

TEXAS TALK.

A Breeze from the Gulf Steamer.

Rev. T. Broad on the Lower Gulf Steamer - A Chat About the Crops, Weather, and Business Prospects.

FORT WORTH, TEXAS, March 17th, 1894.

Mr. Editor, - I have been a long time fulfilling my promise in writing you, but I thought I had better wait while sea as to be able from experience to give you an idea of this very fine state. It has now at least some knowledge of it, and can say it is a fine country. The cattle and sheep business is a very profitable one. Farmers are beginning to realize that this is an agricultural country also, for with the improved method of farming, as practiced north, of thoroughly cultivating the soil, instead of just skinning the surface with one horse, and plowing their seed in a rough manner, planting also wheat and other cereals, vegetables, etc., instead of confining their crops to cotton, and corn, and planting also 10 acres where they used plant but one; the country is being well tilled.

CROPS ARE DIVERSIFIED and abundant. Rains come as a rule opportunistly and often abundantly. The summers sometimes are rather hot and dry, and with many of the products they raise two crops a year. The seasons are very long, so that there is a failure at one time, they can very likely make it up another. Thus, with the advantage of long seasons, and mild winters, the profits arising from cattle, sheep, goats, and hogs, the diversified productions of the soil, make it so that the farmer need not be afraid to come and invest in Texas lands. I have now an opportunity of judging what a Texas' winter is like. It is really delightful with one exception, it is a little too changeable. There is sufficient cold to make it healthy. The "norther" is very bracing and with the keen frost it frees the atmosphere from the malarial gas fatal in some of the Southern States.

WE HAD BEAUTIFUL WEATHER up to New Year, and the beginning of February was our winter in this part of the state. Our coldest spell lasted about 10 days - a long time without a chance for a thaw, four or five days at a time being the average. The cold is simply severe; I think this winter 6 above zero sometimes, but the intervals are really beautiful. The changes usually takes place about every five or six days. The winter is very much like most of our Canadian springs. Now it is spring. Spring sowing vegetables are up. Turnips, onions, and greens remain in the ground all winter. Farmers can plow nearly all winter. In fact it is their busiest time; preparing for their spring crops. They have already sown their grain. Wheat is looking well, corn is up, also potatoes and other vegetables. Peaches and wild plum trees are out in blossom, also the wild flowers, trees are beginning to look green. It rains about every 10 or 12 days. March has been without storm, but that is a very backward spring. Since Christmas, trade has been rather dull, which I am told is always the case for a month or two. It is reviving again now, but there has been no lull in

THE LAND BOOM. Farm and city property is going at a rapid rate. People are coming from all parts. Capitalists are investing large sums of money; they form joint stock companies. One man, an Australian I am told, has invested already $25,000, and has sent after $70,000 more to invest right in this city. A friend of mine the other day bought a piece of property for $1,500 and sold it a little while after for $2,500. Another instance that has come under my own notice. Ten years ago a man bought, or had built, a large store costing him $10,000. A few weeks ago he sold it to another company for $25,000, he renting it one year and paying $5,000 rent. This may seem incredible, but it is true.

People who have the best opportunity of knowing foretell a golden future for Texas. It is only necessary to read the accounts of the doings and sayings of the Texas government, and that at Washington relating to Texas, also the statement made by tourists from other States and countries, the improvements of the past five years, and the improvements contemplated in the future, there are now

FOUR DIFFERENT RAILWAYS coming into this city, and doing a flourishing business; and there are two or three more contemplated. A large amount of money is to be expended in deepening the gulf at Galveston, while arrangements have been made with one of the ocean steamship companies to form direct communication with that city, which will be a great acquisition to Texas. This with the wealth brought into it, the advancement of enterprise, the improved methods of farming, the fertility, and richness of the soil, its diversified productions, its long seasons and beautiful climate, make it a region desirable to live in, as well as points out the future greatness of the country. The more I know of Texas the better I am compelled to like it. I use the term compelled, as it is the facts that compel me. The different railway companies, and there are eight or ten of them in the State, are doing a great deal to help to build it up. The Gould system, and that completed, owns and controls the largest part of the railroads in the State, have done a great deal for it. Its officials as a rule are obliging, and very attentive to business, and they own some of the best land in the State, and their land regulations are within the reach of all; the long time, and easy terms give even a poor man a good chance. I know some who have bought them and well pleased. Also many who do not want to sell will rent. I know one man who will lease 600 acres of fine farming and pasture lands for three or four years for fencing a ground, and if a man builds a house to live in worth $300 or $400, he will give them $200 back when the lease is out. But one need not lease very long. He can soon get a farm of his own. With kind love to all. I remain yours, T. BROAD

PRINCE LEOPOLD.

His Royal Highness Expresses Suddenly at Cannes.

Abbey of the Holy Trinity, Cannes, France, March 17th, 1894.

London, March 22. - Prince Leopold, youngest son of the queen, died suddenly this morning at Cannes, France. Death was due to the effects of a fall from his horse which occurred last evening.

