Halloween was observed in Athens with, as usual, considerable harmless fun. Several homes were visited by ladies and gentlemen (!) so deeply disguised that their identity was not discovered, their sweet falsetto voices leaving their hostesses guessing. Little boys and girls paraded Main street in amusing disguises, while larger boys contented themselves with less than the usual number of mischievous pranks. The old hotel bus, guided and propelled by a company of little boys, made its annual trip down town. The most conspicuous object late in the evening was a "swiped" lantern hung high on a telephone pole.

VISIT OF THE BISHOP

A Total of Sixty-four Candidates Confirmed

On Sunday, Nov. 2nd, the Bishop of Kingston visited the parish of Athens, of which the Rev. W. G. Swayne is Rector, for the purpose of holding confirmations.

At the morning service at Oak Leaf ten candidates were presented, and the Bishop also dedicated two memorial windows, altar rails, and altar service book.

There was a large congregation in the afternoon, twelve candidates were presented at St. Paul's, Delta, and a pair of altar vases dedicated.

Here also there was a very large attendance. In the evening a class of forty-two was presented at Christ church, Athens, and an altar service book dedicated. At this service attendance was truly remarkable. Every available space in the church was occupied, the aisles being crowded and even the windows used as seats where available. A large number who could not get in heard, though they could not see, the service from the school-room in the basement.

At Oak Leaf the chancel window was a memorial to the Rev. Wm. Wright, a former rector, and the window in the nave to Mr and Mrs Edward C. Webster, pioneer churchmen of the parish, and life long communicants. The communion rails were the gift of Mr Peter Johnson and his sister. The altar service book was presented by the communicants of the church. The confirmation class had also presented a brass altar desk, which will be dedicated on a future occasion, having been delayed in transit. The confirmation class at Delta presented the altar vases, and the class at Athens gave the altar service book. Altogether the services throughout the day were of a memorable nature and reflect the highest credit on both the Rector and congregations.

Phillips—Marshall
On Wednesday last Miss Gladys Marshall, daughter of Dolorna Marshall, of Toledo, was married to Merrill Phillips of the same place. The ceremony was performed at the Frankville parsonage by Rev. Mr Hagar. The young couple were supported by Miss Hazel Phillips and Lloyd DeWolfe.

Russel—Coleman
The marriage took place on Wednesday morning in St. Paul's church, Westport, of Mrs James Coleman and Wm. W. Russel. The ceremony was performed by his Lordship Bishop Bidwell, of Kingston.

Both Mr and Mrs Russel are well known residents of Westport, and their many friends extend heartiest congratulations.

Bazaar and Concert
Final preparations are being made this week for the Big Parish Bazaar and Concert to be held in the town hall next week, Wednesday and Thursday afternoon and evening, Nov. 12 and 13.

An elaborate display of the numerous beautiful fancy and useful articles will be a pleasing spectacle, affording the opportunity to procure just what you want for yourself or for your Christmas gifts at a most reasonable price. Come and see and be convinced. The bazaar will be opened at 1 o'clock Wednesday afternoon. Admission free.

In the evening a very attractive entertainment will be held when a splendid programme of choice vocal and instrumental selections will be given together with the laughable farce "The only young man in town." Admission, 25c

World's Temperance Sunday
The annual Union Rally of the Sunday Schools will be held in the Methodist church at 2.30, Sunday, Nov. 9th. A good programme is being prepared by the children and Dr. Hamilton will give an address on the effects of intemperance on the human system.

WOODED UNDER FIRE

CHAPTER I.

"Conrad, my boy, there's one thing dead certain; we're in for an experience this time. No scaling a peak equal to the Matterhorn to-day. I've been lost in an India jungle, caught in a desert sandstorm, and experienced the delights of a Canadian bush fire, but they all fade into insignificance compared with being caught in a fierce snowstorm half-way up the side of Mont Blanc. Conrad, old fellow, suppose you wind that Switzer horn again; give another call, and see whether we can discover some one on the trail which we have foolishly lost."

The speaker shows little evidence of the great anxiety he mentions; indeed, to see him calmly smoking a cigar while slipping his hands together in order to receive warmth, one would hardly imagine he knows what alarm is. And yet his situation is little less than appalling, to say the least. Ascending the terrible Mont Blanc late in the season, attended by a single guide, they have been suddenly overtaken by the worst snow-blizzard Conrad remembers so early in the winter. The beautiful view has been blotted out as if by magic, and around them whirl clouds of fine snow that driven by a cold, fierce wind, seems to cut the flesh like needles.

Others are on the mountains, too, for they have had glimpses of them from time to time at a distance. Through the blinding storm Sam Buxton and his guide have descended. Nearly half an hour has elapsed since the rush of the blizzard began, and Conrad, at length, having lost all traces of the trail in the bewildering snow, candidly admits that they are lost, which remark draws out the words with which our story opens.

Sam Buxton is a character who would attract attention almost anywhere. In size he is rather below the average, and give no more evidence of muscular ability than comeliness; still his face, if homely, has an honest look, which grows upon one as the more you know of him. The better you like him. At any rate, he is fearless, bright as a new dollar, full of chivalrous notions, and plays second fiddle to no man on earth.

Sam has been blessed with a goodly proportion of this world's goods, and travels for pleasure, though perhaps he may have some lousy sort of design in his wanderings. At present his object has been to plant an American flag upon the Matterhorn, a feat he yet never accomplished, though attempted by many an adventurous spirit. Obeying orders, the Swiss guide, a man who is ready to swear by Baron Sam, as the American is sometimes called, raises his hands to his mouth, and with all the force of his powerful lungs sends forth that musical Tyrolean call which can only be properly warbled by an Alpine dweller. Through the storm it rings, for the air is remarkably pure in these mountain regions.

Baron Sam puts away at his cigar, while he strains his ears to discover whether there may be any response made, for if by good fortune there chances to be a Switzer guide within hearing he will readily answer the call, as Conrad has given it a turn that is significant of distress; but it dies away amid the howling of the bitter wind, and the surging of the storm alone reaches him.

"Something like a fraise creeps over his chery face, but he chases it away with a laugh, while shrugging his shoulders as the last squall sweeps down with the fury of demons let loose.

"How it stings! this big collar on my neck comes in handy, and these fur gloves, too. A wide head, that of yours, Sam Buxton, to provide for an emergency, even if the weather did look summer-like at starting. One thing worries me, Conrad, see here," he half shouts, for although the Alpine guide is only half a dozen feet away the sweep of the wind renders it impossible to converse with the natural tones.

"What now, baron?" asks Conrad, who has spent a part of his life upon the sunny Italian slopes of the Alps and hence acquired many of the habits of the people of Aosta.

"When you used the glass and spoke of seeing the party below, were there not females in it?"

"Excellent, I saw the flutter of skirts," replies the other, who is a sturdy fellow, twice as strong as Baron Sam, yet lacking much of the American's grit.

"How many would you say?"

"Two, at least, signor."

"Contend it! what a foolish thing to bring females up on the exposed side of Mont Blanc at this time of year."

Weak, Tired Folks Given New Vigor

Strength Returns, Health Renewed, Vitality of Youth Re-created.

Exhaustion and Bodily Tiredness Every Day Being Turned Into Vigor and Ambition by Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

From Chicago, Ill., N.S., comes the following from Mrs. W. A. Reynolds: "A year ago my health began to fail. I lost appetite, became nervous and sleepless. My weight ran down. I became thin, hallow-checked, and had black rings under my eyes. I really felt as if the charm of life had left me and when springtime arrived I was in the 'blues.' I read of Dr. Hamilton's Pills and got five boxes at once.

"Within a month my appetite and color were good. I gained strength and felt like a new woman. New life and vigor returned, and my friends scarcely knew me. A medicine that will do this should be in every home."

"Good health means much to you. Success and happiness depend upon it. The maintenance and source of health is found in Dr. Hamilton's Pills, 25c. per box, or five boxes for $1.00, at all druggists and storekeepers, or by mail from the Catarrozo Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

I, for one, object to women trying such dangerous experiments; they are more suited to the gentle side of life—drawing-rooms, the drive at Nice, or sight-seeing in the cities. Anyhow, if by reason of a great desire to climb the Alps they do make the attempt, let it be in the season—July or August—not when winter is ready to burst over the mountains and wrap them in a winding-sheet. Ugh! that fairly takes one's breath away," as another extraordinary gust comes tearing down from the wild region of the Matterhorn—that bleak peak reached by human feet for the first time only a few years before, and all of that adventurous party perishing save an English gentleman, a Mr. Wymper, and two guides.

