"Imitation is the Sincerest Form of Flattery."

The best proof that MINARD'S LINIMENT has extraordinary merits, and is in good repute with the public, is that it is extensively imitated. The imitations resemble the genuine article in appearance only. They lack the general excellence of the Genuine.

This notice is necessary, as injurious and dangerous imitations liable to produce chronic inflammation of the skin, are often substituted for MINARD'S LINIMENT by Dealers, because they pay a larger profit.

They all Sell on the Merits and Advertising of MINARD'S.

One in particular claiming to be made by a former proprietor of MINARD'S LINIMENT, which simply is a lie.

The Passion Play in British Columbia

Four thousand Indians were gathered on the Squah Reservation, on the banks of the Fraser River, last week. They performed the Passion Play under the patronage of Bishop Danterville and the direction of the Rev. Father Chironse.

The religious ceremonial lasted three days, and was almost a continuous performance, culminating in a representation of the stations of the Cross. On the first day the Indians paid their homage to Bishop Danterville, prostrating themselves before his Lordship, and kissing the ring. From twenty-five to thirty-five a minute that passed, and it took the Indians one hour and twenty-six minutes to perform this obligation.

The assembled thousands then formed in procession and, with seven bands playing, marched to the cemetery, where mass was said for the repose of the soul of a former missionary leader, Bishop Danterville. On the following day the Indians had long processions around altars erected to the Virgin Mary, and later in the day the lit was carried about the ground for two hours. In the evening the great multitude of redmen confessed their sins to the assembled priests.

This ceremony lasted far into the night, but the effect on the Indians was to prepare them for the great Passion Play of the morrow. The play set apart for the first performance of the religious ceremonial was an ideal one. The sun was shining, and a stiff breeze added life and motion to the marvellous scenes.

The scene of the play was a wide, level, open ground, surrounded by Indian cottages and hundreds of white tents. At intervals between the cottages were great altars erected to the saints and handsomely decorated by the Indians. From these flags and streamers were flying in the wind. The background of the picture was the flood swollen waters of the mighty Fraser and a complete circle of snow-capped mountains, among them the world-famous Mount Baker, glittering in the sun like a mass of molten silver.

The South American College, or, as it is known to the Romans, 'il Collegio Pio Latino Americano,' may be considered as an important connecting link between the centre of Catholicity and the distant but most faithful Latin colonies across the Atlantic. It is here, in the majestic building overlooking the Tiber, that the young missionaries receive that training which will enable them to bear the physical fatigue and the moral trials which they so nobly overcome in the fulfilment of their apostolic duties. Most of the martyrs who have recently fallen victims to their evangelizing zeal in Brazil and in other regions of South America were alumni of the Roman South American College. It was only natural that His Eminence Cardinal Gibbons in the course of his sojourn in Rome, should honor with his presence a religious institute of which not only American, but the whole Catholic world, may well be proud. Before visiting the 'Collegio Pio Latino Americano,' however, His Eminence made known to the rector, Very Rev. Father Radzicki, that he would be very glad to bear some specimens of the Gregorian Chant, which the South American students cultivate with great success, under the guidance of their professor, Father Antonio Rulla. When Cardinal Gibbons made his entry into the Academic hall of the College on Sunday evening he was greeted by a motet magnificently sung by the 'Sohola Cantorum,' who afterwards executed several other classic pieces of Gregorian music, very much to His Eminence's satisfaction. Father Hartmann, O. F. M., who was also present, having played the preludes of his Oration of St. Francis, which was so greatly appreciated last year at St. Petersburg, on the harmonium. His Eminence, in thanking the rector and the alumni for the cordial reception he had received, pronounced an eloquent speech, commenting on the Holy Father's recent Brief to the Abbot of Solesmes on the restoration of Gregorian Chant, and expressing the intention of founding a school of religious around the village was a mile in circumference. The effect of the weird, low murmurings, sliding into high strains of thrilling religious music, sung by the moving circle, was remarkable. First the impressive harmony was heard close by, then far away, then echoed in a hundred places from the surrounding hills.

