THESDAY MORNING, OCT. 21, 1884.

W. F. MACLEAN.

The national club has set a good ex ample to citizens generally in devoting an evening to the discussion of municipa politics. It is a common saying that representative government is on its trial, and certainly if this is true of representative government in general it is precisely true of its application to municipal administration. The present city government is not satisfactory, and many intelligent people, wearylof the blundering and jobbery which are forever cropping up, are beginning to think with favor of a body of paid missioners. This would be indeed an heroic remedy, and before it is resorted to the representative system should have a longer trial under more favorable con-several departments. Mr. Houston's scheme is of a somewhat different character. He would leave the franchise unchanged, and make no distinct tion between members of council after election. With a view to imposing a check on the council he would have the mayor elected by the people, as now, and council, in which, however, he should have no seat. He would be the head of the ex ecutive, and the council would elect its own presiding officer. With a view to improving the council he would limit the number of members to, say, 30 for the whole city, abolish the ward system, and give each voter the right to vote for, say, ten each year. This would give a three year tenure of office, and after each election there would be at least two-thirds of the council not entirely without experience. He, like Mr. Howland, would separate the executive from the legislative function, and pay skilled officers to do well the administrative work now so badly done by civic com Goldwin Smith made a few valuable re marks without going into the formulation of a scheme. He believed the present system was chargeable rather with loss from blundering than with loss from corruption, and inclined to the view that the representative system should be abolished and the whole government of the city handed over to paid commissioners. Washington, in his opinion, is the only well governed city on this continent, and it is administered by three officials appointed by the president of the United States.

Alderman Smith, and ex-Aldermen Dar ling and Ryan gave some useful hints from their experience, and added much to the usefulness of the debate. All agreed that tuller discussion was needed, and endorsed Mr. Howland's proposal that an association of citizens should at once be formed (1) to secure as good a selection of aldermen as possible for next year's council, (2) to discuss schemes of reform, and (3) to press the necessity of important changes on both the council and legislature. Now that the movement has been started let all who feel dissatisfied with the present state of affairs turn in heartily and assist in bringing about a better. The "ward politician" must go whether the wards do or not. If the only way to get rid of him is to abolish the wards then they must go

A Good Law Made Ridiculous.

A good cause may be injured by bad arguments, and a good law may be brought into discredit through enforcing it to the letter while disregarding its spirit. Such a case is that of a decision just given by the treasury department at Washington. The presbyterian board of foreign missions shipped at Canton two converted Chinese women with the object of installing them as teachers in the home mission at San Francisco. Upon their arrival it was National club meeting on Saturday night, found that they were not provided with one by Oliver Howland, the other by the certificate required by law and the de-William Houstan. > Christian Ethics and Social Science. Readers of the Century will notice with pleasure an interesting and instructive little article in the November number on A Phase of Social Science by the Rt. Rev. Henry C. Potter, D.D., a gentleman many will remember having seen upon the platform at the church congress. The question he discusses is: "What has religion of the new testament to say to our modern social science?" and in the answer to this he ciple of personal responsibility by selfishly relieving the evil which results from crime merely in order to save ourselves the trouble of attempting the harder task of eradicating that crime. This is the nucleus of the Rt. Rev. gentleman's argument, and in this he has unconsciously-to judge from his brief treatment of it-hit upon one of the profoundest problems of odern social science. It is but a part of that gigantic question: How shall we elevate the people? To this question the answers are legion. For example in the case of the abuse of intoxicating liquors, how many and various have been the remedies proposed : absolute coercion, as by the Scott act; partial coercion, as by the Dunkin and Crooks acts: the substitution of less injurious beverages, as the proposal to erect coffee houses; the inculcation of a moral incentive to temperance, as proposed | by those who advocate the claims of re ligion, pure and simple, as the only motive virtuous action; and so on almost ad infinitum, according to the number of voices that have expressed an opinion on the subject. And naturally in this nineteenth century we must expect this diversity. Owing to the accumulation of know ledge, and owing to the want of systematization of this knowledge, there at present exists no concensus of opinion as to the proper and true basis upon which to build root of the matter, has yet in a few simple shallow and transparently fallacious theories. "When social reforms," he says, have allied themselves to the spirit and motives of the new testament, when a wo man like Octavia Hill has gone into the homes of the poor to reform the evils o London tenements, not with the power of mere money or mere organization, or merely scientific theories, but with the power of personal sympathy, the situation has been wholly changed. * * And this is the message of encouragement which christian ethics brings to our social science of to day. How shall we deal with these urgent social problems of the hour? * * save as we look at each and every one of them in the light that streams from the This is due to no small extent to the fine cross of One who gave Himself to lift men up? That our public men, irrespective of party, should shrink from grasping this question in its length and breadth, and should hide themselves from responsibility behind the expensive expedient of local option, says less than little for their courage and capacity. The public interest urgently demands the solution of the liquor question The temperance men, while admitting that the Scott act is only a compromise, have boldly taken the lead. Have we no statesman prepared to say whether that lead is in the proper direction or not? No politician to take advantage of its progress or to amend its defects?