"We must push on, baron; to remain is death," exclaims the guide, unconcerned.

"Go it, old man; I'm agreeable," and clinging to such projections as present themselves he swings his body from rock to rock with an agility one would hardly dream he possessed, all the while holding his cigar between his teeth, and keeping a tight grip upon his Alpine staff with its painted, steel-shod base.

Thus they founder on for some time, while the blizzard rages furiously around. Conrad is alarmed—if his employer shows no signs of it—and almost loses his head, but the chery voice of Sam Buxton steadies him, much as a careful driver steadies a restless steed.

"They make progress, but it is impossible to decide whether it is in the right or wrong direction. Perhaps every step takes them deeper into the depths, since there is no means of telling whether they go unless the guide discovers some sign that may be familiar to him. The American tourist is persistent by nature, begins to feel the cold hand of despair clutching at his heart when the storm, instead of abating, grows more furious, and it is impossible to see more than two yards in any direction.

"'Jove! I reckon we'll have to wait for a rescue by the good monks of St. Bernard. Looks like a gone case to me, Conrad. Suppose you give one more warble, my man, and we'll see if anything comes out of the storm. If not, then we must camp as best we can in this bleak place."

The Swiss guide raises his benumbed hands, and again that weird Tyrolean call sounds, amidst the noise of the raging blizzard's mocking voices. Once more Sam Buxton bends his head to listen, then starts, thrilled by strange emotions, for on the wings of the storm comes a cry. It is not what he has expected, but even more of a pitiful appeal for help than Conrad's call.

"Good heavens! man, did you hear that?" he says, clutching the guide by the arm.

There is little need to ask, for Conrad is as white as the snow around him, and trembles as though he might be a human aspen leaf.

"Yes, I hear it; the spirits of lost souls that have met their death on Mont Blanc mock us, baron. They beckon to us. We are doomed!" he almost shrieks, pointing in the direction whence the cry has come.

"The American is practical, and detects anything bordering on superstition, hence he has little patience with this line of conduct.

"You're a fool, Conrad. That cry is for help, and whether it comes from a lost soul or from a human being in distress, Sam Buxton isn't the man to hang back. Follow me or remain where you are."

"No, no, Baron Sam; you will go to your fate!" cries the guide, and truer words were never uttered, though under another meaning.

His employer, with a snort of disgust at the man's superstitious fear, tears away from the grasp that would detain him, and pushes blindly on through the snow-storm to discover the source of the cry that has answered Conrad's call.

When he has gone twenty paces, with the guide following, for Conrad fears being left alone on the mountain, he comes to an encounter with the specks of former unlucky pilgrims, Sam, seeing nothing, drops his cigar, and making a trumpet of his hands, bellows forth:

"Hello, there! where are you?"

"He has a voice hardly in keeping with his body—a voice that is as strong as the roar of a lion in the African forest, and the shrill, mocking tones of the blizzard king fails to keep it from conveying quite an extensive space.

"This way; I am too chilled to reach you," comes a reply very near at hand, and, electrified, Sam bounds over some loose rocks forming a sort of shelter from the blizzard's worst fury, to find himself face to face with—his fate!

"Men-ah! It's a woman!" he ejaculates, almost paralyzed at the sight that greets his eyes. A tall, gaunt figure, not too warmly clad, trying to lean and greet him with outstretched hand, and a smile upon her face. Sam marks on the instant what a face it is, strangely beautiful, and yet possessing wonderful independence, as though the owner were used to having her own way and fighting her own battles.

He scratches off his fur glove to accept the proffered hand; it is almost as cold as ice, being poorly covered with kid gloves. She tatters while endeavoring to stand in the snow, and hold Sam, until he has swooned in the effort to bring about her. His head is thus brought close to hers, and she hears him say:

"Prison, moss or mud, this is no time for etiquette, and you were falling. Allow me," and without waiting for a reply he tears the mockery of gloves from her hands, rubbing the bright members between his own warm ones until he has succeeded in producing a glow, after which he draws the fur gloves over her hands—never minding her feeble protests.

Nor does this American cavalier halt there, but throwing off his outer coat, proceeds to wrap the lady in it. She makes a struggle against the action, but his will compels, and she can only murmur the thanks of her heart, which do not tell one-quarter as much as the glances from her wonderfully large and expressive eyes.

"Conrad, we must make a last effort for this lady's sake. Lead on, man. If you save us it is five hundred lire in your pocket. The path, man—find us the path that leads to the monastery."

Spurred on by the hope of making a large fortune, as well as saving his own life, the Alpine guide again moves on, while Sam follows, leading the unknown lady who owes her life to him, half bearing her, in fact, for who is almost chilled to the marrow. Death stares them in the face, and even the bold-hearted American grows as he feels his strength giving out. She hears and understands.

"Leave me—save yours, if I beg!" she cries, almost pleadingly, but he smiles and shakes his head.

"While there's life there's hope. One thing you must understand—we live or die together, since fate has thrown us in contact. I have some fight in me yet. Oh, Conrad, on; we must find the trail!"

Now he staggers himself; the signor is telling upon even that indomitable spirit, but with set teeth and straining muscles Sam Buxton continues to push on after the lady guide, while the storm rages and the snow upon the ground increases continually in depth.

Hope, that anchor to the soul, has become almost dead within them, when suddenly he hears a shout ahead.

"It comes from Conrad, and as his eyes fall upon that worthy, he has a first glimpse of him dancing nimbly upon the snow.

"The post, Baron Sam! the post that marks the spot where M. de Carot was murdered! It was blessed by holy men; it has been an instrument in saving us. The path is here!" he shouts.

"Thank heaven!" groans the exhausted Sam.

"If we can hold out ten minutes more, dear master, we are saved. Leave the lady here, wrapped in your coat, and run with me."

"Never! Show me the path, man, and then do you hasten below for help, while I try and keep the spark of life in both our bodies. Leave the lady to me. Come! be speedy—do you hear me?" almost roughly, for the man's words have cut to the quick—as though he had ever been guilty of leaving one in distress whose fortune had thrown on his hands—while she rewards him with a single look that warms his heart.

"It is necessary, baron. Praise Heaven and the saints, I hear voices above. It is the lady's party descending. In a minute they are here. Yes, we are saved," and then Sam realizes from the heavy weight on his arm that the unknown lady has swooned.

Conrad's words are true, for the voices draw nearer, and in hardly more than a minute a party of persons appear through the blinding, surging snow, hurrying downward, the guides leading, and keeping a bright lookout, for there is always extreme danger of losing the trail at a time like this, and that means terrible disaster.

Many have lost their lives in the defiles of the Alps, while others, wandering about, fall over some precipice, or it may be are overwhelmed by the mighty avalanche that comes tearing down the side of the mountain sweeping everything in its path into a chaotic mass far below.

Already has Conrad led the guides and as the party discover Sam holding the senseless form of the lost lady, their cries of wonder and praise sound earnest, indeed, for they have given up all hope of ever seeing her again. By accident she had become separated from her party just at the time the storm, without much warning, swept over Mont Blanc—their cries were unanswered, and they despair.

"Allow me to carry her, my dear sir," says a voice that gives the American a shock, for he finds himself looking into the face of the best friend he has on earth, a man six feet in height, and finely proportioned—a Hercules beside a pigmy when compared with Sam.

"Dudley McLane, for all the world," he shouts.

"Good heavens! is it you, Sam, or your ghost? I believe you're in Egypt," says the guide, intending the other in his arms and at the same time, of course clasping the senseless girl.

"Easy, old boy; you forget. None of your bearhugs here! I believed you home in Canada. This is, indeed, a strange meeting."

"When did you find Aileen?" asks the other, and Sam starts at the mention of the name, whether because of its singular nature, or for some other reason, he does not choose to state.

"Wandering in the storm—we were also lost, and just round the path before you came," Sam replies, still holding the senseless form of the girl, whom he seems loth to give up. Did he not save her, and does not that, in a measure, give him a claim upon her?

"Come, the guides are waiting and threatening to desert, unless we move on. Give me the girl, Sam; I am better able to carry her."

"Pardon, signor; allow me to relieve you of your burden. I have some right to assist the beautiful young lady," says a soft voice in Sam's ear, a voice he recognizes as that of an Italian, and turning his head, he finds one of the party close to him, a man who has a graceful, willowy figure, an Adam's nose, looks, with a face that somehow frank Sam Buxton dislikes on sight.

"My friend spoke ahead of you, signor; he has therefore the first claim," and with the words Sam transfers his burden to the Canadian, whose heart is like the trees of his native country, sturdy and unyielding.

