Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have been asked those questions by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North. First, with respect to the question of the closing down of the shale project in, and I believe he is right, it may be Colorado or Wyoming, there is a distinct difference between the American situation and the Canadian situation. That is to say that the United States decision was made not because the Government was pro-business or anti-business but simply because the people of the United States have the good common sense not to tax to its knees an industry which is an engine of growth.

With respect to the question of helping producers and the objectives of marketing boards, we are hearing a contradiction from the Hon. Member opposite. The NDP line is that we are giving money to oil companies. Yet, I hear the Hon. member for Winnipeg North saying that the purpose of marketing boards is to help producers. Who in heaven's name are the producers if they are not those same invidious and malicious oil companies, be they domestic or international?

Mr. Orlikow: I worry about the farmers, not the oil companies.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I wish to aks the Hon. Member a question. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North quoted some interesting statistics from the Petroleum Monitoring Agency. However, in doing so he neglected to answer the question which I asked with respect to the return on investment in the energy industry, which figures were contained, by the way, in that same report from which he was quoting. He failed carry on in his reading into the next paragraph. Could the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards) fill us in on the return on invested capital in the energy industry?

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I just happen to have paid a trip to the Library. I can say that if the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North had read a bit further from what he was quoting he would have seen that as regards oil industry product, the later report released by the Petroleum Monitoring Agency for the first six months of 1985 shows that the oil product sector of the Canadian petroleum industry recorded a $206 million after-tax profit. This compares to a profit of $293 million for the year 1984 and a loss of $158 million for 1983. In spite of the improvement in downstream income in the first half of 1985, the rate of return on capital employed for total operations was only 5.2 per cent, marginally below that obtained by all other non-financial industries for the same period.

Mr. Waddell: Obviously, then, no onw would invest in the energy industry, and Imperial, Gulf and Shell would have done poorly in Canada all these years. This is the old canard of the industry. It constantly asks about the rate of return. It is the figures provided by the industry that count. It counts as part of its investment the oil in the ground, which does not belong to it. It counts lots of things. So the Hon. Member should not get sidetracked by that canard. That is the line of the Canadian Petroleum Association as reflected in the report to the monitoring agency.

• (1710)

I want to ask the Hon. Member two short questions. I have made the case today for a market which is not free. The Hon. Member is a free marketer. Surely, if he looks at the Bertrand Report, the Work of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, the evidence we have heard from small independent dealers, and at the fact that 70 per cent of the retail industry is controlled by four oil companies, would he not admit that we do not really have a free market? If the Government wants to be consistent, it should take steps in the Western Accord not only to deregulate the industry but to make it a competitive market as was done in the United States with its anti-trust laws.

Second, I would like to know what position the Hon. Member took on the expansion of Petro-Canada when the Government bought the gas stations from Gulf, that is, his own personal position.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to take those questions in reverse order. I support the Government's position vis-à-vis the purchase of the Gulf retail operations in western Canada, that is, simply, that the Government had no position on that. That was a decision taken by a Crown corporation which is at arm's length.

Mr. Waddell: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: And is operating like a business.

Mr. Waddell: You are marxists.

Mr. Edwards: Second, when the question is raised about restrictive trade practices and four oil companies operating in the market, here again we have the New Democrat politics of innuendo and fear. The fact is that if we had an NDP Government, which God forbid, we would have a marvellous conglomerate ridden with corruption and inefficiencies. We would have a nationalized oil industry in total.

Finally, there is the marvellous tendency—proclivity I might say—of the New Democrats to ride two horses, to want to have it both ways.

Mr. Waddell: We are asking you. You are the ones who deregulated.

Mr. Edwards: What I am quoting from is challenged, but it is the basis of the statement of the Hon. Member's colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North. The NDP was created by Dr. do-little; it is a push me—pull you.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have a chance to speak in this debate on the pricing of petroleum products and Petro-Canada because it is an issue of great concern in practically every riding in this country. People see the headlines every day and know that crude oil prices are dropping from $28 or $29 a barrel in U.S. funds to $18 a barrel, which is a 33 per cent drop or more, and they are wondering why gasoline prices are not going down at the pumps.

I have a selection of headlines which appeared during the last couple of days. I think that from them we can get some feeling of the problems the Government faces with this issue. For instance, on February 1, the headline in The Ottawa Citizen read: "Federal Energy Policy in Confusion". On January 27 the headline in the Montreal Gazette read: "Customers' Revolt Brewing Over High Gasoline Prices". In the Chronicle Herald on January 23, the headline read: "Gas Tax Bite Too High, Canadian Automobile Association Says". The Ottawa Citizen headline on January 24 read: "Tourism Officials Want Pump Prices to Reflect World Price Cut". The headline in the Toronto Star on January 24 read: "Why is Our Oil Price So High? Industry Has Few Answers". In the Toronto Star of January 23, the headline read: "Excess Gas Prices Cost $8.5 Million Each Day". In the Montreal Gazette on the same day the headline read: "Wilson Won't Lower PetroCan's Gas Prices". On January 22nd, the Toronto Star headline read: "We Could Wait Months Before Gasoline Prices Drop, Minister of Energy Carney Says". That is the consumer side of the issue. In the Montreal Gazette on January 22, the headline read: "Oil Prices Continue to Fall but Not at the Gas Pumps". In the Toronto Sun on January 20 the headline read: "Rip-Off at the Pumps", and there followed a detailed account.

Looking back a little further we see another headline: "PetroCan Names Moore Firm as Consultants", and it goes into great detail about how $100,000 is being paid for consultant fees to Frank Moore to advise PetroCan. Obviously, he has not advised them as yet to lower prices. And as we search through the article we see his cohorts in that advisory group. Mr. Doucette, the brother of the senior aide of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), headed up a company which lost $20 million in East Coast energy. We can then understand why there is difficulty in PetroCan getting the policy right.

Going back a few months to the cut-back in the Petroleum Incentives Program, we see the headline: "Frontier Oil Rigs to be Cut, Analyst Predicts". A little farther back from last year we see: "Promise of Offshore Oil Fading in Nova Scotia", and "PetroCan Plans Gas Station Closures. Small Explorers Ponder Future". That was back on November 1, 1985, at the time of the new energy agreements. I have here a very forthright article written by the President of PetroCan in the Toronto Star on January 25. The headline reads: "PetroCan Chief Speaks Out on Painful Lay-offs and Closings of PetroCan Gas Stations". Here is another headline: "Low Oil Prices Worry PetroCan Chief".

With respect to the motion before us today. I would like to speak briefly about the adverse impact of the oil price drop and the Government's lack of policy with regard to it. I also want to talk about the impact of the oil price reduction and the lack of action taken by the Government over the last year to take economic advantage of lower oil prices. For instance, it is not only the national price of oil, as we would see in metropolitan areas such as Toronto, but it is the impact we see in the more remote areas of our country. Sault Ste. Marie is a medium-sized city serving an area with 120,000 people. It is quite a distance from Metropolitan Toronto. Regular gasoline currently is selling in Sault Ste. Marie at about 54 cents a litre compared to about 61 cents a litre in Toronto, which works out to a difference of seven cents a litre. If we compare that with the population, we find that the resident population consumes about 71 million litres of gasoline per year. That price difference means that the residents of Sault Ste. Marie have to pay around $5 million more a year. For an average family driving an average number of miles, that adds up to an extra cost of $150 a year. If they drive across the bridge to Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan, they will save at least $10 a tank of gas.

We have to ask ourselves whether Petro-Canada, when it was established in the mid-1970s, was meant to be a window on the industry or a bank vault for the Government. On June 1 last, Petro-Canada spent tens of thousands of dollars for advertisements to say it was bringing down the price of gasoline at the pump. The company placed an ad in The Sault Star on June 1, 1985 which said that Petro-Canada was pleased to announce lower prices at the pump. The company said that the recent federal Budget changed the levies on petroleum products and it was pleased to pass on those cost reductions to its customers. Due to decontrol, the company said, and removal of the Canadian ownership special charge, Petro-Canada is lowering the posted price of products such as gasoline and diesel fuel by six-tenths of a cent per litre. Heating fuel was reduced by one-half cent per litre. The prices were effective June 1 at all company-operated and agency stations. That, of course, was very good. The actual petroleum compensation charge was 1.8 cents a litre and they only passed on a portion, six-tenths of a cent per litre, but at least they did something.

Mr. McDermid: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not think my hon. friend would want to mislead the House deliberately. The tax was in fact seven-tenths of one cent, not 1.8 cents, as he said.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. All Membes know there will be a period of questions and comments once the Hon. Member has finished his remarks.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary knows that the petroleum compensation charge put in effect in November, 1984 was 1.8 cents per litre.

This advertisement shows that the Government can give leadership if it wants to. That is what Canadians are calling on the Government to do. They want Petro-Canada to give leadership. I am sure Petro-Canada did not dream up this campaign itself. It probably did it at the suggestion or behest of the Minister. The company is capable of giving leadership on prices, and that is what Members of this House are asking it to do today.

In a front page article in The Sault Star, the Federation of Northern Ontario Municipalities demanded a monitoring system to track gasoline prices and try to bring some relationship between the prices in northern and southern Ontario. As I pointed out, people in the North are very concerned at the additional cost they have to pay. They have longer distances to travel for health care, shopping and things like that. I received a letter from a couple living in Elliott Lake, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Smith. They said they are being hurt by the high price of gasoline. They are pensioners and they have to watch every cent they spend. When they look at making a trip to visit their family in Nova Scotia, possibly for the last time, they are looking at a lot of money for gas. They ask why it is that the U.S. gas is so much cheaper than ours. "Why can our gas not be reduced to a reasonable level so we can afford to drive our car rather than to have it sit in the driveway until the pension cheque comes in?" That is very typical of letters that Members on all sides receive. I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary and other Members on the Government side are getting the same kind of letters. I have another letter from the English Tea House in Desbarats, Ontario. Mr. Johnstone protests the very high price of fuel, not only gasoline. He points out that the price of propane has gone up dramatically from 27 cents to 32 cents a litre. This may not seem like a very large increase between 1984 and 1986, but when you go to fill a 500-gallon tank for a senior citizen like this it is very expensive. He points out at the same time that he uses kerosene for spot heaters and that the price of kerosene has gone up from 51 cents a litre to 56 cents a litre or $2.55 a gallon in one year. This is a tremendous hardship. It was at a time when oil prices were supposedly deregulated, the world price was falling by several dollars a barrel, and of course it has fallen dramatically since. This is the kind of concern being expressed.

I would also like to talk about the anguish that Petro-Canada dealers have to go through. Even though they own all of the gasoline and fuel oil in their tanks, they are forced by contract to sell at a price that Petro-Canada dictates to them. We have an example of that in Bracebridge, Ontario. The company has a formula, which means that the more you charge, the higher your commission. For example, at 55.9 cents a litre you get a commission of 3.4 cents. If you only charge 47.9 cents a litre, you only get 2.8 cents. This is from a pricing schedule for Petro-Canada's Trafalgar terminal as of September 3, 1985. As of January 1, 1986, the company escalated the price at which you get the maximum commission from 55.9 cents to 58.4 cents, but the commission is the same. The whole commission arrangement is designed not to sell more gasoline but to charge a higher price. The dealer who gave me this information is very upset. He feels that the company is totally ruthless, uncaring, and unfair in its relationships.

That is one aspect of the situation as I see it today. The other aspect of the Western Accord and the policy of the Government is that there is very little provision in the Western Accord to maintain and keep the oil industry functioning in a healthy state in western Canada when oil prices are falling. As a matter of fact, the only provision for that in the Western Accord is Section 9 which reads: "In the event of international oil marketing disturbances that result in short-changes to crude oil prices with potentially negative impacts on Canada, the Government of Canada, following consultations with provincial Governments, will take appropriate measures to protect Canadian interests."

We are already seeing that in spades, Mr. Speaker. Besides that policy, which is very inadequate to deal with the rapid drop in crude oil prices, we are already seeing major projects falling like tenpins across Canada. There is no adequate provision in that agreement to deal with price drops to $18, $15, or $12 a barrel.

I recently spoke with an exploration company which said that when the price of crude oil drops to $20 a barrel it cuts its exploration program in half. If the price drops more, its exploration program will be reduced more. Many projects have either been cancelled or are at a standstill. The $4 billion Suncrude oil sands project is under the gun and certainly cannot go forward with this pricing regime. Also affected are the new oil sands plant of Petro-Canada, the phased expansion of the heavy oil up-grading programs at Cold Lake and Wolf Lake, and the $3.2 billion Husky Oil up-grader at Lloydminster.

I had a chance to visit that plant last May with a number of my caucus colleagues. It seemed to me that that was a model project which could have been self-sufficient and created a large number of jobs. Yet, the Government was obviously already sending signals to the company last summer that it was calling the project into question and was starting to draw back from the $50 commitment of the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Of course, the $750 million loan guarantee is falling by the wayside. It was a model project which could have been very beneficial.

Last week the $2.3 billion liquefied natural gas project in Prince Rupert was cancelled. Other projects are on hold and very uncertain. There is not much chance that the 300,000 jobs which were promised by the Minister will be created. That is mostly due to the fact that this agreement has no provision in it to deal with rapid price losses.

It is obvious that consumers of the country want the drop in world oil prices to be passed through to them. It seems to me that the Government's whole energy policy is in doubt with regard to whether the jobs will be created, whether the massive projects will go ahead, and whether we are going to be able to achieve and maintain the self-sufficiency which we enjoyed for the last couple of years in oil production.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, we have heard the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) refer to a great many newspaper articles on the expectations of the Canadian public concerning a price reduction. I think he mentioned some twenty major newspapers.

I suggest that it is all new for the Liberals to be concerned about the aspirations and expectations of Canadians and to be prepared to listen to what Canadians have to say. It is the first time that I have witnessed the Hon. Member for Algoma listening to the Canadian public. I suggest the Liberals would have been better advised to listen to them before they announced the National Energy Program. They could have told Canadians: This program will increase the cost of oil by 80 per cent over the next three years. The situation would have been different if, at that time, they had told Canadians: "You are paying for oil less than the Americans today, but three years from now, you will pay more."

Over the past fifteen months, we have managed to reduce the price of oil by two cents a litre, in spite of the nine cents resulting from inflation. For all practical purposes, we have made it possible for the price not to increase. It is a total reduction of eleven cents, from the economic point of view.

If you had listened to the message then, you might not have received the second message on September 4, 1984, when Canadians elected 211 Conservative Members to the House of Commons. that is because you, as Member of Algoma, refused to listen.

My first question is this: Why did you wait till now to read the papers? And my second question is: Why do the research services of the Liberal party only work in English, because you did not refer to any French-speaking paper?

[English]

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said that he has lowered prices of fuel. If he has lowered them, he should let the Canadian people know because they think prices are going up, and going up too much at a time when the price of crude oil is going down. The people in Algoma cannot imagine why the price of gas is going up when the price of crude oil has gone down by 30 per cent. If the Member understands that, maybe he could explain it to his constituents.

Farmers, even those in many areas of Quebec I am sure, are very upset that the Government gave an exemption of 3 cents a litre on the exicse tax on gasoline in early December of 1984. I also took off the petroleum compensation charge of 1.8 cents a litre. The Government made quite a thing of that in its campaign promises. Most of us who were concerned about the terribly difficult times in agriculture applauded that move. Unfortunately, on June 1 the Government moved to the world oil price so the petroleum compensation charge disappeared but the price of gasoline did not go down, except in the advertisement of Petro-Canada.

Therefore, the farmers gained 1.8 cents a litre and, through the Budget of May 23, they were forced to add another 2 cents a litre on September 3. They were then back to where they had been before the price reduction of the previous November was brought in. On January 1 there was a sales tax increase of 1 per cent, which increased fuel prices by another .5 cents a litre. Therefore, the farm producers ended up paying about 4.3 cents a litre more than they were paying on January 1, 1985. The consumption works out to some 31 billion litres. Therefore, the actual cost to Canadian agriculture is $120 million. We are paying $120 million more than last January for farm fuels as a result of the Government's tax policies, pricing polikcies as well as other factors arising from the Petro-Canada figures I gave earlier.

Furthermore, the exemption of 3 cents a litre will come off at the end of 1986 and another so-called granny tax of 1 cent a litre will be added so that by January 1, next year, there will be another 4 cents a litre in excise tax or another $120 million. There will be an increase in price and excise tax of $240 million to farmers from the federal Government over the next two years unless it makes some changes in its Budget. I do not know about his area, but agriculture is having a very difficult time in many areas of Canada. An additional cost of $240 million will be a great burden.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, the debate has taken place all day. It is obvious where the New Democratic Party stands on this motion because it introduced it. However, the Liberal Party has not stated whether it supports this motion and supports government interference in the market-place by asking Petro-Canada to reduce the price by six cents a litre.

Is that the policy of the Liberals in the field of energy?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had covered that when I spoke.

Mr. McDermid: Yes or no?

Mr. Foster: I was pointing out exactly how Petro-Canada gave great leadership last June 1—

Mr. McDermid: Are you supporting the motion or are you not?

Mr. Foster: I have already pointed out that Petro-Canada gave great leadership.

Mr. McDermid: That was a tax reduction. Are you supporting the motion?

Mr. Foster: This is not a tax reduction.

Mr. McDermid: It certainly was.

Mr. Foster: This is the kind of leadership Petro-Canada has been able to give. I am saying that if Petro-Canada could give that kind of leadership last June in reducing the price it can certainly give that leadership today. Petro-Canada is very capable of giving that leadership. It spent thousands of dollars to buy this kind of advertising and I am sure it can do so today.

Mr. McDermid: I want to ask the Hon. Member the question again because he did not answer it. That happened to be a tax saving that was passed on to the people of Canada through Petro-Canada when the tax was taken off on January 1 pursuant to the accord. He shakes his head to signify no, but I can tell him that that is what it is.

Mr. Foster: The petroleum compensation charge came off.

Mr. McDermid: I want to ask my question as directly as I can and I want a yes or no answer. Do you or do you not support the New Democratic motion today? Yes or no?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I think I have made it very clear that we want Petro-Canada to give the kind of leadership that it is capable of giving in reducing oil prices. There is absolutely no reason—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. Resuming debate.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to enter the debate on the motion introduced by my friend, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). The motion states:

> That this House demands that the Government instruct Petro-Canada and its retail outlets to reduce their prices at the pump by six cents a litre, a move which would enable Petro-Canada to fulfil one of its basic purposes which is to provide Canada with reasonable energy prices.

I have no hesitation in supporting that motion and I take particular pleasure in having the opportunity to conclude the debate on this motion this afternoon.

The situation that faces Canadians and the Government as well is very simple. Canadians have lived for years with rising petroleum prices, including the price of gasoline at the pump and heating fuel for homes. At present they see that the international petroleum price is dropping sharply with all kinds of consequence. Those Canadians expect those decreases to be obvious to them at the pump. However, they find that in January the prices are rising.

Mr. McDermid: No.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): The fact that prices have risen in recent weeks is part of the reason for putting this motion forward and is every reason for exploring the difficulties in which Canadians find themselves. In that light, I believe it is appropriate for me to clarify why Members opposite who have been arguing strenuously this afternoon feel so politically uncomfortable about the whole situation.

There are many reasons to doubt the very market forces in which the Parliamentary Secretary has put his faith. There is good reason for my friend from Vancouver-Kingsway to put forward a motion asking the Government to intervene with the publicly owned oil company, which is not only our window on the industry but a vehicle by which to ensure that something remotely resembling market forces will prevail in Canadian petroleum.

All Members of the House recognize this problem as our constituents write to us about the difficulty they have in enjoying the use of their automobile for driving to work or enjoying their retirement. This was a concern of one of my constituents who wrote to me recently. In fact, he wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), asking how he and his wife can expect to enjoy the use of their car when the price of gasoline continues to rise. Other constituents write to me about the cost of heating their homes. Although they live on the fringes of the city, they live in areas which will not be served by natural gas.

The price of gasoline rose in January because of a tax that the Government does not want to talk about. The Government is eager to raise more money through regressive forms of taxation such as sales tax increases and increases in the price of fuel, without coming to grips with other issues. The Parliamentary Secretary said that we have no program to describe how we would raise revenue. If he paid attention to our fair taxation program he would know that we have an answer. The Auditor General has indicated that tax expenditures are running at $35 billion to $50 billion. There is every reason to look at those expenditures when $50 billion would be almost half of the current rate of expenditure by the Government. We know perfectly well where we could find some of the revenue that we need. The Parliamentary Secretary knows that. He does not want to talk about it.

It is bad enough that the cost of gasoline should rise because the Government has slapped some more taxation on ordinary Canadians. The price of heating fuel is 40 cents a litre in Thunder Bay. I asked my assistants to check on the taxes that are involved in that 40 cents a litre for heating oil. They told me there is not a cent of tax in that. I am paying 56 cents a litre for unleaded gasoline. Constituents of mine who cannot use natural gas or electricity are paying 40 cents a litre for heating oil and there is no tax on it. My God, Mr. Speaker, what are we to say about the oil companies that are supposedly—

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure the Hon. Member would not want to mislead the House. There are no consumption taxes. There are taxes on heating oil. The Member should know better.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): The reality is that prices of gasoline and heating oil are high. Taxes are a significant element in one area. Apparently they are not significant in another. It is something with which the Government cannot come to grips. I am led to believe by the answer given by the Parliamentary Secretary. He encourages me to take another look. Perhaps I can have the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) consider this problem that my constituents have.

The argument of the Parliamentary Secretary is based on the proposition that market forces should prevail. The petroleum industry is not an industry in which market forces are anything remotely resembling neoclassical economic theory or principles of atavistic competition. Nothing remotely resembling that existed in the petroleum industry for years past. To depend on market forces to do what is required to bring prices down is pursuing will-o'-the-wisp.

First, we all know, even though these friends of ours on the other side do not talk about it, that the price of petroleum reached the levels it did in the last 15 years because of a cartel. The most spectacularly successful cartel in human history drove the price of petroleum from $3 a barrel to $38 and more.

Mr. McDermid: Have you heard of the uranium cartel?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Take that in percentage terms and consider the impact and the transfer of wealth that was carried out thanks to the existence of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

The question that all Canadian Governments faced in the late 1970s and into the 1980s as they contemplated the operations of the cartel which, under its price-setting umbrella, sheltered the seven sisters of the oil industry and their operations in Canada as they drew out of the pockets of Canadian consumers enormous quantities of money, was whether they should take it and run. They could have done so so easily if left to what is called market forces, but Canadian Governments decided they should not.

The remarkable thing is that when the petroleum and gas revenue tax was imposed, the oil companies did not suffer particularly. If one takes the statistics of that development, it is astonishing to realize that the industry's share of revenues in 1980 was $6.3 billion, in 1981 it rose to $6.7 billion, in 1982 to $9.4 billion and in 1983 to $10.6 billion. Is that an industry that is hurting?

From 1982 and 1983, Imperial Oil had an increase in profits from $289 million to $344 million.

Mr. McDermid: What was the return on investment?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Texaco had an increase in its profit from $275 million to $344 million. These companies were not hurting, Mr. Speaker. But the people of Canada had available part of this incredible economic rent which OPEC was creating by its pricing policies to use for the public purposes of Canada.

The Government, by repealing the petroleum and gas revenue tax, has given all of that money back to the oil companies. Now we have the decline of OPEC's power. But are those market forces of the neoclassical economic theory? They are nothing of the sort. What my friend has sought particularly to deal with is the reality of a handful of petroleum companies which control the industry, determine prices, and set prices at the pump. They set prices at the pump because they have the power to determine at what price gasoline will be sold. Anyone interested in the topic of combinations of economic power exerted in the market-place is aware that retail price maintenance has been one of the most contentious principles over the years. Governments have attempted to come to grips with that problem. In the oil industry there is no doubt about it. It is perfectly obvious that the people running the stations and selling the gas are under the control of the companies from which they buy gasoline or from whom they receive it on consignment. Retail price maintenance in the purist sense is what Petro-Canada and the rest are involved in. Market forces Mr. Speaker? Do not make me laugh. When we have a situation of four or five companies in an oligopoly, we do not have anything like an atavistic response to millions of consumers, we have several companies involved in establishing prices and maintaining them.

In this context of that kind of market power being exercised by a few companies, companies will now, thanks to what the Government has done, take far more of the gains they can get. After all, we are talking about $20 a barrel. We are not yet down to $5 or $6. We might conceivably get there but we are still a long way from that.

The Government, which is supposedly concerned about the prosperity of all Canada and ordinary Canadians, is letting the companies take the gains. It hopes devoutly this money will be sunk into exploration and that it will generate the 300,000 jobs, but the Government has not given us a guarantee of that.

This is revenue the Government needs so desperately which the Minister of Finance will invoke when he brings in his Budget. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has to admit that this revenue was the reason for his promise of last January to maintain the value in the child benefits package. He was forced to break the promise. In September the Minister was backing down and admitting that money was going to be taken out of the child benefits package over the next few years to keep the deficit down. It is strange that the Government could do that to mothers and babies and at the same time give hundreds of millions it not billions of dollars to the oil companies and then talk to us about market forces. These are brute economic realities which the Government does not want to admit to.

Mr. McDermid: You will eat those words.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): The Tories govern in the interests of these great companies.

If we take a look at the Act that created Petro-Canada in 1975, we find in Section 7 a long list of powers in Part I. Part I runs all the way through to the letter Z. Then we come to No. II which reads, "In the exercise of its powers, the corporation shall comply with such policy directions that may from time to time be given to it in writing by the Governor in Council."

If the Government recognized the brute reality of the economic power that exists in the petroleum industry, if it were really concerned that prices decline as they now deserve to, if the Government recognized that there are all kinds of sellers out there who want the chance to do some of this atavistic competition, whether in gasoline alley just north of Toronto, in the City of Thunder Bay or in Vancouver, if the Government were really sensitive to that and had the interests of the country at heart, the Government would issue a direction to Petro-Canada—which is not just a window on the industry, although Petro-Canada could be that if the Government wanted it to be—to ensure that the kinds of market forces we would like to see operate—

Mr. McDermid: You would let the taxpayer pay.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): —will come a little closer to operating and the Government would see to it that the Combines Act changes that are required to ensure something closer to competition actually were in the Act for us to consider later this year.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

TRADE—CONTENT OF NEGOTIATIONS. (B) NEGOTIATION ISSUES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to rise this evening in response to a question that I put to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) with regard to the subject matter of free trade. At that time I raised the issue as it affects cultural industries. The main thrust of the subject matter of free trade concerns me greatly. I have been asked on numerous occasions as to whether or not I am in support of the Mulroney initiative as it relates to free trade.

Unfortunately, with the way in which the Government has conducted itself to date, I would have to say that I am opposed to the Mulroney initiative with regard to free trade. That is not to suggest in any way that as a Member of Parliament I am opposed to the concept of free trade. As a Member of Parliament, I find it somewhat appalling and extremely difficult when the Government of the day says a whole lot about free trade, the various platitudes, but fails to provide Canadians with the necessary information as to the direction in which it will take our country.

Yes, Canada has a surplus with the United States of about $21 billion in free trade, and we are to sit down with the United States and negotiate an improved a deal. What we do not know with regard to free trade is the cost benefit to the various sectors of the economy. I had hoped that the Government would have laid before Parliament how free trade will benefit my Province of Nova Scotia and the Atlantic region.

We can go back to 1933 when the former Premier of Nova Scotia, Angus L. Macdonald initiated a study which showed the objections that that Government had with regard to the tariff policy of Sir John A. Macdonald. We have no information from this Government. What we have is bits and pieces of information as they relate to brewery workers in my province, textile workers in Truro, Nova Scotia, and how it will affect them. No cost benefit study has been done, or if it has been done, it has been in secret. We have to know whether regional economic development incentive programs are on the chopping block or the negotiating table.

What about unemployment insurance? Is that, too, going to be on the negotiating table when we sit down with our good friends in the United States? What about the various fishery programs, Mr. Speaker? We have a decision here of late from the United States regarding programs which have been determined to provide subsidies. Are they going to be a part of the negotiating apparatus with the United States? Will federal programs such as the fishing vessel assistance program, the agricultural and rural development agreements, the federal Department of Fisheries and Oceans Promotions Branch, the federal Economic and Regional Development Agreements Program, assistance for the construction of ice-making and fish chilling facilities and the fishing vessel insurance plan be up for negotiation? We do not have an answer. In Newfoundland there are grants for purchasing and constructing boats. Will that be on the negotiating table? Will the Newfoundland loan guarantees from the Fisheries Loan Board be up for negotiation? Will the Nova Scotia fishing vessels construction program and the Nova Scotia industrial development division grants from the Department of Development be on the negotiating table with our friends, the Americans? What about the assistance for ice-making and fish-chilling facilities in Prince Edward Island?

There has been a vacuum when it comes to good, precise information on the whole subject of free trade. I cannot see why the Government, if it believes strongly in its assertion that free trade will benefit Canada and the regions, would not provide that information willingly to Hon. Members of Parliament and the provincial Governments. With regard to the free trade issue, conceptually it does have some benefits. The liberalization of trade, not only in the United States but other countries of the world as well, has been the position of my Party for quite some time.

Where is the information? Where are the concrete cost benefit analyses? Why have they not been done? If they have been done, why have they not been provided so that we can have a serious, intelligent debate on the subject which is germane to economic development in my region? I would hope that the Parliamentary Secretary could avail himself of this opportunity to provide Canadians with an answer as to why that information has not been made readily available. Without this information, the Government is asking Members of Parliament to make decisions prematurely without having all the information and facts before them.

I have listed for your information, Mr. Speaker, a number of programs which have been deemed by the United States to be the equivalent of subsidies. Are they now going to be part and parcel of the negotiating process? I would hope that we would get a clear answer from the Government of Canada and hopefully from the Government of Nova Scotia. However, we know that the Government of Nova Scotia is not too wise when it comes to doing cost benefit analyses. It is prepared to agree to anything put forward by the Government of Canada, something which I think is a mistake.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, that is quite an indictment of the Nova Scotia Government. It signed an energy agreement with the Government to which the Hon. Member once belonged. I am sure that when he re-examines his words—

Mr. Dingwall: I'm talking about free trade.

Mr. McDermid: I sat patiently and listened to the Hon. Member. I am sure he will give me the same courtesy since I only have three minutes—

Mr. Dingwall: If you stick to the subject.

Mr. McDermid: —and we had to bear seven minutes of his tirade.

It has been very clear for some time that the Government wants a better, more predictable and more secure trading relationship with our major trading partners so that Canadian enterprise can plan, invest and grow with confidence, the kind of confidence that leads to more and better jobs. Of particular interest is the United States market which now takes three-quarters of our total exports. What will be involved in this? These will be commercial negotiations between two distinct and sovereign countries. We all know that modern nations are more than economic. The challenge will be to strengthen both our economy and our sovereignty.

We and the Americans will be working toward a package of mutually beneficial and acceptable reductions in tariff and non-tariff barriers in order to increase trade and thereby save jobs and create new jobs in the future. In order to get a good deal, each side will have to be prepared to listen to the other. We want the Americans to consider our concerns about the protectionist effect of their trade remedy legislation, our desire to gain greater access to their government procurement market and the need for a more effective and predictable way to settle our differences.

The Americans will want us to listen to their concerns about our high tariffs, our industrial support programs, our investment rules and the international rules regarding trade in services. By listening to each other and placing these concerns on the table, neither side is committed to accepting what the other is proposing. However, only by frankly discussing each other's objectives and concerns will we know if a good deal is possible. We are prepared to do that. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) indicated in his announcement of September 26, if a deal which is good for all regions and all Canadians is not negotiable, there will be no deal.

I might add that I think Canadians do not appreciate having to go to the United States, cap in hand, when each individual issue comes up, whether it be an issue with respect to wood, steel or fisheries. They do not appreciate having to go down there and say: "Please, do not include us in your tariff or in your protectionist Bills". I think the Canadian people want us to negotiate a fair trade agreement with the United States. We are prepared to do that. If it is not a fair deal, and if it is not good for Canadians, then we will not sign it.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED—RADIOACTIVE WASTE DISPOSAL RESEARCH. (B) UNITED STATES DUMP SITE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow up on a question I asked of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) on January 27 last. I suppose the Minister of Energy is so used to hearing me ask questions in which I seek assurances that the site of AECL's underground research laboratory at Lac du Bonnet, Manitoba, will not become the eventual site for a Canadian radioactive garbage dump that when I got up to ask the question she did not pay all that much attention to it. She must have assumed I was asking the same question I have asked repeatedly. She went on to say that she had given assurances to the Manitoba Government that the AECL research site would not become a permanent site for radioactive waste disposal. However, that is not the question I asked.

I asked a question about the concern expressed by the Manitoba Government, and by others, about the list of potential American radioactive dump sites which was recently released. I asked her whether or not in view of the fact that many of those sites, if they were to be used, might have an effect on waters entering Canada—in particular, groundwater—she would consider instructing AECL not to enter into any further agreements with the U.S. Department of Energy for co-operating in research which is taking place at the Lac du Bonnet site. I am thinking particularly of those waters which are adjacent to the Red River Basin.

The reason I asked her the question is I think that we have a very good bargaining tool here insofar as the U.S. Department of Energy wants to participate in the research which is going on in Lac du Bonnet. My position is that we should say to the Americans: "Fine, if you want to use a Canadian site for research, then part of the price for being able to use that site is that you take off the list of potential American sites those sites which might affect Canadian watersheds". In my view this would give the Government some leverage with the Americans with respect to the issue of sites which might potentially damage Canada.

I might also say that this might be something which would be looked upon favourably by the people of Minnesota who have been successful, as I understand it, in preventing the American Department of Energy from carrying on in Minnesota the type of research that AECL is carrying on in Manitoba. By allowing the U.S. Department of Energy to do research in Lac du Bonnet we are effectively allowing it to circumvent the successful opposition which has been generated in Minnesota. Because the rock formations are similar, and by being able to conduct research in Lac du Bonnet, the U.S. Department of Energy is able to do an end run around the opposition in Minnesota and do the very type of research which, depending on what is found, might lead to the selection of the very sites in Minnesota with which we are concerned.

I say to the Government: Take this opportunity of leverage and instruct AECL not to co-operate any further with the U.S. Department of Energy until such time as those sites which potentially could affect Canada are removed from the American list. I might add that it is not just a question of responding favourably to the concerns of people in Minnesota. It is also the quite simple question of not co-operating, not helping people to dirty our own backyard or, in this case, dirty our groundwater and our watersheds. It is also a question of the extent to which, by co-operating with the U.S. Department of Energy, we involve ourselves in the whole American nuclear program. This waste does not all come from reactors. The waste the Americans are looking to dispose of comes as well from their nuclear weapons program. I think that the extent we co-operate with the U.S. Department of Energy in an uncritical way in finding ways to dispose of this waste is the extent to which we should be collaborators, if you will, in the American nuclear program of which, as we all know, many Canadians are critical.

I see this partnership that AECL has entered into with the U.S. Department of Energy vis-à-vis the underground research laboratory in Lac du Bonnet, Manitoba, as one more way in which Canada has become integrated into the whole American nuclear program. I regret that very much. For that reason, to be honest, I would be against co-operating with the Americans in an uncritical way even if these sites in Minnesota had not been released recently.

I say to those whose opposition to this may be more qualified that mine that this is another reason for bargaining toughly with the Americans about the ways in which we co-operate with them. At the very least, the Government should be now saying to the Americans: "Listen. Until you take those sites off the list, those in Minnesota and elsewhere, which could potentially affect Canada, we cannot possibly hope to co-operate any further". Otherwise, we could be open to the accusation that we were helping the Americans pollute our own backyard, and that is not acceptable to us.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have carefully noted the Hon. Member's concerns relative to the potential location of radioactive disposal sites in the United States and American participation in tests at the Atomic Energy of Canada Limited underground research laboratories at the Whiteshell nuclear research establishment. We are all aware, I believe, of the Hon. Member's concerns about the nuclear issue in general. I recall a debate of his Private Members' motion last fall in which he called for an inquiry into the entire nuclear fuel cycle.

Despite the presentation of solid scientific evidence in support of the nuclear cycle, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) remains convinced that nuclear power and nuclear research are inherently dangerous. If the truth were known, he would wipe out the nuclear industry in Canada tomorrow and the 30,000 jobs which go with it, wiping out a very important industry in which we have developed expertise in Canada.

Mr. Blaikie: Not the medical-related research. Not the whole industry.

Mr. McDermid: He hates nuclear energy.

Mr. Blaikie: Not the medical-related stuff.

Mr. McDermid: In a peaceful way, the Hon. Member is opposed to it in any way, shape or form.

Mr. Blaikie: I am opposed to nuclear power, nuclear weapons.

Mr. McDermid: Even when it comes to the medical end of things—

Mr. Blaikie: I am not opposed to nuclear medicine.

Mr. McDermid: —which he is not opposed to, there is still waste. We still have to do research into the safe storage of nuclear waste. That is what is going on now. Our Government is committed to the work that AECL is doing at the Whiteshell facility. I might say that it is doing a magnificent job. It has been very forthright with the Canadian people in its work.

The Hon. Member was not at the standing committee when the witnesses from Whiteshell appeared. They were very forthright about the work which is going on and how they are carrying it out. The Hon. Member was not there to question them—

Mr. Blaikie: I couldn't be there, John. Be fair to me.

Mr. McDermid: To be fair, he should not sit there and heckle and say that they are not being forthright because in fact they have been. I might say that it is a compliment to our Canadian scientists that the United States' Department of Energy has asked to participate in this research work. We are waiting for a formal signing of the agreement with the U.S. with respect to the co-operative research program. I will be quite honest with the Hon. Member, I would much rather have the United States in partnership with us in this very important research to find out how to safely store or dispose of nuclear waste than have the Americans do it in an untested manner in their own country. I would much rather have them gain the expertise we have in Canada in order to ensure that in fact when they do store nuclear waste, it does not affect our sovereignty, nor the Canadian Government. For the Hon. Member to rise in his place and suggest that we blackmail the United States into participating with us on a research program, I feel is ludicrous and I think he would admit that.

TRADE—REMOVAL OF TARIFF ON COMPUTER PARTS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, you are aware, as I am, that ever since the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government announced last September that they desired to enter into trade negotiations with the United States, the issue has been discussed very, very widely across this country. The issue has entailed a debate and discussions relating to the whole question of our negotiations or non-negotiations with the U.S.; the possibility of extending those negotiations right around the world to our other trading partners through the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs, otherwise known as GATT; the whole question of tariffs, their removal, and non-tariff barriers and their removal.

In light of all those discussions, it came as quite a surprise to me that on January 20 the Government announced it was removing our own tariff barrier on computer parts. One would have thought that perhaps that tariff would have been part of the trade discussions which went on in a general way with the U.S. or our other trading partners through the GATT discussions. So, as I said, it was a surprise, at least to me, when the Government announced these tariff barriers were being removed.

This was particularly significant in my own constituency because located there is what is really the original home of IBM Canada. I suppose one might have described that as the typical American branch plant in Canada but it has gone far beyond that. There is now a considerable number of IBM plants in Canada. Even in my own riding, while we have I suppose the biggest IBM production centre, there are a number of other plants. They employ in my own constituency somewhere around 3,000 workers. About 2,000 are engaged in the manufacture of computer parts and the other thousand are engaged in computer research. I would venture to say that if there is an area involving the leading edge of computer technology, it is probably located right in my constituency in those IBM plants. Obviously, anything which impacts on their profitability is going to be of significance to my particular constituency and, indeed, to Canada itself.

It is interesting to note that although at one time, I suppose, those IBM plants manufactured complete lines of computers, they now specialize in particular parts of computers. Those plants have from IBM International a world product mandate for particular computer parts. They compete with other IBM plants around the world for the right to manufacture certain parts for computers. They export those parts right around the world. As a result, I am told, the export trade on their part is growing at the rate of about 20 per cent each year. That is a substantial trade for Canada and obviously for the company itself.

IBM is most interested in the whole area of trade negotiations, and particularly in the concept of tariff reduction. It is interested in the discussions with the United States because it sees some opportunities there to expand and further its own export markets. It is interested in the across-the-board negotiations which the Government is in fact proposing. I am told by the executives at IBM that they were most concerned about the approach that the former Government took with sectoral trade negotiations, but that they welcome the idea of across-the-board negotiations.

Therefore, it is particularly significant when we find that the 3.9 per cent tariff on Canadian computer parts has now been abandoned. It was as a result of that that I expressed my concern as to whether we were getting some comparable trade concessions from other countries. IBM and other Canadian computer parts manufacturers have to export and compete in foreign markets and, obviously, are interested in having the tariffs reduced.

At the same time, I was interested and asked the Minister what the impact would be on our computer industry, particularly on IBM, of dropping that particular tariff barrier. When I asked that question on January 27 the Minister assured me that the tariff barrier that was being removed was also being removed in Japan and in the United States. I was pleased to hear that. I did not get from the Minister the actual impact that it could have on our industry and on the computer industry in my riding in particular.

I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will have some information tonight as to what that impact will be because the Government has computer models to indicate what impact that sort of tariff reduction will have on particular sectors. I would be most interested to hear that from the Parliamentary Secretary tonight.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in response to the comments made by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) concerning the elimination of our tariffs on computer parts, I would first like to give a little history to indicate how this came about.

During the Quebec Summit the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States directed that action be undertaken to resolve specific impediments to trade. One of the areas to be examined was the feasibility of mutual elimination of tariffs on high technology goods including computers, computer parts, and semiconductors. At the same time, the U.S. and Japan were examining ways to improve two-way trade in high technology products and Canada was asked to join with those two countries in removing tariffs on computer parts and semiconductors. In fact, the U.S. and Japan eliminated tariffs on semiconductors on March 1, 1985.

The Department of Finance undertook a review of this issue, including a survey of Canadian manufacturers of computers, computer parts, and semiconductors. Almost all respondents, including IBM which is in the Hon. Member's constituency, and which I have had the pleasure of touring a couple of times—is a great plant—expressed strong support for reciprocal elimination of tariffs on these products. The desire on the part of Canadian computer manufacturers to have duty-free entry of computer parts and semiconductors is, of course, based on the fact that they have to import many of these articles and feel that free entry will enhance their competitiveness.

Although our industry is in favour of eliminating all tariffs on computers, computer parts, and semiconductors, the U.S. informed us that it was not prepared to remove its tariff protection on computers. In view of this, it was decided that Canada should not proceed in this area at this time.

The elimination of the Canadian tariffs on computer parts and semiconductors was effective, as the Hon. Member mentioned, January 20, 1986, and paralleled action taken by the United States on or shortly before that date to remove its duties on computer parts. Japan removed its tariffs on computer parts on January 20. By the way, it also took similar action on computers themselves.

Trade data for 1984 show that imports of computer parts amounted to about $1.1 billion of which $1 billion was from the U.S. and $16 million from Japan. About $1.3 billion of semiconductors were imported in 1984. Of these only $25 million worth were subject to duty. In the same year, our exports of computer parts were valued at about $300 million, most of which went to the United States. Semiconductor exports were valued at $565 million, of which $497 million went to the United States and $4 million to Japan. These statistics show that while our imports of computer parts are far in excess of our exports of these products, the tariff elimination on semiconductors provides a more balanced package of concessions.

I might say that representatives of IBM and other members of the Canadian Business Equipment Manufacturers Association recently met with Finance officials and expressed their complete satisfaction with the action taken by the Government. They see the removal of these tariffs as benefiting their industry by reducing the cost of components they import for their manufacturing operations and by increasing the opportunity to penetrate the United States and Japanese markets.

In conclusion, we believe that this tariff elimination is an important step in demonstrating Canada's strong commitment to trade liberalization and represents a positive follow-up to the Quebec summit.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EFFECT OF REGULATION CHANGE ON CANADIAN ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, let me share with you a letter from a constituent who explains just how unfair and wrong is the Government. The letter reads as follows:

The logic of relating pension benefits, paid for and earned by a worker in a previous position, to unemployment insurance benefits to which the worker is otherwise entitled eludes me.

I am a retired member of the Canadian Forces drawing an annuity. I am, and have been since my retirement employed fulltime in a job in the private sector. I pay the same unemployment insurance premiums as other workers earning the same salary. In the event I left this employment—for whatever reason—the fact that I am drawing a pension from a previous career should have no bearing on my unemployment insurance benefits.

In effect, this proposal would force me and others in my position to pay a premium for a benefit to which I would not be entitled. It seems to me that this is hardly free enterprise thinking.

I might point out that serving members of the Canadian Forces pay full unemployment insurance premiums and this proposal could have a serious effect on many members who are forced to retire as early as age 50 and may well have no entitlement to unemployment insurance benefits, despite the fact that they have paid premiums for 20 or more years.

It is unlikely that much can be done to stop this proposal, as our current majority Government's cavalier treatment of the individual and the individual's rights seems cast in concrete.

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the Sergeant-at-Arms to ensure that the doors to the galleries are opened, please?

MINES AND MINING

LAY-OFFS AT EAR FALLS, ONT.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, on November 16, 1984, the Minister of State for Mines (Mr. Layton) assured the House that the people of Ear Falls, Ontario, would receive the same assistance and benefits made available to communities in Quebec which were caught in mine closures. It has been over 14 months now since the Minister made that promise. Approximately two-thirds of the workers at Stelco's Griffith iron ore mine have already been permanently laid off, with the rest to get the axe between now and April, and this in spite of a major tax remission granted to Stelco by the then PC provincial Government.

• (1405)

Moreover, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on November 8, 1984, announced that he would be providing tax relief for people facing plant closures, particularly in single-industry towns. Income tax time is approaching and the people of Ear Falls wonder whether the Minister of Finance will come through on his promise. The Minister has had the Ear Falls situation under study for months. The people of Ear Falls need and deserve an answer. They need it now.

CHILDREN

DEATH OF MONCTON BOY DESPITE COMMUNITY'S EFFORTS

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring to the attention of the House the life struggle of a young boy and the response of Canadians to this human tragedy.

One-year-old Patrick Drisdelle of Moncton died Sunday in Boston after a valiant community effort to raise funds to provide the necessary medical care for a successful liver transplant. Although a donor was found, two subsequent operations were necessary and the liver failed to function, leading to the tragic end of a long and hard-fought battle.

I am sure other Members of the House join with me in expressing our sympathy to Roland and Cheryl Drisdelle and their family. Patrick's fight for life leaves me and others torn between feelings of sadness and pride, sadness because, despite the best efforts of all, Patrick's struggle was lost. The feeling of pride emanates from the tremendous moral and financial support provided by the people of Greater Moncton and throughout Canada. This tragedy has once again brought the kindness and compassion of Canadians to the fore. I take particular pride in the response of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Not only did he call personally to express his condolences, he also facilitated immediate arrangements by providing staff assistance and transportation to the family.

Mr. Prime Minister, I appreciate your thoughtfulness, which I know expressed to the Drisdelle family the thoughts of a number of Canadians who shared their grief. Your understanding and sympathy exemplified the sorrow felt by many who were touched by Patrick's fight for life. Your actions, and those of the many people involved in Patrick's struggle, reaffirm the ability of the Canadian people to open their hearts in a united effort on behalf of a child in need.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT PERFORMANCE

Mr. André Harvey (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, Opposition Members continue to undermine the confidence of all Canadians, traipsing through our ridings and doing phoney consultations on a number of issues to which our Government has already begun to respond constructively.

They talk about fair taxation but conveniently forget to say that ours is the first Government to impose a minimum tax on the rich whose additional $300 million tax contribution will go a long way towards helping widows and funding our already successful employment programs.

They keep harping on employment yet shy away from admitting that our Government has set a record—25,000 new permanent jobs every month, against 1,200 created by the Liberals over their last five years.

Gas prices are the current topic. The numerous measures taken by our Government in the past twelve months are common knowledge, but our Opposition colleagues would rather not tell Canadians that the provincial tax in Quebec will go up by 16 cents while the federal tax will increase by only 6.9 cents.

I hope the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) will lead his bus load of protesters to the Quebec City National Assembly, not to Ottawa.

Opposition Members crisscross our ridings, questioning Statistics Canada figures on job creation in each of our constituencies.

Perhaps the Japanese are doing better than we are, Mr. Speaker, but in 1985 we did manage to create 8,000 jobs in our region, a record which the Liberals would rather not mention.

Worse still, in my judgment, is the following issue raised in yesterday's La Presse:

Can a Government be—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

YOUTH

CANCELLATION OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, for the youth of Canada and for the Katimavik program, the dream is dead and the adventure is over. Katimavik, which means meeting place, and is a federal award-winning program to employ youth between the ages of 17 and 21, has been summarily cancelled by the Tory Government. This program, which has already attracted over 20,000 youth, and which continues to receive over 500 applications per week, has been slammed closed by the Government.

It is incredible that with more than 600,000 youth unemployed on this very day, the Tories, in their confusion and lack of direction, have seen fit to cancel Katimavik, and they have not told us what will replace it. The Government has made some vague promises to do something, but this will not help the 500 youngsters per week who were applying to get into this program, nor will it help the 279 staff members from losing real and productive employment.

Katimavik is cancelled because the Tories cannot recognize its value for job training. Yet Katimavik won a United Nations Award this year for leadership in improving and protecting the environment through its Youth Reforestation Program. Our youth in this program also do such things as help the handicapped and work with the elderly. Now if the Tories cannot recognize that the environment is a major problem for Canada and an excellent place to create jobs, and that working with the elderly and the handicapped provides needed services and superb job training experience for youth, if this Conservative Government cannot recognize these excellent job training experiences—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT PERFORMANCE

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, the most recent report of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, or OECD, shows that the Canadian economy is more healthy than that of most Western countries. This powerful international economic organization published its latest report in mid-December 1985. The major points are as follows:

Canada is ranked first among the 25 member countries of the OECD in the area of job creation.

Based on our job creation figures, the OECD concludes that unemployment should continue on its downward trend in 1986.

Canada is ranked second out of 25 for individual purchasing power, its performance being exceeded only by that of the United States.

The competitivity of our country has greatly improved vis-à-vis the United States.

Contrary to many European countries, Canada is not affected by a discrepancy between manpower costs and productivity, which means that wage increases reflect productivity increases.

According to the OECD economists, the deficit has been under control since the budget was brought down last May and it will still be under control at the end of February.

The report also foresees sustained growth in the export sector following an increase in automobile, paper and natural gas sales. This last increase, say the experts, is due to the implementation of the Western Accord signed recently by the Conservatives.

Mr. Speaker, there are grounds for rejoicing in the figures published by the OECD. Canada is truly on the right track. This is something that the population should know.

To conclude, I wish to point out that we, in Beauce, are buoyed up by feelings of optimism, trust in the future and confidence.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE IN QUEBEC

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, Quebec men and women who were expecting to pay less for gas were sorely tried yesterday when they learned that the new Liberal Government had raised the tax on gas, thereby causing its price at the pump to go up again.

After hearing so many hypocritical speeches by Liberals here in Ottawa, Quebecers could rightfully expect that the new provincial Government would lower the prices instead of increasing them, especially at a time when gas is already ten cents a litre cheaper in Toronto than in Montreal.

Ontario and Quebec have at least one thing in common: both provinces have a Liberal Government. But there is also a difference between those two provinces: the New Democratic Party in Ontario has managed to force the Peterson Government to withdraw its gas tax increase proposal.

It is clear that Quebec men and women need the New Democratic party in Quebec and in Ottawa to stop any gas tax increase and to fight against the Liberals and Conservatives for a price reduction.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE IN QUEBEC

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in Montreal, a new group came into being, the Canadian National Committee for the reduction of gas prices.

I would like to congratulate its chairman, Mr. Joseph Gilles, a man from Laval who has my full support and co-operation.

This Conservative Government has taken every step needed for that process to materialize. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that lower gas prices will come to the pump very soon.

This morning people could read reports of a new price increase in Quebec, the Province in which the price of gasoline already is the highest in Canada, from 12.9 cents to 13.9 cents a litre, whereas the Federal tax is only 7.1 cents a litre.

The Committee must urgently turn to Quebec City rather than to Ottawa, because here the process has been more than initiated. It is too bad that Quebec should announce a rise when we, in this Conservative Government, have worked for months on a deregulation process that would result in lower prices working their way through to the gas pumps.

Mr. Speaker, I tell my two colleagues: the buses are ready! Get on board for Quebec City. I will join you.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS OF ONTARIO

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE ECONOMY

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He will know that although the Canadian dollar was up marginally this morning, the crisis is far from over. While he has adopted in this House the attitude of blaming everyone else for his problem, he must recognize that he, as the fiscal adviser to the Government, has the sole responsibility of dealing with this matter. Will he today, Wednesday, February 5, tell this House what he is going to do to solve the dollar crisis?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this Government takes full responsibility for the economic policies we brought in. We are proud of them and we think they are doing the job. I will tell the Hon. Member the sort of things we have been doing which are contributing to our economic strength. This is clearly evidenced by the fact that 1,000 jobs have been created every day since we came into office.

We initiated our program with the November economic statement. This set out in a very clear way the sum total of our economic policies. We brought in policies to increase investment, both foreign and domestic. We brought in policies to invigorate the energy sector and the small business community. We have followed a—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope questions and answers will be shorter than yesterday.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The answer does not relate to the question, so I will rephrase it, in French this time.

The Minister of Finance has the authority to solve the problem. What concrete step will he take to put an end to the Canadian dollar crisis?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, a former Minister of Finance, says, to use his words, that my response was not relevant to the question. He asked what we were going to do to introduce a degree of stability into the Canadian dollar as well as strengthen the Canadian economy. For him to say that shows that he fails to understand the effect of the policies we have brought in and their impact on job creation, investment, housing starts, and inflation. All of these things are very, very clear.

If he cares to read not what I say but what expert economists have to say, he will see that they say the economy is strong and on the right track. They say they do not understand why there is a weakness in the dollar in the face of the strength in our economy and the fact we are taking action on the deficit, something which is long overdue after 10 years of mismanagement—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —by the previous Liberal Government.

MINISTER'S POWERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the financial markets in Canada and abroad do not appear to be too impressed with the Minister's style of answer because the dollar is still under tremendous pressure. My question is very simple. Does he feel he is powerless to deal with this situation?

Mr. Gauthier: He sure does.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that way at all. And the childish remarks from the person right behind the Leader of the Opposition are totally unwarranted. The dollar today is up; 70.37 cents is what I heard just before I came down to Question Period. I think that is—I beg your pardon? No, it is 70.37 cents. I would ask the Leader of the Opposition to go and check the record again because yesterday, when he asked his first question, he said the dollar was down at a record pace unknown in our history. That was totally wrong. I said it was wrong at the time and asked him to check his records again, because his records are always wrong. The peak was in 1977 at 8 cents. When he was the Minister of Finance it was down 5.73 cents. That is far greater than it has gone down now. Get the facts!

• (1420)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, one thing which is not wrong is that the Minister was given a 70-cent dollar in September of 1984.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You should have stuck to the piano.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order!

Mr. Johnston: He was given a 77-cent dollar in September of 1984. The Minister has said that the dollar is undervalued and that it will rebound. If he truly believes that, he must also believe that there is no need to continue a policy of increasing interest rates. He should be prepared to protect homeowners who are renewing mortgages and consumers who are taking out—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the Hon. Member has a question.

Mr. Johnston: Why is he following a policy of jacking up interest rates?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, maybe I could quote two eminent observers of the political scene. The first is David Peterson who said, in his words, that we were presented with one hell of a mess on September 4, 1984.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The second is his former colleague, Marc Lalonde, the former Minister of Finance who, in referring to the deficit, said: "Ottawa will be completely hamstrung by the size of the deficit". That is what we were presented with on September 4, 1984.

In response to the specific question—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please!

Mr. Chrétien: The 69-cent man.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Peterson was probably referring to the mess in the policy directions of the Government in September of 1984.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: He was referring to your Government.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE FROM MINISTER

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Will the Minister assure Canadians and Members of the House that there will be no increase in interest rates tomorrow, given his belief that the dollar is undervalued and that it is rebounding?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is a ludicrous question coming from the Hon. Member who was a Minister at the time the previous Government was pushing interest rates up to 20 and 25 per cent per annum. There is no credibility whatsoever in that type of question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): As has been demonstrated, our policy is to get interest rates down. We are encountering pressures in the exchange markets which overlap into financial markets here in Canada, which has resulted in interest rates going up in Canada. However, as we indicated at this time last year, our policy is to get interest rates down by stabilizing markets. That is what we are doing right now, and we will be following through with a reduction of interest rates in due course.

INVESTMENT OUTFLOW

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance and it is also with regard to the continuing problems with the dollar. Yesterday the Minister told the House that his Government is doing all the right things. He reiterated that today when he said he is proud of his policies.

I did some checking on numbers produced by the Government yesterday. Will the Minister confirm that there was a net outflow of Canadian direct investment of $5,290 million, which is over $5 billion, last year, which was a 50 per cent increase from the year before? Will he confirm that there has been that kind of outflow of Canadian investment?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, I will not confirm that figure. I do not know what the Hon. Member is reading from, but there has been a good inflow of investment capital from foreign investors. Yes, there would be some outflow by foreign investors who are investing to broaden their market-place. We are not going to try to stop that. That is a normal function in the market-place.

I said in 1982 that the balance of these policies were necessary in this country to encourage both foreign and domestic investment in Canada, to get control of the federal deficit problem, to deal appropriately with the federal-provincial stresses and strains, as well as to generate a climate where interest rates would be lower. These were the policies I was advocating then and that is what we have followed through on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to tell the Minister that I am quoting figures produced by Statistics Canada.

BUDGET INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has been boasting about his policies. Considering that the outflow of Canadian direct investment actually increased following last year's Budget, at an alarming rate in the third quarter—the last quarter for which we have figures—will he admit that this outflow of Canadian investment is a major factor in driving down the value of the Canadian dollar and, therefore, announce that he will bring in a Budget that will encourage Canadians to invest in Canada to keep our dollar up and keep jobs here?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to have to remind the Hon. Member again, because he does not like the news, but we have been creating jobs in this country at a rate of 1,000 per day, some 450,000 jobs since we took office.

The specific response to his comments on investment is that investment activity in Canada was down for a period of time after the recession. It stabilized in late 1983 and early 1984. This past year, 1985, investment took off, growing at 11 per cent per annum, and the projections are that this will increase to over 12 per cent during the course of this year. That is what we mean when we say our policies are designed to encourage investment in Canada and to create jobs in Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: The rhetoric of the Minister of Finance will not hide the reality of the Government's own statistics which show that last year Canadians invested more abroad than the previous year, and that tendency is increasing to our disadvantage.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTRODUCE NEW POLICIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, this morning we learned that the Government of Canada spent $800 million in the last month buying up Canadian dollars, just to bribe speculators in the United States with our money. Instead of wasting that money in a spurious effort to prop up the dollar, will the Minister bring in new policies to encourage investment at home that will keep our dollar up? That is what he should be doing.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I just indicated to the Hon. Member what we are doing and what we have done to encourage investment in Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: It's not working.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I believe it was a year ago that the Hon. Member's Party said that they wanted to see 300,000 jobs created. We created more than that as a result of the combination of policies that we undertook. The rhetoric that the Hon. Member is throwing out on the floor of the House is false. The true facts are there for him to check.

Mr. Broadbent: I have them.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member for Oshawa should check them. The figure of 450,000 jobs is very, very real and, as I said yesterday, 450,000 Canadians are saying: "Thank you Michael Wilson; you're doing the right thing".

ENERGY

PRICE OF CRUDE OIL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Prime Minister that on several occasions his Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stated in this House that it would take up to three months before lower crude oil prices might benefit Canadian consumers at the pump. Well, this morning I came across some documents which make it crystal clear that crude stocks of Canadian refineries will be depleted within 20 days at most. I would therefore ask the Prime Minister whether he would commit himself to take decisive steps so that Canadian refiners will immediately reduce gas prices at the pump, to the benefit of consumers.

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member's question, I find that stance rather peculiar coming from the Liberals. Their current Leader, when he was Minister of Finance, suggested that when price increases come through, reserves should be used up and it would take at least a minimum of 45 days to do that, which was later transferred into 60 days. Now he is saying prices should drop in a shorter period of time, that is in 20 days. It just does not add up, and the Hon. Member knows that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT IS PREPARED TO TAKE MEASURES TO BENEFIT CONSUMERS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Back to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, because his Parliamentary Secretary did not understand that current stocks will not last more than 20 days. He should do his homework.

I want to ask the Prime Minister whether he is prepared to take immediate steps to make sure that lower crude prices will not lead to excessive profits for Petro-Canada or any other oil company, and that consumers will reap the benefit of cheaper crude oil, as they should.

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member talks about 20 days of reserves, it is interesting to note that the Province of Quebec has always asked for 60 days of reserves because of emergency rationing. They are on hand, and the Hon. Member has been told that time and time again.

It is interesting to hear the Member talk about gasoline prices. He was in Montreal the other day and did not say anything about the one penny a litre raise on gas which the Liberals imposed in that province, twice the amount of tax which the federal Government has—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: The Member does not say anything about reducing that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LEVEL OF INVESTMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. Does he deny that not only has there been a 50 per cent increase in the numbers of Canadian dollars leaving Canada for investment purposes, the difference between 1984 and 1985, but there has also been a $1.7 billion decrease in the numbers of foreign dollars being invested in Canada? How does the Minister explain that when he talks about his policies working to create a better investment climate in Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member must understand that in balance of payments statistics there are pluses and minuses—

Mr. Broadbent: Yes. They are both minuses.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member says they are both minuses. There are a lot of pluses, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Broadbent: And the dollar is going down.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Give him the books.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let me respond to the Hon. Member's question. It is not appropriate to take one statistic and not look at the global effort at raising investment activity in this country. Investment activity is the broadest measure of investment activity, which creates jobs. It shows that last year, after four years of very, very poor performance, suddenly there was an upturn of 11 per cent. As I indicated in my last answer to the Member's Leader, it will be up about 12 per cent this year—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. These answers are getting very long.

GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Minister's answer to my Leader very carefully. He said that his policies were designed to increase investment, both foreign and domestic. How then can he explain, with his policies in place, an increase by 50 per cent of investment dollars leaving Canada and a decrease by $1.7 billion of investment dollars coming into Canada if his policies are working?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how many times the Member wants me to answer the same question.

Some Hon. Members: Just once.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member is pulling specific statistics out of context without looking at the broad picture. The broad picture is one where investment activity was up 11 per cent last year after three or four years of either going down, or staying flat at very low levels.

It has been the policies of this Government to regenerate that investment activity to create the jobs, improving job prospects for Canadians and improving the competitive position. Last year in Canada we had an improvement in productivity and an improvement in the cost structure, something that we had not seen for the last 15 years.

Mr. Deans: $7 billion short.

Oral Questions

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Recently the Prime Minister received a telegram from the Canadian National Committee for the Reduction of Gas Prices headed by Mr. Joseph Gilles. They are demanding that the Government reduce taxes on gasoline immediately, and they are joined in their demands by the Canadian Automobile Association. Is the Government going to act on their request, or does the Prime Minister plan to ignore the concerns of so many Canadians?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for the question because this gives me an opportunity to say that we are concerned about gas prices as well. We expect them to be dropping once the supplies get through the pipelines.

It is completely irresponsible to ask a Government to reduce gas prices in the amounts they are asking for, not taking into consideration supplies that cost extra money, or profit and loss statements of companies, or anything else. Everybody would like to see lower prices in everything, but what is being asked for is completely unrealistic.

An Hon. Member: Bourassa.

REQUEST FOR REDUCED PRICES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Parliamentary Secretary does not agree with the committee's figure on reduction, why does he not set one of his own and at least start the ball rolling to reduce gasoline prices?

Since coming into power the Government has increased taxes on gasoline by 3.09 cents a litre. When, Mr. Speaker, is the Government going to reduce gasoline prices, or is the Government going to gouge the Canadian consumer constantly?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, this matter was fully debated in the House yesterday. The Hon. Member led for his Party and did not have enough guts to stand up and say whether or not the Liberals supported the motion brought in by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

I can tell the Hon. Member that when the Liberal Government was in power gas in Montreal went from 30 cents a litre to 58.1 cents a litre during the time of the National Energy Program, an increase of 94 per cent.

What is the Hon. Member talking about? Such hypocrisy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: One question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would very much like to be able to hear this question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PETRO-CANADA

CLOSURE OF SERVICE STATION AT GRAVENHURST, ONT.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker.

I have a question that I would like to pose to the Prime Minister. I would like him to answer it personally on behalf of a couple of ordinary Canadians.

In view of the fact that Canadians are probably paying 6 cents to 10 cents a litre too much, about $4 a tankful, why did the Prime Minister allow Petro-Canada to close the gas station of Cora and George McAra of Gravenhurst, Ontario, when that couple wanted to lower the price by two-tenths of a cent a litre?

Ms. Copps: Totally out of order.

Some Hon. Members: Shhh!

Mr. McDermid: This question was fully answered and it is to be found on page 10441 of Hansard. It deals with the particular problem that the Member brings to the attention of the Government. The question was answered yesterday. The Member is playing politics with these people's lives.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, these people are paying with their life savings.

ANTICIPATED REDUCTION IN PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. I dare him to show some leadership and some guts and answer the question himself.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: I have to put the question every ordinary Canadian is asking. When, in view of world prices dropping dramatically as they did again yesterday, is the Canadian motorist going to see it reflected at the pump?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will answer that question very quickly so the Hon. Member can hear the answer before he shoots out of the House like a rabbit again.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I tell you nothing so became the Hon. Member as the elegant way in which he beat a retreat yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Young: Where were you on Friday?

• (1440)

Mr. Mulroney: I can tell the Hon. Member that the Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member will be aware of the telex which was sent by the Minister to the various companies, conveying the strong views of the Government with regard to the passing on of the reductions that we expect will take place. That will begin countering in substantial measure the 80 per cent increase in petroleum prices which occurred when the NDP got together with its Liberal sweethearts and drove prices up 80 per cent during the NEP.

THE CONSTITUTION

ENTRENCHMENT OF PROPERTY RIGHTS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. As the Minister will be meeting with the provincial Attorneys General in Vancouver next week, can he assure the House that high on his agenda will be the entrenchment of property rights in the Constitution? Will the Minister agree to urge his provincial colleagues to support such an amendment, a move which is sought by Canadians in all parts of the country?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, this is the toughest question we have had all session.

Mr. Deans: Just answer it quickly.

Mr. Crosbie: At the urging of the Hon. Member and other members of our Party, I have caused to be put on the agenda for our meeting next week in Vancouver the question of the protection of property rights, which our Party supported when the constitutional discussions were under way, and which the Official Opposition and the unofficial opposition both opposed, although the Official Opposition backslid when it was too late for anything to be done to include the protection of property rights in the Constitution. We will be looking at this question, particularly keeping in mind the necessity for the protection of the rights of women and taking into consideration the fears which women expressed with reference to that entrenchment.

BOARD OF INTERNAL ECONOMY

REPORTED TAMPERING WITH RECORDING SYSTEM IN LIBERAL CAUCUS ROOM

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody in his capacity as the designated Member to reply on behalf of the Board of Internal Economy. In light of further media reports that the electronic system in the Liberal caucus room had been tampared with, will the Hon. Member undertake, on behalf of the Board of Internal Economy, to table immediately in the House the report of the incident which was originally presented to the Sergeant-at-Arms? If not, will he, on behalf of the board, undertake to have an immediate inquiry into the situation established?

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Board of Internal Economy, if the Hon. Member has a presentation he would like to make to us as a Board, we will take his representation. We will hear it before the Board of Internal Economy and deal with it immediately.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a new procedure, putting questions to the Board of Internal Economy. It is certainly allowed; I have no problem with that.

Mr. Boudria: I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: No. Because it is an internal matter with regard to House administration, I think I will not grant a supplementary—

Ms. Copps: Oh, come on!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not going to grant a supplementary.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is a brand new procedure. I think that is the way we should start. That is the way I am going to start. If Hon. Members want to discuss that with me later, that is fine. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE IN DETROIT AND WINDSOR

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, if I can get his attention.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Stand up.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benjamin: Now what?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question, please?

Mr. Keeper: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. He will know that yesterday gas was selling in Detroit at 32 cents per litre—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Keeper: —while in Windsor it was selling at 51 cents per litre. It is not hard to understand why Canadians were going to the gas pumps in Detroit. What is difficult to understand, and what requires explanation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Given the way this has started, perhaps the Member could just come to his question, please.

Mr. Keeper: Why has the price of gas fallen dramatically in Detroit, by 10 cents since last November, while it stays stable and high in Windsor? When will the Prime Minister give an explanation of that?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member, without being able to verify his figures, that certainly there is a difference in prices between the United States and Canada for very many reasons. One of them, of course, is the taxation, both the federal and provincial taxation. In Quebec, for example, the provincial tax was raised by the Liberals a penny per litre yesterday, and I guess this morning it showed up at the pump. It makes a big difference in those gas prices.

Mr. Deans: How does that affect Windsor?

Mr. McDermid: However, I can tell the Hon. Member that any of the Americans with whom I have talked would gladly have more pennies on the litres of gasoline down there if they had the social safety net which we have here in Canada. If they had medicare, if they had the Guaranteed Income Supplement and the other social security programs—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I don't believe it; that is coming from a Conservative.

Mr. Nystrom: McDermid for Prime Minister.

Mr. Rodriguez: Smile, McDermid. How can you say that with a straight face?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Oral Questions

REQUEST THAT PETRO-CANADA BE INSTRUCTED TO REDUCE PRICES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): The Minister knows that the taxes on gas have gone since they have come to office.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, just how long will Canadian consumers continue to lose $8 million a day? And when will the Government be prepared to use Petro-Canada as a means to reduce prices and provide fair prices to Canadian consumers?

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is very true that taxes on gas in Canada have gone up. They have gone up because of the mammoth debt with which the Government was left from the previous administration that was supported by that little red rump over there called the New Democratic Party. We are taking our responsibilities seriously. Let me answer the question this way: You are going to see drops in prices very soon, very soon.

JUSTICE

ALLEGED IMPOSSIBILITY OF APPOINTING FRANCOPHONE JUDGE TO ONTARIO COURT OF APPEAL

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question today is directed to the Minister of Justice.

Yesterday, the Minister indicated to the House that he had appointed Mr. Justice Krever, a unilingual Anglophone, to a position traditionally held by a Francophone in the Ontario Appeal Court. He went on to say that it was essential to have a first-class person. I do not doubt that! But does the Minister feel he was unable to find a well-qualified Francophone for this position?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, just in case the hon. gentleman is genuinely worried, there are 18 judges at the appeal level in Ontario, three of whom are bilingual, or 17 per cent. There are an additional four bilingual judges who can be used on appeals from the High Court. Of these seven, four are Francophones. In 1985 there were two appeals among 1,400 applications which required a French panel. To date 43 per cent of all judges appointed across Canada by the Mulroney Government they have been Francophone or had French capabilities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NEED TO APPOINT BILINGUAL FRANCOPHONE JUDGE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Prime Minister, people say that each and every appointment by your Government is verified by you twice before being final.

Do you support the appointment of an Anglophone unilingual judge to the Ontario Appeal Court, indicating that it is impossible to find a bilingual Francophone judge in Ontario today? Was such a judge impossible to find? Do you agree with the Minister's suggestion that a bilingual Francophone could not be found for this traditionally bilingual position, Mr. Speaker?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, together with the Hon. Minister of Justice, I personally contacted a number of distinguished Ontario Francophones and offered them this position. For health reasons or other considerations, they had to decline.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

FUTURE OF CANADAIR

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Before the Government gets involved in a fire sale in the case of Canadair just as it did in the case of de Havilland, could the Minister clarify the confusion concerning the future of that company? Have bids been made for the purchase of Canadair, yes or no? What will be Canadair's profits for financial year 1988? Finally, will the Government consider as a valid option keeping Canadair as a public concern—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is several questions in one. I think the Minister should at least be allowed to answer the first part.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, this is perhaps the eighth time I have been asked if there are any offers with respect to Canadair. As I informed the House earlier, we to date do not have any firm offers for Canadair. At the present time I would say that there are two groups that are at least considering a possible deal involving Canadair. I think the House will be pleased to learn that both are Canadian groups.

CANADAIR—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow, my leader and I will visit Canadair and meet its president, Mr. Desmarais. Will the Minister recommend to Mr. Desmarais to provide us with such essential information as Canadair's profits, or does he feel that we will witness a fire sale in the case of Canadair just as we did in the case of de Havilland?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre visits Canadair tomorrow, he would do a great service if he told those he meets that when we took over government Canadair had a hangar full of finished, unsold planes. It was operating at a loss after a huge deficit was run up by the former Government. I am pleased to tell the House that today Canadair has a backlog for aircraft production. Employment is on the upswing. We have just announced programs that will result in 400 more jobs. In short, I hope the Hon. Member will tell those there that the unfounded rumours that opposition Members have been spreading are totally wrong, and that their jobs are more secure today than they were when we took power.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—
FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Are we making any progress on the federal-provincial talks so that when we go to the trade negotiations with the United States all the provinces will stand four-square behind the federal lead?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the House will know that after the federal-provincial conference in Halifax a continuing committee of officials to deal with trade negotiations was established at the instigation of this Government. That committee was extended to include officials from the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. The House will be very pleased to know that that committee met for some six hours in Ottawa yesterday in a very harmonious and constructive atmosphere. The committee has tentatively agreed to meet again on March 4 to carry on the co-operative progress in this preparatory phase of the trade negotiations.

AGRICULTURE

PLIGHT OF POTATO FARMERS IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. I am sure the Minister is well aware of the serious financial crisis facing the potato farmers of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. I know he has met with a number of organizations which have pointed that out quite clearly to the Minister. What assistance is the Minister prepared to offer the potato farmers of Prince Edward Island and Atlantic Canada to help them through this most serious situation?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the Hon. Member's interest in the plight of the Atlantic Canadian potato farmers. As he knows, a number of representations have been made to me by provincial Premiers and by my provincial counterparts in Atlantic Canada. At the moment, we are looking at three options. I appreciate the difficulties the farmers are experiencing, but to this point in time we have not made any final decisions.

INSPECTION FEES

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, last year for the first time the Government imposed inspection fees of three cents a hundredweight on potatoes. Will the MInister confirm that negotiations are once again under way to increase those inspection fees over the next four years to 20 cents a hundredweight?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member will know that we sat around a table to discuss the matter of imposing inspection fees. Indeed, we will continue to negotiate that issue with representatives. We did not act unilaterally last year, nor is it our intention in 1986 unilaterally to impose increases on inspection fees for the potato farmers or any other group as far as that is concerned.

EDUCATION

FUNDING OF POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I wonder if the Minister of Finance agrees with Terence Donahoe, Nova Scotia's Minister of Human Resources, who reacted to the federal Government's intention to reduce the level of funding for post-secondary education and medicare by saying the following:

—if Ottawa goes ahead with the reduction in grants, "it simply will emasculate the post-secondary education system.

"It is going to be chaos and chaotic . . . the system is simply going to fall apart.

Does the Minister of Finance agree with his Conservative colleague?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the remarks that were just made. I will say to the Hon. Member that when the Budget comes forward in due course, he will see very clearly by the degree of spending we are putting into post-secondary education, research and development, and health care, that these represent clear priorities of the Government. They will continue to be clear priorities. That is the policy of the Government.

LEVEL OF FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister does not agree with his Conservative colleagues in Nova Scotia. Does he agree with the Newfoundland Conservatives who, in a Green Paper, indicated that they are looking at privatization of the medicare system, in part or in whole, as a result of the Minister's cut-backs in the level of funding for established programs financing?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the Hon. Member has been listening carefully to the responses to questions. There are no cut-backs in funding. There is a reduction in the rate of growth, but as the Prime Minister indicated in Halifax the Government will be spending $25 billion more by moving the amount of spending on post-secondary education and health care from $65 billion over the last five years to over $90 billion in the next five years. That surely is not a cut-back in spending.

THE ECONOMY

EFFECT OF LOWER OIL PRICES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday in committee the Economic Council of Canada, and today in The Globe and Mail the data resources indicated that there would be a great benefit to Canada in reduction of inflation, increase of employment, increase of Gross National Product, and reduction of the deficit as a result of reducing oil prices. I was wondering if the Minister will be reflecting those changes in his Budget presentation which will occur later this month.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is looking for a sneak preview and I will try to give him one. The effect of the drop in international oil prices is not an easy one to measure. Yes, as the drop in prices flows through to the consumer there will be benefits felt by the consumer. There will be offsets to that as the Government's revenues go down as a result of lower corporate taxes and lower PGRTs. However, the net effect is probably fairly balanced when taking into account the over-all nature of those changes.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADAIR—PARAMETERS FOR SALE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Yesterday when I asked the Minister to issue new instructions for the sale of Canadair, instructions which would ensure that Canadair remains Canadian, he did not make any commitment on that point but he did say the following:

> However, the conditions under which we feel it should be privatized have been made abundantly clear. There are very strict parameters which we are interested in, when entertaining possible bids for Canadair.

What are those conditions and parameters which are very clear? Will the Minister make them public by tabling them in the House?

• (1500)

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had an opportunity to come to the committee which reviewed the sale of de Havilland to Boeing, he would have heard, of course, the type of parameters to which I referred yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: A very short supplementary question.

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister telling us that the same parameters and conditions which pertained to de Havilland pertain to Canadair? If that is the case, then de Havilland was sold for a song. It was sold outright to foreigners. Will the Minister tell the House whether or not the same conditions and parameters are to be applied to Canadair as applied to de Havilland?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, first, de Havilland was not sold for a song.

Mr. Allmand: Damn right it was!

Ms. Copps: Half a song!

Mr. Deans: It was only a chorus; it wasn't even a song.

Mr. Stevens: de Havilland was sold to a very reputable aircraft company—perhaps the finest in the world—at a fair price. I think Hon. Members will find that it will work to the advantage of the employees of de Havilland, the Government, and the people of Canada. I wish members of the Opposition would quit being such downers as far as the aircraft industry in this country is concerned.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Tuesday, February 4, 1986, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

Mr. Speaker: I am in receipt of one or two notices with respect to questions of privilege and points of order. I will take them in the order in which I received them. I have notice of a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is with respect to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who I think has inadvertently misled the House. If he were to check the record he would find that the NDP voted with the Conservatives against the National Energy Program. The Prime Minister should check that out before making these misleading allegations.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is revisionist thinking!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has made his point, which is not a question of privilege.

The next notice I have received is with respect to a point of order from the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

POINT OF ORDER

DISALLOWANCE OF SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I am raising a point of order with respect to your ruling on whether or not the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) should have been allowed a supplementary question. I recognize that this was the first occasion on which a question had been put to the designated spokesperson for the Commissioners of Internal Economy. However, may I respectfully suggest, Sir, that one should not have anticipated that somehow or other the supplementary question might have been to the same person and, therefore, not permissible. It could well have been the case—and I tell Your Honour it would have been the case—that the supplementary question would have been directed to a Minister on an aspect of the matter related to the original question.

May I suggest, Sir, that on occasions such as this you might wish to consider at least allowing the Hon. Member to say to whom he wishes to ask his supplementary question of, thereby assisting you in making rulings in what are admittedly very tough and stressful situations.

Point of Order—Mr. Gray (Windsor West)

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his support. I would be happy to consider the matter. As I indicated at the time, it was a difficult one. I would appreciate it if the House Leaders, who have some involvement in this matter, would give me some advice on the matter, through the usual channels.

I may say that the point the Hon. Member is making gives me some cause for concern. In other words, if questions can go both to the Board of Internal Economy and to a Minister on the same matter, then matters could be put to the Board of Internal Economy which could at the same time be regarded as matters under ministerial accountability. It is difficult to find that a matter can be in both places.

However, I suggest I will think about the matter again. It was the first time the matter arose. I would appreciate any further advice I can get on the matter. Can we leave it at that?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I just want to add this one comment, Sir. May I say, most respectfully, it would have been easier to make a decision in this type of difficult situation which you have just described had it been possible for you to actually hear the Hon. Member's question. You would have then been able to see more easily whether or not there was an over-lapping, which would have made it obvious that the question should not have been permitted.

Mr. Speaker: I will now hear the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) and the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath).

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to rise on much the same point. However, I rise for a somewhat different reason than that which caused my colleague, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), to rise.

I must confess that when I had imagined that there would be questions to the representative spokesperson of the Board of Internal Economy, I had imagined that those questions would be absolutely non-partisan in nature. It would be difficult for me to imagine how, then, a supplementary question could be put to a Minister of the Crown. Therefore, I would like to have some further discussion on the point. I also urge some consideration on this point: If questions to be put to the representative of the Board of Internal Economy are for information purposes, as I had imagined they would be, then it would be reasonable to think that on most occasions a single question might be sufficient. However, that ought not rule out the possibility that there could be a supplementary question. I will take the opportunity which Your Honour has offered to make my own views known to you privately.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) rising on the same point of order?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, my point has been covered by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Speaker: The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

Point of Order—Mr. Gauthier

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I might add a word to what has been said by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). When we are discussing these matters in terms of the new procedure, we are grateful to the committee chaired by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) for recommending it. I think it is working well. In effect, it has now democratized the Board of Internal Economy so that all Parties are now represented on the Board.

It might be helpful too, when we consider these matters, to consider the practice of giving notice if information is required. Of course, it would be difficult for any Member responding on behalf of the Board of Internal Economy to do anything more than simply take the matter as notice, unless the matter had already been adjudicated upon or resolved.

I think we should talk about the matter. I think it has nothing to do with asking supplementary questions. It has to do with the process of asking representatives of the Board of Internal Economy for information in which all Members of the House are vitally interested and concerned. I look forward to that discussion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I thank all Hon. Members. I repeat my suggestion that I would like some guidance on the matter. I am sure the House Leaders will provide me with that.

POINT OF ORDER

USE OF ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY TERM

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During Question Period today the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) referred to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) as having no guts. My House Leader drew my attention to Citation 320 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition where that term is listed as unparliamentary. I ask that the remark be withdrawn from the transcript of today's proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will know that the term was used in this Question Period by more than one Hon. Member. Certainly, it is language which in normal debate would not be allowed. The Question Period always has its different tensions. I would be happy to think about the matter and look into it. Perhaps the wisest course of action would be to remind all Hon. Members of our obligations with regard to language in Question Period. The Hon. Member has asked me to look into the matter and I will do that.

PETITIONS

EFFECT OF FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS ON AGRICULTURAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to present signed by 1,454 electors from the riding of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. The 1,454 signatures added to the signatures which have already been tabled make a grand total of 3,397 electors from my riding who ask for a commitment from the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) to ensure that agricultural programs will not be sacrificed in free trade negotiations with the United States of America.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I present a petition from constituents in my riding of Scarborough Centre. They strongly recommend that the House of Commons consider the reinstatement of capital punishment for murders of law enforcement officers, for known paedophile sex murderers and persons convicted for the second or third time of armed robbery where the death of an innocent person occurs.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES AND REPEAL OF TAX

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have three petitions from citizens of Regina and Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. Even though the legislation has passed in the House of Commons the petitioners still hope that Honourable Members of the other place will amend the legislation to restore full indexation of Family Allowances and rescind unfair tax increases, sending the Bill back to this place.

Mr. Speaker: Is that in fact a petition to the Senate?

Mr. Benjamin: No, it is a petition to this House.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES AND REPEAL OF TAX

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the voters of Spadina also do not accept the decision which was made. They find the deindexation of family allowances very unfair and they petition this Honourable House to reinstate full indexation of universal Family Allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

ASSESSMENT OF MAINTENANCE FACILITIES—CN SHOPS

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, once again I have the honour to present a number of petitions to this House, signed by residents of the federal constituencies of Moncton and other areas in southeastern New Brunswick. The petitioners are expressing their concern with regard to the assessment being conducted on the maintenance capacity of the CN shops throughout Canada. They are concerned that any negative ramifications of that assessment would have a great effect upon the economy of the area, the unemployment rate and, certainly, upon the lifestyle those people have grown to enjoy over the years.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition signed by residents from southeastern New Brunswick, more especially from Moncton, Dieppe, Richibouctou and Riverview. This shows, Mr. Speaker, that people are quite concerned about conditions at the CN shops and that increasingly they would like to obtain the assurance from the Government that those jobs will be protected.

Several months ago, with respect to Question No. 296 on the Order Paper, the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) indicated he would look into the answer to that question personally. I was wondering whether the Solicitor General could indicate to the House today as to the progress of that question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It would be out of order for the Hon. Minister to reply at this time. It would be in order for the Parliamentary Secretary to reply.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I did on a previous occasion ask a question o the Solicitor General and Your Honour permitted the question to be answered by the Solicitor General.

