The Cruise of the "Kingfisher."

CHAPTER VII

"I've remembered," he said, fixing his eyes upon him. "You're right; I've not met you before; but you remind me of a man, a pal of mine, who's gone under years ago. His name was Percival. Ever heard it?"

The young man's face flushed, but so slightly that the actor did not notice it; but Workley did, though his eyes made no sign.

"No," said Bannister; and he went out.

"Seems offended," remarked Jim. "What sort of a chap was the man he reminded you of?"

The little man shrugged his shoulders.

"About as hot a member as they make 'em," he replied. "This chap that's gone out is the image of him—got the same look in his eyes, and the same nasty twist at the corners of his mouth. Do you know anything about him? Where does he live, for instance?"

The actor shook his head indifferently.

"Don't know. Know nothing about him, excepting just meeting him at a pub. now and again—generally here. Let's have another drink."

The young man went down Drury Lane into the Strand, and across Waterloo Bridge, frowning thoughtfully, and gnawing at the lip which, as Workley put it, "had the nasty twist" to it; for the little man had mentioned the young fellow's real name, and he knew that Workley had referred to his father. Of that father the son knew very little, and that little was of a kind which had prompted him to disown his parent and deny his own name.

Crossing Waterloo Bridge, he turned down one of the squalid and miserable streets on the right, and, opening a door of one of the dirty houses, he went up two flights of stairs, and into a small and poverty-stricken room.

A woman was bending over the fire, cooking a herring in a frying-pan; and the ill odor of the fish, mingled with the evil scent of the cheap lamp, filled the room with an atmosphere too thick and powerful for adequate description.

As he entered, the woman looked round. She was not very much more than a girl, and, seen in a more favorable light, would have been good-looking; and, indeed, even in the dismal gloom of the smoky lamp one could see that, with proper food and gentler circumstances, she would have developed into a beautiful woman. She was dark, and her large eyes, almost black, shone with a feverish lustre from the colourless face. Her lips, well formed, drooped at the corners, and the straight rows were joined with an anxious care-worn expression. But her voice was cheerful and affectionate as she turned and looked at him with a fond smile, which, brief as it was, had tenderness enough in it to transform the expression of the face from one of suffering and want to one of gentle welcome.

"Oh, you've come at last, Ralph! I've just cooked you—"

"Phew!" he said, coldly, and with an air of disgust. "If that's for me, take it off the fire and pitch it out of the window if you like. I don't want it; the smell's enough for me. Put it away somewhere, or I'll go out again."

She took the pan from the fire and carried it outside the door, and opened the window.

"I'm sorry, dear," she said, apologetically; "but—there was only enough for a herring—"

"I thought you went for your mouey this afternoon," he put in, with an air of disappointment and anger. "You don't mean to say they didn't pay you?"

"Oh, yes, they did, dear," she made haste to reply; "but there was two weeks' rent—"

"Which you could have left," he said.

"They wouldn't wait, Ralph; they wouldn't, indeed! She told me so to-day. And I had to buy some oil, and I bought the tobacco for you. Then there was only enough for a loaf of bread and some butter."

"Oh, for God's sake, spare me the details!" he said, curtly. "I came home—perhaps missing a good thing—thinking you'd have a shilling or two."

"I'm sorry, Ralph!" she said, going up to him and putting her arm round his shoulder. "And you're wet! Take off your coat and let me dry it."

"Oh, don't bother!" he said; but he sullenly permitted her to take the coat off. "Did they promise you a rise?" he asked, after a pause, during which he filled his pipe from the packet of expensive tobacco which she had laid on the table beside him. She shook her head.

"No, dear; and I didn't like to press it. You see, there's plenty hungry after my place in the ballet, poor as it is. Oh, there's hundreds that would be glad to snatch at it! But I've been to Mr. Abraham's, the agent's, again this afternoon, and he said that he thought he might get me something at the Halls; anyway, that he'd be sure to remember me."

"Yes; we know what that means!" he said, with a sullen sneer. "Look at me! I tell you what it is, Nita, I don't think I can stand this much longer. The life's pulling me down. I shall cut it. Don't be surprised if you find, some fine day, that I've gone off to—Klondike, or somewhere."

