ST. JOHN, N. B., NOVEMBER 11, 1914 THE DEADLOCK AT VERDUN. The daily reports of the deadlock on the Aisne, now nearly two months old, have overshadowed the meager statements made regarding the deadlock along France's eastern line of defence, which dates from the third week of the war.

Having in mind the record of the German elite guns at Liege and Namur, the outside world expected to see Verdun go down in a similar manner. Masburg and Givet were bombarded from a distance of nearly eight miles and it was hardly expected that Verdun could hold out for any length of time. But this is the striking phase of the situation in the east: that the French, after the series of great disasters with which the war began, should have rallied to the point of holding the enemy at all points and forcing him back along part of the line.

For more than two months the French armies have prevented the Germans from advancing the two or three miles necessary for planting their heavy guns against Verdun. To the north of Verdun and to the west the Germans have had alternate successes and defeat, without getting within striking distance of the fortress. Some of the stiffest fighting of the war has taken place in that territory, where the French have more than held their own.

One authority takes this view of the situation: "The answer to the puzzle, so far as it can be attempted today, is threefold. In the first place the early French defeats, though severe, were plainly not the routs which German reports made them out to be. The second factor is psychological. The world has learned with surprise that the tradition of French character, daring on the offensive, but apt to crumple in the face of disaster, no longer holds. Precisely in the face of great and repeated setbacks, the French have shown a capacity for rallying to the need of the moment. In sharp attack they have fallen. In dogged resistance they have done admirably. The third point is military. If the war has pretty well shown that permanent fortifications have been rendered obsolete by the newest guns, it has shown at the same time that field intrenchments can be made almost impregnable. If the French barrier line from Verdun down through Toul and Epinal to Belfort has held back the German tide, it is not because masonry and armored turrets can resist the German guns, but because field armies in trenches have been able to keep back the German army, guns and all. Verdun, Toul, and Epinal stand today because the French field forces have prevented the Germans from getting their siege guns near enough."

Following the great battle in Lorraine in August, in which a French army of possibly 800,000 men was defeated between Metz and the Vosges and thrown back across the border, the Germans declared that the French defeat was a rout and that it would be months before the beaten army could catch breath. The Kaiser's men forced their way into France, reduced the strongest fortress in the world at Maunouvrier, occupied Lunville, and came almost to the gates of Nancy. But they found that the beaten army very quickly recovered breath, and today the Germans are out of Lunville and very close to their own frontier, if not actually back on German soil.

So with many other parts of the whole little front. Adopting steam roller tactics the Germans rushed toward Paris, regardless of loss of life and determined to capture the French capital and cripple the strength of their opponents before the Allied armies could be got into shape. This plan failed completely. Following the fall of Antwerp the enemy prepared for a smashing drive to Dunkirk and Calais. Fighting desperately, with no thought of the loss of soldiers, he brought all his strength to bear on the line between Arras and the sea. This plan also failed. In the Kaiser's own words Ypres would have to be taken by November 1, or a retreat made. The Allies still hold Ypres and the indications are that they will continue to do so. At no point in the long battle line is the enemy able to break through. From the channel to the Argonne, and from the Argonne to Malhouse the German hopes have been badly frustrated.

ST. JOHN, N. B., NOVEMBER 11, 1914 THE DEADLOCK AT VERDUN. The daily reports of the deadlock on the Aisne, now nearly two months old, have overshadowed the meager statements made regarding the deadlock along France's eastern line of defence, which dates from the third week of the war.

Having in mind the record of the German elite guns at Liege and Namur, the outside world expected to see Verdun go down in a similar manner. Masburg and Givet were bombarded from a distance of nearly eight miles and it was hardly expected that Verdun could hold out for any length of time. But this is the striking phase of the AFRAID OF INVASION.

For more than two months the French armies have prevented the Germans from advancing the two or three miles necessary for planting their heavy guns against Verdun. To the north of Verdun and to the west the Germans have had alternate successes and defeat, without getting within striking distance of the fortress. Some of the stiffest fighting of the war has taken place in that territory, where the French have more than held their own.