Mr. Beatty: I sit here day after day, Mr. Speaker, and we don't get any questions from him.

Mr. Speaker: I would be glad to review it, but I have a feeling that if I did that—which I do not doubt because the Hon. Member said I did—then I made a mistake. Therefore, at this point I am going to recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to reply to the question.

Mr. Nunziata: I take it then, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the Hon. Member on a point of order after, perhaps.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have looked at the question referred to and there are some 36 to 40 parts to it which involve several different departments. That is causing difficulty in responding sooner.

Mr. Nunziata: Well, Mr. Speaker, some time ago the Solicitor General gave his undertaking that he would personally involve himself in the answering of that particular question. You did permit him to answer and through his answer he gave his undertaking. I would like to put my question to the Solicitor General.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-65, an Act to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act and other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a Legislative Committee.

Mr. Speaker: There are eleven report stage amendment motions listed on today's Order Paper concerning Bill C-65, an Act to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act and other Acts in consequence thereof.

The Chair has examined the motions and found them procedurally acceptable, except one, namely Motion No. 5 in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Motions Nos. 1 and 2 will be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 3, 4, 6 and 7 will be grouped for debate and voted on separately.

[English]

Motion No. 5 seeks to introduce a new concept into the Bill, that of collective bargaining, which is clearly beyond the scope of the Bill. I refer the Hon. Member to the Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(1).

In addition, the motion tries to bring in provisions of the Public Service Staff Relations Act, which specifically excludes members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and by so doing indirectly tries to broaden the scope of that Act. As the Hon. Member knows, Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(8)(a) clearly states that this cannot be done. Therefore, I must rule the motion out of order.

Motions Nos. 8, 9, 10 and 11 will be debated and voted on separately.

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put forward very briefly my concerns with respect to Motions Nos. 9 and 11 with respect to the preliminary ruling made by the Chair.

Having reviewed the report stage, I just want to question, if I may, the procedural acceptability of these motions. Motion No. 9 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) appears to broaden the nature of complaints to include those about "the activities of the Force in general".

Since the clause in question deals with the actions of specific individuals and not of the Force, it is hard to see how it is relevant to the clause. I would find it difficult to think of a way of complaining about an activity of an inanimate organization without having a complaint against a member of that organization.

Our past practice in this regard, as outlined in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(1) is as follows: "An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the Bill or beyond its scope". Therefore, I would argue that the motion is irrelevant to the Bill and ought not to be put to the House.

Motion No. 11 seeks to ensure that the Public Complaints Commission has the final decision in the case of appeals from the public with respect to members of the RCM Police. You will be aware, Mr. Speaker, that the House agreed in principle to granting this power to the Commissioner of the RCM Police when it agreed to the Bill at second reading.

In light of this, Mr. Speaker, I think you might find that the motion is contrary to this principle and ought not to be put to the House if we are to be consistent with the practice which is amply outlined in Citation 773(2) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, which reads as follows:

An amendment must not be inconsistent with, or contradictory to, the Bill as so far agreed to—

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to respond to the suggestion which was made with respect to Motions Nos. 9 and 11, and comment briefly with respect to Your Honour's preliminary ruling on Motion No. 5.

First, with respect to the comments of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on Motion No. 9, the clause in question seeks to introduce a new Section 45.35 of the RCMP Act which is headed "Public Complaints". That section sets out a mechanism for the receipt of complaints by members of the public who certainly could complain either with respect to the specific conduct of an individual member of the RCMP or, indeed, might very well wish to complain in a more general sense about particular operational policies, for example, of the RCMP.

I would note that a predecessor Bill, Bill C-50, given first reading in April of 1978, with a similar provision, made reference to the activities of the Force in general. Therefore, I suggest to my colleague, the President of the Privy Council, that this is well within the scope of the particular clause proposed for amendment.

With respect to Motion No. 11, once again this seeks to extend certain provisions of this Bill. As it is now worded, the Bill would establish a mechanism whereby there would be a Public Complaints Commission which could hold a hearing and make recommendations to the Commission.

This amendment was discussed at great length in committee and is well within the scope of the clause it seeks to amend because it would merely include the additional step, as it were, of allowing a final appeal and decision by the Public Complaints Commission. I suggest that Your Honour's ruling is certainly well within the scope of this particular motion.

Finally on that point, when the House adopted the Bill at second reading it adopted the broad principles of the legislation. It would be inaccurate to suggest that the House adopted in principle a whole series of individual clauses. Surely the job of the committee is to examine the representations made by witnesses and make improvements in the legislation. If one if unsuccessful, then at report stage, one should make an effort to improve the Bill again on a serious question such as this. That, after all, is the purpose of report stage.

With respect to Your Honour's preliminary ruling on Motion No. 5, I respectfully suggest that Your Honour reconsider this particular matter. It suggested that the motion seeks to introduce a new concept into the Bill, that of collective bargaining. However, the Bill itself very clearly deals with the whole question of the nature of the relationship between the 14,000 members of the RCMP and their employer. This proposed motion would provide an alternative to the mechanism established in the Bill. It is not fundamentally different in principle; rather, it is once again an attempt to incorporate in the Bill, through changes to two other pieces of legislation, the representations made by, in particular, the Association of 17 Divisions seeking the right to collective bargaining, which is currently denied to members of the Force. Therefore I hope that on reflection perhaps Your Honour might see fit to allow Motion No. 5 to be in order and debated as well.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the comments of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). I would like as well to concur in your preliminary ruling, specifically with respect to Motion No. 9. The Government House Leader indicated he felt that that particular motion, which has the effect of changing the definition of a complaint, was beyond the scope of this legislation. I have some difficulty with his submission because it would mean that it would be beyond the scope of any legislative committee to change the definition of a particular word in any particular piece of legislation. The purpose of this motion is simply to expand the definition of complaints in order to allow a member of the public to complain generally about the conduct of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The Marin Commission recommended a definition that would allow for a general complaint. Therefore, I hope that you will confirm your preliminary ruling with respect to Motions Nos. 8, 9, 10 and 11, and in particular Motion No. 9.

Mr. Speaker: I will of course reserve on Motions Nos. 9 and 11. I have to say to the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) that whatever his arguments are with regard to Motion No. 5, his argument that the tactic used is to amend another Act in consequence thereof I think is admitting that he knows he is going beyond what Beauchesne allows. I therefore confirm my ruling that Motion No. 5 is ruled out of order and I will come back to the House as quickly as I can on Motions Nos. 8 and 11. The rest of the ruling therefore stands.

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-65, be amended in Clause 7 by striking out line 30 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"with pay and benefits."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of this important motion which would amend the provisions of the RCMP Act to ensure that in circumstances in which a member is suspended from duty, that suspension will be with pay and benefits. Clearly the circumstances in which members of the RCMP are suspended are rare. However, in those circumstances it would seem to me that we should recognize the implications of suspension without pay, particularly when that suspension may last for several months or, in some cases, for more than a year. This can cause grave hardship for the individual involved. At the end of the process he could be found to be completely innocent of any wrongdoing. He may very well have had to give up his home and perhaps be unable to afford legal counsel because he has no income.

The committee which studied this legislation with care heard strong representations from both the Association of 17 Divisions and the divisional representatives on this important point.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize that the Association and the RCMP Division Staff Relations Representatives were unanimous in their contention that suspensions without pay are not required to ensure the sound administration of the RCMP. They were unanimous. Mr. Speaker, these people are elected by RCMP members throughout Canada to defend their interests.

As well, Mr. Speaker, I might point out that the Association of 17 Divisions, based in Quebec but with members in all regions of Canada, is made up of some 2,800 members of the RCMP, and this organization also supports the motion.

Mr. Speaker, there are at least five reasons to support this motion. First of all, just like any other Canadian citizen, a member of the RCMP is presumed to be innocent until found guilty. If he is presumed to be innocent, it is unfair that he be suspended without pay and benefits.

[English]

I would note that suspension with pay during an investigation into an alleged offence is an acceptable administrative process and was recommended by the Marin Commission. You will recall that Commission reported to the Government in 1976 after having carefully studied all aspects of this question. At page 154 of the Report is found the following:

● (1530)

During a criminal investigation or a service investigation of a serious nature and any subsequent proceedings, a member should be either suspended with pay or assigned to other duties.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I would note that suspension without pay, in effect, presupposes guilt and constitutes immediate punishment. Suspension without pay is perceived as exerting extreme pressure, in many cases, on the member to resign, thus denying the member a proper hearing.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, to those who argue that it is not fair to keep a member on the force if he or she is accused of having committed serious wrong-doing, I would note that a member who is alleged to have committed a very serious wrong-doing or a criminal offence, and whose services can no longer be accepted within the force, can be processed for discharge on an urgent basis. Clearly such discharges would be rare indeed, Mr. Speaker. I would hope that the Government will recognize the injustice of the proposal in the Bill and will accept the unanimous representation of the divisional representatives on this question as well as the strong views expressed by the Association of 17 Divisions.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I hope that after consideration of this motion the Government will accept it so that justice will be done to all members of the RCMP.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I want to support this amendment very strongly. I moved a similar amendment to the Bill when it was in committee. I have a very strong interest in this issue because, as Minister, I appointed the Marin Commission in the 1970s. The recommendation that members of the force should not be suspended without pay and benefits was one of the recommendations of the Marin Commission.

As my hon. colleague pointed out, this sort of treatment of members of the force is really in contradiction to our Canadian Charter of Rights whereby an individual is considered to be innocent until proven guilty. It is contrary to many other basic principles of justice. I will not prolong the debate, but I feel this is an amendment that should be accepted by the Government if it wants to respect the principles of the constitution and the principles that are inherent in our dealings with employees and our labour relations policy generally. I urge the Minister to give serious consideration to this amendment and to accept it.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I clearly would not dismiss lightly any recommendation made by Judge René Marin in his report. I happen to be a good friend of Judge Marin. I am a supporter of his and I worked with him at the Canada Post Corporation. He is the chairman of that corporation and a very highly regarded individual who produced an excellent report.

I think it is appropriate for us to look at the proposal that is being made by my colleague, the Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), which is flawed in at least two regards. One is a policy matter, and the other is the structure of the amendment that he is proposing.

Section 13.1 of the Act presently reads:

Every member who has contravened, is found contravening, or is suspected of contravening the code of conduct or an Act of Parliament or of the legislature of any province, may be suspended from duty by the Commissioner.

What would be the effect of the amendment proposed by my hon. friend across the way? My hon. friend would remove the words "by the Commissioner" and substitute for that the following: "with pay and benefits".

The first concern that Members of the House should have is a technical concern. I do not understand why the Hon. Member for Burnaby would propose to strip away from the Commissioner the right to make any suspension. That is not at all clear to me from the Hon. Member's amendment. By removing the individual who has the authority to make the suspension and specifying no one, how is the interest of the member served? Is he suggesting that no one within the force has the authority to suspend a member with or without pay, or is he suggesting that the authority to suspend a member with or without pay should be broadened and should be conferred on a broader category of individuals than just the Commissioner?

I suggest to the Hon. Member that if he is concerned about the welfare, the well-being, and the feelings of members of the force, surely the rank and file members of the force would be interested in hearing from him why he would take away an authority which is vested in one individual, the head of the organization, and leave us in a position where, presumably, the effect would be to simply broaden the authority to suspend a member. What is the reason for this sort of amendment?

There is also a policy consideration here, Mr. Speaker. I listened with interest to my colleagues arguing in favour of the principle that when members of the force are suspended they should be suspended with pay as opposed to without pay. Indeed, the committee looked at this when the matter was before it and the committee decided to reject the amendment which has been proposed.

There are a number of reasons for that. The first is that in the majority of cases where an individual is suspended, he is suspended with pay. It is perhaps appropriate to do that. However, there are some instances where an offence which has been alleged is so serious that it would be appropriate to suspend a member without pay. For example, if a member of the force is charged with bank robbery and there is photographic evidence, then there is the potential that over a protracted period of time the officer could find himself in court charged with a serious criminal offence with sufficient evidence to merit suspending him from his duties. Yet, he would continue to be paid during that period if the Hon. Member's amendment were to pass.

This raises questions about the appropriateness of this sort of action and whether or not it brings the administration of justice into disrepute. Our concern is that nothing should be done which would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

If the Hon. Member for Burnaby and the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) want to make an argument in terms of whether or not there is a presupposition that an individual is guilty, they could logically extend that argument to being one against suspension either with or without pay. They would make the argument that surely the court will decide whether the individual who is charged under the Criminal Code is guilty or not guilty and it is not up to the RCMP to suspend the individual at all. However, they are not arguing that. They are saying that it is appropriate, even before a conviction has been secured, for the force to suspend an individual in some cases. The only issues in dispute here are who will do the suspension and whether the suspension should be with or without pay.

There are a couple of other points I would like to make as well, Mr. Speaker. I think the Hon. Member would be concerned about the possibility of creating a special class for the RCMP with privileges and rights which extend beyond those which are granted by Parliament to other public employees. When other public employees in the public service are suspended, the authority is there to suspend them without pay under some circumstances. Yet, the effect of the Hon. Member's amendment would be to create a privileged class in this instance and to confer benefits on members of the RCMP which simply are not conferred upon other federal employees. I suggest that that sort of double standard would be unfair.

There is one other point that I would like to make before sitting down, Mr. Speaker. I gave the members of the committee the assurance that we would bring in amendments to the regulations that would ensure that any suspension of pay of a member is grievable and that, if there is an injustice being done by the administrative action, the member would have the authority to grieve and take advantage of the various provisions under the regulations. We intend to keep that commitment and to ensure that rights of members of the force are protected.

However, we do not believe that a privileged group should be set up with special rights and privileges not conferred on other public employees. We do not believe that any action should be taken by Parliament which would have the effect of bringing the administration of justice into disrepute.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty). What he refuses to recognize is that for many years now there has been a feeling among many people, and members of the force in particular, that the RCMP is a law unto itself, that the rules under which it operates were modeled after the rules and laws of the armed forces of the 17th or 18th century.

Before I proceed to the comments I want to make, I will deal with one point which the Minister made a few moments ago. He said that if we do this for the RCMP we will have two classes of public employees, that these people will have conditions which do not apply to all other public servants. I suggest the fact is the exact opposite, because all other public sevants except employees on Parliament Hill have the right by law to belong to unions, whether it is the Public Service Alliance or the Professional Institute. When they are accused of wrongdoing or disciplined by suspension or firing, they have a right to ask their unions to grieve on their behalf and deal with it through a number of steps.

However, the RCMP force has no organization and the Commissioner does not want them to have one. The Minister and the Government agree with the Commissioner, so that when the Commissioner or senior officials in the RCMP believe that an ordinary member of the force has done wrong, the Commissioner shall be the prosecutor, the judge and jury to decide on the penalty. That is unacceptable.

Let me briefly cite for the record the views expressed in a very fine presentation on this subject by the committee of seventeen. They say:

> Our reasons for recommending that a member be suspended with pay and allowances are as follows:
> 1. The Constitution Act, 1982, presumes every person to be innocent until proven guilty by due process of law.

The RCMP Commissioner wants the exact opposite. When he suspends an officer without pay he has already made a judgment. There is no due process of law or consideration by a committee of peers or outside supervisory group. The committee goes on to state:

> 2. Suspension from duty with pay pending completion of an investigation for an alleged offence or a breach of the Code of Conduct is an acceptable administrative process. This was a recommendation of the Marin Commission.

The Minister says he is proud of his friendship with the Marin Commission, but he is quite prepared to ignore Justice Marin's recommendation when it does not suit him. The committee goes on to state:

> 3. Suspension from duty without pay presupposes guilt and may constitute immediate punishment before due process of law has been completed.
> 4. Suspension from duty without pay is perceived as exerting extreme pressure on a member to resign from the Force.

They go on to describe an actual case of an officer who was suspended without pay. Fortunately, the Commissioner subsequently agreed that the officer should be paid while he was suspended. However, it took two and a half years until the case was finally settled. The Committee states:

> In view of the fact that current proceedings are lengthy, most in excess of two years, it may be realistic to conclude that the member will not be in a financial position to contest the discharge proceedings.

Of course, the member must do this on his own because he has no union or association to support him in his difficult time. The Minister wants to continue this procedure, but as far as we are concerned that is completely unacceptable.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a brief intervention in this debate on this amendment. I am not a former Solicitor General like the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), but I did spend some pleasurable time as a Crown attorney and defence counsel in Vancouver. I have called RCMP officers as witnesses for my cases and I have cross-examined them in other cases, so I believe I have some experience with these officers in their day-to-day work.

I believe they should receive salary and benefits while under suspension. I suggest that the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) is not considering this issue in human terms. I might say that he is a bit too stuffy when he says this brings the administration of justice into dispute.

Mr. Beatty: Disrepute.

Mr. Waddell: That it brings the administration of justice into disrepute. That is a rather high-sounding principle but it does not mean anything in the context of this very human situation.

Mr. Beatty: It does to me.

Mr. Waddell: It is a very high-sounding principle. Let us consider the human situation. These officers are very special and have a very difficult job. There is a greater possibility for them to get into trouble than the average public servant. I make the case that it is a rather unique job and if special cases must be made for them, let us do so. It will not set a precedent for the whole public service.

As my colleagues have pointed out, the civil service has a better grievance procedure and union protection. Let us look at it in the context of human terms and the special job that these police officers must perform. If there is an allegation by which they can be suspended, they are helpless. They are not rich people but ordinary Canadians with families. They cannot afford to hire expensive lawyers to help them when they are under suspension.

The Hon. Solicitor General pays great tribute to Justice Marin and his report. Why do you not follow the report if you have such great respect for the judge, because he clearly saw the human side of the issue? With respect, the Minister ducks behind the technicalities. I believe that these technicalities can easily be rectified and I wish to propose a subamendment to the amendment by my hon. friend, the Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald):

> "by the Commissioner, with pay and benefits".

The Commissioner can still apply the suspension but it will be with pay and benefits. The Minister would not be able to duck behind that technicality.

I ask the Minister to consider the human terms because these people face special and difficult circumstances. It is easier for them, compared to other public servants, to get into trouble but they are left unprotected. It would be no detriment to the Government to exercise some human kindness and allow for suspension with pay and benefits. There is a principle which we must take into consideration besides the money that such a provision would cost, and I suspect that Conservative back-benchers would agree, if they were here listening to what I just said. I ask the Solicitor General to consider this subamendment.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would simply seek your guidance about the rules of the House with respect to moving an amendment to a report stage motion. Could you give us guidance in that respect?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is exactly what I am doing. I am taking it under advisement at this time and carrying on with debate. I hope to come back with a ruling for the Hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty).

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure you will be advised that the subamendment arises from what the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) suggested in his last intervention.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to rise to assure the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) that Government Members are present, attentive and know what the substance of this debate is all about. What strikes me is that perhaps the Hon. Member and his colleagues are either confused, do not understand the meaning of the words in the Bill itself, or perhaps are getting carried away with themselves.

However, it is quite clear that the clause of the Bill we are dealing with does not say that a member of the Force is to be suspended without pay. It merely says they are to be suspended from duty. It does not say whether it is with pay or without pay. It leaves it quite flexible. There is the opportunity to suspend with pay or the opportunity to suspend without pay.

If the occasion arises—it may rarely and it may never,—the Hon. Minister has indicated that when someone is suspended without pay then he has made an undertaking that the regulations are to be amended so that that particular matter can be grieved.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) indicated that, in effect, there was no grievance procedure in the Act, but actually there is. With the combination of that grievance procedure, the Minister's undertaking and the working in the Act, it leaves us with the flexibility that we are looking for. It may be that no one will ever be suspended without pay. There is that flexibility and that option if it is necessary. If it is not necessary, it will not be used because the Act as it now stands allows the Member to be suspended with pay.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Hon. Member a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) must know that there are no questions or comments during this part of the debate.

Let me come back to the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). What is happening is that the Hon. Member for Burnaby is deleting something and the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway is adding something.

Clause 13.1 reads:

—the legislature of any province may be suspended from duty by the commissioner.

Let me read the Hon. Member's amendment:

That Bill C-65 be amended in Clause 7 by striking out line 30 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"with pay and benefits"

The Member is asking that we add the words "by the Commissioner with pay and benefits". I see no problem with that sub-amendment.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is it within the power of a Member of Parliament to make a motion that has to do with the expenditure of Government funds?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, it is perfectly in order.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to clarify something. I believe this will assist the Solicitor General and Members of the House. I have a copy of the amendments as they were given to the Clerk. I believe the difficulty arose because the amendments that were filed to the Bill in the original form referred to the Bill as it was tabled in the House of Commons on June 27, not to the reported version of the Bill.

Unfortunately, it would appear in translating these amendments to the reports stage of the Bill that perhaps an error was made in deleting those words. I have checked the original Bill and it did include the words "by the Commissioner".

It was a difficulty in the interpretation of that amendment to the extent that I was responsible by virtue of the fact that we proposed amendments to the lines of the Bill as it was originally tabled. I certainly regret that. However, I would note that those amendments were translated by others.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During the submission of the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) to this House, he based his objection to the motion on the elimination of the words "by the Commissioner". One would suspect that he would look favourably upon an amendment that would include the words "the Commissioner".

If the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) indicates that in his amendment the words should be there, I imagine that you have no alternative, Mr. Speaker, but to allow debate based on the words included.

Mr. Waddell: That is what he is saying.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the seconder for the motion the Hon. Member for the Winnipeg North?

Mr. Waddell: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) is speaking on the sub-amendment to the amendment.

Mr. Nunziata: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I understand that I will have an opportunity to speak to the amendment as well?

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, during the submissions of the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) he said: "Nothing should be done to bring the administration of justice into disrepute". If there is anything that would bring the administration of justice into disrepute, it is the presumption of guilt before a fair hearing by a particular tribunal.

I cannot help but point out the hypocrisy in the position of the Solicitor General. When he was the Minister of National Revenue, he put together what was known as the Declaration of Taxpayer Rights. I am sure you recall when he put that out, Mr. Speaker. He said that henceforth the taxpayers of Canada would have certain rights and he proceeded to point out what those rights are.

One of those rights, and this is a document put out by the Solicitor General when he was the Minister of National Revenue, was the presumption of honesty. He said: "You are entitled to be presumed honest unless there is evidence to the contrary". He went on to say that "you are entitled to every benefit allowed by the law".

One could ask the Solicitor General why taxpayers should be allowed every benefit allowed by the law yet members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police not be entitled to every benefit allowed by the law? The law of Canada is the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which states at Clause 11(d) that a resident of Canada:

to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal.

The Solicitor General says nothing should be done to bring the administration of Justice into disrepute. His position of not allowing members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to be suspended with full pay and benefits brings the administration of justice into disrepute because it presumes that an officer is guilty of some offence. Why else would you suspend an officer without pay? One could conclude that by suspending an officer without full pay and benefits that the particular officer is guilty of some offence.

The Solicitor General says that in certain cases the infraction might be so serious that it demands the officer be suspended without pay. The Solicitor General then cited the example of a bank robbery.

A person is presumed and assumed innocent, regardless of the evidence prior to a trial. Yet the Solicitor General is suggesting that in the case of someone charged with bank robbery he or she should be suspended without full pay and benefits. Is the Solicitor General not saying that the commissioner, in this particular case, has the authority to condemn an officer or a member of the Force who is still innovent according to the law of Canada? It is a basic and fundamental principle of our justice system that one is presumed innocent until proven guilty. I cannot understand why the Solicitor General is so adamant in his position that he wants to suspend members of the Force without pay and benefits.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) and other Hon. Members have indicated why an individual should not be suspended without full pay and benefits. We in the Official Opposition believe—and I am sure the NDP would agree—that all members who are in the midst of an investigation should be suspended with full pay and benefits or assigned to other duties. Otherwise, the person is being convicted before he or she is given a fair hearing, before the person's final guilt is determined. It is a preliminary finding of guilt if the person is suspended. It is not only contrary to the basis of the justice system in Canada, but on humanitarian and compassionate grounds, and on those grounds alone, one could argue that a member of the Force should not be suspended without full pay and benefits and that indeed one should be suspended with full pay and benefits.

Can we imagine the hardship involved for a member of the Force who is suspended without full pay and is subjected to a long hearing or investigation? Let us say that it takes from six months to a year before the RCMP conducts its own investigation into a particular allegation. What is the particular member who is presumed innocent supposed to do? He or she is denied full pay and benefits. Presumably some of the benefits are for the member's family, so the family suffers as a result. Is he or she to go on welfare? Is he or she to go on unemployment insurance? We can see how serious the matter is, if the commissioner is allowed to suspend an individual without full pay and benefits.

After the final determination of the particular allegation, if the person is found to have contravened the code of conduct or the Criminal Code of Canada, after he or she has been found guilty, we all agree that then and only then should the commissioner be allowed to suspend the person without pay. Otherwise it would create considerable harship.

In closing, I reiterate my very serious concerns about the hypocrisy of the position taken by the Solicitor General. When he was Minister of National Revenue he had what is known as the "Declaration of Taxpayer Rights". It was a high-faluting document. He had it framed. It went across the country. He was very proud of it. He was also proud of the fact that there was a presumption of honesty and that every taxpayer was entitled to every benefit allowed by the law. What has changed his mind since he was made the Solicitor General of Canada? Why should RCMP officers and members not be afforded the same rights as any other Canadian is afforded? Those rights include the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty. I, for one, cannot understand that blatant and obvious hypocrisy.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to respond to the arguments of the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway). He pointed out that the Bill before us indicates that the member may be suspended from duty by the commissioner but that it does not specify whether he should be suspended without pay and benefits or with pay and benefits. Consequently he said that it could be done either way, that the member of the RCMP could be suspended with pay and benefits and that would respond to the law as proposed in the Bill. That is not enough.

I respond to the Hon. Member by telling him that that is not enough because of the abuses present in the RCMP where members were suspended without pay and benefits for long periods of time until their cases were heard. It was exactly for that reason that the Marin Commission very specifically recommended that if they were to be suspended, they be suspended with pay and benefits until the matter had been decided.

It was also for that reason that the Association of 17 Divisions and RCMP divisional staff relations representatives—and both these groups represent members of the force who are not officers—recommended that if there were suspensions, it be written into the law that the suspensions be with pay and benefits. It is not enough that we accept what is written in the law at the present time. It was not enough for Judge Marin when he wrote his report, and it is not enough for the men in the RCMP who would like us to legislate otherwise. I wish the Government would listen to the good reason of the men in the Force and to Judge Marin.

Mr. Robinson: And to the women as well.

Mr. Allmand: And to the women of the Force as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We cannot forget the women. The House has heard the terms of the amendment. Is the House ready for the question on the amendment to the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those against will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it, and I declare the motion defeated.

Amendment (Mr. Waddell) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is now on Motion No. 1. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) on debate.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, at committee we had the benefit of listening to RCMP divisional staff relations representatives in respect of their views on Bill C-65, an Act to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act. On behalf of the Internal Affairs Committee, RCMP divisional staff relations representatives presented a brief to the committee. One would suspect from the comments of the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) that he did not take the time to read it. It was well-written and well-researched and made some very cogent arguments in respect of certain amendments to Bill C-65.

After the introduction in their submission to the committee, the first area of concern expressed by them was the issue of suspension without pay. One could conclude, therefore, given the fact that it was the first item they raised, that it is one of the most important, if not the most important, concerns of the RCMP divisional staff relations representatives in respect of the Bill. It is obvious why this would be a very serious concern.

I should like to quote from the particular submission. They started off by saying:

> The question of whether the Commissioner of the RCMP needs the authority to suspend a member of the force without pay has been a major issue for discussion since 1973.

They referred to an administrative bulletin which was issued last year and said:

> Prior to the passage of this regulation, the commissioner did not have clear authority for suspension without pay. The RCMP divisional staff relations representatives unanimously feel that suspension without pay is not necessary for the proper administration of the force.

They gave their reasons for saying it.

It goes on to list five important reasons why a member of the Force should not be suspended without pay and, if anything, should be suspended with full pay and benefits. First, they say that a member of the RCMP is a Canadian citizen and as such is presumed innocent until proven guilty by due process, the point I raised earlier. The second point they raise is that suspension with pay during an investigation into an alleged offence is an acceptable administrative process as recommended by the Marin Commission.

The Marin Commission spoke about this very issue and recommended that during a criminal investigation or service investigation of a serious nature, and any subsequent proceedings, a member should be either suspended with pay or assigned to other duties.

The commission also recommended that no more than 45 days should normally elapse between the commencement and termination of any service investigation, and that if the investigation cannot be concluded within that time the member should be advised of his position and of the current status of the investigation.

The Marin Commission spent a lot of time putting this report together. As you know, Mr. Speaker, as you were a Member of the House at the time, the commission was instituted by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) who was then Solicitor General. The members of the commission spent a lot of time researching the terms of reference and coming up with recommendations.

The Solicitor General has said that he is a friend of Commissioner Marin and that he has respect for him. The Solicitor General has not given any good reason why we should not adopt the recommendations of the Marin Commission. The Solicitor General has dismissed these recommendations in a very frivolous manner without giving good solid reasons why an officer should not be suspended with full pay and benefits. He cited the example of the bank robber, but that is just not good enough.

The third item raised by the representatives of the RCMP at committee was that suspension without pay presupposes guilt and constitutes immediate punishment. Once again, authority is being given to the Commissioner of the RCMP to be investigator, prosecutor and executioner all at the same time and that is not fair.

The fourth item raised by the representatives is that suspension without pay is perceived as exerting extreme pressure on a member to resign, thus denying a proper hearing. That is an interesting point. This committee is composed of very responsible individuals. Staff Sergeant Fred Davis, Corporal Ron Thurston and Staff Sergeant Rick Preston were, I believe, the authors of this particular report and they suggest that the potential exists for the Commissioner to use his authority in order to pressure a member into resigning. If a member wanted to seek other employment, he or she might not have any alternative but to resign. That is something worth noting.

The fifth and final point raised by the representatives is that any member alleged to have committed so blantant an act that his services can no longer be tolerated can be processed for discharge on an urgent basis, and such instances would be so infrequent that unique methods could be justified. I for one cannot think of any activity that is so blatant that it requires immediate dismissal on an urgent basis. If one is charged with a criminal offence, one is presumed innocent until proven guilty. I suppose if there was a case of continual insubordination, that might be a reason to suspend an officer. However, a mere breach of the code of conduct should not give the Commissioner the authority to suspend without pay because that is a very serious action.

In closing, I would ask the Solicitor General rethink his position. There is still time for him to do so. The Solicitor General appears to be a reasonable person. He says that he is a reasonable person and he says that he has consideration for the administration of justice. He says that he has taken great strides in the Department of National Revenue by giving the taxpayers of Canada their declaration of taxpayer rights. I would call on him to put together a declaration of rights for RCMP members. If the Solicitor General truly believed in entitling every benefit allowed by law to the taxpayers when he was the Minister of National Revenue, then surely he should be consistent, since he is a reasonable individual, and afford members of the RCMP the same rights afforded to every other Canadian.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Robinson) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Chair has reviewed the arguments of the Hon. President fo the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) with regard to Motions Nos. 9 and 11. Motion No. 9 would allow complaints against the RCMP in general. Clause 45.35 allows complaints against any member of the force. Conceivably, one could file individual complaints against all members of the Force for an activity common to all members. In my opinion, Motion No. 9 is within the scope of the clause and therefore is in order.

Motion No. 11 attempts to substitute the final authority on a complaint from the Commissioner to the Public Complaints Commission, as provided in Clause 45.29(1), and therefore is within the four corners of the Bill. The ruling made earlier this day will therefore stand.

We will now deal with Motion No. 2.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-65, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out line 36 at page 10 and substituting the following therefor:

"(5) No member or former member of the Force is eligible".

He said: Briefly, in support of this motion, I would note that the amendment reflects the concern of witnesses appearing before the committee and, in particular, the Association of 17 Divisions, that the external review committee should be seen to be completely unbiased and free of any perception of bias by requiring that former members not be eligible for appointment to the external review committee. The fundamental concern here is to safeguard the appearance of independence of the external review committee.

I would note that the Bill as it is currently worded prevents any serving member from being a member of the external review committee. One would certainly hope that that would be the case. The review committee process is supposed to be external to the RCMP itself, and obviously any internal involvement would be a contradiction in terms. However, I think we have to look at the credibility of this process. The Bill as it is worded would ensure that the external review committee would have the opportunity to review grievances of members of the RCMP. However, it will still be able to make recommendations to the Commission. It will be the Commission which decides whether to accept or reject the recommendations of the external review committee.

For that reason, it is essential that this external review committee not be perceived either by members of the public, who may be involved in this process, or by members of the RCMP, to be in any way linked, either directly or indirectly, to the RCMP itself. Therefore, the amendment would ensure that former members of the RCMP would not play a role in the external review committee. Surely, there are many other outstanding Canadian men and women who could be appointed to this external review committee, without the necessity of tainting the perception of the public by including former members of the RCMP.

I note that the fundamental objective which we in the New Democratic Party have sought to achieve in our review of this legislation is an assurance of the basic right to freedom of association which is accorded all other Canadians. This means that the provisions of various laws which currently deny that freedom of association deny the RCMP the basic right to full and free collective bargaining and that those provisions would be struck down. The Government has refused to accept that. It has refused to allow members of the RCMP to choose for themselves whether or not they want full and free collective bargaining without the right to strike.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, again I repeat that there is now the Association of 17 Divisions. It has members in all regions of Canada, but most of them are in the Province of Quebec. The Association of 17 Divisions has a membership of 2,800 and, as I understand it, roughly 90 per cent of RCMP "C" Division members recently voted in favour of collective bargaining and the right to be represented by the Association of 17 Divisions.

Mr. Speaker, the approach of this Government is to deny Quebec RCMP members the right to choose their own representatives. The Association made it clear that it is not asking for the right to strike. But I think that the attitude of the Government, the basic role—

[English]

The external review committee must be seen to be totally independent. If we are to deny fundamental rights to collective bargaining then, at the very least, the body which is seen to be external to the RCMP which is reviewing complaints must not include former members of the RCMP, just as it must not include serving members of the RCMP.

The objective of this amendment is to ensure that the perception of independence is an accurate one. We obviously would liked to have seen the opportunity for full collective bargaining. At the present time, there are about 14,000 members of the RCMP. It is true that the vast majority of those members—well over 10,000 of them—have decided at this point that they accept the divisional representative system of representation. Certainly, I would not in any way quarrel with their right to make that decision for themselves. However, what we are saying to the other approximately 3,000 members is that they do not have the right to seek free collective bargaining and representation. In the case of the members in the Province of Quebec—

Mr. Beatty: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, however much I admire my hon. friend's ingenuity in arguing Motion No. 5 under the guise of debate on Motion No. 2, Mr. Speaker has ruled Motion No. 5 out of order. The comments of the Hon. Member with regard to collective bargaining in the RCMP are totally irrelevant to the particular issue as to whether or not former memebrs of the RCMP should be allowed to serve on the external review committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate what the Solicitor General is saying. I know that the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), who has been here for a long time, realizes what he is doing. Therefore, I think that the House is now ready for the question.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I defer to the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), unless he is finished. He was in the middle of his submission.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude my brief remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Burnaby still has one minute remaining. Does he wish to carry on with his remarks?

Mr. Robinson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In conclusion, with respect to the amendment which would ensure that the process of the external review committee be seen to be completely free of any suggestion of involvement, either by current members of the RCMP or former members, I point out once again that the reason this amendment is so important is that day, after this committee has in fact made its recommendations, it is still the commission which has the final say. Given the rather primitive system of labour relations within the RCMP, surely the Government would accept this very reasonable amendment to the proposals with respect to the composition of the external review committee.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak briefly to this particular amendment. I am of two minds with respect to it. I will indicate the dilemma in which I find myself.

I understand what the Hon. Member for Burnaby is suggesting. He is saying that no member or former member should be allowed to be a member of the external review committee. If it is truly to be an external review committee, then it should not include as part of its membership someone who is a former member of the RCMP. That can work both ways, and I would like to indicate why I think it can work both ways.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby is suggesting that if a former member sits on the external review committee then, in some way, the individuals who are being investigated might be affected by the fact that there is a former officer who sits on the review committee. That can also work the other way. That is to say if a former member of the RCMP sits on the external review committee, then he or she might have a greater understanding of the issues before it.

I am sure most Hon. Members will agree that when one deals with labour relations, for example when a matter proceeds to arbitration, it is quite normal for labour to appoint a representative to the arbitration board. It is also normal for management to appoint a representative to the arbitration board and then for there to be a neutral chairman, a neutral third person, appointed. I suppose the reason this system has developed in labour law in Canada is to ensure that at any particular arbitration hearing there is at least one representative who is sympathetic to the cause of labour, one who is sympathetic to the cause of management and a third representative, presumably the one who has the deciding vote of the three, who will look at both sides and who has a balanced view of the particular matter being considered.

The reason I raise this matter is that there is a purpose for trying to seek out someone who is sympathetic to labour and management when it comes to labour arbitrations, and that might make some sense when one deals with an external review committee. I agree that a person who is a member of the Force—not a former member—should not sit on the committee. However, I do not have the same difficulties with respect to a former member.

As Hon. Members know, this external review committee is to be made up of five individuals. There is to be a chairman, a vice-chairman, and not more than three other members. People appointed to the board are appointed by order of the Governor in Council. That creates some problem, since we know the track record of the Government when it comes to political appointment, to patronage and to partisanship—

Ms. McDonald: They had a good example to follow!

Mr. Nunziata: Notwithstanding the fact that the Conservatives campaigned against it in the last election campaign, the moment they came to office they started appointing their friends, relatives, Party hacks and bagpeople. Thus, they have a long track record when it comes to patronage. Our friends to the left say that we were not any better. Well, we did not promise—

• (1630)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: —during that election campaign to change the system of patronage.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: I do not want to be diverted from the substance of my submission except to say that I have concerns when we give to the Conservative Cabinet the authority to appoint people to various boards and commissions, because, given the opportunity to appoint a friend and relative, those Hon. Members will appoint a friend or relative to any board or commission.

When we are dealing with an external review committee dealing with the RCMP, we must ensure that the people who are appointed to this committee are people with unimpeachable integrity. We have heard those terms before, of course. They are often used by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in defence of all of those people on the other side of the House. They all have unimpeachahble integrity, notwithstanding the abysmal poor judgment which is often displayed. But I do not want to get sidetracked on this issue.

The Division Staff Relations Representative Committee recommended that consideration be given to an amendment giving the Governor in Council the authority, upon the approval or in consultation with the National Executive Committee of the Division Staff Relations Representative. It wants some say as to who is appointed to this external review committee because it, too, no doubt, has a concern with respect to the type of individual who might be appointed by this Conservative Government. Page 6 of its submission states: "Members of the Force and the public expect a balanced, objective, non-partisan review of matters presented". It then recommends that it have some say about who is appointed to that committee.

The reason the committee made that recommendation is that it does not have the faith and trust that this Conservative Government would appoint an external review committee which has a balanced, objective, non-partisan approach to the matters which might be before it.

In conclusion, I would like to say that I do not share the concerns of the Hon. Member for Burnaby with respect to this particular motion. I think that a former member of the Force, as a member of this external review committee, might serve to provide some experience and understanding of a particular issue which might be before the committee. I would hope as well that we will not give authority to the Conservative Cabinet, or any cabinet, for that matter, to appoint the external review committee. If this particular committee should be above suspicion with respect to partisanship, and truly independent, the committee should not be appointed by Cabinet. Perhaps it should be appointed by Parliament. Some other body should be permitted to make some contribution to the appointment of the external review committee.

If you were the chairman of the committee, Mr. Speaker, I would not have any problem because all of us in this House respect your judgment and balanced approach to the deliberations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to participate in this particular discussion but I must say I was inspired by my colleague opposite who, in his usual friendly and thoughtful way, made a useful intervention in the proceedings of the House. I would like to indicate that I will certainly send down for framing the statement made by the Hon. Member in defence of the Liberal Party. He pointed out that no Canadian will ever be disappointed in the behaviour of the Liberal Party because it never promised anything better than it delivered. In matters of morality, it never disappoints.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: If my hon. friend could get a grip on himself, at least temporarily, perhaps we could get back to the subject at hand which is the motion proposed by my friend, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). The issue seems to be whether there is the potential for a conflict of interest to exist in the case of members of the external review committee. Clearly, in an instance where a current serving member of the Force is appointed to the external review committee, there would be the potential that, in matters coming before the review committee, he might very well have a direct interest in the decision being taken. The question, then, which remains is whether, in the case of former members of the RCMP, they are deemed to have some continuing personal conflict of interest that for all time would forbid them serving on the committee.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if you look at the conflict of interest regulations which involve Members of Parliament, members of the Cabinet and other federal appointees, you will find that the conflict of interest regulations relate to their present activities. If someone is engaged in some activity which is in conflict with his or her professional responsibilities, a conflict of interest exists. There is also a provision for a cooling-off period for senior Government officials when they leave and go to the private sector in terms of the work they can accept. But no attempt is made to bar for all time federal employees from the ability to pursue activities after they leave their present responsibilities. Nor is there an attempt made to bar for all time people with a background and experience in the private sector and other areas who come to Ottawa and who have an interest in serving on government boards and commissions. There is no assumption that one carries with one for all time some scarlet letter which is going to taint and prevent one from discharging one's responsibilities in a fair and effective way.

What is important is that we ensure that no conflict of interest can exist, and the Bill, as it is written today, does precisely that. Second, the Government should have the scope to appoint the most qualified people in Canada to serve on the external review committee. The submission I would make to the House is that surely anyone who looks at a situation like this would recognize that perhaps the people with the greatest expertise in terms of the activities of the Force are former members of the RCMP themselves. Are we simply to exclude a whole class of Canadians on the basis that they are somehow tainted by having served their country well as members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

I note that the Hon. Member for Burnaby makes no effort to bar former members, or even present members of other police forces, from serving on the external review committee. There is no belief on his part that the mere fact of having been a police officer taints one and makes one unqualified for participation on the external review committee. The only group he would seek to exclude are former members of the RCMP. I would suggest that that sort of exclusion is unfair. It casts doubt upon the integrity and independence of former members of the Force. What is more, it would deny the external review committee the ability to draw upon people who may very well be the most qualified people in Canada to serve on the committee.

For that reason, Hon. Members on this side of the House cannot accept the motion which is proposed by my hon. friend.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 2 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

Motion No. 2 (Mr. Robinson) negatived.

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-65, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out line 6 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

"(3), where any member or members are aggrieved by". Motion No. 4

That Bill C-65, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out line 8 at page 14 and substituting the following therefor:

"any level in the grievance process, and in any event, within 30 days the".

That Bill C-65, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out line 27 at page 14 and substituting the following therefor:

"court except in accordance with section 18 or 28".

That Bill C-65, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out line 21 at page 18 and substituting the following therefor:

"36. The Governor in Council may make regulations".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that these four motions have been grouped for debate. The combined effect of all four motions would be to enhance the procedural safeguards available to members of the RCMP, strengthen their rights, and ensure that the grievance procedure is more effective. Motion No. 3 would ensure the possibility of group grievances. As the Bill is now worded, only individual members of the RCMP can file a grievance. This amendment would include the words "or members" and ensure that group grievances could be filed. A similar proposal was made by the Marin Commission. They said that a group of members with a common cause of complaint should be allowed to have a single grievance lodged on behalf of the group. As it is now, if a single grievance affected many other members, they would all of course have to file similar grievances. As the Marin Commission points out, the divisional staff relations representative program has given some recognition to the question of group concerns, but nevertheless I believe the Bill should reflect that recommendation as well.

There are a number of potential areas of group grievances. For example, at the time the divisional representative system was put into place in 1974, there were 14 specific promises made to members of the RCMP. They were asked to vote on whether or not they wanted to have a divisional representative system or collective bargaining. One of those very important promises, which might very well be the basis of a group grievance today, was promise number nine. That promise was as follows.

[Translation]

The Government had promised that a division representative would be directly involved in negotiations with Treasury Board. Well, Mr. Speaker, that was in 1974 and today, eleven years later, it is still not the case since no representative sits at the bargaining table with the Treasury Board.

So the promise was made all right, but it has yet to become reality for members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

And then, Mr. Speaker, if salaries had been reviewed on the basis of the average salary paid by other major police forces in Canada, as RCMP members were promised, then the RCMP membership would not be trailing behind other law enforcement officers in Canada.

[English]

So an illustration, as it were, of the kind of group grievance which might very well be brought forward is that grievance with respect to the promise solemnly made by the Government of the day in 1974. It stated that one divisional representative shall be directly involved in pay negotiations at the bargaining table. That was the promise made and broken by the Liberal Government, and unfortunately it remains unfulfilled by the Conservative Government today. That was one of the premises which underlay the concept of divisional representatives.

[Translation]

And that, Mr. Speaker, is undoubtedly one of the reasons why more than 90 per cent of Quebec RCMP members voted in favour of the right to collective bargaining through the Association of 17 Divisions.

Mr. Speaker, I stress the fact that the Government now refuses to acknowledge that basic right of Quebec RCMP members.

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Are we on Motion No. 5?

Mr. Robinson: In addition, dealing with, as I have been, this important Motion No. 3 with respect to group grievances, another example of the kind of grievance which might very well be brought if there were an opportunity for group grievances is with respect to the surveillance of the Association of 17 Divisions which it is alleged took place. The association has filed a complaint with the office of the Information Commissioner. As a result, it received some 867 pages of documentation concerning the association——and there are still 197 pages which the RCMP has so far refused to make public.

If the motion were to be adopted, Mr. Speaker, many RCMP members would probably insist that the Commissioner reconsider his refusal to publish those pages of material concerning unions within the RCMP and the Association of 17 Divisions, and make that information available to the Association.

[English]

I find it most interesting that at the same time as the RCMP insists there was no surveillance of the association, it refused to make available to the association almost 200 pages of documentation concerning collective bargaining rights and concerning the association. Once again, that is the kind of grievance which should be allowed as a group grievance and would be allowed if the amendment in Motion No. 3 were adopted.

Motion No. 4 would ensure that there is a time limit for the consideration of grievances. It would impose a 30-day time limit, just as Motion No. 8 would ensure a 90-day time limit after the hearing of the grievance before a decision is rendered. These are additional safeguards for the protection of members of the Force.

Finally, with respect to Motion No. 6, this would in effect broaden the scope of potential review by the courts. As the Bill is now worded there could only be review under Section 28 of the Federal Court Act, a fairly narrow review. Motion No. 6 would in effect broaden the scope of review and ensure that members of the RCMP would be accorded the same rights as members of the civilian security service. Those members do have the right to review under Section 18 as well as Section 28 of the Federal Court Act.

The net effect of these four motions would be to enhance the protection of members of the RCMP during the grievance process, once again bearing in mind the fact that the Government still refuses to grant to members of the RCMP the basic rights to which all other Canadians are entitled, namely the right to full collective bargaining and freedom of association.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the Solicitor General, may I point out that the Hon. Member, having been a Member of this House since 1979, realizes that even en français he cannot come back to Motion No. 5. He has done that to me twice and I hope he will not do it a third time.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do however think we should applaud my hon. friend's artistry and ingenuity in doing that.

I would like to comment briefly on these four motions. Motion No. 3 purports to provide for group grievances in addition to individual grievances. Group grievances are possible at the present time. Grievances on the same issue which are filed by a number of members would be consolidated by the Force if practicable. The issue here is whether a class grievance on behalf of a number of members of the force should be able to be filed. The concern which the Government has is that it wants to do whatever it can to avoid a situation where one member of the Force, purporting to speak on behalf of a number of his colleagues, files a grievance when, in fact, he does not speak on their behalf. It is for this reason that we cannot support Motion No. 3.

Motion No. 4 provides that each level in the grievance process should render a decision within 30 days. We believe that at the same time as pressure is put and should be put on the system to ensure that decisions are taken as rapidly as possible, we should also not create arbitrary deadlines which, in some cases, simply could not be met. Clause 46(2) of the Bill provides that all proceedings before a board must be dealt with expeditiously. There may be some instances where it is simply impossible to deal with a particular grievance within 30 days. As a consequence, it would possibly be doing an injustice to the individual involved if a decision were forced in less than that period of time. That is why it is important to allow sufficient flexibility for the system to work properly.

The issue in Motion No. 6 is a highly technical one. It is whether or not it is necessary, as proposed by my hon. colleague from Burnaby, that wherever a review is permitted of the Commissioner's decision under Section 28 of the Federal Court Act, review should also be explicitly provided for under Section 18 of that Act.

The Government has looked at this and feels that the provision in question relates to the right of a member to appeal the final decision of the Commissioner to the Federal Court of Appeal. Second, under the Federal Court Act there are two avenues for appeal, the first through Section 18 and the second through Section 28. Section 18 provides for appeals to the Federal Court Trial Division of decisions of an administrative body and/or interlocutory motions such as mandamus, certiorari, etc. Section 28 provides for appeals to the Federal Court of Appeal of decisions made on a judicial or a quasi-judicial basis.

An appeal from the Commissioner's decisions, because they are judicial or quasi-judicial in nature, accordingly, must be brought before the Federal Court of Appeal pursuant to Section 28. It would be legally contradictory to provide for an appeal of the Commissioner's decision under both Section 18 and Section 28 of the Federal Court Act given the varying nature of appeals provided for under these sections.

The fact that Bill C-65 is silent with respect to a Section 18 appeal does not preclude a motion under that section from being filed when it is appropiate, for example, when a purely administrative issue is to be determined. For that reason, the proposal that is made by the Hon. Member is redundant and unnecessary in this particular case. On the other hand, specifically providing a reference to Section 18 in this section, dealing with appeals from the Commissioner's decisions, would not only be legally incorrect but would also undoubtedly mislead some members into launching an appeal under this section. Accordingly, in order to avoid members using the wrong appeal provision, reference to Section 18 has been deliberately left out.

Finally, the issue with regard to Motion No. 7 is whether the Governor in Council, rather than the Commissioner, should make regulations governing the presentation and consideration of grievances. It is the Commissioner who is charged with the control and management of the force. The grievance system is an integral part of the internal management of the Force, and to divest the Commissioner of the power to make rules respecting the representation and consideration of grievances would be to dilute his control and management of the Force.

Having the Commissioner make rules governing the grievance process in entirely consistent with the general principle that a body normally seized with a judicial or quasi-judicial function makes its own rules regulating the proceedings before it. For example, the Federal Court Act and the Supreme Court Act provide for these judicial bodies to make their own rules of practice and procedure. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, the committee and the members of the Government felt that the procedures in the Bill today are the correct procedures.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I would like to restrict my comments to Motion No. 4 with respect to the time period. The motion moved by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) would amend Section 31(6) to read as follows: "as soon as possible after the presentation and consideration of a grievance at any level in the grievance process, and in any event, within 30 days the member constituting the level shall render a decision". The operative words are: "in any event, within 30 days".

This particular amendment is suggested to put a timeframe on the grievance procedure and, in my view, relatives to Motion No. 1. We spent a considerable amount of time dealing with that motion which deals with a member of the Force being suspended. It was my submission, and that of the Official Opposition, that a member of the Force should be suspended with full pay and benefits for the reasons I gave earlier.

As I pointed out in my earlier submissions, on page 154 of the Marin Commission it is recommended:

> During a criminal investigation or a service investigation of a serious nature and any subsequent proceedings, a member should be either suspended with pay or assigned to other duties.

In his so-called wisdom the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) decided not to adopt this particular suggestion by the Marin Commission, which recommendation was a good one. I hope the Solicitor General will continue to rethink his position. I am sure that reason will prevail in the long run.

However, if, after serious deliberations, the Solicitor General decides that he will not agree to suspending a member of the RCMP with full pay and benefits and affording a member the same rights as any other Canadian, surely he will consider limiting the period within which the RCMP can investigate a particular complaint.

The Solicitor General went over Motion No. 4 rather quickly. He dismissed it almost summarily, I would suggest. He indicated that he did not want to put any impediment in the way which may affect the investigation of a particular alleged offence. What is needed is some method through which those who are conducting the investigation within the RCMP can move a little faster. We all know how slow an investigation could be in certain cases. The investigation can be speeded up or slowed down depending upon certain circumstances that should not, in my view, be taken into consideration.

If you impose a time period and tell the invetigating body that it must report within the given limited period, that particular step in the procedure will be completed within that time. However, if you do not set out a time, the steps may take weeks, months, or perhaps even years while the officer is suspended without full pay and benefits. You are nodding your head in agreement, Mr. Speaker, and I know that you agree with me. If you were given the opportunity you would make submissions to support what I am saying.

In the portion of the Marin Commission dealing with suspension with pay and benefits it says:

> No more than 45 days should normally elapse between the commencement and termination of any service investigation. If the investigation cannot be concluded within that time, the member should be advised of his position and of the current status of the investigation.

That is pretty reasonable, Mr. Speaker, and I see that you are nodding your head again in agreement. It seems that you are agreeing with everything I am saying here today. I would only hope that given the position you occupy in this House you might somehow persuade your junior, the Solicitor General, to see it our way, as well. I cannot understand why the Solicitor General will not agree to at least the Marin Commission recommendation which provides for a time limit of 45 days.

If the investigation cannot be completed within 45 days, Commissioner Marin suggested that the member should be advised of his position and the current status of the investigation. That is all that is being recommended. It is not being said that if the investigation cannot be completed within 45 days it should be terminated. It is being said that if you cannot do it within 45 days you must advise the member of the status and position of the investigation. I suggest that the principles of natural justice would demand that a limitation period be put on the investigation. Any person who is under suspicion and alleged to have committed a breach of the code of conduct or the Criminal Code of Canada is entitled to an investigation and a hearing within a reasonable period of time.

That is another basic and fundamental principle of our criminal justice system. Section 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms deals with legal rights. I will not take the time of the House to read it but it says that an accused person is entitled to a trial within a reasonable period of time.

I suggest that Mr. Justice Marin's time period or the 30-day period suggested by the Member for Burnaby is a reasonable time within which the RCMP should complete its investigation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Motions Nos. 3, 4, 6 and 7 were grouped for debate but must be voted on separately. Therefore, the question is on Motion No. 3 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

"possible, and in any event, within 90 days render a decision in writing on an".

He said: Mr. Speaker, in making my remarks with respect to Motion No. 3 and the subsequent motions in the previous package—

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member. I believe you just indicated that they were separate motions and would have a separate debate. The ruling of the Chair is that Motion Nos. 8, 9, 10 and 11 should be debated and, according to my interpretation, voted on separately. Are you suggesting that there will be a separate debate on each of the four motions?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is exactly what I said. They will be debated separately and voted on separately.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I trust that this motion will meet with the same ringing success as the previous motions. The thrust of this motion is to ensure that in fairness to members of the RCMP, the Commissioner deal expeditiously with grievances.

I made similar arguments with respect to the proposed Motion Nos. 3, 4, 6 and 7. I would simply note that in some cases grievances have dragged on for far too long. The 90-day limit would ensure that the Commissioner would move quickly to deal with these important grievances. Once again, it is an additional safeguard to members of the RCMP.

That Bill C-65 be amended in Clause 15 by striking out line 34 at page 49 and substituting the following therefor:

"having a complaint concerning the activities of the Force in general or the con-".

He said: Mr. Speaker, this important motion would implement a recommendation which was made by the Marin Commission in 1976, to which there has been previous reference, and by the McDonald Commission which reported some years later. The Marin Commission recommended that the definition of complaint be the following: "Any communication received from a member of the public either orally or in writing which criticizes the behaviour of a member of the Force or alleges the failure of the Force itself to meet public expectations".

As well, the McDonald Commission suggested that any complaints with respect to RCMP operations administration which may relate to questionable behaviour on the part of members or generally should be subject to review by the Public Complaints Commission.

This amendment would permit members of the public to put questions to the Public Complaints Commission concerning the hiring policy of the RCMP or policies with respect to a particular detachment which might not necessarily be related to an individual member's activities. It would ensure that the Public Complaints Commission would investigate such policy oriented complaints as opposed to complaints about the specific conduct of one individual member of the Force.

Another example would be a case in which members of a group in a small community might feel that inadequate resources had been allocated to their community. It is not a complaint about a specific member but nevertheless it is a complaint which should be reviewed by the Public Complaints Commission. This amendment would enable them to complain about these matters.

Another illustration of the kind of complaint which could be brought if this amendment were adopted but could not be brought if the wording of the Bill remains as proposed by the Government, is a complaint with respect to hiring policies. I had the honour to serve as a member of the Special Subcommittee on Equality Rights. One of the issues that came before that subcommittee was the hiring policy of the RCMP and its policy with respect to individuals who happen to be gay or lesbian.

I remind the House that the committee was made up of five Conservative Members of Parliament from different provinces in Canada, one Liberal and one New Democrat. The equality rights subcommittee unanimously recommended to the Government that the hiring policies of the RCMP be amended and that qualified men and women not be denied the right to join the RCMP solely on the basis of their sexual orientation but should be judged on their merits as all other applicants are judged.

This amendment would allow members of the public who are concerned about that hiring policy to make submissions to the Public Complaints Commission. We can hope, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps the Government, in responding to the unanimous recommendations of the equality of rights subcommittee on February 25, will implement that important recommendation and ensure that equality is a reality for all Canadians and is not denied to those who happen to be gay or lesbian.

In the event that that important recommendation is rejected by the Government, then surely it should be open to members of the public to complain about those neanderthal and destructive hiring policies of the RCMP. The purpose of this amendment is to allow that kind of policy issue to be dealt with by the Public Complaints Commission.

We have heard from the Commissioner of the RCMP his reasons for opposing this suggestion. I would hope the enlightened Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) might recognize that his colleagues on the equality rights committee were persuaded that the current policies of the RCMP are unjust and must be repealed.

The wording of the amendment in question is very much the wording of the original Act in 1978. In 1978, Bill C-50, one of the many predecessor Bills to this legislation, stated that any person having a complaint concerning the activities of the Force in general or the conduct of any member in particular may make a complaint to the Public Complaints Commission.

Somewhere along the line someone got to the Government and persuaded it that questions of policy should not be brought before the Public Complaints Commission. I would hope the Government will recognize the significance of the proposal made by the Marin Commission and the McDonald Commission and ensure that it is not only individual complaints of wrongdoing that can come before this Commission but as well members of the public can raise concerns about general policy questions.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I will speak briefly to this motion. The Opposition has always supported an expanded definition of a complaint for reasons that were indicated at committee. I do not believe there is any necessity to reiterate arguments I made at committee with respect to why we should have an expanded definition of what a complaint is.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Bill before Parliament today establishes an independent public complaint system or structure. The very guts of this new creation is a definition of what constitutes a complaint. In order to set the machinery in action, you need a complaint.

The Government in its at times questionable wisdom decided to provide a particular definition of complaint. It says that any member of the public having a complaint concerning the conduct in the performance of any duty or function under this Act of any member or other persons appointed or employed under the authority of this Act, whether or not that member of the public is affected by the subject matter of the complaint, may make the complaint to, and it goes on to list how a particular individual can file a complaint.

It certainly provides for third-party complaints. It says: "Whether or not the member of the public is affected by the subject matter of the complaint". If you have an RCMP officer punching someone in the nose, the victim does not necessarily have to complain. Someone who saw the incident, or any other person, could complain of the conduct. To allow third party complaints is a step in the right direction.

The restriction causes considerable concern. The complaint has to concern the conduct in the performance of any duty or function under the Act. As was pointed out previously, it does not allow for a member of the public to complain generally about RCMP policy with regard to any particular matter.

I would like to quote again from the report of the Commission of Inquiry relating to public complaints. I referred to it previously as the Marin Report. It provides for a more expanded definition of complaint.

The Marin Report recommends that a complaints system be set up that would essentially be remedial in nature. At page 73 we find:

> A public complaint system is remedial when it emphasizes the positive aspects of corrective action and encourages the use of other-than-punitive measures to achieve a change in individual behaviour or performance. Such a system will make possible the identification of changes that are necessary and which affect groups or members of the Force as a whole in response to public complaints.

On page 74 the following is found:

> We must begin with a definition of "public complaint" sufficiently comprehensive—

Let me emphasize the words "sufficiently comprehensive". It continues to read:

—to serve the remedial design of the new procedures. Accordingly, we recommend that the Commission's own working definition of a public complaint be adopted.

I would like to provide you, Mr. Speaker, the Marin definition of a complaint. It says:

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police should adopt as their definition of a complaint the following: "Any communication received from a member of the public, either orally or in writing, which criticizes the behaviour of a member of the Force or alleges the failure of the Force itself to meet public expectations".

We all agree that one should be entitled to complain about the conduct of a particular member of the Force. Where we disagree is whether the public can complain or allege the failure of the Force itself to meet public expectations. Surely the public should have a right to complain specifically about certain policies of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

The Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) no doubt would argue, "Well, I am in charge. I will make sure that policies are developed and rules are followed that are in the best interests of Canadians in Canada generally". That would suggest an opinion of himself that perhaps is undeserved.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: I do not know whether Canadians or I—given the Solicitor General's track record with respect to other very reasonable amendments to this legislation—would put our faith in the Solicitor General to ensure that practices are followed in keeping with the best interests of Canadians and that meet public expectations. I think the public should have the opportunity to decide when the Force is not meeting public expectations.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) cited certain situations that might arise that should provide for triggering the complaint mechanism as provided in Bill C-65. I would like to advance one further situation. It was a situation that we in this House dealt with last week concerning certain allegations of sexual harassment by members within the Force. We all know of a newspaper article that originated in British Columbia which alleged that six members of the RCMP had indicated to a particular officer that there was harassment of sorts within a detachment.

We asked the Solicitor General to initiate an external investigation of the complaints. He refused. We indicated how we felt about that refusal in this House and elsewhere.

An Hon. Member: You went galloping off.

Mr. Nunziata: We, in the Opposition, had no alternative but to file a complaint under the Human Rights Act. We filed a third party complaint with respect to those allegations. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) and I were prompted to do so by the inaction of the Government with respect to what we considered to be very serious allegations.

The Solicitor General, speaking for the Government of Canada, decided that it would allow the Force to investigate itself and that it had full faith and confidence that the investigation would be conducted with dispatch and in an objective fashion, notwithstanding that the Force would be investigating itself, notwithstanding that the allegations appeared to be widespread. Obviously the Commissioner of the RCMP got to the Solicitor General. It appears that the Solicitor General often marches to the tune of the Commissioner of the RCMP. At times one wonders whether he exercises independent judgment when it comes to certain matters of extreme importance facing Canada and Canadians generally. In that particular case one would have expected that the Solicitor General would have initiated an external review of the allegations of certain individuals.

The evidence was there to suggest the very serious problem in respect of the role of women in the RCMP. The evidence, uncontradicted, was that in a two-year period some 68 female members joined the force; that within the same period 67 resigned from the force, leaving a net gain of one additional female RCMP member during that two-year period; and that the male resignation rate was five times less. The point I am trying to make is that if one allows for an expanded definition of "complaint", as recommended by the Marin Commission, and given the situation of the allegations of sexual harassment within the RCMP, any Canadian could have filed a complaint and could have triggered the mechanisms provided in Bill C-65 in order to ensure that there was an independent review of the policies and public expectations of the RCMP.

The public expects the RCMP to be non-sexist. The public expects that there will be no harassment, sexual or otherwise, within the RCMP. I see Mr. Speaker is at the edge of his chair. My time is up, but in closing I say that surely the public should have the opportunity to lay a more general complaint against certain practices, including allegations of sexual harassment, or any other general policy of the Force which is not in keeping with the best interests of Canadians. I would hope that the Solicitor General, being the reasonable person he claims to be, will reconsider the particular amendment, regroup with his colleagues behind the curtains, come back and give the amendment unanimous support.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, let me turn briefly, first of all, to the substantive issues which were raised by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). If there is a difference between the presentation which has been made this afternoon by my colleague from Burnaby and the one from the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata), it is that there is some substance in what was said by the Hon. Member for Burnaby, and I think he is entitled to a serious response.

The issue here is whether or not there is merit in a proposal which would allow for general complaints about general matters of policy relating to the RCMP—

Mr. Nunziata: The kid is sensitive; Golden Boy can't take it.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, is there some disturbance in the House?

Mr. Nunziata: Boy, is he sensitive.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, there appears to be a loud noise coming from the other side.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) has the floor. I hope he can finish his part of the debate.

Mr. Beatty: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The issue here is whether or not the commission reviewing public complaints should be looking at broad policy matters and should have the ability, on the basis of a complaint, to initiate such a review, or whether it should be responding to an individual complaint related to an individual case of behaviour on the part of a member of the force. It is certainly possible for this body to take a look at policies which are relevant to a particular specific complaint. Indeed, the specific issue raised by the Hon. Member related to the hiring practices of the force. Obviously, if an allegation were made in a particular case that an injustice had been done or that the behaviour of the Force was improper, they would have the ability to look beyond the immediate circumstances in the case and back to general policy, if they had an influence on the behaviour in the particular instance. I do not think it would be desirable for us to set up a permanent body of inquiry into policy matters within the RCMP. I think it is more appropriate that we should have a complaints commission which, in looking at specific complaints of specific behaviour, would have a chance to review that and to look at any related information it felt was appropriate. There is no question that it would have the ability to make findings which reflect on policy, and so it should.

Let me now turn briefly to the intervention of the Hon. Member for York South-Weston—

Mr. Nunziata: You said you wouldn't.

Mr. Beatty: —which, I say with compassion, was as thoughtful and as intelligent as all the previous interventions he has made today.

Mr. Nunziata: Why respond, then?

Mr. Beatty: It is interesting to listen to the Hon. Member, because again he cited a case in which he exhibited deplorable behaviour two weeks ago, in alleging to speak on behalf of members of the Force and in making a complaint with the Canadian Human Rights Commission in which he cited an individual member of the RCMP without ever having received from her, her consent to do so. What we saw taking place was a gross invasion of the privacy of an individual member of the Force by two irresponsible Members of Parliament.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Beatty: Now there appears to be a sensitive Member on the other side.

Mr. Nunziata: The Solicitor General insists upon misinterpreting facts. Given the fact that he claims to be a reasonable person, I would simply ask that he state the facts as they were. Any Canadian is entitled to file a complaint under the Human Rights Act. If he had the common courtesy to read the Act before he speaks—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that that is not a point of order; it is debate. The Solicitor General has the floor.

Mr. Beatty: The Hon. Member referred to facts. Let us go back on the facts here. The fact is that without consulting with the individual in question—

Mr. Nunziata: I didn't have to, Perrin.

Mr. Beatty: The Hon. Member says that it is not required under the law that he should respect her privacy. The Hon. Member says that it is not required under the law that he should extend some courtesy to the member in question. The Hon. Member says that it is not required under the law that he should respect her most basic rights.

Mr. Nunziata: God, are you obtuse.

Mr. Beatty: Yet, what is at stake here is whether there is an obligation on the part of Members of Parliament to act in a way which respects the rights of other Canadians, or whether the sort of disgraceful behaviour that was exhibited was something which simply should not be tolerated.

Mr. Nunziata: Read the Act.

Mr. Beatty: What is instructive here is that in this particular case, which the Hon. Member cited as justification for building similar provisions into the RCMP Act, after he and the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) went off "half-Coppsed" and filed a complaint purporting to represent the feelings of members of the force, the constable in question specifically said that she wanted no such complaint whatsoever filed. She specifically did that.

Mr. Nunziata: She thanked us for filing the complaint, publicly.

Mr. Beatty: She said that it should be withdrawn. Have they withdrawn it? No. Have they extended an apology to a member of the Force who is a well-regarded member of the force? No. Have they demonstrated any respect for basic human rights? No. Yet, the Hon. Member says that right now Parliament should be amending the RCMP Act to give irresponsible people like the Hon. Member for York South-Weston the ability to invade people's privacy on a continuing basis; the ability to smear the force, as was done in this particular instance; the ability to abrogate the basic rights of individual members of the force, without any respect for the feelings of the members of the Force themselves.

If the Hon. Member wanted to defend the position taken by the Hon. Member for Burnaby, perhaps the very worst example he could cite in support of his case was his own behaviour in the case of the alleged sexual harassment on behalf of members of the force. Certainly the Bill provides, if there are instances where members of the Force believe that they have been subjected to sexual harassment, that they would have the ability to file as complaint and have it fully and fairly investigated. That is the way it should be. However, what the Hon. Member is suggesting is that we should build in a provision which says that in future the Hon. Member for Hamilton East and the Hon. Member for York South-Weston should be able to violate contemptuously the basic rights of Canadians who are members of the RCMP.

Mr. Nunziata: What do you know about rights?

• (1730)

Mr. Beatty: It is precisely on the basis of that behaviour that one would have concerns about building in this sort of provision.

The Hon. Member purports to be speaking on behalf—

Mr. Nunziata: Save that for the Marin Report.

Mr. Beatty: Obviously the Hon. Member is dissatisfied with the presentation he made earlier because he cannot keep silent now and listen to the truth.

He said that we should hear about the facts. Let us indeed hear the facts. About five minutes ago, the Hon. Member—

Mr. Nunziata: Read Marin.

Mr. Beatty: —who cannot listen with his mouth as wide open as it is at the present time, falsely said that the attribution rate among women in the RCMP was five times the rate of that of men.

Mr. Nunziata: That's right, five times.

Mr. Beatty: He repeats it and acknowledges to the Hansard reporter that that is precisely what he said.

Mr. Nunziata: That's what we were told.

Mr. Beatty: That is absolutely false. The attrition rate is twice the rate. The Hon. Member was 250 per cent too high.

Mr. Nunziata: That's not what your officials said.

Mr. Beatty: The Hon. Member would ask if we think it is acceptable for the attrition rate to be twice the rate, forgetting the fact that he gave us a false figure that was two and a half times too high. I certainly do not defend an attribution rate among women that is higher than that among men. Indeed, that is precisely why we are acting to bring in measures to protect the position of women within the Force. If the Hon. Member purports to present facts to the House of Commons, let him do his homework first and let him ensure that what he presents as facts is truthful. If he expects support for his case, he must be able to back it up with the facts.

Mr. Nunziata: Read Marin.

Mr. Beatty: It comes down to a question of basic credibility. Two Members of Parliament were attacking all the members of the Force and the policies of the Force. Two Members of Parliament were depriving an individual and respected member of the Force of her most basic right, the right to privacy and the right to be consulted before her name was used in the way it was. The Hon. Member is making representations with regard to women when it is clear that he simply does not even know what the attribution rate is among members of the Force.

Mr. Nunziata: That's what your officials said. You had better replace your officials then, Perrin.

Mr. Beatty: Yet the Member who has done this in such an irresponsible way is now throwing his support, on the basis of these powerful arguments, to the Hon. Member for Burnaby. It is often said that cases have been won until defence counsel rises to speak. Where the Hon. Member for York South-Weston is concerned, that certainly applies. I do not know whether or not the Hon. Member for Burnaby solicits the support of the Hon. Member for York South-Weston on this matter, but I say on behalf of the Government that the argument that was made by the Hon. Member certainly does not convince us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, in considering Motion No. 9, a motion to amend a new procedure which is being introduced by this Bill, the RCMP public complaints procedure, it seems to me that we should look back to the root of this procedure to see why it is being recommended in the first place. The first police public complaints procedure established in Canada was established in Metropolitan Toronto in the late 1970s. It came about after an incident which occurred in Toronto that caused a great furor, and that was, the shooting of a black man named Buddy Evans by a police officer on the Metropolitan Toronto Police Force.

As a result of the shooting and the subsequent coroner's investigation, racial tensions in Metropolitan Toronto virtually exploded. It was a very tense period of time. People were demonstrating throughout the city. Great crowds were coming before Toronto City Council and various municipal councils in Metropolitan Toronto and great demonstrations were going on in Nathan Phillips Square. In an effort to work out a solution to this situation, the Attorney General of the Province of Ontario proposed a procedure that had been adopted and utilized in some parts of the United States previously, and that was, the citizens' complaint procedure.

This procedure was introduced after a good deal of discussion and negotiation with the various community groups in Metropolitan Toronto, the Police Department, the Police Commission, municipal councillors and the provincial Government. In introducing this procedure, a negotiation occurred in an attempt to balance off the concerns of the citizens and the concerns of the Police Department. There were competing interests and concerns. There was the concern on the part of the public that police officers could do whatever they wanted to do, but there was the concern on the part of police officers that they could very well be shafted by this whole process and be wronged unjustly.

The procedure that was worked out is the same procedure that appears in this Bill, a procedure in which individual complaints dealing with individual officers may be brought before a complaint board to be dealt with and solved on an individual basis and not on a policy basis. It was not an attempt to pillory the entire Police Department or to introduce some procedure whereby one could debate policy. It was simply designed to deal with individual police complaints. That is the procedure that is before us today and it seems to me that that is the procedure we should adopt rather than considering the amendment that has been put forward by the Hon. Member for Burnaby.

If we consider the Hon. Member's amendment, we will tamper with the entire theory of the complaint procedure. We will tamper with the confidence the police and individual citizens have in the procedure. If we destroy that confidence, we will destroy all benefit of this procedure. It has been proven in the past, and certainly in Metropolitan Toronto, that this procedure has solved a really serious problem. We have before us a mechanism by which we can head off serious problems which may occur with the RCMP, and I think we should certainly adopt the Bill as put before us and reject the motion.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment put by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). I would like to deal with two or three reasons for my support.

Let me begin with the question of hiring practices. In my time here, I have supported the concept that Canada is bilingual and I have supported the proposals put by the former and present Governments to encourage more Fracophones to become members of the federal Public Service. I cannot say the same of all Manitoba Members of Parliament who sit on the government side.

I received a complaint recently from one of my consistituents. At a time when the RCMP is encouraging applications and hiring people, he applied to become a member of the RCMP. He met all the qualifications except for one. The RCMP was engaged in an effort to increase the number and percentage of Francophone members of the Force.

I made inquiries about this matter and found that the situation is quite an interesting and complicated one. In Ontario and Quebec, the Provinces of Canada which are the largest in size and population, there are provincial police forces and therefore the RCMP plays a relatively limited role in those two provinces. It deals only with matters which comes under federal jurisdiction. However, in all the other provinces, and particularly in the rural areas, the provinces contract with the RCMP to do all the regular police work.

Many people, not just in Manitoba but in other provinces I am sure, are concerned about the policy of the RCMP to increase rapidly the number of Francophone members. Although roughly 30 per cent of the country's population is Francophone, in terms of the policing which the RCMP carries out in the eight provinces and the territories, the Francophone population is very small. I am not saying they are wrong. I am saying that it was a legitimate question asked by my constituents. It was a difficult problem for me to try to think through. I think it would be helpful for the RCMP, and for the people of Canada, to have an independent review committee look at this type of problem, and not having necessarily to wait for an invidual person to make a complaint.

I would now like to deal with two other matters. I recognize there is a problem with respect to drugs. The illegal use, purchase and distribution of drugs is a tremendously complex problem. I do not pretend to be an expert on the matter, or to have an answer as to how this type of problem can be dealt with. However, I can remember not so many years ago when the public, the courts and police forces considered possession of marijuana, for example, much more seriously than it is now considered. It was the belief that the possession and distribution of marijuana should be dealt with in a much more tough way than it is today. I am sure defence lawyers received many complaints concerning allegations that RCMP officers working in the drug field were frequently involved in entrapment. I repeat, I am not an expert on this matter. I am not prepared to say that, perhaps, the RCMP had to do the things which they did at the time. I suggest to the Minister that when this type of problem arises, an independent review board could look at it and lay down some general principles as to the way the Force should deal with the situation. That would be helpful both to the RCMP and to the public in general.

The last illustration I wish to draw is with respect to complaints which frequently arise from Indian reserves in different parts of the country. I am speaking of complaints from individual members of groups of people who live on the reserves who are not satisfied with the treatment they have received from the RCMP. I recognize that there are tremendous problems with alcoholism, and all sorts of other problems which I will not go into, which occur in and around native reserves. I recognize that the police forces which deal with these problems have an extremely difficult task. However, I suggest to the Minister that if some independent board could look at the complaints and lay down some general policies then it would make things much easier for the RCMP. Their activity would be much more acceptable to the public, particularly to the people who feel that they have been mistreated.

Without prolonging the debate, I have tried to give three illustrations which I think have some merit. I think an independent commission, given the powers which my colleague the Hon. Member for Burnaby has suggested they should be given, would be worth-while. This is an amendment which should be accepted by the Government.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I was not planning to participate in this debate in light of the fact that there are some very able representatives here, both from our caucus and from the NDP caucus. However, I was sitting in my office listening to the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) and I felt it was incumbent upon me to come down to the Chamber, not only to set the record straight but to suggest that the Solicitor General in his about-face—and I would call it a complete about-face—with respect to the issue of sexual harassment in the RCMP shows what hypocritical action he has taken with respect to this issue. In fact, it shows how he has twisted his role as Solicitor General to serve his own political ends.

I make this challenge in the full knowledge that the Solicitor General some two weeks ago said that he was so concerned about published reports, which included comments from six women members of the RCMP who were concerned about the possibility of harassment, that he immediately ordered an inquiry. I remember that that was on a Sunday. The Solicitor General said that he wanted this situation investigated immediately, that these were serious charges and he wanted to move ahead with them. Two days later, when he was faced with questions in the House by the Opposition with respect to the question of harassment as it had been placed before the Subcommittee on Equality Rights, not only did he deny the existence of such allegations, and not only did he challenge us to put forward a name, but when a name, which had been provided as part of a public presentation, was submitted in the House he took the unprecedented and, I believe, illegal step of personally contacting that person to determine what that person's actions would be in respect of a general complaint to the Canadian Human Rights Commission. I ask the Minister how he expects the Canadian public to have any faith in his operation of the RCMP if, in fact, he has shown in other cases this same type of abject irresponsibility and, indeed, total disregard for the law as he did in this particular case.

I felt that there was enough evidence for a general complaint to be laid before the Canadian Human Rights Commission. That position has been supported by people such as Doris Anderson, former President of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, who said that individual officers in the RCMP are afraid to speak out. I do not blame them. If I were a woman in the RCMP who was being harassed, I would not want to speak out either because I would not want to put my individual relationship with the force on the line.

Quite clearly, the combination of events, including the press reports and studies which have been conducted by Professor Linden of the University of Manitoba, which study was commissioned by the office of the Solicitor General, points out that the number of women who quit the Force is at least double that of the number of men who quit. It has been pointed out that the women in the Force have very low morale because they do not receive much support when they raise issues. This was pointed out in statements made before the subcommittee which dealt with equality rights. The Minister has refused to conduct an independent inquiry, or even to seek one from the Human Rights Commission. He has stood in his place in the House and said that he called this woman—and he knows of whom we speak—not once but twice. I ask Hon. Members this: If you were an ordinary constable in the RCMP and you received two calls within a couple of days from the Solicitor General of Canada, would you proceed with your complaint?

Mr. Nunziata: Of course not.

Ms. Copps: I suggest that that phone call was even more heinous—

Mr. Beatty: How do you spell that?

Ms. Copps: h-e-i-n-o-u-s.

Mr. Beatty: I thought it was pronounced "heenous".

Ms. Copps: The Minister knows about what I speak. That phone call was worse than the phone call which was made by the former Solicitor General, which ultimately led to his shuffle out of his position because he had shown himself to be so irresponsible. Elmer MacKay, the former—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order.

Ms. Copps: —Solicitor General received a phone call and met in private with a person involved in the events and about whom we are quite clearly aware. I wish to know why the Solicitor General took it upon himself to call a constable of the RCMP in an attempt—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Is this relevant to the debate?

Ms. Copps: It is absolutely relevant.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I hope the Hon. Member will get back to the motion. I appreciate what is happening here. However, I think the Hon. Member should get back to the motion.

• (1750)

Ms. Copps: The motion deals, Mr. Speaker, with the possibility of an independent review, and quite clearly, when the Solicitor General, has taken the law into his own hands on this issue and has refused to consider any involvement, even from the Canadian Human Rights Commission, with the general problem faced by women in the RCMP he has failed in his responsibility to provide a mechanism for independent review. That is specifically the amendment as proposed by the Hon. Member. It calls not only for an independent review but for the outside capacity to investigate. By hamstringing the powers of review, as is currently the case without this amendment, the Minister and the RCMP will only be allowed to have internal investigations and the review board will be allowed to review that evidence but will not be allowed to conduct its own investigation.

I would suggest that the Minister should be more interested in getting to the bottom of problems within the RCMP and less interested in grandstanding and scoring political points—

An Hon. Member: You should talk.

Ms. Copps: —and less interested in tampering with justice in the way he has done with this particular case—and I will say it outside the House because I think the phone calls the Minister made to that particular constable were totally beyond the call of his duty—

Mr. Nunziata: He harassed her. He deliberately harassed her.

Ms. Copps: —and totally reprehensible.

An Hon. Member: You are out of your mind.

Ms. Copps: So I would suggest that the only way the public will have confidence not only in the RCMP Force as a Force, but also that justice is being done, is to provide a mechanism for independent review through an organization like the Canadian Human Rights Commission, or other similar organizations. That is provided for in this particular amendment.

If the Minister is really concerned about increasing participation of women in the Armed Forces, and if he is interested in looking at issues about the lack of Francophone representation in the Armed Forces—which was raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—he will agree that in order to get to the bottom of some of these problems we sometimes need an outside investigation which looks at the general nature of the problem. By tying this particular Bill to individual complaints or third party complaints about a single specific action, the Minister is saying he does not believe that the Canadian Human Rights Commission should have the right to carry on general investigations.

If the Minister believes that women in the Armed Forces, in the RCMP and in other organizations are afraid to speak out, one way of facilitating the search for information in a general way in order to make positive changes would be to allow an independent external investigation. Without that particular external investigation we can continue to expect that those women who face harassment will remain silent. They will not be able to speak out because of the potential difficulties within the promotional system if they do speak out on their individual cases. All of us know that these problems exist. If we really want to get to the bottom of them, then let us provide for an external mechanism which would not only have the power to review internal investigations but also have the power to investigate in an external way.

I believe that is what this amendment calls for and that is why I support it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 9 standing the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

Motion No. 9 (Mr. Robinson) negatived.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer) moved:

Motion No. 10

That Bill C-65, be amended in Clause 15

(a) by striking out lines 41 and 42 at page 53 and substituting the following therefor:

"has previously investigated, or instituted a hearing to inquire into, the complaint under section".

(b) by striking out line 45 at page 54 and substituting the following therefor:

"with the complaint before the report under subsection (3) or the interim".

"(3) On completion of an investigation under paragraph 45.42(3)(c) or subsection (1), the Commission Chairman shall prepare and send to the Minister and the Commissioner a report in writing setting out such findings and recommendations with respect to the complaint as the Commission Chairman sees fit unless the Commission Chairman has instituted, or intends to institute, a hearing to inquire into the complaint under that paragraph or subsection."

(d) by striking out line 8 at page 58 and substituting the following therefor:

"subsection 45.42(3), 45.43(3) or 45.45(14), the".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is unanimously agreed.

Motion No. 10 (Mr. Towers) agreed to.

That Bill C-65, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 7 to 37 at page 58 and substituting the following therefor:

"45.46 The final decision on action with respect to public complaints will be made by the Public Complaints Commission."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of this motion which in many respects goes to the very heart of this Bill. There are two central elements to the legislation which is now before the House. The first, of course, deals with the question of establishing a grievance procedure to ensure that the neanderthal labour policies which are currently the case within the RCMP are at least brought forward somewhat. The Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) still refuses to give the elementary right to full and free collective bargaining and freedom of association, but that is a debate for another day.

This motion deals with the second element of this question, and that is, who will have the final say on complaints made by the public with respect to activities by members of the RCMP, either individually or in a group. I want to read the motion because I believe it sets out very clearly what our recommendation is "The final decision on action with respect to public complaints will be made by the Public Complaints Commission". As the Bill is now worded, it is the Commissioner who has the final word, so a member of the public who feels agrieved, whether on a policy question or an individual grievance, will file that grievance with the Public Complaints Commission. The Public Complaints Commission will investigate and perhaps hold a hearing and then will make a recommendation to the Commissioner. Following that recommendation, the Commissioner can accept or reject the recommendation. I believe that that totally undermines the integrity of this process. We have heard from a number of witnesses on this point. I would remind Hon. Members of the House of the representations which were made by a very distinguished criminal lawyer from Toronto on this particular motion. I am speaking, of course, of Mr. Clay Ruby. He said that the Government's Bill in leaving the final decision on a complaint by a member of the public against a member of the RCMP to be decided by the RCMP itself is completely unacceptable, and I quote:

> The independent commission of inquiry can be ignored by the RCMP. Based on their track record of ignoring ministerial directives, the law of the land, the Criminal Code and standards of ordinary decency, this does not give one much room for hopeful expectations.
> When will politicians understand that the public is no longer prepared to accept that it is proper, fair or just for a police force to investigate itself and make decisions about what disciplinary action to follow from its own misdeeds?

