Frenchmen Offer Passive Resistance in Ruhr.

French Extending Occupation Area.—Free States Rounding up Republicans.—City of Bochum is Centre of Activity.

RESISTANCE INCREASES

DUSSELDORF, Feb. 23. —Sources from French headquarters indicate that the passive resistance in the Ruhr is increasing. This, however, is not looked upon as an indication of the abandonment of a passive resistance policy. Distribution of pamphlets and the urging of passive resistance is in fact, and there is also a continuation among the working classes in the Ruhr area, owing to the lack of food, and demonstrations are being held demanding an increase.

BOCHUM DOINGS IN RUHR.

ESSEN, Feb. 23. —French to-day occupied the station at Frindorf and the area near here. Extra precautions against public utilities through the area have been taken by the Belgian authorities because of the strike issued by General William G. German Minister of Transport, to the striking railroad workers to cut off gas, water and electric light power wherever possible. According to information in the hands of the French intelligence officers the strikers have been given orders to perpetrate acts of this kind immediately at points so as to hinder in any possible way the forces of German Customs Houses which were taken over to-day, and German officials are being regularly customs officials from the Ruhr. Gradually all Germans in the area are being taken over to-day, and German officials are being regularly customs officials from the Ruhr. Gradually all Germans in the area are being taken over to-day, and German officials are being regularly customs officials from the Ruhr.

FURTHER FIRING IN BERLIN.

DUBLIN, Feb. 23. —There was sharp firing in the streets to-day. A corporal was killed and a woman wounded.

FIELDING FOR WASHINGTON.

MONTREAL, Feb. 23. —A special to the Star from Ottawa says "Provision is made in the estimates again this year for the appointment of a Canadian Minister Plenipotentiary to Washington, and in Parliamentary circles Hon. W. S. Fielding is being mentioned as a not improbable choice."

WATERFORD WILL BENEFIT.

SYDNEY, N.S., Feb. 23. —Half a million dollars will be spent at New Waterford this spring, according to the plans of the British Empire Steel Corporation. The works involve the construction of a new power plant at New Waterford Lake with a capacity of five thousand kilowatts.

LABOR SELECTS CAMERON.

BADDECK, Feb. 23. —Hon. D. Cameron, Provincial Secretary Nova Scotia Government, was nominated by Labor at a Convention here to-day to contest Victoria in the bye-election made necessary by the resignation of former Premier George H. Murray. Cameron at present is a member of the Legislative Council of Nova Scotia.

A North Sea Disaster.

It was feared that one of the worst wrecks during the fierce storms of February, 1903, would prove to be that of the sailing-ship Cambrian Prince, which was reported to have been lost in the North Sea on the 28th of that month, and news received later proved the fears to have been only too well founded. The first news was brought to Shields by Captain Pascoe, of the steam tug Gauntlet, who reported that he had seen, among a quantity of wreckage about a hundred miles off the Tyne, a lifeboat bearing the name of the Cambrian Prince. A Hamburg correspondent confirmed the statement, and said that a thrilling tale of the sea was told to him by a sailor named Nestor Hellestein, of Wisby, the sole survivor of the wreck. The captain of the steamer Clavering, which arrived there on Sunday from Shields, reported that on February 28 he sighted far away in the North Sea a boat, in which was a single man, in a state of great exhaustion, who told the captain he believed he was the sole survivor of the Cambrian Prince, and that he had been twenty-four hours in the boat without food or drink. He stated that he had the carpenter of the vessel, which was on a voyage from Coughlimbo to Middlebrough with a cargo of iron ore. They were unable to make the harbour of Middlebrough on account of the severe weather, and for six days they were driven hither and thither along the coast at the mercy of the waves. On the morning of February 26, the storm grew to the dimensions of a hurricane, and an extraordinarily heavy wave suddenly heeled the ship over to such an extent that her cargo shifted, and succeeding waves finally turned her completely over, and within a few minutes she sank. Hellestein and four others managed to get away from the wreck in a small iron lifeboat, provided with lifebelts. They were continually swamped by the heavy seas and washed out of the boat, into which they clambered back with great difficulty. One after another the sailors lost their strength and vanished, one of them going mad, and after shouting and gesticulating for some time, finally disappeared beneath the waves. At length the storm subsided, and Hellestein, the sole survivor, was left alone, tossing about in the boat. After twenty-six hours of agonizing suspense, he was finally rescued. The crew of the Cambrian Prince numbered twenty men, so that the result of this disaster was the loss of nineteen lives.

Origin of The Indian Mutiny.