The queen is profoundly affected by the death of Prince Leopold. The prince died in a city he was starting for Darmstadt to attend the wedding of his niece, Princess Victoria of Hesse. The residence of the Prince of Wales is besieged by people calling to express condolence. The curfew bell at Windsor castle was tolled at half past seven this evening.

The queen, receiving the ex-Emperor Eugenie, clasped her in her arms and was evidently much consoled by her sympathy. Telegrams of condolence are arriving from all parts of the world. The body of the Prince of Wales will be embalmed and conveyed to England, where it will be buried at Frogmore. The cause of the duke's death was effusion of blood into the stomach and lungs. These were no unusual pronouncements, but the symptoms have long been threatening.

The late prince was the most intelligent, the most earnest, the most highly cultured of the sons of the Prince Consort, and he is said to have resembled his father in many of his characteristics. At the time of Prince Albert's death, Prince Leopold was only in his ninth year, having been born April 7, 1853, and being consequently at the time of his demise very near the completion of his thirty-first year. His royal highness filled the position of private secretary to the queen and in many ways occupied the position of confidential minister. In this office he manifested a faithfulness to the sovereign on the one side, and a courteousness to all on the other side with whom he came in contact that he won universal respect and admiration.

Prince Leopold had little heart, it is said, for political questions, at any rate for political war; he had no love, and was willing to leave the strife for others to engage in. Still he had his own opinions, and sometimes made them felt. In the negotiations with different states, he was during the ministerial interregnum of 1880 he was actively and no doubt usefully employed, and it is whispered that much of the alleged personal dislike of her majesty to the present premier is due to his not finding favor in the eyes of Prince Leopold. Much of the political effort has been in the direction of education in its relation to the masses. He has grasped this important subject with a mind free from prejudices and a will resolved only upon good. Toward religion the deceased prince had strong predilections. At one time he entertained serious thoughts of taking holy orders and his whole life was shaped very much in harmony with the feelings that led him to consider the propriety of taking such a step.

A letter written by Queen Victoria soon after the birth of the prince explains why he was named Leopold. The letter was written before that month closed, and was addressed to Leopold, king of the Belgians and Victoria's uncle. In this letter she writes: "BORN Prince Leopold, April, 1853. - I can report most favorably of myself, for I have never been better or stronger. Stockmer will have told you that Leopold is to be the name of our fourth young gentleman. It is a mark of love and affection of which I hope you will not disapprove. It is a name which is dear to me after Albert's, and one which recalls the almost only happy days of my sad childhood. To hear 'Prince Leopold' again will make me think of those days! His other names will be George Duncan Albert, and the sponsors the queen, Ernest Hohenzollern, the prince of Prussia and Mary Cambridge. George is after the king of Hanover and Duncan is a compliment to dear Scotland.

The christening of the prince took place with the usual ceremony in the private chapel at Buckingham palace. King George of Hanover composed the hymn and music for the occasion, and during the remainder of his life evinced the greatest interest in his favorite godson. Soon after the christening the royal family, including the Queen and Prince Albert, were prostrated by that popular disease of children, the measles. Strange to say, the little prince escaped; but when at eight years of age he was attacked by the same disease in so malignant a form that he barely recovered from its effects. As soon as he was able to endure the journey it was decided by the court physicians to send him to France for a change of climate. After his return to England he was for many years seldom absent from the queen's residence. When she visited the king of the Belgians, or journeyed to Cobourg, Leopold accompanied her. Whether she stayed at Lucerne or returned to Rosenau - a place sacred to her from its associations with the early life of her husband - the child of her heart was there also. It is characteristic of her that she should select this son - whose delicate health had for so many years been a continual source of anxiety - and make him the one central object of her love and care. The prince was educated by Eton tutors and spent three years at Oxford university.

In 1880 Prince Leopold visited this country, He came in company with the Princess Louise, and after spending some weeks in Canada made an extended tour through the States. He was present at the convention which nominated the late President Garfield. On his return to Canada he went into camp with the viceregal party in the Restigouche, where he would have been slighted to an ordinary healthy man, but for a few months. The accident consisted of a wrench to the knee, which developed a tendency to white swelling. Throughout his life the prince suffered from an obscure disease. On the slightest provocation the blood would exude from the vessels. It is said that one of the skins was absent from his person and that this was the cause of his weakness. He was married April 27, 1882, to the Princess Helena of Waldeck. The nuptials were celebrated in St. George's chapel with royal magnificence. A daughter, Alice Mary Victoria, was born of this union Feb. 12, 1883. The prince's health was shattered by the death of her husband, the Princess Alice, and now her youngest son and constant companion.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

A Stirring Sermon by the Rev. Dr. Will. The crowd on Sunday evening was the largest that had ever been in Bond street church for weeks, while fully one thousand were unable to obtain admission.