Then there was a great thundering in the nearby mountains, as of heavy guns being fired. The "Passion Play" was at an end. The kneeling Indians were still silent when a priest rose among them, and, with a quiet, soothing voice, told them in the Chinook language—the trade language of the coast—the story of Christ's life, and the refrain all through the discourse, which appealed to the wandering tribes before him, was "And Christ had nowhere to lay his head."

What the "Passion Play" lacked was more than made up by the deep sincerity and religious fervour of the participants, and in the language of Bishop Danterville, "The play, under the circumstances, could not have passed off better, and it was certainly a most effective object lesson for the simple-minded redmen, 90 per cent. of whom cannot read or write any language."

The stations of the Cross represented were as follows: In the Garden, Treason of Judas, Christ Condemned to Death, Scourging at the Pillar, Crowning with Thorns, Ecce Homo, Christ Falls Under the Cross, Meeting of Jesus and His Mother, Veronica Wiping the Face of Jesus, Christ Exhorting the Daughters of Jerusalem, Jesus Stripped of His Garments, Jesus Nailed to the Cross, His Death on the Cross.—Philadelphia North American.

FROM ROME.

South American College.

The following most interesting information regarding the South American College at Rome, Cardinal Gibbons' visit thereto, and the Gregorian chant as cultivated therein, we take from the Liverpool "Catholic Times":

The Catholics of Kempen have just inaugurated a monument to Thomas a Kempis, says the "London Catholic Times." It is, as he would have wished it to be, an irrefragable monument to the memory of one who has been such a great benefactor to mankind should be perpetuated in every possible manner, but the nobles and most enduring monument to Thomas a Kempis is and will continue to be his own "Imitation of Christ." To day, after more than five centuries, it is a more powerful incentive to solid virtue than ever. It is found in all languages and in every part of the world, and whoever has read it regards the author as one of the best friends he has ever had. That it was really written by Thomas a Kempis has become more and more probable. The proofs adduced by Dr. Cruice, of Dublin, in his able work on the subject leave little room for doubt.

Scrofula

What is commonly labelled as not scrofula but the scrofulous disposition. This is generally and chiefly indicated by cutaneous eruptions; sometimes by pale-ness, nervousness and general debility. The disease afflicted Mrs. K. T. Snyder, Union St., Troy, Ohio, when she was eighteen years old, manifesting itself by a bunch in her neck, which caused great pain, was lanced, and became a running sore.

It afflicted the daughter of Mrs. J. H. Jones, Parker City, Ind., when 15 years old, and developed so rapidly that when she was 18 she had eleven running sores on her neck and about her ears.

These sufferers were not benefited by professional treatment, but, as they voluntarily say, were completely cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

This peculiar medicine positively cures the scrofulous disposition and radically and permanently cures the disease.

music in the Archbishop's Seminary of Baltimore, based upon the books and methods followed at Solesmes, Cardinal Gibbons afterwards visited the premises of the college, greatly admiring the spacious halls, class-rooms, and dormitories. His Eminence is enjoying excellent health, and has evidently derived great benefit from his sojourn in the Eternal City.

Interesting Happenings The World Over.

Preparations are proceeding for the celebration of the Pontifical jubilee of the Holy Father, which occurs in March of next year. Only two of the predecessors of Leo XIII. are credited with having attained to a twenty-fifth year of their pontificate.—St. Peter and Pope Pius IX. Three committees have been appointed to supervise the festivities in connection with the event. Cardinal Respighi has given instructions for the Oremus pro Pontifice to be said in all churches and at all services. To commemorate the jubilee a subscription list has been opened for the restoration of the basilica of St. John Lateran, a great pilgrimage will be organized for the early part of April, 1902, and a large collection will be made for the Holy Father. His Holiness is said to be engaged on a Latin poem, in which he refers to the twenty-fifth year of his pontificate and which he regards as his poetic testament.