Something like a deep, coarse drop from the lips of the Italian as he turns aside, and, knowing these hot-blooded people well, Sam Buxton realizes that by his action he has probably made a bitter enemy, who may hereafter give him trouble, for which he cares little, indeed, being generally able to look out for himself.

By the time the clamoring guides are beginning to mutiny unless the descent is continued, Sam notices that they look to his friend the Canadian as though fear of him is the only thing that keeps them from immediate desertion. He smiles, for Dudley McLane has a way about him of commanding obedience.

"His figure and tremendous voice, make him a natural leader in the field, though as a usual thing Sam had been the general who planned their work in past adventures.

They resume the descent, each step taking them nearer the Hospice of St. Bernard, whose doors will surely be found satisfaction when before them arise the hospitable walls of the monastery that for such long years has been a blessing to travellers and lost Alpine guides.

Here a warm welcome awaits them from the monks, whose lives are devoted to this work, and whose fame has become world-wide. The ladies are revived and made comfortable in a warm room, while the men seek warmth and good cheer in the large reception hall, where a great fire blazes.

Sam Buxton draws his Canadian friend aside. There are a number of other tourists present, who have ventured upon the sides of Mont Blanc, and whom the terrible blizzard sent back, glad, indeed, are all of them to find shelter from the storm. Sam has questions to ask, and Dudley, on his part, desires to learn how his friend of many an adventure in the past chances to be here.

"These two men have journeyed in company over half the world; their tastes run much in common, and both are keen sportsmen. McLane has shown Sam the delights of salmon fishing on the rivers of Canada, and the pleasure of moose hunting, while Buxton, on the other hand, has led the chase of the elk in the Rockies and tracked the grizzly bear to his den.

"You called the lady I had the honor to serve by a queer name—I have never heard it but once—Aileen—was that it?" Sam asks.

"Miss Aileen Winchester, a California heiress to untold millions, a bright, brave, independent girl, travelling with her aunt and chaperon, Miss Dorothy Green, a New England spinster, of queer ways, but possessing a warm heart."

Baron Sam gives an expressive grunt.

"I think I have heard of them before," he remarks, quietly, and then adds: "See here, Dud, perhaps you are in love with the heiress?"

At this the bluff Canadian laughs good-naturedly.

"To confess the truth, my dear fellow I have conceived quite an ardent attachment for the lady, but the trouble is she falls to return it. We are good friends, but it is not that is as far as it goes. Now, if fortune had favored me,

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY

An eminent scientist, the other day, gave his opinion that the most wonderful discovery of recent years was the discovery of Zam-Buk. Just think! As soon as a single thin layer of Zam-Buk is applied to a wound or a sore, such injury is insured against blood poisoning. Not one species of microbe has been found that Zam-Buk does not kill!

Then again, as soon as Zam-Buk is applied to a sore, or a cut, or to skin disease, it stops the smarting. That is why children are such friends of Zam-Buk. They care nothing for the science of the thing. All they know is that Zam-Buk stops their pain. Mothers should never forget this.

Again, as soon as Zam-Buk is applied to a wound or to a diseased part, the cells beneath the skin's surface are so stimulated that new healthy tissue is quickly formed. This forming of fresh healthy tissue from below is Zam-Buk's secret of healing. The tissue thus formed is worked up to the surface and literally casts off the diseased tissue above it. This is why Zam-Buk cures are permanent.

Only the other day Mr. Marsh, of 101 Delorimer Ave., Montreal, called upon the Zam-Buk Co. and told them that for over twenty-five years he had been a martyr to eczema. His hands were at one time so covered with sores that he had to sleep in gloves. Four years ago Zam-Buk was introduced to him, and in a few months it cured him. To-day—over three years after his cure of a disease he had for twenty-five years—he is still cured, and has had no trace of any return of the eczema!

All druggists sell Zam-Buk at 50c. per box, or we will send free trial box, if you send this advertisement and a 1c. stamp (to pay return postage). Address Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

WATERY BLISTERS INTENSELY ITCHY

Between Fingers, Spread to Tips. Would Swell Up, Itch and Burn. Did Not Dare Put Hands in Water. Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment Cured.

Carman, Manitoba.—"A breaking out between my fingers was the first trouble. It was very itchy and spread to my finger tips affecting the nails. It first appeared in watery blisters and they were so intensely itchy I scratched them and let the water out making sores. They would swell up, itch and burn and finally the nails would loosen and come off. I spent many sleepless nights. I did not dare to put my hands in water except to wash them.

"I kept using ointments, Ointment, but was not cured. Sometimes the remedies would help a little but I was not free from it altogether. I was that way for nine years trying everything. I heard of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and sent for them and before I had used them half a dozen times I noticed an improvement. By washing with the Cuticura Soap and applying the Cuticura Ointment frequently I was cured in three months." (Signed) Miss Florence E. Sanderson, May 20, 1913.

For more than a generation Cuticura Soap and Ointment have afforded the most economical treatment for affections of the skin and scalp that torture, itch, burn, scale and destroy sleep. A single set is often sufficient. Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere. For a liberal free sample of each, with 32-p. book, send post-card to Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Dept. D, Boston, U.S.A.

we could perhaps have gone further. Why wasn't Dudley McLane the one to save Aileen?" he adds, with something of a mournful grimace.

"Kismet—it is fate, my boy. Now, who is that dashing looking Italian—he scowls at me every time our eyes meet, as though I have mortally offended him in some way."

"Ah, another Richmond in the field. Sam, I expect to see you two looking over pistols at each other yet. That is, Count Antonio Tivoli."

"The American utters a cry.

"You know him?" demands Dudley.

"His name is familiar to me. I have the honor to be acquainted with his niece, Beatrice Paoli," replies Sam, recovering his composure.

"A charming name," comments the other.

"And the owner is agreeable—in fact, her beauty dazzles one."

"You don't appear to have suffered, Sam Buxton," says the Canadian dryly, with a chuckle.

"THE RITUAL MURDER"

(Chicago Tribune)

The race hangs of religious bigotry, and gloomy superstition, which make a trial for "ritual murder" possible are like prehistoric moths, eating the ages of darkness. Mankind has fought them too long to let them breed now. At the trial of the "ritual murder" the effects of our indifference were felt in every country for a generation.

A realization of this must come to the Russian government. And it is the high duty of European and American peoples to bring this realization by a protest which cannot be ignored by any nation which hopes to keep a place in the honor of the modern world.

PARENTAL RESPONSIBILITY.

(Montreal Daily Mail)

No public machinery for the maintenance of law and order amongst children, however wisely and sympathetically it may be enforced, can supplant the ordinary and intimate relation of a parent to a father to the child. No system which would supplant that relation could be tolerated. It is the duty of those children whose parents reject the responsibilities of fatherhood to be made, and for their own protection, to a hard and fast code of rules for correction which can only be administered with wisdom and kindness in the home, to be efficacious.

Split 40 Cords At Age of 85

Thankful to the Medicine That Gave Him Ability For the Task.

A VERY INTERESTING CASE.

Few men of eighty-five years of age can boast of much else but poor health and falling strength. And such was the condition of Mr. Benj. Marsh, who is known to every soul in the neighborhood of his home at Lima, Lake Ontario.

"Quite unsolicited," writes Mr. Marsh, "I wish to say how I have been benefited for years with stomach trouble. I tried everything I could think of without benefit. I was terribly afflicted with swelling and gas, and had much distress between meals. I tried everything I could think of, but without benefit. Then I was recommended Nerviline. My old Nerviline did me a power of good—made a new man out of me, so that within the last three weeks I have been able to split about forty cords of stove wood. I will always stick to Nerviline and will always recommend it, and would like to meet anyone and convince them it is in doubt as to what Nerviline has done for me."

For sour stomach, nausea, belching of gas, cramps and sudden sickness at night, nothing is more helpful in the home, nothing saves so much pain and distress as Nerviline. Large family size bottles, 50c. small size, 25c. at all storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrozo Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

PATH OF SUN.

Its Relation to the Seasons of the Year.

The sun's path is called the ecliptic. It is a great circle of the celestial sphere, cutting the celestial equator at two points 90 degrees apart and making with it an angle of 23 1/2 degrees known as the obliquity of the ecliptic. The crossing points are called the equinoxes, because the days and nights are then equal, and the point midway between the equinoxes are the solstices, because the sun then seems to stand still for a few days.

The ecliptic is so called because eclipses occur only when the moon is crossing it or is near it, for the moon's orbit cuts the ecliptic in two points called nodes or knots, and at other times is above or below it. If the moon, when in either node, is in line with the sun and the earth we have an eclipse, either total or annular. If she is near her node we have a partial eclipse.