Of course, Mr. Ruby was referring to the sorry chapter in the history of the RCMP, which was very clearly documented by the McDonald Commission, the incidents of breaches of the law and, in some cases, very serious breaches, by the Security Service Operation Checkmate, for example, involving a series of breaches of criminal law and other federal legislation.

What did the Commissioner of the RCMP do in response to that, Mr. Speaker? He said that there will be no disciplinary action whatsoever. "But even if there is to be disciplinary action", said the Commissioner, "I am not going to tell the public what it is". Surely, in a democratic society that kind of response is not acceptable.

The purpose of this motion is to ensure that at the end of the day, after the complaint has been reviewed by the Public Complaints Commission, after there has been discussion with representatives of the RCMP—perhaps, including the Commissioner—the final decision will be in the hands of the Commission itself. I would note as well that the McDonald Commission very clearly and explicitly opposed the suggestion that it should be the Commissioner of the RCMP who had the final say on complaints. The McDonald Commission stated the following, and I quote:

> In this regard, we part company with the strongly held view within the RCMP and other police forces that the final judge in complaint matters should be the head of the force. In Bill C-50, to which we have previously referred, which was introduced in 1978 but not passed, the traditional approach was maintained.

Then it states:

> But we feel there cannot be public confidence in the complaint procedure if the final arbiter belongs to the force whose conduct is under review.

Surely, that must be the case. Surely, it is not acceptable that the individual in charge of the Force which is being reviewed, the individual in charge of the Force against which a complaint has been laid by a member of the public, should be the person who, at the end of the day, decides whether or not to accept the recommendations of the Public Complaints Commission on that complaint. That makes a mockery of any motion of independent investigation and review of complaints by the public. It undermines the whole thrust of this important step forward involving review by a Public Complaints Commission.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, February 5, consideration of Bill C-65, an Act to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act and other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and Motion No. 11 (Mr. Robinson) (p. 10502).

Mr. Speaker: Motion No. 11 has been moved. Resuming debate?

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 11 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion No. 11 (Mr. Robinson) negatived.

Hon. David Crombie (for the Solicitor General) moved that the Bill, as amended, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a third time; by leave now?

Some Hon. Members: Now.

Hon. David Crombie (for the Solicitor General) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak on behalf of the Government to Bill C-65, an Act to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act. Before reporting on the outcome of the hearings on Bill C-65 at committee stage, I would like to take a few moments to remind Members of the House of the essential features of this proposed legislation.

A most important feature of Bill C-65 is the establishment of the RCMP public complaints commission, and procedures for the handling of complaints by the public against RCMP members. The establishment of the public complaints mechanism is a contemporary response to the need for objective and open handling of complaints, which will undoubtedly command public confidence.

A second important feature of the Bill relates to the establishment of procedures to deal with matters internal to the Force, such as grievances of individual members, disciplinary and discharge matters.

The most significant aspect of these proposed procedures relates to the appeal process and, in particular, to the establishment of an external review committee. This review authority will be external to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and independent of it. It will be able to look into certain grievance decisions, formal disciplinary sanctions and discharge or demotion.

In formulating the proposals in these areas, every effort has been made to balance the interests of the members of the public and of the RCMP against the need for continued effectiveness of the Force. There is not a more respected and efficient police force in the world. This legislation will only serve to enhance the operation of the Force.

During the legislative committee hearings on Bill C-65, which lasted for several weeks, the committee had the benefit of hearing from a number of witnesses who represented a variety of interests in this legislation. These witnesses are to be complimented for their able presentations which very much assisted the committee. Special attention should be paid to the excellent submissions of the Division staff relations representatives who presented the views and concerns of the majority of the members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to Bill C-65. As a consequence of the witness' submissions, a number of important amendments to the Bill were adopted by the legislative committee. I propose to review these amendments briefly for the House at this time.

The first major change to Bill C-65 relates to representation before the external review committee. The Bill originally provided for representation by counsel only. The appropriate sections have now been amended to allow for representation by either counsel or a representative from within the Force at a hearing before the external review committee. This amendment is significant in that it allows those giving evidence before the committee to save substantial costs by being represented by members as opposed to counsel.

A second significant amendment to Bill C-65 relates to public complaints with respect to the conduct of a member of the Force. Previously, Bill C-65 provided that the public could complain about any conduct of an RCMP member. The appropriate sections of Bill C-65 have now been amended to restrict the type of conduct which can form the basis of a complaint to a member's conduct in the performance of any duty or function under the Act.

The purpose of this amendment is to ensure that public complaints relate only to conduct with respect to a member's statutory duties and is based upon the rationale that a member of the Force, like any other citizen, has a right to privacy.

Another amendment adopted in respect of the public complaints process relates to the authority of the Public Complaints Commission to investigate a complaint. In addition to these substantive amendments to Bill C-65, there were a variety of amendments adopted by the committee which, while of a more technical nature, will undoubtedly serve to enhance the legislation as a whole. I am positive that upon passage of Bill C-65, the new amended RCMP Act will represent comprehensive, progressive legislation which will benefit both members of the RCMP and the citizens of Canada alike for many years to come.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind the House that the passage of this Bill has been subject to several delays in the past such that the proposed amendments to the RCMP Act are now long overdue. Accordingly, I would urge Hon. Members of the House to co-operate in ensuring expeditious passage of this Bill so that the RCMP Act may be amended to bring it into line with modern times and with the current needs of the RCMP and its members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member is entitled to questions or comments, or is he rising for debate?

Mr. Robinson: Debate, but I will defer to others who might have questions, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) does have a question?

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary why he did not respond to the representations which were made by the divisional representatives and the association of 17 divisions with respect to the question of ordered statements? As the Parliamentary Secretary knows, the provision for ordered statements is one which has been harshly criticized by members of the RCMP and was, as well, criticized by the Marin Commission in 1974.

I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary could respond as to why the Government did not in fact eliminate the provision for this ordered statement?

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, the Government discussed this matter and decided that it was not in the best interests of either the public or the RCMP to propose that amendment at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Supplementary question?

Mr. Robinson: No, I have a question in another area but perhaps I can defer to my colleague, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, as the Parliamentary Secretary is aware, the Bill deals in part with members of the Force. A motion was moved with respect to the issue of collective bargaining for members of the RCMP. The Chair in its wisdom decided that that particular amendment was not in order, that it went beyond the scope and substance of this particular piece of legislation.

I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary, however, whether his Minister is considering the question of giving to members of the RCMP the same rights as any other Canadian with respect to collective bargaining except, of course, the right to strike? Is the Government at least considering that particular issue? The Parliamentary Secretary indicated in his comments that he wanted to modernize the RCMP and bring it into this century. I believe those were his words. If he is truly sincere, I would suggest to the Parliamentary Secretary that in order to modernize the RCMP and to bring it into this century, collective bargaining is the first step. I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to comment on that issue.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, much discussion was given to this subject in committee and it was my judgment, perhaps, as Parliamentary Secretary during the hearings, that the majority of members did not necessarily want to have collective bargaining. They were satisfied with the methods now used through their divisional representatives.

Further to that, the point did come out that the differential in payment between other police across Canada and the RCMP was less than $500 on the average. If the members of the Force become members of a union or a collective bargaining unit, there would be a grave possibility that that $500 would be lost in union dues.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary on the same point. Given the fact that all other police forces, municipal and provincial, as far as I can tell, belong to organizations which bargain for them with the employer, whether it be the municipality or the province, and given the fact that the bargaining processes deal not just with the question of wages and hours but with grievances, along with everything else, surely the Government would accept the idea that the RCMP, like all other federal Public Service employees, should be permitted to belong to an organization if they so wish? Surely the question of whether it is worth it for them to belong, and whether that $500 would go towards union dues, is a question they should decide as free Canadians rather than having the Government make that decision for them.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member did not hear my earlier comment in answer to a previous question. In our judgment, the majority of the members of the Force are not requesting that kind of legislation at this time. Therefore, being a democratic and open Government, we are not going to push this onto a group of people, especially the people who form the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. That force is not like other police organizations in our country. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police is unique. There is not another Force like it in the country. Certainly we are very conscious of its needs and requests and we react accordingly.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I am puzzled by the answer I received from the Parliamentary Secretary. How does the Department know that a majority of the RCMP officers do not want to belong to a union? If I understand the labour legislation which applies both federally and provincially, when a union or association wants to represent a group of employees, it has to try to sign up the particular group. It has to demonstrate to the Labour Relations Board or, I suppose in this case, it would be the Public Service Staff Relations Board, that it has signed up a majority of the affected people. If there is then any doubt, a vote is called which is supervised by the proper Government agency, and if the majority indicates it wants to belong, it then gets certification.

If, as the Government says, a majority of the RCMP officers do not want to belong, then they could indicate that in a vote and that would be the end of it. But whenever the Government adopts its usual "we know best" paternalistic attitude, which does not apply to any other group of employees except, perhaps, the employees who work on Parliament Hill—and the Government is even proposing to give them the right to collective bargaining—I find it very strange.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is dead wrong. In the presentation made by the division of staff relations representatives—which represents 14,000 members of the RCMP—there was no such request made. I suggest that they represented a majority of the RCMP, and if they wanted any system such as collective bargaining I am sure it would have been in their submission. However, it was not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak at length on Bill C-65. We in the Official Opposition have indicated on a number of occasions that we support the Bill. We supported it in principle at second reading. We took a very active part in committee deliberations. We attempted to improve the legislation. However, for some reason or other the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) and the Government have refused to adopt what we considered to be very good amendments put forward by both Opposition Parties. I have concluded that the Solicitor General is not in charge of the RCMP. In fact, he takes his marching orders from the commissioner. We have found time and time again that he has not exercised independent judgement concerning what would be in the best interests of Canadians. He seems to follow instructions from the commissioner to a "t". For example, yesterday during debate, and I know you were very much interested in the amendments proposed yesterday, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Boudria: He always is.

Mr. Nunziata: You agreed with the Opposition. Well, it appeared that you agreed because you were nodding as I was making my submissions and one can conclude from your nod that you were agreeing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I appreciate very much the Hon. Member and his debate, but I would also appreciate if he would not reflect on whether the Chair agrees or disagrees with anyone in this Chamber. I know the Hon. Member will take that under advisement and act accordingly.

Mr. Nunziata: As Your Honour knows, we on this side of the House have the utmost respect for your rulings and deliberations. While we may not comment on whether or not you agree with us, I want you to know that we in particular always agree with you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: If I may continue? As you know, the legislation was part of the previous Liberal Government's agenda. It is not new legislation. Two previous Solicitors General have introduced different versions of this Bill. The only difference now is that the Liberal Solicitor General was prepared to listen to Canadians who came forward with suggestions to improve the Bill. He came into the discussions in committee with an open mind.

However, time and time again we in the Opposition have found that legislation is introduced in the House, referred to committee, and for all intents and purposes committee deliberations are a farce. People take a lot of time to prepare submissions, as did members of the RCMP in this case. They spent a lot of time, money and effort to research this area. However, for the most part their recommendations are dismissed. I suppose this is because the Government is reluctant to improve legislation.

We all know that the present Solicitor General always wants to be the smartest kid in the class. When someone else comes up with a good suggestion to improve legislation he automatically goes into a negative mode because that would imply he did not think of improving it himself. Notwithstanding that, amendments were made and the Parliamentary Secretary urged us to co-operate. There is no need to urge. We indicated right from the start that we would co-operate. We recognize the majority the Government has, as of September 4, 1984. However, we all know that for a number of reasons Members opposite have frittered away that mandate. It appears they have lost touch with reality. This legislation is another example of that. The Government seems to be insensitive to the needs of Canadians.

I want to speak very briefly to some of the amendments we introduced and which were shot down by the Government. They were good amendments. They would improve an otherwise imperfect piece of legislation. You were listening very attentively, Mr. Speaker, and you know how the Opposition viewed some of those amendments.

The first one concerned whether the RCMP should be able to suspend a member of the Force without full pay and benefits. We tried to get the Solicitor General to reconsider his position. We indicated yesterday, and we repeat ourselves today, that his position would tend to bring the administration of justice into disrepute. By suspending an officer without full pay and benefits we are in effect convicting, condemning and hanging him or her before they have an opportunity for a full and fair hearing before an impartial tribunal. It is common practice that when someone is suspended in the Civil Service they receive full pay and benefits until a final determination is made as to their guilt or innocence. The fundamental principle of our justice system is that all persons are presumed innocent until proven guilty. Yesterday I pointed out the obvious hypocrisy of the Government with respect to that issue.

When the Solicitor General was occupying another portfolio, that of the Minister of National Revenue, he introduced what was entitled a Declaration of Taxpayer Rights. He probably sent one to your office as well. It contained some highfalutin principles. Given his position on this legislation today, you have to question his credibility over what is contained in this Declaration of Taxpayer Rights. He talks about the presumption of honesty. He says taxpayers are entitled to every benefit allowed by the law.

Mr. Boudria: Unless they are RCMP officers.

Mr. Nunziata: Yes, that is the point and it is an excellent point. Why would every other Canadian be entitled to be presumed innocent until proven guilty when RCMP officers are subject to another and lower standard of justice? It does not make sense. It is obviously a position which is inconsistent with that taken by the Solicitor General in his previous portfolio. I will not go on very much longer on this particular point, Mr. Speaker. I think that we have made our concerns known.

• (1130)

To conclude on this point, you are familiar with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, as are all Members in the House. That is the supreme law of Canada now and we should all be very proud of it, indeed. That, too, says that an individual is to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing. Therefore, when the Solicitor General speaks of being entitled to every benefit allowed under the law, surely members of the force should be entitled to the benefits, protections, rights, and freedoms, as enumerated in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Government refused to move on that particular issue.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Marin Commission recommended that an officer should be allowed full pay and benefits when suspended. Not only is suspension without full pay and benefits contrary to the basic principles of justice, it would also create very serious hardship for the member as well as for his or her family. It would deny them the opportunity for a livelihood.

We also moved amendments to limit the period within which an investigation should occur. At least that would force the investigators to get the investigation completed as soon as possible. However, once again, the Solicitor General refused that particular amendment.

The other major area of concern was with respect to the definition of a complaint. As I indicated yesterday, the Marin Commission recommended a more expanded definition of "complaint" in order to allow members of the public to complain generally about certain policies of the Force. Once again, the Government has decided not to adopt the recommendations of the Marin Commission but, instead, to have a very restricted definition of "complaint". Why has the Government taken that position? I indicated earlier that in my view the commissioner is calling the shots rather than the Solicitor General.

Obviously, it is in the best interests of the commissioner not to afford Canadians the opportunity to file a complaint about a general policy. If that were allowed, there would be an independent review of a particular policy of the RCMP. I gave the example of sexual harrassment within the force. Another example is that of high-speed chases, and there are other areas which may be of concern. The commissioner obviously would not like it if Canadians were allowed to do that because it would erode his authority. It would call into question his decision with respect to any particular policy of the Force. Therefore, of course, he does not want to give Canadians the opportunity to make a general complaint about policies of the Force.

Commissioner Marin was looking at the issue objectively in terms of the best interests of Canadians to determine what would be the best form of a citizens' complaint bureau. He felt that Canadians should have the opportunity to complain about policies. That recommendation is at page 74 of the report and I will read it again today because it was a good recommendation. It reads:

> The Royal Canadian Mounted Police should adopt as their definition of a complaint the following: "Any communication received from a member of the public, either orally or in writing, which criticizes the behaviour of a member of the Force or alleges the failure of the Force itself to meet public expectations".

The Marin Commission felt it was important that complaints be defined in such a fashion as to allow Canadians the right to complain if the Force did not meet public expectations. I would submit that the commissioner is not, at times, in a position to objectively determine what the expectations of the public are. We know that the RCMP is a paramilitary organization. I do not want you to misunderstand me, Mr. Speaker. We are very proud of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. It is the finest police force anywhere in the world and I challenge anyone to name a better police force. We are trying to improve something that is already near perfect. We believe that a system which allows for general complaints would improve the public perception of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Marin made that recommendation and it was refused by the Government.

We have found that a number of recommendations of the RCMP division staff relations representatives were not adopted by the Government. I think they were not adopted because the commissioner was not happy with the recommendations so he spoke to the Solicitor General and was able to persuade him to see it his way. Obviously, there was a bias in the submissions of the commissioner. He did not want to have his authority eroded in any way. Some of the amendments suggested by the officers themselves would, I suppose, in some way, erode that authority and the commissioner was not too happy about it. It is obvious that the Solicitor General was once again taking instructions from the commissioner.

I spoke on the issue of suspension without pay. Yesterday I spoke on the issue of the external review committee. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the external review committee will consist of five individuals, and the concern of the RCMP officers was that they wanted some say in the appointment of these individuals in order to put them above suspicion. As you know, Canadians are very seriously concerned about the patronage practised by the Government over the last 16 months, notwithstanding the promises it made during the last election campaign. One cannot have full faith that the Government will appoint people based on merit rather than partisan views.

In their submission the staff relations representatives say that members of the Force and the public expect a balanced, objective, nonpartisan review of matters presented to this external review committee. They suggested that rather than simply allowing the Governor in Council to make the appointments, the Governor in Council should consult with the national executive committee in order to ensure that these individuals are not Party hacks and flacks. That is important, Mr. Speaker.

The legislation that was passed by Parliament in 1984 with regard to the Security Intelligence Service said that the members of the external review board were to be appointed by the Governor in Council in consultation with the Opposition. That was inserted and supported by all members of the Force because it was believed that when dealing with the Security Intelligence Service we could not make partisan appointments of political hacks to review the actions of that service. In order to put it above suspicion it was decided by the previous Liberal administration to consult with the Opposition before appointments were made. Indeed, we were consulted not too many months ago with respect to appointments to the External Review Board for the Security Intelligence Service. The Government sought our opinion, which we gave, and I assume that the New Democratic Party gave their opinion with respect to the proposed candidates for this Board.

Since this is a good system. Why would the Government not follow the example of the Liberal administration with respect to the Security Intelligence Service and say with respect to this legislation dealing with an external review board of RCMP complaints that the Opposition should be consulted about appointments to this External Review Board? That is not to say that the Opposition can veto particular appointments, but at least they are consulted and can ensure that individuals will have a balanced, objective and non-partisan perspective.

In conclusion, we in the Official Opposition support the legislation. It has been a long time in coming. We introduced it when we were in office not so long ago, but for a number of reasons the legislation was not passed. We believe that it is a step in the right direction, and while the RCMP officers themselves do not support every aspect of the legislation, they state in the conclusion of their recommendations that they are speaking for the majority of members of the RCMP and request that Hon. Members fully consider their recommendations and concerns when finalizing the amendments to Bill C-65. They request all-Party support in having this Bill finally passed as it contains benefits to their members and the public.

That sums up the position, but I would conclude by saying that their recommendations were not fully considered by the Government. If the Government adopted their recommendations and the recommendations of the Opposition, this piece of legislation would be better. It is flawed but it is a step in the right direction and we intend to support it.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the comments of the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) with respect to the importance of, according members of the RCMP, the right to full collective bargaining. That is not to suggest that current members of the RCMP would vote for collective bargaining at this point. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mr. Towers) is quite right, that a clear majority of members throughout Canada have opted to support a system of divisional representatives at the present time. I might note that part of the basis for that particular system, however, was a promise made in 1974 that there would be direct representation by members of the RCMP at the bargaining table. That was a promise made under a Liberal Government, a promise that was never kept.

Considering that the Hon. Member has indicated his support for the right to freedom of association and collective bargaining rights for members of the RCMP, why have previous Liberal Governments refused to introduce that fundamental principle of collective bargaining in their legislation? It is all well and good for him to stand up now in Opposition and say that they support collective bargaining rights for members of the RCMP, but the Hon. Member himself indicated that his Party introduced similar legislation on four or five previous occasions, but that each Bill his Government introduced denied members of the RCMP the right to collective bargaining. How can he stand up now and say that his Party supports full and free collective bargaining when, in the next breath, he points out that his Government introduced legislation which denied that fundamental right?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, therein lies the difference between the Liberal Party of Canada and the New Democratic Party of Canada.

An Hon. Member: There is none.

Mr. Nunziata: They come up with a policy and it becomes Party policy which every last member of the New Democratic Party of Canada must follow, notwithstanding whatever happens. They stick to that policy and do not change according to changing times. The NDP are caught in the past. They get caught up in their own rhetoric and policies. Is it any wonder that the NDP will never be in a position to govern in Canada and, indeed, are destined to third place?

On the other hand, the Liberal Party is a Party of reform. We are not slaves to the past but recognize that in changing times one has to continually review policy. The Liberal Party is a Party of thinkers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: Hon. Members opposite laugh. They may joke about it but we in the Liberal Party are constantly reviewing policy.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: It is important to keep in touch with what Canadians are thinking. The Conservative Party, on the other hand, has no direction or policy.

I understand that the Conservatives will hold another convention in March. They get together for the sake of public relations. If you attend our conventions, Mr. Speaker, you will see that we work at our conventions because we are concerned about developing policies in the best interest of Canadians.

In response to the question from the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), I have indicated how I feel about the issue of collective bargaining for members of the Force. I have taken a position and will make every effort to convince my colleagues and other grass roots members of our Party to make it Party policy.

I believe that a principle is at issue. Notwithstanding the fact that a majority of members of the RCMP may not want collective bargaining rights, it is my view that they should be given that right if they decide in the future that they want to bargain as a collective unit. I believe it is a matter of principle and that they should have the right to choose to be represented by a union or association with all the rights accorded to other Canadians. Most other Canadians and other police forces have the right to collective bargaining.

I am not suggesting that the RCMP should have the right to strike, because it is an essential service, but I do not see why its members should not be afforded the right to bargain collectively and to have one organization represent the interests of all members of the Force so they may improve their lot as a unit.

I have indicated my position on the matter. I have asked the Parliamentary Secretary to indicate what the Government's position is. If its position vis-a-vis unions generally is any indication, it is obvious that the Government is opposed to affording the RCMP effective bargaining rights. If you left it up to the Government of Canada today, the Government would outlaw and abolish unions. That is the Government's mindset about organized labour.

I hope I have answered the question, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Comments are over. Debate.

[English]

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I had a number of other questions for my distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata), but I will ask them on another occasion.

I am pleased to rise and participate in third reading debate on this important and long overdue legislation. It set out to accomplish two basic objectives. Initially the purpose of the legislation was to establish a system of review external to the RCMP of the complaints made by members of the Force, a grievance procedure of substance as opposed to the rather paternalistic and Neanderthal labour relations policies which are currently governing the RCMP.

The second major area of concern was the question of complaints made by members of the public about activities, either about the Force generally or about individual members. Those are the two basic objectives of the Bill.

The Bill is based very loosely on recommendations of the Marin Commission which was established in 1974. Your Honour will recall that that commission was established following certain allegations made by a number of disgruntled members of the RCMP about the practices and policies of the Force at that time.

Since the commission issued its report in 1976, almost 10 years ago now, there have been a succession of Bills by Liberal Governments and now the Conservative Government on this question.

There is no question that this legislation does represent an improvement over the status quo. We in the New Democratic Party believe it falls far short of legislation which would truly bring into the twentieth century the practices and policies of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, both in the area of Labour relations and in the area of review of public complaints.

I tabled an amendment, which was ruled out of order. In effect it stated our fundamental concern with respect to the first area on which I have touched, that is, the question of the right to full collective bargaining by members of the RCMP, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Association of 17 Divisions has now been in existence for six years and it includes some 2,800 members of the RCMP. This non-profit organization has been set up to maintain and promote the honour of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and of professional policemen. Its purpose is also to promote, support and defend the status and interests of the Association as well as the well-being and interests of its membership. The Association represents all ranks up to staff sergeant.

[English]

I think it is important at this point in the debate to underline some of the accomplishments of the Association of 17 Divisions. It is certainly accurate to suggest that the association has been more active in the Province of Quebec. Indeed—

[Translation]

Recently, Mr. Speaker, at least 90 per cent of RCMP members in the Province of Quebec voted in favour of collective bargaining rights. They do not want the right to strike, nor did they ever want it. However they are adamant in their quest for the same rights as those enjoyed by all other Canadians, including the right of freedom of association.

I hope the Government will grant these basic rights to RCMP members in the Province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I must also underscore the fact that the Association of 17 Divisions has been the subject of RCMP surveillance. In the past the Association asked for a 1,000-odd-page report prepared by the RCMP Commissioner, but to this day he has refused to release roughly 197 pages to RCMP members. In connection with those pages, Mr. Speaker, we are wondering why the Association of 17 Divisions should even come under surveillance. Why this surveillance of the Association of 17 Divisions?

Mr. Speaker, I insist that the Government must release that information as well as the file on surveillance of the Association and give them to the Association of 17 Divisions.

[English]

The association has sought, as I said, the fundamental right to collective bargaining, a right which is accorded to all other police forces in Canada and which remains denied under the Neanderthal policies of this Government.

Some of the accomplishments of the association have been impressive indeed. It sought the elementary right to counsel for members of the RCMP who were facing disciplinary proceedings. But it had to go to court to obtain that right and the Federal Court said: "Yes, members of the RCMP are entitled to the basic right to counsel".

In 1981 when the former Solicitor General sought to break faith with members of the RCMP on retroactive pay, it was thanks to the commitment and dedication of members of the Association of 17 Divisions that that retroactivity was granted.

I could go on about its accomplishments in pushing for improvements to pensions of widows and widowers of members of the RCMP and other accomplishments, but suffice to say at this point that the association has made a valuable contribution to improving the working conditions within the Force and the recommendations made to the committee should have been heeded.

With respect to the question of external review, it is our position that while this is a step forward, certainly members of the Force should have the right to collective bargaining, a right that was also refused by the previous Government.

We proposed a number of other important amendments as well. We suggested that the provision for ordered statements should be abolished. We suggested that the provisions in the Bill which would allow suspension without pay, sometimes for months on end, were Draconian, unfair and that they should be changed.

[Translation]

In 1974, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Government promised that RCMP members would have the right to be directly represented at the bargaining table. I will read that promise. There were 14 all told, and promise No. 9 was as follows:

[English]

"One divisional representative shall be directly involved in pay negotiation at the bargaining table". What happened to that promise, Mr. Speaker? Eleven years later—

—eleven years later: nothing at all.

[English]

The Government has refused to accept its responsibilities to keep the promises made to members of the RCMP at that time.

There are other changes as well that we sought with respect to the policies, provisions and legislation in this area. A draft code of conduct was tabled in the committee. Let me commend the Minister for having tabled draft regulations. I know that, as a former chairperson of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Statutory Instruments, he recognizes the fundamental importance of the regulatory process. Those regulations would maintain the provision requiring members of the RCMP to notify the commissioner three months before getting involved in a common law relationship or getting married.

There is no other police force in the country, probably no other police force in North America which tells its members, the men and women, that they have to send a note to the commissioner telling him that they are going to get involved in a common law relationship three months beforehand, or telling him three months beforehand that they are going to get married. What kind of Neanderthal and backward labour relations policy is that? It is just one illustration of the kind of policy which is continuing today.

The subcommittee on equality rights heard witnesses from across Canada. It made unanimous and strong recommendations to the Government that the current policy of the RCMP which denies employment to gays and lesbians solely on the basis of their sexual orientation is a policy which is indefensible in this day and age and which certainly should be stricken from the books. Equality in Canada is equality for all, not just equality for those who happen to be heterosexual. The committee heard from a member who, after 18 years of faithful and loyal service to the RCMP, a senior member and officer, was told that because he happened to be gay, he was losing his job, his pension and everything else.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson: I challenge Hon. Members on the Government side to stand up instead of just muttering in the background. I challenge them to stand up and defend that kind of reactionary policy. That kind of policy has no place in Canada today. If the Government does not move forward because of the dinosaurs in the tory caucus, I hope that the courts will insist that this kind of policy has no place in Canadian society today.

I could discuss as well the serious concerns which have been expressed about the role of women within the RCMP; the fact that the turnover rate of women in the RCMP is at least twice as high as that of men. We heard representations in the subcommittee on equality rights that the conditions of women within the force are certainly less than satisfactory. I hope the Force will come into the 20th Century and recognize that women should be treated as full and equal members of the Force.

We also have concerns about the extent to which the Force does not reflect the Canadian mosaic, and the extent to which visible minorities and native people remain under-represented in the Force.

The fundamental concern in respect of the external review process remains. It still denies freedom of association to members of the Force. I am confident that that will be struck down by the courts as being in breach of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, just as other provisions of the Act are in breach of the Charter. The final point with regard to the whole question of external review of grievances is that at the end of the day, after the external review committee has met and considered the grievance, it is still the commissioner himself or herself, although that will take a while in the RCMP, I suspect, who has the final word. The commissioner can reject completely the recommendations made by the external review committee. What kind of grievance procedure is that? Even within the civilian security service there is provision for a grievance procedure which would in fact ensure that members are not at the mercy of the commissioner on those grievances. Provisions of the Bill on external review remain seriously flawed.

A second major area of the Bill is the provisions in respect of public complaints, complaints about either policies of the RCMP generally or with regard to an individual member of the Force. Unfortunately the Bill, as was noted by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston, has not accepted the recommendation of the Marin Commission—and in fact the provisions of previous Bills—which ensured that complaints about general policy matters could in fact be brought before the public complaints commission. It is not good enough to suggest, as the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) suggested yesterday, that individual complaints may give rise to policy questions. If a member of the public has a concern about the resources which are deployed by the RCMP in a particular community, if a member of the public has a concern about a policy matter which perhaps a member of the RCMP individually would not wish to raise, he or she should have the right to raise it directly with the public complaints commission.

I was very pleased that the Government accepted my very important and significant amendment in committee which would give the public complaints commission the right to investigate, independent of the RCMP, complaints which it felt warranted an investigation of an independent nature. My amendment was indeed recommended as well by a number of witnesses who made representations to the committee, including the Canadian Civil Liberties Association. I indicate my support for that decision of the Government and my pleasure that the Government moved forward in this important area of independent investigation of complaints.

The Bill falls far short and indeed makes a mockery of the concept of independent review in one fundamental aspect. After the public complaints commission has conducted its review, has perhaps engaged in independent investigation and has come to the conclusion there has been impropriety or wrongdoing, at the end of the day all it can do is go back to the commissioner and say: "Here you are, Mr. Commissioner, here is our recommendation. You do what you like with it. You can accept it or reject it". It is entirely up to the commissioner. We have internal review of public complaints which flies directly in the face of a fundamental need for external review and a final decision on the part of the public complaints commission itself.

I quoted Clay Ruby on this point in my comments at report stage when I proposed an amendment which would have ensured that the public complaints commission would have had the final say. It is not good enough for a police force to investigate itself and make decisions about what disciplinary action will follow from its own misdeeds. This kind of accountability falls far short of what we in the New Democratic Party believe to be essential.

I would note that the Manitoba Police Commission, under the enlightened administration of that province, brought forward a system which ensures that the final decision on public complaints is indeed in the hands of the Manitoba Police Commission, not in the hands of members of the police. We believe that it is important that there be greater accountability to the contracting provinces and the territories. I note the commitment of the Solicitor General in response to my question in committe that indeed the territories would have representation on this public complaints commission as well.

In looking at the process now, we have to ask ourselves: Given the track record of this commissioner, are we satisfied that he will have the final say on public complaints? I have to say that our answer to that is an unequivocal no, absolutely not. For example, it was this commissioner who, following the revelations of wrongdoings, of illegalities and of breaches of the Criminal Code and other federal statutes, said: "I have examined this", and not only was there no prosecution whatsoever, but not one member of the RCMP was subjected to any form of discipline as a result of those wrongdoings.

Mr. Orlikow: Some of them were promoted.

Mr. Robinson: Indeed, as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) points out, some of those who were involved in these illegalities and wrongdoings were promoted. That is the commissioner who is being given the final say on public complaints. It is the same commissioner who has advocated that the RCMP should have the right of access to all Government records. It is the same commissioner, it has been suggested by a very senior and respected member of the RCMP, Superintendent Al Nowlan, who was well aware in 1977 when he was the commissioner designate that he was misleading the then Solicitor General, the Hon. Francis Fox, in respect of the full scope and nature of wrongdoings. It was not, as Francis Fox told the House in 1977, an isolated incident of wrongdoing. Superintendent Al Nolan has put his reputation on the line and has said that it is his view as a senior member that indeed the commissioner designate, the current commissioner, was well aware at the time that he was deliberately misleading the Minister. I call upon the Justice Committee to give Superintendent Nowlan an opportunity to appear before that committee and to make these very serious allegations before that forum.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are signalling that my time on third reading is coming to an end. I want to reiterate our fundamental concern that while this Bill does represent progress in some respects, it falls short of what should be accorded, both in terms of the basic rights of members of the RCMP, and also in terms of the confidence of Canadians in the public complaints commission.

Mr. Nunziata: The Hon. Member for Burnaby stretches things a little too far.

Mr. Orlikow: It takes one to know one.

Mr. Nunziata: It is obvious that the Hon. Member for Burnaby is using his protection in this House with respect to Superintendent Nowlan. Allegations were made and I would simply call upon the Member for Burnaby to call them allegations. He often speaks of legal principles, about the presumption of innoncence and how one has to protect the innocent in society, yet he referred to Mr. Nowlan's accusations as being reality.

If he is acting responsibly as a parliamentarian and an individual trained in law he should not refer to allegations as fact. I agree that the allegation should have been investigated, but I would simply caution the Member not to use his immunity in order to attack individuals. The Hon. Member has done it before when he accused senior Petro-Canada executives of being CIA spies. He used his parliamentary immunity at committee to do this. He subsequently apologized and we accepted that apology. I would simply ask him to be cautious regarding the use of parliamentary privilege as it affects everyone in this House. When allegations are made they should be referred to as such and not as if they are substantiated facts.

The question I would like to put to the Hon. Member for Burnaby is with respect to his Party's position on Bill C-65. He used phrases such as "seriously flawed, makes a mockery of fundamental review, flies directly in the face, the Bill falls far short of", yet the New Democratic Party intends to support Bill C-65. If the Bill is seriously flawed, as they claim it is, why do they speak with such rhetoric in their opposition to the Bill, yet intend to support it? I mean you cannot whistle and blow at the same time. You either support it or you don't support it.

We have indicated, as far as the Official Opposition is concerned, that we have concerns with respect to the Bill, but they are not fundamental concerns, and we intend to support it. Being an individual of principle, how can the Hon. Member for Burnaby justify his rhetoric and reconcile it with the intent of his Party to support the Bill? I would like to ask him when he speaks, does he speak for the New Democratic Party? I know he often makes it clear that he is not, and that his Members at times wince when he takes particular positions on various subjects, but is he truly speaking for the New Democratic Party?

Mr. Robinson: Unfortunately, I don't have enough time to respond fully to that little rant by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston. If there is one Member out of the 282 Members in this Parliament, who should not lecture anyone about dragging reputations through the mud it is the Member for York South-Weston.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson: I remember day after day as that Member stood in the House and dragged the reputation of the Premier of New Brunswick through the mud based on allegations, which to this day he has not had the courage or integrity to stand up and defend. Don't let him talk in that hypocritcal and phoney manner about dragging reputations through the mud.

The Hon. Member asks, how it is we support this Bill when it is flawed, both in terms of the grievance procedure and in terms of the public complaints process. He is right, the Hon. Member has said that this Bill is largely repeating a Liberal Bill and that Bill was a seriously flawed Bill. We did what we could in committee to improve this legislation. We did what we could at report stage to improve this legislation.

I note that the Liberal Party, and the representative for the Liberal Party who was so concerned about this Bill and, had grave reservations about a number of elements, but, when push came to shove, how many amendments did members of that Party suggest to the Bill at report stage? Did they suggest three or two? No, that Party which was so concerned about this legislation, collective bargaining, improving the grievance procedure, did not suggest one amendment—nothing. Don't let them stand up and sanctimoniously prattle to Members of the House and the public about improving the Bill when they did nothing whatsoever to try to improve the Bill themselves.

Mr. Nunziata: On a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for York South-Weston on what I hope to be a point of order.

Mr. Nunziata: I am alleging that the self-righteous Member for Burnaby is deliberately misleading the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: I am prepared to substantiate my allegations. He indicated to this House that the Liberal—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. I must stop the Member immediately because I believe he may have used—not intentionally—appropriate words in saying "deliberately misleading the House". Maybe the Hon. Member would wish to correct the wording.

Mr. Nunziata: It is obvious that either he was misleading the House or was innocently naive in his submission.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Nunziata: I will withdraw my allegation that he deliberately misled the House, but his words will speak for themselves. He said that the Liberal Party did not do anything to improve the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I regret to interrupt, but may I remind all Members that there are ten minutes reserved, for questions or comments. Perhaps there will be some time left—who knows—after the Member for Burnaby has replied.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to make it very clear that we have attempted to make a number of important amendments, which were successfully defeated by the Government. Our Party certainly feels that, while we recognize the Bill may improve somewhat the status quo, it falls far short of what is acceptable. Indeed, it is like the same old Liberal Bill that was presented, and on that basis we certainly intend to oppose this Bill on division.

I have a copy of the Order Paper in front of me, and I am looking at 11 motions tabled at report stage. I challenge the Member for York South-Weston to point to one of those motions which was set down in the name of the Liberal Party, just one.

Mr. Orlikow: One short question. When he was listing some of the criticism of this Bill which were made by the Equality Now Committee, am I correct in my assumption that a majority of the Members of that committee were Conservative Members and that the committee made unanimous recommendations, which of course Conservatives supported?

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to confirm the statement made by the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). The Equality Now Committee recommendations were made by a committee of seven Members of Parliament. Five of those members were Conservative members from all across Canada; one was a Liberal; and I had the honour to represent the New Democratic Party. Let us only hope that those recommendations will be taken seriously by the Government and not ignored, as has been the case with other committee reports.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, as the Solicitor General who appointed the Marin Commission in 1974, I am pleased to see some of his recommendations implemented in Bill C-65. However, I am extremely disappointed that many of his key recommendations have not been accepted.

In particular, I am disappointed that the very strong recommendations made by the RCMP division representatives in their brief and the Association of 17 Divisions, that there be no suspension unless it be with pay and benefits while a charge against the member in question is pending, were not incorporated into the Bill. The division representatives are duly elected by the men of the RCMP throughout the country. They have a very strong and widely-based support. They recommended that the Bill be amended so that the suspension would be only with pay and benefits. As I said yesterday, it is my firm belief that to suspend any member of the Force pending a charge without pay and benefits is in contravention of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In the Charter is entrenched the principle that one is innocent until proven guilty. If one is innocent until proven guilty, then there is no basis for a person who is simply charged with a disciplinary infraction, or whatever, to have his pay and benefits suspended. I do not want to enter into the hot debate which just took place between my colleague and the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mrs. Champagne: Why not?

Mr. Allmand: No, I will not. I would rather concentrate on the Bill.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby knows, since we were on the legislative committee together, that we presented a good number of amendments to the Bill in committee.

Mr. Robinson: What about in the House?

Mr. Allmand: As the Hon. Member knows, both his amendments and mine were defeated in committee by the overwhelming Conservative majority. One can only bang one's head up against a wall so many times. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Burnaby has a harder head than I.

Mr. Nunziata: No question about that!

Mr. Allmand: Rather than continually formulating amendments which will be voted down without any real consideration by this large Conservative majority, I have better ways to spend my time. It is too bad that those amendments were defeated.

On this particular amendment, there was wide-spread and deep support among the members of the Force. They made that clear before the committee. It was something which was also recommended by the Marin Commission, which spent a good deal of time consulting and studying the issue, not only in Canada with other police forces but outside the country as well.

The other matter the Bill does not deal with, and which I think is unfortunate, is leaving the final decision on public complaints with the Commissioner rather than with an independent authority. That is contrary to all the principles of justice and equity. If one is responsible for the administration of a body, in this case the RCMP, then it is not proper that that person should be the final judge on accusations or complaints made by the public against members of the Force while administering the Force at the same time. That person then becomes both judge and administrator. To me that is not proper. It is unfortunate that the Government has not seen fit to accept an amendment along these lines.

I am pleased to recall that during my term as Solicitor General certain improvements were made to the personnel policy with respect to the RCMP. At that time we brought in, for the first time, overtime pay for members of the Force, changes with respect to the marriage rules and the admittance of women into the Force, and the division representative system was set up. The division representative system was certainly a movement in the right direction. According to some members of the Force it is working well.

However, there is still a difficulty in that the RCMP in many of our large cities must work side-by-side with other police forces on joint efforts. The members of those other police forces have the right to collective bargaining. Collective bargaining has been tried in our police forces in the country for several years. It has not been abused.

At the time of the introduction of the division representative system there was not that much experience with collective bargaining. That was in the mid 1970s. I want to make it clear that I am talking about the right to collective bargaining and not the right to strike. The Association of 17 Divisions has not asked for the right to strike. The other police forces in Canada have the right to collective bargaining and they do not have the right to strike. So we are not debating the right to strike issue. However, after this number of years, having seen what has taken place with other police forces in the country, and in light of the fact that the RCMP must work shoulder-to-shoulder in many cases on drug and organized crime matters with provincial and municipal police forces which have the right to collective bargaining, I believe the time has come for the RCMP to have the right to collective bargaining.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby is right when he says that the Liberal Party did not always take that position. As I have said, we have observed what has happened over the years. By the way, we in the Liberal Party are much more broadly based than those in the NDP. We have a much wider range of opinions. We have people in our Party who always believed in the right to collective bargaining and others who did not.

Ms. Mitchell: So that cancels it out and makes it neutral, then.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I get a great kick out of members of the New Democratic Party. It was an NDP Government in Saskatchewan which came to Ottawa to knock out the entrenchment of women's rights in the Constitution, among other Governments. It was the Blakeney Government with others which did that.

Ms. Mitchell: It was the New Democratic Party which got them in.

Mr. Allmand: Their record is far from unblemished when they have been in power. I had to deal with NDP Governments in Manitoba and in British Columbia with respect to Indian rights matters. Their record was far from clean. However, I do not want to get into this matter. I am being provoked by the group over to my left.

Ms. Mitchell: Tell us about the neutral Liberals.

Mr. Allmand: Apart from that, I do not think they are a bad bunch. However, I would like to continue.

Having observed in the country the experience with collective bargaining by other police forces at the municipal and provincial level, I can see no reason whatsoever for continuing to deny this right to members of the RCMP. Even if we are late in coming to the decision, our decision is still valid today. I hope that when we are in Government, in a few years' time, and introduce a Bill on this subject we will have the support of the NDP and even of the Conservatives.

As I have said, there is some improvement in the Bill. However, there is still much to be done. I referred to some of the matters on which work was still required. It is my hope that the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs—and I see that the Chairman of that committee is in the House—will continue to survey the operations of the RCMP in order that we can be made aware of how these changes are being implemented at the administrative level. Perhaps we could be made aware whether or not they are working and how we can continue to make changes so that members of the Force, and members of the public who have complaints against the Force, be justly treated.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Robinson: I have just a brief question to ask the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), the former Solicitor General. I believe the Hon. Member was Solicitor General at the time the divisional representative system was established in 1974. He will recall that at that time a vote was taken amongst all the members of the RCMP as to whether or not they wanted to have a division representative system established. At the time the vote was taken, 14 specific promises were made to members with respect to the division representative system. Promise number nine, one of the most important promises, was that: "One divisional representative shall be directly involved in pay negotiation at the bargaining table". Eleven years later, that promise remains unfulfilled.

Would the Hon. Member tell us why he, as Solicitor General, when he had the opportunity to keep that promise, refused to do so? Why is it that members of the RCMP are today still waiting for that promise he made on behalf of his Government in 1974 to be kept?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member. I am extremely disappointed that that commitment was not kept. The divisional representative system was started around 1974-1975, and that was one of the commitments which was made. I was Solicitor General at the time, not President of the Treasury Board, and perhaps some day the Hon. Member will have an opportunity to know how things work within Cabinet.

An Hon. Member: Not unless he becomes a Conservative.

Mr. Allmand: There is push-and-pull, bargaining and lobbying. I cannot reveal what happens in Cabinet, but I myself have raised that question over the years following my tenure as Solicitor General, both as a backbencher on the government side and in hearings in committee on this particular Bill. I asked why representatives of the division were not present at the Treasury Board hearings on this issue. I think the Hon. Member is completely right. I support that principle and we have to continue to work within our Party, within Parliament and in the Treasury Board to get it accepted.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in participating in this debate, I would like to say that had the RCMP still had the responsibility for the security service, which it had for so many years, this debate would have been much lengthier, and we would have been much more critical because, along with many other Canadians, I have always had very grave reservations about the activities of the RCMP, particularly with respect to the secrecy upon which it insisted. I am still not satisfied with the secrecy insisted upon by the present service, having to do with matters which occurred 50 and 60 years ago, but this is not the time to debate that.

This Bill is based, somewhat loosely, on the recommendations of the Marin Commission. Justice Marin was appointed by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) when he was the Solicitor General because of many complaints which were received. The Marin Commission was established in 1976 to study proposals for creating a public complaints bureau in the RCMP and to introduce a formal grievance procedure for members of the Force.

Since the commission issued its report almost 10 years ago, successive Liberal and Conservative Solicitors General have introduced legislation into the House. While the particular version presented by the current Solicitor General does represent an improvement on the status quo, as indicated by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), there still remains a number of outstanding issues which we have addressed throughout the committee process, and in the House, some of which I would like to put on the record.

These issues focus on two broad areas; first, the degree to which the public complaints commission has any substantive independence and, second, with respect to the grievance procedure. We have questioned its integrity on the basis that the Bill will vest final decision-making authority on disciplinary action with the commissioner of the RCMP as opposed to giving the final authority to the grievance committee.

In the course of the committee hearings, presentations were made by the Association of 17 Divisions, an organization representing almost 3,000 members of the Force. Its presentation was particularly instructive on the flaws inherent in the Bill's grievance procedure.

Similarly, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, and its chief spokesperson, Alan Borovoy, raised key concerns with regard to the problems in the Government's proposal for a public complaints commission as outlined in the present Bill.

The major shortcoming in the Government's proposal for the public complaints commission, with which it has refused to deal, is the final decision-making power with respect to any complaint from the public resides with the commissioner of the RCMP. Section 45.46(2) makes this clear. This overriding authority granted to the commissioner is a departure from the spirit and letter of the Marin report. Justice Marin was unequivocal about this aspect of the process. He stated, and I quote:

> The principal requirement of any credible reviewing authority is that it enjoy the confidence of both the public on whose behalf it is acting and the Force whose actions it is reviewing. Such confidence is possible, in our opinion, if this authority is visibly independent from the RCMP and responsible directly to Parliament rather than to the Government of the Day . . . The need for a visibly independent body is based on perceptions held by many who have difficulty in understanding how the Force can be both supervisor and final abiter for public complaints.

That power given to the RCMP, particularly the commissioner, is, as far as I can tell, not given to any other person or body in this country. Regrettably, Bill C-65 rejects the arguments put forward by Mr. Justice Marin. Witnesses who appeared before the Legislative Committee pointed out that the commissioner's ultimately determinant role in the complainants' process may well deter the general public from reporting abuses or complaints, in the knowledge that there will be no outside investigation with substantive decision-making powers about appropriate follow-up action.

In this context, Alan Borovoy of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association stressed the need for an independent investigative role for the public complaints commission. He argued that only independent investigations would ensure that a thorough and partial investigation of complaints is made and, equally important, that such investigations are perceived as independent and impartial. To this end, the Hon. Member for Burnaby proposed an important amendment which would empower the public complaints commission to conduct investigations of complaints where it deemed appropriate. The commission could then use its own staff to investigate a complaint with the power to subpoena witnesses and documents.

Clearly, this amendment, making explicit the investigative powers of the public complaints commission, would have been an important addition to the Bill. However, the broader problem of the final authority of the RCMP commissioner remains. An amendment to deal with this issue was defeated by the Conservatives in committee.

To improve the complaints process, we have also argued that the Bill should impose a reasonable time limit in dealing with public complaints, or at least ensure that a comprehensive status report is sent to the complainant. Members of the public who have made the effort to file a complaint should be kept informed of the progress of their file.

Another important concern is that the Bill does not permit the public to make complaints with respect to general policy concerns about the RCMP, as well as about specific conduct arising out of isolated incidents. I do not want to repeat the arguments I made yesterday, but I remind Members that I gave illustrations of the relationship between the RCMP and native people on reserves, the role of the RCMP in entrapment in drug cases, and several others.

As addressed in one of our amendments, the issue here is to facilitate the investigation of complaints, such as the hiring policy of the RCMP, or the nature of police services provided, for example, in remote communities. Let me point out there are virtually no members of visible minorities in Canada who are members of the RCMP. There are few, if any, members of the RCMP who are of native origin. That is amazing given the important policing functions the RCMP has regarding native people. I am happy to see the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crosbie) agreeing with me.

Both of these very legitimate issues require that the definition of a complaint be broadened in a way which would permit more policy-oriented issues to be raised by the public and investigated by the commission. The Marin Report anticipated such concerns would fall within the mandate of the commission. In sum, our basic concerns about the public complaints commission are threefold: That the final say on complaints reside with the commission, not the RCMP commissioner; that the RCMP be required to issue a status report to the complainant and, in any event, a time limit be imposed on the investigation; that the definition of a complaint be broadened to allow for policy or administrative concerns to be investigated by the commission.

Regarding the grievance procedure, we believe the second major part of the Bill deals with the establishment of a formal grievance procedure for members of the Force. Fundamentally, the main thrust of our criticisms of this section of the Bill echo the concerns of the Association of 17 Divisions. Their spokesperson came before the committee and argued forcefully that it is time, indeed past time, that members of the Force were entitled to collective bargaining with independent, binding arbitration of grievances, including dismissal, suspension or financial penalties. Such arbitration would be handled by the Public Service Staff Relations Board, similar to the provisions for the Civilian Security Intelligence Service. Why should the Government deny to members of the RCMP what it has given to members of the CSIS by way of labour protection?

The Government refuses to listen to these eminently sensible proposals which would bring labour practices in the RCMP in line with all other major police forces in North America. While I am not a lawyer, I am certain that if RCMP officers take this case to court, given the Charter section which guarantees freedom of association, the Government will be ordered to permit RCMP officers to form an association if they so desire. That simply means the Government will have to pay a substantial amount of money to lawyers to defend the indefensible position it is taking. For a Government concerned about the deficit, that seems to me to be a pretty stupid path to follow.

In light of the Government's unwillingness to move in this important area, we proposed a number of less sweeping measures designed to tighten protection for members of the Force.

We find unacceptable the provisions which allow for suspension of members without pay and benefits. As it stands now, the Bill flies in the face of the fundamental principle of presumption of innocence. That principle has always been part of our system of justice, we believe, and it is certainly part of our Constitution.

A member of the Force could be suspended by the RCMP commissioner for a year or more, and then be found innocent of the alleged offence or wrong-doing. In the meantime, this person, suspended without pay, may have been forced to sell his or her house, find another job, and certainly not be in a position to bear the costs of legal counsel to ensure adequate representation. In fact, the Association of 17 Divisions cited the example of a member of the Force who, for more than two years, was forced to live on unemployment insurance and savings to support his family. As it turned out, all charges were dropped. Yet great hardship was forced upon the member and his family. We fully support the Association's argument that there should be guarantees written into this Bill to ensure that such unfair situations cannot arise again in the future.

Similar to the major flaw in the public complaints process, the grievance procedure grants the final word on grievances and appeals to the RCMP commissioner. The final say on serious grievances should be with the external review committee, assuming that collective bargaining under the Public Service Staff Relations Act is not accepted or ordered by the courts.

In this context, the Association of 17 Divisions has made three basic points which the Solicitor General has unfortunately chosen to ignore. The first is that the commissioner not constitute the final level of appeal in the grievance process. Secondly, that there be provisions enabling a member to appeal the commissioner's decision to an independent arbitrator. Thirdly, that the RCMP Act be brought in line with the Canada Labour Code and the usual labour practices concerning the submission and adjudication of grievances.

In addition to this fundamental point, we argue that there should be a time limit on the rendering of decisions with respect to grievances. This would guard against excessive delays on the part of the commissioner which cause considerable inconvenience and possibly financial hardship to members concerned. With the right to collective bargaining denied, we proposed an amendment, rejected by the Government, which would permit group grievances to be launched by members of the Force. This provision would allow individual members to speak on behalf of a number of fellow officers in situations where a particular policy or administrative regulation has a similar impact on an entire detachment.

In conclusion, we accept that Bill C-65 is an improvement on the status quo. It codifies rules for grievances and public complaints. However, throughout the committee process the NDP argued that significant amendments are necessary to strengthen this legislation to ensure that the grievance and public complaints process command the respect of members of the Force and the general public. It simply is not acceptable for Parliament to send out the message, in the words of one expert, that it is proper, fair or just for a police force to investigate itself and make decisions about what disciplinary action to follow from its own misdeeds. Clayton Ruby said that in reference to an earlier version of this Bill. Neither is it acceptable to deny, as this Bill does, the right to collective bargaining for members of the Force. We in the NDP take issue with the Government's in-house approach to grievance adjudication and public complaints investigation. We made clear our support for those groups and individual Canadians who believe that there should be substantive independence for the public complaints committee, and that there should be full collective bargaining for members of the RCMP.

As my colleagues indicated, despite the fact this Bill is an improvement over the status quo, we believe it is still fatally flawed in many respects and we do not propose to support it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Schellenberg): Questions or comments?

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, after that excellent speech I would like to ask the Hon. Member to elaborate on some concerns he raised in his remarks regarding the Canadian Civil Liberties Association and the role of the commissioner in having the final say. As well, the Hon. Member may wish to elaborate on the comments he made with regard to the language question. He raised some concerns yesterday, and anyone who did not pick up on them yesterday may be watching today. I am concerned, in particular, about the element of leaving the final say with the commissioner. Perhaps the Hon. Member could comment on that.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that if the final say is left to the commissioner, as it is in this Bill, the RCMP, and particularly the commissioner, becomes the complainant, prosecutor, and judge. It seems to me that no individual should have that kind of power. We have a division of authority for everyone else. I have respect for the RCMP and considerable respect for the present Commissioner in particular, however, I do not think that even he should have that kind of power.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): On division. Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

EXCISE TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, January 31, 1986, consideration of Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and Motion No. 19 (Mr. de Jong) (p. 10322).

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I am trying to get my notes straight on this. I have in front of me Motion No. 20 which strikes out lines 34 to 43 at page 112. It deals with prescription drugs and health goods. Am I correct, Mr. Speaker? Are we dealing with Motion No. 20? I was under the impression that Motion No. 19 had been dealt with in the previous sitting. I am, however, prepared to proceed to discuss that motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): We are dealing with Motion No. 19.

Mr. de Jong: I am sorry, I thought Motion No. 19 was dealt with previously.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. If I understood correctly, Motion No. 19 having been dealt with, I will put the question to the House. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. de Jong: I am sorry, we are still dealing with Motion No. 19, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): We are resuming debate on Motion No. 19. Maybe the Hon. Member has already addressed Motion No. 19.

Mr. de Jong: No, no, I have not. I was, unfortunately, out of the city at that time, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am sorry to call the Hon. Member to order, but there is some difficulty due to the fact that the Hon. Member moved the motion. There would, therefore, be a necessity for unanimous consent if the Hon. Member wishes to speak to the motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong).

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, this is not a major amendment, although it is important to the people affected. The amendment seeks to exempt blind people with seeing-eye dogs from paying the tax on dog food. In terms of revenue gathering, I am sure that it is a very insignificant amount in relation to the several billions of dollars that Bill C-80 will raise for the Government. Exempting blind people from having to pay the tax on dog food is a humane gesture with which, I think, most Members of the House would agree. Government Members who spoke on this in committee generally agreed that blind people should in fact be exempted.

It was pointed out to me after the committee meeting by one of the officials of the Department of Finance that blind people are able to deduct dog food from their income tax. I wonder how many blind people do pay income tax. I suggest that most blind people are poor and that they do not pay much income tax. Therefore, an income tax deduction is not very meaningful to them.

Another area which we would like to have exempted from the tax is feed for horses. Many horses in the country are still used for productive purposes. Horses are still used in the lumbering industry. Religious groups such as the Mennonites and Hutterites still use horses. We are of the opinion that putting a tax on food for horses is wrong.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we are hoping that the Government will accept our amendment in the name of humanity as well as common sense to show that, while it is interested in gathering revenues, it will stop taxing food for guide dogs and for horses used for productive processes. I hope the Government Members will find this amendment acceptable.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak briefly on Motion No. 19 moved by the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party which refers to tax on food for guide dogs, and for horses which are used in productive purposes such as farming and logging. I certainly support that motion because we still use horses in the logging industry in my province. They are also used for other purposes. In the fishing industry we use horses for raking Irish moss. This is an excellent motion which I hope Government Members will support. It was obviously an oversight in the original legislation. The Government should in no way be taxing food for guide dogs used by blind people because those dogs are a very necessary part of the lives of those people.

I think I could even go a little further and refer to ordinary pets. An awful lot of older people spend a great amount of time with their pets. Many older people do not have families close by and, to some degree, their pet becomes very much a part of their family. I do not think we should put any extra burden on people who are finding it very difficult to get along. I certainly would support this motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. The Hon. Member may resume his debate this afternoon. It now being one o'clock p.m., we will adjourn until two o'clock p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

EXPORTATION OF FOSSILS TO HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Party has long been considered a party of dinosaurs so I am sure that Tory Members will feel a certain kinship with the latest Tory scandal that I have unearthed.

We all know that the Progressive Conservatives have skeletons in their closets going back many, many years. This latest scandal sets a new record for Tory scandals in that it was 200 million years in the making. That is even older than the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen).

The scandal I am referring to is "fossilgate". Last week an announcement was made of a major find of rare fossils near Parrsboro, Nova Scotia. Following this important find, three tons of fossil specimens were illegally shipped to Harvard University in Boston, contrary to the Cultural Property Export and Import Act.

In all the excitement surrounding the discovery, no permit was applied for or granted. I sincerely hope that no harm will come to Canadian heritage in this case and that these fossils will be returned to Nova Scotia after they have been processed and studied.

I ask the Government be more vigilant about making sure that those who need to be aware of the Cultural Property Export and Import Act are made aware of it. We must do everything possible to encourage scientific discovery in Canada, but we must also ensure that our national heritage is protected.

NATIVE PEOPLES

EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the provision of education to the people of Canada should not be a privilege for those who can afford it, or those fortunate enough to reside in an area of Canada where the population is concentrated. It must be considered a right of all Canadians to be able to receive the education we all need in this ever changing world.

At a recent conference of school committee chairmen looking into special education for native communities, the chiefs raised some very alarming concerns. Among the 19 schools in one part of the Nishnawbe-Aski area of northern Ontario, there is only one gymnasium, one home economics space, and one library. There is not a single science or laboratory facility.

The chiefs also pointed out that during this current school year, the communities of Lac Seul, Sachigo, and Kasibonika had to delay their school openings by at least a month due to repairs. In the community of Wapekeka it has been five years since the school burned down in 1981. No new school has yet been built. The children have missed classes and have been educated in temporary facilities.

Furthermore, it appears that there is no official policy on native language education in Ontario.

The education of native children is both a treaty right and a moral responsibility of this House and the country. The Government must act immediately to upgrade standards to meet these pressing needs.

REFUGEES

FORMER INDIAN CONSULATE EMPLOYEE'S APPLICATION FOR REFUGEE STATUS

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, in mid-January of this year an official of the Indian Consulate-General in Toronto, Mr. Inderjit Singh Bindra, set out to obtain refugee status in Canada. Mr. Bindra decided to give up his diplomatic standing and, in effect, defect to Canada rather than follow the orders of his superiors which were to infiltrate a Sikh temple in Toronto and to organize events which would discredit the Sikh community in Canada.

A spokesman of the India High Commission in Ottawa discredited Mr. Bindra by saying that this was only a ploy by him so that his family could settle in Canada.

The Government of India is highly suspect in this case. One only has to recall the violence of June, 1984, when Indian troops descended upon the Sikh religions holiest shrine, Amritsar's Golden Temple, in a bloody assault upon the Sikh minority, a minority that is struggling for an autonomous homeland.

Mr. Bindra, a Sikh, and his family believe that their lives are in grave danger. That is why they do not wish to return to India. The Bindra family are legitimate refugees in the truest sense and I call upon the Government to do everything in its power to help them remain here, free of the grievous harm that will surely befall them if they are forced to return to India.

FISHERIES

IMPORTANCE OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETINGS

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): As the member for Gaspé in the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to the first federal-provincial meeting which was held in Quebec city on Friday, January 24, 1986, between my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), and the Quebec Minister responsible for Fisheries. I would like to emphasize the importance of this meeting for the fishermen in my riding, in view of the fact that 60 per cent of all the fishing in Quebec is done in the Gaspé riding. This first contact between the two levels of Government was marked by cordiality and a determination to co-operate. In line with our policy of national reconciliation, the purpose of this meeting was to foster positive cooperation between the two Ministers. This approach will be reflected in their respective departments and make it possible for their officials to consult, exchange, and discuss various issues of common interest.

The Ministers have concluded that their officials should strive first and foremost to eliminate the duplication of Government programs and services, while harmonizing their respective policies and planning development agreements.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, both ministers unanimously agreed on the need to ensure the quality of sea products. There exist now various methods and programs to improve the quality of fish, and it is not—

Mr. Speaker: I must regretfully interrupt the Hon. Member, since the time allotted to him has expired.

EQUALITY RIGHTS

COMMITTEE'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Government must respond by February 25 to the report of the parliamentary committee on equality rights which held hearings from Cape Spear, Newfoundland, to Vancouver, British Columbia. We have heard rumours that the Government is having difficulties in obtaining consensus from its caucus on the 85 recommendations that were unanimously agreed to by the all-party parliamentary committee.

As I have said before, and as others on the committee have said, the recommendations of this committee should not be buffeted about by the prevailing political wind. Issues of personal freedom are simply too sacred and too important to be ignored on a partisan basis.

Discrimination based on sexual orientation must be eliminated. Women should be able, if they wish, to participate alongside men in the Canadian Armed Forces in the interests of their country. Adequate, accessible, and affordable child care services must be available, where desired, by all Canadian parents.

We should not have to fight to achieve equality for all in 1986. It seems from my vantage point, Mr. Speaker, that the enemies of equality will smile and smile, and study you to death. Sometimes we are called upon to speak out for principles, even if they are not politically popular.

Canadians hope to hear the Government say that it is prepared to fight for our Charter of Rights to make it a real bastion of equality, humanity, and decency for all Canadians.

ENERGY

PRICE OF CRUDE OIL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, the Bank of Montreal has just published a report on the situation of the building industry in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, this report shows that there will be more growth in the housing sector in Quebec than anywhere else in Canada in the coming months.

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that not so long ago, so-called experts, of which a number are now warming the benches opposite, forecast a decrease in activity in this sector. As usual, they were wrong. We have witnessed just the opposite, a substantial increase, since housing starts have gone up from 42,000 units in 1984 to 48,000 in 1985.

According to this report, the outlook and the recovery in this sector had not been this favourable for many years. For instance, housing starts have more than doubled since 1982.

Mr. Speaker, these figures and many others just as favourable confirm the fact that Quebecers, like all Canadians, have regained their confidence in the future.

Our colleagues opposite would be well advised to recognize the many achievements of the Government in all fields of activity instead of sinking to partisan politics as the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (M. Malépart) enjoys doing.

TRADE

FOOTWEAR AND CLOTHING IMPORTS FROM EUROPEAN COUNTRIES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, despite factory shutdowns in Ontario and in Quebec since most footwear quotas were dropped, the Government has now surrendered more jobs by giving the European Community exemptions from various remaining restrictions. In addition, the Government has given the European countries special import rights for some clothing items as well.

How can the Government explain this surrender? More important, is this surrender in the context of the European Community a sign of how weak we will be when it comes to our negotiations on free trade with the United States? We have already seen an incompetence on the part of the Government in sorting out with the provinces, the Canadian provinces themselves, methods of organizing strategy and developing a mandate. We foresee a future of disaster as the Government carries forward these negotiations with the United States. I have to ask, too, if this give-away to the European community—

THE ECONOMY

SUPPORT FOR EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—INTERVENTION BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the House to the courage shown by Mr. Wilson, our Minister of Finance, in allowing the Bank of Canada to make a significant intervention in support of the Canadian dollar, a move which the Liberals had never done. Indeed, $2.5 billion have been made available to that end.

Private and public sector corporations will benefit with major decrease in the cost of their long-term borrowings of foreign funds.

That intervention was also needed to improve the viability of our bilateral trade talks with the United States.

Let us keep in mind, Mr. Speaker, that the drop in the value of the dollar was engineered by the Liberals. Because of their socialist programs, they caused a drop in our national productivity and hence a reduction in our exports.

The deficit accumulated by the Liberals has discouraged our business people.

The action taken by the Minister of Finance will put an end to that erosion of the value of the Canadian dollar, and put a stop to the short selling of Canadian dollars by speculators of a rather liberal character.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

REPRESENTATIONS CONCERNING REOPENING OF DESBIENS PLANT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Last week, Mr. Speaker, I accompanied my leader in a tour of the Saguenay region, and we visited the ridings of Chicoutimi, Jonquière, Lac-Saint-Jean, Roberval, Quebec and Lévis.

Mr. Speaker, I have to tell you and the House that the residents of the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean region are wondering whether they are represented here in Ottawa. Somebody in the riding of Chicoutimi even asked me whether the Member is a man or a woman. I have no idea, I have never seen that Member in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, we met with the employees of the Desbiens plant and I can say that those people will be here next week despite the fact that the Hon. Member for Roberval (Mr. Bouchard) threatened them in an attempt to prevent them from asking Liberal or NDP Members to defend their rights. I commend these people who had the courage to call me. They will be here next week to meet with the Members from the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean region and try to find a way to re-open that plant.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

WHEELCHAIR ATHLETE'S WORLD TOUR

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, February 10 marks the day that wheelchair athlete Rick Hanson completes the half-way point of his "man-in-motion-"world tour. On that day he will arrive in Melbourne, Australia, having travelled exactly one-half the circumference of the globe. He will finish his monumental journey in the spring of 1987 in Vancouver, the city where it all began in March, 1985. He will have visited 33 countries, and will hopefully have reached his goal of raising $10 million for spinal cord research. The funds raised so far remain in the countries he passes through to benefit the disabled living there.

Perhaps even more important, he will have raised the consciousness of the entire world to the plight of the disabled who are denied access to many of the privileges of everyday life because of their disability. In the process he is providing an example of hope for many, many thousands whose lives he touches.

In the coming months he will visit China, Korea, and Japan, and in the fall of this year he will start the final leg of his journey in Newfoundland. His 4,000-mile trek from coast to coast may well be his greatest challenge as he faces the severe weather of a Canadian winter. In all it is estimated that his wheels will have made a total of six million revolutions when his journey is completed.

I ask all Members of the House, all Hon. Senators and all Canadians to make his odyssey a worth-while experience. I call upon all Canadians to acknowledge him as a true hero and to support his cause with all the generosity which can be found in our hearts.

INCOME TAX

REMOVAL OF NORTHERN BENEFITS REMISSION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, on January I the provision which remitted tax on certain allowances and benefits paid to persons residing in the North and in other isolated communities such as Wabush in Labrador was removed. There is little or no positive economic change in northern communities, and the arguments previously put forward are still valid for retaining the remission order. The economy in northern Canada is reeling from the downturn in Canada's resource industries. The northern tax allowances should immediately be reinstated to help these mostly single industry communities cope with this economic downturn.

● (1415)

I would urge that the Government reinstate the remission provision and consult with northern communities such as Wabush the manner in which the present system can be improved. The Government promised to consult constantly with Canadians. It should immediately honour this commitment by meeting with representatives of northern communities to sort out this problem.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POLICIES—DATE OF BUDGET PRESENTATION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Minister has bought massive amounts of Canadian dollars. He has intervened to the extent of $2.4 billion in borrowing in U.S. funds. He knows that he can buy dollars, but he also knows that he cannot buy confidence. A line of credit is no substitute for some coherent fiscal and monetary policy. Would the Minister today tell us the date when he will bring in his Budget, or at least assure us that it will be brought in before the end of February?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the simple answer to the Hon. Member's question is it will be brought in before the end of February. I think the comments that he was making about the coherence of the policy of the Government are totally unfounded. The policy that we have been following to deal with the fiscal problem that we were faced with when we took office a year and a half ago has been regarded as being responsible and absolutely necessary. As I have indicated before in the House, this will continue.

As far as monetary policy is concerned, again we have demonstrated that the monetary policy is designed to lead to non-inflationary growth, and that is exactly what we have had over this past year. Inflation is stable at 4 per cent, and Canada has had the best growth of any of the western industrialized countries, creating 450,000 jobs. That, Mr. Speaker, is sound policy.

INCREASE IN BANK RATE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, indeed inflation has been steadied, thanks to the initiatives of the preceding Government. If everything is as rosy as the Minister pretends perhaps he can tell us why the bank rate has again increased. We have had an increase today of two-thirds of a per cent. Would he also confirm to the House that the borrowings that he is engaged in in order to protect the dollar will involve additional costs to Canadian taxpayers in present dollar calculations of close to $1 billion?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): I don't think the Hon. Member should use that type of alarmist figures without having access to the source of those figures. That will come at the time the Budget is brought down. In response to the increase in the bank rate today, that is a valid question. I will be addressing that point in a statement that I propose to make at the end of Question Period today. I would just like to assure him at this point that the combination of our actions in the exchange market, and the interest rate market, are an important combination in dealing with speculative activity which we felt was unnecessary and certainly inappropriate to the economic circumstances that we are in at present.

REQUEST THAT INTEREST RATES BE ROLLED BACK

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, on my last supplementary might I just say that the Minister has had the courtesy of delivering that statement to me, which I appreciate, but does the Minister agree—as he must, in fact—that each 1 per cent increase in the interest rate—we have had a two-third per cent increase today—costs the average Canadian family renewing a mortgage approximately $600 per year. That is $50 per month. In view of that why doesn't he roll back the interest rates which were jacked up to protect the dollar, as part of the very expensive initiatives which he has taken in his exchange transactions?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important again to repeat myself. This has to be seen as a package of initiatives designed to meet a specific circumstance. I will be commenting on those initiatives later on today. The initiatives that we have taken over the past couple of days are designed to bring back a degree or normality to the economic situation in this country. That degree of normality had been knocked off track by the speculative pressures in the market-place, which we felt important to meet head-on. That is what we have done.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CALCULATION OF PENSION AS INCOME

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I wish to give the Minister another chance to withdraw her cruel and insensitive policy to cut unemployment insurance benefits to thousands of Canadians who have taken early retirement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: She is now being sued in the courts, and a former Conservative Minister of National Defence has publicly criticized her policy. I want to ask her once again whether or not she will suspend this retroactive policy to cut unemployment insurance benefits to thousands of early-retired Canadians and refer the matter to the Forget Commission, which she herself appointed to study the entire unemployment insurance system. Will the Minister do that?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked this question on a number of occasions.

Ms. Copps: And never got an answer.

Miss MacDonald: I have explained to him on a number of occasions the way in which this regulation is being implemented. I have also explained to him that the whole question of premiums, who pays them and under what conditions, has been referred to the Forget Commission which will make recommendations to me. As I have said to the Hon. Member, I await the recommendations of the Commission.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Through her policy, Mr. Speaker, she has stolen from thousands of Canadians the unemployment insurance benefits for which they have been paying for a number of years.

Now then, how can she justify the existence of the Forget Commission after changing the unemployment insurance regulations even before the commission has had time to publish its report? Under such circumstances, how can she justify the commission's existence?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member does not recognize is that these regulation changes were announced long before the Forget Commission was set up.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is no excuse.

Miss MacDonald: He could have heard about them 14 months ago. What I would like to explain to the Hon. Member, and to other Hon. Members is that, indeed, we are very concerned about the inequities—

Mr. Allmand: Baloney!

Miss MacDonald: —in the unemployment insurance program. It was for that reason that we felt a full review of the entire operation of the unemployment insurance fund was long over-due. We are very pleased that Claude Forget, and the other commissioners, have taken on this heavy responsibility to see what recommendations can be made to improve the operations of the unemployment insurance fund.

FINANCE

INCREASE IN MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Government claims that the dollar crisis is temporary.

Thirty thousand Canadian families will be renegotiating their mortgage this month.

Why would the Government want to punish those families by raising interest rates again today?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my response to the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount, what we are trying to do is re-establish some stability in the market-place. That required the combination of actions which we took in the last couple of days. The purpose of doing this is to provide all Canadians with a much more favourable outlook and with better opportunities to deal with the particular personal needs to which the Hon. Member refers. That is our objective. We are confident that that will be the outcome of the actions which we have taken.

MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the Minister that he knows full well, to use his own phrase, that the personal needs of families who have to renew their mortgages will be hit—and hit very negatively—as a result of what the Government has permitted today. The Minister knows that. Is he aware that the two-thirds of a percentage point increase which has been announced—one of the biggest jumps in the rate that we have experienced—is likely to translate into a percentage increase in the cost of a mortgage which will mean that a typical family's costs will increase by about $12,000? Does he think that the typical Canadian family should have to pay for the Government's incompetence in terms of the economy?

● (1425)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would just remind the Hon. Member that mortgage rates in Canada are still a good deal below the levels they were at the time we took office in September of 1984. So we have made a good deal of progress in spite of the recent uptake we've seen in rates in the last few days.

The increase in rates is much more so in the very short end of the market-place and not much at all in the five-year end.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, considering that there are 30,000 families renewing their mortgages this month, and considering that the average increase as a result of what happened today is likely to be $12,000 over the course of the life of a mortgage, is the Minister of Finance saying to these families that they have to pay the burden of the Government's problems with the dollar?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is not this Government's problem with the dollar, it's this country's problem we are dealing with here.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Who's in charge?

Mr. de Corneille: It's the country's fault now.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am not going to repeat the comments I have made in Question Period in response to the Hon. Member's questions and questions put by the Liberals on the directions of our policies, except to say that what we are doing here is approaching the broad problems the country was facing when we came into office, with a broad range of policy response, including the responses we have seen in recent weeks, and also in areas relating to foreign investment, domestic investment, job creation through programs brought down by my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and policies to get the deficit under control to take pressure off the exchange markets and the interest rate markets. This is a broad policy response which, I remind my colleague, has been pretty well received by organizations such as the OECD.

CALCULATION OF SEVERANCE PAY AND PENSIONS AS INCOME

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the heartless Minister of Employment and Immigration—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hopkins: —who is in charge of the unemployment—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows that such comments are not permitted. Question, please.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration who is not only in charge of the unemployment insurance program but who is also responsible for the unfair changes to the calculation of benefits.

Even last year in reply to a question put by myself, the Minister said she would be sensitive to members of the Armed Forces who are required to retire early in life. Why then has the Government put in place unfair regulations which take severance pay and pensions into consideration as income and which cheat these people—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hopkins: —out of the benefits for which they have contributed?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. The Hon. Member is an experienced Member of the House and knows the question is far too long.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has raised a question which has been raised on a number of previous occasions in the House. I would tell the Hon. Member, as I have told Hon. Members on other occasions, that the regulations apply to Armed Forces personnel, and apply to other sectors of society that pay into the unemployment insurance fund, and have over many years, knowing that they will never be able to draw from the fund—that whole question has been referred to the Forget Commission for examination, for consideration, and for recommendation to the Government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Just a supplementary question, given the length of the first one, please.

Ms. Copps: What about the answer?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. She is the Minister responsible for the unemployed of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hopkins: Why is she—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An Hon. Member: Nice try.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is an experienced Member of the House. I specifically asked him to put just a supplementary question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I specifically asked him to put just a supplementary question. He has chosen not to do that. Therefore I recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Ms. Copps: Oh, come on!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: It's the second time in two days he's cut us off.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not know how many times I have to make it clear that preambles when they get too long are unfair to the House.

An Hon. Member: And unfair to the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: Order. They are not unfair to the Chair. They are unfair to the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

• (1430)

Ms. Copps: What about the point of privilege from the Deputy Prime Minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is the House which has the right to hear questions and answers, period. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Waddell: It's ironic, isn't it?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ENERGY

DECREASE IN PRICE IN CRUDE OIL

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The other day the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy said it would take up to 60 days for the dramatically decreasing world oil prices to work their way through the system. In view of the fact that the average posted price for a barrel of oil in Canada on December 6 last was $28.51, and by December 13 it was $26 a barrel—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question or just a preamble?

Mr. Waddell: My question is this.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: The price of oil went from $28 a barrel to $26 a barrel after December 6. That is 62 days. I want to know if the Government has some revised figures telling when it is going to show up at the pump?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that gas in my constituency fell some eight cents a litre in the last couple of weeks, so I am not sure what that relates to.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, we are not talking about price wars, we are talking average—I want to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Fair has to be fair always. The Hon. Member knows that. I indicated the Member was long and he should put a question. He began again with a preamble. I have to be fair always. Therefore, the Hon. Member for London-Middlesex.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '86 EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM APPLICATIONS

Mr. Terry Clifford (London-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment. I recently conducted a meeting—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Clifford: —with 380 businesses in London-Middlesex.

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Clifford: These people—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My goodness, fair is fair. The Hon. Member gets a chance, as do other Members, to put a brief preamble. All Members have been given that chance.

Mr. Clifford: Mr. Speaker, it was a very brief and exhaustive survey of 380 businesses in my riding and it revealed that 84 per cent favoured a career-related summer experience for students. They want to know when and how they can get involved in Challenge '86 so they can provide a future for Canadian youth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to inform the Hon. Member, indeed all Hon. Members, as well as people in the business community across the country, that Challenge '86 is a program which invites their co-operation. The application forms for Challenge '86 are now in Canada Employment Centre across the country. I urge all potential employers to go in, pick them up, fill them out, and hire young people this summer in jobs right across the country.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. She is aware that according to StatsCan the Province of Newfoundland, with only 2 per cent of the country's population, has 15 per cent of its hidden unemployed. Does the Minister agree with Mr. Chris Palmer, Research Director of the Royal Commission on Unemployment in Newfoundland, who has stated that, based on StatsCan's own unpublished figures, real unemployment in Newfoundland is a full 10 per cent higher than the officially published 21 per cent?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, one of the very real problems of unemployment is its unevenness across the country. We all know it is worse in places like Newfoundland than it has been in Ontario. However, as we see the economic turnaround in this country we are moving to assist the turnaround in places like Atlantic Canada and British Columbia with programs we have in place, such as the Canadian Jobs Strategy. We are also seeing that the hidden unemployed, the people who have been discouraged and dropped out, are now coming back into the labour force because they see more opportunity than they had before.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, with that kind of rhetoric is it any wonder that some Newfoundlanders are looking for foreign aid in the U.S?

STATISTICS CANADA'S FIGURES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister again whether or not she agrees with the figures and analysis of the Director of Research for the Royal Commission on Unemployment in Newfoundland? He has said that, according to StatsCan's own unpublished figures, real unemployment in Newfoundland is 10 per cent higher than the published 21 per cent. What is she going to do about it? Where are the concrete programs? We do not want rhetoric.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raised the question of foreign aid. I am pleased to tell him in that particular community two projects have been approved which have employed 10 people—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: —in training programs. This is in one community. Right across Newfoundland there are communities which are hiring and training people for full-time jobs. As a result, we have seen unemployment dropping in Newfoundland, including that particular community.

REFUGEES

DRAFT LEGISLATION INQUIRY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. Last September she publicly declared that she is in charge of new refugee legislation. Therefore, will she confirm to this House that she recently authorized a draft legislative proposal which would deny to most refugee claimants in Canada the right which was guaranteed last year by the Supreme Court of Canada, that is, the right to have full access to the refugee determination process in Canada?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is generally wrong about most things and he is wrong about that.

CONTENT OF ALLEGED DRAFT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister is being evasive—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Heap: —I will ask whether she will confirm that she recently approved a draft authorizing Immigration officials to expel within 72 hours most refugee claimants who, in fleeing their country, have passed through another country?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned to the Hon. Member, he is wrong in wha the puts forward. I am not sure how I can be called evasive when I say that.

However, I will tell him that the whole question of developing a new process for refugee determination is a very serious one. It has been studied by commissions and has certainly been vetted by people all across the country. The Government is determined to bring this to fruition in a way which is just, humane, and fair.

PUBLIC WORKS

INSTALLATION OF RECORDING SYSTEM IN LIBERAL CAUCUS ROOM

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works and about one-third of the Cabinet, my question—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Where is your Leader?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Where is Turner? Where is Ouellet?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The reaction the Hon. Member got gives evidence of why there should not be any mention of the presence or absence of any Member or Minister. Just a question, please.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the electronic system in the Liberal caucus room. Can the Minister responsible for answering on behalf of the Minister of Public Works inform the House whether or not he or she got a copy of the report concerning tampering with the wiring system in the Liberal caucus room? Will the Minister also undertake to table in this House at the earliest convenience all documents pertaining to the installation of the electronic system in the Liberal caucus room?

Mr. Benjamin: The Liberals have their wires crossed.

• (1440)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it the President of the Privy Council wishes to reply, and I will allow the answer because I allowed the question.

Mr. Prud'homme: How kind.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I only remind the Hon. Member that he puts me in some difficulty about questions to Ministers who are responsible today.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as you know—

An Hon. Member: Check it with Erik.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —this is a rather difficult topic inasmuch as the precincts of Parliament, including caucus rooms, are under your responsibility and jurisdiction—

Mr. Prud'homme: Pass the buck.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —indeed, under the responsibility of the Board of Internal Economy. I will take notice of the Hon. Member's question with respect to any responsibility there may be on the part of a Minister. I simply reiterate the fact that this is basically a question for the Board of Internal Economy.

Ms. Copps: No it isn't.

Mr. Benjamin: Your wires are crossed too.

REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the system was installed by Public Works under a contract given to EMI Connors Electronics Limited. In view of the fact that it was a Government installation, can the Minister commit himself here and now to provide all documentation concerning that installation and maintenance, repairs, or alterations to the system, forthwith in the House of Commons?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I reiterate the fact that, notwithstanding the delivery of the system, it is under the supervision of the Speaker of the day. The matter is now one of public record because it has been raised on the floor of the House of Commons. It is within the jurisdiction of the Speaker. I will take this as a representation.

JOB DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM—FISHERIES DEPARTMENT PROPOSALS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration and is with regard to the Job Development Program under the Canada Jobs Strategy. I have here a copy of the guidelines of the Job Development Program which say, in part, that federal Departments and agencies are not eligible for funds under that program.

Can the Minister explain to the House why, a few days ago, her office approved some 17 different proposals by the federal Department of Fisheries and Oceans, in Winnipeg?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there are a number of federal Departments which administer this program in co-operation with the Department of Employment and Immigration. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans is one and the Department of Forestry is another. I know that many of the Member's colleagues from the Province of British Columbia have welcomed the projects in forestry which have been approved in their ridings. I am glad to report to the Hon. Member that, indeed, we are working in close co-operation in these fields so that people who generally work in forestry and the fishery are able to have jobs this winter.

PROGRAM GUIDELINES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister can comment on memos which I have in my hand from Government officials which say that the Department of Fisheries and Oceans initiated and proposed these ideas because of cut-backs in their Departments. Is this not a violation of the guidelines of the Minister herself under the Job Development Program, a copy of which I have here?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure just what the Hon. Member is trying to say to me. Perhaps he will tell his colleagues who come from ridings along the Pacific coast that these projects should not be approved in their ridings.

Mr. Nystrom: Why isn't it in the guidelines?

Mr. Deans: When did Winnipeg get onto the Pacific coast?

Miss MacDonald: Perhaps the Hon. Member for Churchill would prefer not to have these projects approved in his riding.

Right from the outset, the program has been a huge success, involving some 18,000 applications across the country—

Mr. Nystrom: Answer the question, Flora.

Miss MacDonald: —these have included projects—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Order!

Miss MacDonald: —under the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the Department of Forestry.