THE SERMON. And be not drunk with wine which excites, but be filled with the spirit - 1st Cor. xiv. 4. In judging of what we see and hear, everything depends upon the spirit we possess when we undertake the judging. If a good Methodist mother were to be taken to a dance for the first time, and were to see a crowd whirling madly about and prespiring with the effort, she would naturally enquire why they did such foolish things. To her it would be a ridiculous and nonsensical sight, while those who were dancing would think it was charming. If a quaker lady, in her simplicity of dress, were to see a man in a fashionable belle with her feet encased in tight shoes, her waist compressed with corsets, her face powdered and painted, her ears and fingers jewelled, her hair fringed, frizzed and curled, the quaker would be lost in wonderment, and fail to see any religion in such a superabundance of attire, while the belle, on the other hand, would perhaps despise her critic. It is just the spirit that is in us that will guarantee the judgment we will give. So the salvation army must appear ridiculous to outsiders, but it does not follow that they are so. What is sublime to one is ridiculous to another. To the salvationists their conduct is law and order, and it is only to the cold, critical, cynical man who does not feel the love of God that it seems nonsensical. If respectable business men in Toronto will smash the windows of a broker's office in a wild rush for Manitoba land where dollars and cents is concerned, then give the salvation army freedom to save souls in their own way.

The army must appear very irregular to those churches that are entrenched in form. No gowns, no surplices, no robes, but on the contrary, they evince a remarkable freedom of action. Like nearly all religious sects, they have adopted a special dress which some object to, yet what about the episcopalian and catholic churches in this respect? Take Dr. Sullivan, the eloquent and clever bishop of Algoma. As soon as he accepted his office he was arrayed in a peculiar garb that in the eyes of the speaker disgraced his many forms. There's a meaning in the form, is there any effect? There's a meaning in the regimental garb to the salvationists. The excessive mummery to be seen in a catholic church is the sublimest thing in the world to them; it is the height of spiritual etiquette. The test of all these dresses comes in existence because the lower classes were unclean in religious matters, but in time the church became proud and wealthy and then God raised up the salvation army to carry on the work among the neglected. They, too, in time will crystallize, organize, and weaken and cease to exist as it is now, and the day will again come when another army will be needed.

The army has a work and a place. They do a work he (the preacher) was ashamed to do, and in making that confession he was doing so for a great many others. In building a house everyone would like to be the superintendent and none the hod-carriers, but the latter were just as honorable and essential. He would say, God speed them in their social of the old, old story, and in their efforts for the salvation of souls. In conclusion a brief history of the rapid rise of the army was given, together with some notable cases of conversion.

A Case Much Talked Of. The case of John Morrison, of St. Ann's N.S., who was afflicted with a serious dropsical disease of the kidneys. The best medical aid having failed, his life was despaired of. Two bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters cured him. His statement is vouched for by J. D. McLeod, J. P., who knew of his condition. The cure is considered marvellous in his town. 2c From the Liver and Kidneys arise fully half the sickness. Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters stimulates both Liver and Kidneys and insures one against disease; it is not an alcoholic stimulant. In large bottles at 50 cents. m Thousands bear witness to the positive curative powers of the GREAT GERMAN INVIGORATOR, the only remedy that has proved itself a specific for general debility, neuralgia, weakness, impotency, etc., and all diseases that arise from self-abuse or overtaxed brain, finally ending in consumption, insanity and a premature grave. Sold by all druggists, or will be sent free on receipt of $1.00 per box, or six boxes for $5. - address F. J. CHERRY, Toronto, Ont., sole agents for the United States. Send for circular and testimonials of genuine cure. Geo. Rhynas, Goderich.

Headaches and Rashes. The first article of the Tory creed is that Sir John is a snobbish, stupid and more capable than any Brit that ever lived. The chiefest of a martinet is the great beast of the party heeler, who chuckles with delighted appreciation at every sally manure and stroke of sharp penmanship of his long and tortuous nose. It is surprising that a generation of politicians who have grown up under the tutelage of these men, who have been educated in the same schools, and who have been brought up with the same measures taken to ensure it, should be disposed to regard with leniency, if not with actual approbation, such projects as the bribery conspiracy? The latter discreditable scheme is the direct outcome of the low standard of public morality fostered by Tory here-orthodoxy. It is the example of Sir John that the Wilkinsons and their tribe seek to emulate, but, having neither the ability nor the cunning of the arch-trickster, they meet with expense and contempt in the place of admiration. - Toronto News, (Ind.)

Sunday Observance in England. The lords have had an unusual debate on the subject of the opening of museums on Sundays. Lord Thurlow led the debate in favor of the bill. He urged that the time had gone by when strict Sabbatarian views could be allowed to stand in the way of measures involving social progress; that a change of occupation was the greatest recreation, and that to the hard working mechanic a few hours spent in a museum on Sunday were as good a healthy recreation and a rest. The Earl of Shaftesbury opposed the measure on strictly religious and moral grounds. He urged that the bill was a blow at the sanctity of the Sabbath and contrary to the tone and instinct of the English mind. Lord Powerscourt supported the bill, and the Duke of Somerset opposed it. The Duke of Westminster, speaking in favor of the bill, pronounced the opposition ill-judged. He maintained that changes were imminent, to which their lordships could not close their eyes, and that it was a suicidal policy of the house to oppose progressive measures. He was followed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, who opposed it on religious grounds. Ultimately the bill was rejected by a majority of eight.