The moon's nodes are not stationary, but move backward on the moon's orbit, completing a revolution in about 18 years, when the eclipses of the period recur in the same order and at about the same intervals are before. This period of 18 years and 11 days is called the Saros, and was known to the Chaldeans and the Greeks and gave them their data for computing eclipses.

Any intelligent person can trace the sun's path in the heavens. If the sun rises exactly in the east and sets in the west it is the time of the equinox, the sunrise and sunset points are farthest north and the sun at noonday is highest in the heavens. It is the time of the summer solstice. If the sunrise and sunset points are farthest south and the sun is very low in the heavens at noonday it is the time of the winter solstice.—Harper's Weekly.

Catarrh Brands You An "Undesirable"

So Loathsome is the Disease That Few Will Associate With a Catarrhal Victim.

Is Your Trouble Catarrh?

Poor remedies have given Catarrh the reputation of being incurable. But it is curable, easily and quickly, if the right method is employed. Snuffing a powder or ointment up the nose won't cure Catarrh, neither will tablets, douching, or stomach medicines cure. These treatments fail because they only affect local conditions, they do not remove the cause which is germ life established in the lungs, bronchial tubes, and nasal passage. Ordinary remedies do not reach these remote parts, but Catarrozo does, for it is breathed through the inhaler into every air cell in the lungs, into every air passage in the head and throat. No matter where the Catarrh is, Catarrozo will reach it. It kills the germs, heals sore spots, clears the nose and throat instantly. Universally used; pleasant and clean; guaranteed to cure or money refunded.

Don't be an object of aversion to everyone you meet—get Catarrozo to-day and use it regularly; it will cure your Catarrh, Bronchitis, Large Tracheitis, spitting, and gagging. Large size 50c. All dealers of the Catarrozo Co., Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Canada.

WOODED UNDER FIRE

"Conrad, my boy, there's one thing dead certain; we're in for an experience this time. No scaling a peak equal to the Matterhorn to-day. I've been lost in an India jungle, caught in a desert sandstorm, and experienced the delights of a Canadian bush fire, but they all fade into insignificance compared with being caught in a fierce snowstorm half-way up the side of Mont Blanc. Conrad, old fellow, suppose you wind that Switzer horn again; give another call, and see whether we can discover some one on the trail which we have foolishly lost."

The speaker shows little evidence of the great anxiety he mentions; indeed, to see him calmly smoking a cigar while slipping his hands together in order to receive warmth, one would hardly imagine he knows what alarm is. And yet his situation is little less than appalling, to say the least. Ascending the terrible Mont Blanc late in the season, attended by a single guide, they have been suddenly overtaken by the worst snow-blizzard Conrad remembers so early in the winter. The beautiful view has been blotted out as if by magic, and around them whirl clouds of fine snow that driven by a cold, fierce wind, seems to cut the flesh like needles.

Others are on the mountains, too, for they have had glimpses of them from time to time at a distance. Through the blinding storm Sam Buxton and his guide have descended. Nearly half an hour has elapsed since the rush of the blizzard began, and Conrad, at length, having lost all traces of the trail in the bewildering snow, candidly admits that they are lost, which remark draws out the words with which our story opens.

Sam Buxton is a character who would attract attention almost anywhere. In size he is rather below the average, and give no more evidence of muscular ability than comeliness; still his face, if homely, has an honest look, which grows upon one as the more you know of him. The better you like him. At any rate, he is fearless, bright as a new dollar, full of chivalrous notions, and plays second fiddle to no man on earth.

Sam has been blessed with a goodly proportion of this world's goods, and travels for pleasure, though perhaps he may have some lousy sort of design in his wanderings. At present his object has been to plant an American flag upon the Matterhorn, a feat he yet never accomplished, though attempted by many an adventurous spirit. Obeying orders, the Swiss guide, a man who is ready to swear by Baron Sam, as the American is sometimes called, raises his hands to his mouth, and with all the force of his powerful lungs sends forth that musical Tyrolean call which can only be properly warbled by an Alpine dweller. Through the storm it rings, for the air is remarkably pure in these mountain regions.

Baron Sam puts away at his cigar, while he strains his ears to discover whether there may be any response made, for if by good fortune there chances to be a Switzer guide within hearing he will readily answer the call, as Conrad has given it a turn that is significant of distress; but it dies away amid the howling of the bitter wind, and the surging of the storm alone reaches him.

"Something like a fraise creeps over his chery face, but he chases it away with a laugh, while shrugging his shoulders as the last squall sweeps down with the fury of demons let loose.

"How it stings! this big collar on my neck comes in handy, and these fur gloves, too. A wide head, that of yours, Sam Buxton, to provide for an emergency, even if the weather did look summer-like at starting. One thing worries me, Conrad, see here," he half shouts, for although the Alpine guide is only half a dozen feet away the sweep of the wind renders it impossible to converse with the natural tones.

"What now, baron?" asks Conrad, who has spent a part of his life upon the sunny Italian slopes of the Alps and hence acquired many of the habits of the people of Aosta.

"When you used the glass and spoke of seeing the party below, were there not females in it?"

"Excellent, I saw the flutter of skirts," replies the other, who is a sturdy fellow, twice as strong as Baron Sam, yet lacking much of the American's grit.

"How many would you say?"

"Two, at least, signor."

"Contend it! what a foolish thing to bring females up on the exposed side of Mont Blanc at this time of year."

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY

An eminent scientist, the other day, gave his opinion that the most wonderful discovery of recent years was the discovery of Zam-Buk. Just think! As soon as a single thin layer of Zam-Buk is applied to a wound or a sore, such injury is insured against blood poisoning. Not one species of microbe has been found that Zam-Buk does not kill!

Then again, as soon as Zam-Buk is applied to a sore, or a cut, or to skin disease, it stops the smarting. That is why children are such friends of Zam-Buk. They care nothing for the science of the thing. All they know is that Zam-Buk stops their pain. Mothers should never forget this.

Again, as soon as Zam-Buk is applied to a wound or to a diseased part, the cells beneath the skin's surface are so stimulated that new healthy tissue is quickly formed. This forming of fresh healthy tissue from below is Zam-Buk's secret of healing. The tissue thus formed is worked up to the surface and literally casts off the diseased tissue above it. This is why Zam-Buk cures are permanent.

Only the other day Mr. Marsh, of 101 Delorimer Ave., Montreal, called upon the Zam-Buk Co. and told them that for over twenty-five years he had been a martyr to eczema. ### TEMPERANCE NOTES

The Field Day work of the Alliance is this year meeting with great success. This work consists in the holding, upon the same day, of Sunday services in most of the churches of a county, at which services the pulpits are supplied by special deputations of Alliance workers. Sometimes there are more than a hundred of such services on one day. The field occupied for the remainder of this year, before the work is dropped for the Local Option campaign that will culminate on January 5th, is as follows:—Nov. 9th, Toronto; Nov. 16th, Victoria and Haliburton; Nov. 23rd, Bruce; Nov. 30th, Glengarry, Russell and Prescott; Dec. 9th, Middlesex and London. In these services the Alliance is reaching a great many people and doing a great amount of very valuable educating of public sentiment.

Some change has taken place in the list of Local Option campaigns now under way. Some of the municipalities failed to present in time their petitions for the submission of by-laws. The number of by-laws to be voted upon as far as now reported is forty-four. The liquor party have already secured the submission of repeal by-laws in ten Local Option municipalities. There are seven Canada Temperance Act campaigns under way. This makes a total of sixty-one contests that will be fought out at the polls in the near future.

The courts have decided that the licenses issued this year in the village of Aurora are legal. A section of the License Act provides that when a Local Option by-law has been declared carried at the polls, but is subsequently quashed by the courts, no licenses may be issued in the municipality affected without the special consent of the Provincial Secretary. When Aurora voted, the municipal clerk declared the by-law approved. At a subsequent recount it was shown that one vote had been cast illegally, and the court ruled that evidence could not be taken as to how the illegal ballot was marked, and that he therefore could not certify the by-law as having the necessary three-fifths vote. The action in question was taken to decide whether or not the commissioners could issue licenses under the circumstances without the consent of the Hon. Mr. Hanna. The courts have now held that the clause mentioned does not apply in as much as there was not really a by-law in the case, no third reading of the proposed by-law having been given by the municipal council.