ENERGY

TIMEFRAME FOR OFFSHORE CRUDE OIL TO REACH SERVICE STATIONS

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques attempted to misinform the House by revealing the wrong figures which—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mrs. Bourgault: —he obtained from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Will the Parliamentary Secretary tell the House exactly how long it takes for offshore crude to reach the gas pumps?

Ms. Copps: Order!

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques was deliberately trying to mislead the House yesterday. I think he had obtained some statistics that he did not look into far enough in order to see exactly how long it does take for the crude to get through the system. I give him the benefit of that doubt.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. McDermid: I must say that I think The Toronto Sun treated him very unfairly this morning with the headline: "Grit's Mouth Runs on Empty".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: The question came from over there.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary can conclude briefly.

Mr. McDermid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I could not even hear myself think with the yapping coming from over there. It takes three to four—

Mr. Deans: You don't know what you missed. We could.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Benjamin: One of his colleagues asked the question and he is answering some Liberal.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! Perhaps the Hon. Member for Regina West would allow a question to be put.

AMENDMENTS AFFECTING BENEFITS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Last January the Government once again shortchanged older Canadians by amending the unemployment insurance regulations. A 61-year-old resident of my riding accepted his company's offer to retire early just so a younger employee would not lose his job. Can the Minister explain to the House why the rules of the game were changed in January and why that man has been denied unemployment insurance benefits? Why did you change the rules of the game and penalize older Canadians.

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that in the Province of Quebec there has been an increase in the number of people employed this year and a very substantial decrease in unemployment. It is for that reason, in the whole job strategy, la planification d'emploi, we have seen the growth of jobs in the Province of Quebec. Every day we see that trend developing. I am pleased to see that happening, and—

Ms. Copps: Oh, sit down and answer the question.

Miss MacDonald: —I wish the Hon. Member would help in spreading word of the new programs which will encourage that trend.

Ms. Copps: You are ripping off the seniors.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately the Minister's answer proves that she is a hypocrite, like the Prime Minister, but she has much—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows full well that he is not allowed to say what he just said.

An Hon. Member: What did he say?

Mr. Speaker: That the Minister is a hypocrite, that is what he said.

An Hon. Member: That is not what he said!

Mr. Speaker: That is what I heard, period. In fact, would the Hon. Member put his question immediately?

INQUIRY WHY POLICY AFFECTING BENEFITS HAS BEEN CHANGED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): I will repeat my question to the Minister. It has nothing to do with employment. Here it is: Like in all other ridings in Canada, a 61-year-old resident in my riding willingly agreed to retire early just so a younger man would keep his job. Halfway through the game, in January, you changed the rules and cut off his unemployment benefits, yet he had taken early retirement at the request of the company. Why?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows that the regulations to which he refers to were announced in November, 1984.

Ms. Copps: So what?

Miss MacDonald: It may take a while to get things through the Hon. Member's head, but that was 16 months ago, and I would ask him to please keep up with the times.

CANCELLATION OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Youth. Is she aware that there has been a storm of protest from young people and community leaders across the country about the Government's senseless and thoughtless cut of Katimavik? Will she, as the advocate of youth in the Cabinet, march into the next scheduled cabinet meeting and demand that the money for Katimavik be reinstated as a minor expenditure compared to the millions given to the oil companies and the millions used to bail out the banks?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to finally see some interest in young people expressed by the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Champagne: Let us realize that this is only the second question to be asked about young people this year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1450)

Mrs. Champagne: The House may also want to know that the Member for Windsor-Walkerville, as youth critic, was invited to some of our regional forums. He was too busy in July and was not interested in October to hear—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will allow questions again when members of the Opposition are quiet and allow them to be put. I know of no other way to make Members on the opposition side, and others—

Mr. Tobin: You have a right and a left, Mr. Speaker. That is your right and that is your left.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I said "and others". The Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville has a supplementary question.

Mrs. Champagne: I did not even answer.

Ms. Mitchell: You don't deserve to answer.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the Minister of the Crown show a little more cool in response to questions. I want to ask her—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Members know that I stopped the Minister because of certain remarks. The Hon. Member cannot simply come back and make comments about the Minister. That is not fair. What is the Member's question, please? Immediately.

Mr. McCurdy: Will the Minister of State do her job and fight on behalf of youth? That includes staying long enough to make a speech at her own forum, which she saw as too useless to spend more than an hour or so—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Etobicoke North.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PRESENCE OF TOXIC CHEMICAL IN ETOBICOKE NORTH

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. For two years now a company in my riding, Ferguson Fumigants, has been attempting to dispose of just under a thousand gallons of hazardous chemical, ethylene di-bromide, since it was banned as a toxic matter by the Department of Agriculture. There is no dump site in Canada that will accept this. The Ontario Government now recognizes that the pressurized containers are rusting and deteriorating.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Pennock: Yes, I do. Can the Minister offer any assistance to this constituent before this becomes a major health hazard for the residents of Etobicoke?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct. There is no readily available means for disposing of the offensive substance in question. The preferred option in the long term is recycling it in a way that will not threaten either the environment or human health. We are looking at that option, hand in glove with the Ministry of Environment in Ontario.

In the meantime I am happy to inform the Hon. Member that as of 1.30 today all the substance in question has been repackaged in an appropriate container in response to the urging of my Department and that of the corresponding Ministry in the Ontario Government.

CANCELLATION OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Secretary of State has strongly praised the Katimavik program in times past.

Why has the Government, before a $300,000 evaluation study was completed, without consultation with young people, the Katimavik board, its staff, or with anyone concerned, mysteriously and suddenly smashed Katimavik and broken a contract one year ahead of time, which is abruptly crashing 279 jobs and disappointing thousands of young people across the country who have already applied?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, there has been consultation with young people in Canada throughout International Youth Year. Young people in Canada want to do things by themselves and do not want everything thought out for them. They want help in doing those things that will help the community and let them participate in their own communities, towns, and villages.

There will be programs to help them do just that. Young people in Canada have told us that they want to have a future, and in order to have a future the deficit must go down.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Champagne: The sum of $10,000 per participant is too much.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, this hasty decision smells of cheap politics.

WORTH OF PROGRAM

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Does the Deputy Prime Minister not realize that this program not only enables young people to find work that will make them more employable but it helps make them bilingual, self-reliant, better citizens, and prepares them for life at large, at a wage of $1 Canadian a day? Where else can one find a bargain like that?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, what the hon. gentleman—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: It's Bugs Bunny.

Ms. Copps: Did you get it on tape, Erik?

Mr. Waddell: If I am a rabbit, you are Bugs Bunny.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the colleagues of the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence will allow him to hear the answer, since he put the question.

Mr. Nielsen: In his question the hon. gentleman did not call attention to the fact that since the election there have been 42,000 jobs created for young people in this country compared to a net loss of 283,000 jobs under the previous administration.

A press release on this subject was issued, and he was told yesterday when he put this question that other programs will be put in place that will employ far more young people directly and much more permanently than this program.

However, he should be directing young people toward Challenge '86, as he was urged to do by the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

TRADE

FOOTWEAR IMPORT EXEMPTIONS FOR EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. The Shoe Manufacturing Association of Canada says that the new exemptions on shoe quotas for the European Community will render the remaining shoe quotas virtually useless and add to job losses in that industry. Why has the Minister surrendered to the European Community in this fashion, which is so irresponsible to those out of work in this country?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, to the contrary, the Government has acted in a most responsible manner. With the extension of shoe quotas on women's and ladies' shoes for a further three years we were subject to retaliation under the GATT and put $136 million worth of Canadian exports to the European Community at risk. I am pleased that we have reached a settlement with the European Community which will forestall such action.

CLOTHING IMPORTS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister include in his pleasure the extra imports of clothing from the European Community which will also cost extra jobs for Canadians throughout this country? Is he as pleased with that?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am quite happy to advise the Hon. Member and the House that, in arriving at this settlement, not only will there be no loss of jobs to Canadians there will be reduced cost of goods to Canadian consumers, which is very important to this Government.

AGRICULTURE

PROPOSAL SUBMITTED BY MARITIME FARMERS COUNCIL

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He will know that the Maritime Farmers Council submitted a proposal to him which has subsequently been supported by the Maritime Premiers Council. Some 440 days have passed. Will the Minister explain to the House why there is this inordinate delay when farmers in that region of Canada are well beyond the crisis stage?

● (1500)

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I listened very closely to the Hon. Member's question. I have received a number of representations from the Maritime Farmers Council. I am not certain to which matter the Hon. Member refers.

Mr. Speaker: Under the circumstances, a very short supplementary.

FEED FREIGHT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a short supplementary. The Minister knows full well what I am talking about. It concerns federal feed freight assistance. The Council wants to know where the Minister and the national Government stand with regard to its request.

Why are you dragging your feet on this most important request when your own Members of Parliament have been asking you to move on it? Why the delay?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased the Hon. Member clarified his question. The Maritime Farmers Council made representations on another subject as well.

Again, the Hon. Member is outdated. Last November at the time of the First Ministers' Conference we made a proposal with respect to the issue and the concern of the Maritime Farmers Council. The commitment made at the conference was that our provincial colleagues would work in concert with the Maritime Farmers Council to develop a program to increase the degree of self-sufficiency in feed grains in Atlantic Canada.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Wednesday, February 5, 1986, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

I gather the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) would like to raise a question of order.

POINT OF ORDER

DISALLOWANCE OF SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring a very serious point of order to your attention which affects my rights in the House of Commons as well as others. You said I was an experienced Member of this House, which is true. I am experienced enough to know when I am being shortchanged, which I was. I would like to point out clearly that on my supplementary question I made one very brief comment and I was into my question when you cut me off. That is an injustice.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate that the Member feels aggrieved. I rose during the preamble before his question had begun. I did so because I had specifically indicated to him that his first question was long and his preamble was long. I asked him specifically when I granted him a supplementary question to put only a question. That is the end of what. There is no point of order.

Mr. Hopkins: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. There is no point of order. The Hon. Member will please resume his seat.

Mr. Hopkins: I have a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member will resume his seat please. The Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) claims a point of privilege.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, my point of privilege is that Minister's answers are also supposed to be relevant to the questions. We have been hearing long speeches from the front benches of the Government without giving answers to questions. That, too, is a rule of this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hopkins: If you are going to enforce the rule on me, then I want—

Mr. Speaker: Given the comments of the Hon. Member, it may come as some news to him, as I am sure it will to many Members, that there is no such rule of relevance requirement.

As the Hon. Member knows, if he is unhappy with any answer for any reason, he can file with the Table a request to do a Late Show on the matter. That is the provision in the rule.

An Hon. Member: What about supplementaries?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is no rule with regard to the granting of supplementary questions. All questions and recognition of supplementaries are matters within the discretion of the Chair.

Mr. Nunziata: You are stifling debate.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Question Period, may I say it over and over, is not debate. It is a time to ask questions and to get whatever answers the Government gives. It is not debate. That is precisely why the Chair is concerned about the length of the preambles, in order to try to get as many questions as possible. That is what it is for.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Government House Leader whether he can give us the business he intends to call in this House for the coming week?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. As the opposition House Leader knows, I was attempting to have a meeting of House Leaders earlier, before Question Period. I thought we would canvass those Members and come to some sort of understanding of what would be convenient to the Opposition.

We are meeting at 4.30 p.m. Possibly, with the leave of the House, I might come back after that meeting and indicate the order of business, once I have had a chance to consult with my colleagues.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if prior to 4.30 p.m. the Government House Leader might consult with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and try to obtain for the House the date upon which the Budget will be presented?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I always consult with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and I will continue to do so.

THE ECONOMY

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian economy is performing better than most other industrialized countries' economies. And yet, in face of this, the Canadian dollar has come under sharp downward pressure in recent weeks. The market observers have given a variety of explanations for this weakness. I would like today to put this matter in some perspective and report to the House on the Government's response.

The weakness of commodity prices in general and recent declines in the international price of crude petroleum do have negative implications for our export earnings, but these must be put in perspective.

Canada's net earnings from international trade in petroleum in 1985 were about $2 billion, or less than 2 per cent of our total merchandise exports. The recent fall in oil prices will thus not have a dramatic effect on our trade balance. Even allowing for consequent movements in the prices of our other energy exports does not paint a picture of a sharply deteriorating balance of payments. The existing levels of commodity prices will not have a sufficiently large impact on our resource exports to justify the recent pressure on the exchange rate.

Hon. Members should understand, despite the prevailing caricature, that the strength of Canada's exports extends far beyond the resources sector. Raw materials constituted only 16 per cent of Canada's merchandise exports in 1985. We are now a major exporter of semi-processed and finished manufactures, and these are an ongoing source of strength for our balance of payments. That strength is assured by Canada's vastly improved performance in getting our inflation rate down.

Our inflation rate has been about 4 per cent for the past 19 months. Domestic prices and costs have behaved well. Our productivity performance is impressive. This should continue to ensure the competitiveness of Canadian products on world markets. Canada's economy is strong. The growth of our Gross National Product outpaced that of the United States by more than two percentage points last year. That is almost double the rate of growth in the United States. We expect Canada to do better again this year. As a result, the current account of our international balance of payments turned into a small deficit in 1985, and most analysts expect that this small deficit will continue through the course of this year. Apart from the low levels in commodity prices already noted, this is a normal cyclical response to a recovery and reflects the fact that Canada's economy has been growing more quickly than those of most of our major trading partners. A part of that better performance is the stronger growth in business investment expenditures which have a high import content. This shift is contributing to the current account deficit. However, that deficit is quite small by historical standards and should not be a major source of weakness in our currency.

● (1510)

The flow of long-term capital funds, which are the source of funds to finance most private sector investments, has continued to favour Canada in 1985; acquisitions of shares of Canadian companies by non-residents were particularly strong. Direct foreign investments in Canada were also high even though they were offset by take-overs of foreign companies by Canadian interests.

In all likelihood the flow of long-term capital funds will continue to have a positive impact on the value of our dollar this year.

[English]

It is the typically volatile short-term capital flows which have been influencing our dollar adversely in recent weeks. This speculative activity has arisen from misconceptions about the state of our economy and about the Government's commitment to pursue the policies required to sustain the strong recovery we are now experiencing.

I believe that negative speculation about the Canadian dollar has gone too far. Levels of the exchange rate earlier this week have been clearly below what is justified by fundamental developments in our balance of payments and have not reflected the healthy state of our over-all economic performance. A continuation of this negative sentiment would threaten to undermine the progress we have made in sustaining an economic recovery through strong growth, accompanied by continued moderation in inflation.

The fundamental strength of our economy is reflected in an underlying balance of payments structure that is good. I believe that the speculative elements which I cited that are countering these fundamental forces will wither away as the sources of that strength are more generally recognized.

[Translation]

The downward pressures on the Canadian dollar in recent months have been offset through foreign exchange market interventions financed with the Government's exchange account and through a gradual increase in short-term interest rates. Still the increase was significant and the gap between our short-term interest rates and those of the United States has widened considerably, more than 3 per cent.

[English]

In recent days pressures against the Canadian dollar greatly intensified. To counter unwarranted speculative activity, the Bank of Canada has this week operated forcefully in the domestic money market and, as fiscal agent for the Government of Canada, forcefully in the foreign exchange market. The result has been a strengthening of the Canadian dollar and a sharp further upward movement in short-term interest rates. Our dollar has moved from a low of 69.13 U.S. cents on Tuesday to about 71 cents currently. Today's bank rate has risen to 11.7 per cent, up 67 basis points from last week.

The Government is prepared to continue to reinforce its intervention in the foreign exchange market in order to promote orderly conditions. To this end, yesterday I announced actions which have been taken to increase our reserves of U.S. dollars by $2.4 billion. The Government is prepared to use these official reserves to enter the market as aggressively as necessary to counter speculative pressure on the dollar.

The main purpose of these actions in the financial and exchange markets is to reinforce the thrust of our broad economic policy stance which looks to a continuation of non-inflationary growth. To that end fiscal policy will ensure a measured, orderly and significant reduction in our deficit.

I have heard and read in the media many commentaries expressing doubt about the future course of our fiscal policy. These doubts are unwarranted. I have reiterated on many occasions our resolve to improve our fiscal position. This is being done in a comprehensive way and primarily through a reduction in the level of Government spending. The unprecedented spending reductions announced in November, 1984 and in May, 1985 are being implemented and will have a growing fiscal impact over time. Our deficit is under control and it will come down. Monetary policy will continue to be directed at keeping inflation under control. The Government has also moved in other areas, such as energy and foreign investment, to improve the efficiency of our markets and increase confidence in Canada. Together these policies will serve to ensure the sustainability of the recovery and, with it, a strong and stable currency and a return to lower levels of interest rates.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I simply cannot understand why the Minister came to the House this afternoon to deliver that statement.

Indeed, I listened closely, I read the statement carefully and I can tell you that it is nothing to write home about.

[English]

The Minister has described what is almost an Agatha Christie mystery—who killed the Canadian dollar? It does not take Hercule Poirot to solve this mystery. The Minister has recited a number of interesting facts about the Canadian economy. I will come to them in a moment, because we have to eliminate each of them as villains in this piece one by one. However, there is one glaring omission, there is one suspect to which reference has not been made. All he has to do is look around him, especially at his Leader, at his Cabinet and from time to time in the mirror, and he will find the cause of the falling Canadian dollar. He will see the killer face to face.

[Translation]

The reason—and I will prove it this afternoon—is that there is an obvious lack of coherence in leadership among the Conservatives. We know full well there is political infighting among Cabinet Ministers themselves and especially among caucus members. In short, Mr. Speaker, Canadians and foreigners alike have lost confidence in this Government.

[English]

That is what has killed the Canadian dollar.

Let us look for a moment at what he has told us. I read his speech carefully. He takes on the issue of Canada being perceived as a resource exporter and says that there is no reason for people to be alarmed about falling commodity prices or falling oil prices, that that should not be the reason for the fall of the Canadian dollar. Of course he is absolutely right. Most people know that. Unfortunately the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) does not know that. I hope the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has had the opportunity of educating the Prime Minister who, in an interview in Fortune magazine on March 4, 1985, said the following:

● (1520)

We do not have a very good track record. Our products have not been of the highest quality. Our deliveries have been lacking in reliability. Our expertise has been in large measure borrowed. Our technology has been purchased. What the hell makes us so special? If somebody wants to buy some oil, somebody wants to buy some wheat, hell, we're in the business. That's what it's all about. Forest products, mining—God, we'd love it if somebody wanted to joint-venture with us in mining development, taking our products at competitive prices. Damn right we would.

That is our Prime Minister, of course, spreading that perception. As I say, fortunately, his ignorance is not widespread amongst intelligent members of the business investment communities, and, in fact, among Canadians in general who realize that Canada has become a strong exporter in other areas.

Notwithstanding the efforts of the Prime Minister to denigrate the strength of our export sector, I suggest to you that that is not the villain, it is not that perception. What on earth can it be? Not our rate of inflation says the Minister of Finance. Again, he is absolutely right. The rate of inflation has hovered around 4 per cent. I might add, the Minister could have recognized that a legacy he received in that "bare cupboard" he likes to refer to was a rate of inflation below 5 per cent, having been brought down by the Liberal Government from something like 12.5 per cent in 1982 through the six and five program to less than 6 per cent in 1983, and less than 5 per cent in 1984. I would like him to acknowledge that some time. I am sure he will.

In addition to that, I need not refer again to the fact, with which we are all painfully familiar, that he received a dollar which had a U.S. exchange rate in September, 1984 of approximately 77 cents, and of course early this week we saw it as low as 69 cents.

Well, he tells us it's not inflation, it's not Gross National Product. We have had sustained growth, so it is not the resource sector, it is not inflation, it is not our Gross National Product that has driven it down. It certianly is not our current account deficit, which he points out is small by historical standards. No reason to be concerned, so it cannot be that. We gradually go through everyone and we finally get to the butler.

In any case, none of these are villains in this piece. Long-term capital flows, the Minister rules that out. Again, we agree with him. Yes, indeed, there must be something else. We have not yet found the killer of the Canadian dollar in all this information which he offered to us here this afternoon. Well, he tells us that there has been this speculation in recent weeks, or even in recent days. Why is that? Why, if we are so strong in all these areas that the Minister describes is the dollar being killed? Why did the Minister have to borrow $2.4 billion yesterday at a cost, as I raised in Question Period, if those loans went to maturity in present value, as high as close to a billion dollars out of Canadian taxpayers' pockets? Why does he have to watch interest rates escalate two-thirds of a point today? He is shaking his head. I will look forward to having him produce the numbers I have got mine here. You can't borrow $2.4 billion for ten years at 9 per cent U.S. without incurring major interest costs. Why is that? Why is that interest rates again today had to increase to 11.47, an increase of .67 cents from yesterday?

I come back to my point, we have eliminated all of the suspects, except one, and that one is right over there on the Government benches, the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister and those other Ministers responsible for economic policy in this country. Let me explain why. Let me offer you the proof very quickly, Mr. Speaker, so this will not simply be treated as partisan rhetoric coming from the Official Opposition. Let's play detective for a moment.

Despite the rhetoric there has been incoherence, there has been confusion, and there has been conflict in our economic policy. I will terminate by offering some quick but convincing evidence. First of all, the Minister of Finance on March 1, 1985 said on CTV "Question Period": "We are going to get the deficit down. We are not going to do it through taxes, there is enough room on the expenditure side". And then a scant two months later he brought in the biggest tax increase in Canadian history. Now, talk about that in terms of conflict and confusion.

Second, at the same time he brought in a capital gains tax exemption which we had to adopt several weeks ago in this House, there was a measure intended to put capital into Canadian industry, especially the small and medium-sized business sectors. But it was completely unfocused. Where has that money been invested? It was an invitation to divest, and probably reinvest outside Canada. Combine that with the most remarkable suggestion of all, this alternative minimum tax which penalizes recipients of Canadian dividend income and, in fact, required Canadians who had capital tied up in holding companies to divest their assets before year end. Where do you think those moneys were invested, with the prospect of a penalizing tax on Canadian dividend income? To the United States, that is where a lot of that money went. Complete incoherence and confusion.

I am coming quickly to the end, Mr. Speaker, if you will just bear with me because, I do not want the Opposition to think that this is empty rhetoric. I want the Government to reflect on these points, because they stand out so clearly.

The great privatizers, Mr. Speaker. They told the world they were going to privatize. The first major act was the acquisition of a lot of service stations through Petro-Canada, which are found in your province. I know it may have been difficult for you to go back to your riding for some weeks, but I gather the dust is settling down. Privatization the purchase of retail gas stations. Then to counter that perception there has been unseemly haste to dismantle the Canadian aerospace sector and dispose of de Havilland. There has been the attempt to reduce the deficit with excessive tax increases, and perhaps to cover the $2 billion to bail out chartered banks. We have seen the Western Accord which gave hundreds of millions of dollars to multinational oil companies. People do not believe this Government, and with good reason.

So I conclude the killer is before you. The evidence stands. It is not the economy, it is the lack of credibility and confidence in the economic management of this country by this Government.

[Translation]

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to comment briefly on today's decision concerning yet another increase in Canadian interest rates. This policy of the Conservative Government is a threat to Canada and all Canadians. This latest increase in interest rates will likely trigger a sharp rise in bank rates, and if the banks do make that decision, within a month we will have higher interest rates, perhaps up by 2 or 2.5 per cent. It is not good for farmers, it is not good for families about to renegotiate mortgages, and it is not good for the unemployed seeking work. This policy to raise interest rates and shore up the dollar did not work for the Liberals in the past and it is not going to work now.

[English]

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, the statement the Minister has made today can be accounted for very largely by, not the ongoing problem of the dollar, but the very large increase in the interest rate that was announced earlier, the two-thirds of a point increase in today's announcement which, when translated by the banks, as it likely will be, will mean that in the past month of this Conservative Government we will have seen an increase in interest rates anywhere from 2 per cent to 2.5 per cent. I say to the Minister that that type of policy was disastrous for farmers, disastrous for homeowners and disastrous for the unemployed when the Liberals implemented it a few years ago. It is no better today when coming from the Conservatives.

• (1530)

Mr. Broadbent: This is what the interest rate policy announcement will mean in concrete terms. According to the present Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), when he sat on this side of the House as opposition critic for DREE, he said that a 1 per cent increase in the interest rate—and we almost had that today, and it will likely be 2.5 per cent by the end of the month—means the loss of 25,000 jobs. According to the Hon. Member's calculation then, that means some 50,000 jobs have been placed in jeopardy by the Government's incompetence just in the past month. This monthly increase in interest rates—and I have spoken to my colleagues about it—in terms of the present level of the debt will probably increase farmers' debt charges by about $500 million in one year. Who will pay that? I will tell Hon. Members who will pay. It will be the farm families who will have to pay that increase in debt charges.

I already mentioned earlier today what this increase will mean in terms of mortgage rate changes. Over the life of a mortgage it will cost the typical Canadian family some $12,000. This reassuring the-land-is-strong type of statement which we heard from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will not fool Canadians. Canadians will note that the most significant announcement today came not from the Government of Canada but from the Bank of Canada, sanctioned by the Government. I refer to the announcement with respect to the increase in interest rates. The Minister opposed that policy when he sat on this side of the House and he ought not to be supporting it now that he is in Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In our view the Minister has correctly said that some of the recent problems with respect to the dollar are to be attributed to speculators in Chicago and elsewhere. I think there is certainly evidence to support that. I hope that in that context the Government has communicated with the Government of the United States to see if anything can be done through regulatory mechanisms to head off this speculation which puts the whole country in a hostage situation as a result of the operations of a handful of speculators. I doubt that anything can be done. However, I hope the Canadian Government has made some inquiries to see if anything can be done. The Minister is right, speculators have played a role.

It is also the case that the great fluctuation in energy prices has played a role. I also want to say that it was the Minister's Party, and his Government, which deregulated the oil industry. They said that it has to be left open to the whims of the market-place and, therefore, if we are now having to react to what the Saudi Arabians have decided in a completely unfettered way, once again it is his Government's decision that has placed us in this type of precarious situation.

Quite apart from the short-run questions there are some longer-range problems which the Minister did not discuss and to which he alluded in a rather oblique way. One of these concerns the flow of investment. Yesterday, the Minister and I had an exchange in the House about what has gone on in the 12 months since his Party formed the Government. I wish to make the point again today, and perhaps the Minister on another occasion will deal with it. I would like to look at what happened in Canada between the last quarter of 1984 and the last quarter of 1985. I wish to begin by conceding with regard to what the Minister said yesterday. Yes, there was an 11 per cent increase in investment in Canada. That is true, and we are pleased to see it. As I have also said to the Minister on another occasion, it is true that our job forecasts were inaccurate and that the economy performed in a better way than we had anticipated. More jobs were produced. I have always taken it as a matter of principle that when the Government does something right we should say so. If something turns out to be better than we had estimated, then we should also say so. The Minister is now smiling because I agree.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I now wish to see what he will say. He pointed out that there was an 11 per cent increase in investment in the Canadian economy last year. What is decisive in terms of its impact on the dollar is not that increase. What is decisive is that there was a 44 per cent increase in money leaving the country for investment. That is what impacts on the dollar. So we had an 11 per cent increase in terms of new investment and in terms of job creation, which is good, but a 44 per cent increase—some $5.2 billion—leaving the country to create jobs elsewhere. I also want to say to the Minister, as he well understands, that this drives the Canadian dollar down. What we need are policies which will keep that investment in Canada. Let the Minister deal with that issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I wish to say to the Minister—who is again smiling—I hope that he will deal with the issue of that 44 per cent increase year-over-year. If we look at what was going on in 1985, after the Minister tabled his Budget last spring, we will see that the flow of investment abroad actually accelerated. Thus, if his Budget had any effect on investment intentions it was to say to Canadians: "Take your money and run with it out of the country". The Minister ought to be reassessing some of his policies in a serious way in terms of his forthcoming Budget.

The second matter I wish to point out is that we are dealing not only with a current crisis in terms of the dollar but, as the Minister knows, for a number of years the Canadian dollar has been at a pretty low level. There are some serious structural explanations for that. One of them is the high degree of foreign ownership. The Minister will recall the time just about a month ago, around the end of the year, when there were transfers of massive sums of money from Canada largely to the United States. We had another kind of run on the dollar—another dip in the dollar. Why? Because the branch plants were making their dividend payments back home; or we were making payments for service charges. If the Minister were to look at some of the numbers he would be somewhat concerned because they are quite disturbing. The most recent figures we have in this respect are for 1984. We do not yet have the figures for 1985. The figures for 1984 are as follows. We paid out some $3.2 billion in dividend charges. That had a negative effect on the Canadian dollar. We also paid out some $6 billion in service charges in 1984. No doubt this pattern will continue for 1985.

I wish to say to the Minister, and to my Liberal colleagues, that it is this type of strutural problem about which the New Democratic Party has been concerned for years. It is not because American investors are the bad guys, or any other foreigner is a bad guy, a bad woman or a bad company. We say that it is bad for the Canadian economy to have that level of foreign ownership—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. I have given the spokesmen from both opposition Parties an extra few minutes for their remarks. Perhaps the Hon. Member would care to wind up now, please.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your understanding. I want to conclude by saying that what we need are some serious long-range changes in policy if we are to deal with the question of the dollar. I am glad the Minister is nodding his head on this point. I hope he has been listening to some of the suggestions which I have made.

Finally, I wish to say to him that the bad news for Canadians which was announced today in terms of another increase in the interest rate is a policy, as I said a moment ago, which did not work for the Liberals and which will not work for the Conservatives.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement this day's sitting will be extended by 30 minutes. Therefore, Private Members' Hour will begin at 5.30 p.m.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-262, an Act to change the name of electoral district of Nunatsiaq.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Suluk: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to change the name of my electoral district from Nunatsiaq, meaning beautiful land, to Nunavut, meaning our land. The proposed change of name to Nunavut is more reflective of the aspirations of my constituency. The name "our land" recognizes the spirit of a former remembered independence and acknowledges our aspirations for a future of self-reliance.

• (1540)

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I missed petitions. Is it agreed that we revert to petitions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PETITIONS

SHARING OF CHILD-REARING RESPONSIBILITIES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it gives me, as well as a number of my colleagues, great pleasure to associate ourselves with a petition for men's rights in relation to families with children.

[Translation]

To the Honourable the House of Commons of Canada, the petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now exercise their unchallenged right to present a common grievance, with the assurance that we are against Bills C-47 and C-48 which do not improve the situation of children of separated or divorced couples.

[English]

The gist of the petition is to seek a more equal sharing not only in the responsibility but in the joy of child rearing, particularly after painful separations and divorce. The Speaker may also be aware of a hunger strike which is going on at the moment by Mr. Ricardo Di Done, and this petition speaks to that. The petition is presented by myself and my colleagues, because we fight for men and women.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that you are permitting the commercial messages and preambles which the Speaker is ruling out in Question Period.

I have the honour to present a large number of petitions which, unfortunately, did not get here in time. They have been gathered at the expense of considerable time and effort by the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers. These petitions come from all corners of the country and relate to the family allowance which the Government has now deindexed. The petitioners ask this House of Commons to see that the Government rescinds unfair tax increases.

POSTAL SERVICE IN VAUGHAN, ONT.

Mr. Anthony Roman (York North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition from constituents in the riding of York North and, more specifically, in the Town of Vaughan. The petitioners are asking for improved postal service. They had been patiently waiting for years and up to this time they still do not have either a mail delivery or the green boxes. They certainly have limited postal service.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that the following question will be answered today: No. 499.

[Text]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Question No. 499—Mr. Gauthier:

2. Will the Government table a copy of the study and, if so, on what date?

3. Does the Government intend to table a copy of other studies made by Mr. Foucher while he was employed by the Department of the Secretary of State?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): 1. (a) $92,691.91; (b) the Public Service Commission's Interchange Canada Program, specifically for the Secretary of State Department's Promotion of Official Languages Branch via Legal Services; (c) yes; Mr. Foucher on occasion advised in respect to constitutional law issues.

2. A copy of Mr. Foucher's report was given to the members of the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Official Languages Policy and Programs on December 10, 1985.

3. Not applicable.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I want to respond and thank the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary for answering my question today. Since one of my questions is dated February 6, 1985, and since this is its anniversary, may I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to look into that question and possibly give me an answer before the end of the year?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that. I notice that we have just answered a question dated December 3, 1985. We try to prioritize the questions and give the answers as quickly as we can. We will look into it.

EXCISE TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and Motion No. 19 (Mr. de Jong) p. 10322.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at one o'clock p.m., the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) had the floor. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I believe every Hon. Member who takes the opportunity to read this amendment must support it. Specifically, it speaks to the ability and the mobility of the handicapped, particularly the blind, to be able to compete in the market-place, to be able to get out there and be financially independent. I am speaking, of course, about the decision of the Government to ignore the pleas of the Canadian Association of Guide-dog Users to exempt them from the tax on pet food.

I know there are many seniors who, for example, have a cat or dog. They keep a pet because it is the only company they might have as shut-ins. We find it is wrong that they should be forced to pay this tax which the Government is then going to use to give a half million dollar capital gains tax exemption to those rich in our society who can most afford to take advantage of it.

If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), in his insensitivity, is bound and determined to tax pet food in a general way, as he seems to be on the basis of this budget measure, at the very least it would make sense to have a specific exemption for guide-dog users and those others who use animals in the normal daily business of living.

People who use guide-dogs do not keep those dogs as pets. They are an integral part of their daily living. That is why it is so important that every person in this Chamber, including Hon. Members of the Conservative Party, recognize that this amendment does not lead to a tax exemption for all pet food, but speaks specifically to those people who use guide-dogs. It also includes horse feed. For those Hon. Members who are interested in the farming community, it provides for an exemption for horse feed or feed for those animals used for productive purposes such as farming and logging.

If there were an exemption for bulls, obviously many of the Members on the Government side of the House would be able to take advantage of it. However, that is not what is being proposed.

Mr. McKnight: Sexist.

Ms. Copps: A bull, Mr. Speaker, has no gender in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: However, Mr. Speaker, that is not the question. The question is whether members of the Government and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall)—I am sorry she is not here because in committee I specifically asked her whether we could consider this. I am sorry, I am not supposed to comment on the presence or absence of an Hon. Member.

The Minister of State for Finance did give us the undertaking during the committee stage that there would be a very serious look given to dealing with the specific problems of guide-dog users when it comes to the tax on pet food. As you know Mr. Speaker, many people who have become blinded, through the adult onset of diabetes, for exemple, have many other costs involved in maintenance and in keeping themselves not only independent in their own home but, perhaps, able to get out and be competititve in the market-place. They are being hit with the double whammy of the tax on medication and on literally thousands of products used to assist a person who is suffering from a chronic illness. On top of that they have to pay the tax on pet food.

This amendment simply asks the Government to make a special provision for farmers and guide-dog users. We are opposed to this tax in general but we believe that at the very least the Government should exempt guide-dog users as well as farmers and those people who are using animals for productive purposes rather than simply as pets. This is a very supportable amendment and I dare say that if we had a recorded vote on this issue, every Government Member would join with me in supporting the demand by the Canadian Association for Guide-Dog Users that they be exempt from this tax. They should not have to pay for the Government deficit through a tax on their guide-dogs. That is a wrong-headed approach which has been adopted by the Minister of Finance so he can bail out the banks and hand out a $500,000 capital gains write-off. He is calling on the poor and least able in our society to pay for the deficit. We in the Liberal Party believe that is wrong. We think the country agrees with us. We think pet lovers agree with us. Taxing these dogs is like taxing your eyes. It is like taxing your very right to live. Without guide-dogs these people are defenseless. They must remain in their homes. In fact, they become a greater burden on the system because they need the support services which are not necessary when they are able to get out and be independent. Even the pharmaceutical industry suggests that the tax on medication will cost us money in the long run. People will go to prescription drugs which will be paid for by the Governement rather than going to non-prescription medication. It is penny-wise and pound-foolish. It will not deal with the problem of the deficit and it will penalize those in our society who are the least able to pay. We urge support for this amendment so that at the very least the blind will not have to pay for the billion-dollar bank bail-out.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal briefly with Motion No. 19 and the unfortunate remarks made, among others, by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

I understand the representations made and the amendments proposed by the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong)—

An Hon. Member: —East—

Mr. Vincent: Yes, that is what I said, "East".

Mr. Speaker, I can understand his interest in not to want to tax seeing-eye dog food. However, if we consider the way it is done, I suggest it is all right. The amount in annual tax which this could represent is approximately $20.00 or $25.00, on the one hand. On the other hand, we should consider the amount of paper work which would be required from blind people to recover these $20.00 or $25.00. I suggest it would not serve the interests of either the taxpayer generally or the blind to ask the latter to fill in additional forms to collect $20.00 or $25.00.

Mr. Speaker, I wish also to remind the House that the Income Tax Act provides already a special allowance for handicapped people, including the blind.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I just could not support the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Regina East.

Mr. Speaker, concerning horse feeds, I should like to remind the Hon. Member that animal feeds for the most part are unconditionally exempt under the relieving provision of the Agricultural Products Act.

Feeds supplements required by farmers should also be eligible for an exemption when they are used by producers of goods, which means that the feeds for horses used in productive purposes are also exempt.

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I urge the House to reject this motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has the floor.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I was really disappointed and scandalized to hear the remarks of the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent).

He has just said that he is in favour of exempting farmers from the tax on feeds for their horses, yet he cannot see a way to exempt people who suffer from blindness. Mr. Speaker, it is scandalous indeed, coming from a man—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would like the Hon. Member to understand that we are dealing with Motion No. 19. It deals with feeds and supplements for guide-dogs used by people requiring their assistance, and feeds and supplements for addition to such feeds for horses used in productive purposes.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, that is the point. We know that a blind man's friend, faithful servant and guide is his dog. It is the most important thing to a blind man.

The Parliamentary Secretary has just told us—and the social injustice minister is here, he is listening, but he is not doing anything—that he cannot find a means or a way to refund the tax on feeds for a blind man's dog.

Mr. Speaker, the Government did find a way to exempt the rich from the capital gains tax, they fill in magic forms. But we are now talking about blind people—I hope the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) will support me in this case—and there are organizations to look after them. Their only income is social welfare, peanuts, Mr. Speaker. They do not live under the threshold of poverty, they live under the threshold of misery! Be they in Quebec, in the Maritimes, in western Canada or elsewhere, all blind people live on social welfare. Those people would rather work despite their handicap and they often submit projects under the Canada Works programs. Things have to be changed somewhat to offer cultural activities to those people and to meet their special needs.

And now, notwithstanding scientific progress and the know-how of experts and Government officials, the Hon. Member tells us that he simply cannot find a way to refund the outrageous tax imposed by this Government, even on the guide dogs of blind men. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, he tells us, and I wonder whether he has a safe instead of a heart, that he can provide an exemption in the case of horses. He can therefore provide tax exemptions for other things.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the Hon. Member for Hochelega-Maisonneuve agrees with me because there is an organization for visually handicapped people called Bon Pilote in his constituency. I am convinced that the great majority of Conservative Members agree with me. And I trust—

An Hon. Member: No, no.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised. The Hon. Member for La Salle (Mr. Lanthier) disagrees. I know that he does so because this concerns the poor and he defends the rich. In view of his profession, his environment and his friends, he would certainly not defend the handicapped; that is not his vocation. He has every right to defend the rich in this place. That is his right.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I would like to invite the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), who met with failure in the case of old age security pensions, in the case of the next amendment which we shall be discussing and which relates to the use of a tax on illness to finance the Government, and in the case of family allowances, to show his humanitarian feelings, to make the diminutive Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) understand that his career will not last long, and to realize that it is possible to agree to the amendment and to find a way to reimburse all visually handicaped people in Canada for the 10 per cent tax they will have paid on the food for their guide-dogs. These animals are not kept for pleasure, Mr. Speaker. I could go further. To prevent solitude among senior citizens and to get them out of their homes, doctors advise that they keep a dog or cat so that they will live longer and be in better shape. That is the medical aspect of the issue, Mr. Speaker. On the other hand, a heartless Government has decided to impose a tax without taking the human factor into account.

Mr. Speaker, I shall close by inviting one last time the Minister of National Health and Welfare to try if possible to make the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières and especially the Prime Minister understand the situation, accept the amendment and find the means to reimburse visually handicaped people for the 10 per cent tax.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind my good friends on the Government side of the House of a little bit of history. The present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was the Minister of Finance in the Government of 1975 when the excise tax on gasoline was put into place. The then Minister of Finance accepted an amendment from this side of the House, which I will not brag about authoring, which was supported by the then official Opposition, the Conservative Party, to provide for an exemption and rebate of the excise tax on gasoline for the handicapped who had to be driven from place to place or who had specially equipped automobiles. That amendment was accepted and was in place until 1979. I want to remind my friends on the Government side that the Budget brought in by the present Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) cancelled the rebate on excise taxes for those who had to drive specially equipped cars because they were handicapped. They wonder why they got defeated later.

This is not a big deal, Mr. Speaker. The amendment only asks for an exemption. By regulation you can require those who are blind and have guide dogs to apply for a rebate of the excise tax. They can keep their bills for a year and get a cheque back for the tax. It would not be a hardship upon the Government or the administration. It would certainly not be a financial hardship on the Government. To be so small-minded and mean-spirited as to apply that tax in those circumstances is, surely, not worthy of the members of the Government and not worthy of Parliament.

I hope that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) or the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), who are present, will get up and say that they are prepared to accept this amendment, and they will be applauded on all sides of the House for it.

[Translation]

Mr. Michel Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on this motion because after listening to the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) one cannot do otherwise. He has just suggested to my colleague from Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) and to other Members on this side of the House that we were a heartless Government. A heartless Government because we were going to tax food for guide dogs, which means approximately $25 a year. To my knowledge, this is much less than the deficit inherited from the Liberals—$200 billion, Mr. Speaker. This is far less than the income tax they did not collect from the most affluent when they formed the Government because, as you know, had they made the most affluent pay tax when they were in Government, had they managed the country in a honest and fair fashion, we might not be in such a predicament today. Today, our situation might be that we could give more to the handicapped.

Paying tax on dog food means $25 a year, as I said. All farm producers pay that, and the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie, who is in the habit of mistaking carrots for cabbage, should have known that the handicapped indeed get a special allowance which farmers do not get. There are other specific programs especially for the farmers. On the other hand, in our last Budget, we made sure that the handicapped would get that allowance.

The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie has just told us that we are a pitiless Government. Mr. Speaker, in 1981, the previous Liberal Government promised a pension to older people, to widows aged between 60 and 64. They were committed to that. But we were the ones to move on that, thanks to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). We assumed responsibility for the lives of the most in need. When we see the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie rise in this House, and anyway he is not here now, when we see his colleagues rise from their seats and lie to the Canadian people, lie to the people of Quebec, attack this Government because we are in the process of reducing the deficit—in the process of developing a system that will allow all needy people and he referred to the aged, but what has he done when he was in Government, when his Government brought indexation down to 5 and 6 per cent while it was running at 11 and 12 per cent? Nothing! He never uttered a word.

Mr. Benjamin: Make the blind pay!

Mr. Champagne: Mr. Speaker, we have been elected, and the NDP, instead of laughing out loud, should listen and look at what we are doing exactly, rather than supporting the Liberals.

When we hear the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie, when we hear his colleagues grumble because this Government has to restore order, to reinstate social justice, I am asking serious questions. As a Government, we have at heart the most needy; we have at heart as a Government to restore a just and fair society, a society where we will be in a position, once everyone pays his or her fair share of income tax, once everyone contributes directly or indirectly to the Canadian economy, at that point, Mr. Speaker, we will be in a position to give to those of our citizens who are most in need the decent income they seek to make ends meet.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 19 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 81(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

EXCISE TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East) moved:

Motion No. 20

That Bill C-80, be amended in Clause 51 by striking out lines 34 to 43 on page 112.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with my remarks, I wonder if I could have unanimous consent of the House to change the motion to read:

That Bill C-80, be amended in Clause 51 by striking out lines 34 to 38 and lines 42 and 43 at page 112.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the Hon. Member has had any discussions with Members opposite. He can probably discuss the amendment until such time as we can get back to him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow the Hon. Member to go ahead and debate Motion No. 20 before amending the motion. Perhaps we can get some information for him before he concludes his remarks.

Mr. de Jong: The purpose of this motion is to maintain the exemption form for non-prescription drugs and health goods. The Government proposes to impose an 11 per cent tax and a new tax on such things as vitamins, aspirin, cough syrup, cold remedies, medicated shampoos, as well as imposing an 11 per cent tax on surgical gloves, surgical sutures, dental and surgical equipment, needles and syringes. We believe that it is an unjust tax.

According to the Government's proposal in Clause 51, an exemption would apply to people who use insulin infusion pumps and parts especially designed therefor and insulin syringes. In other words, diabetics are exempted from this tax.

Due to the complexity of the Act, our original amendment would have removed that exemption for diabetics. We are asking for the unanimous consent of the House to change our amendment so that the exemption for diabetics is retained in the amendment and that it applies an exempt status for all other non-prescription drugs and health goods.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): May I interrupt the Hon. Member? If there is unanimous consent in this particular instance, I am sure a motion can be put to amend the motion by the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong). However, I must have unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion shall read as follows:

Motion No. 20

That Bill C-80, be amended in Clause 51 by striking out lines 34 to 38 and lines 42 and 43 on page 112.

That is the amended Motion No. 20. We are now speaking on the amendment. Shalll I put the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the amendment of Mr. de Jong to Motion No. 20. Is there agreement to the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. de Jong) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We are now debating the amended motion.

Mr. de Jong: Yes. I thought you were asking for debate on the amendment to my amendment. Since the amendment to my amendment has been passed by unanimous consent, I understand we are back to the original motion as amended.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is correct, by unanimous consent.

Mr. de Jong: I will continue with my remarks, Mr. Speaker. The intent of this motion is to maintain the exempt status for non-prescription drugs and health goods. Today our health system is under severe pressure and some would say it is under attack as a result of cut-backs by the various levels of Government. In particular, pressure has been exerted on our hospitals as a result of cut-backs in funding. I am amazed that the Government is proceeding to impose an 11 per cent tax on such items as surgical gloves, sutures, surgical equipment, needles and syringes. This will increase the operating costs of our hospitals so that, on the one hand, the Government is cutting back on transfer payments, squeezing our health care system and hospitals in particular while, on the other hand, it is extracting more money from them by imposing this new tax. In other words, the Government is really taxing itself.

One must assume that there must be sane people on the Government benches, but it just does not make any sense for them to take such action.

The Conservative Party, whose Leader John Diefenbaker took great pride in helping to establish medicare in this country, is nickel and diming our medicare system to death. Such a move is outrageous and defies logic or any sense of compassion and reasonableness.

Furthermore, there will be a new 11 per cent tax on non-prescription drugs and health care products such as vitamins which are an important supplement to the diet of many people, particularly older people. There will be an 11 per cent tax on aspirin which is used by many Canadians, particularly older people.

Many doctors prescribe aspirin, yet the Government is intent on imposing an 11 per cent tax on that product. Cough syrup, cold remedies and medicated shampoos are examples of other products that will be taxed. While these products may not require a prescription, they are health products which are essential to the health and well-being of some people.

This does not seem to matter to the Government. These products will be taxed by another 11 per cent. In other words, we now have a tax on illness. The Government wants to make a profit on sick people.

It is obvious from the previous motion that the Government wants to tax blind people. Now it will make a profit on illness. It wants to extract nickels and dimes from people who have headaches, colds and other minor illnesses. It wants to extract nickel and dimes from our hospital system.

Many parts of Bill C-80 are flawed. However, a tax on blind people, on the sick and on our hospital system is inexcusable. I urge government Members to support our Party and tell the bureaucrats that enough is enough.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I would like also to contribute a few remarks to this debate by supporting this motion which, I feel, penalizes mostly older people and our most disadvantaged citizens. Older people who are entitled to the Guaranteed Income Supplement have cards which they can use to buy drugs from the drugstores, but only medication prescribed by a physician.

Well, with Bill C-80, all drugs, whether they are aspirin tablets or cold syrup—and God knows that we live in a country where the weather is bad, where winters are long and cold, and where most of us, especially older people, suffer from colds and headaches—will cost more because of this tax.

Mr. Speaker, we could truly say that the Government is taxing our headaches!

Mr. Speaker, I heard a moment ago my colleague the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) who was referring to the deficit. Yes, but if the Government wants to reduce the deficit, it should ask everybody to contribute, and not do so on the backs of older people and the poor.

What about the investors who had over $60,000 in the bank which failed recently? In that case, you were willing to pay . . .

What about the Reichmann brothers who received a tax give away of nearly $1 billion? Are you going to ask these people to do their share?

Mr. Speaker, the Government has given a $2 billion gift to the oil multinationals. But these people have nothing to do with the deficit! It is only the older people and the poor who have to reimburse the deficit, Mr. Speaker. What can you expect from a Conservative Government which is a "Reverse Robin Hood". They take from the poor to give to the rich!

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thought it was incredible to hear the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) refer as he did to the oil companies. But these companies did their tax planning under the income tax legislation that was passed not by the Conservative Government, but by the previous Liberal Government. He omitted to tell us about the steps we have taken, such as the minimum tax, to ensure that all Canadian taxpayers pay their fair share of the income tax. Hon. Members opposite did not do anything about the minimum tax. God forbid! They were not concerned about it! And now they say nothing about it! Mr. Speaker, they do not say that the May Budget has stopped donations inter vivos which had made it possible for people to split among their family members their interest income, so that nobody paid any income tax at all. They do not talk about that either, Mr. Speaker.

Now, concerning his Motion No. 20, he raises the issue of aspirins. The real idea here is to remove exemptions on such medical supplies as surgical dentures, suture threads, thermometers, ex-ray material, surgical and dental tools and microscopes, the value of which is less than $50. Mr. Speaker, the idea is merely to remove exemptions for professionals, physicians and dentists who are using this material in their daily work.

Mr. Speaker, if physicians and dentists are to be exempted, and if I follow the argument of the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou he will be asking for an exemption on his pencils and erasers, he is a CGA! That is what we are going to do, Mr. Speaker. That is the purpose of the exemption. We will give him an exemption on the pencils, the paper and the erasers he buys for his accounting firm.

Unfortunate though it may be, Mr. Speaker, there are things which the Liberals never did understand. We have a $200 billion deficit because there were things they certainly failed to understand. We have to put the Canadian economy back on its feet, we must ensure that professional people pay their fair share, Mr. Speaker, and they simply cannot be exempted from all expenses related to their profession. To me, Mr. Speaker, that is simple, logical and normal.

Mr. Gagliano: Is it just like taking aspirins?

Mr. Vincent: Aspirins yet! He is talking about aspirins, Mr. Speaker! I am not talking about aspirins, I am talking about medical supplies.

Mr. Speaker, again I must say that I am against this motion.

[English]

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) is in fine voice this afternoon. It is just a great pity that there was neither knowledge nor compassion in what he had to say.

One of the distressing aspects of the way the Government has dealt with this Bill is the total intrasigence on its part. We had closure imposed at second reading. In committee no amendments were accepted and none of the suggestions put forward by very knowledgeable and concerned witnesses received any attention, far less, of course, the proposals put by Members of this House.

One of the meanest and most unpleasant of the changes involved in the Bill is the imposition of sales tax on health products and, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) has just said, on non-prescription drugs.

A very interesting presentation was made by the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada. It pointed out that limiting the tax exemption is really restrictive and will create a whole lot of other problems.

Let us deal with the increased costs of dental care. It is obvious that as the Government has put sales tax on dental equipment, these costs will be passed on to the consumer. Again, families with young children will be affected.

To get this tax grab, the Government is going to nickel and dime Canadians to death with sales tax being imposed on so many goods, which cannot in any way be considered luxuries, and on essential services, particularly those used by families. The tax on health care products hurts families with young children, the older person and the disabled person who is living on a fixed income. It is a cruel tax.

The amount of money that will accrue to the Treasury as a result is not worth the imposition of it. It is small in terms of the Treasury, but it is a large amount to those poor people who are hurting.

I can only say how much I deplore the fact that the Government has been so intransigent about this Bill. No amendment has been considered. Nothing put forward either by citizens' groups or by opposition Members has even been considered. The Government is steamrolling ahead with this amendment for which there can be no justification.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I just want to take a moment to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to consider the argument put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) about the increasing cost of health care. He has spoken on many occasions, both from the government side and from the opposition side of the House about the rising costs of health care. If he does not consider it, it is somewhat illogical to increase the costs of health care further by an 11 per cent tax.

How can the Minister justify it in light of arguments and speeches he has made himself about the rising costs of health care and about how the Government and the health care system will have to devise ways of holding those costs in check? Surely the Minister of National Health and Welfare will want to contemplate for another 30 seconds and then tell us why the Government is increasing the costs of health care. It is a totally illogical move and is more of the mean-spirited, small minded attitude on the part of the Government. It amounts to chiselling. I am sure we are all acquainted with one or more people who suffer from severe diabetes. The Government wants 11 per cent in tax on the needles they have to buy. Really, Mr. Speaker, how hard up can you get when you consider that there are people making $50 or $100 on the stock market today, and there are people speculating in Canadian dollars? They are not paying a cent of tax on their profits, and we are doing nothing to them. There is nothing in the Budget about those people, but we want 11 per cent out of people who buy pet food for a seeing-eye dog, and 11 per cent out of people who have to buy hypodermic needles in order to administer their insulin shots daily. They want 11 per cent on non-prescription drugs. They want 11 per cent on equipment or non-prescription medicine prescribed by a hospital upon the release of a patient. Surely there are dozens of options available to the national Government and to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to increase revenues and reduce the deficit. Many of those options will bring in many times more than the amount of money they can hope to get under this miserly, chiselling measure. Why do they not deal with the kinds of options we have proposed time and time again, not only to this Government but to the previous one as well?

I do not understand why Government Members cannot accept something on second thought. It would certainly make them appear a lot bigger in the minds of Canadians as well as in the minds of all Hon. Members of the House of Commons. I hope the Minister of Finance rises in his place and justifie the actions of the Government in increasing the costs of health care. At the same time as he decries the rising costs of health care and calls upon the whole nation to deal with them, then he proceeds to add to them. I wish he would rise and justify it.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few brief comments on Motion No. 20 dealing with surgical and dental supplies, needles and syringes. I want to add my voice to those of my colleagues in the Liberal Party and in the New Democratic Party. Again the Government is attempting to nickel and dime people to death.

The previous speaker referred to diabetics who require insulin, yet the Government is trying to get another 11 per cent from them. It should look seriously at this legislation because it affects those people in society who can least afford it. That is why there are a number of amendments to the legislation which we in the Liberal Party and in the New Democratic Party think would be helpful and would display compassion toward our senior citizens and those who are less fortunate in society.

We all recognize the size of the deficit. We on this side of the House have a great concern about it, as does the Government. However, where we part company is on how to reduce the deficit. Governments sometimes have to show leadership within their own ranks. Under the present Government we see a Cabinet of 40 Ministers, one of whom has resigned. It is one of the largest Cabinets in our history.

Mr. Winegard: And one of the best.

Mr. Henderson: No. I would not say that.

Mr. Schellenberg: The best.

Mr. Henderson: It is probably one of the worst I have ever seen. From talking with some of my constituents, I think Canadians see it as I see it, because of the way it is going about dealing with the deficit situation. There seems to be no problem in the Government showing compassion when it comes to big banks.

Mr. Winegard: And all the little people.

Mr. Henderson: No, not the little people. The previous Government increased the insurance for bank depositors—and the House voted on it—from $30,000 to $60,000. However, when the banks were in trouble, their depositors did not lose. Some of those depositors were large corporations which gambled for higher interest rates that they could not obtain from any ordinary banking institution. They gambled but they did not lose. No, they did not lose because the Government told taxpayers that they had to pick up the tab. That is what burns me up as a Member of Parliament. It bothers me when I see that sort of thing happening and I see what this Bill is trying to do. There is no consistency in the Government's plan.

There are many ways for the Government to show leadership in deficit reduction, many ways which would be far more compassionate and humane to our citizenry. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has been persuaded by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I know the Minister personally. I am sure he has more compassion than that, but it has been forced upon him. It is the same with my good friend, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), who is present in the Chamber. He has brought in another form of user-fees on the inspection of potatoes; he is attempting to nickel and dime poor farmers to death. I know the Minister of Agriculture has a heart, but obviously he does not have much clout around the cabinet table, or he would not have allowed this to happen. However, that is what is happening in agriculture, in fisheries and in health.

That is why I support the amendment before us. That is why we on this side say that it is a goof amendment, as are all the other motions. The Government should give this matter second thought. It would be better off if it listened to the concerns expressed by the Opposition and voted according to its conscience. Government Members are not hard-hearted people. I see smiles on their faces. I think of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) from my province. I am always very proud of Members of Parliament from Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Winegard: And so you should be.

Mr. Henderson: The Minister of the Environment knows the problems of my province. I am sure in his heart he does not want this piece of legislation to pass and that he will show good judgment later and speak. I am sure he will do the right thing and show some guidance or leadership in that group over there which has no compassion or pity whatsoever for those who are less fortunate in society.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 20, as amended, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 81(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

• (1640)

Motion No. 22

That Bill C-80, be amended in Clause 52 by striking out lines 5 to 42 at page 114 and lines 1 to 4 at page 115.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity) moved:

That Bill C-80, be amended by deleting Clause 52.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, the aim of this amendment is to preserve the exempt status for conservation and alternative energy products. First of all, the people who will be hit hardest with this tax will be the people involved in insulation products. In other words, what this Act is doing and what this proposal of the Government is doing is that those people who choose to insulate their homes will now be taxed an extra 11 per cent. The Parliamentary Secretary shakes his head no, but the section deals with home insulation—7 per cent. I am sorry, it was 6 per cent last year, it is 7 per cent this year.

An Hon. Member: That's quite a difference from 11 per cent.

Mr. de Jong: Yes, there is some difference there, but certainly the difference between 7 per cent and 11 per cent is a lot less than between 0 and 7 per cent. It is the Government's intention, which is so obvious in this piece of legislation, to start taxing now the conservation field.

It is a foolish move on the part of the Government. The present world glut in oil is a temporary situation. Oil is a diminishing resource, a non-renewable resource, and this country will again face a crisis in the field of energy. There is no country in the world that is more dependent upon energy than this country. Our geography and our climate make us, on a per capita basis, one of the highest, if not the highest, consumers of energy. It is foolish not to use this period of time when we have been given a breather between an oil crisis and a future oil crisis to use this opportunity to develop alternative sources of energy and to make certain that our buildings are properly insulated.

I remember well the creation of the energy crisis of the 1970s and early 1980s, the number of homes in this country that were not properly insulated and were built with the assumption that energy will always be plentiful and cheap. People received a rude awakening. All at once the price of oil, and therefore the price of gas, and the price of electricity started to skyrocket. To assume that the present glut in the world oil situation will remain forever is very foolish.

We should continue to have Canadians conserve and insulate their homes properly, knowing full well that a day will soon come again when the price of oil will go up. As well, it is unfortunate that this Government has deemed it necessary to tax a budding new industry, and that is, the industry of alternative energy fuels. We will now be taxed on our heat pumps and our woodburning stoves, on our solar and wind collectors and other insulation and conservation materials and equipment.

As well I find the tax on the insulation equipment to be somewhat arbitrary. For example, there will be those who have signed a contract and made a deal to construct a building the price of which was based on the assumption that the price of insulation materials would be a certain amount. Of course now those people will find that the cost for the insulation material will have jumped by some 7 per cent. They will not be able to recover that because they are very often in a signed, fixed contract. No wonder business people used to complain about the Liberals and their arbitrary measures that prevented business people from making firm and forward-looking decisions, because all at once, out of nowhere, a new tax would appear that would totally throw out their planned projections.

This particular Government is doing even worse as evidenced by an item that it announced in its spring Budget which it brought into effect on January 1, 1986. Those contracts that were signed prior to the spring Budget were based on the assumption of lower costs of insulation materials, so the contractors, of course, are going to be out by the difference.

In terms of alternative energy forms, this country can and has the potential of playing a leadership role in the world in developing alternative forms of energy: wind collectors, heat pumps, woodburning stoves, photovoltaics, et cetera. We were well on the way to beginning to develop a new, good, budding industry. Then, of course, this particular Government came along. First of all, it wiped out that section in the National Research Council that offered some assistance to the development of alternative energy. Then the Government proceed to wipe out the home insulation and the off-oil programs. As a final kick—most probably the kick of death—they are now going to slap 11 per cent tax—well, in some cases 11 per cent tax, in other cases 7 per cent tax, on heat pumps, woodburning stoves, wind and solar collectors. This particular Government really hates conservation and alternative energy. It is just kicking them to death.

An Hon. Member: Not true.

Mr. de Jong: It is a pity, because one would tend to think that anybody who calls himself a Progressive Conservative believes in conservation. An old Conservative, a small c conservative, generally is one who espouses a notion of conserving, who believes that conserving is important. Yet this Government has done everything possible to kill the conservation industry in this country. It is shameful. This particular Act, I would predict, is almost a death blow to the conservation industry and the alternative energy industry in this country. In future years when the price of oil starts going up again we will be able to point to those people across the way and say, "Much of the fault should be placed on the Government's shoulders". I do hope that this Government and Government Members will see fit to support us in this particular amendment.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in supporting this motion I would like to remind the House that there are in Canada a substantial number of firms engaged in renewable activities, some 500 or so I am told, which employ in the neighbourhood of 5,000 people. This is a new industry that has emerged in less than 10 years, mostly as a result of the initiatives taken by the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Alistair Gillespie, following the oil price crisis.

I am told also that the potential in the world for the absorption of equipment, material and technology of this kind is somewhere in the neighbourhood of $4 billion, which is not a minor amount. It has enormous export potential for Canadian entrepreneurs and Canadian workers.

In support of this motion as well I would like to say a couple of words which I did not express at second reading in relation to the position of taxes on gasoline. At that time, you may recall, I was very upset by the fact that the application of taxation on gasoline, as it is proposed in Bill C-80, is one that has serious environmental consequences. I am glad to see the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) in the House today because it may have some relevance to his way of thinking. The tax that is being proposed in this Bill on unleaded gasoline is greater than on leaded gasoline. Therefore, once this becomes law, the price at the pump will be affected so that the gap in price at the retail level will be greater than it is now. As Hon. Members must have noticed there is now a three-cent gap, more or less, at gas pumps across the country. Some six months ago it was 2.59 cents. I am afraid that with the imposition of this measure the gap will increase. Of course, this move will cause two negative consequences. The first is with respect to misfueling. Those people who buy leaded gasoline, who really should be buying unleaded gasoline, will be encouraged to misuse gasoline. Second, the greater consumption of leaded gas will lead to undesirable health problems, as Hon. Members well know. In addition, the use of unleaded gasoline is possible in cars which are equipped with catalytic converters. Catalytic converters are gadgets which reduce the emissions of nitrous oxide into the environment. Accordingly, the acidity of the rain is reduced and the environment is protected. Therefore, it is necessary to impress upon the Minister of Finance and the Government the notion that the imposition of a tax on gasoline which is greater on unleaded than on leaded gasoline is environmentally wrong.

I carry the argument further by suggesting that we introduce a tax system on gasoline which is so adjusted that the prices for the two at gasoline pumps are equal. This has been done in some European countries, in particular Austria. It is a desirable and ultimately possible goal.

I realize that in this regard there may be some difficulties encountered by farmers and fishermen. In the past their concerns have been taken into account through the use of programs which have refunded them the difference between the amount they have paid and what they would have paid under an existing regime. Something of this nature could be put into place with respect to unleaded and leaded gasoline as well.

From an environmental point of view, I repeat, it is undesirable to sell leaded gasoline at a price lower than that charged for unleaded gasoline. There is no doubt about that. On the one hand, there is an increase in the demand for automobiles running on leaded gasoline. On the other hand, this move provides an incentive for the misfueling of automobiles designed to run on unleaded gasoline. I know that the Minister of the Environment has been quite articulate on this matter. He has not only expressed his concern, but I am sure that he has also put pressure on his provincial colleagues to find ways of discouraging and possibly eliminating this type of practice which is damaging to the environment.

The matter boils down to this. The price advantage leads to increased lead pollution, when there is a price advantage in terms of leaded gasoline. It also leads to acid rain-causing emissions. That is really the bottom line. It is therefore desirable that we use the federal commodity tax system to eliminate this price advantage. It is important from now on when we approach the taxation of gasoline that we do so with a political concern for the damage caused by acid rain in this very particular daily manner. It is important that our taxation structure reflect this concern. This is a departure from past practices. We have come to this conclusion as a result of the experiences of a number of other countries, particularly in Europe, which suffer acid rain damage because of dense vehicular traffic in highly populated areas.

I submit that it would be to our long-term benefit if we could put into place a gasoline taxation structure whereby unleaded gasoline is made available to the consumer at the same price as leaded gasoline for the reasons I have mentioned earlier. In so doing we would reduce the lead emissions and the concomitant health dangers accompanying those emissions. This would apply particularly to our urban areas where the emissions of nitrous oxide, which are emissions caused typically by the combustion engine process, find their way into the atmosphere and come back to us in the form of acid rain. It is with this in mind that I make this intervention.

I do so in the hope that in the little time left between report stage and the conclusion of third reading stage and the time which will be required for the examination of the Bill in the Senate that the Government will see fit to introduce a modification to the specific rate of sales tax imposed on this petroleum product. A specific increase on leaded gasoline will be required so as to permit unleaded gasoline to find its way to the dump at price equal to that of leaded gasoline. I am sure you, Mr. Speaker, your children and your grandchildren would substantially benefit, as all of us would and will, if this so-called Progressive Conservative Government, which is neither progressive nor really conservative when it comes to matters of this type, will see the light and adopt a conservation measure which in the end will benefit the health of all Canadians. In the end it will also benefit the health, growth and quality of our forests because, as Hon. Members know, acid rain is an issue of health and an issue of the growth and good quality of our basic natural resources.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, Motions Nos. 22 and 23, which have been grouped together for debate, concern the removal of the sales tax exemption for energy conservation goods and also certain construction materials. First, in terms of construction materials, many witnesses who testified before the committee expressed their concern about the increased sales tax on building materials. The Canadian Institute of Steel Construction and the Canadian Prestressed Concrete Institute are particularly opposed to the provisions in this Bill. In their view it will directly affect the ability of their members to compete with builders of like goods erected on the construction site, thereby threatening their viability both at home and abroad. The associations claim that limited tax revenues will be generated by such a scheme, given the relative smallness of the affected industries, but that the altered taxation could be extremely damaging to them. Apart from the concern about the basic sales tax, there is the additional concern that in the construction industry, fixed price contracts are very common.

The Minister was not even prepared to accept an amendment which would have let this change come into place at a later date. The Canadian Construction Association had asked for a grandfather clause which would excuse from the payment of the higher tax rate those who are unable to recover the additional sales tax liability because they did not have an escalator clause in the contract. An amendment of this kind, I might add, was made in 1963 when the then Government changed the sales tax.

In summary, we are opposed to the imposition of the sales tax on building materials, in the first place, and we are doubly opposed to the fact that the Government has not been willing to make any allowance for the existence of fixed price contracts in this field and has not been willing to consider some kind of grandfather clause which would have protected in particular the small and medium sized construction firms, some of which may very well be put out of business as a result of this change.

The second matter with which these two amendments deal is the tax on energy conservation goods. The Canadian solar industries and the Conservation Renewable Energy Industry Council, among others, opposed the removal of the federal sales tax exemption for energy conservation goods. It is argued on the one hand that the tax would generate little revenue given the industry's gross revenues of roughly $40 million a year. On the other hand, it will increase the sales price of the goods, thereby making them less competitive with other sources of energy. As a result, the well being of the domestic industry could be jeopardized and this, in turn, could adversely affect its ability to compete abroad, given that a strong domestic base is essential to attracting foreign sale.

As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), pointed out, there is a further disincentive when one looks at the other clause in this Bill which exempts from the excise tax diesel fuel used in the generation of electricity in other than the operation of a vehicle. Because this method of energy production is in direct competition with that of the renewable energy industry, Bill C-80 affords the former an unfair competitive edge.

For these reasons, we would urge the reinstatement of the sales tax exemption for energy conservation goods.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment briefly on this motion. First of all, it has to do with building materials on which this new tax would be levied beginning July 1, 1985. Mr. Speaker, you know very well that we are talking about construction, and everybody knows that contracts in that industry are awarded on a long-term basis. We have tried many times to convince the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that he should at least exempt those companies, most of them small businesses, from paying that tax, at least on contracts which were signed before the Budget was brought down. They were not aware that the Minister of Finance would include in his budget this tax which would have come into effect on July 1.

Mr. Speaker, the Government has therefore placed in a very vulnerable position thousands of smalll businesses working in the building industry to install heating equipment, insulation and so on.

I can speak from my personal experience as concerns energy conservation products. In my constituency of Saint-Léonard-Anjou, which has a large population of about 130,000, a lot of work has been done in recent years to change the heating systems to conserve energy because we have to be careful even if prices have gone down since they could go up again eventually and our supplies of non-renewable energy will not last forever. The purpose for my constituents and other Canadians was therefore to conserve energy and also to reduce their heating costs.

I want to say once again that winter is too long in this country and that heating bills can hurt the pocketbook. Any program encouraging Canadians to reduce their heating costs would have represented an economy for Canadian consumers and, since they would have more money to spend, this would have contributed to economic recovery and helped to reduce the deficit.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that the Bank of Montreal is forecasting an increase in consumer expenditures of only one per cent in 1986 compared with a figure of 5.1 per cent for 1985 because of these sales taxes which took money away from the consumers.

[English]

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments to speak on the amendments before the House which attempt to keep a series of conservation and building materials away from the 7 per cent increase in tax which is being proposed by the Government. Before I begin, however, I want to point out that this particular tax has already been levied. The House has not yet dealt with it but it will be shortly. The tax came into effect on July 1. I think that is one of the problems my constituents had with this particular tax.

I, like most Hon. Members in the House, have a number of contractors, builders, people who manufacture ready-mixed concrete and people who are putting together components which will become buildings, and this tax has caught them somewhat unawares. They operate traditionally, in our part of the country, at least, on the basis of forward contracts where they will contract to make deliveries of a certain amount of concrete or to provide certain components for a building during the summer building season. Those prices are fixed and those contracts are firm. They found on May 23 that they were being charged an additional 7 per cent on their product. This could not be passed on to the consumer or to the buyer. It had to be borne by the small manufacturer.

The amount of money which is built into a contract by a small builder or producer of ready-mixed concrete is not a great deal and the 7 per cent tax forces many of them to go very close to the line. It has caused some to have difficulties in making their payments to the banks and has even forced some close to the verge of going out of business. That seems a bit ironic because this was supposed to have been a Budget, according to its framers, which would create a great upswing in economic activity.

In addition to the manufacturers of ready-mixed concrete, there are manufacturers in my riding who are producing energy efficient materials such as panels for solar equipment and heat exchangers in a fairly sizeable way. These components, which were going into buildings as well, were caught by the 7 per cent increase which came into effect on July 1. Some of those were forward contracted as well. However, in future the price will have to go up 7 per cent, which will reduce sales somewhat. In those cases where the purchase had been forward contracted, the loss will be borne by the company itself.

In so far as society in general is concerned, it makes no sense to increase taxes on products which are designed to reduce the use of energy. It seems a very strange way to encourage conversion from gas and oil, and the use of better insulated homes, heat exchangers, and that sort of thing.

There is another factor here and I do not know whether the Government has spent any time dealing with it. One example is the extra cost to the City of Regina due to the application of this tax to concrete and asphalt materials. That extra cost amounts to more than $500,000 a year, which will have to be added to the taxes of the residents of Regina. It is not just a single tax of 7 per cent; it comes back again and again in the form of increased taxation in municipalities in my riding and others right across the country. The federal Government is taxing them on the improvements they have to make in their villages, towns and cities. That is unfair. Therefore, we propose to pull those taxes from this Bill and revert to the old level and save this 7 per cent tax from being applied to conservation and building materials.

[Translation]

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my comments to those made by my colleague about the following issues: First, the cost of materials, and second, the tax on energy conservation products.

Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised that a Government which is supposed to be for energy conservation would decide, in the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), to impose a tax on products especially designed to conserve energy.

If we look at the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), the chairman of the Committee on Public Accounts, who knows a lot about finance and who moved that the bill be amended to remove the energy conservation tax proposed by the Minister—

[English]

Obviously the amendment by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) deals with the specific issue of encouraging energy conservation. In fact, the Minister's attempt to tax energy conservation products runs absolutely contrary to all the things we fought for as a Liberal Government. The tax on construction materials, which is part and parcel of this grouping of amendments, is another indication of the callousness of a Government which introduces an amendment without any notification. In some cases this has added millions of dollars to the cost of construction. The estimate we got from the Canadian Association of Municipalities was that it would cost municipalities across Canada $1 billion. At the very least the Minister should delay the tax so that construction companies would be in a position to estimate—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please! The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) on a point of order.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is now discussing has no relevance whatsoever to Motions Nos. 21 and 22. I would therefore appreciate that she deal with Motions Nos. 21 and 22.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Parliamentary Secretary has a point and I know the Hon. Member will come back to the motions.

[Translation]

Ms. Copps: Maybe the Parliamentary Secretary cannot read, but Motion No. 22 deals with—

[English]

The amendment strikes out the clause transferring certain construction materials and energy conservation projects to Schedule V, thereby qualifying for the sales tax. This is exactly what I was discussing. When I was so rudely interrupted—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: —I was about to mention the fact that if this Government had any concern for the construction industry it would have at the very least acceded to demands that this tax be delayed for six months to one year. I think of the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) who represents many small employers in the construction industry. In my own riding I have many small employers who are bidding on projects two, three or six months ahead. A lead time is necessary to incorporate this increased cost into the tender process. If you happen to run a multimillion-dollar company maybe you can carry yourself over the cash flow problems created by the Government and the Minister. However, if you are running a small paving company and you have one or two employees, this tax could be the straw that breaks the camel's back.

It is our suggestion, as well as that of the NDP, that we delete this tax for a period which would allow the construction companies, in particular the smaller employers, to phase in the costs so they will not be hit four-square between the eyes as they have been by the Wilson Budget and those amendments. The people we heard in committee were very forceful on this issue. They put their point succinctly and directly to the Minister. However, their request was refused, and this amendment is our attempt to deal with that inequity.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I would simply like to contribute to the debate by suggesting that the amendment we are putting forward is aimed at eliminating specifically the tax transfer to energy-saving products.

As I recall, Mr. Speaker, and it is only fair to say so, that program was very important to Canadians and to Canada during the energy crisis. I instructed my office to send me the statistics on the Canadian Oil Substitution Program, for instance, and the Canadian Home Insulation Program. The results are quite eloquent. Under the Canadian Oil Substitution Program there have been 988,486 applications across Canada for a total $716,230,300. That was a program that Canadians truly appreciated, Mr. Speaker, and which was terminated as we know on 31 March, 1985.

And the other program, the Home Insulation Program, is a program under which there were 2,287,844 applications nationally for a total $874,649,300. And, Mr. Speaker, when there is a response from Canadians, an awareness as to the need for energy conservation, the need for heat in a country as cold as ours, a snowed-in counry, we must try and realize that a Government that collects taxes on insulation products, and also taxes on wood stoves, as I said not so long ago in this debate, is an insensitive Government that does not fulfill the needs of the people. And it is our hope that we will prevail upon them to back down, to become aware of the needs of Canadians, to desist from taking out of the pockets of Canadians taxes that will increase their heating and insulating costs.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal briefly with the allegations made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). He has just mentioned some tremendous figures and programs which brought about the closing of four refineries in Montreal under a Liberal government, thanks to the programs the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier has just mentioned. He has blamed the Government for closing one refinery while praising programs which brought about the closing of four refineries. Are we to be blamed for the four refineries that were closed down in 1982-83, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Gauthier: You are responsible because you closed these refineries!

Mr. Vincent: Moreover, Mr. Speaker, when they introduced these programs in 1970, they said in their Budget that there would be no permanent exemption on that. In 1978, it was the Liberals who removed the exemptions on storm doors and storm windows. Mr. Speaker, they failed to mention that they did that in 1978. I think it is necessary to put that in the proper perspective. But what I find most funny, Mr. Speaker, and I am going to conclude with this, is that the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Mrs. Nicholson), because of the way it is drafted, would actually raise the tax to 11 per cent instead of leaving it at 7 per cent as it is now. Perhaps Hon. Members opposite should learn to read.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 22 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) and Motion No. 23 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour will please yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 81(11) the recorded divisions on the proposed motions stand deferred.

The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions at report stage of Bill C-80. Call in the Members.

And the division bells having rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The first vote will be on Motion No. 1. Mr. de Jong, seconded by Mr. Deans, moves:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-80, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 44 to 46 at page 14 and substituting the following therefor:

"(5) Subsection (3) shall be deemed to have come into force on July 1, 1985."

The House divided on the motion (Mr. de Jong), which was negatived on the following division:

Excise Tax Act

(Division No. 188)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations and I think, if you inquire, you will find a disposition of the House to have this vote applied to the remaining motions before us and recorded as such.

Mr. Plourde: Mr. Speaker, I was identified as Mr. Plamondon. I am André Plourde, Member for Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That will be corrected.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to follow the proceeding here. I take it that the negative vote on Motion No. 22 will not necessitate a vote on Motion No. 23 but will take care of Motion No. 23 by being negatived at the same time.

An Hon. Member: Definitely.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the proposition of the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) agreeable to the House?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I think that is quite satisfactory. It means that all report stage motions will be defeated.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in order that it may be understood, there will be a separate record made of the votes on each motion, with the names recorded the same way as they were on the motion with which we just dealt.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is agreed. Must I put the question on Motion No. 23?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is fine. It is all agreed. Motion No. 23 will be negatived on division.

The next vote is on Motion No. 2. Mr. de Jong moves:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-80, be amended in Clause 16 by striking out line 40 at page 16 and substituting the following therefor:

"1986".

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

JUDICIAL APPOINTMENTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Alan Redway (York East) moved that Bill C-259, an Act to amend the Federal Court Act, the Northwest Territories Act, the Supreme Court Act, the Tax Court of Canada Act and the Yukon Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased indeed to have this opportunity to move second reading of Bill C-259, and to move as well that the Bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for consideration.

This Bill is being put forward at this time with a view to establishing a process for the parliamentary scrutiny of all federal judicial appointments. Now, I wish that that were a simple matter and we could put that forward in one Bill, or in one motion, but it is not quite that easy, I am told. The difficulty lies in the fact that appointments are made to a number of federal courts by the Governor in Council under a number of different federal Acts. Those are the Acts that I referred to in Bill C-259 that is before us today: the Federal Court Act, the Northwest Territories Act, the Supreme Court Act, the Tax Court of Canada Act and the Yukon Act.

In addition to that, there are other appointments made by the Governor in Council, but those, however, are made under Section 96 of the Constitution Act. Because of that fact it is necessary, in order to establish a judicial review procedure or a parliamentary review procedure, for appointments of that sort—and those, by the way, are appointments to Superior, County and District Courts in the provinces—to be made by way of constitutional amendment to set up a similar procedure. That is why my Bill, while it deals with the five different pieces of federal legislation, does not, in fact, deal with an amendment to the Constitution Act. That would require a constitutional amendment, and that is going to be dealt with separately because I have placed on the Order Paper a Notice of Motion No. 252 which reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of undertaking negotiations with the provincial governments to establish a process for the parliamentary scrutiny of federal judicial appointments made under section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867, in order to ensure that in making these appointments, the government is guided by the highest standards of conduct.

That motion will come forward at a separate time and it will give us another opportunity to debate this matter.

Of course I hope the Hon. Members will see fit to pass my Bill at second reading stage and move it on to committee today. Both the Bill and the motion provide for the parliamentary scrutiny of all federal judicial appointments. Let me quote the following statement: "That, in my view, is a necessity in order to reinforce public trust that all judicial appointments are of the highest calibre and that in making those appointments the Government is guided by the highest standards of conduct". I am quoting here directly from a comment made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on September 9 of last year when he introduced his seven points on public ethics and used those very words to describe the process that he hoped this House would adopt.

Now you will remember that during the 1984 federal election campaign, Government patronage appointments, and particularly judicial appointments, were a major issue. Just before he handed over power to former Prime Minister Turner the then former Prime Minister Trudeau reached an agreement with Mr. Turner that there would be certain patronage appointments made. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), as he now is, agreed that there would be certain patronage appointments made, including a number of judicial appointments. Subsequently those appointments were made, and that touched off a controversy that gripped the country during the last federal election campaign, a controversy which, as we all know, is renewed in this House every time the Government makes an appointment of any sort.

The total issue of course is one that is much wider than merely that of judicial appointments; it covers all Government appointments. You will recall, as I said a few moments ago, that our present Prime Minister addressed the topic of Government appointments as part of his statement concerning standards of conduct required by the Government and the Public Service that he delivered in this House on September 9, 1985. In that statement the Prime Minister dealt with a package of seven major initiatives on public sector ethics. They included an experimental program of parliamentary scrutiny of Governor in Council appointments, and that, of course, is part of the package of reforms that is now before the House, is being considered, and hopefully will be approved very shortly by everyone in this House.

In addition to that package of seven initiatives there was also included a review of the judicial appointment process. In his statement the Prime Minister announced that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) had the judicial appointment process under active review. Well, of course it is still under active review and we have not had a report back from the Minister of Justice on that subject as yet. That is what Bill C-259 is all about, it is to bring forward a process for that form of review of judicial appointments.

In introducing this Bill I do not want to leave the impression that I question the competence or the integrity of our judges. The country has been and continues to be well served by its judges. However, I am introducing this Bill because I share a concern that was expressed by the committee of the Canadian Bar Association on the independence of the judiciary, which reported in August of last year and indicated that the existence of political influence in judicial appointments could undermine public confidence in the judicial system. At the same time it reported that Canadians are cynical about the current method of appointing judges and want a totally different method. I agree with those statements, and I also agree with the statement of the Chief Justice of Canada that was made a year earlier, in August of 1984—actually during the election campaign of 1984—when he said that, "the public is entitled to be reassured that our judges are appointed on the basis of merit and legal excellence alone". That is really what I am trying to accomplish in introducing this Bill C-259.

At the moment we have a process of federal judicial appointments that is behind the curtains, if you will. It is something that goes on away from public view. In fact, the Governor in Council can make some 760 federal appointments. There are some 760 federally appointed judges at the present time. The Governor in Council makes those appointments to the Federal Court; the courts of the Northwest Territories, the courts of the Yukon, the Tax Court of Canada, the Supreme Court of Canada, and also, as I indicated under Section 96 of the Constitution Act, appoint Superior District and County Court judges in each province, except for the Courts of Probate in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

In actual practice what goes on is that the Minister of Justice has the responsibility for recommending to the Governor in Council the persons who should be considered for this sort of judicial appointment. The appointment of the Chief Justice actually rests with the Prime Minister, but in all cases except, as I understand it, in cases of Supreme Court of Canada appointments, it is actually the Minister of Justice who performs this duty on behalf of the Prime Minister.

In actual practice, however, it is an official, of course, in the Department of Justice who does this sort of thing. He gathers suggestions from far and wide across the country through a network of persons, including judges, lawyers, law schools, Members of Parliament and provincial officials. Once he has a tentative choice for a candidate, that candidate's name is submitted to the national committee on the judiciary of the Canadian Bar Association. This committee then evaluates the suggested candidate and reports back to the Department its opinion as to whether this person is well qualified, qualified or not qualified enough.

Although political patronage in judicial appointments has declined over the years, it is obvious that it has not disappeared altogether. Of course, during the past election campaign there were appointments announced. They were announced without the advice of the national committee on the judiciary having been sought. That is what this Bill is aimed at trying to eliminate. We are trying to set up a process of openness so that every appointment will have the opportunity of being publicly vetted. There have been a good many suggestions as to how this should be done.

In our country, from 1956 through until 1979 I believe, there were some four different suggestions put forward as to how we should go about this. All of them involved some aspect of having provincial input into the selection of judges for the Supreme Court of Canada. In the summer of 1985, the Canadian Bar Association proposed a more comprehensive system on the topic of the independence of the judiciary. It proposed that an advisory committee be set up to seek candidates and to assess their qualifications. It also proposed that this committee be composed of judges, lawyers, representatives appointed by the federal and provincial Justice Ministers or Attorneys General, and members of the public. The Government would then be able to choose the best qualified from among those candidates. It is interesting to note that the committee did not advocate a parliamentary review of judicial appointments as my Bill proposes.

