punishes the person who promises the bribe or the office, and contains no punishment for the person who sought such bribe or office. The hon. gentleman proposes now, as he says, to get at the other side of the case which is already met by the present law.

Mr. CASEY. That is what I cannot see.

Mr. LAURIER. Even if the party who, under such circumstances succumbs to the temptation i not already punished by the law, perhaps it is jus as well to leave the law as it is, because the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Casey) seems to defeat the effect of the amendment moved by the member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet). If the party who solicits the bribe and the party who gives the bribe are equally guilty, no one would have an interest in informing, and both would be silent upon it. But, on the other hand, if you leave simply the tempter to punishment, then, of course, the other man will have no interest in keeping the matter concealed. I remember very well in former times under the liquor laws when it was equal guilt for the party who sold and the party who purchased liquors, and the consequence was we never could obtain a conviction. I am very much afraid we will have the same result here.

Mr. CASEY. It is not very often that I have to differ from my leader, but in a matter of opinion such as this I am compelled to do so. He says that if you punish equally the tempter and the man who has succumbed to the temptation there is nobody to inform. Such cases have come to light already, and in hardly any case that I am aware of has either the tempter or the tempted given the information. Neither are likely to give information in any case. Suppose the temptation is successful, and the person tempted yields to the solicitation of the applicant, is he likely to give it away? He is not a bit more likely to inform in that case than if he were subject to a penalty, because in any case he is subject to the penalty of public opinion, and he is not going to submit himself to that by confessing unless he has to. The information will have to be sought in all cases from other parties, and I think we should not omit to provide for the punishment of the other party for fear that on that account he might not be willing to confess. There are many other crimes punishable by our laws which neither party is likely to confess, although only one of the parties to the transaction may be guilty in the eye of the law, and we have to depend on the ordinary sources of evidence for convicting such persons. There is certainly force in what my hon. friend says, but I cannot go so far as to agree with his views. The hon. Minister states that the law as it now stands provides for this case, but I contend that the law now refers to transactions which have at least their beginning during the election campaign, because no person can induce another to support him unless the offer is made before polling day. A man is not going to pay another man for supporting him after the poll unless he has previously agreed to do so. This amendment refers to a class of cases arising after the election, and it only comes into effect if the candidate or member-elect is in a position to grant these favours.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the law goes further than that, and punishes the act although it has no connection with anything incident to the election. It goes on to say:

"Or corruptly does any such act as aforesaid on account of any voter having voted or refrained from voting at any election."

That is:

"Gives him money or offers or promises to him any such, by virtue of the voter having voted or refrained from voting at an election."

Mr. CASEY. That punishes the candidate for bribing the man for voting for him, but I want to cover the case of a man who comes afterwards to the candidate or member and says: I offer you certain valuable considerations to give me an office which you can do in virtue of your influence with the Government.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I wish to call attention to another objection made to the amendment of the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Casey). It would punish the neighbour of an applicant for office, who recommends him to the member for an office, on the ground that he has voted for his party and ought to receive any consideration that that gentleman can give in the way of recommending him for office. I do not see anything immoral or improper in that. The amendment says:

"Every person who is, or has been, a candidate for any election for the House of Commons, who agrees to procure, or attempts to procure for any other person, any office, place, or employment, in consideration of such voting, or illegal assistance, or valuable consideration, as specified in the next preceding sub-section."

Then it comes to this: The member who says that A. B. is perfectly fit for the office he is seeking, is a good reliable man and has voted for me, and has, therefore, a claim on my recommendation; that makes the member guilty of an indictable offence.

Mr. CASEY. In consideration of such voting as mentioned in the last sub-section. The hon. gentleman's objections, if they apply to my amendment, apply equally to the last sub-section. By the last sub-section a man is punished for asking for an office on the ground that he has voted or assisted, and the words of my motion specifically refer to that sub-section. I do not see how the hon. gentleman can possibly read into that amendment the meaning that it would prevent a man urging his party services as a reason for his appointment. If a judicial construction of my amendment would imply that, I wish to change it so that it will not imply that; but I wish it to mean that there shall be no corrupt bargain between a candidate and a voter for an office or other valuable consideration in return for support at an election.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I understand that the motion of the hon. member for Laval is simply that the bribee as well as the briber shall be punished. I agree with that. Of course it takes two to constitute the offence, the man who gives corruptly and the man who receives corruptly. My Bill made express provision in a general clause for the punishment of both the person who bribes and the person who receives the bribe. The hon. gentleman's amendment is limited to the cases of a gift, or loan, the promise of a gift, loan, office or employment, or other valuable consideration. If the law as it now stands provides for this, then the hon. gentleman's amendment is not required at all.

Mr. CASEY. My amendment is not intended to refer to the class of cases spoken of by the hon. member for West Huron. It is chiefly intended to cover the case of a member giving an office or employment or money as a bribe, as well as the man who receives the office or employment or money. To put it in plain English, it is to cover the case of a member who sells his patronage, and I think that the member who sells his patronage is as guilty and should be as severely punished as the man who applies for the purchase of that patronage—the man who says: I have given you my vote and influence in the past, or I will give you my vote and influence in the future, or I will give you valuable consideration if you get me an office. We have already agreed to make that a criminal offence, and I say, go on and make it a criminal offence on the part of a member to accept the offer. I am not dealing with the question of a candidate bribing a voter, but I want to get at the candidate or member who takes a bribe for using his influence with the Government. If the Minister of Justice is positive that the words of my motion as it stands would include the case of a candidate who urges proper considerations in favour of his recommendations, it is easy to change that by inserting the word "corruptly" before the word "agrees." I would ask the hon. Minister to give my amendment his serious consideration, because it is more important than the one we have just passed. The latter punishes only the poor man who applies for a position in which to make his livelihood; this is to punish the man who holds the power as trustee to confer that position, and who might be mean enough to sell his patronage.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It seems to me that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for West Elgin is entirely out of place as an amendment to the election law. If proposed at all, it ought to be proposed as an amendment to the common law. It does not refer to elections at all; it has no connection with elections. It is intended to punish a crime that may be committed after the election is over.

Mr. CASEY. Both before and after; there is no limitation.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It applies during a man's whole lifetime, if he has ever been a candidate.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It says any person who has been a candidate; that means after an election is all over; so that it has no reference to the election. It is an amendment to the common law of the land, and if I am not mistaken the common law makes provision for that offence now.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister of Justice rules that it does apply to the election law.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Has the hon. Minister of Justice decided to propose an amendment fixing the time of the declaration?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I stated when the House went into committee that I was unable to make any proposal on that subject this afternoon, as I thought it would be dangerous to fix any limit of time. The leader of the Opposition made a suggestion, which I promised to consider in connection with a new measure, as to appointing returning officers.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am sorry the Minister of Justice has not arrived at a conclusion on that subject, because I think it would be the most important provision of the Bill.

Amendment of Mr. Casey negatived on division.

Mr. LAURIER. Before you report the Bill, Sir, I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Justice to a subject which perhaps is not exactly germane to this but comes under the heading of elections. There are to-day one or two vacancies in this House, and it is quite possible there may be others, as there are many election petitions now pending. I would suggest that it would be advisable to defer any elections for vacancies until the new lists come into force, which are now in preparation. Of course if a vacancy occurred through some one accepting office, that would be a different matter.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am very glad to receive the suggestion and will give it all possible weight. I will concur in it unless some reasons appear to the contrary, which I am not aware of now.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to make a suggestion with regard to the declaration. I would suggest that the Minister should consent to have all protests fyled within thirty days from the date of the election; and if the returning officer has not made the return within the thirty days, then the party protesting could apply to court for an order extending the time to protest.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We will take that up in the Bill relating to controverted elections.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand the Minister is disposed to consider my suggestion favourably. I hope he will be able to give a more definite answer.

Mr. McCARTHY. I must protest against the doctrine laid down by the leader of the Opposition. It seems to me extraordinary that the House or Government should have the power at their pleasure to leave a constituency unrepresented for any length of time. We have had Kingston unrepresented for the last two months, and this House has not thought fit to order the issue of the writ, and the Government have not thought fit to take any action. In England the system is exactly the reverse. The writ issues automatically, one may say, upon the death of a member or when a vacancy occurs, and it is not in the control of the House to postpone the issue of the writ for party or other reasons. I think we ought not to part with the right of the people to have for every constituency a representative on the floor of Parliament.

Mr. LAURIER. It is said the French are logical and the English practical. It seems to me on the present occasion the rule is the reverse. The hon. gentleman is logical but not practical. There are one or two vacancies, and everybody, on either side, knows that the present is not the best time to consult a constituency as to its choice of a representative to fill the vacancy. There is certain preparatory work going on, and the hon. gentleman must admit that until that work is completed there is no likelihood of the people being represented as they should, and we are not desirous to have an election on a list five years old.

Mr. McCARTHY. If we have the power to do that in one case we have it in all, and we are leaving to the discretion of the Government or the House to say when writs shall issue.

Mr. LAURIER. We are not, but we ask that an understanding should be come to. The law may be amended, and the hon. gentleman has the right to ask that it be amended in the direction he suggests, but we merely ask that it be understood on both sides that vacancies will not be filled until the new lists are completed, except where vacancies are created by the acceptance of office. Of course, if the hon. gentleman were taken into the Cabinet, there should be an election immediately, but in the other cases the necessity is not so immediate.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not know that I would have the faintest objection to carry out the proposition made by the hon. member for North Simcoe, that writs should issue automatically, as he says, but I may remind the hon. gentleman that at any time in the last ten years or more have the writs for bye-elections been systematically delayed for two, or three, or four, or five months, simply at the caprice of the Government, and so long as that continues to be the case, the suggestion made by my hon. friend that the elections should take place after the revision of the lists is a good one.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am merely protesting against the practice.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The law should be amended so that the voters' lists would be revised before general elections, and not disfranchise a large number of the people.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. CASEY. I asked for some information, and the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue promised to bring it down yesterday. I would like to ask if the hon. gentleman can give me that?

Mr. FOSTER. I may inform my hon. friend that yesterday the Minister read the letter from the Auditor General in reply to that.

Mr. CASEY. I beg pardon. I was not here at the time.

SLAUGHTERING OF AMERICAN CATTLE IN CANADA.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to ask the Government to give us some information in regard to the proposal to bring cattle into Canada from the United States to be slaughtered here. I know there is considerable excitement among cattle dealers and farmers, and I think the country ought to be informed as soon as possible what the Government propose to do.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Government have made no relaxation of the law, and have given no permission for the importation of cattle.

Mr. OUIMET. I hope in the meantime the Government will seriously consider whether it might not be in the interest of the Province of Quebec, and of the whole of Canada, to grant such permission, provided the Government see their way to prevent all danger for our own cattle and to preserve the privilege we enjoy in the British market. It is going abroad that because this industry is to be started in our province, some prejudices have been aroused. I am sure that it is not so, and I emphatically say so here, but the idea goes abroad, and it would be injurious to the Government and to the country that, on account of the prejudices of one part of the population or of one province against another, an important industry which must be advantageous to one part of Canada, or to the whole of the Dominion, should be stopped in consequence of these prejudices being fanned by people who have no proper interest in the country.

Mr. DAVIN. I am sure that there is no prejudice in this instance, but I know that all over the West there is great anxiety in regard to the action of the Government in this matter. I cannot see why, if it pays the English importer to take our cattle—and if he can take our cattle at an advantage to himself—the Quebec speculator in dead meat should not be able to take the live cattle from the West. I have no objection to this, if such safeguards are taken as will satisfy the mind of the British farmer in regard to the danger from pleuro-pneumonia and other diseases, but one industry is a small matter compared with the vast interests which are involved in the export of our live cattle to the British market, and the advantage which we there enjoy. I consider that any interest, no matter how minute it is, if you can yield to its demands safely, should have its demands yielded to, but to imperil a staple trade of Canada because of a problematic industry would be a very suicidal course to pursue. My hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Ouimet) knows that the man who is now speaking has no prejudice in regard to the Province of Quebec or the French people anywhere, but it is a thing of great importance that the position we occupy at the present minute as exporters of live stock should not be in any way imperilled.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think that, considering that this matter must have now been nearly five weeks or more before the House and under the consideration of the Government, we ought to know definitely what decision the Government have arrived at within a day or two. There is no doubt whatever that a great many persons engaged in this cattle trade are under very considerable anxiety as to what the course of the Government may be, and, although I should be the last to ask that they should decide hurriedly or hastily on a case of this kind, still, seeing that so many weeks have elapsed since the matter was brought to their attention, I do not think it is asking too much to ask the Government to state definitely within a week what their decision may be. I hope that the Minister of Justice, or whoever represents the department will let us know, and will say now when they will let us know, what their decision is.

Mr. HAGGART. I may inform the hon. gentleman now that the Government have come to a decision not to allow the company to manufacture American dead meat in Canada at present.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Sault Ste. Marie Canal..... $935,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to this canal, I would be glad if the Minister in charge will give the House what information he has as to the progress of the work and the ultimate cost, and generally what is likely to be done with respect to this. I think I understood that some considerable alterations had been made in the original design of this canal.

Mr. BOWELL. The cost of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal I gave to the House when the question was under discussion some little time ago, but I did not enter fully into the question of the enlargement of the canal and the extra expense which will be incurred in carrying out the suggestions which have been made by the engineers. I think it is well that the question is asked, and that the Committee should be put in full possession of the facts which induced the Government to change the plan of the canal by adopting a larger lock instead of the one for the construction of which they entered into a contract, and to make the canal of a depth of 19 feet, equal to that of Sault Canal on the American side, instead of making it a 16-foot canal. The difference between the contract price as originally agreed upon for the construction of that lock, and the price of the construction under the present plan will amount to about $100,000. By the changes in dimensions which have been effected, the expenditure is increased by about $200,000, but by modifications in the original plan in other directions there will be a reduction of cost to the extent of about $100,000, leaving the net increase, as stated, about $100,000. In addition to the additional expenditure which I have referred to, there will be a large expenditure of, perhaps, from $500,000 to $600,000 in deepening the approaches to the canal from the lake or western end, and also from the Sault River. But it will not be necessary to make this expenditure until it is found that the trade of the country demands an extra depth. It would also be necessary, in making the whole navigation a 19-foot navigation, to dredge or deepen the harbour at Port Arthur, which is included in the amount to which I have called the attention of the Committee. I know that complaints have been made in connection with the granting of the contract for the dredging of the entrance of the canal from the east and also from the west, the contract not having been awarded to what was supposed to be the lowest tender. I can place the Committee in possession of all the facts in connection with the letting of these contracts, by reading the report of Mr. Page upon the subject, should the Committee desire it, which is the justification for the Government in the course they have pursued. I think it would be well, in dealing with this subject, that I should also read the report of Mr. Trudeau, and I think it will also be well to read the supplementary report which was made by Mr. Shanly, upon the same subject, in order that there may be no withholding—if I may use that expression—of any facts connected with it. I may also mention that the attention of the Government was called to the necessity that they believed to exist for the increased depth of this canal, and the need of enlarging it so as to make it a fair competitor with the canal on the American side of the line in accordance with the representations of the boards of trade and those who are interested in carrying on the commerce on those lakes. Mr. Trudeau, in his report dated the 14th of May, 1891, says:

"I have the honour to bring before your notice the following observations and suggestions with regard to the canal works now in progress at the Sault Ste Marie. Under date of the 2nd of May, 1888, an Order in Council was passed authorizing the construction of this canal, and fixing the depth as sufficient to accommodate vessels of 16 feet draught at the lowest stage of the river. Plans and specifications were prepared accordingly, having in view a canal capable of receiving vessels of that draught, with a lock 600 feet long 85 feet wide, and having 16 feet 3 inches depth of water on the sills at extreme low water. Under authority of an Order in Council dated the 12th November, 1888, a contract was made with Messrs. Hugh Ryan & Co. on the 20th of that month, covering the works of lock and canal construction. Considerable progress has been made by the contractors, including the whole of the excavation for the lockpit on the dimensions indicated above. The question has now been raised by persons interested in the trade of the lakes, whether it is not desirable to increase these dimensions before proceeding further. It is urged by the Toronto Board of Trade and by the President of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that the depth should not be less than that to be afforded in the enlarged canal now being constructed on the American side of the river. There is no doubt in my own mind but that an increase in dimensions should be made. I consider it desirable that the depth of water on the sills at extreme low water, should be increased to 19 feet, this being the equivalent of the depth now being provided on the American side. Together with the question of depth is that of length and breadth, and having regard to the length and breadth of vessels in use, I am of opinion, the breadth of the lock should be increased to 100 feet (in place of 85 feet) and that an addition of 50 feet should be made to the length, which would then be 650 feet, thus accommodating at one time four vessels of the larger type. The estimated extra cost to be incurred may be set down as about $225,000. In connection with this matter certain collateral points are involved, viz., difficulties which might possibly arise in the event of contingencies barring Canadian vessels from the use of the channel now being deepened in American waters between the canal and Lake Huron, a position which would limit the draught of vessels to that afforded by the Canadian channel, about 16 feet:* also the absence of terminal Canadian harbour accommodation for vessels of the larger draught. These questions, though undoubtedly to be considered hereafter, do not appear to be necessarily involved in the present issue. All that needs immediately to be dealt with, is the point whether by an additional expenditure of $225,000 in a work (the lock chamber and its fittings), the estimated cost of which is about $1,000,000, the Government should make a provision of accommodation which may be called for within a few years, but which can then only be afforded by the construction of a new lock at a very great cost, and after a long delay. The deepening of the canal proper and its approaches can be proceeded with by degrees, after the completion of the present works. I, therefore, suggest a submission to the Governor General of the question of the amendment of the existing plans so as to adopt the following as the dimensions of the canal lock chamber: length, 650 feet; width, 100 feet: depth of water on the sills at extreme low water, 19 feet.

"The further question should be submitted of obtaining from the present contractors, Messrs. Hugh Ryan & Co., an offer for the execution of such extra work, it being understood that no offer will be accepted until it has been submitted to and approved by the Governor General in Council.

"I have the honour, &c.,

(Sgd.) "T. TRUDEAU,

"Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals,
"and Chief Engineer of Canals.

"*In Lake George, which is an expansion of St. Mary's River, the Canadian channel has, in many places, only from 8 to 10 feet of water."

Upon that report an Order in Council was passed adopting the suggestion for the enlargement of the canal. Mr. Trudeau discussed the matter with the contractors, and made satisfactory arrangements with them for the work. I will read his report, dated 3rd June, 1891:

"SIR,—I have the honour to report to you that in pursuance of the Order in Council passed on the 21st ultimo, authorizing the adoption of certain modifications in the plan of the lock works at the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, I have had negotiation with the contractors, Messrs. H. Ryan & Co., with a view to ascertaining the prices for which they would be prepared to execute the additional work required, bearing in mind the limit, $225,000, of my own estimate, which estimate has been adopted by the said Order.

"I would here observe that the work to be done will necessitate the re-placing of plant, and also the purchase of additional plant, and the excavation will be at detached points, and will be expensive in its execution. These features, added to the risk of encountering water-bearing seams, and the increased outlay that would be necessary for pumping should such seams be met with, have been taken into consideration in arriving at prices for the additional work required.

"As will be seen from the correspondence with the contractors, which I herewith enclose, a basis of agreement, in my opinion, satisfactory, has been reached, under which for a total extra cost of $219,000 the work will be carried out by the present contractors, extra time to the extent of one year being allowed them.

"While this extra cost will be incurred, a saving will be affected, by the change of details of the work, to the extent of about $119,000, leaving the actual additional cost to the Government about $100,000, the full advantages of increased length, width and depth being secured by this expenditure.

"I have no hesitation, therefore, in recommending that the agreement for the work and prices thus provisionally made with the contractors be submitted for the favourable consideration of the Governor in Council.

"I have the honour to be, Sir.

"Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) "T. TRUDEAU.

"To the Honourable
"The Minister of Railways and Canals."

These arrangements were approved by an Order in Council, and a formal agreement has been entered into with the contractors to that effect. I have also a long report from Mr. Walter Shanly, which, if the Committee will have a little patience, I will read. I will do so in order that the reasons which were given to the Government for the course they pursued may be placed upon record, and that the Committee and the public may learn the full facts in connection with this matter. Mr. Shanly's report is dated 13th April, 1891, and is as follows:—

"SIR,—As requested by you I have discussed with Mr. Trudeau, chief engineer of canals, certain moot points in reference to the canal and lock now under construction at Sault Ste. Marie, the main question to which our attention was directed having been as to the width of the lock. As planned, and now under contract, the dimensions of the lock are as follows: length of chamber, 600 feet; width of chamber, 85 feet; gate width, 60 feet; depth of water on sills, 16 feet 3 inches. In the St. Lawrence Canal system (including the Welland) the lock measurements are: Length of chamber, 270 feet; width of chamber, 45 feet; gate width, 45 feet; depth on sills, 14 feet. When these (the St. Lawrence) canals shall have been completed, vessels of the extreme size that the locks will admit will certainly be the 'rule of the trade.' Only two such vessels, say 255 feet long by 42 feet beam, could be locked at one and the same time in the Sault Ste. Marie Canal as now planned. Increasing the lock width to 100 feet would allow of four of the same class of vessels being passed through in one 'operation,' that is to say, the adding of 15 feet to the chamber width as at present intended would double the capacity of the canal for accommodating the largest vessels of the Canadian lake fleet of the future. The minor classes would, of course, also benefit in time-saving by the enlarged roominess of the lock. The works now in progress at Sault Ste. Marie, including lock and canal and the dredging of the approaches at either end are estimated to cost about $3,000,000. To give the lock an additional width of 15 feet will probably add 3 per cent. to that amount, or at the most $100,000. I unhesitatingly recommend (assuming that no other or greater changes are to be considered) that the width of the lock chamber be increased from 85 to 100 feet.

"Among the official papers placed in my hands by Mr. Trudeau as bearing on the questions under debate were letters from certain parties, public and individual, urging that the depth of the lock, leaving all other dimensions as at present, be increased to 20 feet, and I asked Mr. Thompson, the Government engineer in charge of Sault Ste. Marie works, to make an estimate of the cost of such a change including the lock proper: the half mile canal through rock cutting above the lock—also of necessity to be deepened—and the dredging to 22 feet on the two approaches, the amount reaches $650,000, to be added to the $3,000,000 involved in the present work. I would not advise the spending of so large a sum of money to gain 20 feet of depth unless we also adopted all the other proportions of the work now being carried out, just opposite to ours, on the United States side of the river. The dimensions of the new American lock are: Length, 800 feet; width, 100 feet; depth on sills, 20 feet. To adopt these measurements for the Canadian lock with corresponding depth in the canal and immediate approaches, would involve an addition of not far from $850,000 to what we have already undertaken.

"That the time will come, and perhaps not in the far away future, when the trade of the Dominion will require that there should be a second and independent lock of the largest proportions is hardly to be doubted, but it should be remembered that what we are now doing (assuming the lock widened to 100 feet) will amply accommodate for a long time to come by far the larger number of Canadian vessels—the size of which will be limited by the size of the Welland Canal; while for vessels drawing more than 16 feet, comparatively few in number, the American lock, open to all comers, will be available. The question of harbour accommodation, too, has to be considered, and unless at Parry Sound (perhaps) and at Windsor, I do not know the port, on the Canadian waters, from the River St. Mary to Port Colborne where a vessel laden to 20 feet could deliver cargo. On Lake Superior our chief port, Port Arthur, would, I believe, need costly improvement to fit it for vessels of 20 feet draught. But it is also to be kept in mind that whatever the capacity given the Canadian canal, Canadian shipping going to, or coming from, Lake Superior, must pass through American waters between Sault Ste. Marie and Port Huron, a distance of 30 miles or more, the River Ste. Marie not affording within the Canadian boundary depth sufficient all the way for, I am informed, even 16 feet draught; for 20 feet certainly not. Nor is the American portion of the river, either, fitted by nature for the greater draught, and consequently, the United States Government is now expending in connection with its new canal works at the Sault very large sums to improve the channel to at least a depth of 22 feet throughout. Therefore, we might build our lock on the scale of the new American one, without, of necessity, having to improve our channel, a much more circuitous one than the American, to corresponding depth—at a probable cost, as estimated by Mr. Thompson, of three quarters of a million of dollars. Our neighbours are now building their third lock at Sault Ste. Marie. The first one, completed upwards of 30 years ago, was then the largest structure of the sort in America, and was supposed surely to be large enough for all probable future requirements of Lake Superior shipping. Trade, however, developed to such unlooked for volume, that within the last 10 years a second lock, of far more than double the tonnage capacity of No. 1 was constructed. It, No. 2, now proves to be unequal to the still growing traffic, though in its 8 months of navigable season there passes through it a tonnage exceeding that of the Suez Canal, open the year round. No. 3 lock, on the vast scale the figures of which are noted above is now under construction by the United States Government at an expenditure, including the deepening of the River St. Marie, of about five millions of dollars. Canadian commerce is as yet but a small proportion of the gross tonnage passing the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, but within fewer years than have elapsed between the undertaking of the two latest of the American locks, the Dominion North-West will have added enormously to the lake trade. The works as at present undertaken by the Canadian Government are to cost about $3,000,000. Increased to the dimensions of the United States new works the cost will be increased by about $850,000, of which the deepening of approaches would absorb $470,000, leaving as due to canal and lock enlargement proper, say, $380,000."

Mr. Thompson and other engineers say:

"The sum of $380,000 might be apportioned as under:

Deepening prism of canal proper.	$126,000
Enlarging lock.....	254,000
Total.....	$380,000

Then the report goes on to say:

"So that for a present outlay of $3,380,000 we would have 'the lock of the future' ready for use when its use should come to be needed, instead of then having to build a wholly new one. The expending of the large sum of $470,000 in deepening the approaches could very well be deferred until the call for 20 feet of depth had become imperative, or the dredging could in the meantime be carried on gradually, over a series of years, so as to make the outlay as little burdensome as possible. Whether it would be prudent to increase intended present expenditure by some $380,000 (about 12½ per cent.), and so be done with it, or, more prudent, to wait some years, and then have to expend a couple of million dollars in the construction of new and larger works is a financial question hardly germane to a report of this kind. Appended is a tabulated statement showing approximate expenditure involved in the several plans, or changes of plan discussed.

"I have the honour to be, Sir.

"Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) "W. SHANLY,

"Consulting Engineer."

The reasons which induced the Government to adopt the report and to incur the increased expenditure, were in order to prevent the necessity hereafter—should the trade, as I have no doubt it will, develop in the future as it has in the past—of expending a very much larger sum in the construction of a new lock altogether.

Mr. McMULLEN. What will be the size of the Canadian lock when finished?

Mr. BOWELL. 650 by 100 feet and 19 feet deep, which I explained to the hon. gentleman a moment ago, as I understand from Mr. Trudeau and Mr. Shanly, equals 20 feet as measured by the Americans.

Mr. GIBSON. In the Canadian canals we measure from the mitre sills, and the Americans measure from the bottom. It is not with a view of criticising the Government with regard to the building of this lock that I rise, but I should like to ask them, if the offer that has been received from Mr. Ryan for that addition to the lock is a satisfactory one? While I am asking this question I would like to say at the same time that I should imagine the specifications would have covered this, as it is usually provided for in all specifications in this country.

Mr. BOWELL. The agreement entered into with Mr. Ryan was considered to be satisfactory to the engineers, and I took the trouble the other day, in consulting Mr. Shanly on this subject, of showing him the agreement into which the Government had entered with the Messrs. Ryan, the contractors, and he assured me that it was a much more favourable one than he could possibly have anticipated, and had he been asked to make a report he certainly would have estimated a larger sum. I told Mr. Shanly that I would use his name in discussing this question, as I thought it was a matter the House should know.

Mr. GIBSON. I would ask the Minister if in the additional width being made to the new lock of 100 by 18 feet, the opening has been increased proportionately? As I understand it the present lock is confined to a 60-feet entrance, and a vessel being towed up by a steamer has to run at a rapid rate in order that she may clear the narrow entrance and take a side berth in the canal or lock, so as to allow the other vessels following after to come abreast of her. The American locks, as I understand, were first built with this narrow entrance, but the locks recently constructed have been built with a full opening. As our Government is going to spend a large sum of money, would it not be well that the engineer in charge of this work should consider the advisability of making the opening full width, even if they had to resort to double caissons. There should be no impediment there and full ingress and egress to the canal should be given. I simply make this suggestion as I see that the Deputy Minister and the engineer are here, and I would like to have their opinion through the Minister.

Mr. BOWELL. The engineers, both of whom are here, tell me that they have not provided for the increased width as suggested by the hon. gentleman. From an engineering standpoint, or rather from a common-sense standpoint, I was of the same opinion as that expressed by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. I thought that the American system in reference to the opening of the gates should be adopted also, by which we would have advantage of the full width of the canal in entering and going up. The engineer tells me that that has not been widened.

Mr. GIBSON. Is it done in the new American locks?

Mr. BOWELL. I believe it is.

Mr. GIBSON. Would it not be well for the Canadian Government to adopt the same principle? The United States Government have made this improvement after an experience of thirty years, since their first lock was built, and would it not be well for us to be guided by their experience and provide for a full entrance to our lock? I say as a Canadian that I am proud of the Canadian Government for the enterprise they have shown in building this highway, and I would like to see it a complete success, which I believe it cannot be unless by the American principle of having a full opening, even if it should cost more money. It is only a question of time when it will have to be done, and would it not be better for the Government to consider this small outlay and have it done now when the lock is under construction?

Mr. BOWELL. The suggestion is a practical one, and one that deserves serious consideration. The deputy informs me that one reason they did not do it, was the fear of changing and altering the contract which might involve the expenditure of a very large amount of money. In deepening the other portions of the canal, it was not so much a change in the contract as adding to the expenditure by deepening and widening.

Mr. GIBSON. I understand the difficulty exactly that the engineer had before him, but I would like to point out to the Government the likelihood of accidents occurring on account of vessels being pulled into the lock at a rapid rate. As I stated before, the vessels, in railway phraseology, have to run and shunt on a siding to enable the succeeding vessels to follow in after them. Would it not be well to build steel gates on modern principles and have a full width to the opening?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Could the Minister or his officers give us any idea of what the cost would be? There can be no sort of doubt, I think, that the suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Gibson) is eminently in the interests of all who may use these waters.

Mr. BOWELL. I am quite satisfied that the House and the country will justify any reasonable additional expenditure in making this work as complete as possible, since we are spending so much upon it; and acting upon the suggestion made by the hon. member for Lincoln and by the hon. member for South Oxford, I will instruct the deputy to make a calculation as to the additional cost which would be incurred in carrying out that suggestion. I quite agree with them that it would be a great pity, after we have expended so much money, that there should be any failure in the future as to the adaptability of this work to the trade of the country.

Mr. GIBSON. The only additional expenditure that would be necessary, so far as I can see, would be on the gates, though I admit that would be considerable. I think it would be well that Parliament should now, if it would be proper, authorize the acting Minister to see that this is done.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understood the Minister to say that there are only two ports on Lake Huron where there would be a sufficient depth of water to admit of our making full use of this canal.

Mr. BOWELL. That is what Mr. Shanly points out. He gives the names of some ports which he thinks would have to be deepened by dredging. The proposed deepening of the canal to 19 feet will cost about $600,000, including the approaches at both ends, and the deepening of the harbours as suggested by Mr. Shanly would cost $400,000 or $500,000 additional; but he points out that this might be done gradually as the trade developed, and as vessels drawing that depth of water would be brought into use.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course, if the canal is deepened to 19 feet, the strong probability is that that expenditure must be incurred within a moderate space of time. The total expenditure, then, as I followed the Minister, would amount to about $4,000,000; that is, $3,000,000 for the original project, $600,000 or thereabouts for the deepening and for the approaches, and $400,000 or $500,000 for deepening the harbours.

Mr. BOWELL. That is about right.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Supposing there are no extras. Have the St. Clair flats been deepened sufficiently to allow of the passage of vessels drawing 19 feet?

Mr. BOWELL. No; the channel is only 16 feet at present.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I take it for granted that for a considerable time to come the trade we are to deal with will be almost, of necessity, confined to that of the two upper lakes, Lake Huron and Lake Superior.

Mr. BOWELL. I think so; unless by transferring the cargoes to smaller vessels which would pass down the St. Lawrence.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand that the channel of the St. Clair flats is being deepened by the United States Government, although it passes through our waters. Shall we be liable for some expense in connection with that?

Mr. BOWELL. In the construction of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal we are following the example of our neighbours on the other side of the river, who meet with the same difficulty as we do in regard to reaching the waters of Lakes Erie and Ontario. As the hon. gentleman says, the dredging on the St. Clair flats is now being carried on by the American Government, and it is also true, as the maps which I have examined indicate, that a portion of the channel which is being dredged is in Canadian territory. However, that is a matter in dispute; but as these waters are common to both countries under treaty, I suppose that the American Government have considered it more in their interest to expend the money than to ask us to assist, which they have not yet done.

Mr. McMULLEN. The dredging of the St. Clair flats raises a very serious question with regard to the ports on both sides of Lake Huron. I suppose the hon. gentleman and his engineers are aware that within the last few years a serious fall has taken place in the water of the several harbours on the Georgian Bay. For instance, the water in Owen Sound harbour has fallen 3 feet within the past few years. It is hard to account for this, but it is supposed to be due to the dredging of the St. Clair flats which makes a readier outlet for the waters of Lake Huron. I would like to know if the engineers of the department have taken this important subject into consideration. If the water in those ports is going to be so lowered as to only permit vessels of 12 to 15 feet trading in these waters, it will seriously injure the entire navigation of the upper lakes. Have they taken notice of the fact?

Mr. BOWELL. We do not see how the result pointed out by the hon. member for Wellington could follow the deepening of the St. Clair flats, unless the water were lessened to the extent of 3 feet on Lake Huron, and the same effect would be seen in Lake Superior, as the one feeds the other. I cannot understand how the harbour at Owen Sound could have a less depth of water by 3 feet, owing to the dredging of the St. Clair flats, unless the whole of Lake Huron was lowered to that extent.

Mr. McMULLEN. This has been going on for some years. I was told by a practical man about this difficulty. He deplored the fact that these harbours had been injured, and could not explain it in any other way. The hon. gentleman says that the dredging of the flats could not so drain Lake Huron as to lower the water, but the continuous increase of outflow from the flats by opening up the river, causing an increased drain on Lake Huron, might be the reason.

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). I do not think there is any danger of the water being lowered by the dredging of the flats at all. Old residents know that the water rises and falls in periods or cycles. The water in Lake Superior will rise steadily for about seven years and gradually fall again. The water is lower now than it has been for a number of years, and I have no doubt this is the end of one of the cycles, and that the water will begin to rise again.

Mr. GIBSON. I must give the Government great credit for their foresight in making this canal at the Sault 19 feet 6 inches deep. Whether the harbour at Owen Sound or any other place is deepened or not is of secondary consideration, and I give the Government credit for making adequate preparations to carry the trade of Lakes Huron and Superior. We are all aware that the Welland Canal has only 14 feet of water at the mitre sills and that only vessels drawing 14 feet can pass through. In the upper lakes many vessels draw from 18 to 20 feet, and no fault can be found with the Government for making the depth of water at the mitre sills 19 feet 6 inches.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think there is the slightest disposition to quarrel with that principle. All we desire is to ascertain what we are committing ourselves to. That curious question of the rise and fall of water in the various lakes is one that has never been scientifically or satisfactorily explained. I do not know whether the theory my hon. friend from Wellington has advanced will prove correct in an engineering point of view; but I presume if you excavate the channel to a greater depth you will probably draw off a considerably greater quantity of water, and it would be a question for engineers to decide whether it would be possible to lower the level of the lakes by any such process. I do not know whether Mr. Trudeau, who is here, could give an off-hand opinion on this point.

Mr. BOWELL. In answer to the hon. member for South Oxford, Mr. Trudeau says he agrees with him that the question is a complicated one, and, with his usual caution, does not care to commit himself.

Mr. WATSON. With regard to the lowering of the water, experience in the smaller lakes shows it is caused by dry seasons.

Mr. BOWELL. Whatever the cause may be, there is no doubt the water rises and falls in cycles, as the hon. member for Algoma has pointed out, and possibly the rise may begin shortly.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the hon. gentleman will enquire he will find that the water has been going down for the past nine or ten years. I mentioned this with regard to the St. Clair flats because the Minister said that the United States were doing that dredging. If they are so dredging that river, that they are seriously injuring our harbours along Lake Huron and in Georgian Bay, it is a matter of very serious moment whether the Government should not remonstrate with the American Government and see if some other course could not be adopted, such as, for instance, putting on a lock and thus prevent the lowering of water in the harbours, now so valuable, and which will carry on much larger commerce when the lock at the Sault is completed. We hope that the development of our mineral interests along Lake Superior will some day equal that of the United States, and it is of the greatest importance that our harbour accommodation should be preserved. If by the dredging carried on by the Americans on the St. Clair flats our harbours are going to be injured, the Government will have to see that it is not carried to the extent of ultimately ruining property that has cost such an enormous amount of money.

Mr. TROW. If the falling of the waters as predicted by the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Macdonell) takes place every seven or eight years, the result may be what he says or it may not, but he might stretch his imagination further and show that it is by the wear and tear of the Niagara Falls, and he might even go still further and predict that in the course of time Lake Huron will be a good farming country.

Mr. WATSON. To my own knowledge the water of Lake Manitoba has fallen 6 feet between 1880 and 1888, and since that it is commencing to rise again. There is only one outlet to that lake, the Fairford River, and a great tract of country drains into the lake, so that in wet years the drainage from the surrounding country fills up the lake and there is only one outlet, whereas in dry years the one opening allows the water to fall. The Government will have to pay some attention to that matter in the very near future, because there is a large tract of land around Lake Manitoba which will be submerged by the rising water. I know that some farms are now being cultivated which in 1880 and 1881 had two or three feet of water upon them. That may occur again, and the Government should take an early opportunity to widen the outlet into the Fairford River.

Tay Canal—completion..... $30,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We want to hear a little more about the question of freight on the Tay Canal. I dare say the Committee will recollect that the Postmaster General gave us some statistics as to the volume of trade passing through the Tay Canal, and the amount saved on freight. My recollection is that the Postmaster General stated that the saving amounted to $1.50 per ton on all the freight taken from Perth. I suppose he meant taken from Perth to Montreal or some such point as that. I may point out to the Committee that, if that is the case, the Tay Canal has performed a rather remarkable feat, because, as that involves a saving of freight amounting to 1 cent per ton per mile from the good town of Perth to Montreal, they must have been tremendously fleeced before if they have got a reduction of $1.50 a ton in consequence of the construction of the Tay Canal.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman has evidently misunderstood the tenor of my remarks. I was not making out that the saving to the people there was altogether in reference to freight that travelled along the Tay Canal, but I said that, owing to the construction of the Tay Canal, the people were enabled to make better terms with the railway companies, and as a result of that they saved $1.50 per ton on their freight. That was the information furnished me by those interested in freight in Perth. The total trade passing through the canal amounts to about $40,000 a year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Oh, it is growing. It was $30,000 last time.

Mr. HAGGART. Between $30,000 and $40,000. That is the information given to me.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The rate is about 1 cent per ton a mile.

Mr. HAGGART. It is not 1 cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You say there is a saving of $1.50, and the distance from Perth to Montreal cannot be more than 150 miles, so that would be 1 cent per ton a mile. You mean to say that the construction of the Tay Canal has saved $1.50 on every ton that goes into or goes out of the town of Perth.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then they must have been enormously fleeced before. The Tay Canal can only put you in connection with Kingston, because it connects with the Rideau Canal, and the Rideau Canal does not carry freight for nothing. The vessels are small and the charges considerable, and it is a very far fetched idea that the saving is as much as ought to convey from Perth to Montreal every ton of freight, and coarse freight at that. Yet that is what the hon. gentleman stated.

Mr. HAGGART. That is what I stated.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then, as I have said, the people must have been very heavily pressed before.

Mr. HAGGART. That allowed the people to get their freights coming into Perth and going from Perth at $1.50 less per ton. The people at Smith's Falls, on the bank of the Rideal Canal, had the advantage all the time of a competing line. The building of this canal has not only given Perth a connection with Kingston or with Ottawa, but connection with all parts of the country. There are boats loaded in Pennsylvania with coal, that may come up that canal and may come to Perth.

Committee rose; and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice on page B—301 of the Auditor General's Report, the money that has been expended during the last year; I would like to enquire whether the sums so paid are under schedule rates as contracted for? Are those rates arranged by schedule prices, or is there competition in the letting of that work?

Mr. BOWELL. There was competition in schedule prices, and I am informed the contract was given to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. McMULLEN. It appears to me in some cases the prices are very high. For instance, earth excavation, under water, dredging, there are 16,000 yards at 30 cents a yard.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not know the nature of the work. That is the contract price given to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice very high charges for timber for cribbing, and so forth. For instance, timber in sides and ends of crib, 17 cents a square foot. That is a very high price; also, pine or cedar in superstructures, 25 cents a square foot. I do not know how such prices can be got there. I know these prices are not paid in my section of the country for square timber.

Mr. BOWELL. The price here paid for timber, as I understand, is for the timber in the work as it is completed. Of course the price of timber after it is worked up may be higher than the first purchase price. But it is all done under contract at schedule prices, and the timber was bought from the lowest tenderer.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see we pay for spike nails and cut nails, 6 cents a pound. Certainly there must be some peculiarity about these nails. You can buy them over the counter at 3½ cents or 4 cents.

Mr. BOWELL. The Committee will understand that the hon. gentleman is asking questions affecting the expenditure under a contract which has been completed and paid for last year. The deputy informs me that this item completes the whole work, including the extension and the swing-bridge.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Postmaster General some time ago said that a considerable saving of freight was effected owing to the construction of this canal. What are the railway freight rates from Perth to Montreal?

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I understand this is to complete the extension up to Haggart's mills. In a former discussion it was stated there was a balance left over from the old grant. Can the hon. gentleman tell me what that balance was?

Mr. BOWELL. $16,000 or $18,000.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The complete work will cost $48,000.

Mr. BOWELL. The item is for the completion of the work, and the deputy informs me the amount includes everything in connection with it. $14,000 of it is a revote.

Carillon and Grenville Canal—Rebuilding masonry..... $14,000

Mr. McMULLEN. Why is this amount required?

Mr. BOWELL. It will be remembered the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) made some calculations, from which he came to the conclusion that $14,000, the full amount asked, was more than was necessary to complete the work. Since that time calculations have been made, and the amounts are as follows:—Earth excavation, 1,325 cubic yards at 25 cents, $331.25; rock excavation, 150 cubic yards at $1, $150; masonry and walls, 1,575 cubic yards at $6, $9,450; removing dry wall, &c., 1,530 cubic yards at 25 cents, $382.50; coffer dam, approximate, $2,000; removing coffer dam, $500; total, $12,813.75. Contingencies, 10 per cent., making in all, say, $14,000. The hon. gentleman will understand that in removing old works where leaks are likely to occur, it is impossible to calculate to hundreds of dollars the exact sum required.

Mr. GIBSON. I received that information on the night I asked the question, and I made no objection to the item being passed. I am perfectly satisfied with the information.

Repairing Carillon Dam..... $15,000

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the necessity for this expenditure?

Mr. BOWELL. The works have become weak, and it is necessary to strengthen them. There is a very large body of water in the dam and frequent repairs are necessary.

Land damages and services of valuators. $1,000

Mr. McMULLEN. Who are the valuators?

Mr. BOWELL. This is to pay Mr. Winan's claim of $300 for damages done to his lot at Hawkesbury. He was tendered $60, but declined to accept it. The land will have to be examined again.

Mr. GIBSON. In what part of the canal was the damage done, and was it done by water?

Mr. BOWELL. It was at Hawkesbury, at the foot of the canal.

Rideau Canal—Dredging plant..... $5,000

Mr. ALLISON. Is this the same dredging plant that I have been enquiring about for the last two or three weeks, and which the Minister of Finance said he would give me the information I desired about?

Mr. BOWELL. No; this is not the same.

Mr. FOSTER. I will get that information for you.

Towards deepening the Basin at Ottawa. $2,000

Mr. McMULLEN. Could the hon. gentleman tell me, is the tonnage on this canal increasing or decreasing? Of course, if it is increasing this would be a justifiable expenditure.

Mr. BOWELL. My impression is that the tonnage passing through the canal is increasing. This work is done on the recommendation of Mr. Wise, the superintendent of the canal, and it has been asked for by the forwarders.

Towards settlement of several claims for damages by water to lands bordering on the drowned lands of the Rideau Canal in the Townships of Kingston, Storrington and Frontenac $1,000

Mr. McMULLEN. When are we going to get through with these claims? It appears to me that they have an almost eternal existence. I would like to know from the Minister if this would settle for every claim that would possibly arise?

Mr. BOWELL. I do not think I would like to give an affirmative answer to that question, because these new claims are constantly cropping up. In the settlement of these claims lately we have adopted the plan of paying the sum for damages past, present and future. For the reasons suggested I put these words in the settlement of the claims and recommended their adoption to Council. I am in hopes that this will cut off these almost eternal claims that are constantly cropping up.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish some person with foresight had been in the position of Minister at the inception of these claims, because it would have been a grand thing to have some provision of that kind when we started out first to pay them; however, it is better late than never. Perhaps a great many along the canal will now think that they have some claim when this provision is adopted for damages in the future, and they may be inclined to put in their claims. It would be a good thing for the country if this provision had been put in the claims at first. I want to draw the Minister's attention to another thing. When a man makes a claim for damages and is allowed even a small sum, his neighbour thinks he is unjustly dealt with unless he gets something too, and there is no end to these claims. Therefore, I am glad that the Minister has adopted the system of closing out everything at once, so that when a settlement is made, a man cannot present any further claim.

Mr. DAWSON. I would like to ask the Minister if anything has been done in regard to a claim sent in by the township council of Bedford to the department for damage to a bridge, caused by the raising of the dam on the West Rideau Lake. I believe the township council put in a petition asking an engineer to be sent to assess the damages. I would like to know if that was done.

Mr. BOWELL. The deputy has no recollection just now whether he received the petition referred to or not. I will make enquiry and let the hon. gentleman know.

Mr. DAWSON. I called at the department a couple of months ago, and was told there that it had not then been done, but that the matter would be looked after. I have heard nothing of it since.

St. Peter's Canal—Towards reconstructing whole of west wall..... $37,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We want some details of this.

Mr. BOWELL. The timber of the present wall is more or less decayed, and the back of the wall more or less out of order, and a large portion of the wall must be rebuilt as early as possible. The work will be done by day's labour. The estimated excavation will be 50,250 yards, at 60 cents a yard, $30,150; repairs to the swing bridge, $1,175; repairs to the lock gates, $350; painting the buildings, $150; repairing the road, $50; replacing fenders, $150; iron bolts, &c., $33; other contingencies, $4,000 or $5,000.

Cobourg Post Office, Custom House, &c.—To complete payments..... $1,500

Mr. McMULLEN. What was the original contract for this work, how far was it exceeded, and what was the estimated cost to complete it?

Mr. FOSTER. The building is all completed, and this vote is for payments due and waiting to be made.

Mr. McMULLEN. We are rather suspicious of post offices, as they generally cost a great deal more than the original estimate. Does the contract provide for a clock on this post office?

Mr. FOSTER. This is not for a clock.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We will give the hon. gentleman this item if he will put in the Cobourg item.

Mr. FOSTER. If I find it necessary I will put it in.

Immigration..... $197,025

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Judging from what we have seen of the value of the services rendered by this department, it would greatly improve the Estimates if this item were struck out. I have had occasion frequently to remark that I doubted extremely whether the calculations made by that department were of the slightest value; and in view of the fact that while they reported 886,171 persons to have settled in Canada within the last ten years, the total increase of population is about 400,000 less, it appears the time has come when we should consider carefully whether we should go on spending $250,000 a year in the attempt to bring out immigrants to the country. It is possible these immigrants may have come, but it is very certain they have not stayed. I doubt myself if one man in ten, looking at the returns of the census of those alleged to have come into this country by the Department of Agriculture and Immigration, has stayed, and I am very sure not more than one in four has. My own impression is that any immigrants who have come here and whom it is desirable to retain would have come without the aid of this vote at all. Those we do bring and who have stayed with us, to a great extent, practically exclude certain trained people from occupation in this country. Until we find means of retaining our own people here, we are simply wasting our money in voting this quarter of a million for immigration purposes. I, therefore, advise the Minister of Finance to improve the aspect of his Budget by striking out this $135,000 in toto. The whole system has been thoroughly wasteful and useless to us during the past ten years. It would be much better, looking at the results we have obtained, if the Minister insists on keeping up this expenditure, to hand this sum over to be administered by the people of the North-West, who have a real and live interest in bringing people to the country. I do not see that any value at all has been received by us from this expenditure.

Mr. DAVIN. I am very sorry to hear the suggestion made by the hon. member for South Oxford. That suggestion is one we have often heard from the Liberal benches, and I think the attention of the Liberal party in this House has been called to a powerful article which appeared in the Liberal organ at Winnipeg a few weeks ago, in which, after reviewing the speech made against giving money for immigration, I forget whether by the hon. member for South Oxford or the hon. member for North Norfolk, the Winnipeg Free Press said that if that was the policy of the Liberal party, they need never hope for any support in the North-West or Manitoba. It pointed out that the Liberal party might have fairly hoped to have got support in Manitoba, but how could they expect it when they gave utterance to such sentiments in regard to immigration? I will concede that the results of our efforts in the way of immigration have not been as satisfactory as we should have liked, just as in our country and in other countries the increase in population has not been what was expected or what we should have liked, but I say that the fact that our spasmodic efforts—and I shall speak in a moment in regard to their spasmodic character—have not been more successful is due in great part to the extraordinary policy which has been pursued from the Liberal side of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. Hon. gentlemen cheer derisively, but for nineteen years I have been watching what has taken place in this House from the gallery, or through the columns of the press. Ever since the Conservative party came into power, I have been watching what has taken place on the Opposition benches, and what has been the invariable cry? The invariable cry has been to decry Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear; not so.

Mr. DAVIN. I say it cannot be contradicted——

An hon. MEMBER. It can.

Mr. DAVIN. It can be contradicted by someone who does not care what he says. It cannot be contradicted by anybody who wishes that his public expressions should have credence all over the country, but the tone taken on the Opposition side of the House has been invariably this doleful song every year at the time of the Budget debate. They take a series of figures tending to show great prosperity in the United States and great adversity in Canada, and, although one cannot see how a syllogism can be made out of the bringing together of such figures, it is easy to understand how the impression goes abroad that in some way or other Canada is not so inviting a country to live in as the United States. Again, what has been the character of our immigration policy? Has it been a steady immigration policy? No; in consequence of the very criticisms to which I have referred, and of such criticisms as to-night have fallen from the hon. member from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), our immigration efforts have been spasmodic. A sentiment has been created throughout the country against immigration efforts. A sentiment has been created in the towns, especially against spending money on immigration? And what has been the result? The result has been that pressure has been put upon our own Government to curtail the expenditure, until at last they brought down the amount expended on immigration to the beggarly sum of about $50,000 a year. That $50,000, to deal with so important a matter as immigration to this country, was, as everybody knows, entirely inadequate, and it was only after pressure had been brought to bear on this Government that they took it into their heads to place a sum in the Estimates somewhat commensurate, but not wholly commensurate, as some of us believe, with this great function of the Government of Canada; for we may lay this to our hearts, looking at the history of the United States and other countries, looking at the history of Australia, if we want to build up Canada, if we want to make Canada rich, if we want to make the men who are in Canada rich, if we want to bring about prosperity here and to create a higher level of life and property, the best way in which we can do this is to bring in fit immigrants. How can that be done? Mr. Dyke, in Liverpool, if you speak to him, will tell you; Sir Charles Tupper, if you speak to him, will tell you; those who are conversant with these matters will tell you, that immigration, like other things, is a commodity. Here are a certain number of people who desire to emigrate; here are countries who want the immigrants; and the country that bids the highest gets them. In order to avoid our immigrants going across the line, the manner of spending money voted last year and the money to be voted this year has been and will be of that character that not one cent of that money can be paid out until the settler is firmly settled in this country. That was suggested, not from the Government benches, but from one of the humble members of the Conservative party, in order to meet, and properly meet, the jealousy of those who felt we were spending money with the result of sending immigrants across the line, and also to meet the objections of the labour party. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) made a suggestion which I hope the Government will pay some attention to. He said, jocosely, I think—but sometimes a man unwittingly speaks truth in jest, and it is possible in this House for a gentleman to blunder into statesmanship—at least, let us hope so—he said that he hoped this money would be given to the people in the North-West, who had most interest in attending to the bringing in of immigrants, in order that they should administer the funds. I can only say that, if it is given to us, we shall not object to taking the responsibility of administering it. If the $150,000 were given to us, it would be found that at the end of a year we should give a good account of it. However, I do not suppose that we can persuade the hon. the Minister of Finance, or my hon. friend who represents the Minister of Agriculture in this House, to give us all this sum, but I hope that, in regard to a part of it, they will listen to the suggestion of the member for Oxford. Let them place a part of that sum at the direct disposal of the North-West Territories. You have our lands; you administer our lands; we are really under your Government; but I agree with the proposition which is behind the statement of the member for Oxford, which is that you cannot here in Ottawa attend as well to the pressing on the attention of the emigrating world the attractions of Prince Albert, of Alberta, of the Saskatchewan, of Assiniboia, as we could ourselves. We do not want a very large sum. Suppose you put $5,000 for each district in the Estimates, that would not be a large sum. I venture to say if you put $15,000 or $20,000 in the Estimates yet to come down, to be entirely at our own disposal for immigration purposes, that at the end of a year or a couple of years we shall give a good account of it. It has been said that we have not made as much progress, from a census point of view, as we ought to have made. Very well. We have not. Neither has the United States, neither has England for that matter, nor any country on the continent; but we have to ask what would have been the progress of our population if no efforts had been made at all in this direction? If no efforts had been made at all in the way of immigration, instead of having close on to five millions, probably we should not have more than four millions to-day. What is the reason that we have not made such progress in population as we should like? As a fact, we have made progress in population, but some of our population has gone away from us; and you cannot prevent, in a country like this, with so enterprising and so migratory a race as we will have in Canada, you cannot prevent the young men going across the border and taking their chances in that country.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The National Policy has driven them out.

Mr. DAVIN. There is a smile of derision on the hon. gentleman's face as he utters those words, as much as to tell me he is joking. He himself does not believe the National Policy has driven them out, because before having a National Policy they went away. One of the first times I spoke in this House I mentioned that one of the reasons why many of our population go away is this: Our education is so well organized, we educate our young men so highly, that they become discontented with the plough, and we have more men of education and of professional ability at the present moment in Canada than Canada can support. That is the reason those men of professional ability go elsewhere, and they have to do it. It is the same way in England; there is a class in England that are actually forced to emigrate, and if they do not emigrate they have to starve. You have doctors by the score, you have barristers by the score, you have architects by the score—all of them starving on the high education they have received. Now, we have something like that in Canada; we have a certain portion of our population educated above the capacity of Canada to meet. Of course, I know this happens in every profession; no matter how crowded the profession is, if a man be a first-class man he will force his way; you cannot keep first-class ability down—it will up. Now, I suppose there is not a greater friend of education than I am, yet I will say this, that the greatest curse that can befall any young man of mediocre talent, fairly respectable talent, is that his fond father, or his fond mother, or his own fond vanity, should send him to a university. There is no such waste in a wasteful world as to bestow a first-class education on second-class brains. When you do that you produce a class of men—and what are they fit for? They cannot work, and to beg they are ashamed. They cannot plough, they cannot do mechanical work, and the consequence is they go across the line. But there are others who are of a different class from that even; there are men that go every year, for instance, to our Military College at Kingston; they go there and get an engineering education. Have we scope for their engineering ability here? We have not, and the consequence is they have to go elsewhere. They go to the United States, they go to South America. Just as you find Irishmen, Scotchmen and Englishmen all the world over, so you will find enterprising young Canadians all the world over. These men will go away, and if you are not supplying the drain by bringing in the kind of immigrants, the kind of workers, that we need in a new country like this, the result is that we die of inanition; we should not have a progressive population at all. But, Sir, I hold that the efforts that are being made now are of a wholly different kind from the efforts that were made in the past in respect to immigration. In the past a most wasteful system was adopted by whatever Government was in power. They did not understand the conditions of the country, in fact they did what is the curse of mediocrity, whether in Governments or in anyone else, they were mere imitators; they asked what other people did, and they did it. They found that other people gave bonuses to immigrants, and gave free passages, and they said: We will do the same. They never considered that there was a difference between Canada and Australia, that whereas Australia was sphered by the sea, Canada had a vast border line dividing it from a country in some respects more highly organized than herself—although not in the higher qualities—but in some respects in advance of herself. They never considered that, and they went on from year to year, to some extent, I admit, pouring water into a sieve, and, as a matter of course, the sieve never ran over. But I think the plan that is adopted now of paying only for results will be successful; at all events, we cannot now pay for an immigrant coming here who leaves us, we only pay when he has settled down, we only pay when it is shown by the man who has brought him in, that he has taken up his homestead, and we know very well that once he has taken a position like that, it is very unlikely he will leave the country. Now, instead of placing a vote of $150,000—it has been cut down since last year, and I think that is a retrograde step—I think we ought to spend $500,000 a year on immigration. A sum of $500,000 a year would be well spent on immigration, if it were spent in a fruitful way.

Mr. McMULLEN. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend from Wellington says "hear, hear," in a doubtful manner. Why, he himself is a business man, he is a man of ability, he is a man of tireless energy, and if he were as far-seeing as energetic, he would know that the more he crowds this country with population, the more rapidly he develops the North-West Territories, the higher in value will his own property become, and the richer this country would be for himself and his children.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What would be your plan to get better results?

Mr. DAVIN. The other evening I asked the leader of the Opposition what he would do under given circumstances, and he said: "Wait until I am responsible." And I heard the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), when he was asked to explain one of the most difficult problems, I think, that was ever placed before a rational assembly—he said: "We are not yet called in." I do think that in the midst of a plea for more energy in immigration, more wisdom, also, in spending the money, it is hardly rational to ask me for my plan.

Besides, I am not a prophet, nor the son of a prophet; I am only the humblest soldier in the army of the Conservative party. I am not a person to propound great policies, I am not a profound individual who sits down and cogitates great plans for enlarging the bounds of freedom and enriching the country; I am not one of those heaven-sent individuals that you can pick up like grasshoppers on hedges wherever you go. In fact the plan has been for some time in this country—I do not say it has actually occurred in this House—but I think myself I have seen something like this: I have seen a great Minister entrenched in power, who could do almost anything he pleased; I have seen him take a rat and cut the tail short and the ears short, and put a collar of gold around its neck, and say to his party and to the country: "Gentlemen, this is a bull dog." And all the party papers said next day it was a bull dog. If it turned out that a small terrier attacked it and worsted it they declared that he fought most splendidly, and that the terrier was utterly crushed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Name, name.

Mr. DAVIN. Is it any wonder, let me ask in all seriousness, when that has been the way by which Cabinets have been recruited, that money has gone like water through a sieve? Is it any wonder that when money has been spent unwisely on immigration it has been found difficult afterwards to get the sanction of the House of Commons to a proper expenditure? I do hope the day has gone when the people of Canada will sit quietly by and see one of the most fatal things that can be done for the nation, especially for a young nation, namely, great trusts placed upon narrow shoulders and narrow foreheads. I did not want to go into those deeper explanations as to why it was that the immigration policy was not more successful; but I say this, that be the Government Liberal, or be it Conservative, that Government which refuses to spend money on immigration, and refuses willingly to spend large sums on immigration, is not a statesmanlike Government. The Government that knows what is in the interest of Canada, what is in the interest of enriching the eastern provinces, enriching Quebec and Ontario, as I could show if I did not shrink from taking up the time of the House, is one that will spend money in crowding immigrants into the North-West and developing that great country. An hon. gentleman says something about the Regina Leader; there is no doubt that it has been a most successful immigrant. I am talking in favour of a larger vote instead of a lesser vote. I utterly repudiate the suggestion of the hon. member for Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), and I say that the Government will increase the confidence with which it is regarded in this country, especially in the North-West; will increase the confidence with which it is regarded by all who take an intelligent view of the conditions on which the future of Canada depends; if, instead of listening to such a sinister suggestion from the hon. member for Oxford, they take the suggestion of the Free Press of Winnipeg, the suggestion of every man who knows anything whatever about the history of a new country, and spend wisely as much money as they ever can obtain in bringing first-class immigrants into this young Canada of ours.

Mr. FRASER. After the able effort of my friend from Assiniboia, I feel as if the commonplaces I am going to utter on this question will fall very flat on the House. I thank the hon. gentleman very much, he being a Conservative, for his close and accurate analysis of the present Government—a Government of mediocrity—that is bad enough: a Government of narrow foreheads; a Government that contained a rat that passed off for a terrier. That was the unkindest cut of all. I do not wonder the census has developed the results we have, if we are governed in that manner. It was bad enough to say the Government was an old sieve through which the immigration money poured so that none of it remained to keep immigrants in the country. But to have those narrow foreheaded hon. gentlemen to lead the Government—I am not sure some of them have very narrow foreheads—I am certainly of the opinion that some of them are not wanting in cheek if they are in forehead.

Mr. DAVIN. I was not personal.

Mr. FRASER. The very lack of saying anything personal tended to strengthen the hon. gentleman's remarks. When such an indictment against the present Government was fyled by my hon. friend, I felt it was time I should rise, although opposed to them, to say something in their behalf. It is well the country should understand the real condition of affairs. They will know exactly what the true state of things is if they learn the spirit so aptly displayed by the hon. gentleman when he discussed the present Government, its methods and its expenditures, and, if they learn his views, there ought to be no mistake among the electors as to how we are governed. I agree with the hon. gentleman that this country can never develop, never will develop, and no country of the size of Canada with all our resources ever did develop, except by immigration. You may talk about our wealth as much as you please, and about amassing large fortunes here. It is all no good; heads count in this new country, and nothing else. What the hon. gentleman did not say, I am bound to say, namely, that for the last 10 years we have had simply a system of shout, buncombe and brag. We have been talking about this great country. That is all right. We have been talking about its development and how it is filling up. The fact is, the country has not been filling up. Immigrants who came here found that all this buncombe and brag displayed by hon. gentlemen opposite in regard to this country were not true; they simply got disgusted and left Canada. I will show hon. gentlemen how you can bring immigrants here. There is only one way, and that is by making this country a better country to live in than any other, and that never can be accomplished with the National Policy in force. It cannot be done by advertising. The hon. gentleman thinks that if he had $15,000 with which to advertise the North-West would be filled up. We have advertised; we have had agents going up and down the country, not only in Canada, but in Europe; and with what results? Wretched results. Why is it? We have been attempting to reverse the doctrine, not only of political economy, but of common sense, that in this country, if we are going to build it up, we must make the conditions of life so favourable that when a man comes here and takes up land he can live cheaper and freer in this Dominion than elsewhere. We have reversed this condition of affairs. We want to build up kings who will take from the wealth of the poor and add it to their own wealth; and then we are surprised that immigrants are not coming here. A nice condition of affairs they find here when they come. They discover that the very necessities of life are taxed so that they cannot live here. Why are they leaving the country? There was a time, a few years ago, when I would have been met with a chorus of shouts and I would have been told that the country was prosperous. The hard, dry facts of the census have proved that hon. gentlemen opposite were wrong and we were right. When we come to understand, not by buncombe and brag, that no laws shall be placed on the Statute-book giving a better opportunity to one man than another we shall get immigrants to come here. We must understand that this matter cannot be managed entirely by money. We have commenced at the wrong end. We legislated for the few when we expected the many to come in; and when immigrants did come in they simply left us. We have spent three or four dollars for every man, woman and child who came into this Dominion, and we have spent about five dollars for every individual in our increase of population, natural and by immigration, in the last ten years. Is that a result to be brought about simply by voting money? The truth is that we have been paying agents everywhere all over this country, and in other countries, to try and bring immigrants here, but they cannot succeed in doing it. We sent a man down to Dakota, and gentlemen opposite declared that there was a tremendous exodus from Dakota into the North-West, but we found by the census that Dakota had increased its population 300 per cent., while we have only increased by 11 per cent. We have not taken the proper method of government in this country, and that is the reason why our population has not increased. Look at the results in the Maritime Provinces. We have always been thinking, and I quite agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) in that, that the North-West is the place for settlers to go, but we must not forget that there are large tracts of land in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, and in the older Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, which might become the homes of happy and contented people. Immigration to a country must be voluntary. Men who leave a country to come to another must be allowed to choose their surroundings, and men are intelligent beings and will always select the country they will come to. You cannot drive them in herds and say they shall live in a certain place. Their impressions and their ideas of a country must form a prominent part in their deciding to settle in that country. In the census for the last ten years the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island have gone far behind. Take, for example, the Province of New Brunswick. Will any man say that the intelligence and enterprise of the people of New Brunswick are not equal to that to be found in any part of this Dominion, and yet the saddening sight is presented to us that on the basis of population New Brunswick will lose two members in this House. That fertile province increased only by 61 of a population in ten years; not any more than we ought to expect under natural and proper circumstances from the gentlemen who represent the province in this House. It does seem like the irony of fate, that a province that produced a Finance Minister; that had no more backbone than to inaugurate this present system, and subsequently a Minister that was too weak—although I know his better judgment tells him now as it has always told him, he being a student, that it is wrong to continue the wretched system—to abolish that policy. Again, in the Province of Nova Scotia we lose one member. Where is the immigration to that province in the last ten years, or where is the natural increase in population? We are told on the floor of this House, that we must expect that the people will leave this country. Must we expect that more people will leave the country than come into it? Have we come to that sad condition? My hon. friend here (Mr. Davin) discovers that the whole difficulty is, because we are educated too highly. He says we have too many professional men. Perhaps we have, but it is the first time I have heard in this country that an educated man cannot be a good farmer. What are our common schools for, but to educate the people? I agree with him that we are educating men for the United States, but that is because in this country we are not giving our young men the opportunities that they elsewhere find. Why is that? Is not our country as rich as the United States, and have we not all the advantages that are to be found in that country? Yes, we have, and greater advantages. I agree with any man who says that in this Canada of ours we have a better country in every respect than they have in the United States. Take any province in the Dominion of Canada, and put it side by side with any state of the Union situated similarly and you will find that it is superior to any state in the Union under similar circumstances. Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are ahead of Maine or any of the New England States, and I am sure that Ontario is as fertile and as productive as any part of the United States. Is Quebec not as good as any state in the Union? Is her land not as rich, and are the people of the Province of Quebec not as industrious as the people of the United States? Are they not as frugal: aye, they are far more frugal than the people of the United States. Why is it that the people are leaving our rich and fertile provinces? Is it because we are educating our people too highly, and not spending half a million dollars to bring immigrants into the country? No; we must look deeper for the root of the evil than that, and the quicker we understand the real cause the better. Do you think that while we are placing a barrier on the importation of goods, and while we are making it harder and harder every day for the poor to live, that we are going to get immigration into this country? You may blow the horn louder than Gabriel's horn to call the people to emigrate to this country, but they will not come until you change your policy and your system of government. Does any man think that the class of men we want from England, Scotland, and Ireland, are not well educated? I tell you that the ordinary men in Great Britain are better educated to-day than they were twenty years ago, and through labour unions and other agencies that are at work, they understand just exactly the kind of country they are coming to when they leave England. We sometimes hear that the classes which emigrate from England are not educated. I can tell you that they know more about our country from reading books, and they enquire about our country more than our ordinary farmers and mechanics in this country do. They know all about it, and they know how to reason about the policy in force in this country, and how hard it makes it for the workingman to get a living. I spoke in this House some time ago, and I said that in the three counties I was well acquainted with—Pictou, Antigonish and Guysborough—that the condition of the farmers and fishermen was nothing like as good as it was ten years ago. I was laughed at then, but when the census returns came down, we found that the County of Pictou, the county in which I live, a county that is noticeable all over Nova Scotia for its enterprise and intelligence, a county that has given as many men to public life, to the professions, and to industrial pursuits, as any county in the province, has actually, under the beneficent effects of the National Policy, where it was supposed to work a great deal of good, retrograded by 1,000 in its population. In the County of Antigonish, inhabited by sturdy Highlanders, a county with a rich and fertile soil, where twenty years ago you would find wealth and contentment everywhere; that county, represented by a Cabinet Minister, went back 2,000 in its population. In the ordinary work of making the roads in the Counties of Pictou, Antigonish and Guysborough, I know there are three-mile districts where there is not a single man to perform the statute labour on the roads which has to be done by every citizen, because the few men who live in the districts are over sixty years of age, and they are exempted from that work by law. The sad thing about the fact that we are not getting men and women into this country is this: that the best part of our population is going away; our young men are leaving, and only the old people remain behind who are not able to work the farm. I want to remind my hon. friends opposite that they pretended—it was only a pretense I am sure, but they led the people to believe it—that when they inaugurated this National Policy there would be a different state of things in the country, and instead of showing 17 per cent. increase as we did during the ten years from 1871 to 1881, they would show during the last decade an increase of double that number in the population. They promised that, and we hold them to their promise. We knew very well they could not do it. We knew that, even without having the description so eloquently given of the character of the present Government by the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). We knew that if their foreheads were wider, their heads larger, their shoulders broader, and they had no terrier in the shape of a rat among them, they would not have been able to do it. No man in this House respects the gigantic intellect and the ability of my hon. friend from Assiniboia more than I do, but even if he were in the Government he could not with this National Policy give us the results we would like.

Mr. DAVIN. I rise to order. The Government that I was describing was the Government of the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie.

Mr. FRASER. Why, the hon. gentleman has spoken of this Government as a Government of antiques; he has spoken of their policy as the green-grocer policy; and he cannot go back on them now. But I was going to say that even he could not make this country prosperous under such a policy. No, Mr. Chairman, a Government cannot make a country; a policy cannot make a country; nothing can make a country except making the laws of such a character and so easily workable that the common people will not only appreciate them, but gain the results of them. You cannot make laws such as we have been making without having these effects. The day has gone by, I repeat, for bluster. We must deal with facts just as they are. The most amusing thing I have heard in this House, as to the state of our country as shown by the census, was the speech of an hon. gentleman who endeavoured to show from the census that the country was in an excellent state, increasing in population everywhere. Why, in the City of St. John the other day the Board of Trade met, and what did they say? They said that the census of the city was not properly taken, and the suggestion was made that they should take the census over again to show that the Government were wrong. One distinguished gentleman came all the way from St. John to Ottawa, and all the way he was protesting that his name was not taken at all. When he arrived here he went to search for himself, and he found that after all his name was taken, and now he does not think it would do any good to take the census again, because the Government census is correct. If there is anything wrong about it, I think it represents the population as fully greater than it really is. This is not a matter for congratulation, and I believe that I am joined by every hon. gentleman on this side of the House when I say that every patriotic Canadian feels this. I feel it, because our neighbours to the south, who are so anxious to lord it over us, who have so much to be proud of, and are often prouder than they have reason to be, will say that this country has been retrogading. We are building immense railways, which is not a bad thing under certain circumstances; but I notice, for instance, that in Great Britain the only thing they think in regard to our railways is that they will be of use in case of war, to enable them to send their soldiers quickly to Asia. That is no reason for us to build railways, and if the English people want our railway for that purpose, they should help to build it; but all the railways we may build in the North-West will not bring immigrants into the country unless they find that it is a better country and that the conditions are more favourable than they will find elsewhere. There is no country in the world today with a fertility equal to that of the North-West, the approaches to which are superior to those to the North-West. A man can leave any country in the old world and come to Montreal, and there take the Canadian Pacific Railway, and go straight to the North-West. But why do people from Europe not go there? I am sure that my hon. friend from Assiniboia has done his share; he says that the paper with which he is more or less connected has done its share, and I believe it; then, why is it that immigrants have not gone into the country? The truth is you cannot always keep all the people in any country. Our race is so vigorous, and its love of adventure so great that it moves from place to place. The difficulty of any nation is in keeping its people at home. Heads count in any country. I would rather have a large population with small means in a country than a few wealthy men and the great body of the people poor. You can never make a country where there is a small body of wealthy men living on the rest of the people and making them pay tribute to them. This is worse than any taxes which exist in Great Britain, because it has the sanction of a Parliament elected by a free people, enabling a few men to put their hands into the pockets of the poor and make them poorer. I was amused at one hon. gentleman opposite saying that it was only in Grit districts we had retrograded. I was very much surprised at that, because I find, for example, that five counties represented by members of the Cabinet have shown a decline. That is not the way to meet the difficulty. We must meet it fairly and squarely, and this Parliament will be derelict in its duty if it does not now or very soon meet this difficulty as it ought to be met. I tell you that all the speeches made in this country as to the greatness of our country and the immensity of our resources, will not bring immigrants into the country. You cannot bring immigrants here merely by praising the country; the only way you can bring them is by making the conditions of life attractive. I was surprised that the hon. member for Assiniboia did not rise to a position of true statesmanship when he said that it was not for him to make a suggestion. I submit that it is the duty of every member of Parliament to make a suggestion, more especially when we have a Government in power of the character he describes. It becomes the hon. gentleman and myself, small as our quota of suggestions are, to offer to assist such a Government to promulgate proper views with reference to immigration. But I submit that weak as they are and mediocre as they are, it is all the more incumbent upon the hon. gentleman, who represents their views, to make such suggestions to them as will enable them to do better. However, I think the Government are acting wisely in not voting a larger sum of money this year. I think they are beginning themselves to understand that this is a wasteful method of spending money, and that they must devise a better method before they spend much more. I understand that this vote is only for the purpose of retaining in their positions the gentlemen who do the immigration business of this country. That business has been very badly done, surely. I do not know, because I am not on the ground, what is best to be done in the North-West Territories. My hon. friend suggested for it, a vote of $15,000—a very modest sum. I was surprised at the modesty of the request, and I could only understand it as coming from a man who felt himself that we were meeting grave issues just now, and that the money could be better spent by peopling the North-West than in any other way. I, for one, would vote $15,000 every day in the year if the magnificent results which the hon. gentleman described were achieved in the North-West. But mere votes of money will not people the North-West under our present conditions. We must change those conditions. And now let me say something in answer to what I have heard some hon. gentlemen opposite say, that this country is less popular with immigrants because of the facts brought to light by members of the Opposition in this House. I suppose they would say that it is our fault that the people are leaving the country. Some of them are bold enough to say it, but it will not do just now. Do these hon. gentlemen not understand that, in saying that, they are declaring that the people of this country can have no confidence in the Government? The Government are the stronger, and yet these hon. gentlemen say that the Opposition, which they profess to look upon with contempt, are the parties who are depopulating the country. Hon. gentlemen opposite hold power. They hold it with a varying majority, it is true, but still sufficient to carry on the business of the country. They have all the wealth of the country at their back, they take from the people between $30,000,000 and $35,000,000 every year, and the result of all their labour is that the people have no confidence in them and are leaving the country. Some time ago I saw the suggestion made by a gentleman who lives on the Government, who receives a large amount from the Government every year for advertising in a small country newspaper, matters relating to the North-West, a paper which no man reads, that the editors of Grit papers should be sent out of the country. What a glorious country it would then be for the party in power, with nobody to find fault, and with full liberty to do what they liked! It will not do for the Government to say that the Opposition are to blame. The fact stares us in the face that our population has not increased. If this vote is not going to do, if half a million is necessary, let the Government spend it and try every method; still I believe they will not succeed unless they adopt a common-sense policy—a policy of so carrying on the business of the country and so arranging our fiscal laws as to give opportunities, not to the few, but to all the people to prosper. We have a country which can be made prosperous, in which there are willing hands and hearts to build it up. I will be charitable enough to think that even hon. gentlemen opposite have some desire that this country should prosper; but so long as we legislate so as to exclude from a proper participation in the wealth of the country the class of all others that will make it prosperous, the farmers, fishermen and artizans, so long will we go begging for immigrants and not keep them. Open our doors, give us better laws and wider intercourse with the world, and you will see every province start into new life. We have faith in the intelligence and energy of our people and in their ability to compete with any people in the world. We are not the miserable dwarfs the Government policy would make us out to be. We have the hands and the brains and the hearts to compete with any people in the world. Give us the chance, and in the next ten years you will find this country filled with an industrious population, filled with people who stay at home and are contented with their lot. No man wants, no man ever did want to leave the country if his condition here were such that he could obtain in it a happy home and moderate wealth; no man wants to leave it so long as he is able to do that which every good citizen should be able to do, live at peace with his surroundings, meet his bills, and be contented and prosperous.

Mr. TISDALE. Unlike the hon. gentleman to whom we have just had the pleasure of listening, I had not prepared any remarks for this occasion, but still I could not forbear addressing a few remarks to the Committee in reply to the hon. gentleman. I had some hopes of the hon. gentleman when I first heard him speak in this House, and I have yet hopes of him if he will only allow the patriotic sentiments he expresses to control his arguments and his actions. I like patriotic sentiments, but I like better arguments consistent with them. I am glad to be able to say that if there has been on this side any bluster, brag and buncombe in discussion, it has not been bluster, brag and buncombe to the detriment of the country and against our faith in the country. I was glad to hear the hon. gentleman say that the different provinces of this country were greater than Maine, Vermont and the other eastern states; that we were prosperous and ahead of those states. But while doing that, the hon. gentleman took occasion to decry the country he admits is superior to these states. Let me ask the hon. gentleman opposite to quote the statement of any public man in Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, or any of these states, in their newspapers or on the floor of Congress or the Senate, detrimental to those states which even hon. gentlemen opposite admit are behind ours? When I hear a gentleman uttering some of the sentiments the hon. gentleman did, and coupling them with other statements he sends broadcast to the country, I cannot help coming to the conclusion that he allows his desires of a party nature to overpower his better sentiments. He says the National Policy is the root of all evil, and finds fault with the Government because they do not pass laws to remedy the state of things he complains of; and in the next breath he says it is impossible for any Government or party to pass laws to regulate or affect trade. If the latter is his view, I do not agree with him. I appeal to the history of the country, since the National Policy was inaugurated, to prove that this country has prospered.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Look at our population.

Mr. TISDALE. I take strong grounds in opposition to the hon. gentleman when he says he prefers a poor country with many people to a rich country with few people.

Mr. FRASER. I said I preferred a country with a large number of people in moderate circumstances to a rich country with rich men and few people.

Mr. TISDALE. You did in one part of your speech; but in finding fault with the fact that the census had not evidenced such an increase in our population as you desired and we all might desire, you said you desired many heads, that the heads counted, and the other considerations of the country were of secondary importance.

Mr. FRASER. I beg your pardon. I said I preferred many heads as the only basis of wealth in the country.