The present unrest in India, due to the folly of the Home and Indian Governments in permitting agitators to continue their dangerous propaganda and thus inflame the religious feelings of the native population, recalls to mind that it was a similar agitation which led to the outbreak in 1857. It was on February 25 of that year that the Sepoy army rebelled. On February 24 a detachment of the 34th Bengal Native Infantry marched into Berhampore and the members of it were according to the custom in such cases, entertained by the 19th Bengal Native Infantry (Ug-Ka-Pultan), then in garrison. At the least the all-engrossing topic of the alleged greased cartridges was fully discussed together with other grievances, real or fanciful; and the sequel was not far distant. The next day, when Colonel Mitchell ordered a distribution of blank ammunition, the men of the 19th refused to put it in their pouches, on the plea of having suspicions as to how the cartridges had been prepared. As they were of the old fashion, which, without scruple, they had used and bitten for years, this conduct was deemed as absurd as it was outrageous. Sullen, suspicious and stormy, they were intimidated by Colonel Mitchell with some difficulty, and accepted the ammunition in sullen and ominous silence, repairing, on dismissal, to their lines. In the course of the evening, after secret consultations, during which they worked themselves into a frenzy of excitement, they rushed forth, burst open the little huts where the spare arms were deposited, and seized them with shouts of defiance. They were in no mood to listen to reason, and all the explanations of their European officers proved perfectly futile, so to coerce them by force alone remained. Accordingly, Colonel Mitchell ordered a general parade of the garrison, and the refractory regiment soon found itself in a place that was completely commanded by the guns of a battery, supported by a battalion, when they were ordered to "Ground-arms." This they agreed to do if the battery and troops were withdrawn, and humanely unwilling to decimate them, the colonel agreed. So the 19th were marched to Baradpore, where they were disbanded. This arrangement should never have been permitted, for by allowing the mutineers to dictate terms, at a time when insubordination was spreading far and wide, the great mutiny was begun, and resulted in terrible outrages on white women and children as well as the death of hundreds of British soldiers.

Poultry Notes.

The day of scrub poultry is passing when a person could keep a few hens of doubtful antecedents and throw them out a few handfuls of grain occasionally—the owner is beginning to notice that the feed costs money, and to figure whether "Biddy" is returning value. That is where the scrub falls down. Of course she can't return the value in eggs. She wasn't bred for it, and breeding counts just as much in a chicken as in a race horse. You wouldn't think of entering a colt in the Derby, whose ancestors had been truck-horses, would you? Well, then, don't expect a hen who hasn't been bred for it to bring you profit in the laying stock. The initial cost of pure bred stock is little more than that of mongrels; its upkeep is no more, but the returns are sufficiently greater both in production and size to cross the line between loss and profit. Even in well-bred poultry weed out the non-layers. Remember that one "slacker hen" can eat the profit of several good layers.

Use Individual Motor Drive

The evolution of power in factories has led very naturally to the modern practice of individual motor drive for machines. The savings in power thus obtained pay many times over for the cost of the motors.

Ask our engineers to discuss this latest development with you, and to show how the use of such famous motors as the Westinghouse Type CS will make the factory or shop more efficient.

There are many people in the city too, who are fond of fresh eggs and nice fowls for table use. If they would construct a small place in the corner of their backyard, start in with a few standard-bred fowls of whatever breed or variety they like best, take an interest in feeding them and keeping them comfortable, they would soon learn that it is a profitable investment and at the same time provides a recreation for spare time that would be all the pleasant and refreshing.

Business-men, doctors, clerks and working-men all over the country are engaged in this useful pastime of "back-yard" poultry keeping and they enjoy the work. Birds of highest quality can be raised on a small lot and develop just as rapidly as if allowed to range on a farm, provided the conditions can be as nearly as possible those obtainable by the farm bird—viz., dry, well-ventilated and draught-proof sleeping quarters; water, green food, grit and nourishing food. The necessary exercise to keep the birds in condition is obtained by causing the birds to work for the food they consume. Birds will not suffer from cold if they are kept busy scratching in dry litter for their grain rations.

Our Public Men of the Past.

Legislators and Other Prominent Officials in "the Good Old Days Gone By."

(By an EX-M.H.A.)

Great hearts of the olden time meeting with us full and strong, memories and sublime glories round us throng. Old men of Runnymede with us still in times like these; shades of Arlon's mighty dead close of witnesses."

There were no knights and barons and O.B.'s here in those days. They were all commoners, but they were large-hearted, manly men—"men whom the list of office could not buy." In saying this much, I make no insinuation, nor do I wish to imply more than is necessary to duly emphasize the comparison here instituted. Some public men belong to all ages and all parties, and to a good many limited liability companies. But of these I shall speak later on. The professional politician in my mind's eye as I write belongs rather to the grocer's scheme of things. His abilities and virtues are all on the back parlor scale. His nose is not to be trusted, as we have seen, and his eyes are by no means "double million gas microscopes of hextra power." He is shrewd in a Sancho Panso way, and by no means deficient in judgment where his own interest is concerned. He is ambitious, too, and, in quiet times, aspiring and unresting mediocrity often wins the race against great talent.

WHAT THE PRESENT EMERGENCY DEMANDS.

But the present emergency demands very extraordinary men, and, unfortunately, most of those available are rather quite ordinary men in very ordinary situations. Our good old democratic system of rule has degenerated into demagoguism. The dividing line is not easy to trace; and yet there are no two qualities of government which are more contradictory. Originally the word demagogue was applied to a man who successfully led the people in the art of self-government, which is the art of political and social self-restraint. Nothing could be further in purpose and character from such a man than one who seeks and obtains power over the people by inciting their passions and intensifying their prejudices; and yet it is to this opposite extreme that the name demagogue has come to be applied. Undoubtedly many a true leader of the people in self-government has found it impossible to lead by virtue of reason alone, and undoubtedly many a man who has mounted to power through popular passion has served some good end at one time or another in his career; and therefore the determination whether a man is a demagogue in the one sense or the other has been at times a matter of opinion rather than of demonstrable fact. But to keep in view "the great hearts of the olden time."

MEMBERS OF THE ASSEMBLY ELECTED IN 1874.