The Americans, of course, have adopted a process of having a Congressional or Senate review of judicial appointments. Some American judges are elected and some are appointed by state Governors. However, federal judicial appointments are made by the President with something that is called the advice and consent of the Senate. This means that while the President formally nominates a candidate for a judicial appointment, the matter is investigated by the Attorney General of the United States, by the standing committee on the federal judiciary of the American Bar Association, and then by the Senate judiciary committee, which reviews all nominations to the federal bench in the United States and which makes the ultimate recommendation to the Senate.

What I propose is not exactly an American-type of legislative review. Of course, it is one model which we could look to. There are also other models we could look to. What I am suggesting is a model of parliamentary review which, in fact, is already in use in Canada. While it is not a procedure which may be familiar to most Hon. Members, it is a procedure which is set out in a strange Act of Parliament entitled the Safe Containers Convention Act. It is an Act of Parliament, much to the surprise of most, I suspect which sets out exactly the same method I propose in my Bill.

The Act provides that where there is a recommendation made by the Governor in Council, or an order for a judicial appointment, that recommendation must be tabled in each of the Houses of Parliament within five days of the making of the order. The order is then referred to a committee of the House of Commons or of the Senate. The committee has the opportunity to review the appointment and report back to the House of Commons or the Senate within 30 days of receiving the order. If it is not reported back in 30 days, then the order is confirmed and the appointment is made. If it is reported back negatively, then Members of the House of Commons or the Senate are given the opportunity to place before the House a notice of motion, which is to be signed by either 25 Members of Parliament or 15 Senators, depending on which House deals with the matter, asking for a debate on the particular appointment. The debate has to follow within five days of the tabling of the notice of motion and is limited to five hours. If the motion is defeated, then the appointment goes through. If the motion is passed, then the matter is referred to the other place, be it the Senate or the House of Commons, and within five days of receiving the motion it must be debated by that place. There is also a five-hour time limit placed on debate. If it fails in that House, then the appointment goes through. However, if it passes, then the appointment is rejected. That is the procedure that I suggest in my Bill. It may not be a familiar procedure to most of us, but it is a procedure that is already in place. In that sense it is not something new or foreign. This is why I feel it is appropriate in this instance.

As I have indicated, the Canadian Bar Association does not recommend this method. It suggests the formation of an advisory committee of the bar association itself. The interesting thing I have noted is that in the United States there is an advisory committee of the American Bar Association. If the late President Woodrow Wilson had always accepted the advice of the bar association's judicial committee with respect to who should be nominated to the Supreme Court of the United States, then Mr. Justice Brandeis, a well known and respected jurist, would never have been selected since he was not recommended by the American Bar Association.

In my view, this reinforces the need for Canada to have an open process of parliamentary review for these judicial appointments. Basically, that is what I am saying in my Bill. I am saying that we should have a public scrutiny process. It is the only way by which we can reassure the public that this major concern which arose in the last election campaign can be dealt with properly. In this way we can reassure Canadians generally that all judicial appointments will be of the highest calibre and that in making appointments the Government will be guided by the highest standards of conduct. That is the basic thrust of my Bill.

It is with that in mind that I commended to the House that this Bill be given second reading and reference to a legislative committee. I hope that Members of the House will agree to my proposal for no other reason than to give us an opportunity to discuss the question of some sort of review or a new process for judicial appointments.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in this debate and I have to say to the House that it is unfortunate that we do not have all the time required to debate the value and substance of this Bill C-259, an Act to amend the Federal Court Act, the Northwest Territories Act, the Supreme Court Act, the Tax Court of Canada Act and the Yukon Act.

At the outset, Mr. Speaker, may I commend the Hon. Member for this initiative which is excellent and quite timely indeed because it relates to something which is important to me, namely the parliamentary scrutiny of appointments to the various courts of the land.

Mr. Speaker, parliamentary scrutiny and review of such appointments is necessary if only because in most instances nowadays it is based on a system which is not only archaic but which in many cases does not quite reflect true democracy, which means public review and scrutiny of those appointments.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to a simple case which I have been mentioning in the House these past few days, as Hon. Members would know, and of course I am talking about the appointment of a bilingual Francophone judge to the Ontario Court of Appeal. It is unfortunate that this incident could not have been settled through the parliamentary process. I am certain that this House, for example, if it had to vote on the appointment of a judge in Ontario today, knowing full well that there are 500,000 Franco-Ontarians in this province, knowing full well that the provincial legislature passed a law in 1984 which was proclaimed in 1985 and which will be in force throughout the province in 1986, it would keep in mind the fact that Franco-Ontarians, like all other Francophones who come here from elsewhere in Canada, might have access to the courts in their own language. That is not what happened, Mr. Speaker, and it is unfortunate bcause we, as Parliamentarians, did not have the right to examine the appointment and to check the qualifications of the appointee, especially as concerns the linguistic criteria, which should always be kept in mind.

Mr. Speaker, I could read the correspondence of Mr. Robert Paris, for instance, the former president of the French-speaking jurists of Ontario, who recommends parliamentary review and examination of the linguistic qualifications of judges appointed to superior and appeals courts.

However, my time is limited and I want to leave my colleague of the New Democratic Party enough time to say a few words. Since we do not have much time and we do not have all the . . . Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that of the 16 judges of the Ontario Appeals Court, only two can speak French.

At the Quebec Appeals Court, there are also 16 judges, but they are all bilingual, and 8 of them, if I recall correctly, it is in fact 18. Yes, I am sorry, but it is 18. Of these 18 judges, 8 are bilingual anglophones.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the House could agree to something as simple as a review to ensure equity in these appointments to the courts. I do not think that it is too much to ask that these appointments be submitted to the Canadian Parliament to ensure linguistic equity in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I could give you the names of the judges in New Brunswick, where the proportion is fifty-fifty, in Quebec, in Ontario and elsewhere, but that is not the point. I think that the Hon. Member tried to make us aware of the need to implement a new mechanism for appointments which would require a review of judicial appointments by Parliament, meaning both the House of Commons and the Senate.

Before resuming my seat, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member once more and tell the House that what is at issue here is not the legal ability of the judges. I do not know that much about it as I am not a lawyer myself. However, I do know that if I go before the courts in Ontario and I want to speak French, it is essential that the judge be able to speak my language.

When the House adopted Bill C-42 a few years ago, it accepted the principle whereby each Canadian has the right in this country to be heard by a judge speaking his or her own language. I suggest that is a basic right. I just cannot accept the fact that because only two cases were heard last year in Ontario out of 1,400, it is a good enough reason for disregarding the linguistic aspect.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that a right cannot be quantified, that it is wrong to do so and that a right must apply to everybody. As a Parliamentarian, Mr. Speaker, I feel, as I am sure a great many of my colleagues do, that it is high time for the Government to submit its appointments to a parliamentary review and that this would be a major step for democracy in the country.

[English]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I regret that we only have five minutes. In order to let other Hon. Members speak, I will be brief. It is unfortunate that we do not have much time because it is a very interesting Bill. It is a good Bill and I support it in principle. I have some questions about the procedure of applying the Safe Container Convention Act to judges. That is a new one, but it is very imaginative. I did not realize that procedure was there. It is a procedure for House scrutiny.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), the justice critic of the New Democratic Party, has in the past supported scrutiny of appointments, especially judicial appointments, by the House. I hope that a technically good way can be found to do that.

I regret it only applies to the federal courts and not to the Superior Courts in the provinces where the real judging goes on. If I had my way, I would almost abolish federal courts because I think we could have a much simpler system of justice if we ran them in with the provincial courts on the superior level.

I think this is overdue because of new laws like the Charter of Rights. We are asking a lot more from our judges. We are asking for high calibre and that they be completely unbiased. We expect them to be really quite extraordinary people, and many of our judges are extraordinary people.

I hope that judges come from other parts of society as well. I think we need more women on the bench. I would like to see some community lawyers on the bench, not just corporate lawyers. We need people who have been out in the world. That is what we will need for interpretation of the new Charter of Rights.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): I too would like to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), for bringing this subject before Parliament. There has been considerable discussion about the appointment of judges and I think it is an important issue for Parliamentarians to look at. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), in his discussion of the appointment of judges, raised a specific example. He referred specifically to the recent appointment of a judge in the province of Ontario and questioned the process by which that appointment was made. It is important to look at the facts of just who the judges are and who have been appointed in the province of Ontario since that issue is now before Parliament.

At the District Court level in the province of Ontario, there are 146 judges, 15 per cent of whom are bilingual. On the Supreme Court level, there are 18 judges at the appeal level, three of whom, not two, are bilingual. The Chief Justice of Ontario himself has said that there is no problem with bilingual trials or appeals.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier says he is talking as a Parliamentarian. Well, I can say to you, Mr. Speaker, that as a Parliamentarian, he is doing a disservice to his province and to his country by injecting this matter into Parliament again and again since this appointment.

Bill C-259, the Judicial Appointments Bill, which was introduced by my colleague, raises a number of interesting points. It does not purport to cover all judicial appointments in Canada. In fact, I believe it covers just 50 out of the over 700 appointments which are made by the federal Government. It excludes those who are appointed under Section 96 of the British North America Act. My colleague said perhaps there would be constitutional difficulties. It would be an interesting case to have referred to the Supreme Court of Canada in order to see whether in fact a Bill such as the type introduced by my colleague could, in fact, be made and not have it ruled unconstitutional. In any case, the Bill deals exclusively with appointments to the so-called Section 101 Courts, which are the Supreme Court of Canada, the Federal Court, the Tax Court and the Supreme Courts of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. In order to accomplish the purpose of this Bill, the method of appointment to Section 101 Courts would have to be changed. At present there is a considerable variety in the statutory formulae applicable to the appointment of judges to each of those Courts. For instance, while all appointments are made by the Governor in Council, those to the Supreme Court and the Federal Court are by Letters Patent under the Great Seal.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, would it be possible for the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) to go before me?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I see no problem so long as the Parliamentary Secretary who is going to respond is here.

Mr. Waddell: Is he here?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, we have no problem with that. The Parliamentary Secretary is not here right now but I am sure he will be here shortly. I am staying anyway to answer questions.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I presume that what is being suggested is that the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) and the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) exchange places. Is that correct?

Mr. Waddell: It is just that I am involved in something and I wondered if one of the other Members wanted to go first and I would go second. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) can go first. If that is possible I would appreciate it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

ENERGY—MAJOR OIL FIND IN BEAUFORT SEA

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the reason I am rising this evening is not because I was dissatisfied with the answer given by the Parliamentary Secretary on January 16. It is because I feel that the discovery of what appeared to be very sizeable oil reserves in the Beaufort Sea is something worthy of comment in this House. It is of extreme importance not only to the part of Canada I have the Honour to represent but to all Canadians.

On December 30 a press release was issued by Gulf Canada Resources announcing that they, in co-operation with their partners in the Amauligak I-65 well, had been successful. They estimated that the well was capable of producing something like 35,000 barrels of oil a day. Estimates as to the size of the oil pool in the Amauligak structure might be something like 1 billion barrels. To put it into perspective, that is something quite larger than Hibernia.

What does this represent for the North? First of all, it indicates some success for an exploration program which has been going on for many years. It entailed the expenditure of billions and billions of dollars. Credit is due to Dome Petroleum, one of the early major operators in that area. That company developed a lot of technology. While they themselves have not been that successful, Gulf has been, as so often happens in the circumstances. Esso have also been operators in that area. They invested a lot of money and are worthy of comment. We are all pleased to see the success. The effort has paid off.

My constituents in the delta were always very concerned that the exploration effort in that area might dry up. It had been successful in a way in that a lot of oil and gas had been found, but it had been in accumulations that were not big enough to justify the expensive transportation systems that would be needed to bring that oil to southern markets.

Regardless of what happens to the price of oil in the near future, the find now is of such magnitude that the owners thereof cannot walk away from it. Therefore, we can be assured of continued activity in exploration and development in that area for some years to come. We can look forward to the construction of a pipeline down the Mackenzie Valley. There is one there now from Norman Wells in the Territories to Zama in Alberta. If this particular find was put into production, that line would need looping and an extension. There may be need for a brand new line all the way from the delta to refineries in the Edmonton area.

I am pleased to report, Mr. Speaker, that a lot of the preliminary work has already been done. The socio-environmental studies, the economic studies, and the environmental studies have been largely done already. This could proceed expeditiously without getting into the same kind of mix-up we experienced 10 years ago. Exploration is still ongoing, but in the near future we can look forward to the development and production stage. I am pleased to see that legislation has been introduced in the House which gets rid of the old PIP program. If that system had any usefulness, it has now expired. We are looking at a royalty regime and a system of incentives that is more in keeping with the new stage in the production effort in the Beaufort Sea.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), in a trip to Inuvik earlier this year, promised to work on a northern accord similar to the Western Accord, a system of revenue sharing to allow the people who live in the Territories to derive immediate benefits from developments as they take place. We need a better system of management than COGLA, which we have at the present time, which reports to two masters. Those are the things which remain to be done.

The last point I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, is that it has always been somewhat embarrassing to people like myself from the Territories who recognize that we take more out of Canada than we put in. It is expensive to operate education and health systems and to build roads there. We are very grateful for the amount of money that southern Canadians have put into the North. However, we look forward to self-sufficiency as a result of oil and gas activity. We look forward to being able to pay our own way in Confederation in the very near future. I think I speak for all of my constituents and all the people in the Territories when I say that we are delighted with this extremely important find which has been made in the Beaufort Sea.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is not often that one has good and exciting news to talk about. I know that my hon. friend from Western Arctic is very proud of his area. I have visited there with him on occasion. The news of the Amauligak discovery was greeted with some joy by everyone, no matter what their political stripe.

In December, 1985, it was announced that a major discovery had been made at I-65, the first delienation well drilled into the Amauligak structure in the Beaufort Sea. Drilling was carried out from the giant Molikpaq caisson over a sand berm. I was on the Molikpaq last summer and it is quite an exciting and interesting operation. Based on its first two tests, Gulf has stated that oil flowed at rates in excess of 7,000 barrels a day with calculated capacity on the second test of 35,000 barrels a day. Testing has been completed on I-65 and they are now doing additional drilling at I-65A, and will continue in the coming months. Based on the test results from I-65 delineation well, it appears to be one of the most productive wells in Canada's history. Needless to say, we are excited about the fact that it is the first indicated commercial discovery in the Beaufort Sea. The Government of Canada shares the industry's enthusiasm about these results. Nevertheless, we do recognize the requirement to undertake further testing and drilling on this structure to determine more precisely the magnitude of the field.

I might add that in the midst of plummeting world oil prices, it is encouraging to note that independent oil analysts have commented that project development of this field should not be impeded by lower international price levels.

The Amauligak well has produced the highest flow rates in the Beaufort Sea in more than a decade. We are hopeful that further drilling will yield more promising results that will result in Amauligak being the lead project prompting full-scale development in the Beaufort region. Of course, this will do nothing but good for the citizens of the North, especially in the western Arctic which my hon. friend represents so ably.

ENERGY—INCREASES IN GASOLINE PRICES. (B) CONSUMER PROTESTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to my hon. friend, but the Parliamentary Secretary is here and I would like to finish with him. He has certainly earned his keep today and yesterday. He has been here consistently as well as in the committee. I want to make life a little bit more difficult for him.

I rise tonight concerning a question I put to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) on January 20, 1986. Let me quote from page 9943 of Hansard on January 20, 1986:

> Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On March 28, 1985, on the date we debated the Western Accord, as reported at page 3473 of Hansard the Minister said in the House:
> "If the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is right that by creating a market environment prices will continue to decline, obviously that provides the environment for gasoline prices to decline. They certainly are not going to increase in a declining market."

I asked:

> —why are gasoline prices increasing in a declining market? What does the Minister intend to do about it in order to protect the Canadian consumer?

The Minister has received much publicity in the press and is supposed to be one of the stars of the Government. That star has begun to fall in the last couple of weeks.

The question that I asked in the House of Commons is one that every ordinary Canadian motorist is asking. When they read in the paper that the price of oil has dropped from $28 American to $20 American and even lower, they ask why prices have not come down at the gas pumps. Why have Canadian consumers not benefited from this? That is the question I put on behalf of all Canadians. After the NDP kept pressure on for about a week, the Minister finally sent a telex, got down on her knees and prayed to the oil companies to reduce the prices.

We told her that she has the ability at her fingertips to do something about this. She has the power under Canadian law, Section 7(2) of the Petro-Canada Act, to instruct Petro-Canada—since it is our oil company—to lower the prices if the other oil companies will not lower theirs. The Minister said that she could not do that. She could not let Petro-Canada be a price setter, but rather a follower of the other oil companies.

Not only is Petro-Canada following the other oil companies, it is restricting competition for a small business couple in Gravenhurst, Ontario. They wanted to lower the price at their gas station by 2 cents a litre, but the Government oil company threatened to lock their pumps. This is taking place at a time of declining oil prices. That is why there is so much concern. People are angry.

I have had calls and letters from all over the country. Tomorrow we will be tabling a petition from the lower mainland of British Columbia with 3,500 signatures on it. The city council of Powell River, I think, has passed a motion complaining about the increase in gasoline prices. There is a group in Montreal, a spontaneous grass roots group, that has formed to fight the Government on higher oil prices. I am getting phone calls from Toronto, the Maritimes, from everywhere, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Automobile Association put an advert in the newspaper. From British Columbia we got 1,500 replies in one week. People are angry.

The Parliamentary Secretary said that the Government expected the decline in prices at the retail level to come sooner than expected. Industry competition in the refined product business will come on like gangbusters, he said. Where is it? It has been 62 days since December 6 when the price of oil started moving from $29 to $27 a barrel. The price of gasoline has not come down. We hear that these things are in the pipeline. But we are still waiting.

The Americans have lower gasoline prices. Our problem is too many Government taxes. The Government keeps adding more taxes. The Liberal Government in Quebec did it the other night. The Liberal Government in Ontario was going to do the same thing until the NDP in Ontario stopped it. As well, we have a non-competitive system.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) says the Government needs the money. I do not want to hear this argument from the Hon. gentleman opposite. We hear that the Government needs the money for social services. Why did the Government give $5.3 billion in tax advantages to the oil companies? The people of Canada have said enough is enough. They see oil prices declining. They want the price of gasoline to come down at the pump and they are asking why it has not.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, that was one of the greatest shows I have seen in a long time put on by my friend, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). He has been energy critic for the New Democratic Party for five years. I am surprised the Hon. Member does not understand the energy business any better than what he has apparently shown. The Member does not have a clue how the system works, no idea at all. The Member stands there and says when the price of a barrel of oil goes down today, the prices at the pump should go down today.

Mr. Waddell: That is not what I said. Sixty days you said.

Mr. McDermid: Let us make a deal. I sat quietly and listened to the Member's tirade, which was full of nonsense. I could have interrupted him many times. I have only three minutes. The Member had seven minutes, seven minutes too many, I might add.

Let me tell the Hon. Member that it takes 60 days from the time the oil comes from the wellhead to the time it reaches the market. The Member knows that. He talks about the price of oil after December 9 dropping from $29 to $27 a barrel. There was movement in the market-place at that time. That is when it started the downward trend. The real drop came January 28. The Member admitted this in the House himself the other day. That was a week ago, which means it will not be until the end of March before we see the dramatic drop hit the pumps.

We saw today that Imperial Oil lowered its rack price by 2 cents a litre in Toronto and Sarnia. That is what the free market is all about. When the Hon. Member stands up and quotes figures to the Canadian people, it is no wonder people are confused. The Member is being a little less than honest with Canadians in the way he throws figures around. He knows that. I thought much more of the gentleman because he was energy critic. The Member wanted to be Energy Minister in British Columbia. He volunteered his services. But they did not want him. They wanted him to stay here in Ottawa.

Mr. Waddell: Who told you that?

Mr. McDermid: If he were honest with Canadians, the Member would explain how the system works. He is taking an issue like this and playing cheap politics with people's lives and with gas prices. Canadians see through that. They understand. They know it takes time. They know that it took 60 days for prices to rise once stock was depleted. The same thing happens when the prices are coming down. We are going to see the results of that. In conclusion, he was critical of the Minister and said that her star is falling. I am going to tell you something, her star is on the rise. She is one of the best energy ministers this country has ever seen, and I predict she is going to be around, I predict, a lot longer than the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway.

INSURANCE—LIABILITY COVERAGE (A) DIFFICULTIES FACED BY SMALL BUSINESS. (B) SOLVENCY GUIDELINES FOR INSURANCE COMPANIES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, to place the liability coverage issue in its proper context, I should like to return to the Question Period of November 4, 1985, when we, as Liberals, asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) to look very closely into the liability coverage crisis which was really exacerbating. His reply was to the effect that he was monitoring the situation very closely and that the Cabinet would adopt various measures.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the situation has greatly deteriorated now: institutions and small businesses have been receiving every day letters to the effect that when their insurance policies expire, there will be no renewals. Then, on January 16, as much as two months later, because the Conservative Government had failed to act on the pretext that it was a provincial jurisdiction, ten Liberal members asked for an investigation under the Combines Investigation Act to shed light on the whole business.

Then, Mr. Speaker, on January 20, I asked the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall)—following our request for an investigation the Government had finally started to move—what she was going to do to help small businesses, financial institutions, arenas, municipalities and others which had no liability coverage. The Minister replied that that very morning, she had met representatives of the insurance industry and that a Bill was forthcoming. Mr. Speaker, we are still waiting for it!

But in order to shed light on this problem, Mr. Speaker, I should like to read just a few of the great many letters which I have received so far, including one from a chartered accountants firm.

Mr. Vincent: A C.G.A.?

Mr. Gagliano: No, not a C.G.A., but a C.A. It is not mine, but the Montreal firm of Richler & Tabac which wrote:

[English]

I have read with interest and have seen on Canada AM (CTV) concerning the problem of liability insurance.

Our firm recently paid an increase of over 150 per cent when we had to renew our professional legal liability insurance. Not only that, but whereas in the past, there was a choice of insurers, we were obligated to deal with the only firm who was writing this type of policy in the Province of Quebec.

I do not know what is going on but I cannot believe that such increases can be tolerated when inflation has been limited to less than 5 per cent.

I hope that your efforts in requesting a federal investigation to this matter will be successful.

Another letter coming from Ontario reads:

Re: Product Liability Insurance

Our company, a wholly-owned Canadian corporation, is a manufacturer of machine tools and employs three hundred (300) people in Windsor, Ontario.

In the past 26 years no product liability claims have been registered against us, because quality and safety is essential and primary in the manufacture of our products.

On July 1, 1985, our product liability insurance increased in cost by eight (8) times with $100,000.00 deductible.

I could continue, but my time is limited. All industries, all sectors were affected. Canada Public Works has a problem with liability insurance. To conclude my remarks, I would like to quote:

The head of the Insurance Bureau of Canada says now is a good time to shake up the insurance system a little to see if there are any problems.

"I think the mechanisms that sell insurance, the mechanisms that underwrite risks have to be looked at," John Lyndon told CTV'S Question Period in an interview taped for broadcast Sunday.

● (1855)

Those are the words of John Lyndon, the head of the Insurance Bureau of Canada.

The funny part—or perhaps I should say the tragic part—of this whole crisis occurred to me when I read in a booklet entitled Le Portefeuille d'assurances, at page 15, the following:

[Translation]

This is what has been predicted by Mr. Daniel Demers, an actuary for La Laurentienne Générale, at a luncheon of the Cercle d'Assurance Accidents de Montréal. He first indicated—

And I quote:

Recent social and legal events having created panic among insurers, reserves were increased to the point where a most profitable experience is predicted for 1985-86!

Mr. Speaker, people cannot get liability insurance, but companies are looking forward to a most profitable year. So we have every reason to ask the Government for action, and I know very well the point the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary will be making, that this again is a provincial responsibility. I am sorry, but the problems exists from Newfoundland to British Columbia, it is therefore a national problem. This Government should take the lead, get together with all provincial ministers in charge of insurance,and put an end to the crisis once and for all.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to reply to the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano). It is unfortunate . . . as he said earlier, he asked the first question in November 1985, and since then we have been trying politely, kindly, tactfully, to make him understand the insurance problem in Canada. Unfortunately, I realize once more tonight he has not quite grasped it yet.

Mr. Speaker, on the one hand, the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) tabled in June 1985 a report on financial institutions, part of which dealt with insurance companies. Now, when the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou states that we failed to assume our responsibilities as a federal Government, my answer is that in June 1985, before he raised the matter, we already had a factual report, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gagliano: Where is it?

Mr. Vincent: It was tabled.

Mr. Gagliano: What do we do now?

Mr. Vincent: We are now working on a bill. The report has been tabled.

Something else, Mr. Speaker. He referred to the increase in premiums. As you know, Mr. Speaker, insurance premiums are a provincial responsibility.

I had the oppotunity last week to take part in a debate on the program Sur la Colline and a renowned Montreal lawyer, a lady who deals with insurance, held a neutral position between the two of us. What did she say? She said: "I must admit that Mr. Vincent is right. What the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou is asking for does not come under federal jurisdiction but under provincial jurisdiction".

He suggests the national Government must deal with it because it is a nationwide problem. Mr. Speaker, if every school in this country were to be faced with a problem tomorrow morning, would the federal Government intrude in a field such as education which comes under provincial jurisdiction? We would be... That is not our problem. As the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) said, she first met with the various insurance companies, and she said she would introduce a Bill concerning the solvency of insurance companies. That is what she said. But solvency is not the problem, the problem has to do with premiums and hat falls within provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, I see that my time is almost up. I might add that the Government said it would co-operate with the Province of Ontario, among others, and with all the organizations concerned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Therefore this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

DEPARTMENT OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES

TREATMENT OF LAWYER AND MEMBER'S STAFF

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, recently my office received representations from a constituent who was having difficulty getting a cheque out of the Department of Supply and Services. My constituent was represented by a local lawyer who prepared the submission and delivered it personally on October 29, 1985, to Mr. Lloyd Spiro, who is a counsel for legal services in the Department of Supply and Services. Following the submission, my constituent received word from Mr. Spiro saying that she would have a cheque by December 27, 1985, and then December 27 became February 1, 1986.

Out of frustration my constituent came to my office. One of my staff contacted Mr. Spiro's office. But, before returning my secretary's call, Mr. Spiro called my constituent's lawyer and was absolutely livid and rude. Then Mr. Spiro undertook to call my office and proceeded to call my constituent's lawyer a liar on several occasions and said that he would love to punch him in the mouth. During his tirade on the telephone to my secretary, Mr. Spiro accused my constituent's lawyer of misconstruing everything, and made some very degrading statements about him.

The point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is that a public servant who acts in this manner does not deserve to be employed in the Public Service of Canada, and I am requesting that the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) take action. There is no way I will tolerate any member of my staff or a decent hard-working constituent having to put up with this kind of conduct and verbal abuse. The very least that I can expect is an apology to my secretary and to the lawyer concerned.

SHIPBUILDING

CLOSURE OF B.C. MARINE SHIPBUILDERS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the closure this month of B.C. Marine Shipbuilders, the oldest shipyard in British Columbia, terminates 250 permanent jobs in Vancouver East. The campaign promise of the Conservative Government to revitalize our shipbuilding industry was another betrayal. The only concrete action the Government has taken has been a complete elimination of all Government support for this once thriving industry. A workforce which once boasted 15,000 jobs for skilled workers across Canada will dwindle to 5,000 by the end of this year. On the West Coast, B.C. Marine Shipbuilders will be the third shipyard in three months to cease operations.

Instead of taking action to save these jobs, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) have ignored telegrams and letters requesting immediate meetings and clear answers on policy direction. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) has made a complete mockery of the Government's promise to aid shipbuilding by failing to ensure that two new CN ferries planned for the East Coast are built in Canada. Although he told the House in November, 1984, that these ferries will be built here, he is now considering using foreign-built ships at a cost of 10,000 person years to Canadian workers.

I urge the Government to act now to save our shipbuilding industry. Go West and meet with the people in the industry. Ensure Government support so that ships operated in Canada are built and serviced by Canadians. Give back to those proud and skilled workers their jobs.

CHINESE NEW YEAR

WELCOME FOR YEAR OF THE TIGER

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, as all Members with Canadians of Chinese origin in their ridings know, Sunday, February 9, marks the beginning of the Chinese New Year. I know Hon. Members will join with me when I say on behalf of this House and the Government of Canada that we join with all Canadians of Chinese origin in welcoming the Year of the Tiger.

EMPLOYMENT

CREATION OF HALF A MILLION NEW JOBS

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Government campaigned on the theme of economic renewal, always stressing the strategic importance of job creation. The results of a questionnaire which I circulated in my riding indicate that my constituents strongly supported the Wilson Budget of last May. This morning, editorial after editorial, recognizing that over half a million new jobs have been created across Canada in less than a year a half, are complimenting the Government on the 129,000 new jobs created in January.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tupper: This pushed the unemployment level below 10 per cent to 9.8 per cent. In the Province of Ontario some 14,900 new jobs were created every month for the last 17 months, for a total of 239,000 new jobs. In the last months some 21,000 new jobs were created in Ottawa-Hull, 17,000 in Hamilton, 61,000 in Toronto, and 12,000 in London.

Think of the joy and satisfaction in the hearts of 500,000 Canadians who are back in the workforce, and the new economic wealth being created by them.

THE CENSUS

INCREASED THIRD LANGUAGE ADVERTISING URGED

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, Census Day in Canada is rapidly approaching. However, the Conservative Government is threatening its accuracy by eliminating all funding for media advertising. Historically upwards of 2 per cent of Canadians are officially omitted from this statistics-gathering process, while unofficial reports claim the figure is significantly higher. A very worrisome statistic, however, is that of those omitted the majority are Canadians from ethnocultural communities. It stands to reason that without media advertising, including the important third language media outlets across the country, these numbers will inflate dramatically. That would indeed be most unfortunate.

Third language newspapers and magazines are widely followed, as are multilingual television and radio programming. In addition, ads placed in these media tend to offer greater prominence and therefore greater value for the advertising dollar, and better communication. I therefore urge the Minister responsible for Multiculturalism to urge his colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) at the very least to approve census advertising in Canada's third language media. It is vital that our national statistics accurately depict the real and contemporary Canada, including the integral and inseparable multicultural components.

EMPLOYMENT

JOB CREATION INCREASE

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, 211 Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament were elected because we promised jobs, jobs, jobs. Today's figures from Stats-Canada have proven that we can deliver, deliver, deliver.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Schellenberg: Not only has the rate of unemployment dropped across Canada to 9.8 per cent, the lowest in five years, but my home Province of British Columbia saw one of the biggest drops in the rate of unemployment of any province. Under a job-intensive Progressive Conservative Government the B.C. unemployment rate has gone from 15.2 per cent in 1984 to 12.9 per cent today. That is down 1.2 per cent in the last month alone. To put it in human terms, tens of thousands of British Columbians who were not working before the last election are working today.

There is an old saying that at a party the host sees the glass as half-full but the guest sees it as half-empty. Applying that philosophy to our job-creation figures, to the pessimist 9.8 per cent of Canadians are unemployed, but to the optimist over 90 per cent of Canadians are working.

However, beyond partisan pride I think every Member in this House is encouraged by today's figures. They mean that hundreds of thousands of Canadians who ask for nothing more than the feeling of accomplishment that comes from meaningful work have come through a horrible recession and bounced back into the workforce. Obviously there is more to be done. We want more Canadians working. However, today we acknowledge that we are well on our way to recovery and that the Government is fulfilling its mandate with jobs, jobs, jobs.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

VISITS BY UNITED STATES VESSELS ARMED WITH NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, Canadians should not be surprised that the number of visits by American ships carrying nuclear weapons increased in the last two years, but this increase makes news in Canada, and that tells me that something is very wrong in the country. Canadians really have no idea of the extent to which their country is tied into the nuclear weapons race. They like to think that Canada is nuclear weapons-free because our forces do not actually have their fingers on the button. However, this is not true.

Nuclear weapons are anchored in Canadian ports, tethered to our docks by a few feet of rope, overflying our air space in B-52 bombers, and making test runs a few feet under the surface of our waters and a few hundred feet over Alberta and the Northwest Territories. Other nuclear weapons are earmarked to be sent to Canada in times of crisis. Canadians are either unaware of these facts or are ignoring them because their implications are too horrible to face. However, Canadians must face up to these facts if we are ever to deal effectively with the question of nuclear arms control and disarmament.

Governments, both Liberals and Conservative, have been guilty of keeping Canadians in the dark on nuclear issues. It serves their political purposes to avoid this controversy by hiding nuclear weapons agreements and asserting that Canada is nuclear free. This claim rings false to those who control the nuclear arsenals and know of our complicity in their deployment. Neither Moscow nor Washington will ever take seriously our plea that they cut their nuclear forces as long as we aid and abet the nuclear arms race.

PUBLIC WORKS

LOCATION OF NEW UNITED STATES EMBASSY IN OTTAWA

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada has embarked on a policy of selling the Crown jewels. First it was the threat of logging national parks, then selling our national aircraft manufacturer, then the possibility of privatizing Air Canada, and, finally, the potential sale of part of Mile Circle Park right here in the city of Ottawa to build a U.S. embassy.

This park is bordered by a residential neighbourhood. Hundreds of average Canadians live there and hundreds of children go to school there. It is the worst possible site for such a building. In the past American embassies have been the targets of very unfortunate events. Could the safety of innocent people living in the area be affected by the potential construction of such a structure in their neighbourhood?

As the opposition critic for the Department of Public Works, I call upon the Government to reject any American offers to buy or lease Mile Circle Park. I call on the Government to send a clear signal that Canadian parklands, our natural treasures, are not for sale. I call upon the Government to state clearly that it will not act improperly by selling Mile Circle Park or locating an embassy in it.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DECREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT TO FIVE-YEAR LOW

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, 15 months ago, after our Economic Statement, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and his soulmate, the Leader of the NDP, the "Nearly Departed Party", (Mr. Broadbent), were clamouring to whomever would listen that our policies would destroy thousands and thousands of jobs in Canada. Figures were being brandished around by the opposition Parties stating that 50,000, even 100,000 jobs, would be lost. What happened to these predictions of gloom and doom? They were shattered.

This morning Statistics Canada announced that the Government had just established an all-time record for job creation in a single month. One hundred and twenty-nine thousand new jobs were created in January of this year. The Liberal legacy of unemployment has dropped to under 10 ten per cent for the first time since April, 1982. The rate now stands at 9.8 per cent, a level which the Opposition claimed to be unattainable only 15 months ago.

The NDP and the Liberals are shuddering in their boots, they are shuddering in their skirts, and they are shuddering in their drawers, at this tremendous achievement. We have shown that, when you have a Government with vision, goals can be achieved and objectives can be attained and even surpassed. We in the Conservative Party have faith in Canada. We have faith in the ability of Canadians. We know, and we have proven, that as a nation we can stand with the best.

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, Statistics Canada announced this morning that we have set a new all-time record for the number of new jobs created in one month, namely 129,000.

One hundred and twenty-nine thousand new jobs for Canadian men and women, in January!

Mr. Speaker, since we were elected, we have created more than 589,000 jobs. More than one-half million! That is leadership. That is effectiveness. That is what excellent policies can do! Unemployment, that Liberal legacy, has dropped by 17,000 and is now around 9.8 per cent, its lowest level since 1982.

Mr. Speaker, these figures will probably not be well received by the Opposition nit-pickers who always try to see the negative side, nor will they be good news for those who set the interests of their party above the national interest. And they will certainly not be good news for all those people who like to spread gloom and doom in this country.

Well, Canadians have had enough of these tactics. It is time for Opposition members to start working for the well-being of their constituents by making a positive contribution to the debate in the House and being constructive instead of constantly criticizing and obstructing the proceedings.

Mr. Speaker, there are now 580,000 Canadian men and women who know the Government keeps its promises.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. With yesterday's increase in the bank rate, Canada will have the highest interest rates in the western world. Mortgage rates will climb, inflation will go higher, and business will be hard hit. What steps does the Minister intend to take to ensure that high interest rates do not undercut economic recovery?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe that all of these matters have to be considered as a comprehensive whole. I am sure the Hon. Member would like me to advise her today that last month we had a record high level of job creation of 129,000 jobs.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Since the Government took office, 1,100 jobs per day have been created for a total of 580,000 jobs.

Last year we had the largest single increase in job creation—a half million people. Over 1,100 jobs a day were created. That is the full measure of the comprehensive economic policies that this Government has followed, and that is what the Hon. Member should be focusing on rather than walking around under a little black cloud.

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, interest rates were jacked up in order to prop up the dollar. There was massive borrowing to prop up the dollar. The dollar, which closed at 71.12 cents yesterday opened at 70.99 cents this morning, although it had moved up very slightly at eleven o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Nicholson: What does the Minister propose to do now since yesterday's massive intervention is clearly not having the dramatic effect that was hoped for?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we had what is probably the largest two-day increase in the level of the Canadian dollar in history. I think the Hon. Member is totally off base with her preamble.

I have always stated in the House that we must view economic policy as a comprehensive whole rather than nit-pick at little items of the policy without recognizing that—

Mr. Gauthier: What about the interest rate?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member is laughing. I suggest that he go to the streets of Ottawa-Vanier and ask his constituents—

Mr. Gauthier: I do every day.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question was short. The answer can be short.

Mr. Gauthier: You come down to my riding, Michael.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to accept the Minister's invitation to put the matter into a broader context. May I just remind him that he inherited a dollar at 77 cents which he let drop to 69 cents. He inherited an economy that was growing at a rate of 6 per cent which he let drop to 4 per cent. When will he replace this ineffectual manoeuvring with a coherent policy?

• (1120)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the Hon. Member has been for the last little while. We inherited an unemployment rate of 11.7 per cent. This month that rate is down to 9.8 per cent, the first time in over four years that unemployment has been below the 10 per cent barrier.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We inherited a deficit of $37 billion. We have got that figure down a good deal lower. I will be coming out with a precise figure in a very little while so the Hon. Member will know exactly what it is.

We inherited a country that was growing much more slowly than is the case now. We inherited a country where the estimates of economic growth were far less than we were able to demonstrate through actual figures. This is what we inherited, Mr. Speaker. But more so—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming a speech.

DOLLAR'S EXCHANGE VALUE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Government has been in office for over a year and a half. It has to stop talking about what it inherited—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: Because it is embarrassing to the Liberals.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): If everything is going so well because of what the Government is doing, can the Minister explain why the dollar was worth almost 77 cents U.S. when it took office and it is only in the 71-cent range today? Can the Minister explain that, because he is not really doing as well as he is trying to pretend today?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there are 580,000 more people working today, over 1,100 more people a day over the last 16 months. Eighty per cent of those jobs are full-time jobs. Only 20 per cent are part-time jobs.

The rhetoric which the Hon. Member throws at us here says nothing when you look at the facts. Facts speak louder than the empty rhetoric of the Hon. Member. I will match those 580,000 jobs against his rhetoric any time of day, any place in this country.

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the facts are the dollar today is in the 71-cent range and it was 77 cents U.S. when the Minister took over. Because of the Minister's action, interest rates today are at a 15-month high, costing consumers more, costing small business more, and costing homeowners more. Why is the Minister sitting by and letting those rates climb? Why is he revelling in that instead of bringing them down?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that if the Hon. Member went out to Sparks Street and asked Canadians about the things that are important to them, they would tell him that 580,000 jobs are important.

The Hon. Member is talking about what we inheritated. We inherited a youth unemployment rate of 18.4 per cent. Last month that rate was down to 15.9 per cent. That is what we have done with our inheritance. We have improved the position of many, many thousands of Canadians, young Canadians and other Canadians, far, far more than had been the case for a number of years. That is much more important than the empty rhetoric of the Hon. Member.

MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance.

On my way down Sparks Street this morning I was stopped by a number of people—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: One must have been a policeman.

Mr. Deans: They wanted me to ask—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You asked for that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the people on Sparks Street want the Hon. Member to be able to put his question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: A lot of ordinary Canadians were on their way home or to work.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: From work or to work.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Obviously, you don't understand. Many ordinary Canadians work nights.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: And days too.

Mr. Deans: The interest rate increase will affect 30,000 people this month who will have to renew their mortgages. It will affect numerous small businesses that have to carry inventory. They will have to charge higher prices as a result of additional costs, which will detrimentally affect the already high level of consumer borrowing costs. What action does the Minister propose to take now to ease the burden on those who will have to renew their mortgages during this month at higher interest rates?

• (1125)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was also stopped on the way to the House today. I was not sure that I was going to be able to make it because of all the people who were stopping me and shaking me by the hand and saying: "Things are going pretty well with 580,000 jobs".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member has raised the question of interest rates. As I indicated to him and to his Leader yesterday in the House, what we have done in the last few days has to be viewed as a package approach, or a comprehensive approach, to dealing with the problem of speculators in the market-place. However, I should remind the Hon. Member that current levels of mortgage rates still show a $70 per month saving, whether it is a one-year mortgage, a three-year mortgage or a five-year mortgage, from what had been the case when we took office. That is an annual saving of about $835.

We are not happy with the level of interest rates. We want to get them back down to a more normal level, but in order to preserve the balance in the economy it was necessary to do what we did over the past week.

SITUATION OF SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister seems happy with interest rates for mortgages and does not propose to do anything, what action does he propose to take to ease the burden of high interest rates which will have to be carried by small businesses and which detrimentally affects the cost of consumers because it will ultimately have to be passed on to them? Does he have anything to offer them by way of some action?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member is focusing on the right point again. If he analyses what has happened to small businesses over the last 16 months, he will see that they are at the heart of the 580,000 jobs which have been created since we took office. Those 1,100 jobs per day have been created by small businesses because they are responding positively to the economic environment and economic policies set out by the Government. That is what we are doing for small business.

Mr. Deans: There is no action for mortgages and there is no action for small business costs.

INTEREST RATE INCREASES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): What action is the Government going to take to counter the effect rising interest rates are having on the purchasing power of consumers?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker . . . Excuse me, Mr. Speaker!

[English]

Mr. Speaker: This had better be a short answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I would like to say that in Montreal, we created 1,000 jobs a week throughout 1985. This is very important for small and medium-sized businesses, because they have created jobs in Quebec, and I think it is very important for the Government to maintain the policies that have created the environment for this marvelous performance of our economy.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. We welcome the improvement in the general rate of unemployment—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: —but unfortunately the Government is using that moderate improvement to divert attention from—

Some Hon. Members: Moderate improvement!

Mr. Allmand: —and avoid action on some very serious underlying problems—regional unemployment, part-time employment, older workers, and the enduring rate of 15.9 per cent for youth unemployment.

Mr. McDermid: Down from 18.4 per cent.

Mr. Allmand: What will the Minister and his Government do to break the log-jam and alleviate that rate of 15.9 per cent for youth unemployment?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has forgotten what I just said in response to a previous question. We have done something about youth unemployment. We have brought the youth unemployment rate down from 18.4 per cent to 15.9 per cent, still too high, but a considerable improvement over what it had been prior to our taking office.

• (1130)

I would also like to comment on another element of his preamble. He was talking about full-time jobs. Conservatives jobs are full-time jobs, 80 per cent of the jobs created have been full-time. Liberal jobs are part-time jobs; it is just about the reverse.

GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister can pat himself on the back all he wants. Is he saying that 15.9 per cent for youth is acceptable? This week the Government cancelled Katimavik. It cut back on transfers for post-secondary education to the provinces. What specifically are you going to do to break that log-jam because it is stuck at 15.9 per cent?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Challenge '86 is a program which has been introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration. She has also, in the comprehensive Canadian Job Strategy Program, set out in a very focused way a much greater target of training as part of our job creation, working with the private sector and working the provinces to ensure that young Canadians are assisted in learning skills which can help them get full-time jobs. I think the performance that we have demonstrated in getting the youth unemployment rate down from 18.4 per cent to 15.9 per cent is a clear demonstration of the success of our policies.

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATES—EFFECT ON FARMERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and concerns his comprehensive interest rate policy. Since December prime rates have increased 2.25 per cent, which for farm people means that falling farm land prices fall even faster, debt-to-asset ratios grow, and even more people are pushed out of farming. How does that help Canada's economy?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Agriculture, has addressed the questions that the Hon. Member has put on these topics in the past in a very effective way, demonstrating the actions—I think it is 145 pieces of specific action—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You're turning farmers into truck drivers.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —that we have taken to address the problems in the farm community. Yes, there are problems in the farm community. Yes, those problems are caused by some international phenomena over which we do not have control. But we are doing a tremendous amount to deal with the problems within our total control, and we will be doing more in the future.

FARMERS' NET INCOME

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, virtually all of those 145 actions that the Minister of Agriculture relates would have taken place whether there was this Government, the old Government, or no Government. Would the Minister explain what his Government is proposing to do to turn around the dismal net income situation for farmers, which has stayed virtually the same since 1974, even though those same dollars will buy only half as much?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is widely recognized that the agricultural industry has gone through one of its toughest years in 50 years. There is also a great recognition out there that there are a number of areas to which the Hon. Minister of Finance has referred in the international market-place which cause us great difficulties. Since assuming office this Government has supported the agri-food industry consistently. We are going to continue to support it. We know that we have to do more in the area of farm finance. As the Hon. Minister of Finance indicated, that is exactly what we are going to do.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister will know that unemployment in Atlantic Canada is very high and his economic policies are not working. I want to ask the Minister, and ask him sincerely, what he proposes to do now to change that dramatic situation in those communities, whether they be Halifax, Saint John, Cape Breton, Moncton or Summerside. What will he do now to try to alleviate the hardship with which those communities are confronted?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite right. The main increases in employment have been in the central part of the country, and to a lesser extent in the western provinces, but we have always acknowledged the very important need on the part of the Government to address regional unemployment problems. My colleague, the Hon. Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, has addressed this issue on a number of occasions in this House. The Hon. Member knows full well that in the region he comes from we have the most generous tax incentive programs in order to draw business to that part of the country. This is a continuing concern of this Government and will be a focus of our policy in the weeks and months ahead.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR CHANGES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I say sincerely to the Minister that response will not provide comfort or hope to the thousands of Canadians who are unemployed or have no hope of getting any employment at all. Will the Minister amend the Canadian Jobs Strategy Program and put in place a special job program for Atlantic Canadians in order to give them an equal opportunity, as is inscribed in the Constitution?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think what the Hon. Member has said in his question and what I said in my answer to his first question are pretty consistent. We both share the concerns of those in Atlantic Canada who are out of work. We know there are greater numbers out of work in Atlantic Canada. As the broad recovery taking place in this country continues there will be clear results for those in Atlantic Canada. As I have indicated, there will be specific policies directed toward developing more employment opportunities in Atlantic Canada.

HEALTH

HIGH INCIDENCE OF CANCER SUFFERED BY GOLD AND URANIUM MINERS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It concerns an extremely serious matter. A recent Government of Ontario study revealed that gold and uranium miners in Ontario, particularly at Timmins, Elliott Lake, and Fort William, suffer a tragically high incidence of lung and stomach cancer. It was also revealed that between 1943 and 1979 the mines introduced aluminum prophylaxis treatment which was not voluntary but involuntary.

Mr. Speaker: Is there a question, please?

Mr. Rodriguez: Is he prepared to work with the Steelworkers of America and the Province of Ontario to launch an in-depth study with respect to the effects of aluminum prophylaxis on those who worked in those mines during that period of time?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we are aware of the problem with aluminum prophylaxis, and the health and safety aspects of it. Much of it is handled by the Government of Ontario. I think it is important that perhaps a joint study by Ontario and the Governmenbt of Canada, the unions, and possibly the companies, should be examined. I am going to take this matter up with my colleague, the Minister of Labour, the bottom line being the protection of the Canadian miners' health.

REQUEST THAT MINERS' REGISTRY BE ESTABLISHED

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for the answer. My supplementary question is for the Minister of Labour. Is the Minister of Labour prepared to co-operate with the Steelworkers of America and the Province of Ontario in establishing a registry for all those miners who worked within that period of time in the gold and uranium mines? Will he also help them in their efforts to obtain recognition of and compensation for their illness?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we would assist in any way that we possibly could, recognizing that the responsibility and jurisdiction rest with the Government of Ontario concerning gold miners. The other thing that should be drawn to the Member's attention is that for three years the Ontario Ministry of Labour has been researching literally mounds of documentation to try to establish a probable cause for the injuries suffered by the miners. However, we recognize that this has been a serious occupational health and safety problem. If there is any way that Labour Canada or the federal Government can assist, we would be only too happy to do so.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DROP IN UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and involves the announcement that unemployment has dropped for the first time in the last five years to single-digit figures in spite or opposition predictions that—I am trying to work my preamble up to only about half the length of opposition preambles.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the Hon. Member has a question now, just a question?

Mr. Hicks: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister. Would he like to comment further on this dynamic, exciting revelation—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the Minister would, but the Hon. Member will know that that question—I think I will simply go to the next questioner.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and I will give him the opportunity his colleague wants him to have. Yesterday the Minister of Employment and Immigration refused to agree or disagree with the assertion, based on Statistics Canada's unpublished figures, that real unemployment in Newfoundland is a full 10 per cent higher than the figures officially announced by Statistics Canada. Is the Minister aware that with the exception of one area in Newfoundland where fishermen have gone back to work, unemployment has increased everywhere else in Newfoundland this month, including the ridings of the Hon. Member for St. John's East and the Hon. Member for St. John's West? Unemployment on the Avalon Peninsula has increased from 18.4 per cent last month to 20.6 per cent this month. Where are the jobs, jobs, jobs that have been promised?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the Hon. Member's seatmate, we are very conscious of the fact that the recovery is not as strong in Atlantic Canada as it is in other parts of the country. I indicated very clearly in my response to the previous questioner that my colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, is working on policies to encourage a greater degree of economic activity in Atlantic Canada. I am sure my colleague would welcome the suggestions of the Hon. Member if he has any ideas on how to best do that. We share his concern and we are dealing with it.

INCREASE IN YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, Atlantic Canada is not recovering, it is haemorrhaging to death. I would ask the Minister whether or not he is aware that youth unemployment in the Province of Newfoundland has increased from 29.6 per cent in December to 33.9 per cent this month, an increase of a full 4.3 per cent in just one month. Would the Minister agree that the only difference in job strategy for central Canada and Atlantic Canada is that there has been the election of two Liberal provincial Governments in Ontario and Quebec recently?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member would expect anyone in the House to be so naive as to fall for that one. He knows that the job-creation performances in both Quebec and Ontario were improving considerably long before any Liberal administration took over.

[Translation]

And the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie said he has a problem with the employment and unemployment figures. I may remind the Hon. Member that in the province of Quebec, we have created, I think . . . Just a second please—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

OUSTER OF DUVALIER REGIME

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who will join the impoverished people of Haiti in the one thing over which they have to rejoice, the departure of the autocrat.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Jewett: I wonder if the Minister can give us the latest word on the situation in Haiti, on the transfer of power, on the role of the militia, and a word from the 2,000 or more Canadians who are in the country.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question. The House will know that I am answering this question in the absence of the Minister of External Relations who has been handling this file with skill and effectiveness. There appears to be an atmosphere of calm in Haiti and the new Government seems to be in control of the country. Naturally, we are monitoring developments on an hourly basis.

With regard to the some 2,000 Canadians who are in Haiti, the Canadian Embassy there has established direct and systematic contact with them. We have every reason to believe that they are all safe although I must indicate to the House that, given the dispersed nature of their presence in that country, there cannot at this stage be a 100 per cent guarantee, but that is our impression at the moment. We are working now with various other countries to put in place a system by which Canadians who might want to leave Haiti would be helped in doing so if that were necessary and if that were their choice.

POSSIBILITY OF ELECTIONS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the House is glad to hear that from the Minister. I wonder if he could elaborate a little further on the nature of the Government now in power and the Minister's information on the possibility of elections being held.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have no other developments. The initial assessment of the officials of our Department is that it is in fact a representative Government and one that is able to establish authority and control over the country, and that indeed some of its more prominent figures are people who have taken positions with regard to questions of human rights that Members of the House would find very encouraging.

EFFECT OF INCREASED EMPLOYMENT ON UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND DEFICIT

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Over the last four years there have been large deficits of billions of dollars in the unemployment insurance account as a result of record high unemployment. How much will that deficit be reduced next year as a result of nearly 600,000 jobs being created in the next year and a half and consequently more people paying in and fewer people collecting? My own estimate is that it will decrease by over half a billion dollars a year. Is the Minister's estimate more, or less?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I do not have a specific number to give off the top of my head of what that change would be. Clearly the breadth of the economic recovery and the resultant decreasing number of unemployed will have a very positive effect on the Unemployment Insurance Fund. However, that does more than just change the numbers in the fund. It conveys a much greater sense of confidence and well-being to people in Canada, gives Canadians the sense of confidence that their jobs are secure, and gives them the sense of confidence that will lead them to make big-ticket purchases such as a new refrigerator or a new—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PAYMENT OF PREMIUMS BY ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Why are members of the Canadian Armed Forces forced to pay unemployment insurance premiums at a time when they do not qualify to collect benefits when they retire, because of changes made in the UIC regulations by the Government?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe that is a question that the same Hon. Member put to my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, just yesterday. Oh, that is right, the Hon. Member bumbled when he asked the question. I forgot that.

The answer to the question is quite simply that these changes were announced in November, 1984. They have been referred to the Forget Commission because it is a very complex issue. It is something which will impact not only on the people in the Armed Forces but on others who might be taking early retirement as well. The Hon. Member's concern is well noted and the Forget Commission will be giving us some good advice on this matter, I am sure.

CHANGE IN REGULATIONS—APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister stick to the subject matter and explain to this House and to all Canadians why the Government changed the unemployment insurance regulations, which have virtually denied the right of former members of the Canadian Armed Forces to collect benefits therefrom, and then, after the fact, it appointed a commission to review the Unemployment Insurance Program? Why did the Government not wait until at least its own commission had reported? It changed the regulations and then it asks someone to review the whole thing.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there are a very wide range of issues which have been referred to the Forget Commission, not just the single issue referred to by the Hon. Member. We have not had a full review of the unemployment insurance system for a number of years now—

Mr. Axworthy: It was 1981.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —and a lot of changes have occurred in the system. There have been changes in a number of social programs to assist people who are out of work, and there have been changes in the economic environment in which people are living and working.

It was because of all of these things that we felt, in the middle of last year, that it was very important that we refer the whole question of unemployment insurance to the Forget Commission. I would ask the Hon. Member to watch for the results of this Commission and to give us some advice when the Commission comes down with its report.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INDEXATION OF PENSIONS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a question for the Minister of Finance. It is in regard to the statement in last year's Budget that the Government intended that the indexation of Public Service pensions would be replaced by a new formula. Is the Minister aware that just before New Year's the President of the Treasury Board told the press that the level of benefits under the new plan would not be inferior to the level of benefits under the existing plan for the 200,000 superannuates who have already retired from the Public Service? Can the Minister confirm that it is now Government policy that people who are retired from the Public Service, from the RCMP or from the Forces, will not suffer because of new plans and will not lose the benefit of indexation?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is a question which I will take as notice and refer to my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board. The Hon. Member and the President of the Treasury Board have had a number of discussions on this subject, I know, and I am sure the matter will be considered and discussed with the Hon. Member within a very short time.

POSITION OF SUPERANNUATES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware of the fact that a number of his colleagues from the Conservative Caucus have in fact raised this question in the House of Commons? Why can he not now confirm that these people who have been retired from the Public Service should not be forced to suffer because of retroactive changes in the plan to which they contributed in good faith in order to receive an indexed pension?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board was in the House yesterday. I am sure he will be in the House next Monday or Tuesday. I would think it would be far more appropriate for the Hon. Member to refer that question to the Minister who is responsible for this particular issue.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

REQUEST THAT GASOLINE TAX REBATE BE INCREASED

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the gasoline excise tax rebate which is received by disabled Canadians who require the use of their automobiles. In light of the increase in the federal excise tax on gasoline, would the Minister consider increasing the rate of this rebate for disabled Canadians from the current rate of 1.5 cents a litre to 3.5 cents a litre to reflect the increase in the excise tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the interest of the Hon. Member in this matter. His interest in the well-being of disabled Canadians is certainly very well known.

Mr. Deans: How come you don't thank us when we ask those questions?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): As the Hon. Member knows—

Ms. Copps: Yes, and he passed a Bill taxing the blind.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to compete with a canary on the other side of the House.

JUSTICE

ALLEGED IMPOSSIBILITY OF APPOINTING FRANCOPHONE JUDGE TO ONTARIO COURT OF APPEAL

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. I would like to get back to the case of the judge and to the appointment at the Ontario Court of Appeal where a bilingual Francophone was replaced by a unilingual Anglophone. Mr. Speaker, in his reply on February 5, the Minister informed the House:

> In 1985, there were two appeals among 1,400 applications which required a French panel.

Mr. Speaker, how can the Minister use the small number of appeals in 1985 to justify his refusal to appoint a Franco-Ontarian to the Court of Appeal? Does the Minister consider economy before rights? Is the number that relevant?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there is no refusal to appoint a Francophone judge in Ontario; certainly not. In fact, of the 15 judges appointed in Ontario by this Government, four of them, or 27 per cent, were bilingual. Mr. Justice Lacourciere has not retired from the Bench. He is going to act as a supernumerary judge. He is available now, just as he was a month ago, to sit on appeals of anyone who requests that their appeal be heard in French. We have seven other bilingual judges in the Ontario Trial and Appeal Court. So this attempt on the part of the hon. gentleman to suggest—

Ms. Copps: They are bilingual like you.

Mr. Crosbie: —that we are not interested in appointing persons who speak both official languages, or Francophones, to the Court, is simply not correct. Forty-three per cent, or 35 of the judges we have appointed to date, are Francophones or have French capabilities. That is a very high proportion.

DEMAND THAT FRANCOPHONE JUDGE BE APPOINTED TO ONTARIO COURT OF APPEAL

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Commissioner of Official Languages has also commented on and objected to this appointment, as have many others.

I would ask the Minister whether he is aware that in Quebec, out of a total of 17 or 18 judges, all are bilingual, 8 are Francophones and 8 are Anglophones. Why doesn't he reconsider his decision? Why doesn't he appoint a Franco-Ontarian to the Court of Appeal, and I am not talking about any of the other courts, but the Court of Appeal of Ontario?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Attorney General of the Ontario Liberal Government, Mr. Scott, was consulted about the appointment of Mr. Justice Krever, and has authorized me to say that he has stated he approved of that appointment. In a press scrum yesterday after Question Period in Toronto, when asked about this, Mr. Scott stated: "Who is Gauthier, anyway?"

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Did he give you permission to say that?

Ms. Copps: Bravo, John.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

HEALTH

BIRTH CONTROL RESEARCH

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The serious concerns of Canadian women regarding safe birth control methods were highlighted today by the call of the Vancouver Women's Health Collective to remove the Copper 7-IUD from the market. Safe, effective methods of birth control must be found. Will the Minister assure the women of Canada that increased money will be designated in the upcoming Budget for research into safe, effective birth control?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the matter of the Copper 7-IUD is well known to me and to the Department. The Hon. Member will possibly be aware of the fact that this product has been removed from the American market by G. D. Searle and Company due, at least from our information, to its concern about lawsuits. We are looking very carefully at the situation in Canada. We believe there are approximately 100,000 Canadian women who are using this product, and all of our research from a health point of view shows that the product is safe. However, I have indicated to the Department that I want a very close monitoring of the situation, and if any further action is necessary, we will take it.

DEPOPROVERA—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC HEARINGS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister if he would put more money into research instead of cutting it, as he has done this year. Will the Minister now take preventive steps to reduce the health risks to women? And will he agree to hold public hearings on DepoProvera as requested by the growing coalition of women and health groups across Canada?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is wrong again. I have given her this information in writing. She cannot read so I will give it to her in the House. In 1983-84 the Government of Canada spent $8.525 million. In 1984-85 it spent $9.891 million. In 1985-86 it spent $10.782 million. That is an increase. It is not a decrease.

Ms. Mitchell: You haven't answered the question.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): In addition, the Minister responsible for CMHC could tell the Hon. Member that in 1983-84 there were 63 transition houses which were funded in part by CMHC.

Ms. Mitchell: What does that have to do with it?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Today there are 228 transition houses funded by CMHC.

• (1200)

There was the question of CAP and that there should not be a means test. We removed the means test, and she is not happy about that. We have had the Badgley Commission and we are responding to that.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), one question.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST BY MONTREAL EAST SURVIVAL COMMITTEE FOR ZONE 4 DESIGNATION—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): I have only one question and it is directed to the Minister of Finance.

I must say that this morning, representatives of the Gulf Refinery employees called me on the telephone, and they are in no mood to shake hands with the Minister of Finance, certainly not, now they have met the President of Ultramar.

Considering the fact that unemployment has gone up in the Montreal area, is the Minister prepared to support the Montreal East Survival Committee's request to have this area designated "Zone 4", which would release funds for modernizing businesses and creating jobs, thus preventing plant closings and the loss of 5,000 jobs?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says there is an unemployment problem in the province of Quebec and in the city of Montreal. I may remind him that we have created 10,000 jobs a month in the province of Quebec since September 1984. In Montreal, we created 1,000 jobs per week last year.

To answer to Hon. Member's specific question—if the Hon. Member would care to listen, I will give him his answer. His representations are important, and my colleagues, the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and I will consider them and will give him a reply.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions, with one exception, presented by Hon. Members on Thursday, February 6, 1986, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

The petition presented by the Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Roman) does not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think the Government House Leader is now in a position to respond to a question with respect to the Business of the House for today and next week.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question from the Official Opposition House Leader. I would like to take this opportunity to outline the Business of the House for the next several days.

As you are aware, the first item of business today will be second reading of Bill C-93, an Act relating to the establishment of self-government for the Sechelt Indian Band. Following that we will resume consideration of Bill C-90, an Act respecting pension plans. If the debate on Bill C-90 concludes, the next item of business will be resumption of second reading debate on Bill C-45 concerning the creation of unions on Parliament Hill.

On Monday the first item of business will be Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act at third reading. If that debate is completed, the House will move to Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976, which is at report stage.

On Tuesday the focus of debate will be House of Commons reform. Following extensive consultations with Members from all sides, yesterday I tabled a revised package of proposed Standing Orders and a Notice of Motion which seeks to implement the proposed rules for a trial period commencing with the return of the House following the February recess and ending on the last sitting day of this year. I hope that after Members have had the opportunity to register their views in debate the House will take up the challenge of reform and agree to what I believe would be a very constructive experiment.

In the event that debate wraps up early, and in keeping with the other reform initiatives, the backup to the debate on the proposed Standing Orders will be Government Order No. 71. That order is the motion referring to the paper entitled Lobbying and the Registration of Paid Lobbyists: A Discussion Paper to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization for their consideration and recommendations.

Finally, I hope that we will have made sufficient progress by Wednesday to call Bill C-86, an Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. If that debate is completed it would be my intention to commence consideration of Bill C-92, an Act to regulate interests in petroleum in relation to frontier lands, which is at second reading.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Minister for his statement. I want to make sure he realizes that so far as the Official Opposition is concerned, we have not entered into any agreement that the motion on the changes to the Standing Orders will be disposed of on Tuesday. We will take part in the debate in a positive and forthcoming way, but we do not want any misunderstanding. We are not saying at this point that we are ready to come to a conclusion at the end of business on Tuesday.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in the interests of making sure that everyone's position is clear in this regard, I want to say on behalf of my colleagues that we do believe there has been a considerable amount of time spent in the negotiation process. I am not entirely satisfied that everything will work according to the way it is interpreted. I hope it will. However, we are prepared to deal forthrightly and expeditiously with the package in an effort to have it in place for a trial period on the understanding, of course, that as problems arise we will meet and resolve those problems and not delay the resolution until the end of the trial period.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the announcement by the Government House Leader but I would like to ask him if the Government intends to proceed with the non-procedural reforms? What we have on the table deals with the procedural recommendations of the special committee, but there are I think some 29 non-procedural reforms having to do with support services, administration of the House, et cetera. Is it the intention of the Government to proceed with these?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments and responses of the House Leaders and I look forward to dealing with this matter expeditiously.

It was my intention that the matter would be debated at an early date so there would be an opportunity for participation. I think we have a very acceptable package. We have attempted to meet the concerns expressed by the opposition Parties in particular with respect to the provisional rules to be implemented.

With respect to my very distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), and I see sitting beside him the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), as well as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), to whom we all owe a very great debt of gratitude with respect to the work they have done, let me say unequivocally that the Government has already announced it has the firm intention of proceeding with those non-procedural items with dispatch. We intend to carry out the intentions which the Hon. Member as chairman and his colleagues brought forward in their excellent report.

We look forward to entering into this new period of reform and I want to again compliment him and his colleagues for the excellent work and leadership they have shown in this area.

TIME ENCROACHMENTS ON PRIVATE MEMBERS' HOUR

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, this is somewhat along the same lines as the discussion relating to House reform. Yesterday the time for Private Members' hour was shortened to Private Members' half-hour as a result of the encroachment of Government business and a vote during that hour. That was the latest in a series of encroachments on Private Members' hour which have taken place since the beginning of this Parliament. In fact, Private Members' hour was shortened on two occasions for Royal Assent and on seven occasions for other Government business. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, and all of the House Leaders, if you will be kind enough in future, in the spirit of parliamentary reform, to guard Private Members' hour as jealously as you do Question Period.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have a twofold and brief answer to the Hon. Member's question. I know he is very, very active in the affairs of the House of Private Members' Business.

• (1210)

First, the rules of the House provide for postponing Private Members' Business until later in the day but not for a curtailment of the time which is used for that business. Second, it is my intention with respect to the reforms that have been tabled to enhance Private Members' Business and, indeed, give it a profile which it has not had in the history of the country. I look forward to that experiment so that all private Members will be able to participate fully in the deliberations of this House.

DISALLOWANCE OF SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I simply want to bring to the attention of the House that yesterday's Hansard shows that I was, in fact, in the middle of a question when I was cut off by you.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! Hansard may record, as it does, what the Hon. Member said in the House. Hansard does not record, as the camera records, when I rose. If the Hon. Member wishes to check the tape, he may do so.

SECHELT INDIAN BAND SELF-GOVERNMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

On the Order: Government Orders:

February 5, 1986—Second reading and reference to a Legislative Committee of Bill C-93, an Act relating to the establishment of self-government for the Sechelt Indian Band.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated the first item of business for today. I have given my opposition colleagues a copy of this order. There has been an agreement with respect to Bill C-93 with respect to the Sechelt Indian Band that, rather than going to a legislative commitee after second reading it will, by consent of all Parties, go to the Standing Committee.

Therefore, I think you would find a unanimous disposition to accept and have adopted without debate the following draft order:

That the order for the second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-93, an Act relating to the establishment of self-government for the Sechelt Indian Band be altered to provide for reference of the said Bill to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the order just read by the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn), I want to indicate that this matter was discussed in the standing committee. It was the wish of the standing committee that the Bill be referred to it rather than to a legislative committee. We concur in that and give our consent.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I would like to confirm that we supported that particular order and we concur in it as well.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the order. Unanimous consent is required to introduce the order. I take it there is that consent and agreement that the order carry.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PETITIONS

GASOLINE PRICES—TAX INCREASES

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a petition compiled by Mr. Alex Blake of Coquitlam, B.C. and signed by 3,499 residents of my riding of New Westminster-Coquitlam and of surrounding areas in the lower mainland. The petition protests the exorbitant price charged for gas by the oil companies at the pumps and the injustice of gasoline tax increases imposed by the Government on the consumer.

PROPOSED MOVE OF AIR CANADA INTERNATIONAL FLIGHTS

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, rather than presenting 13 petitions today with over 1,000 names on each of them, I comply with your request made several times, and will simply table one petition. The petitions are all approximately the same and contain 13,000 names in total. Since I am not permitted to make comments, I hope that your Honour will recognize me at two o'clock on Monday to make relevant comments.

The prayer of the petition is quite simple and quite brief. Whereas Air Canada has made application to move its international flights from Gander to St. John's, and whereas this move will cause Gander Airport to lose its international status which will have a disastrous effect on the Town of Gander and the surrounding area, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, ask the Minister of Transport to reject Air Canada's application to move international flights from Gander to St. John's. The number of petitioners will increase over the coming days, Mr. Speaker.

PROPOSED DEVELOPMENT OF NCC PARKLAND

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the spirit of democracy is very much alive and well in my riding as well. Last night I was presented with petitions signed by almost 2,000 persons who are opposed to the National Capital Commission's proposal to develop the parkland around the Mile Circle into an embassy row. It is my honour, my duty, and my privilege, to present their petitions to this distinguished House on their behalf.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, today question No. 517 will be answered.

[Text]

MR. SIMON REISMAN

Question No. 517—Mr. Caccia:

Did Mr. Simon Reisman divest himself of any role, interest or responsibility related to the Grand Canal Company (Grandco) of St. John's, Newfoundland, and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reason?

Mr. Len Gustafson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Reisman has never received any remuneration; he has never owned any shares nor has he held any office related to the Grand Canal Company of St. John's Newfoundland. Mr. Reisman acted as an unpaid advisor to the Grand Canal Company, at the request of its President, during 1984 and 1985. Mr. Reisman has had no contact with the company or any of its officers since accepting his present assignment.

(a) Mr. Reisman has no role, interest or responsibility to divest. (b) Answered above.

[English]

Mr. McDermid: I ask that all remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government a question in the spirit of reform which was discussed earlier this morning. I would like to have the attention of the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on this issue, if possible. I wonder if the Government House Leader could indicate to the House—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Questions may be put to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary in this regard. This procedure is to allow Members to make representations on matters which they regard as urgent rather than to ask questions of Ministers about questions that are on the Order Paper.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I was only attracting the attention of the Minister who was responsible for answering the question to start with, as I understood it.

I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary or the Minister responsible for responding to those questions when the questions that were put on the Order Paper over a year ago will be answered by the Government, if the Government is at all serious about reform. I refer specifically to question No. 285 dated February 28, 1985; question No. 287 of March 6, 1985; and question No. 319 of April 1, 1985. There are numerous other more recent questions. It is quite obvious that if the Government wanted to, it could respond to questions after a one-year delay.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member raised that point. It gives me an opportunity to point out that in the package of reforms which the Government is bringing before the House there is a time limit suggested for the answering of questions on the Order Paper. Therefore, the Government is acting responsibly. We are hoping that when we debate these reforms the Opposition will be supportive of them.

I also point out to the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) that, if one takes a look at the Government's performance in answering questions on the Order paper—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. Order!

Mr. Boudria: I never heard such nonsense.

An Hon. Member: Do you ever listen to yourself?

Mr. Boudria: Well, it's arrogance on your part, and you know it.

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member please come to order?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, some days ago on a similar occasion I asked the Parliamentary Secretary, then responsible for answering Order Paper quesions, why I have waited since November 9, 1984 for an answer to my question about the then economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I was advised by the Parliamentary Secretary some days ago that I would have an answer forthwith. I would like to ask this Parliamentary Secretary when I am going to get an answer to a question that was put on November 9, 1984, on a budget matter which interests all Canadians.

• (1220)

Mr. McDermid: I have been assured by my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis), that the Hon. Member will get an answer in the fullness of time.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

SECHELT INDIAN BAND SELF-GOVERNMENT ACT

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill C-93, An Act relating to the establishment of self-government for the Sechelt Indian Band, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

He said: Mr. Speaker, today I rise to ask all Hon. Members to consider legislation that will restore self-governing rights to the Sechelt Indian community of British Columbia. Moreover, the proposed legislation will demonstrate the Government's commitment to advancing self-government for all Indian people and thereby advance the cause of Canada.

I believe that this legislation is in the best tradition of Canadian federalism, demonstrating creative flexibility and power sharing not only for the benefit of the Sechelt community but for the country as a whole.

There was a time when all Indian nations had self-governing powers in this country, those very powers which Canadians enjoy today, but which they very often take for granted. These self-governing powers, the most basic of all human rights, were taken away from Indian people. But today with this legislation we have the opportunity to recognize those rights of self-government again, at least for one Indian community.

This proposed Act will catch the interest and I hope the imagination of native people all over the country. Canadians in general and, I can assure some, indigenous people the world over.

As I have already mentioned, self-government is not new to Indian people. In fact, finally there is a growing realization in this country that Indian culture has been fundamental to the growth of democratic and political institutions in this country. Those who are familiar with the rich Indian heritage will know that various forms of Government existed among Indian nations in this country for centuries. What better example, and perhaps one of the best known, than the formation of the League of the Iroquois, inspired by Hiawatha around 1570. That confederacy over 400 years ago, which consisted of the Mohawk, Oneida, Onondaga, Cayuga, Seneca and later, the Tuscarora, exerted a dominant political and millitary influence throughout eastern North America for more than 200 years.

The political and social structure of that League, its emphasis on an equal voice for all members of the confederacy, its respect for human dignity and its emphasis on rights, obligations and participation has remained an enduring legacy in this country for those who have the wit to look at it. I could mention scores of other examples, from sea to sea to sea, which act as historical beacons for Indian people in their quest for the renewal of self-government in our own time.

For the broader public, self-government for Indian people has raised interest, support and a lot of questions. How will it be worked out? What will it mean in practice?

I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in his opening remarks at the First Ministers Conference on Aboriginal Rights on April 2, 1985, put the situation very well when he said:

> We Canadians are a cautious people and self-government is a term which is worrisome to some of us. But self-government is not something that I fear. It is not an end in itself, but rather a means to reach common goals.

He said:

> The federal Government's approach to self-government for aboriginal peoples takes account of these realities, of the inventiveness and creativity that Canadians have always shown in developing their democratic institutions. It is through self-government that a people can maintain the sense of pride and self-worth which is necessary to productive, happy lives.

The Sechelt proposal gives us one set of answers to what self-government can mean to one community and how it may be worked out for other communities. But even as this Parliament works to afford the Sechelt concept the recognition of law, I can assure you that there are hundreds of Indian communities right now who are fashioning their own forms of self-government and who will be looking for our support in the very near future.

They include the Swampy Cree in northwestern Manitoba; the Nishawbe-Aski Nation representing Cree and Ojibway people in northern Ontario; the Kahnawake; the Akwesasne; the Tyendinaga community proposal on Mohawk self-government; Pointe-Bleue in the Province of Quebec; the Enoch band in Alberta; the Kootenay Indian Area Council representing five communities in the interior of British Columbia, the Robinson Treaty Nation proposal submitted through the Union of Ontario Indians; the Pas band in Manitoba; the Yellowhead Tribal Council; the Sushwap Nation of British Columbia; the Caribou Tribal Council and so many, many others.

Of course, a number of Members in this Chamber will know that self-government arrangements have been tried before. In 1984, through the James Bay and northern Quebec land claim settlement, the self-government aspirations of the Cree and Naskapi peoples of northern Quebec were given recognition in law by the House. I am looking forward to an implementation plan that will match the imagination of that understanding.

The current push for self-government emerged from a well known history of discontent. After Canada's national Government took shape in 1867, it was the Indian agents who controlled a large part of Indian life. In the last 20 years, Government tried to turn over more management to Indian people, but usually kept the final say for itself.

Indian people now want to put on their own face and their own stamp on their own Government. Here is one Indian community which wants to chart its own course, to plan its future and turn its dream into reality. However, I can assure you again that it is a vision that is shared by all Indian communities in this country.

When Parliament's Special Committee on Indian Self-Government in Canada held hearings in 1983, Indian native people from all parts of the country said that they wanted two main changes. First, they wanted a new and more self-reliant relationship with the federal Government; second, a better and stronger economic base.

Both these goals involve more community power to determine their own membership; to control such matters as health, education and social services, to manage their own economic enterprises and their own lands and to determine the form of Government under which they will live.

Today, some communities are eager and some are cautious. Some want one approach and some another. However, everyone agrees on one thing—that the time has come to establish Indian self-government in Canada.

All Parties in the House endorsed the recommendations of that Special Committee. The Government has accepted that report as the important fundamental document from which Indian self-government will proceed. That is why the Government has taken a community-based approach to self-government because it means that Indian people can tailor their own form of Government, one suited to their own circumstances, which reflects their own past and one in which they can mould their own future.

There are many forms of self-government, many degrees of self-sufficiency and many dimensions of self-determination. It might take place by legislation, by new funding arrangements that transfer responsibility, in conjunction with native claim settlements, or by a maximum use of by-law powers in the present Indian Act.

Our concept is a simple one. Instead of making communities fit our legislation, we will make legislation that fits the community. Self-government will be more than the end result; it will also be part of the process. Working in this way, Indian people can build self-government at their own pace and according to their own lights.

But who are these Indian people? What sort of people are they?

I think my colleague and friend, the right Hon. Member for Yellowhead, now the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) described very eloquently who they are. He was participating in the debate in this House nearly one year ago when we were amending the Indian Act with Bill C-31. The changes this Government introduced, which he so vigorously supported and which this House endorsed at that time, provided for equality of men and women under the Act and a measure of self-government by giving Indian communities the power to control their membership. During that debate he put it this way:

> The children of the Eden Valley Reserve west of my home town were as free as I was to run, to ride and to be children. However, when we stopped being children, the youngsters of Eden Valley were not as free to be themselves as the youngsters of High River because to be Indian in the land which the Stoneys, the Blackfoot and the Cree discovered was to have your life run by someone else. There is somewhat more freedom now for the Stoneys, the Cree and the Blackfoot, but their memory and our legacy was of Ottawa running Indian lives, Ottawa setting Indian standards.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me look at the specifics of the Bill by which we are untying the strings.

After many discussions with the Sechelt people and the B.C. Government, we have agreed on a form of enabling legislation. Instead of a skeleton framework that leaves everything too vague, or an exhaustive agreement that sets too many rules, this legislation will let various new powers come into place over time, subject to negotiation within certain clearly defined parameters.

The enabling legislation sets up the community as a legal entity with all the capacities, rights, powers and privileges of a natural person. With this legislation, the Sechelt community may enter into contracts and agreements; acquire and hold property; sell and dispose of property; expend, invest or borrow money.

Under this legislation, the community will develop its own written constitution, a document which will be the fundamental cornerstone of its government. Under the constitution, the community can establish the composition of the Council, its terms of office and tenure of its members; establish procedures or processes to be followed by council in exercising the band's powers and carrying out its duties; provide for a system of financial accountability of the council to the members of the band; include a membership code for the band; establish rules and procedures to be followed in respect of the disposition of interests in Sechelt lands; set out specific legislative powers of the council and provide for any other matters relating to the Government of the band, its members or its lands.

This brings us, Mr. Speaker, to the legislative powers of the council. I will note some of those things, but the list is obviously not exhaustive.

The council will have the power to make laws in relation to matters coming within any of the selected classes of matters to the extent that it is authorized by the constitution of the band: access to and residence on Sechelt lands; zoning and land use planning; expropriation for community purposes; use, construction, maintenance, repair and demolition of buildings; taxation for local purposes of interests in Sechelt lands and of occupants and tenants of Sechelt lands, including assessment, collection and enforcement procedures and appeals; administration and management of property belonging to the band; education; social and welfare services; health services; preservation and management of natural resources; preservation, protection and management of fur-bearing animals, fish and game; public order and safety; construction, maintenance and management of roads, operation of businesses, professions and trades et cetera.

In short, the Sechelt people will have a Government accountable to their own electors and not accountable to a remote bureaucracy in Ottawa. They will have a Government determined to use its resources to strengthen that community.

Their type of Government will nurture culture, give life to language and will extend the dimension of this country.

In 1984, the Sechelt people held an historial celebration and placed three carved figures in their community; a young warrior, a mother figure representing culture, and a father figure or headman with a talking stick. But unlike the traditional talking stick, it had no carvings because the Sechelt felt that they lacked achievements under their own authority.

They believe their real identity will come with their understanding of self-government. In the words of the ceremony of that day, they said as a community:

We want to carry our own stick and govern ourselves and be a resource to this great country of ours . . . Canada.

I am asking the House, Mr. Speaker, for its best consideration for this Sechelt legislation. I do so for three important reasons. First, it fulfils a dream of the Sechelt people for self-determination and self-government. Second, it represents a first expression of this Government's commitment to a community-based approach to Indian self-government. Third, it is a beginning, a moment in Canadian history to be marked, a time to affirm the Canadian heritage of freedom so clearly intoned in this House on July 1, 1960, by that great parliamentarian, the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker. He said:

I am a Canadian, a free Canadian, free to speak without fear, free to worship God in my own way, free to stand for what I think right, free to oppose what I believe wrong, free to choose those who shall govern—

The people of Sechelt want that freedom to be Canadian in a way that respects their history, their culture, their language and their pride in who they are. They want to begin, and they need our help.

That is my appeal to this House for them and for other Indian communities who are working and planning to build their own expression of self-government, which I hope we will have the privilege of considering in the months ahead.

I would normally close now, but before I take my seat, Mr. Speaker, I thought I might conclude my remarks by offering some acknowledgements and thanks to a number of people who worked so very, very hard over the last number of months. Most Bills that come through this House are faceless in the sense that we sometimes fail to recognize the folks who actually do the work.

In this case, the Bill, whatever its advantages, whatever its shortcomings may be seen to be, is the product of some very creative work done by a number of people both in this place and outside of it. I want to make sure they are recognized.

I would like to offer my congratulations and my heartfelt thanks to Chief Stanley Dixon, to his Council and to the people of Sechelt. They exhibited tremendous tenacity, patience and imagination. I want to offer thanks to Mr. Graham Allen, and Mr. Gordon Anderson, advisers to the Sechelt community. I thought of what words to describe their contribution. Tough insistence are the two words which I came up with. I want to thank John Tait, Mary Dawson, Fred Caron and Claude Bisaillon, all from the Department of Justice. They were willing to engage in some imaginative and creative law which can be found in the Bill. Also I want to thank Audrey Doerr of my own Department who pushed, pulled, prodded and pleaded to get it done and bring it home. She was ably assisted by Steve Aronson, Graham Swan and Carol Ann Brewer. I acknowledge the tremendous "beyond the second mile" effort on their part.

Finally, if I could have the indulgence of the House for a moment or two longer, I should like to thank Theresa Nahanee, my legislative assistant, who dreamed and worked and wrote a wee poem which I want to share in my concluding remarks. I received the poem the other day; I hope I will not embarrass her. She called it "Sechelt". Theresa Nahanee is not only my legislative assistant; she is a Squamish Indian women from Vancouver. Her poem reads:

a giant step for Indian-kind if the arrow is true to its mark
—a drop in the ocean
if the target be missed (easily corrected)

a microcosm of Indian-life to sift through gently to learn from in earnest
—the strong, survive the weak, perish

in the dustbin of history each minute particle of change represents heroic effort of herculean proportions celebrations of an era
—in its time, fought for with vigour in the future, remembered with dignity fling the future to the wind but never to chance for nothing is fixed in man's mind historic changes are marked in light-years.

like little sparks flying,
Sparking, dying in their time littering history like a milky way.

to the victors, spoils, to the vanquished, defeat for those who struggle, reward for those who don't, nothing opportunities to cast a giant shadow or shed a great light, come not often in a lifetime.

but here you have another opportunity.
what will it be?

What will it mean?
history will record.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to follow the Minister and to speak on behalf of my Party in respect of what has to be regarded as a most important piece of legislation for the Sechelt Indian people, a piece of legislation for which they have worked and looked forward to for a very long period of time.

When the Minister introduced Bill C-93, it was accompanied by a communiqué that spoke about a Bill establishing self-Government for the Sechelt Indian Band. In that communiqué, the Minister said: "This Act allows the Sechelt Indian Band of British Columbia to move toward Indian self-government".

I would just to indicate, and only in passing, that the word "allows", meaning that the federal Government will permit, will certainly grate upon the ears of some Indian elders in the country who would be very swift, if they had the opportunity at this moment, to remind us that the right to Indian self-government was never at any time in our history relinquished. It was never given up or transferred to any colonial power or to the Government of Canada as we know it today.

The Minister's phrase in the communiqué, "move toward Indian self-government", perhaps could have been "move further toward Indian self-government". I say that to point out that in fact the Sechelt Indian Band, which consists of 33 reserves and covers some 2,500 acres situated north of Vancouver between Gibson's and Powell River, has already taken advantage of all the optional powers available to it under the Indian Act. In other words, it has occupied all the space which we as a Government allowed them. Of course Hon. Members, and most particular the Minister himself, know that occupying that space is self-government in name only. It is not genuine self-government because under the Indian Act there are still many strings attached, many guidelines and many circulars issued when we allow an Indian band or an Indian Government to take certain over responsibilities.

