St. George's Field Garden Party.

The proceeds of yesterday's Garden Party at St. George's Field in aid of the Methodist College Ayre Athletic Field amounted to the handsome sum of $1,500. Over two thousand people attended and were provided with a splendid afternoon's entertainment.

The grounds were decorated with bunting and about the eastern corner were situated the tents at which teas and refreshments were served by the energetic ladies who were kept continuously busy. Various side-shows were also provided under direction of Messrs. Geo. Rabbits and C. Bowden and were well patronized. The sports programme of which Mr. J. S. Ayre was in charge, assisted by Mr. A. H. Salter as secretary, Mr. W. J. Higgins, referee, Mr. C. E. Hunt, timekeeper, Messrs. H. D. Reid and C. J. Ellis as judges, was carried through without a hitch. The various events were keenly contested and proved very interesting. The programme was:—

100 yards Dash—Won by T. Butler, time 11 mins. 1-5 secs.

1-4 Mile Race—Won by E. Spry, time 59 mins. 2-3 secs.

Mercantile Football—Ayre & Sons vs. Bairds, won by Bairds by 2 corners.

1-2 Mile Race—Won by T. Butler, time 2 mins. 17 secs.

Obstacle Race—1st, McCall; 2nd, B. Sinnott.

Final Football Fives—Bowings vs. Bairds, won by Bowings by 1 goal and 2 corners.

Little Girls' Race—Won by Mary Nelder.

Baseball—Cubs vs. Wanderers, won by Wanderers by 2 runs to nil.

The winning football team, Bowring's consisted of Barnes, Adams, Phelan, Watson and James.

The girls' race, was keenly contested some seven or eight ladies taking part. The prize, a handsome doll was donated by Mr. S. Levitz.

Hon. R. A. Squires presented the prizes which included silver cups, gold medals and a doll for the girls' race. The ladies in charge of the tea tables, and whose catering left nothing to be desired were Mesdames R. C. Ayre, P. Hudson, Macpherson, Gushue, Parsons, Leamon, Inkpen, A. Soper, G. Soper, F. Horwood, J.

The Reason Why?

M. Vladimir de Pachmann, the famous Chopin pianist, who has been giving some wonderful performances at the Albert Hall recently, is fond of telling this story concerning a friend of his.

He was (says M. Pachmann) a man whose manner of speaking was extremely slow and deliberate. One day he and I were dining together at a well-known London restaurant. Two plates of soup were placed before us. "I cannot eat this soup," said my friend slowly, not looking up from his plate.

The waiter whisked it away before he could finish the sentence, to reappear a moment later with another supply of the same soup, which he placed before the objector, and then stood regarding him with an anxious face, wondering what could be the reason the soup remained untasted.

"I cannot eat this soup," again slowly remarked my friend.

"Why not sir? What is the matter?" stammered the unhappy waiter.

"I cannot eat this soup," said the friend calmly, for the third time, "because I have not as yet been provided with a spoon."

And, looking up to catch the expression of relief on the waiter's face, he indulged in the low chuckle which was the only expression of amusement to which he ever gave way.

Round the World by Boat

Captain A. L. Napper, of the Sussex Motor Yacht Club, is proposing to start on a one-man voyage round the world in a motor-boat.

This will be a unique achievement as far as this new kind of craft is concerned, but similar long-distance voyages in ordinary small and fragile boats have frequently been accomplished quite successfully.

Twenty-five years ago, for instance, Captain Joshua Slocum sailed a tiny cockle-shell of a craft measuring less than thirty-seven feet in length right round the globe. He left Boston, U. S.A., at noon precisely on April 22nd, 1895, and arrived back there at 1 a. m. on June 27th, 1898, having sailed, rowed and drifted more than forty-six thousand miles in three years, two months, two days, thirteen hours.

Many times, too, the Atlantic has been crossed in small boats, and some years ago, a foolhardy individual tried to cross copped up in a barrel weighted with lead, to make it stand upright, and fitted with a sliding man-hole and a collapsible mast. He was drowned.