In the town of Orillia some opponents of Local Option presented to the council a petition praying for the submission of a repeal by-law. It was proposed that if repeal should succeed, applications would be made only for wine and beer licenses and it was argued that such a licensing plan would be in the interest of "true temperance." After a strenuous effort, however, the repealers succeeded in securing only thirty-two signatures to their petition and some of those who signed were aliens and not entitled to vote. The movement was so manifestly insignificant and unpopular that the council properly refused to take any action concerning it.

Revival of Ploughing Matches

Canadian Farm:—The ploughing match is coming into its own again. There was a time, in Ontario at least, when the ploughing match was an annual affair in almost every township. And it accomplished a great deal of good too. But from some cause or other it fell into disrepute in many sections, though several localities kept on in the good work, and in those localities to-day are to be found our very best farmers. In recent years and since the organization of the Provincial Ploughmen's Association, there has been a new interest created, and good ploughmen, and men who take an interest in proper cultivation of the land, are more numerous than they were five years ago. A provincial contest has been arranged for to take place at Eglinton (adjoining Toronto) on Tuesday, Nov. 11, at which the prize winners in the local matches will compete. This promises to be an event of unusual interest. Every farmer interested in better ploughing and better cultivation of the soil should be there.

TEACHER IN TROUBLE

Recorder: Crawford Loys, a young school teacher of 19 years, son of Samuel Loys, of Elizabethtown, was committed for trial at police court on Monday morning on a charge of assault occasioning grievous bodily harm on Elsie Davis, 11 years old, and daughter of Charles Davis, of the same township.

Love is the teacher in Jellyby school and it is claimed that recently he struck the girl across the back with a pointer because she refused to answer a question.

The accused later appeared before His Honor Judge McDonald and upon being arraigned pleaded not guilty. He elected trial by jury and his case will come at the sessions next month. Bail was granted, himself in $200 and two sureties, his father and Alfred Smith, a trustee, in $100 each.

M. M. Brown appeared for the Crown, and H. A. Stewart, K. C. for Love.

UNGRATEFUL PEOPLE

The following from the Bracebridge Gazette is equally applicable to many other towns and villages:—

At last the church has capitulated. Thanksgiving Day is for feasting, shooting, racing and general jollification pure and simple. Long ago Thanksgiving Day was supposed to be set apart for giving thanks to the Providence who made the sun to shine, the rain to fall, the seed to grow and generally kept faith that "while the world endureth, seed-time and harvest shall not fail." Many years ago men dropped-out of it but their wives and the preachers and the newspapers still kept up the idea of a day of Thanksgiving to God. Gradually the necessity of bigger dinners kept the women away from this public thanksgiving, but the parsons and editors kept it up. This year there is still the pious editorial about Thanksgiving, but the parsons have capitulated: church doors were closed on Monday. Now we poor newspaper men may as well also capitulate to the worldliness of the age. Alas, there was a time when each church in Bracebridge had a good attendance that day; it dwindled until the idea of combined service sufficed. Bye and bye there were not enough "combined" men to take up a collection; now it is all over. Now we say "This is Thanksgiving Day; let's go out to the bush and kill something God made." As we still keep up the custom of feasting our bodies and have dropped the practice of thanking a Higher Being, I suppose it means we have worked for what we got and are independent. If the business is closed, why not take down the sign?

NOVEMBER ROD AND GUN

Rod and Gun in Canada for November (Publisher W. J. Taylor, Ltd., Woodstock, Ont.) sustains its reputation as the leading Canadian magazine devoted to the interests of sportsmen. Big game hunting in British Columbia is described in several well written and illustrated articles; "A Labrador Room" is descriptive of a Labrador fishing village; "My Visit to an Alberta Trapper," details a successful day on the trap line; "How to Keep Game from Spoiling" contains some valuable information for the hunter of big and small game; "When Riley Tied Hanlan" is by way of variety and is reminiscent of the famous Barrie Regatta when all the world's big scullers had a try-out for the Championship. The regular departments are well maintained.

The Beneficent Crow

From the Department of Agriculture at Washington comes a warning to farmers not to destroy crows. Heretofore farmers everywhere have supposed that crows were a pest and a nuisance. Men have lain awake at nights devising plots to exterminate the feathered pillagers of their ripening crops. In the aggregate millions of dollars' worth of time has been squandered in rigging up plausible-looking scare-crows, the very name of the contrivances witnessing to the age-long effort to escape their devastations. For hundreds of years, according to the experts of the Biological Survey, farmers have been worse than wasting their time. They have been persecuting a friend, and far better would it have been for them had they exerted themselves to protect and propagate the crow. After a careful examination of the habits of crows and the analysis of the stomach of several hundreds of them, the experts have reached the conclusion that a crow consumes enough grasshoppers, cut worms, white grubs and other injurious insects to more than outweigh the value of the small amount of grain and fruit that he eats or destroys.

STEWART-SPENCE

At the rectory, Athens, Monday, November 3, Rev. W. G. Swayne united in marriage Miss Violet Myrtle, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Spence of Charleston, to Mr. William Disley Stewart, son of Mr. and Mrs. James H. Stewart of Brockville.

The bride wore her travelling suit of grey Bedford cord, with satin blouse and velvet hat to match.

After the ceremony the bride and groom left by auto for Bellamy's, where they entrained for a trip to Ottawa.

Mr. and Mrs. Stewart are immensely popular with their many friends. On their return they will reside on Perth street, where the groom has a home in readiness.

Best wishes are extended to the young couple in their new sphere of life.

MEN WITHOUT BUSINESS TRAINING

All Look Alike to the Employer

You young men and young women who are thinking of entering the business world to-morrow must learn to-day—it's your only salvation. You must be prepared. If you're not, you'll be lost in the crowd—you'll be numbered among those who are "just making a living"—you'll be passed in the race for success by those who were willing to spend the little time and money necessary in learning about business before they went into it.

The logical place to study business is the Business School. Our sole purpose is to train young men and women that when they graduate from this institution they will be equipped for better positions—will be singled out by the men who do big things as "the one for the place because they have the training." Our system of instruction permits you to enroll at any time.

A WARNING NOTE

Montreal, October 21st.—Mr A. A. Ayer, president of the A. A. Ayer Co., wholesale distributors of dairy products, sharply criticizes what he termed a nefarious effort on the part of American interests to buy up the dairy cattle in Eastern Ontario and Quebec at big prices, and thus impoverish the dairy market of Canada.

"It has come to my notice," said Mr Ayer, "from various sources, that United States buyers are raiding the farmers throughout Eastern Ontario and points in the Province of Quebec, buying up whole herds of dairy cattle and young cattle. The prices they are paying are so much in advance of what the farmers have been accustomed to that the farmers seem to have lost their heads.

"Such thoughtless proceedings by the farmers will leave our dairy country impoverished, and will seriously affect the amount of milk, butter and cheese available for next year. It is time, to my mind, that an alarm was sounded, lest more farmers than have already done so, will permit American money to dominate and injure the dairy cattle market in Canada.

"Under the new American tariff there is no doubt that the dairy farmer will obtain higher prices next year for his products than he has been accustomed to secure. If it were possible to enact a law prohibiting the killing of heifer calves, our dairy herds could be increased in a short time, not only to meet the needs of the milk consuming public, but also to supply the market with baby beef. This latter means fattened calves about one year old.

"The dairy business in Canada today is more prosperous than it has ever been, and it will be regrettable if American interests are allowed to interfere with it. I am optimistic regarding the future of the dairy industry here in Canada. It is my opinion that there are few farms in Eastern Ontario or Quebec that under a proper system of rotation of crops and other modern farming methods could not be made to produce double the crops they now produce, and with the proper selection of calves as they develop obtain a better grade of cows."

C. P. R. MEN GET PRIZES

Agent at Jack Fish, Lake Superior, Winner

To have merited the distinction of having the most beautiful station garden on the whole Lake Superior division of the Canadian Pacific Railway is to have won the admiration of every stationmaster on the company's lines reaching from ocean to ocean. This honor has just been awarded to P. A. Jack Fish, in winning the general superintendent's prize of twenty-five dollars. Since the C. P. R. inaugurated the system of beautifying the station houses, round houses and section houses by supplying seeds and offering prizes for the best gardens, competition has become keen among the officials at various points of the system. Each year has brought forth better results until a perfection has been reached, and now the railway station, which was ever unsightly, has assumed the aspect of the Swiss chalet. Each property by the individuality of its respective official, has its own unique characteristics, and is artistic and wholly beautiful.

The other prize-winners of the Lake Superior division were as follows: W. Chandler, locomotive foreman, first prize for the best roundhouse garden, $10.

