About Copper King Mattresses.

The frames are made of kiln dried white maple, and strong enough to withstand any strain. The fabrics are woven of the highest grade tinned mattress wire—reinforced with special copper woven bands—each mattress has three special cross wires running from side to side of the fabrics. This improvement distributes the load—an improvement found in no other mattress. We believe this is the best mattress on the market for comfort, costs less than many makes, and is always entirely satisfactory. Prices run from $2.75 up to $4.50.

In Matters of Dress.

It is The Correct Thing.

To dress according to one's means.

To avoid all extremes and eccentricities in dress.

To remember that neatness and scrupulous cleanliness are the fundamentals in a proper attire.

To pay dressmakers and seamstresses a fair price for their work To pay them promptly.

To avoid conspicuous attire on the street.

To dress in society as the occasion demands.

For people in moderate circumstances to avoid unpleasant comment by wearing inexpensive gowns in which good taste and a graceful style compensate for the want of cost.

To remember that one of the marks of a lady is to dress as one.

To keep one's clothes in perfect order.

To make a liberal use of soap and water.

To leave rouge to the green room where it is a necessary adjunct, and to the woman who has no reputation to be compromised.

To remember that tight lacing, and any device of the toilet which injures the health, is not only bad taste, but is positively wrong.

To remember that no lady, to say nothing of a Catholic worthy of the name, will wear a gown cut immodestly low.

To dress becomingly in the home circle.

To remember that the body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, and is therefore worthy of proper care.

To think less of adorning the body than the soul.

IT IS NOT THE CORRECT THING.

For a woman to spend more than she can afford on dress.

For a woman to spend the greater part of her time shopping, studying fashion-plates, devising costumes, and sewing.

To follow an ugly and unbecoming fashion.

For poor women to try to rival rich ones in matters of dress.

To haggle over a reasonable price for dressmaking and sewing.

To show disrespect to a hostess by appearing at her entertainments in unsuitable apparel.

To wear showy and expensive costumes at church.

To wear untidy costumes at church, as if anything were good enough for the house of God.

To wear torn stockings, ripped gloves, shoes with buttons off, gowns in need of dusting and renovating, hats out of date and unbecomingly soiled collars, cuffs, or ruching, and to make a liberal use of pins.

To use rouge on the cheeks, ink on the eyebrows, or blondine on the hair.

To forget that an immodest gown is a mark of low breeding.

—The Correct Thing for Catholics.

Marriage of the Marquis of Bute.

There were great rejoicings in Ireland and Scotland at the marriage of the Marquis of Bute and Miss Augusta Bellingham, which took place at the pretty little church of Kilsaran on July 6th. The people in the village of Castlebellingham and the district had been looking forward to the day with lively interest, and their artistic tastes were admirably applied in the preparations which had been made for the reception of the bride, the bridegroom and the fashionable gathering that assembled for the ceremony. Every house bore evergreens and flags, and signs of rejoicing in the form of arches of flags with complimentary mottoes were to be seen on the roads leading to the village. The bridegroom and his best man, Lord Ninian Stuart, drove to the Church at Kilsaran before ten o'clock. The Marquis's piper, who played various march tunes on the way, preceded them. Large crowds lined the route, and the Marquis as he passed was heartily cheered. He was in Highland costume, as were also Lord Londond and Captain Colin MacRae, who accompanied him to the church. Kneeling at a prie-dieu, the Marquis awaited the ceremony. The bride, who, accompanied by her father, Sir Henry Bellingham, arrived soon after ten o'clock, was greeted with loud cheering on approaching the church. At once the Scotch piper struck up the tune, "Happy we're all been together," and "An Invocation to the Holy Spirit" was effectively sung by the choir of Marlborough-street, Dublin, conducted by Mr Vincent O'Brien. Walking up the aisle, she took her place at the prie dieu. The church was very handsomely decorated with festoons and evergreens. The ceremony was performed by the Rev

Items of Interest.

Right Rev. Maxime De Colles, Bishop of the Diocese of Hyacinth, Canada, died on July 7.

During the late great riots at Odessa, in Russia, St. Gregory's Catholic Church was burned to the ground, and the priest in charge brutally beaten by the revolutionary hordes.

There are over 330 Masons in the French Chambers! Until these men are dismissed, little good can be expected for Catholic France. In the current issue of the "National Review" there is a luminous article on their work by the Rev. Dr. Barry.

A press despatch from the City of Mexico states that some two hundred French priests who have had to leave their native land are expected to arrive in Mexico shortly, and will remain in the republic permanently. Among them are many Jesuit fathers.