Officials of ocean steamship now at Mon treal say that the British shipping trade is in a very depressed condition. Numbers of steamers are all the time leaving the principal ports without any paying freight. This agrees with a cable despatch from London, which says that the distress in the shipbuilding trade in the north is in creasing. Trade on the Tyne is paralyzed Forty ocean steamers are idle at Sunde land. Subscriptions are being raised for the relief of workmen thrown out by the closing of yards. The London Economist estimates that, including rent, tithes, rates and taxes it takes £6 per acre to grow wheat in England, and this calculation does not includ many incidentals, which are alleged to be more than capable of devouring any little balance that may remain in the farmer's favor. The only remedy suggested for this state of affairs is an extension of the badly for those American farmers who contemplate the abandonment of grain growing also. The exportation of cattle does not pay now, and the business is not likely to improve if the Economist's advice be followed.

It appears highly probable that, between the "seare" on account of the British navy having been allowed to run down in condition, and the idleness and depression now prevailing at the great shipping centres, good reason will shortly be found for giving large government orders for new ships, of the sort that modern naval warfare most demands. Something tewards this is to be done at the autumn session of parliament, so it is said.

Protection in Ohio.

To the Editor of The World. SIR : Your inference from the defeat of Mr. Hurd, the well-known fiscal-reform advocate, in Ohio is that protection has a strong hold on the public mind of the United States. Mr. Hurd's own inference is that he was defeated by the corrupt use of money, and this is under the circumstances very probable. The republicans were determined to carry, not merely the state in the election of state officers, but as many as possible of the congressional districts. In spite of their efforts the democrats have retained 11 to 40 of fine latter. Of course Mr. Hurd, from his prominence, activity and ability as an advocate of revenue reform was specially ob-noxious to the protectionists, but congres-sional terms are short in the States and he will soon come to the surface again. Meanwhile he can work for reform outside of congress, only less effectively than inside.

Markham," he said with quick, cutting emphasis, "I feel it my duty to inform you that ice-boating is not a suitable sport for a lady. In the first place, the boats are mere skeletons, and the only way to accommodate oneself to them is to lie down flat in the stern. There are no seats, no cushions, nothing—in fact there are only the barest ribs of timber to hold on by. No lady can ride in one without real discomfort, and—not a little discredit to herself."

"What do you mean to insinuate, air?"
Valcour exclaimed angrily.
"I insinuate nothing," Douglas replied coolly. "I state the case without equivocation."
Then he turned to the coachman and caid in a low tone."

"We might go this afternoon," he said reflectively; "the ice looks pretty sound, and there's a fine breeze blowing.
"Yes, yes! do let us go this afternoon!" Stella urged eagerly.
And so it was arranged.
The Victorine, a splendid little ice yacht, lay just off the landing. Valcour had provided cushions and robes for her, but Stella was somewhat surprised to learn that Alan Douglas had come pretty near the truth.

that Alan Douglas had come pretty hear the truth.