In November, 1874, the following gentlemen were elected to the House of Assembly. That was before the last "Redistribution Bill" increased the representation of Harbor Grace and Bay de Verde, made a district of Fogo, and gave representation to St. Barbe and Bay St. George's.

St. John's East.—Robert J. Kent, Robert J. Parsons and John J. Dearn.

St. John's West.—Lewis Tessier, Maurice Fenelon and P. J. Scott.

Harbor Main.—Joseph J. Little and Patrick Nowlan.

Port de Grave.—Nathaniel Roberts, Carbonear.—John Rorke.

Bay de Verde.—James Rogerson.

TWO CASES — "MANSLAUGHTER" AND "ARSON."

"Gentlemen of the Grand Jury: There are two indictments for your inquiry, and they are of a serious character—for "manslaughter" and "arson." There were other cases on the criminal side returned for the term, but from absence of witnesses, and other causes, the Attorney General is not prepared to proceed with them at present. The first of these is that of the Queen against the accused for manslaughter. It would appear from the depositions that on Saturday evening, near 10 o'clock, the 1st August last, a number of persons had assembled at a licensed premises for the retail of liquors in Water Street, St. John's. The deceased was among them and requested to be supplied with liquors, placing some coin upon the counter. The landlady properly declined, as the deceased appeared to be intoxicated, and she impounded him to leave. To this advice he did not attend, and was apparently inoffensive in his behaviour. The accused, who was present, as it is alleged, forcibly pushed the deceased through the front door of the shop. He fell heavily on the ground, which occasioned a fracture of the skull, became insensible, and it is averred that the next day the injuries received resulted in his death. The accused is not charged with having wilfully or with malice caused the death, which is the chief distinction between murder and manslaughter, but that in ejecting the deceased he was bound to act with due caution and not violently, incautiously or heedlessly, but to use all ordinary precaution in preventing injury to the person; and even in the case of removing a trespasser from your house only so much force as is reasonably necessary. For the purpose must be used. If the deceased would not have died but for the injury he received, should the accused have unlawfully caused it, he is, in the estimation of the law, guilty of man-

AN INTERESTING INCIDENT RECALLED.

Although I am not now on the staff of any newspaper, yet I often think of the time when, with the Rev. Dr. Harvey, the clever, but somewhat eccentric, Mr. F. R. Bowers, and other "old boys" of the local press—I used to attend the various public functions and vie with them in writing up reports for the journals we respectively represented. Some of our achievements along these lines came up before my mind one forenoon lately in November last as I entered the Hall of Justice on Duckworth Street, and noticed the preparations then being made for the opening of the Supreme Court and the reception of their Lordships Sir William Horwood and Judges Johnson and Kent. I at once recalled a similar event which took place thirty-one years ago; it was on the 20th of November, 1891. The three Judges who were then present have long since gone to "that bourne whence no traveller returns," and so, also, have nearly all the Grand Jurors and other actors in the drama of that day, as the reader will observe when he runs his eye down the annexed list of names so familiar to the past generation. I can still quite distinctly remember what took place, and even the very words in which the proceedings were reported. The Inspector of Police (we had no Inspector General in those days), Colonel Fawcett—an old cavalry officer—had his force drawn up in military formation, and the man presented a very imposing appearance. Upon the arrival of their Lordships the usual salutes were given and received. They were present on the Bench when the Court opened His Lordship the Chief Justice Sir F. B. T. Carter, Sir Robert Pinnant and Mr. Justice (subsequently Sir Joseph) Little. On the Grand Jury panel being called it was found that the following were in attendance—Mr. John Carnell, foreman; Messrs. John Furlong, Henry LeMessurier, F. W. Ayre, M. F. Smyth, Joseph English, Joseph Sechan, John Coady, John Browning, John Wharley, Alexander Shirran, William Woodley, John W. Hayward, M. O'Neill, John Callahan, P. R. Bowers, J. R. Moss, James Boggan, Peter Saunders, Robert Rendell and John Carroll. His Lordship the Chief Justice addressed them as follows:

slaughter, however involuntary, as we may assume the death in this case to have been, from the circumstances, of which I have given a mere outline, and the form of the indictment prepared by the Crown. From these premises you will be better able to arrive at your own finding after hearing the evidence of the medical and other witnesses. The other case is that of the Queen against Lucy Percy and Jessie Morgan, charging them with having feloniously and maliciously set fire to a dwelling house of one John Morgan, situate in Cabot Street, St. John's, with intent to defraud. It appears that Morgan, husband of the accused Jessie, was insured by subscribing policies in the sum of $400 on the house and $400 on the furniture therein. To constitute the offence there must be an actual burning of some part of the house; and this, however trifling, will be sufficient, although the fire be afterwards extinguished. It is seldom that a wilful burning can be made out by direct proof. So in this case you will have to presume from the circumstances. It is essential that the intent alleged should be proved.

THE COUNTRY CONGRATULATED BY THE BENCH.

His Lordship then went on to say: "It is gratifying to be enabled to congratulate you and the country upon the prosperity which has generally attended the fishing operations of the past season. We trust that this increased product of our great staple, upon which we have ever mainly to depend, will not be without having a permanently salutary effect among the 'folgers of the sea' and all classes interested."

A WORD ABOUT THE VENERABLE CHIEF HIMSELF.