Mr. TISDALE. The hon. gentleman said so many things that I think he forgets several, because some of them were completely inconsistent with others. I have challenged him on this, and, if I am incorrect in challenging him, so much the better for him and so much the worse for the remarks I am about to make, but I believe the country will understand him in that sense. I prefer to see a country such as Canada is. Though the population has not increased as we might have desired, the country is prosperous and the different classes, some rich but not many, some poor, some in medium circumstances, but none suffering, all prospering, and in the crisis from which so many lands suffered, not even the mother land escaping, which is supposed to be the richest of all, no country went through that crisis so well as this Canada of ours. When the hon. gentleman complains against the National Policy, I would ask him how he proposes to remedy it? If it is true that there is an exodus, where is it going? It is going to a country with double the National Policy that we have. The hon. gentleman referred to Dakota and the western territories. The hon. gentleman is from the lower provinces, and perhaps he is not posted in the history of the Liberal party in the western provinces. Who helped to fill Dakota and the western territories, when we were bidding against them for the immigrants to the North-West? It was not the Liberal-Conservative party or the followers of the Government, but it was the teachings of many men who were his predecessors on that side of the House, and it was just such speeches as he has made to-night that tended to bring about that result. I am not saying this to hold up the side of politics I belong to, but, as one of the citizens of Canada, as a native-born Canadian, I am deploring that in this country political partizanship has become so strong on every occasion, even on the floors of Parliament, the attempt is made to decry the country because hon. gentlemen opposite think they will dissatisfy the people with the actions of the Government. Let me call the hon. gentleman's attention to recent occurrences in Dakota. What happened in Dakota when our immigrant agents, the agents of the railway company and all those who were attempting to further immigration from that place to the North-West, went there? Did they allow them to open immigration offices there, as we do here, and as all civilized countries should do? No; when they found the people were getting information from reliable sources and that that information was undoing the effect of certain information which had been given to them before, they tarred and feathered them if they would not leave and shut up their offices in the territory and go back to Canada. These are the forcible arguments which our neighbours apply when they find it necessary to prevent the people from acquiring valuable information in regard to Canada. The hon. gentleman says we do not give our young men an equal chance with those in the United States. I am surprised to hear that. I challenge the hon. gentleman on that. I say that in Canada our system of education is not second to any in the world, and I can prove that by the record he refers to, by the United States itself. We all know who read, and I know something of it by personal experience, that young Canadians who go to the United States, having been educated under our system, at once get places in preference to their own young men, owing to the excellent system of teaching we have here. I think the hon. gentleman's remarks were almost all wide of the item we are discussing. He evidently had prepared himself, and for what? Not to discuss, as my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) did, the question of immigration, but to make an attack upon the Government and upon the country. I do not propose to follow him further on that, but, as representing one of the oldest ridings in Ontario, the first settled part of that country, I desire to add my voice to that of the hon. member for Assiniboia in declaring that the Government ought not to be afraid to make a liberal appropriation to assist immigration. As an hon. gentleman has well said, that is the efficient way in which the United States and the countries in South America are encouraging immigration. It is a pleasure to let the people of the older provinces know that the member for South Oxford opposes that. He wants this item struck out altogether. His riding is also an old one, and I am sufficiently near to it to know the feelings of the people there pretty well. I do not believe that the old farmers of Ontario, the bone and sinew of Ontario, are afraid to see a fair appropriation made for the purpose of filling up that new country in the North-West, which will react upon us in the near future when we get it filled, as I am sure we will. I am satisfied that is the feeling in Ontario. They do not want money wasted, neither do I, nor my constituents, but having entered into the system of Confederation, having made an arrangement to acquire that territory and having acquired it, having undertaken the duty of seeing this country united from the Atlantic to the Pacific by the great system of public works which we have constructed, it would be absurd to say that we shall not pay a dollar to encourage people to go into that great country, this heritage the responsibility of which has been given to us, which offers free homes to tens of thousands of people, which is the hope not only of the people of this country but of the older countries which are filled up in the way the hon. gentleman says he believes in, by too many people with too little to live on. It has been said that this is a dream. It was said so very often in the early days. I have heard hon. gentlemen decry the Canadian Pacific Railway. They were afraid of that enterprise in 1874. I remember the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) had a set speech on that subject in which he counted the number of bushels of wheat and the carloads of silver that would be required to build that road, and described it as an unsettled country only fit for bears and Indians. He also referred in similar terms to the north shore of Lake Superior, where we are now discovering such great mineral wealth. Now, while we have not progressed as we had hoped to progress, still there is this pregnant fact that satisfies me, namely, that in this country to-day and during all this time there are no people suffering. People who are willing to work, people who are enterprising, people who are undertaking new enterprises or sticking to old ones, have abundant opportunities to exercise their energies and ingenuity in getting a good living, and prospering, and advancing to wealth. I say again that we are not building up a monopoly of rich men. The hon. gentleman talks about a few rich and a great many poor. I say that in proportion to our capacity, in proportion to the wealth in the country, we have no greater proportion of rich men compared with the well-to-do—and not as great proportion compared to the medium classes—as other countries. It is all very well to get up and make such statements. We have not heard one hon. gentleman quoting statistics to prove that was true. He talks about brag and bluster. They talk about monopolists getting rich, about wealthy manufacturers, and they say that is the cause of our people going into a country where those conditions are a thousand-fold greater. Sir, we are not afraid of the responsibilities that have been cast upon us if we stand up and protect the life of our nation, if we protect our union, first of all, with the mother country, sticking by the institutions that the wisdom of the ages has confirmed, under which actual liberty, and freedom of conscience, the rights of the person and the rights of property, are better protected than in any other country in the world.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why don't you imitate the English policy?

Mr. TISDALE. The hon. gentleman wandered into those questions, and I am giving him a little dose of his own medicine. I say frankly that I am getting tired of hearing it said that we cannot answer the arguments that are presented by the other side, and that are not relevant to the question at all. The hon. gentleman has taken the opportunity to make an attack upon the country and upon the Government, holding it to be the fault of the Government that the population has not increased; but he has not proven it in any way except by showing that the figures are not so great. He has endeavoured to make out two things, first, that the country was in a distressed state, and secondly, it was the fault of the Government because they did not provide some kind of legislation to improve the condition of things. No hon. gentleman can understand the fairness of that sort of argument, from his own standpoint, better than the member for South Oxford, because in days gone by when he was sitting on the ministerial benches, he said the Government could not legislate to benefit the country. He agreed with the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) who said that the Government was not capable of doing so. I say I am prepared to support a full measure of expenditure for immigration in order to fill up the North-West.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have never opposed any reasonable effort to secure immigration. During all the years I have had a seat in this House I have never once voted against grants in aid of immigration. If I were sure that the money would be wisely expended, and if I were sure that the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) would have charge of expending it, I might be inclined to take his advice and vote for half a million. But, Sir, we have tried the half million experiment, within my recollection, and we see to-day, by the census, the results of it. Now, I think it is time for us to consider seriously whether we are on the right road, or whether we have been going astray all the time. It seems to me that the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) hit the nail exactly on the head when he said that the fitful system we have been living under during the last dozen years is the cause which is preventing immigrants from coming to settle amongst us. I believe the hon. gentleman is perfectly right. The hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Tyrwhitt) says that the country has prospered since we had the National Policy. Well, Sir, the country was prosperous before we had the National Policy, and after we got the National Policy there was a seeming spurt of prosperity in manufacturing. It was something like the hectic flush of fever, and it was succeeded by a stage of great depression, of great weakness, and the country is in that state of weakness now. That has been our experience of protection. Now, Sir, I hold that until we get back to a correct fiscal policy, until, as the member for Guysborough says, we can make all the conditions of life in this country equally favourable, if not better than the conditions in other countries, we cannot expect to attract immigration in rivalry with these other countries. Under our National Policy this country does not present a favourable field for immigration. This may seem a startling assertion. I said just now that under the National Policy, while we had had a period of seeming prosperity in manufacturing during the first few years of its existence, we have had a corresponding period of depression since. The natural result of all such means, of all such fiscal systems, has come upon us, and we are now in a state of exhaustion, with over-manufacturing, and our manufactories are standing idle. Sir, I am giving no imaginary picture. If it were necessary I could state hard, dry facts to substantiate what I say. I have only to point to the fact that there is a factory in the town of Dundas that, before we had the National Policy, was in a thriving state, was paying good dividends, and in constant work. It has cost, with the plant, $800,000, and the other day it was sold under the hammer for $150,000. In my own City of London, before we had the National Policy, there were three very large and thriving manufactories of agricultural implements, and three men—before we had the National Policy at all—had made good snug fortunes in them; and where are they to day? Two of them had sense enough, when the National Policy came, to sell out and get out of business. Not a dollar has been made in either of these two factories since. One of them is standing idle.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the reason of that?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The National Policy is the reason. One of them is standing idle, and the other has been turned into a factory for making ploughs. Then, as regards the other one, the man who owned it before we had the National Policy, is still trying to do something in it, although it has passed out of his hands. He had made a snug fortune before we had protection, and he has lost every dollar of it since the day that we got it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the reason of that?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The National Policy. Can't you understand it? You are not an ignorant man.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is it because there is too much competition?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Now, with these factories standing idle all over the country, do you want to bring operatives from the old country to take the place of the few that can find work in this country? If that is what you want, it is an idle dream. It is more than cruelty to the people that you bring here. A few of our operatives in this country can get work, but the great bulk of them have to try other occupations. They have gone to the United States, because they have been driven there by the National Policy. What kind of immigrants do you want to bring to the country? We certainly do not want pauper's children. Let us begin at the Maritime Provinces. Do you want to bring men in there to help the people to work the farms and carry on lumbering operations? The people already there cannot obtain sufficient work and are going across the line to find it elsewhere, as the census shows. Do you want to bring in men to work the mines in the Maritime Provinces? The National Policy was to foster mining there. Here is the way we have done it: We have almost doubled the price of iron to the consumer throughout the Dominion, and we have taxed him to pay a bonus to the men producing it. Yet, instead of our manufactures of iron increasing, they are decreasing under that wasteful system. Do we want to bring in men to work at coal mining? We have been trying to fight against geography in the matter of coal. We have been endeavouring, with the aid of the Government railway carrying coal at less than cost, to compel the people of the west to buy coal from Nova Scotia. But hon. gentlemen opposite cannot fight against geography, and the people of Ontario buy their coal where they can get it most handily and most cheaply, namely, the United States. So there is no class of immigrants wanted in the Maritime Provinces. We next come to Quebec, and what do we find? The manufacturers there are in the same position as those in Ontario and elsewhere, they have hands more than enough for the factories. Do you want immigrants to help the farmers of Quebec to carry on their operations? The operatives in factories, and the farming population too, cannot get enough work at home and are going over the line and looking for it in another land, and are becoming citizens of another country. Then, we come up to Ontario. What sort of immigrants do you require there? Are you going to bring out tradesmen from the old country, carpenters, blacksmiths and others? There are more there now than can find work under the debilitating influences of the National Policy. On account of its disastrous results there is scarcely any building going on throughout the whole province, expect here and there among the farms, or in one, two or three cities at the most. The other towns are going backward instead of forward and no operations are going on there. Do you want to bring farm labourers there? Men fit to go on the farm and work there are not men who want to be hewers of wood and drawers of water for the rest of the community. I say without hesitation that the only class of immigrants we want are men who can come here and become farmers and help to develop the resources we have in the land. That is the only class we have work for. Talk about mining, so long as we keep up the National Policy we place it beyond possibility, it is utterly hopeless to talk about manufacturing our minerals. We will be told we have a great country in the North-West—we have been told that to-night—and that we ought to have immigrants to fill up that country. Would to Heaven we had them. It is the strongest wish of my heart that that country should be filled up as rapidly as possible, and the only hope of Canada is to get that country filled up by a happy, prosperous and contented population. Why has it not become filled up? In 1870 the country came into our possession, as fair a heritage as the sun shines on in this world of ours. What is it to-day? Anyone who was here in 1874—the Chairman of the Immigration Committee who was here, will know I am speaking the truth—will remember the glowing accounts we had from the Deputy Minister of Agriculture of the thousands and hundreds of thousands of immigrants who were going into the North-West. Had the statistics at the Committee meeting to prove it. It was said we were decrying the country and doing a grievous harm because we questioned the accuracy of those figures. But the census pricked the bubble, and showed either that the figures were false and misleading, or else that the people had been driven out of the country. I believe a great many people did go in there, and I believe they were driven out of the country by the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. You may ask how it was done? It was done in this way: Anyone who has been raised in this country knows that it is hard enough for a man without means to make a settlement on new land and make a living, without being highly taxed to pay for the land on which he is going to make his living. We have been discounting the whole future of the country. Instead of making it easy for immigrants to settle there and make a new start in life, we have done everything possible to make it hard for them to start and to deter them from making the venture.

An hon. MEMBER. How?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Have we not handed over more than the settled part of the Province of Ontario into the hands of soulless corporations and speculators, and have not speculators drawn the life-blood out of the country? That is a fact which no hon. gentleman opposite with any regard for truthfulness will dare to deny. What did we do? A road was laid out for a Pacific Railway. It was laid out all through the fertile part of the country where it would do most good as a colonization road. By some means or other to gratify the railway company the Government allowed the road to be carried south into the desert part so as to run it 400 or 500 miles through a country in which no man could settle, because he would be starved out.

Mr. DAVIN. No.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How much?

Mr. DAVIN. There is a certain portion of such country through which the land runs, but I do not think it is over 150 miles or 200 miles.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. From Moose Jaw.

Mr. DAVIN. I know what I am speaking about, and I say it is not more than 200 miles. It is the spur of the American desert that runs up to about forty miles west of Moose Jaw. When I say the American desert, the denudation, as is well known, is not nearly so much as it goes north as it is down in the midst of the desert, and even that land with irrigation could be made fertile.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Yes, if you took the waters of the Rocky Mountains for irrigation.

Mr. DAVIN. The distance is not more than 200 miles.

An hon. MEMBER. Nearly 300 miles.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I thought so. The other route would have taken the line through a fertile country. What did the Government do? It was agreed that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were to take their average land along the route. Although they carried the line through this desert, they did not take one acre of land there, but took the land in Manitoba.

Mr. DAVIN. They could not get an acre in Manitoba.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Do you mean to say that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company does not own an acre of land in Manitoba?

Mr. DAVIN. Not of land acquired as part of the land grant. They took it elsewhere in the North-West.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Did they not get land in Manitoba as well as in the North-West?

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, for the line in Manitoba.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. They got it through Manitoba, and when the road entered the North-West, instead of taking it where the road ran, they were allowed to take the best in the territories.

Mr. DEWDNEY. They have taken nine-tenths of it along the road.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Along the fertile part of the road. Then we have handed over to every railway corporation that has asked for it, grants of land in the same way, and what is the result of it? The result, as I said before, is that there is a whole province there locked up in the hands of corporations and speculators. If we wanted to make the best of our resources we would have tried to get the immigrants in as cheaply as possible, and to have given them the very best chance to settle in the cheapest way, and to live most cheaply afterwards. If we had done that we might have hoped to prosper. I know it is customary to say that there is plenty of free land through the country, but, when the settlers find that all the land anywhere near the railway worth settling upon is handed over to these corporations and that they must pay a ruinous price to get it, when they find that if they take these free grant lands they must go away from neighbourhood, railways, and everything that makes life comfortable and agreeable, and convenient, when they find all that they leave the country and go where they hope to find better conditions. That is what we have done to retard immigration. Our fiscal policy and our land policy together have driven the immigrants out of the country, and, worse than all that, they have driven our own sons and daughters out of it. The hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) said that if the Americans would come over here we could teach them something about farming and matters in general. Well, Sir, unfortunately, it is not necessary for them to come over here, because we have driven over, to teach them in their own homes, our most intelligent and best educated sons and daughters. Then we hear that old story again about decrying the country. I have scarcely ever heard a gentleman on the other side of the House speak on the state of the country that has not brought in that old chestnut and charged that the Opposition has been the cause of driving the people out of the country.

An hon. MEMBER. So they have.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The hon. gentleman says so they have. Well, now, friend, are you serious in saying that? Do you mean to tell me that these immigrants that come from Europe to go up to the North-West, before they settle there, send down to Ottawa and get the Hansard to see what my friend on my left said about the country? Ah, nonsense. I do not mean to say that the gentlemen wilfully falsify, but the fact of the matter is they have told the story so often that they are beginning to believe it. Gentlemen, ask yourselves are there any other reasons why our best and most intelligent people are leaving the country? I do not want to dwell upon it to-night, but there is another reason, and it is a potent one, too. I know the young men of this country of ours, for I have mixed amongst them as much as most men have. I know their noble, manly aspirations. I know that they look upon this country of ours as their country, and they want it to be something, and like myself—for I am a native-born Canadian—we look upon it as our own country as the first and best country on the earth, and we believe it is to our own country that we owe it our first and highest allegiance. Now, Sir, when you tell these intelligent and patriotic young men that they must reverse their national aspirations, that before they allow any such feelings to sway them they must submit them to gentlemen on the other side to see whether they are right or not, or they must send them to a country some 3,000 or 4,000 miles away to see if they are approved of there or not; when you tell these young men that they must repress their noblest feelings after national greatness and nationality, you have done everything you can to crush everything manly and noble out of them, and you have actually compelled them to go to a country where these feelings can find vent, where the best interests of the country they have chosen may be advanced in the people if the country may think best. Sir, I do not wish to do anything to prevent a single immigrant coming into this country. If it can be shown that any result can be accomplished by the amount asked for to-night there is no man who will support it more heartily than I will, but I do want to say, that after twelve years of trial, the utter folly and falsity of the system we have been working under is apparent, and the absolute necessity is clear that a change should be made in our policy.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for South Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong) expressed a very strong desire in the beginning of his speech that the immigration policy of the Government would prevail much better than it had, he has also given his reasons why it has not prevailed and why there are not more immigrants in the country, and he repudiates the idea that they have done anything which would retard immigration. I have only to say that if any intending immigrant should have read the hon. gentleman's speech before he left the old country, he would be loth to come and settle in Canada, because the speech of the hon. gentleman tended to show that the conditions of life here were entirely against the immigrants' chances of success, although he afterwards expressed the hope: "Would to Heaven that we could convince them to come." The hon. gentleman also told us that the country in the North-West is locked up in the hands of railway companies, and that is the reason immigrants did not go there. He forgets that there are millions of acres of free lands there open for settlement to immigrants, and that the conditions of life for settlement in our Canadian territory are as favourable, perhaps much more favourable, than they are in any other country in America, or perhaps in the world. The hon. gentleman told us that the land was locked up by the railway companies and that the settlers could not get a chance; but he did not tell the House nor the country how much land his friends of the Liberal party proposed to give for the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. He seems to forget that there were only 25,000,000 acres of land given for the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway by the Conservative Government, that his friends proposed to give 50,000,000 acres, just double the amount. If it is so injurious to immigration that 25,000,000 acres of land should be given to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company how much worse would it have been if the policy of himself and his friends had prevailed, and if 50,000,000 acres were given away for the same purpose, and, as he is pleased to call it, locked up from settlement? The hon. gentleman referred to the conditions of life in this country; but I can assure him that if we compare the conditions of life in Canada with the conditions of life in any other country to which immigrants are going, there are very few who will not admit that the conditions of life here are more favourable than they are in most other countries. Is it because we have not the means of conveyance and transit, and the conveniences of civilized life for the people who come to settle in this country, that we have not more immigrants? Surely, the policy of the Conservative Government has been to develop our highways of commerce, build our railways, our canals and our telegraph lines. Why, we are blamed by gentlemen opposite for the expenditure which has given all these conditions of life to the thousands who are invited to come to our shores. We are opening up that great country in the North-West, we offer the settlers there cheap homes, in fact free homes; and the railways are built so as to give the people all the conveniences of life. I can tell the hon. member for South Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong) that in Canada the conditions of life are not only equal but are superior to what may be found in any other part of North America. He says we are in a state of exhaustion in this country, and as an evidence of that he says that the Dundas cotton mill has gone down and has been sold at much less than its cost. In other words, the country is in a state of exhaustion because the overproduction of manufactured goods has brought down the prices until there is not a remunerative profit left to the manufacturers; and in the next breath he condemns the Government because the prices of goods are so high in this country that immigrants will not come here. If the prices are so low that it does not pay the manufacturers to produce, it must follow that the consumers do not pay high prices. Does the hon. gentleman mean to tell us that the products of the cotton mills are not lower in price when we have seven mills in the country than they were before the National Policy when we had only three? I do not think the people of this country will agree that the conditions of life are more unfavourable now, when increased competition has brought down the price, than they were before we had that large increase in the number of the cotton mills of the country. The hon. gentleman might have been fair enough to tell the people that it is not because the cotton mills are not paying a fair dividend to-day, it is because the machinery in that mill is old and out of date, which caused it to be sold for the small sum it was. The hon. gentleman says that we are in a state of stagnation—why? Because there is no building going on in the country. Does he forget that $600,000 has been spent this year on building in Winnipeg alone? Does he forget that the City of Toronto has more than doubled in population in the last ten years, and that the building in that great city has been greater than that in any other similar city on the continent of America? Does he forget the increase of population in the City of Montreal, in the City of London, and in other cities during the last ten years? He must if he says that we are in a state of stagnation, and that there is no building going on except a few scattered houses and barns. The evidences we see on every hand in travelling through the country are strong arguments to the contrary. The hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong) says he has never opposed a vote for immigration, but he would like to know that it is properly spent, and then he goes on to condemn the expenditure of the money. But he did not give any details to show where the expenditure was wrong. Does he think we have too many agents or that we advertise the country too much? No; he does not. The hon. member who preceded him said that we have agents all over the country, and he condemned the Government for having so many. Does the hon. gentleman know that we have only five agents in England Ireland, Scotland, France and Germany, these great countries with their millions of population from which we expect to draw our immigration? Is that overdoing the work or advertising our country properly? I think it is the very reverse, and it would be wiser to double the expenditure on immigration. If the speech of the hon. member for Guysborough meant anything, it was that heads and only heads in a country counted. Therefore, if we would increase three-fold the number of agents in foreign countries, we would be acting in the best interest of the country. Will the hon. gentleman tell me that two agents in Ireland are sufficient to look after immigrants there? Will he say that four or five are sufficient to advertise the country in England and Scotland? I say that this is the most meagre expenditure for immigration that any country could make which has so great a need of it as Canada has to-day. It is the fault of our Government that it does not keep double the number of agents employed in trying to advertise and direct people to this country. If the speech of the hon. member for Guysborough was notable for anything it was for its inconsistency. He says that no Government can make or unmake a country. If so, the Government is not responsible for immigrants not coming into the country. Then he says we want the necessaries of life cheap; and then he goes on to prove that the necessaries of life are dear here because of the National Policy. The hon. member for Middlesex says that the necessaries of life are dear because the competition of the manufacturers is so great that they are breaking down on account of the small profits they are receiving. Is there consistency in that? The hon. member for Guysborough says that we have the best country in the world to live in, but that no Government can make or unmake a country. Then, why hold the Government responsible for what he pleased to call the exodus, or for the small number of immigrants? I say that his speech was a medley of inconsistencies from first to last. He says that any province in Canada is better than any portion of the United States; and yet he says that the people are leaving these provinces because the necessaries of life are made dear in them by a protective tariff, and where are they going? To a country that has a much higher protective tariff than Canada; so that if the hon. gentleman's argument is worth anything, the necessaries of life must be much dearer there than they are here. Then, the hon. gentleman holds the Government responsible because the increase in the population shown by the census is not as large as it was generally expected it would be, and he says that the result is that the Maritime Provinces must lose two members — why? Because the reduction in population has been going on owing to the policy of the Government; although he told us in the same speech that a Government could not make or unmake a country. He tells us that our people are going to the United States because the conditions must be better there, the necessaries of life cheaper and the taxes lower. Yet every comparison we draw shows that the taxes are lower, the necessaries of life cheaper, and the conditions of life more favourable in Canada than in the United States. If the hon. gentleman's argument was worth anything, he would not expect to find similar conditions in the United States to those we have in Canada regarding decrease in population. You would find a gradual increase going on in the population everywhere, and no diminution anywhere. I have here a clipping from an American paper, and what story does it tell? There were 2,781 counties in the various states, and in 405 of these there has been a decrease in population during the last ten years. During the previous decade only 138 counties indicated a decrease. This decrease, beginning in the east, covers Maine, the central portion of New Hampshire, Vermont, New York, northern New Jersey, a considerable part of New Virginia, extensive districts in Illinois, Ohio, Indiana, Tennessee, Kentucky, eastern Iowa, Wisconsin, and southern Michigan. This is a problem for these hon. gentlemen to solve, showing, as it does, that exactly the same condition of things is going on in that country where the conditions, they say, are much more favourable than here. If the same rules apply to those sections with regard to the number of representatives, there will have to be a decrease in the number there as well as here. These sections stretch from the eastern parts of the states away across to the west, and comprise the oldest and most fertile parts of the country, and in some cases the newest parts. That indicates to me that there are other conditions which account for the decrease of population besides the policy of the Government, that it is due to different causes entirely from those the hon. gentleman represented as the cause of the decrease, and that our Government are not responsible for it any more than are the Government of the United States for the decrease there. It is due to circumstances over which the Government have no control. We find those people coming into the manufacturing centres, on account of fewer hands being required in the agricultural centres, owing to the use of improved machinery. The hon. gentleman was not warranted in his contention that if we had a different Government we would have a larger increase in immigration. He forgets that every year, for twelve years back, the immigration policy of the Government has been attacked by hon. gentlemen opposite, and that the expenditure has been gradually cut down, and that at present the Government propose to spend $50,000 less than last year. The hon. member for South Oxford would be better pleased if we did not spend a dollar on immigration. He tells us that the constituencies in the north-west of Ontario are being depopulated, and yet he does not want people to come and take the places of the inhabitants who have gone, and the whole tenor of his arguments would be to make people leave. The Government have during the last few years followed a very injudicious policy. With millions of acres of productive land lying open for homesteaders, they have failed to adopt a liberal policy on immigration. I regret to find the Knights of Labour all over the country opposing our immigration policy and advising that the Government should not bring men from the old world to compete in their trades, and we have been confined almost entirely to agriculturists and labourers. That is a mistake. Some of the most successful farmers on the continent of America to-day were the weavers of Scotland of by-gone years. We ought to invite all classes of people to our shores, as we have openings in every line of life for them. I believe the great need of the country is a larger expenditure on immigration, so that we may obtain those immigrants who are only waiting to come as soon as they know the conditions of life are so favourable. We have spent a great deal in building railways and making other highways of commerce, and we have everything necessary to enable settlers to earn a good living. We have a fruitful soil, a healthy climate, free homesteads, railways built wherever necessary, and all that is necessary is to let the people of the older countries know what advantages we can offer them, and that can only be successfully done by having more agents and spending more money in advertising our country in foreign lands. The hon. gentleman said that what we want is a large population and not a wealthy one, and that the number of heads was the best test. If his argument amounted to anything it would mean that China would be the finest country in the world. But will he tell the people that China, with its ignorance, and slavery, and other drawbacks, is a superior country to this. There is an over population there; in our country we have not sufficient population, and as long as we are in that condition we will be justified in spending every year a large amount to bring out immigrants.

Mr. DAWSON. I am sure we are surprised to hear the hon. gentleman opposite advocating immigration from China. He says that China is overpopulated and that we are under populated, and that the policy of the Government was to bring in these people.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not want the hon. gentleman to misunderstand me. I did not speak of immigration from China. I said, applying the hon. member for Guysborough's arguments, that the number of heads was the test of the best country, China ought to take the lead, because in China there was an overflowing population.

Mr. DAWSON. And that we wanted them here. The hon. gentleman has been very courageous in advocating the National Policy, considering the facts presented to this House in the census returns. He says there have been large building operations in Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal, London and other cities, and that the country is prosperous. Certainly wealth has increased in our cities during the past ten years, but it would be interesting if some of the hon. gentlemen opposite would tell us how much of that increased prosperity is due to the fact that vast sums of borrowed money have been expended in the country during the past ten years. Millions of dollars have been expended in the construction of railways and canals, and no doubt this expenditure has very largely contributed to the prosperity of our cities and tended to increase the population there. But in spite of this increase of prosperity in our cities, the results have been discouraging in the extreme. The hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) also lauded the National Policy. It required singular courage on his part to do this, in view of the fact that his constituency has lost 1,239 of population during the past ten years. He advocates an increase in the grants to immigration. Doubtless he knows it is required in his constituency, and he hopes that, by the expenditure of larger sums of money, some of those who have left his constituency within the past ten years may be induced to return. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) was accused of saying that legislation could not better the condition of the people. I think what the hon. member wants is for the Government to quit tinkering with our trade policy by legislation, to remove legislation which is shackling our trade and to allow our trade to flow into natural channels, instead of forcing it by legislation in unnatural directions, with the disastrous results which have flowed from that policy. Those hon. gentlemen join the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) in saying that the Liberals are continually decrying the country. They seem to confuse the country with the Liberal-Conservative party. They think they are the country, and, if any one dares to criticise their policy or that of the Government they maintain in power, he is said to be decrying the country. Liberals have pointed out year after year the fact that the policy of the present and the late Administration was not in the interests of the country at large, but was legislation in favour of the classes and to the injury and detriment of the masses, and that the result would be the depopulation of the country, and these prophecies or criticisms of the Government policy have been borne out by the results. In all these years I do not know that any Liberal has made a more slashing attack upon the policy of the Government than the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). He says, if it had not been for the large sums which have been spent on immigration, the population would by this time have dwindled to four millions of souls. As a result of the immigration policy, I am told by the Government returns that 886,000 people have come to our shores, while our population has only increased by half a million, showing that 386,000 souls and the whole of our natural increase have departed from our shores. The hon. gentleman well expressed it when he said our country had become a mere sieve through which the immigration poured into the country to the south. I do not think the people whose sons have gone to the United States will thank that hon. gentleman for saying that none but those of second-class brains go to the United States. Two years ago I heard the hon. member for Algoma say that in home after home in his constituency you would hear the cry go up that the young men were leaving, and that one young man cradled in the home of our pioneers would do more towards the development of this country than six of the immigrants. Evidently his opinion of the classes of our young people going to the United States was different from that of the hon. member for Assiniboia. It has been shown by these hon. gentlemen, in their advocacy of a larger grant, that the present policy of the Government is so rotten and so disastrous to this country that the Government must offer a bribe to the immigrating classes to come to Canada. I think nothing has been said by any Liberal which speaks in terms of such severe criticism of the policy of the Government. In filling up the North-West, I would advise the Administration to keep faith with the settlers there, to issue no more pamphlets offering second homesteads, and then, after the settlers have been secured, withdraw the grant, and teach the people that they are not willing to keep faith with the settlers. I think it would be well to pause and to consider whether it is advisable to expend any further sums in trying to induce immigrants to come to this country until the Government revises its policy. I think, if the Government would adopt a policy which would be in the interests of the great mass of the people, and would cease their class legislation, we would have no difficulty whatever in securing immigrants to this country and retaining them when we got them here.

Mr. McMILLAN. Coming from one of the best agricultural counties in the Province of Ontario, I hold that the statements which been have made with respect to the Liberals decrying this county are untrue. I believe the Liberals have told the whole truth about the country in every respect. We have always held that Canada is one of the best countries in natural resources, and if all the other conditions were equal, of any other country on the continent of America for settlers to succeed in; but when it is made one of the dearest countries to live in, it is impossible that we can succeed. I have been astonished to hear hon. gentlemen opposite comparing Canada with England in regard to the increase of population. Do they not know that Britain is a country which is throwing off thousands of her population every year and sending them to all the countries in the world, while Canada is a young country, taking in population and which ought to be increasing rapidly in population? Yet they compare the increase in population in this young country with that of an old country, which is overcrowded, so that its people have to emigrate in order to better their condition. Take the Northern Atlantic states and see the increase in population there compared with Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. While these provinces gained only 1·17 per cent. the eastern states had gained 19·45 per cent., showing that even in that country, with all the disadvantages we have heard described, with all the misery existing among the people and with the great emigration to the west, the increase is greater than it is in even the populous Province of Ontario. Take Ontario and compare the increase in population with the states of Michigan, New York and Minnesota, taking into consideration that Ontario is larger by 38,000 square miles than those three states. The State of Missouri is also one that we may make a comparison with. We have heard that described as the state of storms and blizzards, where people live in dug-outs and could not have a comfortable house to live in. In that state the population has gained 510,804, or more than the whole Dominion of Canada, and yet hon. gentlemen tell us we have gained fairly in population. The State of Minnesota has gained in population 521,053, or more than the whole Dominion of Canada, and yet we believe that state to be inferior to Manitoba and to the North-West Territories. There must be some potent reason why people will flock into a country with all the disadvantages we have heard hon. gentlemen describe as existing in the north-western states. We have heard that Dakota was a country of blizzards, a sterile desert, where settlers could not live, and yet Dakota has gained 300 per cent. or 376,352, while all our provinces west of Port Arthur have only gained 172,169. The hon. gentlemen tell us that we want to spend a large sum of money in immigration. We have spent very large sums of money in immigration; we have spent over three million dollars in immigration within the last twelve years, and they now ask us to spend still further large sums. We were told by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that two immigration agents in Ireland were not sufficient properly to represent Canada in that country. But, Sir, what we want is something in this country that will retain the population that we have here already. We find that in the North-West Territories, by the census of 1885, there were 48,363 of a population: we find in Manitoba, in 1886, we had 108,640, or a total of 157,003. Then we find by the immigration figures that from 1881 to 1886, 166,002 came into the North-West, and we had by the census of 1881 a population of 122,400. Add 122,400 to the 166,002 that went into the North-West, and you should have a population of 288,405. But when we came to get the true population, what did we find? We found by the actual census that we have only 127,003 in the North-West, leaving 131,399 unaccounted for. Will hon. gentlemen tell us that immigrants do not go to the North-West? I say they go, but they do not remain there. They find the conditions are unfavourable, they find a large tariff is imposed upon them in that country, and this is what has driven the immigrants out. Sir, let hon. gentlemen look at the report of the Minister of Agriculture on immigration, and let them look at the report of the immigration agent in Winnipeg, who says that a great many immigrants came from the old country to settle in the North-West, and he found that after visiting the North-West and going through it they perceived that the representations that had been made to them by the Government and their agents were not verified. They went to British Columbia, but they did not remain there, and they went into the United States. He states that over ten thousand had gone into the United States in one year who had left Europe with the expectation of settling in Canadian territory, in the North-West and in British Columbia. But it did not end there. What was the fate of this immigration agent who dared to give a correct statement with respect to the immigration of that country? He was notified by the Government to hand in his resignation, else his dismissal must follow. It is not the policy of this Government to have the truth told on any occasion by one of their employes, when that truth does not satisfy their purposes. It is true that the misleading statements of the Government and their action in imposing such a high tariff upon this country have driven the immigrants out of it. Let us look at the North-West. Farmers going in there pay 35 per cent. upon their implements, and we have been told time and again across the floor of the House, even this session, that implements are sold in the United States to go into the North-West cheaper than they are sold in the United States to the farmers of that country. I saw a statement in the New York Tribune last week that an investigation had been held in the United States into this very question, respecting agricultural implements being sold cheaper out of the country than they are sold to the farmers of the United States. The implement manufacturers themselves were called upon to give evidence, and they stated that they had a better profit upon implements sold to go out of the country than they had upon implements retained in the country and sold to the farmers of the United States, and that as a rule they got the cash for the implements they sent out of the country, while the implements sold at home were sold on credit, and they had not the same profit upon them. So I hold that the tariff has had a great deal to do with the fact of immigrants going out of the country. When we look at the United States, is it not a fact that Minnesota has gained in population more than the whole of Canada west of Prince Arthur? Let us go into the County of Huron, which I hail from, and I hold that we have in that county as industrious a population, as intelligent a population, and as independent a population as lives on the continent of America, and what do we find? Why, Sir, we find that in 13 out of 15 townships belonging to the three ridings of Huron there is a loss of 9,032 in population during the last ten years, and we find that these parties have gone to the United States. Many of them, to my knowledge, went into the North-West and settled there; but when they found the condition of things that existed, and when they ascertained the superior condition of things across the line, in Dakota—a country that we have heard decried by hon. gentlemen opposite and in the Immigration Committee, as suffering the very lowest depth of misery—yet we find that large numbers of people went from the North-West and settled in Dakota, simply because they found the conditions for settlement more favourable. In the first place, they found in our own North-West that for a length of time there was a great monopoly in the shape of a land corporation, who held a vast amount of the most available land for settlement, and had laid it out in alternate sections, and no settler will ever settle in a new country where a large monopoly holds a large quantity of land. Then we find that in the County of Huron the villages are not prospering. In the village of Seaforth we only had an increase of 160 inhabitants during the last ten years, and yet we have a furniture manufacturing establishment that employs over a hundred hands, showing that if it had not been for this one industry Seaforth would have lost in population. Then we have the town of Goderich, which has lost over 700 within the last ten years, one of the most beautifully situated towns on the shores of Lake Huron. It is a resort for Americans who come there to spend the summer holidays. Yet, with all these natural advantages we find that under the policy of the Government our harbour is nearly deserted, and the town of Goderich has almost completely lost its prosperity. We find that up to the time that the McKinley tariff was adopted we had a line of steamboats plying twice and three times a week between Goderich and Sand Beach, in the United States, but during this summer that line of boats has been laid off. I believe if we had reciprocity that within a very short time the town of Goderich would become as prosperous as any town in the Dominion of Canada, on account of its natural advantages. Now, I will try and recount a few of the reasons that this country is not prosperous, and that we have not gained in population. In the first place, let me say that as regards the Province of Ontario there is not a state of the Union that can compare with Ontario in point of fertility, and there is not a state in the Union that can compare with it in the industry and intelligence of the agricultural community. We find that in fall wheat Ontario is four bushels per acre ahead of the very best states of the Union, and in spring wheat also Ontario is four bushels per acre ahead of any state of the Union, on an average, during the last ten years. In barley we are over three bushels per acre ahead of the most fertile state of the Union. When we come to oats we find we are more than one bushel beyond the most fertile state in the Union. So we have a country which I believe to be second to none in the world. It was well described by Mr. Wells, an American who visited the Province of Ontario, when he said that the Canadians possessed one of the fairest heritages on the face of the earth, one of the finest countries that God Almighty had ever given as a gift to the human race. He said it was the home of long-woolled sheep, that it was the home of Durham cattle, where they could be raised to the greatest perfection, and that it was to Ontario that the farmers of the United States must look to recuperate and renew their stock, both in sheep and in cattle. Let me state some of the reasons why the country has not prospered. I will first take the iron industry. We were told when the duty was increased to $4 a ton on iron, and when the duty was taken off anthracite coal, that there would be an increase of 20,000 workingmen and 100,000 in population. What are the results? In 1878 we manufactured 18,000 tons of iron, and neither duty nor bounty was given. I find that $300,330 have been paid in bounties to iron manufacturers. And the duty that would have been collected if that iron had been brought into the country was $835,758, or nearly one million dollars have gone into the pockets of the iron manufacturers of the Dominion. And yet we find by the last statement that the increased manufacture of iron was only 4,000 tons per annum. There are reasons why the farmers do not remain here, because of the very high prices to which iron has been advanced, and on account of the prices of agricultural implements, which can be purchased very much cheaper in the United States. There are other reasons why they go across the line. I found a comparison between the prices of wheat in Rochester and Toronto, and while the price was $1.20 and $1.22 in Rochester it was only $1.12 and $1.13 in Toronto. A farmer was left his father's estate in equal shares with his brother. By-and-bye one brother went to Michigan and bought land. The brothers met annually, and they found at the end of ten years that the brother in the United States obtained from 18 to 20 per cent. more for his farm products than did the brother who remained in Canada. As the one who remained here found that the tariff was increasing the burdens of the settlers he pulled up stakes and went to the United States, although, as he told us, it grieved him sorely to find he had to leave his native country in order to get a better living on the other side. The National Policy has impoverished the farmers both in buying and selling. If we had reciprocity with the United States I hold that every farmer would be benefited, as between buying and selling, to the extent of $150 annually. The farmers of Ontario and other provinces know this, and so long as the National Policy is continued in existence just so long will it be foolish to spend large sums to bring out immigrants in order that afterwards they may go to the United States. So much is this the case, that I was very much amused at a statement I saw with respect to an examination which took place in a school. A little girl was asked to name the exports of Canada. She replied: "The exports of Canada are young men and young women to the United States." Perhaps that was one of the most characteristic answers that could be given under the circumstances. I hold the policy of the Government has injured the farmers by placing large tracts of land in the North-West in the hands of companies, and further by imposing a tariff that makes this a dear country to live in. Let me give a single instance connected with a young man with whom I am acquainted. After he had been twelve months here his father sent out a watch as a present. It was taken possession of by a Custom house officer, and before he could obtain it he had to pay $5 duty. I heard the young man say he would never remain in a country where such a demand was made, and he went to the United States, and a number of other young men followed him. If immigrants are to be encouraged to come to our shores they must be liberally dealt with. These results are due to the action of the Government, not to the speeches of the Opposition. We contended that the number of people in the North-West in 1886 was not the number the Government represented. When the census was taken they found that the Opposition had been telling the truth, while the Government had been misleading the people. Now that the census has come down we find that in 1886 the Government published to the world that we had within 29,000 the population which the census of 1891 gives for the whole of Canada at the present time. These conditions imposed on settlers are sufficient to keep down our population, and until the Government makes this a cheap country to live in, and one equal to any other country for settlers, they will not get settlers to come here. Many of the people in the old land have relatives in Canada and in the United States, and they are constantly comparing notes. A gentleman visited my own place this last summer; I was not there at the time and did not see him, but he remained a long time in Canada. He then went to the United States and examined the condition of affairs there, with a view of sending his son to this country. He wrote me from his home and stated that if he had ten sons to send to America to settle he would send them all to the United States; that our cursed tariff was enough to deplete any country and prevent any young men from coming to Canada. He was an intelligent individual. He said the United States was very different to Canada; that it was a whole continent within itself; that it had all the conditions a country required; that it had free trade from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from Mexico to Canada, whereas Canada was only a long narrow strip. He has visited the Dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific and has also visited the United States, and his opinion with respect to Canada was, that no man who expected to flourish should come to it so long as the tariff remained as at present.

Mr. SKINNER. Even at the risk of trespassing for a few moments on the attention of the Committee at so late an hour, I wish to say a few words, principally with respect to the arguments or rather the speech of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) as to the Maritime Provinces, and as to the result, so far as information is concerned, of the census we have taken. I am not going to speak for the purpose of saying that that hon. gentleman desired to run down the country, or anything of that kind; but I must say that the remarks he made were calculated in a remarkable degree to misrepresent that position which the Maritime Provinces hold. Speaking first of Nova Scotia, outside of the question as to whether her population has decreased or not, I do not think there is a more prosperous commonwealth in America, at all events, than is the Province of Nova Scotia. If any one wished to go into statistics to show the resources of that country and the development of them, and gave a true picture of the way the people live, their great prosperity, the large amount of wealth to the individual person, and the conditions they enjoy, he would draw a true picture of a people who are more prosperous, at all events, than any people of whom I have knowledge. I think myself that they are more prosperous in Nova Scotia in that sense than almost any country of which I have any knowledge. If the gentlemen cross the Bay of Fundy from the City of St. John, and strike in at Digby and Annapolis and go up the great valley of Nova Scotia they will find for a distance of over a hundred miles the evidences of prosperity in a most marked degree. The people have every facility for rational enjoyment, their houses are good, their carriages are good, and there is a general display, if not of great wealth, of, at least, every comfort belonging to prosperous people. If you go to the cities and towns of Nova Scotia you will find the same evidences of prosperity spread out before you everywhere, and with the development of her mines, minerals and fisheries you will find that Nova Scotia is one of the best countries we have in connection with our Dominion, or that has been developed in America up to the present time. It may be said that Nova Scotia has lost a great many of her people. That is true, but the reason that Nova Scotia has lost people is not on account of want of prosperity. It is not on account of the want of development of her resources, but on account of the desire manifested by people everywhere to get into the great cities and towns. In the United States, the cities of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore are so attractive that the young people go there and mingle into the business life of those great cities to a very large extent. Therefore, the emigration from our country is not the result of want of prosperity, but it is the evidence of the determined and go-ahead spirit of the young people, which has been built up in them by education. As I said before, if you go into the Province of Nova Scotia you will find there a prosperous and successful community. The hon. gentleman has also sought to say that because the Province of New Brunswick has not increased in population it has also been destroyed, and its business depleted, and all that sort of thing. He is entirely mistaken in that. In order to ascertain the position of New Brunswick with reference to the general trade of this country, you have got to cast your mind back for some time. Up to the time that the development of iron shipping came to such a perfect state in Great Britain there was no province in this Dominion that built so many ships, calculating on their sea tonnage, as the Province of New Brunswick did. It was a ship-owning province. Around all its shores and in its harbours the people were largely engaged in the ship-building business, and when the iron ships pressed that business out of existence it was said: What is the Province of New Brunswick going to do; its great business has been destroyed; it has no future before it; its people will have to leave. Well, it was a great blow to our province, and the City of St. John, which I more particularly represent, was largely engaged not only in ship-building, but our people were large owners of ships as well, and it was supposed when the great shock would come upon us, as it did come, that we could not stand up under it. But we have borne the shock. If we have not gained in population we have held our own, and you will find with reference to the people engaged in ship-building that they changed their business, developed other lines of trade, and have fought the fight, and are doing well, notwithstanding what may be said with reference to them. It is said by the other side of the House that the National Policy has brought about these injuries. I say that is not the case. The National Policy, at all events, from the very lowest standpoint you view it, has done no harm to our ship-building and ship-owning business. It was not the National Policy that affected our trade, but it was the aggressiveness of the iron ship-building industry that brought that about. If our people had not had the benefits of developed manufactures under the National Policy what would they have done? Why, we could not have got over the crisis at all. It was the National Policy that came to our assistance, and that enabled our manufacturers to sustain themselves against the competition of the United States. When hon. gentlemen opposite talk about these things they talk as if we had something to do with the American tariff. Had we anything to do with the repeal of the reciprocity treaty? Had we anything to do with the high tariff the United States put on after the war? Had we anything to do with reference to the McKinley Bill? No; the United States have made themselves a protective country, because they thought they could keep our trade out. They intended to do that, and to some extent they have succeeded; and when it is charged against us that we have something to do with that, the charge is mistaken, and the facts do not warrant any inference of that kind. One of the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House stated that the immigrants would not come into this country because we have a high tariff. He says that when an immigrant has made up his mind to come to America he wants to come to that part of America where the tariff is the lowest, and the hon. gentleman's argument is that the immigrant chooses the United States, where the tariff is higher than ours. I do not believe that any immigrant who ever left the shores of Europe to come to America was ever influenced one way or another by the tariff of either country. It is a mistake to say that Canada is a hard country for the immigrants to live in. There is no country in the world where living is cheaper than in Canada. Where can the emigrant get cheaper vegetables, cheaper meat, or cheaper clothing along the line of clothing manufactured in this country than he can here? No place can the immigrant or any other person secure the means of livelihood cheaper than he can in Canada. Why do not hon. gentlemen opposite publish that fact to the world. We heard the hon. member for South Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong) state to-night that few people here could get employment, thereby throwing out the idea that the masses are unemployed. Do not statements like that injure the country? The hon. gentleman from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) spoke about our taking a hopeful view of the country, as if we were deceiving ourselves and those who come here. Nothing of the kind is warranted by what has been said and done upon these lines. We do say that this country is great, and we believe that it is very likely that if the hon. gentlemen opposite get into power they would soon change their tone about this country. But it will never help them to get into power to run down this country and to say that it is a dear place in which to live, that it is not prosperous, and that there is no hope for the country unless we can get free trade with the United States. The United States can do what they like about free trade, and we cannot compel them to take action one way or the other. I do say that we can build up this country even if the United States shut us out altogether and keep us shut out. Let it be known throughout this country that whilst we want freer trade relations with the United States that we are not dependent upon them for these things and that we can develop our country without them. I say that if we have added a half a million of people to this country during the last ten years we ought to be proud of it, and although we had hoped to have added more, we have no reason to be disappointed. If you travel up and down Canada you will find that the Canadian people are as prosperous as the people of the United States, and I believe the time will come when our own people will see more and more that the true place for them to stay and live and develop is in Canada. But they will not be encouraged in that way if this strong argument of hon. gentlemen opposite is continued, that the country is going to the dogs. I say it is not. Although we have not developed population as fast as we had hoped, either by immigration or otherwise, yet in the last ten years the country has shown marvellous development in the material prosperity that comes with the creation and ownership of wealth. We must remember that the spirit is abroad among people to crowd into cities; but that is not going to continue always; it will pass away, and the people will be more inclined to remain on farms. Therefore, I say to the hon. member for Guysborough that when he stands up here as a representative of the Maritime Provinces, and attempts to persuade this Parliament that because the Maritime Provinces have not increased in population they are not prosperous, he makes a mistake. If he would go to the Island of Prince Edward, although its population has not increased, he would find a country whose prosperity is not equalled anywhere.

Mr. PERRY. How do you know?

Mr. SKINNER. Because I have been there.

Mr. PERRY. When?

Mr. SKINNER. I have been there a good many times, and I know of what I speak. There is no place where you will find more men, not of large, but of proportionate wealth, than in Prince Edward Island. The farmers of that province are prosperous; many men have made money by handling agricultural produce; and the people are contented and happy. It is a fine place to live in, notwithstanding what any man may say against it. I know of what I speak, from what I have seen and heard, and I stand here to say that the people of the Maritime Provinces, numbering together, as they do, 800,000 people, are as good, as prosperous an 800,000 as are to be found anywhere in Canada or in the United States.

Mr. WATSON. This is a matter in which, as a representative of the North-West, I feel very much interested. I regret that the Government have seen fit to reduce the vote this year. I regret, moreover, that I cannot agree that the Government have judiciously expended the immigration votes of past years; and I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, that Canada is as prosperous as it should be.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. WATSON. Hon. gentlemen appear to dissent from this view, but I think they ought to listen attentively to any person who makes any suggestions for the improvement of our condition. We have been attempting to bring people to our shores at the public expense for years, and we have made a miserable failure of it. We have not retained our natural increase. To say nothing of our natural increase, we have not retained one-half of those reported by the Department of Agriculture to have come to our shores. Therefore, hon. gentlemen opposite, instead of standing up to defend the policy of the Government, should be ashamed of the policy they have pursued. We know that we have a fine country, and I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to quote the words of any hon. gentleman on this side of the House who has decried the natural advantages of Canada, either in the Maritime Provinces or in the North-West. We have always spoken well of our country. We know its natural advantages, but we know that it would have a larger population if it had not been misgoverned. We have been told that we have our schools; but we educate our young men, and they leave us, because, as the hon. gentleman who spoke last has said, they want to go to the larger cities. Why do they leave the rural districts? Because they cannot make a living there; because the policy of the Government has been opposed to the interests of the great mass of our people, the agriculturists, and they leave the country because they cannot make a living in the industry which is most natural to our country. We are asked why the people leave. I believe they leave to better their circumstances; a great number of them go to the United States, and I believe they do better their circumstances. Notwithstanding all our natural advantages in Canada, what do we find? In the past ten years our population has only increased 11 per cent., whereas in that highly-taxed country which hon. gentlemen opposite so often speak of the population has increased 25 per cent., or more than double the increase in Canada. I claim, as a Canadian, that we have better natural advantages in Canada than they have in the United States, and with such advantages Canada's population should increase more rapidly than the United States. But what is the fact? The fact is that to-day we are not only not retaining our natural increase, but Canada is simply a breeding ground for the United States. We are educating our young men to become citizens of a foreign country. I regret more our losing our natural increase than I do our not retaining the immigrants who come to our shores, because I believe that one native Canadian is as good as any two immigrants from a foreign country. We produce a better class of people than any other country in the world, and our own people are better adapted to our country. My hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), though not a native Canadian, will bear me out when I say that the best settlers we have in the North-West are the young Canadians from eastern Canada. I regret that it should be possible for a gentleman to advance as a reason why our young people are leaving the country, particularly the lower provinces, that they want to go to the larger cities. Why have we not those large cities in Canada? The Government promised to build up large cities and great industries by the National Policy. But it has proved a miserable failure, even to the manufacturers, simply because they have not a market for their products. They view with alarm the census returns which have been presented to them in the last few days. They know that they have established their businesses, but they have not an adequate market; but I venture to say that with unrestricted reciprocity with the United States our Canadian manufacturers would be better off than they are to-day. You have been taxing the masses for the benefit of the classes; but even the classes are not now prosperous, because while you have put increased taxes upon their products you tax at the same time their raw material. While they do not prosper, at the same time you impose heavy taxes on the agriculturists on their behalf. Why, we find that the farmers of Manitoba have had to import within the past few weeks 120 tons of binding twine, on which they were obliged to pay a duty of 25 per cent.; and will any hon. gentleman tell me that it is made cheap by that duty? Owing to the magnificent crop which has been raised there this year they require three pounds of binding twine to the acre, which means 10 cents an acre of increased cost for binding twine, on account of the duty upon it, merely for the benefit of some half-dozen ropewalks in Canada. I say that the National Policy, along with the Government's land policy, with its railway policy and its policy of monopoly, are the causes of our not having more people in the North-West. I have been accused of decrying the country, simply because I have said that the statements made to this House by the immigration department were incorrect. That department wished to spread throughout the country the opinion that people were coming in and settling and remaining in our North-West, and were happy, contented and prosperous, when such was not the case. When we had the miserable showing of 1886, what was the answer of hon. gentlemen opposite? Look to Hansard and you will find who were decrying the country. What was the excuse they gave for the people leaving? They said it was because we had suffered from summer frost. That was not the cause. The whole secret lay in the fact that the people reported to have come into that country were incorrectly reported and never came there; but the Government, for the purpose of showing that they were bringing immigrants into the country cheaper than the previous Government, at so much per capita, doubled the figures; and in 1885, when the census was taken, we found a loss of some 175,000 people in Manitoba and the North-West. We find to-day, according to the census, that Manitoba and the North-West are the only provinces which have increased in population, and they do not by any means contain the people who are reported to have gone there. The policy of the Government is against the settlement of the North-West. An hon. gentleman asked to-night what about the Mackenzie Government, and he said they wanted to give double the amount of land which the present Government have given the Canadian Pacific Railway. Why, Sir, the times and the circumstances were different, and the Mackenzie Government were allotting the land under a different system. This Government has given the Canadian Pacific Railway 25,000,000 acres of selected land; the Mackenzie Government intended giving them 50,000,000 acres in blocks of alternate townships. I would ask any hon. gentleman, I would ask the hon. member for Assiniboia, if he would not rather have 25,000,000 acres of selected land than 50,000,000 acres in alternate blocks? But we are not here for the purpose of discussing that now, but for the purpose of discussing immigration. We are told that the Government have only seven agents; we are told that they have not enough agents in England, Ireland and Scotland. But I say they are not following the proper policy. The system adopted last fall and winter, a portion of the expenses of which was paid by the Government and a portion by the Canadian Pacific Railway, of sending prosperous settlers from our North-West to the old country to instruct the agricultural classes there as to the capabilities of our North-West, was a good system. Under the present system, we find one agent getting $4,000 a year, and in seven or eight years sending out one immigrant. Is that the proper way to spend the money we vote for immigration? It is not. We want results. I want to see a large amount of money expended on immigration, but I want to see it judiciously expended. The best immigration agent is the contented settler. Make the people contented, remove their grievances and they will advise others to come. We have the natural advantages in the North-West, and all we want is for the Government to pursue a proper policy. We have been told that the speeches of the hon. member for South Oxford retard immigration, but we all know how absurd is such a charge. Talk about prosperity in this country! What could any one say which could compare with the sworn evidence of several witnesses, given before a Committee of this House, that for the sake of securing situations worth $1.25 per day men will give a bonus of $150 or $200. That is the kind of evidence that hon. gentlemen opposite provide for the people in other countries, that employment is so hard to secure in Canada that men will give $200 of a bonus to secure a job at $1.25 a day. That is the kind of advertisement the Government are holding out to the people of other countries. Talk of the tariff of the United States; notwithstanding their tariff they have a great country within themselves which they can serve, and it is not fair to compare Canada with the United States when speaking of protection. If we were situated north and south as we are east and west, we might possibly thrive under protection; but, as we are, it is impossible for us to do so. We are so situated that it is natural for us to trade with the people of the south and we want their trade.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). Do you want to supply them with wheat?

Mr. WATSON. Yes; and I venture to say if we had had unrestricted reciprocity last fall wheat would have been worth 10 cents a bushel more in Manitoba than it was, not only on account of our grain going to Minneapolis, which is the hub of the milling world, to be ground, but on account of the freight rates. We have to-day no competition, as we have only one line of railway, which is a monopoly. That road benefits by protection as trade is forced over it, simply because there is a tariff wall at the international boundary. Hon. gentlemen will say that is not our funeral, that the Americans put it there, and that we cannot take it down; but I believe that if we approach the American authorities in a proper spirit, as business men, a treaty could be arranged which would be beneficial both to them and to us. The barrier between us is an unnatural one. The hon. member for Leeds asked if we wanted to take our wheat to the United States. I believe that in the near future, instead of the United States exporting grain they will be importers. Several of the states which exported millions of bushels a few years ago are to-day importing breadstuffs.

Mr. O'BRIEN. When they want our wheat they will take the duty off.

Mr. WATSON. Yes; and I believe they would take it off to-day if we would take the duty off agricultural implements. It is an unnatural barrier. Up at Sarnia, in a few days, a tunnel is to be opened below the St. Clair River. For what purpose? For the purpose of encouraging trade between Canada and the United States. And what do we find? We find a Customs officer at each end of the tunnel to restrict trade. We have nothing to fear in Canada from the people of the United States. Our natural wealth is greater than theirs, and it is surprising to find that in ten years we have not retained our natural increase. People abroad will naturally say: Why should we go to Canada, when that country cannot retain her natural increase? Of what use is it asking strangers to come to a country when we cannot keep our own people at home?

Mr. INGRAM. There are a large number of people in this country opposed to a system of immigration of any kind.

Mr. WATSON. I am sorry to know that there is any class of people in this country who are afraid of competition. The hon. gentleman, no doubt, defends combinations. I am a mechanic myself, and I say we want everyone we can get to come to this country, and the idea of these trades unions asking this Government not to allow artisans to come to this country is a great mistake. Artisans make the very best class of people we can have in the country. I regret that any view should prevail that, because a man knows more than an ordinary agriculturist in the old country, because he has had the ability to acquire the knowledge of a trade, he should be debarred from coming to this country. I almost regret that the Government place a tax on Chinamen. We condemn the Chinaman because he works too cheaply; we condemn the Indian because he does not work at all, and the trades unions complain that artisans are allowed to come to the country, for fear, I suppose, that they will work too cheaply. I admit that it is necessary for the artisans to band themselves together for self-protection, but it is protection all through, in consequence of the system which was inaugurated by hon. gentlemen opposite. The mechanic says, if the manufacturers are to be protected the mechanic must also be protected. But take down the barriers of trade, and the trades unions will not require to petition the Government to prevent artisans coming to this country. We will be able to live more cheaply and will be better in every way as an agricultural and also as a manufacturing country. At this late hour I do not propose to occupy the time much further. I regret very much that the Government and the Department of Agriculture have not made more progress in inducing people to settle in this country. We find that the returns which are made to us from year to year by the Agriculture Department are incorrect. We have not the people here. I was called to task on one occasion by a note from the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, stating that he would appear before the Immigration and Colonization Committee to correct a statement I made in the House similar to that I have made to-night. When he appeared before that Committee, not even the member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) had the face to stand up and defend the Deputy Minister. The statements I made then were true, and the statements I have made now are true, that the figures we get from year to year from that department are not borne out by the census, and that we are not getting value for the money we expend. Until you remodel that Agriculture Department and put live men at the head of it you cannot expect anything else.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be better to remodel the Opposition.

Mr. WATSON. After what I have heard from the would-be Minister of Agriculture to-night, the member for Grey (Mr. Sproule), I do not think they will get any better results by elevating him to that position.

Mr. McMULLEN. He will never get there.

Mr. WATSON. I hope he will not.

Mr. SPROULE. Your hopes or fears will not affect me much.

Mr. WATSON. I do not think it matters, for the hon. gentleman has no chance. I think this vote should be increased, and should be judiciously expended, and that live men or a live man should be placed at the head of that department to see that the money is judiciously expended. We are going on in the old slow-coach style while other countries are securing the immigrants. We have nothing to fear from the United States. Our natural advantages are better than theirs, and we are getting people from the Western States into our North-West this year.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). That is not possible.

Mr. WATSON. We have removed some of the barriers. We have removed the railway monopoly, at least in name. The Northern Pacific have a few miles of road there, but they are not really a competing line, in consequence of the restrictive policy of the Government in not giving them the same franchises they give to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Last year the Department of Agriculture were not energetic enough to spend even the amount voted by Parliament. That is sufficient evidence that they are incompetent men when they cannot use the money voted, because they do not know how. You want a live man at the head of that department, who will at least properly use the money which is voted by Parliament. I am not going to refer to the different provinces, but in Manitoba we have an increase in ten years from 62,260 to 152,442. While that is an excellent showing in comparison with the other provinces, it is a miserable showing when we consider the great field for immigration we have in our Canadian North-West. I hope the Government will adopt some of the views at least which have been thrown out from this side of the House, and will change their policy in such a way that in the near future we will have, not only our miserable population of 154,000 in Manitoba, as we have to-day, while as I contend, if a proper policy had been pursued by the Government, we would have had at least a million and a half. We have not 10 per cent. of the population we should have. We have the country: we have the land. It has been properly stated that large tracts of land were locked up in that province. That was true. In the years 1881, 1882 and 1883, when we would have expected the largest number to settle in that country, it was almost impossible to secure a homestead at any land office in Manitoba on account of the colonization companies and the railway reserves. The whole of the country south of the Canadian Pacific Railway was reserved and many of our settlers and intending settlers left the country in consequence. In 1885 we had the rebellion, which stopped immigration for a year or two, and I will not say that was not also the result of the policy of the Government. Outside of that, the policy of the Government has not been to encourage the settlement of the North-West. They have been throwing obstacles in the way of that settlement ever since they came into power, and to-day we have the miserable result before us.

Mr. INGRAM. I did not intend to offer any remarks on this question, but I wish to explain some of the reasons why I believe this item has been decreased. There are a large number of men in this country who are opposed to assisting immigration at all. They believe that those who have money enough to bring them here should be welcome, but they are opposed to assisting them in any way at all. Now, having that pressure brought to bear upon the Governmant, and the Government feeling the pressure, on the other hand, of those who are in favour of immigration, I can understand the reason why this item has been made so small. For my own part, I am in favour of a thorough immigration system, that will encourage immigrants to come to this country, immigrants of a class that will become good subjects and good citizens. I say that the very class who to-day are finding fault with the encouragement given to immigration are willing that a class of people should come to this country who will assist in building it up, and making it a country worth living in. Now, as regards the National Policy which our friends find fault with, speaking in a local way, I have this to say: That in the riding I have the honour to represent, it is owing to the National Policy that we have had an increase in population. The hon. member for South Oxford admitted during the campaign that this was one of the ridings that the National Policy had done something for. I know that in the town of St. Thomas, were it not for the National Policy, we would not have the factories there to-day that we have; so that their arguments with respect to the National Policy do not hold good. I, as one of the supporters of this Government, support it chiefly because I believe in the National Policy I believe it is the true policy for this country; I believe that in course of time it will make this country one of the greatest and most prosperous nations of the world. I believe we are as good a people, and just as able to hold our own, as any other nation on this continent. We want a fair field and no favour; we do not want to give the Americans any undue advantage over us, but if the policy hon. gentlemen opposite are advocating were adopted, then the Americans would have an undue advantage over us. Now, as respects immigration, I would be willing to see a million dollars placed in the Estimates for that purpose. I would suggest to the Government, as has been suggested by the hon. gentleman who spoke last, that more vigour should be shown in our immigration policy. What has been the case in the Dominion of Canada? Every town and every city in this country have been visited by American agents, trying to induce Canadians to go to some of the western states. I think the Government should place a greater sum in the Estimates in order to put men in the different towns throughout the Dominion to counteract the influence of the American agents. Who would find fault with the Government for doing so? It is not the supporters of the Conservative party, but I can name you supporters of the Reform party who never lose an opportunity to call attention publicly to any little thing of that kind done by the Government, to any little means they may take to counteract American influence. I say to our friends opposite that if the Dominion of Canada has not increased in population to the extent it should have done, a great portion of that blame rests with those hon. gentlemen and their friends, and not with the supporters of this Government

Mr. GILLMOR. I had a desire, when the senior member for St. John (Mr. Skinner) spoke, to make a few remarks with reference to this question, but it is late now, and I do not feel that it is important that I should say much. But with regard to immigration, I have been surprised that people are inclined to leave Canada so much as they do; I have been surprised that emigrants from Europe are not as much inclined to come to Canada as to the United States. I cannot account for it, except on the supposition that they do not like monarchical institutions, and they are rather inclined to have a change and to go where there are republican institutions. There may be something in that, because, everything considered, Canada is a very desirable country to live in, a desirable country to which to emigrate. I do not agree with our friends in the North-West, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), who want a very large appropriation to encourage immigration. My hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Ingram) would like to see this $150,000 increased to $1,000,000. That sort of talk is absurd. I think we have done quite as much as we can afford to do for the North-West. I remember not many years ago, when the late Mr. White spoke of the North-West as being a spoon-fed people. He never said a truer word. I say that Canada has done for the North-West all she ought to have done, and more too. I say, when you look at the older provinces and see what they have done for the North-West, and consider the opportunities and the advantages in the North-West, it is nonsense for them to come and ask the older provinces to pay hundreds of thousands of dollars annually to get people to go there, after that country has been bought by the older provinces, and paid for, and a hundred million dollars put into railway operations there, and the Mounted Police kept up, and the Indians fed; and I say that, after we have done all that, if these people in Europe and in Canada, in civilized society, do not know the advantages of the North-West without being bought, and hired, and paid to go there, I say, let them stay away. There is nothing in the condition of the older provinces of Canada to-day to warrant us in voting a single dollar to bringing out immigrants to Canada. Here is Canada, and it is a good country. It is not such a country as both Liberals and Tories talk about; it is not the Garden of Eden; it is not the best country in the world. But it is as good as the majority, and it is better, I think. But I do not think this country is prosperous at present; I do not think this country has progressed. I do not think the policy that has been pursued for the last twelve years is calculated to give prosperity to any country. That is the way I look at. Talk of the National Policy making the country prosperous! In my opinion, we might as well expect to gather grapes off thorns, or figs off thistles, as to get prosperity out of protection. You have had twelve years of experience, and your boasting has been all in vain. You never got such a "sockdologer," you never got such a knock-down as the census has given you.

Mr. FOSTER. Explain.

Mr. GILLMOR. The Minister of Finance feels the blow, and the only argument he makes, now is: Oh, you are running down the country; you are a miserable minority against whom the people have pronounced whenever they have had an opportunity. And yet, notwithstanding that they have got the majority in Parliament, and that they are sustained by a majority in the country, somebody makes a speech on this side of the House and thwarts the whole of their policy, and prevents people from coming here. It is said that we on this side of the House are preventing people coming here, that we are running down the country in our speeches and that the people believe us, and absolutely leave this country. That is all negative. Where is your positive benefit? And where is the progress this country has made? The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Skinner) spoke of comfortable homes. There are many comfortable homes in Canada, and there is very little want; but there is no progress in this country commensurate with that which you would expect from its broad acres, its natural resources, its soil and its climate. As the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) said, we in Canada are simply marking time. But in a great part of this Dominion I hold we are in a still worse position. I remember reading that Sir Edward Parry, one of the great Arctic explorers, got on an ice floe on his way to the north pole, and day after day he kept marching northward without taking an observation, and when he did take one he found that while he was marching 10 miles a day to the north the ice floe was floating 12 miles to the south, and at the end of each day he had lost two miles. So it is with us. We are further back than we were some years ago. We are living in a state of advanced civilization. There never was a period of civilization so advanced as that in which we are now living. But I do not give the Government credit for inventing the electric telegraph, for the steamboat or steam engine, for the numberless inventions of labour-saving machinery. I want hon. gentlemen opposite to show me where this country has prospered from the policy of the Government. I do not give the Government credit for building the Canadian Pacific Railway. It required a small amount of brains to tax the people and build the road. It never requires much ability to tax the population and spend the money. I want hon. gentlemen opposite not to burke the question, but to show me where their policy has benefited this country and given us anything like progress or advancement. It has not done so. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Skinner) spoke about New Brunswick. That province is my home; and what showing has she made? The hon. gentleman spoke about shipping. What is the condition of shipping? The tonnage in New Brunswick in 1881 was 333,215 tons, in 1889 it was 218,873 tons, or a loss in 8 years of 114,342 tons. That tonnage at $40 per ton would amount to $4,573,680. The hon. gentleman says that iron ships caused that decline. If so, why did not those marine men put their money into iron ships? The truth is, that $4,000,000 of money have been lost, and we have nothing to show for it. Again, with respect to the population of St. John and the trade of that port. You need not talk to me about progress when the importations into a country are falling off. Under those circumstances there is no progress, because the people will buy all they want if they are able to do so. What is the use of talking about progress when the real estate market is flat, and real estate is not worth half as much as it was twenty-five years ago? That shows that the young men who should be occupying the land are leaving the country and no other young men are coming in, and it is impossible for the country to be prosperous under these circumstances. Hon. gentlemen opposite need not talk about this town or that town increasing. It would be a curious policy if some people did not get rich under it, if some locality did not benefit by it; but, taking the whole of the country, there is not only no progress and advancement, there is an absolute retrogression, and all the people have to congratulate themselves on is the present advanced state of civilization. Every scientific man who discovers something for the benefit of his race, every ingenious man who invents something has, in a certain sense, made a contribution to Canada, and the Government have injured rather than assisted in these contributions. I do not blame the Government for a great deal for which perhaps some other people blame them. I do not believe a Government can prevent the people coming and going, but the supporters of the present Government must be astonished when they look back to the time when those hon. gentlemen declared they would keep the people in the country, when they charged the Administration that preceded them with having driven the people out of the country, and yet the exodus to-day is greater than it was then. The most cowardly thing to be said is that we on this side of the House are driving the people out of Canada, that we are decrying the country as one not fit to live in. No one makes that assertion. The attacks are not made on the country, but on the Government and on its policy and practice. This country is a very good country. I have lived here all my life, and I expect to spend the balance of my days here, and it should be the home of millions of people. There should be ten millions of people here now, and I believe that if we had a free trade policy—and this country needs a free trade policy above all other countries—we might have had that population. With respect to our neighbours, I think well of them. I do not fear so much their legislation as I fear our legislation. God Almighty never allowed one nation, unless they went to war, to be ruined by another. They cannot fill their coffers by placing a tax on their own people, and although the McKinley Bill may injure us as a protective policy injures the world, yet it injures the nation and people who produce it ten times as much as it injures any other people.

An hon. MEMBER. The United States tariff is 61 per cent.

Mr. GILLMOR. Those arguments are stale, commonplace, worn-out, absurd and silly. Every old woman has got them. The United States is a great country in spite of protection, because protection never, under any circumstances, helped the prosperity of the people. The nation I want to copy is the mother country, and yet I never felt I was bursting with loyalty, that it was oozing out at my fingers, as is the case with hon. gentlemen opposite. I admire Great Britain for her institutions, because she has set an example to the wide world, because she fought the best battle for the race when she threw down her tariff walls and declared against protection and defied the nations, and she leads the van to-day. I admire Great Britain because she sits the queen of nations, and she has set an example to the world. I admire our neighbours across the border, and I feel that instead of this war-like attitude and this disposition to retaliate and fight with them we should treat them as brothers. They started 120 years ago on their march to nationality, and we started at the same time. We had the mother country, with all her wealth, at our back, but where are we now and where are they now? Where are they compared with us, even though we have our fertile provinces and our vast resources of fisheries and of mines and of agriculture. Why, the State of New York has got a good deal more people than the Dominion of Canada, and I believe, also, that the State of Pennsylvania has a more numerous population than our country. I have been informed that there is one wholesale house in the States that sells more dry goods than we import into Canada altogether. I do not want to be dependent, but this sort of independence that I have heard about to-night is an independence which the lowest conditions of human life are found in. It is living within yourselves, and growing for yourselves and making all you want and buying nothing. Is that the way, for the Lord's sake, to get rich? That is the way you tell us to get rich, but it leads to the lowest condition that the human race has ever been found in. I remember well, when you first introduced the National Policy, the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) was a great protectionist. He told us how independent we were going to be, and that the good wife could spin, and weave, and knit, and the old man could shear the sheep, and the wife could lay the good little boy on the floor, and take a piece of chalk and make out his own trousers, and that was to be our independence. If you expect to get wealth you have got to get it by trade, and if you want this country to grow prosperous you have to take the ligaments off trade. If you tie ligaments around the limbs of a child and stop the circulation of the blood you cannot expect him to grow, and it is just as ridiculous to expect a nation to grow by placing ligaments and obstructions everywhere on its trade. I say to you gentlemen: Go to Washington on the 12th October; go, and you have my best wishes; go there and make a treaty and get all you can. If you cannot get anything more than reciprocity in natural products take it, and get the rest as soon as you can; but if you cannot get free trade come right back home and have free trade yourselves. Look down in my own county and look all around the borders at how people are going away from the country. Why do they go away? It is because you have put on your tariff, and then you go to work and appoint an army of brigands and freebooters to follow every man, woman and child who is buying a dollar's worth, or half a dollar's worth of goods, and you keep these brigands to prevent what you call violation of the law. Do you know what I think about this matter of violating the law? I think the law is wrong. I do not think that buying and selling is wrong, but I think it is wrong for a law to fine a man for buying his goods wherever he pleases, and it is wrong to put a lot of brigands all over this country to watch and persecute men who are doing what ought to be a lawful trade. Of course you say: Here is a man who advocates smuggling. Well, I do not advocate smuggling; but I do not condemn it very much, because it does not violate any moral law. I think the law is violated by putting that law in the Statute-book, and I think the time is coming when it will look just as ridiculous to people to fine men for buying and selling as the Blue Laws of Connecticut appear to people now. As I stated the other day, under the Blue Laws of Connecticut, a man kissing his wife on Sunday would have a split stick put in his tongue, and I suppose that in the eyes of the Puritans of that day the offence for which the punishment was awarded was considered a terrible sin. Now, you have had twelve or thirteen years' experience of the National Policy, and you know that the ordinary average of human life is only thirty years, so you ought to be convinced in these twelve years that your National Policy is a failure. Further than that, I charge on the National Policy the political corruption of Canada. I charge that the National Policy is immoral, that it leads to immorality, and that it is the beginning of all the evils we are contending with now. Your corruption began when you commenced to legislate for protected industries, when you commenced to legislate for a few at the expense of the many, and to disregard the many for the few. The sore began then which has grown to such proportions now. Take any session you please since the National Policy was inaugurated, and what has been the character of the legislation in this Parliament? There has been no legislation for the people. The legislation has been for some protected industry, or some monopoly or some corporation, or something of that kind, but the interests of the great mass of people are never considered. My hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) wants a half a million dollars for immigration, and he wants to have it sent to the North-West and he will take charge of it. He does not think of all the people who have got to contribute that. I am opposed to any more money being expended for immigration. I believe the experiment is too costly. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Skinner) may talk about the comforts of the people as he likes. Of course, they have some comforts, and why should they work from generation to generation without a little comfort. I will tell you of a little incident which happened during the last election, and will show you how the National Policy benefits these protected millers by its duty of 75 cents a barrel on flour, and how it injures the poor people. I know a widow with two or three little boys who wanted a barrel of flour last year, and she got them to cut a little soft wood and send to Eastport to get the flour. When she got it home on the sea shore she was travelling through the snow to find a Customs house officer. For fear one of those brigands would come down on her and take her flour she managed to get 75 cents to pay the duty, and she said to my son, whom she met: "I hope, Mr. Gillmor, you will do all you can to have this frightful system stopped, by which I cannot get food for myself and children without going to all this trouble and expense." Can you think of a system that would be so bad as that? Talk about direct taxation. Under direct taxation you would not make a few men rich and take the money out of the poor people who are struggling to keep body and soul together. No; you would go to the rich men who are able to pay, and you would not tax those who are suffering destitution. We know that the rich man never goes to bed without his supper, but the poor often do. Now, I have spoke long enough.

Mr. DAVIN. Hear, hear.

Mr. GILLMOR. I listened to the speech of the hon. member for West Assiniboia, and I never heard more nonsense. He is adapted to it. He talked for ten minutes about putting a first-rate education into a second-rate brain; but how could you get it in? Now, the Government are showing a good degree of economy this session; they are beginning to haul in their horns, and I think they are wise. I hope they will hesitate before they do any more for the people of the North-West. Some of them are no better than hermit crabs ; they cannot make a shell for themselves, and they crawl into some shell that has been abandoned. My constituents have not any such advantages ; they have not the soil of the boundless, rolling prairie, neither have they so much frost in August. Then the cheek of these men, to stand up here and ask the Government to give them more. Do not give them any more, and I wish you would conclude not to give them that.