An Unpropitious Family. Is one that has not that valuable remedy Haggard's Yellow Oil in the house for accidents and emergencies. It cures colds, croup, sore throat, deafness, rheumatism, neuralgia, chilblains, burns, bruises and all painful injuries. 2c Treatment of Balky Horses. Any one observing the inhuman treatment often bestowed upon balky horses, will indorse the following persuasive measure recommended by the German-town Telegraph. To these remedies others may be added, but the ground is sufficiently covered by these hints to meet all ordinary cases of the sulks in horses. As long as we can remember this singular fit of obstinacy in the horse has been discussed, and all sorts of plans given for overcoming it. It must be remembered that what will prove a remedy for one horse will not for another. The original cause of it is, doubtless, neglect and ill treatment of the colt, or after it has been broken to harness. Sometimes stopping a few moments will be sufficient to start the animal again of its own accord. Kind words, patting, a handful of hay or grass, an apple, or a little black pepper on the tongue, will induce it to go ahead as if nothing had been the matter. Whipping, at all times, and especially in this case, is the worst resort. We have ourselves induced balky horses to quietly start by some of these means, and one was entirely cured of it by letting it stand until it was on a gain of its own will. Sometimes the mere turning of the head and letting the animal look in a different direction, or rubbing the nose, has answered; so has tying a string around the foreleg below the knee and drawing it rather tight. Various resorts of this kind should be adopted, but never force.

Freeman's Worm Powders destroy and remove worms without injury to adult or infant. Did She Die? "No," she lingered and suffered along, "pining all the time for years, the doctors doing her no good; and at last was 'cared by this Hop Bitters the papers say so much about. Indeed! indeed!" "How thankful we should be for that 'medicine'."

Almost every pill contains calomel and other mineral compounds. Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters is purely vegetable and takes the place of all other purgatives. In large bottles at 50 cents. m The hectic flush, pale hollow cheeks and precarious appetite indicate Worms. Freeman's Worm Powders will quickly and effectually remove them. 1m Cremation has been gaining ground in England ever since Justice Stephens ruled that it was lawful. The London city authorities have resolved to establish a crematory at Ilford, a suburb of the East End, on the recommendation of the medical officers that cremation is the least objectionable of all the known methods of disposing of the dead.

Is the only instantaneous relief for: Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, etc. Rubbing a few drops briskly is all that is needed. No taking nauseous medicines for weeks, but one minute's application removes all pain and will prove the great value of Kram's Fluid Lightening. 25 cents per bottle at George Rhynas' drug store. b The editor of the Wingham Advance denies that he ever visited Blyth, with the intention of starting a newspaper there. Eustace, the Outcast.

CHAPTER II.

LOVE, TRUTH AND SCHEMING AMBITION.

Of course, the most natural thing for Eustace to do was to return on the following day to the cottage of the Somervilles to enquire if Lilia had suffered...

Indeed, when the difference in their station is taken into account, it is difficult to conceive that in a casual way an intimacy could ever have been established between them...

Could she possibly do other than admire the brave, generous youth, who had risked his own life to save hers?

Therefore she did admire him, and that most cordially. In his presence she forgot all about his rank, and was conscious only of his great and noble nature...

And Eustace, what was his state of thought and feeling? Ah, he had entered what seemed to him a very paradise. The unveiling before his special eyes of a heart and soul so pure, so sweet, truthful and lovely...

She found, however, that Mr. Graham was a man who was to be little influenced by affection, and that one of his ideas connected with the establishment of family greatness was hereditary right...

At the same time his mother never ceased to instill into his mind the idea that he might possibly after all be the heir of Bengarry. Eustace might die, or he might in some way offend his father...

Lilia was quite capable of bearing her part in such communion, for her uncle, the minister, had given her a good education, and her mind was not only well-stored, but cultivated and refined.

Only one result could follow from all this, and it had been shown on any side the intercourse would have terminated almost as soon as it had commenced. But who could expect prudence from young, warm hearted, inexperienced folks like Eustace and Lilia?

Eustace, having finished his education, was directed by his father to come to Bengarry, and there take up his permanent residence. Mr. Graham and his eldest son had seen very little of each other, but the father took it for granted that the youth had been brought up in a manner suitable to his exalted station...

But Willy was young likewise, and had no very exalted notions of mere rank or station. He admired Eustace exceedingly, not because he was the laird's son, but because he had the qualities he had indicated, and these with Willy were not only the highest and best things in any man, but they were what the lowest born might have as well as the highest, and the possession of which produced an equality which neither title nor wealth could destroy.

So that holding ideas such as these, Willy thought there was no harm in the world in his sister associating frequently with Eustace Graham. And thus, no other party having a right to interfere being cognizant of what was going on, the interviews continued, till Eustace and Lilia were so deeply in love as ever were two true loving hearts in this world.

When we said that no party, having the right to interfere was cognizant of what was going on, we ought to have added that a certain party, deeply interested in the matter, was kept fully informed of the whole affair, and kept a silent, anxious watch on the lovers, frequently hoping that Eustace would not only cherish a deep affection for Lilia, but get so involved as to make it impossible for him to give her up.