Needless to say, I listened with much interest to the venerable Chief Justice as he delivered his address to the Jury, on that occasion. One could not help being pleased to observe his comparatively healthy and vigorous appearance. Beyond a slight cough, the result of a cold contracted during a trip to England, from which he had just returned, His Lordship seemed free from all bodily ailment, in spite of the fact that more than three score and ten summers and winters had come and gone since he first saw the light of day. He came into existence in 1818, and must have been seventy-two years of age at the time I refer to. Very few persons so far advanced in life presented a finer or more dignified physique and bearing than the Chief Justice of that day. As a matter of fact, all three of our Judges then were most distinguished-looking men.

A STAR IN THE LEGAL FIRMAMENT.

One of the first half dozen outstanding men at the Bar in the early "eighties"—and there were several brilliant stars in the legal firmament here at that time—was Mr. John H. Boone. He had the edge of a new lance; it was but touch and cut. Yet, notwithstanding a subacid temper at times and a withering power of scorn, no one had a quicker eye for worth or a nicer regard for whatsoever things were lovely and of good report. A humorist, he enjoyed the role—especially while a member of the House of Assembly—of spectator and critic; but when he girded his loins for battle, that is to say, tutored a trifle viciously with his right hand at the nape of his gown, the enemy had cause to look out. His professional brethren understood that unconscious jerk and sat up expectantly. It was then that terror fell upon refractory or equivocating witnesses; for when they fancied themselves as adamant suddenly he would open an abyss at their feet, and, as they shuddered on the brink, the concentrated eagle-face completed their confusion. Even judges, it was whispered, were "afraid of what he would do or say next." Solicitors certainly were, but such was his winning way with a jury that they steadfastly besieged him, and his fees were what he chose to make them. Loyal to his cloth, he believed in big figures, yet had been known to plead a widow or orphan's cause out of the kindness of his heart or for the pure love of the thing. Hence he got a name for eccentricity. But everybody liked him. He died when a young man, and his professional brethren and the whole community felt they had sustained an irreparable loss.

CIVILIZATION AND THE LOOKS OF THINGS.

What treacherous store we human beings do set upon the looks of things! What a major factor in the vast structure of our emphasis on the looks of things! Here is the little experience that carried that thought home to me recently. I went to buy a watch and had some difficulty in finding just the kind I wanted. As I went from shop to shop trying to suit myself I fell to thinking. It ought to be a simple thing to buy a watch, since presumably what I want is something that will tell the time, and tell it accurately. But the trouble is that on top of that I want it to look a certain way. Now, why should it matter how a timepiece looks, if it is a convenient size and is an accurate time teller. A time piece is to tell the time. But, fancy, if watches were made just for that, what would happen to the watch

Makes a Family Supply of Cough Remedy

Really better than ready-made cough syrups, and saves about 25% each.

If you combined the curative properties of every known "ready-made" cough remedy, you probably could not get as much real curative power as there is in this simple home-made cough syrup, which is easily prepared in a few minutes.

Get from any druggist 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex, pour it into a 16-oz. bottle and fill the bottle with syrup, using either plain granulated sugar syrup, clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, as desired. The result is 16 ounces of really better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made and saves easily 25%. Taste is pleasant and never spoils.

This Pinex and Syrup preparation gets right at the cause of a cough and gives almost immediate relief. It loosens the phlegm, stops the nasty throat tickle and heals the sore, irritated membranes so gently and easily that it is really astonishing.

A day's use will usually overcome the ordinary cough and for bronchitis, croup, hoarseness and bronchial asthma, there is nothing better.

Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, and has been used for generations to break up severe coughs.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2 1/2 ounces of Pinex" with full directions, and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

making industry! And then my mind went further into the ramifications of that thought. Dressed to Keep Warm. Clothing was originally designed solely for warmth. Men made themselves coverings because with the change in climate that gradually came about upon our planet (I am sure that will strike a reminiscent chord in the minds of the readers of a certain recently published history) they had to do that or freeze. But how large a factor is the keeping warm factor in our making and purchasing of clothing to-day? If we all bought clothing simply to keep warm, and went without anything we did not need for that purpose, the whole economic structure of the world would be revolutionized.

Houses Just for Shelter. Houses were built at first for shelter, from wind and cold and presumably from intense tropic heat. (I am shaky on that point, don't scold me too hard, learned Reader, Friend, if I am wrong). Think of the intricate development those first shelters have undergone to become the crudest houses to-day, to say nothing of the further metamorphosis into our costly and beautiful homes. To be sure, the desire for comfort is one of the factors that has forced this development (and in this connection it is interesting to note that the average prosperous workman of to-day has more real comfort in his home than the king of a few centuries ago) but the desire to have shelters and the furnishings thereof look thus and so has had just as large a part.

Reaching Out For Beauty. The looks of things is one of the Gods of civilization. Do we sacrifice too much to it? Many times I think we do. But on the other hand, one must not forget that this desire for beauty (which is the underlying force, though often expressed itself badly) is one of the things which distinguishes man from beast. The beast is content if he can satisfy his hunger, if he can reproduce, if he is warm, if he is safe. Man goes beyond that, and reaches for the star of beauty. Often he reaches in the wrong direction, but surely it is right that he should reach out, since that craving it so deeply planted in his heart.

The Whiskey Smugglers.