Her face, already of an ivory pallor, went whiter, and she stopped in the act of putting on her shawl and hat, and looked at him, holding her breath, as it were.

"You—wouldn't do that! No; you couldn't be so heartless!" she panted. Then she forced a smile, and bent over him. "I've been a good wife to you, Ralph."

He made a movement of impatience; and—how soon a wife learns to check all signs of unwelcome affection!—she drew away from him.

"I must go. If I can borrow a shilling, I'll bring something home

Did Child Wake Up Cross Or Feverish?

Look, Mother! If tongue is coated give "California Syrup of Figs" to clean the bowels.

Mother! Your child isn't naturally cross and peevish. See if tongue is coated; this is a sure sign its little stomach, liver and bowels need a cleansing at once.

When listless, pale, feverish, full of cold, breath bad, throat sore, doesn't eat, sleep or act naturally, has stomach-ache, diarrhoea, remember, a gentle liver and bowel cleansing should always be the first treatment given.

Nothing equals "California Syrup of Figs" for children's ills; give a tea-spoonful, and in a few hours all the foul waste, sour bile and fermenting food which is clogged in the bowels passes out of the system, and you have a well and playful child again. All children love this harmless, delicious "fruit laxative," and it never fails to effect a good "inside" cleansing. Directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups are plainly on the bottle.

Keep it handy in your home. A little given to-day saves a sick child tomorrow, but get the genuine. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," then look and see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company."

for supper. Don't put your coat on again till it's dry."

She went out, and the man, when her footsteps had disappeared, brought in the herring and ate it. Then he lit his pipe again, yawned, and catching sight of the piece of newspaper in which the fish had been wrapped, took it up and began to read it.

Suddenly his hands clutched at the paper, his face flamed red, his eyes grew wide, and an exclamation broke from him. For this is what he read:

"The Rattan Romance.—Notwithstanding the unceasing efforts of the family solicitor, Mr. Bulpit, of Market Ration, the heir to the title and vast estates of Rattan has not yet been discovered. The heir—indeed, the owner, for there now stands no one between him and the historic earldom and almost uncountable wealth of Rattan—is a son of the third brother, Ralph Percival. It is known that Ralph, the father, was well, anything but a respectable man, and that, for reasons easily understood, he found it wise to conceal his name. He was in Australia, where he married, and Mr. Bulpit is assured that a son was born. This son, if he is alive, is the Earl of Rattan. The latest tidings of the father leave him playing small parts in a country theatre. Perhaps the son may be found following in his father's footsteps."

The young fellow stared at the paragraph as if he were in a dream; but his mind was awake. He could remember his father, raffish, disreputable, stumbling half drunk across the stage of a country theatre, and remember the swagger with which, when quite drunk, he would boast that he was "a gentleman, sir—a gentleman born and bred!" Could remember other such incidents, seemingly insignificant at the time, but, heaven and earth! how significant! how pregnant with meaning now, when viewed in the light of this dazzling, electrifying paragraph!

He felt dizzy, overwhelmed, and he gazed round the room like the man half stupefied. Then suddenly he began to realize what it all meant.

His father's name was Ralph Percival—though he lived under an alias—his own name was Ralph Percival. He was the Earl of Rattan!

He fell into the chair, and instinctively looked round for something to drink. There was nothing.

"An earl—an earl! Untold gold, and not a drop of anything! And in this filthy den!" He laughed harshly, thickly, with bitter scorn of his circumstances. "An earl! My God! I shall go mad! Uncountable wealth! And it's waiting for me! I'm a gentleman—no, a nobleman!—and I live, here in this—!"

He looked round and struck the table furiously; and then he caught sight of a skirt—a mud-stained skirt—hanging on a chair, and a strange look came into his face—a look of disgust, which slowly gave place to one of cunning; the nasty twist of the under-lip again came out.

"I've been a fool!" he muttered—"a cursed fool to marry. A pretty fool I shall look with a woman—a low-class woman—hanging at my heels when I go to claim my rights. 'A ballet-girl countess!' That's what the d—d papers will call her. And it will stick to her, and to us, for life. I couldn't face it. I'd rather stop where I am, what I am!"

He leant his chin on his hands and gnawed at his lip, his eyes half hidden under his lids. And he did not look pretty at that moment, or very much like an earl.