It is stated that on Queen Alexandra's recent visit to Marseilles, France, she went the first day to the church of Notre Dame de la Garde, accompanied by the Grand Duchess George of Russia, expressed her pleasure, examined the basilica throughout, "bent down, as if in prayer, before the sanctuary" and signed the roll of honor.

English exchanges record with deep regret the death of Rev. Michael Moloney, of Westminster Cathedral, London, Father Moloney was a leader in the Gregorian movement, and it was he who originated the summer school at Appuldurcombe, Isle of Wight. His name is on the programme as registrar for this year's sessions. An Irishman, fond of the ancient tongue of his country, he showed a great interest in the St. Patrick's Day service in Irish at Westminster Cathedral.

An appeal has been issued for papers and documents to promote the beatification of Right Rev. Dr. Hartmann, Vicar Apostolic of Patna, India, whose death, after many years of heroic and wondrously fruitful missionary labor, occurred in 1864. He was the founder of the "Catholic Examiner," of Bombay, and the author of a celebrated catechism in Hindustani, with a vocabulary and grammar. He also prepared an Urdu version of the New Testament. Bishop Hartmann was a member of the Capuchin Order.

There has been a long delay, says the London "Catholic Times," in issuing the new Vatican edition of the Plain Song which the Holy Father entrusted to a special commission working with the French Benedictines of Solesmes. The cause was that there have been two schools among the monks, each striving to get its own views adopted as the standard—the older school of Dom Pothier, to whose genius the revival is due, and Dom Mocquereau, who has artificialized the chant. Members of the former school declared that there was danger that, instead of practicability, archaology pure and simple might be brought into vogue in the Church by Dom Mocquereau and his party. But they are content now that the Pope has settled the question. By a letter written by the Cardinal Secretary of State to Dom Pothier, the venerable abbot has been appointed the sole responsible editor, and his edition of the "Graduale" of 1895 is the standard. This is regarded as a complete victory for the practical school.

"The following note reached a schoolmaster from a boy's father, informing him of the cause of his son's absence from school the previous day. It naturally caused some merriment, and, judging from the way he signed the epistle, it in no way flatters him. The note ran as follows: "Please excuse Tommy not being at school yesterday as he was kept at home to wash—his father."

The Ups and Downs of Marjorie.

BY MARY T. WAGAMAN.

(From the Ave Maria.)

XIV.—A DAY OF DISGRACE AND ITS ENDING.

And, though Marjorie could not accept Aunt Nanette's view of the situation, things looked gloomy enough for her, as the long day wore on, and her fate still seemed to be in doubt.

"Oh, Miss Susan will send me back to St. Vincent's, I know! And what will Mother and Sister Angela say when they hear I ran off with an old gypsy woman in the middle of the night?"

And, half-bewildered, half-awake, poor little Marjorie followed the gentle lady down the broad stairs to the sitting-room, where a tall, white-haired old gentleman sat talking to Miss Susan.

Aching Joints

In the fingers, toes, arms, and other parts of the body, are joints that are inflamed and swollen by rheumatism—that acid condition of the blood which affects the muscles also.

Sufferers dread to move, especially after sitting or lying long, and their condition is commonly worse in wet weather.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Removes the cause of rheumatism—no outward application can. Take it.

"My God, it is herself again!" It is Marjorie—my child, my child!" Then, for the first time in all her remembrance, bewildered little Marjorie was clasped in the strong arms that had suddenly regained all their life and vigor, and was held to a heart throbbing with fatherly love and grief and joy and remorse—all combined; while Miss Martha's gentle voice murmured, tremulously:

"Oh, thank God, you have found her! Thank God, our little Marjorie is blessed and safe at last!" What a bewildering evening it was for Marjorie! Half a dozen times she had to pinch herself sharply to be quite sure she was awake. It was so altogether novel a thing to be perched upon a grandfather's knee, with his arm about her waist and her curly head drawn upon his shoulder, as if he could not let her go even for a minute from his sight and hold!

"Oh, I wish for one thing so much!" said Marjorie, gaining courage as she felt the hand threading her red-brown curls with loving touch, "But it's a great big thing, grandfather."

"What 'great big thing' does my little girl want so much!" was the smiling question. "Asa Greene is going to take Manor Hill—all this home—from Miss Susan and Miss Martha."

"Never!" said the Judge, decidedly—"not while we have a pocket-book to save it, Marjorie. That's not a big wish at all. Think of something else."