Nowhere can that be better demonstrated than when we consider how the Government—not just this Government but the previous administration as well—has a different interpretation of Indian control over Indian education. When the document "Indian Control of Indian Education" was first introduced by the then National Indian Brotherhood, it meant exactly what it said, that Indian people were to have full control. It was to be community-based control. But we know that the current administration and the previous one interpreted that as meaning that it was only to allow a degree of participation, which is quite different from Indian control over Indian education.

Be that as it may, I simply point out that the occupying of space under the Indian Act is not Indian self-government. The Sechelt Indian people have occupied that space. They virtually operate all programs and services made available by the Department of Indian Affairs which are appropriate to their circumstances. For example, the Band has its own primary school. It administers its own social assistance program. It has a housing authority, and it looks after its own economic development. However, let me remind Hon. Members that it is always with provisos, restrictions or limitations. With Bill C-93 the Sechelt band will be able to go further in the direction of self-Government.

This Bill alloows—and again I point out the word "allows"—or devolves power or responsibility from the federal Government, and also some from the provincial administration, but it does not recognize that self-Government is a basic, essential and primary aboriginal right. I will return to that point later in my remarks. Nevertheless, with the passage of Bill C-93, the Sechelt Indian Band will be allowed to become a legal entity. I want to tell my colleagues in the House what that means.

In its own right, the Sechelt Indian Band will have the power to enter into contracts, to hold property, to borrow and to spend money, and even to sue and be sued. At the present time none of those rights can be undertaken by the Band without the consent of the Minister and his officials. Bill C-93 will allow the Sechelt, to a certian extent, to get out from under the totalitarian regime of the Indian Act. Let us be fair and accurate in this regard.

This is not a Bill giving total emancipation to the Sechelt Indian people. It moves toward that and, therefore, my Party and I support it. However, we want it to be seen in its proper context. It moves toward, it allows the Sechelt people, to a certain extent, to get out from under the totalitarian regime imposed upon it by the Indian Act, and out from underneath the paternalism, as well meaning as it often is, of the Minister and his officials. The Sechelt band will be enabled to go on its own to a greater extent than is now possible living under the Indian Act and under the full authority of the Minister. So it will become, first, a legal entity.

Second, Bill C-93 will enable the Sechelt Indian Band to gain legal title to its reserve lands. These lands will be transferred in fee simple to the Band, subject, of course, as I have said before, to certain restrictions. Many Canadian people would be amazed to learn that Indian people do not have legal title to their own reserve lands at the present time. Bill C-93 will change that situation, as the Minister said, with respect to one band which has 2,500 acres of land. There are restrictions, however, but I am not going to dwell on those now. We will examine them more carefully when this Bill is in committee. There are restrictions relating to the ownership and exploitation of minerals, for example.

I want to remind the Minister of the report of the Special Committee on Indian Self-government to which he referred. He indicated that it is now a document that has been accepted by this administration, and for that we express our gratitude. I remind the Minister that the report of the special committee was convinced that in order to ensure that self-government becomes a reality, each Indian First Nation must have full rights to control its own lands in the manner that it sees fit. That is somewhat different from what we have in Bill C-93. The legal title to those lands is given, but harken, there are restrictions.

Third, the Band will have its own constitution. It should be noted that the Government must give its approval to any constitution that is adopted by the Band. The Band will have to seek Ottawa's consent for the original constitution, for the approval of that constitution, and later on if there are amendments it must come to Ottawa, to the Governor in Council, to have those amendments approved. That will be of interest to Hon. Members because—

Mr. Crombie: Every government in Canada, all governments.

Mr. Penner: —that is exactly what we had to do when our Constitution was changed. We had to go to Westminster and have that approved. The difference is that we did it for the last time, we do not have to do it again.

Mr. Crombie: Every Government in Canada has to do it now, the federal Government.

Mr. Penner: I have to remind the Minister who is interjecting—the Minister is interjecting here that all Governments have to do it.

Mr. Crombie: Yes, they do.

Mr. Penner: Being in conversation with his colleague he missed the point that I was making earlier—

Mr. Crombie: I heard every word. Every Government has to do the same thing.

Mr. Penner: —that the right to self-government by Indian First Nations was never at any time relinquished to any other power. There is a big difference and the Minister knows that. At the time that our Constitution was formed the powers between the federal Government and the provincial Governments were divided and constitutions had to be approved within a federal state. The Minister is very, very touchy, so I must have hit upon a point that bothers him.

Mr. Crombie: I don't wish you to diminish something that was a real stride forward.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Penner: The Minister recognizes that this is a touchy point, but when I move on further in my remarks I want to make it clear that this is not something that is being imposed on the Sechelt people, it is something that they are prepared to accept and live with, and something that they participated in.

I want Hon. Members in this House to know that when they build their constitution and put it together it has to be approved by Ottawa. If they change it at any time it has to be approved by the Governor in Council. That point should be known.

Mr. Crombie: The whole Constitution of Canada has that obligation.

Mr. Penner: The Minister wants to keep arguing. I want to ask the Minister to stand in his place and tell the Indian people of the country, or to tell this House, when that power was relinquished and given to the federal Government, so that now you have the power to approve Indian constitutions and the power to approve of amendments. When did that happen? Is the Minister prepared to answer that?

Mr. Crombie: If you want to ask the question, I will answer it. Yield the floor and I will answer it.

Mr. Penner: I will yield the floor. If the Minister can answer the question then let him answer it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Minister to make a comment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The floor will then go back to the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner).

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, the point I make to the Hon. Member, only because I respect his contribution over these many years, is that the Sechelts' obligation to come back with respect to any constitution or any change is indeed the same restriction we have for every government in this country, whether it is provincial, federal or territorial. Constitutional changes have to go through a process which involves the Governments of this country. That is all. It is no more or less. I might say, it is a striking advance over anything that was brought forward by the previous administration.

The reason I keep interjecting is because I know that the Hon. Member needs to say some things which are not of a laudatory nature. While he is doing that—and I respect the Hon. Member very much, as he knows—I do not want anyone to believe that somehow there was not a striking legal advance made in the development of that point in this Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, on the latter point, there never was an argument with the Minister. What the Minister did not address is the historical reality with respect to the aboriginal right to Indian self-government. That is the historical point, and the Minister did not address that.

Mr. Crombie: I would be happy to. The federal Government's position, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the right to self-government in the Constitution is well known and was indicated at the last conference on aboriginal rights between the federal Government and the provinces. Indeed, that position of the federal Government is one which is supported by constitutional aboriginal groups in this country, as the Hon. Member may well know.

Mr. Penner: We were at the point where it was indicated that the Sechelt Indian Band will have their own constitution, and how that constitution will come into existence, and how that constitution will be amended. The band will, under its constitution, be able to know what powers it can exercise and what procedures it must follow in the exercise of that self-government. When the Special Committee on Indian Self-government was holding hearings representatives of the Sechelt Indian Band, came before the special committee, and demonstrated that they were progressive and forward-looking in their approach. They did so by presenting to us an example, or a draft of enabling legislation that would permit them to opt out of the Indian Act and operate under a band charter, or constitution, which would have the force of law for that Band.

During those very same hearings we heard also from the Grand Council of the Cree, and they described for us their negotiations with the Government which led eventually to the drafting of the Cree-Naskapi (of Quebec) Act, which has already been enacted into law by the Parliament of Canada. This particular Act was a follow-up, as the Minister said in his speech, to the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement. I want to point out to the House that at the time the Cree appeared before the standing committee to tell us about the negotiations leading to their Act they made it very clear that the legislation they were working toward was, and I quote, "the Cree aspirations and the Cree position".

Chief Stanley Dixon and the council of the Sechelt Band have also stressed that what Bill C-93 does is to meet their urgent needs to be delivered and to be freed from the limitations imposed on them by the powers and the jurisdiction of the Indian Act. I do want to point out, and the Minister has done this as well in his communiqué, that neither the Cree of northern Quebec, nor the members of the Sechelt Indian Band in British Columbia, have ever suggested for a moment that their particular pieces of legislation are to be regarded in any way as models. Other Indian First Nations are free to accept from either the Cree-Naskapi (of Quebec) Act or from Bill C-93, any appropriate elements. It should be understood that there is no imposition of any kind by this statute upon other Indian First Nations.

I would like to call it one o'clock and continue my remarks after the break.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will resume debate with the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner).

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, the House is debating a Bill introduced by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie), Bill C-93, an Act relating to the establishment of self-government for the Sechelt Indian Band. I was telling the House earlier that this Band, consisting of some 33 reserves and having 2,500 acres of land, is located in the Province of British Columbia North of Vancouver.

When we recessed at one o'clock I was pointing out, as the Minister did in his remarks, that this is by no means the first time the House has legislated self-government. The previous Parliament legislated the Cree-Naskapi (of Quebec) Act. I think it could be argued quite convincingly that in many ways the Cree-Naskapi (of Quebec) Act was a more progressive piece of legislation. I am not going to take much time of the House to dwell on that. I will leave that to another spokesman for our Party. However, it should be pointed out that the Cree-Naskapi (of Quebec) Act did flow out of what may be described as the bilateral process.

The Cree-Naskapi (of Quebec) Act came out of an agreement that involved Quebec, Canada and the Grand Council of the Cree, the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement. However, the Act itself was negotiated between the federal Government and the Cree and Naskapi people. The Bill we are debating today could be more accurately described as one coming out of a tripartite process. According to this Bill, the British Columbia Government has certain major roles to play. I will leave it to other spokespersons to point out what part the British Columbia Government will play in the implementation of this legislation. I believe some Hon. Members from British Columbia may wish to dwell on that, and I am sure they will want to express some concerns, because, as we know, in that part of Canada there has not been the most far-sighted understanding of the importance and prominence deserved by the recognition of aboriginal rights. In fact, in that province there has been a very reactionary situation that has led to many sorts of difficulties, the most recent being the case of the Haida people and Lyell Island.

With respect to the Cree-Naskapi (of Quebec) Act, I was emphasizing at one o'clock that the Cree themselves have said that that particular Act represents Cree aspirations and the Cree position. The leaders of the Sechelt Band have expressed the same view but in slightly different words. Chief Stanley Dixon and the Council of the Sechelt Indian Band have stressed that Bill C-93 meets their particular urgent need to be freed to a certain extent, but not entirely from the limitations imposed on them by the Government of Canada. Certainly they will be freed from the jurisdiction imposed upon them by the Indian Act. But as I pointed out earlier, there are still many restrictions imposed on this Band.

When I made those comments, the Minister reacted with some sensitivity, but I think he will have to admit that this is not in any way a Bill of emancipation. It does not in any way provide full self-government, even with respect to the transfer of legal title to the land. We know that there are restrictions of which the British Columbia Government will be very quick to remind the Band, restrictions particularly related to the exploitation of mineral resources.

Neither the Cree-Naskapi (of Quebec) Act nor the Bill regarding the Sechelt Band can be regarded as models for any other Indian First Nation. Never has that been argued, even by the Minister himself. Of course, it can be said that if there are appropriate elements in Bill C-93 or in the Cree-Naskapi (of Quebec) Act that other Indian First Nations may wish to adopt, they are free to do so, but there is to be no imposition of any kind.

The Minister has indicated very clearly that he understands this particular point. In the communiqué he issued in conjunction with the introduction of the Act he said that this is an example of the community-based approach to self-government reflecting the specific, special or particular circumstances of the Sechelt Band. The Minister strested that it is not a model for other communities. Chief Dixon of the Sechelt Band echoed this very same view when he said that enabling legislation might not be the answer for other Bands and that they will have to choose their own path when they are ready.

I do not want to belabour this point, but again I make the argument that Members of the House who are concerned with policy relating to Indian people are particularly distressed by the situation in British Columbia. None of us should think that Bill C-93 contains any avenues that will help us solve all the difficulties experienced by aboriginal people in the Province of British Columbia. We are not dealing here with a model, and that approach, of course, must always be avoided. I have said, as has the Minister and other Members of Parliament, that there is too much diversity in the Indian community of Canada to have a single model that in any way could fit the needs or aspirations of all Indian First Nations, and therefore we must avoid imposing that approach. The Special Committee on Indian Self-Government became very much aware of the diversity that exists in Canada when it held its cross-country hearings. That is why in the report we tabled there is no model or description of what self-government should look like. I can remember how disappointed some members of the news media were. They asked us what Indian Self-Government looked like. They felt that there had to be a chart or a graph somewhere. But there was none because none can ever exist. Indigenous self-government must relate to the needs of the people and flow either from traditional sources or from present current needs. Of course, that is what we are doing with the Sechelt Band.

The Sechelt Band legislation is very modern. It meets the needs of these Indian people who are surrounded by other municipalities but cannot act as other municipalities can. They are limited by what we here have imposed upon them by way of the Indian Act and all of the policies and regulations that flow from that Act. It is that from which they are being relieved to a significant extent.

I have to express a little concern. The Deputy Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, when he appeared before the standing committee, made this observation regarding the Sechelt Indian Bill: "It is not what we consider a model". Good. But then he went on to say: "But rather what we consider an indication as to how far we are willing to go as a department". In other words, what we have here today is the outer limits of how far—if the spokesman from the Department can be believed and that is an accurate reflection of Government policy—the Department will go.

Mr. Oberle: How far we can go.

Mr. Penner: My hon. friend who served on the committee asks how far we can go. That is exactly the point I want to stress. Perhaps it is how far the Department is willing to go or how far it can go, but it is for that very reason that Indian leaders are somewhat apprehensive about the route we are taking today, the so-called legislative path or avenue. That is why Indian leaders continue to stress with vigour that what we have to pursue is the constitutional route. When we have done that, and when we have been successful at the constitutional level, then it will not be how far the Minister or the Department is willing to go or, as my hon. friend opposite said, how far they can go. Rather, it will be what rights or powers flow from the Constitution of Canada. Legislation cannot replace the need for constitutional recognition.

Let us come back to where the Minister took us in his remarks. I have to concur entirely with him when he said that Bill C-93 is a major step forward for the Sechelt Indian Band. That is a fact, that is why I support Bill C-93 and that is why my Party will vote in favour of it. For that Indian Band, this is an historic occasion for which it has planned and worked with great determination and much skill over a very long period of time. But Bill C-93 has to be seen in context. We must return to what I consider to be the touch-stone of the policy of Indian Self-Government, to which the Minister referred, entitled Indian Self-Government in Canada, a Report of the Special Committee.

For the benefit of hon. Members who may not have been here at the time the report was tabled, I will give them the first two recommendations in the report. First, the Committee recommends that the federal Government establish a new relationship with Indian First Nations, and that an essential element of this relationship be recognition of Indian Self-Government. What the "new relationship" in this context means is cutting the strings, severing the ties that bind, letting go. I point out to the House that Bill C-93 does not cut all of the strings. It cuts the strings which are in the Indian Act but replaces them with new ones. In fact, it gives the province of British Columbia some strings it didn't have before.

Mr. Crombie: Stan Dixon says "We'll be free with 93".

Mr. Penner: I do not know why the Minister did not take his full 40 minutes.

Mr. Crombie: I wanted to give you time to be a gentleman, that's why.

Mr. Penner: He wants to interject during my speech. I don't know why he didn't use his full 40 minutes since he is so proud of Bill C-93. He should have taken his full time to praise it to the hilt. I think he is very disappointed—

Mr. Crombie: Disappointed in you, Keith.

Mr. Penner: —that some other Hon. Members—

Mr. Crombie: In you.

Mr. Penner: —are giving an objective analysis of the Bill.

Mr. Crombie: You are not, and you know it.

Mr. Penner: Since when did an objective analysis become a problem for the Parliament of Canada?

Mr. Crombie: You're misleading people, and you know it.

Mr. Penner: Recommendation No. 2 of the touch-stone of the policy of Indian Self-Government states that the rights of Indian people to self-government be explicitly stated and entrenched in the Constitution of Canada. All Hon. Members of that committee, representing all of the Parties, unanimously agreed that the surest way to achieve permanent and fundamental change in the relationship between Indian peoples and the federal Government was by means of a constitutional amendment.

Mr. Oberle: Read on, Keith.

Mr. Penner: An Indian First Nation Government would be a distinct order. My hon. friend remembers how we argued for days before we finally agreed that we would recognize that there was to be a distinct order of Indian Government with that jurisdiction defined.

These two recommendations continue to serve, I believe, as the beacons pointing to genuine self-government. They embody the hopes and dreams, unfulfilled aspirations and unrealized goals of the Indian people. The fact that such recommendations were made unanimously by an all-Party Committee indicates that there are unkept promises which have not been forgotten.

However, we knew that the constitutional process would not be an easy one. We knew it would be difficult, disappointing and frustrating, and that has turned out to be the case. Sometimes here and there in the constitutional process there have been some heartening aspects. There have been some small rays of light from time to time breaking through the darkness, fear and ignorance of those First Ministers Meetings as they applied to the whole vital issue of aboriginal rights. The Special Committee anticipated accurately that there would be these difficulties and that constitutional recognition of the right to aboriginal self-government would have to follow a very steep, rugged and slippery path. Therefore, we proposed that there be a temporary or intermediate fall-back position, and so while the Committee concluded that the surest way to lasting change is through constitutional amendment, it encouraged both the federal Government and Indian First Nations to pursue all processes leading to the implementation of self-government, including the bilateral process, and that was the third recommendation. That is how we got the Cree-Naskapi (of Quebec) Act and, to a certain extent, it brought forward the Sechelt Indian Band Self-Government Act, although as I said earlier it is more trilateral than bilateral.

The Ministers who were involved, our present Minister and his predecessor, plus the Indian leaders who engaged in the negotiations leading to these agreements, deserve our praise, admiration and our gratitude. I am reflecting all of the good words the Minister said earlier. I do not know why he has been so troubled by a little objective analysis.

Mr. Crombie: Misleading.

Mr. Penner: This House should encourage and support what has occurred but it has to be seen in context. That is my point and the point that Indian leaders have already made to the Minister and which they will make to the Minister again.

Mr. Crombie: Misleading.

Mr. Penner: To this point I want to say to the Government that in what has been given today, or what will be given when we complete all stages of this Bill, let there be no reneging. Let there be no backing off, no hiding behind legalisms or obscure officialese. We cannot shortchange these Indian people who once again have negotiated and contracted with us in good faith. We must proceed on the same basis when we negotiate with the Indian people.

• (1420)

We have seen some of this before in the James Bay and Northern Quebec agreements. It was the standing committee which took leadership in the last Parliament with the previous Government and pointed out that they were trying to escape some of their obligations. We forced them into an inquiry and they finally had to admit that although they had not violated any of the legal aspects of the agreement, they had failed to live up to its spirit. I am saying to the Minister, let the letter and spirit of this legislation, as far as it goes, be lived up to.

We are still troubled by the Cree-Naskapi (of Quebec) Act insofar as there was an accompanying Memorandum of Understanding signed by the previous Minister. We are still worried and want to be assured that, although that was not in the Statute itself, it is not seen as an obligation of this Government. Just because it was signed by a previous Minister—

Mr. Crombie: The Sechelt is in the legislation.

Mr. Penner: —is no reason for this Government to back out of a memorandum entered into by agreement.

Mr. Crombie: It is statutory to the legislation. Why didn't you do it?

Mr. Penner: That is why it was signed by the previous Government and—

Mr. Crombie: It was not done right and you know it.

Mr. Penner: It is this Government which has to live up to the renegotiation of the funding agreement.

Mr. Crombie: Quit playing politics with it.

Mr. Penner: I am going to tell the Minister that Bill C-93 is going to be carefully examined by the standing committee.

Mr. Crombie: I hope so.

Mr. Penner: We are going to hear directly—

Mr. McDermid: You are more of a man than that. Come on.

Mr. Penner: We are going to hear directly from the Sechelt people. Mr. Speaker, why are these hon. Members so annoyed when I deal with legitimate concerns expressed by Indian leaders in this country? I raise it in the House and they become very sensitive.

Mr. Crombie: Because you are misleading.

Mr. Penner: We know—

Mr. Crombie: They believe you and you are misleading.

Mr. Penner: —that we are touching some pretty sensitive nerves today.

Mr. Crombie: No, you are misleading and they believe you and that is a tragedy.

Mr. Penner: I ask that that be withdrawn.

Mr. Crombie: No.

Mr. Penner: The Minister says I am misleading. There is none of that going on here and I ask that it be withdrawn right now.

Mr. Crombie: You are misleading.

Mr. Penner: I ask that that be withdrawn.

Mr. Crombie: No.

Mr. Penner: And I do not want this to be taken out of my time. I am raising a point of order, that there has been no misleading in this House.

Mr. Towers: Don't tell the Speaker what to do.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I recognize the difficulty we find ourselves in today on the broader questions in Indian Self-Government, the expectations that raises among many Indian bands and the constitutional issues. However, this is a very proud day for the Sechelt people. It is the fruition of a decade of work and it would be of great benefit to all of us to consider the Bill before us, to the degree possible, in light of the requirements of the Sechelt people. We have some issues we wish to raise at another time. We will express many of the points raised by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner). I hope we will not get ourselves into a procedural difficulty, but that we move forward in the spirit which has brought this Bill before the House today.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, I entirely agree with my friend from the NDP. I have interjected and I apologize to the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner). I did not mean to interject but there have been so many people who worked so hard on this legislation. It is not an uncomplicated matter, and I think with great respect it deserves a greater sense of understanding than has been offered. There are matters in the legislation which require examination and they are important to the Sechelt people. I did not want to have that lost in the kind of political rhetoric which the Indian people have had to pay for, for so long. I wanted to get down to what was important to them. I apologize to the Hon. Member for interjecting and I will of course, refrain, but I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, it is with some difficulty.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I concur entirely with the comments of my friend from the NDP. Of course this is an important day for the Sechelt Indian Band. If my remarks are examined coolly and calmly he will see that I indicated repeatedly how important it is to meet their needs. I never for a moment thought that what was taking place in the House of Commons today was a ceremony. I thought the House of Commons was a place—

Mr. Crombie: We are talking about the Sechelt.

Mr. Penner: —where men and women representatives could debate issues and raise matters of concern. I was trying to raise these matters in a cool and dispassionate way. If I became rather heated at certain moments, it was not because I intended that to be the case, but because of the interjections of the Minister. He has apologized and I accept his apology. Certainly we want to praise the Sechelt people, but I wanted to point out that failures to live up to treaties and agreements and understandings are too much a part of the history of this country. The committee will hear the Sechelt Band and we will praise them for the work they have put into this. There has been an enormous input from these people and their adivisers. The committee will want to know exactly how this Bill will impact on these people over a period of time. Once the Bill has been passed, without any obstruction at all from us, then we will monitor the Bill and see how it is working in the communities under the jurisdiction of the Sechelt Band.

I will conclude by using exactly the same words used by my friend from the NDP. Bill C-93 is a significant achievement for the Sechelt people. All Hon. Members want it to succeed. In adopting this Bill we want to say from this part of the House that it has to be seen in the context of larger issues pressing upon the hearts and minds of the Indian leaders of this country. I raised those issues and I am sorry if I broke the ceremonial atmosphere which the Minister wanted to create, but my obligation as a Member of Parliament is not to come here and engage in ceremony, but to make sure we get the best possible legislation. It should neither be underplayed nor overplayed. It should be seen in its proper and correct perspective. I believe that is our obligation.

It is an important day. We are not blocking this Bill. We only have two speakers from this Party. We are going to work expeditiously in committee to see that it comes back quickly for third reading. We are going to rejoice with the Sechelt Indian people on the day this Bill is finally proclaimed in law.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pride and satisfaction that I rise today to comment on this legislation. Before commencing to do so I would like to offer my thanks to the Minister and the Government for bringing the Bill forward. It is an important step. A great many hurdles were overcome. It has been a long process. It has involved more than one Government. Direction has had to be established and the bugs have had to be worked out to bring us to the point we are at today. The Minister and his staff, as well as previous Governments and Parliaments, have worked on this problem and it has now come to a point where I think the Sechelt people are very pleased.

I would also like to extend my thanks to the Official Opposition representative who just spoke. He voiced many important concerns to native people. I know he has supported these people in their endeavours toward self-government and they have a great deal of respect for the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superioe (Mr. Penner), as do many other native people in Canada. The points made by the Hon. Member were certainly not lost today. They will be raised again in committee. The issues which concern him and his Party, as well as ours, will be raised again.

Today is an important day for the Sechelt people in a lot of respects. This Bill is not a product of the current Government alone. It is not a product of the current band administration alone. This is the unfolding of aspirations of the Sechelt people which they have held for many years. There are about 650 people who live on the Sechelt Peninsula in British Columbia. They live in areas which have great potential. Over the years they have felt thwarted in their efforts to use the resources on the lands they occupy in order to bring about a better way of life for their people.

The Indian Act provided an impediment to progress. The Band has been lucky to have had good managers and very active participants in the government of their community. I believe the Band has been exemplary in the way in which it has developed. Eventually the Indian Act became a very serious impediment. Alterations were made which allowed Bands discretionary power. Those options were fully utilized by the Sechelt Band. They were able to make the decisions which affected their community in a number of areas. Later those powers became too limited. Progress for native people across the board in Canada did not move forward in a timely manner to aid the people of Sechelt. They began to think in terms of a piece of legislation which would enable them to develop their community resources in a timely way which would be meaningful to them. I believe that the Band has always had responsible leadership which reflected the wishes of the people. The Bill before us today represents that particular situation.

The interesting thing about this particular legislation is that it goes back at least 10 years. Many people have been responsible for bringing it forward. I want to give credit, on the record, to the people who have been involved with it. They include Chief Stan Dixon and the present Council of the Sechelt Indian Band, Benedict Pierre, Clarence Joe, Lloyd Jefferies, Ann Quinn, Gilbert Joe, former Chief Calvin Craigan, and Ted Dixon, a very well respected member of that community who was active in bringing forward the concerns of the Sechelt people on this and other issues. There was a very strong force which assisted the people of Sechelt to bring this, as well as many other projects, forward. Involved in developing this concept, filling out the framework, doing the detailed work, and providing an enormous amount of the energy which brought it forward, were the Band's legal adviser, Graham Allen, and the Band's financial adviser, Gordon Anderson.

There have been years of blood, sweat, tears and enormous frustration and problems. Instead of yielding to those frustrations they reorganized, applied more effort and more resources, and overcame the impediments. They convinced people that their course of action was correct and needed to be heeded and dealt with. We have the ultimate product of that before us today.

Mention has been made of the provincial Government in British Columbia. There are certainly occasions on which we disagree with it. It is interesting to note that the provincial Government does appear to support the thrust and direction of this legislation. It would appear that it is prepared to make moves to complement the Sechelt Indian Band Act and bring the desires of the Sechelt Indian people to fruition. We support that. I think the Government of British Columbia will make an effort to co-operate with this legislation.

On the other side of the coin, the Member for Cochrane-Superior has alluded to the problems in other areas with native people. The Government does seem to have a course of action which is not conductive to co-operation with some Indian bands. Ultimately, as is the way in our country, the people of British Columbia will make the decisions on those issues.

I would like to conclude my remarks by again thanking the Minister and the representative of the official Opposition, the Member for Cochrane-Superior, for assisting in bringing forth an agreement today which will allow this Bill to pass through the House. We will definitely hear more about this in committee. There is no doubt in my mind that the Sechelt Indian Band will have this legislation which will be a tremendous boon to the development of their community and to the satisfaction of their people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

PENSION BENEFITS STANDARDS ACT, 1985

The House resumed from Tuesday, January 28, 1986, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-90, an Act respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I will speak very briefly because I believe there is consent by all Parties to move this legislation forward as well. It has been 10 years since the subject of pension reform was first raised in the country. There have been 10 years of study, and now is the time for action. I have participated in the debate for most of those 10 years.

It is interesting to trace how many levels of Government have studied the problem. The Quebec Government has studied the issue with the Cofirentes Plus. The Ontario Royal Commission has studied it. The Lazar Interdepartmental Task Force has studied it at the federal Government level, as has the Senate Task Force on Aging. We have had the National Pension Conference, which I was privileged to be able to announce in the House on behalf of the present Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) nearly seven years ago. There was the Ontario Select Committee on Pension Reform, as well as the House of Commons Task Force on Pension Reform chaired by the Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith).

This Bill and those which will follow it are among the most important social measures that this House will examine in this session, because they deal with the issue of poverty among the elderly and the prevention of poverty among the future elderly. This Bill contains many specific provisions which will improve the situation of the elderly in the future. We are guaranteeing access to pensions for part-time workers. We are improving vesting, introducing, for the first time, portability provisions, providing for disclosure to employees and employee representatives of the state of the fund and of benefits accrued, looking after widows and widowers by making survivors' pensions mandatory, and looking after women by ensuring that they receive benefits equal to those received by men from pension funds. We are improving death benefits out of pension funds on a mandatory basis.

I am pleased, as I am sure are Members of all Parties, that the pension critics for the Liberal and New Democratic Parties support this Bill. They raised three issues in their speeches on the Bill which I would like to deal with. The first issue raised by both Members was that of the CPP changes which are part and parcel of the reforms recommended by the House of Commons Task Force on Pensions. In particular, the Member for Sudbury argued that we should be bringing homemakers' pensions forward on a rapid basis. That is outside the scope of this particular Bill, but the Government agrees with him and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has indicated in the House that we intend to proceed with that measure as quickly as possible. We hope to have that measure in place by January 1, 1987. I hope that the Member for Sudbury will use his considerable influence on the new Government of Ontario to ensure that it feels as strongly as he does so that we can bring this forward on January 1, 1987. That is something which will dramatically reduce poverty among our elderly. As he is aware, I testified in favour of this at his committee when I was representing the Canadian Institute of Actuaries. Indeed, I was involved in bringing that measure forward to the Progressive Conservative convention when it was adopted as part of our Party policy.

The second issue raised by the Member is that the pension task force recommended that we should implement inflation indexing for pensions. Again, I agree with the Hon. Member for Sudbury and, as he is aware, I testified before his committee on behalf of the Canadian Institute of Actuaries, not only indicating that it was desirable but also how we could do it.

The Hon. Member is very thorough and has read the Bill. I am sure he is aware that Clause 21(5) of the Bill makes provision for outlining what types of inflation protection will receive credit by the federal Government in recognition of the obligations that employers undertake.

Although we were unable to carry the provinces with us, we hope that the introduction of this clause will encourage the private sector to bring in these inflation protection measures on a sound financial basis and indeed encourage other provinces to buy into this procedure in order to make pension reform work.

When the committee studies this Bill, we will table papers showing how we chose the formula in Clause 21(5), and how employers can introduce sound indexing and inflation protection on a basis which does not expose them to unlimited cost. We will be in a position to explain why this basis was chosen, and I hope the Hon. Member for Sudbury uses his considerable influence to persuade the Ontario Government to replicate the provisions in our Bill. As he knows, that Government backed away from inflation protection and I hope it will recognize that we are taking a positive step forward.

Mr. Frith: There is no inflation protection in the Bill.

Mr. McCrossan: Yes, there is. It is in Clause 21(5).

Mr. Frith: Give me the formula.

Mr. McCrossan: Seventy-five per cent of the cost of living less 1 per cent, or its actuarial equivalent, which would be excess interest over 5 per cent. It is in the Bill, Clause 21(5).

The Hon. Member for Sudbury and the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) raised the issue of withdrawal of surplus from pension funds. I believe they have identified a key issue which needs to be dealt with in the committee. This question has obviously received a considerable amount of attention recently, with the recent actions taken with respect to Dominion Stores. It is an important issue that deserves detailed study and action in the committee.

Mr. Frith: Good heavens, Paul. You have a plan to provide indexation. You are not forcing companies to have indexation.

Mr. McCrossan: That is right.

Ms. Copps: So tell the truth.

Mr. McCrossan: I am telling the truth. I would be happy to elaborate on that briefly. We have provided an incentive. As the Hon. Member is aware, the provinces wanted to have only a fifty-fifty cost sharing. The federal Government's position was that we wanted to encourage people to bring in the stronger basis of inflation protection. Therefore, we have provided an incentive in this Bill for employers to adopt mandatory inflation protection.

That is as far as we could go with the provinces. I believe it is an important step forward because once this Bill is enacted many companies will indeed opt for better formulae in the Bill; it can be set up on a sound basis.

Let me return to the issue of withdrawal of surpluses. I first raised this in 1980 with Wells-Bentley of the Pension Commission of Ontario. I still strongly believe that such protection for the workers is needed in law. Again, I give my undertaking to Members that I will try to help develop a response to their concerns so that we can have a much better pension system in the future.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I recognize that the Hon. Member has done a great deal in the debate on pension reform in this country, not only as a Member of Parliament but in his previous occupation. Will he admit on the record that there is absolutely nothing in Bill C-90 that will require inflation protection for pension assets on a mandatory basis? Will he also acknowledge that in the Lalonde Budget of the previous Government, Mr. Lalonde agreed with the recommendations from my task force that would allow for mandatory inflation protection on every pension fund in this country? Would he at least admit that?

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, I will admit both of those things. However, I will also point out to the Hon. Member for Sudbury that one of the key recommendations of his report was that we bring in uniform pension legislation across the country rather than a patchwork quilt system. The Hon. Member knows that the Progressive Conservative Government of Ontario and the federal Liberal Government at that time were the only two Governments willing to go ahead and mandate inflation protection.

In order to put the package together last February, we had to make certain compromises. The federal Government held out for making a provision in the Bill that would encourage people to implement inflation protection, and indeed, that provision is in the Bill.

The question with which we must be concerned is, what is the greater need? We felt that achieving a consensus and moving forward on something which has been studied for 10 years in reaching unanimous agreement was most important, because in those 10 years many people have received inadequate benefits, lost their benefits and, indeed, people have retired without survivors' pensions. We must move forward.

We stuck to our guns and put in those provisions. We have clearly indicated our direction for the future by encouraging this type of inflation protection. We intend to build on this in the future. I am sure Hon. Member will recognize the practicalities of achieving unanimous consent among 10 provinces and the federal Government in this area.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I indicated that we agreed with Bill C-90 in principle when it was introduced for second reading. I also said that at committee stage we would move a number of amendments on areas in which we believe the Bill can be improved.

Will the Hon. Member give us some co-operation and undertake to at least consider these amendments in a straightforward way rather than on a political partisan basis?

I believe there are some serious deficiencies in the Bill, one of which is the definition of part-time under this law. There are also ways in which we can significantly improve pension benefits for all Canadians workers.

I would be the first to agree with the statement that in the interest of getting on with pension reform we at least approach this on the basis that the consensus package is the lowest common denominator for this reform and, therefore, we will not block the Bill at second reading.

Frankly, I hope we will be able to make progress with this in committee so that we can have legislation in place by January 1, 1987. Do I have the word of the Hon. Member that he will at least try to discuss with his Party, in a very straightforward and objective manner, the amendments I wish to put forward?

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to give my word, provided that the Member lives up to his preamble. He asks that this Bill be dealt with in a non-partisan way, and I agree. To the extent that the amendments he proposes are indeed non-partisan and designed to further the interest of pensioners in this country, I would certainly be prepared to exercise whatever influence I have in my caucus to make sure that we bring in appropriate amendments.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, my question deals with the issue of inflation protection. The Hon. Member has certainly left the House with the distinct impression that this legislation includes inflation protection. One only needs read the clause which he cited to see that it does not provide for automatic inflation protection. In fact, the Conservative Government has backed down on a previous commitment by the federal Liberal Government to have full inflation protection. How can the Member make such a misleading statement in the House with a straight face when he knows that his Government has backed down on the issue of inflation protection?

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, I believe that was clarified in my remarks and in answer to the two questions from the Hon. Member for Sudbury.

If the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) feels so strongly about this issue, she should talk to her former Leader to make sure that he brings in measures that are in his Bill which he dropped in the Province of Ontario. It is about time we proceed with this, and if she feels so strongly about it let her act on it. I acted on it. I made sure this provision was in the Bill to ensure that we had a model for the private sector to follow. I have taken some positive steps. I invite her to take some herself.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, the protection to which the Hon. Member alludes in this House is not in the Bill is under discussion by all Members today, and presumably I am here to make contribution to this Government and this Bill. You are leaving it up to the companies, if they so choose, to provide inflation protection. They will then be subject to the sections of the Act, but there is no inflation protection on a general basis.

Let me ask the Member again how he can continue to mislead the House on this issue when he knows full well the previous Liberal plan had included full inflation protection.

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, I conceded to the Hon. Member for Sudbury that the Lalonde Budget included mandatory inflation protection. I also reminded the Hon. Member from Sudbury about his recommendation that no significant measure go forward without the unanimous consent of the provinces, which it was not possible to get.

What is the greater principle? There was such a strong recommendation from everybody who studied this issue that we not have a patchwork guilt of legislation.

Very specifically, there is no mandatory inflation protection in this Bill, but there is a model to encourage employers to bring in voluntarily inflation protection which will protect the workers. I believe, and I believe history will bear me out, that many employers having seen the studies, which we are going to table in committee, will choose voluntarily to bring that in, and that we will see the issue take hold in the private sector.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the argument of the Member that we are in some way prevented from introducing, on federally regulated pension plans, the notion of the inflation protection eludes me. The Member will know that the Bill we are discussing today deals with federally regulated pension plans, which cover the federal public sector and those employees covered under the Canada Labour Code. Obviously we would love every province in Canada to provide full inflation protection as well, but we are dealing with proposals for a federally regulated pension plan. Why does the Member hide behind the notion that somehow the federal Government cannot provide the lead in this area, and that without unanimity he is not prepared to move on the issue of inflation protection, specifically in federally regulated pension plans?

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, there are two complementary ways of protecting workers to make sure that they get a fair shake in a pension plan. The first alternative, which nine of the 10 provinces favoured, was the imposition of a fifty-fifty minimum cost sharing of pensions. That provides considerable protection for workers, but it is not nearly as strong as having automatic inflation protection. The consensus was reached that the fifty-fifty which is referred to a couple of clauses earlier than the one I cited would be the main model to offer workers protection. Indeed, that does offer considerable measure of protection for workers.

In order to move on with this, the federal Government decided we would go beyond the provincial consensus. The provinces were arguing that it was too costly at this fragile time in the Canadian economy, when recovery is just taking place, to impose the most expensive item of pension reform on a mandatory basis. We said all right, we will bring in the minimum with which all the provinces agree, but we will provide an incentive for companies to move forward to what we believe is the ultimate step that should be taken.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, can the Member tell us why this legislation does not include a provision so that surpluses which may accrue in a pension fund can be pumped back into the fund for the benefit of the employees rather than simply taken over by the employer investor?

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, I raised this issue in my opening remarks. When the provincial consensus was being developed, there were no examples before us of the type of situation which had developed with the Dominion Store workers within the last few months. Almost without exception, employers had acted responsibly. When they had made surplus withdrawals, it had been to get money to keep the company alive. Many companies, and I am sure the Member is aware of them particularly in the transport sector back in the 1981-82 period, needed access to funds just to stay alive. The particular provision in this Bill says that the companies can have access to funds where that access does not impair the solvency of the fund. Companies cannot get any more back except that which was surplus to the obligations they committed to.

Since the time this Bill was tabled it has become apparent, and I think there is a well known high profile case I cited in my speech, and no doubt the Member will cite it in hers—where it is felt there may well be injustices to workers. The fact that there had not been a problem up to that time is the main reason that there is nothing in the Bill to prohibit it.

In the United States, which brought in a similar provision prohibiting entirely withdrawals of surpluses, there has been ample demonstration that that type of approach to the problem is counter-productive. It is counter-productive because employers stopped funding on anything other than the minimum basis. They left the minimum amount of assets in the fund, and when they got into financial difficulty the funds folded and the workers were left high and dry.

If you bring in a strict prohibition against withdrawal of surpluses, as we can see now from nearly seven years of experience in the United States, the effect is to leave workers in a worse off position. Employers take steps to reduce their contributions to the bare minimum in order not to get caught. It is not as simple as just prohibiting the withdrawal of surpluses and saying that means workers will be better off.

We have all kinds of evidence. The pension benefit guarantee fund in the United States has lost hundreds of millions of dollars as a result of the actions that employers have taken by minimizing funding and then leaving the fund high and dry when employers got into trouble.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join in this debate because the Hon. Member who spoke to the Government's position on the proposed pension legislation has made a number of assertions, assertions that somehow this legislation would be of great benefit to those among our society who currently represent the poor, in particular women, and those women in poverty.

This piece of legislation does include a shorter vesting period. Obviously we in the Liberal Party support that because the Liberal Party in the budget of Marc Lalonde originally introduced the notion of reducing the vesting period. Our Party supports more portability in pensions. Our Party supports a reduced vesting period to allow the kind of pension mobility that we know is following the mobility of workers in society. It is important we have this portability so workers can feel if they move from job to job, as is currently the case in a highly mobile Canadian society, that those workers will continue to have coverage. However, the Government's position and refusal to look at the issue of full indexation in fact belie and contradict the very claims made by the Hon. Member in respect of the leadership of the federal Government on this issue.

We know that under the previous Liberal Government the national policy was committed to a full indexation of pension plans. Now we hear Government spokesmen saying that they would rather leave it to the private sector, somehow hoping that private companies will take their responsibility and in fact provide a clause for full inflation protection. That has not been the case in the past. The Government continues to support a pension fund where the excess of the investment can be withdrawn by the company for use in developing its profits margins, supplying other products and expanding into new areas. Essentially this is not for the benefit of those who contributed to the pension plan, but for the benefit of shareholders of the company. There is a principle involved here which speaks to whose dollars are in the pension fund. Are they dollars for the shareholders? Are they dollars for company products? Are they dollars for workers who have contributed with matching contributions from companies to provide their own future inflation protection and retirement benefits? I suggest that we are speaking about the latter. Those pension funds should be solely directed toward the payment of pension benefits to retiring and outgoing workers. The company should not be permitted to skim off the cream of pension investments. Otherwise, the pension fund is not being used for the benefit of workers and the investment is not there to assist in the retirement of workers but is there to pass off an extra few cents or dollars to the shareholders, to the management of the company or to the company's bottom line.

Why does this particular measure discriminate against the majority of employees who work for small businesses in Canada? When I speak of small businesses, I am talking about businesses with less than 50 employees. Many of the provisions, including the establishment of a pension committee and an invitation to have some worker involvement in the investment process of the company, are restricted to those companies with 50 or more employees. If we are truly concerned about the tripartite approach of labour, management and Government which we as a Parliament have paraded over the last number of years, both previous Liberal Governments and the current Conservative Government, then we should encourage worker involvement in pension funds at the company level, even if the workers happen to work for a company with less than 50 employees. We should not only encourage that type of involvement, but we should facilitate it by suggesting that any worker in any organization where workers want some involvement in the kinds of investments which will be used to guarantee their future retirement should be permitted to do so. In light of current Government changes, as they specifically relate to the Government's consideration of pension benefits as income for the purposes of calculating unemployment insurance, we will see that more and more workers will want a direct say in what happens in their company pension plans.

At the same time as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is introducing the Pension Benefits Standards Act and subsequent Conservative Members are speaking to it, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is creating a disincentive to private pension plans by introducing the new notion that, for unemployment insurance, pension benefits will now be considered as income. That has created a two-class system of citizens. The first class includes those citizens who are not salaried employees. Not only does this particular measure indicate that those with pension benefits will not be allowed to collect unemployment insurance, it applies only to those who are salaried employees with a company pension plan. However, if one happens to be in business and has contributed to a private money purchase plan, an RRSP, the Minister of Employment and Immigration has said in her wisdom that one is exempt from the new regulations. In other words, an upper-middle income Canadian, who has had an opportunity to contribute to a private Registered Retirement Savings Plan, which has accrued and built up over the years, and has retired from work, will be entitled to collect unemployment insurance benefits for the 52 weeks following retirement if he or she has not yet reached the age of 65 years. At the same time, salaried employees who are in company pension plans are denied that right.

When we adopted the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, we said that all citizens and residents of Canada were created equal, with the same rights and obligations. It is not only this particular pension measure which discriminates against employees of companies with less than 50 workers. A concurrent measure of another Minister dealing with pension benefits indicates that salaried employees, such as steelworkers in the riding of Hamilton East, will not be allowed to collect unemployment insurance as long as they are receiving a pension from their companies. At the same time, if I am forced into retirement by the voters of Hamilton East and have an RRSP—and subsequently I can take another job or cash in my RRSP—I can collect unemployment. Is it more important for the steelworker in the riding of Hamilton East, the salaried employee or company person, to collect a pension or is it more important for the upper middle-income Canadian who has contributed to a private money purchase plan to be able to collect unemployment insurance?

We have been elected to protect those who are least able to protect themselves. Those of us who can afford private money purchase plans, who can afford to play the stock-market and who can afford accountants to give us the loopholes we need so that we do not have to pay as much in taxes as we might have to do if we were straight salaried employees, have built in protection. It is the salaried company person who does not even have any input into how his or her pension funds are spent who is hamstrung by the decision of the Government. If in fact good pension investments should result in a higher than average yield and in an increase over what was expected for the pension plan, such workers, unlike private RRSP investors, will not be able to take advantage of that excess. That excess can be skimmed by the company and sunk back into its profit margins, its president's salary and its shareholders' return. The people who will be left holding the bag will be those who thought they had a greater say in pension funds as a result of the mesures about which we are talking today.

Many issues have not been addressed in this particular Bill. They have actually been ignored. The difficulties have been compounded by the current position taken by the Government in respect of the calculation of pension benefits as earnings for the purpose of unemployment insurance.

When the Hon. Member commented upon the situation facing the women of the country, he neglected to say that while the particular Act will obviously be of benefit to those people who are currently in a pension plan or are currently in a company with over 50 employees, it does nothing to speak to the basic inequities currently being faced by senior citizens and elderly women between 55 and 65 years of age who may find themselves, through no fault of their own, never having been in a company pension plan.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this Government which is talking about equity for women and the poor, which has just announced a program under the Bill for women or widows between the ages of 60 and 65, this Government is at the same time discriminating against women who have never married or who for whatever reason are divorced or separated. In other words, the Government Member would have us believe the Government is doing its best for women who have no other means of support. However, we all know that under the Bill announced in 1985 by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, which concerns women between the ages of 60 and 65, these women were not covered if they were single or divorced. They were not entitled to the same pensions offered to widows, a group the Government had decided to give a pension.

So there are some very large gaps, not just in this Bill but in the Government's whole policy on pensions.

Speaking of the Bill, I think it has two major shortcomings, one being the Government's decision to reject the policy of the previous Liberal Government by saying that every pension plan must contain guarantees against inflation.

Mr. Speaker, we now know, whatever may be said from time to time in this House by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), that the real rate of inflation in 1986 is practically the highest ever. For instance, the banks are offering us from 6 to 7 per cent on our investments, while they are charging from 11.5 up to as much as 14 per cent on mortgages and other types of loans.

So, the so-called spread between the real rate and the rate charged by the banks is 6 or 7 per cent, which is much higher than what we had two or three years ago.

When we see the spread between the interest rates and the rates charged by the banks, we have to conclude that the Government has ignored the pleas of Canadians, of employees and companies, for real protection against inflation, while we also know that the real rate of inflation continues to widen the gaps.

I would say that especially the elderly and those living on pensions are among those who are least protected against inflation. We young people who are in good health can always go out to work or find another job, or even have two jobs or find some other way to save money. When we look at a person who has to take early retirement at 60 for health reasons, that person does not have the same ability to adjust to inflation rates of 6 per cent, 7 per cent, 8 per cent, 10 per cent, 11 per cent, 12 per cent and 13 per cent, as is happening at the present time.

I think it is much more important for the Government, first of all, to provide protection against inflation, and second, this would have been a very good Bill if the Government had decided that the funds invested in these pension plans . . . If the investment happens to be a good one and the pension fund has a surplus over what it is supposed to have, I think this would have been a good piece of legislation if the Government had decided to give employees the right to return these funds to the pension plan.

Mr. Speaker, what is happening now is that if we end up with a surplus in the pension fund, we allow the companies and employers the possibility to use these surpluses either as profits or to return them to the investors, without really giving employees the opportunity to benefit themselves from the surpluses in their pension funds.

What is the purpose of a pension fund, Mr. Speaker? It's not intended for the investors, for the company or to make profits. The pension fund is there to help employees when they retire. That is the reason why we are dealing with this Bill today. That is the reason why the federal Government has decided to act in a responsible manner and to create a climate where uniform pension funds can be developed.

But when the Government refuses to allow these pension funds to be re-invested for the benefit of the employees, it shows it is more interested in protecting the interests of companies than those of the workers who, in all fairness, should have the opportunity to benefit from surpluses which result from their own investments in the company.

We see, Mr. Speaker, that because of these two shortcomings the Government has failed to recognize the importance of employee involvement and employee contribution to private company pension plans by refusing to provide full inflation protection and by refusing to allow surpluses that may occur in pension funds to be pumped back into the employee's pension benefits. The federal Government is saying that, in fact, it does not really believe that employees, first and foremost, should be involved in the management of their company pension plans. Employees should not have that opportunity except if, by some happenstance, they are employed by a company of 50 or more people and if, by some happenstance, the company happens to have agreed to some type of inflation protection. It is the same kind of voluntary approach of the private sector that we see has failed so dismally when it comes to the so-called Challenge '85 and Challenge '86 programs.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration said: "Leave it to the private sector, they are going to create jobs. Leave it to the private sector, they are going to give us inflation protection". I dare say that the workers in the steelmills in Hamilton know they have been able to accrue some inflation protection by the sweat of their brows and not because of any largess on the part of a company boss. In fact, some of those workers have gone on strike, some of them have been forced to walk a picket line to get the kind of inflation protection that is now built into their pension plans. In the same breath we see that that inflation protection, that particular benefit—if you want to consider it so, a carrot that might encourage people to take early retirement—has not only been ignored by the lack of inflation protection in this particular Bill, but has been further jeopardized because of the action of the Minister of Employment and Immigration when she told the workers and the salaried employees of this country: "You will no longer be eligible for unemployment insurance because you are on a pension plan".

Mr. Speaker, if you were a union negotiator and you were negotiating a contract which would be coming up for renewal in 1986, would you tell your older workers that they should be looking for more pension contributions? Would you tell your older workers that the company should be building up the pension funds and encouraging early retirement to allow younger employees to come on to the job? No, you would tell them to get the bottom line now, get into private RRSPs and get out of the pension company system, because the Minister of Employment and Immigration has introduced discriminatory legislation. I would hope the Government would consider some amendments to those regulations while we are discussing this issue of extreme importance to all Canadians, that is, pension protection for all workers, not just those who are lucky enough to have their own private RRSPs.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a very leading question of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). It will facilitate the workings of this House this afternoon, as Members are in the middle of those discussions right now.

Under present legislation the definition of part-time work is 35 per cent of the year's maximum pensionable earnings. That definition will not cover 80 per cent of the women in this country who work part-time within the federal jurisdiction. Would she be in favour of that definition or does she think it would be better defined in committee?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) has a great interest in this question because he chaired the committee that came up with a number of good recommendations in this particular piece of legislation. However, where the Government has missed the boat is on the question of part-time workers. Unfortunately, it chose to ignore the recommendations of the Wallace Report as it dealt with part-time workers. The Wallace Commission travelled across the country and talked not only to women but to men to find out how we could deal with the ever-growing workforce of part-time workers, both in terms of getting them the kind of benefits protection they want and also of ensuring they are working part-time because they want to and not because they cannot find full-time jobs. It seems to me that by ignoring the recommendations of the Wallace Commission, the Government is trying to reinvent the wheel.

I think there will be some very good presentations brought before the committee, and I know the Hon. Member for Sudbury has been in close contact with groups across the country that are concerned about expanding the definition of part-time work for the purpose of receiving benefits under this particular piece of legislation. However, the Government has had all the facts in its possession since its overwhelming mandate began on September 4, 1984. To date, the Government has chosen to ignore those recommendations.

While I know the Hon. Member for Sudbury will be doing his best to get the message across, I am not optimistic about Government Members unless we can get through to some of them who seem to think that women are working part time for little money and no benefits because they want to do so. Unfortunately, there are still many Members of the House who feel that a woman's place is only in the home and that a woman does not have the right to the same type of job and protection that men have. We have to convince these Members of Parliament that women have the right not only to compete equally but also to be afforded equal protection in part-time employment. We must convince them that women need protection regarding the question of the social costs of bearing children and having families.

We know that the Government is talking about taking maternity benefits out of unemployment insurance. Again, that is a Neanderthal attitude on the part of the Conservative Party that does not really believe in equality for women. The Hon. Member for Sudbury will be highlighting those issues in committee, but I would encourage those members of the Government who are not Neanderthals to join us. The Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk) says that he is not a Neanderthal. I would encourage him to join us in committee to make sure that the Government brings in changes which allow part-time workers, primarily women, to take advantage of the same kinds of pension benefits and protection that are currently being awarded to full-time workers.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have a chance to say a few words on the matter of the Government's pension reform Bill. I would like to introduce what I am saying with a few comments on what I see as the background of the principle of pensions.

Private pensions are something that only a minority of the workers of Canada enjoy because most pension plans have been negotiated by unions with their employers and it is only a minority of the workers who have as yet attained union status. Therefore, pensions are always negotiated as part of the wage package. There are the official wages and there are other economic benefits in the contract, and then there are pensions, if there are pensions. Of course, by no means have all unions been able to negotiate pensions as yet.

I recall that for 12 years as an officer in my local union, I was helping to develop the pension policies of our company, Continental Can. The company did have a pension plan. We had to negotiate improvements to it. Every time we negotiated a new contract every one or two years, the company said that there is this much in the pension fund and that much in wages, or we could have it all in wages or we could have it all in the pension plan. There were different ways the package would be offered, but the money in the pension plan was traded off against our wages. It is a very important principle that at least half of the money in the pension fund is the workers' money. The other half of it that the company puts in in the formal sense is also there by virtue of negotiations. It is part of the package that the workers negotiate. It is traded off against wages, against hours, against working conditions and fundamentally it is part of what is traded off for the goodwill and co-operation of the workers and the no-strike clause in the contract that lasts for the length of the contract. That point is not sufficiently recognized by many employers. Notorious for this is Conrad Black who took millions of dollars out of a pension fund because he felt he had a legal loophole which enabled him to do so. However, what he did was thoroughly immoral. Morally speaking, it was theft. He took money that belonged to the workers to use for his own private purposes without any moral excuse whatsoever. This Bill only goes a very small distance toward recognizing that principle.

Our Party will be supporting the Bill because it represents a small progress, but it falls far short of what would be just, and in fact it falls far short of what the Government promised. The main object of the Bill is to regulate the private pension funds of the country. It does not apply to the federal public servants who are already governed under the Public Service Superannuation Act. The Government says that it will extend comparable benefits to those employees, but of course it has not said when it will do so. Why the Government did not bring that forward at the same time as this Bill is something it has not told us. We are being asked to believe that the Government will do it reasonably soon and in reasonable conformity with its promises.

Although we are supporting this Bill because of its degree of progress, we have to object to, and hope there will be some improvement in, two particular faults of this Bill. One fault which has already been mentioned is the fact that it does not provide mandatory inflation protection. It does not protect the workers against having a pension that may have looked good at the time it was negotiated but may be peanuts by the time the workers have retired and are collecting on it. The Bill also notoriously fails to provide any protection against the kind of theft that Conrad Black practised against the workers of Dominion Stores. Why the Government refuses to protect against that, of course, is something that it has not told us.

In an inflationary situation, the workers get hit twice. They get hit once because retired workers find their pensions are worth much less than they thought they would be and much less than they were led to expect they would be. It hurts future pension beneficiaries because it encourages the employer, as in the Conrad Black case, to look at the surplus in the pension fund which has grown because of inflation and to decide to scoop it out rather than convert it back into benefits for the employees who paid for it and earned it.

We very much hope that in committee, Government Members will see fit to agree to amend this Bill in those two respects. At least, we hope they would honour the promise that was made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his Budget and to honour the Government policy statement, Better Pensions for Canadians, which was issued in 1982 by the previous Government and which many workers took as being a guideline for what the Government might do.

Two things are needed to bring minimal justice to this Bill rather than the half-justice for which we will have to vote if the Government refuses to relent. The first thing needed for minimal justice in this Bill is the provision of mandatory protection against inflation, not voluntary protection. I do not know of employers or vendors who have been willing voluntarily to give a break to their workers or consumers as against inflation. It has to be made mandatory, either through Government legislation or through union action. Union action may very well have to include strike action.

Workers may be forced once again to go on strike to get decent pensions for themselves, for those who have retired and for those who may come after them. Many Members on the opposite side deplore strikes and wish that unions would not use their only weapon, the strike. It would be sensible for those Hon. Members to amend this legislation in such a way that public opinion, which recognizes the need for pensions and the need that workers' money in these pensions should be used to their benefit, should find expression in legislation by this Government, by this Parliament, which would ensure that the pension funds are protected against inflation and that they are protected against theft by the employer.

There is, of course, a better way to do this. There is a better way still which our Party has advocated and which our predecessor Party, the CCF, advocated and which those who founded the CCF were advocating even before the CCF was founded, that is, a Government pension such as the Canada and Quebec pension. That would be the most just and economical way of ensuring a decent level of retirement income for all Canadians. But to do that, the rate of benefit of the Canada and Quebec pension would have to be sharply increased. Those workers who can negotiate with their employers, those minority workers who are in the fortunate position of being in unions and able to negotiate with their employers for a private pension, which will be in addition to their Canada and Quebec pension, of course, at the present time find that they are obliged to do that as a matter of prudence because they have no reason to believe that this Government will increase the Quebec and Canada pension to a level that provides for a decent living. But if this Government, on the one hand, wished to avoid strikes, by those workers in a position to struggle for better pensions, or if it wished, on the other hand, to avoid the compulsory, that is the mandatory, inflation protection we are asking for, the Government has a simple solution. It could announce that it will increase the Canada Quebec Pension Plan to a level that makes it unnecessary for workers to negotiate away part of their wages in return for a private pension plan.

The Government has two good options if it does not wish to promote industrial unrest, that is, either make a suitable increase in the Canada Quebec Pension Plan or else amend this legislation by including genuine mandatory inflation protection and ensure protection against the employer lifting the surplus out of the pension fund.

I hope that suggestion will be taken quite seriously by the Government Members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Resuming debate.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault).

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I too am pleased to comment briefly on Bill C-90 to make changes to the pension plans of companies and organizations under the jurisdiction of the Government of Canada.

We find that this timely piece of legislation includes several measures which will be of great benefit to people who work for the Canadian Government or for companies under its jurisdiction.

Indeed the Bill takes into consideration the fact that the situation has changed drastically over the years. It will make it a lot easier to administer pension plans and give more leeway to individuals who will now be able to transfer their pension funds from one employer to another, an option which workers have now been seeking for several decades.

We want to see this Bill get second reading and be referred to committee, but it does not necessarily mean that we fully endorse all its provisions. For instance, we are anxious to send the Bill to a committee of the House for further consideration because we know that several groups have already expressed the wish to appear as witnesses in an attempt to amend some of the clauses of the Bill. Indeed, one of the changes on which the workers will certainly insist relates to the indexation of their pension benefits. In other words, they want those benefits protected against erosion due to increases in the consumer price index.

Unfortunately that is probably the most obvious shortcoming of this measure—it offers no protection whatsoever against inflation. Hon. Members who have been in the House for some time will recall some of the proposals made in the past. For instance, when the Hon. Marc Lalonde was Minister in the previous Government he proposed a formula which I will outline in a few moments. From the outset, Mr. Speaker, I can say I did not think it was overly generous, but at least the formula did take into account the fact that a worker's pension is regularly eroded by the ever rising cost of living. Mr. Lalonde's formula was simple enough: take the increase in the consumer price index, deduct 2.5 per cent from this and then grant 60 per cent of that figure as an hedge against inflation. If the inflation rate were about 5 per cent, for instance, we would take away 2.5 per cent, which would leave 2.5 per cent, and pay 60 per cent of that amount, which would mean that, in a period when the consumer price index goes up by 5 per cent, pensioners would receive a protection of only 1.5 per cent. That is not a lot. However, it would at least be somewhat more than a symbolical recognition of the fact that pensions are eroded by inflation, and I am quite surprised that this Government has not introduced such a minimal protection because it really is the least that we could do, and I am sure that many employees of companies covered by this legislation would not be satisfied with it. I have to ask myself why the proposals of the Government do not take into account the negative effects of inflation on the amount of pensions. When this legislation is referred to a committee, as it will be before long, it will be very important to think seriously about amending it to provide more than a symbolical protection for pensions so that they will not be constantly eroded by inflation.

Another part of the legislation which seems seriously defective is the description of part-time workers. As we know, in well-managed pension plans, full-time workers make contributions to the plan, or at least such is the case in most civilized societies. There are also companies where part-time workers have the option of contributing to the pension plan. However, I find the description of part-time worker contained in this legislation insufficient and defective. The Bill says that, to be a part-time worker, someone must have accumulated over one year 35 per cent of normal annual earnings, which means that he must have worked about one-third of the time, which seems reasonable at first glance. However, according to our research, if this standard is applied, there will probably not be more than 20 per cent of part-time workers eligible, especially in the case of women. And this for the obvious reason that there are more women than men employed in temporary jobs, part-time jobs in our Canadian society. It is more normal for a female employee to spend certain parts of her time at home, and certain times at work. According to our estimate, if we were to apply that 35-per-cent standard to maximum annual earnings, we would find ourselves in the situation where there might be four women out of five who might not have the opportunity to participate in a pension plan. This in our view is an aspect the Government should be considering and assessing before the legislation is passed.

Also, concerning protection against inflation, both in the definition or description of part-time work, it is our firm intention, when the legislation goes before the appropriate committee of the House of Commons, to suggest changes and to move amendments. I hope that at that point, after the debate in this House, the Government will agree to give particular attention to those two areas and make the changes that are needed in my view.

This being said, Mr. Speaker, we have no intention of protracting the debate on Bill C-90, but only to take the time needed to make the Government realize, before we go to committee, that it is most important that some of the shortcomings I have just described should be corrected before the Bill is returned to the House at report stage so we will have before us, at the end of our discussions at the report stage and third reading, a bill that will be closer to perfection than this one. Those, Mr. Speaker, were the comments I wanted to bring to the attention of the House and the Government at this stage.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make a few comments about these amendments which have been so long in gestation that there must be people who have retired and died since they were originally proposed back in the 1960s. It is scandalous that so many pension plans seem to be designed to benefit not the employee but only the employer. They give the illusion of protection but it is not followed through. The rules for vesting are so inappropriate because they require that an employee attain the age of 45 and have more than 10 years of service before benefits can be vested. That is being changed in this Bill and it is a welcome change. However, it has taken a heck of a long time to get to that point. I believe the reason for that is that the employers and the pension industry have not wanted those changes to be made. I want to go on record as condemning their record and their failure to understand the necessity of providing income security for that large number of people who work for employers where there are pension plans regulated under federal or provincial legislation.

When I was in the Ontario Legislature the question of pension reform came up frequently. We had a royal commission. It was studied by a legislative committee. Vast amounts of studies and research were produced. However, what we could not get around was the lack of political will by the Conservative Government of Ontario and the then Liberal Government of Canada to make the necessary moves. The only place where reform really came forward was in the Province of Manitoba under an NDP Government. That province decided, regardless of the failure of other provinces and the federal Government to move, that they would make the necessary and desirable reforms in order to ensure that employees who contributed to pension plans had a good chance of actually benefiting from them.

We finally have some changes. They are watered down and inadequate. In particular, they are objectionable because they only apply after 1987. They do not take into account contributions people have made prior to the beginning of next year. Some might say it is better to have that than to have nothing. We say that too. The NDP is supporting this Bill. We discussed it in caucus and decided that although we object to the failure to back-date and the fact it falls short of what is needed, we had better support the Bill because it is the best we are going to get from this Government. It is a heck of a lot better as well than what we got from the previous Government when nothing was done on this subject at all. Nonetheless, let us not fool ourselves. There are still an awful lot of loopholes in the Bill which will allow our pension legislation to continue benefiting employers to the disadvantage of employees who have a legitimate need of income security through the contributions they make.

The fundamental problem here is that there is a real quarrel out there as to just who pension contributions belong to and whether or not they are a form of deferred income. It has been increasingly accepted that they are a form of deferred income. If an employer contributes 7 per cent or 8 per cent of an employee's wages or salary to a pension fund, then as far as I am concerned that money should be seen as belonging to the employee and be used for his or her benefit. That should be a fundamental principle. These days it is becoming more and more obvious that long-term employment in one particular job will become less and less the norm. That is happening now and I suppose there are many Members of this House who have already had two, three or four different careers. Perhaps they were in business, perhaps they were teachers. Perhaps they began in a trade or they went on to take post-graduate studies or practise law. I was a journalist, an alderman, a provincial MPP and now I am a federal MP. I might be a business consultant some day trying to wake up the business community to the needs of working people.

An Hon. Member: Dream on.

Mr. Cassidy: Who knows? I am the only socialist MBA in this House, with the exception of my friend from Kenora-Rainy River who shares that distinction with me. Perhaps there are one or two back-benchers in the Conservative Party who have not revealed their true stripes.

We still have a long way to go before the principle that contributions made by employers as well as employees rightly belong to the employee is universal. I am glad to see that harmonized legislation is now coming forward from the provinces and the federal Government to implement Bill C-90. However, that is not going nearly far enough. Other elements of income security which are important have not yet been into place. In fact, the Government is actively leading the way in the opposite direction. Today I was preparing a brief to the Forget Commission on unemployment insurance. One of the points I want to make is that the Government's decision to disallow unemployment insurance benefits for any person receiving more than a certain amount of pension income prior to the age of 65 is a fundamentally objectionable principle. It will hurt ex-service people and Public Service employees who retire before 65. It will also hurt people in the private sector who chose early retirement or are compelled to take early retirement at a reduced rate. They are then looking for some form of income security from a job, but if they lose it they will have no right to unemployment insurance benefits in return for the premiums they will be compelled to pay. The Quebec Pension Plan allows for retirement before 65. The pension is less than the full rate, but the right exists and that has not yet been put into the CPP. Obviously it should be included in order to correspond with the right of early retirement provided for under federal jurisdiction in this Bill. The QPP provides for an increased rate of pension benefits to people who chose to retire after the age of 65, and that is a flexibility we should see in our pension arrangements in this Bill as well as the CPP.

My colleagues have talked about specific measures in the Bill. This Bill does not apply to federal public servants and they are now being compelled to accept a situation where the indexation they have fought for is going to be taken away. It does not cover people in the Forces who have very serious problems and who are being given absolutely no say in the management of a pension fund which amounts to some $13 billion. This is nominally in their account but they have not say at all in its management. As my colleagues have said, this Bill does not ensure that all retirees will enjoy adequate, dignified retirement incomes. It only covers a proportion of people under federal jurisdiction who happen to have pension plans.

I do want to talk about those persons because, if we can get decent standards for them, they will not be in the position of requiring the guaranteed income supplement or other forms of assistance from the federal or other Treasuries after they retire. They will be able to live in dignity. They will be able to be sun-seekers, if they want, or to live in the country with dignity. They will not be under the constraints which govern people who live out their retirements in poverty today.

There are some fundamental principles which must be considered. The first is that the net effect of this Bill is very negligible for the next few years because vesting after two years is only provided for with respect to contributions after 1987. There are large numbers of employees under the age of 45 who work in federally-regulated jurisdictions who now have up to 15 or 20 years of service with an employer and who still stand at risk of losing the benefit of the employer's contributions and the benefit of vesting in the foreseeable future. That could continue for as long as 10 or 15 years with respect to persons who may have 10 years of service and are aged 30. They will not reach the magic age of 45 for some time, and they have no right to the employer's contribution for the years of service they have now.

There could have been some negotiation on that front. It could have been provided that the full rate of interest on employers' contributions would not begin to be paid until after this Bill was proclaimed. It seems to me that the Bill should now be amended to provide that when employees have been in a particular job for a number of years they should not lose the benefit of vesting if they should happen to lose or change their job prior to reaching the age of 45 and meeting the requirements under the previous Pension Benefits Act. That is very objectionable, Mr. Speaker.

I think the two-year rule is too long. It should probably be only one year, at least for anyone over the age of 25, at which time the work careers of people begin to settle down. To forward date it means that it will be a long time before people who are contemplating retirement now will be assured of substantial portability in their pension benefits. This Bill does not provide for instant portability, despite what the pension industry and private employers want to tell us. It provides for a very qualified amount of portability. The first portability provided for under this Bill, believe it or not, will not occur for about 1,000 days, that is not until January 1, 1989.

I welcome the fact that the Bill provides for making information available to employees. However, some improvements could be made in those particular provisions. The actuarial and other information should be on file at the administrator's office and should be available to plan members and their unions at any time. However, I do welcome the fact that that information will be available. I hope we do not get into silly situations whereby employees who seek to look at that information are denied the right to take copies or to make copies at a reasonable charge.

The provisions for the direction of the plans are quite unacceptable as far as I am concerned. I do not care how much protestation there is from employers about this. I find the idea that employers shall continue to be the sole administrators of pension funds objectionable and unacceptable.

I have given a great deal of thought to the question of how the Canadian industry should work in the future. Everything that I see and hear, not only from my friends in the trade union movement, but also from business consultants, from the example of Japan, and from management consultants in the United States, indicates that if we in North America are going to be competitive in a very difficult world environment over the course of the next years, we will have to build relationships built on trust and co-operation in the workplace rather than on the current practice which seems to prevail whereby the employer knows best and tries to treat the employees like dirt.

That means that pensions should be run on a joint basis by employers and employees with equal representation on the board directing the administrator, possibly with a neutral chairman. That kind of arrangement could and should have been included in this particular Bill. The current provisions give employees no guarantee of any say in the administration of pension funds if there are fewer than 50 employees. Most people who study the subject know that it is very difficult for employees to get together and say that they want to exercise their rights because they do not have an organized mechanism by which they can make the provisions stick.

In addition, this Bill says that there will be only a consultative committee and that employees will have the right to representation on some unexplained basis, direct or indirect, on that consultative committee. The committee could have 10 or 15 members and there would only be a requirement that one be representative of the employee. There is no guarantee that the committee will give any credence or voice to the objections or concerns which may be raised by the employee representative. There is no guarantee that the employee representative will not be that of the middle management employees covered by a particular plan. The blue collar, pink collar, or white collar employee may have no representation at all. I think that is inadequate and the Government should have recognized that in drafting the Bill. It should recognize that now and bring forward appropriate amendments to that particular part of the Bill.

I believe the employees should have a substantial voice in the policies and investment provisions of the pension fund in which an important part of their future security is put. On the one hand, I think that is more effective than only having investment rules that are administered by a superintendent of insurance or of pension schemes here in Ottawa. Second, I think it lends itself to innovative forms of finance into which many employees may be prepared to have their pension fund enter.

What happens, for example, if a particular enterprise which has $10 million or $15 million in its pension fund is in a difficult situation? It may well be that employees under that situation would be prepared to see up to 25 per cent of the value of their pension fund used in a rescue effort to get that company back on the rails. That is a possibility. It may well be that a pension fund could be used to provide important benefits to employees. Many employees cannot currently afford to make an investment in a house. Yet, at the same time, they may have credits in a pension fund which, if they could draw on them, would permit them to make such an investment.

I am not sure whether there has been agreement among the House Leaders that this matter should come to a vote now. I understand that some of my colleagues may have some comments to make. If not, I am sure the matter could come to a vote later. I know that the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) has a question and I will allow her to ask it.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) whether he could comment on some specific concerns we have with respect to the definition of part-time workers in the Bill. The Government has chosen not to follow the recommendations of the Wallace Report. Does he have any comments on that? We are particularly concerned that from the federal Public Service perspective there seems to be a fair movement toward the contracting out of services and the use of part-time, unprotected workers, as opposed to full-time, fully-fledged civil servants under the Public Service Alliance Act.

● (1600)

Mr. Cassidy: The time is short so I will be brief in my comments. Without commenting on the specific recommendations of the Wallace Report, I gave a brief recommending that federal and provincial labour statutes should in fact be applied as much as possible to part-time workers. I believe that should be the case for people regularly employed as part-timers in companies that are federally regulated, just as it should apply to companies that are provincially regulated.

I agree with the Hon. Member's concern that the Bill is too restrictive in the way it is being applied to part-time workers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ADVISABILITY OF GRANTING RIGHT TO POLITICAL PARTICIPATION

The House resumed from Friday, September 13, 1985, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cassidy:

That the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates be empowered to study the question of granting to federal public employees the full political participation enjoyed by other Canadians and, that the Committee report its findings to the House no later than June 28, 1985.

And on the amendment of Mr. Benjamin:

That the motion be amended by deleting the year "1985" and inserting the year "1986".

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment before the House that the motion be amended by deleting the year "1985" and inserting the year "1986". That would, in effect, require that the question of granting full political participation to federal public employees be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates and that the committee report its findings to the House no later than June 28, 1986.

Hon. Members will recognize that this resolution has already been debated in the House on two previous occasions, on April 15, 1985 and on September 13, 1985. The purpose of this resolution is to give an opportunity for federal public employees, their unions and members of the general public to comment on the question of granting political rights to public employees of the Government of Canada. Its purpose is also to give some momentum to an issue which seems to have bogged down in the 17 months since the federal election.

I consulted with the Table Officers today concerning the specifics of the motion, anticipating that we might have to seek another amendment. However, I have been advised that that is not necessary.

The House Leaders are presently negotiating because of the new rules that will be debated next week. Therefore, should they decide that the subject matter of this resolution should go before another committee, they can do that by consent. That would be acceptable to our Party and I hope to all Members of the House.

However, it is with some frustration that I ask the House to allow this matter to be sent to a committee and to ensure that the matter is not talked out for a third time as it was on two previous occasions.

When this issue was raised last April and September we were assured by Members representing the Government Party that this matter was under discussion with the unions and, threfore, it would be inappropriate for a parliamentary committee to intervene at that time. I believe that excuse is becoming somewhat thin and I hope the House will take the necessary action to allow a committee to consider this matter over the course of the next few months.

I point out to my hon. friends that this matter is under very active consideration in Ontario where it has been referred to the Ontario Law Reform Commission. In fact, they have had very short notice and will be preparing a report for the Ontario Government some time in May. The Ontario Government, with the support of the NDP in the Ontario Legislature, as a result of the accord between those two Parties, has undertaken to take early action on the matter of expanding political rights for provincial public employees. The question is whether we will forever be bogged down with this issue or whether action will be taken.

Let me also point out that this is a matter of importance to those of us who represent members of the Public Service of Canada not only because of a pending election in 1988 or 1989 but because it is posing a real dilemma for employees of the Public Service of Canada. Yesterday I received a phone call from an individual who has returned to the Public Service after taking leave and is now under great pressure to abandon his activities within the riding association of a political Party. He is identified in the community as being part of that political Party because he was a candidate in an election.

There is no law stipulating that he should not be part of a riding executive between election campaigns but the pressure is there, with no clear definition of his rights and responsibilities apart from the guidelines issued by the Public Service Commission. However, the court has determined that these guidelines have no legal effect. Nevertheless, these guidelines apply in terms of disciplinary action by his employer.

Let me read into the record a specific promise which was made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he was campaigning for office in 1984. In a letter to Mr. Jack Donegani, who was then President of the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada, the Prime Minister, then Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, stated:

We believe that this matter—

The matter of political rights for federal employees:

—should be addressed by an all-Party Parliamentary Committee in consultation with public service organizations and we believe the situation can be quickly resolved. Much of the work, after all has been done as part of the D'Avignon Report, but the current Government has not demonstrated the political will necessary to implement the long overdue changes.

I do not always agree with the Prime Minister, but with regard to what he said to the Professional Institute in August, 1984, I am entirely in agreement. The former Liberal Government lacked the political will. The reform in terms of granting political rights to Public Service employees is long overdue. While Members from different sides of the House may have somewhat different ideas about exactly what should occur—I believe there is harmony—its consideration is surely long overdue.

I have been proposing that this matter go before a parliamentary committee since last April so that the issue could get on the rails rather than being side-tracked as appears to have been the case due to other priorities of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and the Government.

As the Prime Minister indicated a couple of years ago, the matter can be quickly resolved if there is the political will to do so. It is up to Members of the House to demonstrate that we have the political will to act. This question has long been a priority of the unions representing federal Public Service employees and they have indicated their support for quick parliamentary action on political rights.

I am somewhat disappointed that the Conservative Government has failed in its efforts to fulfil promises to Public Service unions so far. However, this is not a costly issue and involves a categorical promise made by the Government. For that reason I suggest we can send this question to a committee and allow it to come back with a report and recommendations that would expedite this matter.

Members are aware that there is a group of Public Service employees who are taking this issue to court in April. I have some association with that case but, frankly, I would prefer to see the matter settled by Parliament before going through such court procedures. I believe this matter can be decided in Parliament.

I also point out that the Equality Now report issued by a committee of this House gave a clear recommendation in favour of giving political rights to public employees. Members will recall that the committee considered representations from myself, the Public Service Alliance and others. Let me quote from the Equality Now report under the heading "Political Rights of Public Servants". It reads:

All Canadian citizens have the right to take part in the political process of their country. Freedom of expression and freedom of association are enshrined in section 2 of the Charter. The democratic right to vote and to serve as a candidate in provincial and federal elections is also recognized in section 3 of the Charter. The law does recognize a number of legitimate restrictions on these broadly state rights. Concern was expressed in several submissions to the Committee about the limitations on the political rights of federal public servants.

Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act forbids public servants from "working for, on behalf of or against" a political party or candidate for election to the House of Commons or a provincial or territorial legislature. Federal public servants subject to the Act are also barred from being candidates in such elections unless they obtain a leave of absence from the Public Service Commission. The participation of public servants in the political process is limited to voting, contributing funds to a political party or candidate and attending meetings. If a public servant engages in activities prohibited under Section 32, he or she can be dismissed by the Public Service Commission upon inquiry after a complaint is made by a candidate or former candidate for election.

This has been said many times. It is significant that, despite the fact that that law has been on the books for almost 20 years, no such complaint has, in fact, ever been launched with the Public Service Commission. In other words, we and our predecessor Members and all those men and women who ran as candidates have never ourselves been offended by the participation of federal public employees in election campaigns. As the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) and my other colleague from the Ottawa area know, I do think a few federal employees have taken part in campaigns.

The Equality Now subcommittee report goes on to state:

While we believe that the political neutrality of the public service must be preserved as a general principle, it seems to us that the rights of public servants are, at least in certain circumstances, unduly curtailed. The prohibition against campaigning, soliciting funds and assuming official functions with a political party applies to all public servants, even to those whose job classifications are such that no suspicion of conflict of interest or breach of trust might arise from the exercise of such political rights.

Again, that echoes some comments made in the D'Avignon Report which tried to draw the distinction between the 4,000 or 5,000 senior members of the Public Service who clearly exercise policy making or policy development functions on the one hand and, on the other hand, a large number of people who work as nurses, draftspeople, truck drivers, et cetera who clearly are not in a position to influence policy, were they to indulge in apparently partisan activities.

The recommendation of the Equality Rights Subcommittee reads:

We recommend that Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act be amended to ensure that no greater limitations are imposed on the political rights of public servants than are necessary to maintain a politically neutral public service.

I would have liked to have seen a little stronger recommendation, but nonetheless I think that is a challenge put out to the rest of us in this House by the Equality Rights Subcommittee. I think it is something on which we are in a position to act in view of the promise made by the Prime Minister.

Just what does that mean? The Equality Rights Subcommittee had to look at a vast range of other matters as well. It dealt with political rights only in one paragraph or two and in that one recommendation. I believe this is a matter which affects 250,000 federal public employees. Indirectly it affects some 600,000 people working for Governments at different levels across Canada. I do believe it is important for the Government of Canada to try to give a lead.

I will conclude my remarks so that other Members can have a chance to contribute to the debate. Since September 4, 1984, we have heard more about political rights for federal employees in this House than I think we had in a century before that. This has been good, the matter has been ventilated, and it is being raised. Now I believe it is time for all of us in all three Parties to implement the commitment that our Parties gave in the 1984 election, which was to take action on political rights so that before the 1988 election, hopefully sooner than that, federal employees can have the kind of rights that I think would be in the spirit of the report of the Equality Rights Subcommittee, of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and of what most other democratic jurisdictions give to their Public Service employees, that is, with very narrow restrictions, that civil servants can be treated like any other citizens of this country when it comes to political rights.

I urge my colleagues on all sides of the House to support the amendment and then to send this out to a Commons committee for a report by the end of June, 1986.

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity on behalf of my constituents in Nepean-

Carleton to rise this afternoon and offer some comments on the amendments before the House to the motion moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), respecting political rights of public servants.

I think we should congratulate my colleague from Ottawa Centre on his interest in extending the political rights of public servants. He has been an advocate of it while a member of the provincial legislature in the Province of Ontario, and an advocate of it in a very aggressive and thoughtful way since he has taken his seat in this House. He was particularly involved with the matter during the 1984 election campaign.

I think we should take note that the Hon. Member represents the federal riding of Ottawa Centre. This House should be cognizant of the fact that his predecessor from that riding was in many ways instrumental in delaying legislation relative to the extension of the political rights of public servants during the course of the previous Parliament.

I think every Government, regardless of its political stripe, requires at its side a strong Public Service, a competent Public Service, a contemporary and willing Public Service and one that is loyal.

The Public Service I know is that kind of Public Service. The people who work in the Department of Energy Mines and Resources, the Department of Agriculture, the National Research Council, and the Department of Communications are the ones with whom I am familiar in more detail, but that group of men and women are world class. I am sure the expertise they have can be found in all of the Departments across the Public Service.

I need to acknowledge, in all fairness, that during the 1984 election campaign, the political rights of public servants was widely discussed in my own riding. I was disappointed, to be fair about it, when a lot of my close personal friends, people who were neighbours, people who had worked with me in municipal campaigns earlier, were unable to become involved in my federal nomination or in my federal election campaign. In a way, they became political eunuchs. Much of the threatening aspect to them was derived from a communication issued in February, 1984, over the signature of Edgar Gallant and two other commissioners from the Public Service Commission who gave their interpretation of Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act. I found that Mr. Gallant and his commissioners' interpretation of that section was an enormously conservative interpretation of the guidelines. I think it forced in the 1984 election a large number of public servants, who might well have qualified under Section 32 to participate in some way in the political process, to withdraw from it. Because of that, the concern over Section 32 and the limitation on political rights of public servants was therefore highlighted.

What did our Party say about political rights? In many respects the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre correctly quoted the attitude of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in his communications about political rights. The Progressive Conservative Party, in responding to the professional institute, as was noted earlier, indicated that it favoured a general removal of the restrictions on political activities, especially for those public servants covered by collective agreements. These restrictions are unnecessary and may not be justifiable under the terms of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. There are probably some senior public servants whose job responsibilities are very political in nature and whose rights should be somewhat restricted to prevent conflict of interest, but we are confident that these people could be covered separately, without disenfranchising over 200,000 public servants in the process.

You know, Mr. Speaker, where the Prime Minister and my Party stand on this particular issue. I personally favour in style that recommendations which were put forward in the D'Avignon Report. It is a concept which is fairly widely used in the British House of Commons and in the British Parliament, where public servants are in fact tiered. For example, there is a tier of persons who have total political freedoms and an upper tier of those who do not. In between there is a tier of people whose political activities can be structured in the framework to varying degrees. The system seems to work reasonably well. We should look at that model very carefully. There is one aspect about it which I find attractive. It is that the public servant knows, when he accepts a certain class of employment within the Public Service, what political rights he has at the time of engagement. There might be some difficulty in the initial moments, but I am sure that sort of thing can be phased in without a great deal of difficulty.

The issue of the right of public servants to participate in political activities has been with us for a long time. With the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, we, as defenders of the rights of the individual, will have to make a decision quickly on the political rights of those who provide counsel to the Government. At issue is the fundamental relationship of the Canadian political system, with Parliament at its core, to the federal Public Service.

Canadians have a tradition going back many generations of being able to approach public servants without having to consider their political affiliation, or that of the public servant with whom they deal, and how it might make a difference in their treatment. I am proud of that tradition, as I think are all Canadians. In that regard we have set a world standard. I hold our Public Service in the same high standard as observers from foreign lands who have seen and studied the systems and operations both here and in other countries. For those individuals working in the Public Service, the present situation offers them perhaps the best career opportunities in Canada, where advancement is based firmly on the principle of merit, not on whom one knows, not on one's political connections, not on buying one's way to the top with influence or wealth. Canada has stubbornly rejected the American system of "across the board" high-level purges and firings when a new administration is voted into office. The Canadian Public Service has been impartial and, equally important, has been seen to be impartial since Confederation. A very notable thing happened in 1984 when in this country we had a democratic revolution. There was no political purge of the Public Service. I hope all Canadians and all Members of the House take note of that.