"Why shouldn't I?" he muttered, as if he had been examining an idea. "Who'd know? She wouldn't. She never sees a paper, and the true story of my life wouldn't get into it. Why shouldn't I make a clean cut of it? By the Lord, I did give a hint just now! That's lucky! Yes, luck's turned for me, even in small ways! An earl—an earl! Only had a drink! My head's swimming! A ballet-girl countess! No, no; it wouldn't do! She wouldn't like it—she wouldn't be happy. Yes; it would be kinder to make a clean cut of it, and—and I'll do it—I'll do it for her sake. O—n it! I didn't know who and what I was when I married her, and it wouldn't be fair to shove her into such a place—it wouldn't be fair to her. No; I'm doing the right thing. She'll soon get over it. Women soon forget. There's plenty of other fellows, and Nita's a stylish-looking girl."

The meanness grew more distinct and hideous on his face, his eyes more shifty, as if he were afraid lest he should catch sight of his own face in the broken glass on the wall. He got a sheet of paper and wrote hastily, with a hand—in justice to him let it be said—that shook a little:

"Dear Nita,—I find I can't stand this life any longer. I'm off to Klondike, or abroad somewhere where there's an opening. A pal has promised to help me with a passage, and I'm going to start early to-morrow. Don't fret about it. I'll come back when I've made my pile. With love, Yours, RALPH."

He stuck this up against the lamp on the grimy mantel-shelf, put on his coat and seedy hat, and stole, like a thief, down the dirty, rickety stairs, and into the night.

The next day a tall young man entered Mr. Bulpit's office at Market Ration, and enquired for that gentleman.

The clerk eyed him curiously and a little suspiciously; for, in the first place, the young man was a stranger, and, in the next, he was pale-faced and shabbily dressed and mud-spattered, as if he had walked many miles, which he had.

"What name?" asked the clerk, civilly enough, but coldly.

"My name doesn't matter," replied Ralph, in a voice hoarse with fatigue; and suppressed excitement.

"Mr. Bulpit is out."

Ralph leant against the table, and wiped his face with a grimy handkerchief.

1247—A Dainty Boudoir Set.

Ladies' Dressing Sack, Boudoir Cap and Slipper.

For the sack and cap, lawn, dainty, embroidery or crepe would be pretty. The slipper may be of felt, elder down, flannel, blanketing, or silk. The sack would be lovely in dotted Swiss with edging and insertion of "Val" lace, and tiny bows of wash ribbon, or of velvet to hold the parts together. A cap of net or of Swiss with edging is nice and becoming. For the slipper light blue or pink quilted satin would be warm and comfortable. Any of the pretty flowered crepes or cretonnes would also be nice for the slippers with a soft lining of couturaster color. The Pattern is cut in 3 sizes: Small, Medium and Large. It requires 1/2 yards for the cap, 1 yard for the slippers, and 2 1/2 yards for the sack, of 27 inch material for a Medium size.

A pattern of this illustration mailed to any address on receipt of 10c. in silver or stamps.

1254—A Dainty Negligee.

Ladies' Dressing or House Sack with Bell or Bishop Sleeve.

Cotton crepe in a soft shade of pink or blue or in cream white, with a plaiting of self material or wash ribbon, would be very nice for this. A simpler finish would be to bind the edges with ribbon or satin, or to ornament with feather stitching. Dainty, lawn, organza, batiste, cashmere, crepe de chine, silk or voile are also suitable for this style of garment. The model is pretty and comfortable and very easy to develop. The bell sleeve is cool and dainty, but for warmth the bishop style may be preferred. The Pattern is cut in 6 sizes: 24, 26, 28, 30, 32 and 34 inches bust measure. It requires 3 1/2 yards of 36 inch material for a 36 inch size.

Strongest Liniment in 100 Years Best for Either Man or Beast

Nothing for Family Use Can Compare With It. RUB ON NEVRILINE.

When you have been exposed to wet and cold and your muscles are full of pain, nerves are jumping with neuralgia, then you should have ready at hand a bottle of Nevrline. It robs pain of its terrors, gives relief to all suffering, brings ease and comfort wherever used.