Mrs. Craigie, more widely known as "John Oliver Hobbes," has just been elected a member of the council of the Authors' Society in England, being the fifth woman to be thus honored. She is a convert and author of "A School for Saints."

Writing of the London Library, "the largest subscription library of the kind in the Empire," the "Catholic Weekly Register," of London, says: "In some libraries Catholic books are so far excluded or neglected as to indicate gross prejudices or who are responsible for their neglect. This is not the case here, where Catholic books receive their full share of attention. Hardly one of our modern writers is unrepresented, and there is a complete set of the Fathers of the Church, the "Acta Sanctorum" and a great accumulation of mediæval chronicles. The object is not to cater for the novel-reading public, whose wants are supplied from other sources, but to supply students and other thoughtful persons with the high-class literature of this and other countries. The present number of the books on the shelves amounts to about 200,000, and their increase at the rate of over 5,000 volumes per year. The book circulation varies from time to time; during the last twelve months it has nearly reached 112,000 volumes."

Under the head of "Lynching and Its Remedies," the Pittsburg Catholic has the following: "The lynching of degenerate negroes has broken out with renewed violence in several of the southern States. This abnormal state of affairs will continue until the leaders of the race, instead of prating of equal rights, put themselves vigorously to work to correct the morals of their people in this section of our country. The hysterical evangelism of the southern camp-meeting has no effect, for it has neither force nor truth to impress its followers with the duty of right living. The people need a strong corrective; they need religion that dominates passion, and they are practically without this. The vast majority of the southern whites, so far as religion goes, have but a mere sentiment, and hence this awful war between the races. Lynching upon lynching may follow, and still the terrible oracles will continue until they pall and dull with their constant repetition. Only religion in all its truth will solve for this unfortunate land this terrible problem. Here is a subject for truly apostolic zeal."

Does it pay to be a Christian Scientist? is a question which many bereaved parents in the United States are now asking themselves when they see their beloved olive branches dead when skilled professional treatment might have saved them. It pays Mrs. Eddy very well, at any rate. So is the fondness of this crazy society which it would be deoeration to call a religion. Her book, "Science and Health," is the Bible of her disciples. It costs her 47 cents a copy to get it printed, it is sold at from $3 to $8 a copy, and Mother Eddy, as she is affectionately called, has already received the tidy little sum of $300,000 as her profits from the sale.—Casket.

Richards' Headache Cure gives instant relief.

AN Ottawa despatch of the 14th contains the following: Work of tabulating the population of the Dominion is completed, but it is announced that the figures will not be made known until Hon. Mr. Fisher returns to Canada.

WHEN Sir John McDonald was Premier of Canada and was engaged in the great work of up-building our great Dominion, he of necessity found himself obliged from time to time to visit London.

We deeply regret to announce the death of Mrs. McDonald, wife of Hon. Senator A. A. McDonald, which sad event took place at her residence early on Friday afternoon.

Nothing could more strongly prove the political insincerity and hypocrisy of the Local Government than their attitude regarding the Prohibition Act.

Subscribers Attention!

We beg to call the attention of our subscribers to a matter of much importance to them, and especially to ourselves. Heretofore it has been the custom to allow the subscriptions to run to the end of the calendar year.

When a minister says that there is no longer an exodus and is shown to be wrong, he is not made right by the statement of his friends that there is another movement of population from the United States to Canada.

The Grits and the Exodus.

A favorite shibboleth of the organs of the Laurier Government is that the "Exodus has ceased."

The Navy All Right.

The Washington Post's London letter states: The more the naval scare is examined, the less worthy of serious attention it appears.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

RUSSIA'S NEW PORT. The correspondent of the Morning Post, telegraphing from New Chwang, says he has just returned from visiting Dalney, the new port that the Russians are constructing a few miles from Port Arthur.

THEY GOT STRANDED.

A Glenwood Springs, Col., despatch of the 15th says: A thoroughly organized band of pickpockets operating at Colorado Springs is responsible for a party of about twenty English tourists becoming stranded here.

BIG JUMP IN CORN.