In 1886, again, three men navigated a small boat called the "Homeward Bound" from Port Natal, in South Africa, to Dover. While, some few years back, four members of the crew of the British ship "Manila," torpedoed a Hun raider in the Pacific, voyaged in the ship's small lifeboat to Pago-Pago, 1,200 miles distant.

Why He Was Nervous.

Referring to his early experiences of railway management, Sir Eric Geddes recently told an amusing story concerning an action for damages that was brought against a certain company by the owner of a horse and trap which had been run down by a train at a level crossing.

The most important witness for the defendant company (said Sir Eric) was the signalman in charge of the crossing.

He stuck tightly to his story, in spite of a severe cross-examination. He persisted that he had waved his lantern frantically, but in vain, to the driver of the trap.

"You did excellently, Tom," the superintendent told him afterwards. "I was a bit afraid at first you might waver."

"Not me!" said the old man proudly. "But I felt a bit nervous lest the lawyer bloke should ask me if the lantern was lighted."

MRS. M. E. SMITH, prominent Tampa, Florida, woman, who says, thanks to Tanlac, she is now able to walk around without the help of a cane after eight long years of suffering.

"I am so glad my health is being restored after suffering for over eight years with indigestion and rheumatism that I feel like telling everybody about Tanlac," was the enthusiastic statement made recently by Mrs. M. E. Smith, one of the best known and most highly respected women of Tampa, Fla., residing at 906 Morgan St.

In referring to her recovery, Mrs. Smith said: "The rheumatism from which I had suffered for years even before I had stomach trouble, pained me worse than ever and until recently I was not only unable to walk without the use of a cane, but I was so weak at times I could hardly get out of bed. I tried many medicines but nothing helped me and I almost despaired of ever getting any better. When Tanlac came along and in just a few days after I began taking this grand medicine, my appetite began to improve and in only a short time I was able to enjoy my meals and everything seemed to agree with me perfectly.

"My rheumatism is so much better and I have so much more strength I am now able to walk all about the house and up and down the stairs without my cane. Friends who have become so accustomed to seeing me walk with my cane are astonished when they see me now walking around without it.

"I will always praise Tanlac for what it has done for me."

Tanlac is sold in St. John's by M. Conroy, by Reg. Sullivan, Pouch Cove; Sound Island Store, Sound Island; Dennis Flynn, Avondale; J. J. O'Brien, Cape Broyle; J. W. Smith, Bell Harbor; W. A. Burdock, Bellegram; John Moray, Fermeuse; Mrs. Jos. Quinn, Renewa.—adv

Mainly About People.

Miss Cicely Hamilton, the English writer, believes in the "treat 'em rough," theory of disciplining idle wits. The so-called "cave men," in her opinion, have a very important part in making women realize that there are very many duties outside the social calendar. The ornamental women, as a rule, are the spoiled wives of indulgent husbands.

James Hay, the newspaper man, who has covered trips of several American presidents, is convinced that it is impossible for the president of the United States to get an unbiased important opinion on any current subject from those around him. They all tell him only what they think he wants to hear, with the result that a president is the loneliest man in the world.

Archie M. Andrews, the young Chicago and New York banker, who at 49 is a multi-millionaire, owner of town and country homes, and employer of 8,000 persons, sold papers in front of the Chicago Herald building when he was 16 years of age and has bought that building. He had to go to California for five years to save his life. He returned to Chicago, took an office boy's job, saved $500, and bought a seat in the Chicago Stock Exchange. Now he is an investment banker with offices scattered over the United States. He lacked health, money and education, and yet worked out great success. He pays some of his employees $25,000 a year.

Mme. Rishbouchinsky, the Russian actress who divorced her Russian husband, and who is now the wife of Robert Godlet, is awaited by New York as one of the most beautiful of women. She is sure of a place in society, for Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt and Lady Michael Herbert are her husband's aunts. Marshall Orme Wilson, who married a daughter of the late Mrs. William Astor, is his uncle, and the Gerrys and the Galatins, are family connections. He is one of the wealthiest men in New York, which is saying a whole lot.

Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

WOULD YOUR HUSBAND SAY THIS?

Do you interrupt your husband? Do you have the feminine habit (so the masculine characterize it) of jumping from one thing to another? I heard a man say the other day that he thought this habit of interrupting and of never really concentrating, is one of the commonest and most exasperating of all feminine tricks.