The very creation of a management category in the federal Public Service is predicated upon the goal of encouraging professionalism, merit and impartiality in the category of senior managers charged with effectively delivering needed Government programs to Canadians in all regions of the country. That falls into two parts—the creation of policy or offering policy alternatives to be decided upon by persons in the House and then, once decided upon, their delivery across the nation.

A great deal of energy and expense has gone into honing the skills of these fine and capable men and women, the majority of whom, from my experience, are genuinely instilled with a desire to be of true public service. Are we to clean shop every time a new Government is elected? What a waste. Nevertheless, a Public Service with certain political rights and freedoms is clearly an idea whose time has come. Which of the many issues in today's complex and whirlwind society that profoundly affect Canadians has not sorely tempted all Canadian citizens, including those who might happen to work in the federal Public Service, to voice their opinions to friends, to co-workers, to editors of newspapers, to their clergy and, perhaps more important, to their Members of Parliament? When is this hypothetical public servant about whom I speak to be considered as criticizing his or her employer on any of these issues? When does freedom of expression become political activity? By responding to a heartfelt emotion and appearing in a peace march? By reacting with honest emotion and concern over the shooting of a police officer and writing to a Member of Parliament about reinstating capital punishment? Which of today's pressing issues does not touch, at least in some way, the mandate of one of the hundreds of federal Government Departments, programs or agencies?

Surely it is obvious that a case can be made that almost any issue one cares to name falls in some way under federal jurisdiction. Common sense tells us that the issue of political rights of public servants is far more encompassing and pervasive than just the freedom to criticize politically the "employer". Have we really sounded out the views of public servants in an adequate fashion? Has the consultative process been complete? Do we fully understand whether public servants want to be involved and want to have total political rights?

In any case, the matter warrants serious examination. It should be studied, ideally it seems to me, in a respected and existing forum in which representatives of both the employer and employees can air their views constructively, suggest and discuss approaches, and arrive at a mutually agreeable course of action for consideration by the House.

Another reason that the time has come for the granting of certain specific political rights and privileges to public servants is that there is a great deal of intellect, expertise and ability to be found in the ranks of public servants. My constituents, many of them people of logic, compassion and talent, of all political stripes, make this Chamber the worthy institution that is it. The federal Public Service, from my experience, has a large share of that kind of person. The Public Service is a great resource to the country, not just as a large employer. In it can be found men and women of great distinction who work in many cases far harder than many people in the private sector. It is a shame not to be making better use of this resource. We have sitting Members in the House who are veterinarians, pharmacists, lawyers, chartered accountants, why not public servants? Certain constituencies, particularly around the National Capital Region, are assured of having residing in their midst future Mike Pearsons or John Diefenbakers with a great contribution to make to their country. Not just individual ridings, but the Parliament of Canada would be better served if these people could be brought into this House by the voters to share their gifts and participate in the free political process as all Canadians can.

The Government has every hope that this will soon be a reality and that the basic provisions contained in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms can be realized by as many public servants as possible. However, if we work hard enough and are smart enough, with adequate consultation with affected parties, which has been an overriding principle of this Government since it has been elected, the final result should be a Bill of enduring value and a real credit to all Members of this House. Only then should a fully thought-out piece of legislation be presented for debate and consideration, with all clauses having been thoroughly thought through in their scope and in their immediate and long-term implications, and without political impartiality entering into it.

I welcome the opportunity to share with the House some of my thoughts on the issue of political rights for public servants, on the need for this Parliament to provide public servants with much needed access to the political process, so they are not political eunuchs in the future. I very much hope that in the days ahead all of my colleagues will be able, in a unanimous fashion, to endorse legislation that will extend the political rights of public servants over and beyond what they now enjoy. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to take part in this debate and to comment briefly on the motion of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), concerning the right of public employees to full political participation.

I listened to the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Tupper) who started by saying that it was not a matter for political partisanship, and that for a number of members from the National Capital Region, it was quite obvious that there were Liberals and Conservatives and New Democrats among public employees.

During the last twenty-five or thirty years, all Members from the National Capital Region have been trying to find some way for federal public employees, who are in the majority in the National Capital Region, to be free of any constraint on their political liberties and stop being second-class citizens.

Mr. Speaker, for years we have been hearing speeches and a lot of well-meaning phrases in the House, full of a desire to give public employees the right to take part in certain political activities.

We saw the split that occurred within the Public Service Commission in 1979, during the Quebec referendum, when we were unable to determine whether a referendum did or did not constitute a political activity.

Public employees were sent ambiguous messages, just as they were in February 1984 before the last general election.

Mr. Speaker, we should stop these well-meaning speeches and we say, now that we have the opportunity, that this Bill or rather this motion should be referred to committee. And why not? In committee, studies can be made, witnesses heard and just about anything can be done, to find a solution that will give public employees the same privileges as all other residents of the National Capital Region and across Canada. I refer specifically to the National Capital Region because that is where we probably have the largest number of public employees.

Mr. Speaker, the best thing to do, now that everyone has been praising our hon. friend from Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), saying what a marvelous motion this is... My hon. friend from Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Tupper), who underscored the words of my colleague from Ottawa Centre on the motion before the House, well, I suggest that if everyone is agreeable—and I think everyone is, because just about everybody said the same thing about this motion—I suggest that we ask for the unanimous consent of the House to refer this motion immediately, without further debate, to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, for consideration.

So, I suggest we stop all this mutual admiration, and if everyone is agreed, I think we should act on my suggestion.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore suggest that you ask the unanimous consent of the House to refer immediately the motion by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre to committee, for consideration.

[English]

Mr. McDermid: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate?

Mr. McDermid: On a point of order. I know that there are a number of people on our side who wish to address this issue and I feel that they must be given the opportunity to speak.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will recognize Hon. Members for debate if Members rise.

Ms. Copps: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. There was a request for unanimous consent and I did not hear any nays. I heard one Member ask on a point of order and everyone else said yea—

Mr. Dick: You're not in Ontario now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair saw the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) stand up on debate, so the Chair presumes there is no unanimous consent. On debate, the Hon. Member for Red Deer.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, although much debate has already centred on this important issue of political rights for public servants, once again this question surfaces in the House. The term public servant is self-defining. They are people entrusted with the responsibility of serving Canadians in an impartial and non-partisan manner. Public servants are responsible for advising the Government on matters and issues which affect the lives of every Canadian. This responsibility has, up to this day, taken precedence over the individual rights of public servants in the area of politics. They are also responsible for the application of policies and programs set forth by the Government. This requires the provision of non-partisan and unbiased advice to Ministers on matters which must be dealt with by the Government. In the spirit of the British parliamentary tradition, the Government, and indeed the Public Service, have accepted the fact that certain restrictions be imposed on their rights as public servants to engage in various forms of political activity.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Order, please.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) on a point of order.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Members are not allowed to read from a prepared text. We are here to express our own views.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will allow the Hon. Member to proceed.

Mr. Towers: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McDermid: Just ignore Miss Wonderful!

Mr. Towers: I have been around this House a lot longer than the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). I think she still has a little something to learn.

Mr. McDermid: That's right.

Mr. Towers: Anyway, Mr. Speaker, the basic premise behind the principle of neutrality is one of trust, a trust that the Public Service has earned from both the Government and the Canadian public. It has earned the trust from the Government because of a reputation for offering advice that is untainted by partisan or political bias. This tradition goes back to the beginning of this century when laws were enacted to guarantee the neutrality of the Public Service. They were passed to ensure that it would not be used as a political tool by Governments and that Public Service positions would not be filled through patronage to further the cause of one political Party.

I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on Private Members' Hour on behalf of myself, because that is what Private Members' hour is all about. It allows Members of Parliament to bring forth issues that are of importance to them. While we are extending the rights and privileges to public servants, there is one thing that must not be overlooked, and this has to do with an experience I personally had during the last federal election. A chief executive officer of one of the unions was a candidate for the constituency of Red Deer. He was funded partially by union dues. This was not fair to the members of that union because they had no choice as to whether or not they should pay their dues. They had to pay those dues in order to hold down their jobs. Of course, those dues or a portion of them went to support a candidate that was not of their choice.

When we are talking about political freedoms for the Public Service, I think we are going to have to take a serious look at that aspect of the matter. If the members of the union to which I was referring had paid dues of their own free will, I would not have any problem with this. However, they did not have any choice. They were forced to pay those dues and, as all Hon. Members know, those dues are quite substantial in a great many cases. When they are used for political purposes against the wishes of the union members to support a candidate not of their choice, I consider that to be an injustice and on of the things at which we must look when talking about giving civil servants freedoms.

Canadians expect as a right to be served in an impartial manner without consideration of their political beliefs or opinions. That right is a fact under the present regulations which ensure the political neutrality of the Public Service. The trust Canadians have in the Public Service extends to the Government, and it is conceivable that should citizens lose their confidence in the impartiality and neutrality of the Public Service, they may well lose their confidence in the Government.

The concept of neutrality extends to public servants themselves. Current regulations ensure that their careers and advancement are dictated by the merit principle. They are guaranteed protection from unfair or arbitrary dismissal or capricious career decisions due to political beliefs. This protection permits them to accomplish their responsibilities free from the fear that they may be subject to reprisals from new political leaders.

The last few years have brought a great many changes to the perceptions of individual rights and the balance between the rights and regulations governing the political rights of public servants. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees freedom of expression and of association for all Canadians, and that includes public servants. However, reasonable limitations must remain to ensure the impartiality and maintain the integrity of the Public Service. These limitations are required particularly in respect of those who are responsible for advising or counselling the Government on policy matters.

In examining the rights of public servants, we must not lose sight of the basic principle which I stated earlier, it being the trust that exists between the Canadian public and the Public Service. Whatever direction is finally decided upon must ensure that the confidence that has been developed be maintained and whatever trust exists between the Ministers and the Public Service must be protected to guarantee the impartiality of Government actions and programs.

I propose to the House that it would be unwise to proceed with the proposed Bill since it is the Government's firm intention to come to an understanding with the unions that would satisfy all parties and would deal with the aspect of this matter to which I referred a moment ago. I am sure all Hon. Members would agree that a solution should be arrived at that is mutually satisfactory.

In conclusion, let me reiterate that this Party has always believed that the best way to solve important issues facing the Government is to discuss them with the interested parties and to seek a mutually satisfactory agreement that this issue should be resolved in this manner. I know that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Cadieux), has something he wishes to put before you at this time, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, as a private Member and as a representative of my Party, I would like to support the private Member's Bill put forward by the NDP Member on this particular issue. I think the Government has been confronted with a challenge at this point in time. Either it can support the private Member's Bill by agreeing to give it unanimous consent to move to committee or it can stonewall it. We see quite clearly that it is its intention to stonewall it by having Government Members speak until we reach the time at which a vote would be prevented from taking place.

For those Hon. Members who still do not know the rules, if in fact the debate on this issue ceases before five o'clock, there will be a vote on it and we will know where the Government stands on this issue. We do not know where the Government stands on this issue at the moment. Government Members are attempting to obfuscate the issue by talking the Bill out until five o'clock. It being 14 minutes to five, we are prepared to waive any future comment on this particular motion because we would like to seek the unanimous consent of the House to have the Bill moved forward into committee. Again, we seek the unanimous consent of the House to do so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have such consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There being no unanimous consent, I recognize the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Cadieux).

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Cadieux (Vaudreuil): As a Member of Parliament, I too have the right to speak on Bills introduced in the House. Whether we are dealing with private Members' Bills or Government Bills, Mr. Speaker, I think I have the right to take the floor, and I would be grateful if my colleague would give me a break, considering that sometimes she seems to take that privilege for granted. Members on the other side often say that we never speak but when we do rise they say we should not speak. They will have to make up their mind one of these days, Mr. Speaker, and let us give our views on any legislative measure, whether private Bills from the NDP Members or from the Official Liberal Opposition. We are entitled to express our views and we intend to take part in the debate. Again I would point out to my colleague, whom we can hear from practically anywhere in the House whether her microphone is on or off, that even though I am a new Member in the House more private Members' Bills have been adopted in the last 15 months than in the 16 years under the previous administration. So, Mr. Speaker, we have made great progress in parliamentary reform, and if indeed Hon. Members want to be logical and if we want to have . . .

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Could we have order and allow the Hon. Member to make his speech, please.

Mr. Cadieux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is not easy to speak out when the Hon. Member is here, but I will try, in spite of her efforts to prevent the House and the Canadian public from hearing, to make my views known so that we may have the opinion of everybody about this important Bill. People, whether or not they belong to the Public Service, have basic rights which should be respected, but I believe we should look into the issue before accepting anything blindly as some would have us. Perhaps I should refer to my notes so that I won't put my foot in it. I shall continue by saying that the issue of political rights for civil servants deserves to be seriously and thoroughly examined. As a matter of fact, it is an issue which is raised each time there is an election, whether on the federal, provincial or municipal level. Thus a good many of us during the last election campaign, had to discuss the matter with our constituents to determine under what circumstances public servants could actively take part in the political process and when they should refrain from doing so.

There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the Public Service should remain neutral as far as politics are concerned. If not, its credibility in the eyes of the Canadian public which it is called upon to serve would be jeopardized. Moreover, the Public Service Employment Act now in effect is there to ensure a certain degree of neutrality during election campaigns by restricting political activities of public servants. Thus the Act provides as follows and I quote:

> No employee shall
> (a) engage in work for, on behalf of or against a candidate . . . or engage in work for, on behalf of or against a political party;

However, this legislation provides that an employee does not contravene the legislation when he attends a political meeting or contributes to a candidate's fund. Moreover, public servants can stand as candidates to an election provided that they have previously obtained leave without pay for such a purpose.

Clearly, in the discharge of his responsibilities a Deputy Minister has to avoid any political partisanship. This is self-evident, Mr. Speaker, and of course there must be neutrality if operations are not to become very difficult, whatever the Government or the official concerned. To the same extent, various other officials must be absolutely neutral as regards Government policy. Indeed, when the Public Service Commission considers an application for leave submitted by any official wishing to be a candidate in an election, it takes into account the employee's group and level, to preclude any doubt in the public's mind as to the possibility of the official involved being in a conflict of interest situation.

Such a neutrality, which has been a tradition ever since the turn of the century and accepted as a rule, is viewed by some people as contrary to the basic principle of the rights and freedoms of public servants. An increasing number of people seem to share that view, especially since 1982, when the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms was proclaimed. The Charter guarantees freedom of expression and, I believe, even for Members of Parliament, the freedom of thought, belief and opinion for all Canadians, and of course federal civil servants for that matter.

We should therefore look at the nature and scope of the limitations imposed upon civil servants in the area of freedom of expression and association. Perhaps we should even question the concept that they do not enjoy the freedom of speech in matters political and that they must seriously restrain their activities in that area.

Any restriction to the rights as enshrined in the Charter must be justifiable. Any change made to the provisions dealing with federal civil servants must both be in line with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and take heed of the concept of political neutrality in the Public Service. Any scrutiny of the matter of the right civil servants have to take part in political life must keep a fair balance between the rights of civil servants in light of the Charter on the one hand, and the neutrality of the Public Service on the other.

To the extent that we can safeguard the impartiality of the Public Service, the Government shares the view that the restrictions now in force concerning political activities of public servants should be mitigated. However, caution should be exercized in that respect, because it would be unacceptable,

Mr. Speaker, to jeopardize the neutrality of the Public Service. This would involve reconsidering the concept of a permanent public service operating on the merit principle, a public service capable of serving the Government of the day with great objectivity and in line with the best interests of the Canadian people. Some questions remain—for instance, would a highly politically involved public servant still be in a position to provide the Government with his best advice? Could he remain objective and impartial? Would that same public servant be protected against arbitrary decisions that might affect his career? Could he be guaranteed that his promotions would be based on the merit principle?

Would he be protected against an unjustified discharge? It seems difficult to believe so, Mr. Speaker.

The Federal public servant knows that his future does not depend on the political party in power. He knows that the merit principle gives him some security. He has some means of redress as concerns decisions which affect his career. Perhaps because of these reasons, he may not wish to question the principle of his exclusion from the political scene, but is this a reason to refuse this right to the entire Public Service?

In any case, any examination of the neutrality of the Public Service and the right of public servants to take part in political activities will have to be made in consultation with the unions and will have to take into account public opinion on the matter.

Mr. Speaker, the Government is convinced that a proper balance can be reached in this area. Moreover, the Government will do everything possible to attain this balance.

Notwithstanding, Mr. Speaker, the numerous interventions of my colleague who had the possibility of speaking a few moments ago when you recognized her and decided to sit down—

Ms. Copps: Kill the Bill. You've got four more minutes to kill it.

Mr. Cadieux: I intend to use—

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Keep quiet, cry baby.

Mr. Speaker, I must protest. Will we have to listen to personal references until 5 o'clock and waste our time in this way?

We are discussing a serious subject and the Hon. Member should leave if she is not interested.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the intervention of my colleague for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) and I hope that she will continue to defend me, but with your permission and notwithstanding the unwarranted interference of the Hon. Member who seems to preach the right to speak in this House, but who is always preventing others from saying what they wish without any partisan interruption, I propose to use the time allotted to me today, Mr. Speaker, and if necessary, I shall continue on Monday, if I have unanimous consent.

As I was trying to say earlier, and I shall try once more, perhaps the population—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Cassidy: I regret the fact that it appears the Bill will be talked out. However, I certainly would appeal to Hon. Members on all sides to work within their caucuses, particularly the government caucus, to ensure that next time we can in fact bring this to a vote.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, that is not a point of order.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order I would like to reiterate that if these Hon. Members are in fact speaking from their heart, and in their opinion—

An Hon. Member: That's not a point of order.

Ms. Copps: —why is it that they are all reading from prepared texts—

An Hon. Member: That's not a point of order.

Ms. Copps: Because they intend to kill the Bill.

An Hon. Member: That's not a point of order.

Ms. Copps: Why don't they just tell the truth?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Ms. Copps: Why don't they just tell the truth Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Copps: —that they want to kill the Bill?

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order! Please stay calm. There are only two minutes left. Let us keep calm. The Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Cadieux) has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Cadieux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope I will get my last two minutes because I think I am entitled to speak when I want to speak as a private Member in this House. I believe I am a Member of this House still and I intend to be here for a hell of a long time.

An Hon. Member: That's right.

Mr. Cadieux: And I am going to use every occasion I have to speak on Bills whether or not it pleases my colleagues opposite.

Ms. Copps: A Government lackey, killing the Bill.

Mr. Cadieux: Seriously, Mr. Speaker, because I do believe we are here—

Ms. Copps: A Government lackey.

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is abusing my rights as a Member of this House. I wish you would help us. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East is denying us our rights.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Cadieux) but the hour set aside for Private Members' business has now expired.

It being five o'clock this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

EXCISE TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and do pass.

She said: Mr. Speaker, this Bill is an important part of the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in May 1985. It contains substantial amendments to the Excise Tax Act aimed at improving tax fairness, and it proposes changes in the application and rate of federal sales tax in order to increase revenue and thus reduce the deficit. The Bill is a clear reflection of the Government's resolve to achieve the Budget's goals of economic renewal while maintaining tax fairness.

During consideration of the Bill by the Legislative Committee, a number of concerns were voiced regarding the fairness of some of the proposals, especially with respect to the new dividing line between taxable and exempt products. This is an important matter and I would like to take this opportunity to elaborate.

The Committee received representations from a number of sectors affected by the proposals contained in this Bill. Manufacturers of candy and confectionery products expressed their doubts about the decision to repeal the sales tax exemption on their products. They argued that candy and confectionery products should continue to be exempt from sales tax on the same basis as other food products. They suggested that a broader range of snacks be made taxable at a reduced rate. Manufacturers of soft bars appeared before the Committee to express their opposition to the proposal by the candy and confectionery products manufacturers, and their support for the line drawn by the Government between taxable and exempt food products.

Committee members expressed concern about the proposals aimed at restricting the exemption on health products to prescription drugs, products for diabetics and drugs required for the treatment of illnesses that pose a health risk, appearing on a list drawn up by the federal Government. Present exemption rules have given rise to numerous disputes between the Government and taxpayers regarding proper application of the tax. An increasing number of tax exemptions have been granted in this sector as well, which means that many products which are only indirectly connected with health protection are eligible for the exemption. The Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada appeared before the Committee to propose a number of changes in the budgetary proposals so as to include several major drugs which for purely technical reasons are not eligible for an exemption. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has already promised to review the list from time to time and, if necessary, to add new drugs to the list of tax exempt products.

Representatives from the construction industry expressed their opposition to the repeal of the special exemption formerly allowed on prefabricated construction materials. The prefab concrete and structural steel sectors suggested that instead of paying tax on the sale price, they should be allowed to pay tax on only 60 per cent of the price. However, this proposal would perpetuate many of the problems in drawing the line between exempt and non-exempt products in this sector and would substantially reduce Government revenues. For these reasons, the Government did not accede to the industry's requests. The proposals contained in this Bill guarantee fair taxation of construction materials, since all construction materials are now taxable on the sale price just like other manufactured products.

The Canadian Bar Association proposed a number of changes in the Bill to clarify certain technical provisions and improve others which, in the opinion of the Association, do not achieve the degree of fairness intended. Many of these proposals were adopted by the Committee and are included in the Bill before the House today.

The Government is very pleased with the efforts of these and other groups who made representations and appeared before the Legislative Committee to express their views, and it is most grateful.

While all the representations did not lead to amendments to the Bill, the process has been most helpful. The Members and the people who made representations concerning the provisions in the Bill can be assured that their views will be considered extensively and taken into account whenever further changes to those acts are contemplated.

The tax measures included in last May's budget are aimed at controlling the deficit and more efficiently managing our public affairs so we may reap and maintain the benefits of the economic growth we are now enjoying. Our policies designed to control the deficit and better manage public affairs are part of a comprehensive package for meeting a wide range of economic and financial needs.

The deficit affects and threatens each and every one of us. The burden of deficit control measures must be shared in the broadest possible way, if we are to obtain the desired results. The purpose of the Bill now before us is to help us attain that goal through a broad and fair distribution of tax increases.

The principle of fairness also prevails throughout the extensive system of assessment, opposition and appeal procedures introduced in the legislation. Until now, the Excise Tax Act had no provisions for the assessment of sales and excise taxes, and taxpayers had only limited access to an independent appeal process in cases of litigations. The Bill implements an assessment and appeals system similar to that in the Income Tax system.

Where a taxpayer is not satisfied with his assessment or the handling of an application for refund, he will have access to a well-established process ranging from informal discussions with Revenue Canada officials to court hearings. The new system also protects taxpayers from the collection of disputed amounts until there has been a court decision.

The Bill should also be viewed in the light of other budget proposals announced by the Minister of Finance. Tax increases are combined with reductions in public expenditures that amounted to nearly 75 per cent of the deficit reduction effort in 1985-86, the other 20 per cent provided by tax increases. The impact of tax increases on the economy is mitigated by tax reductions, the freeze on unemployment insurance premiums, the injection into the economy of RHOSP funds, and the important proposals to stimulate private initiative and productive investments in the economy. This Government has openly asked a wide range of taxpayers to shoulder their fair share. Overall, expenditure reductions and tax changes are an important and a fair way to restore this country's financial position.

All Canadians will benefit from the achievement of our goals.

● (1110)

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to make only brief comments on the Bill before us, but since the Minister has rightly pointed out that the Bill must be viewed in a broader context, and since the Minister made her remarks in a fairly broad context, I trust that I will be allowed to do so for just a few minutes.

The Government claims that it wants to reduce the deficit, but what is happening in the Budget as a whole? The Budget does away with tax on the oil multinationals so that by 1990 the Government will forgo $8.5 billion. The Budget does away with tax on capital gains. As a result of this measure, by 1990 the Government will forgo nearly $5 billion in favour of the 4 per cent of the population which can benefit from this measure. At the same time, low and middle-income families and individuals are told to tighten their belts because they must do their share in bringing down the deficit.

The Government considers that it can afford $875 million to bail out uninsured bank depositors. It considers that it can afford tax rulings which may result in billions in of forgone revenue. However, when it comes to families with incomes of $15,000 or $20,000 the Government cannot afford to keep indexing family allowances. The Government thinks it can activate the economy by taking money away from those who have less, the low and middle-income Canadians, and giving it to the wealthy.

I will now turn directly to the provisions of Bill C-80. The avalanche of taxes in this Bill will have a severe dampening effect on the economy. There is no disputing that the broadening of the sales tax base and the tax increases will extract billions of dollars from the domestic economy putting inflationary pressure on the economy and dampening consumer demand. The Government's line has been that it is fair because it hits everyone. The Minister's speech this morning made much of fairness and equity. However, it is plain to see that tax increases and new taxes on items such as health care products hit first and hardest at those on fixed incomes and those earning low and middle incomes. This is not fair. It has been amply demonstrated that this barrage of tax increases cannot be justified economically or on the basis of fairness. It is impossible to understand how a Government that took an unprecedented nine months to bring in its first Budget could have brought in measures so unsound and unfair.

This is not to say that Canadians are not prepared to help get the deficit under control. Of course, all Canadians are concerned about the deficit and about the amount of money that goes out to service the national debt which rose primarily during the time of recession. Of course, since the economy is becoming healthier, this is the logical time to move on the deficit, but not in this way.

What are Canadians to make of a Government that rushes to bail out a bank and the bank's uninsured depositors, and then tells blind people that they must pay sales tax on the food for their seeing-eye dogs in order to get the deficit under control? What deficit reduction will there be when the Government forgoes billions of dollars through tax rulings, bailouts, and so on? The $2 billion to be taxed out of consumers' hands through this measure this year may just about cover the cost of the bank fiasco. What possible justification does the Government have for unmercifully squeezing low and middle-income Canadians on the pretext that they must share in the task of getting our fiscal house in order?

We have addressed the specific measures in this Bill at report stage and there is no need to repeat the arguments which were made then. However, I should point out that all the amendments put forward were voted down solidly by the Government. This morning the Minister sounded a little sympathetic to the case put forward by the confectionary manufacturers, although she did not say that they should necessarily be excused from sales tax.

What they have pointed out is that it was difficult for them to have to absorb the tax on the goods they had prepackaged for their peak sales times, Hallowe'en and Christmas. A delay in the imposition of the sales tax would have been greatly appreciated by that industry, but the Government was intransigent.

The Minister seemed to imply this morning that the proposals which concern the construction industry might be looked at in the future. In the meantime, however, we will find many small construction firms in real difficulty. In the construction sector, fixed price contracts are common and those who found themselves suddenly hit with large additional sales taxes have had to absorb them and the amounts are considerable, perhaps enough to put some people out of business. Those industries have also asked for a grandfather clause which would delay the imposition of these sales taxes for those who have contracts without escalator clauses. The Government refused to give even this small relief. I know that some Hon. Members opposite have written to the Minister asking that this hardship on the construction industry be corrected in the next Budget, so we must hope that perhaps the Government may be listening a little harder in the next few months than it has.

With respect to the whole question of the transportation industry, the additional taxes will certainly make it very hard for it to be competitive with U.S. competitors. The taxes on energy conservation and alternative energy are hitting a very vital and relatively new industry which has come into existence in the last 10 years. It employs about 5,000 people, I believe, and has developed interesting new technologies and opportunities to export, but the Government has removed all incentives from that industry as well as created additional hardships, all in the interest of supporting the oil and gas sector. The Minister did mention this morning that the Government has relented somewhat on the sales tax on health products and we may see some further consideration there. But this is too little, too late. The Bill before us proposes additional sales tax on a wide number of commonly used items. It is a measure which hits particularly at families and those of low and middle incomes. It is harsh, unfair and regressive. It is something of which the Government cannot be proud. This is not the way to fight the deficit. We must only hope that in the upcoming Budget some of the worst excesses of this Bill will be corrected.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am also quite honoured to have an opportunity to say a few words on this last day of debate on Bill C-80, An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. I would like to preface my remarks by suggesting that the numbers of families which are defined by Statistics Canada as having a family income which places them below the poverty line are actually increasing month by month and have been for some time. The same statistics tell us that those people who, I suppose, we could call the "super rich" or "extremely wealthy" are also expanding while the group of middle income earners is shrinking by the week and by the month. Fundamentally, this particular Bill which flows out of the last Budget introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will make the system even more discriminatory against the middle income earner and the poor of Canada.

I think it is instructive to see Bill C-80 in the following light. What we are discussing here today is a Bill which will impose a whole new range of taxes on everyone, rich, middle and low income earners alike. In other words, when we buy a bottle of aspirin or some other similar non-prescription drug, if we purchase some pop for our children or some pet food, if we fill up our gas tank, or buy a new shirt, a refrigerator, or a teapot, we all pay the same level of tax. You and I both know, Mr. Speaker, that some people will not even notice the additional few percentage points added to their bill. Others, of course, will. A difference of $2, $3 or $15 makes a real difference to more and more families, especially those families which find themselves living below the poverty line as defined by our own Statistics Canada.

If we examine the provisions of the Bill before us and the other Bills already dealt with in the last few weeks, we find the average Canadian family will now have to pay about $1,000 more in federal taxes, in charges of one kind or another, as a result of this Bill and the two previous Bills. In 1986, the average Canadian family will have nearly $1,000 plucked from their purses, wallets and pocketbooks for the federal Government to use as it sees fit. Allegedly, this is for assistance in reducing the deficit, and I say "allegedly", and I will come back to that point in a few moments.

Some of my colleagues and I have been touring the country on what we call "Tax Probe '86". It is an effort to probe into the tax system and covers sales tax, excise tax of one kind or another, personal tax and corporate tax. We have talked to specialists, tax advisers, lawyers and accountants and those groups which are involved with taxation, whether it be the forest industry, mining industry, construction industry or the trucking industry.

Some very interesting points have emerged. For example, when we suggest to people that their taxes related to the federal Government's activities will result in about a $1,000 increase in their taxes in 1985 and 1986, most people do not know that. I suspect that very few people actually know what is going to happen to them as a result of the taxes. They tell me they find it hard to believe so I break it down for them.

First, we make the assumption of a family of four, with one wage earner bringing home about $35,000. This is an above average family, the middle income earner, the people who once again are being grabbed for more and more taxes. When we eliminate the federal tax reduction that family loses $100 off the top. That, by the way, will be another $100 next year, but for 1986 the elimination of the federal tax reduction will cost a family $100 in money they do not have. The modification to the cost-of-the-living indexing will cost $115. The cut in family allowance, which is another Bill, will cost $22.50. The broadening of the sales tax will cost about $150. That deserves some comment. Sales tax is the most regressive kind of tax to impose because it hits everyone equally. Those whose income is $1,000 a month and those whose income is $15,000 a month all pay the same sales tax on goods they purchase. That will cost this family an extra $150. Not only has the tax gone up, but it has been broadened to take in a whole number of commodities which hitherto had not been subject to the sales tax imposition.

You might ask what some of the those items are, Mr. Speaker. They include cough syrup, vitamins, aspirins and cold remedies of one kind or another. It is now the middle of winter. How many people here do not know at least somebody who has a cold? Probably half the Members in this House are hacking and sneezing with colds. It is part of the Canadian life, almost, unfortunately. Everybody has to buy cold remedies of one kind or another, but now for the first time these remedies are to be taxed at 11 per cent. Then we have medicated shampoos, surgical gloves, sutures and certain kinds of surgical equipment. This is a federal tax on sick folks, people with bronchial and other problems who need non-prescription drugs. In a country that prides itself in having one of the finest medicare systems in the world, to be taxing people now at 11 per cent for cold remedies and the like seems to be a very regressive step.

What about the increase in gasoline tax? This will amount to an additional $50 in tax in 1986 for a family. A lot has been said about the increase in gasoline tax, but I noticed with some interest that the Canadian Trucking Association said that it will create inflation increases in certian parts of Canada and that it was really a subtle tax on distance. People who live in the more remote areas of the west, the east and the north will feel the gasoline tax more than others. This tax is very discriminatory. The increase in oil and gas prices will amount to about $200.

An increase in the sales tax generally will result in $150 more per household, an increase in unemployment insurance premiums will amount to $102 per household and an increase in cigarette and alcohol tax, assuming people have a few glasses of wine or perhaps the odd sip of this or that during the year, will amount to about $75, making a total tax increase of $964.50, to say nothing of a whole host of other costs. For example, increased user fees in our federal parks and increased ferry charges. One can go on and on with all kinds of newly imposed costs.

On the one hand the Government says, we have real concerns about the deficit and so we are going to introduce a set of new taxes and increase a set of other taxes that are the most regressive. These taxes will have a significant impact on people who can least afford to pay, namely, the poor, those on fixed incomes like the elderly, people of limited means, all those unemployed and those who have part-time work. The people really struggling to make a go of it today are the ones who will be most adversely affected by these impositions. But not everybody will receive the same imposition, Mr. Speaker. Let us be very clear about that.

At the same time the Minister of Finance was introducing these additional taxes on middle and low-income Canadians, he was also introducing a major income tax break. He is going to remove all the taxes completely for those people able to obtain some or all of their income from capital gains. A person receiving income from capitl gains will be able to receive income of up to half a million dollars and pay no tax whatsoever. Do you not find that to be rather peculiar? On the one hand for deficit reasons—that is the excuse—we have to impose taxes on dog food and on candy bars, taxes that will affect families. Yet on the other hand we are going to give a tax exemption to people who obtain their income from capital gains, up to the accumulated value of income of half a million dollars.

Mr. King: With the exception of farmers.

Mr. Riis: With the exception of farmers. I am glad my friend, the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King) reminded me, because there is confusion. We are quite prepared to entertain the notion of a capital gains excemption up to a particular limit, maybe that limit is $300,000, maybe it is $500,000 for farmers, who can use it as a retirement package.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What about the small businessmen?

Mr. Riis: And for selected small family businesses as well. But I do not understand why Hon. Members have not stood in their places and condemned this capital gains exemption which can be used for manipulating the stock market in the U.S. For for selling off land and race horses in Arizona. I have not heard anything from these folks, Mr. Speaker. If criticism is thrown my way, I ask Members to permit me to say something in response.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Great article in the Herald.

Mr. Riis: I am glad my friend reminded me of the retirement option for farmers. The Government feels there is another group that needs some assistance in retirement, people whose incomes are about $90,000 a year. The Government has said these folks need help; if you are making only $90,000 a year, we have to give you some incentive to save for your retirement.

The Government in this instance is lifting the limits on the registered retirement savings plans. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, as a wise man, if a person is making $85,000 or $90,000 a year does that person need a tax incentive to encourage him or her to save for retirement? I suspect with an income of that level you could probably take care of yourself using the normal channels and opportunities available. This measure will cost the Government money, make no mistake about it. When you give tax breaks to people who have incomes up to $90,000 a year to encourage them to save for their retirement, it will cost tens, perhaps hundreds of millions of dollars in lost revenue.

If the Government is concerned about the deficit and wants to impose special new taxes on aspirins and cough medicines and hit certain aspects of the construction industry for the first time in some years, I do not see why we should be making exemptions and special deals for some other people.

Let us look at the construction industry. Good grief, I remember time and time again one of the points made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he was on the campaign trail. He said that one of the critical industries of any country is its construction industry. It is an industry that builds, creates new structures, homes, apartments, shops and offices. By building and creating that new landscape, the industry hires a lot of people. It is labour intensive and requires all sorts of outlets for manufacturing products for use in those new facilities such as chairs, windows, furnishings and construction material of one kind or another. To encourage the construction industry is a great way not only to create construction jobs, but to create all kinds of other jobs because of the spin-off effect in a variety of other areas.

I remember the Prime Minister saying that one of the ways is to reduce the sales tax on construction material, such a critical area in a country that is trying to expand its economic base. I remember him saying that reducing the sales tax on construction material would be one small thing the federal Government could do. I thought that was a good idea, and I think many people across the country thought that the idea of the Prime Minister to be was a good one. I suspect that most people in the construction industry went out and voted Conservative because they thought it was a good idea to reduce the sales tax on construction material. That industry and those people who listened to those comments were betrayed, because the minute the Minister of Finance had the opportunity to do so, did he reduce the sales tax on construction material? No, he did not. Of all things, he increased it. He said, let us now make it tougher to build in this country; let us impose a new charge on the construction industry so that everyone who builds houses, factories, plants and buildings will be charged more taxes by the federal Government". How on earth will that help anyone? What kind of a signal does that send to the construction industry?

We have committees so that Bills, such as Bill C-80, can be referred to them where we can bring in the advisors and experts to say what will happen as a result of the provisions of the Bill in the construction industry, the soft drink industry, and the dog food and cat food industry. We did that. We said we would co-operate as opposition Members and get the Bill into the committee system as quickly as possible, to hear from those folk who are most knowledgeable about the effects of those provisions. We heard some very interesting things.

We heard from the construction industry that it would cause irreparable damage and set the industry back. As a matter of fact, the Canadian Institute of Steel Construction claimed that it would lose 300 jobs right off the top. The Canadian Prestressed Concrete Institute estimated that 160 jobs would be lost right off the top because there would be much less activity in building projects. The pet manufacturers indicated that there would be a loss of some 400 jobs, and confectionary manufacturers indicated that up to 1,000 jobs would be lost immediately. Group after group appeared before the committee and said, let us understand one thing; we will lose jobs.

Let me refer to the pet food industry in particular. Thousands of blind Canadians require seeing eye dogs. If the Government is to be totally heartless and impose a new tax on Spot's or Rover's dog food, it should at least exempt seeing eye dogs so that disabled people who require them will not be penalized for having to use and to feed such dogs. Did the people hear that? No, Sir. The Government is to impose a tax on seeing eye dogs. I hear Hon. Members chuckling. I do not believe—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The tax is on the food, not on the dog.

Mr. Riis: The tax is on the food, but if one does not feed the dog, one is in trouble. Essentially the Government is saying to those people who rely upon seeing eye dogs that that dog food will be taxed and their lives will be made even tougher. What kind of a Government would say that? Perhaps we will hear some explanations later. The Minister forgot to give them in her speech, so perhaps others will make some comments later.

I should like to refer to the alternate energy industry which involves a number of things from windmills to encouraging people to use solar energy and so on. I do not want to put words into the Government's mouth, but I guess it realized the progressive nature of the alternative energy industry. It indicated that there was a need to develop wind, solar, tidal and other alternative forms of energy, but that it would not happen now, and it imposed a new tax on those folk which made it even less competitive and tougher to develop an alternate energy industry. Essentially that is what the Government has done. It imposed an 11 per cent tax in May and an additional 1 per cent in January on the alternate energy business.

I should like to refer to the comments of one person who appeared before the committee. He had the following to say about the decision of the Department of Finance to tax the energy conservation industry:

> I do not think they really knew what this industry was all about. When we queried them they were unfamiliar with what photovoltaics was and asked us if we could please describe what microhydro was.

In other words, the Department of Finance was levying taxes without even knowing what it was levying taxes on. That is not the kind of sophistication we would expect from a Government in 1986. That is why we sent it to committee for fine tuning. Did any government Members pay one iota of attention to these points when they were made? Apparently not.

Perhaps this becomes a little repetitive after a while. We point out time and time again how every group which appeared before the special committee looking into this matter said: "No, no, no; it is inappropriate, improper, and you promised you would not do it".

In closing let me simply say that it seems very hypocritical to be passing Bill C-80 which imposes a set of very regressive taxes that will have a major impact on low and middle-income earners, when at the same time the Government is giving tax breaks to those whose incomes are derived from capital gains—and they are a very small percentage of the taxpayers of the country—and other breaks to large corporations and some very wealthy individuals. Therein lies the agenda of the present Government.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to mention first that the lapel button I am wearing is a reminder that all Canadians are invited to participate in Winterlude activities now taking place in the national capital. In addition, before commenting briefly on Bill C-80, I urge all my House colleagues to go skating on the canal, admire the outstanding work done by 400 volunteers, and enjoy the entertainment offered in the capital where they should feel right at home.

Mr. Speaker, the House is now on third reading of Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill is yet another indication to Canadians that there is no co-operation between the private sector and the Government, and that the necessary information is lacking. As well it demonstrates quite clearly that recommendations from the industry and Members of the Opposition cut no ice with this Government: the Bill has been before the House for some time now, yet it was reported practically unchanged since it was first introduced on October 18, 1985.

Mr. Speaker, the Government spent the last election campaign wooing Canadian electors and promising them everything under the sun. It kept repeating that the Government would listen to them and promised an open and responsible administration. Promises galore, Mr. Speaker.

Bill C-80 is a rather timely reminder that those promises have not been honoured. The Government did not listen to what the industry had to say. It did not listen to what Hon. Members have been repeating on second reading, in committee, and even today on third reading. No, the Government did not listen, and as a result we have an altogether regressive measure which will put an additional tax burden on the backs of certain Canadians.

It has been said before, Mr. Speaker, and the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) just raised the point that the Government has been anxious to look after the oil multinationals, for example, by lowering taxes to the tune of $8.5 billion.

[English]

It is interesting to note that the Budget does away with capital gains of up to $500,000 per Canadian. At the same time, lower-income families and individuals are told to tighten their belts because they must do their share to bring down the deficit. On top of that, we had the Olympia and York advance ruling which gave it substantial sums of money. Let us total all these give-aways to bank depositors who were uninsured, to multinationals, to Olympia and York and to many others. I think I said at second reading that there is a list that goes on and on and on. That sum of money—$16 billion was given away by this Government to these banks, the oil companies, Olympia and York—adds up to exactly what they are taxing Canadians with in Bill C-80 until 1990.

• (1150)

In other words, if you took the paper that was made public after the last Budget, and you totalled the amount of money given to the oil companies, to the multinationals, given to the banks' depositors, which were uninsured, plus several others I have named, you would come up with about the same amount of money.

That is very strange action from a Government which said it would listen, be responsive, and act to protect the interests of all Canadians.

[Translation]

Apparently, Mr. Speaker, we have not yet seen the last of the Conservative Government's regressive measures. There will be higher excise taxes on gas, more taxes on alcoholic beverages, tobacco products, wines, telecommunication programming services, an additional sales tax on a number of building and prefabricated materials, taxes on equipment and building materials used for energy conservation, taxes on candies and soft drinks. Yet such taxes will not apply to certain products widely described as snack foods, so I would predict that when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) introduces his Budget in a few days he will be telling us he has found a new formula, a new solution and that, as Ontario has done, he will slap a tax on everything called fast food. There might even be a rationale for that, but he will tax some but no others such as chips and pretzels. I have the complete list here pretzels, potato chips—

[English]

What about pretzels, granola bars, nuts and many other things? It is felt not by me, Mr. Speaker, but by the industry itself that they are being discriminated against. Now the Government, and we hear from its branches—I guess they have leaked it—is going to think about putting an over-all tax on all snack food. We will wait and see. I have the Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) say, "No way, no way". We will see. You will have your chance to get up after my speech and ask me a question. I am telling you now that I am predicting that this Government will tax pretzels, granola bars and nuts, and will tax all these other things because it creates an enlarged source of income and an enlarged source of taxes.

[Translation]

Whe we go through the list of all the costs resulting from policies put forward by this Conservative Government, Mr.

Speaker, we realize that the tax break granted multinationals will cost $8.5 billion by 1990. That is 8.5 thousand million dollars, which is a lot of money. Where will all this money go? It will go back into the pockets of multinationals.

Someone referred earlier to the capital grains tax exemption. I will refer to it myself because I feel that it should at the very least be applied only to Canadians who invest in Canada or make gains in Canada, but not elsewhere. I feel it is quite reasonable to tell the Minister: You should seriously consider this request whereby if you make in Canada a profit of some $500,000, there will be no capital gains tax. However, make sure that this profit is made in Canada, not in Florida, Mexico or in other countries where there might be sound reasons to invest. If people invest in those countries, however, they are taking a risk and are paying these countries taxes. In my opinion, they should not benefit from a tax break in Canada to invest in other countries. The money should be invested here.

There are still 1,300,000 unemployed in Canada, Mr. Speaker. Our first concern and duty is to these 1,300,000 Canadians who should, could and want absolutely to work.

It is a financial disaster, Mr. Speaker, and it will cost at least $1 billion, and I have even been told that it could even cost $2 billion. The Algoma deal will cost $200 million. The advance ruling for the Gulf-O&Y purchase, $16 billion. This adds up to $16 billion, Mr. Speaker. I say it again because this is exactly how much the Government will collect with Bill C-80 in four years. I find this a strange coincidence.

Not only are the figures similar, but it seems to me completely unfair that taxes be collected from Canadians to fill the pockets of our wealthy friends and those who need it the least.

Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government misled the Canadian public during the electoral campaign. The Government had promised to listen and to be sensitive to the needs of Canadians. This promise has not been kept.

Mr. Speaker, we shall not vote for a Bill which will increase the burden on Canadians. We shall not support a Bill which restricts purchasing power. We shall not vote for a Bill which, once more, taxes those who are not as well-off, these who are disadvantaged. We shall not vote for a Bill which overtaxes Canadians to pay for the mistakes of this Government, which is acting completely irresponsibly in its dealings with the multinationals and the large banks.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I believe that the House would benefit from listening to what the Canadian public is saying. I think that I am reflecting the views of the public, at least in my constituency, when I say that Canadians have had enough of regressive taxes such as these. That is why I rise today, because it is time to think about the disadvantaged, about those who cannot defend themselves, and it is time for us to be sensitive to their needs and to give them the opportunities they deserve.

[English]

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, what I find offensive about this Bill—as we know from second reading and also from the report stage—is that, in addition to those things that have been raised by colleagues on this side of the House, it does do two things to the environment that are profoundly disappointing and objectionable. The first one is that the taxes recommended in this Bill will discourage energy conservation, a new and important economic component, and particularly as that affects renewable resources.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that in the seventies, as a result of the oil prices rising in a very short period of time, as a nation we decided to turn to renewable sources of energy and to energy conservation as an important way of reducing our dependence on imported oil, as well as reducing our dependence on non-renewable resources, such as oil and gas. You will recall that in that decade the then Government of Canada launched a variety of initiatives to encourage the formation and the expansion of solar, wind and biomass oriented industries with substantial investments by way of programs aimed at the entrepreneurs who would want to take advantage of it, I believe between 1977 and onward. As a result, thre are now in Canada some 450 companies that did not exist 10 years ago actively engaged in the manufacturing, sale and export of equipment related to the use of solar and wind energy and related to the use of solar and wind energy and related renewable sources of energy. That activity, which was made possible because of the creative spirit of many Canadians, has also created some 5,000 jobs.

As if this had not happened, Bill C-80 contains a measure which imposes a new tax on parts and components of the renewable energy industry. It is an imposition that will slow down the expansion of that sector and will affect therefore the creation of jobs. It sends out the wrong signals, because the measure has been interpreted by the members of the association of the solar energy society as being a lack of interest on the part of the Government in renewable sources of energy.

I find it hard to believe that a Government would want to shift to non-renewable resources, as Bill C-80 is implying this Government wants to do. After what was done in the 1970s regarding conservation and renewable energy, it is wrong to give out this message in the mid-1980s when everyone who is engaged in the oil industry is telling us that perhaps four or five years from now prices will rise again. This measure is not only offensive, it does not make sense in terms of the long-term energy interests of our nation.

That is one of my reasons for rising to express my views on Bill C-80. Contained in this Bill is a tax measure that will discourage energy conservation. However, that is only one of the environmental implications of this Bill that must be put on the table for discussion today. The other one is one about which I spoke at the time of second reading of this Bill.

It became evident to me at second reading that we were being asked to endorse and support a tax measure that would impose lower taxes on leaded gasoline and higher taxes on unleaded gasoline. When one purchases unleaded gasoline, one is purchasing a gasoline that is cleaner and more desirable in an environmental sense, because it does not contain a high content of lead and it does not emit substances that find their way into the atmosphere and return to the surface in the form of acid rain. However, when purchasing gasoline we see that there is a difference in price between leaded and unleaded gasoline of some three cents. The unleaded is more expensive. The tax measure introduced by Bill C-80 will make this price gap between the two gasolines even larger.

This increased difference in price will encourage consumers to do two things. First, consumers will be encouraged to engage more frequently in misfuelling, something which the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) quite rightly has criticized, and about which he has expressed himself on more than one occasion by encouraging provinces to introduce legislation that would make it more difficult to misfuel. However, there has been a lack of communication in the Government. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is disregarding the publicly stated objective of the Minister of the Environment by introducing a tax that disregards entirely what the Minister of the Environment has said. The Minister of the Environment has said that we should have gasoline prices at the pump that will not encourage misfuelling and the Minister of Finance has come forward with a proposal that will have the opposite effect.

The second consequence of the gasoline tax measure introduced by Bill C-80 is that people who purchase cars will be looking for cars that consume leaded gasoline rather than unleaded gasoline. Therefore, the sale of leaded gasoline consuming cars will increase and that will result in increased emissions into the environment of lead, something which we all know is a substance that damages the health of humans, and particularly of children. It has been found by a number of scientific studies that lead has a negative and long-term effect on the learning and thinking capabilities of children. As a result of that aspect of it, this measure will also have health implications in the long term, and the Government does not seem to be concerned about that at all.

There are two voices emerging from this so-called Progressive Conservative Government which, regarding environmental matters, is neither progressive nor conservative. The voice of the Minister of the Environment indicates that there should not be any misfuelling and that we should shift our consumption to gasoline that does not contain lead. The other voice which is evidenced by Bill C-80 is proposing the opposite of what any environmentalist or person concerned with health would propose in this day and age.

You may ask, Mr. Speaker, how we may change this and whether or not it has been changed elsewhere. Yes, it can be done and there are nations that have already introduced, by way of changes in their gasoline taxation systems, unleaded gasoline prices which are the same as leaded gasoline prices, and there are nations that are in the process of devising this new system. Once again and for the third time, I must bring this fact to the attention of the Government and call on the Government to get going in this respect by readjusting the tax structure so as to enable Canadians to find leaded and unleaded gasoline at the same price. The revenue of the state will not be affected or reduced in this way. What will happen is that there will be a shift in the weight of existing taxes, a relief in the taxes imposed on unleaded gasoline and an increase in the taxes imposed on leaded gasoline. Of course, it is possible for someone to detect a flaw and say you can't do that because evidently and inevitably the farmers and the fishermen will be affected. This is a case which we have to recognize in practical terms. In that case we will have to devise a program whereby farmers and fishermen will be refunded the amount they pay additionally on leaded gasoline as a result of these changes in the tax structure presently being imposed on the two types of gasoline. This is the way in which a modern nation has to work.

We have all made speeches on the subject of health and the environment. We have all acknowledged and accepted the reality that lead in gasoline is an element which has long-term negative effects on the health of human beings. We have made commitments to the environment in 1,000 different ways; but when the opportunity arises the political will is missing. Bill C-80 is an example of this. When will the Government show the political will which is needed to practice what it preaches?

We all know that Bill C-80 will move to the Senate after we have dealt with it here. If the Government really wishes to practice what it preaches, then it can make the necessary changes as the Bill progresses through the Senate. We raised the matter in the House in November at second reading stage. As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, because you patiently listened to me on the subject, we also raised the issue last week. Your Honour now has to undergo that torture once again. I apologize to you for the frequency and the repetition of the same theme, but I cannot help it. That is the nature of the Bill before us.

If Hon. Members sense me getting a bit hot under the collar and a bit impatient, then they are right. I cannot understand why this point is not taken into account by the Government when it comes to the taxation system. It could correct a situation which is undesirable, namely, the fact that the spread between the price of leaded and unleaded gasoline at the pump is increasing. The spread was 2.5 cents some seven or eight months ago; it is now three cents. Once Bill C-80 is enacted the spread will increase. Therefore, consumers will be given an additional incentive to either misfuel their cars or purchase cars which use leaded gasoline. If this should happen then we will lose the ground which we gained so gradually during the 1970s and the early 1980s. Thus, Hon. Members will not be surprised if one gets up to express these concerns with respect to Bill C-80 from an environmental point of view. I think I have done it succinctly enough, both with respect to the tax which is being proposed on renewable energy equipment and with respect to the proposed tax on gasoline. I hope that someone is listening and that remedial action will be taken.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). He may have dealt with this point in his speech already. However, he has made an eloquent plea for continuing the present exemptions for solar energy equipment. I would now like him to answer a question which some people may wish to ask. If the Government is right and after a few months the lower international price of oil will be reflected in lower domestic prices for gasoline, and presumably fuel oil for home heating, then why is solar energy and renewable energy as important in that scenario as it was a few years ago? As the Hon. Member will recall because of the Iranian oil crisis and so on, world oil prices were sky-rocketing a few years ago. Perhaps the Hon. Member can clarify that point, one which may be raised by some members of the public.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) for his question which is relevant and topical. He asks why solar energy is so important in light of declining world oil prices. This is a question which could be asked on the doorsteps or in the kitchens of any home in the nation at this point in time. The conclusion in the view of most economists and oil analysts in the world today is that oil prices, while declining at the present time, will rise again at the end of the decade. The turning point being suggested by analysts is around 1989-1990. As prices rise we will benefit in the meantime if we have strengthened and expanded our capacity to draw from renewable sources of energy, in particular the sun. The radiation levels in the prairie region are phenomenal and among the highest in the world. We have a great potential to develop hot water solar heating systems, for instance. However, this potential will be slowed down and handicapped by the introduction of the taxes contained in Bill C-80. This is what we do not want to see. We want to think in the long term, just as the Government should think in the long term. We want to think of the energy requirements of the next generation. We do not live from day to day. Governments have to undertake long-term planning. The measures in Bill C-80 do not take into account any long-term planning. They just look at the present. They impose a tax which says that what has been done has been done, but we are not interested in ways of stimulating and strengthening the industries in Canada which have emerged in the last few years which have given our energy requirements a boost because we are beginning to utilize and tap renewable sources of energy.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member another brief question. Does the Hon. Member really believe that the Conservative Government will allow the Canadian consumer to obtain the full benefit of lower world oil prices? It is not implicit in some of his comments that, quite apart from the likelihood that a decade hence or in a lesser period of time, world oil prices will rise again, and even in the intervening period Canadians will not be allowed by the Government to obtain the full benefit of declining world oil prices?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that the so-called Progressive Conservative Government will do that; but thus far we have not seen any evidence of it. We have urged the Government in questions asked during Question Period to ensure that domestic prices move downward as international prices move downward. So far we have not seen any evidence of the Government doing that. However, we have kept the pressure on. We even raised the question of the role of Petro-Canada in this whole matter. We feel it has a role and a responsibility to the public to ensure that prices go down at the pump as new oil comes into the system at lower prices, that this advantage is passed on to the consumer. Unfortunately this has not happened yet.

Mr. Mantha: Mr. Speaker, can the Hon. Member comment on how, when his Government was in power, the price of gasoline jumped 80 per cent between 1980 and 1984?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quoting a percentage which applies to a time when the world price was going up. We are now talking about world prices going down. I hope he understands the difference between up and down. If he does not, then we are really in trouble.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, could the former Minister explain what there was in the NEP which guaranteed prices going down? I thought the prices were locked in and they would stay high.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I recall the NEP as one of the finest programs—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Caccia: —that we ever had in this country.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Order. You are smiling.

Mr. Caccia: I fully supported the NEP and I still regret the fact that this so-called Progressive Conservative Government has cancelled it. I think historians, when they write about the NEP—

Mr. Fennell: The biggest disaster to hit Canada.

Mr. Caccia: —in a non-partisan manner will describe it as one of the finest pages in Canada's history.

Mr. Hawkes: The biggest catastrophe.

Mr. Caccia: It permitted the regions in eastern Canada to use Canadian natural gas. Many, many Canadians benefited from the NEP in a variety of ways. It also told foreign investors that we as Canadians want to be the co-owners of our natural resources. I do not think that is a bad thing at all.

Mr. Mantha: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member say that the energy policy of the former Government caused the failure of those two banks in western Canada?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I heard that fanciful notion being raised by Ministers of this present Government. If the Hon. Member really wants to deal with the facts, he will know that the bank crisis was mainly caused by their investments in the most fanciful outlandish and exotic projects, particularly outside Canada. This generated the crisis in the banks. I do not think the Hon. Member is adding to the quality of this debate by attributing the failure of those banks to energy policy. I think he is out to lunch.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-80 is premised on the belief by this Government that the deficit is the biggest evil. That reminds me of an American comedian who, as part of his act, dresses up as a woman and calls himself Geraldine. Although she is a believer, she always blames the devil: "The devil made me do it". This Government has coined a new phrase: The deficit made me do it. The deficit made me increase taxes. The deficit made me attack senior citizens and families. However, that does not wash. Clearly the Canadian public knows it does not wash. Two separate polls, one done in the fall of 1984 and another one published this January, show that around 22 per cent of the Canadian public feel that the deficit is the most important economic problem facing the country. Yet 54 per cent said unemployment was the major problem. Canadians felt that the deficit was a problem, but the majority did not consider increasing taxes or cutting back on social services was a viable means of reducing the deficit. However, those are the two steps which this Government has taken based on the philosophy of: The deficit made me do it.

The impact this Bill has is very broad. In one way or another it hits out at almost every sector of our economy. In committee we heard that this Bill would create more unemployment. Jobs in the steel and construction industries, the prestressed concrete industry, pet food and confectionery manufacturers would be lost right across the country. As well, it is unfair because a sales tax is regressive. It does not discriminate between those who can afford and those who cannot. Because of that, and because of the dollar value of the measures proposed through this Bill, it will hit lower income people to a much greater extent than those of us who have money left over.

Let me give you some examples. In 1986 a family with an average income of less than $10,000 will pay about $128 more in taxes. For a family with an income between $30,000 and $35,000 the increase will be $352. For those making $50,000 or more the increase will be $547. However, when you look at the increase as a percentage of income, you find the numbers change and there is a greater impact on those with lesser incomes. This Bill will take 1.39 per cent of the income of the family making less than $10,000; .92 per cent of those earning between $30,000 and $35,000; and only .69 per cent for those making over $50,000. Clearly this Bill takes money from people who can least afford it.

The National Council on Welfare, in its analysis of the Budget, found that poverty has been increasing dramatically. In 1981 there were approximately 3.5 million Canadians living in poverty. However, by 1984 that number had increased to 4.4 million, or 25 per cent. If we look at the average family income of the poorest fifth of Canadian families we see there has been a reduction of approximately 11 per cent. By comparison, the richest fifth of Canadian families realized a marginal increase of .6 per cent.

As I said at the beginning, this Bill is fairly wide reaching. It is part of the over-all package which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) introduced and it will take as much as $1,000 out of the pockets of a family of four earning $35,000 a year. Let me give you these figures because they show how this Government is approaching people in this country. The list includes the elimination of federal tax reduction, $100; modification to cost of living indexing, $115; cut in the family allowance, $22.50; broadening of the sales tax, $150; gas tax increase, $50; increase in oil and gas prices, $200; increase in sales tax, $150; increase in unemployment insurance premiums, $102; and cigarette and alcohol tax increase, $75; for a total family tax increase of $964.50. I have not included the cost of having to pay for a new social insurance card if you lose yours, airport parking, rail fares, or ferry service. The list goes on and on, Mr. Speaker.

Let us look at how Bill C-80 will impact on some of the sectors. Our municipalities are, by and large, supported by the property tax payers. This is another regressive tax because it does not take into consideration the ability of people to pay, nor does it take into consideration someone who has owned their own home for 40 or 50 years and has paid for it. It is not due to anything they did that the price went up and, therefore, the market value assessment went up. They do not see why their property taxes are at a certain level. They will be given an extra burden.

The Federation of Municipalities in Canada feels that this Bill will cost municipalities collectively $200 million every year. This comes at a time when the municipalities have done some very exhaustive research into their situation and find that we need a national program worth $12 billion just to protect the existing infrastructure of roads, bridges and sewers. Instead of working to help out the municipalities, the Government is giving them an extra $200 million bill each year. That bill will trickle down to the property tax payer. When Budgets are struck this spring in municipalities across the country, that will have to be considered. It may not show up as a line item or in zero-based budgeting, but it will certainly show up in the tax bill.

Farmers in Canada who are in a position to begin to expand their operations, perhaps by building a new silo, are going to find that the cost of a silo will be up by about $4,000. Our national trucking fleets move most of our food products in the country. As a result of the change in the gas tax, which is really a distance-related tax, truckers will have to pass more and more costs through to the consumer.

Let us take a look at the 1 cent per litre tax on gasoline which will come into effect on January 1, 1987, plus the 2 cent tax per litre which came into effect September 3, 1985. What will that do? We have heard in the House over the last two weeks that world oil prices are falling extremely fast. Are Canadian gas prices falling as fast? Of course not. An industry that can respond immediately when world oil prices go up seems extremely sluggish when they go down.

My colleagues, the Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) and the Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) and I did a study in northwestern Ontario. We compared gasoline prices in northwestern Ontario with those of our neighbours to the south in Minnesota. On our side of the border a litre of gas costs anywhere from 53 cents in one of our more urban communities, to $1.80 per litre in some of the remote northern reserves. I remember the days when a gallon of gas cost much less than $1.80 in Thunder Bay. Now a litre costs $1.80 in some of those communities. A litre of gas in Minnesota, converted to Canadian funds, costs 38.4 cents to 44 cents. Clearly, Mr. Speaker, the American Government is more responsive to the change in world oil prices to ensure that its consumers get a break. In comparison, our Government is putting more taxes on.

It could be said that in some of our metropolitan communities, such as Toronto and Montreal, where there is an appropriate mix of urban transit, it perhaps makes sense to financially convince people to avail themselves of public transit. However, we do not have those options in northwestern Ontario. People who live in Atikokan do not have the option of using public transit. They no longer have rail service. If they need to get to Thunder Bay for medical assistance, for shopping, or for business, they have no choice but to drive the 120 miles each way. Northern residents all across the country are being penalized by this taxation.

I want to discuss for a moment the impact on the construction industry of the Budget and this particular Bill. The first issue I would like to discuss is the imposition of a new tax on the asphalt industry. While I disagree with the implementation of the tax per se, there is a more far-reaching concern which is an indication that the Government really did not think this through. It clearly did not know anything about the construction industry, particularly road construction.

Most of the projects which relate to asphalt are Government-induced. Whether through the federal Government in terms of airport construction, through the provincial Governments in terms of highways, or through municipal Governments in terms of roads, governments are the main purchasers of those services. Bids are not put in one month with construction starting the next. In some cases it takes as long as three years from the time a provincial government calls a tender until the asphalt is actually laid. Due to the provision of only a few months notice of the imposition of this tax, road construction firms across the country were forced to reduce, by the amount of the tax, the small profits they were making. Escalator clauses are not built into contracts for road construction projects done by provincial Governments. We have heard time and again in this House and in other houses in the country that we must have a fixed price in order to protect the taxpayers. Taxpayers will not be very well protected if a lot of these firms go out of business because their margins are very, very slim. When the decision was made to impose the tax a company which has a bona fide contract, with the time of payment for the laying of the asphalt being some time after the date of imposition, should have been allowed an exemption. It would have been only fair to take that approach rather than the heavy-handed method which the Government has applied.

The other impact on the construction industry which I would like to discuss is the changes which affect the cast-in-place versus the precast industry. There is now a different situation in existence which will bring about some real problems in that industry.

• (1240)

I would like to turn now to the very clear shift in policy by the Government of Canada away from one which, in a minor way, was beginning to promote the use of alternate forms of energy, to conserve oil and gas—

Mr. Holtmann: We started promoting jobs.

Mr. Angus: The Hon. Member says they started promoting jobs. Let me give you an example, Mr. Speaker. My riding is involved in the marketing of solar panels to provide energy for remote areas.

Mr. Holtmann: It's commercial.

Mr. Angus: It is commercial, yes, but in northwestern Ontario we have great difficulty getting hydro into a lot of our communities because the cost is very horrendous. One resort is 10 miles away from a brand new hydro-electric generating facility and it would cost in excess of $100,000 to get that hydro.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Talk to Queen's Park, your buddies at Queen's Park.

Mr. Angus: Actually, I have, but that is part of the realities. Obviously I woke up those Hon. Members, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We are getting hungry over here.

Mr. Angus: Well, they have to stay until one o'clock whether they like it or not.

To get back to my point, Mr. Speaker, an individual in my riding wants to promote Canadian manufactured solar panels. It would be Canadian workers who would build them and install and maintain them. But without the incentive of a break in the sales tax, the individual is unable to convince potential customers of the value of solar. We all know there has to be those kinds of incentives.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Poor marketing.

Mr. Angus: The Hon. Member says it is poor marketing—

Mr. Althouse: It's straight economics.

Mr. Angus: Yes, it is straight economics if we compare a diesel generating system with a solar system, with the batteries. There has to be some kind of incentive to induce people to take something which is new and innovative when all of their friends have diesels and they know how diesels work. But solar energy needs some incentive and the Government is backtracking on that. It is adding costs to insulation which conserves energy. I do not understand why the Government is taking this kind of approach when what we should be doing is opening things up in a greater way, giving greater incentives to conserve and to develop new technologies.

Mr. Holtmann: Did he get a grant to start his project?

Mr. Angus: No, he did not get a grant to start his project, Mr. Speaker, he is an entrepreneur. He is not even a school teacher. He is a forester.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Change the packaging.

Mr. Angus: The other aspect of the Bill is the increase in taxation for alcohol. That will have a very profound effect on our tourist industry. I was at a conference a week or so ago in my riding of Atikokan. A group of us from the community got together to try to develop some strategies to encourage greater use of the Quetico Park, the Atikokan wilderness area, for tourist ventures and determine how we could better accommodate visitors from other parts of Canada and our neighbours to the south. One of the impediments is that once the tourist, particularly the American tourist, comes to the sunset country travel area, stays at one of our local hotels or motels and orders a drink, they are told that a beer will cost $3. Why is the price so high?

Mr. Holtmann: Do we want to entice them over here with alcohol?

Mr. Angus: The Hon. Member asks whether I would want to entice Americans with alcohol to come here. Of course, not. But it is part of our image. If people come to Canada and perceive themselves as being gouged, whether by the Government or by the establishment, they will not come back.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): They love our beer.

Mr. Angus: Even if they might only have had one beer or one drink, quite frankly, it will leave a bad taste in their mouth.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): They want good service.

Mr. Angus: I want to thank you for listening, Mr. Speaker, and I might suggest that you might want to do something about the rabble across the way who kept interrupting me.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who has just spoken comes from an area where tourism is important. Would he not agree that the higher prices charged for so many things involved with tourism in Canada is one of the factors which discourages tourism? Would he not also agree that the sales taxes which will be imposed by Bill C-80 are going to add to this problem? I am sure he would have some insight into this because of the area he represents.

Mr. Angus: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some comments. In fact, what I would like to do is compliment the previous Conservative Government of Ontario for making the decision to exempt hotels, motels and camp grounds from the sales tax in order to encourage Canadians from other provinces and Americans to use our facilities. Very clearly, prices do have an impact, but regardless of where our dollar is in relation to the American dollar we do have some constant travellers. There are some people who will come back every five or ten years.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Expo 86 is sold out.

Mr. Angus: I grew up in the tourist industry. I know of it first hand. The gentleman opposite talks about Expo 86. If we do not change the price of gas those people will not come because they will not want to have that transportation experience.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments with regard to the remarks of the Hon. Member with respect to the deficit. He mentioned that a recent poll indicated that only 22 per cent of Canadians see the deficit as one of the severe problems facing the country, and that approximately 50 per cent of the people see unemployment as a more serious issue. I certainly agree that unemployment is the serious issue and I think that we have been addressing that issue very well.

However, perhaps he and some of the people who answered that poll do not realize that one cannot understand the deficit when no one in this country lives that way. Whether it is with respect to a small business or a household budget, no one spends way beyond what they bring home. When something in the neighbourhood of 80 cents on every tax dollar goes to pay just the interest on the deficit, surely to goodness the Hon. Member and the New Deomcratic Party must understand that we have to begin looking at something which is a little more durable and long term. I would suggest that we do have a choice. We can print more money, as the Liberal Party did over the last dozen years, or we can take the course of trying to turn it around, bringing about some economic recovery and getting more people back to work.

Mr. Holtmann: And that's what we are doing.

Mr. Ravis: What I would like to ask the Hon. Member is why is he and his Party fighting these initiatives which, just last month, brought about 129,000 jobs? That is a record in Canadian history in a month which is probably the toughest of all months in any given year to produce jobs. Why does the New Democratic Party continue to fight these positive initiatives when, really, the Canadian public is looking to all parliamentarians to work together to bring about economic recovery?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, let me try to respond to the questions put by the Hon. Member in the order he raised them. I have a mortgage on my house.

Mr. Ravis: So do I.

Mr. Angus: That mortgage means that I have contracted for a certain amount of dollars for my dwelling which I am paying off over time.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The Grits mortgaged this country.

Mr. Ravis: So I am in debt. We jokingly refer to the fact that we do not own a house, the bank does, and in my case it is the credit union. So I think the suggestion of the Hon. Member that this is unique is not quite accurate.

In speaking about job creation, the Hon. Member used a figure of $129,000. I read the article that showed almost as many jobs had been lost in that same period of time—

• (1250)

Mr. Holtmann: That is ridiculous.

Mr. Angus: While there was a net growth, it was in the range of 5,000 or 6,000 as opposed to 129,000. The Member should be careful how he uses those figures.

During hearings on Bill C-75 last week the President of the Dominion Marine Association appeared before us. We were talking about a cost recovery measure on the Seaway. He said that he would rather see the Government of Canada letting people continue to work on the lakes instead of raising fees, because when more people are working more people will be paying taxes, and that is when the deficit will come down, not before.

Mr. MacDougall: Mr. Speaker, it is marvellous to listen to Members of the New Democratic Party with their pie in the sky type of attitude. They would take the printing press and let it continue for years if they could. In their antics they try to give an impression that they have all the answers for all the people but they forget that young people will have to carry the debts for years to come.

Would the Hon. Member tell us how he plans to address the debt for his children, his grandchildren and his great grandchildren with all his pie in the sky attitude, for which the NDP is so famous?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Member was not listening to my last few comments. We believe that it is important for as many Canadians who want to have a job to have the opportunity of a job that pays a decent wage. To achieve that you do not cut programs and throw people out of work. You do not bail out banks at a billion dollars a crack. You use that money wisely as an investment. In the short term, yes, you have to have some kind of bridging with the make work programs, but at the same time you have to put in place long-term strategies that will not only train people, as the Government is trying to do, but will make sure there are jobs for them. The more people we get working, the more people will be contributing and this will create other jobs. More and more people will be paying taxes, and less people will be collecting unemployment insurance, welfare and what have you. That is our goal. That is the direction we would take as the Government of this country. We would ensure that as many people who wanted to would have an opportunity for full employment.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, let me follow up on the comment made by the Member about job creation. It is no wonder there is a lot of cynicism across the country. At a time when 129,000 permanent jobs were created in January we had the leader of the Liberal Party last week, and now a Member of the New Democratic Party saying to Canadians that these are not real jobs, that a lot of other jobs are being lost and there is a lot of part-time work. There is no feeling of support, of getting your shoulder behind the wheel. I do not understand why the Opposition cannot get behind some of our initiatives. There is no question that Canadians are crying for these jobs. The opposition Parties should be hailing the great job-creation initiatives and saying let us get on and see if we can create more.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, we would like to be behind it. We have yet to see the numbers, which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), Cabinet Members and others are presenting to us, in any documented form. We have not seen what the relationship is between full and part-time work is—

Mr. Holtmann: Open your eyes.

Mr. Angus: —and between wage levels. Nor have we seen anything in terms of a breakdown between male and female jobs. What kind of jobs are being created? The impression that we have is that they are part-time, short-term and poor paying.

Mr. Holtmann: I beg your pardon.

Mr. Angus: All the Government is doing is trying to hype up Canadians to make them believe the Government is doing something when it damn well isn't.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, we are now dealing with third reading of Bill C-80, A Bill to increase the federal sales tax in a number of different but unfair ways. This debate on third reading gives us a last chance to appeal to the Government to reconsider what it will do to the economy and to millions of individual Canadians through this measure. Through our appeal to the Government, we hope it will take another look, recognize the error of its ways and not proceed with third reading of Bill C-80.

After this Bill was presented to the House, a number of submissions were made by many groups and associations that outlined how the sales tax increases in the Bill would reduce the purchasing power of Canadians, increase costs and generally impact adversely on the competitive ability of Canadian industries as well as dampen the economy.

The Conservative Government is boasting about what has been happening in the economy over the past several months. What has been happening is simply the cumulative effect of efforts of recovery that began several years ago under the previous Liberal Government.

Mr. Kilgour: Horse feathers!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): The Conservatives are simply coasting on the beneficial effects and thrust of Liberal policies.

Some Hon. Members: Rubbish.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): People may challenge this view on my part, but I do not see how the Conservatives can logically challenge the point that there will be an adverse impact on the economy with the increases in sales tax in Bill C-80. These increases will slow down or blunt the forward movement, to the extent that there is any recovery of the economy.

Let us take a look at the increase in taxes which the Government is trying to impose on Canadians. There are tax increases on gasoline. There is the imposition of 2 cents a litre last September and 1 cent per litre in January 1987. Tax increases are imposed on many categories of construction materials, including modular homes, concrete and asphalt. We have also been discussing the tax increases imposed on equipment and construction materials used in energy conservation. This Conservative Government is even imposing sales taxes for the first time on candy, soft drinks and pet food. In spite of some partial and very limited backtracking by the Conservative Government, it is imposing in this Bill a new sales tax on a wide range of health care products.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): To pay for your bills.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): What is the effect of all of this, Mr. Speaker? Consumers will be paying $2.6 billion more in sales taxes by 1990-1991. At the same time, corporations will enjoy a $2.2 billion decrease in taxes. The capital gains tax break alone will reduce the taxes of wealthy Canadians by $1.25 million. Where is the equity?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Where is the deficit going to be?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Where is the fairness in all of this? If the Conservatives are serious about wanting to reduce the deficit, they have yet to explain why they are putting an unfair share of the burden of doing this on the backs of lower and middle-income Canadians.

Mr. Holtmann: You built the deficit on the backs of young people.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): To what the Conservatives have already been doing to increase the very deficit they say they want to decrease, there is the cost of their efforts to sustain the value of the Canadian dollar.

We in the Official Opposition have demonstrated that the measures they took last week will cost Canadian taxpayers in present value dollars close to $1 billion in interest payments, $200 million this year alone.

The Conservatives are crying crocodile tears about the deficit. On the one hand they say they have to reduce the deficit but they do not explain why they are taking all sorts of misguided measures and steps to increase that deficit. What about the $1 billion cost to the taxpayers of their botched and bungled bail-out of the two banks, the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank? What about the way they tried to rescue the dollar that went down in value because of the lack of confidence of the world economic community in the way they are managing the economy?

Last week in the House the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said that Canadians were telling him, "Thank you, Mr. Wilson, for what you have been doing to help the Canadian economy".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I challenge this Conservative Government to find one middle or lower-income Canadian who will say "Thank you, Mr. Wilson, for the burden being put on lower and middle-income Canadians by this misguided Bill C-80."

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): The Conservatives should have the courage to withdraw this Bill if they are seriously interested in helping lower and middle-income Canadians. By continuing with this Bill, the Conservatives are showing they are not interested and stand condemned in the eyes of millions of middle and lower-income Canadians.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand that there is an agreement on procedure. The Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations among the Parties, and I think there is an agreement to have the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) make a statement at this time and to have a response from each of the Parties represented in the House. The time used for this process will be Government time. We will move back Statements and Question Period to a point after these statements have been made, and they will just be extended accordingly.

Mr. Speaker: I take it there is agreement for this particular procedure.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

DISASTERS

TRAGIC RAILWAY ACCIDENT NEAR HINTON, ALTA.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness and sympathy that I rise today to report to the House on the collision between a freight train and a passenger railway train last Saturday, which tragically resulted in the loss of many lives. On behalf of the Government, and I am sure on behalf of all Members of the House and the people of Canada, I wish to extend my deepest sympathies and sincere condolences to the families of the victims of the collision. We share with them a tremendous sense of shock and grief at their loss. To those who suffered injuries, we extend our hopes and wishes for their early and complete recovery.

Over the weekend I spoke with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who has expressed his deepest personal sympathies and sorrow at this tragic event. Like all Canadians, he was horrified at learning of this tragedy. I have also been in contact with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), the Deputy Premier of Alberta, Mr. David Russell, and the Alberta Solicitor General, Ian Reid, who also extend their condolences and heartfelt thoughts to those involved.

At 8.45 a.m. on Saturday, February 8, VIA Rail train No. 4 travelling eastbound from Jasper and CNR freight train No. 413 travelling west from Edmonton collided at mile 173 of CN's Edson subdivision near Hinton, Alberta.

There were three crew members on the freight train, two at the front end and a conductor at the rear. On the basis of information currently available, the VIA passenger train carried a crew of 15, and 104 passengers had booked seats on the train. While search of the crash site and identification of bodies are still ongoing, it would appear that at least 29 people died as a result of the crash. The bodies have been taken to Hinton where a temporary morgue has been established. The injured were rushed to hospitals in Hinton and Edmonton. Uninjured survivors were also taken to Edmonton and were assisted to complete their journey.

The track in the vicinity of the crash site is among the finest in North America. At this point it does not appear to have been a contributing factor. Likewise, the weather on Saturday morning was clear and cold and does not appear to be a likely contributing factor. While the CN train was carrying a limited amount of dangerous commodities, these were not involved in the collision or the resulting fire.

The first notification of the crash was received by CN within minutes. This information was immediately relayed to Hinton emergency services and the CTC, and the emergency response begun. Fire, police and paramedical units from Hinton arrived at the crash site and began the immediate task of rescuing survivors. Their efforts were hampered by fire at the site caused by the locomotive diesel fuel, and lack of ground access. Emergency response units from Hinton and CN assisted with the removal of the injured to surrounding hospitals.

On Sunday afternoon I visited the collision site and was horrified by the destruction that had occurred. I was moved and impressed by the dedication and the expertise with which rescue operations were conducted. I wish to commend the emergency response forces, and particularly those volunteers for their tireless efforts to rescue and comfort those involved in the collision. In particular I extend my appreciation to the residents of Hinton and the people of Alberta for the humanity and generosity that they have shared with the victims and their families.

I would also like to extend our appreciation to the office of the Hon. Member for Yellowhead, in particular Mr. David Jones at Edson whose efforts were invaluable in assisting the families and friends of the victims and those injured or surviving. As well, the co-operation and assistance of the Government of Alberta and provincial officials was greatly appreciated.

The safety of our transportation system is of paramount importance to this Government. We are deeply concerned by this tragedy, and believe that every effort must be made to determine the cause at the earliest possible date. Therefore, given the tragic and extraordinary circumstances surrounding this collision, the Government has ordered a judicial inquiry to ensure that a complete and independent examination takes place. I can inform the House that Justice Rene Paul Foisy of the Court of the Queen's Bench in Alberta has been appointed under Part I of the Inquiries Act to conduct the investigation. Mr. Justice Foisy has been given broad terms of reference to enable a comprehensive examination of the causes of this collision. We have also requested that the inquiry provide specific recommendations to reduce the risk of a reoccurrence of this tragic event. Mr. Justice Foisy has been asked to report before May 30 so that the Government can have the benefit of his findings at the earliest possible opportunity.

In conducting the inquiry Mr. Justice Foisy will be able to draw on the work of the CTC accident investigators and staff who are presently conducting an extensive examination at the collision site. The CTC have five staff on site at present and another one is enroute. I have spoken to the CTC and they have assured me of their full co-operation with the inquiry. The latest information provided to me by the CTC suggests that there is evidence that the CN freight train ran through the switch joining the double-track to the single-track where the collision occurred. The switch was set for the passenger train, and the freight should have stopped on the double-track.

In conclusion, I wish to repeat again on behalf of the Prime Minister, our Government, and I trust all Members of the House, our heartfelt expressions of sympathy and compassion to the victims and families of those involved in this terrible railroad tragedy. We offer them our condolences, our sympathy and our prayers. Our Government is committed to an urgent and comprehensive inquiry into the causes and contributing factors relating to this collision. We have asked that interim measures be examined by the CTC to provide the necessary safeguards while the investigation is underway. The safety of the transportation system is a top priority and we are prepared to act on an urgent basis to respond to any safety deficiencies that can be identified.

The Canadian transportation system has a safety record amongst the best in the world. We must do all that we can to maintain and improve that record. As the Minister of Transport I commend to this House the Government's commitment to ensure that the safety of our transportation system is never diminished. We will use the full extent of our abilities and powers to safeguard the lives of Canadians.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Liberal Party and my colleagues, I would like to add to the comments made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) by expressing our regret and sorrow to the families and relatives of the victims of the tragic train crash which occurred near Hinton, Alberta. I would like also to commend the emergency response forces which are on the site for, as the Minister has said, their tireless efforts to rescue and comfort those who were involved in this collision and, indeed, the residents of Hinton must be thanked for their efforts on behalf of the victims at the moment of the accident.

I think we should recall at this time the words of Mr. Justice Samuel Grange in his report on the Mississauga train derailment. He said the following:

> A long, fast train is a profitable one; it is not necessarily a safe one. I accept, of course, that in the course of natural justice one does not normally make an order affecting another's rights or pocket book without giving that other a chance to be heard. But there may come a time, where the safety of the citizen is concerned, when the onus shifts. In such case the burden of proof may (perhaps should) fall upon him who creates the risk.

I am sure all Members of the House would support the Minister of Transport if he were to put before us an immediate program of measures designed to ensure that this type of accident is not repeated. Indeed, we have been very fortunate that in the past there have been very few fatalities, collisions and derailments. All rail companies have had, up to now, a solid safety record. However, this incident does raise a number of questions regarding the Government's record in and commitment to safety.

In transportation policy, the Government's sole crusade has been in the fields of deregulation and cost recovery. We have as yet seen no positive commitment to safety. While we on this side of the House accept this new commission of inquiry and we will indeed assure the Government that we will co-operate with it on any measures that will enhance security for passengers using all modes of transportation, we must remind the Minister that this House has yet to see the implementation of the key safety recommendations contained in Judge Lockwood's Gimli inquiry, and in particular those contained in Barnard Deschenes' marine casualty investigation in which Recommendation No. 86 deals specifically with a multimodal safety board which would have powers similar to those of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board.

The Minister of Transport spent almost half a million dollars of taxpayers' money on Mr. Hugh Horner's Rail Passenger Action Force which did not even publish a final report. The result of that task force was the reintroduction of the Superliner in June 1986 on a very heavily travelled line. Since the public has yet to see this report, the Minister must now tell us what recommendations concerning safety were raised in this report that can no longer remain secret.

Finally, we know that the Treasury Board has instructed the Minister of Transport, under Structure 90, to cut back 600 person-years this fiscal year and 1,000 person-years next year. The Minister has failed to reassure us that this will in no way jeopardize his Department's responsibility in the field of safety. Indeed, we are waiting for more concrete, positive action on the part of the Government than merely another investigation.

• (1415)

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues, I wish to join with the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) in expressing our sadness and sympathy to the families, relatives and friends of those who perished in the accident on Saturday. We also wish to express our thanks through you, Sir, to many people who are the unnamed and unknown heroes as a result of this tragedy. I speak of the volunteers in and around Hinton, the surviving members of the crew of the VIA Rail train, all of whom performed heroic duties, and fellow passengers who did the same. This tells us something about human beings rising to the occasion in order to assist one another in times of severe trial.

While there is much speculation about the cause of the accident, we welcome the announcement of the Minister of Transport with respect to establishing a judicial inquiry which will have at its disposal the expertise of CTC officials who are now carrying on an investigation. That is fine, insofar as what is shown, thought or known to be the cause of the tragedy. It is fine in this instance and we welcome such an inquiry. We also welcome the Minister's statement that he is asking the judge to make specific recommendations so that this type of occurrence will not take place again.