A. Dre-ri, section foreman, Kama, first prize for the best section house garden, $10

F. Zanna, section foreman, Craigs, Ont., second prize for the section house garden, $5.

W. J. Summers, agent, Cache Bay, first flower garden on district No. 1, $10; second prize $5, won by N. W. Vansiele, agent, Clamford.

District No. 3, first prize, $10, won by P. Barr, agent at Pearl; second prize, $5, awarded to J. Nicol, at Rossport.

A BIG CONTRACT

The General Sales Manager of the Canada Cement Company Limited, Montreal, writing Mr W. G. Parish, local agent, says:—

"Dear Sir,—The following is copy of telegram just received from our Toronto office, which explains itself:—

"County Council of Essex decided last night to submit a by-law for one million dollars on January 1st for concrete roads."

"You are quite familiar with the work that we have been doing in connection with concrete roads and this is probably one of the biggest appropriations ever considered, and certainly the largest in Canada for concrete roads. It is particularly gratifying, as Essex County is right across from Detroit, where the people know all about concrete, therefore, this cannot be taken, in any way, as an experiment."

SHORT WEIGHTS IN CHEESE

For a considerable time persistent complaints were made to officers of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa by producers and vendors of dairy produce in Eastern Ontario and Quebec regarding the unsatisfactory methods by which butter and cheese were weighed in Montreal. So numerous were the charges and so serious the allegations that it was considered necessary by the Government to have the matter properly investigated. Consequently in the summer of 1912 a royal commission was appointed. The investigation by this commission covered several months and involved the taking of evidence at many points and from many people who were considered likely to be able to shed light on the subject.

The report of the commission, consisting of a pamphlet of 17 pages, is ready to be sent to those who apply for it to the publications branch of the Department of Agriculture, at Ottawa.

The Name Lehigh.

On March 6, 1812, Lehigh county was formed from part of Northampton county. Its name came from the Lehigh river, being an Indian name derived through the German. The original Indian name is said to have been Le-chau-weech-ink, or Le-chau-week-1, meaning "the place of the fork of the road." The German settlers of the region shortened this into "Lecha," which is still in use among the Pennsylvania Germans. "Lehigh" is the English version of "Lecha." Allentown, the county seat, was called Northampton until 1838.—Philadelphia Record.

Size of Old Kitchens.

The kitchens of olden times seem to have been of extraordinary size, judging from the investigation recently made by an English historical society. At Hurstmonceux, for example, there was a kitchen 28 feet high, with three huge fireplaces and a bakehouse with an oven 14 feet in diameter.

Fewer Now Speak Gaelic.

Census figures show that in the county of Renfrew, Scotland, the number of persons who speak Gaelic is decreasing. In 1901 there were 5,736 and at present there are 5,587. Only six persons in the county speak Gaelic only.

How Concrete Work Was Made Easy For You

UNTIL a few years ago farmers considered concrete a rather mysterious material, that could be used successfully only by experts. They knew that upon the quality of the cement depended much of the success of concrete work. They had no means of testing cement, such as big contractors employ, and so could not be sure of its quality.

Yet the farmer needed concrete. He was kept from using this best and most economical of materials by

1. Lack of knowledge of how to mix and place concrete.
2. Lack of a brand of cement upon the quality of which he could absolutely rely.

Canada Cement

has supplied both these requirements.

We employed men to make a thorough investigation of the farmer's requirements; to find out where and how he could use concrete with profit to himself; to discover all problems he might come across and to solve them. This investigation was expensive. But when it was completed we had the material for our campaign to show the farmer how and where to use concrete, and we printed a book, "What the Farmer Can do With Concrete," for free distribution. That book makes every farmer who reads it a concrete expert, as far as his needs are concerned. He finds that there is nothing mysterious about concrete—that a few simple rules supply all the knowledge required.

At the same time we met the farmer's second objection—inability to test the quality of cement—by producing cement of a quality that does not need to be tested.

The Canada Cement that you buy by the bag is the same Canada Cement that is sold by the train-load for great elevators, buildings and bridges.

AUTUMN DAY

A deep silence has settled on the wood. Across the rill a grey grouse is drumming on the grey trunk of a fallen tree. The grey squirrel is gathering nuts for the winter. The young deer has changed his summer coat for one of a sombre hue; a red-brown to match the autumn leaves. Now the leaves are falling, unveiling the forest and opening long avenues through which we get glimpses of jumping deer.

This is the time to visit the Algonquin National Park, a delightful spot to enjoy a few days rest, study wild animal life, enjoy autumn in the forests and gather strength for the strenuous life ahead during the winter months.

THE GALTON WHISTLE.

In the sense of hearing numerous problems have interested the experimental psychologist. Among these may be mentioned the range of sounds that can be heard by an individual—that is, the limit both above and below which no sound can be heard. The solution of these two problems, the determination of the upper and lower limit of sound, has occasioned a great deal of careful work and the construction of many forms of apparatus. For determining the upper limit of sound for any individual—and individuals differ considerably—the Galton whistle is generally used. It consists of a tiny pipe, which is lengthened or shortened by a piston adjustment by a micrometer screw. This little instrument can be regulated to make a tone which is too high for any human ear to hear, and which will finally produce only a painful sensation.

The Galton whistle was devised by Francis Galton for his study of individual differences. He and one of his whistles built into the end of his cane, and as he walked through the zoological gardens he would blow it near the ears of the various animals. He adjusted the whistle too high for his own ear to hear, and if the various animals responded to the sound, he knew that their upper limit was greater than that of the human ear. The ordinary human ear can detect a tone whose vibrational rate is at least 25,000 vibrations per second, while the whistle will produce 50,000 per second. This upper limit varies with the age of the individual to such an extent that, if the upper limit at 17 years of age were 50,000 vibrations, at 60 years of age it would be about 25,000 per second.—Strand Magazine.

She Challenges All the Girls In the World

FASTEST GIRL RUNNER.

Julia Downey, 69 Poplar street, Brooklyn, has issued a racing challenge to "the girls in the world." She runs 100 yards in 11.5 seconds, and she does it, mostly, because she just loves to run.

She began running races a few years ago on the Brooklyn school grounds, and won three handsome medals.

Later she passed all the other girl runners at public foot races, and her recent triumphs have brought national celebrity to her.

Now she is ready to run against any girl for the championship of the world.

She keeps in training all the time and her daily programme includes boxing, handball, bag-punching, etc. Miss Downey believes all girls should take an active interest in athletics.

PACKING OF FRUITS

Government Issues a Pamphlet on Recent Changes.

Canadian fruits, than which there are none better, are now regarded in the markets of the world at their true worth. Through the operations of the Inspection and Sale Act, the packing of Canadian fruit has been greatly improved and the development of the trade accelerated. From time to time since its enactment, as experience has indicated, the Act has been improved, in order to more completely encourage and protect the industry. The latest amendment to the Act, which passed during the past session of Parliament, extends inspection to imported fruit, thereby placing it on equal footing with that grown in Canada. The amendment provides that the Governor-in-Council by regulation may prescribe the kinds of imported fruit, the packages containing which must be branded or marked; the brands or marks to be used thereon, as well as the methods and places where such branding shall be done. Other minor changes were effected in the Act.

For the information of those interested in the fruit trade, there has been issued by the Dairy and Cold Storage Commission a pamphlet designated Bulletin No. 40 of the Dairy and Cold Storage Branch, containing the Inspection and Sale Act, Part 9, (the Fruit Marks Act and Fruit Packages) as amended. Copies of this bulletin are available to those who apply for them to the publications branch of the department of agriculture at Ottawa.

NAVAL CONTRACTION.

(Chicago Tribune)
Mr. Winston Churchill's renewed suggestion of Germany that a year's suspension of ship building be agreed upon to reduce the cost of armaments is likely to run into one or two difficulties. If the German naval programme be intended, as Germany insists, merely to provide a navy adequate for the needs of the nation, the answer to the British first and of secondarily, would be that there could be no suspension until the requirements of the German service had been met.

If Germany is building against Great Britain, as the British believe, the Churchill suggestion might offer an additional reason for increased German activity. Behind the proposals of the first kind there is the intention that Great Britain is wearying in the endeavor to build two for one. Therefore, Germany might take the suggestion as indications of weakness and push ahead.

If the German empire is building quite regardless of other nations for its own purpose, it is not likely to consider its plans a proper subject for international agreement; if it is building deliberately against Great Britain, it is even less likely to consent to a suspension even for a year.

Minard's Liniment Cures Garget in Cows.