This was his step-mother, his father's second wife, a selfish, calculating, and designing woman, whose secret ambition was to see her son Randolph made heir to the estate. The first Mrs. Graham, the mother of Eustace, died more than twenty years before the opening of our story, leaving two children, a boy and a girl. The boy grew into the strong manly Eustace, the girl died at the age of six, but not before her governess managed to entangle Mr. Graham in her meshes, and draw from him the offer of his hand—an offer which it is needless to say was very promptly accepted. The fruit of this marriage was one son, born when Eustace was four years of age.

In due time his second wife also made him the father of a boy, and he had some thoughts of calling him by his own plain name of John; but this proposition the vain designing mother would in no wise listen to, and suggested the noble Scotch name of Randolph, which name was accordingly bestowed on him at the baptismal font.

The upbringing of Randolph was left solely to his mother, but Mr. Graham more especially systematised the rearing of Eustace, who was to be educated for his important and exalted position. At the age of twelve he was put under the charge of the minister of a parish, some twelve miles distant from Bengarry, with instructions from his father to train and discipline him for the station he was to fill, an injunction which the good old minister interpreted in a very Christian end, and inculcated in the heart and mind of his young charge lofty and generous principles, true thoughts and feelings and views of life more in accordance with the reality of things than with the proud conventional notions of aristocratic society.

It thus happened that Eustace was separated from his family, an arrangement with which Mrs. Graham was well pleased, for she hoped that the father's affection would thereby be alienated from this eldest born and concentrated on her own son, thus promoting her secret views and rendering far after operations the more easy.

She found, however, that Mr. Graham was a man who was to be little influenced by affection, and that one of his ideas connected with the establishment of family greatness was hereditary right. The eldest son was the proper heir to the property, and nothing but the most atrocious behavior on his part would, he well knew, cause him to divert it to Randolph.

The training of Randolph being left to herself, was of most pernicious character, for she taught him to dislike, if not absolutely to hate, his absent brother, and to look at him as one who would deprive him of a substantial inheritance that he had the same right to, and yet would not receive, just because he chanced to be born a few years later.

At the same time his mother never ceased to instill into his mind the idea that he might possibly after all be the heir of Bengarry. Eustace might die, or he might in some way offend his father so far as to forfeit the inheritance, in which latter case Randolph would be made heir by a settlement.

The latter eagerly listened to these evil suggestions. He partook largely of his mother's nature, and was in addition proud, haughty, insolent and revengeful. His soul was of the meanest, his his passions were debased, and to those whom he counted his inferiors, or over whom he had power, his behavior was most tyrannical.

When he grew up it was considered necessary by his father that he, being the younger son, should choose a profession, and at his own wish he entered the navy, and was at the time our story opens a junior officer on board a man-of-war.

Eustace, having finished his education, was directed by his father to come to Bengarry, and there take up his permanent residence. Mr. Graham and his eldest son had seen very little of each other, but the father took it for granted that the youth had been brought up in a manner suitable to his exalted station and was imbued with notions becoming a country gentleman and the heir to such a noble estate as Bengarry. He was of an age now when his long-cherished plans and expectations respecting him were to be carried out, and he was impelled to purpose for this special and all-important purpose.

Of course the marriage of Eustace held an essential place in his father's plans, and he had settled it in his own mind that he must form an alliance with one of the good families in the neighborhood—may, he had even selected the girl who was to be his son's wife.

Not far from Bengarry was the estate of Kinmuir, whose owner had a large family of daughters, and it was his design that Eustace should marry one of these. There were four of them, and though he had himself a preference for Mary, the second in point of age, he was resolved to allow Eustace to make his choice out of the quaterion.

The youth had come to reside thus permanently at Bengarry only a few weeks before the incident recorded in the last chapter, through which he formed an acquaintance with Lilia Somerville. Mrs. Graham had treated him with a parent's kindness, but in secret she was intensely chagrined, and bitterly hated him. His robust, healthy frame, his manly disposition, his frank, generous, upright nature, increased this hatred still more, for she saw that they gave her but a faint prospect for her son Randolph.

But she was not to be deterred from cherishing her secret ambition, and her subtle mind to work with a view to accomplish the ruin and disgrace of herself. She narrowly watched him in the house and in society, and had also the means—through the agency of another—of receiving information as to his movements out of doors.

It was not long, therefore, till she was made aware of his intercourse with Lilia Somerville, and the hope sprung at once into her heart that the intercourse would land him in disgrace, or better still that Lilia would do, what she herself had done with Mr. Graham, and inveigle him into a marriage, in which case her ambitious wish would most certainly be crowned with success.

Most careful, therefore, was she to prevent Mr. Graham from hearing in what manner Eustace spent the most of his days, and she did everything she possibly could to promote a free and uninterrupted intercourse between Eustace and Lilia.