They had met him on their way down to the river, but he passed on with the slightest of formal salutes.

"Is there no one else going with us?" Stella asked in surprise, as Eugene Valcour tucked the robes about her, and seated himself in a half-reclining posture at her side.

"No," he answered with a smile. "I can manage the boat myself, and the Victorine is so small there is hardly room for more. Besides," he added in a lower and more tender tone, "would not another person be de trop? You are not afraid to trust yourself with me?"

"Oh, no!" Stella answered were height over the smooth, glittering surface of the ice.

Lying in the stern of the boat, Stella looked up at the clear blue sky, and out at the snow-clad mountains which skirted their path on either side.

Every object she fixed her eyes upon appeared to vanish as if by magic. The boat seemed to skim through the air. Even the express train which came bowling along on the east bank of the river was left far in the rear.

"She is catching up with us," Valcour exclaimed presently; but Stella was not the least bit interested in the chase.

"I feel as if I were drifting away into dreamland somewhere," she said; and then she felt a firm hand held softly over her

This brought her to her senses; she opened her eyes with a start and found Eugene Valcour looking down at her with an expression she could not mistake.
"I wished we could get drifting on this way for ever," he said passionately, "you and I darling."

For the moment his hold on the rudder had relaxed, and he forgot that constant vigilance was required of him.

"Look out!" was the clear ringing shout that came from the boat in the rear, but it Came too late.

The Victorine had borne down upon one of those treacherous air-holes. In an in-stant she had capsized, and both Stella and Valcour were struggling in the water.

A cold and frightful plunge was all that she remembered till hours had passed, and she found herself lying in bed, while Nora chafed her wrists and temples with al-"Than God!" Nora cried fervently, as Stella opened her eyes. "Tell Mr. Douglas she is safe." "Where is Mr. Valcour?" Stella asked feebly.

"Did Alan save my life?" Stella asked tremulously.
"Yes Oh, he has acted like a hero today. He saw you set out, and felt so fear-ful for your safety that he took another boat and followed you. He was right near at hand when the accident occurred." Stella had nothing to say just then; but face to face.

"I sent for you," she said, holding out her hands to him. "I owe you my life, Mr. Douglas"

"You owe me nothing," he interposed, hastily.

"You make it very hard for me," she said, looking down. "If I may not offer you my lite in payment for a debt, will you accept it as a gift?"

He looked at her incredulously for a mount and then he caught her hand that Nors came to make them a visit in England. Mention of Major Valcour's name paved the way to a free discussion of the foregoing episode.

"I think," Stella then remarked, with conscious pride in her husband's worth, "that true courage must always have in it a strong admixture of caution."