(By EDWIN SMITH, in The Canadian Magazine)

The experience of Captain Z— was hardly less exasperating. The shore fishing on the south coast of Nova Scotia had proved a failure a few years before, and Captain Z— who owned a fishing sloop, thought to supplement his scanty earnings by making a little trip to St. Pierre. He confided his plans to a young man of about eighteen years, of age who agreed to take the venture for half the profits. The terms were satisfactory to Captain Z— and one fine day, while the sun was shining and the birds were singing in the trees along the banks of the beautiful L— river, the little fishing sloop, with more grub aboard than she had seen for many a day, hit the trail for St. Pierre. But the sun in due course went down, and the birds no longer sang, and during the two following days of fog and bad weather Captain Z— lost his reckoning, and the two adventurers were "somewhere" in the Atlantic Ocean between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland," but beyond that they could say nothing more definite. They sailed about for a couple of days, hoping to meet some coasting schooner or ocean liner from which they could obtain their latitude and longitude, but without success. At last Captain Z—, being a good deacon of the Baptist Church, betook himself to prayer. The exigencies of his case did not yet demand fasting. The captain confessed his sin of omission, and even went so far as to confess to sinful intentions, and then earnestly prayed for forgiveness, protection and guidance, from the God who holds the waters of the sea in the hollow of his hand. That day a schooner bore down upon them and informed them that they were fifty miles northeast of Whitehead, Nova Scotia. This was encouraging. A new course was set, and on the afternoon of the next day St. Pierre was in sight and ere the sloop went down again they were safely tied up to the pier, withatches off, ready to receive cargo.

The return trip was uneventful. The weather was clear and fine, and the winds fair and moderate, so that in less than four days they were again sailing the peaceful waters of the beautiful L— river, and since the two voyagers began to estimate the net profits of the venture, Captain Z— suggested that, since he owned the sloop and had provided half the crew and all the grub, that his partner ought to be content with one-quarter of the proceeds instead of one-half as previously agreed upon; but this, his companion absolutely refused to accept. The captain might have suggested also that his prayer was the very probable means of saving his companion's life, but this, may be, the young man would have declined to believe. At any rate, when they anchored that night in the middle of the river, ten miles from the sea, they had not come to any amicable agreement, and the young man, feeling incensed at what he considered a gross breach of contract, went straight to the customs officer of the port and informed him that if he would look up Captain Z—'s sloop he would find her full of whiskey just in from St. Pierre. This the officer did, and the sloop and the cargo were confiscated. The whiskey was destroyed and the sloop sold by auction, as the law enjoins. When Captain Z— found out who gave him away, he told the officer that his informant was himself a partner in the enterprise. Search being made, however, it was found that the young man on the very morning of his arrival in the town, had purchased a ticket for Boston, and so Captain Z— like Captain C— found that it was no easy matter to maintain honor among thieves. Smuggling of this sort was carried on with more or less success until a few years ago, when the placing of a British sub-consul at St. Pierre, made it almost impossible for vessels to load contraband in large quantities without his knowledge. But the business is still carried on in a small way. Vessels from Prince Edward Island or Nova Scotia go down to St. Pierre with produce and return in ballast, but very often underneath the ballast are stored cases and boxes that the customs officer could not see unless he removed tons of sand, and so, the vessel is entered in the usual way, and the captain sees to it that these boxes are removed to a place of safety as soon as possible.

Another method employed by these trading captains is to make crates, already ballasted, with a strong line and buoy attached. These are filled with cases of contraband and carried in the hold of the vessel until the home port is reached. The captain takes care that he enters the river at night, and when a convenient place is reached, these crates are hoisted overboard and let go. The buoy marks the spot and enables the confederate to find the booty even in the night. This writer knows of one place, in a certain river, where many such crates were dropped off from the decks of passing vessels, and though the customs officer examined the ballast carefully nothing in the shape of contraband is ever found. One skipper was very bold. He came in about seven o'clock one summer evening, when the tide was at the flood, and an onlooker said to himself, "You will be ashore in a minute if you do not tack ship immediately." But the captain held his course, and deliberately ran the schooner ashore in broad daylight and stuck fast in the mud, a quarter of a mile below the town. At first the onlooker thought it was an accident, but when next morning, the schooner came up to the wharf with the incoming tide, and with her nose cocked up in the air, he knew that contraband had gone out of her. On thinking it over it was remembered that she had been run ashore on the shorefront of a gentleman connected with the trade, and it was simply a case of "fixing" the customs officer who was old and slow, and who never put in an appearance until the afternoon, when, of course, everything was all ship-shape and the ballast half out.

In 1910 this writer was in Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, and saw a schooner used for sale at public auction—other cases of seizure for smuggling. A few weeks previously the schooner had come in from Prince Edward Island, and there, was prevailed upon by a fish liquor merchant to try a trip to St. Pierre. A cargo of coal was taken down, and a full cargo of contraband taken back, but he was suspected by the authorities, and when the schooner was later found in a cump of fifty miles down the coast from Glace Bay, he was at once put under arrest and in the trial which followed, he was proved guilty not only of smuggling, but of perjury and sentenced to six years in the penitentiary. This was simply another instance of listening to the voice of temper, for he knew better, and to this time had borne an honest reputation, and was well liked by who did business with him. He brought disastrous results to himself, his wife and family. When it was late he saw how foolish he had been. The season was poor and he had debts to pay, and he had a wife and family to support, and it looked him that, since the people were drinking whiskey, and were getting it, there was no law, he might as well carry them as anyone else, and make an honest dollar. An honest dollar well it depends upon the way you look at it.