Mr. HAZEN. I will not trespass at any length on the patience of the House at this late hour of the evening. In fact, my excuse for rising is that the speech which the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) has just delivered has put the House in such good humor that I feel sure that they will not mind wating while I make a few remarks. As everyone knows, free trade has been a part of the hon. gentleman's political religion since he has been in public life, which has been for a great number of years. But I cannot understand how a gentleman who is honest in his views of free trade could approve of his party when they enunciate a policy which is not free trade with the world, such as the hon. gentleman approves of, but with a country having the highest protective tariff on the face of the globe, when that policy necessitates the adoption by this country of a similar tariff or the assimilation of our tariff with theirs. The hon. gentleman has charged that protection is immoral, and that the National Policy has led to immorality in all branches of the public service. If that is the case, if a tariff of 35 per cent. makes people immoral, how does he think we are going to get clear of that immorality by joining a country which has a tariff of virtually 60 per cent., and adopting that, as we should have to do under unrestricted reciprocity. If the National Policy tends to make this country immoral, then the logical sequence of the hon. gentleman's argument is that the adoption of unrestricted reciprocity and the tariff of the United States would tend to make this country twice as immoral as it is at the present time ; and I have always failed to understand how gentlemen who believe in free trade as a political doctrine can see a cure for our ills and an improvement for our condition in a policy which would necessitate our adopting the American tariff ; because they all know that the time has not yet come for the United States to lay aside a policy of protection which nine-tenths of the people of that country believe has made it prosperous and brought it to its present condition. Now, I have never, on the hustings or anywhere else, made the charge against the party to whom I am opposed that as a party they are disloyal. No matter what opinion I may entertain of some individual members of that party, no matter what I might feel, I would hesitate to make the charge against any great body of people of this country that they were disloyal to British connection or to the interests of the country. I could not bring myself to believe that such was the case. But it is a fact that frequently in their newspapers and occasionally on the floor of this House they allow their partizan feelings to so run away with them that they utter speeches which must do great injury to this country wherever those speeches are read. In the speech delivered by the hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong) this evening, I think he furnished one of the strongest arguments that could be placed in the hands of any intending emigrant in the old world, who desired to take up life in the new world, why he should not come to Canada. I would venture to say that if an intending emigrant was divided in his views as to whether he should go to the United States or to Canada, and the speech of the hon. member for Middlesex were placed in his hands, he would at once say that Canada was not a fit country to settle in, and he must go somewhere else. According to the hon. gentleman's speech, there is nothing but blue ruin and stagnation in Canada from one end to the other. He commenced with the Maritime Provinces, where, according to him, there was no opportunity for labour, in our mines, on our farms or in our lumber woods ; he came up to Quebec and Ontario, and there everybody was going to destruction, and nobody was wanted in the factories ; and when he got to the North-West the conditions were so terrible that there was no chance of employment there. So, while these hon. gentlemen do not wish to make disloyal utterances, the fact remains that they do make utterances which are calculated to do irreparable injury to Canada in the minds of all people who read them or become acquainted with them. The hon. gentleman differed to some extent from the views of his party. When the National Policy was introduced in 1878 it was said, time after time throughout this country and in this House, that it would have the effect of building up monopolies and making the few rich at the expense of the many. That has been said in this House this session. The hon. member for South Oxford, the financial critic of the Opposition, has referred to the manufacturers not only as monopolists but as vile monopolists. One would suppose from his remarks that the manufacturers of the country were growing rich, that they were rolling in wealth, and that the labourers of the country, the artizans, the miners, the farmers—in fact, all other classes—were paying such tribute to the manufacturers that the manufacturers were growing rich whilst the others were growing poor. Yet the hon. member for Middlesex tells us that the manufacturers are going to ruin, that they are making no money, that in common with all other classes they are in a state of collapse, blue ruin and stagnation. Let me ask hon. gentlemen opposite in all sincerity, not desiring to charge against them disloyalty to the Crown or the country, do they think that it is fair or proper to send abroad such exaggerated statements as these ? We know that what is stated in this Parliament is spread broadcast by means of the electric wire over the United States and Great Britain. I verily believe that if a change of Government took place, even though there should be no improvement in the condition of the country, we should never hear any such speeches from the hon. gentlemen. It is a fair charge to make against them that their partizan feelings overcome their better judgment, and force them to make statements which are not warranted by the facts, and are calculated to do an immense amount of injury to this country which they, as well as we, are interested in seeing prosper. If I had the view of affairs in this country, which is entertained by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McMillan) and the hon. member for Middlesex and the others, I would not stay here twenty-four hours. These gentlemen prophecy that there is no future for this country, and yet they have lived in it all their lives and have made money in it, and are well supplied with this world's goods. The only fair inference to be drawn from their remarks, and I extremely regret having to draw it, is that, interested as these gentlemen must be in the development and progress of this country, no matter what their political feelings may be, they are so blinded by party feeling as to make statements they must know are not correct. I, as a rule, do not admire the methods and devices of politicians and statesmen on the other side of the border; but there is one quality I admire in them, and that is, no matter how much they may berate the Government of the day, you will never hear one among them, be he in opposition or supporting the Government, say a word in depreciation of his country, or that will tend to lower it in the estimation of the world. In fact, their tendencies are the very reverse. Wherever they are they exalt their country, they lavish praises on it, and inspire in others the belief that it is the greatest country on the face of the globe. But if in the United States, there were gentlemen opposed to the administration of the day, making speeches, year in and year out, with regard to their country, such as we have heard Liberals for the last ten years make with respect to this, the United States would not have progressed as they have done during the past fifty years. It is but fair that we should ask hon. gentlemen opposite, when they present so gloomy a picture, what remedy have they to suggest? But first of all, with regard to the census returns, which have been spoken of as very disappointing, it must be admitted to a certain extent they are disappointing, when we see the increase in ten years is only 500,000. Still, that is a fair and substantial increase; and the true question is, are the people remaining in the country to-day prosperous, happy and contented with their lot? Now, Sir, very naturally a good deal of reference has been made to the Province of New Brunswick, and especially to the City of St. John. Well, I would say this, that in St. John to-day there is a great deal of discontent at the way the census has been taken. No man who lives there to-day and who knew it in 1881 will say, no matter what his party feelings may be, that there are fewer people there to-day than there were in 1881. All the facts point to the reverse. Since 1881 over seven hundred new houses, and houses of a substantial character, have been erected there. There are more pupils attending the public schools there to-day than there were in 1881, under the very same system of education. There are hundreds more voters on the lists to-day than there were in 1881, men who have votes in the federal and provincial elections. And if the census of 1891 had been taken on the same basis as the census of 1881 the population of St. John would show a marked and substantial increase. In 1881 there were reasons why the population of the city should have fallen off. First of all, the city, as has been pointed out by my colleague from the city and county, enjoyed a large industry in shipbuilding, and it was not unusual to see a large number of ships on the stocks at the same time, giving employment to a large number of people; but that industry became destroyed by iron and steel taking the place of wood. The National Policy had therefore nothing to do with its destruction. In the second place, there had been a depression for some years in the lumber trade, and in 1877 the city was swept from water to water by the great conflagration of June. When the census of 1881 was taken people were put down as being in the country who did not happen to be there at all. For instance, after the fire and depression in shipbuilding a great many people were forced to leave the city, yet in the census of 1881 they were counted as residents. Under the system of 1891, although there are unquestionably more people in this city than in 1881, only those who were away for less than a year were marked down as residents, and consequently the result shows differently from what it would have shown had the same plan been followed as in the census of 1881. Had the census of 1891 been taken on the same principle as that of 1881 the population would have shown a substantial increase. Take the material wealth of the people: there are millions of dollars more in the St. John savings banks to-day than there were in 1881. The deposits in the chartered banks of New Brunswick to-day are millions of dollars more than they were in 1881. All these point to the fact that from the census figures of 1891 a correct conclusion cannot be drawn, and it is not a fact that the province is less prosperous than it was ten years ago. It is said that the cost of living is greater and that the National Policy is responsible for the increase. I reply that if it had not been for some of the industries created in St. John by the National Policy our population to-day would be much less than it is. These factories have to a considerable extent taken the place of the shipbuilding industry, and given employment to our people. In the elections of 1878 one of the main reasons which induced people to adopt the National Policy was that we were alongside the United States, and that no matter what might be the correct theory of free trade and protection, if we sent anything to the United States we had to pay a heavy duty, while they could flood us with their goods and pay hardly any duty. I do not think hon. gentlemen opposite will call that free trade, or desire a return to that system, by which our markets were opened to the Americans comparatively free, while we could send nothing into theirs without paying a very high duty. Hon. gentlemen say that it has increased the price of living. In the first place, they will admit that the cost of tea, coffee, sugar and other necessaries of life is less to-day than it was in 1878 or in 1881. I have here a statement taken from the Journal of Commerce of January or February last, showing the price of goods in Canada in 1878 and in 1891, and also the price of farm produce in those years. I do not wish to weary the Committee by reading the columns of figures, but they go to show that most of the articles that the farmers have to buy were dearer in 1878 than in 1891, and that on the other hand the price of what the farmer had to sell was less in 1878 than it was in 1891. I am not afraid to discuss at any time with any hon. gentleman opposite the question that the National Policy has not increased the price of living, or reduced the price of produce to the farmer. No one can deny that there is a tendency amongst the young men of our country, especially in the rural districts, to leave their homes and crowd into the cities. I believe as firmly as any man in this House that education is a blessing. I believe in the freest possible education. I believe that the land of the country should support the schools of the country, and that the son of the poorest man should receive his education by the side of the son of the richest man. Still, there is some force in what has been said by the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) as to the effects of education. The boys are better educated than their fathers were; they read more, newspapers are brought within their reach, and at last they find that they do not want to stay on the farm. Perhaps they have the example of some young man who has gone from the same section to a large city and has amassed wealth, and they decide not to remain on the farm, but to go to a big city in order to make money in the same way. But that is not a fault particular to Canada. It exists the world over. It exists in Australia, and it exists in the United States. In Great Britain you find the agricultural class leaving the farms and going into the cities, and I venture to assert that, but for the National Policy, the census of 1891 would have shown a greater falling off in the agricultural districts than now appears, because the farmers would not have had the home market they now have, and the cities would not have shown the great increase they have now. The increase in the great State of Illinois has been referred to, but that increase is almost entirely in the cities. The city of Chicago alone has six-sevenths of the whole increase, and in the whole of the American Union the tendency has been for the young men to leave the farms and go to the cities. Take the New England States. Go from Maine down to Massachusetts, or to New York, if you like, and you find the same tendency. It is a favourite argument of hon. gentlemen that, if we had access to the market of 65,000,000 people, forgetting that we could only reach a fraction of that population, our farmers would get rich. The same argument would apply to the New England States, and do those farmers get rich? Take Vermont, for instance. Vermont has unrestricted reciprocity. It has the advantage of the market of 65,000,000 people, but the commissioner of agriculture of that state, in his report for 1889-90, draws this picture in regard to the farmers of that state, which could not be drawn without gross exaggeration in regard to any of the Maritime Provinces of the Dominion:

"It is shown that there are more than 1,000 farms in Vermont, formerly under cultivation, which are now abandoned for farming purposes, one-half of which have buildings thereon in fair condition. These farms represent an aggregate of 118,000 acres.

"In addition to this, facts will warrant the statement that many towns did not report lands of the character above mentioned, where they are known to exist.

"It is safe to say that of the lands under consideration there are 500,000 acres, or about ten per cent. of the arable acreage of the state. There is no account made in the estimate of lands once cultivated but now grown up to forests.

"Of the lands once cultivated, but now unoccupied for farming purposes (not including the timber lands and those attached to other farms alluded to), the official reports show that a large portion are of good soil, not worn out and can be made as fruitful as lands near by.

"In 29 towns 101 school-houses are standing without teacher or pupil, or have gone into decay.

"The fact that our lands have been left uncultivated and our population during some decades has decreased is not entirely without its bright side; and we do not alone suffer from the causes mentioned, as our sister states have experienced the same decline in population and farming interests."

Now, if the argument of hon. gentlemen opposite were correct, that unrestricted reciprocity would make the farm lands of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia valuable, how can the farm lands of Vermont and New Hampshire not be made valuable, but depreciate in value and numbers of them become deserted? The same state of affairs, in some respects, exists there as exists in the Maritime Provinces. A young man without capital hesitates to put his axe over his shoulder and cut a farm out of the virgin forest. He prefers to go to the west, to a prairie country, where there are no trees, but where he has simply to put his plough into the prairie and commence his farming operations. That is the influence which has operated both in the New England States and in the Maritime Provinces, and I am proud of the policy which has opened up our own western country, so that when our young men are leaving home and seeking to make one in the west, they need no longer to go to the other side of the boundary line, but can take their lands in our own country, where they will remain citizens of the Dominion and members of the great British Empire. I see hon. gentlemen smiling, and I know they say that they have not gone to our own west to the extent they should. I ask hon. gentlemen to bear this in mind, that the Northern Pacific has been running through the northern states for many years past, and the people there have had the advantages of railway communication and other civilizing influences, while in Canada it is only a few years since our west was opened up. This year, 1891, was the year when the Canadian Pacific Railway was to be completed, and, whatever hon. gentlemen may say as to the wisdom and policy of the course which has been followed in relation to that railway, they must bear in mind that the Government of Alexander Mackenzie grappled with the problem of constructing that work and did not succeed, while the Government of the late Sir John Macdonald entered into a contract for the completion of the road in 1891, and we find in this year that the mails have been carried from Japan to London over this route in the unprecedented time of 21 days. Besides this, we are all aware that people going into a new country, with which they are unacquainted, with a new climate and new conditions, may easily make mistakes, and that it may take them some years to know how to labour to the best advantage. But this year, with the reports we have from the North-West, from the golden harvest with which it has been blessed, with 20,000,000 bushels of wheat for export, as I believe it has been reported, I believe that the more direct attention of the people of the old world will be called to that great country, and that the possibilities of our North-West will attract thousands of settlers, who will make their homes there. No doubt there is truth in the remarks made by the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor), that emigrants leaving the old world are more attracted to a republic than to a colony of Great Britain, because they have an idea that a republic is the freest form of government in the world, and they may, perhaps, have grievances against the institutions of the country they are leaving.

Mr. DAVIN. Will my hon. friend permit me for one moment, before you go away from the 20,000,000 bushels that would be exported, to point out to the Committee that the money that will come into Canada for that wheat would more than pay the interest on all the sums expended, or alleged to have been expended, leaving aside altogether the value of property that has accrued from that expenditure.

Mr. HAZEN. I am obliged to my hon friend for having saved me the trouble of stating that to the House. I was saying that emigrants from Europe have an idea that a republican form of Government is the freest form of Government. It cannot be expected that people in Europe should know that Canada is the freest country on the face of the earth, that its system of government is infinitely freeer, and superior in every respect, to the system of government in the United States; that our system is more directly responsible to the people than the American system. Now we must remember that the land fit for settlement in the United States is fast being taken up, and hon. gentlemen opposite who have followed the discussions in the American magazines for the last few years cannot fail to have noticed that one topic of discussion in those reviews is the fact that the land fit for settlement in the United States will very soon be all taken up. I believe that time is very near, and I believe that Canada, with its magnificent wheat fields, that produce two or three, and sometimes four times, as much per acre as do the wheat fields of Minnesota, will then secure the great tide of immigration which is now flowing into the western states. I believe the time is near at hand when the population of our North-West will increase with great rapidity, owing to the fact that the settlement land in the United States will be soon all taken up. In the meantime, I believe that the five millions of people in Canada to-day enjoy as great liberty, enjoy as great comfort, and enjoy, on the average, in as great a degree all that tends to make life happy, as do any other five million people on the face of the globe.

Mr. KING. I cannot allow the remarks which have fallen from the member for St. John City and County (Mr. Skinner) to pass unnoticed. I am sure it must be very gratifying to the Government to find that the two members representing St. John City and County are prepared to back up and support their policy in the way they have done to-night, notwithstanding the condition of things which exist in the city from which they come, as appears from the census returns. I think it is but proper to say that I feel it comes with bad grace from the hon. gentlemen who have exercised the patronage of appointing census enumerators in the City of St. John, as soon as the census returns are announced to the House to stand up in their place and charge the gentlemen to whom was committed the duty of taking the census in the City of St. John with blundering or incapacity. Now, I have no means of knowing what has caused the decrease in the City of St. John as shown by the census. I have only to say that since Confederation I believe the census has been taken at least three times, and on every occasion by a Conservative Government, and by the appointees of that Government. I believe further that if the census were honestly taken in Canada—and I am not now finding fault with the system adopted—it would show that the actual number of the resident population of New Brunswick, instead of being 321,000, would fall as low as 300,000. Notwithstanding the difference in the system under which the last census was taken and the system adopted five years ago, it is an actual fact that there are a great many people in New Brunswick, and I believe elsewhere in Canada, whose names appear upon the list twice. But I wish more particularly to refer to the argument which hon. gentlemen opposite are continually making use of when they say that we are unpatriotic. They point us to the people of the United States as being a patriotic people. Well, I submit, Mr. Chairman, that I think there must be a difference between the people of the United States and the people of Canada in this respect, and I desire to point out wherein that difference lies. Hon. gentlemen in this House, on previous occasions as well as to-night, have thrown into our faces the reports published in the United States setting forth the condition of the agricultural interest in the New England States, and the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Hazen) has instanced the State of Vermont. I would like to ask that hon. gentleman where he got that information. Did he not obtain it from the report prepared by a commission appointed by the State of Vermont? Now, I submit that if the State of Vermont is honest enough to set forth the facts before the people and to publish them to the world, and if they are not denounced for so doing, as decrying their country, then I would like to know why the Liberal Opposition of this House should be denounced as unpatriotic for stating the truth in regard to the position of this country as concerns the population. The hon. gentleman made another allusion to the United States, and said there was no inducement for the people to leave the Province of New Brunswick to go to the states to farm. I may tell the hon. gentleman that there is a county bordering upon the Province of New Brunswick, the County of Aroostook, in the State of Maine, and I make the statement on the best authority—that the people who have been leaving the County of Carleton within the past decade have largely gone across the line into Aroostook County, because they find that they can carry on farming there with greater profit than they can in the Province of New Brunswick. It is a fact that a large number of people in the County of Carleton are selling out their farms and going across the line and investing their money in the County of Aroostook. I may also mention the fact that only last year the County of Aroostook sent through New Brunswick to the City of Boston more potatoes and more potato starch—the product of potatoes—four times more than the whole export of the agricultural products of New Brunswick. This proves that farming is much more remunerative in the State of Maine than it is in that portion of New Brunswick lying alongside of it. Again, I do not think the hon. gentleman, knowing New Brunswick as he does, he being a native of the province, does the province justice when he attempts to institute a comparison between it and Vermont as a farming country. New Brunswick stands far ahead of Vermont as an agricultural province. And it is well known that in our province, which has an area of 17,000,000 acres, only 6,000,000 acres have passed out of the hands of the Government, and that during the past ten or twelve years scarcely any one has been found willing to buy 100 acres from the Provincial Government and settle on it. This condition did not always exist. If the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Skinner) is satisfied with the condition of affairs in that province it simply shows that he is very easily satisfied, more so than some of his constitutents will prove to be. It is all very well for that hon. gentleman to point to the North-West and tell the Committee how many million bushels of wheat have been produced there this year; but I should like to see the hon. gentleman discuss the affairs of his own province a little more. The hon. gentleman in his speech spoke of Nova Scotia, but little of New Brunswick. I admit that the National Policy has not so directly injured Nova Scotia as it has New Brunswick, and that is no doubt the reason why the hon. gentleman directed the greater portion of his remarks to the former province. I am not surprised at his position, because it is well known that the hon. gentleman has been on both sides on that question. Only a short time ago he was a candidate of the Liberal party, and it is a well known fact that in a speech delivered at St. John he complained of the working of the National Policy, and said that the effects in New Brunswick were worse than the effects of a frost on a field of buckwheat in the autumn. I believe the hon. gentleman made a true statement. There is another matter that needs attention, and that is the loss of representation to New Brunswick. Our province in all probability will, when a redistribution of seats takes place, have to submit to the cutting down of its representation from sixteen to fourteen members, and the very county in which Mr. Hazen first saw the light of day may be deprived of its representation. Yet the hon. gentleman is satisfied with the condition of things in the city he represents. I repeat that, if he is satisfied, the majority of the people of New Brunswick will not be satisfied. It is not worth while discussing the National Policy, for we have the answer as regards New Brunswick in the census. I admit that in some counties of the province there has been an increase, notably on the north shore. I attribute it not to the good effects of the tariff, but to the overflow of immigration from the Province of Quebec. Take St. John, and the City and County of St. John: instead of an increase under the National Policy there is a decrease. If there is a decrease, it is in the class of manufactures carried on under the National Policy. Hon. gentlemen opposite have attempted to mislead the House, I will not say wilfully, for they may themselves be misled in thinking that we have larger manufacturing establishments established by this policy. Such is not the case. We have in St. John two bankrupt cotton concerns. We have invested a good deal of money in manufacturing under the National Policy. If there is a province in Canada where the people were ready to take advantage of that policy and endeavour to work it out to a successful issue it was New Brunswick. With one or two exceptions, almost every dollar invested under the National Policy in manufacturing in New Brunswick has been sunk, and the hon. gentleman must know it. The hon. gentleman has sought to leave the impression that the lumbering interest was a waning one, and that therefore a decrease of population might be expected. I am perfectly safe in stating that the lumbering interest in New Brunswick is not a waning one. During the last ten years the exports have been quite as great as during any similar period in its history, and therefore the lack of increase of population cannot be charged to the falling off in that industry. I am safe in stating that there were as many people engaged in manufactures in St. John before the National Policy as there are to day. If such is the case, how is it possible that the farmers have a larger market for their agricultural produce than prior to the introduction of that policy. The hon. members who spoke did not agree even with regard St. John and the benefit of the National Policy. One hon. gentleman said it had benefited the farmers; the other gentleman took the view which will please his constituents, that meat and vegetables are cheaper than formerly. One says the farmer's market is a great deal better than formerly, and the other declares that meat and vegetables are cheaper, and therefore the labouring classes can live more cheaply. I agree with the latter view, that many lines of farm produce bring less prices than before the introduction of the National Policy.

Mr. MACDONALD (Winnipeg). Even at half-past one in the morning I venture to delay the Committee with a few remarks on the question of immigration, which is such an important one to Canada as a whole, and especially to the western portion of the Dominion. Fortunately for this House, the hon. and eloquent member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has so thoroughly exhausted the question that there is very little for me to add to what he has said; consequently, I can be very brief. I cannot, however, refrain from expressing my regret, which I share with the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), that the Government has seen fit to reduce the vote for immigration purposes, for I believe that the people of this country would more heartily endorse the expenditure for immigration than for almost any other object. I say that, notwithstanding what has fallen from the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) to night, for although I am aware that the people in the older and more thickly-settled provinces do not attribute so much importance to this question of immigration as we who come from the sparsely settled region of the west do, I hold that even in the older provinces the thinking men are not inclined to under-estimate the importance of this great question, on which the future of our country depends. Of course, I am aware, as we all are, that a year or two ago representations, and very strong representations, were made by the trades and labour organizations of our towns and cities against the system of assisted passages then in vogue, and I confess I sympathize very strongly with those who made those representations; for I think if I were in their place I would think as they did, and would remonstrate most strongly against the system which had been adopted of bringing to our shores artizans from England and other European countries, who, in many instances, flocked to the towns and cities, where the labour market was already over-stocked, and so throwing out of employment many who had families to support and who had paid taxes for many years. Besides, their arrival here would have the effect of causing a reduction of wages, a thing that the human soul abhors. I think the Government acted wisely in listening to the remonstrances made by the trade organizations and in stopping assisted passages to mechanics coming from the mother country and other European lands ; but I am inclined to think that the Government listened a little too eagerly, and in their anxiety to do away with that which they believed to be a grievance, went too far, for I believe it was a mistake on their part to cease aiding immigrants who are not mechanics, and who wish to seek our shores with a view of making homes for themselves. This class of immigrants is not only desirable from the standpoint of the country, but they increase the wealth by increasing the market of the very persons who were remonstrating against assistance being given to them. I trust that in the near future the Government will find the finances of this country in such a shape that they will be able to restore the vote for immigration, not only to the figure at which it stood last year, but to a very much larger sum. I trust that they will see their way to adopt a much more active and energetic immigration policy than we have seen in the past ; for they must remember that Canada is not the only country on the face of the globe in which immigrants, desirous of leaving the old country, can find homes. They must remember that the United States, and our sister colonies of Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, not to speak of Buenos Ayres and other South American countries, are eagerly competing for immigrants, and that in order to induce them to come to our shores we have to offer at least as great inducements as do these other lands. We have in our western country a land fit to be the home of millions, and I expect that long before many of those who are at present in this House pass away from the earth they will see that country, perhaps not the home of millions, but the home of hundreds of thousands, all of whom have improved their position by coming there, and all of whom have become happy and contented settlers in this Canada of ours. Mr. Chairman, although I do not agree with the policy the Government are at present adopting in cutting down the vote for immigration purposes, I by no means wish to see them change sides with the gentlemen on your left, for I feel that if those at present in Opposition once got the reins of power I could well say : God help the North-West ; because ever since 1878 no measure has been proposed which would advance the interest of Manitoba or the western country that has not been opposed by the gentlemen sitting to the left of the Speaker. I presume that that is caused to a great extent by the fact that the representatives sent to Parliament from that country have mainly supported the Government of the day, and that that has raised the antagonism of the gentlemen who wish to oust the Government and take their places. The hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong) in his speech this evening blamed the Government very much for granting lands to aid the building of railways in the North-West. He is not in his seat at present, but if he were I should like to ask him how he expected that western country to be filled up without railways. The settlers could only have settled along the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and when settlement extended back from that line as it has already done, and as it did many years ago, the settlers would at once cry out for railway communication to enable them to reach the market. The Government would then find itself in the position of being obliged to build the railways out of the public funds or to give the aid which they have already given to railway companies, either by granting lands or in the shape of a money bonus. I do not believe that the settlers of the North-West grudge the aid that has been given to any railway which has been carried on and built and has enabled the settlers to get their grain cheaply and readily to market. The hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong) also sneered at the remarks which have fallen from many members on this side of the House with regard to the speeches made by hon. gentlemen opposite having had the effect of inducing immigrants who had come to this country to leave it, and also of persuading our young men to move across the border. He said that he did not believe that either the immigrants who had arrived here, or our own people, would send down to Ottawa for a copy of the Hansard to read the speeches of hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House. Well, Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt he is perfectly correct in that, but that is not the way that speeches delivered by hon. gentlemen opposite have done harm. Some four or five years ago when I was travelling on the Chicago and Milwaukee Railway from Chicago to St. Paul, I myself saw a pamphlet got up by that railway company in which a number of quotations were contained from speeches made by the Hon. Edward Blake at that time leader of the Opposition. The pamphlet had a photograph of that hon. gentleman on the first page and that was being distributed to immigrants who were passing through, many of whom were heading for the North-West, by agents employed by railway companies who held land grants in the states. You can easily understand what effect that would have on the minds of incoming settlers, when they saw that the leader of one of the great parties in this country had spoken so highly of the wheat fields of Dakota and had painted our own wheat fields in such disadvantageous colours as compared with theirs. I think, Sir, that in acting as they have done in this case, the members of the Opposition have allowed their love for party to overcome their love for country, and I do not think that we would have anything to hope if we fell into their hands. I trust, as I have already said, that before the next estimates come down, the Minister of Finance will be able to advise the Minister of Agriculture that he has plenty of funds at his disposal, that he can adopt a bolder and more vigorous immigration policy, and that he can apply more money to secure those immigrants which this country so much requires.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he recollects ever reading any portion of any speech of any member from this side of the House, that claimed that there were better natural advantages in any portion of the United States than in any part of our North-West ?

Mr. MACDONALD (Winnipeg). You mean natural advantages of soil ?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. MACDONALD (Winnipeg). I cannot say that I do, but I have read speeches which tried to show that the settler there occupies a very much better position than the settler in Canada ; that here the Canadian Pacific Railway is such a grinding monopoly that it was impossible to live under it, whereas that monopoly did not exist in the United States. I may state that in none of these speeches which told against our country were the advantages which it contained ever alluded to. For instance, there was that celebrated speech by Mr. Edward Blake, then first lieutenant of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), in which he described British Columbia as a sea of mountains. I do not care a rap whether that was an original remark of the hon. gentleman, or quoted from Principal Grant or any one else; but I would call the attention of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) to the fact that that description of the Province of British Columbia, though it might be eminently calculated to attract tourists on the look-out for scenery, was not calculated to induce immigrants to seek British Columbia as a home, particularly as the hon. gentleman who made the speech forgot to mention that between the mountains scattered through that country there were some of the most beautiful and fertile valleys in the world, and that many of the mountains themselves were filled with minerals.

Mr. FORBES. I wish to say a few words in reply to the remarks made by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Macdonald). I cannot agree with him that there is anything in the policy of the Government advantageous to the settlement of the Dominion as a whole. As regards Manitoba and the North-West Territories, their policy may have been advantageous to the settlers to a certain extent, but their policy in relation to railroad development and grinding monopolies has been entirely antagonistic to the opening up of the country for settlement. But I rose simply to make a suggestion to the Government that occurred to my mind while listening to the hon. gentleman's speech. That is, that a portion of this large sum of money which they are asking this Committee to vote, might be expended in enlarging the bureau controlling the immigration system, by opening up some branch in which every farm or lot owned by any person in the Dominion would be recorded, and a price put upon it at which the owner would be willing to sell the property. From such a record incoming settlers would be able to ascertain the price at which an acre or fifty acres or a larger portion of land could be obtained. In that way thousands of acres in the older provinces might be taken up by immigrants. We have hundreds and thousands of acres in the Maritime Provinces that are not cultivated, and it can easily be seen how quickly the province would be opened up under that system. As a Nova Scotian I have to express my regret that the province from which I come has lost not only its share of immigration, but a large portion of its natural increase within the past ten years, and that it has only increased in population in that time to the extent of about 9,000. The county which I represent has increased only thirty-three souls. In these progressive days this is a fact which one can consider only with serious regret. It touches us representatives of the Maritime Provinces most keenly. The result will deprive the Province of Nova Scotia of one representative; but if the Government could strain the law so as to save that province that member, I would support them in so doing. The result of the census will probably be that when another Parliament is elected the eastern provinces will lose four members and Manitoba gain two, making a reduction of two in the number of members of this House. I agree with those who attribute the loss of our population to the policy of the present Government, and it is greatly to be regretted. I ask the Government to consider the suggestion I make. I believe that the Local Governments are about to consider the possibility of adopting some system whereby the vast stretches in those provinces which are now unoccupied shall receive their share of immigration.

Resolutions reported.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 2 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 10th September, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE CUSTOMS ACT.

Mr. FOSTER moved third reading of Bill (No. 155) to amend the Acts respecting duties of Customs.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Before the Bill is read a third time, I desire to make a few remarks and to offer an amendment to the House. It will be remembered that item 3 of section 1 of the Bill provides:

"All sugars above number 14 Dutch standard in colour, and refined sugar of all kinds, grades or standards, and all sugar syrups derived from refined sugars, a specific duty of eight-tenths of a cent per pound."

I propose, Mr. Speaker, to offer the following resolution for the consideration of the House:—

That the said Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to a Committee of the whole House to amend item 3 of section 1 of said Bill, so as to provide that all sugars No. 16, and under, Dutch standard in colour, shall be admitted free of duty, and that the duty on all sugars over No. 16 Dutch standard in colour, be reduced to one-half cent per pound.

It will be noticed, Mr. Speaker, that I propose two changes. The tariff fixes the standard below which sugars may be admitted duty free at No. 14, Dutch standard of colour. I propose that the House, if it sees fit, should amend that by raising the standard to No. 16. That, I think, will be of very material benefit to the people of this country, and it is so reasonable a proposition in itself that I think the House should not hesitate to sanction it. I do not desire to take up much of the time of the House, because this subject has been pretty fully discussed at previous sittings. At the same time, as I suppose we are to have a vote upon the question, it will be just as well for us to recognize the position in which we stand in reference to sugar. The Finance Minister in his Budget speech announced that he was about to give the people free sugar; but that was scarcely a correct description of the change he was making in the tariff. He has given free sugar to the refiners of the country; he has given them their raw material free; but I think that it cannot be truthfully said that he has given the people of the country free sugar, because sugars of No. 14 and under are not sugars that can be or will be used to any appreciable extent by the people of the country. In fact, fixing the standard at No. 14 is, in my view, absolutely prohibiting the free importation of all sugars that can be used upon the tables of the people of this country. My first proposition, then, is to change the standard at which sugar is admitted free from No. 14 to No. 16 Dutch standard. While with the standard fixed at No. 14, scarcely any free sugar would come into the country at all, if it were fixed at No. 16 I think considerable quantities would come in, and they would come in to the great advantage of the people of the country. This change would also have a beneficial effect upon a trade which the House has expressed its great desire might be cultivated and enlarged, namely, the trade with the West Indies. We have had in previous discussions, and it is not necessary to review the matter now, full proof before us that if the standard were fixed at No. 16, a very large and profitable trade might be done with the Island of Jamaica, whereas with the standard fixed at No. 14 we had the absolute proof that it simply meant the impossibility to develop any trade with that Island. We know that the cultivation of that trade was deemed so important that the Finance Minister himself went to the Island of Jamaica on purpose to promote it; and if a change such as I propose can be made that will bring about a marked extension and development of that trade, it will be only carrying out the expressed desire of the House; and if my resolution is voted down, I wish hon. members to recognize that in voting it down they are demonstrating that they desire to kill off not merely a possible but a probable profitable trade with that Island, which they have hitherto expressed the strongest desire to cultivate. Now, with reference to the second portion of my resolution, I propose, in addition to raising the standard at which sugars may be admitted free to No. 16, to provide that all sugars over No. 16, instead of paying a duty of $\frac{8}{100}$ of a cent per pound, as the Bill provides, shall pay $\frac{5}{100}$ of a cent per pound. I might remark that the law at present in force in the United States fixes the standard for the admission of free sugar at No. 16 Dutch standard in colour, and the duty levied by the United States upon sugars over No. 16 Dutch standard in colour is $\frac{5}{100}$ of a cent per pound. Hon. gentlemen opposite avow that the reason they are putting this duty on refined sugar is to carry out one of the principles of their party, which they contend the country has sustained at every general election, that is, the principle of protection to the manufacturers of this country. It is alleged by the Minister of Finance that it is necessary that there should be $\frac{8}{100}$ of a cent per pound of duty levied in order that they might exist in the country. Well, if we take that as a fact that the $\frac{8}{100}$ of a cent a pound is necessary in order to maintain them, then we have it as a fact, announced by the Minister of Finance, that it requires $1,800,000 of the people's money to keep them alive. It is replied by hon. gentlemen opposite that they are not exacting the full amount of protection, that they are not charging $\frac{3}{100}$ of a cent a pound more for sugar than any other country. If we grant that proposition, it only establishes the fact that it is not necessary, in order to maintain them in existence, to give them that amount of duty; and if it be not necessary, why should they be put in a position to enable them, if they choose, to exact that amount from the people. Now, I propose to quote an authority from their own side, because in appealing to them, I should arouse hostility in their minds if I were to quote the statement of an opponent of their National Policy and principles. Let me take them on their own ground, and give them the arguments and statements of the official organ of the manufacturers of this country. Let me give them the views of the National Policy organ as to how this matter of the sugar duties, as arranged by the Minister of Finance, stands, even when viewed from the standpoint of an authority which hon. gentlemen opposite will certainly admit is most friendly to them. I find in the issue of that journal of 7th August several articles dealing with this very question of sugar, and in one of the articles that journal goes on to state that American granulated sugar has been sold in England at $3.70 per 100 pounds, that the Americans at the same time were charged in their own country $4.25 per 100 pounds. The argument of the writer then is, if that sugar could be sold profitably at $3.70 in England, it was evident it could be sold at that price in the United States, and that the difference between the price in England and that which the American people paid was the burden imposed upon the American people. So that when I compare our prices with the American prices, it must be remembered I institute a comparison with the prices of sugar in a country where the prices are raised higher than they would be were that country not working under a protective system and extending the benefits of protection to their manufactures. The article goes on to say:

"If a protection of 50 cents per 100 pounds on refined sugar is unnecessary for American refineries; if it involves the loss of a large revenue from raw sugar, without any corresponding advantages to the consumer, and along with this, affords to the refiners a means of exacting exorbitant profits from the public, what can be said in favour of the higher rate of 80 cents per 100 pounds, under the Canadian tariff? The Canadian consumer is not only placed in a worse position than his neighbours across the border by the higher rate of duty, but he is further debarred from obtaining that relief which is afforded in the United States, where fair qualities of domestic brown sugars can be imported free of duty, sugars No. 14 to No. 16 D. S. being subject to prohibitory duties in Canada. If 60 cents per 100 pounds covers the cost of the labour, cooperage, management, interest on capital, insurance and repairs of buildings and machinery, and all the money expended in Canada in refining, and this is the only part of the cost which should be protected, then about 40 per cent. on this amount, or say 25 cents per 100 pounds, should be ample protection. Under this rate, refiners would have a fair margin for profit, and the consumers of Canada would save 50 cents per 100 pounds, or about $1,250,000 per annum on the 125,000 tons of sugar consumed annually. From a careful consideration of the surrounding facts we have been forced to the conclusion that the present sugar policy of the Government is not in accordance with the principles of the National Policy, and that it has not been framed in the best interests of the people."

That is the argument of the Canadian Manufacturer, the organ of the protectionist party, and I think hon. gentlemen opposite will find it rather difficult from their own standpoint to justify the position the House has previously taken with reference to fixing the sugar duties, when they find their own organ taking that view. We can account for this plain writing in the organ of the National Policy party by the supposition that the advocates of that policy see that the arrangement of these sugar duties is so iniquitous in its nature, is so calculated to arouse the highest indignation of the people, that it will injure the whole fabric and structure of the National Policy. It is too glaring, it is not to be defended on the ground of maintaining manufacturing industries in our midst, because that journal shows conclusively that these industries would be maintained if there was a million of revenue put into the treasury by way of levying part of this duty on the raw sugar which the refiner uses, or if we give that amount of money to the consumer by giving him cheaper sugar. I will read another article in the same issue, for in it there are no less than three or four articles devoted to these sugar duties, so that hon. gentlemen opposite will see how indefensible they are when the organ brought into existence to maintain the policy of protection is forced to speak in the way it does:

"Mr. Foster was induced to place raw sugar upon the free list chiefly because the United States had done so; for without such a change there would have been such a wide difference in the prices of sugar in the two countries as would have induced much smuggling of the article in Canada. We are accustomed to regard the McKinley tariff as the acme of protection, and when the American Congress places the duty upon refined sugar at one-half cent per pound it may be safely inferred that that amount of protection to the American sugar refining industry was quite sufficient to secure the manufacture of refined sugar to American refiners. That this matter was well considered and digested is evident from the fact that in debating the question in Congress it was contended that even a lower duty—four-tenths of a cent per pound—was sufficient for the purpose; but the McKinley spirit prevailed and the rate was fixed at one-half cent per pound. If, then, $10 per ton duty is high enough to protect American refiners, why should not that duty be high enough to protect Canadian refiners? Canadian refineries are new institutions. They have been, generally, in successful and profitable operation for many years, and it is to be supposed that as far as their management, their machinery and their appliances go, they can be operated quite as economically as American refineries. Why, then, should they be protected by the tariff to the extent of $6 per ton more on their products than American refineries? This is not according to the ethics of protection.

"We illustrate our contention by the presentation of a few facts. Mr. Foster stated in his Budget speech that in 1889 the consumption of sugar in Canada reached the enormous amount of 223,841,171 pounds, or, in round numbers, about 112,000 tons. If this quantity of sugar were refined in the United States the protection upon it there would be, at $10 per ton, $1,120,000 representing what the refiners would obtain for their services. But being refined in Canada the protection now offered by Mr. Foster would be, at $16 per ton, $1,792,000, or $672,000 more than the American refiners, under the McKinley tariff, would receive for the same service."

I hope the House grasps the statement that we are giving to the four sugar refineries of this country $672,000 per annum more than the manufacturers of that country need under the McKinley tariff, which is supposed to be the acme of protection.—

"Why should Canadian refiners receive 60 per cent., or $6 per ton more for their services than what the McKinley tariff gives the American refiners? On June 19, 1889, the London Times published a letter from Mr. James Duncan, chairman of the British Sugar Refiners' Association, in which he stated that in the previous year 740,000 tons of sugar were refined in the United Kingdom in twenty-six refineries, employing 4,260 men. An average distribution of production and labour in this British industry would give 28,450 tons to each refinery working with 164 hands. There are said to be four refineries in Canada, and it is supposed that they have capacity to manufacture all the refined sugar required in the country. This being the case an average distribution of production of 112,000 tons of sugar among them would be 28,000 tons each, a little above the average to British refineries. On the same basis only 164 hands would be required to each refinery, and the whole number of hands required to operate these four Canadian refineries, manipulating 112,000 tons of sugar per year, would be only about 650 men. Allowing that, as in the case of the American refineries, a duty of $10 per ton is sufficient to maintain the industry, afford fair remuneration for capital invested, and guarantee employment to labour, we find that the higher Canadian duty of $16 per ton represents an opportunity to the Canadian refiners to further benefit themselves to the extent of $720,000 per year. This is not according to the ethics of protection. Surely Mr. Foster must have viewed this question in this light when considering the duty he proposed levying upon importations of refined sugar. The high duty of $16 per ton will effectually shut out all importations of refined sugar, and therefore the revenues cannot possibly be benefited by it; and he may be sure that the refiners—after the adjournment of Parliament—will govern their business according to the unique advantage he has placed within their reach."

They do not anticipate that within the time of the sitting of Parliament, they will take full advantage of it, but when Parliament rises, no further interference can take place.

An hon. MEMBER. What paper is that?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is the Canadian Manufacturer, which is the special organ of the manufacturers of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the same you read before.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It is the same paper, but it is not the same issue, and I have other copies of the same paper in which it returns to the charge, showing that, whatever explanations hon. gentlemen may have been able to give, they failed to convince the able editors of their organ that their position was wrong. There is another article in the same issue which says:

"In a former article we contended that, if the Government had preserved a duty of 40 or 50 per 100 pounds on raw sugar, and put the duty on refined at 80 cents, the country would have derived a revenue of over a million dollars, and consumers would have obtained their refined sugar as cheaply as they do now. The revenue so derived would have enabled the Government to aid many public works which it is now unable to assist; and a very small portion of it appropriated for the encouragement of the beet sugar enterprise, would have secured its rapid and certain success. We believe an error has been committed in this matter, which, in its results, will tend to cast discredit on the National Policy, which may suffer far more severely from this mistake of its leaders than it can from the assaults of its opponents.

"Owing to the radical change in the sugar policy of the United States, we expected that a large reduction of the sugar duties in Canada was inevitable. He did not believe, however, that there was any political necessity for such a radical change as has been made, not that the financial position of the country warranted the abandonment of over $3,000,000 of annual revenue; nor could we have imagined that nearly the half of this loss of revenue would be allowed to fall into the hands of three or four refining companies. The maintenance of the former policy would have been attended with less harm than the present one. Government has already been compelled to abandon some public works, and to refuse its accustomed assistance to others, whose utility it has acknowledged and whose claims it has admitted, for the sake of an empty cry of 'free sugar'—and still sugar is far from being 'free.'"

The Finance Minister thought we were trying to rob him of the glory of giving the people free sugar, but the organ of his party says that he has lost three millions of revenue by his action, and has not given free sugar, but that one-half of that amount has gone to four sugar refineries in this country. Before denouncing anyone on this side of the House, let him begin with the friend of the hon. gentleman, whose utterances I have been reading, and whose statements and arguments I think he will be unable successfully to controvert. Hon. gentlemen thought I was reading from the same paper that I have read from before, but I did not desire to repeat what I have already read, and I have issue after issue of that paper here constantly returning to the same charge. On 21st August he says :

"Under the new Canadian tariff the domestic consumption of sugar is restricted to refined sugar, for no sugar not higher than No. 14 Dutch standard is suitable for domestic use. In the United States under the McKinley tariff, all sugar not higher than No. 16 Dutch standard is admitted duty free, and this includes centrifugal and similar sugars which are well suited for domestic use, and which is largely used there, because they are about $1.50 per 100 pounds cheaper than refined sugar. If the Canadian tariff had placed the limit of free sugar at No. 16 Dutch standard, so that the masses of the people could obtain sugar that they could use for domestic purposes, and costing them a cent and a-half less than refined sugar, the per capita consumption of sugar in Canada would be greatly increased, and at the same time this consumption would probably be twenty-five per cent. or more of all the sugar used in this country. Another view of this sugar question is this :—If the consumers of sugar in Canada were to receive the benefit arising from the removal of the duty upon refining sugar, or even a considerable portion of it, no objection could be raised to that removal, but as we have before shown, while the Government stands to lose the whole duty, the refiners are the only ones who are benefited, for this so-called free sugar is not suitable for domestic use, and the duty upon such sugars as are suitable, afford the refiners the opportunity to force consumers to pay very much more for their product than was ever intended by the upholders of the National Policy.

"As we have shown, American refiners can compete with European refiners in the British market, and while operating under almost precisely and quite as favourable circumstances, one-half the protection now offered by Mr. Foster would enable the Canadian refiners to continue to heap up riches. But if the duty must be kept at 8-10 of a cent per pound, where Mr. Foster thinks it should be kept, he should have allowed the Government to divide the profits with the refiners by imposing a light duty upon refining sugars. This would not have closed the refineries nor yet have advanced the price of refined sugar, but it would have afforded a revenue of a million dollars or more to the Government. If the Government could find no other use for so large an amount of money, it could have been applied to the payment of the public debt."

The hon. Minister of Finance will see that it states he would have a million dollars to use, and if he could not employ it in necessary works, he could apply it to the redemption of the public debt. But his own organ states that instead of doing that he has so arranged it that he gives that sum to four sugar refining companies that we have in this country, that they get the whole benefit of it, that the consumers of sugar do not get the benefit, and the revenue is lost. He will not wonder, then, that I have felt it necessary to submit this proposition to the House, that will enable the House to see whether it would not be wise now, while there is yet time, that we should revise this item in the tariff. I do not ask him to leave the refiners without protection ; my resolution allows the same protection to the refiners that is given to the refiners in the United States, where they are working under a protective system, where they are working under the McKinley tariff ; I propose to reduce the duty to the same extent and leave the refiners ample protection, as this argument clearly shows, while at the same time it will give to the people of this country the benefit of a million dollars of cheap sugar. As the Finance Minister rested his whole contention in this matter upon the necessity of maintaining these four refineries which, according to these figures, only employ 650 hands, I am directing my remarks from their own standpoint in reference to this matter, and I say that his policy is unwise, that he can accomplish all he proposes in the maintenance of these refineries, and still, either place the duty on the raw sugar of the refiner or give to the consumers their sugar a million dollars a year cheaper. But he may say, perhaps, that this able writer may not be a manufacturer, that he does not thoroughly understand the sugar question, that that there are some points, at least, that he does not understand, while he may think that the refiners could refine sugar with half a cent per pound protection and that is what they would have if the duty on refined sugar was half a cent a pound, provided they had their raw material free. If he says that the writer does not understand the business, I will give him, and I will give the House the authority of one who does know what it costs to refine sugar, an authority that I think even he will not dare to controvert—I propose to give him the testimony of the Hon. Mr. Drummond, the head of one of the largest sugar refineries in this country, and I call his attention to what Mr. Drummond says in reference to this matter. Mr. Drummond, speaking from his seat in the Senate in 1889, on 12th March, in a discussion that was going on there, used this language :

"Before closing, I would like to give one other fact. I have known gentlemen having come from England being struck with the cheapness of sugar there as compared with the prices of sugar in this country. They ignore entirely the fact that the refined sugar which is sold in England is manufactured from raw material, upon which no impost of any kind has been imposed by the Government ; and not only that, but probably manufactured from raw material artificially cheapened by the operation of bounties on the continent of Europe. The company to which I have referred before, and of which I am an official, contributed to the revenue of this country last year some very considerable sums of money. We paid in duties on our raw material very nearly $1,500,000. In all the discussions which have taken place on this subject this fact has been entirely ignored."

Now, I ask the Finance Minister's attention to what follows :

"Now, as a manufacturer, I say that my preference is distinctly to be placed in the position of the manufacturer of cotton, and have my raw material duty free. If that were so, I honestly believe that I could supply the trade and the country with sugar as cheaply as in England ; but as a manufacturer it is perhaps stepping out of my province to suggest it."

Now, there is what a gentleman, who has been at the head of one of the largest refineries in this country, states in his place in the Senate, as reported in the Official Debates, that if they had given him his raw material duty free he believed he could manufacture and sell sugar as cheap as they do in England ; and yet the Government solemnly propose, on the consumption of 223,000,000 pounds of sugar per annum, to give the refiners the benefit of $\frac{8}{10}$ of a cent per pound. Why, Sir, the proposition, when it is looked at in the light of what this gentleman states himself, I think, ought to convince the House that it is the absolute duty of this House to revise this item in the tariff—not to wipe out the manufacturer, not even to do as Mr. Drummond suggests he would do, when he says : Give me my raw material duty free and I will manufacture without any protection at all—for that is virtually what he says. But my motion is to reduce the duty to half a cent a pound, which means, on 223,000,000 pounds of sugar per annum, over a million dollars—instead of $\frac{8}{10}$ of a cent, as is proposed here, or $1,800,000. Why, Sir, what did the leader of this Government say in the Senate in the same year, speaking on the sugar question ? He was pointing out the protection the sugar refiner had at that time ; and he said :

"Has anyone ever heard it stated that the taxation of raw sugar for refining purposes, which does not affect in any respect the manufacturers of refined sugar, except to compel them to raise the money to pay the duties, and which does not protect them in the slightest degree, is nearly as great as the duty on refined sugar."

That is what Mr. Abbott, the leader of this Government in the Senate, states, that under the old tariff the duty on raw sugar was nearly as high as the duty on refined sugar. Now, what does the Finance Minister propose in this Bill before us? Why, that there shall be $\frac{8}{100}$ of a cent per pound more duty upon the refined sugar than there is upon raw sugar. I think the House will see at once that the amount of protection, as given by the Minister, is so excessive in its nature that it cannot be defended; that the organ of the party, speaking specially for it, in article after article, has pointed out that that proposition is so monstrous in its nature that it will tend to bring discredit upon the whole system of which these hon. gentlemen opposite are the exponents. Now, my proposition is not a proposition that sugar be placed upon the free list all round; I am proposing that they shall alter their tariff, and in the alteration of that tariff that the refiners of this country shall have the same amount of protection, or as large an amount of protection, as the refiners have in the United States. From the articles I have quoted it will be seen that the manufacturers in the United States are exacting in part the protection they have from their own people, as proved by the fact that they are able to sell their sugar at 40 and 50 cents per 100 pounds less in England than they do in their own country, where they are doing a profitable business. The facts of the case to-day are that the sugar quoted in Canada is about 30 cents per 100 pounds higher in Canada than it is in the United States, where they are taking the benefit in a great measure of the amount of protection that they have there. If you compare it with the prices of sugar in England where sugars are free, it will be found that a large part of this $\frac{8}{100}$ of a cent per pound is being taken by the manufacturers of this sugar upon the product of their manufacture, and the article I have read from the Canadian Manufacturer says there is every probability—that is the assurance given to the Finance Minister by that writer that when Parliament rises—they will take the full benefit of the unique advantage that he has placed within their reach. An argument was made by hon. gentlemen, when the subject was discussed in Committee, in which they pointed out that, with respect to low grade yellows in this country, the proportion was very much greater than in the United States. There was some force in that argument, and it was the only argument that seemed to carry any weight as against placing refined sugars under No. 16 on the free list. But hon. gentlemen opposite who are acquainted with the subject will agree with me that, while that might have been the case when we had a very high duty on sugar before, now, with the raw sugar for the refiner free, there will be an increasing amount of granulated sugars, white pure sugars being sold in proportion to yellows, that yellows will decrease and granulated sugars will take their place. So there will probably be no difference in the relative consumption of these sugars in this country and the country to be south of us. I will occupy no more time of the House, but I beg, Mr. Speaker, to submit the proposition which I have placed in your hands.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

Mr. STAIRS. Before the amendment is put to the House, I should like to say a few words in reply to the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), and also upon the general question of the sugar-refining industry in Canada. I may say, I only wish I had the good voice and pleasant manner of that hon. gentleman, for I feel sure, if I possessed them, I would present my case more effectually to the House than I can do now. However, I ask the House to bear with me, for I feel the arguments I can put before the House this afternoon, and the facts and figures I can give, will completely convince every impartial hearer that the case as put by the hon. gentleman should not receive the sanction of this honourable House. I have followed, as closely as I could, the remarks which that hon. gentleman has made and the quotations which he has given to the House, and I will deal with them as fully as I can, one by one. The first important question the hon. gentleman raises is one that affects this tariff in its bearing on the West India trade. Every hon. gentleman in this House is convinced that it is in the interests of Canada to encourage the West India trade as much as possible, and it is partly on that account that we, on this side of the House, support the Bill to be read the third time this afternoon. I feel convinced that, if the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, which is embodied in the amendment of the hon. gentleman, were adopted, it would not have that beneficial effect which he anticipates on the West India trade, but, instead, would do a great deal to injure it, as I will show a little later on. If I understand the proposition of the hon. gentleman it embraces two main features: first, that the standard of colour at which sugars shall be admitted duty free shall be raised from No. 14 to No. 16; and that the duty on all sugars upon which duty is charged, namely, all above No. 16, is to be reduced from $\frac{8}{100}$ of a cent to $\frac{5}{100}$ of a cent per pound. First, we have to consider the effect raising the standard from No. 14 to No. 16 would have, especially as regards its bearing on the West India trade. The hon. gentleman said that if the standard was fixed at No. 16 a large trade would be done with the Island of Jamaica, and in voting down his resolution hon. gentlemen on this side of the House are demonstrating that they wish to vote down any attempt to encourage the West India trade. I desire, in reply to that remark, to point out to the hon. gentleman, what I am sure he is not aware of, that in that Island very little sugar is made over No. 14 Dutch standard. A reliable authority from the Island itself has said that this quality of sugar does not constitute more than 10 per cent. of the whole output. If my recollection serves me, the whole product of sugar in Jamaica is in the neighbourhood of 25,000 tons. If 10 per cent. of that sugar is over No. 14, the hon. gentleman will see that it only leaves about 2,500 tons which the adoption of the policy of that hon. gentleman would enable to be brought into Canada free of duty that can not come now. This applies not only to the product of sugar in the Island of Jamaica, but also, in a general sense, to the product of all the West Indian Islands, as I will show more fully a little later on; and, therefore, there is nothing in the argument put forward by the hon. member for South Brant this afternoon that the tariff as embodied in this Bill will do anything to injure or curtail the trade with the West Indies. I shall now proceed to show, not only that this tariff will not have the effect of curtailing it, but that its real effect will be to maintain the import trade Canada now has, because I assert, and I defy contradiction, that a trade between Canada and the West Indies cannot be conducted unless you have a profitable refining industry in Canada. That is evident from the fact I have stated, that but a very small portion of the sugars made in the West Indian Islands, in all the islands, are of a colour light enough and suitable to go into consumption directly; or, to put the matter in other words, nearly all the output of the West Indies is a class of sugar that has to be refined to make it suitable for the larger number of consumers in all civilized countries. Then there is another reason why it would not be wise for this House to adopt the amendment of the hon. member for South Brant, and it is because it would apply not only to the raw sugars coming from the country of production, but it would let in a very large quantity of dark refined sugars running from No. 14 to No. 16, which would very seriously interfere with the working of the sugar refiners in Canada. This would be the case to a much larger extent, and it would have a more serious effect upon refining in Canada than the proportionate consumption of those sugars in Canada would lead one to suppose, because the output of those low grades of yellow sugar in the refineries of the United States and of the United Kingdom, especially those of the United Kingdom, are to a certain extent waste products—perhaps that is a rather strong expression, but they are products which the refiners find it difficult to dispose of, and they, therefore, sell them at prices very much less than their real cost, and if these sugars are allowed to come into Canada to compete with the low grades of yellows made by our refiners, it will have the effect not only of reducing the price of those yellows, which is not by any means the most serious effect, but it will also take from the refiners the chance of disposing of their low grades at prices which enable them to manufacture fine grades at moderate prices. Every hon. gentleman will see that if they had to dispose of a considerable proportion of the output at exceedingly low prices, much below cost, they must, in order to carry on their work, put a higher price on the better grades of sugars. I now come to consider what will be the effect of reducing the rate of duty from $\frac{8}{100}$ of a cent as it stands in this Bill to $\frac{5}{100}$ of a cent, as proposed in the amendment of the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson). Before doing so I wish to state the general fact that the present tariff and the late tariff, so far as the protective part is concerned, did not increase the price of refined sugars to the consumers in Canada at all. If that is the case it does not make very much difference to the consumer whether the duty be $\frac{8}{100}$ of a cent or $\frac{5}{100}$ of a cent per pound, except that if you make the protection too low you allow the same effect to take place that I said would follow if you raised the standard from 14 to 16. That is, you allow the importation of a large quantity of low grade sugars which could not otherwise come in, and that would affect seriously the market of our own refiners for the low grade sugars. A little later on I propose to give the prices of refined sugars as they exist in Canada to-day, and as soon as I state them the House will be convinced that it is utterly impossible that the refiners are taking advantage of even the small protection of a fraction of $\frac{8}{100}$ of a cent per pound which exists under this tariff. The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) said that when we maintained this protection of $\frac{8}{100}$ of a cent per pound, it requires $1,600,000 or $1,800,000 of the money of the people of this country to support the refiners of Canada. I deny that emphatically. Even if the hon. gentleman's figures had been correct, and I presume he did not understate them, according to his own statement this evening that the prices of sugars were only 30 cents per 100 pounds higher in Canada than in the United States, it shows it would be only taking $600,000 instead of $1,800,000.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is over and above what the American refiners take. Take it by the English figures.

Mr. STAIRS. I will take them both in a little while. I will show the hon. gentleman, from the prices in England and the United States, that the prices of refined sugars in Canada are not increased by the $\frac{8}{100}$ of a cent per pound given as protection, by even 1 cent per 100 pounds. I will consider for a few moments the very full and lengthy extracts which the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) read from The Manufacturer, a newspaper in Toronto which he called the National Policy organ. I have not the pleasure of knowing the gentleman who conducts that paper, nor have I hardly ever read it. When he says it is a National Policy organ, I presume he has some good ground for stating so, but I affirm most strongly that the editor of that paper, or whoever wrote those articles was not posted on the subject on which he was writing about. In what I stated before, in replying to some of the arguments put forth by the hon. gentleman himself, I have incidentally shown that a great deal of what is stated in that newspaper is fallacious. The hon. gentleman read an extract from that paper in which it said—I do not suppose I can remember the exact words, but I think I can give the sense of the extract, and if I am wrong the hon. gentleman can correct me. The extract was in effect:

"American granulated has sold in England at 3⅜ cents per pound, and if it can be sold profitably in England at 3⅜ cents per pound, they are asking too large a price in the United States at 4¼ cents per pound."

I do not know when that happened, but so far as my argument is concerned it does not make any difference at all. In the first place, neither the newspaper nor the hon. gentleman himself had any authority for assuming that if granulated was sold for 3⅜ cents in England, it was at any profit, or even cost price was obtained for it. I will show him from the prices that have been ruling in the States for raw sugars for many months, if granulated sugar were sold for 3⅜ cents in England, it must have been sold at a loss. The hon. gentleman may ask, why they would sell it at a loss, but the answer is: Simply because there was too large a stock of granulated sugars on hand and as the refiners wished to unload it, it paid them better to send it to England and get rid of it even at a loss, than to le it go at a loss in the United States. For many months the prices of centrifugal raw sugar has ranged in New York from 3⅜ to 3½. Now, I need not state to hon. gentlemen that no refiner in America or in the world can make granulated sugar out of 96 test centrifugal sugar which costs from 3⅜ to 3½, and pay all the costs of refining, and pay the freight to England, and sell it at 3¾, without a heavy loss. The prices which the paper gave as those ruling in the States, far nearer represent what the cost of the sugar would be, with perhaps a very moderate profit that any refiner would be entitled to take. Now, Mr. Speaker, it has been said in that paper that if the protection of $\frac{5}{100}$ of a cent which is given the American refiners under the McKinley Bill is enough, why is it not enough for Canadian refiners? The Canadian refiners, I believe, can refine sugar as cheaply as American refiners: at least, so near it that the difference does not affect the calculation at all. But why is it that they want a little more protection? It is because the market of Canada is not so large.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hear, hear.

Mr. STAIRS. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) thinks he has got a good point, but, if he knew what he is referring to, I am quite sure he would not be so confident. If he knew anything about manufacturing, he would know that it is very often the case that, even when a manufacturer is able to compete with another country in price, if he has to compete with a country where the output is very large, it will be at a considerable disadvantage, though he can manufacture as cheaply as the manufacturers in the other country can. The hon. member knows that the output of sugar in the United States is very large indeed, and it will sometimes happen that the refiners in the United States may want to sell some particular grade of sugar at a low price to get rid of it, because they have too large a quantity of that particular grade of sugar, or, perhaps, for some other reason. It will not affect their business at all if they can sell a small portion of their output in Canada, because they might be able to close up our refiners altogether, and then they might charge whatever price they liked afterwards. You will see that the production of sugar in the United States by the American refiners is so very large that they might sell a percentage of it to the Canadian market at a price below cost, without affecting their profits to any considerable extent. That is a fact which need not be repeated to the House because every hon. member will at once see the force of it. Any one who has had any experience in manufacturing knows that the whole tendency of manufacturing at the present day is to merge into very large concerns. Then, there is another reason why we want a little more protection in Canada than they have in the United States. It is because raw sugars cost our manufacturers a little more than they do the manufacturers of New York. That is something merely incidental to the geographical position of the refiners in the two countries. New York happens to be the great centre of the sugar trade in America, perhaps the greatest centre in the world in cane sugars, and naturally enough the freights to New York are a little lower than the freights to Canada. Therefore, if we have a slightly greater protection in Canada, the refiners do not receive the benefit of it. The hon. member for South Brant quoted from the Canadian Manufacturer with regard to the number of men employed in the refineries of this country. Now, I am not going into the question as to whether the number of men given by that paper are correct or not, because I do not need to do so in order to answer the point raised by the hon. gentleman. I only want to point out what any one acquainted with the refining business is aware of, that the number of men employed in a refinery itself form but a small proportion of the whole number who gain their livelihood from that industry. I need only refer the hon. gentleman back to what took place when the Government of the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie was in power, to prove that authorities supporting that Government took our view of this matter. If the House will pardon me one moment, I will read what was said by Mr. Workman, the then member for Montreal, who supported the Government of the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie. During the debate on the sugar refining interest which took place in this House on the 3rd of April, 1876, Mr. Workman said:

"It had been said that only 300 persons had been employed in the refinery at Montreal, but the Premier had in his possession a petition in this connection, signed by 2,800 persons, who had been directly or indirectly employed by the proprietors of this establishment. Two refineries had formerly existed in Montreal."

And he goes on to say that they had been closed. Those two refineries, which were the only ones in the country at that time, did not manufacture one-fourth of the quantity of refined sugar that is manufactured in Canada to-day. That proves conclusively that the refining industry in Canada is a very important one, as respects the number of men interested in it and obtaining a livelihood from it. I come now to treat what has been stated in The Manufacturer and quoted with approval by the hon. member for South Brant, to the effect that if the Government had seen fit to allow a duty of ½, or say ⅝, of a cent per pound upon raw sugar to remain, the price to the consumer would not have been increased at all. A little later on, when I give the prices as they have been ruling in Canada for some time, it will be seen that not one fraction of that $\frac{5}{100}$ of a cent per pound is taken by the refiners to-day.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hear, hear.

Mr. STAIRS. I am glad the hon. member for South Oxford approves; and if that be the case, the assertion of that paper, supported by the hon. gentleman——

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then you do not want any protection at all.

Mr. STAIRS—that if $\frac{5}{100}$ of a cent per pound had been left on raw sugar it would not cost the consumer any more, is incorrect; because it stands to reason that a duty on raw sugar to-day would have the same effect as the duty on raw sugar had under the old tariff. It would increase the price of sugar to the consumer exactly to the extent of the duty. I am confident that this is the case. The hon. gentleman also quoted from a speech made by the Hon. Mr. Drummond some time ago in the Senate, in which, if I understood the quotation rightly, that hon. gentleman said that if he were placed in the same position as the manufacturers of cotton, that is, with free raw material, he believed he could supply sugar as cheaply as it is supplied in England. That is probably true, but still it does not disprove the contention of the Government and of members on this side of the House that to maintain the refineries we require the protection that has been given in this Bill, for the reason that I have already explained. If you were dealing with one single article, like granulated sugar, if all the raw material were manufactured into granulated, and only granulated were consumed, then there might be something in the argument put forward by the hon. member. But when it is borne in mind that many different kinds and qualities of sugars are being made, and may be sold at very much less than cost, you will see that in order to maintain the refiners, a reasonable protection is needed, and it has to be settled what that reasonable protection is. If you are convinced that the effect of the protection is not to increase the price to the consumer, but only to ensure the market to the refiners, I am sure that we can agree that our protective tariff as regards this article has not any injurious effect in the line suggested by the hon. gentleman, and we gain all the advantages that accrue to Canada by having the article manufactured in the country. I wish now to say a few words on the general question of the sugar trade, and the benefits that have resulted from the policy put in force in 1879. One of the objects that were to be secured by the adoption of a protective tariff on sugar was to bring the sugars from the countries of production to our own ports, and have them manufactured in this country. As an illustration to prove that that policy has had this effect, I will give, very briefly, some figures as respects the Province of Nova Scotia. In 1878 there was entered in Nova Scotia for home consumption 7,895,733 pounds, on which a duty was paid of $187,825. In 1890 there were entered in Nova Scotia 50,900,000 pounds of sugar on which a duty of $641,000 was paid. In 1879 only 6 per cent. on the total importation of sugar to the Dominion was raw sugar from the countries of production. All the rest of the large quantity of sugar consumed in Canada was refined sugar brought in from the United States and the United Kingdom. Now, the effect of the policy enforced previous to 1878 was seriously to injure the carrying trade and very seriously indeed the West India trade. The West India trade is assisted and encouraged by having cargoes both ways, and it is self-evident to all who have studied this question that you cannot trade with the West Indies and get freights both ways unless you have refining industries in the Dominion, as you have not got the class of sugar to bring from the West Indies which will take the place of the refined sugar and go right into consumption. The policy enforced in 1878 and the few years previous, deprived the Canadians of the opportunity of refining their own sugar, and gave the manufacturers and the labourers of the United States the benefit derived from these industries, whereas at present our own labour receives the full benefit. Some of the advantages which accrue to Canada by bringing raw sugar to the ports of Halifax, St. John and Montreal, and refining it in this country, consist in the fact that the trade thereby gives more work to our pilots, to our tug boats, to our coal miners, to our stevedores, labourers and coopers, that it increases the light dues from vessels and the money spent in port for disbursements. It also increases the railway traffic in carriage of both coal and sugar. The vessels which take West India cargoes from the ports of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are also benefited by having return cargoes to Canada, and thus being enabled to carry the fish and other goods we export to the Islands at a lower rate. The adoption of the policy advocated by hon. gentlemen opposite would, I believe, compel our West India trading vessels to take their return cargoes to the ports of New York and Boston or return home in ballast. Any policy which interferes with the refining industries of this country is certain in time to affect our trade with the West India Islands. I desire to elaborate a little more fully the points I have already touched upon with regard to the importation of grocery sugars from the West Indies. That point has been raised several times in this House during this session, and has been brought up again by the hon. member for Brant in this debate, and I will take the opportunity of referring to it a little more fully than I did, when replying to the observations of the hon. member for Brant on former occasions. We cannot expect any considerable trade in grocery sugars from the West Indies for the reason that the consumers in Canada, as well as in the United States—and I may say practically in nearly all civilized countries—have been trained to use refined sugars. The reasons for this are many. In the first place, the packages in which refined sugar is packed are clean and very convenient, whereas the raw sugar comes in bags and hogsheads and barrels which, in many cases, are very dirty. Further, in dealing with raw sugar the loss in weight is sometimes very heavy, and the dealer can never tell how much he will get out of a hogshead, and for that reason prefers to have the refined. Then, a very small portion of the production of the West India Islands is above No. 14 Dutch standard and light enough in colour to be imported largely. It is said that not more than 10 per cent. of Jamaica sugar is of this description: and I received some time ago from New York, from a gentleman there, a letter in which he says that, as far as he knows, Cuba makes no quantity of sugar worth mentioning above 14 Dutch standard, unless since the change in the American tariff, but it has not appeared so far. Porto Rico, it appears, makes a larger quantity of sugar above No. 14, but not enough to affect appreciably the trade in this class of sugar with the people of the Dominion. For these reasons, because the consumers will have refined sugar, because we cannot get any considerable quantity of raw sugar of a suitable character from the West Indies, refined sugars will always constitute a great portion of the sugar used, and if the protection of refined sugar is so reduced that the refiners cannot operate, we will have to import refined sugar from the United States and England, and will not be able to import grocery sugar, such as has been referred to, from the West Indies. The refineries, therefore, would have to shut down, and the classes to whom I have referred as being benefited by this industry would be thrown out of work, and also—and this I know is a point which hon. gentlemen opposite will seriously consider—the West India trade would be sure to be very seriously handicapped. With respect to the operations of the refineries for some time, and the cotton factories which have been brought into operation by the National Policy, though the original shareholders may have lost—I am speaking now of the cotton factories and sugar refineries in the neighbourhood of Halifax—both the cotton factories and sugar refineries in Halifax and Dartmouth have spent $1,250,000 in salaries and wages alone since they were erected besides their large indirect disbursements in coal and freights and many other things. Many similar instances, not as regards sugar refineries alone, but all classes of factories, can be given in other parts of Canada. Is it a wonder the people prefer the policy advocated by hon. gentlemen on this side? It is an interesting fact to note that the consumption of sugar under the National Policy increased, in round numbers, 50,000 tons in twelve years. That may not altogether be attributable to the National Policy, but still it is an evidence, first, of the general advantage of the policy, and, secondly, of the prosperity of the people. The population increased only 15 per cent. whereas the consumption of sugar increased about 100 per cent. Let us see how the prices of sugar compare, taking the prices in 1878 and in 1891. In 1878, the wholesale price of granulated sugar in Montreal was from 10 to 10½ cents, duty paid. In 1891, when there was no revenue duty on sugar, the price of granulated in Montreal ranged from 4⅜ to 4⅝. Of course, to find out exactly what the consumer has to pay for manufacturing the sugar, we ought to take the price of sugar in bond in 1878, because if hon. gentlemen opposite had not collected the revenue they did on sugar they would have had to take it out of the people in some other way. The price in 1878 was 10 cents, and the average revenue duty was somewhere in the neighbourhood of 2½ to 3 cents on granulated sugar, so that the price in Montreal, if there had been no duty in force, would have been 7 cents, whereas in June of this year the price was 4⅜ cents. It shows the price in Montreal, if there had been no duty, would have been 7 cents as compared with 4⅜ now. But hon. gentlemen opposite will say that the price of raw sugar was then very much higher. That is a fair argument and the difference must be allowed, for if we want to show the real gain to consumers by the present policy as against that which hon. gentlemen opposite carried out in 1878, and refused to change, we must take the price of raw sugar and of granulated sugar then and now. Take the difference between a standard description of raw, say centrifugal sugars, 96 test, which were worth about 5 cents in New York in 1878, and compare it with the price of granulated sugar in Montreal at that time, which was about 7 cents, or a difference of 2 cents between the cost of the standard raw sugar in New York and the granulated sugar in Montreal. In June, 1891, the price of granulated sugar in Montreal was 4⅜ cents, and the price of centrifugal sugars in New York, testing 96, was 3⅜ cents, or only a difference of 1 cent, being 1 cent a pound less than the difference that existed in 1878. This is a fair and reasonable comparison, and shows that on the present consumption of sugar in Canada, the people are getting their sugar for about $2,000,000 less than they were in 1878, under the policy supported by hon. gentlemen opposite. If they compare the different prices at which sugars are sold in Canada and the United States, hon. gentlemen act unfairly in comparing the lowest refiners' prices in New York with the prices in western Ontario, after a considerable sum has been added for transport. To be fair, let us see how the prices of sugars compare in New York and Halifax. If there is any difference between those ports, the trend of the freight is a little against Halifax. On 30th June, the centrifugals in New York were quoted at 3⅜, and granulated at 4¼, while in Halifax the centrifugals were 3½ and the granulated 4¼. On 17th July, centrifugals in New York were at 3 7/16 and granulated was from 4 5/16 to 4 7/16. On 30th June, granulated was sold in Brantford at 4½, delivered. Any hon. gentleman can see for himself that the price of sugar is as low in Canada now as in the United States. The present prices in New York, as nearly as I can get them, are 3 7/16 for centrifugals testing 96, and 3 cents for Muscovadoes, and 4⅛ to 4⅜ for granulated, the Muscovadoes being a lower kind testing about 89. I will give the contents of a telegram which I have received this morning from Halifax, giving the prices of sugar there now:

"Refined granulated four one-quarter, yellow three-eight to three-half, add quarter cent, these prices for Ontario. Raw centrifugals ninety-sixth, test three-half to five-eights, Muscovado eighty-nine, test three to three-sixteenth, New York granulated four five-sixteenths."

I would ask hon. members to pay attention to these prices. I do not take yellows as a quality that you can compare scientifically, because the colours differ so greatly that you cannot make a proper comparison. You might have one yellow sugar of a bright colour, and another of a dark colour which might test higher, and therefore have cost more to make. But I want to point out how the prices of yellow sugar in Halifax compare with the prices in New York, and you will see that the refiners cannot be taking advantage of the tariff to impose on the people. Muscovado sugars are selling in New York at 3 cents and Halifax at 3 1/16 cents, and low yellows are being sold now in Halifax at 3⅛, and the refiners have to pay the cost of refining, they have to pay for the loss of weight and for the barrels, and have only 1/16 of a cent to do it on. Of course they get some profit on their granulated sugar, and, though it would not be fair to say that the advance on yellow sugar should be the same as that on granulated, there cannot be any excessive profit on either.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman should give us an idea of how many pounds of this low grade yellow sugar could be produced from this high grade raw?

Mr. STAIRS. It is hard to answer a question of that kind, because the refineries are not worked in that way. If you take a high grade sugar testing 96 and attempt to get a low grade out of it, it would be very unprofitable. You might have some gain in weight but not much.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Was the quotation you gave for the raw sugar of the same saccharine strength as that of the other sugar you referred to?

Mr. STAIRS. I think the test of the refined sugar at 3⅛ cents would not differ very much from the 89 test raw which I quoted. I hope I make myself clear.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I understand it, but I am doubtful.

Mr. STAIRS. Now, the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), in the course of his remarks, said that at the present time we were paying 50 cents a 100 pounds more on refined and granulated sugars than the people in the United States. Now, let us see how that stands. The prices of granulated in New York are about 4 5/16—that was the price given a few days ago. Granulated sugar is selling in Halifax to-day at 4¼ cents, so the House will see that the price of granulated sugar to-day in Halifax is as low as the price of granulated sugar in New York.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is it in Montreal?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then what do you want protection for?

Mr. STAIRS. The hon. gentleman from South Oxford can never be convinced. He does not know enough about the practical business of refining.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Practical robbery, you mean, for your business is robbery.

Mr. STAIRS. The hon. gentleman, I notice, finds the facts so strongly against him that he has to fall back upon his old tactics and talk about robbery. The anger that he manifests is not worthy of him, he should not indulge in it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You will hear enough of it before the debate closes.

Mr. STAIRS. The hon. members on this side of the House who are acquainted with this question are quite able to take care of anything that is said on the other side. I will just show that the prices of granulated in New York and the prices of granulated in Halifax to-day are about the same; in fact the telegram I have to-day shows that the price in New York is one-sixteenth higher, but we will call it, for the sake of argument, the same. Now, at the prices which are given in New York and the prices that are given in Halifax, sugar delivered in Ontario will cost practically the same, there will be very little difference indeed.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Would the hon. gentleman agree to deliver sugar in Ontario at the prices he has quoted?

Mr. STAIRS. I would not agree to deliver. I am not selling sugar just now. I will tell him exactly what will be done. The telegram says that the price in Halifax is 4¼ for granulated; to get the price in Ontario add ¼ of a cent per pound, and the hon. gentleman can make the calculation for himself.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is the hon. gentleman prepared to sell sugar at that price, of the same quality as Montreal sugar?

Mr. STAIRS. The quality is identical. According to this telegram the price of sugar in Brantford to-day would be about 4½ cents.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How does it happen that sugar is being sold in Montreal at 4⅝ cents with the freight added?

Mr. STAIRS. The hon. gentleman must remember that the price of sugar is, perhaps, a little lower now than it was a few days ago.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you want to buy?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Yes, I will buy at that price.

Mr. STAIRS. All the hon. member has to do is to send the order. If the Montreal refiners are a little cleverer than we are in Halifax, and able to get a little bigger price, that is not our fault. It only shows that the buyers in the west are not as sharp as I gave them credit for. But this is the price of the Nova Scotia refinery.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Of equal quality to Montreal?

Mr. STAIRS. Quite equal.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It is wonderful you do not sell more sugar in the west.

Mr. STAIRS. Now, let us take yellow. In New York, to-day, yellow sugars range from 3⅞ to 4⅛. In Montreal they are quoted at from 3½ to 4 1/16. From the prices I have given of yellows in Halifax to-day it will be seen that really there is very little difference between the New York and Canadian prices; if any, Canadian prices are lower. Now, to prove that the strong language of the hon. gentleman opposite does not apply to the sugar refiners in any way, it is a fair comparison to take the difference in the price of refined sugar in New York and the raw sugar, and the difference in the same classes of sugar in Canada. New York sugar, granulated, is worth to-day, according to the telegram which I have read, about 4·31, and 96 centrifugals are worth 3·43 per 100 pounds, showing a difference of 88 cents per 100 pounds between the price of this standard raw and the price of standard refined; whereas in Halifax granulated is sold at 4¼ net, and centrifugals are costing 3½ net, showing a difference of 75 cents per 100 pounds. Therefore, it will be seen that in refined, in Halifax to-day, they are taking 13 cents less per 100 pounds for manufacturing granulated sugar than they are in New York. Now, both during the continuance of the old tariff and since the present tariff came into force, I am convinced that refined sugar has been as low in Canada as in the United States. And, as respects England, if you take the price to-day of granulated sugar in Halifax, you cannot put English granulated there at any lower price, even if there were no duty upon it at all. The consumer in this country has the advantage of having the factories, and having his sugar in better order, of having less damage, and of getting it more quickly and easily, accordingly as he wants it. Mr. Speaker, from what I have stated upon this subject I feel that I have convinced all who have paid attention to the prices I have given, that the refiners are not taking any more for the granulated and other refined sugars to-day than they are in the United States; and, therefore, I hold that the arguments of the hon. gentleman who has proposed the amendment should have no effect upon this House, and I ask the House not to adopt them. I want to say that I am convinced that as it has been in the past, so it will be in the future, that the refiners will not take any advantage of the tariff to put their prices up after the House has prorogued. It was hinted in the paper from which the hon. member for South Brant quoted, that as soon as Parliament prorogued the refiners would take advantage of the 5/16 of a cent per pound to put their prices up. Now, some years ago I find that the refiners, when they had an opportunity under the tariff as it then existed, did not take advantage of the protection except to hold the markets for themselves. The same would be the case now, and I leave the matter in the hands of the House, and I firmly believe that the resolution of the hon. gentleman will not commend itself to the House.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Finance Minister, I judge, feels a little difficulty in attempting to justify the policy of the Government in regard to the sugar duties, and so he delegates the defence of his policy to a gentleman behind him. He may, however, have been actuated by another motive.

Mr. FOSTER. We are all equal in this House.

Mr. CHARLTON. The speech of my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Paterson) was perhaps a little fiery, and the hon. gentleman thought it was best to put a wet blanket upon it, which he has most effectually done by a tedious speech. Now, this sugar question, with all the special pleading we have listened to a few moments ago, with the attempts made by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs) to bewilder the House and the country by his mass of figures, is nevertheless a very important one indeed. The hon. gentleman assures us that we may trust the refiners, that they will take no advantage of us: we need have no fears at all. Sir, we do not need to put ourselves in a position where we will have to trust anybody, where we will have to believe that anybody will exercise forbearance towards the people of this country, when they are placed in a position to do something else. We do not need to take a position where we may trust the refiners: we need to take the position that the refiners shall have simply what is just and right, and nothing more.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the policy of the Government to some extent, is copied from that of the United States, as their policy has been for many years past. The American Government reduced the duties on certain grades of sugars, and the Canadian Government were obliged to follow suit. The action of the Canadian Government is not one they took voluntarily, but it was one which was forced on them by the necessities of the financial situation. The American Government, when removing the sugar duties, exercised that care towards the manufacturing interests which they always do. The refiners of the United States had influence enough with that Government to secure such terms as they chose to demand, and the terms given to American refiners, in my opinion, were as high, the protection as great, as any class of manufacturers could reasonably ask. What were those terms? The American refiner had not the face, the effrontery to ask the Government that a duty should be imposed on sugars that were below No. 16 Dutch standard. They had not the effrontery to ask for a protection of more than half a cent a pound. They well knew they needed no protection at all. Sugars could be laid down as cheap in New York as in Liverpool, and could be refined as cheaply in New York as in Glasgow or Liverpool; and the refiner of the United States had his natural protection, to wit, the cost of the transportation of the sugar from Liverpool or Glasgow to New York and American points. And this protection was sufficient. They asked for more, for what was an unreasonable amount, half a cent per pound in addition to the natural protection. That degree of protection, large as it is, ample as it is, is a degree of protection that the refiner of Canada is not satisfied with, but he must have $\frac{5}{16}$ of a cent per pound and must have the limit for admitting sugars free placed at 14 and exclude sugars from the operation of the free law between Nos. 14 and 16 Dutch standard. The hon. gentleman said, in the course of his speech, that a very small proportion of the sugar of Jamaica is over No. 14, and nearly all the sugar of the West Indies is only fit for refining purposes, and that if we were to attempt to procure sugars in the West Indies up to No. 16 for consumption here, we would find ourselves unable to do so. I believe the hon. gentleman is mistaken. I believe that these classes of sugar, the Porto Rico bright sugars and the classes of sugars produced in Demerara, are fit for consumption in this country, and that if there was a demand for these classes of sugar the production would equal the demand. It is simply because those low grades of sugars are imported for refining, because they answer for refining purposes as well as any others, that they have not been used for consumption. But give a demand for such sugars fit for consumption and that demand will be supplied. I well remember when I was a young man in the grocery trade we sold 10 lbs. of Porto Rico and Muscovado sugars, as they were called, for 1 lb. of refined sugar. The demand was for that class of sugars, and the same class could be produced now. They were a cheaper and actually better sugars, possessing more saccharine matter, than the sugars that are now given by our refiners to consumers. The argument is utterly fallacious that, forsooth, if we have not a supply to fill the demand, we should put on an additional duty to prevent those sugars coming in. The supply is there to fill the demand, and if they permitted the importation up to No. 16, the people would be at liberty to buy direct from the West Indies, and our shipping would have been called into requisition to bring that sugar to Canada for the purpose of supplying the want felt for the use of that sugar.