And thus the lovers had every opportunity of meeting together and indulging in that sweet and rapturous communion of soul which had now become to them so precious. As yet Eustace had not expressed his love in formal words, but Lilia was in no doubt as to its existence. She knew that the affection of his great and noble heart was centered in her and that he was altogether given to her in turn, and therefore she was very truthful and very happy. Poor, simple, loving girl, she had no cloud of doubt and fear to trouble her. She was too guileless to anticipate and dread future consequences. Knowing Eustace to be so good and tender and great, she cherished no forbodings, but suffered her heart day by day to twine more closely and confidently round his, and repose upon his love with fullest trust and satisfaction.

But during this sweet and happy period Eustace was not without his thoughts of the future. Often during the hours he spent apart from Lilia he reflected on the state of matters which his intercourse with her had produced. Of their mutual love he likewise entertained no doubt, and had settled it in his own mind as a matter of course that Lilia must be his wife. But would his father be pleased with the choice he had made was a question he sometimes asked of himself. He well knew that it was his father's wish that he should marry Mary Maxwell, the daughter of the laird of Kinmuir, and he might therefore feel disappointed when he learned that it was not on whom he had set his heart, but on an humble, virtuous cottage girl.

That evening, as the sun, shining in a cloudless sky, was dipping down towards the western mountains, he emerged from the wood just behind the cottage of the Somervilles, and passed where, at a little distance stood Willy in his boat, which floated in the shadow of the precipitous bank. The youth was too intently engaged watching the water to observe his friend, and Eustace, after gazing a moment or two across the desert, the golden sunshine lighting up his many faces, which glowed at the moment with a lover's ardent animation.

Lilia sat sewing in a little room, the window of which looked westward, and here, too, the summer radiance streamed in, making her fair countenance bright and beaming, and revealing the quiet depth of happiness which dwelt in her heart.

She started when she heard the well-known footstep on the gravel path without, and her face flushed with pleasure, and her eyes beamed still more brightly as she caught a glimpse of the loved face passing on towards the open door.

In another moment Eustace had crossed the threshold and she rose to meet him. She manifested neither confusion nor bashfulness at the meeting, nor did she seek to disguise her gladness at his coming.

'How can you sit inside?' he gently exclaimed, 'while such a glorious evening passing without?'

'Because Willy has not returned,' she answered simply.

'But the evening meal is prepared, and waiting his arrival,' remarked Eustace, glancing at the dishes on the table, and the teapot simmering by the side of the fire.

'Then come and let us have a stroll, and see the grandeur of the sunset.'

Lilia, with undignified happiness put on her bonnet, and they left the cottage. Eustace drew her arm within his, and led her silently to the eminence at the edge of the wood in which he was reclining when he saw her fall into the water.

Here they sat down on the thick grass, with the dark wood just behind them, and so near that the branches of the outermost tree hung above their heads.

'I have brought you here tonight for a special purpose,' he said. 'I wish to have declared in words that mutual love which I am sure we cherish. I think, Lilia, our hearts are given away to each other, though no confession of the sweet remembrance has escaped our lips. But why should we longer keep silent, and rob ourselves of the sweetest endearments by which avowed love is so exquisitely enhanced? The fault has been mine, I confess. I should ere this have shaped into words the warm affection that you must have seen and felt existing in my heart. Let me do so now. Let me say how at the very first I was struck by your beauty and charmed by your goodness. How I was drawn irresistibly to seek your society, and how day by day your rare qualities of heart and mind revealed themselves to me, causing me to rejoice in the blessing of your companionship. As you I found those thoughts, feelings and sentiments, which responded to my own, and with a thrilling gladness the conviction seized me that my heart had discovered an object to love with all the strength and ardor of which it is capable. Willingly, joyfully, I gave myself up to the blessed influence of your companionship, and have dreamed that to you I am not indifferent. Tell me, Lilia, have I dreamed aright? May I hear you say that my love is returned? Will you be my wife?'

How well Lilia knew all that he was going to say even before he uttered it. He had already and often said the same thing in many silent, nameless, but unmistakable ways, and she was confident that at the time which seemed to him right he would speak as he had spoken now; yet, oh! it was rapturous to re-define thus upon his bosom, to feel his arm drawing her towards him, and his lips uttering the love which she was certain lived in his soul. She heard with a delicious, swooning kind of delight, every syllable that fell from him, and when he ceased to speak, she slowly raised her head, and turned upon him eyes swimming with a soft, lustrous rapture.

'Yes,' she nobly answered, 'yes, Eustace, I love you, and it will be the greatest earthly joy I can experience to be your wife.'

He opened wide his arms, and she throwing herself again upon his bosom, was folded in a close and fond embrace. For some moments neither spoke, their hearts being too full for words; but by-and-by he bent down, drew her face to his own and pressed a warm kiss on her trembling lips—trembling with the very excess of maidenly joy.

'My own dear, darling Lilia,' he whispered.

'Dear Eustace,' she murmured, and again there followed some moments of speechless rapture.

'What unspeakable rapture is ours, were the next words of Eustace. 'It is almost too great for endurance,' returned Lilia. 'I dare not fully indulge in it. I fear that a cloud may come upon our joy. Your father—he will not approve of your choice? You are rich and high born. I am poor and humble. Oh, Eustace, he may separate us.'