No care or expense has been spared to secure for Nevrline the purest and best materials. It is prepared with a single aim: to restore the sick to health. This cannot be said of the preparation that an unscrupulous dealer may ask you to accept instead of Nevrline, so we warn you it is the extra profit made on inferior goods that tempts the substitute. Of him beware.

Get Nevrline when you ask for it, then you are sure of a remedy that will cure all aches, strains, swellings, and the pains of rheumatism, neuralgia and lumbago. In the last hundred years no liniment has been produced that can compare with Nevrline in strength, in penetrating power, or in curative ability. For nearly forty years it has been Canada's household remedy, and mothers will do well to follow the advice of Mrs. Jesse Beggins, of Stella, P. O. Ont., who says: "Very frequently there are ailments in the family that can be cut short if Nevrline is handy. When my children come in from play, with a cough or a bad cold, I rub them well with Nevrline, and they are well almost at once. Nevrline is fine for earache, toothache, chest colds, lumbago, stiffness, rheumatism or neuralgia. In fact there is scarcely a pain or ache in man or beast it won't cure quickly. The large 50c. family size bottle is the most economical; trial size 25c. at all dealers.

GREAT APPEAL OF PREMIER ASQUITH AT NEWCASTLE

"Master and Men Together Will Deliver the Goods."

10.00 A.M.

NEWCASTLE, To-day. The British Prime Minister, Herbert Asquith, who so often during his Premiership has had to gloss over the statements of his Cabinet colleagues in an appeal to-night to workmen of the Northeast coast to speed up the output of munitions of war, refrained from all references to the "duty" of the men and declared there had been no slackness on the part of employees or employers. The necessity for greater effort, he said, arose from the fact that an enormous quantity of ammunition was being expended and the success of recruiting among workmen and the consequent shortness of skilled labor. This was being remedied and the Premier foreshadowed the enlargement of the present plants and utilization of factories otherwise engaged to do Government work with proper compensation. The appeal was addressed almost as much to employers as to the men, although the meeting was entirely for workers, and manufacturers were told in plain terms that they must not expect to make undue profits from Government contracts. The Prime Minister was accorded a great ovation. He will visit some of the armament works on Tuesday to-morrow. Premier Asquith said he was here to speak not only to the men of Newcastle and of Tyndeside, but through them to the men of the Northern coast, for in no other area of the Empire, not even in Flanders or France, were the national fortunes of Britain or her success so intimately bound up than with the efforts and energy and with the patriotism and self-devotion of those like his hearers. Such men, the Premier continues, were specially called by the supreme exigencies of time and by their own capacities and opportunities to render their best services to the State. We tried, said Asquith, without success to minimize the conflict, but our honour, our security, our glorious traditions, our best hopes and our cherished ideals were put in the issue. The Premier declared that the demand for men and material was so vast a scale that it might be said without exaggeration that the whole nation was taking part in the war. The armies fighting at the front, like the armies which were being brought into being, were drawn to a degree never before known from all classes and sections of the people. There were very few houses which had not voluntarily and spontaneously contributed their best manhood to the forces of the Crown. Men who were producing materials were in their ranks like sailors, soldiers, fighters and combatants in this national war. No man was worthy of the name of British citizen who was not taking his part in it. In the early days of the war, said the Premier, the Government had appealed for recruits and had obtained the largest and finest body of men who had ever followed the colors. They came not for adventure or for glory, said the Premier, but with a spirit which enabled us to make good. Our casualties can be described only as a spirit of self-sacrifice. The same spirit is needed in the departments of war with which we are dealing to-night. I am not here to allege remissions. Never has there been better equipment. I saw a statement recently by that our work at the front was being crippled by lack of supplies. There is not a word of truth in that statement. The Premier also denied that the Government had only become lately alive to the importance of the matter, and declared that in September he had appointed a committee of the Cabinet, headed by Lord Kitchener. The effort of this committee had largely increased the supplies. Nor is it true that there has been general slackness of any employees or employers, continued the Premier. Some employers registered 67 to 69 hours per week per man. The situation can be otherwise explained. It is due to the unprecedented scale on which ammunition has been expended on each side, to shortness of skilled labor and to success in recruiting. Two hundred and seventeen thousand miners had enlisted, twenty per cent of the total number, or nearly fifty per cent of men of military age, said the Premier. There was an influx of seventy thousand men from other industries. There was still a shortage of fourteen per cent of former numbers, the result being the present diminution of twelve per cent of the normal output, while the war had caused an increased demand. Asquith appealed to the men to rival the patriotism of their fellows who had gone to the front by regular attendance at work and an increase in output. All were called upon to make sacrifices. These sacrifices included the limitation of profits, temporary suspension of restrictive rules and customs with provision for reasonable compensation in cases of proven injury or loss. Manufacturers of war material, he said, were not entitled to undue profits. Trade unions would not prejudice their interest by suspending their rules. Firms suffering by transfer of labor or by inability to carry out their civil contracts would receive prompt and adequate compensation. All claims would be settled at once by a tribunal set up by the Government. The Premier congratulated the men on the formation of the committee of Newcastle, which was devoting itself to bringing in skilled labor to fill vacant places in armament firms. This was the first deficiency to be made good. The next thing was to broaden the bases of production by utilizing works which at present are devoted to other purposes for the manufacture of munitions. "I state my own conviction," said the Premier, "that I say that once productive factories are organized and mobilized, all will be well. I remember your message: 'Masters and men together will deliver the goods.' That is all we ask you to do."