"And then the way women interrupt when you're reading! I'll be a thousand miles deep in something I'm tremendously interested in, and my wife (he had unconsciously changed over from the would-be impersonal 'your wife,' to the frank 'my wife') will break in to ask some question that could just as well have waited. What makes them do it anyway?"

Why They Do It

"Sometimes," I suggested, "they do it because they've been storing things all day to say to the man of the house, and when he comes he just digs into a paper and grunts like a cross pig when she tries to ask him anything."

"I talk to her all through supper," he countered.

"I didn't say you," I pointed out.

But even though I defended my sex when attacked, I do think the attack has some grounds. The habit of letting their minds hop from one thing to another and never following one thing through, is a rather common feminine trait. I think it comes partly from their work—there are always so many tasks pulling them this way and that, that they do find it hard to concentrate on one. And I think that inability, in turn, makes their work harder.

GOOD CLOTHES.

My heart is right, but my pants are wrong, and I take my place in the has-been throng. I fall in line at the merchant's door and ask a job in his useful store; I need the coin, and I'd gladly toil until each finger had grown a boll, but the merchant looks at my seedy shirt, at my shoes all stained with the highway's dirt, at my trousers torn with their bagging knees, and says, "Oh, fade from my doorway, please!" I've a willing heart, I have active legs, but my vest is stained with the juice of eggs, and my whiskers leak and my hair is long, and so I trot with the has-been throng. Perhaps it's wrong that the seedy man can't

A Studio Misunderstanding.

Madame Nazimova, the screen star, tells a funny story concerning a sister artist, an Italian lady, who once appeared in an English production. One very hot day some indoor episodes were being filmed (says Mme. Nazimova) and the actress in question wanted a bier to lie upon in one of them.

She accordingly sent to the producer beforehand explaining what she would require.

"Wants a beer, does she?" said the producer, who, although well up in his job, was a somewhat rough and uncouth sort of man. "Wants a beer? Well, she can want and be blowed. I ain't providing beer for these furrin players. Tell her she can't have one."

The actress, on receiving the message, was furious.

"Go to Mr. Blank," she said, "and tell him that unless I have a bier I will not consent to be filmed in the next episode."

The messenger duly repeated the message. "She won't won't she?" screamed the producer. "We'll see about that!"

Then, relenting, he took half a crown from his pocket, and said with a sigh: "Well, I suppose I'll have to let her have it. Here, go and get her a quart."

Later on, of course, explanations followed, and the actress got her bier.

AT HOME.

I do not want to see the sights.
I do not care about Japan
Or Italy's romantic nights.
A fig! say I, for Hindustan;
Great wonders round the world may be.
But still I do not care to roam;
I find there's joy enough for me
Here in the little place called home.

Let him who will, take train or ship
And smile as he is outward bound.
I do not envy him his trip.
Though he may fare the world around;
I have no wish to stand and gaze
Wide-eyed at some cathedral dome,
I merely want to live my days
Here in the little place called home.

New scenes? I crave them not at all!
New faces? Better far the old!
This humble roof and modest wall
The treasures of a lifetime hold;
Here is a sweeter rest than that
They find who brave the ocean's foam.

And for all time I'd hang my hat
Here in the little place called home.

Travel, you wanderer, if you will,
And see the splendors of the earth.
No distant journeying can fill
This heart of mine with honest mirth;
Peace and contentment day by day
Come with the sunset and the gloam,
And to the end of time I'd stay
Here in the little place called home.

First Book to Record Discovery of America.

It looks interesting, and it more than lives up to its looks.
Bound in brown crushed morocco, with filleted sides and gilt edges, it is the 411-year-old volume of Brandt's "Ship of Fools," one of the many wonderful old books in the Wrenn Library at the University of Texas, at Austin.
It is stated by bibliographers that if for no other reason it would be interesting on account of its age—but there are other reasons. It is the first edition that was printed in English and the first brought to America. Not only this, but it has the quaint distinction of being the first book to contain any reference to the discovery of the New World.
"The Ship of Fools," by Sebastian Brandt, was perhaps the most popular book of the last few years of the fifteenth century and the early years of the sixteenth. It was first printed at Basle, in German, in 1494, and was soon translated into the principal languages of Europe, going through many editions. The first translation into English was made by Alexander Barclay, in 1508, and was printed by Richard Pynson in 1509.