A New York despatch of the 12th says: There was a scene of great excitement in both the wheat and corn markets in New York today.

When a minister says that there is no longer an exodus and is shown to be wrong, he is not made right by the statement of his friends that there is another movement of population from the United States to Canada.

RAILWAY HORROR.

The Nickle Plate Bridge at Springfield, Pa., gave way on Thursday just as a freight train with three cars attached was passing over precipitating the three cars laden with laborers into the valley over 50 feet below.

In South Africa.

Referring to the Salisbury government's admission that they had information regarding the shooting of British wounded at Vlakfontein, far back as June 11, the London Daily Mail whose correspondent was the first to make the news public, stated that this is only a small portion of concealment now being carried on.

A TERRIBLE accident occurred on the P. E. Island railway at Summerside, on Friday night. As the express for Charlottetown was backing up from the wharf to the station after taking on the passengers from the Northumberland, a man named John L. Weatherbe, who had come over in the steamer, and who did not wait for the train was run into and instantly killed just as he was about to cross the track near the station. The unfortunate man seemed to be deaf for he did not hear the order of the train men or the people on the platform shouting to him to get off the track. The train was going very slowly at the time but could not be stopped in time to save his man. Two cars and one truck of the postal car passed over him. He was found quite dead, with his two legs severed just above the ankles and his right arm off near the shoulder. He was also struck about the head. The deceased was a ship carpenter, who was returning to the Island to visit his daughter, Mrs. Donahue, of Canaan, after an absence of 25 years. He was about 50 years of age and was an uncle of Mr. Isaac Lane, of this city. He belonged to Lot 49, but had been living at New Bedford, Mass., all along. A coroner's inquest was held at Summerside, on Saturday afternoon, and after all the evidence was taken the following verdict was pronounced: "We the jury appointed to investigate the death of John L. Weatherbe, while crossing the railway track near the east end of the platform at the passenger depot S/ide, on the night of July 12, 1901, find that he was struck and instantly killed by the rear end of the express train, as said train was backing into the station, after leaving the wharf, and that no blame whatever attaches to the train or station men, all the usual precautions for safety having been taken." "The Jury are of the opinion that owing to the late arrival of the steamer and the heavy travel during the summer months accident of this kind is too frequent and in order to prevent any similar accident at the same place in the future, the railway authorities should place a watchman at the station crossing or adopt some other precautions, when trains are backing into the station; and when shunting is being done at that place."

The French Shore.

A London despatch says: For a settlement of the Newfoundland question there is a brighter prospect now than has existed for some time, in spite of the rumors circulated concerning the partial failure of the recent visit to London of Mr. Bond, the Newfoundland premier. Neither Mr. Bond nor Mr. Chamberlain has been at liberty to make public the lines of the probable settlement, if only for the reason that thus far no definite propositions have been laid before the French government. But unofficially the French foreign office has been sounded, and with results on the whole satisfactory.

Persons in touch with the British colonial office understood that Great Britain had considered four suggestions from Newfoundland for the cancellation of the French fishing rights on the treaty shore. These are monetary compensation, a recognition of French sovereignty in the New Hebrides, a cession of the Gambia colony and protectorate, and concessions to France in Nigeria.

It is Nigeria that both powers are looking for a solution of the Newfoundland problem—the problem Sir Charles Dilke once said was the most menacing question between London and Paris. France, after all her sacrifices and also her magnificent achievements in Central Africa, finds her position in that part of the world unsatisfactory.

For years the French colonial party looked toward Lake Tchad. Now that this inland sea is no longer a mystery the French are bitterly disappointed. They are disillusioned by the treaty arrangement. The western shore of the lake is British and its southern is German, while to the French it is the northern and eastern shores. Unfortunately for the French, their section turns out to be little more valuable than a desert. After an immense outlay in blood and treasure, France finds her abundance in the Tchad region has yielded her, not the land of promise, but a desolate waste. The province of Zinder, which lies between Lake Tchad and the Niger, is still "in the air," as the only route to it is through British territory.