CONSCRIPTION NOT NECESSARY.

LONDON, To-day. In the Commons, Lloyd George gave a definite answer as to whether the Government would introduce conscription. He said the Government was not of opinion there was any ground for believing the war would be more successfully prosecuted thereby, and advised that Kitchener was very gratified with the response to his appeal for volunteers. Lord Curzon tried to get further information respecting operations in Mesopotamia and throughout Africa, but he was little more successful than his colleague in the Lower House, Earl Crewe, on behalf of the Government, saying the military authorities were opposed to giving information until reports were received from Generals on the ground. Everything, however, has been told of battles in Mesopotamia. Lord Lucas, who answered for the Colonies, said no fighting had occurred in Nyassaland since the Germans were defeated in September, while in Northern Kamerun the British and French forces were dealing with a German stronghold. Along the remainder of the frontier there was many minor engagements. Very considerable losses had been inflicted on the Germans.

SUCCESSFUL AIR OPERATIONS.

LONDON, To-day. Two French aerial squadrons attacked the railway positions along the Rhine on Monday, says a Zurich correspondent. The operations were successful in blowing up the stations of Mullheim and Halsheim. Immense forage stores at a Mannheim station were set on fire, the buildings and contents being completely destroyed.

INTEGRITY OF CHINA.

LONDON, To-day. The preservation of the common interest of all Powers in China by the insurance of the independence and integrity of the Chinese Republic and the principle of equal opportunities for commerce and industry of all nations in China, was declared by Sir Edward Grey to be the policy of the British Government in China. Sir Edward Grey spoke in the Commons and was asked questions concerning negotiations now going on between China and Japan. He replied that under present conditions while negotiations were still proceeding, he was not able to make a decided statement. Speaking generally, however, he declared the policy of the British Government in China continued to be governed by the terms of the Anglo-Japanese agreement as defined above.

KEEPING THE MOUTH HYGIENIC.

Each morning the grooming and thorough brushing of the teeth and clearing of the mouth should be accomplished with vigorous perseverance. The morning cleansing gives a purer and more healthful breath and takes away the accumulations that may have gathered on the teeth during the sleeping hours. Before using a new tooth brush, it should be allowed to soak for two hours in cold water, as this prevents the usual shedding of the bristles, and the tooth brushes should be kept clean and antiseptic and frequently renewed, and the brushes should always be placed with bristles down after using until the water has been drained from them. Teach children never to crack nuts or bite bread with their teeth, for it is understood that once the enamel which is a thin shell covering the tooth structure and not the tooth itself, is injured, cracked or worn, trouble is bound to ensue.

It is not enough to brush the teeth and gums every morning, though this is important; one should use an antiseptic mouth wash, and one of the most beneficial washes for daily use is a weakened boric solution, and this is prepared by dissolving one-half ounce of boric powder in one pint of warm water.