The book contains 118 woodcuts which seem to have been very popular at the time of its publication and are so highly favored by modern collectors. Like most very old editions, it has no title page, but has a unique page at the end of the book which bears the name and sign of the printer, Richard Ynson.
Printers' Errors in Those Days, Too. It is amusing to note that at this time, as well as now, the printer was wont to get the blame for any mistakes in publication. In spite of the fact that the book is considered one of the best specimens from Ynson's press, Barclay made a quaint apology for the typographical errors, in which he tried to throw the blame on the printer:
"Though that some words be in my booke amys For though that I my selfe dyd it correct. Yet with some faultis I knowe it is infect Part by my owne oversyghte and negligence And part by the Printers in thyr beynesse Do all thyr werkes hedebynde, and in haste."
This volume in the Wrenn collection is believed to be the only copy in North America and is regarded by collectors as invaluable. It was obtained by the late John W. Wrenn, of Chicago, from the collection of Marshall C. Leferts, of New York. The University of Texas gained possession of it with the purchase of the famous library in 1918 by Major George W. Littlefield, of Austin, for $225,000. Major Littlefield donated the collection to the University of Texas.

Telling Time Since Time Began.

The great timepiece of Nature, the sun and a shadow falling upon a certain stone, served the need of the primitive cave dweller in making and keeping his appointments.
The development of a system of measuring time forms an important chapter in the progress of man and of his building of cities which, shutting out the sun and its shadows, make the cave man's methods impossible.
The sundial underwent many changes. For instance it was found that the shadow of an upright stick or stone varied from day to day, because the sun rises farther north in summer in the northern hemisphere than it does in winter. So the mark for a certain hour would change as the season changed and the dial would not indicate time accurately.
Berosus, a Chaldean historian and priest of Bel, or Baal, a god of old Babylonia, who lived about the year 250 B.C., hit upon a very ingenious way of solving this difficulty.
He made the dial hollow like the inside of a bowl. Into this the shadow was cast by a little round ball or bead at the end of a pointer that stood horizontally over the bowl.
The sky itself being like a great bowl or hemisphere, however the sun moved upon it, the shadow would move in the same way upon the inside of the bowl. By drawing lines in the bowl similar, to the lines of longitude upon the map, the hours could be correctly measured.
The "Hemicycle of Berosus," as it was called, was the favorite form of sundial all through the classic period of Greece and Rome.
Cicero had one at his villa near Tusculum, and one was found in 1726 at Pompeii.
"Cleopatra's Needle," and other Egyptian obelisks may have been used as huge gnomons to cast their shadows upon Mammoth dials, for they were dedicated to the sun.
In the days when Nebuchadnezzar built the hanging gardens of Babylon they used the "Clepsydra," an instrument the Greek derivation of whose name meant "thief of water."
Stop Long Parliamentary Speeches.
The clepsydra consisted of a vessel of water, having a small hole in the bottom, so that the liquid dripped out drop by drop. As the level within the jar was lowered, it showed the time upon a scale. Thus, if the hole was small and the vessel was large it could be made to require twenty-four hours to empty.
Improvements naturally followed, and although there were faults the clepsydra opened a field of fascinating possibilities in time recording—it gave the chance to make use of a machine. The clepsydra was used in the Roman law courts in the time of Pompey to limit the time of speakers and to "prevent babbling."
The first hour glass, a form of an instrument which is still used for boiling eggs, is supposed to have been invented at Alexandria, about the middle of the third century.
That it was known in ancient Athens is certain. The Athenians used to carry these time pieces as we do our watches. It was an ancient custom to put an hour glass, as an emblem that the sands of life had run out into coffins at burials.
Centuries later while the hour glass, the clepsydra and the sundial were still much in use—came the clock.