Great Britain will never relinquish her hold upon Lake Tchad. The governor of Lagos, Sir William Macgregor, recently declared that England will not rest in Africa "until the iron horse drinks the waters of Lake Tchad." Nor would the British government give up Bornu, whose riches have yet to be tapped, even to settle the troublesome French shore controversy. But within limits there is a possibility of a modification of the Alger convention that would be satisfactory to London and at the same time provide a route from the west or north to Lake Tchad which would not lie through British territory.

A TRYST WITH SOLITUDE. BY SARAH FRANCES ASHBURTON. In the clear blue of noon I sought the wood, Keeping a longed-for tryst with solitude. Seating myself beneath a great oak tree, A wood owl's eyes, uncanny, glared at me. Chill was the air; the dark and oozing moss Two griggy spiders weaved their webs across. From a green pool, fetid with stagnant breath, A slimy creature croaked—I thought of death. Weary of life, my steps had turned away, In the still wood to muse, that summer day. Now changed my mood—the tall firs piercing through, Once more I caught a glimpse of heavenly blue. To go was bliss, to breath was a delight, With scent of flowers, and meadows greenly bright. And lo! a flash of sunlight from on high Smiled, like a beam of hope, from God's own sky. Then all my soul went up in voiceless praise. "Thank God," I thought, "for this sweet day of days! "Bright are the fields, dim and dark the wood,— No more I keep a tryst with solitude."