Great care should be given to the selection of powder or pastes used for cleansing the teeth, as some powders have sufficient roughness in the material to wear the enamel, and the best way is to make a good powder at home. An excellent and safe powder is made by mixing well together one-half ounce each of white Castile soap powdered, boric powder and pulverized sugar and two ounces of prepared chalk, one ounce powdered orris root and one-half drachm powdered winter-green. If tooth powder is used daily and the mouth rinsed out with the boric solution after brushing the teeth at night, it will tend to prevent chemical changes, which during sleep take place without hindrance, unless some preventatives are used.

Fads and Fashions.

Boleros are surely in high favour. Black veilings are most favoured. Evening gowns are made of tulle. A lovely orchid shade is a bluish lavender. Shantung pongee is in favor for summer dresses. Summer hats studded with beads are very pretty. Taffeta basques are used on all kinds of gowns. Hats with transparent brims are decidedly smart. White waists, of course, will lead during the summer. Wash skirts are made of pique, cordelie and linen. Many evening toilettes are entirely of white tulle. The "officers tunic" suit is hard to beat for a chic effect. Pockets are mostly confined to the sports style of skirts. Jet buttons are excellent on white crepe de chine bouases. Charming buttons are of silver crochot or silver filigree. New skirts gain fullness by a series of puffs and ruffles. There are collars low and broad and there are collars high.

PLATE GLASS WINDOW SMASHED.

At 2 p.m. a horse attached to a box cart became frightened on Duckworth Street, at the foot of King's Road, and backed into the shop window of Mr. Geo. Hudson's dry goods store, smashing the glass in pieces.

An Evening Off!

RUTH CAMERON

By RUTH CAMERON.
 "I took an evening off last night," said the lady. "We were great friends but we haven't seen each other or written for years. You know how it is. I heard that she'd been having a rather hard time and I thought a little friendship letter might cheer her up a bit."
 The lady was silent a moment. Across her eyes drifted the film that comes like a curtain of mist to shut off the world of to-day, when we think about old times.
 "Were there any more?" wondered Molly, after a little.
 "Oh yes," said the lady, coming back. "I heard that Margaret Morey's husband had been doing some splendid work and that the men over him were pleased. You know how hard he's been fighting bad habits and I guess he's winning out. I wrote her the good things I had heard about him."
 "You dear," said Molly, dropping the tongs with a clatter and coming over to take her place on the little ottoman at the lady's feet. "Aren't you the kindest thing ever. Who else would be so good?"
 "Good!" echoed the lady with genuine surprise in her voice. "I don't call that good. Why I loved it. I don't know when I've had such a happy evening. That's why I told you about it."
 Questions and Answers.
 "What can be done about people who spoil other folk's enjoyment of a play or concert by carrying on a conversation. I have been repeatedly annoyed this way. At a performance of 'The Merchant of Venice' there were three young ladies directly in front of me who chatted the whole time trying to convince each other that Bassanio was in love with Jessica or that Nerissa was Shylock's daughter. I heard only a word here and there. Is there anything that can be done about such rudeness?"—F. W. T.
 Reply.—You might speak to the usher, although one naturally shrinks from that. Or you might speak as gently as possible to the girls themselves. That, too, is an unpleasant task, but even if they resent it they may take the lesson to heart and you would help others as you'd like to be helped.
 "Do they?" said the authorman. "Do they? That's half what I write for. They live on those letters."
 "Don't suppose they care anything about the money they get. Don't suppose they live on that at all?"
 "They exist on that," said the authorman gravely. "They live by the appreciation the letters bring them."

FREEDOM.

By GEORGE FITCH,
 Author of "At Good Old Swasey"