There is a general belief that Gerbert, the monk who was the most accomplished scholar of his day, was the one who first took the important step of producing a real clock, and that this occurred near the close of the tenth century.
Galileo, the great Italian, in 1581 when a youth of 17, stood in the Cathedral of Pisa. Close at hand, a lamp suspended by a long chain swung lazily in the air currents. There was nothing unusual in such a sight. At this moment, however, a great discovery of far reaching application—one which was to revolutionize clock construction—hung waiting in the air. Young Galileo took notice.
The lamp swung to and fro, and to and fro. Sometimes it moved but slightly. Again in a stronger breeze, it swung in a considerable arc, but always—and this was the point that impressed the Italian lad—the swing was accomplished in exactly the same time.
In order to make sure of this fact Galileo is said to have timed the swinging lamp by counting the beating of his pulse. Thus was discovered the principle of the pendulum.
The Babylonians had known this thousands of years before, but did not know how to apply it. It remained for Galileo to suggest an application.
The first watches date back to about the year 1500.
Peter Henlein, a locksmith, put to practical use a mainspring wound up with a ratchet, just as is done to-day.
The watch of to-day, however, did not come complete from the mind of any one man, but it grew, in shape and structure, out of the small clock which could be worn at the belt.
Even in the present day timepieces are constantly undergoing changes, but all later development has passed out of the hands of artists and inventors into those of manufacturers. Present history is no longer a record of science, but a romance of industry,

The Victoria Cross of the Sea.

The Deal lifeboat and its gallant crew have a record of 1,500 lives saved since the crew was organized. In the "home" at Deal, England, three great honor boards stretch from the ceiling to the floor, full of gold-letter memorials of wrecks attended and lives saved.

And these men have another amazing record—the greatest of all. They can boast and do so proudly, that the Deal boat never once went out to a wreck, however terrible the weather, seas or conditions, and left one soul unsaved who was living when it reached the doomed vessel! Nor has it ever lost a life, either of crew or ship wrecked in its innumerable and splendid efforts to help wrecked ships.

Seventy years of age, bold, energetic and skilful to an amazing degree, fearless of anything that the sea can threaten; ready to go to save perishing seamen at all times; the very picture of the typical British sea-dog, such is Will Adams, of Deal, the coxswain of the life-saving "Charles Dibdin."

Will Adams has a record of saving over 500 lives, and he has recently been up to London to receive at the hands of Lord Burnham and Lord Riddell the greatest of all honors that the Royal National Lifeboat Association can give. As Lord Burnham and others said on that occasion, "The trouble is to find what one can give the Deal coxswain and his men as a fitting reward for their amazing gallantry, labors and success."

Will Adams has just been given a second bar to his "Victoria Cross of the Seas," the special silver medal awarded by the Society for unusual bravery and success in saving life at sea. It may be worth while mentioning how he got the medal itself, as well as the first bar, and now the second bar, thus having won the "V.C." three times, so to speak.

How Medal Was Won. The medal itself was for saving eleven hands from the Leopore, a mine-sweeper, under most trying and dangerous circumstances. It was never expected they could be saved, but Adams and his men vowed to do it or perish. So, as he says, they did it.

A vessel, the Piave, was engaged by the French for naval work. She was wrecked on the Goodwins, and the lightships there sent up rockets to tell the lifeboats they were needed. There were raging winds and seas, but off at a moment's notice went the famous "Charles Dibdin," with Adams at the tiller, and heroes at the oars.

What a job they had to get ever near the wreck! When the captain of the vessel yelled that they had no less than ninety-one souls aboard and their ship would sink in a few minutes, brave Will Adams shouted, "We'll take the whole lot of you in one voyage if you'll do as I tell you."

But they didn't obey! They would go their own way, with the result that as they were launching their own boats, the ropes gave and a vast number of sailors were precipitated into the boiling waters. The guard-ship threw a searchlight on the scene, and so skilfully did Will manage that somehow or other—he says even now he can't explain how they did it—the whole ninety-one were picked up from the sea and saved!

Then as to the first bar. It was for the splendid rescue when the Val Salice, an Italian ship, went down on the Sands. The seas were mountainous, the weather freezing, and the conditions about as difficult as they could be, seeing that nobody on the wreck spoke a word of English, and none of the lifeboat men knew Italian!