with Fulljames, is not at all satisfied with ware of Lem. Felcher's statements in The World of yesterday morning. Popp called at this office last evening and made a lengthy declaration of what he alleges to be 'acked up facts. Popp says that after to articles of agreement (which The Wor read over) had been signed, and he (Popp) had deposited $50 of Gilmore's stake, he went to Ayr, Ont., to work. He wrote to Felcher from Ayr saying that he could not reach Toronto before Tuesday night or Wednesday morning and for him (Felcher) to act on Gilmore's behalf in selecting the grounds in company with W. lecting the grounds in company with W. J. Howell, Fulljames' manager. "I "ar rived in the city at 5.45 Wednesday night," continued Popp, and "went direct to the Woodbine saloon and asked for Felcher. His bartender told me that he had left the city that morning. I then went up to Billy Howell's saloon and he told me that Gilmore had left in company with Felcher, George Briggs and MoIntyre (Gilmore's backer) for the fighting ground. Howell told me that I rould go over with the Toronto party that night on the steamer Armenia. that I could go over with the Toronto party that night on the steamer Armenia. Felcher was not on the grounds when I arrived there next morning with the Toronto crowd. On Friday night I called at Gilmore's house with the view of getting Gilmore and Felcher face to face and geting at the truth. We went to the Woodbine saloon, and the conversation between myself and Felcher was in the presence of Pete Green, Mr. Middleton of Orangeville, and two others. I asked Felcher in the presence of these witnesses to state what he asked Gilmore to do when he went to see him in the Rossin house. he went to see him in the Rossin house. Felcher replied that he had met Gilmora and McIntyre in a room in that hotel, and that he (Felcher) told them that the police had been at the Woodbine saloon and informed him that they were going to arrest the principals. This was on Tues-day night. Gilmore asked Felcher where he would go to, and Felcher told him he he would go to, and Felcher told him he had better go to Parkdale and catch a train there. Gilmore asked Felcher what he was going to do with Popp, and Felcher told him that Popp must not go with him, as he might be arrested also. Felcher told Gilmore to take the train alone for either St. Catharines, Niagara or the fort, and he and George Briggs would find him out and conduct him to the firthing grounds. As you know, when fighting grounds. As you know, when Felcher arrived at Niagara he could find no trace of Gilmore. I asked Felcher which of the police had been at the Woodbine, and he replied Detectives Reburn and Brown. Pete Green told him that that was not so, as the police knew where to lay their hands on both of the principals and could have arrested both of them if they so choosed. I asked Felcher what time he showed up fighting grounds, and he said at 6 c'clock in the morning. Fulljames arrived shortly after he did. I then asked him if Fulljames stripped and got into a staked and roped ring. He said he did not. To ion as to the re the fighting ground at 9 15 (45 minutes before the time expired by the articles of agreement) he replied that he went to Niagara for the purpose of seeing the captain of the Toronto boat to see if Gilmore had come over. Felcher said he had made a bet of $2 with Fulljames on Thursday morning that Gilmore had not come over on the . I next asked Felcher if he had seen Fulljames weighed that morning according to the articles. He said he saw him weighed the day before (Wednesday) and he weighed 127½ lbs. According to the articles the money collected for lickets to the fight was to b deposited in the stakeholder's hands, wh was to give 60 per cent, to the winner and 40 per cent. to the loser. I asked Felcher if he got this money and he said: 'No, that is where I made a mistake.' Felcher next told me that he had put his watch ahead for Gilmore's benefit, but when I asked him to state the benefit he said he had private reasons for not doing so. If his watch was ahead of time, say one hour, and he left the grounds at 9,45, he must have been gone 1 hour and 45 minutes before the full time expired. I warned Felcher not to pay over the stakes, as Fulljames had not won them; according to the articles, and Felcher told me that he had already paid them. I enquired why he had paid them, and he said because Gilmore was not on the ground dur-ing the specified time. I asked him how he could prove that if he had lett the grounds at 9.45 and did not return. He said he had heard in Niagara that Gilmore did not show up. I told Felcher that he had done a very mean trick in agreeing to choose the ground and to take agreeing to chose the ground and to take Gilmore to them and not carrying out his promises, and that ways and means would taken to recover the stakes, as they had not been won honestly. All of this conversation took place in presence of the

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon treatment for catarrh. Out of 2000 patients treated during the nast aix months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of the patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patients presenting them advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination; this accomplished, the catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures stills. plished, the catarrh is practically cirred, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on catarrh.—Montreal Star. 26

The U. S. Gas Commission demonstrated by numerous practical, scientific tests that, in order to secure the maximum of light at the ninimum of cost, gas pressure should not exceed five-tenths of a gas inch at the burner.

A heavier pressure means a waste of gas. This is the verdict of the most intelligent exert authorities of Kurope and America.

Why Condemn the Gas Companies?

As in order to supply all their patrons, near As in order to supply all their patrons, near and remote, they are compelled to employ an excessive local pressure of 1½ to 3 inches. Different degrees of elevation also effect the nominal pressure and add to the difficulty of maintaining a low average pressure. The remedy is in the hands of the consumers.