Freedom is man's ability to do as he pleased.
 It is the choicest gift of civilization and is the most highly valued next to the ability to make some other man do what you blamed please.
 From the beginning of history, men have fought for freedom at every opportunity. Nothing has made brave men to buckle on their swords and wade through rivers of gore so cheerfully as the belief that someone was holding on them in the liberty line. America became a free country almost 150 years ago and yet to-day the fight for freedom goes on more fiercely than ever. Scarcely an election occurs in this country in which some patriot does not arise to plead with the people to strike off their shackles and vote as one man for freedom as represented by the right to drink beer all night or to organize a holding company with grabbing attachments.
 This sad condition does not exist because of any lack of desire to souse this land in the purest brand of freedom, but because it is so difficult to determine who shall partake thereof. It is very easy to secure perfect freedom for one man but in order to do this he must be enabled to interfere with the freedom of several thousand others. If he does as he pleases he is bound to interfere with some other man who has a perfect right to do as he pleases. Nothing is more annoying than to be struck in a vital spot by some unfettered son of freedom who is driving an automobile down the wrong side of the street at a mile-a-minute rate in full persurance of his sacred privileges.
 Man had perfect freedom before government was invented, but it proved to be very unhealthy, owing to the extreme duency with which they killed each other while exercising the same. Gradually it became the custom to toss a certain amount of freedom into the common pot and make a daw out of it. We are now captive bound by 11,000 laws with a prison clause in each; yet the death rate has gone down remarkably and we do not have to bury our wealth and watch over it with a battleaxe any more.
 There are still people who yearn for perfect freedom and indulge in it now and then to excess. But they do not last long. Sooner or later they are taken up as common nuisances and fled away in a stone mansion for future reference.
 We have no perfectly free man any more, but we have 100,000,000 people who are not interfered with by other people's freedom to any extent, which is a greater blessing.

GRIT.

WALT MASON

When Edison awoke one night, Misfortune loomed up in his sight, and dealt a heavy stroke; his mighty shops were all ablaze, the product of his going up in toilsome days was smoke. He lost a thousand cherished things, he lost a fortune fit for kings, while fire fiends painted red; against the gods he might have railed, he might have wrung his hands and wailed, but not a tear he shed. "This interrupts the game, but 'twill not do so long; tomorrow we'll be all on deck, and clear away the smoking wreck, a thousand workmen strong!" We'll build up better than before, and if the fire fiend comes once more, we'll soak him in the eye." And then this great, heroic man retired to figure on a plan, nor heaved a single sigh. And we, who rant around and curse, whenever we meet some slight reverse, should bear in mind this tale; we ought to meet with dauntless front misfortune's worst and fiercest stunt, and not put up a wail.

"What Are You Doing for that Eczema?"

AN UNITED EMPIRE.

The Empire is working towards elastic co-operation on purely British lines with a solidly clear enough eye to any eye that is not looking for symmetrical schemes. That it has a spiritual identity all the world realizes with wonder and admiration whenever its unity is in danger. It's progress towards consciousness is steady, the fabric of its outward expression being raised stone by stone, even as the British Constitution itself was raised. We have not to prove that Empire and democracy are not merely competitors but counter-parts; "we are doing that already. The centralization of authority in such a far-flung dominion as ours would make not for strength but for weakness. Imperial Federation is an idea which has never had the vigor of life in it. Where it was at its inception it is now, whereas the conception of the Empire as a brotherhood of free nations gathers strength with every passing year.—Broad Arrow.

SWISS NEUTRALITY.

The best schemes may fail unless they be worked in the right spirit and in this instance, in the spirit of broad charity and human sympathy. In that spirit the Swiss have excelled. Among the neutral nations the position of Switzerland has been perhaps the most difficult. Dependent upon surrounding countries for many of their supplies, dependent upon their own army for the eventual defence of their soil, akin in language and feeling to two of the chief belligerents, the Swiss have nevertheless evolved a positive form of neutrality, and the neutrality of well-doing towards the defenceless and the suffering.—London Times.

I, personally "decorated" my new cottage with

NEPONSET WALL BOARD FOR WALLS AND CEILINGS

It was no trouble at all and took me a very short time. You see, anyone can apply it.

I simply gave my dealer the dimensions of the cottage and he sent me up enough bundles of this new material to cover the walls and ceilings—I did the rest with hammer, nails and saw.

It cost me a great deal less than lath and plaster, and there was no dirt and muss or delay of drying-out.

NEPONSET WALL BOARD comes in sheets, all decorated; 7 to 10 feet long, and to fit across standard studding. It is ideal for unfinished rooms in houses, camps, garages, and for partitions anywhere—makes wonderfully attractive interiors. Surfaces waterproofed.

IT'S WORTH CONSIDERING. Every problem that takes into account the payment of a small insurance premium coupled with the element of risk is worthy of careful consideration.

RISK IS ELIMINATED when it comes to policies written here. That house of yours needs an extra policy, and why not have me write it? A day's delay may cost you thousands. It's the time to act and not to procrastinate. Do it to-day.