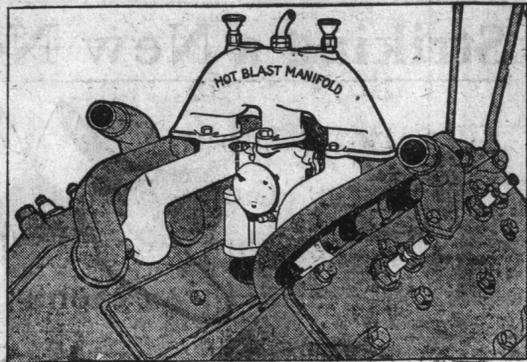

Italian Captain's Triumph. It seemed as if the "Charles Dibdin" would never reach the ship, so adverse were the waves and winds. After the rescue the Italian captain became enthusiastic as he described the work in his own language. "I thought the lifeboat must go down, but not us," he said. "For, one minute it was on the top of an enormous wave, and the next hidden from sight in a hole that looked miles deep. Yet, now it kept coming nearer all the same, while we cheered and cheered as it wrenched itself—and life!—getting closer to us every minute."

Then came the "third service" bar. Really the second bar on the occasion. The Togo, of Estonia, last November was cast on the Goodwins and became a wreck. The Charles Dibdin went to the rescue, and Adams with his men, after a terrible voyage to reach the doomed vessel, found her sailors crying for help. But, owing to the awful waves and the darkness, no attempt at rescue could be made till daylight. When the shipwrecked men got on board in a most exhausted state, but Adams and two of the lifeboat's crew were badly hurt by the heavy seas throwing them against the bottom of the boat whilst engaged in their noble work.

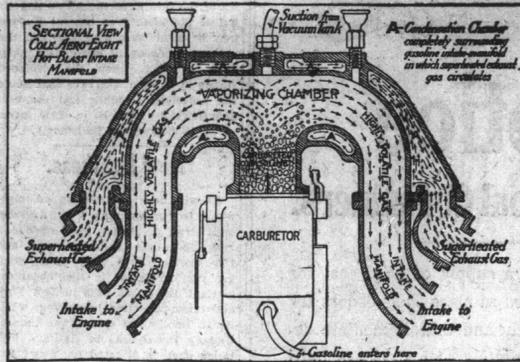

So extremely bad were the conditions attending this rescue that the Royal National Lifeboat Association decided that nothing less than an extraordinary award could possibly be awarded the coxswain for his great work that night.

It is rumored that the Society did consider having a gold medal specially struck for Adams, the greatest of living lifeboat men, who may yet receive the honor if he lives a little longer.

Aero-EIGHT Hot-Blast Manifold Assembly

Operation of Aero-EIGHT Hot-Blast Manifold

The Cole Aero-EIGHT Manufactures Its Own High-Test Gas at No Additional Cost

Perfect Combustion—Smoother Running—Quicker Get-a-way In Cold Weather—Less Carbon With Aero-EIGHT Hot-Blast Intake Manifold

Quick to realize that in order to get the maximum motor car efficiency something must be done to combat the handicaps imposed by the rapidly deteriorating fuel supply, Cole engineers developed a superheated intake manifold.

Through this device, the gasoline was heat-treated before entering the carburetor and properly vaporized to insure smooth running, quicker get-a-way in cold weather, and the elimination of carbon deposits usually associated with the use of low-test fuel.

From this early vaporizer the present highly efficient HOT-BLAST MANIFOLD of the Aero-EIGHT was evolved.

This new device manufactures high-test gasoline as it is required by the motor. There is no additional drain on the fuel supply carried by the car—no subsidiary appliances, nothing to get out of order, nothing to require adjustment.

The heat expended from the time of the first explosion of the engine is utilized to accomplish the results, being concentrated where the fuel is most susceptible.

The quick get-a-way of the Aero-EIGHT, its smooth operation on low throttle, its exceedingly high mileage per gallon of gasoline, its freedom from carbon annoyance, its adaptability to varying conditions of temperature and its ability to give maximum efficiency even though the poorest test fuel is used are all traceable to the Aero-EIGHT HOT-BLAST MANIFOLD. It is a true revelation.