On his first Christmas Day in English Harbour, when the winter weather prevented them from going to Trinity for the Church services that he had been, accustomed to in October, he spent the day pleasantly with family and friends, and in the evening he joined with a number of men who purposed to visit the fifteen or twenty houses that were there then, and to sing the old Christmas Carols, that their fathers had learnt, and sung in Dorset for years past...

George did not forget his promise to his father, and he wrote to him, after his marriage, giving him a detailed account of what had happened at Obouru before he left, and assuring him that he was very happy in his new home and surroundings. His letter was received just in time for his father to read it, before he died...

A PREMIUM ON PAPER COVERS.

A friend of mine in Trinity called my attention to the following item in "The Overseas Daily Mail" or January 6th, 1923: "An original set of Pickwick Papers, by Charles Dickens, issued in paper-covered parts, has been sold for more than eight hundred pounds to a United States buyer by a mail dealer."

PUTS HEALTH AND VIM INTO WOMEN

So Says Mrs. MacPherson of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Brantford, Ontario.—"I was always tired and the least exertion would put me out for a day or two. I had a pressing pain on the top of my head, pain in the nape of my neck, and when I stooped over I could not get up without help, because of pain in my back. I felt queer and nervous at the least noise. I kept house, but I was such a wreck that I could not sweep the floor nor wash the dishes without crying down afterwards. A friend living near me told me what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for her so I began to take it. With the first bottle I felt brighter and got so I could wash dishes and sweep without having to cry down. Later I became regular again in my monthly terms. I have taken ten bottles all told and am now all better. I can truly say that your wonderful medicine cannot be beaten for putting health and vim into a woman."

Trinity, to such as found it necessary. Several took advantage of it, and then got to like it so well, that one after another, they married the first widow or spinster that intentionally or otherwise crossed their paths, respectively; and as it is registered in the old burial register to the credit of one William Warren (lived in a married state forty-five years, and recently brought up a numerous family) Permit me to give in outline a case in point, the facts of which I have gathered from scattered but consecutive entries in the old church registers. In other words, with these facts as brick, and my imagination as mortar, I shall endeavor to build up a story structure, that will either point a moral, or adorn a tale.

WEEK-END NOTES.

(I. C. MORRIS.)
CHAPTER VIII.

Not only were there stowaways who came to St. John's, but there also were several who went from it; and as those who came found their bed hard, and their experience bitter, so many of our own lads, who had made the venture to get away and see the world, as they said, paid a bitter price, and paid a terrible penalty for their daring. Some of those lads who stowed away from St. John's in the fifties and the sixties got back in the seventies, and eighties; and the tales which they told of travel, danger, and hardship, would fill out a book well worth reading. Those lads, or rather men, for men they were when they returned, told a tale of bitter facts, which they themselves had endured. It was not mere romance; there was nothing whatever imaginary about what they said, for they had lived it all themselves, and learned in the hard school of experience what they knew on ship-board meat. Several of those lads joined large ships at Liverpool, and for years they engaged in what was then called "deep water sailing." Eighteen months was a common voyage, and sometimes it was longer. To India, or out to China, or to far off Australia, and around Cape Horn, to the Pacific Coast, or as they often said, "half around the world, and back again" was the sort of voyage they usually took. Some of those sailor men who were very hardened; but they were glad to get back to the old land, and see it for a while, and then depart, no more to return. Amongst the most hardened of those who came back was a man who, while aboard took the name of Brown, and who, unknown as he thought, returned some fifty-five years ago after an absence of about thirty years. I never met Brown, I was too young, I only heard of him; but of all the returned deep water sailors that I have met, or all that I have heard of, Brown exhibited the hardest heart of them all, for it was said of him that he denied his own mother. It seems that he was a wayward boy, and that his parents were severe with him, and he was bent on roving, and when about fifteen years of age he found a chance, and got off at some outward bound ship, so that when he returned after thirty years, he was about forty-five years of age. He spent most of his roving years in the East India Trade, but had also spent a good deal of time on the Atlantic sailing packets; and had been chief officer on some of the ships belonging to what was known at that time as the Black Wall Line. The Black Wall Line was reputed for its service between Liverpool and New York; but unfortunately the crews were reputed for their severity. On leaving the Black Wall Line, Brown signed on a ship at London, which happened to be bound for St. John's, and so in course of the season, his ship dropped anchor in his own native port, from which he as a lad of fifteen had taken his departure as a bare-footed, ragged, stowaway. After such a long silence, Brown was pretty well forgotten by his people, and, of course was unknown, and not thought of in the town.

Greater Achievement Through Electric Service

Out of the great central power plant, electric energy leaps to do your bidding, in home and industry, lighting houses and streets, driving sewing machines and lathes, turning the wheels of transportation. Yet before the advent of this great power, generated for every conceivable use, women laboured at their household tasks from dawn to darkness; through the same hours men struggled to produce the world's goods.

How different now. Households are lighted, rooms cleaned, clothes washed, food prepared, by clean, silent, invisible energy, created miles away by the central power station. Men are transported to their labors, the heavy tasks are lightened, the scope of productive activity becomes boundless; gifts of a new era. The magic of electricity.

Keep ahead of the times, encourage this new industry on which so many other industries depend, not merely by using its product; electricity; but by investing in successful hydro-electric company stocks, put your spare funds to work for you and incidentally help build up new industries and increase your country's prosperity.

Prosperity will never come of its own accord. The time to act is now. Buy United Towns Electric Company 7 per cent. Preference Shares. Particulars, Prospectus, etc., on application to the Company's Office, Telephone Building. feb19, 61

MOTHER NEVER FORGETS.