(Montreal Telegraph)
We should be hypocritical, as well as ungrateful to their memory, if we pretend that our zeal for peace and our friendship for our neighbors upon this continent rendered us forgetful of the sufferings of those who, in the foundations of our great Dominion with this globe to be found, and in this our American continent have their honorable share. That is, that of almost a hundred years now no sword has been drawn, no sun fired by one nation against the other. For more than three thousand eight hundred miles a common frontier runs unbrokenly unguarded as far as military strength is concerned. No naval armaments are maintained. No international wars, which are as large and as bloody as the Balkan, the Adriatic, the Black Sea and the Caspian. There have been as many and as serious possible causes of war during that period between the British Empire and the United States as there have been between any two European nations. We have demonstrated the fact that high-spirited and energetic people can live alongside each other, can develop their commerce and in the morning add the sugar, figs and nut meats and steam one hour in a double boiler, stir in the vanilla extract and turn into a serving dish. Chill and serve with whipped or plain cream.—Patent Review.

What Alaskan Dogs Eat.

Dogs in Alaska, when on the trail, are fed once a day, after the day's work is done. They are never fed in the morning, for if they were they would be lazy all day, or, what is more probable, would vomit up their breakfast soon after they got on the trail. Dogs, to work well, must be well fed, and it is false economy to underfeed a dog. They are fed on a variety of foods, including rice, fallow, corn meal and fish. If rice or cornmeal forms a part of their food it must be cooked. Some men prefer to feed their dogs on bacon or fish, thus doing away with cooking. Cooked food is cheaper and more fattening than raw feed, but the question as to whether dogs can work better on cooked or uncooked food is one that will never be settled so long as there are "mushers" to argue the question.—Harper's Weekly.

Not Always Available.

A smile rippled over the features of James M. Baker, secretary of the Senate, when reference was made to Washington sissies. He said he was reminded of the Pennsylvania girl who visited the marine barracks. The young girl, in company with several other visitors, according to Mr. Baker, was shown around by an officer who explained everything pertaining to the life and discipline of the post. "It is all wonderfully interesting," remarked the Pennsylvania girl at a certain point in the officer's talk, "but what do you mean when you refer to 'sissies'?" "Sissies are played every night on the bugle," explained the officer. "They mean 'lights out.' They are played over the body of a dead soldier." "I see," responded the Pennsylvania girl with a look of great enlightenment. "But what do you do if you haven't got a dead soldier?" Philadelphia Telegram.

HABITS OF THE 'COON.

Pretty Little Animal a Confirmed Nighthawk.

Were you ever at the Zoo at the animals' meal time, about eight o'clock in the morning or two in the afternoon? There are many interesting things to be seen then, and one of the most interesting is to see the raccoons wash their food. Instead of washing their faces as cats do, they dip their food into the water and rub it with their paws. Sometimes they get too hungry to take time for this washing, and the little boys and girls sometimes hurry to the table without washing their faces. Out in the woods the wild raccoons like to live near lakes or streams so they can dip their food in the water.

It would be interesting to know why the raccoons have this queer habit. It may be that because they get a good deal of their food from the water, such as clams, mussels, crayfish and oysters, they like to get into the habit of eating as if it all came from the same place. No doubt you have wished that "Bobby" Coon would wake up when you are standing in front of his cage on the north side of the Zoo, so that you can get a better look at him. Yes, he seems to sleep most of the time. It is his natural habit to sleep in the daytime, and do their stirring about at night. But if you have seen them standing up, you have noticed that they look like a small bear. They are akin to the bear family. They are generally of a brown or grayish color, with black patches around their eyes. Their tails are ringed with black and gray. They have sharp claws and sharp teeth. They are very strong for their size, and they fight with great fierceness when in their wild state.

'Coons are found all over Canada and the United States, and everywhere it is one of the greatest sports to hunt them. Once the writer helped chop a 'coon down to get a 'coon. He was there all right, and as soon as he came out of the hollow a little dog was on his back. He was a little 'coon, not quite as big as the dog, but more active. They kept fighting till they made their way to the bank of the creek and tumbled into the water. Then there was a tussle, each trying to drown the other. It was about an even match till a big dog, which we were holding off, broke loose and leaped in after the 'coon. With his strong jaws he crippled the 'coon before we could make him drop it.

The fur of 'coons is valuable, but most of the reason for hunting them is the sport in it. Perhaps it is best not to let them become too numerous, for they catch birds and break up their nests, getting the eggs. They are also very fond of corn when it is in milky grain, and occasionally they steal around to the farmer's henroost and get a chicken.—Kansas City Star.

Tight Money Pinching Many

Thousands more are being squeezed by aching corns which can be cured quickly with Putnam's Corn Extractor. Being free from caustics, Putnam's is painless. Use successfully for fifty years. No other, 25c at all dealers.

Fig Tapioca.

2-3 Cup of Tapioca, 2-3 Cup of Bread Figs, 2-3 Cup of Cold Water, 1-2 Cup of Light Brown Sugar, 1 Table-spoon of Vanilla Cream. Soak the tapioca overnight and in the morning add the sugar, figs and nut meats and steam one hour in a double boiler, stir in the vanilla extract and turn into a serving dish. Chill and serve with whipped or plain cream.—Patent Review.

TOWELS AND EYE DISEASES.

(New York Herald)
Towels have been found to be the most serious carriers of eye diseases. It is quite impossible to clean eyes or other parts in an institution well if there is any expense in the use of common towels. Even when only the hands are wiped the fact that the fingers are carrying to the eyes leads to the spread of disease. Other afflictions may be spread, though only rarely. Where recent bleeding points as in father's shops are touched, however, there is no little danger.

ALL OFF.

(Pittsburg Gazette-Times)
The fact that the split skirt is sanitary and healthy does not mean that the impression get abroad that it is a sensible garment and it will be all off, so to speak.

The march of the human mind is slow.—Burke.

Something of an Athlete.

One of the party in a Washington club the other night referred to a wonderful stunt in athletics and then Congressman Alfred G. Allen, of Ohio, came across with a story about the prize athlete.

A short time ago two college boys called on a beautiful girl at her papa's cottage down by the restful sea. One of the boys was a friend of the family, but the other had not previously met the girl in question.

"Miss Smith," said the friend, filling the veranda full of profane bows, "permit me to introduce Mr. Jimson, of our track team. He has lifted 700 pounds, and jumped 2 3/4 feet at a private trial."

"I am very pleased to meet you, Mr. Jimson," sweetly remarked the fair one. And so you are in athletics? You make me think of a distant uncle of mine."

"Thanks!" responded the college boy, as the fair one blushing sufficed. "You quite flatter me. Was the uncle you speak of an athlete?"

"Well, I should say he was!" was the emphatic declaration of the girl. "He lifted $30,000 and jumped from here all the way to South America!"—Exchange.

Was Not Missed.

No amount of persuasion of punishment could keep Johnnie from running away. The excitement of being pursued and of being brought back to a tearful family appealed to his sense of the dramatic and offset the slight discomfort that sometimes followed.

Finally his mother determined upon a new method. She decided, after many misgivings, that the next time Johnnie ran away no notice whatever should be taken of it. He should stay away as long as he pleased and return when he saw fit. In a few days the youngster again disappeared. His mother was firm in her resolve and no search was made. Great was poor Johnnie's disappointment. He managed to stay all day, but when it began to grow dark his courage failed and he started for home. He sneaked ignominiously into the kitchen. Nobody spoke to him. Apparently his absence had not been noticed. This was too much. As soon as opportunity offered he remarked casually: "Well, I see you've got the same old cat."—Pittsburg Chronicle.

KEEP BABY HEALTHY

To keep the baby healthy his little stomach should be kept sweet and his bowels working regularly. Nineteen-tenths of the maladies which afflict little ones are caused by some derangement of the stomach or bowels. Baby's Own Tablets are the ideal medicine for little ones. They sweeten the stomach; regulate the bowels; break up colds; make teething easy; dispel worms and cure constipation and indigestion. Concerning them Mrs. S. Hamilton, N. B., says: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets for my little ones and think they are just what children need. I would not be without them." Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 25c a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

BRAIDS.

(Chicago Tribune)
There are no young girls in America, asserts a French observer. Our girls, he says, become old before they are young. They are trying to charm and to attract at an age when they should properly be content to remain mothers. The Frenchman's basis for his conclusions on his observations in our large cities. He doubts if he had some into the smaller towns he would have found less sophistication and more simplicity. Nevertheless, his criticism is not unjust. It is the big cities that are the standard for the rest of the world. The girls of the big cities are the braided type with native ornament eyes, is indeed becoming rare in our cities.