Then the hon. gentleman told us that the refined yellows would have to be sold cheaper if No. 16 sugar were admitted free of duty. Of course they would. The imposition of a duty on sugars above No. 14 is for the purpose of making the yellow sugars dearer. Whatever may be the amount of the duty, the effect is to increase the cost and value of all sugars, and the imposition of a duty on Nos. 15 and 16 is simply to enable the refiner, as the hon. gentleman in an unguarded moment admitted, to charge more for the yellow sugars he sells. Take off the duty on sugars from Nos. 14 to 16 and give the consumer the benefit of free sugars of a class he could import and use, and would import and use largely, and place the refiner under the necessity of selling the yellows at a lower rate, and we derive a double advantage: we get cheaper sugar from the refiner, and cheap and wholesome sugars imported from the West Indies.

Then the hon. gentleman enters into a long array of figures with respect to the comparative prices of sugars in New York and in Halifax, but he said very little about Montreal, and he told us it did not make much difference to the consumer whether the duty is $\frac{5}{16}$ of a cent or $\frac{7}{16}$ of a cent per pound. If it does not make much difference, then place it at $\frac{7}{16}$ of a cent and give us sugars up to No. 16 free of duty; and, if it does not make much difference to anybody, we will accept the altered condition of things and take the sugars at the lower rate at which they will be sold. The claim is made that the refiners in Canada are placed at a disadvantage in competing with the American refiners, from the fact that the freight on sugar brought from the West Indies to Canadian points is higher to some extent than the freight on sugar laid down in New York. That is true. There is a difference of perhaps 20 cents per 100 pounds, but, if the refiner had a duty simply of $\frac{1}{100}$ of a cent, that would more than compensate him for that disadvantage. As against 20 cents, he would have a duty equal to 50 cents to protect him; and, under all the circumstances, a duty of $\frac{1}{100}$ of a cent is ample to protect the Canadian refiner. We require to bear in mind the fact that the refiner in New York cannot place sugar in the hands of consumers in Quebec and the greater part of Ontario as cheaply as the Montreal refiner; and, while the New York refiner may obtain an advantage on the importation freight of 20 cents, he will lose nearly the whole of this advantage in the increased cost he must pay for transportation to Canada, as compared with the cost of transportation paid by the Montreal refiner. Moreover, he cannot place sugar in the Maritime Provinces in competition with the Halifax refiner, because he is at a greater disadvantage in bringing sugar from the West Indies viâ New York than in bringing sugar from the West Indies to Halifax. There can be no question that the general range of prices has been lower in the United States than in Canada. Yellow sugars have been very materially lower, and granulated sugars have been on an average a quarter of a cent per pound lower in New York than in Montreal. To-day, granulated is worth 4$\frac{5}{8}$ in Montreal and 4$\frac{1}{4}$ in New York. With the price on New York at 4$\frac{1}{4}$ I have no doubt that the American refiner is receiving for his sugar $\frac{1}{100}$ of a cent more than the price at which he can afford to produce it; and that the American refiner can and will export his sugars to England or any other country and sell those sugars at $\frac{1}{100}$ of a cent per pound less than in New York and in the home market, where he can put up his price by virtue of the $\frac{1}{100}$ of a cent protection. The fact is that American sugars were sold abroad at $3.70 per 100 pounds when the same sugar was sold in New York at 4$\frac{1}{4}$ cents per pound.

Mr. FOSTER. What date was that?

Mr. CHARLTON. This was the statement given by the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson).

Mr. FOSTER. Do you know the date?

Mr. CHARLTON. No, I do not know it. It was said to have been early in August. It is certain that the American refiner does sell, can sell, and will sell, in foreign markets at a lower rate than he does in his own market. He does that for the reason that he is protected in his own market and that the foreign refiner is at a disadvantage of half a cent per pound before he can meet him in his own market in competition. The fact that he does sell abroad cheaper than in his own market is proof positive that he sells in his own market at a higher rate than he can afford to sell in a foreign market. We are placing our refiners in a position where they can sell this sugar at $\frac{1}{100}$ of a cent per pound more than they ought sell it for. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs) admits the fact that we can refine sugar as cheaply in Canada as anywhere in the world, and therefore this duty places the refiners in a position where they can sell their sugar at $\frac{1}{100}$ of a cent per pound more than the cost of refining, before foreign competition can enter in to regulate the prices they charge. We assert that this gives the Canadian refiner too great an advantage. We assert that the American refiner has an advantage of half a cent per pound over all competitors, under the motion of the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), and that even that is unjust, but when you give $\frac{1}{100}$ of a cent per pound to our refiners we contend that it is a gross injustice to the people of the country.

We are told by the member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs) that American refiners may want to sell some particular grades of sugar in Canada below cost, and that their object in doing this may be to freeze out the Canadian refiners; that they may, in adopting this policy, design to obtain control of this market after freezing out the Canadian refiner. How can they do that? They have got to meet in this market the English and the Scotch refiner, and they have no advantage over either by doing this. It would be of little service to them to freeze out the Canadian refiner, even if they were able to do it, because after having done that, they would meet in Canada the same competition they meet in all other countries in the world. They might as well try to freeze out the refiner in any other foreign country. They might as well try to freeze out the refiner in any neutral market, as to attempt to freeze out the refiner in Canada, and therefore it is all nonsense to talk about that. The American refiners have to meet in Canada foreign competition, and if they are selling granulated and other kinds of sugar below cost for this mythical advantage that is asserted by the member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs), they are seeking to obtain, they are labouring under a delusion, for everyone knows that they cannot obtain any such monopoly here.

The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs) referred to some remarks made by Mr. Workman in this House in 1876 in which he made some observations with regard to the number of men employed in the sugar refining industry in Canada. It seems to be clearly demonstrated that the number of men actually required for refining sugar in Canada does not exceed seven or eight hundred at the very most. Besides these, there are the carters and the sailors and railway men employed in handling sugar, but it must be remembered that if we imported sugar, all these men would find the same employment, because if you do not reduce the consumption of sugar in the country you cannot reduce the amount of labour required in handling that sugar. Therefore, even admitting that the introduction of cheaper sugar would ruin the refining industry in Canada, it is a very high price for the people of this country to pay $1,800,000 a year, which they are obliged to pay by this duty of $\frac{1}{100}$ of cent per pound if the refiners choose to take advantage of it, to procure employment for these seven or eight hundred hands. Even admitting that these men could not find employment anywhere else, it is, I say, a very high price to pay for their employment.

It is said that a policy of putting the duty too low on sugar would damage the West Indian trade, but the proposition made by my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson) is not to adopt a policy that will prevent our refiners from transacting their business at a profit. He does not seek to close the refineries of this country, he does not seek to place them in a position in which they cannot transact a profitable business, but he simply asks that the Government shall permit the introduction, free of duty, of a certain class of brown sugar, that the people may require to use, and which they will use if it is admitted free up to 16 Dutch standard. He asks in addition to that, that the duty upon sugar shall be confined to a limit that will enable the refiners to make a good profit, but will not place them in a position to make an inordinately large profit. The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) asserts that one-half a cent per pound would be ample protection. As the hon. member for Halifax asserts that the refiners of this country can manufacture as cheaply as the refiners anywhere, then the Canadian refiners need no protection at all; but the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) says: Give the refiner half a cent per pound protection so as to place it beyond all doubt that he can command his own market, but do not give him $\frac{1}{16}$ of a cent per pound, which puts him in a position where he can rob the people of Canada at his pleasure; do not give him $\frac{1}{16}$ of a cent per pound more protection on sugar than under any circumstances he is entitled to ask.

It is simply a question as between the refiners and the people of this country, as to whether the refiners shall be placed by the Government in a position where they can make the people of this country pay $1,800,000 a year more than they can import sugar for, or whether the refiners shall be obliged to reduce these profits which they put into their pockets by $500,000 a year. The amendment of my hon. friend from Brant allows the refiners to put into their pockets over a million dollars a year more than the sugars can be imported for, and surely that ought to be enough. If these few refiners in Canada can refine as cheaply as the refiners anywhere else, surely they ought to be satisfied with a tariff that will enable them to charge ten or twelve hundred thousand dollars a year on the sugar used in Canada, more than it can be imported for. If they do not accept this, surely their demands are most unreasonable, and the Government are seriously to blame for permitting these men to exact from the people of Canada $1,800,000 a year more than under any circumstances they are entitled to. My hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson) proposes that they shall be compelled to reduce the tribute that they lay upon the people of Canada by $\frac{1}{16}$ of a cent per pound, and that they shall be satisfied with $\frac{1}{16}$ of a cent per pound profit above the price of imported sugar. I think that the demand of my hon. friend from Brant is a reasonable one. I think the country will consider his demand a reasonable one, and I think that the country will consider that the Government of the day, in submitting to the terms dictated by the refiners and in permitting the refiners to place themselves in a position where they charge $\frac{1}{16}$ of a cent per pound more for sugar than they ought under any circumstances to charge, are false to the interests of the country, and more than loyal to the interests of the refiners.

The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs) makes a comparison between the prices of raw sugar in bond at Montreal in 1878, and the prices of raw sugar there now. What has that comparison to do with the question? The question is not a question of comparative prices; the question is: Are the refiners of this country receiving terms from the Government which permits them to have an undue advantage, or not? Are the refiners of this country placed in a position where they can exact, if they choose to make a combination, higher prices for sugar than they ought to receive? That is the question, not what was the price of raw sugar in 1878, or in 1858, or any other period in our history. Of course the price of raw sugar was higher in 1878 than it is now. Is the hon. gentleman ignorant of the effect of the bounties granted to promote the production of beet-root sugar in France and in Germany? Is he ignorant of the fact that owing to the operation of these bounties the price of sugar has been constantly declining, and that it has been lower within the last few years than it has ever been known to be in the history of commercial nations? It is this that has reduced the price of sugar. But that has nothing to do with the question whether the refiners shall get $\frac{1}{16}$ of a cent per pound more than they ought to receive either here or anywhere else.

Then, the hon. gentleman says that Halifax refined sugar is only 4¼ cents a pound. How does he account for the fact that the price in Montreal is 4⅛ cents a pound? Is Halifax sugar of poorer quality than the Montreal sugar? Is he lacking in the enterprise necessary to enable him to push his sales, as he reasonably could do with the advantage of lower prices by 16 or 20 cents per hundred weight than those of the Montreal refiners? I am rather suspicious of the hon. gentleman's quotations. I cannot believe that in the regular range of prices between Montreal and Halifax the difference is so great as he represents it to be.

No, Mr. Speaker, the Government in this matter has been considering the interests of others than the people of Canada, as is their custom. They have very little regard for the millions who buy sugar or anything else; but they have very great regard for the few hundreds or thousands who are engaged in the business of supplying the wants of these millions. If they can pour money into the coffers of the few at the expense of the many they are willing to do it; it has been their constant care since 1879 to benefit the few, and to rob the many in order that they may do so. This is only a gross instance of that policy by which the refiner is granted the power to increase his gains illegitimately to the amount of over a million dollars; and the Government should be called to account for their action by some such motion as that which has been made. This resolution simply demands that the rights of the people of Canada shall be considered as of as much consequence as the interests of three or four refiners. It demands that the interests of the five million people of Canada shall weigh in the scale as heavily as the interests of the five or six hundred men who work in this industry. It demands that the principle of the greatest good to the greatest number shall guide the Government in their dealings with such questions as this. But instead of being governed by any such considerations, the Government give their ear to the few men interested in one or two refineries in Montreal and one or two in Halifax. These men say: We want such and such terms; we want you to exclude all classes of sugars that are likely to come into competition with ours; we want you to limit the importations to No. 14 instead of No. 16; we want you to prevent the people importing Muscovado and Porto Rico sugars which they can use; then we want you to place a duty of $\frac{1}{16}$ of a cent a pound on all sugars above No. 14; and, although we assert that we can refine sugars as cheaply as any refiners in the world, nevertheless we ask you to place us in a position to rob the people of Canada of $\frac{5}{10}$ of a cent a pound on 230,000,000 pounds a year, amounting to about $1,800,000, and to trust them that they will not take any advantage of the people but will deal fairly by them. It is the duty of this Parliament to deal fairly with the people ourselves, not to trust to a monopoly exercising forbearance towards them. Our duty is to guard the rights of the people there. This House represents five million people, not the four or five refiners, and this House should guard the interests of that five million people and not those of the four or five refiners. This kind of work has gone on long enough. It is time the Government set to work to guard the interests of the many and to let the few take care of themselves. We do not object to a policy which limits the duty to $\frac{1}{2}$ a cent a pound, although I would say that that is as high again as it ought to be. I would say that a duty of 2½ mills a pound is ample to give the refiners all the advantage they require. Five-tenths of a cent is more than ample, and if the Government do not concede so reasonable a proposition, if they are not willing that the refiners shall be given simply what they need to do a fair business, but that they shall be placed in a position to take $\frac{5}{10}$ of a cent a pound more out of the pockets of the people than the American refiners take, the hon. Minister of Finance will see, I am quite sure, if an impartial man and amenable to reason, how utterly indefensible such a policy is. I am sure that he cannot fail to realize that he, as the Finance Minister of this country, is the guardian of the interests of the people of this country, not those of a few men—that his duty is to look after the interests of the great masses, to see that they are not plundered or placed in a position to be plundered by rings and monopolies, as they will be if the policy of the Government in regard to this sugar duty is carried into effect.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I do not intend, Mr. Speaker, to occupy the time of the House at any length upon this question. There are only one or two points to which I wish to call the attention of hon. members before the vote is taken. The arguments of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who has just taken his seat, are, in my opinion, and I think the House will agree with me, a mere repetition of the arguments used by the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), and by him much more fully discussed and elaborated than by the hon. member for North Norfolk. These arguments were in my opinion so fully met and answered by the facts and figures presented by the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs) that I do not feel it necessary to repeat all the statements which have been already submitted to the House, in order to meet these arguments. The hon. gentleman who moved the resolution proposes to reduce the duty on refined sugars coming into Canada from $\frac{5}{10}$ of a cent per pound to $\frac{4}{10}$ of a cent per pound. The only argument which has been advanced to justify this reduction is the fact that this rate of duty has been adopted in the United States. I feel, and I believe the House will agree with me, that this is not a sufficient reason to justify the course of action proposed. Hon. gentlemen opposite make no allowance for the difference in the cost of the raw material, to which the hon. member for Halifax has referred. It is true this is not a very large item, but still it is an item in the consideration of this question; and we all know that raw sugars can be landed in a large market, like that of New York, at somewhat cheaper rates than they can in the markets of the Dominion. Hon. gentlemen opposite also entirely ignore the difference in the character of these two markets. If hon. gentlemen will examine the market quotations in the large cities of the United States or in London and other large cities of Great Britain, they will find that there are grades of sugar in those markets quoted very much above granulated, generally ranging from ½ cent to 1 cent, and in some cases 1¼ cents, above the prices quoted for granulated. The granulated is about the lowest grade of refined sugar quoted on these markets at all, and we very seldom see yellow refined sugar quoted there at all. This indicates that in those markets there is a very much larger consumption of high grades of refined sugar than in Canada. In Canada the proportion in the past, as admitted by the refiners and grocers, is about one-third granulated sugar, which is about the highest grade of refined sugar sold in any large quantity in the country, to two-thirds of yellow sugar. Now, the fact of reducing the duty simply makes Canada a slaughter market for these low grades of yellow sugars which the large refiners in Great Britain and the United States are obliged, to a certain extent, to produce, and for which they have not got a market at home. One object for keeping a protective duty in this country at the amount it is, $\frac{5}{10}$ of a cent, is to protect the refiners in our own market and enable them to meet the large demand which exists for the yellow sugar they are now turning out. There is another point which the hon. gentleman ignores in connection with this subject, but which was referred to by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs), and that is the size of the market. We all know that our market in Canada is limited as compared with the markets of the refiners in the United States or Great Britain; and while it is possible for large manufacturers, by slaughtering their goods, to obtain possession and control of a small market, it is impossible for them to obtain control of a large market. This appears to me to be a conclusive argument why our duty in Canada should be higher than that of the United States. If $\frac{4}{10}$ of a cent is sufficient to protect the manufacturers in the United States, it may be very reasonable that $\frac{5}{10}$ of a cent might be required in Canada to protect our markets from becoming a slaughter market for the refiners of Great Britain or the United States. Let me call the attention of the House to this fact. When I speak of Canada becoming a slaughter market, I do not mean that our prices in Canada would thereby be permanently lowered and that our consumers will always receive their sugar at lower prices than at present. The effect, in my judgment, would be that the large refiners of the United States would send sufficient of their goods to this market to be slaughtered to close up our refineries, and, having thus obtained control of our market, they would raise the prices to our consumers higher than they are at present. The hon. gentleman referred to the remarks of the hon. member for Halifax with regard to our trade with the West Indies. The hon. member for Halifax called attention to the fact that a very small proportion of the sugar exported from the West India Islands at present graded above No. 14

Dutch standard. The only answer which the hon. member for North Norfolk made to that was that, if we admitted the higher grades of sugar into this country duty free, they might be manufactured in the West Indies and shipped to this country. The hon. gentleman would appear to be desirous that that state of things should exist. He would appear to desire to substitute for the yellow refined sugar which our people use to-day, sugars manufactured in the West India Islands. If that is the hon. gentleman's object, it is contrary to the policy which this Government believes to be the best in the interests of the country. They believe it is desirable our people should continue to use the yellow refined sugars which are a good quality of sugar and are manufactured in our own country in preference to the high grade of raw sugar which, under other circumstances, is manufactured in the West India Islands. The hon. gentleman appears to me to occupy a very inconsistent position in many respects. He tells us that the effect of this duty is to put $\frac{1}{10}$ of a cent per pound into the pockets of the refiners of Canada, and he proposes instead to put $\frac{5}{16}$ of a cent per pound into their pockets. That would be a bonus to our refiners, according to his figures, of something like $1,000,000. If the hon. gentleman believes that that is the effect of this duty, he certainly is inconsistent in taking the position that we should impose $\frac{1}{10}$ of a cent per pound on sugar at all. If I believed the imposition of this duty increased the price of refined sugar in Canada by the amount of the duty, I confess I would not adopt the resolution the hon. gentleman proposes, but I would adopt one of two positions: I would either advocate the free admission of all kinds of sugar or take the course suggested by the hon. member for South Brant and impose a purely revenue tariff upon all descriptions of sugar which come into the country. The hon. gentleman has called this duty robbery. If he believes it is robbery, how can he justify robbing the consumers of Canada of $\frac{1}{10}$ of a cent on all the sugars they consume, and putting the money, as he says, into the pockets of the refiners? This argument of the hon. gentleman has been fully answered by the hon. member for Halifax, who submitted figures and quotations from various sources, which hon. gentlemen opposite have not attempted to prove incorrect, and which prove clearly that the prices ruling for sugar in Canada show very little difference as compared with the prices paid by the consumers in the United States and other countries. His figures show that while this protection has kept our refineries in operation, it has not, as a matter of fact, increased the cost of sugar to the consumers. The position we on this side take on this question is that a certain amount of protection is necessary in order that we may be able to refine the sugar consumed in Canada; and to sustain this position, I think we can appeal safely to the experience of the past. We all know that previous to the introduction of the National Policy, when the principles which hon. gentlemen opposite are advocating prevailed, sugar refining ceased in Canada. We know that our market was filled, not with the raw West India sugars, but with refined sugars brought from the United States and a small proportion from Great Britain. No reason has been given, no reason can be given, why, if a similar policy was adopted at the present time, similar results would not follow, and the effect will be to entirely close our sugar refineries and we would lose all the indirect benefits derived from the establishment of those industries in this country. The figures which the hon. member for Halifax gave show that refiners do not in this country take advantage of the duty to increase the cost of sugar to the consumers. This is proved by a comparison of prices with other countries, and also by the history of the refining industry in this country. We know that a large amount of capital has been invested in these industries, they have been in operation for many years, but they have not derived excessive profits from those industries, and the stocks of the sugar refining industries have often been placed on the market for sale, and they rarely have brought more than par and have often been sold below par. No excessive dividends have been declared by these companies that I am aware of, and in two cases, I think in Halifax, the companies have failed, and the original capital invested in the business has been entirely lost. I think it will be clear to the House that these facts in regard to the experience of the past are a full and sufficient answer to any arguments which hon. gentlemen opposite have advanced in support of the resolution they have submitted to this House, and I trust this resolution will not be adopted.

Mr. McMULLEN. I did not intend to take up the time of the House in the discussion of this question but for the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just taken taken his seat. When the Finance Minister came down with his Budget speech, he led the people to suppose that he was giving the people free sugar. Throughout the Dominion, the Conservative press declared in loud and pointed terms the great advantages the people were going to realize under the changed condition of things as far as sugar was concerned. The Finance Minister said he was going to give the people a free breakfast table, but, when we analyze the condition of things as clearly presented to us by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) this afternoon, we see that, instead of giving free sugar to the people of this country, this proposal of the Government is virtually giving the refiners an advantage which was not necessary and to which they are not entitled. You are simply compelling the people to contribute $600,000 more than is absolutely necessary. It is clear from the remarks of the hon. member from Brant and the quotations he has read from the organs of hon. gentlemen opposite, that $\frac{1}{10}$ of a cent would be ample protection for the refiners in place of $\frac{5}{16}$ of a cent. It is clear to me, and I think it will be clear to the country, that, if the Finance Minister was honestly in earnest in the statements he presented to this House and to the country, he was sadly misled and deceived. Of course, he is not a practical refiner of sugar, and has no knowledge of what is necessary to give to the refiners of this country the protection they require under the National Policy. Hon. gentlemen interested in the refining of sugar who sit behind the Minister have evidently made statements to him as to what protection is necessary and have in that way secured from him an advantage in the alteration of the tariff which is altogether unfair and beyond the necessities of the case. My hon. friend made some remarks as to the amount of yellow sugar used by the people of this country. He said about two-thirds of the sugar used was yellow sugar, and that the West India sugar that would be imported would not be of such a quality as to take the place of this yellow sugar made in this country. Any member who will take his mind back to the time when the tariff changes were prepared in this House will remember that two samples of sugar were submitted by a gentleman from Cuba who came here to try and work up a trade between the two countries. He was led to believe that those samples, which were not refined, but only cleaned, were fit to be used in a large number of houses in Canada, but he found that, under the alterations of the tariff, these sugars would be subject to a duty of $\frac{1}{100}$ of a cent a pound. Another statement was made that there was not over $\frac{1}{100}$ of the entire sugar that Island turned out that would come above 14 Dutch standard. I had the opportunity of conversing with a gentleman who had been there for the purpose of trying to establish a trade, and he said that 40 per cent. of their sugar was cleaned and would come above 14 Dutch standard, so that would come in as No. 16. It is clear that the refiners of Canada are not only anxious to shut out that class of sugar, but they want to secure the entire market for themselves. They are not prepared to allow the poorer classes the privilege of buying the class of sugar they largely use on the best terms they can. They not only want to secure the entire quantity of refined sugar made in Canada, but they want also to monopolize the yellow so as to have the entire market for themselves; and the reason why hon. gentlemen opposite want to secure these terms for the refiners under the operations of this law, is that the latter may have the entire monopoly of the Canadian market for all the sugar, whether granulated or yellow. Now, I think that is quite clear. Another statement that was presented by the hon. gentleman was that in 1878 we imported more sugar from the United States than from Great Britain. I have before me the facts which show that the quantity imported from Great Britain was 47,611,106 lbs., while we imported from the United States 40,897,269 lbs., which shows clearly that the statement made by the hon. gentleman is not correct. Now, I cannot see why our manufacturers in Canada should not be able to manufacture under a tariff of $\frac{1}{100}$ of a cent as well as the Americans. Surely, we can lay the raw material down here, say at Halifax, where my hon. friend lives, as cheaply as the Americans can at any of the American ports. I think if we are going to work up that trade between Jamaica and ourselves, of which we have had such glowing prospects presented to us, we ought to be able to lay the raw material down upon our shores about as cheaply as they do at Boston or any other important refining points. Cannot our refiners refine sugar as cheaply as they can in the United States? Is not labour as cheap in Canada as it is in the United States? And is not the living of those who are engaged in that industry as cheap in Canada as it is in the United States? I think it is; house-rent and everything in fact is even lower here. Now, I would like to know why it is that the refiners of sugar in Canada cannot operate successfully with $\frac{1}{100}$ of a cent protection as well as the refiners of the United States for $\frac{1}{100}$ of a cent? It is clear that the hon. gentlemen in this House, who are interested in the refining of sugar, have got the ear of the Finance Minister, and have secured from him, under circumstances of which he was completely ignorant, by the statements they have made, terms far better than were necessary, even for the purpose of carrying out what they call the principles of the National Policy. I contend that the circumstances in which the refiners are now placed, are very much better than they were before; simply because the refiners can operate with very much less money. The capital necessary to operate a refinery under the present system is much less than it was under the former system. Under the former system they had to provide for duties, and a very large amount of money was paid in that way. When they took their sugars out of bond they had to lay out that money for a considerable time, until the sugar reached the consumers and the returns began to come in; they even had to place their sugars in the hands of wholesale dealers for 30 or 60 days at a discount. Under the present system they are not called upon to pay a single farthing; they have only got to buy the raw material, they have no duty to pay, they have simply the carriage to pay, and that is all. When their sugar is refined they can place it upon the market, and there is no expense or outlay connected with it. On the whole, the advantages accruing to the manufactures under the present system are very considerable, and it is quite clear that hon. gentlemen who are in the trade fully realize this fact; and when they got the Minister of Finance to consent to a tariff of $\frac{1}{100}$ of a cent, I am satisfied that in their inner soul they knew that under the operations of that tariff they would be very much better off, and that they would make more money, and make it more easily, than under the old system. Now, my hon. friend said that if you reduced the duty so as to enable the refiners of the United States to send their sugar into Canada, they would at first sell their sugars so low that it would have the effect of shutting up the refineries of this country, and after they had secured the suspension of our refining establishments, they would then put up the price in order to victimize the consumers of this Dominion. I would like to ask my hon. friend who presented that statement as a scarecrow to this House and the country, where would the refiners of England be all this time? Would the refiners of England stand by and allow the Americans to play their pranks in the Canadian market as the hon. gentleman seems to suppose? Would it not be competent for the refiners of England to send their sugar in here on the same favourable terms as the Americans, and to take just as much advantage of the circumstances? Then, supposing that the Americans did send in and slaughter their sugar upon our market, I would like to know, the moment that they attempted to raise the price beyond its normal figure, where would the English refiners be? Immediately the Canadian importers could send across to Liverpool, or Manchester, or Glasgow, and in a very short time they could secure a supply of sugar and put it into the Canadian market in opposition to the sugar of the United States, just as soon as the American refiners attempted to extract out of the people of this country more than the actual value of the sugar. We have heard such statements as these made in this House before. Hon. gentlemen opposite are very anxious to impress upon the people of this country the idea that if the National Policy is interfered with, if the privileges that are enjoyed under the operations of that policy are at all touched, so as to permit the United States to compete with Canada, immediately we will be subject to an enormous increase of prices. Well, Sir, that argument is threadbare ; we have heard it and answered it so often that it is useless to mention it. But I was amused that my hon. friend, in face of the knowledge that we have in regard to the enormous refining institutions in England, should venture to risk in this House such a statement, when he knows that it could not hold for a moment ; because he knows perfectly well that the moment England had an opportunity of competing, there would be no difficulty in the world in England sending any quantity of sugar to Canada.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) at considerable length reviewed the action of the Government in connection with the increased duty on sugar. He criticized at considerable length the policy that has been recently adopted. He endeavoured to show, and I think he did show conclusively, that the changes which have been made have been largely in the interest of the refiners of this country. I have been endeavouring to point out the fact that, in my humble opinion, the Minister of Finance has been taken advantage of, and I do not wonder at this. Unless he was a practical sugar refiner and able to judge himself of the duty necessary to give the Canadian refiner a slight advantage over the American or English refiner, it was utterly impossible for him to decide fairly in the interests of the consumers. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance when he was in the inner courts of his political sanctum surrounded by the Kennys, Woods and Dickeys, pressing on him the justice of making a change in the direction of more protection for the refiners, who were standing at his other elbow pressing on him the interests of the consumers? No one. Yet the hon. gentleman was supposed to act in the interests of the people ; but, in place of doing so, I have not the slightest doubt he succumbed to the demands of the refiners and gave them all they asked. The result we have to-day. While the hon. gentleman came down to the House and announced that the people which he blessed with the privilege of using free sugar and declared he was giving the labouring classes, the farmers and consumers a free breakfast, he was at the same time placing the refiners in a position so that they could take out of the pockets of the people $1,800,000, not one cent of which goes into the treasury of the Dominion. That money is taken out of the pockets of the consumers simply for the purpose of enabling the refiners to continue the business in which they are now engaged. On the American side, where the people are particularly fond of protection, and where if any country in the world protection has run wild, they have given a protection of $\frac{5}{10}$ of a cent ; but our refiners thought they would not be able to do with less than $\frac{8}{10}$ of a cent. If you take the prices of sugar quoted in Canada, you find they are the prices quoted in New York and Boston, with the addition of $\frac{8}{10}$ of a cent duty, and with the addition of the freight charges. I am satisfied the refiners will continue to extort from the consumers as much as the tariff will enable them to exact. To present the case in another way : If the Minister of Finance had passed a law which would enable the tax-payers to go to the door of each house and collect a certain contribution for the refiners, they would require from every household of five persons 60 cents to keep the refiners in their present condition. If they went round and obtained contributions for the entire sum they would require to collect from each household of five $1.80. But admitting that $\frac{5}{10}$ of a cent would be reasonable and moderate protection, amply sufficient to give them the market and all advantages necessary to enable them to manufacture sugar, the amount to be collected from each family would be 60 cents. Another change was recently made in the interests of the refiner. When the Minister of Finance made his Budget speech he announced he was going to grant a bounty for beet-root products grown for the purpose of producing sugar. He said that bounty would only be continued for one year ; but he subsequently amended his proposition and made the term two years. That is a decided advantage to the sugar refiner. It is as good as $\frac{1}{4}$ of a cent protection to the refiners. They are now using beet-root, and I understand they have adopted a new process by which they manufacture a diluted sugar of inferior quality to that produced some years ago. Under the operation of a tariff giving $\frac{8}{10}$ of a cent protection and a beet-root bounty, to promote the production of beet-root here, which the sugar refiners will be able to purchase at their own price, we give the refiners a glorious opportunity during two years at least of making very large sums from sugar refining. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Stairs) said something with respect to the very great advantage that sugar refining conferred on this country. In my opinion it would well pay our people, although I am opposed to the superannuation system we have in force, to superannuate every sugar refiner and place sugar on the free list. I contend that of all the pernicious laws ever introduced into any country, that law which forces one man to contribute of his money to the well-being and prosperity financially of another is the most unjust. I am glad that some men in the interests of the enormous body of consumers in the United States are about to carry the whole question of protection to the Supreme Court of the United States, where it will shortly be argued with a view of testing its constitutionality, and I hope the protection system will be pronounced unconstitutional, as it should be, in every country where it is introduced. I desire to draw the attention of the House for a few moments to the question of our Jamaica trade. The Minister of Finance went to Jamaica, at no doubt considerable expense, to try and build up a trade, and with the intention of trading as freely as possible with the people of that Island. Judging from his speech, he intimated to the Jamaica people that Canada would be willing to negotiate for the freest trade possible with that Island ; but when the hon. gentleman returned here, and was surrounded by the sugar refiners of Halifax and other places, he found that such trade arrangements would seriously militate against the interests of that particular class, and so he could not possibly carry out the promise and pledge made to the Jamaica people. If we had obtained control of the trade of that Island it would have been decidedly advantageous to our people. I desire to give an idea of the commodities that Jamaica imports from the United States, and which she might import from us. During the twelve months ending 30th December last Jamaica imported goods to the value of $2,640,000 from the United States, including many articles in which we could compete. These articles include: bread and biscuits, $63,500; butter, $103,000; cheese, $39,000; brine and salt fish, $82,000; herring, mackerel and salmon, smoked and pickled, $35,000; white flour, $875,000; boots and shoes, $46,000; pease and beans, $7,600; soap, $14,000; white pine, $78,000; shooks and headings, $50,000. The exports of Jamaica to the United States during the same period amounted to $3,860,000. These figures clearly show the advantage it would have been to our farming community to have had an additional market, even to that limited extent, opened up in Jamaica for many of the commodities we could very well supply. That trade would have been obtained had it not been for the fact that the Minister of Finance found, no doubt, when he came home, that the refiners of this country could not make the amount of money that they were anxious to make if they permitted him to enter into these trade relations. The result was that, notwithstanding the fact that he led the people of Jamaica to understand that the people of Canada sent him there for the purpose of effecting these trade relations, he had to eat his own words when he came home. The men brought here from that Island who were led to believe that the people of this country were willing to trade with them on fair and equitable terms, had to pack up their samples which they brought here for the purpose of doing business and go back to their Island disappointed and disgusted. After the very able arguments of the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) and the quotations he has presented to this House from the organs of hon. gentlemen opposite with regard to the advantages that the sugar refiners of Canada enjoy under the changes that are proposed by the Bill before the House, it is the duty of the Parliament seriously to reconsider the whole question. Sugar is one of the most important commodities that we have to import into this country; it is used by rich and poor, and the poor contribute more than the rich, because, in proportion to their means, they use more sugar than the rich do. The result is that this tax on sugar strikes harder on the poor people of this country than it does on the rich people. Next to the necessities of life, such as flour, sugar should be placed in the hands of the consumers of this country at the lowest possible price. While we have no desire whatever to interfere with the manufacturers and refiners of sugar in Canada—we would be glad to see them all prosper—we do not want to see millions and millions of money in large fortunes made out of the poor people of this country who are the consumers, nor do we want to see unfair advantages given to the refiners to enable them to produce sugar at an unreasonable profit. It is quite time that we should seriously consider this question and legislate in the interest of the consumers, rather than to give away every advantage to the manufacturers of this country.

As I said before I sympathize with the position that the Finance Minister occupies. I believe that he sees himself that he has been drawn into a trap. I believe that while he is committed to keeping faith with the sugar refiners in the Maritime Provinces and in Montreal, that they have taken advantage of him simply because he does not understand the process of refining sugar. I believe that these men went away from his office laughing in their sleeves at the advantages they were going to enjoy under the tariff they induced him to bring before the House. I contend that this article of sugar is a most important commodity from the farmers' standpoint. While by the operations of this pernicious tariff the Government have placed the farmer in the position that he is restricted in the sale of the commodity he produces, they have also restricted him in the privilege of purchasing whatever he likes and whenever he can purchase to the best advantage. The system pursued by the Government reminds me of the story of the old darkey who used to set his trap to catch a coon, and when some one enquired of him how in the world it was he was so successful in catching the coon every time he set the trap, he answered that he always set his trap to catch the coon "whether going or coming." In like manner the Minister of Finance has set his trap to catch the farmers of this country whether buying or selling. His trap catches the farmer even in the matter of buying a pound of sugar, and it catches him when he goes to sell, by placing an embargo on the commodity that he wants to sell in the best market in the world. The trap catches the farmer both ways, and between the upper and nether millstone of the National Policy he is robbed right and left. It is not to be wondered at that the recent census shows that our population has not been increasing to the extent we have a right to expect it should. Our people have got discouraged and dissatisfied by the extortions of the National Policy; and they decided to try their luck in other parts of the world, and the result is that we have not that population in Canada to-day that we would have had we followed up the honest, upright and British principle of only taxing the people proportionately for the necessities of the country; in place of making the masses the slaves of the few manufacturers, so as to make the manufacturers wealthy and independent. This high tariff law in this country has led to the demoralizing condition of affairs which we have now to deplore. These men who allow themselves and their consciences to get so seared that they can collectively and unitedly join for the purpose of putting a law in the Statute-book that robs the people of this country for the benefit of sugar refiners and implement manufacturers and others, are sanctioning a law that is unjust, unfair, un-British and disloyal. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that the Liberal party of this country are disloyal, but there never was placed upon the Statute-books of Canada a more disloyal Act than the Act known as the National Policy. It is disloyal to the liberties of the subject, it is not creditable to us as a colony of the British Empire, and it is not treating the mother country with the loyalty with which we had a right to treat her. I think still that we should reconsider this whole question of the duty on sugar and adopt the amendment of the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) to reduce the duty from $\frac{5}{16}$ of a cent to $\frac{4}{16}$ of a cent per pound. If we give to the Canadian sugar refiners the same advantages that are enjoyed by the American refiners, we are certainly giving them as much and more than the people of this country can afford to confer upon them. If you reduce the duty to $\frac{4}{16}$ of a cent per pound, the refiners will still continue to produce all the sugar that is required by the people of this country, and you will at the same time save to the people of this country $600,000 a year, or to every household of five you will save 60 cents. I hope the House will adopt the amendment of my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson), and thereby save to the people of this country a considerable sum of money which would otherwise go into the pockets of the sugar manufacturers.

Mr. KAULBACH. It was not my intention to offer any remarks with regard to the matter of sugar, after the able and eloquent addresses of the hon. the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs) and the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) in answer to the resolution that was submitted to this House by the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), but as it affects the trade of the province to which I belong, and especially the ports of Lunenburg and Halifax, more than it does the trade of the rest of Canada, I feel that I would not be doing myself justice as a representative from that province if I allowed the matter to go without saying a word in reply. It is well known that the industries of Canada have a right to be kept up, and every one should feel an interest in seeing that they are upheld. I do not think the hon. member for South Brant, if he has an interest in the welfare of this Dominion, would calmly submit to see the industry of sugar refining in Canada destroyed. Placed as we are geographically, we are unable to import raw sugars as cheaply as they can be imported into New York, or Boston, owing to the larger importations and the greater competition at these points. Besides, we are compelled to pay a larger freight on all the sugars imported into Canada than is paid upon those imported into New York, or Boston, owing to distance and increased cost of freight; and for that reason our sugar refineries should have a shade more protection than those of the United States. We find that our trade in sugar has increased very considerably since the introduction of these refineries, the four of which employ something like 650 hands. To assimilate our duties on sugar to those of the United States would place us at a very great disadvantage indeed, and the consequence would be that in a short time we would see those refineries closed up. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen opposite to say that we can import as cheaply as the Americans. They know right well that if we were to expose our refiners to competition with the Americans, they would soon flood our markets, glut it with sugars at figures far below what our refiners could produce sugars for, and they would continue to supply us only until they succeeded in closing up every refinery in the Dominion; and the moment that was accomplished, they would raise their prices to the old figures. What benefit are these four refineries to this Dominion? Besides employing 650 hands directly, they give employment, indirectly, to the larger portion of the shipping of the Maritime Provinces. Almost every vessel that leaves the port of Halifax or the port of Lunenburg, the two most important shipping points in Nova Scotia, after discharging its cargo of fish and general products, brings back a cargo of sugar. Formerly, before the sugar refineries were established in this country, these cargoes of sugar went to the United States, were refined there, and then brought to Canada for consumption. But after the introduction of the National Policy we found our sugar refineries moving along in a measure successfully. Upon the introduction of that policy we heard the statement everywhere that it was going to enrich a few wealthy men and empty the pockets of the poor. Has that been the result with respect to the sugar refineries? No, Mr. Speaker. I am one who can speak from experience. I had a certain amount of capital invested in a sugar refinery in the City of Halifax, and I lost every dollar of it; and I believe that that was the case with nearly every refinery in this Dominion. But those of us who invested money in this industry did not lack courage; we felt satisfied to place our capital again in the same industry, and though we did not see the profitable results that we had expected, still we felt satisfied if we could get a moderate return on the money invested, we were conferring a lasting benefit on the people of this country. Now, Mr. Speaker, if we allow these refineries to be closed up by reducing the duties to that of the United States, as hon. gentlemen opposite would desire, we should be deprived of a large and profitable trade. Vessels which are now employed in the carriage of sugars to those industries will be deprived of employment, and the parties who are at present indirectly receiving a living from them will be shut off completely. The hon. member for South Brant referred to the percentage of sugars in Jamaica. I can vouch, I think with some accuracy, that the percentage of sugars from thence averaging over No. 14 Dutch standard is about 10 per cent. But the importers of sugar sustain a certain amount of injury by the present regulation, which I think the Government will endeavour to avoid, or at least correct, when they see the friction that it causes, which is principally on the importations of sugars from Porto Rico. These sugars class more than 10 per cent. over No. 14 Dutch standard. In some instances they run very considerably over that, and also test high, something like 96. But without placing ourselves at the risk of subjecting the sugars coming into Canada to competition with those going to the United States, we could obviate that difficulty by exacting a duty only on such portions of sugar imported into Canada as would be over 15 per cent. on the quantity over No. 14 Dutch standard, and the carrying trade would not suffer. In that way we could provide against our refineries being interfered with. Now, with regard to beet-root sugar, to which the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) referred—I would have considered the reference hardly worth the mention. It is known pretty generally to everybody in this Dominion that the industry of the beet-root is as yet in its infancy, and that the small quantity that is grown in Canada for sugar purposes would not be of enough consequence to the refiners of this country as to be worth mentioning. The Finance Minister is deserving of credit in being able with one stroke of the pen to remove the tax the people were paying on sugar to about $3,500,000 annually, which should merit the unqualified support of every member of this House, and the duty of $\frac{8}{10}$ of a cent per pound over 14 Dutch standard is advisable, providing the Government will admit 15 per cent. over 14 Dutch standard also free, which would enable us to import for refining Porto Rico without inconvenience. I, consequently, will ask the House and the Government to consider very carefully the suggestion I have made with regard to the duty on sugars imported. We will then find that the refining industry will move along successfully and the shipping now employed in the carriage of sugars from the West Indies will not be interfered with. But, on the contrary, if we were to follow the advice of our hon. friends opposite, we would reduce the trade of our shipping ports along the Atlantic coast to the extent, in the course of a very short time, that we would scarcely have a vessel engaged in the West India trade at all, and the trade generally devastated, were we to take the advice of hon. gentlemen opposite. I must ask the House to pardon me for the few disjointed remarks I have made, but I felt it my duty in the interest of the sugar refiners, whom I desire to see protected in the best possible manner, to urge that they should have sufficient protection to enable them to make a fair profit and give employment to their operators, and also benefit the outside trade engaged in the carriage of sugar, which would be the shipping of the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. CHRISTIE. It is not my intention to occupy the time of the House at any length. I simply desire to record my protest against the iniquitous system of taxation which now prevails. When the Finance Minister struck off the duties on the lower grades of sugar, I think he should have gone a step further and struck off that portion which goes into the pockets of the sugar refiners. It appears to me that was the most objectionable part of the duties and should have been the first removed. It appears to me unreasonable, not only unreasonable but unjust, that every man who buys a pound of sugar should be compelled to pay tribute to the extent of $\frac{1}{2}$ of a cent a pound, not for revenue purposes—of that I would not complain—but solely for the benefit of the sugar refiners. We all know that the sugar industry is not an infant industry. It has been long established and the refiners are all wealthy men, thoroughly able to enter into competition with the world and take care of themselves, and there is no good reason why the whole Dominion should be heavily taxed for their special benefit. There is no reason why the people should have to pay $1,800,000 a year for the sole purpose of making a few men millionaires. If this was the only industry that was preying on our people, it might be tolerated. But it is not. Our people are being bled at every pore. Millions and millions of dollars are being filched from their pockets annually, under the guise of protection, for the purpose of building up industries from which they derive very little benefit. I hold that it is unjust and unreasonable that the great mass of the people should be taxed for the benefit of a few monopolists, whether sugar refiners or any other monopolists. I believe the day is not distant when, if this vicious policy be continued, our people will revolt against such an iniquitous system of taxation. They are revolting now, but they will rise in their might and emancipate themselves from the tyranny and oppression of the monopolists. I hold that this is a system of slavery in labour and in trade, and that every fair-minded man should protest against it. I would have been glad if the amendment had gone further, as I should like to see sugar absolutely free. I hold that all the prime necessaries of life should be free and that everything else should be reduced one-half to a fair revenue tariff. It is this iniquitous system which has impoverished our people and is retarding the prosperity of the country and driving our people away. Notwithstanding the fact that this amendment does not go as far as I would wish, yet it is a long step in the right direction, and inasmuch as it will lighten the burdens of the people by nearly $1,000,000, I will have pleasure in recording my vote in its favour.

Mr. KENNY. I see that the House is impatient to vote, and I promise to occupy its attention but a very few minutes. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has told us that if the amendment moved by the hon. member for Brant had contemplated the entire abolition of the duty on sugar, it would have commended itself more to his approval. I must congratulate the hon. gentleman on being thoroughly consistent. He is, as regards sugar at least, a thorough free trader. The mover of the resolution and the hon. member for North Norfolk who supported it have contended that the $\frac{8}{10}$ of a cent per pound duty would accrue to the benefit of the sugar refiners of this Dominion. My hon. colleague has dealt so exhaustively and fairly with the technical issues involved that I shall not detain the House by referring to them, but I wish simply to point out the illogical position hon. gentlemen opposite occupy. They contend that under the present tariff on raw sugars, the people of Canada are robbed of $1,600,000 for the benefit of the sugar refiners. But the resolution and the argument supporting it are to the effect that while it is highly improper that the people should be robbed of $1,600,000, there can be no objection to robbing them of $1,000,000. The hon. gentleman who moved the amendment made his argument in a business-like, straightforward manner, but the hon. member for South Oxford interrupted my hon. colleague to declare that those amongst us who had invested our money in sugar refineries were "robbers." I am not disposed to bandy words across this House with the hon. member for South Oxford or any other hon. gentleman, especially with the hon. member for South Oxford, who is always aggressive, and has an inexhaustible supply of offensive adjectives. I was surprised to hear such language used by that hon. gentleman with regard to those who are interested in the sugar refining industry, and I must resent it and protest against it. I must say that in the community in which I live many among us took an interest in the sugar refining industry, believing it would be a valuable adjunct to our West India trade, and we invested our money in it in order also to start an industry in our own community which would be beneficial, we hoped, to ourselves and to the West India trade, in which the people of the Maritime Provinces are especially interested, and I do think it is hardly fair for the hon. member for South Oxford—in fact it was most unfair for that hon. gentleman occupying the position he does in this House and country—to apply to the men who have invested their money in that industry the offensive term "robbers." I know that in the community in which I live there are many gentlemen who usually support the Opposition in this House, who are identified with this industry, and who will be much surprised and grieved to hear that their association with it has warranted the hon. member for South Oxford, according to his ideas of this matter, in applying to them the epithet "robbers." Now, to deal with some of the arguments which have been advanced by hon. gentlemen opposite. If I understood the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), if I remember correctly what he said, or rather what he read from some journal interested, I believe, in the manufacturing industries of Canada, he said that the cost of transferring raw sugars into refined sugars was 60 cents per 100 lbs. In 1889 and 1890, the raw sugars which were bought by the Nova Scotia Sugar Refinery cost on an average $5.14, and the price at which they were sold was $5.74, so that by a coincidence there was exactly 60 cents between the cost price and the selling price, and, therefore, hon. gentlemen will see that, if the statement of the hon. gentleman is correct, we merely received for the refined sugars what the hon. gentleman tells us is the cost of producing them. Hon. gentlemen opposite have also contended that if the tariff permitted sugar between 14 and 16 Dutch standard to be admitted into Canada free of duty a large amount of that grade would come in. My hon. colleague dealt very fully with this phase of the question, and I only desire to point out to the hon. gentlemen opposite that it has been shown in the course of this debate that in the year 1879 only 6 per cent. of raw sugars were imported into the Dominion under the tariff inaugurated by hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, Sir, from 1876 or 1877 to 1879, of all the sugars that were imported, I assume that fully 30 per cent. were granulated and probably 70 per cent. were yellow sugars, and yet there is the fact that only 6 per cent. of raw sugars were imported in the year 1879, showing that even if their proposition was adopted we could not expect to import any large amount of sugars between 14 and 16 Dutch standard. The hon. member for North Norfolk told us that when he was a young man large quantities of sugars between 14 and 16 or about 16 Dutch standard were imported into Canada, and that these were favourite sugars in the province in which he resides. I have referred to the fact that we were influenced in starting our sugar refinery in Halifax because we believed it would be beneficial to that community as well as to the trade of the Dominion, and I think, when we decided on that course of action, we were only doing what the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), when he was a younger man and knew more about 14 Dutch standard than he does to-day, told the people of Canada would be beneficial to the cities and the people in general. Looking over the Hansard of 1876, I find that the hon. member for North Norfolk, on 29th February, in the course of a speech on the Budget, said:

"Why is it that we are so desirous of selling in the United States articles of food? It is simply because they have by protection built up manufacturing cities with a numerous population that consumes, not only the vast products of their own country, but also affords a better market for our products than we in the Dominion possess."

It may have been these comparatively early utterances of the hon. member for North Norfolk that influenced us in starting our sugar refinery in Halifax, in the hope and expectation and belief that it would benefit the whole country and that the people employed in that industry would help to improve the home market for Canadian products. In fact, it has helped to develop a home market for the farmers and the producers of the necessaries of life which are grown in this country. When these hon. gentlemen tell us that the present tariff is a robbery—I do not say that the hon. member who moved the amendment has used that expression, but the hon. member for North Norfolk and the hon. member for South Oxford have used it—they apply it to the agricultural as well as the manufacturing industry. It seems to me that the object of this amendment is rather to secure greater uniformity between our tariff and that of the United States. These hon. gentlemen have advised us simply to adopt the American tariff. We know that the hon. gentlemen's policy in regard to commercial union is that our tariff should be assimilated to the tariff of the United States.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. KENNY. Hon. gentlemen say "no," but they cannot honestly and sincerely contend that their policy is not that our tariff should be assimilated to that of the United States. Hon. gentlemen must remember that Mr. Wiman, to whom they are indebted for their commercial union or unrestricted reciprocity fad, stated publicly in the City of Boston that, if the Liberals came into power in Canada, the action of the Government would be changed in relation to sugars, and that the sugars used in Canada would be refined in Boston and New York. In other words, it would result in handing over our refining interests to the factories of Boston and New York. That was the doctrine laid down, if not by the leader of the Opposition, at all events by the New York leader of that party. All of us, who are engaged in any manufacturing industries, know that the abolition of these industries would seriously disarrange the labour market in the different communities in which we live. This was felt and realized by the people of Canada during the last general election, and I am satisfied that the majority by which the present policy was sustained in all the great centres of population, was due to the fact that the people residing there realized that the destruction of any one of these industries, particularly of so important an industry as that of sugar refining, would seriously disarrange the whole labour market and result injuriously to the Dominion of Canada. Sir, I feel it my duty, a duty that I owe to my constituents who sent me here, to oppose every measure, and every movement, and every resolution which tends to commercial union or unrestricted reciprocity, or the assimilation of the Canadian tariff to that of the United States; and, therefore, it is that I shall oppose the resolution moved by the hon. member for South Brant.

Mr. CASEY. I do not propose to go into the technicalities of this question in any great detail, more especially because they have already been treated by experts on both sides of the question, by those interested in and familiar with questions connected with the consumption of sugar, and more especially on that side of the House by those interested in the particular tax which this resolution proposes to reduce. It is worthy of notice that the only defence of the existing tariff that has been made from that side of the House to-day, has been made by gentlemen more or less directly interested in maintaining the present tax upon refined sugar; and two of the gentlemen who have spoken, the gentleman who has just sat down (Mr. Kenny), and his colleague (Mr. Stairs), in the representation of Halifax, are admittedly directly interested in the production of sugar, and the other two gentlemen who have spoken are, I understand, also interested financially in the maintenance of the present tariff. So, Sir, all the arguments that have been addressed to us in favour of retaining the present duty, have been addressed to us by persons to whom it is individually and financially an object that these duties should be maintained; they are talking, in other words, for their own pockets, and their arguments, no matter how learned they may seem to be in saccharology—if I may coin the word—matters relating to the technicalities of sugar refining, their arguments must be allowed only the weight due to arguments advanced by interested parties. When a man speaks for his own pocket he is allowed to put things in the most favourable light for his side of the question, he is generally suspected of putting things in a more favourable light for that side of the question than anybody else would put them. We must, then, consider the arguments advanced from the Government side of the House as arguments advanced by people who are talking for their own pocket, talking for their own personal advantage. It makes me wonder all the more that the Minister of Finance, who is nominally, at all events, responsible for the tariff, or is nominally supposed to have evolved those changes in the tariff from the depths of his own tremendous financial ingenuity, with the assistance, of course, of such sources of information as were at his disposal — that this hon. gentleman, so responsible, should have allowed the defence of this policy to rest in the hands of suspected advocates, suspected because of their personal interest in arguing as they do. It ill-becomes that hon. gentleman, who is certainly not lacking in the ability to hold a brief for the sugar refiners or any other class of the community, it is certainly not worthy of him that he should allow the defence to rest in such hands, instead of assuming the responsibility at once, upon being challenged, of defending it himself, and giving us the reasons for which it should be retained. It would be for him to speak for the country, to answer the challenge brought forward by the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), on behalf of the country, to show that the country's interests were advanced by the present tariff, and would be endangered by the proposal of my hon. friend. He has not done so, he has left the Government to be defended in the manner to which I have referred, but I am sure that before the debate is over he will find it necessary to his dignity as a responsible Minister to give us a judicial finding upon the arguments that have been laid before the House to-night, and to explain more in detail than he had time to do in his Budget speech, why he disregarded the obvious arguments on the other side. Now, my hon. friend who has just sat down, the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny), says that the proposition of my hon. friend which is now before the House looks towards assimilating our tariff to that of the United States, that it is an imitation of the Yankees. Why, Sir, do we not know that the proposal of the Finance Minister itself, removing the duty, in part, on imported sugar, was confessedly an imitation of the Yankee tariff, was confessedly introduced simply because a similar change had been introduced on the other side of the line? It is the Minister of Finance who is open to the charge of trying to assimilate our tariff to that of the United States. I know that the hon. gentleman claims credit for having to this extent reduced the taxation of the people, but why did he do it? Did he tell us he was convinced that he should do so on the merits? No; he did not tell us that he was convinced on the merits of the case that the duties on raw sugar ought to be taken off, but he admitted that he had to take off those duties because they had been taken off on the other side of the line, and the people here would not submit to be taxed so much more highly for their sugar than their neighbours across the boundary; therefore the tax had to go. But he did not go far enough. While he went so far as greatly to reduce the revenue derivable from sugar, he did not go so far as to confer upon the consumer of sugar the benefits conferred upon the consumer in the United States by the McKinley tariff. My hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson) has pointed out how that is so, that while we lose about $3,000,000 of revenue by the changes in the sugar tariff, the consumer is only relieved to the extent of $1,500,000 or thereabouts. In other words we are only relieved of about a million and a half of taxation. Even to that extent is this reduction of duty any real relief to the people? I contend, under present circumstances, that it is not, because the reduction of taxation on one particular article is no relief so long as the expenditure of the Government is not reduced. If we have to raise as much revenue, after reducing the revenue on one particular item of imposts as before, the deficiency must be made up by increasing imposts on other articles, and the Minister of Finance has confessed this by certain imposts which he has proposed and carried into effect this session. He has confessed that the deficiency caused by the removal of certain sugar duties must be made up by increased taxes on other articles. He has not made up the full amount in this way, but he will have to do so. If the revenue of this year does not turn out equal to the deficiency new taxes will have to be placed on other articles; the people will be taxed even more than before, although on different articles, because the revenue is decreased from the duties being removed that were formerly imposed. The hon. Minister of Finance has followed up what is too frequently the protectionist practice. He removed those taxes which produced the most revenue with the smallest burden on the people, and retained the taxes which produced no revenue and yet imposed burdens. He has, in fact, made the hon. members for Halifax, Senator Drummond and other refiners, in a sense, branch collectors of Customs, with the great difference that the duties collected by them do not go into the public treasury, but into their own pockets. I have taken pains to point this out, because it is a most clear and comprehensive example of the general effects of protection. We are able to see very clearly, in reference to this item of sugar, the effect of protective taxation on the consumer and producer. When Major McKinley and the Congress of the United States compelled the Minister of Finance to change his sugar duties, one great prop of the National Policy was knocked away never to be replaced, that is to say, the theory of hon. gentlemen opposite that the consumers do not pay the taxes. Apart from the fact that the Minister of Finance confessed that the removal of the sugar duties would make sugar cheaper, we find that it has made sugar cheaper to a certain extent, although not yet as cheap as in the United States; but the country has found by actual experience that it is the consumer that pays the taxes, and that the people during all these years the tax on raw sugar continued, which the Minister Finance was unwilling to remove, have paid the taxes and not the producers of sugar. One great prop of the National Policy was knocked away by the experiment tried, and it has been made clear to the people how protection acts. Protection is not intended, in the first instance, to produce revenue. It happens that in Canada high protection has produced a considerable amount of revenue, for several reasons: partly, because the protective system here is not very well conceived, even from a protective point of view, and it is not a very perfect protective system; partly because the Canadian market is so small that, in many lines, no protective tax will encourage home production, since the market is too small to encourage the investment of the necessary capital. The people of the Maritime Provinces are well aware of this from what they have seen of the iron industry, for that is one of our most highly protected industries. There is a tax of $4 per ton on pig iron and $2 per ton bounty on pig iron, or a protection of $6 per ton; and yet there is only one company undertaking to produce pig iron, that at Londonderry, and it has been in a chronic state of bankruptcy almost ever since it was established. The protective duties on iron have not caused the home production of it, and we still import practically all our iron, because the market here is too small to induce capitalists to erect works of such size as to economically produce pig iron. In regard to the sugar industry, the hon. member for the refiners, the refining member for Halifax, has himself admitted that under the protective system of the past the refiners were not making such high profits as the people generally supposed. They must have been making reasonable profits and a little more, or they would not have continued in the business. He appears to consider the present arrangement more profitable than the old one, and for that reason I conclude it affords him larger protection. Referring to the general argument, the facts connected with imposing and removing the duty on sugar make it now patent to every one, however little attention he may have paid to political economy, that the protective taxes paid by the people do not as a rule go into the treasury. In Canada, for certain special reasons to which I have referred, protective duties have yielded a larger revenue than was expected, because they did not encourage home production. We remember in the early years of the National Policy how embarrassed the Government were by the surpluses occurring from year to year; surpluses so large as to give rise to a popular demand for the reduction of the tariff. The Government, being a monopolists' Government and not a consumers' Government, adopted the course of getting rid of the surplus instead of getting rid of the taxes which produced the surplus. They have very effectively succeeded in getting rid of it since those early years, and no doubt the present Minister of Finance will have methods for preventing the occurrence of surpluses to any alarming extent in the future. The Minister of Finance has shown much talent in that direction. In general, the principle is that under protective taxation the excess of price paid by the consumers does not go into the revenue, but into the pockets of the producers. The question arises, why such a system is now maintained? It is absurd to claim that the present tariff system is a continuation or development of what was originally called the National Policy, because, when that was introduced and carried through Parliament, we have the authoritative declaration of its author that it was not a system of protection but a rearrangement of taxation looking ultimately towards reciprocity with the United States. The present system, instead of being a development of that, is a pure system of protection, aping that of the United States as far as possible, though not so scientifically contrived. Why has this change occurred? Why have we drifted away from the policy intended to promote temporarily the prosperity of all industries in Canada, by avoiding undue foreign competition, and ultimately to obtain the advantages of free trade. Notwithstanding what has been said by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who are interested in this tax, it has been properly characterized as a system of robbery. Late developments in connection with the public service, showing the relations of the Government as a Government, of individual Ministers of that Government, and of the party generally, to persons who have business dealings with the Government, lead us to believe that the percentage system has extended to the formation of the tariff also. I say, Sir, that this policy is no longer a National Policy, but it is a 10 per cent. commission policy. The Government arranges the tariff in consultation with the manufacturers and the manufacturers put their hands in their pockets and put up cash to sustain the Government at elections. Where is the difference between that transaction, and the transaction between a Minister who calls for commissions payable to an election committee, from those who do business with the departments? In the one case the individual Minister enables the outsider to make a profit, and the outsider who makes the profit contributes to sustain the Government in power. This we have on the admissions of the Ministers themselves, as well as on the testimony of others. It has come to be a well understood thing that it is proper to ask contractors for contributions to election funds. It has come to be an understood thing that commissions should be paid by all who sell anything to the Government, commissions paid in the first instance to the official, although sometimes directly to the campaign committee, and sometimes probably indirectly to the Minister himself, whether for campaign purposes or otherwise we cannot always tell.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. When was that done?

Mr. CASEY. If the hon. Minister will ask his alter ego, Mr. Dansereau, and ask Mr. Rolland, and Mr. Benoit, and ask others, he might find out.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If the hon. member means to insinuate that I have been a party to any corrupt practice with contractors, I tell him that his insinuation is mean and false.

Mr. CASEY. Hon. gentlemen say "order," but they must call the Secretary of State to order, for he introduced the subject and asked me a question, and I replied that these people can tell him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CASEY. I am perfectly in order. I am not referring to the proceedings of any committees. It is a matter of general publicity that these people know about these matters. Mr. François Benoit also can probably tell. I can refer the hon. Minister to several others by name, but I am not allowed to repeat their evidence given before a committee, because it has not been reported to this House yet, although it has been reported in the public press, and I learn from the newspapers that these gentlemen know something about it, and I am advising the Secretary of State, who asked me, to ask them where these things occurred.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. CASEY. I am answering the question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. CASEY. The responsibility is upon him for the introduction of these names. I am quite aware that his colleagues, and those who sit behind him, think he made a mistake in asking that question, but when he did ask that question I am in order in replying to it in the way in which I did.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sugar.

Mr. CASEY. You need a lot of sweetening, you need a lot of sugar, but I am not giving you taffy just now. I say the transaction between a Minister who should make such a corrupt agreement——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CASEY. These hon. gentlemen who call order do not know what order is, or else they simply wish to break up my argument by interruption. I say that the transaction between a Minister who could make such a corrupt bargain with a public contractor, is exactly parallel to, and exactly of the same nature as, that which is made between the Minister of Finance representing the Government and those manufacturers whom he bonuses by way of protective tariffs, and from whom he receives subscriptions to carry on elections——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CASEY. The two transactions are exactly of the same nature——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CASEY. If the Minister of Finance feels that it is an insult to him to say that the two transactions are of a similar nature, he had better not call the attention of the House to the fact, because he is casting aspersions on his own colleagues.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I rise to a point of order. When the hon. gentleman said it was exactly the same as when Ministers had made bargains and corrupt bargains with contractors, I asked: "When was that done?" The hon. gentleman then mentioned my name and I told him, as I tell him now, these were not only false insinuations, but false utterances in the House, and I say he has not the right to make it.

Mr. CASEY. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman must take back that statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. In the British House of Commons such a statement as yours would not have been allowed.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman cannot go on till he takes back the statement that I made a false assertion.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Will the hon. gentleman take his seat?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I submit that an hon. gentleman may fairly take a point of order while another is taking a point of order and that is what my hon. friend is doing.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Let us take one after the other.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Secretary of State interrupted my hon. friend.

Mr. CASEY. Does the hon. gentleman withdraw the statement that I made a false insinuation to the House?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I say that the hon. gentleman has made a false insinuation if he meant me. That is very plain; but I have not to withdraw that expression, and I cannot do it.

Mr. CASEY. Does he withdraw the statement absolutely and without qualification? Otherwise I will move that the words be taken down and I shall take the usual steps.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. CASEY. If he does not take it back without qualification, I move that the words be taken down.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Which words; yours or mine?

Mr. CASEY. The words "false insinuations."

Mr. CHAPLEAU. When the hon. gentleman mentioned my name in connection with two other names, I said that that insinuation or that utterance was false, and I cannot withdraw that and I will not withdraw it.

Mr. CASEY. Then I shall have to take the necessary measures to draw the attention of the House at a subsequent stage to the fact that the Minister is out of order, that he has used unparliamentary and ungentlemanly language across the floor of this House and has refused to take it back.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; sit down.

Mr. CASEY. I call upon you, Mr. Speaker, as it is your duty to do, Sir, to order the hon. gentleman to take these words back, and failing that I will have to take other steps.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) has certainly been out of order for the last ten minutes. I may mention that the question before the House is the third reading of the Act to amend the Act respecting the duty on sugars, and the hon. gentleman referred to matters which were connected with committees outside the House. He went too far, and only I thought the hon. gentleman was coming to the end of his remarks I would have interfered. He even mentioned the names of witnesses who are not yet called before the committee. I think the hon. gentleman was entirely out of order. As far as the words used by the Secretary of State are concerned I will not take it upon myself to say that these words are parliamentary, but I will say this: That what the hon. gentleman has said was certainly enough to provoke the answer which was made by the Secretary of State. I hope that the hon. gentleman will now talk pertinently to the question before the House, or else there will be no end to this discussion.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Speaker, you must give a decision whether the words of the hon. Secretary of State were parliamentary or not?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, chair.

Mr. CASEY. I say, Sir, that the question whether I was in order is one thing. The question now is whether the hon. Secretary of State was in order, and you must rule.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. My ruling is that if the hon. gentleman takes back what he said when he spoke of matters investigated by committees, I will ask the Secretary of State to take back what he said.

Mr. CASEY. You must rule.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am ruling now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What do you rule? Do you rule that the words used by the Secretary of State were in order or not? That is the point on which we desire a decision.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I said that if the hon. gentleman in speaking as he did meant me, his insinuation was false, and he mentioned names which led me to understand that he referred to me, and then he was doubly out of order. He was referring to an enquiry before a committee of which he had no right to speak here, and I said that if he meant me his assertion was false, and I repeat it if he means me.

Mr. CASEY. I am speaking to the question of order.

Mr. OUIMET. Chair, chair.

Mr. CASEY. I am speaking to the chair, and not to the ex-chair. The hon. Secretary of State asks if I meant him. What I said was that if the hon. Minister wanted to know what sort of agreements I spoke of, let him ask so-and-so and so-and-so; and he immediately took that advice as a reference to proceedings before a committee. I could make the same suggestion without making any reference to the proceedings of a committee, and I am not debarred from making the suggestion because of any proceedings before a committee. A criticism of any evidence given before a committee would not be in order, and your ruling is perfectly correct in that respect. But I made no reference to any proceedings or any evidence given before a committee; I referred to gentlemen who have not yet been called before the committee as well as some who have. If the hon. Minister considers that by telling him to ask so-and-so I was insulting him, that the mere request to ask those gentlemen what they knew about such matters implied a slur upon him, why, then, the cap seems to fit him, and if he chooses to infer from my remarks that he was guilty, it is he who says it and not I. It was he and not I who was making the charge, otherwise the words were meaningless as an insult to himself, which they would not be if there was nothing improper between him and the gentlemen to whom I referred. As to the words he applied to me, they are unparliamentary no matter what I have said, and I must call upon you, Mr. Speaker, definitely to rule that his words were unparliamentary. It is not your place as Speaker to propose a compromise; it is your place to rule, Sir, definitely, whether certain words are parliamentary or not.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman, as I said a moment ago, has been out of order for some time. Now, I understand that the hon. gentleman wants my ruling on what the Secretary of State said. I may say for the information of the whole House that hon. gentlemen speaking here on the policy propounded by the Government, for or against, have not a right to impugn the motives of any member of the Government. The hon. gentleman has done that, and under the circumstances my ruling is that having heard everything that has been said by the hon. gentleman, the Secretary of State was entirely in his right in answering in the way he has done.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Very well, Sir, that is a precedent.

Mr. CASEY. I think, Sir, we must have the sense of the House on that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CASEY. If it is parliamentary, as you rule, for one member to say that another member has made a false insinuation——

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). You are out of order now.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman may call upon the House to decide whether my ruling is sustained or not, but he has not the right to make reflections upon it. He may ask the House to pass upon my ruling, but he cannot do more than that.

Mr. CASEY. I am not casting reflections upon your ruling, but I merely say that if that is the law we would like it established. But it may not be worth while. I have nothing to take back of what I said, and if the hon. Secretary of State refuses to take back his remark, both can stand so far as I am concerned.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would ask the hon. gentleman now as much as possible to speak on the question before the House.

Mr. CASEY. If you keep the hon. Secretary of State quiet, I think I can manage to do so. To come back to the remarks of the hon. member for Halifax, he referred to a speech made by my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) in 1876 in favour of protection. Now, Sir, I think he should not have referred to that. It is a very old story for one thing, and for another thing, I think it is a confession of inferior intellect or inferior patriotism on the part of those who bring it up. The hon. member for Norfolk was a protectionist in 1876. He has had the intelligence to think differently since; he has been able to learn from experience as well as from theory; and he has had the honesty to avow his change of opinion. It ill-becomes one who is directly, financially interested in maintaining the protective system, to cast a slur upon another gentleman who was a protectionist at one time, and who has since seen the error of his ways and been honest enough to confess it. I think the instance of my hon. friend from North Norfolk is one of the strongest arguments against protection and in favour of a reasonable tariff that has been brought up to-night. Again, the hon. gentleman refers to Mr. Wiman as the New York leader of our party.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASEY. A lot of open mouths on the other side of the House call out "hear, hear," but have they no remembrance? Most of them are comparative greenhorns in the House, of course, but most of them ought to know from the public press that when Sir Charles Tupper wanted to communicate with the American Government on trade questions, it was under Mr. Wiman's wing that he approached them. They ought to know that Sir Charles Tupper wrote to Mr. Wiman and got him to arrange a conference between him and the American authorities — that he presented himself under the auspices of that gentleman whom they now refer to in terms of derision as the New York leader of our party. If they could by any means induce Mr. Wiman to take their view of things, as it is rumoured they are trying to do, if they could induce him to plead their cause at Washington and help it in Canada, we would hear no more about his being an American. We would find the fact emphasized that Mr. Wiman, long as he has left Canada, has not taken up citizenship in the United States, but remains to this day, in spite of his interests there, a loyal Canadian citizen. Now, Sir, we are not responsible for what Mr. Wiman says. We are not responsible for the fad of commercial union which we do not support, but, on the other hand, oppose, and consequently all reference to it by the hon. gentleman fell utterly to the ground. I propose to give a rest to the susceptibilities of a certain Minister by drawing to a close, but wish to emphasize the points from which the interruption of the Secretary of State has diverted attention. They are that no credit was due, in the first place, to the Government for the reduction of the sugar taxes, because that reduction was forced upon them by the action of the United States; and, secondly, that in reducing the tax the portion they have retained produces little or no revenue, although coming out of the pockets of the people, and the portion they have abolished is that which produced a material revenue. The consumers have not been benefited by this change in the tariff to anything like the extent to which the revenue has been reduced. The proposition of the hon. member for South Brant, though it does not go quite so far as I should like, is a step in the right direction, by allowing the importation of the higher grades of unrefined sugars and reducing the toll we have to pay the refiner on the various grades of refined sugar. It is not so long ago when the higher grades of unrefined were in common use throughout the country, and they would be in use again to a considerable extent if we had the duties arranged as proposed in this resolution. For all these reasons I have great pleasure in supporting most heartily the resolution of my hon. friend.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Paterson (Brant):

SUPPLY.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like to take this opportunity of bringing to the notice of the hon. Minister of Finance the fact that he must have been misinformed when he made a statement on Thursday night last to the effect that no work was required to be done at the Cobourg harbour. If he will give me his attention for a few minutes, I will show him that additional improvements are very badly required there. In the first place, let me read the resolution passed on the 27th of January, 1891, by the commissioners of the town trust:

"Resolved that the harbour commission be authorized to memorialize the Dominion Government for additional harbour improvements and for the use of the dredge."

A copy of this resolution was sent to the Department of Public Works, and the 17th of April, 1891, its receipt was acknowledged by the secretary of that department. Again, on the 15th of May, last, since this House has been in session, the following letter was written by the secretary of the commissioners of the town trust to the Hon. Sir Hector Langevin, Minister of Public Works:—

"COBOURG, 15th May, 1891.

"Hon. Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN, K.C.M.G.,
"Minister of Public Works, Ottawa.

"DEAR SIR,—The Commissioners of the Cobourg Town Trust would most respectfully draw your attention to the fact that owing to the position of the piers of the harbour of refuge, a large amount of sand is driven by the action of the water into our inner harbour. That has been the case so largely during the past year that it is now impossible for vessels to load and unload at our lumber pier. You have been kind enough, for several years past, to send your Government dredge here and keep the channel clear. It has now become a necessity to again do so, as we have a large quantity of lumber awaiting shipment; and we would respectfully ask you to allow your dredge to come and do the necessary work as before. We think about one month would do what is required. If, however, your dredge is engaged, we have been informed that a Mr. Silcox, of Brighton, has one that could be at once engaged. Time is very important to us just now, so that facilities may be given for the shipment of lumber. We trust that you will kindly order the work to be done without delay and thereby assist in the promotion of trade and commerce.

"Yours very truly.
"JOHN SUTHERLAND,
"Secretary."

Mr. CASEY.

This letter was acknowledged by the department on the 30th of May last, so that since the House has been in session the authorities of the town have requested the Government to do the much-needed work at the harbour there. I was pleased last night to hear the Minister of Finance state that if the work was required, he would place this item of $2,000 in the Supplementary Estimates yet to be brought down. It is not necessary for me to say anything more on this subject, but I hope, after what I have said, that he will see the necessity and justice of replacing this item in the Estimates.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It was not very easy to hear the representations which the hon. gentleman made, but I understand he read from a document which had some bearing on the necessities of the harbour at Cobourg. If he will be good enough to hand them to the Minister of Finance, he will see what he can do.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Cattle quarantines and possible expenses for cattle diseases and sheep scab $15,000

Mr. CHARLTON. How many points have we in the Dominion where cattle are quarantined; what is the amount of business at each of these stations; what are the expenses in each case, and what is the number of cattle and sheep quarantined at each station?

Mr. HAGGART. You will find the whole information on pages 6 and 7 of the Report of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. CHARLTON. How many quarantine stations have we in Ontario?

Mr. HAGGART. Only one; at Point Edward.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the point for the North-West and Manitoba?

Mr. HAGGART. There is a depth of two townships reserved along the boundary, from the Rocky Mountains to Emerson, and there is a special station at Emerson and another at Fort Macleod.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the arrangement in British Columbia?

Mr. HAGGART. The quarantine station is at the harbour of Victoria.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is it necessary to have a quarantine station there? No cattle would be shipped there to Europe, so as to interfere with our trade.

Mr. HAGGART. That is the principal port for the importation of cattle from the United States to British Columbia. At present there is not such danger of disease from those places, but there might be. The principal danger is hog cholera.

Mr. CHARLTON. Are hogs subjected to quarantine as well as sheep and cattle?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, 21 days.

Mr. CHARLTON. How long for cattle?

Mr. HAGGART. 90 days.

Mr. CHARLTON. And sheep?

Mr. HAGGART. 15 days.

Mr. CHARLTON. What amount of land is held by the Government in connection with the quarantine station at Point Edward?

Mr. HAGGART. It is an enclosure which is rented from the Grand Trunk. It is very nearly 200 acres.

Mr. CHARLTON. Where is the quarantine station for the Province of Quebec?

Mr. HAGGART. At Point Lévis.

Mr. CHARLTON. Ought there not to be one near Montreal? Would it not be more convenient than one at Point Lévis?

Mr. HAGGART. I believe Montreal is only an inspecting port.

Mr. CHARLTON. Have you any stations in the Maritime Provinces?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes; at Halifax and St. John.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the cost of maintaining all these stations?

Mr. HAGGART. About $15,000.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I think the Maritime Provinces and the Province of Quebec are sufficiently provided for, but I think the people of Ontario find it a grievance to have to ship stock from Pennsylvania around by way of Detroit and thence to Point Edward. It would be better to have a quarantine station at Suspension Bridge, which is the most convenient point for that province. If anyone is shipping from the eastern states he has to go to Detroit and to Port Huron, and then to Point Edward, and the risk is run of coming into contact with the hogs from the western states which are more likely to be diseased than those from the eastern states.

Mr. HAGGART. It is a matter of agreement between us and the Imperial Government, and they would only agree to one quarantine station in the Province of Ontario. It is one of the conditions by which we prevent our cattle from being scheduled in Great Britain.

Mr. GIBSON. This causes an extra haulage of 367 miles from Buffalo to Cleveland and then to Detroit, and then to Port Huron, and then to Point Edward, and it is a great hardship to shippers.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no doubt of that, but that is the absolute condition.

Mr. GIBSON. Most of this product comes from the west. A very limited quantity comes from the east, but it seems a hardship that shippers should have to send such a great distance.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I think the best stock comes from the south, from Kentucky and Ohio, as well as from Pennsylvania and New York, and all that stock has to go round by way of Point Edward. I think if the Government were to make an effort to have a quarantine at Suspension Bridge, as well as one at Point Edward, it would be a great advantage.

Mr. HAGGART. It may be that it would be more convenient for shippers from certain parts of the states that there should be a quarantine at Niagara Falls. I understand that it was an absolute condition of allowing our cattle to go over to England without being scheduled, that there should be only one port, and that was the port agreed upon.

Mr. FEATHERSON. I asked the question whether the Government would not endeavour to have a quarantine established at the Bridge? I think if they made an effort in that direction we might be able to get one. It would be a great deal more convenient than Point Edward for Eastern Ontario.

Mr. HAGGART. The trouble would be that we might, perhaps, get the permission with a good deal of trouble from England, and it might afterwards be used as a reason for scheduling our cattle. Besides, the department think we could not even get the permission.

Mr. FEATHERSON. I cannot see why there should be any reason for scheduling our cattle at all, because we have no cattle coming through by the Bridge from the United States. Cattle coming from the United States into this country come through either at Detroit or Sarnia viâ Buffalo, and there would be no danger of American cattle, by that route, coming into contact with our cattle. All cattle coming from the west go through by Fort Erie to Buffalo.

Mr. MULOCK. It does not seem that the reason assigned was a good one. A beast that is diseased would be just as objectionable whether imported at Point Edward or at the Bridge. It does not seem to me, if cattle are free from disease, that they will endanger the health of Canadian cattle because they are imported at the Bridge instead of at Point Edward. I would like to ask the Minister what provision there is at the quarantine at Point Edward for the segregation of cattle as between themselves?

Mr. HAGGART. There are special provisions for the segregation of cattle at Point Edward in the shape of sheds and special enclosures, and some other precautions.

Mr. MULOCK. How far apart are the sheds?

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I think I can answer the question of my hon. friend. The stables and enclosures at Point Edward are very good. They are located in a sort of bush, and are separated by a very good distance. Different shipments are isolated from each other at a fair distance, and I am satisfied the regulations are quite as good as could be expected. I have never been on the quarantine grounds at Quebec, but I am satisfied from what I have heard that they are not so well isolated as they are at Point Edward. At Point Edward they lay right along the bank at the head of the river on Lake Huron, and nothing comes in contact with them except the air coming off the water. I think it is one of the most healthy places that could be had for a quarantine station. All that we are asking for now is an additional one at the Bridge, and I think if the Government would try they could get it, because there are men living in my own county, men living in Eastern Ontario, who import cattle from New York State and Pennsylvania, and have to go all the way round to the quarantine at Point Edward, whereas if they could come through by the Bridge it would be handier and more convenient for them.

Mr. McMILLAN. At Point Edward it appears that at one time 128 cattle came across in one lot. That is a very large number, and I think myself it would be very beneficial if the Government were to establish another station at the Falls, so that so large a number of cattle might not be congregated together. Even where they are partially separated there is a good deal of danger. I am certain that the great majority of the cattle that come into Ontario from the other side come from the eastern states, not so many from the west. Hereafter the number from the west will increase, so that it would be necessary to keep up both places. It would be a benefit to the farmers to have a quarantine both at the Falls and at Point Edward.