But there was one who never forgot her boy—the one who never does forget—his mother, who was then a woman past seventy. The ship hauled in at Bennett's wharf to discharge her cargo. Bennett's wharf at that time was where Hickman's now is, but before that it was where Duder's premises were afterwards, and now occupied by Messrs. Crosbie & Co. The ship landed her cargo, and being larger than our usual local shipping, there was not any freight offering for her, so she took ballast to sail for Quebec to load deal for the other side. The ship was probably in St. John's for three weeks; but no one was aware of the personnel of her crew. The captain belonged to the old country, and the most of the ship's company were outlandish men, and with them the mate was reputed as the same. It, however, became known, that the mate was very tyrannical man; and withal, a very strong, shrewd man, of powerful physique and burly arms. There was at that time in St. John's something like on hundred and fifty rum shops. There was not many fancy saloons; merely the old style rumshops, with the decanter in the window and the pewter mugs on the counter. To these place foreign sailors resorted, and over their glasses talked, and listened to the tales of their wanderings and whereabouts. It so happened that during the stay of the ship it leaked out that the mate of the ship at Bennett's wharf was a St. John's lad, who had stowed away many years before. The rumour having once got started, it very soon reached the mother's ears. Of all others the mother was interested, and having heard of the ship, and that the man on board was her son, she of course decided to go down and make enquiries as to his identity; and so it came about one afternoon that she put her shawl over her head, as was the custom of that time, and wended her way down to Bennett's wharf, and stood by the side of the ship, then

Obituary.
GEORGE HIERLICH.

The passing of Mr. George Hierlich, merchant of Bay Roberts, came as a sudden shock to his numerous friends yesterday. The deceased entered the General Hospital in June last when an operation for appendicitis was performed. On the 5th of January he was stricken similarly, and was again compelled to enter the hospital for further treatment. The second operation proved very successful, and for some weeks he showed signs of improvement, but during the past couple of weeks complications set in and in spite of the medical care of the doctors and nurses he passed away yesterday at 1 p.m.

The late Mr. Hierlich was born at Bay Roberts in 1834, and for the past 22 years carried on a successful general business. For 15 years he figured largely in the Labrador fishery, always meeting with a great measure of success. The deceased was a member of the Masonic, Orange and Foresters Societies, and always took an active interest in fraternity work as well as in everything for the advancement of his native town.

Mr. Hierlich leaves to mourn their loss a wife (née Nellie M. Spencer) daughter of the late Captain John Spencer of Harbor Grace, also four children, Muriel, Clifford, Oscar and Marjorie, also mother, two sisters and one brother. The deceased was also a brother-in-law of Conductor W. Pushe of the Reid Newfoundland Company, and Mr. George Badcock of the Marine & Fisheries Department. The funeral took place from the hospital to the Railway Station at 7.30 this morning, when the remains were placed in board the 8.45 train for Bay Roberts where interment takes place. The Telegram extends sincere sympathy to the bereaved in this their sad hour of sorrow.

Wharf-Rat to World Fame.

ROMANCE OF A GREAT SINGER'S CAREER.

Some forty years ago there haunted the docks of Naples a bare-footed little lad whose fame as a singer was destined to be world-wide.

He was what we should call a wharf-rat. His parents were poor people dwelling in a thickly-populated working-class quarter of the city. Doubtless they did their best for their little son. But he was wild and wayward, and played truant from home and from school whenever possible.

Indeed all the schooling he ever had occupied less than two years, and then he learnt little. This was because his master discovered that his young pupil possessed a voice quite out of the ordinary, and proceeded to exploit it by securing engagements for him to sing at fashionable weddings and other social functions—and pocketing the proceeds.

When Caruso sang for Coppers.

Refusing after a while to be exploited any longer, he was expelled from the school, and a little later ran away from home and became a street singer, thrilling his golden notes for a few coppers outside the cafes and theatres of Naples.

That is how, if you had happened to be there at the time, you might have listened to Caruso without it costing you a penny piece. For the boy singer was none other than he.

He had at this time—we are told by the joint authors of "Caruso and the Art of Singing"—a hard job to keep body and soul together.

When Success Came.

Even when, after a long struggle, he at length succeeded in obtaining a regular operatic engagement at a

TO-DAY'S MESSAGES.

NEXT PLEASE!
LONDON, Feb. 24.
Society is stirred by the announcement that Lady Mercy Greville, nineteen year old daughter of Countess Warwick is shortly to go on the stage. The Countess, in an interview with the Evening News, says she is delighted with her daughter's choice of a career, arrangements for which are being completed.

RUSSIA'S CLAIMS.
MOSCOW, Feb. 24.
George Tchitcherin, Bolshevik Foreign Minister, in a note addressed to Italy, Great Britain, France, Germany, Poland and Lithuania has announced that Russia, unless consulted, must ignore, and in future present claims for damages for any decision made by the Allies regarding Memel, made without Russia's consent, as this Baltic port is of vital interest to Russian trade. Russia is endeavoring in every way possible to protect her interests in former Russian territory.

TROTSKY IS HOPEFUL.
MOSCOW, Feb. 24.
The fifth anniversary of the formation of the Red Army was celebrated throughout Russia yesterday. Minister of War, Trotsky, sent the following message to the army: "We want peace, but nobody knows when the host intentions of our enemies will compel us to get into the field. Let us, therefore, during the coming year, meet every month and every day as if it were the last month and the last of our preparedness."