'Never,' cried Eustace, pressing her again to his bosom. 'What are wealth and rank compared with love and happiness? These are higher far than the other, and are not love and happiness ours, my darling?'

'Oh, yes,' she answered, 'but others may not think and feel as we do. Oh that you were poor, Eustace—ay, a poor working man like Willy. I would then know that no one would try to part us.'

'Dismiss such fears, my darling,' he soothingly murmured. 'I do not anticipate that my father will try to part us when he knows how good you are, and how entirely I love you. But should he ever feel so unjust as to desire such a thing, you do not think so meanly of me to imagine that I would forsake you at his bidding? I swear to you, Lilia, that no power on earth shall separate us. I am now yours, and you are mine forever. See, the sun is about to set behind the purple hills—let him carry with him the record of our betrothal. Shall we not declare in the sight of this glorious earth and radiant heaven, that our hearts are eternally united, and that our love and constancy shall never be destroyed?'

With a low murmur of joy the happy Lilia threw herself upon his throbbing bosom, and they breathed in each others ears vows of eternal devotion, while the last rays of the setting sun shone upon their heads, as if heaven was witnessing with an approving smile their sacred and solemn betrothal.

Long they sat in that hallowed spot till the shadows of twilight stole silently over the scene, and the silvery stars came forth in the soft night sky, and the great hush of the even-distant noontide hills stood silent sentinels at the western gates of heaven.

Then they rose, and the fond arm of Eustace twined round the lovely form of Lilia, they left the grassy bank, and full of measureless happiness sought the cottage below.

Scarcely had their dim figures vanished down the slope when a rustic was heard in a hazel bush close behind where they had sat, and the head and shoulders of a man were lifted up from the ground to gaze after them.

This man, whoever he was, had been an eye and ear witness of all that had taken place; and as he rose from his lair and entered the wood a hush, discordant chuckle came from his husky throat, and mingled strangely with the lingering echoes of the vows of love that had just been breathed like music through the fragrant air.

Such is a Little. Many proprietary medicines, if they cure at all, require such a large quantity to produce effect that it makes them very uncertain and expensive remedies. Not so with Burdock Blood Bitters. It is highly concentrated, and for all diseases of blood, liver and kidneys, one or two bottles will cure more than gallons of the weak mixtures usually sold. Send for facts and figures.

A Gentleman. 'What is meant by these familiar expressions, "He is a gentleman," "He is no gentleman?" They do not mean that the man has or has not a grandfather who is a nobody; or that he is dressed or not dressed by an artistic tailor; that he is wealthy or poor, or that he is in the use of a certain conventional phrases. What do they mean? Here is an excellent definition: A gentleman is just a gentleman; no more, no less; a diamond polished that was first a diamond in the rough. A gentleman is gentle. A gentleman is modest. A gentleman is courteous. A gentleman is slow to take offence, as being one who never gives it. A gentleman is slow to surmise evil, as being one who never thinks it. A gentleman subjects his appetites. A gentleman refines his taste. A gentleman controls his speech. A gentleman deems every other better than himself.

The following description of a gentleman was written about eighteen hundred years ago, in a letter to certain persons at Philippi, and, in our judgment, is as accurate now as it was then: "Whatever things are true, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think of these things."

The well known strengthening properties of Iron, combined with other tonics and a most perfect nerve, are found in Carter's Iron Pills, which strengthen the nerves and body, and improve the blood and complexion.

Having his Evening. S. Webb, of Aubert, Ont., had a most distressing cough for six months, during which he was under medical advice. But still he grew worse and worse and his case was given up. He bought two bottles of Dr. Wilson's Pulmonary Cherry Balsam, and after using them was able to earn his own living. It is the very best cure for all manner of coughs and colds and all forms of disease of the lungs and air passages. It cuts away the phlegm soothes the inflammation, and tones up the system.

Little Things. Seem to constitute the very essence of life. The little drops of water uniting form the mighty ocean, and a hundred examples might be cited to prove how important after all are these little things. Now, corns are small affairs. Little sympathy is expected, though they should be a source of agony to the unhappy possessor. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor is a small affair, yet by its perfect, speedy and painless action it has gained the good will and kind words of thousands who have used it. Don't take the dangerous substitutes offered by some, but see that it is made by Polson & Co., Kingston. Safe, sure, painless.

Home Items. "All your own fault. If you can't get on with your own Get hot bits that never fail. The weakest woman, smallest child and sickest invalid can use hop bits with safety and great good. Old men tottering around from Rheumatism, kidney trouble or any weakness will be almost new by using hop bits. My wife and daughter were made healthy by the use of hop bits and I recommend them to my people. —Methodist Clergyman.

Ask any good doctor if hop bits are not the best family medicine on earth. Malarial fever, Ague and Biliousness, will leave every neighborhood as soon as hop bits arrive. My mother drove the paralysis and neuralgia all out of her system with hop bits. —Ed. Oswego Sun.