Mr. HAGGART. The officer of the department informs me that he does not think the British Government would consent to have a quarantine station near Niagara Falls. There is pleuro-pneumonia in that section of New York and part of Pennsylvania, and the Government would be very chary about allowing cattle from that district to come in there. With regard to the segregation of different shipments at Point Lévis, the officer informs me that the precautions there are much better than at Point Edward. He says there is absolute isolation.

Mr. MULOCK. That must be some recent regulation.

Mr. HAGGART. He says it has been so for several years. They had pleuro-pneumonia there some time ago, and the cattle were kept perfectly clear on account of perfect isolation.

Mr. MULOCK. I know in one case a shipment of cattle left a British port on the 8th of July, and was received in quarantine at Point Lévis on the 20th of July. According to the regulations, if they were free from disease at the expiration of 90 days from the time of shipment from the British port, they ought to have been at the disposal of the importer. In this case they were placed in the sheds within 36 feet of a herd of cattle that had pleuro-pneumonia. They did not contract the disease within 90 days, which proves, beyond question, that they were free from disease when they were shipped. They were kept until December in quarantine within 36 feet of diseased animals, and they were allowed to smell diseased animals through a board fence. After about 170 days the cattle were pronounced diseased, and they were all slaughtered at an enormous loss. At that time the sheds were within 36 feet of one another, although there are 400 acres at Lévis—a state of affairs that never should have existed, and I trust does not exist to-day.

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose the hon. gentleman knows the facts, but the officer of the department states that none of the cattle caught the disease but those in contact, and that the carcasses were burnt.

Mr. MULOCK. He does not know. They came out by different vessels. A herd imported by Mr. McCrae, of Guelph, had the disease, and other shipments by different vessels contracted the disease from Mr. McCrae's herd. Everybody in the business knows that the animals were kept almost in contact. In one case healthy animals coming on different vessels were put in a paddock and were, I am informed, allowed to smell diseased animals through a board fence. I heard that fact from the information of a man who came out from Glasgow in charge of a healthy herd. Enormous loss was occasioned. In fact the board bill and the cost of attendance ate up much of the compensation, and the man practically lost all the purchase money for the cattle.

Mr. HAGGART. The statement of the hon. gentleman may be perfectly correct, that the cattle came on different vessels and were put together. They were supposed to be free from disease. The disease developed afterwards, after a number of days or weeks.

Mr. MULOCK. I saw a communication from the herdsman in charge of the healthy cattle protesting against the distance between the healthy animals and diseased cattle. I saw a telegram sent to the Minister of Agriculture on the subject, and a reply saying that the distance was a safe distance—the distance being 36 feet. The result was that, after the cattle had been in quarantine nearly six months, from 20th July until December, they were pronounced diseased. I heard the opinion of a veterinary surgeon, of whom there is no superior in Canada, to the effect that no animal could have had pleuro-pneumonia on 8th July and not have manifested it until December. That being the case, there was only one way by which the animal got it, namely, being in quarantine.

Mr. HAGGART. The officer of the department states that the longest time for the disease to develop itself is 90 days; that is why the quarantine period is fixed at that time.

Mr. MULOCK. That is just what I say. Inasmuch as the disease, according to all recognized authority, will develop within 90 days, it is perfectly clear that cattle shipped from England on 8th July must have been free from the disease at that time as it did not develop until December. It is, therefore, clear that they contracted the disease in quarantine, owing to the defective regulations in force.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no doubt they must have contracted the disease in quarantine.

Mr. MULOCK. That is why I am asking what is the distance between the sheds, and whether shipments of cattle are kept apart?

Mr. HAGGART. There is 20 feet between the sheds.

Mr. MULOCK. Can healthy cattle be 20 feet from diseased cattle?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. With all due respect to the authorities, it is a wholly insufficient distance for safety. I am aware that cattle in quarantine were 36 feet apart, and, according to the contention of Dr. McEachren, that was a safe distance. But it was not safe, because animals contracted the disease from one another. Why have cattle been put 20 feet from each other when we have 400 acres at Lévis, and the sheds might be remote from each other?

Mr. HAGGART. The officer says that the enclosures were placed at that distance by authority of Dr. McEachren, who is supposed to be the highest authority in Canada, who thought that distance was ample.

Mr. MULOCK. I would not question Dr. McEachren's authority further than to say that Dr. McEachren in the case I have mentioned thought 36 feet ample, and yet cattle contracted the disease across 36 feet. How many acres have you at the quarantine at Point Lévis?

Mr. HAGGART. 200 acres altogether.

Mr. MULOCK. If that is the case, why should the sheds be placed within 20 feet of one another?

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I understood the arrangements at Quebec were much better than those at Point Edward. From what I have heard, those at Point Edward are much better than those at Quebec. At Point Edward the sheds are over 100 yards apart, and there is a little brush between the two sets of sheds. Where there is a long strip of land, that is the proper way to arrange the enclosures so as to isolate the cattle as much as possible. I am satisfied with the arrangements there, but if the sheds are going to be 20 or 30 feet apart there will be no safety, and animals will catch the disease. In our county this year the hogs have caught disease although one mile apart, the germs being carried in the air.

Mr. HAGGART. All the information I can give is that the sheds at Lévis were placed there on the recommendation of the veterinary surgeon, and the statement of the department is that those diseases are not contagious altogether, that there must be actual contact, and they are not infectious. There is a distinction between these terms.

Mr. MULOCK. I think it is very unwise that any risk should be taken, especially where there is ample land. I am surprised that the distance should have been reduced from 36 to 20 feet. The disease having been communicated across 36 feet, it is strange the distance should have been reduced to 20 feet. Why should the department run such a risk when it is not necessary? I desire to ask what is the provision at quarantine for feeding animals; what is the provision for shippers buying food? Is there any monopoly for supplying the food?

Mr. HAGGART. There is no monopoly at all. They can buy it anywhere.

Mr. MULOCK. I will conclude by saying that if there is an outbreak of pleuro-pneumonia or other contagious disease in quarantine at Point Lévis on account of the close proximity of the various sheds, the Government of course must be fully prepared to take the responsibility. There can be no doubt about it that 20 feet is an unnecessarily close distance and the Government is running an unnecessary risk. The occurrence to which I have referred had a serious effect on the importation of high class cattle into Canada. It frightened shippers who have taken a very important part in the cattle industry, and there should be no possibility allowed of risk of any such occurrence in the future. I hope the Government will put these sheds so far apart that the danger will be lessened.

Mr. McGREGOR. That may be in Quebec, but at Point Edward the stables are well kept and work very well. They are a long way apart and are fairly well built and well kept. Mr. McDougall who has charge of the stables is a very careful, quiet, nice man, and I am quite sure that any person having cattle there will have them properly taken care of. The caretaker is a man who understands the business thorougly, and is a first-class cattle man in every way. I think in Point Edward the stables are from 100 to 200 feet apart. It is near the shores of Lake Huron, a very airy and a very nice place, and I think the location is well adapted for quarantine.

Mr. McMILLAN. Has each individual to provide his own caretaker in quarantine?

Mr. HAGGART. The Government has a general caretaker to look after single animals, but where the importer brings out a lot he is allowed to appoint his own caretaker.

Mr. McMILLAN. It is a most dangerous thing for the same caretaker to attend two or three small herds of cattle. I do not care what the isolation is, as far as the stable is concerned, the caretaker will carry the contagion along with him if there is any disease. So far as feed is concerned I am satisfied that every person has full power to get his feed on the market and take it there, and I think it is correct also that where there is a large herd of cattle the importer can have his own man to take care of them. Where there is a small herd of two or three or even one animal the Government have a caretaker, and there is great danger in carrying the disease from one to the other. I hold that each herd should be cared for by one individual, and if he goes from one to the other he should change his overalls at each station.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I think the cattle are well looked after at Point Lévis. I had 185 head of cattle there, and I was well satisfied with the way they were looked after. Mr. Walsh, the superintendent, is a very careful man and looks after the cattle very well.

Mr. McMILLAN. I was promised when this item would come up, that I would have an opportunity of speaking on the experimental farm and getting some information about it. There has been some talk about building a sheep pen upon this farm, and I would say that so far as the farm at Ottawa is concerned I do not think it wise to get any more stock upon that farm. The care of a herd of sheep is something that requires a very large amount of experience. A man may be a very good cattle man and a very poor sheep man. There is not one in twenty of those who have gone into sheep raising in Ontario who have thoroughly succeeded, and I am also aware that if the Government buys a herd of sheep it will be ten or twelve years before they can get a herd that will be any good. At all events they would only be following in the wake of the best farmers of the present time, and whenever private enterprise is doing all that can possibly be done in any particular line of agriculture it is my opinion that the Government should not interfere. I am perfectly certain so far as the Province of Ontario is concerned that we have herds of sheep there far ahead of anything that the Government could get for a number of years. I see that $4,835 has been spent on an implement house, and I would ask if the Government applied for tenders to build this house and if the lowest tender was accepted?

Mr. HAGGART. I promised to give the hon. gentleman the information on that subject to-night, and the deputy promised to have it for me, but he has not got it.

Mr. McMILLAN. There may have been tenders called for that implement house, but I am sure there was no advertising, because I am convinced from the quantity of money spent on that shed that it is an exorbitant price to pay for it, where lumber is so cheap. I never said much about the buildings on the farm before, but I wish to speak about the barn to-night. I have examined that barn carefully, and for the large amount of money that has been spent on it, and for a barn on an experimental farm, it is one of the most inconvenient buildings I have ever set foot in. If the Government had taken Mr. Edwards from down the river, into their confidence, and had asked him to assist them to get up a plan, they would have got a plan from him that would cost only half the money and would have been twice as useful. I notice that the seventy head of cattle there had to be fed by carrying the stuff in a basket from one end of the stable to the other. In a barn got up on proper principles there should be a tramway to take the feed for the animals standing in a row, or there would be a hand cart or a large barrow instead of a man having to go from one end of the building to another which is certainly a very inconvenient system. When we have spent $17,000 on that barn and outbuildings, apart from this implement house, we would have expected more conveniences. Again, there is no common farmer who would allow the system adopted there of carrying off the water used by the animals to remain on his place for twenty-four hours. They have not even put in a pipe to carry the water away and hence the water cannot be taken from the cattle as often as it should be. It is impossible for cattle to thrive properly in a building kept in such a manner, and double the hands are required that would be necessary if the barn were properly built. I saw them cutting corn for food with a straw-cutter the other day. There is a shoot to put it in on the one side, and just for the want of a little care and a little management an extra man had to be employed throwing the stuff to the other side, when any common farmer in less than an hour would have arranged to do the work properly. Buildings put up on a farm like this ought to be arranged so that the fewest hands could attend to the cattle in the shortest possible time and with the greatest convenience; but I must say that above and below I have never seen a barn with so little convenience. It must take double the hands to attend to a full herd of cattle in that barn that it would take if the barn were properly fitted up with the right kind of arrangements for feeding them. Then, in the upper part of the barn we find a second floor, which prevents it being used to the best advantage for storing grain. This prevents the grain from settling, as it would do if there were no second floor. In all properly constructed barns to-day, you will find rack-lifters for lifting the grain; but in this barn, owing to the two floors, there is no chance for a rack-lifter. It takes double the men to put grain into this barn, and then it will not hold half the quantity it should. There are two large stacks outside at the present time, and if the barn were properly constructed it would not be necessary to build them there. In a properly constructed barn when you are storing the grain in the bay, it rises rapidly until it is built to a certain height, when the weight of the grain will cause it to settle, and it keeps settling until it gets pretty solid. But this barn will not hold half the grain that it should. It needs to be thoroughly overhauled, in order that the work about it can be done with the fewest possible hands. Then, the root-house is built at 12 or 14 rods distance from the barn, necessitating the men in the winter time drawing the feed that distance to the cattle sheds. The root-house ought to have been built close to where the cattle are, so that the feed and the cattle would be practically in the same building. Everything on the farm appears to have been arranged on the principle of having the greatest number of hands to do the smallest possible amount of work. I was astonished to find that where the pig pen is built the yards are a few rods distant from it, and when any of the pigs are let out to go into the yard, there must be two or three men there to drive them in. I have never seen a place where so much money has been spent with so little convenience as a result. There is not a thoroughly practical man on that farm to manage it: I do not care who knows it. I have visited some of the best farms in Ontario, and I must say that I never saw so much waste during the days of harvest as I have seen this season on that farm. We were out there on a picnic in July, by the invitation of the Minister of Agriculture. There was some green feed standing ready to be cut—pease, oats and barley. The oats were white on the top, and any farmer would have had this green feed cut forthwith. I was out there again on the 19th of August—I took a note of the day—and it was still uncut, and by that time the straw was perfectly useless, as the heads were getting down to the bottom. Then, I saw a large quantity of ripe grain standing long after it should have been cut. They were ten days if not two weeks too late in beginning their harvesting. Any visitor from abroad going to that farm, and examining it as a model, would go away with a very poor idea of the knowledge possessed by the farmers of Canada from what he saw there. There has been more grain shaken off in the work of harvesting than I have seen in 40 years in Canada. There is a lack of proper management all over the place. I have no doubt that Professor Saunders and the Minister of Agriculture are doing all they can to make the farm a success; but neither of them are practical farmers, and they do not seem to have any one there who has been accustomed to manage a large farm, and to manage it on proper principles. There cannot be any lack of hands on the place, because on one day that I was there I saw no less than 25 men at work drawing in grain. There are enough men and teams to do the work, provided a proper system is followed; but I am afraid that a proper system is not followed there. With reference to cattle, I say that there is not a man on that farm who knows how to handle stock. These experimental farms of ours are established to show what can be done with cattle of various breeds, with the financial power of the country at their back, and with all the skill and knowledge that the Government can secure; and it is the duty of the managers of these farms to exhibit their stock at the coming Ottawa show—not for the purpose of competing for prizes, but as is done in the case of the model farm at Guelph, for the purpose of comparing their stock with the stock of the different farmers of the country. That should be done by the managers of the Ottawa farm, from the youngest animal to the full-grown animal of each breed. Farmers are apt to think they have the very finest animals in the country until they see others and compare theirs with them; and the results of proper caring for cattle are apparent when they are taken to shows where they can be compared with other cattle. I think it would perhaps have been well if for the present the experiments on this farm had been confined to cows and butter. I think a mistake has been made in attempting to do anything at present with other stock. I speak advisedly when I say that a visitor coming from the United States or from the old country, a thorough stockman, accustomed to breeding, and examining the stock at the Ottawa farm, would have a very poor idea of the stock of the farmers of Canada, if he took the stock here as a sample of what generally prevails throughout the country. On a farm like this we should have animals of the very best description to exhibit, and they should be cared for in the very best manner and on the very best system. But no farm will be successful, I care not what care is exercised, unless it is managed by a thorough agriculturist, possessing a knowledge of the different classes of cattle that should be kept upon it --a man who would be competent to go out and purchase cattle, and to select the best breeds and specimens. A knowledge of that kind cannot be obtained in two or three years, from books or anything else, except from actual experience with the management of cattle ; and it is no credit to the Government to have their principal farm conducted in such a manner as this is. As a Canadian I feel proud of what the country has done in improving the different breeds of cattle : and I hold that if the Government go into an improvement of any description they should take the lead, and not manage their farm in a manner that puts them behind the best farmers of the country. Go and examine the farm of Mr. Edwards ; look at his cattle, and see the conveniences that he has there ; and certainly the Government ought to have been able to get their buildings laid out as well and provided with all the conveniences that he has. Whoever prepared the plans and specifications of those buildings was certainly not a practical man, for the building seems all to be dropped down anywhere, without any plan, except just the barns and the sheds, in a manner I have never seen buildings put up in any part of Ontario that I have visited, and I have visited some of the best farms in that province. It has taken 4 men to attend 70 head of cattle on this farm, and I have been in barns where one man with little assistance could attend to 70 or 80. They cannot do it on this farm, because they have not the conveniences. When we have spent such large sums, it is too bad everything should be in the condition in which it is. Any farmer visiting that farm during the harvest, and seeing the condition in which the grain is, would be disgusted with the system carried on. If that is the way in which our experimental institutions are carried on I do not want to take example from them. I have a farm about as large as this, and take in 140 acres of crop with the aid of three hired men and one son and one grandson during the summer, and the work is well kept up and the grain taken in in good order, but it would not be if it was allowed to stand as it is on this experimental farm. There seems to be no regular system followed there; and unless a regular system is adopted, and some one is there to see that it is carried out, the farm is going to be a huge failure.

Further amount required for plant for Printing Bureau..... $11,650

Mr. CHAPLEAU. This includes a covering machine for pamphlets, necessitated by the great number of pamphlets and special reports issued, as in the case of the experimental farm and the Agriculture Department. This machine costs $2,000. There are also fittings for repair shops and type for voters' list, &c., $3,500 ; and unforeseen expenses, additional forms, &c., $3,700.

Mr. MULOCK. Who has recommended the purchases you have just mentioned ?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The Queen's Printer, Mr. Chamberlin, and Mr. Gliddon, who is in charge of the Printing Bureau.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total amount we have paid for plant up to date ?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I think about $180,000, or $275,000 if we include all machinery for printing and binding, and engines, boilers, shafting, &c.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What has the building cost ?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. That is not in my department. The estimate of plant has exceeded what I stated should be the cost.

Mr. FLINT. I have seen it stated that a large amount of the plant purchased is not required.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have asked the question myself to my officers, and am informed that everything purchased is, or is likely to be shortly, required. We have 44,000 lbs. of minion in stock for the voters' lists. The result of the revision, so far, shows that very large additions to the list must be made. But, of course, as is always the case in a large printing establishment, a certain amount of the plant would lie idle for the moment. No plant, however, has been bought uselessly. Large quantities may have been bought, but nothing has been bought which is not required.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many printing presses have you ?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Sixteen large cylinder printing presses and seven Gordon presses. I am not sure of the number. There is no need for any more presses this year, except the ordinary additions to plant, and the appropriation this year is not so much as would be required in an ordinary printing establishment. We have curtailed about $11,000, although more would have been required.

Mr. FLINT. Would the hon. gentleman tell us the number of type-setting machines he has, and their approximate cost, and what success has attended their use ?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We have bought four of them. I am informed that they can be utilized with a great deal of profit to the establishment, but we have not yet had sufficient experience of them to say what they will do. Another item may be put in the supplementary estimates for the acquisition of four more. The four we have were bought two years ago at $3,500 each, and new ones may be had at $3,000 each. This question will come up again, and I shall then take the opportunity of giving the House a statement as to the great utility of the linotype in the department.

Mr. MULOCK. I suppose proper precautions are taken to see that this money is not to be spent, to any extent, in commissions?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have taken all precautions against that. Any wrong-doing shall not be renewed, if there has been anything wrong done.

Mr. MULOCK. You think it is all right to pay these commissions?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I did not say so.

Mr. MULOCK. I thought you said there was no wrong done.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I cannot speak of what has taken place in a Committee of the House, when the evidence has not been reported, but I am sure that, if any wrong has been done, it will be punished, and precautions will be taken to prevent anything of the kind in the future. I am also sure that there has been no loss to the public treasury.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Are these machines made in Canada?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The linotypes are made in New York. I understand that there will be a manufactory established in Canada before long. We have given an order, which can be filled at once, and I do not know whether it will be cancelled or not, but I have information that so many orders have been received by the manufacturers from printing establishments and newspapers in the United States and Canada, owing to the usefulness of these machines, that probably no orders can now be executed for twenty-three months.

Mr. MULOCK. What is a linotype?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If my hon. friend would go to the Printing Bureau, not only would he be convinced that these machines are useful, but he would see one of the most wonderful inventions of the age.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who is performing the duties of superintendent of the Printing Bureau?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Mr. Gliddon is at the head of the department and Mr. McMahon is the acting superintendent. It is the same in the Department of Stationery, where the subordinate officers are acting for the late superintendent. No new officer has been appointed.

Mr. FLINT. I understood these machines were leased by the Government.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No; they are bought by the Government with no royalty.

Mr. MULOCK. Are there any tidings of the whereabouts of Senécal?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I thought that belonged to the Printing Committee.

Mr. MULOCK. We have some interest in that.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have no tidings, but I have made some enquiries, and hope to be able to give some information on the subject to the Printing Committee.

Mr. MULOCK. Has no one been appointed in the place of Mr. Bronskill?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No.

Mr. MULOCK. He must have been more ornamental than useful.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I can only say that I am very sorry that such an efficient officer as Mr. Bronskill has been guilty of a reprehensible act which caused the Government to dismiss him. I wish I could replace him with an officer as efficient as he was in the practical work of the Stationery Department.

Brandon Post Office—To complete..... $16,500

Mr. FOSTER. We will reduce that amount by $2,500, because a revision of the matter down to a later date has enabled the department to make a closer estimate. The amount of expenditure up to date has been $45,908. The amount of the contract was $31,500. The extras amounted to $1,676. The heating apparatus cost $4,750. That makes $37,926, and there is still due to the contractor $646. The expenditure upon the site was $5,500, which leaves a difference made up of the following items:—Architect's services, $928; clerk of works, $1,826; specifications, $24; advertisements, $141; printing, $31; travelling expenses of clerk of works, $81; box fronts, $94; construction of drains, $250; additional height of rear wall, $228; additional depth of foundation, $418; pointing of external wall, $860. With reference to the statement read by the hon. member for South Oxford made by the Minister last year, making the total cost of the building $45,000, I think that had reference to the building, and not the fittings or anything of that kind.

Mr. CHARLTON. Does that include the site?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; the exact figure is $45,908?

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the further amount required?

Mr. FOSTER. $12,350.

Mr. WATSON. Who is the clerk of works, and how long has he been employed?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not his name; his services have been dispensed with.

Mr. CHARLTON. Has the Finance Minister taken into consideration the suggestion made the other night with reference to establishing some rule for the Government to follow in the matter of erecting public buildings, fixing a minimum revenue in the several towns and villages below which buildings should not be erected? A rule of that kind would correct certain abuses that have grown up in late years—the erection of public buildings in small towns for purely political purposes, as was the case at Cayuga, in the County of Haldimand, an insignificant village of seven or eight hundred inhabitants. The Government have erected a post office in that place for the purpose of strengthening the member in his seat, and I think it is high time that some rule should be adopted to prevent the recurrence of cases of that kind, governing the action of the department in the appropriations made for public buildings.

Mr. FOSTER. It is pretty hard to get a chance to think of these things in this turmoil, but the matter will be considered.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think I shall propose at a proper time a motion in regard to this matter, to name a sum below which no buildings will be erected.

Mr. FOSTER. I think you will find it very difficult to make a hard-and-fast rule.

Mr. CHARLTON. But you can make a rule to prevent the erection of post offices in a little town like Cayuga. The Government have acted in a way that requires Parliament to step in and fix some rules restraining the Government from spending public money, presumably for purely political purposes. Now, the moneys of this country have been squandered in many instances in a way fully as corrupt as any corrupt practices that our election law forbids. The Government have taken public moneys in large sums and used them for purely political purposes, with no other object than to corrupt and buy ridings, to influence public sentiment thereby.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to attribute improper motives.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am not attributing improper motives to individuals, but to a collection of individuals. It is perfectly proper to criticise the motives of the Government in making appropriations which can have but one purpose, can be actuated by but one reason, and I repeat the charge, that appropriations have been made by the Government in past years that could have had no other object than to corrupt the ridings and buy their support, and we want to adopt a rule, so far as possible, to put a stop to that kind of work.

Subsidy to steamer between Campbellton and Gaspé, and intermediate ports $12,500

Mr. FOSTER. The contract was entered into on the 7th of November, 1883, between the Government and Mr. Chabot, by which Mr. Chabot was to place a steamer on the route for five years, two round trips per week. The contract differs from most contracts--that is, it is not simply a subsidy for a vessel going and coming, but Mr. Chabot undertakes other work as well. The vessel is the Admiral. Mr. Chabot has to unload the cars, as they run down to the wharf; he has to put the goods in store, and put the goods again from the store on board the steamer. All the cost of this unloading from the cars and storing the goods, and putting them on the steamer, and vice versa, is borne by the vessel owner. The rates are subject to the approval of the Railway Department. Mr. Chabot is to provide agents, and pay half the cost of advertising. The Government has a right to deduct from the subsidy any sums due for back charges on freight, coal or stores. The number of trips is 55 to 58 per year. My hon. friend knows that under these circumstances the subsidy is not an excessive one. The contract runs until the close of navigation in 1892.

Mr. WATSON. What is the tonnage of the vessel?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know.

Mr. CHARLTON. Have you any data as to her value?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. LAURIER. When this item was called up the other day I told the hon. Minister of Finance that it should be allowed to stand over until the report of the investigation, now going on before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, should be brought before the House. The hon. gentleman cannot but be aware that this is one of the charges that has been brought forward, and I understand that within a very few days we shall have this report before the House. It will be better to have this item postponed until that time arrives. If, for instance, the report was to show that the value of the Admiral was only $16,000 or thereabouts, as I have reason to believe, the hon. gentleman himself will admit that it is an outrageous figure to give such a vessel a subsidy of $12,500 a year. There is reason to believe that such is the fact. Moreover, there is reason to believe, if indeed the fact is not established, that Julien Chabot is not the owner, but another person. Under such circumstances, the hon. gentleman had better do what he agreed to do the other day, and allow the item to stand over until we have that report.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman must not tax me with it. His understanding of the arrangement is quite correct. But when the item was called to-night the suggestion was made by the hon. member for South Oxford that we should proceed with it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I was the offender, but I was not aware that the item was for the steamer Admiral.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see why the item should not be passed. It is a matter under contract for this season, and three-quarters of the season is over, and the vessel is running, and is performing service under the contract.

Mr. LAURIER. That may be true, but there is another consideration. If it is proved to this House that the contract has been obtained under false pretenses and under the supposition that the owner was Julien Chabot, and if it is shown that the contract was not really with Chabot, but with another party, this would be a reason that would induce the Government to consider whether the contract should be carried out or not. It would be an unfortunate thing in some respects, but at all events the moment it was proved that the Government had been deceived, that while they intended to contract with a certain party they never contracted with him, it would then be for the Government to consider whether the contract was to go on or not.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not think there can be any question as to Chabot. He is the registered owner, and entitled in every way to make a contract, and the only question is, whether the contract has been made. There may be questions relating to interests other parties have for whom Chabot may have been a trustee. If we wanted the services of the Admiral, he was the only person who could contract for them. Not only is there a contract outstanding, but the moneys are due. Before the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections is disposed of all the moneys will have been earned perhaps.

Mr. LAURIER. If Chabot was merely a trustee, I admit at once the force of the reasoning of the Minister of Justice. But if there is more than that—if Chabot was not a trustee, but simply a shield, a person to shield some one else, if he signed the contract, not as trustee, but in his own name, if it turns out that he is not the owner of the boat and never received a cent, that payments made to him were immediately turned over to another person—these are points that deserve consideration. But the whole matter is under investigation before a Committee of this House, and I suggest, under such circumstances, that it is only proper and right that the item should stand over until we have a report from the Committee.

Mr. CHARLTON. There is no doubt of it. We proceeded to consider the item under a misapprehension. Now that the House is apprised of the true state of the matter, it is desirable that we should carry out the arrangement made the other night.

Mr. LAURIER. Better let it stand.

Mr. FOSTER. All right.

Resolutions reported.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 11.40 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 11th September, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. Mr. Speaker, my attention has been called to an editorial in L'Electeur of yesterday, 10th instant, containing the following:—

"IS THERE A CRISIS AT QUEBEC?

"HOW EXPLAIN THE PRESENCE OF MR. MACKINTOSH, M.P., IN QUEBEC?

"The article says: 'It is certain, all the same, that the Federal Government is going to make unheard of efforts to crush Mr. Mercier, because it feels that he is a formidable adversary. That the Federal Ministers are preparing to make war upon Mr. Mercier is undeniable. It suffices to watch their agitation, to be convinced of this fact. Mr. Mackintosh, member for Ottawa, was sent to Quebec; then Mr. Blanchet, the chief of the Opposition, immediately proceeded to the Capital. What does all this mean? We shall see before long.'"

In justice to myself, as well as to the members of the Government individually and collectively, I must ask this House to bear with me while I explain that I was called to Quebec to meet members of my family there on Sunday last; that I neither communicated with Lieutenant-Governor Angers, directly nor indirectly, nor did I see Mr. Blanchet during the day, or any other politician or public man; that I left Monday shortly after noon and on the station platform at Quebec met Mr. Blanchet, who informed me that he was going to Ottawa in connection with an election case. I was not sent by the Government, I could not have been sent; I would not have gone had I been asked so to do, for I am too well aware, as a member of this House, that I have no right to interfere in constitutional issues affecting the provinces, and sufficiently respect my position not to do violence to constitutional usage. Therefore, I must give a flat denial to every statement contained in the article, so far as it refers to me.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. When may we expect the evidence taken before the Committee on Privileges and Elections to be placed in the hands of members? It is a good while since the taking of evidence was closed before the Committee, the House has been a good while in session, and we are anxious to get through with the business. At the same time, private members have serious objections to voting on a question until they have had an opportunity of reading and studying the evidence, and I hope it will soon be placed in the hands of members.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The evidence will be placed in the hands of members at the earliest possible moment. The Committee are about to deliberate upon their report, and the evidence is being revised in order to be ready for instantaneous delivery with the report.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is it necessary to delay the placing of the evidence in the hands of members until the report is made?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am afraid it is.

Mr. LAURIER. The evidence will be brought down the same time as the report?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 147) further to amend the Controverted Elections Act.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McCARTHY. I desire to move an amendment to the said clause, namely:—

1. The paragraph lettered (i) of section two of "The New Dominion Controverted Elections Act" is hereby amended by striking out the words "the Court of Appeal for Ontario" in (1) sub-section thereof, and the words "for Lower Canada" in (2) sub-section thereof.

The principle of this amendment is to limit the hearing of election cases to the courts of first instance, that is, the three divisions of the Court of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas and Chancery. By the judicial system in the Province of Ontario, the Supreme Court is divided into the appellate branch and the branch for hearing cases in the first instance. Hitherto it has been the practice to give the Court of Appeal jurisdiction in election matters, thus casting upon it the burden of trying matters which properly belong to the other divisions of the court; and the practical result is that great delays have resulted in the hearing of the ordinary cases before the court. They should hold two sittings before Christmas vacation, but having now to try a number of election petitions, they will only be able to hold one sitting before Christmas, and after the Christmas vacation they will be loaded down with the cases which it will be impossible for them to get through before the next long vacation. As the ultimate result of a suit depends on the decision of the Court of Appeal, we will be delaying decisions to a degree quite unnecessary by continuing this jurisdiction upon them. I, therefore, move that the election petitions be fyled in the ordinary courts and not in the Court of Appeal.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I merely wish to call the attention of the Committee again to the effect of this amendment, which will be that the judges of the Court of Appeal in Ontario will not be available for election trials. I should apprehend, from the slight knowledge I have of the subject, that with the increased demand which we make on the judges by the provisions of this Bill, which requires that two judges shall sit for the trial of every election petition, this will have the effect of seriously retarding the disposal of such petitions by withdrawing the judges of the Court of Appeal from participation in this work. This is a matter concerning which I have not sufficient information personally to form an opinion, and the members from Ontario who are interested in it must take the responsibility of forming an opinion on it. I presume that when the matter attracts public notice, we shall have an expression of opinion if the apprehension I entertain is well founded. In the meantime, I do not profess to know enough about it to say that the clause should not be adopted, and must leave to members from Ontario to consider that question, and I feel the more reluctance in expressing any determined opposition to the amendment owing to the information its mover possesses as regards the organization of the court and the requirements of other business which seem in his opinion to call for the change.

Mr. McCARTHY. The judges of the Court of Appeal are ex officio judges of the other courts, and can, if necessary, be used in the other courts. Still I do not at all contemplate that can be done, because that would, of course, defeat the object of the amendment; but there are at present four judges attached to the Court of Chancery and three to the other courts. The scope of the Act is that election petitions should not be commenced within six months, and the result is that it is just a choice which business we should disturb. The election trials must be commenced within the six months, and by the three courts or by the four courts, if the Committee think better to leave the four courts. In the one case the business of the first instance might possibly be interfered with, that is the causes in their early stage; in the other case, the causes in their ultimate stage, where, as far as my practice goes to show, a great deal more damage is really done. In the United States the Supreme Court is so loaded up with cases that people enter appeals simply in order to gain time. I believe that cases are entered in Washington which cannot be reached for three or four years, with the result that appeals are entered for no other purpose than to gain time. I know that the opinion of the profession in the Province of Ontario is, that it would be better that this business should be confined to that branch of the Supreme Court to which it properly belongs.

Mr. LAURIER. There are several members from the Province of Ontario who are not now in their seats, and it might be advisable to postpone this discussion until they are here.

Mr. McCARTHY. I have no objection.

On section 2,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I would call the attention of the Committee to the change which is being made here. Instead of fixing the time at thirty days from the gazetting of the election in Ottawa, we are making it thirty days from the day of the declaration. It was suggested that we should make it thirty days from the date of holding the poll. The difficulty in regard to that is what I have already explained to the House, namely, that in all cases the thirty days would be shortened by the delay in making the declaration, because the petition cannot well be presented until one of the candidates is declared elected. My own preference would be for thirty days from the day of declaration, but if the House is of opinion that it should be thirty days from the day of polling, it would be necessary to give power to some tribunal to extend the time if, in consequence of the weather, or negligence, or death, or sickness or otherwise, a considerable portion of the time should be consumed. I think, however, that it is better to leave the thirty days clear from the time of declaration. That will be an improvement on the present law, which gives thirty days from the time of gazetting.

Mr. CHARLTON. Delays have very often occurred in making declarations, and those delays might occur for a considerable length of time, so that the difficulty complained of under the present system would to some extent still exist. One returning officer might make his declaration within a few days of the polling, and another might withhold it for weeks. I think it would be better to fix some date counting from the polling day. If thirty days are not enough, take some larger number, but fix some date, so that one candidate may not be placed at a disadvantage compared with another. I understand the difficulties to which the Minister of Justice referred, and they might occur in such ridings as Gaspé or remote ridings in British Columbia, but it might be possible to make exceptions in these cases. I think the Minister of Justice would present a more acceptable Bill to the country if he would fix some time from the day of polling, instead of leaving it in the power of returning officers to delay the return of a candidate.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I regret that the Minister of Justice has changed this amendment. The committee to whom the Bill was referred was unanimous upon the point that the time should be fixed within which petitions should be fyled. The hon. gentleman has changed that and left it nearly as bad as it was formerly. Formerly it was quite uncertain when the petition was to be fyled. It depended on the returning officers. Some of them made their returns promptly and some delayed them for weeks. I know that, in the election in my own county, although the returning officer lived only 12 miles from the county town, I did not get my notification for three weeks after the polling day. It does not matter which party is in power; both parties should be treated with absolute fairness in this matter. It was not so under the old law, and it is not so under the new law. A large part of the difficulties remain, and we are dependent upon the will and caprice of the returning officer as to when the petition shall be fyled. Everyone should be placed in the same position, whether defeated or elected candidates. A difficulty in the case of a few counties may arise, but that can only be in a very small number of constituencies, and there can be no difficulty in making it applicable to a large majority of constituencies. If the hon. gentleman does that, he will do what will give general satisfaction to the country. The Select Committee was unanimous on the point. There was not a dissenting voice. The time within which the petition is to be fyled should be a fixed date.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Was it from the day of polling?

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). From the day of polling, except in the case of parties elected by acclamation, then from the day of nomination. But in all other cases, wherever there was a poll, it was fixed from the day of polling.

Mr. McCARTHY. Why would it not do to make the time run from the day of the declaration?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many days does that give?

Mr. McCARTHY. The time is indefinite, but before the election there can be no presumption that the returning officer will not fix a proper time, and he has to fix it in his proclamation before the polling. The 16th section of the Act covers the time and place fixed for the nomination of candidates; the day on which the poll for taking the votes of the electors is to be held, in case a poll is demanded; the several polling stations fixed by him, and the time when, and place where, the returning officer will sum up the number of votes given to the several candidates. Now, let the time be counted thirty days from the date that the return ought to be made.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). But we fix no date in the return.

Mr. McCARTHY. The proclamation fixes the date for the declaration. But he might not be able to make the declaration on that day, because the ballot boxes may be lost; but the ballot boxes can always be obtained, and the information given within a week or so. So that if the delay was fixed from that date, I think it would be more reasonable than to fix it from the date of polling.

Mr. AMYOT. Why allow the returning officer to fix the dates? Why not make the same delay for everyone? The returning officer might fix it at thirty days or forty days.

Mr. McCARTHY. That ought to be done in the Election Act.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Would not practically the objection of the Minister of Justice be met, and the object which the Committee desire to attain be effectually attained, by extending the term from thiry days to forty days? I can hardly conceive any possible case, outside of some five or six counties, in which forty days from polling would not be ample time for every possible ceremony to be observed, and due time given for presenting an election petition. It seems to me that a slight extension would meet the views of the Minister of Justice, and it would also attain the extremely desirable end of having an absolutely fixed date. Now, if the suggestion made by the hon. member for North Simcoe would be a good suggestion, that of having only a fixed time appointed by law within which the declaration should be made, it would be practically the same thing as my suggestion. But that is not done as a matter of fact. It still leaves a great deal of power in the hands of the returning officer.

Mr. LAURIER. I would be sorry if the member for Simcoe at all departed from his amendment. The advantage of his amendment is that the petition must be made within a stated and uniform delay. The objection to the present law is that the provision which requires that the petition shall be fyled within thirty days after the proclamation allows invidious distinctions to be made, and the amendment of the hon. gentleman does away with that possibility. Now, the amendment suggested by the Minister of Justice, that the delay shall run from the proclamation instead of the gazetting, is only substituting one form of the evil for another, and the law remains the same thing in principle, that is, the delay within which petitions are to be filed is uncertain; whereas if we fix a date—and if thirty days is not sufficient then let us extend it to forty days—then you have a uniform delay which will apply to all parties. Now, if we adopt the other system of having the date run from the proclamation, you retain the same difficulty, because in one instance the returning officer, through negligence, perhaps, may postpone the proclamation, and thereby give to his neighbour or to some other party an advantage which the party in his own county does not have.

Mr. McCARTHY. What if he does not make the return in forty days?

Mr. LAURIER. He would then be guilty of a violation of duty.

Mr. AMYOT. If he does not make a report within forty days, then he may never make a report. The Government is not supposed to take rascals or fools for returning officers. We want a uniform delay for everyone. Let it be twenty, or thirty, or fifty days, or even a year, if you will, but we want it uniform, so that no undue advantage may be given to one candidate over another.

Mr. McMULLEN. If forty days is not sufficient time for the party to come into court, why not allow the time to be extended upon application by any person who wishes to fyle a petition?

Mr. McCARTHY. To my mind, it makes little difference whether you count from the polling day or from proclamation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Polling day is a fixed day, being the same in all cases.

Mr. McCARTHY. There are some constituencies, like Algoma, where a return cannot be made in twenty days at least.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is proposed especially to except these.

Mr. McCARTHY. They are not provided for yet.

Mr. LAURIER. We could enact that in Algoma and Gaspé the delay should be sixty days.

Mr. MULOCK. A party might fyle a petition even before the declaration day. We know who the candidates are, and any elector might petition, even without a declaration. Suppose there is no declaration made at all within forty days, or any other time, and if any person chooses to make application, even without a declaration, he can fyle a petition claiming that such and such person ought to be declared the elected candidate.

Mr. McCARTHY. Say forty days from polling. There is a provision for declaration to be made.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would adopt the suggestion of the Minister of Justice and say forty days from the day of polling in all ridings except Algoma and Gaspé.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We cannot make an exception like that, because in Gaspé, Bonaventure, Chicoutimi, Saguenay, Algoma, Muskoka and Cariboo, in British Columbia, are all subject to delays. The only argument in favour of a uniform rule would be to make the time long enough to cover all these places.

Mr. LAURIER. If I remember aright, the delays are uniform except in Algoma, Gaspé and Cariboo. In all those places, which are actually excepted under the present law, then you might leave the same exceptions, but have the general law everywhere.

Mr. McCARTHY. I propose to strike out the word "or" in the clause: "any unlawful or corrupt act by any candidate at the same election who was not returned, or by any agent of such candidate with his consent or privity." If the candidate pays money himself or it is paid with his privity, then an election petition shall be justified, notwithstanding the lapse of thirty days: but not when this is done without his knowledge by some other person.

On section 5,

Mr. DICKEY. I move that in line 11, clause 5, after "examinations" the following words be inserted: "purporting to be signed by the examiner." Sometimes it is difficult to prove the signature of the examiner, and for that reason evidence is excluded. I propose this amendment in order that evidence may be accepted by the courts without evidence as to the handwriting of the examiner.

Mr. McCARTHY. It would be still better to permit evidence to be taken by stenographers, and make the transcript primâ facie evidence.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). There is a clause I submitted to the House that the Minister of Justice should adopt. As the law now stands you cannot receive evidence until the time for the trial is fixed, and you cannot tell when the trial is going to be held. It is well known from the history of election cases that before the date of trial is fixed, important witnesses sometimes leave the country, and you cannot obtain their evidence. I propose the addition of a distinct clause to enable the petitioner or respondent to serve a subpœna on a witness the very moment the petition is fyled. The clause in my Bill is as follows:—

"At any time after an election petition has been fyled and before the day has been fixed for the trial of said petition, a subpœna may be issued and served on any witness on behalf of the parties to the said petition, and the said subpœna shall have the same force and effect as if it had issued after the day fixed for the trial of the petition: and if it is made to appear to the said court or any judge thereof that any such witness intends to leave Canada and cannot attend such trial, then, on application to the said court or judge, on notice to the parties to the petition, the said court or judge may grant an order for the examination of such witness at a time and place and before a person to be named in such order, and the said witness may thereupon be examined touching the matter complained of in the petition, due notice of such time and place being given to the parties to the petition, who may, by their respective counsel, attend such examination, and examine and cross-examine such witness; and such examination shall be reduced to writing and signed by such witness, and when truly returned by the examiner, may be used by either party to the petition on the trial thereof."

Mr. CHARLTON. It strikes me this provision would rather seriously interfere with individual rights. The person is subpœnaed as a witness, and perhaps the day has not been fixed for the trial, but the witness is obliged to wait week after week and month after month, to know when his presence is required. It strikes me that this provision, although in some sense a good one, might interfere with the privileges of the subject.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). If the witness wants to remain away until after the trial he can give notice to the opposing party, who may examine him under the section that has just passed.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The difficulty about adopting this, is, that the moment a petition is fyled a number of immaterial witnesses can be summoned to remain in the country for twelve months, which would be a great inconvenience to them, and very great expense to the parties to the petition. In the case, for instance, in which petitions were presented last April, I suppose that the day of trial has not yet been fixed in any one of them, and a man might be kept in the country on the service of a subpœna all this time, and for some months yet. I think the clause would be a serious inconvenience to those who would not be material witnesses.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). That difficulty can be got over by the person subpœnaed offering to be examined under the clause we have just passed. There is very little danger of immaterial witnesses being subpœnaed, because they have to be paid their witness fees.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am afraid that will not help matters very much, because, to my knowledge, witnesses have gone out of the country after they have been subpœnaed and they may remain away until after the petition is disposed of, and there is no way of dealing with them. There is no doubt that there is a great deal in what the member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) says. I remember on one occasion that the judge had to come back three times, but the witnesses tired out the judge and the judge declined to come any longer and had to close the case without the evidence. While the proposition of the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) would to some extent cure the evil, it would not remedy it altogether.

Mr. DICKEY. I think it would be a better provision that when a person is summoned as a witness before the trial the evidence of the witness should be taken, and preserved in that form.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I think perhaps on the whole the suggestion of the hon. gentleman is better than the clause of the Bill.

Mr. DENISON. Would not that increase the expense of election trials? You would probably have a great many people examined on the chance of getting evidence from them.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think my hon. friend is stealing a march on the member for Huron (Mr. Cameron), in getting him to assent to that as a substitute for his clause, because it is the present law. Section 19 provides for that.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I understood the suggestion of the hon. gentleman to be that a subpœna could not issue without the order of a judge, so that there would be good faith in it. If the Minister of Justice thinks my amendment ought not to become part of the law I will not press it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think, considering the present power of examining witnesses, and considering the clause we have just adopted, that we had better not run the risk of going further.

Mr. McCARTHY. I wish to move the following amendment to clause 10 of the Act:—

Section ten of the said Act is hereby amended by striking out the word "or" and substituting the word "of" in the sixth line thereof, and in striking out the words "or at his or their domicile," in the ninth line thereof.

Clause 10 of the Act now says:

"Notice of the presentation of a petition under this Act, and of the security, accompanied with a copy of the petition shall within five days after the day on which the petition has been presented, or within the prescribed time, or within a longer time as the court or any judge thereof, under special circumstances or difficulty in effecting service, allows, be served on the respondent or respondents."

My amendment would make it read:

Under special circumstances of difficulty.

Instead of:

"Under special circumstances or difficulty."

In the ordinary case if there are difficulties in service the parties may apply to the judge of the court to get the time extended; but what I submit is that the time should only be extended when there are difficulties in service. In one case that recently occurred the man was served with a petition within five days. The petitioner discovered that he had made a mistake, and then he went to the judge and said: I have made a mistake in my first petition and I want to get an extension of time, and the judge gave him an extension of time under the clause, as he said that was a special circumstance. I propose to amend by re-substituting the word "of" for "or." The word was "of" in the original Act, but in the consolidation it appears to have been changed to "or."

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Why is the time for service limited to five days? I think it ought to be ten days. The candidate may, perhaps, be a business man in the west, and he may be away in Montreal on business, and if service is not effected within five days, and an application is made to the court at Toronto, he may be subjected to considerable expense.

Mr. McCARTHY. I have no objection to making the time ten days; but I am dealing with another matter. I wish to provide that the service shall be personal unless the man is evading service. Under the words of the statute our courts have held that service may be effected by leaving the writ at the domicile, without personal service at all. That is not the intention of Parliament, I take it, nor is it fair to the man, who may be present at his domicile at the time of service, and who should be served personally. I desire to provide that if he is not served personally within the prescribed time, the judge may, upon application, direct how the service shall be given, whether by leaving the writ at his house, or giving it to his wife, or his servant, or in any other way.

Mr. MULOCK. I think it would be better to provide that the mode of service shall be by delivery to the returning officer. A candidate may be elected in a constituency thousands of miles distant from where he lives, and the petition has to be fyled in the province in which the riding is situated.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman wants to prevent domiciliary service in the first instance. Is he aware of any miscarriage of justice having arisen from this clause as it exists now?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am aware of this, that in one case an order was made for substitutional service; the candidate appealed, claiming that the order for substitutional service was given without sufficient ground; and the court agreed with that view, but held that the service might be at the domicile. Until this decision was given, nobody in our province dreamed that that was the law. Therefore, I think we should make the law definite by providing that the service must be personal in the first instance, and then, if the man is evading service, giving the court power to order the service to be made in any way it sees fit.

Mr. MULOCK. I would suggest that five days be substituted for ten.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think you are right. Five days is too short a time. I move that:

Section 10 of the said Act is hereby amended by striking out the word "or" and substituting the word "of" in the sixth line thereof, and in striking out the words "or at his or their domicile" in the ninth line thereof.

We had better pass this amendment as I have moved it, and then repeal the clause and re-enact it as amended.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. McCARTHY. I move to omit the words: "and the court may, at any time thereafter, upon the application of either party, fix some convenient time and place for the trial of the petition." I move that these words be struck out of the thirteenth clause. How these words got into the Controverted Elections Act I do not know. They are not found in the English Act or in the Ontario Act, and the result is very mischievous, because the judges have held that they cannot fix an election trial until either party moves, and at this moment, when we will probably have a large number of election petitions for trial——

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). That is all right. Nobody wants them to fix the time for trial.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is exactly what I think they should do. An election trial is a matter in the interests of the public. The party stepping forward as petitioner has virtually made himself a public prosecutor; and both in England and Ontario the judges fix the time for trial at their own convenience, having regard of course to that of the parties as well. After the last Ontario elections, the judges took the lists, and saw what time they had to spare, and what judges they had to undertake the trials, and they divided the work among them, fixing the days for trial, so that a judge started on an election petition circuit as he would on an ordinary circuit. In that way the work was got through as speedily as possible, instead of being delayed, as it sometimes has been, until the member whose election is petitioned against has sat in the House a couple of years.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am opposed to making the judge a party, as it were, to the petition by enabling him to fix a date for the trial. I am opposed to his being allowed to intervene at almost every stage, and not giving the party interested the opportunity to decide how he shall carry on his own proceeding. I have not known, in my experience, of any difficulty arising in the way of delay in consequence of its being necessary that the petitioner should move to fix the time for trial. In my own province I know the trials have been disposed of very expeditiously, and it is not out of recollection that an election has taken place and the successful candidate unseated, and a new election been held between one session and another. Any difficulty that arises will certainly only be felt after a general election, when petitions are numerous, and it would not be well to alter the whole system by which the petitioner has to some extent the fixing of the time for trying his petition. The present crop of petitions is larger than has ever been known before, and the present inconvenience is not likely soon to occur again. The law is sufficiently stringent in that regard, since it fixes the time within which the trial must take place, but to say that the judges shall decide of their own motion when the trials shall take place, would be placing the judiciary in a position it ought not to occupy with regard to the procedure on election petitions. It is true to some extent that the trial of an election petition is one in which the public is interested, but it is likewise true in many cases that the public interest is not the primary object which the petitioner has in view; and I think he should have the right to apply for a date when the petition shall be tried or whether it ought to be brought on or not.

Mr. McCARTHY. The amendment I make is by no means a novel one. It has been the law in England ever since they have had a Controverted Elections Act, and it has also been the law in Ontario. Under that law, ample notice is given the petitioner of the time fixed for the trial, and the Minister forgets that the petitioner really is a man who comes forward in the public interest with a bonâ fide intention that he will prosecute the petition, because provision is made that if he does not prosecute, another may apply and be substituted for him, so that the scope of the Act proposes that that should be done. It does appear to me that it will be impossible for the judges to try these petitions unless they can control the time when they shall be tried. All they do is to fix the day of trial and they do not do that until the case is at issue, and they fix it at a time when the parties have ample notice to be prepared for it. Then, if the petitioner does not want to go to trial, he can withdraw, giving, of course, the opportunity to some other person to take his place, but I am told by some of the judges who have spoken to me that it is most embarrassing to have some fifty petitions in the province, and only about six weeks after their circuit during which they have an opportunity to make an appointment for the trial of those petitions.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman knows that there are fictions of law which are not altogether based on the facts, and it is not literally a fact to say that election trials are public cases. If they were public cases, they would be dealt with at the suit of the Crown, but, though they may be technically public cases, they are brought at the suit of private parties, and the machinery of the law is open to the most diligent. It is, therefore, fair that the general principle should apply that the most diligent should have the advantage.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not desire to press this against the general view of the Committee, but I think my hon. friends are making a mistake in not permitting this to be done. In the Ontario election trials, the whole thing was done conveniently and the judges were able to get through with their work, commencing with the eastern and finishing with the western section.

On section 6,

Mr. DICKEY. I do not object to the clause itself, which I think is perfectly right, but it introduces an entirely new principle into the law. It throws the burden on the candidate petitioned against of proving a negative. He has to prove that no corrupt practices were committed during the election on his behalf. That is a very difficult task for any candidate. It seems to me that the proper way would be that, if the court or judge was of opinion from the evidence that such a state of matters existed in the constituency, this result might follow, but that the judge should not be required to report that the candidate has proved this negative. Let the judge form his opinion upon the evidence submitted, and do not leave a negative fact to be proved by the candidate after the case against him is closed.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Surely the least the candidate can do is to say on his oath that no corrupt practice has been committed by him personally.

Mr. DICKEY. Look at sub-section d.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). It is easy for the candidate under sub-section d to swear that, as far as he knows, there was no corrupt practice.

Mr. DICKEY. But the words are added "and his agents," which means every person in the county who has acted for the candidate.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). It only applies to his knowledge. Now, the election would be void if these acts were committed by an agent, but this prevents the unseating of the candidate even if corrupt acts are committed by his agent, if he can clear himself. Sub-section d only requires the candidate to swear that he did not authorize corrupt acts or commit any himself.

Mr. CASEY. This does place, as my friend from Cumberland (Mr. Dickey) says, the duty of proving a negative on the candidate. It assumes that, if corrupt practices have taken place on the part of the agents of the candidate, that should avoid the election unless the candidate proves his ignorance of those practices, his attempt to prevent them, or their triviality and limited extent. The candidate must prove those points before the assumption that he is responsible for the acts of his agents is got rid of. It is always difficult to prove a negative, and it would be difficult for the judge to report positively that it was proven that the candidate took all reasonable means to prevent the commission of corrupt practices, or that it was proved that the offences mentioned in said report were trivial. We leave it to the judge to say what sort of offences are trivial and unimportant. If it is contended that only slight breaches of the law, breaches committed with the knowledge of the candidate, should not void the election, then I think the nature and extent of the corruption, or the nature of the acts that would void the election, should be in some way specified in this Act. I think it is quite just that the candidate should not be held responsible for everything done by unauthorized parties professing to be friends of his; but I think the law should be so worded as to indicate what amount of corruption, what amount of bribery by unauthorized parties, even against the orders of the candidate, should void the election. It is quite possible that the candidate might make a great show of taking measures against the corrupt practices of his agents. We have known such things to be done before. We have known a candidate to take every means of avoiding responsibility, ignoring his committee and having no knowledge of what is going on, while at the same time an agent is sent in from elsewhere, and in the interest of that candidate, but wholly without his knowledge, has been guilty of considerable corruption, and corruption affecting the election. It seems to me that if this was so phrased as to provide that unless the judge reported that such amount of corruption had taken place even without the knowledge or consent of the candidate, and in opposition to his instructions, as appeared likely to have affected the result of the election, the election should not be voided. I do not think the words "trivial and unimportant" are a sufficient guide for the judge. It is not for the judge to say what is trivial or unimportant, it is for Parliament to say, and anything that affects the result of an election cannot be trivial or unimportant. This provision is so vague that the judge might easily err in making his report; whereas, if you are only asking the judge to decide whether it appeared likely from the cases of bribery that had been proven, that there had been bribery enough to affect the result of the election, in that case he might be called upon reasonably to come to a proper decision. Naturally, the petitioner could not be expected to prove as many acts of bribery as would have actually obtained the majority secured by the successful candidate, but if a considerable amount of bribery was proven, it would be natural for the judge to assume that the result might have been affected by cases which had not come to the knowledge of the petitioner and consequently had not been proven. We wish to obtain the opinion of the Minister of Justice also as to the effect of this clause upon election petitions now pending, as to whether this wording and the intention of this provision are to apply to the trial of cases which occurred during the last election. I think the intention of this provision is right and just, but it is open to great question whether this law should be applied to cases arising out of the late election, whether, in other words, it should be retrospective. The late election was conducted under the old law which provided that the act of an agent, no matter how trivial, if it were a corrupt act, was sufficient to unseat the successful candidate. The candidates and their agents, and all concerned, had full knowledge that such was the law and the elections were conducted with this full knowledge on their part, and with full notice to them to avoid all such acts as would, under the existing law, unseat the candidate. It is open to question whether this section relaxing the strictness of the law, should be made to apply to cases occurring under the old Act. I hardly think, for my own part, that it should, but I wish to get the opinion of the Minister of Justice on that point.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think it is not unreasonable that the burden should be put upon the candidate of exonerating himself if the facts proven are such as, under the law as it stands, would forfeit his seat. As to the objection of the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), that the words "trivial and unimportant" are vague, inasmuch as it is for the judge to decide whether the acts of corruption are trivial or not, I think we can leave that in no better hands, and it is probably safe to leave it there, inasmuch as we are just adopting the language, in that regard, of the Corrupt Practices Act of England, of 1883. I think it is better to adhere as closely as we can to the provisions of the statute under which a series of decisions have been made.

Mr. CASEY. Are those words the same?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes, it is the same in the English Act. It is not an extensive change from the law of 1888. As regards the other point, whether this should be retrospective, I think it would be better and more dignified that we should add a clause to the Bill providing that this clause shall not affect pending petitions. There is a good deal to be said on the other side. It is not uncommon, when we relax penalties and penal provisions, to make them applicable to existing proceedings. But on the whole I think it would be better to allow the petitioners in pending cases to make what they can out of their petitions against us, and it would be a pity to deprive them of that right.

Mr. CHARLTON. I cannot agree with the opinion expressed by the Minister of Justice that the amendment to the law proposed by this Bill shall not apply to pending petitions that have not yet been tried. If the law required amending, if the law was in any respect unjust, if the law was in any respect unduly severe, if the provisions of the law in the interest of justice required to be changed, I would like to ask why this provision should not apply to suits that are yet to be tried, why the provisions of this law should be extended away on into the future, perhaps years from this time? If there is any need for the law at all, the need of that change is an instant need, it should apply to petitions now pending. It is admitting that there is no use for the law and no necessity for the law, practically admitting that we need not to make the law applicable to cases that are yet to be tried. I should say it would be an absurdity to place a law upon the Statute-book providing that it shall not go into operation until the necessities that called that law into existence, so far as they exist at present, have passed away. Most certainly the law should go into operation from the day that it passes, it should apply to cases that arise after the passage of the law, and after the law receives the Royal Assent.

Mr. SKINNER. I want to draw the attention of the Committee to section 8. When it was before the Committee previously, the Committee did not think that the party petitioned against should have to go to affirmative proof on sub-section d in order to get the benefit of it: but that he should get the benefit of the evidence as it stood. It seems to me that as sub-section d now stands, no part of the benefit of the sub-section would be had by the person petitioned against unless the conditions laid down in sub-section d are fulfilled, namely, proof that the election is free from any corrupt practice on the part of such candidate and of his agents. The word "agents" under the election law is a term of very general description, and persons are made agents by the law although the candidate had nothing to do with their appointment. Therefore, it is calling upon the candidate to produce a line of proof which it is almost impossible for him to bring forward. The Committee were of the opinion that the sitting member should have the benefit of the evidence as it stood at the time the judge made his report. I propose that sub-section d be altered, to the effect "that in all other respects the evidence did not show there had been any corrupt practice on the part of the candidate or his agents." If the judge reported that the evidence did not show corrupt practices on the part of the candidate or his agents, the candidate should have the benefit of the provisions of this section; otherwise, at the election trial he would have to go through a process of proof with respect to all his agents, and establish that no corrupt practice had been carried out by any of them. It would be impossible to carry forward that proof with any reasonable success, owing to the uncertainty involved in the matter, and, therefore, to pass the section of the Act as it is would be practically nullifying the Act.

Mr. DICKEY. There can be no question with respect to sub-section d that the candidate must prove, in order to get the benefit of the section, that each and all of his agents had been innocent of corrupt practices during the election. This word "agent" is used also in the previous section, and as it is used twice it must necessarily receive the same meaning in each place, and therefore a candidate must prove that there has been no corruption anywhere in the county on the part of any person actually working for him. I admit that the candidate should be placed on oath to give evidence as to the absence of corruption; but it is unfair to make him prove the act of every agent throughout the county, of which, presumably, he knew nothing whatever, and especially when the effect of his failing to prove that, for he cannot prove it, would be that it would be thrown up to him throughout the constituency that he was not able to clear himself personally.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Strike out the words "any of his agents."

On section 6,

Mr. McCARTHY. I wish to draw the attention of the Committee on this section to a matter which I think is very important. This absolves the candidate for the capital offence, as it may be called, of bribery. The amendment in the English law upon which this is founded, still leaves bribery, no matter how trivial the bribery may be, an offence for which the election ought to be avoided, and I would certainly protest against our law being altered in that regard. I think the experience of any person who has had anything to do with an election trial, is, that for every fifty cases of bribery you try to prove, and which I venture to say have been committed, you may establish only one, and that bribery is not committed unless the money has been furnished by the candidate, or by the candidate's friends. The individual elector does not put his hand in his own pocket and bribe. The result of experience in the Ontario election trials has been that perhaps you will spend five or six days endeavouring to prove a case of bribery, and although every person who hears the evidence will be morally satisfied that bribery has been committed, you cannot prove it. The witnesses say "no" or "they cannot remember," and all the rest of it, and perhaps, in the end, after a long trial, you will establish a case of bribery, and the judge has got to say: This is but one case of bribery of perhaps $5, and am I to set aside the election on account of that. We ought not to weaken the election law. We are always talking here about putting down corruption, and because it may be injurious to us personally, we ought not to weaken the law in that cardinal point. I think we will make a very great mistake indeed if we do. While for ordinary offences, undue influences, and treating, the judge may well say that the election ought not to be set aside, I venture to submit that we are making a mistake if we do not provide that the elections shall be set aside for even one case of bribery. I know that is the opinion of the hon. gentleman who formerly sat where my hon. friend who now leads the Opposition sits. If bribery is proved let the election be voided. The example is a good one at all events. What will be the result if we leave the law as it is? Well, men will say: We will bribe, and even if it is found out in one case, the judge will say it is a trivial matter and the election will not be set aside. Is not the experience of all of us that it is almost impossible to prove bribery? You have to take the evidence out of a hostile camp, and not only is the man desirous of sheltering himself personally from the disqualification which follows, but he is surrounded by his party friends, and the man who comes through the ordeal of cross-examination, battles with the counsel, and comes out triumphant, is a hero, whereas the unfortunate man who told the truth is looked upon as not quite fitted for the company in which he is.

Mr. LAURIER. That applies to all corrupt practices.

Mr. McCARTHY. No. Treating may be a trivial matter, and the judge can say if it is organized that it will void the election, but if it is merely a man treating another, which people often do at their own expense, it is left to the discretion of the judge whether he shall void the election or not. But, when money is paid, we know very well, whether we like to admit it or not, that it comes sooner or later out of our own pockets. It may not be paid at the time, but before the next election generally the call is made upon us, and it comes from the candidate or from those who put the candidate forward. I, therefore, would ask the Committee to pause before they pass the law in the wide sense in which it is now, and to omit from this the crime of bribery.

Mr. CHARLTON. What would you suggest?

Mr. McCARTHY. To meet the crime of bribery.

Mr. CHARLTON. The law now provides that the candidate shall free himself from all charges of corrupt practices. I cannot believe that my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is right, when he says that in all cases where bribery is resorted to the candidate is a party to it or ultimately becomes responsible for it. There are hundreds of cases where warm party friends, anxious to carry an election, will use means that the candidate will not approve of if he is appealed to, and which he never hears anything about. If you are going to adhere to the old rule that one single case of bribery will void the election, you are not making to any great extent the law less severe. I can cite the case of Dr. Platt, the former member for Prince Edward County, who was unseated on account of the payment of $1 by one of his agents, to a drunken loafer, whose importunities induced the man to give him $1 rather than be bothered with the man repeatedly coming to him. My experience leads me to believe that there are a great number of cases where party feeling runs high, and where improper influence being used, the candidate has no knowledge of. The candidate is not responsible for that, and he is powerless to prevent it. I cannot subscribe to the assertion made by the hon.

member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), that in all cases the candidate will sanction it and will foot the bill before the next election. I think it would be more suitable if we adopted the provision of the Ontario law in this respect, which says that it should be shown that corrupt practices had prevailed to an extent to influence the result of the election. One solitary act will not, perhaps, influence the result of the election, but if it does then the candidate should be unseated. If one solitary act of bribery has occurred in a riding where there are hundreds of a majority, of course it does not affect the result of the election. I consider the Ontario law a fair and equitable law. It has worked well, and it has secured as great a degree of purity in the elections of that province as we can boast of in the elections for the Dominion. I cannot agree with my hon. friend the candidate in most cases has complicity in bribery, but on the contrary he is more frequently personally innocent. I think it would be an extreme hardship to assume that the candidate is responsible for the bribery, that he knows of it, and that he will be ultimately responsible by footing the bill.

Mr. CASEY. I quite agree with my hon. friend in what he has said, and I would like to point out what happens in cases of bribery arising from betting. If a man has bet a considerable sum on an election, he is almost certain to use a portion of the money he has at stake in obtaining votes for the side for which he has bet. I have been told by betting men that they make it a practice to use half the amount of the bet in this way. I think a great deal of bribery of this kind goes on for which the candidate is not responsible, and it would be a shame if a successful candidate were to be unseated because one or two men had been guilty of bribery in working for their own interest. Of course if enough votes were influenced in that way to affect the result of the election, it should be voided; but if the judges report that they do not believe enough votes have been bought during the campaign to affect the result, I do not think the candidate should be unseated because there have been a few cases of bribery for which he is not responsible. That, I understand, is practically the meaning of the existing law in Ontario. It does not follow that nobody is ever unseated under that law, because the judges do frequently unseat successful candidates for the Legislative Assembly. But that clause prevents the unseating of candidates for things with which they have nothing to do.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not want to be misunderstood in saying that the candidate always pays the money. What I mean to say is, that either the candidate or those responsible for the election, the party pay the money, and not the individual man who states in the witness box that he paid $5 for a vote. The case to which the hon. member for North Norfolk has referred, that of the Prince Edward election, is certainly an unfortunate illustration for him. It is quite true that the case was decided on that one act of bribery. But on the first day of the trial a shocking state of things had been revealed; numbers of men had proven to have been bribed, and it was necessary to prove their connection with the candidate. But on the next day, as soon as one case was proved, the trial stopped, being decided on that; it was not necessary to go any further. That is the ordinary case. So many difficulties stand in the way, that you are, perhaps, able only to bring the briber home in one case. But so long as there is bribery, the public will perhaps think that we are taking a great deal more care of our seats than of the public interests, if we relax the provisions of the law against it.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman has pointed out a case in which there was a great deal of bribery, but in which it was not all brought home to the candidate.

Mr. McCARTHY. I said that on the first day the facts of the bribery had been established, but that it remained to make the connection with the candidate. The first thing to do in an election trial is to establish the bribery; the next is to establish the agency. The bribery having been established in a series of cases, the connection was established in one case, and the other cases were not gone into.

Mr. CASEY. I propose that if we give the candidate the protection of not unseating him for an isolated case of bribery, we should go to the other extreme and provide that if it be proven that a sufficient number of voters have been bribed to affect the result, the election should be voided, no matter whether agency is proven or not. Although the candidate may have been perfectly innocent, yet if a sufficient number of votes have been obtained by bribery to affect the result, the election is not an expression of the will of the people of that constituency, and therefore it should be voided, though there may be no stain on the character of the candidate.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I do not agree with the hon. member for North Simcoe that this Bill in the slightest degree interferes with the election law. It will punish a man for bribery the same as before. The only object of this provision is to relieve persons who have conducted an election fairly and honestly and without bribery. As the law stands, the victim is not the man who is guilty of bribery, but the unfortunate candidate who may be innocent of bribery or any knowledge of bribery, and who yet may be unseated and saddled with an enormous bill of costs in consequence of that bribery. If the hon. member for North Simcoe had experience of that, as others in this House have had, he would realize that the victim is the successful candidate, although he may be a perfectly innocent man. We do not interfere with the law regarding bribery. I would make it much more stringent; and in my Bill I proposed to do so, and to make many things corrupt acts and punishable by fine and imprisonment, which are not now corrupt acts. There is no reason why a clause of this kind should not pass, even if it does not have the result that the Minister of Justice says it has. I do not know that I would be in favour of a provision requiring proof of a sufficient number of acts of bribery to affect the result. If a man had a majority of 500, a very large number of cases of bribery would have to be proven in order to affect the result of the election, although there may have been the grossest bribery and corruption practised. I think the clause goes as far as it should go, by leaving the matter in the discretion of the judges. I am perfectly willing to leave it there, as I have full confidence in our judges. The hon. member for North Simcoe speaks as if the candidates were the persons who commit acts of bribery and corruption.

That may be the hon. gentleman's experience, but it is not the experience of some. I have known leading men, active, vigorous canvassers, who never spent any but their own money in an election ; and it is the grossest hardship upon a candidate that although he may not have spent money, and may not have heard of any being spent until the fact is elicited by a sharp counsel like my hon. friend at an election trial, he is to be unseated and to lose $3,000 or $4,000 costs. And all because some man with whom he had practically no dealings whatever, and to whom he gave not a cent of money, did something he ought not to have done and violated the law. I have known it to happen more than once that because a zealous friend, zealous perhaps because he is a strong politician, or perhaps because, as the hon. member for West Elgin says, he has something at stake on the result of the election, has seen fit to risk something and has violated the law, the unfortunate candidate is made to suffer. We ought to have some consideration for the candidate as well as the people. We ought to see that they are not improperly and unjustly punished for something somebody else has done. It is a well-known principle of law that a man should not be punished for the act of somebody else ; but under this election law an innocent man may be unseated and saddled with a large bill of costs on account of the act of somebody else whom he did not authorize. It was for the purpose of getting over that difficulty and dealing out to members elected a measure of justice, that, at the beginning of the session, I submitted a Bill containing a clause having the same effect as this. I believe it is a measure of fair-play and justice which will commend itself to every right-thinking man. The hon. member for Simcoe, who objects to this clause and who has never had an election petition presented against him, has not had experience ; or has the hon. gentleman had experience ?

Mr. McCARTHY. I have not had personal experience, and am not like you in that respect.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). And on that account he opposes this section. I trust this clause will pass. I do not think that it will have any injurious effect in practice. On the contrary, I believe it will have good effect. If there is such a class of men in the community who spend money on the faith of getting it back from the candidate, they will not do so when they know that the candidate will not be unseated by anything they have done. I believe it will be in the interest, not only of purity of elections, but of a class of men, members of Parliament, who, in the past, have suffered by reason of the indiscreet acts committed by others.

Mr. McCARTHY. I would not trouble the Committee again were it not for the personal allusion the hon. gentleman has made. I do not think we can discuss a matter of this kind if we introduce personal allusions into it.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I did not introduce any.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes ; the hon. gentleman made a pointed allusion to me.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I did not know you were protested.

Mr. McCARTHY. I was not protested, but have been engaged as counsel in election petitions, and have perhaps as large an experience as the hon. gentleman, though not his personal experience.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Is that personal ?

Mr. McCARTHY. I say I do not desire at all to introduce personal matters.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I would say that some of your friends have had a good deal more experience than I.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am not speaking of my friends. The hon. gentleman has brought this upon himself. The records of the courts reek with his acts. I am sure it was not his friends, it was not any indiscreet man who had a bet on the hon. gentleman's election, and who took an interest in it, but the hon. ge' 'eman himself——

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). No.

Mr. McCARTHY—who recorded in his own diary under his own hand——

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). No.

Mr. McCARTHY—the items of the sums paid to churches as election expenses.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Certainly, were not these good payments to churches ?

Mr. McCARTHY. Very good, under the circumstances, and very evenly divided.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). You surely do not complain of that ?

Mr. McCARTHY. What I propose, at all events, is to insert after the words "any offences" in the clause : "Where, after the passage of the Act, on the trial of an election petition respecting an election, the court decides that the candidate at such election was guilty, by his agents, of any offence other than bribery by the payment or the promise of payment of money"—leaving all the other election offences to be excused. That is section 15 we are dealing with.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think it would be unwise, in dealing with a measure of this kind, to be governed by the feeling that public opinion may suppose that we are dealing too tenderly with an offence such as bribery. Even if such impression should prevail outside, the objection founded on it is altogether inapplicable. The effect of the clause is only to exonerate a candidate when two distinct circumstances appear. One is, that it has been proved to the satisfaction of the court which tries him, that he is perfectly innocent, that he is not only not connected with the particular offence which has been proved, but that he has not been connected with any other offence in the election. And the second element is that the offence which was committed by the other man, without the candidate's knowledge or consent, was unimportant. I am not afraid of public opinion when I exonerate a man who is innocent from the consequences of the offence of another man, and when I find that such offence was unimportant and committed without his knowledge. Under these circumstance, I think the clause should pass.

Mr. MULOCK. In section 15, second line, you use the word "court ;" and in the fifth line you use the words "court or judges." I suggest there should be uniformity.

Mr. McCARTHY. Better leave out the word "judges."

Mr. DEPUTY CHAIRMAN. The clause reads as follows:—

Where, after the passing of this Act, upon the trial of an election petition respecting an election, the court decides that a man at such election was guilty by his agent or agents of any offence that would render his election void, and the court further finds no corrupt practice was committed at such election by the candidate personally, and the offences were committed contrary to the order and without the sanction or connivance of the said candidate, and that the said candidate took all reasonable means of preventing the commission of corrupt practices at such election.

Amendment agreed to

Mr. DEPUTY CHAIRMAN. And the addition moved is as follows:—

That the offences mentioned were of a trivial and unimportant character.

Mr. CASEY. I would suggest the addition of the words "were not sufficient to have affected the result of the election."

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The words here are stronger.

Mr. DEPUTY CHAIRMAN. Sub-section d reads:

That in all other respects the election was free from any corrupt practice on the part of such candidate or his agents.

Mr. DICKEY. I move to strike out the words "or his agents."

Mr. McCARTHY. Will not that destroy the whole effect? The judge has to decide on the whole trial that the election is free from corrupt practices by the candidate or his agents. I think that should be left in.

Mr. CASEY. I must agree with my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) and with what I conceive to be the intention of the Minister of Justice, not to protect a candidate unless he is ignorant of corrupt practices, even in trivial cases.

Mr. McCARTHY. There is no practical difficulty about it. The judge can only decide upon the evidence.

Mr. MULOCK. The report as to the general existence of corrupt practices is involuntary on the part of the judge. It is very different if the judge has to report that not one agent of the candidate has committed any corrupt practice except of a trivial character. If a candidate is nominated at a public meeting, according to the present law every man who is there is the agent of the candidate for the purposes of this Act, and every one of the 500 or more people present could unseat the candidate, who would be obliged to satisfy the court that not one of these legal agents had committed any corrupt practice except of a trivial character.

Mr. McCARTHY. If there is no proof of a corrupt act, the judge certifies that there is none.

Mr. MULOCK. If the judge finds that there is no corrupt practice, he must find it on the evidence. Under this provision the court is called upon to find a negative, and it cannot do that without evidence.

Mr. McLEOD. Before this section applies at all, the court must find that the candidate, by himself or his agent, has committed bribery or some corrupt act. Then the judge has to find that in all other respects the election is free from any corrupt practice on the part of the candidate or his agents, and I do not see how he can do that without evidence.

Mr. CASEY. I think all the difficulty would be avoided by adding "as far as appears by the evidence submitted to the court."

Mr. DICKEY. I agree to adding "as far as disclosed by the evidence."

On section 7,

Mr. GERMAN. Before this clause is adopted I think it would be wise for the Minister of Justice to consider the question of costs in regard to election petitions generally. I think it would be wise if the same principle was adopted in the Controverted Elections Act of the Dominion that is adopted in the election law for the Province of Ontario, that is, limiting the costs to which an unsuccessful respondent or petitioner shall be mulcted, to a certain fixed sum. We all know that on certain occasions the costs which are involved in the trial of these petitions, are something enormous, particularly where neither party to the proceedings is quite able to pay the costs. Illustrious counsel from Toronto is employed—and I am not speaking from any desire to be personal—who are justly entitled to have very large fees, and besides that, enormous costs are incurred in getting witnesses, which in many cases are quite unnecessary. It may be said, of course, that the costs are subject to taxation; that is true, but we all know who have had any experience in regard to taxing bills of cost, that when they come before the taxing master, and a party to a suit shows that he has paid out money for witnesses, the taxes are generally allowed to go without any great strength of evidence. I submit to the Minister of Justice and to this Committee that before this matter is finally wound up, an amendment should be added limiting the amount of costs which shall be paid by the unsuccessful party in a controverted election case.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I quite agree with the observations of my hon. friend. I have had four petitions fyled against me, and I never was unseated but once, that was in 1874. I was not unseated at that time for subscribing to religious monuments in Penetanguishene or elsewhere; but I was unseated all the same. That election trial cost $3,500. These costs are a terror to any candidate against whom a petition is fyled. It is a lottery, but one thing is always certain, that is that whoever fails has to pay from $1,000 to $3,000. Now, that ought not to be. There are extortionate fees charged. You cannot get counsel from Toronto for less than two or three hundred dollars a day. If the sum is limited and fixed, such extortionate fees will not be charged by local counsel or by anybody else. At present the unfortunate candidate has got to pay it all. Therefore, I think, if it is possible for Parliament to fix the amount, we ought to do it, so that the unsuccessful petitioner or candidate should not be saddled with unreasonable costs.

Mr. MULOCK. I have drawn an amendment which I had intended to make at some stage in regard to the costs. I think there is a good deal to be said as to whether there should be any costs awarded at all in election trials.

Mr. McCARTHY. Don't let us have any election trials; that would be better still.

Mr. MULOCK. I am not speaking for myself. But I must say I sympathize with what has been the bitter experience of many men in public life, men of limited means, who have gone into public life in response to a demand on the part of people, and have been subjected to one or two election trials, and $5,000 or $10,000, the whole accumulations of a lifetime, are swept away. I sympathize with those people, and I think they should not be exposed to that loss. They are engaged in the public service, and they are the sole sufferers in the long run, and perhaps being ruined in public life, they become dependent on the Government of the day for some office. Perhaps they are induced from exigency to do what, in their earlier years, they would have shrunk from doing, and are ruined, perhaps, in mind, body and estate through a few election contests. The public are concerned in such matters, it is not a question of private right at all, it is a question of pnblic right, and I believe that unless the candidate is personally to blame, we might with perfect justice declare that in no case should the costs be payable except where the candidate himself had been personally guilty, and in that case I would not spare him. But in every other case I think he is entitled to a great deal of consideration; and if the House is not prepared to take the step of declaring that there shall be no costs recoverable at all, I think we might well limit the maximum amount recoverable. The fact that to-day costs are unlimited may be—I will not say it is, but may be—an inducement to some people to promote litigation. In many cases the petitions are not the result of known wrong, but they are fyled, perhaps, to serve some party purpose, not fyled by reason of the supposed existence of a wrong, but on speculation, and so on.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think the greater evil is—and perhaps in that respect we do not sufficiently protect the sitting member—that men of straw are put forward as petitioners; that really is the greater evil, because each party takes his chances. If these election petitions are put in, they must be at the expense of somebody; and if the illustrious counsel from Toronto, to whom the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) has referred, are engaged, these will have to be paid by some person or another. A petition is fyled, that petition is successful, wrong has been done, and to that extent the public interest is subserved in the exposure of that wrong, and yet the petitioner has to be at the expense. Now, we might well consider how the respondent may be protected. I have known many instances of that kind, where the respondent finds that the party put forward is simply a man of straw and is not worth a cent, and that the deposit has been exhausted for witness and other purposes, and that there is no protection for him—I think that would be a matter that the Committee might well consider. But, on the other hand, limiting the costs will not reduce the counsel fees, it will not reduce the witness fees that will have to be paid by the successful party, but, after all, in the event of success, has done a public service.

Mr. MULOCK. I beg to move the following section as clause 6 of section 7:—

That no greater counsel fee or fees shall be taxed as between party and parties, in respect of or in connection with the trial, than $50, and when the trial shall continue beyond one day, a further sum not exceeding $40 for each additional day the trial shall continue, whether one or more counsel be engaged at the trial, except as to certain witness fees and other actual disbursements in regard to the evidence, taxable as in ordinary cases between party and parties, as may be allowed by the judgment or order of the court allowing or apportioning costs; no greater sum, including counsel fee, than $300 shall be taxed or taxable against either party as costs in the cause.

Committee rose and reported progress.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

THE RATHBUN COMPANY.

Bill (No. 171) respecting the Rathbun Company (Mr. Kirkpatrick) was considered in Committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 147) to amend the Controverted Elections Act.

(In the Committee.)

On section 8,

Mr. CHARLTON. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if this new Act will have any bearing upon the position, that if proceedings were not taken within six months of the time of the protest, they fall to the ground?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It does not affect that.