Blandine of Betharram. BY J. M. CAVE. (American Messenger of the Sacred Heart.) (Continued.) Blandine came tripping lightly along the hall. Her presence at this moment was a happy diversion for Margaret's heart was full to overflowing. Blandine's eyes were sparkling with animation; she was evidently impatient to impart some great news. "Well, demanded Sister Noella, 'what of the procession, and the pilgrimage?' 'Was it a success?' 'O!' exclaimed the little one in a voice of rapture, 'O! so beautiful and such prayers! And a poor paralyzed man threw down his crutches, and walked in the procession; and every one could see the tears rolling down his cheeks. And a lame sister was cured, and everyone was so happy for her, she looked so glad! "And was the singing good?" "Oh, such singing! Everyone sang, and the Magnificat was just like at Lourdes, and the Benediction hymn, too!" "So you waited for Benediction? Who bestowed it?" "Our own dear Bishop of Tarbes, and he looked so kind, and spoke so pleasantly to us—to the children, I mean, and gave us his blessing more than once. I gave my benediction for—the speaker glanced at Margaret, and their joyous look fell. She was disappointed, just if she had expected that Benediction to bring back the gift of sight to her dear lady. But Sister Noella looked so happy that she forgot her praise and responded with a loving smile to the Sister's next words. "That was all, dear, and I am sure Madame Margaret felt its sweetness this very hour. Is it not so, dear friend?" "O, yes, indeed! I felt and feel it, God is very good! Come here, Blandine." She folded the child tenderly to her heart and kissed her fondly, while she whispered, "Be faithful, my dear child; be faithful, that you may gain a crown of life for yourself, and help me to regain what I have lost. Not my sight, dear Blandine, but something far more precious! You understand do you not?" "O, yes, dear Lady and I will try hard," was the earnest reply of the little creature, as she withdrew to her lessons. "And now, dear Sister, at last I may call you by that name, dear, may I not?" "Unworthy! unworthy," still protested poor Margaret. But the nun took no notice of the protest. "Now, that my dear sister is so much better and stronger for our conference, is she not curious to know when and how I first guessed her identity? For you know I only saw you once, for a few brief moments, and in the midst of a throng. First, let me say, however, that you attracted and interested me from the very beginning. Never seeing you unveiled, how could I guess that the plain, black gown hid from me the white-robed convent-girl? Then when we made nearer acquaintance, the first impression had given way to other interests. I thought of you only as the relative of Madame Moore. It was in that feverish hour when you threw off the bed-covering and a letter fell from the folds of your night-robe, that I made the discovery. I read the clear, bold letters of the address without premeditation. They stared me in the face, large, clear. That letter I put carefully away, dear Margaret, till you shall choose to ask for it." Margaret was sorely troubled now. She had somehow concluded, in her own mind, that Antony had found her; that the letter must be from him. Not that she fancied for an instant that he could be still seeking her for any other motive, but a sense of high Christian duty, and the desire to right a cruel wrong. Now she realized her mistake. Had the letter been from him Sister Noella, so frank and confiding by nature, would have said so; the handwriting would have told her the fact. Who then could her unknown correspondent be? "There is no one on earth to write to me," she said sadly, after a little reflection. "There must be some mistake. Please read or examine the letter, Sister Christmas, it cannot be for me, I think." Sister Noella drew forth the heavy folds of paper from their secure covering. Soon a joyful exclamation broke the silence, "O Margaret! Margaret! Ah, how wonderful are the ways of Providence! Here in my hand lies the fulfillment of your friends' words: 'After my death it will come to her'! Yes, here it is!" "What is it, Sister? What of good can come to me?" "O, fall less, doubting Margaret! Fortune has come to you; good fortune! wealth! Do you understand, my dear? O, I am glad! glad!" "Wealth, Sister! Ah, can it be wealth! then I can keep Blandine?" "Dear, unselfish heart," thought the nun, as she gazed upon the calm face, and the sightless eyes lifted to heaven. Not one selfish thought, even at this moment. "Yes, you can keep Blandine; shall I send her to you, or read the letter?" "Read enough to satisfy yourself, dear Sister, to make sure there is no mistake; then, if you will, let the child come to me. Do not tell me any details, dear friend." "You may surely have your way about the child," said Sister Noella. "Money, and very much, is yours, now." "Keep the papers, dear. Let Blandine come." "When the echo of the nun's footsteps had died away, Margaret sank on her knees and stretched out her arms. "O, God!" she moaned, "come to me, Thyself! Come to me, not with riches; not with happiness, and not even with sight! Come to me with pardon. Blindness shall be as light to me with Thee. Come to me, my Saviour, my light, my life! Come to thy blind prodigal. Since she cannot find her way to Thee, come thou to her!" "Dear little Blandine, it seems to me that you love the poor blind woman?" "O very, very much, dear lady!" "Art thou very sure, dear little one?" "Very, very sure, dear lady. Justly!" "Enough to be my child, my own little child? Enough to call me by a better name than that of 'dear lady'?" Blandine did not understand. She was silent. If Margaret could have read the expression of that sweet face, there would have been no need of further questions. But she was patient. She had a mother's instincts. Seeing the look of patient waiting, the tender, longing look on the kind face, seeing the poor sightless eyes, the child took courage to speak out her thoughts. "Then can I tell you, dear lady? It is as if you knew what I was thinking in my heart for such a long time." "And of what has Blandine been thinking so long?" "Blandine was wishing so much—so much, to be your little girl, your own little girl, to work for you, to wait on you, to stay here with you, and to take you up to the Calvary—when you are strong, I mean. And to ask our lady to give back your dear eyes. To ask her on the very tomb of Father Gerardo's, where the dead child was restored to life." "And then, Blandine, after that?" "O, after that, to be always with you, dear lady. That was in my thoughts before you could not see any more." "How so, dear?" "Because, when Sister Superior sent me to you with messages—when you let me do little things for you, you spoke so gently, so—like my own-