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper.

EMPLOYEES' WELFARE WORK. (Philadelphia Record)
No feature of the industrial revolution is more conspicuous than the improvement in the health of the employees. The introduction of their own health insurance is spreading throughout the world. The health of the employees of the great manufacturing concerns and mercantile establishments are more and more looking after the physical safety, the health and the recreation of their employees. The Philadelphia Steel Company has just created the position of safety engineer, whose chief work will be bettering health conditions. In each department a committee will be formed of employees, who will have a part of a day each week to inspect their respective departments and to study dangerous and unhygienic conditions and practices and to devise remedies for them.

Minard's Liniments Cures Colds, Etc.

She Was Prepared.
Here is a story told by the Bishop of London. When he was in Toronto recently a member of one of his audiences told him that he had heard him speak 14 years before in London, and remembered only one thing he said. "He told me that 14 years ago," said the Bishop, "I related the story of an old woman who fell from a three-story window in the East End, struck her head, and was picked up for dead. "He added that I had said I went to her neighbor and remarked: 'I am afraid Mrs. Jones was not prepared,' and that I had received the reply: 'Oh, yes; I know she was, because she passed my window in her fall, I heard her say, "Now for a bump!"—

NA-DRU-CO Tasteless Preparation of Cod Liver Oil

Prevents Sickness Restores Health

Are you one of those thousands who, though apparently well, catch cold easily and often? It's a dangerous condition to tolerate, and one which you can easily prevent by taking two or three tablets of Na-Dru-Co Tasteless Preparation of Cod Liver Oil at once—this fall.

This pleasant-tasting food- tonic gives tone and vigor to the whole system, and so strengthens lungs and bronchial tubes that they readily throw off the colds which would otherwise take hold of you.

By virtue of its remarkable combination of curative and nutritive properties, Na-Dru-Co Tasteless Cod Liver Oil is one of the very best remedies known for chronic coughs and colds, bronchitis, asthma and catarrh. It is also an excellent reconstructive tonic after fevers, and in diseases such as scrofula and rickets, which are due to constitutional weakness.

Prove its worth by getting a 50c. or $1.00 bottle from your Druggist. 311

That Trouser Skirt.

We've heard of it. It is not sensational. There's a box plait at the back. There are side plaits at the sides. At the front there's a seam from waist to hem. Though there are plaits at the top, the skirt is scant and straight around the feet.

Not a Soloist.

The late Theodore Thomas was rehearsing the Chicago orchestra on the stage of the Auditorium theatre. He was disturbed by the whistling of Albert Burridge, the well-known scene painter, who was at work in the loft above the stage. A few minutes later Mr. Thomas' librarian appeared on the whistling, where Mr. Burridge, merrily whistling, was at work.

"Mr. Thomas' compliments," said the librarian, "and he requests me to state that if Mr. Burridge wishes to whistle he will be glad to discontinue his rehearsal."

Thought He Was Needed.

Tony came over from the old country and obtained employment in America as a section hand. Some time afterward he went to his former and said: "Boss, I like to get a vacation." "Why, Tony, you don't need a vacation," answered the boss. "Yes, boss, I like to get a vacation," repeated Tony. "What do you want with a vacation? If I give it to you, Tony, you will go over to the old country, blow all your money, and then come back broke. You had better stay here." "I like to get a vacation, boss," stolidly repeated Tony. "I'm going to get married and I'd kinda like to be there."—Everybody's Magazine.

History of Tea.

The earliest record of tea being mentioned by an Englishman was probably that contained in a letter from Mr. Wickham, an agent of the East India company, written from Firando, in Japan, on June 27, 1615, to another officer of the company, resident of Macao, in the south of China, asking him for "a pot of the best sort of chaw." It was not until the middle of that century that the English began to use tea; they received their supplies from Java until 1686, when they were driven out by the Dutch, says the Bulletin, of the Imperial Institute. At first the price in England ranged from 26 to 210 per pound. In the Mercurius Politicus of September, 1658, occurs an advertisement for the "China Drink called by the Chinese Teha, by other nations Tea, alias Tee," being sold in London. Thomas Garway, the first English tea dealer, in 1659 or 1660, offered it at prices varying from 15s to 50s a pound. Not until 1677 is there a record of the East India company having taken any steps for the importation.—London Globe.

Where the Fish Bite.

A travelling salesman while in Chicago was invited to a party given by a friend. During supper stories were called for, and he told the following. Two Irishmen were fishing one day in a lake. After nearly all day one of them threw his line far out and, pulled in, he got a strike. After fishing awhile, he finally landed a fine fish. "Oh," said he, "Mike, this is the only place in the lake to fish; we will just make it." And he cut a notch in the side of the boat. They all laughed, and the story telling was resumed. There was one Englishman who kept laughing all the time during the rest of the evening until time to go home, when he came up to the travelling salesman and said: "I was just thinking of the story you told. It was such a funny story, I don't believe I ever heard such a funny story before. Just think, if they had got the wrong boat they would have never known where to fish."—Machinists' Monthly.

Fifteen hundred head of cattle from the Canadian side were taken into Watertown over the St. Lawrence division of the N. Y. C. Railway on Saturday.

The most recent despatches from Mexico indicate that the United States will intervene in that troubled country and restore order.

Mr Marcellus, poultry expert of the Dominion Live Stock Branch, and Mr W. M. Bass, president of Delta Fair, are attending the ploughing match this afternoon.

At a meeting of the town council of Brockville on Monday evening a petition signed by 1,100 citizens of Brockville was presented, praying for the submission of a local option vote.

Single fare tickets will be issued from all stations on the B. & W. Ry. to Athens for the big Parish Bazaar, Nov. 12 and 13, good to return up to and including Nov. 14.

During the past week Mr C. C. Slack has been making improvements in the opera house scenery, applying his artistic brush where necessary, and it now presents a very attractive appearance.

On Sunday afternoon A. E. Cameron, the well known miller of Brockville, died instantly. He was out driving with a companion when life departed without a moment's warning.

Members of the Methodist church choir who purpose attending the special services at Hard Island on Thursday evening are requested to meet at the home of Mrs Derbyshire at 7 o'clock sharp.

Dr. O. O. Stowell of Watertown, N. Y., is visiting his brother C. Stowell of Athens, and his two sisters Mrs H. Brown, of Athens and Mrs H. C. B. Brown of Delta.—Brockville Times.

One of the societies of Queen's University, Kingston, Ont., is opposed very much to what it terms "fancy" dances, which include the bear dance, bunny lug, e.c., and at a recent meeting passed a resolution prohibiting such dances at any of the functions held by the society. It asked that these dances be barred at any of the big dances or social functions during the college season.

In earlier days "The wild goose flying southward, on its wing the clamorous wa-wa" found a welcome rest and feeding place at Lake Elioia. Latterly flocks have been comparatively few until this fall when several have dropped from the line of flight to recuperate in that quiet neighborhood. Mr Philip Robeson bagged a 9-lb goose, but many other hunters have had to be content with a distant view of the birds and with hearing their discordant "honk."

A farmer carrying an express package from a mail order house was asked by a merchant, "Why didn't you buy that bill of goods from me? I could have saved you the express, and besides, you would have been patronizing a home store, which helps pay the taxes and build up this locality." The farmer looked at the merchant a moment and then said, "Why don't you patronize the home paper and advertise? I read it and didn't know you had the stuff I have here."

Mr C. C. Slack has completed his paint shop near his residence on Elgin street and is now ready to fill orders for all kinds of decorative work in his line and for the painting of buggies, cutters, etc. We are pleased to note this evidence of Mr Slack's intention to make Athens his permanent abode, and hope that his wide experience and unusual skill as a wielder of the brush will meet with deserved recognition by the people of the village and country.

Domestic Model B Easy to Operate

To the Ladies of Athens and vicinity:

I have taken the exclusive sales agency for the

Domestic Vacuum Cleaner
acknowledged in the United States as well as Canada to be the superior of all vacuum cleaners.

The Domestic has ball-bearings throughout and runs so easy that a child can operate it.

It has three powerful bellows with more suction power than any other hand-cleaner made.

Its many points of superiority can best be appreciated when seen, and you are invited to inspect it at our store, or, if interested, we will demonstrate in your home.

The Domestic is operated like the ordinary carpet sweeper and is made in three sizes. It can be supplied with brush attachment for taking up hairs, threads, lint and heavy surface dirt; also with a hose and nozzle attachment for cleaning upholstered furniture, mattresses, draperies, etc.

No home should be without a Domestic Vacuum Cleaner.