First, let us take you for a ride in an Aero-EIGHT that you may appreciate its superior performance. Then let us show you how the Aero-EIGHT HOT-BLAST MANIFOLD manufactures its own high-test fuel while the car is running.

Stronger Than Gibraltar

No doubt the best known fortress in the world is the Rock of Gibraltar, but perhaps the strangest and strongest is away in the heart of Ceylon. It is known as the Lion's Rock, or Sigiriya. It rises its five hundred odd feet of granite in the midst of a vast jungle-covered plain, where now only tigers and elephants roam. Its shape is like a domed pillar. The sides are nearly perpendicular and in all but one place the top actually overhangs the walls. Standing in the heart of a flat plain. It is a natural wonder, and remarkably suited to form a fortress.

In the fifth century Ceylon was the home of a great nation, made up of people from India who came some eleven hundred years before. In the fifth century a prince named Kasapa killed his father and assumed the throne, and would have killed his elder and only brother, Moggallana, had not Moggallana escaped to the court of an Indian king. The capital of the kingdom, which was noted for its magnificence, was at Anuradhapura. Kasapa was much afraid his brother would return with an army from India and revenge himself and take the throne which was rightfully his. So Kasapa bethought himself of the wonderful rock of Sigiriya. But the rock was so sheer that, while its top would make the strongest fortress in the world, there was no way to scale it. Still, Kasapa was determined. So he called the most skilled engineers in the kingdom in counsel. They set to work with thousands of slaves to assist them. They cut into this great pile of granite a winding stairway up the face of the rock, and laid a floorway of solid brickwork covered with limestone slabs. The stairway or causeway was further protected by a wall some nine feet high and four feet thick. Around the rock this wonderful causeway wound. At the northeast side and about two-thirds of the way up as a further protection an enormous brick lion was built through which the passage led. Between the paws of the lion huge and magnificent gates of iron were hung. Beyond this the way led to a point so steep that steps of stone were cut for the last part of the ascent. At the foot of these steps another set of gates were hung. The causeway once completed, building material was carried to the top. Here a unique city sprang up, peopled by courtiers, priests and scholars, who surrounded the court of the king. Kasapa's palace was on the highest point of the western summit. An extremely ingenious plan made it possible for this queer city always to have a supply of water, for from all the roofs the drain pipes ran into a great reservoir. Several years' supply of food was always kept on hand. So popular did it become that houses were actually built on great timbers overlooking the rounding face. If a person absent merrily stepped out his back door he dropped five hundred feet. On the top of this impregnable fortress Kasapa and his court lived for twenty years. Now took place the strongest part of Kasapa's strange history. For twenty years he had lived in an impregnable fortress; had come there chiefly to be ready and protected against his revengeful brother's coming. On the rock's top was water and food to last a siege of years, and half a dozen men could hold back a million. Yet instead of staying upon the rock, Kasapa, believing his troops were strong enough to win the battle, marched down into the plain below the rock and gave battle. It was a memorable encounter. But Moggallana had good fortune on his side. Kasapa's fighting elephants, several score in number, took fright and stampeded, breaking up the whole army line. According to the legend the animals' fright was caused by the appearance of two supernatural strangers of great size mounted on white horses, who suddenly appeared from nowhere and with flaming swords began fighting for Moggallana. But realizing his defeat Kasapa rather than be taken prisoner, fell on his sword. So Moggallana took the kingdom that was rightfully his. The great rock fortress was deserted. The kingdom a few years later began to waste.

CHAPTER XXXII.

THE FOREIGN ELEMENT IN AMERICAN CITIES.

No independent or impartial stranger can pass through the cities of the United States without noticing the predominance of what may be called "the foreign element" of the population. At every turn this is visible; and as one considers it there comes a conviction, that the Anglo Saxon race is being supplanted. This change may be attributed to different causes, some of which are unavoidable and perhaps justifiable. But there is one aspect of this question which is not justifiable, and which is avoidable; and upon this point the future of the Anglo Saxon people of the United States largely depends—it is the question of the family. The question of children; their bearing and their rearing.