Mr. MULOCK. I fully approve of the proposition involved in this clause, requiring two judges to preside at the trial; but I fail to see any necessity for there being two judges to hear the application for withdrawal. In the trial itself there is a severe contest, whilst the application for withdrawal is a minor matter altogether, and in most cases there is a consent so far as there can be any such under the Act. I would suggest that while there are two judges for the trial, a withdrawal can be before one judge.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) is right in that. I notice this clause says: "And additional judges shall, if necessary, be placed on the rota accordingly." I have no doubt that is according to the English Act, but we have no rota here.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We can strike out those words, and also provide that the withdrawal of an election petition may be before one judge.

Mr. MULOCK. That will be satisfactory.

On sub-section 2 of section 8,

Mr. CASEY. I would ask why it is that there is an appeal where the court is unanimous, and no appeal when the court is divided? One would expect that it should be the other way altogether.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. When the court is divided there is no judgment to appeal from.

Mr. CASEY. That is the technical view of the matter, of course, that you cannot have an appeal where there is no judgment. But although there is no judgment, the same effect is reached; the member is confirmed in his seat, and the attempt to unseat him fails because the judges differ. On the other hand, if the judges agree to maintain the member in his seat, there is an appeal, and further proceedings may be taken to show that he should not be retained in his seat. Although technically no appeal lies when the judges differ, I do not see why the Act should not provide for an appeal though no judgment is given; or else, on the other hand, make the judgment final when both judges agree, no matter which way they may decide. You ought either to make their judgment final in both cases, or else provide for an appeal when the court is divided as well as when it is unanimous. It is an anomaly that one member should be unseated by the unanimous decision of the judges, while another member is retained in his seat when the judges differ and no further proceedings are taken.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In such a case he gets the benefit of the doubt. The reason why there can be no appeal is not merely technical. The hon. gentleman will see that any further proceedings in the matter would not be in the nature of an appeal at all. The petitioner would be simply looking for two other judges who might agree, in order to have the case tried again. But surely when the member has been tried once, and the two judges are unable to agree that he forfeits his seat, it does not follow that there should be a second trial.

Mr. CASEY. Then why should there be a second trial when they agree?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is another matter. Personally, I am in favour of appeals as far as you can give them.

Mr. CASEY. Of course, the Minister can provide for what he likes in this Bill, and I think he should provide that where the judges differ there should be an opportunity for further proceedings; because the effect of the disagreement of the two judges is practically to give a final judgment, although as a matter of form no judgment is given. I think the Act should be made logical one way or the other.

Mr. McCARTHY. I happen this time to agree with the hon. member for West Elgin. If the two judges decide against a candidate, there is an appeal; but if the candidate has the good fortune to get the judges to differ, that decides the case finally. This is a logical absurdity which it seems to me should be removed. But the other question to which the Minister refers, I think, deserves our consideration. There is nothing that seems to melt the hearts of the members of this House so much as the fact that there are election petitions, and still more, that there are costs attending them. Of all the costs, those of the appeal to the Supreme Court are the greatest; and if two judges are to try instead of one, have we not sufficient confidence in our judiciary to make their decision final? Unless there is a concurrence of the two judges both in law and fact against the sitting member, he holds his seat. As ours is a federal system, we might perhaps provide that questions of law should be appealed to the Supreme Court.

Mr. CASEY. If an appeal is not allowed where the judges differ there should be an opportunity to institute new proceedings. The evidence already taken might be used again.

Mr. DAVIN. I should like to ask my hon. friend whether, in his experience, appeals have not generally been made by the candidate petitioned against?

Mr. CASEY.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think appeals are as frequent one way as the other. Perhaps I may be allowed to move my amendment now, and we might discuss the question of appeal afterwards.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have no objection to let the clause stand in the meantime.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is another matter which seems to me of considerable consequence—that is, the mode of petitioning. At the present time we know that one-half of the seats in this House are attacked, and that in a great number of cases the petition did not originate in the constituency at all. The intention of the provision for a petition and the mode of trying controverted elections is to put an end to corrupt practices and to prevent gross abuses in elections. But it is possible to work the law as it now stands in such a way as to make it a greater evil than the mischief which it is intended to remedy. It is very clear to my mind that when parties living 200 or 300 miles away from a constituency come there two or three weeks after the election with a petition, and ask some elector to subscribe to it, assuring him that he need not make any deposit, but that it will be made for him, and asking him to charge all kinds of corrupt practices against the candidate who has received the majority of the votes, that is certainly a very serious abuse. I am inclined to think that the law as it stands provides the candidate with a remedy against that abuse; but it will, under any circumstances, entail upon him a certain amount of costs; and the proceedings against a man who has been returned as a representative of a constituency ought not to be vexatious proceedings. They ought to be undertaken only where a wrong has been done and an abuse is to be corrected. At present, petitions have in many cases been got up in the way I mention. It is a question whether the party petitioning ought not to appear before some judge on a motion asking for leave to petition, setting forth the facts upon which he relies, and which, if established, would justify the petition. I think such a proceeding would protect those who undertake to conduct an honest election against vexatious litigation, and it would at the same time put no barrier or impediment in the way of those who have been guilty of serious wrong, either by bribery or undue influence themselves or through their agents. In my opinion, if we were to make some provision requiring a party who has to be a petitioner to move before some judge for leave to petition, setting forth this fact, and have that right, as a matter of course, upon making out a primâ facie case, we would get rid of a very great deal of difficulty, the duties of the judges would be enormously diminished, and members who conduct elections honestly would be protected against vexatious proceedings.

Sub-section 2 allowed to stand.

Mr. McCARTHY. I move the following amendment:—

Section 23 of the said Act is hereby repealed and the following substituted:—Any party may, at the trial or other proceeding, use in evidence any part of the examination of the opposite party; provided always that in such case the court may look at the whole examination, and if it finds that any other part is so connected with the part to be used that the last mentioned part ought not to be used without such other part, it may direct such other part to be put in evidence.

That is the law in Ontario in ordinary actions. It prevents the introduction of a mass of irrelevant evidence.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. McCARTHY. I propose now to bring up the question about the appeal, and I move the following amendment :—

Section 31 of the said "The Dominion Controverted Elections Act" is hereby amended by inserting after the word "district" in the 4th sub-section thereof, "and by consent of all parties, or without such consent for argument merely, or for the delivery of judgment to any place within the province," and before the words "as to him seems convenient."

Now, the 4th sub-section of section 31 provides that the judge of the trial may adjourn the same from time to time, and from any one place to another in the same electoral district, as to him seems convenient. I propose that by consent of the parties he may adjourn to anywhere else, or without their consent, he may adjourn anywhere else for argument or for delivery of judgment, so that the court will not be required to remain in the county, if the parties are willing to go to Toronto, for instance, to take, we will suppose, a witness who is not in attendance, or for any other purpose.

Mr. MULOCK. I think it is reasonable that the court should be allowed to deliver judgment at other than the place in the riding; but I am not inclined to favour a consent to transfer the enquiry into questions of fact to a point remote from the place of trial. We know that it often occurs in the course of a trial that the parties will arrange, perhaps out of regard to the convenience of persons, to transfer the trial to a central place. In my opinion it is important that the trial of an election case should take place in the community, that the people should see for themselves what has taken place concerning this matter of public importance. I am satisfied that the spirit of the law which requires election trials to be had in the riding, was not only for the purpose of convenience and economy, but also that the election trials should be an object lesson to the electors. There is a great deal of good to be attained from the trial, with all its consequences, taking place in the community. For example, if a person has violated the law and it is necessary to punish him, the proper place in which to deliver that judgment is in the district in question, where he will be punished publicly in the presence of the whole community. I think that the transfer of that branch of the case outside of the riding would be a mistaken step.

Mr. McCARTHY. There is much force in what the hon. gentleman says, but sometimes expense is saved, that is the only thing.

Mr. MULOCK. The law part of it, perhaps.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is what I mean. Sometimes the books of reference are not in the county, and it is difficult to argue the case satisfactorily, and therefore the argument is frequently without authority. But I think there is much force in what the hon. gentleman says, that the intention and spirit of the Act is that the whole matter should be conducted as an example and warning for the benefit of the public. I will not press the amendment against the sense of the Committee.

Mr. LAURIER. Even as respects the judgment, I am sorry my hon. friend does not insist upon the whole trial and judgment being rendered in the same place.

Mr. McCARTHY. I will now move the next amendment of which I have given notice :

Subject to the provisions of the next succeeding section, the trial of every election petition shall be commenced within six months from the time when the petition was presented, and shall be proceeded with from day to day until such trial is over, unless on application, supported by affidavit, it is shown the requirements of justice render it necessary that a postponement of the case should take place.

Then the next section will read :

In case the member elected is entitled to take his seat, the trial shall not been commenced during any session of Parliament; and in the computation of any time or delay allowed for any steps or proceedings in respect of such, or the commencement thereof as aforesaid, the time occupied by such session of Parliament shall not be included.

That is the law now, because if there are six months before you try a man, and Parliament sits, as this has, during five months, there is no time for trying him at all.

Mr. MULOCK. Is that an unmixed evil?

Mr. McCARTHY. I was going to ask whether members in the House against whom there are election petitions are competent to take part in this discussion?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to ask if those who are not petitioned against are competent to take part in this discussion, because I notice they are anxious to make the law more stringent than it is.

Mr. McCARTHY. The law at present is in a very unsatisfactory state. The law at first says the petition shall be tried within six months; it then says that during a session of Parliament, if it be necessary that a member should be present at the trial, the time of the session shall not be counted. Now, as a matter of fact, it is always necessary, but as the law does not say so, it is better to put it in black and white that the time of the session should not be counted. The result at present is that you have to make application for the trial, and the sitting member comes forward and says: I require to be present; and the judge has got to hear the point argued, and determine whether his presence is necessary, and if so, then the time does not count. If that does not take place, the time runs.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not see the necessity for the amendment. Any party to a petition can make an application to have the time enlarged.

Mr. McCARTHY. No; it has been decided otherwise in the Kingston case and two or three other cases. He cannot move on grounds unless he has asked for a trial and the respondent has said he wants to be present. The judge, therefore, postpones the trial on that account. I propose to say that during the session of Parliament the time shall not run. Then, no case will be tried, no application will be necessary, and the time will be counted out in the six months. No hon. member wants to be tried during a session of Parliament. The decision I have referred to was given by the Supreme Court in the Glengarry case.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman says that a judge will not consider an application for a petition unless there has been a motion for a trial.

Mr. McCARTHY. If you apply after six months for an extension of time the court would want to know if within the six months the sitting member raised the point that his presence at the trial was necessary. The jurisdiction is gone otherwise. If the trial is not to take place during the session of Parliament the six months does not count.

Mr. MULOCK. You are asking for legislation on the ground of some decision.

Mr. McCARTHY. I will make it like the Mowat law, if that will suit you.

Mr. MULOCK. I will decide for myself. I would like to see the decision to the effect that the judge could not extend the time.

Mr. McCARTHY. I said he would not.

Mr. MULOCK. That decision I should like to see. I should like the amendment deferred until I see the authority.

Mr. McCARTHY. The law practically says that a man shall not be tried within six months. But the party is put to the expense of going through the ceremony of having a date fixed for the trial, of showing cause, and of coming forward and asking for postponement, because he has to attend to his parliamentary duties. That is a farce it is no use going through.

Mr. MULOCK. It is not much of a farce.

Mr. CASEY. The time of a session should not count.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The adoption of this amendment would make a man lie under petition for 12 months. You can move before the six months have expired to have the time extended. Otherwise, a man petitioned against in April would be liable to proceedings during the whole 12 months.

Mr. McCARTHY. It is in favour of members of Parliament that there should be no trial during the parliamentary session.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is one view which the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) has not considered, I think ; but if he has, I should like to hear his views. The effect of the present law has been fully stated. The application to set down the case for trial must take place within six months, after which the petitioner is out of court. When it takes place within six months it is incumbent on the respondent to show that his presence at the trial is necessary, and he desires a postponement. The effect of the amendment will be to take away the right which is given under the present law of having the case promptly tried.

Mr. McCARTHY. Undoubtedly.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The amendment would compel the parties to wait until after the session of Parliament. It was, therefore, questionable whether we had not better leave the law as it is. If he is willing to take the trial, I do not see why he should not be allowed to do so.

Mr. McCARTHY. On theory that is sound. In practice, however, we find that no man wishes to do so, and no attempt is made. In all the petitions entered, not a single attempt had been made to fix a day for trial, not one in Ontario at least. I think it is looked upon practically in the profession as useless to attempt it, because the application would certainly meet with the opposition of the sitting member on the ground that he must attend to his parliamentary duties. I have no objection to leave the law as it is ; but all these applications add to the cost and trouble.

Mr. CHARLTON. In my opinion we had better leave the law as it is. If the date of trial falls during the session of Parliament, application can be made for an extension of time. The probability, however, is that no trial will fall during the session. Should it do so, the remedy can easily be applied. I agree with the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) that it would be absurd to make an arrangement by which the trial would be held over a member's head for a year by not counting in the time the session runs. I am convinced the law is better as it is now.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman thinks the amendment is absurd. I think his contention is still more absurd, because it is possible to keep a petition for a year over our heads by going through the process of obtaining an extension. I do not see any hardship to anybody in postponing the trial. I am sure no member of this House wants to subscribe to the proposition that he would like to see the law in such a shape that by keeping Parliament sitting for six or seven months he could prevent his petition coming to trial.

Mr. DICKEY. There is another view too, and that is, the petitioner in these matters has rights as well as the respondent. It may not be that the respondent can state under oath that his presence at the trial is absolutely necessary. So the petitioner makes his motion for his trial immediately, and it is not only for the sitting member to state that Parliament is sitting, but he must go further and swear that his presence is absolutely necessary at the trial. There may be many cases where he can go to a speedy trial.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. McCARTHY. I move that the following section be added as section 13 :—

If the appeal as provided by the said Act is made to the Supreme Court of Canada, the judge shall make the report and certificate required by sections 44 and 45 of the said Act, to the Supreme Court of Canada, and the same shall form part of the record in the said matter to be presented to the said court on said appeal.

Mr. LAURIER. That is to say, providing the two judges agree there shall be an appeal, but that if they do not agree there shall be no appeal.

Mr. McCARTHY. This is contemplating an appeal. In some instances that I know of when the judge has disqualified, the record does not come to the Supreme Court, because they only deal with the questions of law before them. What I propose is that in that case the report shall be made to the Supreme Court instead of to the Speaker of the House, and that the registrar of the Supreme Court shall finally report to the Speaker.

Mr. LAURIER. That is fair enough.

Mr. McCARTHY. Going back now to clause 6, I propose now to strike out an appeal on questions of fact, and leave an appeal simply on matters of law. I believe, as far as the province from which I come is concerned, that the public is perfectly satisfied with the decision of two judges on questions of facts. Gentlemen from the other provinces can say what they think of the matter.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is hardly in accordance with the law of the British realm that the subject should be denied the right of appeal. If we want an appeal I do not think my friend should step in to deny it.

Mr. McCARTHY. There is no appeal in England, and there are British subjects there.

Mr. MULOCK. We know that the advantages of appeal on questions of fact are very limited, but still there is a kind of appeal in regard to facts, which should be continued. For example, we know that the appellate judges will not ordinarily review findings on questions of facts, but we understand their rule to be that they will draw inferences, and if the judges at the trial have drawn a wrong inference from the admitted facts, the judges of the Court of Appeal are free to draw the correct inference. I think that this should be left open to them still, and I do not think it is necessary to legislate to say that there shall be no appeal. I remember that the Supreme Court reversed the decision of the Court of Appeal in the South Ontario Dominion contested election case. In that case, whilst not overruling the judge below on the findings of fact, they drew different inferences, and, therefore, reversed the judgment of the Court of Appeal.

Mr. CASEY. I think my hon. friend forgets that now we have two judges instead of one, and the case in which different inferences were drawn by the Supreme Court from the court below was one in which only one judge presided. If we have two judges who must agree in order to unseat a man, we may trust that the inferences which they draw from the facts will be quite as correct as the inferences drawn by the Court of Appeal. I quite agree with what has been already said that permission to appeal at all can only lead to increased expense. I do not see any use in appealing questions of fact unless you re-examine witnesses in the presence of the court to which you appeal, because the judges who hear the facts are undoubtedly better qualified to find on the facts than any other court can be from a written copy of the evidence. I think, therefore, the best way out of the difficulty is to adopt the proposed amendment; for, under the clause as it stands, a man with two judges in his favour might be subjected to further proceedings, while a man with only one judge in his favour might be finally cleared. If you do not see fit to provide for an appeal in both cases, I think it is best to provide for no appeal in either case.

Mr. DAVIN. I am opposed to doing away with the appeal, partly on the ground stated in such sounding phrases by my hon. friend from North Norfolk. I yield to no one in my respect for the bench of Canada; all over the Dominion we have a bench of which we may well be proud; but I do not think our judges are exactly of the same build as the judges on the English bench, who are lawyers before everything else, generally speaking, being men who have devoted themselves entirely to law.

Mr. LAURIER. What of our judges?

Mr. DAVIN. Our judges are men who have devoted themselves partly to law and partly to politics, and who are sometimes politicians before they are lawyers. Although in any given case I believe that two of our judges would decide on fact and law according to their consciences, yet where there might be a close balance between the parties, and where a few decisions might determine whether the parties would or would not cross the House, the judges, being human, might be influenced by the atmosphere around them and the impending possibilities in politics. Therefore, from the peculiar nature of our political, social and legal life, an appeal in this country is of more importance than an appeal in England. I had in my earlier days an opportunity of knowing and studying the characters of the judges in England, and I know that a judge in England is as a rule law from head to toe—law, law, law.

Mr. MASSON. I agree with a great deal of what has been said as to the right of a person charged with any offence and incurring penalties, to have an appeal; but in case of a trial by two judges, I think that if the two judges agree that the charges are not made out, and that the sitting member has been duly elected, their decision should be final. If, on the other hand, they agree that he has been guilty of the charges made against him, and that he is improperly returned, I think it is only right that he should if he chooses seek a higher tribunal to rid himself of the odium which their judgment has cast upon him and the penalties and costs to which it has subjected him.

Mr. McLEOD. I think that in this case the right of appeal should be allowed. While I agree with the conclusions drawn by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), I do not exactly agree with his reasons therefor. I believe our judges are good lawyers, and devoted to law; but from various causes I think there are stronger reasons for an appeal here than in England. I think at all events, as it is admitted that there should be an appeal in matters of law, that the appeal should cover the whole case. I have a great deal of faith in the right of a man to have his case tried by the highest court of the country, more especially should this be the case where the seat of a member of Parliament is attacked. Therefore, I think where the two judges agree there should be an appeal. It is different where the judges do not agree. In that case there is no decision whatever, and, of course, no judgment to appeal from.

Mr. LAURIER. It is universally conceded in all civilized countries that courts of appeal are an absolute necessity in the administration of justice. There is no country in the world where the judgment of the first instance is final in all cases. Is there any reason why in cases affecting the political and civil standing of a man, possibly even his rights as citizen of a country, the ordinary rule should be departed from? If you sue a man for $500 in any of the provinces of the Dominion, at all events in Quebec and I believe also in Ontario, he is judged in the first instance, then he has an appeal to the Court of Appeal of his own province, and then an appeal to the Supreme Court and in some instances to the Privy Council. In these election trials before two judges, if the case is open to doubt, there is no appeal, but if the case is so clear that they agree you have an appeal. There is no logic in that, no common sense either. At all events, it is not safe that rights so important as these should be determined finally on a hearing before two judges.

Mr. McCARTHY. Personally I have no very strong feeling one way or the other. Professionally I have a very strong feeling in favour of appeals. But all the same I am quite satisfied of this: Of the enormous cost of election trials, the greater portion arises in the printing of a tremendous book of argument for the Supreme Court. The only reason, in my judgment, why there should be an appeal on questions of law, is that ours is a federal system, and the judges of one province may determine the law differently from those of another, so that it is well the Supreme Court should settle the law for all the provinces. On questions of fact, however, the expense is tremendous, and nobody can complain that unless two judges concur in saying a member is guilty by himself or agents, he retains his seat, and it is only in that event he can have the right to appeal. Surely, that ought to be satisfactory enough. However, I bow to the general feeling expressed all round from the different provinces with regard to the right they think there should be for an appeal. I only draw attention to this fact that the first trial is expensive enough; but if there is to be an appeal, the cost to be saddled on the litigant will amount really to his ruin.

Mr. CASEY. It gives an enormous advantage to the man who has the longest purse or the strongest backing. I am with the hon. member in thinking there is no necessity for any appeal at all, but if there should be an appeal, I think the suggestion of the hon. member for North Grey comes in very well, that it should be only in the case where judgment goes against the member who may be looked upon in the same light as a convicted criminal because he is subjected to penalties on account of the judgment going against him. Any man who is convicted and whose rights are in danger through the judgment might have the right to appeal, if an appeal be at all granted. The law proposed by the Minister of Justice will give an appeal only where the judges are unanimous and refuse one where there is reason to doubt what the decision should be. That is wholly illogical. Every lawyer seems to see an insuperable difficulty in obtaining an appeal where no decision has been given. That arises from their purely technical way of looking at the matter. They look at it as lawyers and not as legislators. They do not realize, although there is no means of having such an appeal at present, it is within their power as legislators to provide machinery for an appeal; or if they do not choose to call it an appeal, for getting a decision from another court on the same set of facts. I do not see what difficulty there would be in providing that in every case where the judges disagree, if you are going to have an appeal at all, the evidence should be submitted to a higher court for decision, so that you would have an actual decision of some court on the point raised. It is very likely in most cases that the judges will disagree, and that therefore the object of obtaining a judicial decision upon the acts of the candidate is not attained, through no decision being had. The simplest way would have been to provide, in the first instance, that three judges should sit, and the decision of the majority prevail.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the subject is too important to be dealt with on such short notice. We had better take a little time to consider it. I therefore move that the Committee rise and report progress.

Mr. MULOCK. I intend moving an amendment that every petition be accompanied by an affidavit of bonâ fides.

Mr. CASEY. I propose to move an amendment in connection with clause 6. A great defect of the present law consists in the fact that the penalties provided for use of corrupt means are not enforced. Very few cases come to light except through the confession of the party himself who is protected by the certificate of the court; and even where other cases come to light, nobody proceeds against the offender. The party successful in the trial has nothing to complain of, and the defeated party is unwilling to prosecute the offender for fear of exciting animosity. It should be the duty of some officials appointed by the Government to prosecute the offender in every case. I, therefore, propose to move:

That the Governor in Council shall name or appoint an officer, whose duty it shall be to prosecute such parties as have been found guilty, during the trial of an election petition, of any corrupt practices, and who have not received a certificate from the court, for the enforcement of the penalties to which they have become liable under this Act.

Committee rose and reported progress.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. TISDALE. With the permission of the House I wish to make a personal explanation. I notice in the Ottawa Free Press, a newspaper published in this city, the following article in to-day's edition, headed "A Whitewashing Report." After reporting the proceedings of the Cochrane Committee, of which I am the chairman, that newspaper thus alludes to the meeting the Committee held in the evening with closed doors:

"A WHITEWASHING REPORT.

"In the evening the Committee met again, when Col. Tisdale, the chairman, presented a cut and dried draft report, completely exonerating Mr. Cochrane from all blame. It was evident that this report had been prepared by Mr. Osler, counsel for Mr. Cochrane, the language being almost identical with that used by Mr. Osler in his address. Even the William Johnson charge was reported disproved, although all the evidence on that charge has not been heard. This showed clearly that Col. Tisdale's draft report had been prepared before the Committee's decision re the Johnson charge had been reached. When the Colonel's attention was called to this he had the clause relating to the Johnson charge struck out. Messrs. Cameron, Mulock and German will not accept the Osler report, but will prepare a minority report, pointing out what charges have been proved."

Again in the same paper of to-day I find, in regard to another meeting, the following:—

"The Cochrane Committee met this afternoon to consider the report to be made to the House of Commons. It is admitted that the report submitted by Lieut.-Colonel Tisdale last night was prepared by Mr. Osler, counsel for Mr. Cochrane, and that it was prepared before yesterday's discussion. In other words, the lawyer employed by the accused member prepared the judgment of the court before the evidence was completed. And that report not only exonerates Mr. Cochrane, but declares that the committee which sold appointments on the Murray Canal, and which was duly recognized by Mr. Cochrane, did perfectly right in extorting campaign funds from applicants for offices. In other words Col. Tisdale and his Conservative colleagues justify and approve the sale of public offices for campaign funds. They defend crime on grounds of public policy. There is little doubt that the whitewashing report will be agreed to by Sir A. P. Caron and Messrs. Tisdale, Skinner and White, of Shelburne, while Messrs. Mulock, Cameron and German will sign a report setting forth the facts as proved by sworn testimony."

Now, I wish to say in regard to the allegation made in these articles that Mr. Osler prepared that report, that it is an unmitigated falsehood, and further that I never had a single word in reference to the investigation or any matter connected with it, with Mr. Osler. In regard to the balance of the charges, of course, I cannot say anything as to what transpired in the Committee, but they must be untrue, because no member of that Committee, I am sure, would commit such a gross breach of privilege as to mention to anybody what had occurred with closed doors. I will say in conclusion that the time has come when I think something should be done with these papers to teach them that they cannot make such charges with impunity against members of this House.

SUPPLY--CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Public Buildings, Quebec..... $103,300

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if he is in a position to give the House any assurance that the expenses connected with these post offices will not be so excessive as those connected with the erection of the Napanee post office, for instance. When the item was first brought down for the construction of that office, we had the most positive assurance from the Minister of Public Works that the cost of that building would only be $25,000, and it has cost $48,000. I would like to know if the experience we have had in the construction of the Napanee post office is going to be repeated in connection with the post offices at St. Henri, St. Hyacinthe and other places in Quebec, and whether the contracts have been let for the completion of these buildings or only for a portion of the work, and whether we shall have to vote other large sums for the inside fittings, the same as we have done in other cases. In my opinion the system should be abolished at once, and the entire contract should be let for a definite sum, and the Government should be called to complete the building for that sum and to take such precautionary steps as to secure that end, so that the estimate should in no case be exceeded.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not possible to make a hard and fast declaration that in no case will the original estimates be exceeded, and no practical man would make such a promise, because it is impossible to know at the beginning what changes may be found necessary. For instance, you may have certain information with reference to the class of building which is necessary, and you go upon that, but after a time it may transpire, when better information is given, that in some particulars it would be advantageous to make certain changes. I think no practical builder would say that in every case he will make no changes at all. There may be errors of calculation with reference to the foundation; it may be found when you come to make excavations to prepare the foundation, that the soil or rock may be different from what was expected, and in these cases it is not necessary to go by the distinct letter of the first plan, when that information was not obtainable. But I entirely agree with my hon. friend in stating that the original estimates should be made as carefully as possible, and when once they are made, no changes should be made, nor should the original plan be departed from, unless there are the best reasons to give to Parliament for so doing. I am sure nothing more could be stated by a practical builder, or by a Minister. Then with reference to the extreme cost of some of these buildings, I am sorry that such extreme cost was incurred. I think in some cases, that one especially, and some others could be mentioned, it is fair to suppose that for one reason or another the ultimate cost was far beyond what was anticipated at first, and far beyond what the necessities of the case would demand. However, I am not the Minister of Public Works. Our endeavour will be made in three directions: First, to accommodate the style and plan of the building to the population and resources and needs of the place in which it is built; second, to be careful as to the calculations for the original estimates and not to exceed those unless the very best of reasons occur as to why they should be exceeded; and third, to keep down the expenditure for incidentals and extras as far as is consistent with the proper supervision and completion of the work.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman says he is not Minister of Public Works, and, if he will pardon me for saying so, it is just as well he is not. His notions of the duties of a Minister of Public Works appear to be so lax that I am afraid in the administration of that department he would not prove so great a success as he has in finance. The hon. gentleman made a speech in which he commenced by saying that is was impossible to force things, that a plan would not require to be changed. I can understand that in very heavy work which would involve hundreds and thousands of dollars which might be carried on at the bottom of a river there was sometimes occasion to make changes: but when you have to construct a building such as this Napanee post office, estimated at $25,000 at first, how can it be argued that the plans and specifications cannot be prepared so as to meet the estimate, how can it be at all difficult to keep within it. I can understand there may be a change made in detail. That is possible, but it is possible on very rare occasions. The hon. gentleman says that no change should take place except for the very best reasons. What are the very best reasons? If you admit that such changes can be made for the very best of reasons, you at once open the door to changes being made. I do not admit that such changes should be made. I admit that changes equal to 2 or 3 per cent. might not be objectionable, but it must be manifest to every hon. gentleman that when a contract is given for a lump sum, I do not care whether for a large or small sum, if afterwards the building doubles the amount set down at first, there must be laxity somewhere in practice. I will not charge bad faith; but simply from an engineering point of view, if the estimate is found to be so far wrong from the total amount at first intended to be expended, there must be some laxity in practice and it must be manifest to the Minister of Public Works that his engineers cannot be depended on. The Minister is not to draw up the plans and specifications, but he has to rely on his engineers; but if he finds the plans submitted to him do not agree with the estimates prepared by the engineers, and that double that amount calculated by the engineers has to be expended on the work, he must be satisfied that the engineers are not competent, or must be something worse.

Public Buildings, N.W.T.....$102,310

Mr. CHARLTON. I move that the following words be added to the motion:—

That appropriations for the erection of post office buildings shall in future be made on an uniform rule having regard to postal revenues of the town or city in which such building is to be erected and when public convenience requires such building and when the importance of the town where it is proposed to erect such post office building warrants the expense.

Mr. BOWELL. There are many cases in which the postal revenue is not the most important one. It often occurs in erecting public buildings that the Customs and Inland Revenue Departments are more important than the Post Office Department. There are many places in which the post office receipts may be very small and in which the postmaster is paid by fees; but the revenue arising from the Customs and Inland Revenue may be of such importance as to necessitate increased accommodation, not only for the collectors of each department but for a number of clerks in addition. If the erection of public buildings is to be based exclusively on postal revenue, then such a system will necessitate probably the erection of two or three buildings, two at least, one for post office accommodation which would not require an expenditure of more than $5,000 or $6,000, for which a very respectable building might be erected if it were devoted exclusively to post office purposes. Then another building would be required for the other two departments, or accommodation would have to be rented. I scarcely think the hon. member for North Norfolk has given the subject that consideration which it deserves. If this system is to apply to all branches of the service in reference to building accommodation there might be some reason in it, and even then it does not follow that these should be the exclusive reasons for the erection of public buildings. They have to be erected in accordance with the places in which they are required, and have to be somewhat in accord with the character of the buildings in that particular locality. I do not wish to be understood as saying that the expenditure in many places has not been greater in the erection of these buildings than might perhaps be justifiable under all Governments.

Mr. LAURIER. Speak for yourself.

Mr. BOWELL. I have had sufficient experience in this House and as a public man to be able to speak respecting the Government of which the leader of the Opposition was a member with as good reasons and as much force as with respect to the Government with which I have been connected. I may say to the hon. gentleman that there have been some buildings constructed by the Government of which he was a member respecting which the greatest complaints as to their erection and what was termed the mean character of their appearance came from that side of the House. A member called the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact that the public building which had been erected in his town—one of the most important in western Ontario—was of a character that ought never have been erected, and he hoped that no public building should be put up so cheaply and meanly as that. I am referring now to the hon. member for Brant. So that there is such a thing as going too far in one direction, as there is in going too far in another direction. The amendment is not only useless, but it would be inoperative; therefore I see no good reason for adopting it by the House.

Mr. LAURIER. I am disposed to agree with my hon. friend to a certain extent in some things which he has said: that Governments, even when they are Liberal Governments, may be liable to temptation. Of course, I cannot say so much as to Conservative Governments, but I go so far as to say that even Liberal Governments may be liable to temptation, and it is because men are fallible that we want as much as possible to preclude the causes of temptation. The hon. gentleman himself admits that in the past this class of expenditure has been liable to abuse, and so it has. The hon. gentleman has been forced to admit during the present session that some of these public buildings had been erected where really there was no cause whatever for the erection of such buildings; and where no cause could be found for the erection of them except simply that it was to favour some political follower of the Government. On the other hand, public buildings had been refused for places in which public buildings may have been necessary and were refused, because it so happened that the political complexion of the place was an objection. It is proposed by my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) that the erection of these buildings shall be henceforth, not left to the caprice of the Government or not left to the influence of the member, but shall be decided on an uniform standard, which shall be known and shall be established as the law of the land. I can conceive no other object but the collection of revenue which calls for this kind of building. I admit no other reason. There can be but one reason for the erection of a public building and that is the collection of revenue. It may be revenue from the post office, or from the Customs or from Inland Revenue, or all three combined; but at all events the only reason why such expenditure can be justified is the necessity of collecting public revenue in that locality. If that be the rule, and I think there can be no other just one, there must be a maximum and a minimum of revenue which can justify any locality being favoured by any such public buildings, and the revenue should reach a certain point before any locality should have a public building at all. If the hon. gentlemen were to admit that rule, if it were insisted on that no locality would be entitled to have any public building where the revenues of the Government would not be $10,000 or $20,000 or $40,000—I leave that to the judgment of hon. gentlemen opposite—if it were understood that no locality would be favoured with a building unless the revenue derived from all sources should reach a certain figure, then the Government would free themselves at once from many opportunities, and they would be no longer liable to such reproaches as they have been subjected to, and which they have to endure because they are well founded. We have passed appropriations to build certain post offices in certain localities where the building of these post offices could not be justified upon any reason whatever. What is the reason that the Government has consented to give a post office building to certain places, which I will not name at this moment, but which I have in my mind and which they no doubt have in their mind? There is no reason but the importunity of their followers. Had it not been for that the expenditure would not have been placed upon the country. Therefore, the moment we have it well understood as the rule of the Government that no place is to have a public building unless they can show by figures they are entitled to it, it would be a law which would operate in the future to the advantage of all Governments, whichever they may be.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think that any resolution upon the subject ought be a little more carefully considered than this one, because I think the hon. gentleman has probably drawn it hastily, and that he will see himself that it hardly fits the case. The Minister of Customs has given some of the reasons why it does not do so, but another reason that might be mentioned is the peculiar language of it in which it seeks to control future appropriations by this Parliament. It does not even propose to lay down a rule or affirm a principle, or even to say that a rule ought to be laid down, but it says that future appropriations of this Parliament should be guided by some rule. Parliament from time to time must be the absolute judge of the appropriations it shall make at each session, and in every case a resolution which seeks to control the future action of Parliament—and this does nothing else—I submit, is a resolution that would be practically inoperative and would not be a good form to adopt. I think it would be better that the subject should be further considered and the resolution not pressed at this stage.

Mr. CHARLTON. I suppose it is competent for this House to adopt rules which may be repealed by the House itself. Of course this motion, if adopted, would remain in force until some future Parliament rescinds it. As the Minister says, this amendment was perhaps hastily drawn, but it might be amended to cover the class of public buildings in which, as the Minister of Customs suggests, the combined revenue might be considered. The motion covers the case of post offices. Many post offices have been erected that are not designed for any other purpose but the use of the Post Office Department, and abuses have occurred in connection with the erection of public buildings for this purpose.

Mr. BOWELL. It is only in large cities.

Mr. CHARLTON. Post offices have been erected in small towns. I have in my mind a case where a post office has been erected in a town of only 800 inhabitants and where the revenue is only $600 or $700 a year. We have been considering appropriations for the erection of post offices in towns that are not entitled to these buildings.

Mr. SPEAKER. I hope my hon. friend is not making a speech. My hon. friend knows as an old parliamentarian that the moving of the resolution precludes him from making a subsequent speech.

Mr. CHARLTON. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I trust I have conveyed my views to the House.

Mr. FLINT. I gather from the tone of the observations of the Minister of Justice that he is inclined to think the principle suggested by this resolution has sufficient merit in it, at any rate to warrant a little consideration, and I believe that the principle must, from the experience of hon. gentlemen opposite, demand from them serious consideration. Apart from the detriment to the public interest, which has been so ably demonstrated by the hon. leader of the Opposition, I think it will no doubt be admitted by our friends opposite that they themselves and the treasury have been to a large degree the victims of the unfortunate habit which the people of the country have got into in connection with appropriations for post offices and other public buildings. I think it is not necessary to enlarge upon the numerous political difficulties which this loose and hap-hazard manner of making apropriations has created hitherto. We know that in the cases named by the hon. leader of the Opposition, where appropriations could not be justified on their merits, they have been justified almost solely on the ground that other towns of no greater importance and with perhaps not as strong political claims, have received these public buildings; and an amount of jealousy and heart-burning and political immorality has been engendered on account of these political appropriations which has done a great deal of harm to the public service. I think the Government themselves would be relieved of a vast mass of importunity if they would adopt some definite system with reference to the erection of public buildings. I admit that my hon. friend's resolution does not perhaps cover all the details of this question. No doubt other public buildings than those in connection with the Post Office Department are to be considered in adopting any general rule, as many towns and cities require accommodation for other departments; yet there can be scarcely two opinions that public life would be more endurable, particularly to the Government, if a hard and fast rule were laid down, after due consideration, based upon some principle, on which appropriations for public buildings shall be made. Owing to the Government giving way to political exigencies or to the pressure of individuals, a great deal of injury and injustice is done. I have in my mind a case in which the friends of the Government pressed strongly upon them for a public building, and the Government acceded to their request, which I believe was put upon the ground that other places no more important had received public buildings. Land was purchased for it; yet subsequently, for reasons which I am not prepared to criticise just now, the Government did not construct the building, but delayed the work. In the meantime the political complexion of the constituency changed, and all further expenditure for that building was dropped, or postponed for a longer period. On the face of the record here was a community with claims for the erection of a public building; and the Government, whether properly or not, are charged with having acted on political grounds; and it forms a legitimate subject of attack on the Government and the purity of our institutions that it has not been proceeded with. I trust that the Government will take into consideration the reasonable proposition of the hon. member for North Norfolk between now and the next sitting of this Parliament, and see whether they cannot adopt some principle which shall be satisfactory to the country and have the effect of saving a large amount of money in the way of appropriations for public buildings, which are too often used by people engaged in the elections as so much political gain. These buildings are often promised on the eve of elections, on the word of the candidate or without the word of the candidate; and a great deal of unpleasant feeling is aroused and severe observations are made upon the Government, perhaps undeserved, in consequence of their not fulfilling these promises. I believe that a large amount of political corruption would be avoided and a large amount of money would be saved to the public by the adoption of some such definite rule as my hon. friend proposes.

Amendment negatived on division.

Prince Albert Crown Lands and Timber Agent's Office..... $6,000

Mr. LAURIER. Is that for new offices?

Mr. FOSTER. For a registry office. The two are combined.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the Government's policy now with regard to the homestead provisions in the North-West? Do they retain the same regulations and rules as formerly with regard to odd sections in townships open to homesteaders and other sections open for sale, and what are the prices of public lands in different sections of the North-West?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Every even numbered section is a homestead section. The odd numbers are offered for sale unless reserved for railways, The prices for all Government land outside of the railway belt and inside of the railway belt, is $3 an acre.

Mr. CHARLTON. That applies to lands on each side of the Canadian Pacific Railway and without reference to distance from the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. Do the Government find that the price of $3 per acre is one likely to induce settlement? It is a higher price than the American Government ask, almost three times as high. It strikes me that the policy pursued by the Government with reference to our public lands in the North-West has been radically wrong from the outset. Their homestead policy is wrong. The prices for our public lands are too high. The policy of homesteading by alternate sections is not calculated to induce settlement to the extent it would if public lands were open to be homesteaded without reference to location. The policy pursued by the American Government in seeking for settlement under their homestead law, was to permit homestead settlers to homestead public lands wherever found, and by that means form continuous settlements.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is speaking twice. I am not going to raise objections, but draw his attention to the fact.

Mr. CHARLTON. Can you only speak once on concurrence?

Mr. FOSTER. He is not at liberty to make two speeches on the one item.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman asked a question which the Minister of the Interior answered, and, therefore, I do not intend to enforce the rule.

Mr. CHARLTON. This is another item, and not the item of post office buildings.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not rule that the hon. gentleman cannot speak on this item after having spoken on the item of post office buildings; but he asked the Minister of the Interior a question to which the hon. Minister replied. Strictly speaking, according to the rule, I presume my hon. friend would be precluded from speaking, but as he is dealing with a reply which the Minister of the Interior made to his question, I will not enforce the rule.

Mr. CHARLTON. I forgot that we are not in committee, but with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will make the few remarks I wish to make on this matter. It is a matter of a very great importance to the country. The settlement of the North-West has not been very rapid. That country has an enormous agricultural and mineral wealth. It is a country with a great future before it and in which we ought to have many more inhabitants than are there now. It will be a source of food supply for many millions of the human race, and our policy should be to secure its rapid settlement. I do not think it is a matter of such importance how much revenue the hon. gentleman derives from the sales of the lands as to get the lands settled and derive from Customs duties on the importations used by these settlers a larger revenue than would be from the sale of the lands. We have been for many years, and still are, a competitor of the United States in the obtaining of immigrants and placing them upon new lands. We are placed at a disadvantage in this competition by the fact that the United States public domain is nearer the market and more accessible than our own. The public lands in Dakota and Minnesota are more easily reached than those in Alberta and the Saskatchewan, or even Manitoba. This being the case, we ought at least to have made the inducements to settlers as great as those offered by the American Government. We ought to have made them greater inducements, but certainly as great. Contrast our homestead policy with theirs. The Americans offer their public lands for homestead settlement wherever they are: the homesteaders can go in and take a whole township and have a solid continuous homestead settlement without a single break in section, except one or two in a township reserved for school purposes. There is greater inducement under that system than under our checker-board system, where every alternate section is either reserved for sale or granted to a railway company. In this way we have suffered serious loss to the settlement of the country by not offering homestead settlers the inducements that our competitor and rival offers them. Then with regard to the price of public lands. In the United States the price within what is known as the railway belt, where the odd sections have been granted to railways, is $2.50 per acre, but outside of the railway belts it is $1.25 per acre. Now, while the American Government is selling to the settler who is not a homestead settler public lands at $1.25 per acre my hon. friend is selling the same kind of lands at $3 per acre. Well, the inducements are all on the side of the American Government. If a settler wishes to purchase, he can go to Dakota, Minnesota, Montana, Idaho, wherever he chooses, and obtain public lands at $1.25 per acre, but in our Canadian North-West he will have to pay $3 per acre, and this difference in price itself would, in the majority of cases, determine the settler as to which country he will go to. I do not believe our policy is a judicious one. I have always held that we should in the first place restrict the sale of public lands to the wants of the actual settler. We ought to restrict the sale of land to the amount the settler will occupy, whatever that might be. In the next place we ought to offer that on as favourable terms as the United States offer. If we fail to do this we are carrying out a policy the results of which will not be as satisfactory as they would be if our terms were more liberal than those of the United States. In our North-West we have given away I do not know how many million of acres for railway purposes. My hon. friend promised to bring down a return of the amount, but he has not yet done so; but we have given a very large proportion of our public domain away. Now the balance of that land we want to have settled. We have a little fraction of it under cultivation this year and are going to have a score of millions of bushels of wheat to send to the markets of the world. If we had half a million or three-quarters of a million people there, if we had three or four times the area under cultivation that we now have, we would have, not twenty but eighty million bushels of wheat for export, which would make a vast difference to the country. My hon. friend should have adopted the most liberal land policy for the purpose of producing this result, instead of asking $3 per acre for land which the United States offer at $1.25 per acre. This policy by which the land is divided into a checker-board gives settlers the privilege to homestead alternate sections, while the United States give them the privilege to homestead public lands wherever it can be found. The difference in the policy of the two countries is telling against us as our census shows, and as every man whose eyes are opened to the conditions in the North-West and the progress of the country is perfectly aware of. I take the occasion to refer to this matter in the hope that the Minister of the Interior who is well acquainted with the North-West, its capabilities and resources of all kinds, both agricultural, mineral and timber, will see fit to inaugurate a more liberal policy and one better calculated to secure to that country what is its great want, settlers to bring the land under cultivation.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I presume the hon. gentleman's policy would be to throw the odd numbered sections open for homesteading, as well as the even numbered, because that is the policy of the United States. I do not think the tax-payers of the eastern part of Canada will agree to that policy. When the Canadian Pacific Railway was being built they were told that the odd numbered sections, or a certain portion of them, would be kept in order to pay for the construction of the road, and it is too late in the day to change that policy now, that would be breaking faith with the people of Canada. In regard to the price of land, it is my impression that we have been holding our land too low. I do not think we appreciate the value of our land. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken in regard to the price of land in the United States. But whether they have got any now or not, or whether they are selling any now or not, I think is a great question, because I think it has been pretty nearly all appropriated both for settlement and for sale, and they have to utilize the dryest portions of their territory because their good land is pretty well all gone. I was comparing the price of land all over the world and in British colonies, a few days ago, and I found that even at $3 per acre we are to-day selling our lands cheaper than any colony of Great Britain. My impression is that we have been making light of the value of our land. Our homestead laws are just as liberal as those of the United States, and even more so. Our present policy has been followed for years, the country has become acquainted with it, and it would be impossible to change it, if we would keep faith with the people.

Mr. LAURIER. Then we are to understand that the Government are satisfied with their policy, that, judging by the results of the census, they are determined to persevere in the policy of the last ten years. The hon. gentleman says that to change the policy now would be breaking faith with the tax-payers of Canada. The truth is that to adhere to his policy is breaking faith with the tax-payers. We have been induced to incur an enormous debt on behalf of the North-West, and the statement has been made again and again on the floor of this House that the sale of lands in the North-West Territories would pay for the increased debt.

Mr. FOSTER. So it will.

Mr. LAURIER. Present prospects are not in that direction. We have heard that statement before. We all remember that in 1884, and in 1881, Sir Charles Tupper made a declaration that by the year 1891, in which we are now, the sale of land alone would average $90,000,000. Where are we to-day in respect to that matter? And after such an experience the hon. gentleman still says that he is satisfied with his policy, and still thinks that the land will pay for the debt. I hope that his expectations will be realized, but if his prophecy is to prove true, it is not by following the mistaken policy that has produced such barren results. If that land is to pay for the enormous increase of our debt, we must reverse our policy. We were led to expect some years ago that by this time we would have a million inhabitants in those vast territories, but every promise held out to us in that direction has been proven false. To-day the only course for us to take is to retrace our steps and to adopt the policy suggested by my hon. friend. It must be obvious to every man that to continue to sell our land at $3 an acre, when immigrants in Europe can have just as good land at $1.25 on the other side of the line, is a policy which will continue to produce deplorable results.

Mr. TROW. The system adopted by the Government is evidently erroneous. In the United States the upset price of land is at $1.25 per acre; in the course of five years these lands are revalued and are then sold for 75 cents an acre, and in the course of five years more they are sold for 50 cents an acre, just the reverse of the policy of our Government. Our Government saw that the land increased in value on account of the settlement, and they consequently raised the price instead of reducing it. I think any government that wishes to settle that country should sell the land upon the most reasonable terms. We know that a new settler is generally not able to pay much for his land. If they settle upon those lands and attain to eligible positions, they become consumers and add to the revenue of the country by paying taxes. I think if our lands were even given away to settlers it would conduce to the prosperity of this country. At present we have millions of acres in Manitoba and the North-West lying idle and useless, and I have always held that we should not merely encourage settlers to come in and buy those lands, but that it would be advantageous even to give them away for actual settlement.

Mr. DAVIN. It is difficult to understand the contention of hon. gentlemen opposite, and it is difficult to escape from the opinion that they are using words dubiously. What does the hon. gentleman mean by saying that settlers going in there pay $1 an acre for their land? We give the land free to a settler that goes in to the North-West; all it costs him is about $10 for 160 acres. The notion that you could settle up the North-West at $1 an acre, which was the notion of hon. gentlemen when they were in power, was proved to be perfectly absurd. How did that eventuate? It eventuated in hon. gentlemen, some of whom are sitting now on those benches, going up to the North-West and buying vast tracts of land at $1 an acre, which was the amount at which they were selling their land, withholding it from settlement in order to get a high price, and they have made large sums of money in consequence of the increase in value. I have frequently declared here and elsewhere that as to every step taken in the North-West by this Government, I do not say that every step was a wise step, but I say that if you go back to the Orders in Council, which you will find in the Eastern Block, passed while the hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, you will see evidence of the most imbecile policy that any government could possibly adopt for settling the North-West. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) talked about settling the country by lowering the price of land. Why, Sir, anybody who talks about settling the country by lowering the price of land and points to the example of the United States, and says that has been the attraction which has brought people from Europe to the United States, shows the most gross ignorance of the history of the United States, of the history of its immigration policy, and also of our experience in the North-West. Settlers going in will not buy an acre of land as long as there are free homesteads. Remember that we are in a position that the United States are not. We have, and shall have, for a few years to come, millions of free homesteads to give to the immigrating world. Now, as long as you have free homesteads they will not buy. We have a number of men around Regina and Moose Jaw, men who came in and took up homesteads and pre-emptions, who bought cattle and have progressed, and after four or five years they have bought hay sections, and paid as much as $5 an acre for them, and they have made money. I could take you to a family—the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) knows the family; he has visited at their house and received their hospitality—the family of the Lamberts, who went there with $6 or $7 in their pockets and with the proceeds of the remnant of a farm that they had in the east. They came there, as they are proud to say themselves, with little money, and to-day they have a herd of blood and grade cattle of over three hundred, which the member for Wellington has inspected. To-day they own a large amount of property. I calculate they own land worth at least $30,000, if you place it at only $5 per acre. They have acquired that land partly by homesteading, the family keeping together, partly by buying up land; but they did not buy an acre until they had homesteaded and pre-empted and made money by buying and selling cattle and by making butter, and I consider they are worth some $40,000 at least. As to the practice of settling a country by lowering the price of land, the hon. member for North Norfolk cannot point out a single instance, or, if he can, it will be a single instance in the whole history of the United States, of settlers coming into the States, and when they came in buying land, when, by going a mile or two miles distant, they could settle on free land.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How does the land get a value if none of it is settled?

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman sometimes ask conundrums. He now asks, how does the land get a value if none of it is settled? The value of a thing is what it will bring, and although that is a very old saw in political economy, I will venture to say, and I have paid some attention to political economy, that a thing may have a real value, as we use the word value, before you have placed any price on it at all. Will the hon. gentleman deny that the 160 acres that are given to the incoming settler for nothing has a value beyond what he gives for it, the $10 entry fee? The hon. gentleman knows that it has. And yet sometimes in our history there would have been difficulty in selling it for $1 an acre. Why? Because there were no buyers. To my hon. friend I may say that in political economy, as in higher matters—

> "A little learning is a dangerous thing, > Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring."

When gentlemen study political economy as children bathe who go down to the stream and dip their ankles in the water, I sometimes feel it would almost be as well if they had not studied political economy at all.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Did you go in further?

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, a little further; I went knee deep. The way to settle up a country is to do what my hon. friend who has just spoken said he would do, and which the Government is actually doing—giving incoming settlers free lands on as easy conditions as possible. That is the way to settle up a country, and the North-West is settling up, as the evidence of the census shows. It has not settled up as quickly as some of us anticipated, but it is settling up; and one of the reasons why it has not settled up as rapidly as many of us anticipated is well known. It is this, because the emigrating world can form a habit, as an individual can form a habit, and for years and years the habit of the emigrating world in Europe has been to go to the United States. As Mr. Bright once said in a magnificent passage, at a time when I had the privilege of listening to him: "When the Irish or the Scotch peasant looks for home and food and blessings, his eye follows the setting sun, his heart expands beyond the broad Atlantic, and in spirit he grasps hands with the children of the West." He meant by the West the United States. I quote that, and I am glad it appears to please some hon.

gentlemen opposite. It is a dangerous thing for a person such as I am to quote from the speech of a man like Mr. Bright, because Sterne tells us that a dwarf who brings a measuring line along with him is a dwarf in more ways than one. The reason I quote that is this: What does that statement prove but that a few years ago, when I was accustomed to hear Mr. Bright in the British Parliament, the habit of mind of the emigrating world was to go to the United States? It is only a short time ago, only since Lord Dufferin came here, and his services as an advertising agent for Canada have hardly been appreciated, that the people of England have realized what Canada is, or know anything about it. Canada was only beginning to be known; but Canada is known to-day, and the services of the much-maligned High Commissioner have done a great deal to make Canada well known. Whatever credit belongs to the High Commissioner for those services is reflected on the Government which he represents. Only for the high respect, great regard and admiration I have for the leader of the Opposition I would not refer to the twaddle that fell from his lips as to what the North-West has cost this country, and how you are to be recouped. I ventured the other night, when an hon. member from one of the constituencies of the lower province was speaking, to interject a remark that he should point out what the present harvest in Manitoba and the North-West means to the whole of Canada. The hon. gentleman who is sitting there (Mr. Paterson), who is an energetic merchant and manufacturer, will benefit by that splendid harvest in the North-West. That harvest of more than 20,000,000 of bushels for export—what will it bring to this country? At the very least $15,000,000. That amount, if the hon. gentleman will make the calculation even on the extravagant, absurd and outrageous basis of the hon. member for South Oxford, would more than pay the compound interest that the North-West has cost you. The hon. gentleman for Brant (Mr. Paterson) once delivered a speech in this House, which I read and I think listened to, in which he spoke very strongly in favour of a certain policy. My hon. friend is a shrewd man, an able man, and not only a great man in parliamentary life, but one of our ornaments in the business world, and he knows as well as I know that he and his brother merchants and manufacturers will reap the benefit of that great harvest, and they are indeed reaping the benefit already. The merchants and manufacturers in Toronto told me two or three years ago when I was there——

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No one denies that.

Mr. DAVIN. Then, what is the meaning of the leader of the Opposition asking where are we to get back what we have spent in the North-West? If the policy hon. gentlemen opposite would fain apply to Canada and the North-West should obtain——

Mr. SPEAKER. Allow me to interject a word here. At the outset of the discussion I rather thought the hon. member for North Norfolk was transgressing the bounds somewhat in opening up this whole question, but I was under the impression, on looking at the vote, that as it provided for officers for Crown lands and timber agencies, he might refer to the question of the price of land in the North-West. I am, however, quite sure the hon. gentleman will agree with me that it will be most inconvenient to open up a discussion of this kind on an item like this.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). You should not forget, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentleman addressing the House has been knee-deep, and special privileges should be allowed him.

Mr. DAVIN. I would not disagree with you, Mr. Speaker, for the world. I am glad my speech and your remarks have given an opportunity for a brilliant display of wit on the part of my hon. friend (Mr. Paterson). But, Mr. Speaker, as a member from the North-West, when a man holding the distinguished position of the leader of the Opposition asks a question so vital to Canada, I surely must reply. When he asks how this country is to be recouped for the outlay in the North-West, am I not bound, Sir, in the interest of Canada, in the interest of the Empire, and in the interest of the hon. gentleman himself—because, although he knows a good deal, he does not know everything—am I not bound, Sir, even so humble a person as myself, to instruct him on this?

Mr. LAURIER. I am open to conviction.

Mr. DAVIN. I was about to point a moral and adorn a tale when you interrupted me, Mr. Speaker, but some other time I will make use of the illustration that occurred to me and which was at once forcible and, I think, conclusive.

Mr. DALY. Do I understand that you rule, Mr. Speaker, that there shall be no further discussion on this matter.

Mr. SPEAKER. I can hardly deter my hon. friend from going on in the same line that the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) did: but I am quite sure that the House will agree with me that unless my friend is very desirous to address the House, it would be better not to adopt a very inconvenient practice.

Mr. DALY. I am very desirous, Mr. Speaker, of correcting some of the statements made by the hon. gentleman, and I think my position as a member from the North-West entitles me, with your permission, to say a few words. I would not have taken up the time of the House, were it not for the statement of the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) that the land policy of the United States was more liberal than that of the Canadian Government. We have had this matter under discussion to my knowledge for five years, and I have heard the hon. gentleman make these statements over and over again. I have contradicted him, and the hon. members from the North-West have contradicted him, but it seems like throwing water on a duck's back, and the hon. gentleman recurs to these statements every session. As to comparing the land laws of the United States to the land laws of Canada, it seems ridiculous after the enlightenment the hon. gentleman has received at my hands, and at the hands of other hon. gentlemen, that he should insist on making these misstatements. Let us take the Dominion Lands Act. A man comes to Manitoba, he takes up a quarter section for which he wishes to get a homestead entry, he goes to the land office, pays $10 entry fee and gets his land. He is required to put in six months in each year, and at the end of that time he sends notice to the nearest land agent saying that he desires to get his homestead patent, and an inspector is sent to his very door, so that the man is not put to the inconvenience of going to the Dominion lands office at all. On the evidence of the settler and of two corroborating witnesses the inspector makes his report and he receives his patent. On the other hand the laws of the United States are that a man must reside five years on his land. After the expiration of that five years the inspector is not sent to his door, but he has got to give notice in a newspaper for five previous weeks, then go to the nearest land office and hire and pay an attorney to get his patent. In view of these facts I ask hon. gentlemen whether or not the land laws of Canada are more liberal than the land laws of the United States? I have made these statements time and again on the floor of this House, and I cannot understand the reason which induced the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) to make these representations unless he is interested in some lands in Dakota or in the western states, which he desires to sell, and uses his position as a member of Parliament to hold out that there are better land laws in Dakota than in our Canadian North-West. If land is cheaper in Dakota, why is it there is such an exodus from Dakota to Manitoba? We have had a thousand souls from Dakota into the North-West this year, and more are coming every month. That does not look as if the land laws in the States were more liberal than ours. The hon. gentleman has taken exception to the fact that the value of lands, as stated by the Minister of the Interior, at $3 per acre, is too much. Now, Sir, I will quote from the report issued by the Department of Agriculture of the Local Government of Manitoba on 1st July, 1891, and I will show the value of lands as given in this report as follows:—

	1890.	1891.
Average cash price of improved land	$9.43	$10.85
Average cash price of unimproved land	$5.43	$ 6.96
Percentage of land occupied	57·2	62·7
Percentage of land fit for cultivation	71·4	74·8
Number of farmers in the province	13,877	18,937
Average acreage put under crop by each	73·0	78·5

These figures will illustrate to hon. gentlemen opposite, or to any person who desires information on this question, that the Province of Manitoba is increasing in wealth year after year. It is true that our population has not increased as we desired it should, but I believe when the full census returns are brought down to this House, they will show that the material resources of the North-West have increased in a greater ratio that in any state in the Union. They will show, I believe, that the value of farm lands, cattle, horses, farm buildings, farm implements, and everything that goes to make farmers wealthy, have increased in a greater ratio than they have in any state in the Union. I say, Sir, that the census returns will show a material progress that will astonish even hon. gentlemen on this side of the House who are desirous of seeing that country opened up and developed. Even if we have not increased in population at the rate we desired, it is already shown that we have increased by 148 per cent. since 1881. That is a greater increase than Dakota has made during the last five years according to the state census. The hon. gentleman desires us to believe that the land policy of this Government is not as liberal as the policy of the Government of which he was a supporter some years ago. I will read to the House the following Order in Council passed on the 26th September, 1874, in reference to lands, showing the policy of the Mackenzie Government at that time:—

"Copy of a report of a Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor General in Council on the 26th December, 1874.

"On a memorandum, dated 24th December, 1874, from the Honourable the Minister of the Interior, stating that in view of the location of the Canadian Pacific Railway line westerly from the present limits of the Province of Ontario, he submits that in all probability during the coming season there will be a disposition manifested on the part of the settlers going into the Province of Manitoba to squat upon lands along the route, thus possibly embarrassing the Government in carrying out the provisions of the Railway Act of last session, and under these circumstances he recommends that he be authorized to give public notice to the effect that all land within twenty miles on each side of the line surveyed, and upon which the telegraph is now under construction, are for the present withdrawn from sale or settlement under the Dominion Lands Act, and that no rights of entry upon the said lands by parties who may have settled thereon after the issue of this notice, will be recognized by the Government until further notice. The lands so withdrawn to include also a district twenty miles to the westward of Fort Pelly. The Committee advise that the requisite authority be granted.

I will now ask hon. gentlemen whether they will say that the policy adopted by the Liberal Government was a liberal one or not, when this Order in Council says that as they expect squatters to settle on the lands of Manitoba they will withdraw all the lands within 20 miles of the line of railway. Although their policy was in force for three long years, yet in 1877 on the representation made by the representatives of the country at that time, and by the press of Manitoba, we find that an Order in Council was passed in 1877 which contained the following:—

"He therefore recommends that the lands in Manitoba withdrawn as above, be thrown open for actual settlement, but not for homestead or pre-emption entry, or for entry by military bounty or police warrants, or for ordinary sale. No person to be allowed to acquire more than one-half section, or 320 acres, and such land to be paid for by the occupant at whatever rate and upon such terms as may be fixed therefor by the Government, when the remainder of the lands in the province of this class are disposed of.

"He further recommends that persons desiring to acquire such lands shall, previously to settlement thereon, be required to be entered therefor at the nearest Dominion Lands Office, and in order to prove their good faith, the applicants shall be obliged in each case to make a payment in advance at the time of entry of one dollar per acre in cash on account of the purchase, and further be required to settle in and commence to cultivate the land within one year from the date of entry, or in default thereof the payments so made to be forfeited."

After reading that Order in Council and the Order in Council of 1874, I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite whether the policy of the present Government is not more liberal than the policy of the Government of Mr. Mackenzie. Now, Sir, in reference to this land question, we have offered another privilege to settlers in this Dominion which has never been enjoyed in the United States—that is, the right of pre-empting 160 acres. Before the Act of two sessions ago, any man was entitled to pre-empt 160 acres contiguous to the 160 acres of his homestead at $2.50 an acre on very easy terms of payment. Such a right never existed on the other side of the line; settlers there were entitled only to the bare 160 acres of their homestead. Any person desiring to give a fair and unprejudiced opinion on the land laws of Canada as compared with those of the United States must admit that our laws are better in every respect and better administered, and give a greater facility to settlers than do the land laws of the United States.

Mr. FLINT. I would like to make an observation which though, perhaps, not strictly in order, will be very brief. I think the hon. gentleman who has spoken on the other side ought to admit that——

Mr. FOSTER. Would you allow a suggestion? We have had an equally full discussion of this subject on both sides, and we should now come to the point.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think I am to blame for permitting this discussion at all from the beginning, and that is the reason why I have not interfered with it before. The hon. gentleman will understand that on the resolution agreeing to the vote for Dominion Lands, this question will be in order. Of course, if the hon. gentleman insists, he may go on.

Mr. FLINT. I do not wish to go on after your ruling.

Material for repairs, &c., in connection with the ventilation of public buildings at Ottawa..... $4,000

Mr. CHARLTON. The ventilation of these buildings has been defective ever since they were constructed, and I have called the attention of the Minister of Public Works to this matter every year. Fortunately, this summer, we have not suffered so much, as we have been able to get free air into the building, but during the winter the ventilation is wretched. We continue to bring the air in through the subterranean ducts that run from the brow of the hill, and there seems to be some objection that cannot be overcome against introducing pure air. By running a tower up in the court we could bring in the pure air from heaven, but instead of that we draw it through a sewer, and it comes to us tainted by its passage through fungi and damp and mold. This system ought to be changed. We are squandering enough money in other ways to afford an expenditure of a few thousand dollars for the protection of the health of members who come here from year to year. The building at present is unhealthy, and every session we lose some of our number on that account. I hope the Minister of Public Works will attend to this matter, and see that this chamber and the other rooms connected therewith are properly ventilated.

Mr. McMILLAN. I was led to believe two years ago that there was a plan in the Public Works Department by which this building was to be extended. What was the cause of that plan being set aside? A petition was sent to the Department of Public Works and a promise made that it would receive attention, but so far nothing has been done. Have the Government any other scheme for improving the ventilation than the one of extending the building, for which a plan was prepared?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know of any other scheme. I know that one would have cost a good deal of money, but I do not know whether the reasons for not carrying it out were money considerations.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Is there any plan by which this chamber could be better ventilated than it is? The system is so bad and the draft so continuous, that it is impossible for people to remain here and enjoy health as they would in a well ventilated house. The registers are immediately behind our chairs, and the cold coming in from the corridors creates a draft that is felt almost every day. Surely if the matter were submitted to engineers, they would devise some scheme. There is not a building in Ottawa which has cost $5,000, in which there is not far better ventilation than in this building, which has cost $1,000,000.

Harbours and Rivers generally..... $6,000

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Under this heading I want to get a little information in reference to an item in the Auditor General's Report under Harbours and Rivers, on page 42—C in regard to the salary drawn by A. P. Kilganan, that appears to be extraordinary. He received payment for 395 days in one year, at $3 a day. When I went to school there were only 365 days in a year.

Mr. FOSTER. That is changed since, we are progressing.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). It will be necessary for the Finance Minister to say when the change took place, and if it took place specially for this man's advantage. Now, he received "sustenance"—I suppose that means food—not for 395 days, but for 417 days, so that he must have been a hungry person when he started to work. In addition to that he received $328.24 for what is termed "travel and outlay." Now, I can understand what "travel" means, but I do not know what "outlay" means.

Mr. FOSTER. You did not go to school long enough.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). It appears not, and I am going to call you in to give me assistance, as you have had a special training for this purpose; and as you are going to put yourself up for tutor I hope you will do your work well.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman will send me over that paper I will get him the explanations, but the question is clearly out of order, because it refers to an appropriation made a year and a-half ago, whilst this is for works to be gone into during this next year.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I understood I was in order in putting this.

Mr. FOSTER. It may take some time to get the explanation. It is a difficult question, but as soon as it can be solved——

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I am afraid my tutor does not know any more than his pupil. Are you not going to venture any explanation about the 395 days?

Mr. FOSTER. Not to-night.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Nothing about the "sustenance?"

Mr. FOSTER. Not a word.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). No explanation of what "outlay" means?

Mr. FOSTER. I will refer you to the dictionary.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). No explanation as to hotel bill in addition to sustenance? That appears to be a very strange account, and the Finance Minister should be in a position to explain it, more particularly when he ventured so good humoredly to answer.

Mr. FOSTER. I said I would get the answer if you would send over the questions.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). You will get the questions to-morrow, probably, in the Hansard, if you will be kind enough to read them over, and give the answer in a day or two.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes: it will be more pleasant to ke them out of the Hansard.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 11.35 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 14th September, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

GUYSBOROUGH FISHERY OVERSEER.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. FRASER) asked, What salary was paid Thomas McKeen, of Melrose, in the County of Guysboro', fishery overseer, between the 1st of June, 1889, and the 1st day of September, A.D. 1891? Has any further sum or sums of money been paid the said McKeen besides his salary? If so, for what reason, and what are the items of any further sum other than salary paid him?

Mr. TUPPER. The amount paid Thomas Mc Keen, of Melrose, County of Guysborough, N.S., for salary as fishery warden between 1st June, 1889, and 1st September, 1891, was $67.50. A further sum of $167 was paid Warden McKeen for expenses incurred in defending himself against a charge for criminal assault while discharging his duties, the items of which are as follows:—Paid J. H. Sinclair, barrister, for defending at investigation, $13; witnesses at investigation, $7.20; witnesses for attending at Supreme Court, $51.80; Daniel Macdonald, Q.C., counsel fee, $20; C. F. McIsaac, for going to Guysborough from Antigonish and defending at trial, $75; total, $167.

SMITH & RIPLEY AND THE HON. J. A. CHAPLEAU.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. FORBES) asked, Has the Government, or any member thereof, had their attention called to the following statements published over the signature of Wm. McDougall:—

"1st. Shortly after the accession of Sir John Macdonald in 1878 the Government determined to abandon the construction of the Georgian Bay Branch of the Pacific Railway.

"2nd. It was then under contract in which Messrs. Smith & Ripley, of New York, well-known railway contractors, had acquired a controlling interest.

"3rd. Mr. Chapleau had been retained by these contractors to advise them in acquiring this controlling interest.

"4th. In consequence of his ignorance or neglect the assignments of the interests they bargained and paid for were so informal and imperfect that a majority of the judges of the Supreme Court, on appeal from the judgment of the Exchequer Court in their favour for $171,000, held that Messrs. Smith & Ripley had acquired no legal interest in the contract, but a majority of the judges expressed the opinion that as these gentlemen had acted in good faith and had expended a large sum in the building, that the contract had been legally assigned to them and the Government ought to and no doubt would overcome the defect and deal justly with them.

"5th. Mr. Chapleau neither appeared nor advised in any of the proceedings in the courts from 1879 to 1884, when the case was finally disposed of on a petition to the Governor in Council prepared and presented by me.

"6th. On the day information reached me that the Council had decided to offer them $83,000 in full of their claim, Mr. Smith informed me that the Chapleaus had demanded ten per cent. of the amount.

"7th. Whether Hon. J. A. Chapleau actually received that sum or any part of it, I cannot affirm, as I did not see the money paid to him; but I know that he was exceedingly attentive to Messrs. Smith & Ripley on and during the day on which they drew the money from the bank.

"8th. Mr. Smith and his partner gave as reason for offering me $2,000 for my professional services, extending over a period of upwards of four years, that they had been compelled to pay large sums to people who had done nothing but use influence with the Government.

"9th. I believe Mr. Chapleau received a large part of that solatium.

"I leave the records of the Exchequer Court, the reports of the Supreme Court, and the testimony of my professional brethren who were of counsel with me, to vindicate my reputation as a lawyer in that difficult case. It would have been simple and easy if Mr. Chapleau had given proper notice to his clients, when they paid him $1,500, as he says, for securing to them a controlling interest in the contract.

"I am, &c., &c.,

(Sgd,) "WM. McDOUGALL."

And does the Government purpose taking any steps in the matter? If so, whether an investigation will be immediately directed?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If the hon. gentleman in whose name this question stands (Mr. Forbes) had been in this House, I would have called attention to the gross abuse of which he has been guilty in taking advantage of a question to make it the vehicle of attack and to bring up an old and exploded charge. This was made about six years ago. It referred to a private and professional matter, and referred to professional transactions which immediately afterwards were clearly and specifically denied on the part of both the parties who were referred to as being aggrieved. Since then, the charge has not been revived, and it is now made, as I understand, in no sense by the authority of the person whose name is used.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I would ask leave of the House to supplement the answer of the hon. gentleman, and I am sure I will be allowed to do so as a matter of privilege. Although this charge was specifically denied at the time and was repeatedly denied afterwards, in spite of that, I have been often very wantonly assailed both in the press and on the hustings on account of this unfortunate publication which originated only in regard to a matter of personal and professional spite between Mr. McDougall and myself. But as an hon. member of this House has, from what motive I do not know, thought fit to revive this long dead issue, I think it my duty to bury for all time that half pulverized skeleton which was disinterred as a fine morsel to scandal eaters. I believe that I cannot do that better than by reading to the House a letter which I received last evening on this subject:

"SOMERSET STREET, 13th September, 1891.

"MY DEAR MR. CHAPLEAU,—I am sure you will believe me when I tell you that I have neither prompted nor assented to the re-publication of extracts from a letter written by me some seven or eight years ago, in re the affairs of Messrs. Smith & Ripley.

"I am unable to discover the pertinence of that old controversy in the discussions of Parliament at the present day. My accusation at most was that of professional neglect. That charge was afterwards denied by my clients, as well as the alleged demand of 10 per cent. I may remind you that my letter was not altogether unprovoked, though after the positive denial of Smith & Ripley, which, if I am not mistaken, they verified by affidavit, I never ventured to repeat the accusation against you.

"I may be permitted, as an old parliamentarian, to say the attempt to invoke the interference of the Government in a newspaper squabble between two lawyers about the proper conduct of the case many years ago is unprecedented and not to be countenanced.

"I remain, my dear sir,
"Very faithfully yours,
"WILLIAM McDOUGALL."

I may add that I have here the two affidavits mentioned in this letter, but I think it is not necessary to submit them to the House.

FISHERY OFFICER FITZGERALD.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. BARRON) asked, Is Mr. G. W. Fitzgerald a fishery officer under the Government of Canada? Are his duties confined to the County of Peterborough? If not, what are his limits? How many persons were prosecuted and fined by him, or through him, in 1890? What are the names of such parties, and what is the total amount of fines collected?

Mr. TUPPER. Mr. G. W. Fitzgerald is a fishery officer under the Government of Canada. His duties are confined to the inland waters of the County of Peterborough. Ten persons were prosecuted and fined by or through Mr. Fitzgerald in 1890. The names of these parties are as follows, with place of offence:—Stone Lake—John Mills, Edwin McElvina, Joseph Yelland, J. Bennett, G. Bennett, Thomas Hull, Davin Drain, John Drain; at Katchabogamog—J. J. Bennet, J. E. Bennet. The total amount of fines collected was $29.

APPOINTMENT OF JUDGES AND THEIR SALARIES.

Mr. LÉPINE asked, 1. Whether, in accordance with the promise recently made to this House, the Government have taken steps to appoint a successor to the late Sir A. A. Dorion, as Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench for the Province of Quebec? If so, has the position been offered and declined, and if declined, for what reason? When will the appointment be made, and what salary is to be attached to the position for the future? 2. Have the Government been informed of the serious and incurable illness of the Hon. Mr. Justice Church, and of the prolonged illness of Hon. Mr. Justice Tessier, both of them Puisné Judges of the Court of Queen's Bench? Have the said judges tendered their resignations, or is it the intention of the Government soon to call upon them to resign, and to appoint their successors before the next ensuing term of the Court of Queen's Bench fixed for the 15th September instant? 3. Is it the intention of the Government to submit to Parliament during this session a special measure to provide for an increase in the salary of judges, or for a different system of pension for judges retiring or discharged on reaching a certain age or a certain period of service? 4. Whether the Government have, since their recent statements in this House in relation to provincial legislation at Quebec authorizing the appointment of two additional judges with civil and criminal jurisdiction in the Court of Queen's Bench, notified the Government of that province of the expediency of issuing forthwith the proclamation giving effect to the said legislation, and of their desire to appoint such two judges in conformity therewith? If not, is it the intention of the Government, at an early date, to call the attention of the Government of that province to the necessity of appointing the said two judges, and completing the organization of the Court of Queen's Bench?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Steps have been taken to appoint a successor to the late Chief Justice Dorion of the Court of Queen's Bench for the Province of Quebec. The position has not been declined. The appointment, I think I may say, has been made. The salary to be attached to the position is that provided by statute. The Government has been informed of the serious illness—I cannot say at present incurable—of the Hon. Mr. Justice Church. They have likewise been informed of the prolonged illness of Mr. Justice Tessier, both Puisné Judges of the Court of Queen's Bench. Mr. Justice Church has not sent in his resignation. Mr. Justice Tessier has resigned. I cannot say that we will call upon Mr. Justice Church to resign, for such is not my duty, or that of the Government. A successor to Mr. Justice Tessier will be appointed before the opening of the term. It is not the intention of the Government to submit to Parliament during this session a measure providing for the increase in the salary of judges, or for a different system of pension for judges retiring or discharged on reaching a certain age or a certain period of service. The Government, since their recent statement in this House in relation to provincial legislation in Quebec as to the appointment of two additional judges with civil and criminal jurisdiction, has not notified the Government of the province of the expediency of issuing a proclamation giving effect to that legislation, or of any desire on their part to appoint two judges. It is not the intention of the Government to call the attention of the Government of the Province of Quebec to the necessity of appointing two judges and thus completing the organization of the Court of Queen's Bench, because that does not seem to fall within the duties of the Government.

Mr. LAURIER. Do I understand that the hon. gentleman is not in a position to say now who is to be appointed?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to tell him later.

MICHAEL COSTELLO, MONTREAL CUSTOM HOUSE.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. McMULLEN) asked, Is Michael Costello night watchman in the Customhouse, Montreal? If so, what is his salary? Who appointed him, and when was he appointed? Are the Government aware that the said Michael Costello, who is a brother-in-law of M. P. Ryan, the present collector of Customs at Montreal, is the contractor for draining St. Antoine Ward, Montreal?

Mr. BOWELL. Michael Costello is night watchman in the Customs examining warehouse at the port of Montreal. He is paid $2 per day—or rather per night. He has not been appointed permanently, but has been employed since 1st March, 1885. The Government has no knowledge of Mr. Costello's relationship with Mr. Ryan, nor of the contract for draining St. Antoine Ward, Montreal; and I may add that even if he has such contract, there is nothing in the law to prevent him taking such contract, and draining the whole city of Montreal if he likes.

WALTER HOGG.

Mr. CHOQUETTE asked, Whether there is a person named Walter Hogg employed on the Intercolonial Railway, and if so, in what capacity is he so employed, and what is his salary? Does he employ, with himself, one or more of his sons, and if so, what are their duties?

Mr. BOWELL. I am informed that Walter Hogg is not employed on the Intercolonial Railway, nor are any of his sons so employed.

MR. JULES HELBRONNER, MONTREAL.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. BRODEUR) asked, 1. How much money have the Government paid to Mr. Jules Helbronner, of Montreal, since 1884, and for what was such money paid? 2. Was the said Mr. Helbronner sent to the Paris Exposition, at the expense of the Government, and in what capacity?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Mr. Helbronner was appointed one of the members of the Royal Labour Commission, and the sum of money paid to him has been reported in the Auditor General's Accounts. Mr. Helbronner was not sent to the Paris Exposition by the Government, if the hon. gentleman means the Special Exposition of Social Economy. By request he was sent as the general delegate of the Council of Trade and Labour. He was given by me a letter to our agent in Paris, and during the time he stayed there he took part in the Congress of the Exposition of Social Economy. Mr. Helbronner prepared a very extensive report which was afterwards printed by the Government as one of the appendices to the Royal Labour Commission.

POSTMASTER OF STE. ANGÈLE.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. BRODEUR) asked, Whether the Government have dismissed M. B. Loiselle, postmaster of Ste. Angèle, in the County of Rouville? Were complaints made against him, and who is the person who made such complaints? Why was he dismissed as postmaster?

Mr. HAGGART. The dismissal of Mr. B. Loiselle from the postmastership of Ste. Angèle de Monnoir has been decided upon by the Government. Complaints were made that a registered letter addressed to Mr. A. Guillet, and repeatedly applied for by the addressee, was improperly detained in the Ste. Angèle de Monnoir post office for three days, and the post mark altered to conceal the time date of receipt. The principal complainant was Mr. A. Guillet. These complaints were found on enquiry to be well founded, and the facts have been considered sufficient to justify the postmaster's removal from office.

SALE OF ORDNANCE LAND ON RIDEAU CANAL.

Mr. SOMERVILLE asked, Has the Government sold ordnance land on the Rideau Canal, near the Ottawa exhibition grounds? Was the land sold at public auction? If not, how was it sold? To whom was said land sold, and in whose name was the patent issued? What was the extent of the land sold and its dimensions? What was the price paid? When was the Order in Council passed confirming the sale?

Mr. DEWDNEY. 1. Yes. 2. No. 3. It was sold under sub-section 3 of section 5, chapter 55, which provided that the Crown may, by private contract, sell lands occupied and improved with the assent of the Crown, to the person in possession, without resorting to public auction. It was so sold to Mr. Thos. F. Wallace, who, in addition to being the occupant, held an assignment of a perpetual lease from the Crown to Lewis Williams dated 1830, at 2½ cents per acre. This perpetual lease had been assigned to Mr. T. F. Wallace by Mr. H. H. Williams, son and heir of said Lewis Williams. The sale was made in accordance with the terms of an Order in Council authorizing the same. The land was sold to Thos. F. Wallace, and the patent issued to him. 5. $\frac{67}{100}$ of an acre. 6. The price paid was $75, being $25 in excess of the valuation placed upon it. 7. 30th August, 1890, but the application to purchase is dated 20th July, 1889, and Mr. Wallace asked to purchase upon the same terms and conditions that had been granted to the other purchasers of similar lands. The said Order in Council reads as follows:—

"On a memorandum dated 18th February, 1890, from the Minister of the Interior stating that on 12th December, 1889, he has submitted to the Privy Council an application by Mr. F. Wallace to purchase a strip of ordnance land in the township of Nepean, as to the sale of which the Department of Railways and Canals had reported that that department had no objection, but the matter was referred back to the Minister with direction that this application should stand over until the question of title in the case of the Sparks estate against the Crown now pending in the courts is determined.