One authority takes this view of the situation: "The answer to the puzzle, so far as it can be attempted today, is threefold. In the first place the early French defeats, though severe, were plainly not the routs which German reports made them out to be. The second factor is psychological. The world has learned with surprise that the tradition of French character, daring on the offensive, but apt to crumple in the face of disaster, no longer holds. Precisely in the face of great and repeated setbacks, the French have shown a capacity for rallying to the need of the moment. In sharp attack they have fallen. In dogged resistance they have done admirably. The third point is military. If the war has pretty well shown that permanent fortifications have been rendered obsolete by the newest guns, it has shown at the same time that field intrenchments can be made almost impregnable. If the French barrier line from Verdun down through Toul and Epinal to Belfort has held back the German tide, it is not because masonry and armored turrets can resist the German guns, but because field armies in trenches have been able to keep back the German army, guns and all. Verdun, Toul, and Epinal stand today because the French field forces have prevented the Germans from getting their siege guns near enough."

Following the great battle in Lorraine in August, in which a French army of possibly 800,000 men was defeated between Metz and the Vosges and thrown back across the border, the Germans declared that the French defeat was a rout and that it would be months before the beaten army could catch breath. The Kaiser's men forced their way into France, reduced the strongest fortress in the world at Maunouvrier, occupied Lunville, and came almost to the gates of Nancy. But they found that the beaten army very quickly recovered breath, and today the Germans are out of Lunville and very close to their own frontier, if not actually back on German soil.

So with many other parts of the whole little front. Adopting steam roller tactics the Germans rushed toward Paris, regardless of loss of life and determined to capture the French capital and cripple the strength of their opponents before the Allied armies could be got into shape. This plan failed completely. Following the fall of Antwerp the enemy prepared for a smashing drive to Dunkirk and Calais. Fighting desperately, with no thought of the loss of soldiers, he brought all his strength to bear on the line between Arras and the sea. This plan also failed. In the Kaiser's own words Ypres would have to be taken by November 1, or a retreat made. The Allies still hold Ypres and the indications are that they will continue to do so. At no point in the long battle line is the enemy able to break through. From the channel to the Argonne, and from the Argonne to Malhouse the German hopes have been badly frustrated.

MARKED DECLINE IN CANADA'S REVENUE

Ottawa, Nov. 6.—The financial statement of the Dominion for October and for the first seven months of the fiscal year shows as may be expected, a continued serious falling off in revenue. The October statement, especially, reflects the effects of the war in cutting customs revenue.

For the past month customs receipts totaled $5,811,000, a decrease of $2,710,397 as compared with October of last year. For the seven months of the fiscal year customs revenue has totaled $47,288,157, a decrease of nearly $20,000,000. The total revenue for the seven months has been $89,972,466, which is $20,130,848 less than for the corresponding period of last year. The October drop in revenue was $3,984,844.

Expenditures for the ordinary expenses of administration show, on the other hand, a continued increase. For the seven months consolidated fund expenditure has been $65,211,708, an increase of $7,764,876.

Capital expenditures show some curtailment this year. The comparative figures are $23,500,656 for the first seven months of this year as compared with $30,720,450 for the first seven months of 1913-14.

The net debt of the Dominion is now considerably higher than it has ever been although the war expenditure has hardly begun to figure as yet in the returns. At the end of October the net debt was $329,675,899, an increase of $51,847,862 as compared with October 31 of last year. During the past month the jump in the national debt was $2,988,814.

Temporary loans now amount to $20,574,835, an increase of about $11,000,000 over the same period of last year. Despite the increased excise taxation paid by the provinces, the net debt of the Dominion for the first seven months of 1914-15 was $3,984,844 less than for October of last year.

FOUR REGIMENTS OF MOUNTED RIFLES

Ottawa, Nov. 5.—The Canadian government will issue a special issue of the Canada Gazette proclaiming a state of war against Turkey and bringing into effect the subjects of that country under the orders in council already passed against Germany and Austria.

The recent war office communication, asking for 15,000 more men from Canada for the second contingent did not provide for any cavalry and some surprise was expressed here at this omission. It transpires, however, that the reason for this lies in a development of the fighting now going on in France and Belgium. Information received here is that considerable proportion of the Allies' cavalry, armed with rifles and bayonets, are now in the trenches fighting side by side with the infantry. Their horses have been withdrawn from the zone of fire and the work of reconnaissance has developed largely on the foot.