In the first place the American people have got the idea that a large family is a mistake, and to escape the penalty, eugenics have been adopted, and to such a degree has this theory been carried out, that the birth-rate of the nation is small in the extreme. It is the object of many married people to avoid the family, and one or two children are considered sufficient. Especially is this the case among the upper classes. While at one large city, we were told of a street in the most aristocratic quarters, where only two households had any children. This story is lamentable—but also too true; and because it is true the real American citizenship is being supplanted by the Latin and Dago element; and the stock which laid the foundation of the Republic is being lost to the nation. This is unworthy the fathers of the nation; and it is a betrayal of the fortitude of the women who bore equal burdens with the men, and whose ambition was to raise a family and honour God.

It would seem that society is getting too respectable to attend to the duties of family life; and every agency is being brought into play to discourage the old-timed family of six or eight children. If a landlord has a house to rent he does not wish to have as his tenants people with a family. In some cases it is quite difficult for people, to whom God has entrusted children, to get a flat to live in. By this action the landlord is discouraging child-bearing, and encouraging race suicide. It may not be thus meant; but that is what it amounts to. The house is more than the child, and a few scratches on the wall might ruin the house, and spoil the profits of the rent, and of course that would never do; the house must be protected, but the child must be penalized. This is what is really taking place in the American cities, and it means that the making of money is of more value to the state than the raising of children. Someone is forgetting that they were once children themselves, and that as children they were the nation's best asset.

But we must not think that America is alone in this delusion. She is not; for the same error is being indulged in by many people. Nor can it be otherwise, for society has adopted false principles; and the value of man; and the dignity of woman, and the glory of children, have been overshadowed by the pursuit of material gain. Thus it is that the purpose of the human race is being defeated, and its highest interests frustrated. At creation man stood at the head of the universe. In intelligence he was first, in physique he was perfect, in possibilities he was vast. God meant him for this, why then has he not reached his end; and why is he so far from it? We are taught in Holy Writ that man is but "little lower than the angels." How does this agree with the emaciated thousands of the great cities? Where look we for the angels? Surely not in the broken humanity that one meets. Surely not in the cusoms of society, that are lending to the elimination of the grand Anglo Saxon people? Oh no! not in these, for these are detrimental to progress; and while they continue, they will work their deadly poison and so "leave the whole lump."

It may be that the foreign races will be just as beneficial to the America of the future, as the Anglo Saxon; but if the history of central Europe may be taken as a standard, and the present condition of Europe be taken as a criterion, then the evidence stands in favor of the race that made the American Republic and the verdict therefore must be in their favor. (Continued on Saturday.)

New Business.

As will be seen from an ad. elsewhere in our columns, Capt. J. Snow and Sergt. J. Dooley have opened a very up-to-date Tailoring shop and Dye works. Both these young men are very proficient in their business as Capt. Snow has been in New York and taken a course in cutting, while Sergt. Dooley has spent some time at Ungar's Dye Works in Halifax. The tailor shop is situated on Water St., the dye works over Mr. J. McKinley's, on Lime Street. Capt. Snow and Sergt. Dooley are both Blue Puttee boys and were in some of the stiffest engagements with the Royal Nfld. Regiment. We predict for the new firm a large share of the public patronage.

Quite a Sensation.

Quite a little sensation was caused on Tuesday evening when "two men in a boat," arrived from the fishing grounds and reported to the Inspector General that one of their companions had probably lost his life. It appears that they were fishing near Logy Bay, and one of the men, named Evans of this city, decided to go up the cliff in search of young gulls. He commenced his perilous climb, and after a short time, his comrades in the boat heard him crying out, as they thought, for assistance. He had disappeared from view, and they were under the belief that he had fallen over the cliff, or that he was, at least, seriously injured. They waited for a considerable time, shouting out to him, but received no answer. They then decided to come on to town, report the matter to the police, and ask for assistance. Two constables were dispatched to the scene, but could find no trace of the body dead or alive. They then went to Logy Bay, and found the missing man comfortably ensconced in one of the houses of that prosperous little village, enjoying that whole-hearted hospitality of one of the residents, for which they have been so characteris-