"The Minister represents that it was subsequently ascertained that the land applied for does not now and never did form part of the Sparks estate and is not in any way affected by the suit on that matter, and, further, that it has been under lease from the Crown to, and fenced in and cultivated by, Mr. H. H. Williams, the person from whom Mr. Wallace purchased the land in rear, for upwards of 42 years, It will thus be seen that it is and has been for some time in the actual possession of Mr. Wallace with consent of the Crown,

"The Minister recommends, with the concurrence of the Minister of Justice, that the piece of land shown red upon the annexed plan, being a portion of lot K, concession T, township of Nepean, containing an area of 67-100 of an acre, be sold to Mr. Thomas F. Wallace for the sum of $75 cash."

STONY ISLAND BREAKWATER, N. S.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. FLINT) asked, What amount was voted for breakwater at Stony Island, Shelburne County, N.S.? Who is the present contractor? What is the contract price? Will the work be completed this session? Are works now being pushed to completion, or are the same suspended? If suspended, for what reason?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. 1. Fiscal year 1890-91, $3,800. Fiscal year 1891-92, revote $2,600, new vote $1,300—$3,900. The total amount voted is, therefore, $5,100. 2. John Nicholson. 3. $4,650.

4. The time for the completion of work, according to the contract, is 20th October, 1891. 5 and 6. The work was suspended to 1st September, owing to lack of timber, but will be resumed before the end of the month and pushed to completion.

ORDNANCE LANDS IN MONTREAL.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. McMULLEN) asked, Was there a lease of any of the ordnance lands in the City of Montreal, or in the vicinity thereof, granted to any person within the last three years? If so, to whom, and how much? Was there an application made by any person for a lease of any of the said lands and the application refused? If so, by whom, and why declined? Was there any effort made to purchase under such a lease by virtue of the law regulating the sale of ordnance lands? If so, by whom?

Mr. DEWDNEY. 1. No lease for ordnance lands in Montreal or vicinity has been issued during the last three years. 2. No lease has been applied for or refused during the same period. 3. No effort made to purchase.

FISHERY WARDENS—P. E. I.

Mr. PERRY asked, Have all the fishery wardens in Prince Edward Island been appointed guardians? If not, what are the names of those who have not been appointed, and for what reason? What are the names of those appointed in their stead?

Mr. TUPPER. All the late fishery wardens in Prince Edward Island have not been appointed guardians. The following are the names of those not appointed:—Queen's County—Michael Ready, Lionel Garnum, George Stevenson, James Power, Jonathan Delaney, Finlay Mackenzie, William Whitehead, Thomas Murphy, James P. Trainor, Geo. F. Beers, Dominique Buotte, Joseph Murphy, Charles C. McDonald. Prince County—John Rix, John A. Ramsay, John B. Stewart. King's County—Daniel Riley, Peter Duffey, James Mitchell, John O'Brien. The reason for the non-appointment of the above is that I am not aware that their services are required. The names of late wardens and others who have been engaged as temporary special guardians are as follows:—King's County—James Cuddie, James H. Dingwell, Ronald McDonald, Allan McDonald, Malcolm Matheson, Henry Morrow, Henry K. Griffin. Queen's County—Peter Bradley, Newton McKenzie, Neil Currie, Alexander C. BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. LAURIER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to have the attention of the Minister of Finance for the moment. I should like to ask him if he proposes to bring down Supplementary Estimates; if so, when?

Mr. FOSTER. I propose to bring Supplementary Estimates, and will try to bring them down to-morrow afternoon.

NORTH SHORE RAILWAY.

Mr. BOWELL moved third reading of Bill (No. 170) respecting the North Shore section of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. LAURIER. I desire to offer the hon. gentleman an amendment with respect to this Bill, the effect of which will be to bind the company to perform their work within a certain period. The Bill now reads as follows:—

"On the execution by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Government of Canada of a deed of agreement in such form as is determined by the Governor in Council, effectively binding the company to commence forthwith and to complete within such time as is prescribed in such deed the execution of the works and improvements."

There is nothing here to bind the Government to any limited time, or any limit as to time when the contract is to be entered into or the work performed. It seems to me that this is altogether too vague. I propose that the time to enter the agreement shall be fixed at within two months from the prorogation of the session, and that the time to complete the works shall be twelve months after the contract has been signed. This seems to be reasonable delay. If it is not reasonable, I shall have no objection to the time being extended if it is thought advisable to do so; but the Government, I hope, will agree to the necessity of having some limit of time fixed within which the work must be performed. I, therefore, move:

That the Speaker do not now leave the Chair, and that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole with instructions to amend the same by adding after the word "agreement" in the second line of the first section, the following words:—"within two months after the prorogation of the present session," and by striking out the following words in the fifth line of the section:—"such time as is prescribed in such deed" and substituting the following:—"twelve months after the completion of such deed."

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I submit to the hon. gentleman that it would not be wise to insert so rigid a provision as this just now. A good deal of allowance must be made, as I claimed when the resolutions were under discussion, for lack of detail in the scheme, and this was essential from the fact that we had made no agreement upon the subject. I am sure that Parliament would prefer that the Government should come down with a scheme and submit it here before entering into agreements in all cases, but that course has sometimes to be departed from. In adopting this course we are always placed at a disadvantage by asking to have details inserted which require to be very carefully considered before we undertake to be bound by them in the form of a statutory obligation. The Bill as passed so far says that the completion shall be at a time to be fixed in the agreement. That requires some little negotiation. As regards the time of the commencement of the work, I think that the time should be as stated in the resolution, two months after the session, provided the contract is immediately made, as I presume it will be, but if not, it ought to be, at any rate, within two months after the execution of the agreement or as soon as we settle upon terms with the company, so as to ensure setting about this work immediately. Considering that it involves so large a sum of money, and that considerable time is required for the preparation of materials, and so on, I think the limitation of a year is too short. Communications have been entered into with the company in that regard, and the company require a much longer time. I am not prepared to say that we would be disposed to concede what they do require as regards limitation of time, but I think we would be very much hampered by having the time limited in the statute thus requiring, if we do not come to an agreement, that we should come to Parliament for an amendment of the statute next year. In the meantime we shall find ourselves unable to execute an agreement with the company. This requires an expenditure of from $600,000 to $750,000, which is a very considerable sum to be raised, and not only is that the case, but part of the work is in the nature of iron and steel bridges which may not be capable of being constructed within a single year. The utmost time that we would be disposed to concede would be three years and with a stipulation that one-third of the value should be placed on the line every year. I hope the hon. gentleman will realize that it is perhaps unwise in the interest of the work that we should bind ourselves in the form of a statute on this subject, and I think it would not be unreasonable to expect that he would accept our assurance that we intend that the work shall be commenced immediately on the execution of the agreement, and pushed forward as rapidly as we can get it pushed forward; but, at any rate, with the undertaking that each year a proportionate amount shall be expended.

Mr. LAURIER. I am sorry to say, Mr. Speaker, that I am not at all convinced by the argument of the hon. gentleman, and I rather leave it altogether to his own diligence and to the diligence of the Government, whether we shall be bound by such a long term as three years.

Amendment negatived on division.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Geological Survey.....$60,000

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to ask whether the Geological Survey Report for this year is yet out?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The last report is just about out of the printers' hands. I have received an advance copy, and I think the others will be ready for distribution almost immediately. I think the plans are not quite completed yet.

Mr. CHARLTON. Where was this report published?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It has been in the hands of the Montreal Gazette Company for some time.

Removal of the residue of the Lake of Two Mountains Indians from Oka to Township of Gibson (revote).....$4,865 83

Mr. LAURIER. I was not in the House when this item was before the Committee, and I would like to know whether any information was given as to the number of Indian families yet to be removed from Oka to Gibson?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think there are about 150 Indians still at Oka.

Mr. LAURIER. Willing to be removed?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; they are not. We thought at one time that we had an arrangement with them by which we could induce them to remove; but some influences, of which I have no knowledge, were brought to bear to induce them to change their minds, and at present we have no intimation of the willingness of the Indians to remove, except that one or two, whose friends are at Gibson, occasionally make up their minds to go. Since this matter was before the Committee of Supply, I have seen some newspaper remarks which assumed me to have stated that this matter had been tested by a case in the courts, and that the Indians had obtained a verdict. The fact was exactly the opposite. I said that I was under the impression that a case had been heard in the courts, and that the Seminary had obtained a verdict. Since that time I have found that there has been no case, but that the highest legal authorities we have been able to consult have expressed the opinion that the land belongs to the Seminary. That was what was on my mind, and what I intended to state. I was also reported to have said that the sum we had on hand for the removal of these Indians was about $300,000, whereas the amount is what is stated in the Estimates. The Seminary has offered to pay the cost of removing the Indians and the cost of the improvements on the different Indian locations. Consequently the cost to the Government will not be very great when the Indians make up their minds to move.

Mr. LAURIER. I speak under correction, but I was under the impression that a case was pending in court to test the rights between the Seminary and the Indians. Perhaps the hon. gentleman could inform me as to that?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; that matter has never been in the courts.

Mr. CHARLTON. Would it not be well to have a judicial decision on that question?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I would not like myself to express an opinion with regard to that, although I should like very much to see the matter settled. I think the Indians who remain at Oka are really at a disadvantage, for they must feel that they are not at home there, whereas, at Gibson, I believe they would prosper very much better than at Oka.

Mr. CHARLTON. What proportion of the tribe are at Gibson now?

Mr. DEWDNEY. About two-thirds.

Mr. CASEY. It seems to me that the Government, acting as the guardian of the Indians, should have obtained a judicial decision as to their rights in this matter before they attempted to remove them from their homes. The law may have been exactly as the Minister has been advised by those whom he consulted; but it certainly would have been less open to objection if a judicial and final decision had been secured before the Government undertook the expense and responsibility of inducing these Indians to leave the place where they have been so long settled. The land might belong to the Seminary subject to certain conditions, or it might belong absolutely to the Seminary; but there is no use of expecting to settle a matter of this kind by an ex parte opinion given by legal authorities, unless the case has been thoroughly tested in the courts.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think the opinion of the Government of Mr. Mackenzie was that the Seminary had the right to the property. I think it was through the instrumentality of Mr. Mackenzie that the Ontario Government provided the township in Algoma to which the Indians were removed, and I am quite sure that he would not have taken any action in that regard unless he was satisfied that the Indians would be better provided for there than at Oka.

Mr. SCRIVER. My impression is that a suit was instituted on behalf of the Indians at one time, but that it was dismissed on some technicality, and the question as to the right of the Indians to the property has never been actually tested before the courts, though I believe the hon. Minister is right in stating that opinions were obtained by a preceding Administration to the effect that the rights of the Seminary in the property were good. However, I rose for the purpose of asking the opinion of the hon. Minister as to the present condition of the Indians at Gibson—whether they have prospered there, or are in such circumstances as to warrant the belief that the removal of those remaining at Oka to that township would be in the interest of the Indians?

Mr. DEWDNEY. This year I have received no direct report from the chief at Gibson, but last year I received a report from him stating that his Indians were progressing and doing very well, and he has written one or more letters to his friends at Oka, advising them strongly to remove to Gibson.

To provide for survey of Indian Reserves $1,639 02

Mr. CASEY. What Indian reserves is it intended to survey at present? I remember presenting a year or two ago a petition from some Indians on the reserve adjoining my county asking for a sub-division survey. Is this merely intended to survey the boundaries of reserves or sub-divisions?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The boundaries of reserves, some of which are indistinct and have given rise to several disputes. I gave the explanation when the item was up before.

Mr. CASEY. Is it the hon. gentleman's intention to do anything with regard to the sub-division of the reserves among the Indians, as there are constant complaints among the Indians of encroachments?

Mr. DEWDNEY. We are very anxious to do that, and I am giving my attention to it. We have not done much sub-dividing in the older provinces, but in the North-West Territories I was induced to do it on account of difficulties that arose with regard to bounties.

To aid agricultural societies of Indians to enable them to give prizes:
Oneida Agricultural Society..... $60
Muncey Agricultural Society..... 90

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What is the policy of the department in reference to aiding Indian agricultural societies? These seem to be exceptional cases. No doubt it would not be wise to bring all the societies within the limits; but are there some special reasons in the case of these two? They have very successful exhibitions in the reserves in my riding, and I do not think they get any grant. Has there been any application for one, or does the hon. gentleman deem it advisable to initiate this system?

Mr. DEWDNEY. We think it is a good policy to encourage agriculture among the Indians, who have no funds of their own, by giving a small amount to be competed for in prizes. The Indians the hon. gentleman refers to in his riding are very wealthy, compared with these. They have made application to receive some assistance, not with regard to agricultural prizes, but with regard to the amount to be given to an agricultural society for fencing and other purposes. These two amounts were in last year for the first time, and a strong request was made to repeat them this year, and the Indians have very little funds.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I did not catch the full import of the statement of the hon. gentleman, but I believe, from what I could gather, this is the introduction of a new principle into the policy of his department, and, I venture to say, a rather vicious principle. The hon. gentleman is now introducing a system of giving aid to certain agricultural societies on behalf of the Indians. He will have to make that aid general. Is he prepared for the full result of the policy carried out to its logical consequence? Or are there special reasons for these two votes which do not apply to other Indians throughout the Dominion? When you get in the thin edge of the wedge the result will be that in a few years all the Indians will require the same aid. If you grant these amounts on special grounds, it would be well for the House to understand what the grounds are. If this is to be a principle generally applied it means the expenditure of a great many thousand dollars during the year.

Mr. DEDWNEY. Are there any agricultural societies in Prince Edward Island?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am not speaking of Prince Edward Island; and I suppose I have the privilege of speaking for the rest of the Dominion, although there are no Indian agricultural societies in my province.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I merely asked because I thought there were no agricultural societies in Prince Edward Island, as there are none in some of the other provinces. The Indians mentioned in this vote are very enterprising, hard-working men, and have no funds of their own. Last year was the first year this was voted, and it has been asked for again this year; but it is not to be continuous, and this is to be the last year application will be made. For myself, I think that, wherever the Indians will take an interest in agriculture, a small amount should be granted them for prizes, as it would have a good effect. I should like to see a much larger sum given to all agricultural societies.

Mr. LAURIER. There may be no agricultural societies among the Indians of Prince Edward Island or of Quebec, but it is very true that after this vote agricultural societies may spring up on every reserve. If agricultural societies are formed which are only the result of this vote, they may be of very questionable utility. There ought to be some principle on which these grants are made, some rule of efficiency, but the hon. gentleman will admit that if on the fact alone of an agricultura society being established it is to be entitled to a grant, he is introducing an unwise policy.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would ask whether those two agricultural societies, the Oneida and the Muncey, towards which we have just passed votes, are the only two societies to which we grant aid?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They are the only two in the eastern provinces. We do give some to the agricultural societies for Indian exhibits in the North-West.

Mr. CASEY. I did not understand that. In my county there is a very excellent society at——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member cannot enter into that again. That has been passed, and I must enforce the rule of the House.

Sioux Indians, North-West Territories. $5,669

Mr. CHARLTON. How many Sioux Indians have we in the North-West?

Mr. DEWDNEY. About 3,000 Sioux and Assiniboines. Some of them are treaty Indians. The great majority of the Sioux are Minnesota Sioux who came over many years ago, and some came in with Sitting Bull, but they are gradually going back to the States.

Mr. CHARLTON. Are the American Sioux getting assistance the same as our own Indians?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No, they are receiving a very slight assistance, but the Sioux Indians are doing very well for themselves, they are almost self-supporting. They only receive between $2,000 and $3,000, and $1,300 of that goes to a school.

Schools, British Columbia..... $43,730

Mr. CHARLTON. Is this for Indian schools?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. Have we in British Columbia the system of paying missionaries as we discovered we had in New Brunswick?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Does the New England Society give any aid to Indians in British Columbia now?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No.

Running expenses of Steam Launch.... $2,860

Mr. CHARLTON. Where is this steam launch used?

Mr. DEWDNEY. On the north-west coast from 100 miles south of the mouth of the Skeena northward to the upper end of our territory.

Mr. CHARLTON. How often does she make trips?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Whenever the agent thinks it is necessary to visit the reserves.

North-West Mounted Police..... $701,000

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the character of the arms with which the Mounted Police are now equipped? Have the Government taken any measures to prevent arms of precision, Winchesters and so on, getting into the hands of Indians in the North-West?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have a memorandum on that subject, but I cannot put my hand on it. I know there are a large number of Winchesters and some Enfields. We are taking every precaution we can to prevent the rifles getting into the hands of the Indians. We found lately that a trader was doing business south of the Blood Reserve on the other side of the line and was selling not only arms, but I think also whiskey. Within the last ten days we have communicated with the American Government, and I have no doubt they will stop this as they have stopped similar cases before. We also prohibit the sale of arms without the permission of the Lieutenant Governor.

Mr. TROW. The Indians on the reserves do not want any arms, because they are agriculturists.

Mr. DEWDNEY. They are getting rid of them very rapidly, but we considered it would be out of the question to disarm them.

Mr. CHARLTON. With the permission of the House——

Mr. FOSTER. Spoke.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is not in order, and I would suggest that, if any members would put their questions before the Minister answers, it would be more convenient.

Mr. CHARLTON. I simply wished to refer to the very great importance of doing what the Government are doing, to prevent the Indians getting these improved arms. The United States Government found the Indians armed with improved breech-loading rifles, and it cost millions of money and many lives to put them down. We want to be alert in this matter, as I trust and believe the Government are.

North-West Mounted Police—Clothing, $59,000

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman doubtless remembers that when we had this item in committee, he promised to bring down the names of successful tenderers for clothing.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Not only for clothing, but I was asked for the names of all the contractors for supplies to the Mounted Police: and I have them here. My information does not give the prices. It is a very long list, there are about a hundred contractors for clothing, for provisions, beef and forage. I will lay the list on the Table. The contracts were all given in the usual way to the lowest tenderer.

North-West Mounted Police—Repairs, renewals, replacement of horses, arms and ammunition..... $50,000

Mr. CHARLTON. Where arms are replaced, are the Government substituting Winchesters for the old Enfields?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. To what extent and how rapidly is that substitution going on?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have a memorandum stating the police are armed with the Winchester repeating carbine and the Enfield revolver. One hundred and twenty rounds of carbine and about 60 rounds of revolver ammunition are issued annually to each member of the force for private practice. When the rifles are worn out they get the renewal parts from the States, They are now nearly all armed with Winchester rifles.

North-West Mounted Police—Books, stationery and printed forms..... $4,000

Mr. CHARLTON. Does the Government furnish books and papers for the reading rooms of the North-West Mounted Police stations?

Mr. FOSTER. These are Mining Commissioners' Reports.

North-West Mounted Police—Contingencies..... $8,000

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman promised to give us some information as to the expenditure for telegrams in connection with the North-West Mounted Police. He will remember that the objection was made in committee that the expenditure was very large, and we desired to know how that expenditure came to be so large.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The total of the amounts shown in the Auditor General's Report, 1889-90, page C—224, is $3,360.61. The correct amount, as per departmental books and vouchers, is $3,520.62. The difference appears to represent charges for postage which, in the classification in the Audit Office, have been included as telegrams. The distribution of the $3,520.62 is as follows:—

Department, Ottawa	$ 449 17
Regina	1,652 61
Battleford	39 73
Prince Albert	113 75
Saskatchewan	88 43
Lethbridge	146 41
Macleod	411 13
Calgary	251 39
Medicine Hat	50 93
Maple Creek	152 35
Wood Mountain	90 61
Portage la Prairie	7 20
Government Telegraph Service	66 91
	$ 3,520 62

The charge of $1,652.61 for Regina includes telegrams sent from the numerous outposts east of that place and in Southern Manitoba. Regina being the headquarters accounts for the large item for telegrams at that point. The item of $113.75 for Prince Albert includes several telegrams respecting the destitute condition of certain half-breeds in the Prince Albert and Batoche districts during the winter of 1889-90, and the relief extended to them. Many of these telegrams were properly chargeable to relief to destitute half-breeds. The items of $146.41, Lethbridge; $411.13, Macleod; $152.35, Maple Creek; $90.61, Wood Mountain, contain large sums for telegrams reporting the movements of smugglers, suspected horse thieves, &c., also telegrams in connection with extradition cases. Every effort is made to keep down the telegraph charges of the Mounted Police, but it is impossible to lay down definite instructions, and reliance has to be placed on the judgment of the members of the force as to the necessity of using the wires. It must also be remembered that many of the police outposts are not connected with the regular postal routes, and the telegraph line is the only source by which information can be rapidly communicated. The telegraph account in connection with Customs and Interior business in Southern Manitoba is all charged to the police account.

Canada Gazette..... $6,000

Mr. CHARLTON. How large is the circulation of the Canada Gazette? To what extent is it circulated free, and about how many persons subscribe for it?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I could not give that information unless I obtained it from the department. The old circulation has increased, I suppose. Last year for the first time I had a surplus from the Official Gazette.

Mr. CHARLTON. Then the hon. Minister is not able to give any information about it whatever?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No. I can have the list this evening. There are no great changes.

Miscellaneous Printing..... $22,000

Mr. CHARLTON. Of what does this printing consist?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It consists of all reports sent to Council, the printing of papers, and miscellaneous printing for the departments, with the exception of reports. It is an item in which the only change is the amount asked.

Mr. LAURIER. Economy and retrenchment.

Customs, Prince Edward Island..... $19,885

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I desire to ask the Minister of Customs if he has had time to give consideration to some remarks made from this side of the House respecting the collection of revenues at Charlottetown, and the salaries of the officers? I think the hon. gentleman was kind enough to intimate that this matter would receive consideration at his hands.

Mr. BOWELL. My promise was that the question of the salary of the chief clerk should receive the consideration of the department. The general question to which the hon. gentleman refers has received my attention and consideration a great many times. I do not see my way, as I indicated in my former remarks, to increase the expenditure which would be incurred by adopting the system suggested by the hon. gentleman, or having statutory increases for all officers of Customs. Since that discussion, I have looked at the list of officers at Charlottetown and compared it with the lists at the cities to which he referred, and I do not find that discrepancy he indicates, except in regard to the higher classes, the chief clerk and surveyor. But as regards the landing waiters and tide waiters, they are about on a par with officers of like character in St. John, Halifax and Montreal.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then with respect to the higher officers, their cases are under consideration?

Mr. BOWELL. They are. The question as to the chief clerk, to whose case special attention was called, should be considered.

Travelling Inspectors..... $18,000

Mr. CHARLTON. How many inspectors are there in the service of the Government?

Mr. BOWELL. I answered that question before. One for Nova Scotia, one for New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, one for Quebec and part of Ontario, one for the upper section of Ontario including Manitoulin Island, one for Winnipeg and as far east as Port Arthur and west to British Columbia, and one in British Columbia. As British Columbia has not many ports I gave the power and authority of the inspector to the collector at New Westminster. These are the regular inspectors.

There is also the financial inspector, Mr. McMichael, in Toronto. When any difficulty arises in connection with the books and collections we send him to all parts of the Dominion in order to settle the matter. He also performs all the duties formerly discharged by Mr. Wolfe, and no new appointment was made in that officer's place.

Board of Customs $17,550

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the nature of the duties of the chairman of the board, and what is the total amount of his salary?

Mr. BOWELL. $4,000. He presides at all meetings of the board in addition to performing his other duties in connection with questions affecting the tariff and the interpretation of the tariff. This sum has been paid ever since the board was established.

Mr. CHARLTON. And Mr. Johnston is still acting?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Administration of Chinese Immigration Act $2,000

Mr. CHARLTON. Has the Customs Department had any representation made to it by the United States respecting the smuggling of Chinese from Canada into the United States in the guise of women?

Mr. BOWELL. No; no information of that character. We have had information, however, as I explained when the item was before the Committee, from the United States about smuggling or the passage from our country into theirs of Chinese. Moreover, the United States Government have made representations to the Imperial Government, who have transmitted the despatches to this country, asking that we co-operate with them in preventing the Chinese leaving this country and going to the United States. The House will easily understand what answer they received to a communication of that kind. When once a Chinaman is here and has paid his $50 he has a right to go and come as he pleases.

Mr. CHARLTON. There is no friction or bad feeling between the two Governments?

Mr. BOWELL. Not at all.

Mr. LAURIER. I think I have seen it in the public press, that by a judicial decision recently rendered, either by the Supreme Court of the United States or the Supreme Court of California, I do not know which, applying a local law to the State of California which provides that all Chinese coming into the United States in violation of the laws of the United States are to be shipped back: it was supposed they were to be sent back to China, but I understand that the court decided in this case that they should be sent back to the country whence they came, which is British Columbia. I have seen the statement somewhere that such a decision has been rendered not later than three weeks ago.

Mr. BOWELL. I have not seen that. The former decision was quite the other way.

Indians, New Brunswick $6,200

Mr. DEWDNEY. In connection with this item I would like to make a statement in reference to an accusation that was made by the hon. member for Guysborough when we were in committee on the supplies for New Brunswick Indians. I am sorry the gentleman is not now in his place, but he made an accusation against one of our Indian agents, and I think it is only right that I should take the first opportunity I have of showing that he was misinformed with regard to the accusation he made, and to clear the character of the agent, who I believe is an honourable man. The member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) stated that a yoke of oxen had been sold to the department by a man named Donald Chisholm for $70 or $73, and that Donald Chisholm had only received $60. I told the hon. gentleman then, that this was a very strong accusation to make unless he had good proof of it, and that if he would send me the proof he had, I would make enquiries, because if the agent was found guilty of that he would receive his instant dismissal. The member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) sent me the following day the information which induced him to make the statement which he did, and from it I can find no fault with the hon. member for making the accusation, but if he had come to my office with the accusation, he would have found this agent to have been most grossly maligned, and he would have had no occasion to leave him for a week or two under the ban of being a thief. The following is a copy of the memorandum which the hon. gentleman forwarded to me, and on which he based his accusation:—

"This is to certify that I sold a pair of oxen to W. C. Chisholm, Indian agent, in summer 1888 for sixty dollars ($60) and I see he has charged the Government $70 or $73 for them.

"DONALD CHISHOLM,
"Afton, Antigonish.

"AFTON, 17th July, 1891."

The following day I went to the department to make enquiries into the matter, and I find from the voucher, a copy of which I hold in my hand, that a voucher had been made out to Donald Chisholm for $70 for a pair of oxen and $1.50 for an ox chain, making $71.50; that the cheque had been made out in Donald Chisholm's name, forwarded to him, and that he endorsed it and certified to having received the money. On the day following I received a letter from the agent to this effect:

"HEATHERTON, ANTIGONISH CO., N.S., Sept., 1891.

"Hon. E. DEWDNEY,

"Supt. Gen. of Indian Affairs, Ottawa, Ont.

"SIR,—My attention has been called to a remark made by D. C. Fraser, M. P. for Guysborough, in the House of Commons, as reported in Hansard, 31st August, page 4730, in which he said:

"Among those supplies was one yoke of oxen charged at $73 and one yoke at $70. On making enquiries I find that the oxen did not cost that much. I have a certificate signed Donald Chisholm, who sold the oxen, stating that he sold a yoke of oxen to Indian agent W. C. Chisholm for $60, and that he found that the agent had charged $70 or $73.

"I beg to inform the Department that Chisholm received the whole sum of $70 for the oxen at that time. That there is not an atom of proof in anything said to the contrary, that Chisholm says he signed the certificate under a misapprehension, that upon my asking him to give me a declaration to the contrary he did so in the presence of Allan J. Cameron. I enclose a declaration signed by Chisholm. Hoping this will satisfactorily clear up this affair,

"I have the honour to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
"W. C. CHISHOLM.
"Indian Agent, District No. 9."

The declaration of Donald Chisholm is as follows:—

"I, Donald Chisholm, of Afton, in the County of Antigonish, hereby declare that I received seventy dollars for a pair of oxen bought from me in the fall of 1887, for the Indian, viz., Charles Pullet, by William C. Chisholm, Indian agent, and I also declare that any statement made to the contrary is false.

"DONALD CHISHOLM.

"HEATHERTON, 30th July, 1891.

"I hereby certify that in my presence Donald Chisholm, of Afton, acknowledged the above statement to be correct and the said signature to be in his handwriting.

"A. J. CAMERON.

"HEATHERTON, 30th July, 1891."

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is that the same man who gave the member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) the statement?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes, the same man.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not rise to impugn in any way the accuracy of the statement which the Minister has just read to the House, further than to say that the memorandum he read is in no sense, legal or otherwise, a statutory declaration. It does not profess to be such, and the hon. gentleman of course must not represent it to the House as such. The statement, as it appears from the remarks of the Minister, was made by this same Donald Chisholm in the first instance to the member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), who, as the Minister of Interior justly remarks, was fully justified in making the remarks he did in the House. This man Chisholm now makes a simple statement contradicting the first one he made, but it is not in any sense a statutory declaration and neither the House nor the country will receive it as such. Another man states it was made in his presence, but it is not a statutory declaration and is not subject to the penalties which may be attached to such.

Mr. TUPPER. The first statement was not a statutory declaration either.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Neither is, and therefore so far as the member for Guysborough is concerned, he was perfectly justified in making the statement to the House. What I rise for is to repudiate the implied reflection which the Minister cast upon the member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) in bringing this matter before the House. He intimates that the proper way was for the member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) to run around to his office and get the information privately. I wish to take issue distinctly on that point. If the member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), or any other member of this House, has information of such a character as that placed in his hands by the seller of the article, saying that he had sold the article for such a sum, and that a less sum was credited in the public accounts, it is the duty of the member to make that statement in his place in the House. Reckless statements will be discountenanced at all times by the House, and no hon. gentleman who values his reputation will make them; but when he has a statement to make affecting the character of a public officer and respecting the proper conduct of public affairs, his duty is to make it from his place in the House. I do not think the Minister's contention was correct, that instead of the hon. member making his statement in the House he should have gone to his department. Members of Parliament cannot be expected to run around to the public departments trying to find out whether each one of the statements they receive from all parts of the country is correct or not. The matter must be laid before the House, and the House is the proper place in which to make such statements. The statement made, and the refutation such as this, will now go before those who are, or ought to be acquainted with the facts, and they can judge whether the statement was correct or not. As the matter now stands the House has two statements made by the same man and contradicting each other, and we have nothing further.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The course which the hon. gentleman suggests would be a very proper one if there were no interests to be considered except those of the public, the member who is possessed of the information and the department. But this matter relates to a gentleman who has another interest, namely, his private character. He is a public officer, and as such is, of course, open to censure and enquiry, but he is not subject among honourable men to be robbed of his character by an unjust accusation. Now, I do not want to say one word reflecting upon the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), in his absence; far from it. I merely suggest this as a general principle, that, where a charge is made, without knowledge by the member of the credibility of the person making the charge, perhaps it would be well for him to send it across the House to the proper Minister before reading it to the House, in order that enquiry may be made. I do not know the person who gave this certificate in answer to the charge, but it seems to me that the certificate is a complete refutation of the dishonest accusation which he made, and which misled the hon. member for Guysborough. I know Mr. Chisholm, the agent, and I know that he is one of the most respectable men in the county, a man against whom no such charge would be made by anyone who knows him either in that county or in the adjoining county of Guysborough. He is a respectable merchant, a councillor of the County of Antigonish, and a man whose reputation is above reproach. I know that if the hon. member for Guysborough knew the man, he would have allowed an opportunity for the answer to be made before giving the charge publicity.

Mr. McNEILL. I wish to add a word in entire approval and support of the position taken by the hon. Minister of Justice in reference to this matter. I think that a great responsibility rests upon members of Parliament in bringing injurious accusations in this House against people throughout the country. Only a short time ago a most respectable and highly esteemed man in my own constituency was attacked by an hon. member in this House, in exactly the same way, and the injurious statements that he made were circulated through the press. This gentleman and his family were, for a very considerable time, caused the greatest possible mental distress by these utterly unfounded statements. If a charge is placed in the hands of an hon. member of so serious a character as to render it necessary for him to bring it to the attention of this House, it would be a very simple thing for him to make some enquiry in reference to the matter from the department. I think we all, as members of this House, ought carefully to consider this matter, and make up our minds that no charge shall be laid against any man upon our responsibility as members, without first making enquiry as to the bonâ fides of the person who places the charge in our hands.

Mr. LAURIER. This is a matter of some importance, and I believe, and I think the House will agree with me, that in all such matters the public interest is best served by members of this House discharging their public duties on the floor of this House. For my part, if such a matter were placed in my hands, I would be opposed to going around to a Minister's department to have, I will not say a Star Chamber enquiry, but a private enquiry into the accusation. This system of making charges may be liable to abuse; in all such cases abuses are liable to take place; but I contend that less abuse will take place if these duties are discharged openly in this House than would be the case if the course suggested were followed. Occasionally some injustice may be done to certain men; but there is certainly something extraordinary in a person making an accusation against an officer of the Government, and afterwards repudiating it. At all events, the character of the officer has not suffered, as the party who made the accusation, I believe, now retracts it, and there is more likelihood of justice being done to all parties concerned by having the matter ventilated on the floor of Parliament. If the other course suggested had been taken by the hon. member for Guysborough, what would have happened? If he had gone to the Minister's department, perhaps the vindication of the character of the officer would not have been as speedy and full as it has been. Under all circumstances, it seems to me that the best course to be followed is to have any charges made against an officer of the Government ventilated on the floor of the House, with full publicity.

New Brunswick Indians—Medical attendance..... $1,195

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think this is the item that includes certain payments made to some Roman Catholic missionaries in the Province of New Brunswick, and charged as such in the public accounts. A good deal of attention has been attracted to this matter, and I should like to know what the intention of the Government is in regard to it, because we cannot allow salaries to be paid to the clergymen of any church under conditions such as those under which these payments are said to be made. This money is intended for the material well-being of these Indians, and it may be expended in a careful and judicious manner; but it appears to establish the principle of voting money for the religious instruction of the Indians. I am not going into the question whether such religious instruction should be given by the state or not. All I say is, that this is not the present policy of the Government, and it must not be applied in one case and in no other. The Minister must see that this money is used as far as may be for the purpose for which it is intended, and not in the exceptional manner in which it is now distributed.

Mr. CHARLTON. I was in hopes that we should have something suggested by the Minister in regard to this matter. It is a matter that will attract a good deal of attention in the country. As my hon. friend from Muskoka says, the principle of making payments from the public funds to denominational teachers of the Indians is one that will not be accepted by the country. It is as well to have this matter settled now. The amount is not large; but, in my opinion, it is better for the Government to drop this entirely, and to leave to the different denominations the religious instruction of the Indians.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think I explained, when this matter was before the Committee, that these reverend fathers had been continued year after year ever since Confederation; in fact they were in the service of the Imperial Government before Confederation. This money is for the distribution of medicines among the Indians, and for work which, if we change our policy, will have to be done by agents. In New Brunswick we have only two agents at present. The matter having now been brought to the attention of the Government, however, I propose to consider it during the recess, and see whether any change can be made; but nothing can be done until we enquire into the general working of Indian affairs in New Brunswick.

Management of four Well-boring Machines, North-West Territories.... $3,000

Mr. CHARLTON. When in Dakota some months ago, I heard a good deal of talk about artesian wells, which are being carried on to some extent there and have proved quite successful. Do the Government intend trying the system in the North-West?

Mr. DAVIN. In accordance with your decision, Mr. Speaker, that the members should speak before the Minister replies, I would state to the hon. gentleman that these four boring machines, I am sorry to say, are not artesian machines. We have no artesian wells in the North-West, but the Minister is making an experiment at Deloraine. There cannot be the least doubt, judging by what has been done in Dakota, that if the Government would sink artesian wells in the North-West, in those places where it is difficult to get water—not because there is no water, but because the means of the farmers will not allow them to dig deep enough—parts of the Territories which are richer than I can describe, but in which there is no irrigation at present, would become very attractive to settlers. As it has been declared on very high authority that this Government is the real Government of the North-West, that it administers the land, it is the duty of this, and not of the Local Assembly, to deal with the problem. I was on a visit to Dakota two years ago, and I saw what I thought was a lake in that prairie country, but I was told it was not a lake at all, but the flow from the artesian well. The well runs the whole year, the pipe rises above ground, and overflows into an immense tank, the overflow from which finds its way down to the valley and forms itself into a lake, at once useful and picturesque. If we had artesian wells at points where four sections touch, we would have water, at a cost probably of $1,000, within the reach of sixteen settlers, and if you divide that amount by sixteen you will see what a paltry lien it would be on each farm.

Mr. CHARLTON. Could you have an artesian well for that amount?

Mr. DAVIN. No matter what it would cost. Suppose it cost $2,000 or $3,000, that would still leave but a small lien on each farm, when divided by sixteen, especially when you set against it the distance the farmers often have now to go in search of water, ten miles and twenty miles. I have urged on the Minister and the Government to deal with this question and not shift the responsibility to the Local Government. A large portion of country near Moose Jaw and south of Wascana and other parts of the North-West, where you have the best land in the world, but where water has to be brought a great distance, if artesian wells were dug, would become most attractive and profitable to the incoming settlers for agricultural purposes, and not be wholly devoted to grazing.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I appreciate the importance of the question, and we are now endeavouring to see whether we have an artesian basin in our country or not. We have, with the aid of moneys invested by the municipality of Deloraine and by the Local Government of Manitoba, succeeded in boring over 1,800 feet deep, and have not yet succeeded in obtaining water. We expect to do so, however, and parties in Dakota are as much interested in the well as we are. Some of the experts from Dakota have been examining the well, and are very anxious with regard to the result, as the well will serve the country between our boundary and Devil's Lake, where the present artesian well has been so successful. With reference to the scheme proposed by the hon. member for West Assiniboia, I do not think we can attempt to sink wells at the intersections of four sections, because we would have to bore to a great depth, and $1,000 would be altogether insufficient. The machines referred to in the Estimates are well-boring machines, which are not expected to go further than a few hundred feet, and are for the purpose of giving information to the farmers how far they will have to go for water. They will then know whether it is within their means to sink the wells themselves. They have been a very great success as far as they have gone, and have been very much appreciated by the farmers, who give what assistance they can in the shape of horse power towards sinking these wells. The subject of artesian wells is a very large question, and some people are under the impression that irrigation can be carried on to some extent by means of artesian wells. I think that is a fallacy, and, as I know by experience and by enquiries, there is very little irrigation to be obtained from artesian wells. The largest artesian wells on the continent of America is in Southern California, and the water obtained from that is only sufficient to irrigate one square mile of territory, so I think this system cannot be used very much for irrigating purposes, though it may be useful in a country like ours if the water can be carried long distances for the use of farmers, then the system would be of great benefit. However, it is very uncertain yet, and I doubt if it is so difficult as has been represented to obtain water in the North-West. I know that south of Regina, which was reported to be so very dry, they have sunk wells lately where it was stated it was useless to do any boring. They obtained the services of some knowing Hungarian and followed his advice, and I believe they have some running wells now. With the aid of these borers, I believe we shall be able to do a great deal of good in this dry part of the country, and that we shall be able to find water in the upper stratum, in the gravel, at reasonable depths, but I believe that below the clay it would be necessary to go down 1,800 to 2,000 feet.

Mr. TROW. I think this is commendable where the Government have large tracts of territory, but I do not think it is desirable to spend money in this way at every cross road. Surely, if it is true as has been stated that the grain will this year reach the price of a dollar a bushel, the capitalists who own so much land in the North-West should undertake to make the improvements, or a few of the farmers combined could do it without the Government carrying water to every man's mill in the North-West. We have been exceedingly liberal to the North-West all along, and I think it is time to put on the brakes.

Rent of Court Room..... $500

Mr. CHARLTON. Where is the court room?

Mr. DEWDNEY. This is in a building erected by the North-West Land Company in Regina.

Contingencies (to be approved by Minister of the Interior)..... $3,000

Mr. CHARLTON. What does that mean, "to be approved by Minister of the Interior"?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think this item will appear here for the last time, because, after the next meeting of the Assembly, they will have it in their own hands.

Schools, North-West Territories..... $100,000

Mr. CHARLTON. Is this for Indian schools?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; for public schools.

To meet expenditure in connection with the Canada Temperance Act.. $2,500

Mr. CHARLTON. What expenses are we incurring now in connection with the Canada Temperance Act?

Mr. FOSTER. This is to meet what may be required to be expended. For instance, if any county petitions to have the Act put in force, or to have the Act repealed, the expenses of the voting will be taken out of this.

Mr. CASEY. I think this Government has tried to throw too much expense and too much responsibility on the Local Governments in connection with this Act. This is a Dominion Act and should be enforced by Dominion officers. It concerns the Department of Excise in the first place, and the Government ultimately, to see that this Act is enforced. I do not say that the law is always practicable. There are districts in which the public sentiment is strongly in favour of prohibition; it may be so, but in a mixed community it is very difficult to enforce it. It has not been the policy of this Government to attempt to enforce this Act, and I can hardly characterize their course as otherwise than cowardly. They are apparently afraid to incur the hostility of those who deal in liquor by taking means to enforce the Act. They prefer to allow the officials of the Local Government to make the attempt at enforcement, and to leave the cost of carrying it out upon the Local Government, which is always blamed in case of a failure to enforce the Act. I do not think it has been sufficiently made plain how far this Government is forgetting or intentionally neglecting its duty in this matter. I should think I might appeal to the Minister of Finance, as one who is well known for his interest in temperance matters, to see that a change is made in this direction. If we allow counties to take a vote and put in force a Dominion Act, undoubtedly the responsibility for enforcing that Act rests with the Government here, and it is the duty of Ministers to take the responsibility for such enforcement. I have known a good deal of ill-feeling to exist in my own county where the Scott Act was for a time in force, and although the Local Government officials did their best, they failed to enforce the Act. They simply succeeded in collecting a considerable amount of revenue in the way of fines, and it came to be practically a question of fining the tavern-keepers so many times in a year, and thereby collecting a reasonable revenue, and the Local Government was blamed by the prohibitionists of that county and of all counties, for not enforcing the Act better. Now that the Government are taking a vote in connection with this Act, I think it behooves the Minister to explain what steps he intends to take for its enforcement, where it is supposed to be in force, and the extent of the responsibility of this Government in connection with the matter. I would like to hear what he has to say on that point before the item is concurred in. I have no doubt that under the circumstances, considering that this is a question of temperance work, he will not allow this challenge to pass without reply; if he does, he confesses that he does not intend to do anything, that he does not acknowledge the responsibility of this Government in the matter, and does not wish to incur the ill-feeling of another class of the community by enforcing the Act. I think he might explain the intentions of the Government in respect to enforcing the Scott Act; if not, he will confess by his silence that they do not intend to try to enforce it at all, that they intend to continue the course they have pursued hitherto, of leaving the matter in the hands of those who have not machinery sufficient to enforce it, and to blame them for the failure of the Act itself.

Mr. FOSTER. Carried.

Mr. CASEY. Confessed.

To compensate members of the North-West Mounted Police for injuries received in the discharge of duty.. $2,000

Mr. CHARLTON. Is this supposed to cover all possible contingencies under this head?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is supposed to meet all contingencies.

To provide for the payment of Mr. Fabre's salary and contingencies of his office..... $3,500

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would not feel warranted in asking the Minister to give the House information that might have been given at a previous stage, simply because I was absent, but I have looked through the Hansard diligently under the date when this item passed through Committee, and apparently it was passed without discussion.

Mr. FOSTER. I gave explanation at the time.

Commercial Agencies..... ..... $5,000

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I have not been able to find it yet, but no doubt the subject is of sufficient importance that the Minister perhaps will not object to say a few words again in explanation. I remember a few years ago when this item was put in- I think it was $10,000—I viewed it very favourably; I thought it was a step in the right direction, I thought it was well to locate agents in countries where we might expect to do a foreign trade and that benefit would result from it; but I am not aware that we have had any explanations in any year as to any effective work that has been done in this direction. If I remember rightly a portion of the vote, at any rate, was supplied to sending Mr. Jones to the Argentine Republic. It seemed to me that was scarcely the object for which it was voted. It is well known in the House that the Canadian exporter and manufacturer visiting a foreign country is under a good deal of disadvantage. The British manufacturer has, of course, the British Minister in the country to whom he can apply for assistance, if he requires it; and the United States manufacturer, of course, has the United States Minister to whom he can apply, while the Canadian manufacturer or exporter, in visiting one of these countries to push his sales, finds himself without any assistance. Of course he may apply to the British Minister, and no doubt would receive a very courteous reception from the British Minister, and it would probably be conveyed to him that the interest of the British manufacturer and the interests of the Canadian manufacturer were separate and distinct in these matters, and that he was charged particularly with advancing the interests of the manufacturers in England, or in Scotland, or in Ireland, and that it was not his particular duty to give assistance to the Canadian manufacturer or exporter. I had thought, when this item was first placed in the Estimates, that it was with a view to feeling our way as to whether a resident agent in some country in which we might hope to develop a good trade, might be found of sufficient advantage to warrant its introduction and the extension of the principle. So far I see there is just the same amount asked from year to year, and as I said before, I am not aware that any explanation has been given to the House as to how this money has been expended. I would like the Minister to say whether we have really had a commercial agent at all, one that might fairly come under the designation for which this vote is asked? Have we had any agent of the Canadian Government residing in any foreign country to attend to the commercial interest of Canada? That, I think, was the object of this vote. Sending an agent to Jamaica, or to the Argentine Republic, or somewhere else, does not seem to me to have come within the idea that was entertained when this vote was asked from Parliament. I would like to ask, further, whether the full amount of $10,000 has been expended each year, how it has been expended, to whom it has been paid, and whether it is intended to try the experiment of having a resident agent, a commercial agent who shall look after the commercial interests of Canada, in some countries?

Mr. FOSTER. On September 7th, as will be seen by referring to Hansard, a discussion took place on this item, although it was brief. I think last year there was a little longer discussion upon it, and I explained a little more in detail what we proposed to do with the vote, which was formerly $10,000, but is now $5,000, and which, as he says, was used but only in part, to defray the expenses of Mr. Jones' trip to South America. Since then I do not think much has been expended out of that vote. The last fiscal year of which we have a record nothing was spent out of that vote; in the fiscal year just passed, of which we have not a record yet, the expenses which were incurred in my mission to the West Indies was charged to that vote, and as long as we have such a vote we may use it for purposes of a like kind.

Mr. CASEY. Did the hon. gentleman say that the expenses of the Jamaica Exhibition were paid out of it?

Mr. FOSTER. If at any time during the course of the year it is thought expedient to send any commercial mission to any country—and such things do occur, and they are liable to occur at any time—it is quite well to have a sum voted out of which an expenditure for such purpose can be had. But my main object in continuing the vote since I have been Minister of Finance, was in the direction that my hon. friend hinted at, namely, commencing with a few countries, to establish a kind of commercial agency, not on a large scale at all, but to make the beginning of a kind of stationary agent, who could report the state of the markets, the requirements of the markets, the prices of goods and the like of that, and these reports being sent to the department could be published for the benefit of the commercial public. During my trip to the West Indies I had personal conversations with gentlemen in several of the Islands to that end, and I intend this year to bring before Council a plan, not at all ambitious or large, for the establishment of commercial agents in several of the more important points of the West Indies, and in other points in countries, especially those with which we might be able to establish trade. Of course the small sum at my disposal would not allow me to go very far in this direction, but I should like to make a trial of it and find out how it worked; and if we obtain valuable reports, and I have received a very excellent one of its kind from Trinidad, such as will help the commercial community, we could have them printed in bulletin form and distributed to the commercial community, to the boards of trade and other bodies, so that the merchants would get hold of them and the information might be acted upon and found very valuable.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In connection with this subject of the necessity of the Government obtaining accurate information from foreign ports with respect to matters affecting Canadian exporters, I should like to recall the attention of the hon. gentleman to an important conversation which took place in the House about two weeks ago respecting our right to have our products admitted free into Havana. The Minister of Finance, a short time after that conversation took place, said he was in a position to communicate to the House the information that our products would be admitted free into Havana up to next January, January 1st, I think, on equal terms with those of United States. That statement was received by both sides of the House with very great pleasure, and it was received with still greater pleasure by those exporters in the Maritime Provinces who for a year or two past have engaged very largely in exporting the products of the Maritime Provinces to that port. To-day I received from one of those gentlemen a Havana prices current issued by M. Gondalez & Co., dated Havana, September 5, which has created some little consternation among the exporters of the Maritime Provinces. In that circular, referring to the item of potatoes, it is stated: "Potatoes from the United States, free; from other countries 1·050 per kilogramme." I think it right to bring this matter to the attention of the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. What date?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Fifth of September—nine days old. Some of the steamers are in the act of leaving, or are getting ready to leave for Havana, and it is highly important that shippers should be informed at the earliest possible date what the real facts are. I am also aware from information conveyed to me that New York shippers are under the impression that, in the Havana market, United States produce will have an advantage over Canadian produce in that respect, and they are also declaring in circulars and otherwise that they will have control of that trade this year, which of course will be detrimental to the interests of our merchants. I hope, therefore, if any step is still required to be taken by the hon. Minister to settle the matter absolutely, he will take such step at an early date, and will take this House into his confidence, and let us know how we stand. I hope he will be able to repeat his assurance that our produce will be received in Havana at exactly the same terms as that of the United States.

Mr. CASEY. I have had several cases in my own county bearing on this subject. I have received a letter from a gentleman who wishes to export beans to Cuba, the markets of the United States being closed against him by the duty of 40 cents per bushel which is now imposed. He informs me that he has been in communication with a party in New York, who reported there was a good market for beans in Cuba, and that if he could get them entered on the same terms as beans from the United States a large trade could be opened up, which would afford a market for farmers in Western Ontario where beans are very largely grown. In the western portion of Elgin, and in Essex and Kent, they are one of the leading crops. That gentleman asked me to find out what the Government knew about the matter, and whether our produce would be admitted into that Island on the same terms as produce from the United States. I understand the ministerial explanation to be that, under the most-favoured-nation clause of the British treaty with Spain, we had the right to enter our goods under that treaty as the most favoured nation. I understood the Minister of Finance at the time to say that treaty ran on to June—perhaps it was a mistake for January. Has the hon. gentleman any further information to communicate to the House?

Mr. FOSTER. The information I conveyed to the House some three weeks ago, in answer to a question put to me by the hon. member for King's, N. S., was substantially as stated by the hon. member for Elgin, which was to the effect that my information from the British Government was that, until 1st July, 1892, or the last of June, on account of the convention existing between that country and Spain, our goods, because we were included as a colony in that convention, would be received in Cuba and Porto Rico on the most-favoured-nation terms. I have had no information to the contrary. I can quite understand how this idea to which the hon. member referred arose. I know that about that time the same statements were being made, not only in the public press, but in private letters, that after 1st September there would be a difference in the duties on United States products and the products of all other countries. It may be simply the survival of that idea, which may very easily obtain among people not acquainted with the terms of the convention and whose attention had not been called to it. I have no reason to give any other information to the House, but having had my attention called to the subject, I will make special enquiries regarding it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Minister of Finance spoke about obtaining commercial reports from Trinidad, and having them circulated among the merchants of the country. I would suggest that if we were to obtain from the English Foreign Office copies of the consular reports from all those countries with which it was thought possible that Canada could establish trade, and have them circulated as our blue-books are circulated, we would be conferring an immense advantage. If these were sent to the manufacturers and merchants of the country they would prove of very great service. There are no reports I know of which are so complete as those from the British consular agents. They are published by the Consular Department of the Foreign Office and distributed as are other public documents. If the Government were to distribute three copies to each member they would be widely circulated, and not only convey accurate and full information with respect to trade and the character of trade with Trinidad, but with every other country in the world, if we chose to obtain complete sets of the reports. I received them for some years when connected with the press, and they were worth to me all other documents of every other kind put together. I am sure very great advantage would accrue to our manufacturers and merchants if these reports were circulated as are the official documents of the House. We have grown into a sufficiently important Dominion to take interest in foreign trade, and these reports published by the Consular Department of the Foreign Office will be found invaluable to our mercantile and manufacturing classes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I was pleased to hear from the Minister of Finance that he intends to take the step he indicated. That would be good, but I think the point he ought to bear in mind when he is making these arrangements with these agents is to have it understood that anyone interested in that will be at liberty to call upon them, and that, as part of their duty, they shall give them all information and every facility, in addition to the statistics.

Mr. FOSTER. That will be done.

Mr. CASEY. Might I ask the permission of the House to make a suggestion?

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must remember that we are not in Committee of Supply.

Mr. CASEY. I merely ask the permission of the House to make a short statement.

Mr. SPEAKER. The rules must be maintained. I cannot allow the rules to be violated.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. CASEY. I am asking the permission of the House and no person objects.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. MULOCK. Mr. Speaker, the courtesy of allowing members to speak twice has been extended to several members of the House on this very subject.

Mr. SPEAKER. It has been accorded to the Minister of Finance because questions have been asked him by different members, and I suggested some little time ago that whatever hon. members had to say in regard to each of these items had better be said before the Minister was required to answer. I can hardly prevent the Minister from answering questions which have been asked by hon. gentlemen.

Mr. MULOCK. Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; chair.

Mr. MULOCK. I am quite in order, because I have not spoken before on this question. I was about to say, Mr. Speaker, that inasmuch as not only the Minister of Finance but other members have been allowed to speak twice, it is not equal rights all around to interfere with my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Casey).

Mr. CASEY. Speaking to the question of order I was merely asking permission of the House to ask a practical question concerning the interests of my county in this matter. The importance of obtaining some authoritative information about the difficulty in Cuba is such as to justify people in wishing to obtain it, before they ship their goods to Cuba. If we do not obtain these privileges, the market for beans is closed entirely against us, and this is a very important matter to my constituents.

Mr. LAURIER. This is a question which must be settled, and it all comes down to the point as to whether the reciprocity between the United States and Spain is in force, or not in force. I was surprised the other day when I heard the statement of the hon. gentleman, because my impression was that the treaty between Spain and the United States is in force.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly on the 1st September.

Mr. LAURIER. Then we are not any longer in the same position in which we were. We have still the most-favoured-nation clause in our favour, but at the same time the treaty between Spain and the United States is in force. The reciprocity clauses of that treaty are not now in operation, and, therefore, the class of articles which are now admitted from Canada under the most-favoured-nation clause, pay duty, while the same class of goods from the United States pay no duty, because the reciprocity clauses in their favour would apply. If the treaty is in force we are at this moment in the same position in which we will be after the 1st July, 1892; but if the treaty is not in force, and perhaps it is not, because if I remember aright the correspondence between the two Governments, it was stipulated that the provisions in the treaties between Spain and other nations had to be provided for, Therefore it may be that the treaty is not in force, but if it is in force the American shippers have an advantage which we have not.

Mr. FOSTER. There was a preliminary arrangement up to the 1st July.

Mr. CHARLTON. The question is whether or not the most-favoured-nation clause affects the reciprocity treaty between Spain and the United States.

Mr. SPEAKER. I hope my hon. friends are not going into a general discussion on the question of the reciprocity treaty.

Mr. CHARLTON. I merely want to know from the Minister of Finance if he asserts that under the most-favoured-nation clause of the treaty between Great Britain and Spain, Canada and Great Britain will have the same right, with regard to the markets of the Spanish West India Islands, that the United States has under a special treaty. Are we admitted to the same privileges of reciprocity, and do we grant them the same privileges that the United States grant? If not, it is useless to tell us that under the most-favoured-nation clause we are enjoying the same privileges that the American shippers do, and it is not fair to the shippers of beans, to whom my hon. friend refers, to convey the impression that under the most-favoured-nation clause they stand on the same footing as the people of the United States. This is a matter of money, and let it be well understood. We should not convey a false impresion to the country.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It was officially stated we had the privilege.

Mr. FOSTER. Will you allow me to state that I will bring down and lay on the Table the correspondence with reference to the Havana and Cuba duties. I may read this statement from the last Halifax paper:

"Messrs. Pickford & Black received a cablegram last night announcing that the cargo of potatoes sent from Halifax on the steamer Beta had been entered free of duty at Havana."

Mr. CHARLTON. At what time was the entry made?

Mr. FOSTER. About the 10th or 11th of September.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Homestead Inspectors' Salaries..... $8,400

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I wish to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior a case of hardship, as I regard it, to a settler in the North-West. A Mr. Thomas Campbell removed from the County of Huron in the spring of 1890 and went to the North-West and homesteaded, in the office of Brandon, the north-east quarter section 12, township 6, range 19, near where his brothers were already settled. He and his son went upon the section and made some improvements, and while so engaged he received a notification from the agent at Brandon stating that a mistake had been made in giving him that quarter section, as it had been promised in sale to a Mr. Hislop in 1887, and that Mr. Hislop had made one payment upon it, and advising Mr. Campbell not to go on with further improvements until he again heard from him. Mr. Campbell thereupon gave up work, after working for a week on the land. Ten or twelve days afterwards a letter came from the agent stating that he had referred the matter to the commissioner at Winnipeg, the result of which was that Mr. Campbell's right to the homestead had to be cancelled, owing to the promise made to Mr. Hislop in 1887. Mr. Campbell feels it a hardship that after taking up this land as a bonâ fide settler, and making improvements upon it, he was compelled to leave it because of a promise that had been made to a man three years previous, although only one payment had been made and none in the previous two years, and no interest had been paid. Mr. Campbell had taken steps to build a house, although he had not proceeded very far when he was obliged to leave the quarter section, and he squatted on school lands near by. He states that there is no other available quarter section in that locality, and he is unwilling to leave his brothers and go farther west. He was asked by the agent at Brandon to send in a statement of the amount of labour he had expended. He sent in a statement, asking $40 for the improvements he had made, claiming that he had ploughed ten acres. It appears the inspector was sent out for the purpose of ascertaining how much improvements were made, and he reported that Campbell was only entitled to $10 for his improvements. After I came here, I saw the Deputy Minister, Mr. Burgess, who is always willing to give every information he possibly can. I got him to write to the inspector to visit again Mr. Campbell's improvements, and have the ground measured, and he did so. He reported that only five acres were ploughed, that ploughing there only cost $2 an acre, and that he was willing to recommend that $10 be paid to Mr. Campbell. But Mr. Campbell claims rightly that he is entitled to more than $10 on account of the mistake for which he was in no way responsible. He lost time from the 10th of July, when he got the first notice that there was a mistake, to the 21st of July when he was told his homestead would have to be cancelled. Having gone there early in the spring, expecting to be able to bring his family shortly after, he found himself unable to do so on account of this mistake; his whole summer's work was thereby lost because he had done all his work on this claim, he has no home now, for his family are still living in my riding, and he is away out there in an unsettled frame of mind. Being a fiery tempered man, he says he is going to leave the country, he says he is going to Dakota, but, of course, allowance must be made for what a man will say when angry at unjust treatment, and I do not believe he will leave the country. All I ask of the Minister is that he will examine into this case thoroughly and indemnify Mr. Campbell for all the trouble and expense and damage he has been caused. He claims about $40 for his improvements and the time lost. It took him and his son a whole week to get to that place and come away again after receiving notice that there was a mistake. His hardships were increased by the fact that he and his son were a whole night and part of the day out in the drenching rain without any protection, having no place to go to. If the hon. Minister will take into consideration all the circumstances, he will see that Mr. Campbell's case ought to be liberally dealt with. I leave the matter in his hands, hoping he will do what one man should do to another under these circumstances. I speak for Mr. Campbell, not for any personal interest I have in the matter or any political bias whatever, because he is a strong Conservative, has always supported the Conservative party in Ontario, and no doubt will do so out where he is.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think I recollect the circumstances of the case referred to. There was a great deal of correspondence regarding it. I did not understand the hon. gentleman to say whether he had made any improvements on that quarter section or not.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Mr. Campbell says that Mr. Hislop took a considerable quantity of the timber off, but he made no improvements.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The hon. gentleman must understand that we have to be guided by the reports of our agents, unless we have some very special information. I will give this case special attention and make further enquiry, and if I find Mr. Campbell is entitled to a larger amount than offered him, I shall see that justice is done him. The hon. gentleman says that Mr. Campbell is a good Conservative and has always worked for the Conservative party. I do not know anything about that, but my impression is that Mr. Hislop is on the other side of politics.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I believe so.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I am sure there has been a great deal of correspondence from people in the neighbourhood, who generally take sides in a matter of this kind, and we came to the conclusion that Mr. Hislop was entitled to the quarter section. At the same time Mr. Campbell has something in his favour when, by inadvertence, the entry was given him; and, under the circumstances, he deserves some consideration.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I also understand that ploughing is worth more than $2 an acre.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Breaking was worth from $3 to $4.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). It was breaking up; the first ploughing was in July.

To meet expenses for cattle quarantines and possible expenses for cattle diseases and sheep scab $15,000

Mr. O'BRIEN. I wish to take this opportunity of calling the attention of the Government to a matter which is closely connected with this vote. In a recent publication, the Farmer's Advocate, a very respectable and influential paper, published at the beginning of this month, I find an extract quoted from an American paper. The article in which it appears is one written just before the Government announced their intention not to permit the admission of American cattle for slaughter at the proposed establishment at Three Rivers. That, of course, is done away with, but this article, in order to point out the dangers likely to arise, quotes an article from an American newspaper, as follows:—

"BURLINGTON, IOWA.—The mysterious hoof and mouth disease so prevalent among cattle in north-western Iowa is in full force in Des Moines County, nearly 200 cases having been reported. The disease is found in all parts of the country, and is quite prevalent over in adjacent counties. The dairies around Middletown, Danville, Augusta and other places have been attacked, and the healthful supply of milk is greatly diminished. The state veterinarian has been notified of the situation, and has signified his intention of investigating the trouble. There is a great deal of uneasiness regarding the use of infected milk."

Then it quotes a number of extracts from American authorities on pleuro-pneumonia, pointing out the great danger which may arise, not from actual contact, but from the germs being carried in various ways. One illustration given is that of a herd of cattle which had been to a show at Detroit and was returning, but were placed on a switch side by side with a car-load of cattle that were affected with pleuro-pneumonia. The result was that the whole herd had to be destroyed. They were on adjacent sidings. I see also by this paper that an outbreak of pleuro-pneumonia has occurred in England, and the herd of Sir Wilfred Lawson has been destroyed. Taking these facts together, it is likely that greater uneasiness will be caused in England as to the danger of pleuro-pneumonia, and I ask the Government whether it is wise for them to allow, under any circumstances, the passage of possibly infected cattle through our country to markets in the eastern states. Mr. Gibson, of Delaware, a very well informed man, writes, advocating a period of quarantine on cattle coming into this country under any circumstances. Of course, the adoption of such a plan would effectually stop the transit in bond through Canada from Detroit or anywhere on that frontier to the eastern states. It seems to me, if the dangers of infection are as great as they are said to be by those American authorities, it would be advisable to prevent the transit of American cattle through our country. Of course, as long as there was no increase of disease in the United States, it might not be worth taking these representations into account, but, as we have the evidence of this fresh outbreak, and we know that all these cattle have their market in Chicago, and that, if the outbreak is in Iowa and in Illinois, their cattle have to find their market in Chicago, they may possibly bring the infection into Canada, and the result of one case of that pleuro-pneumonia in Canada would at once be sufficient to stop our trade in live cattle with the mother country. The danger is so great, the risk is so enormous, the consequence is so serious, that I think the Government should carefully enquire into this matter and ascertain whether their present restrictions are sufficient to protect us from the danger which threaten us. I have no doubt that reasonable restrictions are demanded and have been taken with regard to the transportation of these cattle, but from the evidence which is laid before us, as to the ease and rapidity with which this infection may be carried through the germs which may be floating in the air, and may find resting places from which they may be conveyed to cattle in various ways, the danger certainly seems to be exceedingly great. I see it is stated here that the droppings of cattle, the manure which may be shovelled out of the cars, may be a source of danger. That, of course, cannot be prevented. Something of that kind must take place to a greater or less extent in the transport of cattle, and if by that means infection can oe communicated, it is certainly another serious source of danger. I have nothing further to say except to call the attention of the Government to the fact that this sudden outbreak of pleuro-pneumonia in the States of Iowa and Illinois should put us on our guard in respect to the transport of cattle coming from that infected country, while the additional fact of a fresh outbreak in England will make the farmers there much more anxious than they have been hitherto to avoid any possible danger. But, of course, all that brings us to the very serious consideration that the slightest outbreak from this source will at once put an end to what is now our most valuable and profitable trade.

Mr. HAGGART. I will draw the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the remarks of the member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien). It is a very serious question to consider whether we should put a stop to the transport of cattle in bond through this country from the United States. They pass through on regulations and conditions which are approved by the Imperial Government, and every means possible will be taken for the prevention of the spread of any disease. As I understand the subject, it was stated the other evening that pleuro-pneumonia is only communicated by contact with diseased animals. I think every precaution is taken in their transport through the country. However, I will draw the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the statement of the hon. gentleman, and if he will give me the pamphlet I will hand it to the Minister.

Mr. MULOCK. The other evening, when the subject of quarantine was under discussion, the Postmaster General then announced it as the opinion of the veterinary department that pleuro-pneumonia was only communicable by contact. The authorities quoted by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) this evening would indicate that that theory was not correct. Should these authorities be correct, I trust there will be better safeguards adopted at quarantine. The Postmaster General should remember that it was announced the other evening in the House that animals coming in by different vessels were housed only 20 feet apart from each other, so that a diseased herd might be within 20 feet of a sound herd. If cars passing each other can communicate the disease, surely there is danger of its being communicated when animals are standing by each other for 90 days only 20 feet distant from each other, even if there may be some frame shed or structure separating them. That, I understand, is the condition of affairs at quarantine where there appears to be no valid reason for the continuance of such a state of affairs. There is no limit to the quantity of land at the disposal of the department; there is land enough in Canada surely for quarantine buildings at a safe distance from each other so as to avoid any possible risk being incurred. The member for Muskoka raises a most important question, and inasmuch as the Postmaster General intends to communicate with the Minister of Agriculture upon the subject, I would venture to suggest that he should also see what precautions are taken by the Railway Department to see that the cars in which cattle from the states are shipped are thoroughly disinfected before Canadian cattle are shipped in those same cars.

Mr. BOWELL. The railway authorities, not the Railway Department.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Customs says the railway authorities have to look to that. Now, whilst it is their duty to carry out the regulations, it would be the duty of the Government to prescribe proper regulations.

Mr. BOWELL. It is not the duty of the Government to attend to any matters affecting either quarantine or Customs. The regulations are very strict and very severe, and it is the duty of the Customs Department, not of the Railway Department, to see that they are carried out to their fullest possible extent, with the aid of the Department of Agriculture. I can assure the hon. gentleman that nothing has been left undone in matters affecting either quarantine or the enforcement of these regulations. I did not understand the member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) to quote any authorities or any instance to show that anything else than contact would communicate the disease from one herd of cattle to others. It is true he quoted some authorities who had given the opinion that it was communicated by the droppings; but it is quite easy to understand that the germ of the disease might be communicated from a carload of cattle affected with pleuro-pneumonia standing alongside of another, because the wind would carry the breath from the cattle of one car to those of another, and by that means the disease might be communicated.

Mr. MULOCK. That is not what we were told the other night.

Mr. BOWELL. That is what the member for Muskoka told us to-night, and that is the reason for a stricter adherence to the rules which at present are in force. I can only add to what the Postmaster General has already said, that the Minister of Agriculture is always on the lookout, together with his officials, in order to prevent the possibility of the contagion spreading in this country, and I am quite satisfied that if the disease is spreading in the United States to the extent indicated by the hon. member for Muskoka, the most rigid steps will be taken, even to the point, if necessary, of preventing the transportation of cattle through Canada from the United States, in order to preserve our Canadian cattle from the disease.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Toronto Harbour Works..... $75,000

Mr. MULOCK. Before this item is adopted I desire to call the attention of the Minister in charge to the fact that a leading paper in Toronto, the Mail, recently published an article referring to the work in question, making some very grave charges against the department in connection with that contract. I had expected before now there would have been some communication and announcement in regard to it. The papers were ordered to be produced before the Public Accounts Committee some time ago. I have not yet learned of their having been produced, and before this item is passed there are some points on which I should like to trouble the Minister who has the matter in charge. First, I should like to enquire why this contract was let to Murray & Cleveland, and why the tender of Macdonald & Aylmer, which I understand was much lower, $40,000, was passed over.

Mr. FOSTER. As the hon. gentleman says, or implies in what he has stated, this work was advertised for public tender on 15th April, 1889. In reply, tenders were received up to and including 3rd May following. There were twelve tenderers, the first being Murray & Cleveland, of St. Catharines; the second being Macdonald & J. A. Aylmer, of Toronto. Calculating the estimated quantities by the schedules of prices given in each tender, the tenders turned out, not as the hon. gentleman intimates, but quite the reverse, the tender of Murray & Cleveland being $192,810, while that of Macdonald & Aylmer was $193,125. All the other tenders were higher, grading up as high as $315,912. So tenders were called for by advertisement, twelve were received, the lowest tender was accepted and the contract was given to the lowest tender.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman has a statement of the calculations worked out?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. Will it be put on the Table?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. I am told the specifications for the work called for two dredges being regularly employed on it, of the joint capacity of 1,500 cubic yards per day, with a penalty of $50 a day for failure of performance on the part of either of them.

Mr. FOSTER. I am informed that it is a fact that under the specifications two dredges were called for, and in fact two dredges have been at work, and have worked always except when disabled, either by breaking down or some accident of that kind, or prevented from working by bad weather.

Mr. MULOCK. Then the hon. gentleman's contention is that that condition of the contract has been substantially fulfilled. Is that what he desires the Committee to understand?

Mr. COATSWORTH. I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that in the newspaper article to which he referred, one of the charges was that too much dredging was done.

Mr. MULOCK. When I have finished putting my questions, the hon. gentleman can put any questions he likes.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I was not putting any question.

Mr. MULOCK. The quantity of work is not complained of. The complaint is that it was not prosecuted with proper dispatch.

Mr. FOSTER. The two dredges furnished by Murray & Cleveland have performed the work very well, with the exception of the times when one or the other was disabled, which will happen, I suppose, under the best of circumstances. The two dredges did all that was necessary, and did it satisfactorily, and the periods during which one or other of the dredges has been incapacitated from work have not been long periods. It is to be remembered also that the dredging that is to be done during this time, until the crib-work it built, is simply for keeping open the channel for navigation, and I believe that has been fairly satisfactorily done.

Mr. MULOCK. Then the Minister gives us to understand that the dredging has been proceeded with as rapidly as the contract requires?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. Therefore, there has been no default in this part of the work, and the other question which I intended to ask, whether there had been any fine imposed which the contract provides for, I need not ask in view of that reply. Then I would desire to know whether the engineer in charge of the works has made any complaints to the Public Works Department that the contractors have not been living up to the specifications or any of them?

Mr. FOSTER. The engineer in charge has made no complaints so far as the engineer here can remember at the present time.

Mr. MULOCK. I would call the attention of the Minister to the statement which I have to the effect that the contract requires the work to be built within thirty months, and that the contract provides that time is to be the essence of it. Has the contract been proceeded with as rapidly as this condition of the contract requires?

Mr. FOSTER. No: the time of the contract will not be complied with. The engineer informs me that there were certain good reasons for this.

Mr. MULOCK. Do you mean the engineer on the ground?

Mr. FOSTER. No: the engineer from the department who is here at the present time. He says that in the first place this contract was let in the wrong season of the year so to speak, that is it fell in the fall of the year, when there is great difficulty and delay in getting the material. The works being very important, the time given for the completion of these works was considered too short and the change made involves much more work.

Mr. MULOCK. Has there been an extension of time given?

Mr. FOSTER. I find that the time for the completion of the work was stated to be the 21st June, 1891. Of course, that time has not yet expired and no application for an extension of time has yet been made to the department. It is also to be remembered that the work was to be enlarged, and that also will be a reason why probably an extension of time will be required. In fact I may say that the engineer informs me that the work will probably not be completed until the end of 1892, or the beginning of 1893.

Mr. MULOCK. Can the hon. gentleman say what amount of money has now been expended on the contract, and what will be the amount of the original contract and the additions thereto?

Mr. FOSTER. I answered my hon. friend that the amount of the original contract was $192,000, and the addition caused an extra expenditure of $30,000, making $222,000 in round numbers. Up to the 11th September, 1891, $109,000 had been expended, leaving $113,800 to be still expended. This, however, cannot be taken as representing the actual value of the work done. The work is for the purpose of creating a permanent channel at the eastern entrance and for navigation purposes. While the work is under construction, and until it is completed, a certain quantity of dredging has to be done each year to obtain a free passage for vessels. The necessity of this dredging was urged upon the department by the City of Toronto in the interest of the harbour and of general navigation.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the hon. gentleman say what work is mentioned in the additional contract?

Mr. FOSTER. It is on account of the change made upon the express report of Mr. Page in the.

absence of Mr. Perley, and upon his recommendations, that the crib-work was first to be laid upon the natural bed of the lake and between the crib-work with a channel of twelve feet; but after his investigation and on his recommendation that was increased to sixteen feet, and the extra crib-work and dredging was to be laid sixteen feet below water, instead of twelve feet, and the channel between the two lines of crib-work deepened to sixteen feet, the extra work as estimated on the schedule prices for the first contract amounted to $30,000.

Mr. MULOCK. Would the hon. gentleman lay that contract or a copy of it upon the Table?

Mr. FOSTER. The contract for the additional work was simply an Order in Council which authorized the change to be made on the schedule prices as in the first contract. I will lay the Order in Council on the Table.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand that the contract requires the crib-work of the piers to be filled with stone ballast, and I would enquire whether there has been any change in that from the terms of the contract?

Mr. FOSTER. No change.

Mr. MULOCK. Then I would like to enquire whether there has been any departure by the contractors from that term of the contract? Have they put in the cribs any other material than "hard approved stone," such as is mentioned in the contract?

Mr. COATSWORTH. I do not think the hon. gentleman stated the terms of the contract right. The terms of the contract, as I understand from the report of the engineer, read:

"It is charged that the cribs have been put down in such a way as to create as much remunerative dredging as possible to the contractors, and that the engineer and superintendent have failed to prevent them from partially filling the cribs with sand dredged from the channel instead of stone, and that they receive the price of stone for it. I would here state for your information that 30 feet main cribs contain when full, 1,500 cubic yards of stone. My instructions from your department are to permit of 180 cubic yards of sand being placed in each crib and to allow the contractors for this amount at the rate for stone-filling per cubic yard, but no sand is ever placed in any crib until there is a sufficient quantity of stone first anchoring it. I would here remark that it is really a temporary allowance to the contractors, as the cribs are not water-tight, and the effect of the waves soon necessitates the replacing of the sand by stone at the contractors' own expense. In practice and effect stone is ultimately used, and the sand in the meantime is beneficially employed in rendering stability to the work."

Mr. MULOCK. I would ask the Minister whether permission has been given to substitute the filling for the cribs with other than the material specified in the contract?

Mr. FOSTER. No departure has taken place with reference to that from the original terms of the contract. The sand that is allowed to be put in is not put in for the purpose of filling the cribs. It is put in, I understand, at the bottom, to prevent the silting or washing out and tipping over of the cribs. Perhaps I had better read what the engineer says in regard to that:

"The contractors have been allowed to put some sand in the cribs in order that this sand may fill the space between the natural bottom of the seat dredged out and the ballast flooring. They are not paid the price of ballast for it, but are paid only 12 cents per cubic yard, as per schedule of their contract. Experience has shown that unless this precaution be taken, a scouring would inevitably occur, and the cribs be tilted over."

Mr. MULOCK. Does the contract require piles to be driven along the face of the piers? My instructions are that it does require them to be driven in at intervals of 10 feet and elsewhere where they are required by the engineer. Has the engineer required piles to be driven at other intervals than 10 feet? If so, have they been so driven, and have they been driven at all events at distances not greater than 10 feet?

Mr. FOSTER. The prices paid are schedule prices. It was optional, of course, whether the department should demand that piles should be driven or that the sheathing and protection should be done in another form. If the piles are not driven they are not paid for, and the engineer informs me that the work is better done in the manner in which they have done it than if piles had been driven.

Mr. MULOCK. I am told that the salaries and expenses of the Government officials employed, chiefly at the other works at the eastern gap, for the protection of the south-eastern coast of the island, including an engineer, an assistant engineer, a superintendent, and an inspector or foreman, for the year ending 30th June, 1889, amounted to $9,763, while for the labour on the work $8,648 was paid. I can hardly expect the hon. gentleman to say now whether or not this statement is correct, as it would require a little examination of accounts.

Mr. FOSTER. I may give my hon. friend some explanation. Mr. Temple, Mr. Swait and Mr. Evans, with the foreman, are supposed to oversee and supervise the operations of a staff of 19 men, including engineer and watchman. These gentlemen are in charge of two kinds of work. They are in charge not only of Murray & Cleveland's work, but also of the works done by days' labour for the protection of the island, which, as my hon. friend knows, is a different work. These works are done with great care, and it is said they are a credit to the staff. So that you are not to regard these men as supervisors to Murray & Cleveland's contract only, as they have to look after both. As to their dividing up among themselves, according to the statement, $6,000 or $7,000 per annum for doing it, Mr. Temple gets a salary of $170 a month, which I do not judge to be an extraordinary salary for an engineer of his standing; Mr. Swait is superintendent of the protecting works on the island, and receives $5 a day, which I do not think is excessive: Mr. Evans, assistant engineer, gets $100 a month and 75 cents allowance while on the works on the island, and not otherwise; and Mr. Hurdon receives $3 a day and 75 cents allowance when on the island. These are the constant staff, and these are the salaries paid.

Mr. MULOCK. Do these salaries continue all the year round?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; all the year round, because these men are at work all the year round.

Mr. MULOCK. In winter as well as in summer?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; there is office work as well as outside work.

Mr. MULOCK. Can the Minister say how many cubic yards of dredging is estimated for in connection with Murray & Cleveland's contract?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend knows the situation of these works and the peculiar difficulty which is to be met with in connection with them, that is, the constant drifting in of the sand. Every storm which comes from a certain quarter drives in the sand, and that has to be dredged out again So that it is almost impossible to make anything like an accurate estimate of the number of cubic yards of dredging that will have to be done before the contract is ended. But a rough estimate is given at about 600,000 cubic yards. My hon. friend will see how difficult it is to estimate the dredging under these circumstances.

Mr. MULOCK. Can the hon. Minister say how many yards have been dredged up to the date of the last report?

Mr. FOSTER. About 300,000 cubic yards up to the 1st of August last.

Mr. MULOCK. Can the hon. gentleman state where the dredgings are taken to?

Mr. FOSTER. About a mile outside in the lake.

Mr. MULOCK. To the east or to the south?

Mr. FOSTER. South-west.

Mr. MULOCK. Has there been any change in the price for dredging since the contract was let?

Mr. FOSTER. The same price continues.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the system of measuring the dredging?

Mr. FOSTER. The dredged material is put into scows, and the capacity of these scows is measured and known, and the aggregate quantity is made out from the number of scow loads.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand that the specifications call for a depth in the eastern channel of fifteen feet. If this is correct, how often since the contract has the channel been dredged out, and what is the depth now?

Mr. FOSTER. The original specifications call for a depth of twelve feet. After the change was made the depth became sixteen feet. Of course, as I explained before, it is continually drifting in, and they keep a temporary channel in the meantime, the depth of which is somewhere about twelve feet.

Mr. MULOCK. And all the dredgings have taken place in the channel?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; with the single exception, of course, of the seats for the cribs?

Mr. MULOCK. Are the contractors allowed to place any of the dredging in the cribs.

Mr. FOSTER. Sand is allowed to be put into the bottom of the crib.

Mr. MULOCK. Are the contractors allowed the same price for the sand dredged out of the channel and dumped into the cribs as if they had to carry it out to the lake?

Mr. FOSTER. Twelve cents a yard.