"Oh, my poor little darling!"—the speaker's voice shook and he drew Marjorie with sudden tenderness to his heart. "Listen, my pet! These things are all past for you, my dear. You are to have no work, no cares, no troubles, Marjorie. I have houses and lands, and money more than I can spend, my little girl! And all is to be yours—all, all! Now make a big wish for your own sweet little self."

AN EXAMPLE OF THE DRAMATIC POWER OF THE GREAT ACTOR.

Lawrence Hutton in "Talks on a Library."

A good many years ago, no matter when, while Edwin Booth was playing a successful engagement in one of the leading theatres of the country, no matter where, I dropped into his dressing room one night during the course of the performance.

Marjorie, having at last found the "fairy wand" of her childish dreams, waved it lovingly and generously. Manor Hill was not only saved from Asa Greene, but bought outright by the Judge, on liberal terms, that made its old mistresses independent and comfortable; securing them a home for life with the little girl they had learned to love as their own; and giving them the happy assurance that, when they were gone, Marjorie would hold the dear old place as her most precious inheritance.

"And we'll build up the porch and prop the chimney, and—and—what else is to be done, Marjorie?" asked her grandfather, pinching her cheek as, perched on his knee, she looked over the big legal papers that had just been signed by the two old ladies with tears of joy and gratitude.

"Oh, fix everything!" said Marjorie. "Mow the lawn and plant the garden and mend the fences, and get Rex a new collar, and Job's new hat."

"How about new gowns and hats for Marjorie?" asked the Judge, smiling? "How about a pretty Phaeton with two grey ponies that a little girl can drive? You've been better than twenty doctors to me already, and I must pay for it."

"Not at all! I bought it for Miss Susan and Miss Martha, who have promised to take you and me in, since I sold our own home a dozen years ago and have been camping around in hotels ever since. Manor Hill is my business entirely. I've got those twenty doctor's bills to pay yet; for I was just getting ready to step into my grave when I found this little hand stretched out to make a new man of me. What would my little girl like best, since Manor Hill is safe?"

"Oh, said Marjorie, with dancing eyes, as she felt the fairy wand really in her grasp at last, I'd love to give the girls at St. Vincent's a party—a real party like Mrs. Grosvener's grandfather used to give; and white ice-cream, and chocolate cake, and little bags of candy all round. O grandfather dear!" she clasped her little hands excitedly, "could we give St. Vincent's an Easter party?"

The Vacant Place.

When the Patriarch of Venice became the Pope of Rome, it made a great change in the lives of his sisters, as well as in his own life. But the three devoted women who had been his housemates followed him, and happily found quarters in an old palace that faces St. Peter's and the Papal apartments in the Vatican.

From their terrace at a certain hour every morning, writes a correspondent of the Springfield Republican, they have the vision of a white-haired figure at a window, a figure whose wave of the hand opens their day gladly.

The Sarto Sisters have continued in Rome a custom of their Venetian days—hospitality. In their house there is ever a spare bedroom, and the table is always large enough for several additional persons. "We like it so," they explain, "if a friend comes he finds that he is not incommoding us. We make no difference all are welcome."

One evening a stranger was taken through the dining room to the terrace, and happening to cast his eye on the table, already laid, noticed that there were covers for four.

"I must hurry," he said to the maid. "The ladies I see have a guest for dinner."

"Where?" exclaimed the servant, startled. "They must have opened the door for him themselves!"

"I inferred so," said the other, "as there are places for four at the table."

The American truth teller was in from. "Talking of ants," he said, "we've got 'em as big as crabs out West. I guess I've seen 'em fight with long horns, which they use as lances, charging each other like savages."

"They don't compare to ants I saw in the East," said an inoffensive individual near by. "The natives have trained them as beasts of burden. One of 'em could trail a ton load for miles with ease. They work willingly, but occasionally they turned on their attendants and killed them."

"I say, old chap," said a shocked voice from the corner, "what sort of ants were they?"

"Elephants," said the quiet man.

Minard's Liniment Cures everything. Three city youths went out one day in the country fishing. Becoming very hungry, and having nothing with them to eat, they went into a wayside house and asked for something to eat and drink. The woman of the house got them three mugs of tea and some cake. One of the three youths, a bit of a wag, noticing the mugs, said:

"Eh, missus, where are the saucers?"

"Ah," said the woman, with a sly little twinkle in her humorous eye, "we don't give saucers to mugs."

"The wag said no more."

"No; he has put it into—let's see, what is it? Oh, I know. It's in shares!"