dear mother," and again at the thought of that dear mother little Blandine broke down and sobbed, sobs of such deep pain for one of her tender years, that Margaret was constrained to gather her again close to her breast, as that mother might have done, and kiss away the blinding tears. When that sorrowful little heart had been soothed, Margaret asked the same question: "Can Blandine love the poor blind lady well enough to call her by that dear name that makes her weep? To call her mother, and let her be her mother, really and truly, in the place of that dear one now in heaven?" "It is as if God wished me to have a new dear mother, just like her," whispered Blandine, nestling to the heart that craved her affection so earnestly, "and this is God's beautiful day for little Blandine," she murmured softly. Presently she fell asleep in Margaret's arms. What would not blind Margaret have given at that moment, to see the sleeping face. She remembered its lovely features, the large soft, dark eyes, the sweet innocent smiling mouth, and the grave look that so readily replaced the smile. She remembered the face. But she longed with intense longing, to catch the expression it wore for her. Not that she could doubt but what the little child was sincere and true and loving—but one sees the heart through his windows, and the pure heart of Blandine was what she craved. But she was resigned. She even said to herself; "It is better so. It is a proof that I may hope to be near him, since He deigns to give me even this little portion of His love to carry." She placed the sleeping child upon her own couch, pondering over her last words: "This is God's beautiful day for little Blandine." "May it indeed be God's beautiful day for these and me," was Margaret's prayer. "Blessed it surely is and will be, since He gives me the sure hope of calling this little lamb my own, and the means of providing for her." Yes, truly a wonderful and beautiful day for Margaret and her adopted child. It is sunrise with them now. Between this glad sunrise and glorious sunset we foresee for them there will inevitably be some clouds, for, as our own dear Longfellow truly says, "Into each life some rain must fall. Some days must be dark and dreary." The reason why Sister Noella goes smiling about her work to-day has nothing to do with Margaret's letter. That letter at Margaret's earnest request, has been put away. She has begged Sister Christmas not to speak of it more, either to her, or any one, until—well, without further explanation the nun understands that Margaret desires something more precious than this world can give, before letting her mind be invaded by any change of fortune, however brilliant. She is more than satisfied with the first fruits of her good fortune. I have given her Blandine, an innocent child, to love and care for. O, who can lead her up the Calvary of Betharram, and thence up that other Calvary, that leads straight to heaven's gate. Yet the grey nun smiles and smiles, although the wonderful letter with its five great red seals has nothing to do with her happy thoughts. If she remembers it she rather frowns, for it is more a subject of regret than rejoicing at this moment. Not that the rich heritage is a subject of regret but that it has come too soon, thinks Sister Christmas, who is expecting a little pilgrimage of her own. She has alluded to this pilgrimage several times, without exciting Margaret's interest or curiosity, and she resents that just a little, in a charitable way, of course. "It is a very little pilgrimage," she says, "only a family group—some friends who have longed wished to pay a visit to the ancient chapel and well of Betharram, and the new grotto and fountain of Lourdes. They will expect to see very saintly folk at these holy shrines, for how could such else abide in the shadow of such sanctuaries." And having said this, partly to Blandine and partly to herself, she is ready a-moment to bite her tongue for vexation and shame lest Margaret, the sensitive, should apply them to herself, and remember the years she has passed in indifference and insensibility, close to the chapel and Calvary itself. But Margaret has not heard a word. She is meditating too intently to notice passing remarks. She is reviewing the past, so bright and then so dark. She is looking at the present; it is dark yet bright too, with a great hope. As to the future she says to herself— "I leave that to the grace of God. Yes, I leave the past to His mercy, the present to His love, the future to His grace." And thus leaving all in the hands that can alone hold all she finds what the world with all its power and glory and splendor can not afford. She finds peace of heart. And now, strange thing! Sister Noella has become busy and intrusive, a most unnatural thing in any religious, but most of all in one so discreet, so well poised, so dignified. She is hovering about Margaret, restless, excited, arranged her hair, her gown, her shawl. "I want some of your repose to

NINE BOILS. FOUR RUNNING SORES. The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont. Some time ago my blood got out of order and nine large boils appeared on my neck, besides numerous small ones on my shoulders and arms. Four running sores appeared on my foot and leg and I was in a terrible state. A friend advised Burdock Blood Bitters, so I procured three bottles. After finishing the first bottle the boils started to disappear and the sores to heal up. After taking the third bottle there was not a boil or sore to be seen. Besides this, the headaches from which I suffered left me and I improved so much that I am now strong and robust again. Yours truly, MISS MARGIE WORTHINGTON, Galesie, Ont. Feb. 3rd, 1901.