SLEEPING SICKNESS IN VANCOUVER.
VANCOUVER, B.C., Feb. 24.
Fourteen cases of sleeping sickness are reported in this city recently. One death, others expected to recover.

roofs or floors, or a dwelling can be built entirely of it, from chimney-pot to cellar, including sinks, staircases, door and window frames, mantelpieces and meat safes. And there need be no fear that the result will be bare and cheerless, for exterior ornaments can be moulded of concrete, with which color may be mixed to obtain enhanced effects.

Two applications of concrete in house-building are revolutionary. One consists of moulding a whole side of a dwelling in single piece, and the other of erecting a house of wood, and then spraying the exterior with concrete, thus getting the effect of rough masonry.

This many sided material can also be employed in shipbuilding. Some experiments in this direction were made during the war, and soon we may see them renewed. In combination with steel, concrete is the ideal material for great and important structures. It makes up a seventeen-story building recently erected at Manhattan, New York, as well as the Parsons Issue Office at Acton—a vast structure 538 ft. long and 245 ft. deep, with a cornice measuring 1,600 ft.

The flexibility of concrete in working, too, is such that it can be used in many ways to preserve existing structures. It has been forced under pressure between the stone of historic bridges that threatened to collapse, binding together the components in such a way that they will be a joy to generations yet to come. Concrete can also be substituted for unstable foundations of old buildings, the life of which can be prolonged indefinitely. The operation carried out recently on No. 16, Downing Street, which was underpinned with concrete and steel because the walls were sinking, indicates a wide field of usefulness for the wonderful material.

Buildings That Won't Bure.
It is with the aid of concrete, again, that houses and other structures may be moved bodily from one site to another. The earth is dug out by degrees from beneath the building, which, as the work proceeds, is supported by steel plates in sections. A bed of concrete then takes the place of the removed soil and is continued to the fresh site, where another foundation, also of concrete, is made. As soon as this is dry, the structure is lowered on to rollers, and moved to its new situation.

Such is an outline of the proved utility of concrete. That its possibilities are not yet exhausted is certain. We may even have concrete cities where sewers, roads, pavements, bridges, institutions and dwellings may be of the material which is hygienic, defies vermin and fire, and may be made not only damp-proof, but practically everlasting, for a mass of concrete and steel rods or expanded metal is indestructible except by a high explosive.

Created a Scene.

WHIFFLE-TREE ARGUMENT GATHERS CROWD.

Yesterday a horse pulling a load of bran over Custom House Hill stopped near the top and refused to go further until the load was lightened. A S. P. A. man appeared on the scene and an argument arose over the potentialities of the whiffle-tree. The peabate waxed warm and a crowd of several hundred people gathered. The principal in the row got hot under the collar and it appeared as if every minute they would come to blows. The scene could have been avoided had the S. P. A. man securely locked up his goal before he undertook his duties. The carmen state that if more attention was given to the condition of the streets, their animals would haul with much greater ease. ### Diaphragmatic Breathing.

The diaphragm is a very busy, interesting and important muscle, voluntarily up to a certain degree, yet automatic in control. It works while you sleep, while you eat, and even while you hold your breath. It is shaped like a crown seat and is stretched across the torso, dividing the chest cavity from the abdominal cavity, with its anchorage or guy lines attached to the lower ribs, spine and lower end of the sternum or breast bone. When the diaphragm contracts it flattens down, pressing the stomach, liver and other inside apparatuses downward and making the belly bulge forward; incidentally increasing the capacity of the chest and drawing air into the chest. The diaphragm is the chief breathing muscle and although it is controlled by the will it works constantly as an automatic, indeed the only automatic voluntary muscle in the body.

Diaphragmatic breathing is the natural and best way to breathe. It is the way we breathe, when asleep or unconscious. It is the way a savage, man or woman breathes. It is the way a civilized man breathes if he has not acquired bad breathing habits by false physical culture practices. But civilized woman with her belly restrained or splinted or put under pressure of corsets and tight waistbands, breathes largely with the upper chest, in the manner called thoracic breathing, because her diaphragm is embarrassed by her clothing. And civilized woman pays dearly for this interference with nature, suffering with all sorts of disorders of the abdominal and pelvic organs. These disorders she is fond of attributing to inherent weakness of her sex, but if there is any inherent weakness it is due entirely to her pathological mode of dress. Women are getting some sense nowadays and slowly but surely are graduating from abnormal splints and orthopedic support to freedom, self support and better health along with a less morbid and more wholesome state of mind. As intelligence permeates the mind of the more credulous see the absurdity of attributing ill health of any kind to a woman's age or sex becomes more and more manifest.

Cultivate diaphragmatic breathing, as a health habit, no matter about your age or sex. Here is the way to get the habit, if you have learned to breathe wrongly.

Lie on your back with both knees flexed. Place your right hand on your belly. Inhale the respiratory movement begins in the toes of your right foot and travels gradually upwards to the middle of your body on the right side, across to the left side, and then gradually down to the toes of the left foot. Follow each inspiration this way up to the middle of the body and down to the other side as you expire. At the same time, try how high, without force, the hand is lifted as the belly bulges or expands with inspiration and how low the hand sinks as the belly falls or contracts with each expiration. Repeat some 20 times, slowly and evenly every night and every morning. This simple exercise has cured many functional disorders of young women.