Mr. MULOCK. As much for the sand they dump into the cribs as if they hauled it out a mile or so in the dredge?

Mr. FOSTER. The same price for the amount they put in the cribs.

Mr. COATSWORTH. They have to shovel it out of the scows into the cribs, whereas in the lake they just open the bottom of the scow and dump it in, so that it is more expensive to put it into the crib.

Mr. DENISON. I was surprised to see in the Mail of the 22nd of August an article headed: "Bungle and Boodle; the slime of the serpent is over them all; another Public Works scandal," and so on. The whole tenor of the article is to besmirch the reputations of the engineer and the assistant engineer, and knowing what a respectable paper the Mail is, I am surprised at their taking the course they have. I feel satisfied, however, they must have been imposed upon by some person who came to them with a story about the great frauds perpetrated, so that they naturally sent a reporter to examine into it, the reporter went to work with the idea of writing the matter up, and the result is the elaborate article I have now before me. If there is anything wrong in the manner in which that work has been done, if Messrs. Cleveland & Murray have been conducting the work improperly, it is quite right for the paper to call for an investigation, and it is quite right that the time of this House should be taken up in looking into it; but, on the other hand, we should be careful how we throw abroad charges of this nature, by which the reputations of honest, upright and competent engineers may be affected and sacrificed. Now, all the charges are boiled down to about sixteen, which are at the end of the article, and I shall take up only some of the main ones. The others consisting of numbers one, two, six, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, are arguments rather than charges, and I think require very little to be said about them. Charge number three reads as follows:—

"That the engineer in charge of the works has proved himself incompetent for his duties, and as a result work has been done in the most expensive manner and often twice over. That he devotes but little time to the works in progress."

As I wrote to the Minister of Public Works recommending Mr. Temple, I am to a certain extent responsible for his being there, and I think it is only right that I should lay his side of the question before the House. When this charge appeared I wrote asking him what explanation he had to give, and in reply I received this letter, a portion of which I would like to read:

"TORONTO, 29th August, 1891.

"I am in receipt of your letter of 28 inst. Since sending you the report on the charges that appeared in the Mail against the harbour works, I wrote the Hon. Frank Smith, going probably more fully into the matter."

Then he goes on to state his services. He says:

"My experience extends over twenty years, in the course of which I have been during nine years assistant engineer of the North Shore Railway; and subsequently division engineer of the Newfoundland Government railway and the Toronto, Grey and Bruce, as well as assistant engineer on the Ontario division of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and am a member of the Canadian Society of Civil Engineers, besides holding a diploma as a land surveyor for the Province of Quebec."

I may state in addition that Mr. Temple is a man from fifty to fifty-five years of age and in no respect an incompetent man. With regard to Mr. Kelly Evans, I might say that he is a son of one of our most respected citizens and a graduate of the Royal Military College, and, as hon. gentlemen know, no graduate of that college could fairly be called an incompetent man, only those competent being allowed to pass, the incompetent ones being rejected and never allowed to graduate. In charges four and five the Mail says:

"Than the eastern channel, which was to be fifteen feet deep, has been dredged three times, and now contains little more than eight feet of water.

"That the cribs that had been put down have been done in such a way as to put as much remunerative dredging as possible in the hands of the contractors and that the work has been ill done after all."

As to that I have a letter from Mr. Temple in which he says:

"My instructions from the commencement of the work were to keep a channel open for navigation. Since that time there has been an uninterrupted passage through the eastern gap. It has of course been necessary to do some dredging there occasionally after a heavy blow from the eastward, as the sand drifts in more or less, and I consider that such dredging will still have to be done from time to time in the future, as in the past, until the eastern pier or crib-work is completed. I do not permit the contractors to do more dredging than is absolutely necessary for navigation purposes."

Then there is charge seven:

"That the stone placed in recent years on the breakwater slope has cost $8.50 and $10 per cubic yard, when at the outside it should not have cost more than $3, and thus, entirely in consequence of the incompetence of the engineering and superintending staff, a loss of many thousands has occurred."

I must remind the House that there are two distinct works. There is the work outside at the entrance to the harbour, and the work which has recently been started. The work outside of the harbour is intended to protect the shores of the island, and that was commenced some years ago and is superintended by Mr. Swait. The other part of the work, the eastern entrance, is looked after by Mr. Evans, Mr. Temple overseeing the whole.

Mr. CHARLTON. What business has Mr. Swait?

Mr. DENISON. He has to look after the crib-work?

Mr. CHARLTON. What is his trade?

Mr. DENISON. I cannot tell you. As to that charge, I would like to read from a letter of Mr. Temple, of the 27th August, in which he says:

"Regarding the officials employed, I can only say that each has his work mapped out for him to do, and the services of each are utilized to the fullest degree. They state that the stone for the protection of the breakwater costs from $8 to $10 per cubic yard and that stone has only been dumped here and there. During the progress of these works 8,834 cubic yards of large stone have been carefully and systematically placed on lake side of the breakwater, and upwards of 6,000 cubic yards of small stone recovered from the lake on the bay side of the works, making a total length of 5,350 lineal feet on the lake side and 4,500 on the bay side fully protected, at a cost of $53,391.10, including expenses of supervision, or $3.50 per cubic yard, instead of $8 and $10, as stated in the Mail. Regarding the charge that sand is used to fill the crib instead of stone: My instruction from the department is to permit of 180 cubic yards of sand in each crib, but no sand is ever placed in any crib until there is a sufficient quantity of stone first anchoring it, and in accordance with my instructions I am to allow the contractors for this amount of sand at the rate of stone-filling per cubic yard. I would here remark that it is really only a temporary allowance, as the cribs are not water-tight, and the effect of the waves soon necessitates the replacing of the sand by stone at the contractors' expense. Should subsequently any sand wash out of the cribs and the stone settle down, I compel him to fill it up with stone at his own expense."

I have already given his answer to charge No. 8. I would like to explain to the House how that is done, and I cannot do so better than by reading this cutting.

Mr. MULOCK. If I understood the engineer's statement correctly, it is that the sand is allowed in the first place to be put on the cribs to a certain extent, and then the stone is put on the top.

Mr. DENISON. No; the stone is put in first, in order to anchor it.

Mr. MULOCK. Then, if the sand filters into the channel, who pays the expense of moving it again?

Mr. DENISON. This is fully explained here, and I think this is the shortest way to get at it:

"The cribs are built in 100 feet lengths of sound square timber, thoroughly bolted together and properly tied with solid cross-pieces. Seventeen inches above the bottom of the crib, resting on cross timbers, are floors of round spruce timber, upon which the stone rests. On being sunk the cribs are filled with stone flush with the top. Upon this crib, already filled with stone, the sand is dumped, the object of putting it there being that the waves may wash it down to fill up the vacant space of 17 inches below the flooring, and also to fill the interstices of the stone, making a solid mass. If this vacant space below the flooring was not filled the action of the waves would soon undermine the foundation of the cribs. Thus, instead of this being an attempt to swindle the public, as the Mail alleges, the sand is really necessary to make a permanent job. If any large quantity of sand were put into the cribs, as the Mail says, any one can see that the waves would soon wash it out, and the stones settling down, the contractors would have to fill up the cribs again flush with the top, so that they cannot get paid for sand more than fills the interstices of the stone."

I think that explains the matter quite satisfactorily. I have also had handed to me a letter from Messrs. Murray & Cleveland, which I will read:

"ST. CATHARINES, ONT., 28th August, 1891.

"DEAR SIR,—You have probably observed an article which appeared in the Mail newspaper of the 22nd inst., in reference to the Toronto harbour docks.

"The article referred to is such an infamous slander, so far as it refers to our contract with the Government, that I have thought you might wish to be informed of the facts, or some of them, when the estimates for the works are under discussion in the House.

"On the date of the article referred to there were eighteen (18) cribs in place, filled with stone, and the work done in the most thoroughly efficient manner. (The Mail stated there were only six (6) cribs in place). At present there are twenty-one cribs in place—twelve in the line of the breakwater and (9) nine on the line at the entrance pier. The water is kept at the full depth in the ship channel, which is authorized by the department, viz.: nine (9) feet on the line of the entrance pier the water is fifteen (15) feet in depth from deep water in Toronto Bay to the south-east end of the entrance pier, and when the entrance pier will have been extended to the outer bar there will be a navigable channel into Toronto harbour of not less than fifteen feet in depth.

"On the date of the article referred to there were 18 cribs in position on the bar, and there were 15 cribs built complete at the slip west of the northern elevator, 33 cribs in all.

"As to the delay in the progress of the work: Bosh! Since the plans for the cribs were placed in our hands, no power on earth could have done more than has been done. In executing the dredging for the crib seats to a depth of 18 feet below the surface of the water we are subjected to serious delay in consequence of the continued shifting sand, which shifts with every change of wind, and when a crib seat is dredged to the proper depth, very often before the crib can be placed the seat has become too deep or too shallow, and consequently has to be re-dredged.

"The weather and continually shifting sand is the whole cause of delay in proceeding with the work; but for those unforeseen difficulties we could easily finish the whole work this season. But the weather, heavy winds and shifting sand are beyond our control, and consequently we can only foresee as fast as the weather will permit us. In conclusion, I wish to say the works have been carried on in the most thorough and efficient manner by ourselves and the engineer in charge. You can state in the House, and I wish you to so state, that there is not a better piece of work of its class in the Dominion, neither is there a piece of work of equal magnitude and subjected to such difficulties of construction which has cost the Dominion Government so small a sum of money.

"The shore line protection works referred to in the Mail is under the control of E. B. Temple. We have nothing whatever to do with them, but I do know that they have been conducted efficiently and honestly.

"I would be obliged by you giving this matter your careful attention when the Toronto Harbour estimates are about to be passed. I have given you facts upon which you can rely most implicitly.

"Yours truly,
"T. MURRAY."

The Mail of 28th August, 1891, in a leading editorial, says :

"That the Toronto members have never done a hand's turn towards the proper carrying out of the contract.

And again :

"It is almost incredible that our Toronto members have been totally unaware of what was going on, the nefarious nature of which were pretty plainly set down in the public reports."

I suppose this refers to the public press, but I confess to have seen nothing that I can call to mind reflecting upon the conduct of the work in Toronto harbour. I may say that I have never received any letter, anonymous or otherwise, calling my attention to any frauds or anything irregular in the conduct of that work, and if there had been any irregularities I think the chances are that I should have received a letter, but neither I or any of my colleagues, so far as I understand, have received any communication of such a nature as I have mentioned. Nor do I consider that it is the duty of a member of Parliament to oversee these works. It surely has not come to this that a member of Parliament has got to sit upon the docks and see that the men in charge do their duty properly. It seems to me surprising that a respectable paper like the Mail should publish such an article as that and put forward such a doctrine. It may be that it is the duty of a member of Parliament to enquire into frauds that are perpetrated upon the public, and if there has been any wrong in this matter I certainly wish that it should be investigated. But in this instance I think the Mail has been imposed upon ; and so far as I can see, without any justification whatever, its proprietors have listened to some story from individuals who have gone to work and vilified the reputation of two competent and honest engineers in a way that they certainly ought to be ashamed of. I may say in conclusion that the City of Toronto cannot suffer by any laches or any wrong-doing that may have taken place in connection with the harbour. If anything of that kind has been perpetrated, the Government will have to bear the responsibility. When the people of Toronto paid $100,000 to the Government it was on the understanding that the works should be kept in repair for all time by the Dominion Government, and, therefore, so far as that sum is concerned, the interest of the City of Toronto is safe in the hands of Government.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to make a change in the wording, so as to add the words "and western," after the word "eastern."

Mr. MULOCK. My hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Denison) seems to take satisfaction out of the situation, because he says that the City of Toronto cannot suffer ; no matter what laches may occur the city is all right, because the Government has got to stand between the city and harbour. That may be very satisfactory for the City of Toronto, but I think the people of Canada are interested in their being no laches at all, if possible. I am not at present able to say whether there has been any laches or not ; I have no information on the subject except the article that appears in the public press. I have no doubt that the matter will be thoroughly investigated, and I shall be extremely surprised if an enterprising journal such as the Mail is entirely mistaken in its alleged facts.

Mr. DENISON. I am afraid they have been taken in this time.

Mr. MULOCK. I am sure it will be satisfactory for the country if it is found for once that the Department of Public Works has done good service for the country. There is one thing in which the City of Toronto is interested, and I am afraid my hon. friends who represent that city have been on this occasion somewhat regardless of their duties. We have it on the statement of the Minister that the work is about a year behind.

Mr. COATSWORTH. No, not at all : the Minister said it would be finished this fall.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman will have his opportunity of defending the maladministration of the department. The City of Toronto is interested in the speedy completion of that work, because the eastern gap is most necessary in order to facilitate navigation. The hon. gentlemen who represent the city will at least admit that it is their duty to see that proper despatch is used in the work.

Mr. DENISON. The time has not expired yet.

Mr. MULOCK. We are told to-night the time expires on the 31st of December.

Mr. COATSWORTH. 1892.

Mr. MULOCK. 1891. However, the Minister of Finance stated that the contractors would not be up to time, that the contract was entered into in May, 1889, and was to be completed in 30 months. The Minister of Finance said that tenders were advertised for in the spring ; they came in in the month of May, if I remember rightly, and that from the time the contract was entered into the work had to be built within 30 months.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Will the hon. gentleman say what difference it makes to the City of Toronto, as long as the channel is kept open for navigation all the time ?

Mr. MULOCK. Then, if the work is not required, why are they engaged in doing it ?

Mr. COATSWORTH. To make the channel a permanent one, and when the work is finished it will not be necessary to dredge it.

Mr. MULOCK. I believe the original depth of 12 feet, the engineer to-night informs the House, is not sufficient. The hon. gentleman will have quite enough jobs to defend if he is in this House very long, without having to defend one that is perpetrated upon the City of Toronto, if one has been perpetrated.

Mr. COATSWORTH. You have not shown any yet.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not know whether there is one or not.

Mr. COATSWORTH. You have insinuated it.

Mr. MULOCK. I am willing to allow myself to be a good deal swayed by an editorial article appearing in a responsible journal like the Toronto Mail. I consider that the article is sufficient to demand enquiry on the floor of this House from the representatives of the people; it is our duty to make enquiry when we see such charges made in a responsible journal, and if there is no foundation for them we shall all rejoice in it; if there is foundation for them, then we must see who is to blame. At all events, if the work is not yet completed it is our duty, whilst there is yet time, to see that if any wrong has been done there should be a cessation of the wrong-doing. That is the line I am taking now, and it is the only line one could take. I say that if we get warning that some public work is not being done as it ought to be done, it is the duty of the people's representatives to take advantage of the warning, and it is in that spirit that I bring the matter before the House. If a channel dredged to the depth of 12 feet is quite sufficient for the purpose of navigation, then why has it been deemed necessary to have it extended to 16 feet?

Mr. COATSWORTH. To take in larger vessels.

Mr. MULOCK. Well, at what stage is it going to be to the interest of the city to let larger vessels in? The contract says that the dredging shall be extended to sixteen feet within a limited period. Now, I presume the sooner the channel is able to receive vessels that will draw sixteen feet of water the sooner we shall have vessels drawing sixteen feet of water coming in to Toronto. We are not going to build vessels and have them wait outside the harbor. When the harbour is able to receive vessels of that draught we shall have vessels of that draught put on the lake, but the deepening of navigation must precede deepening of the draught of the vessels. If, therefore, vessels drawing 16 feet are to the advantage of the carrying trade of Canada, the sooner we make our harbours and navigation capable of admitting vessels of that draught the better for the whole country and for Toronto, too. It is to our interest that the depth should not only be twelve feet, but should be made, at the earliest possible moment, sixteen feet, according to the contract.

Mr. COATSWORTH. It ought to be known to the hon. gentleman, as it is to all of us, that the western channel is quite capable of receiving the deepest draught vessels that enter our harbour. It ought to be known to hon. gentlemen, also, that the eastern channel has been practically of no use to Toronto at any time; at all events, before the Government took hold of the work there never had been a proper channel at the eastern end. Many years ago, within my recollection, there was a sand-bar, and horses and waggons drove where the channel is at the present time. Only within recent years the lake has cut a channel through, and even after that had taken place there was not sufficient depth to allow vessels to pass. Only since the Government has taken hold of the harbour works have vessels been able to pass through the gap, except for some very short periods. I do not think the hon. gentleman intended any reflection on the members for Toronto, and even if the remarks of the hon. gentleman might be taken as implying such, they had no foundation, because we have a better channel than ever before, and any delay, as the Minister has explained, has not been caused by finishing the work under contract, but has been on account of the extra work that apparently became necessary while the work was in course of construction. So, I feel satisfied that the Government are carrying out their part satisfactorily, and I think at the same time it is not wrong that their attention should have been called to the fact that perhaps there has been a little more delay than was necessary, according to the opinion of the newspapers, or some of them, which may not, however, know much about the question. The very fact of these circumstances being called to the attention of the Government will no doubt make the officers doubly vigilant to have the work prosecuted with the greatest possible despatch.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman contends that as Toronto has a western harbour, there is practically no need of an eastern harbour.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Not at all.

Mr. MULOCK. That is the excuse he offers.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Not at all. The hon. gentleman left the impression that we had no entrance into Toronto for deep draught vessels.

Mr. MULOCK. I suppose they know Toronto.

Mr. COATSWORTH. The hon. gentleman apparently does not know it.

Mr. MULOCK. We all know there is a western harbour. The fact that we are engaged in making an eastern harbour shows that the accommodation is not sufficient and that other works are necessary. The fact that we have a western harbour and require an eastern harbour is evidence that the former is not sufficient to met the requirements of the city.

Mr. COATSWORTH. It is not a western harbour, but a western entrance to the harbour.

Mr. MULOCK. A western entrance to the harbour. If the western entrance is sufficient, why are we engaged in constructing an eastern entrance? It is simply because an eastern entrance is required. To use the western entrance, a vessel leaving Toronto and going east is compelled to add several miles to her course.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Ten miles, I think.

Mr. MULOCK. Therefore, the sooner we get an eastern channel suitable for all purposes of navigation the better, for ten miles will be saved by shipping going east. I am glad the member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) has wakened up to the necessity of giving his attention to the matter.

Mr. ALLISON. Is the western entrance sufficient to admit the largest vessels on Lake Ontario?

Mr. COATSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. The largest vessels running from Kingston?

Mr. COATSWORTH. Yes. There are two objects to be attained by an eastern entrance. One is to save to vessels going east a distance of ten miles.

Mr. MULOCK. And it will save an equal distance to vessels coming from the east?

Mr. COATSWORTH. Yes. And it will also be very useful for the purpose of cleaning out the bay.

For three lines of steamers between St. John, and Halifax and the West Indies and South America..... $103,000

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is not my intention to discuss the question of policy on this appropriation. That was done at an earlier period of the session, and it was done very fully and exhaustively by the late senior member for Halifax, at the time the appropriation was proposed. At that time the view of the Minister of Finance prevailed, and he obtained from Parliament an appropriation of $60,000, granted tentatively, for the purpose of securing, if possible, four services, which were to be provided, sailing between New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and the West India Islands, and certain ports in South America. The hon. gentleman at that time advertised for tenders to secure steamers to be placed on these different routes. Three services were tendered for, and for one no tenders were furnished. The hon. gentleman in inserting the advertisement in the newspapers did not seem to possess very much information on the subject, as for the class of steamers that would be required, the speed they ought to attain, and the amount of freight that should be secured between the ports of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick on the other side, and the West India ports and certain ports in South America on the other. The hon. gentleman asked that the steamers should each have a registered capacity of 1,000 tons, and be capable of carrying at least 30 first-class passengers, and of proceeding on their voyage at a speed of 12 knots an hour. The tenders which the hon. gentleman received, and which have been laid on the Table, show that the steamers available were of a smaller class than those for which he asked, and that they were not capable of sailing with the speed which the hon. gentleman thought was necessary for steamers on these routes. The nearest approach, both in regard to expedition and in regard to capacity for which the hon. gentleman asked, were the steamers offered by Mr. Furness. The propositions of the hon. gentleman were not altogether acceded to; counter propositions were made, and a very considerable amount of time was wasted, and the opportunity was lost. Tho hon. gentleman did not answer at once the enquiries of Mr. Furness or his agent. He did not consider immediately the propositions which Mr. Furness made to him, and he subsequently accepted steamers of an inferior character, of certainly no greater speed, and of very much less capacity than those that were offered by Mr. Furness. I think, Sir, that it is impossible to read that correspondence without seeing that there are indications in it of a disposition on the part of the hon. gentleman to get rid of the offer that Mr. Furness made.

Mr. FOSTER. What is that again, please?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I say that the correspondence indicates, in my opinion, a disposition on the part of the hon. gentleman to get rid of the offer made by Mr. Furness, and to deal with other parties from whom, perhaps, we might suppose he could obtain better terms or more suitable vessels than those that Mr. Furness offered. So far as it is now possible to ascertain, these tenders came, at all events in one case, from a party who possessed no ships and had none of the necessary appliances at the time the tender was made, but he proposed to enter into a contract with the hon. gentleman, and even to go to New York, or elsewhere, and to see whether vessels could be obtained which the hon. gentleman would be ready to accept. The correspondence also says——

Mr. FOSTER. May I interrupt my hon. friend a moment. He has made a rather grave assertion, and I would like him to prove it. I wish to call his mind to that matter before he leaves it. He has stated that, in his opinion, the correspondence indicates on my part a desire to get rid of Mr. Furness' offer. He should not leave the matter there. He should show in what respects that is shown.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It will be open to the hon. gentleman to show that my conclusions or inferences from that correspondence are not well founded.

Mr. FOSTER. You have not made any conclusions. You have only made an assertion.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But, Sir, the hon. gentleman knows this: He carried on this correspondence with a Mr. Schofield, who showed as much anxiety to oblige the hon. gentleman as to serve Messrs. Furness & Co. The hon. gentleman asks me for evidence for the statement which I just made. Well, Sir, the evidence, in my opinion, is found in the correspondence which the hon. gentleman has brought down. The hon. gentleman was asked to telegraph or to inform Mr. Furness or his agent at a particular time as to whether his proposition would be accepted or not. He tells the hon. gentleman the character of the vessels he is ready to put on the service; and that vessels of the capacity and speed for which he has asked are not to be found but have to be specially built for that purpose. If the hon. Minister is disposed to accept the offer, he asks the Minister to inform him by telegraph at once, because it was necessary that an order should be given for the construction of that particular class of vessels. The hon. gentleman allowed days to elapse before that communication was answered, and it was perfectly clear from the communication itself that if that answer was not promptly given that Mr. Furness was to be counted out of the race of competitors. The answer was not given, and Mr. Furness accordingly withdrew. The reason which the hon. gentleman gave for delay was that his colleagues were away, that they were not here to discharge their duties, and that it was not possible to communicate with them before he would answer Mr. Furness. But, Sir, the hon. gentleman, while he seemed extremely anxious to consult with his colleagues as to whether he would accept Mr. Furness' offer or not, did not exhibit the same amount of dependence on his colleagues at a later period when he was dealing with Mr. Baird. He certainly took more upon himself in many other parts of the history of this transaction, as he certainly took more upon himself when he ventured to alter the terms of the contract or to disregard them, and disregard them, not in the public interest, but in the interest of the other contracting party. A Mr. Wood offered to enter into the contract for vessels of 700 tons burden, capable of carrying 30 first class passengers, of making a speed of 12 knots an hour and of complying with the hon. gentleman's requirements, except with regard to the capacity of the ship. He asked whether the hon. gentleman would call for fresh tenders or not, and, if I remember rightly, Mr. Wood's proposition was that he was ready to perform the particular service he referred to for $20,000 year. The hon. gentleman made a contract with Pickford & Black and one of the vessels that this firm put upon the route was the Alpha, which was a vessel of 677 tons capacity.

Mr. FOSTER. What route?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is the route between Halifax and the West India Islands.

Mr. FOSTER. But there are a great many West India Islands.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman knows what the terms of the contract provides for, and it is not necessary that I should undertake to repeat the particular points in the West Indies at which these vessels call.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Wood's, and Messrs. Pickford & Black's vessels, or offers, were for entirely different routes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does the hon. gentleman say that Mr. Wood was not ready to engage in the same route that Mr. Black engaged in? Does he say it was a tender for a route for which tenders were not called?

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will allow me I will tell him this: Mr. Wood's offer was for the West India service to Demerara, which is a certain route. He offered 700-ton vessels. My hon. friend commences to contrast my taking from Pickford & Black that 700-ton vessel——

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No; 677 tons.

Mr. FOSTER. That was for a different route entirely—from Halifax to Jamaica.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It was not, Sir, a matter of the slightest consequence, and any hon. gentleman who will take the trouble of reading the correspondence will see that it is not. What the hon. gentleman asked for was ships of a certain capacity, and the vessels which Mr. Wood offered for one of the routes were larger and of greater speed than the vessels which the hon. gentleman accepted; and the hon. gentleman rejected Mr. Wood's offer. For the "B" route the hon. gentleman accepted the service of the Alpha by Pickford & Black, a vessel of 514 tons registered capacity; and the two ships, the Alpha and the Beta were employed by the hon. gentleman, and the terms of the contract were $35,000 a year. Now, the correspondence shows that the hon. gentleman asked these parties from what time they were to count their contract as beginning, and in the case of one vessel they stated the 15th November and in the case of the other the 25th of December. This is their own statement. That left the hon. gentleman $25,000 for the other two services. For the one service "D", with Buenos Ayres, no tender was received, but for the other service, between certain ports in the West Indies and the City of St. John, the hon. gentleman accepted subsequently an offer from Mr. Van Wart. Mr. Van Wart seemed to be the agent and spokesman of a gentleman who had a seat in this House, and I do not find among the papers which the hon. gentleman has brought down any charter or copy of a charter of incorporation of this company under the Joint Stock Companies Act. There is no disclosure in any of the papers whether in this company, which had no existence at the time these negotiations began, which did not exist for some time afterwards, which had no legal existence at the time the contract began to run, there was $5 of stock owned by anybody other than the hon. gentleman who sat in this House, and who was a member at the time this understanding was had and this contract was informally entered into. Now, Sir, I am not going to discuss the question whether this contract was one which ought to have been confirmed by Parliament or not. I wish to bring to the attention of the House that it appropriated $60,000 for four services, that the hon. gentleman used the whole $60,000 for three services, that this appropriation for four services was for twelve months for each service, that the hon. gentleman exhausted the whole $60,000 on three services for a period much short of twelve months, and that he did what in my opinion he had no right to do, what he had no authority to do without coming here and asking for the authority and confirmation of Parliament. In the case of the offer made by Mr. Furness, we find that Mr. Furness offered two boats, the Rollo and the Orlando, the one having a registered tonnage of 1,100 tons, capable of carrying 50 first-class passengers, and having a speed of 10 knots an hour; that he offered to build two new vessels with a registered capacity of 1,100 tons each, capable of carrying 2,000 tons of freight each, and with a speed of 12 knots an hour; that he was ready to construct these vessels and put them on the route at the end of twelve months; that these ships, which could be put on at once, he says are registered as A1 at Lloyds; that they are vessels of the first-class; that they had the capacity which the hon. gentleman said ships should have that are to be put upon these routes, and that they complied with the conditions of his advertisement in everything except speed. Now, the tenders which the hon. gentleman received show the class of vessels that were available, and they showed that, except in the case of Mr. Furness' offer, there were none available of the capacity which he required, and as to the speed there were none available at all approaching what was required. The hon. gentleman accepted an offer of Mr. Van Wart and Mr. Baird. He accepted an offer on behalf of a company which had no legal existence, which had no existence in fact, which was not yet incorporated, and which, so far as this House knows, was not a company that was responsible, that could give the necessary assurance to the Government or Parliament that it was capable of performing the services which it had agreed to perform or to fulfil the obligation which it had undertaken. Now, Sir, as soon as Mr. Baird and Mr. Van Wart entered into a contract with the hon. gentleman for the purpose of performing the services between St. John and the West Indies they undertook to purchase a boat for the purpose of carrying out the contract, and we find that the boat they offered—the first vessel put on the route, the Portia, was a vessel of 732 tons, very much smaller than the hon. gentleman had asked for, and of very much less speed than was required, and the hon. gentleman accepted the service of that ship as a complete fulfilment of the conditions of the contract. Subsequently another vessel, the Loanda, of larger capacity, having nearly 900 tons burden, went on the service; and the contract into which the hon. gentleman entered on behalf of this country was a contract for $4,100 a trip. It was upon the fulfilment of the contract on the part of Mr. Baird and Mr. Van Wart that this sum was to be paid. The hon. gentleman had no more right to pay another dollar beyond that sum than I have. He had no more right to put his hand into the public treasury and take a dollar in addition to that $4,100 than any other member of this House. The hon. gentleman, as a member of the Administration, is a public trustee. He has devolving upon him certain public duties and he is supposed to perform those duties under the law. He is not above the law; he is not beyond control of the law. He is pledged to discharge those duties properly. The whole protection that may be given him for anything he may do depends upon his compliance with the legal requirements of the case; and the legal requirements of the case were that these vessels should have a certain capacity, which neither of these vessels had; that they should have a certain speed, which neither of them possesses; and that a certain sum, $4,100 a trip, should be paid, which was not the sum the hon. gentleman paid. The hon. gentleman, after several of those trips were made, paid, not $4,100 a trip, but 50 per cent. in addition. He paid $6,150 a trip. By what authority did he do that? By what authority did he take, in the case of this vessel, the Loanda, for the four trips she made, $2,050 per trip from the public treasury, or $8,200 in all, and make that $8,200 the property of Mr. Baird or Mr. Van Wart, or any of the parties they may have associated with them? The hon. gentleman has dealt with the public treasury as though it were his own private patrimony. It may be that Mr. Van Wart or that Mr. Baird was his friend, and that might entitle them to some consideration at his hands in his private capacity, but it did not entitle them to receive from the public treasury, without the authority of Parliament, a larger sum than the hon. gentleman had contracted to pay them. I say he had no right whatever to take such a sum from the public treasury. Is that the way in which the Government usually deal with those with whom they enter into contracts? Why, if you take the other confracts relating to the various branches of the public service into which the Government entered, what security will Parliament have if such a policy were adopted, that, long before the year has expired, the public treasury will not be denuded of the money the public have paid into it? The public treasury is under the hon. gentleman's control, but the hon. gentleman is under the control of the law. He is not above the law, yet he has undertaken to deal with these moneys as if he could add an unlimited amount to the amount promised to be paid to George Baird and to Mr. Van Wart. If the hon. gentleman can pay $2,050 a trip beyond the contract price, he can pay $4,100 a trip beyond what the contract warranted, he can pay twice $4,100 a trip, and there would be no limitation of his power. But that is not the position the Minister of Finance occupies. He is bound by the law. He entered into a contract; he ought to have taken security for the fulfilment of that contract. Does any man in this House suppose that if Mr. Furness had stood in the place of Mr. Van Wart or Mr. Baird he would have been allowed to have taken large sums of public money out of the public treasury, through the hon. gentleman's authority, beyond what the contract warranted? Why, if Mr. Baird could not make money out of it, if it was not a profitable undertaking on his part, that might have been a reason why the hon. gentleman should have relieved him of his contract. He had taken no security, and he might have said: I am ready to permit you to cancel your contract, and I will advertise again. But the hon. gentleman did not do that. He came to the House and said: Baird had made a bad bargain; he had lost money by the transaction. But that was not our business. That was not the business of the hon. gentleman. His business was to protect the public treasury, not to protect the interest of Mr. Baird. Mr. Baird was endowed by Providence with a certain amount of capacity, which, I suppose, enables him to protect his own interests; and the hon. gentleman was not acting on behalf of Mr. Baird but on behalf of the public; and in taking from the public treasury for each trip of that vessel $2,050 more than the contract warranted he did what he had no right to do. When the hon. gentleman terminated this contract he made a gratuity of $8,200 to Mr. Baird for four trips of this vessel, which was a very slow craft, a craft of less capacity than the hon. gentleman required when there was question of contracting with another party. Then this vessel, which was bought by Mr. Baird, becomes the property of Pickford & Black, and the hon. gentleman puts his hand into the public treasury again and he draws $15,000 from it, and hands it over, so it is said, as it was said in the other case, to the party with whom he has a contract, for services that were performed before there was any contract at all, if they were performed at all. What evidence has this House before it of the services that were rendered to the country for the $15,000, which Messrs. Pickford & Black received? Does the hon. gentleman pretend that Pickford & Black said they had a contract with him? That contract, in the case of one vessel, began on the 15th of November; in the case of the other vessel it began on the 25th of December. For every trip these vessels made after the 15th of November and the 25th of December, respectively, the hon. gentleman had paid Pickford & Black every dollar to which they were entitled. But when the hon. gentleman transfers the other service to them, the service from St. John to the West Indies, he agreed to pay Pickford & Black $60,000, and he paid them $15,000 for services that were never performed—services that were not performed under any contract or agreement. If Pickford & Black had vessels sailing to the West Indies before the 15th of November and the 25th of December they sailed them upon their own personal responsibility and risk, for their own purposes. They were not moved to take any action in that matter by anything the hon. gentleman was authorized to do or by anything which he did. The hon. gentleman did this: he took $15,000 out of the public treasury without warrant of law, without the authority of Parliament, and he gave that money to Pickford & Black for services they did not perform on behalf of the public, or under any contract or agreement made with them by the Finance Minister as Minister of the Crown. The hon. gentleman made a contract, paid over the money after he had terminated the contract with Mr. Baird, and for what did he pay the money? Has he ever come down to Parliament and showed in what way the public had incurred any obligation or that any contract or agreement had been entered into with Pickford & Black which entitled them to receive this $15,000? Why, for aught we know that money may have been given to charitable purposes.

Mr. FOSTER. By whom?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.) I do not know by whom.

Mr. FOSTER. Why do you not say it?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.) The hon. gentleman had no business whatever to put his hand into the public treasury. The hon. gentleman should have come to this House and asked this House to excuse or condone what he had done. He ought to trace that money and to show where it went and for what purpose it was given. The hon. gentleman may pretend, if he likes, that there was service performed, but I tell him that, in the papers he brought down, there was a written statement by Pickford & Black that they had sent their vessels to sea, that they wanted this contract in regard to one vessel to date from the 15th November, and in regard to the other from the 25th December, and yet the hon. gentleman pretended to pay for services performed prior to these dates, when there was no subsisting obligation between him as representing the Crown and as trustee for the Crown, on the one side, and Messrs. Pickford & Black on the other.

Mr. FOSTER. For the sake of clearness, will the hon. gentleman say whether he means that I paid the money or pretended to pay it?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman asks me to make a statement. That is exactly what the House asks the hon. gentleman to say. I say that the hon. gentleman took $15,000 out of the public treasury without any warrant of law, without any proper contract with these persons, without any legal or moral obligation upon him as representing the public to pay one cent, and it may be that he paid that amount into the hands of Pickford & Black, and next day it may have gone into an election fund. We do not know. He sees what has been done a hundred times, and he knows that he should have conducted that business in a way that would not have been open to suspicion.

Mr. FOSTER. No one but a man like you would have any suspicion about it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman may be as unparliamentary as he likes or as insulting as he likes, but I am simply pointing out to the House and to the country how the hon. gentleman has discharged the trust reposed in him, and I say again that, for all we know, Messrs. Pickford & Black may not have kept the money paid over to them, but may have put it into an election fund.

Mr. FOSTER. You have no evidence of that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That was said in the Pacaud case.

Mr. FOSTER. You were an apologist in that case and defended Pacaud.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I was not. I objected to the tribunal, and defended him only as I would defend any man who ought to be tried by the courts instead of by a mob. I am in favour of a legal and honest administration of affairs of this country, and I say that there is not a legal administration of the affairs of this country when money is paid in this way.

Mr. FOSTER. You do not say there is not an honest administration of affairs this time—you did last time.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I say that, when you put your hands into the pockets of the public to pay people who have no claim, morally or legally, it is not an honest transaction. There is no room for two opinions in a matter of that sort, and I am simply calling the hon. gentleman's attention to it and giving him an opportunity of explaining before this Committee how it was that he disregarded the law in these two cases, paying $2,050 in the one case more than the contract called for and $15,000 in the other case, when there was no contract at all. I think it is high time that, in the administration of the affairs of this country, we should have some regard to the use we make of the public money. I hold that the hon. gentleman, as Finance Minister of this country, has no more right to deal with the public moneys as he thinks proper, unless he chooses to act always as the law requires, than a clerk in my service has to deal with my own money in such a manner. A clerk in a bank might deal generously with the money belonging to the stockholders in that bank, but we know how he would be dealt with, and it is of the first consequence to the management of the affairs of this country that the representatives of the people in this House and the Ministers of the Crown should deal as carefully, as strictly within the limits of the law and within the directions of Parliament with the public moneys as any clerk or trustee would deal with the moneys placed under his control. I say that the hon. gentleman, in paying in one case $8,200 contrary to the terms of the contract and $15,000 in the other case without any contract, disregarded these principles. The hon. gentleman may have an explanation to give, but that explanation has not yet been given, and, so far as the facts appear upon their face, there was no warrant whatever for the payment of either of these sums of money. I think it is high time that a little more care should be exercised by Parliament in regard to its control and supervision over the expenditure of the public moneys of this country, that a more strict surveillance ought to be exercised by this House as the special representative of the people in this matter, and that steps should be taken to see whether these parties are entitled to retain any portion of the funds which the hon. gentleman has paid to them without warrant of law, and contrary to the terms of the contracts into which he had entered.

Mr. FOSTER. I must, in the first place, very good naturedly condole with my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) on the good opinion the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Mills) has in regard to his ability in dealing with questions before this House. Not more than two or three weeks ago, the hon. gentleman from Queen's, after having had all the papers before him, after having digested those papers, after having given notice of what he proposed to do, after having armed himself at all points in regard to what he proposed to do, brought this self-same matter before the House just as ably, just as eloquently, just as concisely and just as conclusively as the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has done to-night; but the hon. member (Mr. Mills) had so poor an opinion of the hon. gentleman from Queen's (Mr. Davies), had so poor an opinion of his capability to deal with the task, or felt so much disappointed that the task which was essayed and carried out by his colleague met with so poor a reception from this House, that he must needs mount his little steed and put his little lance in rest and tilt against this imaginary grievance. I suppose therefore that, though I replied fully to my hon. friend from Queen's, we must review the whole case to enlighten the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. In the first place, I congratulate him on the fine spirit he has evinced and also upon the backwater he has taken. He spoke in this House some two weeks ago; he made insinuations and assertions then which he has kept clear off to-night. If he had made the statements to-night that he made the other night, I would have asked that his words be taken down, and if there were any constitutional way by which he could be made to take them back or prove them he would have been given the privilege. The hon. gentleman has three courses open to him as a gentleman, as a man, as a member of this House and a co-member with myself. The first course is to consider my explanations satisfactory and say no more about them. The other course is to make his charges in this House, if in his heart he believes that which he insinuates, and have them tried before the proper tribunal in this House; and if he will make that charge he shall have his tribunal, he shall have all proper facilities for making his proof. The other course open to him is this: If he is man enough not to shelter himself behind his privilege as a member of this House, and say here what he does not care to say outside, let him say these same things outside, let him put them in a letter over his own signature in any paper in this country, and although my hon. friend has a knowledge of theoretical law which enables him to give lectures at so much each in the City of Toronto, I will speedily give him a taste of practical law. Now, Sir, this is no laughing matter. A public man has a reputation as such, and no other member in this House has a right by insinuation, or by underhanded methods, to try to take that reputation from him. It is all that a public man has with which to stand before the country. The animus, the spirit and the tendency of the hon. gentleman's remarks, both before and at this time, seen and known by every man in this House who has listened to them, have been designed to stab my reputation as an honest man in dealing with the public moneys and the public contracts of this country. Everybody knows that. Is it fair that he should do it? And then shield himself behind his privileges as a member of Parliament——

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I asked the hon. gentleman to say what——

Mr. FOSTER. Speaking in cold blood—and there is no unprejudiced man who will take up his remarks and read them, who will not say that the hon. gentleman from Bothwell suspects and states his suspicions just as strongly as it was possible for him to state them in this House, that I dealt dishonestly with the public moneys. I will leave that to any unprejudiced jury, and they will come to no other conclusion. Do we need to go back to a former debate? Not at all. We have here to-night heard this christian gentleman in five different cases, thrusting out the sharp lance of his insinuations and his suspicions upon a negative which he calls upon me to prove. Sir, a man's reputation is worth this much to him, that before a gentleman like my hon. friend opposite attempts to take it away he ought to have some positive ground to stand upon, and should not merely make assertions and call upon me to disprove them. Is that fair and honest treatment of one man by another? My hon. friend has learned discretion since the other night—at least, he has not gone so far as he did. Any hon. gentleman who will read over the remarks which are written against him in Hansard will see that he went still further then than he did to-night—that is a former debate, and I am not going to allude to it just now. But I will take up the remarks that he made, and I will deal with them just as plainly and simply as I did before. The first is that I did not immediately answer Mr. Furness. I gave the House my explanation, the House received that explanation, and the House, I believe, were fairly well satisfied with the explanation. Must I give it again? It seems so. The whole matter has to be threshed out twice because my hon. friend does not confide in the ability of the hon. gentleman beside him to do the matter justice; he must needs come to the rescue. The reason that Mr. Furness did not get his answer sooner was the reason I gave before to this House. The tenders came in on the 31st of August, as every one knows a time when the Cabinet is dispersed. Mr. Furness received his answer in a speedy time thereafter, just as soon as Council could be brought together, as Council alone could give me authority, for I could not act by my own authority. And although he studiously concealed the fact—he knew the fact all the same—that as I did not act on my own authority in the case of Mr. Furness, so I did not act on my own authority in any other case in this matter from the beginning to end. He knew this; but he did not state it to the House, and he did not wish to state it to this House. That, Sir, is the simple reason why Mr. Furness did not get his answer sooner than he did get it, and the delay was not an unreasonable delay, and no reasonable man will say it was. Now, Sir, for the first time, the fine christian and manly sentiment of my hon. friend discovers in the correspondence that the Minister of Finance desired to get rid of Mr. Furness' propositions in order that he might make an offer to some one else. I asked him to prove it from the correspondence, but he did not give a tittle of proof for it. Does my hon. friend assert that I had a desire to get rid of Mr. Furness' tender? Will he state it? If he asserts it, or states it, he says a thing which is as false as anything a man can possibly utter, as far from the truth as one pole is from the other. I am speaking strongly, I admit, but it makes a man speak strongly when, as I stated before the House, and as every one of my colleagues know, it was my earnest desire to get the tender of Mr. Furness accepted, and I gave the reason why. My hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies), with that weak disdain which sits so naturally upon his countenance, laughs and sneers when I say that. He does not believe it either; the two hon. gentlemen do not believe it. That was the truth. I speak strongly, because I feel it is an outrage that an hon. gentleman should, without a tittle of evidence, declare that I was anxious to get rid of a tender which I was earnestly desirous to make good for the term of years agreed upon; and, until he shows by irrefragable evidence that there was this desire on my part, my assertion of it, I think, must stand, and I think it will stand in this House. Now, Sir, when I pointed him to the truth, and by venturing to interrupt him, asked him to prove that assertion just then and there before the assertion got cold, what proof did he have? None in the world; but he shuffled off to Mr. Schofield, who, he said, was the agent of Mr. Furness, and declared that there was something in Mr. Schofield's communication with me which showed that he was acting in accordance with my desire, and helped it along, to get rid of Mr. Furness. Mr. Schofield is to-day, was then, and has been for years, the trusted agent of Mr. Furness and his company, and it is very odd that the hon. gentleman should, in the same breath, say two things so inconsistent as to declare, without a tittle of evidence, in the first place, that I wished to get rid of Mr. Furness' offer, and, in the second place, that the trusted agent of Mr. Furness was an accomplice of mine in that design. Now, that is his proof, and he has given none other before this House, nor is there any other which he can bring before this House, or to the forum of his own conscience, if he has any. I stated that the vessels, according to Mr. Schofield, could not be found; they had to be built, and he introduced that as a proof that Schofield was acting in complicity with me. When he read that statement of Schofield's he read what Mr. Furness had stated, that these vessels could not be found ready-made; they had to be built for the service, and until they could be built as he intended to build them he would have to get temporary vessels. Mr. Schofield conveyed that information to me, and that is the evidence that he was in complicity with me. The second point on which this veiled—no; not veiled, but open—insinuation was brought out by my hon. friend was this: that I did not show the same respect for my colleagues—and I want my hon. friend's attention, if he pleases—in this case; that I showed great respect for my colleagues in the matter of the Furness tender, but not equal respect for my colleagues in the matter of the later tenders. I state again, for fear it may not penetrate the heart and mind of the hon. gentleman, that I acted with the consent of my colleagues, and only after consulting my colleagues, in the second case exactly the same as I did in the first case. The only difference between the two cases was this: My colleagues were here and with me when the second came up; my colleagues were dispersed and I had to wait their return when the first came up. Will he prove that I did it off my own bat, so to speak? Has he a tittle of evidence to show that what was done with respect to Mr. Van Wart's offer was not done on consultation with Council and on an Order in Council? Will he show it? He cannot show it. The papers show the very opposite. What, then, becomes of his assertion? Just what became of his other assertions. They are mere assertions and have no foundation. Then the hon. gentleman went on to say—and he got very much mixed in regard to the different routes—that I must be found guilty of wrong because I did not take Mr. Wood's tender. That was for a small vessel, 700 tons, and it was for "C" service, and that only. The hon. gentleman knows as well as I do that, when we divided these routes out into three distinct services and came to the full consideration of the question, we determined we would take vessels of 700 tons for "A" and "B" services, but we would require 1,000-ton vessels for "C" service. Mr. Wood never offered for "A" and "B" service at all. The hon. gentleman went on to prove me guilty of inconsistency by stating that after refusing Mr. Wood's tender I immediately took Pickford & Black's offer and put on 700-ton steamers. They are, however, put on a different route from the service tendered by Mr. Wood, and in regard to which we have been talking the whole evening.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). All the hon. gentleman's tenders called for 1,000-ton ships. That is no explanation. You cannot mislead in that way.

Mr. FOSTFR. I cannot mislead; I do not intend to mislead. That is not my trade; the hon. gentleman knows much more about that than I do. Let him go back to Hansard of last year. Let him show a little diligence in hunting up records as well as in throwing out suggestions. Let him go back to that year's Hansard, and he will see the matter was thoroughly explained, that although we called by advertisement for tenders for 1,000-ton vessels, we yet stated that the tenderers could send in tenders for smaller vessels. The reason was given—the advertisement bore it on its face. The reason was given to this House, and it was one of expense. The idea was that, although we would like to obtain 1,000-ton vessels for all the routes, yet we might not be prepared to go to a large expense which this would entail: and when the tenders came in we decided—not I, the Government decided, Council decided, the decision came to the House, and the House had the decision before it and confirmed it—that vessels on "A" and "B" routes should be 700 tons, but that we should adhere to 1,000-ton vessels for "C" route.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.) Why did you not do it?

Mr. FOSTER. Wait. I am not through with the hon. gentleman yet. Then the hon. gentleman proceeded to say that Mr. Van Wart was an agent of a member of Parliament When he stated that he stated what he cannot prove, what he has not attempted to prove, what there is not a scintilla of proof of.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Oh, yes; there is.

Mr. FOSTER. Why, then, did not the hon. gentleman give it? We have been parts of two days on this subject, and the hon. gentleman has not given the proof, nor could he give it. Mr. Van Wart put in a tender for a company that was to be formed. The hon. gentleman is not satisfied because I do not state something that is not the fact; I cannot favour him in that regard. I only state exactly what is the case. Does the hon. gentleman deny that that was the form of the offer? I have not his ear. Does he deny that Mr. Van Wart's offer was not in these terms?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I deny this, that the hon. gentleman can make a contract with any party in behalf of a company that has not an existence—a legal contract.

Mr. FOSTER. You are a bad witness. If the hon. gentleman was before a court and was asked this question, and answered it as he has, the judge would send him to "quod" for paltry equivocation. He answered it disingenuously by asking another question, or rather by making an assertion quite away from it. The statement I make is this, that Mr. Van Wart does not appear in these papers as an agent of a member of Parliament. He puts in his offer as agent and representative of a company not formed—I am not going to be disingenuous about it—and the Order in Council which the hon. gentleman had before him, which he has before him now if he has the papers, expressly states that the offer of Mr. Van Wart is exactly in that line, and the second Order in Council, which accepts it, explicitly states that the offer is accepted for a company to be formed, not then formed. And that company was formed. Will the House please notice another form of statement by my hon. friend? He laid me open to suspicion; he would try to lead the House to the conclusion that there never was a steamship company of that name and kind chartered. He says it does not appear in the papers.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Neither does it.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman state that the company was not duly chartered? Will he state that they did not duly get their papers; that in February, 1890, they did not become a duly chartered company? He will not do so. But he says, you have not proved they were so. The presumptive evidence is in these papers, a statement embodied in the Order in Council that they did become duly chartered as a company under the general Act, and as a consequence we were empowered to enter into a contract with them. What is the use of the hon. gentleman quibbling; why not come out honestly and admit it? He could easily have looked up the records before he threw out the suggestion to the House that probably there was no such company. I say there was a company formed on 3rd February, 1890; that presumptive evidence is given in the assertion of the Order in Council in the report over my own hand. The hon. gentleman could in two minutes have convinced himself of the truth of my statement. He did not do it; he preferred to come here and make an assertion that was without foundation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When was the contract made?

Mr. FOSTER. In March of the same year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Was it paid for from that date?

Mr. FOSTER. From the date the vessels began running; the outward trip beginning on January 8th and ending February some time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then an amount was paid before the company was formed?

Mr. FOSTER. Not a cent was paid until one month after the company was formed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me make it plain. The first vessel went on the route, starting from St. John on 8th January. The company was formed on 3rd February, 1890. The contract was made on 5th March, 1890. The first payment was made a month or more after that time. These are the items of the information as stated in the resolution of my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies). Why, my hon. friend from Bothwell, the gentleman from Bothwell, has no excuse at all. His hon. friend who sits alongside of him went to the trouble of drawing up a whole history of that case, and after it was corrected in one or two unimportant particulars by myself it went on the records of the House, and all that my diligent and careful friend had to do was simply to turn to that page of the Votes and Proceedings and he would have found all this there. He did not do that. Now, Sir, he says that I was guilty, because I used the appropriation for three services, which was called for under the advertisement for four services. My hon. friend knows, the House knows, I do not attempt to conceal it, that when these advertisements were put in they were put in for four services—not, as I stated to the House, with any idea that we would gain a Brazilian service, but that we might be able to get a tender as to what it would cost. As I stated here, we did not expect to get for the $60,000 anything more than the West Indian services and one of them going to a South American port in British Guiana. That was all stated to the House, and the $60,000 was given with that idea, because it was voted and came into effect on the 1st July, 1889, and was available for this service thereafter. It was the only law that was to guide me or guide the Government in the whole matter. By the enactment in the Estimates and by the Supply Bill that $60,000 was put in the hands of the Government for the purpose of carrying on services to the West Indies. That was the law, and that was all the law in the matter. The law did not state that it was to be three services, it did not state that it was to be over any particular routes, it did not state that it was to be paid at so much a trip. The law which my hon. friend has talked so much about was simply the appropriation and the Supply Bill, where the Parliament of Canada gave into the hands of the Government $60,000 to be spent in that fiscal year for steam services to the West Indies. That is the law, and that is the only law upon it, and still my hon. friend travelled backwards and forwards in his vain attempt to make it appear that I had violated a law. I say that that was the only law, that there was no violation of that law, and that he has not proven it, and that he cannot point it out. He says that after we had taken the Van Wart contract—not I, but the Government—that I took two vessels of a less tonnage than a thousand tons. That was all pointed out in a former debate. Is my hon. friend willing to declare now that he has read all these papers and correspondence? Has he really read these papers through from beginning to end? He is silent: I suppose that his silence gives his assent. He has read them, and if he has read them he read the Order in Council expressly stating that for the first year it was contemplated that the service should be a temporary service, and that vessels less than 1,000 tons could be used. It is expressly so stated, and my hon. friend, if he has read the papers, knows that it is so stated, and that by the authority of Council. It was explained to the House, when the House was on these Estimates last year, that it was by the authority of Council that it was decided that during the first part of that service we must necessarily have a service of an inferior kind. So, a 732-ton vessel and a 970-ton vessel were respectively and successively taken during the first year. Neither of them came up to the requirements, but both of them—not in my opinion, but in the opinion of Council acting on my advice and research, such as it was—the best that were available during that first year. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman goes on to state that I was to pay that company $4,100 per trip, and that if I followed the law I could not pay them more than $4,100. Will my hon. friend point out to me a law upon the Statute-book of this country which says that I was to pay only $4,100 per trip to that company. He cannot do it. The only law upon the case is that $60,000 were put in the hands of the Government for the West India service, during that year. Who gave the authority for paying $4,100 per trip. It was the Government of the country acting on my advice, in virtue of the vote of $60,000 for this service having been granted; and the very same Government which gave the authority for $4,100 a trip could have made it $5,000 if the tender had been such, or could have made it $6,000 per trip if the tender had been such, and broken no law. My hon. friend knows it right well, and the attempt to prove that the law is broken is a futile attempt. Why was more than $4,100 given? I explained that fully to Parliament and I took the responsibility of it; the Government took the responsibility of it, and the operation was not carried through even on my own single responsibility. I stated to the House, and my hon. friend knows it, that before I went down to St. John and made these arrangements I consulted my colleagues and had their authority to make the best arrangement I could to that extent; in order to do what? Not, as the hon. gentleman insinuated, to put money into the hands of my friends, but to keep the service from stopping in the middle of the season, until the Council should meet, and could be able to take some definite steps for the permanent continuance of the service. I gave my reason to the House that I would take that responsibility, and do it under the authority that we had, rather than to let the service slip by and go to pieces for four, or five, or six months, or until the current would have been turned aside, and the prospects for the successful building of the trade would have been very materially altered. The hon. gentleman says that I dealt with this as though it were my own property. I did not. When I am dealing with my own property I deal with it without anybody's advice, or without anybody's authority, but in this case there was not a dollar paid out except upon consultation with, and on the express authority of Order in Council with my colleagues of the Government, myself forming one of that Government. To state that I dealt with this as though it were my own private property is a statement which is not true. I come to mention one other point now, and that is this: It is an insinuation implied in the statement, or in the question of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), that if Mr. Furness had been Van Wart and Baird, would he have been relieved of this amount? What did my hon. friend mean by that? It could only have meant one thing, namely, that I did this for the sake of personal friendship, or from a worse motive, and that I did for two friends what I would not have done in the case of Mr. Furness or any other contractor. My hon. friend has no proof of that. He has my statement to the contrary, made somewhat warmly, maybe, but made honestly, that there is not a word of truth in that assertion. He has my statement as to why that further payment was made. It was made for the reasons which I gave to the House before, and which I give to the House to-night; and the very same treatment would have been given to Mr. Furness or any other contractor under like circumstances. Then he insinuated, and very plainly, that this money might have been paid over or might not have been paid over. To-night he rather modifies that, by admitting that the money may have been paid over to Pickford & Black, but suggests that it may have gone into an election fund directly thereafter. Well, Sir, my hon. friend by the exercise of a very little diligence might have made himself perfectly aware whether this money was paid over or not. I hold in my hand every cheque of every payment made for every service performed in this whole West India business, with the receipts and the vouchers; and if my hon. friend will do me the kindness of examining them, if he has any doubt in his mind, he will find whether or not every cent of this money was really paid into the hands of the persons carrying on this West India service. That disposes of the question whether or not this money was paid over by me to them or not. If the hon. gentleman wants to know whether there was any corrupt bargain betweem them and me, or whether the Government profited by a single dollar, he can find that out by the way open to him in this House, of having these persons summoned before the proper tribunal and putting his questions to them before their faces. But I simply state to-night, although such an insinuation is not worthy of a statement, that it cannot be shown by the gentleman from Bothwell or by any other gentleman that a single cent of the money went into my pocket or into the pockets of the Government in any way. It cannot be shown; and if my hon. friend cannot show it, I invite him to cease throwing out the insinuation that such might be the case. I may surely demand that much of fair treatment, even from the gentleman from Bothwell. There is but one other point. He says that Pickford & Black informed me when they wanted the contract service to begin. He has, I suppose, read the letter of the 15th January, 1890. If not, I will read it:

"DEAR SIRS,—We are now preparing contract for 'A' and 'B' services, and I will be obliged if you will kindly let me know what trips have been made by the Alpha and Beta since you received notice of the acceptance of the 'A' and 'B' services respectively."

Their answer is given, as he stated, that one began in November and the other in December, and the contracts were made in answer to that, to date from those special dates. Then, he says that I held no warrant of law, but, contrary to the law, took $15,000 of the people's money and handed it over to Pickford & Black, and it might have gone into election funds. I did pay $15,000 to Pickford & Black; I so stated in this House; and I gave the reasons why only two weeks ago. Shall I give the reasons again? This West India service had been talked of for a long while. The money had been voted in March or April of that year, and the vote came into force on the first day of July, 1889. Nearly a year before that Pickford & Black had put on steamers to the West Indies—to Jamaica and Cuba—and fully a year before that, namely, on the 15th of September and on the 4th November, 1888, they had been given by the Postmaster General authority to carry the mails. They were to be paid for carrying the mails after it had been decided to whom the contracts were to be given for the West India service which we were then talking about. These mails were delivered over to them in September and November, 1888, and they were carried by them from that time on. Although the money was voted by this House in March or April, delays occurred in asking for tenders and in getting in the tenders, so that what should have been a service started on the 1st of July, owing to these difficulties, did not start until late in the autumn; and Pickford & Black, who had been running on these two routes for several months before the 1st of July, for which they made no claim—and they gave their manifest of every voyage in and out according to our requirements—put in their claim from the first that the Government ought to consider their contract as running from the 1st of July instead of from the fall of the year. They were not paid at first, and I wished to see how the service would go on and what our probable expenses would be, and I would make no arrangement with them until I found that the vote would be sufficient for all the services. Then I felt authorized to take their claim to Council, and the Government felt authorized to deal with it without coming to Parliament. It was within the $60,000 vote. The same power that could decide that the contract should begin on the 1st of November could say that it should begin on the 1st of July, and the Government considered it just that they should be paid from the 1st of July, and they were paid.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman says a claim was made. There is nothing of that in the correspondence brought down.

Mr. FOSTER. That is nothing. Does the hon. gentleman doubt my word? It would be like him to do it. The claim was made; but it was not entertained, and no payment was made until I found whether I would have money enough or not in that vote of $60,000 to meet their claim and carry on the services. Otherwise, I would have waited until Parliament met to ask from it that portion of money covered by their claim. The Government, taking the circumstances into account, came to the conclusion that the payment should be made, and ordered it to be made. And that was done without any ulterior motive of profit of any kind, without any thought of its being part of a bargain for taking over the contract, but was done on account of what we thought was the justice of the claim, and for no other reason. The hon. gentleman cannot prove that there was any other reason. That ends my defence of this matter. The gentleman from Bothwell in this whole matter has not treated me in the manner of an honest and independent member of this House, having a full knowledge of his responsibilities and our relative positions, and anxious for our reputations and characters as public men, or as I would have dealt with him under similar circumstances.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The House has had the advantage of having the facts relating to these contracts stated to it some time ago, and they have been before it for some weeks. My hon. friend from Bothwell did not seek to introduce any new statements of facts before the House. Acting properly within his constitutional right, he discussed the facts and submitted to the House certain conclusions of constitutional law which he drew from those facts, and the Minister of Finance was excessively restive during the discussion both the other night and to-night.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly, I was.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes; he was restive, because the conclusions my hon. friend drew from the facts cannot be refuted, and have not been attempted to be refuted. The Minister of Finance confined himself entirely to dealing with what he said were certain suspicions which the hon. member for Bothwell cast on him, and which were justified by the facts and the conclusions. The charges submitted to the House were that the hon. gentleman, according to the papers, appears not to have acted in perfect good faith in the first instance with the Furness Company, and afterwards, when he came to deal with the company with which he did enter into a contract, he paid them 50 per cent. more than the contract price, without any justification for so doing. These were the charges made. The hon. gentleman had no right generously to use the public money as he would his own, but, being a trustee of the people's money, and having contracted with his friends for a certain service at a certain sum, he had no right to put his hand into the public treasury and pay twice the amount; and having done so, he was guilty, in a political sense, of having acted improperly. My hon. friend from Bothwell did not charge anything more than that, and that charge he has proved. In fact the Minister of Finance did not attempt to defend himself, but was very restive, and spoke of my sneering and laughing. I took no part in the debate going on and certainly had no intention of sneering or laughing at the hon. gentleman, and was not listening to the hon. gentleman at the moment he called attention to it. But I listened to my hon. friend's speech, and having studied the papers, I have come to the conclusion that he was well within his constitutional right in calling attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman, in the first instance, did not deal fairly with the tenderers, and afterwards dealt most unfairly, so far as the public interests are concerned, with the favourite to whom he gave the tender. It is unnecessary to go over the facts again, but let us look at the two or three points to which the hon. gentleman calls attention. On the one hand it was evident that the Finance Minister did not give that attention to the Furness Company he should have given, that if he had shown one half the zeal in attending to the demands made by Furness & Co. as he showed in attending to those made by Messrs. Van Wart & Baird, Messrs. Furness & Co. would have entered into a contract. The papers show that Messrs. Furness & Co., the owners of a large steamship line, a firm able to carry out any contract they entered into, said, when tendering for this new contract, that they required an answer on or before a certain day, because certain steamers necessary for the service and which they had in view were obtainable before that date but not afterwards. The hon. Minister knew by the letters he had from Mr. Schofield, the agent of Messrs. Furness, that if he wanted that firm to take the contract at all he had to give an answer by the 5th of September. But he withheld his answer for reasons he has explained to the House, and which the House can judge as to whether they were satisfactory or not, until the 20th of September, when the steamers which Messrs. Furness & Co. had in view could not be obtained, and they declined to enter into the contract. My hon. friend, in taking up the facts as they have been admittedly proved in the House, was perfectly in his right in charging that the Minister of Finance had not in his dealings with Messrs. Furness & Co. shown that diligence and prudence which the House had a right to expect from him. The hon. gentleman had charge of the whole service; all he had to do was to offer them the contract, as theirs was the lowest tender.

Mr. FOSTER. It was not the lowest tender.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It was the lowest tender before the hon. gentleman, for he took the responsibility of rejecting the other.

Mr. FOSTER. It was not.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He took the responsibility of rejecting Mr. Wood's tenders. He did not hesitate about that, but wrote to Mr. Wood at once that the tonnage offered was not what the requirements of the service demanded. The charge before the House and the country is this, that having in his possession a tender from a responsible English ship-owner, accompanied by a limit of time, the 5th of September, after which it could not be effectively carried out, the hon. gentleman deferred answering until the 20th of September, when he knew that his acceptance would be too late. What more? When he gave the contract for the "A" and "B" service to Messrs. Pickford & Black, what did he do? In his advertisement calling for tenders he requires vessels of 1,000 tons, the same for the "A" and "B" service as for the "C" service to Demerara. But he allowed Pickford & Black to put on that service the Beta, 677 tons, and the Alpha, 514 tons, raised subsequently to 750 tons by another deck being put on, or the original tonnage was nearly one-half short of that called for. The hon. gentleman knows that the vessel he accepted for the "A" tender to Jamaica, the Alpha is a steamer twenty-eight years old. It is stated publicly in the Halifax press, and I have also the information in letters from Halifax gentlemen, that Messrs. Pickford & Black made a profit of over 60 per cent. on the money invested in that service, that they bought up all the other shareholders in that company and cleared 60 per cent. And we have what? A steamer twenty-eight years old to compete with the New York liners, running from New York to the West Indies! Do hon. gentlemen expect, under conditions and circumstances of that kind, that we can have a successful competing line? The Minister of Finance knows the thing is an absurdity. Yet, we are paying to-day as a subsidy to that old tub $15,000 a year. With regard to the Beta, we are paying $20,000 a year, and what is she doing for the service from Halifax to Cuba? Why, I have in my desk letters from large fish merchants in Halifax telling me that they can ship their fish to New York, and do ship their fish to New York by the best steamers running from Halifax to New York and thence to Jamaica at 10 cents a drum less than the freight which the steamers subsidized by us charge from Halifax to Jamaica. My hon. friend from Bothwell charges the Finance Minister with having, in the first place, entered illegally into a contract with Messrs. Baird and Van Wart. The hon. gentleman entered into a contract with a company which did not exist. Let me ask him under what contract did the steamer run and earn her money in the month of January, when she ran between St. John and Demerara? She was put upon the service by Mr. Van Wart, acting for himself and friends, Who were the friends? They were George F. Baird, then member of Parliament, who signs himself a managing director. And I say that the hon. gentleman knew that the contract he then entered into, if contract it can be called, was carried out by that vessel running in the month of January before the company was ever formed. In the month of February she started on a second voyage before the company was formed.

Mr. FOSTER. No; you are wrong.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) She completed her first voyage in January, before the letters patent were issued.

Mr. FOSTER. You are wrong. She left on the 8th January and could not get back until the 3rd February.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What company was in existence on the 8th or the 28th of Januuary? No company was in existence. The hon. gentleman at that time therefore entered into a contract with certain gentlemen, one of whom was a member of this House, and part of the work was performed before, though I am aware that the payment was not made until after the company had been formed, so that Mr. Baird might escape the penalties which the law imposes on those who violate the independence of Parliament. The hon. gentleman says that, when the contract was entered into, there was a provision made for a temporary service. It is true that he allowed a vessel which was very much below the requirements he called for to run in that service—a vessel slower in speed and smaller in size, and not equal to the requirements he told the world were essential for that service, and he allowed that to go on for six months, and then Mr. Baird was to build and put on the line the new vessels. But did he do it? Did the hon. gentleman ask him to do it? Was he ever asked to fulfil one term of his contract? When the month of July came, and Mr. Baird found he had not got the bonanza he expected, what did he do? He had solemnly signed a contract to run these boats for $4,100 a round trip, just a shade below what Furness offered to put the boats on for, and, when he told the hon. gentleman he was losing money, the hon. gentleman, without a vote of Parliament, without any legal authority, in defiance of the express terms of the contract, gave him 50 per cent. more than the contract called for, and not only said I will give you $6,150 per trip for the future, but I will apply that to every trip the Loanda has made in the past, and although your contract binds the company to perform that service for $4,100, I, as Minister of Finance, will give you $6,150. What is the hon. gentleman's defence? It is this: I induced my colleagues to ratify what I did—thus sheltering himself behind a report to Council. The hon. gentleman is himself primarily responsible for this. He entered late into a contract with his friend Baird, by which he, under the name of the West India Steamship Company, agreed to perform this service for $4,100 a trip. They performed that service, and then the hon. gentleman gives his friend Baird $6,150, not only for future trips but for the past. That is the charge my hon. friend (Mr. Mills) brings before the House. I ask the House if that has been answered. In addition to all that, in addition to paying $6,150, which neither the law nor the contract justified him in paying, I ask him now under what contract he paid that money? There is no contract produced. There is no contract with the signature of the Queen to that effect.

That money was paid without law, and against the signed and sealed contract, and that contract is there to this day, showing that the hon. gentleman violated the contract and paid 50 per cent. more than the contract called for or the law justified. He says that, in consideration of paying $15,000 to Pickford & Black, the mails were to be carried by those boats; and he made a statement to-day, as I understand, which he did not make when this matter was previously before the House, that a claim had been made by Pickford & Black for payment for this service between July and November. That statement is contradicted by the papers the hon. gentleman brings down, because there are papers brought down which he has under his hand now, showing that before the money was paid to them the hon. gentleman's department asked them from what time they claimed the subsidy should be paid to them, and they replied that it should be paid to them, as they thought, from November or December, not because they had entered into the contract then, but because one of the members for Halifax, Mr. Kenny, had told them their contract had been accepted. There was never any complaint made by any member of this House that they should not be paid from those dates. If they were informed by the member for Halifax that they were to be paid from November or from December we made no complaint in regard to it; but we did complain that, after their request had been granted and they had been paid from the very dates they had fixed, nine months afterwards they came to the hon. gentleman and asked to be paid for six months previous to those dates. There is no evidence that they carried the mails, and the hon. gentleman will not venture to state that they were under contract, or that they carried the mails, or that they were doing anything at that time for the Government or the people of Canada. There were dozens of vessels traversing the ocean during that time. Why did not the hon. gentleman give them a subsidy? Why should Messrs. Pickford & Black receive $15,000 for running their boats to the West Indies? I know gentlemen who own steamships which were running to the West Indies during that time. Why were these men paid this amount? Where is the law and where is the contract to justify this payment? I challenge the hon. gentleman to produce the law or the contract to justify this payment. He paid the amount in defiance of the contract, which says the payment shall only begin in November or December; and, as to the equities of the case, I want the House to understand that the payment began, not from the dates fixed by Parliament, but from the dates fixed by the parties themselves. It is, therefore, evident that the $15,000 was nothing but a present to the company. My hon. friend (Mr. Mills) says: You paid the money, but I have no guarantee that it was not paid back to an election fund. I would like to hear the hon. gentleman say that it was not paid back to an election fund. We are not going to divest ourselves altogether of common sense in dealing with this matter, and if the hon. gentleman pays 50 per cent. to his friends more than the contract calls for, and pays a large additional sum to another friend more than his contract calls for, I say it opens the door to corruption, and it calls for the censure of Parliament if Parliament is to exercise the right of censure at all. The hon. gentleman's conduct is not only not above suspicion, but it is indefensible, and it has not been defended by the hon. gentleman. The other day the policy of granting the money was not attacked. We were then not attacking the policy, but the execution of the policy. The hon. gentleman says better boats are put on. The hon. gentleman attempted to tell us that he has got better boats on now. Well, Sir, I hope after two years he has got better boats on, but he has not got new boats, as the contract called for. He has got the Taymouth Castle, built in 1877, although the contract called for new boats. He has got the Tay boat—I have not seen her, but I am prepared to take the hon. gentleman's statements concerning her. But I point out to the House the fact that the old tug Loanda, which the West India Steamship Line, or George F. Baird, put on and run for months and months, was a disgraceful old tub, so disgraceful that the passengers shouted in dismay at the accommodations which were offered them, and which they said made the boat the laughing-stock of the West Indies and the Maritime Provinces. Sir, the hon. gentleman stated that the trade between the West Indies and the Maritime Provinces had been increasing very largely. The hon. gentleman read certain manifests, the values of certain cargoes which were carried from Halifax to those ports in the West Indies. But he stopped short at a certain date; he did not pursue the argument as far as he should have done, and in that way he misled the House. Why did not the hon. gentleman read the return cargoes, if there were any? Because they would have been a laughing stock in the House. The hon. gentleman knows that, as a matter of fact, and it is a matter of record, we cannot shut our eyes to it, that our trade with the West Indies has been decreasing to an enormous extent, our trade with the West Indies has decreased one million dollars during the past ten years. And the hon. gentleman talks about the value of cargoes increasing during some of those trips. He knows, and every man from the Maritime Provinces knows, that if the steamers carry a little more than at first they are carrying it because they have taken it away from the sailing vessels that for many years have carried on that trade. There has been no new trade to any extent introduced, and the evidence of it was shown by the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), who gave the figures when he made his speech in this House when this subject was last before us. I will not take up the time of the House any longer on this point. I say that my hon. friend who has made these charges to-night was well within his rights in making them, and in making them he has not overstepped the proper and legitimate bounds which are accorded and allowed to members of Parliament in this House in the discharge of their functions in criticising public expenditure.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Before I shall be able to agree in the concluding observations which the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) has just made, it will be necessary that we should arrive at some agreement as to what the charges were, and what the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has proved; because the member for Queen's, during the last hour, has been stating things which he said the member for Bothwell had charged and had proved, but which the member for Bothwell never mentioned, and which only the fertile imagination of the member for Queen's has conceived. Now, there has been a good deal said with regard to this West India service, and the hon. gentlemen assume that the circumstances surrounding it are of a suspicious character. I fully concur in that view, when we find two hon. gentlemen opposite bringing that subject to the notice of the House in debate on four several occasions, and on those four occasions beating over the whole ground one after another, making statements as they advanced from one stage to another, increasing in vehemence, increasing in violence, and increasing in inaccuracy. I have no hesitation in saying that the manner, at least, in which the charges have been brought forward, warrants suspicions of the gravest nature as to the ingeniousness of those hon. gentlemen bringing the charges. Now, let me examine the charges preferred by the hon. member for Bothwell, and the revised version of them given by the hon. member for Queen's; let us see if these charges, the true charges, according to his statement, have in the least degree been substantiated. One of these charges was that the Minister of Finance was ashamed to show to this House the manifest of the cargoes of these vessels, or put it in evidence, because it would make the Government and Parliament a laughing-stock throughout the country, to see how insignificant the trade was. The hon. gentleman said that, in relation to a document which has been on the desk of every member of the House for weeks, and which the hon. gentleman himself was conning, before he moved his resolution two or three weeks ago, for hours at a time, in face of every member of this House. That is the statement which the hon. gentleman makes, and in relation to which he declares that the conduct of the Government is disingenuous, and he expects us to believe that these charges are sustained against the evidence of our eyesight as to this manifest having been on the desk of every member of the House. Now, another statement, or rather insinuation—because nineteen-twentieths of what has been said on this subject has been, not accusation, but mere insinuation—another insinuation which the hon. gentleman has thrown out was that $15,000 had been paid as a present by the Finance Minister. The hon. member was more careful and more fair than his predecessor in debate, because he said the Minister of Finance paid it to Pickford & Black, which the member for Bothwell would not even admit. But he said: "Will he tell me that it did not go back to the election fund?" Now, I will give my answer to that question, it did not go back to the election fund, not a single dollar of it; and when he proves that that $15,000 was paid for political services, past or future, or that it was paid in view of any subscription to the election fund whatever, or that it was ever paid out for election purposes, or contributed to an election fund, having my assertion to the contrary, he will drive me from public life. Sir, that payment was made to Pickford & Black in the autumn of 1890, and at a time when there was no circumstance in this country to indicate that a dissolution would take place, or that any election would come on. If it were desirable that we should take $15,000 from the public treasury and contribute it to somebody who would give it back to us in an election fund, I do not know that Messrs. Pickford & Black would have been chosen for the purpose, even if we could have been base enough to have chosen anybody for that purpose. I have known Mr. Pickford for some years; I know nothing of what his views may have been in the last election, because I was only in Halifax for a night or two—but Mr. Pickford, all the time I have known him, has been a stout and stalwart Reformer; his partner, Mr. Black, has been a moderate Conservative. Those boats are the property of a joint stock company, and this money neither of these gentlemen would venture to control for their own purposes. But I repeat, in order that there may be no mistake about it, and that the hon. gentleman may have his answer, that not a dollar of that money was paid in any form whatever to an election fund. Now, I intended, when I rose to make a few observations on this subject, to separate in my remarks the observations of the member for Queen's from those of the member for Bothwell, but that will detain the House too long, and I will treat the two sets of observations together. Under what circumstances was that money paid to Pickford & Black? I will tell the hon. gentlemen the circumstances. Requests were made to the Government away away back in 1887 and in 1886, to have these services to the West Indies subsidized, the "A" and "B" services particularly. They had been for years under subsidy from the Imperial Government, and these steamers, or one of them, I believe, had been performing that very service, the Alpha, which is now running for this Government, receiving a subsidy of £16,000 a year from the British Government for a long series of years. It was only in consequence of the solicitation of certain persons interested in small sailing vessels in Halifax that the Imperial Government decided that it was an unwise policy for that Government to spend its money in subsidizing steam vessels between Nova Scotia and the West Indies, and the subsidy was discontinued by the Imperial Government. But when it was discontinued, application was at once made here to keep up that service, and no one who asked to have it kept up expected it would be kept up otherwise than by those steamers that had been carrying on the service under the subsidy from the Imperial Government. In 1886 and 1887, and in 1888, the application to the House that a subsidy should be given was unavailing, but in 1888 it was announced in Parliament that a subsidy would be given, and a vote taken at the following session. Remember the contract was not entered into until 1890—the vote was not passed in 1888, but the announcement was made by the the Minister of Finance in that session that while the estimates for that year would not contain a vote for that service, the Government were pledged to the policy of bringing down a subsidy in 1889. In the summer of 1888 Pickford & Black put on the same steamers that had been on those routes and commenced to serve the Government and the country with a view of subsequently securing that subsidy. When they put on those boats they applied for the privilege of carrying the mails, and they applied for a money subsidy. We told them we had not a vote of Parliament and could not give a money subsidy until we obtained a parliamentary vote. They asked permission to carry the mails under contract with the post office. I went myself and asked the Postmaster General to give the carriage of the mails to that line of steamers, that we were not able to give a subsidy, that they would carry them without a subsidy in expectation of a subsidy to come, and that in the meantime it would be fair to give them the carriage of the mails. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), in stating how fully these charges against the Minister of Finance had been proved, declared to this House that these vessels did not carry a mail.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I spoke from the papers.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not know what the hon. gentleman quoted from, those were his words.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Hear, hear.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am glad I am quoting the hon. gentleman correctly, for he says "hear, hear"—that they did not carry a mail. On my own application the Postmaster General gave authority for these boats to carry the mails in the summer of 1888; and in view of the hon. gentleman's statement, which he now reiterates, that they did not carry a mail, let me read a telegram from the postmaster at Halifax. It is as follows:—

"First mail by Alpha to West Indies, despatched 15th September, 1888; and by Beta 4th November, 1888."

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Not under that contract.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That will not save the hon. gentleman, and he may regret in a moment that he jumped so soon, because he may want to jump in another direction before I am through with that point. These two vessels, then, according to the charge which has been so distinctly proved, and with raps on two desks on that side of the House, did not carry a mail; but I know they did, and the postmaster at Halifax gives the date in autumn 1888 when they did begin to carry the mails under that contract with the Postmaster General. "Not under that contract," the hon. gentleman says. So much the worse for him, because that shows there was another contract under which both morally and legally we were bound to pay the firm; yet hon. gentlemen opposite try to fasten the charge on the Minister of Finance of paying $15,000 improperly under this contract of 1890. Matters went on in this way. Every trip each vessel carried the mails under promise of the Government that they would pay them, although not under contract at a stated sum, because that had to be ascertained when we took tenders, and ascertained what the service was worth and what Parliament would vote for it. Then we come to 1889, and in that session a subsidy was given to that very route. The next step in the transaction is that the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) charged that these were unfit vessels, very improper vessels, very unsuitable vessels. I may tell the Committee that not only were they the vessels to which the Imperial Government had been paying for years a much higher subsidy, proportionately, but that they were on that very route when Parliament voted that sum for them, and Parliament voted it knowing the boats were on the route, and that they were those boats that were doing the service, and without any thought of any other boats being employed for the purpose.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman said I had charged that no mail was carried between July and November. I made the charge; does he deny it?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This is what the hon. gentleman denies, that any mail was carried in 1888 when the boats were first put on.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) For the period between July and November when you paid them.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Minister of Finance declared the boats were put on in 1888, and that although there was no subsidy for them, they were given the carriage of the mails with the understanding that a subsidy would be granted. I presume it was referring to that statement, because it was referring to no other, that the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) said they did not carry a mail.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That, I repeat. I do not, however, want to be misunderstood. Tenders were called for in July; the contract was not entered into until December. When asked what time the contract was dated from, they asked to have it dated from November or December, and subsequently the Government paid $15,000 to the vessels for running between July and those dates in 1889, and I asserted they did not carry a mail between those dates. The hon. gentleman says that a year before they carried the mails.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in every point he has made. These vessels carried the mails in September and November, 1888. In the next place, the hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken in quoting from the papers, when he said they asked to be paid from some date in November, 1889. I will come to that in a moment.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). If the hon. gentleman will look at the papers he will see I am right.