Keep the kidneys healthy with hop bits and you need not fear sickness. Ice water is rendered harmless and more refreshing and reviving with hop bits in each draught. The vigor of youth for the aged and infirm in hop bits.

In the history of medicines no preparation has received such universal commendation for the alleviation it affords, and the permanent cure it effects in kidney diseases, as Dr. Van Buren's Kidney Cure. Its action in these distressing complaints is simply wonderful. Sold by J. Wilson.

Ho-wild-phosphoric-acid-of-the-weak-er, leaves-off-the-children-and-over-comes-and-catche-rod-difficult-to-be-overcome. If you follow this plan, perhaps your reason is taking: Hilyard's Botanical Balsam. It is the best remedy for the throat and chest and long remedies known to medical sciences.

Is long distanced by a 10-cent bottle of Polson's Nervine, the power and best pain remedy. It cures colds, cramps, colic, pain in the head, vertigo, pain in the chest; in fact it is equally efficacious as an intersting external remedy. Try a 10-cent bottle of Polson's Nervine, the power and best pain remedy. Sold at J. Wilson's. Large bottles only 25 cents. Try a sample bottle of Nervine, only ten cents.

Why should a man whose blood is warm within Sit to his grass-cut in his abator? Or let his hair grow rusty, scald and thin. When "Crestal" is used, it will make you grow the faster. For sale by J. Wilson.

AYER'S Sarsaparilla. cures Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Rheumatic Gout, General Debility, Catarrh, and all diseases caused by a thin and impoverished, or corrupted, condition of the blood; expelling the blood-poisons from the system, enriching, and restoring the blood, and restoring its vitalizing power. During a long period of unparalleled usefulness, AYER'S SARSAPARILLA has proven its perfect adaptation to the cure of all diseases originating in poor blood and a weakened vitality. It is a highly concentrated extract of Sarsaparilla and other blood-purifying roots, combined with iodide of Potassium and Iron, and is the safest, most reliable, and most economical blood-purifier and blood-maker that can be used.

Inflammatory Rheumatism Quoted. "AYER'S SARSAPARILLA has cured me of the Inflammatory Rheumatism, with which I have suffered for many years. W. H. MOORE, Durham, Ia., March 2, 1882.

"Eight years ago I had an attack of Rheumatism so severe that I could not see from the bed, or dress, without help. I tried several remedies without much if any relief, until I bought AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, by the use of two bottles of which I was completely cured. I have not been troubled with the Rheumatism since. I have sold large quantities of your SARSAPARILLA, and it still retains its wonderful popularity. The many notable cures it has effected in this vicinity convince me that it is the best blood medicine ever offered to the public. E. F. HARRIS, River St., Duckland, Mass., May 13, 1882.

"Last March I was so weak from general debility that I could not walk without help. Following the advice of a friend, I commenced taking AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and before I had used three bottles I felt as well as I ever did in my life. I have been at work now for two months, and think your SARSAPARILLA the greatest blood medicine in the world. JAMES MAYNARD, 220 West 8th St., New York, July 15, 1882.

1000 Forfeit.

Having the utmost confidence in its superiority over all others, and after thousands of tests of the most complicated and distressing cases we could find, we feel justified in offering to forfeit One Thousand Dollars for any case of cough, cold, sore throat, influenza, hoarseness, bronchitis, consumption in its early stages, whooping cough, and all diseases of the throat and lungs, except asthma, for which we only claim relief, that we can't cure with West's Cough Syrup, when taken according to directions. Sample bottles, 25 and 50 cents; large bottles one dollar. Genuine wrappers only in blue. Sold by all druggists.

Vick's Floral Guide.

For 1884 is an elegant book of 150 pages, 3 colored plates of flowers and vegetables, and more than 1000 illustrations of the choicest flowers, plants and vegetables, and directions for growing. It is handsome enough for the Christmas or Holiday Present. Send on your name and Post Office address, with ten cents, and I will send you a copy, postage paid. This is not a quarter of its cost. It is printed in both English and German. If you afterwards order seeds deduct the 10 cents. The Floral Guide will tell how to get and grow.

Fun and Fancy.

Ballroom - A noisy cricket. The pink of politeness is something that does not wash off. Wet weather will influenza man when nothing else will.

Household Hints.

For oiling valance furniture: Raw linseed oil rubbed with a flannel cloth, then polished with a dry piece of flannel; is a careful not to put too much on.

Words of Wisdom.

If you want to be happy when old, be temperate when young. Some people seem born with a head in which the thin partition that divides great wit from folly is wanting.

Got 'em Bad.

A Clear Case of Literary Jim-Jam. From yesterday's issue of the Mail, the following editorial utterances were gleaned:

Banking.

Wm. Johnson, of Huron, Dak., writes that he has been troubled with acute Bronchitis for many years, and that all remedies tried gave no permanent relief, until he procured a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, which had a magical effect, and produced a permanent cure.

Canadian Bank of Commerce.

Allows interest on deposits, drafts, letters of credit and circular notes payable in all parts of the world.

Insurance Card.