Although no official explanation has been made public, there is little doubt that the reason the army council did not side with the inclusion of cavalry or mounted rifles in the second overseas contingent is to be found in the tactical necessities of the situation which is arising in the French-Belgian war. The conditions of fighting in trenches with slow advances, where little opportunity is given for cavalry movements, will, however, change as soon as the present apparent impasse on both sides is over and more rapid advance movements are made. Then mounted troops will resume the role which temporarily they have abandoned.

Moreover, in Egypt and elsewhere, the role of the cavalry has been that of a reserve force. Realizing this, the government here is taking steps to have a force of two or three thousand mounted rifles sent to the front as soon as the war office is ready for them.

Omens of Heaven and Earth

(New York Sun.) Above the world a glare Of sunset-gold and spears; A word that comes to ears Of mist and iron; Long lines of bronze and gold, Huge helmets, such a cloud; And then a fortress, such a word. There in the night that phantoms seem to crowd.

A face of flame; a hand Of iron alchemy Is waved, and solemnly At once the world is seen. A burning hell, From which a stream of Hell, A word of blood, in frenzy seems to roll.

And then, upon a throne, Like some vast precipice Above that River of Dis, Behold a King, alone, A word that comes to ears Of mist and iron; Long lines of bronze and gold, Huge helmets, such a cloud; And then a fortress, such a word. There in the night that phantoms seem to crowd.

Then shapes, that breast to breast Gallop to face a foe; And through the crimson glow The imperial crest Of Him whose banner flies Above a world that burns; A raven in the skies, And as it flies into a Death's Head turns.

London, Nov. 6, 10 p. m. The British cruiser Good Hope has been ordered to steam away from the Admiralty station, which the Germans canopus, it adds, was the statement says: "The admiralty now has on the Chilean coast."

"During Sunday, the first Glasgow came up with the German squadron. The German squadron is an important advantage. The Monmouth has been able to steam away. She was which, during the whole attack on the enemy again a which also was under fire."

"The enemy then attacked known. The Glasgow is not. Neither the Otranto nor. Reports received by the present warship is ashore on prove to be the Monmouth's assumption, to rescue the survivors. The action appears to be in the absence of the considerable."

CONDITIONS IN CANADA FOR RAISING SHEEP AS FOR CATTLE

Yvettes for fall suitings are plain, dark and rich in color.

Conditions in Canada are for raising sheep as for cattle. Yvettes we find these rapidly increased during the years, while there has since the decline in the number raised during the same period are given for the Munton and wool prices for keeping, conducted earlier. The thorough manner, however, did not find to abandon the business, consequently reaped the profits and cleaner and richer.

Much effort has been further the swine and cat sheep culture has been driven along with the success. In 1911, however, undertaken by the Ontario Agriculture having as its motto this neglected industry demonstrate that sheep-ness flocks, of from ten to six acres, were in various tario, were used in the case and the work was in a manner quite within the other farmers who own, sheep. Interest on the side in the flock and the cost in each case deducted from. In every instance substantial were made the average yield of clean wool in various parts of the United States are for times for sheepmen, and since very common. Pays. On the case deducted from. It is that during the war the less be thousands of sheep Europe, it would seem to be a fine time for increasing upon the breeding of a few breeding ewes and since very common. Pays. It does not cost much the monetary rapid; the wool and the saleable annually. Sheep-classes of wool, and every great soil improver. Ex-lings and constant care in a very common. Pays. A flock of ten or twelve grass pure bred ram, and increase from your farm, and at a word of blood, in frenzy seems to roll.

During recent years of Conservation has been cultural survey work in yvettes of the Dominion, and secure accurate information the methods of the Canada with a view to promoting culture. No stronger interest and value of such investment be found than the following respecting wool conditions commonly regarded as the province of Canada.

"The farms in nearly visited are reported as being fested with weeds; soil ewes, wild flax, wild grass, Canada thistle and other weeds. It is getting to be a serious farmers, and one that in with the crop grown as a method of farming by. Those farmers who follow short rotation of crops to keep the weeds fairly. The in time saves him a worth heeding in coming weed problem."

With regard to the conditions in England, Col. Hughes said there was a spirit of optimism everywhere.
"The big struggle has yet to come," he said, "and Canada will go on training her militia, especially the officers, until the day is over."
Col. E. W. Wilson, who returned from England with the minister of militia, left tonight with him on the train for Montreal.