However, while I know that the Minister is sincere when he says that safety is paramount and of top priority, I wish to suggest that more than words are required. I know that when the Minister says it he is sincere. Becauseof this incident, but because there are incidents of one type or another every day in one or other modes of transportation—and we all know it—I would like to suggest that there have been requests for many years from many organizations and experts calling for a full, broad, independent and comprehensive inquiry, not just into the issue of safety and all that pertains to it, but with respect to the issues of security, maintenance practices, inspection, enforcement, operational procedures and the capacity to inspect. Surely, such an inquiry is long overdue. An inquiry into all aspects of the operation of an essential public utility, which also concerns all modes of transportation in our country in all the broadest areas of what is called safety, is required. I appreciate that such an inquiry will take some time.

I know that the Minister will endeavour to institute interim safeguards so that this or similar types of occurrences are much less likely to happen again. However, much more has to be done, and on a much broader scale. It will require the support of Parliament, the Minister's cabinet colleagues, and the public to carry this out in the most systematic, proper and public manner possible.

I wish to close by repeating our regrets at this terrible accident. We appreciate the efforts which have been made and the fact that the Minister himself went to the site. We know of and appreciate his concern. We know he will make every effort he can. However, and I repeat, he will require the support of every Member in this place to carry that out.

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED TREATMENT OF PRESSURE GROUPS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I would like to let this House know about the cavalier attitude, and that is putting it mildly, of some members of the Conservative Government towards immigration pressure groups.

In a document that was circulated in Cabinet, pressure groups in Montreal were referred to as a bunch of crazies. Mr. Speaker, this says a lot about the Conservative Government's claim that it is governing by consensus.

The groups were invited to express their views on reform of the refugee status recognition process. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Ms. MacDonald) went to Montreal last September to show her good faith. But, instead of examining and taking into consideration what these groups have to say, the Government seems to show nothing but scorn. I their it is pretty obvious their opinion does not seem to count for much.

And now it seems that access to the new refugee status recognition process will be very limited. Refugees who stop over in a country where they could ask for refugee status will not be able to request such status in Canada. This considerably limits the number of people who can claim refugee status, and it is certainly not in accordance with Canada's international obligations regarding the protection of refugees.

Mr. Speaker, if the Conservative Government is going to set up a refugee status recognition system that ignores the recommendations of pressure groups and the Committee that examined the question, I wonder—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

FOOD AND DRUGS

PRESCRIPTION DRUG PRICES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, today in our visitors' gallery there is a delegation from the National Council of Women, a federation of 1,500 locally federated organizations with a national membership of 750,000. Among the special concerns of this group is the Government's policy on generic drugs. They will be interested in the fact that the Government is planning to increase prescription drug prices by extending protection for a reported eight years to the multinational drug companies. This is being advocated by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté), who is supposed to advocate competition.

The Minister does not want competition despite the present generic drug law having saved Canadian consumers $211 million in 1983, as documented by the Eastman Commission in Pharmaceuticals. This Minister does not want competition despite the fact that these savings have created 3,500 jobs directly and 2,000 jobs indirectly, according to the Canadian Drug Manufacturers Association. The Minister does not want competition despite the fact that the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) moved to increase drug prices through wider imposition of the federal sales tax.

The Ontario Council of Women and other Canadians will want to know why the Minister opposes competition when it means lower drug prices and jobs. The answer is, of course, apparent. The multinational drug companies and their many lobby groups, and the U.S. Government, do not like our generic drug laws. The NDP says it is a perfectly good law which has worked well and should not be sacrificed to appease the privileged few at the expense of the vast majority of Canadians.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

DECISION NOT TO STORE PCBs AT RENOUS, N.B.

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, late last week the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LaSalle) confirmed to me that PCBs and asbestos would not be stored in bunkers at the Atlantic Institute at Renous, N.B., as had previously been announced. That may seem insignificant when compared to other events and announcements made in the House, Mr. Speaker, but in that small community hundreds of people heaved a sigh of relief.

It is not that the storage of that material would have presented a danger to their health or to the environment, because every possible precaution had been taken to ensure it would not have done so, but undue fear had been raised in the hearts and minds of these good people. The Minister, appreciating what had happened, and demonstrating the great sensitivity and concern for people which have been the hallmark of the Government, cancelled that earlier decision. Mr. Speaker, this is a Government which cares.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EMPLOYEES' WAGES—DEMAND FOR DISCLOSURE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, supposing, in my opinion correctly, that Canadians had the right to know how much they were paying their public employees, prior to 1919 the Government of Canada published the Civil Service List annually. For example, the 1916 Civil Service List reveals that Mr. Edmund Newcombe, Deputy Minister of Justice, was paid an annual salary of $10,000, and that Mr. David Gillespie, bridgekeeper on the Cornwall Canal, was paid a wage of $2 a day. It is not to be supposed, Sir, that either Mr. Newcombe or Mr. Gillespie suffered from having their emoluments made public, any more than MPs and Senators do today.

For some unknown reason the Government of the present time refuses to make known specific salaries and benefits paid to its employees. This has especially been the case with senior employees of Crown corporations. At best, a rather meaningless salary range will be given.

Taxpayers are naturally suspicious of the motives of a Government which hides, for no apparent good reason, the use of their money behind a screen of secrecy. Therefore, let us follow the eminent good sense of our forebears and let this information be known.

FISHERIES

GRANT OF COD QUOTA TO FISH PLANT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, once again we see the spectre of Frank Moores in the recent deal by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) to give $1 million in cod quotas to a company owned by Frank Moores' son-in-law, Frank Moores' former special assistant, and Ulff Snarby, of the Nordic Fishing Company, a company which last year bought access to the Government by hiring Government Consultants International, a Frank Moores company.

The Minister claims that this is all pure coincidence, but we must examine the facts. The company placed into receivership was owned by Frank Moores' cousin, another relative, and his son-in-law's father. The new company is now owned by his son-in-law, his former aide, and a company for which he is a consultant.

Does the Minister really expect us to believe there was absolutely no connection between his $1 million cod giveaway and Frank Moores, a close personal friend of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)? This fishy deal should be subjected to a parliamentary review. But then again, maybe it is just all in the Tory family.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND—GALLUP POLL FINDINGS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the House the recent Gallup poll which shows what Canadians really think about the Conservative Government's sale of de Havilland Aircraft to the Boeing company of Seattle. Only 16 per cent of the people polled support the Government's decision to sell de Havilland. Twice that number opposed the deal, and in Ontario, where the awareness of the sale is strongest, almost half of the population opposed the deal and only 17 per cent backed it.

I cite these figures, Mr. Speaker, because they support what New Democrats have been saying about the sale of de Havilland since it was announced in December. It makes no sense to dispose of de Havilland to a foreign buyer without guaranteeing the research, the jobs, or the Canadian content, and without the Government having seriously considered alternatives to a bargain basement deal.

Most of all, this poll stands as a strong condemnation of the way in which de Havilland was sold without consultation and without Parliament being able to say "no" to a bad deal. Had the Conservatives bothered to seek parliamentary approval on de Havilland, they might have found out what the New Democratic Party said all along, and what the Gallup poll now shows, that Canadians do not like this deal.

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I would like to set the record straight in connection with a statement made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) last month at his conference, when he wanted to challenge the percentage of full-time and part-time jobs created.

Mr. Speaker, 81 per cent of the jobs created since September 1984 have been full-time jobs, while 82 per cent of the jobs under the Liberal Government, between February 1980 and September 1984 were part-time jobs.

Under the conservatives, more than 58,000 full-time jobs were created in sixteen months, compared with 75,000 in fifty-five months by the Liberals.

In January alone, 129,000 new jobs were created, the highest monthly increase on record. And the Conference Board is predicting 395,000 new jobs will be created in 1986.

Mr. Speaker, youth employment has increased by 73,000 since the election, compared to a net loss of 285,000 jobs under the Liberals.

Now the unemployment figures. The unemployment rate is 9.8 per cent, compared to 11.7 per cent on election day. Youth unemployment has gone down 2.5 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, the House will recall that when the Leader of the Opposition was Minister of Finance, total unemployment figures increased by 164,000, and during the last four and one-half years the Liberals were in power, total unemployment rose by 591,000.

Mr. Speaker, let us not forget that in the last sixteen months under the Conservative Government, unemployment has gone down by 203,000.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the PC's record on employment in Canada and it is—

THE ECONOMY

SIZE OF DEFICIT—CALL FOR THREE-PRONGED ATTACK BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the accumulated past debt symbolizes a kind of mismanagement which still shakes confidence in Canada. The debt is growing faster than our economy. Our debt, as a percentage of GNP, is one of the highest in the industrialized world. Recent downward pressure on the dollar and rising interest rates, while due in part to speculation, also reflect concern about the deficit and our resolve to do something about it.

Clearly, we must renew and strengthen our determination to deal with the deficit. The course charted in the November, 1984, economic statement and the May, 1985, Budget is correct. Most individual Canadians feel that they are now taxed to the limit. I think they are right.

I, therefore, suggest that the attack on the deficit should concentrate on three broad fronts; first, by reducing Government involvement and expenditure through the elimination of waste and the discarding of programs which are non-essential; second, by re-examining some social programs to direct payments only to those who are genuinely in need; and, third, by eliminating a number of corporate and individual preferences such as grants, exemptions, subsidies, investment tax credits, excessive capital cost allowances and tax deferrals. Deficit reduction will lead to renewed confidence, more growth, even more jobs, and greater prosperity for all Canadians.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, according to reports, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), having received his advance copy of the latest report on labour information, chose subsequently to leak it to certain people in the media prior to the official release time, an action which has been qualified by the Chief Statistician of Canada as a very serious breach of protocol.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Prime Minister in quoting from the figures omitted to mention that over 1.2 million Canadians are still out of work, that some areas of our country have had an alarming increase in unemployment, and that most of his job-creation programs are based on temporary employment only, there is a more fundamental issue at stake here. It is the potential breach of trust by the Prime Minister of Canada when he releases information which is given to him in confidence prior to the official time, and does so for his own political gain.

[Translation]

The Minister responsible for Statistics Canada should take a firm stand and ensure that his department does not disclose information to the Prime Minister if he is not capable of keeping it to himself, as he should have done. The Prime Minister ought to make a public apology for his partisan and irresponsible actions that have tarnished the reputation of Statistics Canada.

CALL FOR RESTORATION OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Today and every day an ever-increasing number of Canadians ask the Prime Minister to restore Katimavik. Young and old, rural and urban, north and south, east and west, from every age and walk of life, from every part of Canada, a message is converging on Ottawa. It is directed at the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). It is: "Please restore Katimavik". The message is growing stronger. It is in English or in French and it is short and simple: "Please, Prime Minister, restore Katimavik".

Katimavik has been copied internationally and has received an award of excellence from the United Nations. The country and the people are rallying in defence of Katimavik. They say Katimavik is like a school, a school of life. We do not close a school, we do not close a university and we do not close a community college or a CEGEP, so please do not close Katimavik.

The rallying call is criss-crossing the country. Today, for example, at Toronto City Council, a motion will be put forward urging the Prime Minister to reinstate Katimavik. From other regions the same message will be making its way to Ottawa, reaching the corridors of the Prime Minister's office by way of letters, resolutions, petitions, cables, telexes and phone calls. The message is: "Please, Prime Minister, reinstate Katimavik".

RAILWAYS

TRAGIC ACCIDENT NEAR HINTON, ALTA.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Is the Minister aware that an official of his Department has indicated that the accident at Hinton, Alberta, could have been avoided? An automatic cut-out feature which brakes a train if a signal is missed would have stopped the freight train before it reached the single track. Could the Minister indicate to the House why no such feature was part of this train?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first, I am not aware of the comment to which the Hon. Member referred and, second, my understanding is that such automatic features are virtually non-existent in North American type railway systems. I repeat that this particular section of track is one of the most modern and up-to-date on the North American continent. I think I would be appropriate for me at this time to point out that the safety record of Canada's railways is among the highest in North America. CP was rated number one in 1984 and CN was rated number four.

TRACK PRIORITY FOR PASSENGER TRAINS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, the Minister was very pleased some months ago to announce the resumption of the passenger service between Jasper and Vancouver. Can the Minister tell us now what specific steps he took at the time to ensure the priority of passenger trains over freight trains, particularly on that very heavy traffic line?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that has always been the understanding and it will be enshrined, hopefully, in legislation when the new Via Rail Bill will be brought before the House, which should be within the next day or so.

JUDICIAL INQUIRY—REQUEST FOR EXPANSION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister prepared not only to launch a major inquiry into this latest tragedy but also a meaningful inquiry into safety and security standards of all transport-related activities? Can the Minister assure us that he is ready to expand this inquiry into a general inquiry into all transport activities, instead of merely having the one inquiry with respect to this incident?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question put by the Hon. Member. I think what is most important at this particular time, and I hope the Hon. Member will agree, is to try to ascertain the reasons and all of the incidents surrounding this particular disaster. I think it would be important to find out the causes of this accident at the earliest possible date. That is why we have put a fairly strict time frame on the investigation.

I think it would be most appropriate for us to carry on in that manner. In addition, the CTC and the CN are investigating, and there will be other investigations which will be taking place. On the broader question, I think it should be noted that back in 1979 there was a comprehensive inquiry into railway safety under the auspices of Justice Grange. There was also a comprehensive investigation into aviation safety, and a lot of those recommendations have, in fact, been acted upon.

Legislation is currently before the House with respect to the Canada Shipping Act which will enhance safety at sea. We are working on a national trucking safety code. We are investigating the Railway Safety Act to make changes, to update it to today's realities. So there are a lot of things which are taking place.

FISHERIES

CANCELLATION OF FISHING VESSEL ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans who, by the way, has quickly acquired a reputation for doing things in a sneaky and cagey fashion. On Friday afternoon the Minister announced the end of the Fishing Vessel Assistance Program for fishermen, and he was proud to note that the termination of the program eliminated a program identified by the United States Government as a countervailable subsidy. The Fishing Vessel Insurance Plan, ice-making assistance programs, the fisheries Improvement Loan Program and a host of other programs have also been identified on the U.S. free trade hit list. Will the Minister, in his misguided loyalty, be making more bad news late Friday afternoon announcements for fishermen?

● (1440)

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as we review the various programs and initiatives within the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, and in accordance with advice we receive from many sources, including the various advisory groups from whom I hear, as well as the work of the Deputy Prime Minister in his review of the programs, we will be making changes designed to benefit the fishermen. This will enable us to continue contributing to growth in economic opportunity and employment, so aptly demonstrated by the release of employment figures last Friday afternoon which showed that the Government is doing an outstanding job.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is auditioning for the role of Yankee Doodle Dandy, he has won it hands down.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

EFFECT ON INSHORE FISHERY IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister realize that this decision, coupled with the bank's dismal record of dealing with fishermen, will destroy the inshore fishery in Atlantic Canada and that by accident, or even worse, by design, processors will be clamouring for more factory freezer-trawler licences in order to secure raw product?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member can tell winners from losers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: In connection with this program, the Member well knows that we have at present a difficulty with some degree of over capacity in the Atlantic fishery. As well, as the announcement indicated, we have a problem with the countervail duty, which is bad news for the industry and for the constituents who send him here.

More jobs have been created in Atlantic Canada in the 16 months since this Government came into office than in the four years from 1980 to 1984. Six thousand new jobs have been created in the Member's own province in those 16 months, compared with only 2,000 jobs in the preceding four years.

SAFETY AND OPERATIONAL PROCEDURES—UNIONS' REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, earlier today I called for a full general inquiry into matters having to do with safety, security, maintenance practices, inspection enforcement, and operational procedures, in all modes of transportation.

Just recently the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees, the Metropolitan Toronto Residents Action Committee and many others have been calling for inquiries into operational procedures, safety, and inspection practices of the various modes of transportation.

In light of the bottom-line syndrome, the loosening of the regulatory regime, can the Minister assure this House that he will examine and require the railroads and other modes of transportation, airlines or whatever, to cease their cut-backs in employees in the shops, in maintenance and in inspection, as they have been doing over the past several years and are continuing to do today?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's concern. I think he should be reminded that there were two very comprehensive inquiries into transportation in Canada, namely, the Dubin Commission into aviation safety and the Grange Commission into railway safety. Many of the recommendations from those inquiries have, indeed, been acted upon.

I have today announced a judicial inquiry under the Inquiries Act to look into the specific causes of the accident that occurred last Saturday. Within the terms of reference it is clearly outlined that all persons and mechanical components involved in the operation of the two trains and the traffic control systems governing their movements will be examined.

I would suspect in a general way that that would involve the total systems to a large extent. I would think, Mr. Speaker, that our most important concern at this time is to try to ascertain the cause of the tragic accident that occurred last weekend.

SAFETY AND INSPECTION SERVICES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister assure the House, in spite of the hysteria over deficits, that there will be no cut-backs, but increases, in funding and personnel to carry out an increased capacity in his Department and in the CTC regarding safety, security, inspection and enforcement?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): The Hon. Member should know that since 1980 there has been an increase in CTC inspectors by over 30 per cent from 79 to, I believe, 109. The same thing has applied with regard to aviation inspectors. Over 600 aviation inspectors are now carrying out that work.

I should also remind the Hon. Member that just recently we approved additional air traffic controllers, which modified the A-base requirement, which was the product of the former administration. We are taking steps to correct the deficiencies that occurred under the former administration, and in that regard I hope I will have the Hon. Member's support.

FISHERIES

UNITED STATES DEFINITION OF ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Last September 12 I raised a question with the Minister for International Trade concerning the U.S. definition of 58 fishing programs in our domestic jurisdiction as being programs carrying unfair trade subsidies. The Minister replied categorically that his Government has no intention whatsoever of giving up any of these programs.

In his press release issued Friday the Minister said one of the reasons for terminating the Fishing Vessel Assistance Program is that it is part of the U.S. countervailable subsidy. Does the Minister have any other of those 58 programs on the chopping block under this fishing announcement, because of U.S. pressure?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would read carefully from the statement I made, it reads as follows:

> The Minister also noted that the termination of the Fishing Vessel Assistance Plan eliminates a program identified by the United States Government as a countervailable subsidy.

There was nothing in that statement which indicated any admission that it was a countervailable subsidy. Each of those programs to which the Hon. Member refers is being reviewed according to its merits and the extent to which it can or cannot contribute to the genuine well-being of fishermen in Atlantic Canada.

CANCELLATION OF FISHING VESSEL ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): If the Minister considered this Fishing Vessel Assistance Plan so insignificant, Mr. Speaker, why did he take time to put this in his press release, clearly broadcasting to the Americans that we are prepared to cave in to their pressure in these trade talks?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Such paranoia.

Mr. Axworthy: Why is the Minister making these statements before the decision is even made? The decision will not come down until March 18. Why is the Minister already conceding the case to the Americans?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, we are not conceding anything to the Americans.

Mr. Dingwall: Come on.

Mr. Siddon: That program, along with many others, has been reviewed by the Government for many months. The decision was consciously taken to eliminate the program for a number of reasons, the one stated by the Member not being one of them.

THE ECONOMY

RESIDENTIAL MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): My question is for the Minister of Finance. What action does the Minister of Finance propose to take now to protect the 30,000 people who will be required to renew their mortgages at much higher interest rates this month than last resulting from the Bank of Canada's actions in trying to shore up the dollar?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I responded to that question a couple of times last week.

Mr. Benjamin: You said: "Tough cookie".

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I indicated that since the Government has taken office mortgage rates are down by 2 to 2.25 percentage points. That will save the average mortgagor between $70 and $125 a month, or an over-all savings in excess of $800 a year. I think this is good progress. We are not happy that interest rates have gone up recently.

As I also indicated, this is part of a packaged approach, a combined approach, to deal with the problem of speculation in the market-place designed to stabilize the interest rates and the exchange rate, and hopefully in the future to get them down to a more reasonable level.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, there must be something wrong with the way I am asking the question. I do not seem to be able to get a response.

Let me try again. Does the Minister understand what I am saying?

Mr. Axworthy: No.

Mr. Deans: Is he prepared to take some action to protect those people who, as a result of the Bank of Canada's interest rate policy, this month are going to be faced with higher interest rates that will last at least for the next year! Is the Minister prepared to take any aciton to protect them?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that we have taken a considerable amount of action over the last 16 months to get mortgage rates down from 14.25 per cent on September 4, 1984, to the current rate of about 12 per cent. That will save the average mortgagor $122. For a three-year mortgage, it is down from 14 per cent to 11.5 per cent. That is 2.5 percentage points, and it will save the mortgagor $88 per month. Those are significant drops. We want to get them down further. That is the policy of the Government. That is the direction in which we have been going, and we will continue in that direction.

INTEREST RATES CHARGED BY CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I remember when Marc Lalonde said the same thing, as interest rates went from 15 to 16 to 17 to 18 per cent. I should like to ask the Minister a related question. What action does he propose to take to ensure that the banks and financial institutions of the country will not continue to increase their consumer lending rates, in order to protect consumers against the kind of usury which we saw in the early part of the 1980s?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, a person can lose his patience listening to this type of question. The performance of this Government has been to bring interest rates down. It is not always a one-way street. We have had some adjustments up and down. However, the net result, the over-all result which we have had since September 4, 1984, has been very, very clear. That is one of the reasons for the strength in the economy. It is one of the reasons the economy will continue to have strength. It is another reason we will have a continuation of the type of job-creation figures which were announced on Friday, where 580,000 jobs have been created since September, 1984. That is the direction in which we will continue to go.

FISHERIES

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT—WITHDRAWAL OF LOAN GUARANTEES

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries said in his release on Friday that banks provide funds for this purpose, when the Minister knew that the federal Government notified all chartered banks that it would no longer honour guarantees under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, and some of those loans date back to the late seventies. What does the Minister intend to do to assist 1,500 fishing enterprises which have had the rug pulled out from under them by the inaction of the Government?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the ludicrous aspect of all these questions is that Hon. Members opposite cannot stand to ask questions, to look success in the face, and to admit that there have been more jobs created in Atlantic Canada in the past 16 months than in the four years from 1980 to 1984 when they occupied these benches. The programs which are being changed by the Government are being changed to bring benefit to the people who elected this Government. Those people are realizing tremendous gains, as witnessed by the jobs created last month alone—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: —129,000 new jobs, an unprecedented level of job creation in Canadian history.

REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF GUARANTEES

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, there are 1,500 fishing enterprises affected in seven provinces—in the Minister's own riding, in the Prime Minister's riding, and in Newfoundland—and the Minister shrugs his shoulders. The Minister has agreement from the Official Opposition to introduce a Bill in this Chamber—and I am sure he would get it from the NDP—with no debate, to reinstate the guarantees for those loans—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question, please?

Mr. Baker: Will he do it, or does he have to check with the Pentagon?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, why on earth would the Government want to reinstate any initiative of has former Government which has proven to be such an abysmal failure?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: The Hon. Member foments only because he knows that in the last month 3,000 new jobs were created in his province alone and that the unemployment level dropped by a full percentage point. That is the success which he is afraid to admit.

Oral Questions

MINIMUM TAX—ADVICE ON AVOIDANCE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who just heard the Minister of Fisheries say that the programs being presented will protect the people who elected the Government. He will know that tax advisers are advising their clients on ways and means of beating the minimum tax. Newsletters are going out all over the country. Is the Minister of Finance aware of this and, if so, what is he doing about it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, any time there is tax change, the lawyers and accountants will try to find ways of advising their clients to minimize their liability. That is normal.

Mr. Orlikow: And they are very successful.

Mr. Deans: How about giving mortgage holders some help?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I would expect that even the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain has tried to minimize his taxes once in a while.

Mr. Deans: Always pay a little more, just in case.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member has any guidance which he can give me on how the minimum tax can be improved, I would certainly welcome his views on that.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have here a tax letter which outlines six ways to avoid the minimum tax, depending upon one's investment portfolio. My question is a simple one. Is the Minister aware that this is going on? If he is serious about having a decent minimum tax, there should be no way around it. Is he prepared to look into this matter so that the legislation which he brings forward ensures that in fact we have a real minimum tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that we have a minimum tax. It is a minimum tax which has some real bite to it.

Mr. Deans: There are six ways around it so far.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I also ask the Hon. Member to consider the record of the Government in closing off loopholes which have led to some of the problems of people paying too few taxes—the SRTCs, the scientific research tax credits which we closed; the limited partnerships which we closed; the carve-outs which we closed; the income splitting which we closed—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming a speech.

GRANTING OF COD FISHING QUOTA TO NEWFOUNDLAND COMPANY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries. Maybe he is sending a message out to the fishermen in Atlantic Canada that if they want answers they should hire Frank Moores, because he seems to be batting 100 per cent with this Government.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What is your average, Sheila?

Ms. Copps: How can the Minister justify $1 million in cod quotas to a company owned by Frank Moores' son-in-law, Frank Mores' former special assistant, and Nordic Fishing Company, a company which last year bought access to the Government by hiring Frank Moores' company?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I think we on this side would all appreciate it if Members opposite would get their facts straight before they make allegations. I was visited by a delegation of residents and elected officials from Harbour Grace in December to seek a way to have their town opened, to have their cannery restarted this spring. We found 2,000 tonnes of quota which had previously been given to the Spanish fleets, and made that available on the condition that it only be allocated to that plant and on the condition that it be reopened by whomever came forward, to satisfy the receivers who were acting on behalf of the Bank of Nova Scotia. At no time have I met any of the individuals to whom the hon. lady refers.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister who is so knowledgeable about the issue should realize that it is not a cannery. It is a fish plant in question. Since he signed the permit, I should like to ask him whether he thinks it is entirely coincidental that the previous company was owned by Frank Moores' cousin, another relative Carl, his son-in-law's father, and that the current company is now owned by the son-in-law, his former aide, and a company for which he is a consultant, yet he claims that this is absolutely coincidental—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it that was a question. I am sorry, but I did not hear the beginning of it. Is there a question?

An Hon. Member: It is a question.

Mr. Speaker: There was a question.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, if you look at the "blues", I think you will find—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it the Hon. Member asked a question.

Mr. Crosbie: It was built by Frank's father as well, you dough-head.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: Did you just wake up, John?

Ms. Copps: That is why it went into receivership.

Mr. Crosbie: A big mouth never gets anything, baby—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Don't call me "baby".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, he did it again.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Copps: The Minister of Justice called me a baby again.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Poor, thin-skinned Sheila.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This competition is clearly unfair, but I am not sure which way, with respect.

Ms. Copps: He called me baby.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: Get up on your feet and apologize.

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I remind all Ministers and all Members that language which provokes either side is not helpful.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I will comply with your ruling. I frankly do not care if Mickey Mouse owns the fish plant. The fact of the matter is 1,200 people who would otherwise be unemployed in 1986 in Harbour Grace are going back to work.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—CANADIAN WATER RESOURCES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hills): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister has stated in this House that water exports are not on the table with respect to free trade negotiations. I want to ask the Minister whether or not he is aware of the grant given by the National Research Council for a feasibility, study to the proponents of the Grand Canal water diversion? If he is, will he say whether or not he would consider the request made today by Great Lakes United and the Nishnawbe-Aski nation to have that grant rescinded?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that there has been a grant discussed by the NRC. It is not a matter within my jurisdiction. The question, I gather, was directed to me because of the continuing allegation, against all the evidence, that water is somehow involved in trade negotiations with the United States. Water is not involved in trade negotiations with the United States.

GRAND CANAL FEASIBILITY STUDY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have taken the Minister at his word; he does not have to keep saying that. I want to ask him whether the Government will consider rescinding this grant in view of the fact that it constitutes an ad hoc water policy, and may undermine the position the Minister constantly reiterates about water exports not being on the table. If this hare-brained, ecologically disastrous system is not on the table, then why fund a feasibility study of it?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, a number of feasibility studies have been made of this particular notion, not the least of which is a study which was done in the early 1960s called a "Canada-Ontario Water Study". There has been a small contract let by a regional office of the NRC in connection with the Industrial Research Assistance Program. There is no intention of Government to engage in any additional studies that are already on the table.

CRIMINAL CODE

ACQUISITION OF FIREARMS BY PERSONS CONVICTED ON GUN CHARGES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. A coroner's inquest into a recent drug raid and shooting in Metropolitan Toronto involving the Toronto Police Department and one Allan Boyarski has revealed that Mr. Boyarski had purchased two hand guns less than five months after he was convicted of illegally carrying another hand gun. Would the Minister advise the House if the Government is prepared to introduce amendments to the Criminal Code, as called for by the coroner's jury in that case, which would prevent anyone who has recently been convicted of a criminal offence involving a—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the question is clear and it is quite long.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to discuss the specific case the hon. gentleman mentions, but amendments to the firearm control provisions of the Criminal Code, including amendments to permit the revocation of a firearms acquisition certificate, have been under consideration by the Department of Justice. We are all just slightly ahead of inquiries of this type, and they are to be discussed this week in Vancouver at a meeting of the Justice Ministers and Solicitors General. The hon. gentleman's concern will be looked into then.

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In statements last week the Minister and the Prime Minister both blamed the fall of the Canadian dollar on speculators. How does the Minister reconcile that position with statements made by financial analysts that the Government wants to blame three guys in Chicago but there has been gross mismanagement of the economy?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I guess if we had better management of the economy we would not have just created 580,000 jobs; we would have created maybe a million jobs during the first 16 months. The number of jobs created in this country is easily the best record of western industrialized countries. I think the Hon. Member should be congratulating the Government on the policy formula we brought forward. The OECD, which is recognized as an objective observer of Government policy, has said quite clearly that it has no recommendations to make to this Government because it agrees fully with the policy directions we are following.

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Job creation will not be sustained if interest rates are pushed up to prop the dollar. That is what the Minister said he is going to do. Will the Minister say how high interest rates will go? How much hardship will Canadians face buying a house, or getting a job in construction, before the Government accepts the blame for the decline of the dollar and starts looking for real solutions?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Liberal Party, after the November 8 statement, said the policies that were being introduced by the Government were going to result in 200,000 lost jobs. Surely she understands that this wild rhetoric, which has absolutely no basis in fact, no basis in policy analysis, is totally off base. What is far, far more important to Canadians is to judge results, and over 1,100 jobs a day, 80 per cent of them full-time jobs, is the record on which I am proud to stand. Canadians are saying this is the right way to go.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT WISHES TO SELL CANADAIR

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Last Thursday when my leader and I met with the President of Canadair, Mr. Des Marais gave us the assurance that Canadair was in good shape in terms of jobs, orders and viability.

Considering that last Wednesday, the Minister was equally optimistic in his assessment of Canadair, I ask him: Why sell Canadair?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in replying to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre perhaps I could point out that there is, in fact, a difference in attitude between the socialist Party in this House and the Government of the day.

Mr. Orlikow: I would hope so.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, we believe that commercial activities are generally better run by the private sector than by Government. Canadair is a commercial activity that we feel should be put into the private sector, if there is a suitable buyer, and it is that end we are pursuing.

GALLUP POLL STATISTICS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, since in Ontario, where people were closest to the sale of de Havilland, they opposed the Government's decision to sell de Havilland to Boeing by a margin of 46 per cent to 17 per cent, may I then ask again why sell Canadair when it is effective, efficient, productive and competitive? Why not keep it for Canadians in public hands?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Member from Ottawa Centre I am sure unintentionally misled the House with reference to the Gallup Poll concerning de Havilland. He forgot to point out that 52 per cent of those polled said that they did not know about the deal or they had not thought about it. of those having an opinion, the Member also failed to point out that it was 53 per cent having a New Democratic preference who said the deal should not have gone through.

Mr. Speaker, finally, their allies—the near socialists—the Liberals, of those polled 43 per cent said the deal should not go through. There is clearly a difference in our attitude.

THE BUDGET

PRESENTATION ON WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 26

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I am wondering if the Minister of Finance could announce today the date of his Budget.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this occasion to say that I propose to bring down my next Budget on Wednesday, February 26.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to announce that I shall be bringing down my next Budget on February 26—

[English]

At this point may I also make one other comment, Mr. Speaker? There have been some questions about the effective time when decisions that will be announced in the Budget would be effective. I want to make it quite clear that those who are planning their affairs should make sure that they plan their affairs to allow for the effective date of the timing, being midnight the day before budget date, as it was in the May Budget. I want to make that quite clear so that people can plan their affairs and have their plans in place prior to the Budget.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

GENERAL MOTORS—ANNOUNCED TRANSFER OF JOBS FROM WINDSOR TO UNITED STATES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. As I hope he knows, last Friday General Motors of Canada confirmed that it would be transferring 1,000 jobs from its GM trim plant in Windsor to plants in the United States. Will the Minister agree to intervene immediately in order to try to prevent this transfer of jobs since this is important not only to the workers in the GM trim plant in Windsor but could also be the tip of the iceberg for the start of similar shifts of production and jobs in other GM plants from Canada to the United States?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the Hon. Member is quite aware, the dispute between the management at General Motors and the union centres on what might happen if the Canadian company is struck, with regard to the supplying of certain products to plants in the United States. I feel at this stage that it is in everyone's interest that the company and the union be allowed to work out their differences, and hopefully the diversion to which the Hon. Member has referred will not follow.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL INTERVENTION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada, and particularly the workers in question, cannot understand why the Minister will not assume his responsibilities by intervening and telling General Motors that what it is planning to do is contrary to the approach, the spririt, and perhaps even the letter of the Auto Pact, and also by telling General Motors that it cannot ask the Government to impose Canadian-content rules on Toyota and Hyundai and other Third World manufacturers while removing Canadian content from its own plants to the tune of 1,000 jobs. Why will he not assume his responsibilities and take some action on this matter?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as I have already pointed out to the Hon. Member, this is a dispute between the management of General Motors and the union and I would think at this stage that it is in everyone's interest to let them try to work out the understanding that the company feels it needs before it continues with production in Windsor.

REQUEST FOR COMBINES INVESTIGATION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. Because this is much more than a dispute between the union and the company, I have written to the Director of Combines Investigations to protest the restraint of trade practised by GM in this decision. Will the Minister join me in this request to help save these 1,000 jobs, many of which are held by women, and to try to save the exports from the plant to the United States?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): There is no need for me to join the Hon. Member. In my discussions with the union representatives, including Mr. White, and also with the company representatives, I of course encouraged that not only this plant but other plants be kept in production to ensure that General Motors can maintain its level of employment and perhaps increase that level of over 40,000 employees in Canada. We have a mutual interest. It is not a question of joining; we are well ahead.

Mr. Langdon: Speaker, it is a question of joining with respect to Combines Investigation research.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONTACT GENERAL MOTORS ON LIMITATION OF EXPORTS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): My question is: Will the Minister admit that restricting exports from this plant is against the principle of the Auto Pact, and does he intend to contact GM in this regard?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member undoubtedly knows that there has been a change of the Chief Executive Officer at General Motors Canada. I have had conversations in a general way with respect to this matter with the former president of General Motors and I look forward to meeting with the new president at an early opportunity.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HAITI—AFTERMATH OF DUVALIER OUSTER

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for either the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister of State for External Relations. Over the weekend the United States and France were involved in taking the former dictator of Haiti away from Haiti to a new country. Why would those countries become involved with such an unsavoury character? Second, what is our relationship going to be with the new regime? Finally, are we going to provide a—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Ellis: I am never going to get a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the United States can do as it sees fit in the circumstances, and it is no business of ours.

I would like to take this opportunity to give the Canadian people the assurance that the safety of Canadian citizens is not at stake. The situation seems to be getting back to normal, and at this very moment, 400 Canadians should be landing at Mirabel. I may add that this was the only aircraft able to land at and take off from Haiti.

HEALTH

USE OF ALUMINUM DUST AT NORTHERN ONTARIO MINES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the very disturbing reports which came out last week indicating that the aluminum dust procedure which was used for some 36 years to prevent lung cancer in uranium and gold miners in northern Ontario actually probably caused cancer, can the Minister confirm that this procedure, which was used by the Ontario Government for that period of time, actually took place without the approval of the Department of National Health and Welfare?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this topic was raised last Friday. We take it very seriously. I cannot answer the specific question that the Hon. Member put to me but I will get the answer for him.

The Department of Labour of the Province of Ontario has principal responsibility in this field but I have indicated that I, along with my colleague, the Minister of Labour, will give any help we are capable of giving. As to the specific question, I will check it, but there seems to be some question in terms of the dust that was used and that miners were not aware of some of the health factors.

REQUEST THAT OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH CENTRE BE ESTABLISHED AT ELLIOT LAKE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, in view of the increasing concern about lung cancer in uranium miners in Elliot Lake, can the Minister confirm the support of his Department for the establishment of an occupational health centre there, in co-operation with the Ontario Government, as was offered by his predecessor who had offered to negotiate such an arrangement?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we have not received request from the Government of Ontario. As I indicated, we have been willing to co-operate with the Government of Ontario in whatever way possible. If that specific request comes forward, then obviously we would have to look at it at that time.

TAKEOVER OF DOMINION STORES—WITHDRAWAL OF PENSION FUND MONIES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion who is also responsible for Investment Canada. Was the Minister aware that Conrad Black intended to skim $62 million from Dominion employees' pension funds when Investment Canada approved the takeover of Dominion Stores by A & P?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of that fact and I would ask the Hon. Member to make sure it is in truth a fact.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO USE OF PENSION FUND

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister advise the House whether or not his Department intends to invetigate the coincidence between the taking of $62 million from employees of Dominion Stores and the investment of $60 million in the Daily Telegraph in the U.K. and whether or not that pension fund was used to purchase the Daily Telegraph?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the figures to which the Hon. Member refers are figures with which I, of course, am not acquainted. I will ask personnel in Investment Canada to check on the Hon. Member's representations and I will report directly back to him.

The petition presented by the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) does not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

I am in receipt of a notice of a question of privilege to be raised by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

PRIVILEGE

STATISTICS CANADA EMPLOYMENT FIGURES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on Friday I gave the Chair notice that I would raise a question of privilege today with respect to the leak of the Statistics Canada employment figures on Thursday afternoon, more than 12 hours before the official authorization time, which is set for Friday at 7 a.m.

Your Honour may know that it has been the practice of Statistics Canada for many years to release these figures with respect to employment and unemployment on the first Friday of each month at 7 a.m. There are some exceptions to that practice but that is the general rule.

Also, it has been the practice of Statistics Canada to forward these figures to the offices of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the President of the Treasury Board with the understanding that the figures will be kept in embargo and not released in any way until the official release time of 7 a.m. Friday morning. On this occasion, as I have said, the figures were released more than 12 hours in advance. We are not sure by whom they were released; but they were then used by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in a very partisan way at a public meeting in Montreal.

I submit that my privileges and the privileges of other Members of the House have been breached by this leak and the use of the figures in that some Members of the House have had access to and were able to use these figures in a political way before the great majority of Hon. Members in the House. I submit this is a violation of my privileges as a Member of Parliament. If Your Honour finds that I have a prima facie case of privilege, then I will move the usual motion.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker,I wish to address this matter, inasmuch as I think the statement made by the Hon. Member is possibly a little general and sweeping with respect to the participation of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The Prime Minister did not at any point in time make any reference to statistics which were forthcoming from Statistics Canada. Indeed, that information, as I understand it, was in the hands of the media, specifically the CBC, which reported in advance of the actual day of announcement some details with respect to it.

With respect to the question of whether or not privileges have been affected one way or other, I do not think there is any basis or substance with respect to the Prime Minister having released any information at all.

Also, with respect to this matter, I understand that the Chief Statistician at Statistics Canada regards this as a serious matter which is important in terms of the operation of that agency. I also understand that he will be undertaking a serious examination of procedures in order to tighten them up.

As Your Honour will know, the current practice has been in effect for many years. That is to say, that there is a pre-release of this information to certain Departments, such as the Department of Finance, the Department of Employment and Immigration, the Office of the Privy Council, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and the Department of International Trade. The figures are released publicly within 24 hours of release to these officials, which has been the practice for many years.

As I indicated earlier, the fact that specific details were broadcast in advance by the media has caused the Chief Statistician to examine the circumstances to tighten up, hopefully, the procedures in order to ensure that this does not occur again.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate both arguments. I am sure that the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) takes this matter as seriously as does the agency. If the Hon. Member were bringing to me a case with respect to information which, perhaps, was included in an embargoed draft report of one of our parliamentary committees, or some such form, then there might be a question of privilege. However, given that the case he is raising is with regard to information which is properly the property of an agency of the Government and not of Parliament, it would be difficult for me to find that there is a case of parliamentary privilege, notwithstanding the quality of the Hon. Member's grievance and concern. Therefore, I find there is no prima facie case of privilege.

I am also in receipt of a notice of a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Point of Order—Ms. Copps

POINT OF ORDER

UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I regret having to raise this issue again in less than one year. However, I believe that at the time the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), who is responsible for the equality of women, called me "baby" in the House some months ago, I brought the issue to the attention of the Chair so that you might consider expanding the list of words which are deemed to be unparliamentary.

In Beauchesne's Fifth Edition Your Honour will see that words such as "scurrilous" and "scoundrel" are defined as unparliamentary. However, the obvious sexist connotation of "baby" is not listed as a word for consideration. I would ask the Chair to consider expanding the list of unparliamentary language to include this particular word. For the women of Canada, as I have said before, to have the Minister of Justice who is responsible for the equality of women consistently make remarks which essentially demonstrate his chauvinist mentality is unacceptable. I would like to see—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is, in fact, raising a point of order and not a question of privilege. I think she knows that she is raising a question of language. In fact, she did raise the matter with me before. I did, in fact, come back to the House on it.

I would now like to take 30 seconds to explain that there is not a list of unparliamentary words. There are simply decisions recorded in Beauchesne's as to what words have been found in past circumstances, in the context of those circumstances, to have caused a disorder in the House and therefore to have been unparliamentary.

The application of that to Question Period is itself a difficult problem because clearly at the moment there was a disorder being caused, in terms of there being a reaction. Clearly, there was a reaction as a result of the response of the Hon. Minister, which is why I rose at the time to say to both participants that words or language which cause reaction and, therefore, cause disorder through that reaction are not helpful to Question Period.

While I agree with the Hon. Member that there is language which should not be used in the House, I cannot accept her request that we publish a list of words which would be regarded as always being unparliamentary. If the Hon. Member were to read Beauchesne's carefully, I think she would find that that would be almost impossible to do. The only word I can think of in that instance off the top of my head is the word "liar".

Therefore, I think the Hon. Member's representations with regard to language are proper. I hope all Hon. Members will take them to heart.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) is not in the House. I take it that he will be answering for himself with respect to this matter.

Mr. Speaker: May I remind the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) that I am not finding that there was an occurence of unparliamentary language which needs further conversation or a retraction. I hope I have made that clear.

In order to be clear to all Members, there is language which should not be used in the House of Commons. I think we all know that. However, in Question Period there is a special need to be careful, although at the same time we are sometimes in a state of difficulty anyway. I do not know how I could find in that situation that a disorder which was extraordinary had occurred.

THE BUDGET

DESIGNATION OF ORDER OF THE DAY

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members will have heard the announcement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) with respect to the date on which he proposes to bring down his Budget. Therefore, pursuant to Standing Order 65(2) I request the designation of an Order of the Day to allow the presentation of a Budget Speech on Wednesday, February 26, next.

PETITIONS

CANADA POST—MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to present from the Province of Saskatchewan having to do with the Canada Post Corporation. It calls upon Parliament to require Canada Post to assure door-to-door delivery service of an equitable nature and to generally raise its level of service.

GASOLINE PRICES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to present, signed by a number of constituents in my riding. They support the recent Canadian Automobile Association and Ontario Motor League findings in a survey they conducted regarding the exorbitance and over-charging on our gasoline prices. They support my efforts in the House in opposing the same.

EXCISE TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to say a few words regarding this legislation. It is legislation which will have enormous impact on ordinary Canadians. It implements key aspects of the May Budget. Specifically, it increases sales and excise taxes. A sales tax is simply a percentage tax on the price of goods we buy. It will have a direct and very important effect upon consumers. An excise tax is assessed at a fixed rate on units of things we purchase such as a litre of gasoline. This also will have a very dramatic effect upon the pocket-books of consumers across this country. Both taxes will hurt consumers. There is one positive but minor change in this legislation, and the Government deserves credit for it. The administration of the excise tax as it affects retailers is being changed so that when there is a dispute about the liability for tax, the collection of the tax can be delayed until the dispute is resolved. However, that does not take away from the over-all negative nature of the legislation.

This legislation will have enormous impact. Sales taxes are going to be increased on construction materials, cable and pay television services, alcoholic beverages, tobacco products and other goods. The total cost of the sales tax increases to Canadian consumers will be $990 million during the year 1986-87. Candy and confectioneries, soft drinks, pet foods, certain health foods and energy conservation equipment, all formerly exempt, are now subject to tax. It is a pretty mean Government that removes the tax exemption for candy bought by children with their allowance. The Government has chosen to take pennies out of the pockets of children in order to pursue this deficit fixation.

Increasing taxes on health goods will also have a very real impact on elderly Canadians. It is not enough that the Government attempted to deindex old age pensions partially; it is now introducing sales taxes on the goods they need for health purposes. As well, energy conservation equipment is losing its exemption. With the world price of crude oil dropping, perhaps the Government has forgotten that energy conservation is crucial to the long-term economic health of this country. By doing this the Government is saying that it is not concerned at all with energy conservation. That is a very short-sighted and foolish policy for any Government. The fact that oil prices are dropping today does not mean they will continue to drop. In fact, we know the opposite will be the case.

The excise tax on gasoline and diesel and aviation fuel is going to be increased as well. When Members of the Government were in opposition they talked about world oil prices and a better deal for the consumer. Yet today we have falling world oil prices and prices at the pumps are being kept high by the companies who dominate the market. This Government has refused to take any effective action to bring those prices down. It has refused to use Petro-Canada as a lever in ensuring fair prices at the pump. Instead, the Government continues to maintain artificially high prices for gasoline. On top of that, it raises the taxes on gasoline.

Taxes on alcohol and cigarettes are also going up. There are obviously morale and health questions concerning the use of alcohol and cigarettes, many of which I am in sympathy with. However, when the Government increases taxes on cigarettes and alcohol it simply takes another swipe at the consumer.

The total price tag for these increases to the consumer is something like $3.5 billion. That number is pretty hard to conceptualize, but it is an enormous amount. It is a tremendous burden on consumers at a time when they are feeling the pinch with regard to the cost of living. This measure shows the foolhardiness of the Government and its lack of concern for Canadians.

● (1540)

I could say many more things about these measures, but I will conclude my remarks. These measures are unfair in that they hit poor people more than they do wealthy Canadians. The Government could have found other sources of revenue. The negative economic impact of these measures has been documented as they affect most areas of the economy, particularly the tourism industry. Most of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that these tax measures affect low income Canadians more than they do upper income Canadians at a time when poverty is on the increase in the country. The Government should take note of the fact that the number of poor people in the country is increasing. Its tax policy should reflect that and it should show some concern for the people at the bottom end of the ladder.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is the following one. Mrs. McDougall, seconded by Mr. Hees, moves that Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be now read the third time and passed. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

● (1610)

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if you have been able to ascertain whether or not the bells did in fact ring in the Confederation Building. I was informed that they did not, but I am not at all clear whether they rang at any time to notify Hon. Members that there was a vote contemplated. If they did not ring, I would like to suggest that the vote be delayed until such time as the bells are functioning properly, perhaps even until later today, at the end of the day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With regard to the first point of the Hon. Member's intervention concerning the fact that the bells may not have rung in the Confederation Building, the Chair has been notified of that. We have asked for a report from the Sergeant-at-Arms, which we have not received as yet. As far as delaying the vote is concerned, this is a matter for the Whips to decide.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to state that this should not set a precedent for any furture votes. I want the Government to understand that if the bells did not ring calling Hon. Members to the House, it is a difficult situation for them to be in.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, could I ask the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) whether he is expecting any Members? If he is not—

[English]

Is he waiting for someone from the Confederation Building, because if the bells did not ring there we will wait. However, if there is nobody to wait for, we should vote.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of whether or not I am waiting for anyone. It is a question of whether Hon. Members have been properly notified that a division is about to take place. I am prepared to allow that the vote should proceed, but I want to make it clear that in fact there is a requirement that the bells at least ring at some point in order that Hon. Members be notified. I want it to be noted that that did not happen.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On this matter, the Chair will be solely guided by the Whips.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, to be perfectly clear, since this is an unusual situation, and there is a possibility that some Hon. Members will not be able to get here because the bells did not ring in their offices or their buildings—

I will sit down, but on the understanding that this does not create a precedent.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to the taking of the vote.

The House divided on the motion (Mrs. McDougall) which was agreed to on the following division:

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976, as reported (with amendments) from the legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are four stated motions on Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976. Motion No. 1 will be debated and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 2 and 3 will be grouped for debate and voted on separately. Motion No. 4 will be debated and voted on separately.

Immigration Act, 1976

Mr. Mike Cassidy (for Mr. Heap) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 1 by striking out line 8 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"fewer than seven and not more than thirty-six".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I was glad to see that some Members on the government side are prepared to agree to this particular amendment. Members will know—

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, we agreed to the motion being put in the absence of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). We did not agree to the motion.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I did not know whether the vote would be taken, whether in fact Members would be prepared to listen to the reasons for which my colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina, who is our immigration critic, had hoped that the House would accept this particular amendment.

Members will know that the purpose of Bill C-55 is to allow the expansion of the Immigration Appeal Board from its present maximum of 18 members to a maximum of 50. They will also know that the Bill was put forward at the same time that the Plaut Report was being prepared looking at the question of refugee determination, and winding up proposals for alternative means of refugee determination

Members will know that the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration considered the Plaut Report and came back and endorsed most of its recommendations quite conclusively. The major one was that the Immigration Appeal Board should not be used as a chosen vehicle for making refugee determination decisions, but that there should be a separate board to do that difficult and very important job. The feeling that the committee had, the Plaut Commission had and certainly our Party has, is that the question of refugee determination is something that Canadians feel is important. We do not feel that people who are refugees should be forced out of Canada and sent back to homelands where they may risk death, imprisonment or persecution.

Now, how does this affect the amendment which is to limit the proposed increase in the size of the board to a maximum of 36 rather than the proposed 50? It affects it in this way: we have two processes going on side by side. On the one hand the Immigration Appeal Board is to be expanded, according to this Bill, to 50 members at a maximum. Yet on the other hand an all-Party committee has unanimously endorsed recommendations that refugee determination questions should be taken out of the hands of the Immigration Appeal Board. We know that originally the Government's proposal was that the board should be expanded to 36 members in order to deal with sponsorship and a number of other procedural questions where delays were beginning to take hold. I would assume that was done with the concurrence and agreement of the Government.

In future, if someone who claims refugee status on appeal and wishes to have an oral hearing before one member of the board, he or she may do so, but if he or she does not consent, then the original procedure of a three-person appeal board and hearing will have to be followed. As I understand it, that means that the amendments to the appeal board portion of Bill C-55 will help to solve problems of work overload which the appeal board has been experiencing in a number of the other sections for which it is responsible. The board will not in the main resolve the question of refugee determination and, according to the recommendations of the Commons Standing Committee and of the Plaut Report, it should not do so. The Government will remain charged with the responsibility of acting on the Plaut Report, and I hope that means creating a convention refugee determination commission or board which will work on a non-adversarial basis, will not have to work only on the basis of the judicial rules of evidence, and will be able to make compassionate recommendations to the Ministry even in cases where it does not find that a prima facie case for refugee status actually exists. Those are matters on which the Government will have to make a decision.

The reason the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) and I are proposing that the size of the Immigration Appeal Board be restricted to a maximum of 36 members is, as we have argued before, that we do not want to see an appeal board, the existence of which has been questioned as recently as today in a long article in The Globe and Mail because of its failure or perceived failure to act in a quasi-judicial way due to problems in administration, perpetuated because of its vast size and become an institution. If this happens, the Government, because of its size, may be hesitant to cut back on, reorganize, or quite possibly, even eliminate or restructure it entirely. That is a fairly lengthy argument but that is why we are proposing that the maximum size be limited to 36 members rather than 50 as was originally proposed.

The compromise that refugee cases cannot be considered by a single-person panel except where the refugee claimant consents means that this is not now a Bill which is designed to eliminate the backlog of refugee applicants before the appeal board. Another procedure will have to be found. Under those circumstances, it does not make sense to go forward with an increase of the appeal board to 50 members when the reason for the increase to 50 members was that the Government thought at one time that it could use this particular device to eliminate the backlog.

I would like to conclude by saying that it is the opinion of my Party, and we think of most Canadians, that questions of refugee determinations which are life-and-death determinations in many cases must be dealt with in a very serious, thoughtful and sensitive way. A new procedure has been proposed by the Commons committee and by the Plaut Report. We hope that that procedure is followed and that the Government does not try to find some back-door way of doing indirectly what the committee determined in its hearings on Bill C-55 it should not be able to do directly. I do hope that the Hon. Minister of State will be able to consent to this particular amendment, which I think makes sense at this time, bearing in mind that the question of refugee determination is bound to come before the House again in the near future.

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) who has been speaking on behalf of his Party's critic, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). First, I would assure the Hon. Member that the Government is seized of the matter of the new refugee determination policy, and I can assure him that as soon as possible we will be bringing before the House a new system based on the extensive recommendations and representations that have been made to us.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre made reference to the report of Rabbi Plaut. For the sake of the record I might remind the House and the Hon. Member that Rabbi Plaut recommended that the existing system be expanded by an increase of members to the Immigration Appeal Board.

The amendment of the Hon. Member for Spadina is one which was introduced in committee and we have had an opportunity to fully discuss it. The effect of that amendment would limit the number of members of the board at a level which we already suspect we might need during this interim period, until new legislation is in place. If indeed that is the case, surely it is wiser to have the potential for a greater number of appointments should they be required, rather than having to propose new legislation and go through the same process.

The Bill as it now stands, allows a far greater flexibility in terms of the role to be played by the IAB during this transition period. It allows for the IAB to be expanded to better serve those outlying communities in the Maritimes and the West. I reiterate, the Bill is allows a greater degree of flexibility for the board, and for this reason I feel that this amendment should be defeated.

On this occasion, I would like in general to speak more generally about Bill C-55 and the process that it has gone through since its introduction into Parliament last June. For a Bill of such modesty yet important on substance, it has had a remarkable passage, which shows that the democratic process is alive and well and working across the country.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sorry to interrupt the Minister. I really do not like doing this, but if we want to proceed in an orderly way with report stage of the Bill, we must stick to amendments as they are taken up and discussed. We are dealing with the first amendment, but I take it the Minister now wants to speak to the principle of the Bill in general. I would ask him, in a spirit of generosity, to try to stick to the amendments so that we do not get too confused.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair, of course, believes that the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is right in his representations.

Mr. McLean: Mr. Speaker, the justification of the Government for the rejection, is surely part of the substance of the motion. Let me, merely say to the Hon. Member, who seems to be in a mood to facilitate the passage of this Bill, that I want to inform the House and the public that there has been wide consultation. There were consultations before the legislation was drawn up and consultations in committee with many groups from across the country. I would like to pay tribute to them for coming at their own expense to Ottawa to make their concerns known. As well, I want to express our appreciation for the work that was done by the legislative committee.

We want to underline the Government's opinion and belief that what we have before us is a strong Bill. Acceptance of this will also demonstrate that we have made a number of accommodations in the process. We are now putting some flexibility into the instrument of the board, to carry us through the months that lie ahead. Let me conclude by indicating that we will be dealing not only with the machinery, but with the important issue of the appeal rights for citizens and permanent residents. At this time we will be moving forward on this basic human rights issue at this time.

On behalf of the Government, I must oppose the motion as proposed by the Hon. Member for Spadina, and I ask for the co-operation of Hon. Members to see that we are able to move ahead with these motions without delay.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to Motion No. 1 moved by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Regardless of whether the number of commissioners is set at 29, 36 or 40, our Party agrees with the general thrust of the motion. That is to say that I think the Government is more preoccupied with the roots or the by-products of the problem than with the cause. There has been considerable concern expressed that we are institutionalizing the Immigration Appeal Board so that we can resolve the tremendous backlog of some 20,000 refugee claimant cases, as well as other immigration appeals which have come forward from Canadian sponsors and abroad.

In this morning's issue of The Globe and Mail there was a considerable and lengthy article with respect to the whole question of the Immigration Appeal Board and its membership. Rather than quibbling over whether the number should be 50 or 36, I think we should be taking a hard look at the very substance of the board, how it functions and where the problems lie. There was a suggestion in the article, which was voiced by various experts who appeared before the committee, that there should be a separate body put in place to deal with the refugee problem. That seems to say that we are more preoccupied with the symptoms than with the causes of the backlog. What this Party has attempted to do, in conjunction with various community elements, is to speak to those causes. Whether we have 40, 50 or 60 commissioners, there is still a backlog of some 20,000 refugee cases. With all due respect, what we need is a policy which will free that log-jam.

I submit that if we go from 16 or 20 to 50, a considerable amount of time will still be needed to deal with those applications. Countless individuals came before the committee—and there was a huge demonstration in front of Parliament Hill a few weeks ago in this vein—who spoke to the frustrations felt by individuals living in Toronto or Montreal 10 or 12 to a room, waiting for their applications to be dealt with. As a Parliament we cannot now say that the appointment of 50 commissioners as opposed to 18 or 20 will solve the problem. Of course, a number of applications will be resolved somewhat sooner. However, when one looks at the parameters of the situation with this backlog, one finds that we need solutions which speak to the totality of the problem as opposed to the quick figures.

If we do come through with a solution which speaks to the backlog, then what will we do with a board of 50 commissioners which is too large to deal with individual claims after we have wiped the slate clean? I wish to draw to the attention—

Mr. Weiner: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I admire the ruling you just made with respect to sticking to the motion. We are now listening to a discussion with respect to a principle and a process. Could the Hon. Member not stick to the motion?

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I respect what the Hon. Member says. I do not think I was going above and beyond the motion.

In closing, I would like to say that we agree with the general thrust of the motion put forwad by the Hon. Member for Spadina. It does not deal with the symptoms. It concentrates on coming up with a solution which will address in a bold and courageous way the cause of the problem. The problem will not be solved by increasing the number of commissioners. I think that is the message the Hon. Member wishes to convey to the House. We in this Party support the motion. It is also supported by various communities.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the legislative committee and the standing committee, I urge Hon. Members to defeat Motion No. 1 on the basis of the following logic and information. As a result of the information which came to the committee from witnesses, it is not difficult to envisage that an expanded board of 50 members would take between two and three years to deal with the backlog of cases, not including refugee cases. It would deal simply with the backlog in terms of family reunification cases and the addition of rights of landed immigrants, which is contained in the Bill, to appeal to the Immigration Appeal Board on behalf of family sponsorship. With respect to the backlog and the increased workload with respect to family reunification cases, an expanded board of 50 members would take between two and three years to get caught up.

In its wisdom the committee amended the Bill before reporting it back to the House to ensure that these additional people will be employed by the Government of Canada to undertake that job on behalf of the people of Canada for a maximum term of two years. We are not instituting something by which people would be in place for five, 10 or 15 years. If Hon. Members would read carefully the amended Bill as reported from committee, they would see that appointees would be appointed for two-year terms only. One assurance we had from the chairman of the board was that refugee claimants would not have their appeals heard by the board unless they requested it. In other words, any refugee claimant in the system has the power, through the system, to delay his hearing until a new system is put in place. The standing committee certainly dealt with the Plaut Report and with the refugee backlog. It has provided the Government with advice on how to deal with the matter.

However, I think the debate will advance more quickly and in better form if we do not cloud matters with the refugee issue. These commissioners are needed on the appeal board to deal with family reunification appeals. The increased number is not needed and will not be used in any major way to deal with the refugee cases. It is necessary to move as quickly as we can with respect to this issue. The suffering which is felt by a Canadian or a landed immigrant who wants to bring his or her mother, father, brother or sister to the country and is blocked at the appeal stage simply because of a lack of resources to hear the appeal is certainly a real tragedy.

I urge Hon. Members to limit the debate and to move as quickly as we can. If it is felt necessary, then a vote can be taken, if that is what members of the Opposition want. However, the faster we can recruit these new commissioners, train them and get them hearing cases, the more humanely will the Parliament of Canada be acting for some people who really need this type of help. The matter has been on our plate since June, and the faster we can deal with it the sooner more people in the country will be satisfied by the process.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a problem with which I and, I am sure, many other Members of Parliament have frequently faced recently. I refer to the problem of constituents who have come to Canada in recent years from countries such as Poland, Portugual, India or the West Indies and who have a sister or brother still living in the country from which they came. They believe in family reunification, as do members of the Government and Members of Parliament. However, in fact, when they try to arrange for their family member to join them in Canada, they usually face problems and are turned down even before they can get to the Immigration Appeal Board. They are turned down for two reasons. The first reason is that the income of the family which is sponsoring the application is too low. I believe the income requirements which the Government has set down are much too tough. Second, they are turned down because they do not have a job offer which supposedly meets the required needs of this country. When the Minister announced a few months ago that there would be a substantial increase in the number of people permitted to come to Canada, I was quite hopeful. However, it seems to me, from inquiries made by my constituents that the only new people coming to Canada under these new guidelines are people who have a substantial amount of money and—

Mr. McLean: Read your mail.

Mr. Orlikow: The Minister tells me to read my mail. He arranged for a briefing last week. Because I could not be there I sent my assistant and I asked him to ask these two specific questions which I have mentioned. Aside from the income required, with which I have already dealt, when it came to job requirements we looked at the list of 100 occupations and found that they are so highly skilled and specialized that most applications will be turned down because the jobs those people can perform do not fall within that 100. I am disappointed. I thought the Minister was really sympathetic to the concept of familly reunification. I have to say that I am disappointed in what I have seen up until now and I hope he will look at this question again.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) is rising on a point of order, I presume.

Mr. Marchi: Are we not allowed to participate more than once at report stage?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is right.

Mr. Marchi: I thought we were.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No.

Mr. Marchi: Perhaps I can have the consent of the House to ask a question of the Minister whom I see in his place.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there consent to allow the Hon. Member to ask a question of the Minister?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Marchi: I thank Hon. Members.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Remember that.

Mr. Marchi: We have been contemplating increasing the number of commissioners from 18 to possibly 50. Debate has been waged in recent days on the question of who should be a member of the Immigration Appeal Board. Some say it should only be lawyers who can deal with the legal questions. Some are saying that the majority of commissioners should come from those communities with which the board is going to be dealing. Does the Minister favour the legal profession over that of members of the community concerned? Is it a question of balance? This is a subject on which I think a lot of people would like to hear the position of the Minister.

Mr. McLean: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member. He will know that any criticism being made is a result of the current system which the Hon. Member's Party put in place. Obviously we will welcome his observations on the matter.

It is quite apparent that there needs to be a balance between the legal and the ethnic sensitivities. The Hon. Member will know that we had some discussion about the, duration of new appointments. What we are now dealing with is people who may be available for two years rather than the long-term appointments which the Act presently calls for.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I think I understand that because this is report stage one does not have the same flexibility one has in committee stage. I have a question arising out of the Minister's comments which I can put now or during the debate. I prefer to put it now, but I am in your hands.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to ask one question of the Minister?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cassidy: Could the Minister be more specific in his comments about when we will hear an announcement concerning the policy regarding the refugee determination process? When does he expect the legislation to come forward? If it is going to be delayed, there is room for everyone to be concerned. If it is going to happen very soon, then there is no reason why, despite the comments of my friend from Calgary, we could not increase the board to 36 now and, if it needs further expansion, then we can do so when the refugee determination legislation is before us.

Mr. McLean: Mr. Speaker, it is the Government's intention to bring legislation before the House this spring. As the Hon. Member will know, it will take some time before one can actually bring the new processes into play. I can only assure him that we are moving as fast as humanly possible. We need the new legislation in place and we hope to have it in the next few months. I cannot be more precise than that.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister concerning this matter as well, particularly in light of the discussion concerning expanding the numbers on the board to 50 as opposed to the amendment before us which talks about a maximum of 36.

As I understand it—and I would like the Minister to confirm this—it will require 50 members of the board in order to clear away the current backlog of cases, apart from the refugee cases, within two years. Is that correct?

I would also like him to comment on the term of appointment of these people based on some of the comments we have heard here this afternoon. As I understand it, the original term was five years, but now we are talking about two years with one further extension, which I assume means one further term of two years. The Minister has indicated that he intends to recommend the appointment to this board some members of the legal profession. Does the Minister sincerely believe we can recruit capable people to serve on this board for as short a period a time as that, particularly members of the legal profession? Does he seriously think members of the legal profession and other competent peole will pause in their career for two years in order to be appointed to this board to clear away the backlog of cases, following which they will have to go back and pick up their lives again?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Minister to answer the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Clinch: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On this question?

Mr. Clinch: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no unanimous consent.

Mr. Cassidy: Control your own Members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

Mr. Prud'homme: On division.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Heap) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it five o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on Motion No. 1?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt Motion No. 1?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. McCrossan) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt Motion No. 2?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 2 (Mr. McCrossan) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt Motion No. 3?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. McCrossan) agreed to.

Mr. McCrossan moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. McCrossan moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak briefly today on the third reading of Bill C-255, the Public Pensions Reporting Act. Several months ago I spoke during the special debate on parliamentary reform. At that time I dealt particularly with two items in the parliamentary reform process. The first was the desirability of having the first Private Members' Bill passed through the House. The second was the desirability of having a Member, for the first time, vote against his own Party to establish the independence of Members of Parliament. Members who were present at that debate will remember that I did not volunteer for the second role.

Today I hope to see the first substantive Private Members' Bill passed in 11 years because I believe it is important for the parliamentary reform process, which I understand will be debated in the House tomorrow. Mr. Speaker, it is not very often, as Members know, that Private Members' Bills come to third reading.

There are many individuals whom I would like to thank for getting this Bill to the third reading stage the day before we are going to discuss the parliamentary reform of the House. Particularly, in the official Opposition, the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith), the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), and the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) were very helpful to me in getting this Bill as far as it has gone. With regard to members of the NDP, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) and the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) also helped me in getting the Bill this far.

I also want to thank the many Ministers who were involved in this Bill, including the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes), and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), as well as the Chief Actuary, the Auditor General, and the Comptroller General, for their support. I also want to thank the many members of my own Party, including the Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner), who attended hearings and offered their help. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not mention Michael Beaupré, the Assistant Law Clerk of the House of Commons, who worked so hard on this Bill in an attempt to draft it in a way which would be acceptable to all Members of the House.

I believe this Bill will make a difference to the quality of information available to Members of Parliament and to members of the public about the Old Age Security Act and all federal government employee pension plans. This Bill should make it much more likely that we will keep our pension commitments in the future since Members of the House and members of the public will better understand the nature and the cost of the pensions commitments we have made.

Once again, I would like to thank all Members of the House. I hope this goes down as a historic day in the process of parliamentary reform. I would be honoured to be the first private Member to have his Bill passed in the new spirit of parliamentary reform with active support from all Parties, for it is only with all-Party support for each Private Members' Bill that comes to a vote that parliamentary reform will endure.

Since this Bill passed unanimously in committee, and I believe it will pass third reading unanimously today, I hope we will have speedy Senate approval and proclamation.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to take part in a debate that is unique, in that a Private Member, in one session, has managed to present a Bill as important as this one and get it through the report stage to third reading with the unanimous consent of the House. I have been a Member of this House for thirteen years, and it is the first time I have seen this happen. I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member, not only for having tabled the Bill but also for his political acumen, because he has managed to convince us all that it was a good Bill and that its passage was absolutely necessary if it was to have any impact in the near future.

I will therefore be brief. I think that basically, the Hon. Member is to be congratulated, I say it once again, on tabling this Bill. I know he is an expert on actuarial matters. I know that he has worked very hard to convince his Government that this was a sensible piece of legislation.

As far as I am concerned, I am proud to say that I agree with him on the concept of a Bill that is more or less asking the Government to provide actuarial tables and projections on a three-yearly basis, so that we will all know where we are going with these pension plans, which, as we all know, concern hundreds of thousands of Canadians, whether they are in the Canadian Forces, whether they are Members of Parliament or in the Public Service or in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police . . . and the Judges Act and the Old Age Security Act.

Mr. Speaker, that being said, I may inform you that we are very pleased to take part in the debate on third reading and that we are giving our consent for third reading of this Bill today, without further delay. Once again, I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member on tabling this Bill.

[English]

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to offer my congratulations to the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) for the tremendous amount of work that he did in preparing this Bill for presentation to the House for first reading. From my own personal experience I know the amount of hard work that he did in getting this Bill through committee with all-Party agreement.

As I said on second reading of this Bill, this Bill will ensure that Members of Parliament and the public will receive full information as quickly as possible about the details of pensions plans. In that respect alone, I have no hesitation in saying, as I have said before in both committee and in the House, that this Party fully supports the Bill in its final form.

Again, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough on behalf of individual Members in my own Party and, I am sure, other Members in the House, on this, the first Private Members' Bill that has passed through the House containing and dispensing very, very important information to the House of Commons and the Canadian people.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the legislative committee on Bill C-255, and as someone who believes very, very strongly in the process of reform which is taking place in this House, I want to add my congratulations to the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) and to members of all Parties who participated objectively, fairly, and effectively in the discussions we had in committee. I think that demonstrates that this House is not always in an adversarial position and that today is a victory not only for the Member for York-Scarborough, but for all of us and for all Canadians.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall I call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—PRAIRIE WILDLIFE INTERPRETATION CENTRE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, on January 27, I asked a question of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) concerning the future of the Prairie Wildlife Interpretation Centre near Webb, Saskatchewan. I would like now to expand on that subject because I perceive that no firm arrangements have been made for the 1986 summer season, and time is of the essence. The Centre is located some 17 miles west of Swift Current on the Trans-Canada Highway. It was opened in 1979. The visitors' centre and the adjoining lands cost in excess of $1 million. Paving of an access road in 1984 cost another $134,000.

The purpose of the centre was to display and interpret to visitors the unique wildlife to be found on the prairies. The centre was part of a network of five centres operated by the Canadian Wildlife Service which were marked in November, 1984 for transfer to the provinces or to the private sector. The other centres are in British Columbia, Ontario and two in the Province of Quebec. The operating budget of the Prairie Wildlife Centre for the 1983 season was $246,000. For 1984 it was $217,000. In each of those years, approximately 20,000 visitors attended for a per person visit cost of between $11 and $12. Clearly, the centre was not being operated in an effective and efficient manner. It was, therefore, not unreasonable that some spending restraints be imposed.

I understand that some arrangements have been made for the continuing operation of the other four centres on a permanent basis. The problem with the Prairie Wildlife Centre relates directly to its location. It is representative of a vast semi-arid area of western Canada which, by its very nature, is sparsely populated. Southwestern Saskatchewan does not now, and likely never will have, a population base sufficient to support the centre to a break-even point.

The prairies ecology and wildlife is not well understood in Canada. This Centre is, therefore, important in its role of interpreting and translating the vibrancy and uniqueness of this region to visitors and locals alike. Closing the centre after the capital investment has been made and visitor patterns have been established is clearly unacceptable. Most people agree with the objective of cost reduction, but not to the extent of outright closure.

For the 1985 season, the operation was let to a private contractor and funded by the federal and Saskatchewan Governments to the sum of $68,000. This was to be an interim measure while negotiations continued toward the conclusion of a long-term contract. The 1985 summer season was somewhat less than satisfactory in that the opening was not announced until June 13, too late for adequate staffing, planning or preparation. Due to the late start last spring, a lack of marketing and the public perception that the centre was closed, attendance dropped to under 8,000. At the same time the net cost to the taxpayer, after deducting admission fees and land rentals, was under $50,000.

On October 16 last, I asked in this House as to the future of the centre. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Gurbin) stated in part that the Government intended to ensure that the centre remains open and serves the public. Again on January 27, in response to the same question, I was most encouraged when the Minister replied in part: "The main thing is that we are going to keep that centre open and we are going to make an arrangement at an early date". It is now February 10 and I fear there will be a repeat of 1985. An immediate announcement is necessary. It will not be good enough to make an announcement in April, May or June. In order to give the centre a chance to prove itself sufficient, lead time is required.

Expo 86 opens on May 2 and there will be greatly increased traffic on the Trans-Canada Highway. This represents a tremendous opportunity to draw tourists to the centre, providing arrangements are in place. To gear up for May, the centre must have an operator and funding. There is much work to do and the hour is late. Staff must be hired, displays prepared and advertising done.

An area rancher has offered buffalo to the centre as an additional attraction. He deserves an answer. Each additional day of delay compounds the problem and leads to a less satisfactory operation. We need an immediate announcement concerning 1986, the establishment of a telephone number, thus providing an opportunity for schools and other groups to book tours for May and June.

I urge the Minister to let a contract now for 1986 to the same operator as in 1985. That individual is familiar with the centre and is anxious to proceed. I further urge the Minister to redouble his efforts in seeking out a long-term solution to the future of the centre. The centre, in the short term at least, cannot survive on entrance fees and lease rentals. It is located in an area of sparse population but, nonetheless, an area with its own unique ecology and special wildlife heritage which is worthy of promotion and maintenance. That is the basis for its being and that remains the justification for its continuation.

The centre requires some Government support. I am not talking about vast sums of money. It is not a cadillac type of operation. My constituents understand the enormity of the national debt and the paralysing effect that the interest charges which must be paid on that debt have. They appreciate that the operating budgets of the pre-1985 years are simply unacceptable relevant to that deficit. Clearly, the purpose of the centre, which is to display and interpret the unique wildlife of the prairie, is a worthy one. People in my constituency of Swift Current-Maple Creek want to see the centre continue. They also want to see it run effectively, efficiently, and at the least possible cost to the taxpayer.

I conclude by repeating that the successful operation of the Prairie Wildlife Interpretation Centre requires lead time for staffing, display preparation, program planning and advertising. Time is short. I respectfully urge an early and meaningful response in order that the centre can be opened in time to serve school groups, tourists and other members of the public.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to commend my colleague, the Hon. member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson), for his interest in the environment and, specifically, in the future of the Prairie Wildlife Interpretation Centre near Webb, Saskatchewan, in his riding. I appreciate that he has made representations to the Minister on this particular park as recently as January 9, I believe, when he proposed a cost-shared arrangement.

As the House will know, this is part of our Government's response to the problems with which we are faced with respect to the deficit. At the same time, we continue to have concern for the environment and also an appreciation for the importance of interpretation centres such as this one. I understand that the Minister had the Hon. Member's letter for consideration and discussions are taking place. I will, on behalf of the Government, endeavour to have the Minister reply to the Hon. Member as soon as possible.

SENIOR CITIZENS—HOUSING NEEDS IN OWN NEIGHBOURHOODS

Mr. Terry Clifford (London-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, on November 1, 1985, I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) if the Government would consider a new policy directives with regard to the care of seniors in Canada. We have a tremendous need to preparing Canada and Canadians for the 21st century. Presently there are 2.6 million Canadian seniors, which is 10 per cent of the population. By the year 2021 there will be an estimated 5.9 million Canadian seniors, which will be 20 per cent of the population. That becomes a pressing problem. When the National Council on Aging filed its report in January of this year, it said that the number one concern of seniors, was shelter. Their concern is where they are going to live, in what neighbourhoods will they well spend their twilight years. When that concern is coupled with the fact that over 1 million Canadians today, mainly the young and young marrieds, are having problems finding housing, we can see a tremendous difficulty ahead in deciding how we are going to direct our resources and what our policies will be. Basically we have the question, how Canadians take care of their kin?

• (1720)

A couple of things have to happen in the area of housing. We have to look at what we have already done in our veteran's program through the initiative called the Aging Veterans Program with its home adaptation service and the home care service. The program has just recently been expanded from 8,000 to 18,000 veterans. It provides adaptations such as grab bars, locking systems on doors and, security systems, et cetera in veterans' homes. The cost of keeping them in their own homes is one-tenth that of putting veterans in a housing care facility for seniors. What a tremendous advantage this is. If we could expand this service to other seniors, not only would we save money, but seniors would be able to stay where they want to be, namely in their own homes.

We have portable flexible modular housing, which is added to an existing residence, this enables seniors could live with their families. These additions, also referred to as granny flats, are designed specifically for. I understand that Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation through its Design Committee is accepting proposals for new designs for the exterior and interior of housing for seniors. This report is due, I understand, in April.

These kinds of initiatives through Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation will be of great help. At the same time, we have to find a way to bring home care to seniors in a wider context. We should investigate through our two ministries, of National Health and Welfare and Housing and Labour to see whether seniors can get vouchers for home care to pay for daily assistance to meet the needs and the responsibilities of running a house and living a normal life. Again are tremendous possibilities in this field.

I realize the limitations because of federal and provincial responsibilities. A lot of health care is handed over to the provinces. Through some initiatives in these two ministries, the federal Government could show the lead and people would benefit.

Canada is facing a major problem with an aging society which is starting to dominate in percentages. We are creeping up toward 20 per cent of the population in the over 65 age group. They are very healthy people because of diet and strides in medicine in the 20th century. They want to live in their own neighborhoods where they are comfortable with their friends to enjoy these years. We must find ways of keeping seniors in their homes with dignity. An extension of such programs as the Aging Veterans Program and extensions of CMHC's housing is important. We need to design housing that will not become a dinosaur. We have to get the dynamics of architecture involved so that we do not build something that is not needed in the 21st century.

We have over-built certain kinds of housing which no one else can use. In the latter part of the 20th century we over-built schools. The children who went to these schools are now forming the nucleus of what will be the graying society in the early part of the 21st century in Canada.

With some of these initiatives, Mr. Speaker, we could go on to bigger things.

Mr. Joe Price (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for his representations on behalf of senior citizens. He is to be commended for his thoughtfulness and ingenuity in suggesting some solutions to a very serious problem.

When the Member first posed the question, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) replied that the Government is in complete agreement with the importance of helping seniors to live independently for as long as possible. It is without any hesitation that I repeat that position today.

That being said, I would like to inform the Member of the many initiatives through several Departments and agencies at the federal level that are already under way and that have the objective of helping our seniors to remain in their own homes for as long as possible.

Within the Department of National Health and Welfare, we are developing a strategy to promote health among older Canadians and to improve their quality of life. In the area of health services, we have produced guidelines for the establishment of services, such as day care centres since such centres have proved to be effective in postponing entry of the elderly into institutions. Other guidelines on rehabilitation services and on the prevention of progressive incapacity with aging are currently being prepared. In addition, the Department supports many projects to promote community living through its funding programs.

The Department is also actively exploring ways to promote independent living from a social service perspective. We are working very closely with homemakers associations across the country to improve training standards and to produce guidelines for the provision of adequate home care services. We also recognize that the income of seniors can influence their capacity to live independently. This is why we enhanced the financial situation of many of our seniors by expanding the Spouse's Allowance Program to all low income widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64. This goal has also led us to discussions with the provinces aimed at improving the Canada Pension Plan.

Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation also has this objective of independent living in mind in providing as many options as possible with respect to meeting the housing needs of seniors. These include funding research, as the Member has indicated, on innovative concepts such as granny flats and home sharing. It also means administering programs to help finance renovations and retrofitting of housing to make it more accessible and suitable. These programs are used heavily by seniors. Furthermore, CMHC has various social housing programs that add to the stock of housing for the elderly appropriate to independent living.

As indicated by the Hon. Member for London-Middlesex (Mr. Clifford), there are many Government departments involved in assisting seniors to live independently. Some I have mentioned, others the Member has mentioned. Veterans Affairs is another example. Although there is no single policy aimed at ensuring that seniors can remain in their own residences and thus improve their quality of life, there are many responses by the Government to that end.

VISIBLE MINORITIES—REDRESS FOR JAPANESE CANADIANS INTERNED DURING WORLD WAR II. (B) REQUEST THAT ACTION BE POSTPONED PENDING RECEIPT OF REPORT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate to review a question I asked in Question Period on January 28 of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Jelinek). I referred to the ongoing dilemma of the Japanese Canadian redress.

The gist of my question on January 28 was two-fold. First, would the Minister show decency and patience to wait for a study and report commissioned by the Japanese Canadian community to look into the historical perspective of the losses and sufferings caused some 40 years ago. Second, was the Minister prepared to keep the commitment of his own Government to initiate a compensation package with the representatives of the National Association of Japanese Canadians.

• (1730)

The question was prompted by the Minister's Rambo-like actions the day before the Japanese association was in Ottawa. The Minister had met with the association, as did my Leader and myself, but in the press conference he referred to the national association as "dragging their feet" and as "trying to get their act together". He imposed, through those quotes, the deadline that unless the national association moved quickly and came to the Government table, he would perhaps proceed unilaterally as his predecessor attempted.

The editorials in the newspapers across the country the day after certainly took the Minister to task. I should like to refer to a few of them. The article in The Toronto Star captioned "Time for PM to intervene" read as follows:

It's time the Prime Minister, a man with proven skills as a negotiator, put an end to Jelinek's bullying tactics. Mulroney should take over the issue himself, and deliver an honourable settlement. That would be an act of leadership.

The article which appeared in the Vancouver Sun was captioned "Where's the fire?" and read:

> Multiculturalism Minister Otto Jelinek's impatience to settle the issue of compensation for Japanese Canadians for the mistreatment they suffered during the Second World War is insensitive if not insulting.

The article in The Citizen entitled "Jelinek acting like Rambo in compensation wrangle" read:

> One wonders just what exactly, then, the situation is. When Brian Mulroney was running for office, he spoke often of both apology and redress, something the Japanese Canadians warmly welcomed.

An editorial entitled "Mr. Jelinek's haste" in The Globe and Mail read:

> This is the man Prime Minister Mulroney has entrusted with redressing what Mr. Mulroney has rightly called "an historic injustice." Can he not find someone with sympathy for the job?

An article written by Walter Stewart in The Toronto Sun and entitled "Jelinek shows his chutzpa" read:

> It is that wrong that Jelinek now says Canada is willing to right. But only at his price, and only in his time. If he gets away with it, the crime will be compounded.

The whole thrust of those articles was simply to try to bring home to the Government, and particularly to the Minister, that the issue deserved the respect and sensitivity which other issues we debate in Parliament and throughout the country obtain. The Minister must keep the commitment offered by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and by his predecessor, that they would mainly do two things: first, that they would negotiate compensation for the Japanese Canadian community. They said that very clearly, not only in speeches across the country but in a press release dated December, 1984. They also said that they would negotiate with the national association, the representative body of that constituency.

The Minister has spent considerable time on the differences which may exist within the Japanese Canadian community—differences of opinion, differences in approach and differences in process. That happens every day on virtually every issue we discuss in the Chamber. There is no unanimity on anything. There is no complete agreement on a process or a solution. In the end we try to build a consensus. We try to speak with and through the national organizations speaking for their constituencies. Whether it is The Canadian Bankers Association of the National Farmers Association, in the end we have a responsibility to deal with the structures that are in place and were elected by the constituencies they represent. I cannot see why the Minister chooses to spend most of his energy downgrading this national association. What he should be doing is negotiating, discussing and working closely with the national association so that together we can strike an agreement which will do us proud. He is not doing that.

Another factor is that the Minister is forgetting that the injustices to these individuals were against Canadian citizens, by and large. Ninety per cent of those individuals who lost their land, who lost their fishing boats, who lost their property, who lost their life savings, were Canadian citizens of Japanese ancestry. That does not change the fact that the rights of Canadians were abused. Therefore we should not only threat it as a minority issue or as a multicultural issue. It is not only that. It is wider. It speaks to the fundamental rights which you, Mr. Speaker, and I as Canadians enjoy today. Those Canadian rights, some 40 years ago, were trampled upon.

Perhaps the Minister of State for Multiculturalism—and I am saying this objectively—is not the appropriate Minister to be dealing with this issue. It is an issue of basic Canadian human rights. Rather than treating it from a multicultural perspective, perhaps we should have the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) dealing with what is essentially an injustice against Canadian citizens.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it strikes me that the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) and I dealt with the Japanese Canadian redress issue not too long ago during an adjournment debate. I think the Hon. Member would agree that the issue is of such importance that it bears repeating and putting on the record, once again, the superb efforts of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Jelinek) up to this point.

The Government continues to place high importance upon finding a just and equitable form of redress for Japanese Canadians, and upon finding a meaningful way to restore honour and dignity to Canadian citizens who were deprived of their rights and freedoms during World War II.

The Government believes that the matter of redress must be shared by all Canadians and therefore intends that any action on its part be done through Parliament on behalf of all Canadians. That is why, in our efforts to arrive at a reasonable solution, the Minister of State for Multiculturalism has undertaken to consult with a wide cross-section of Canadians represented by a variety of organizations, including provincial Governments.

Among those organizations, the National Association of Japanese Canadians is recognized as one of the most important representing the interests of Japanese Canadians. In a meeting with the NAJC on Monday, January 27, 1986, we were in general agreement on a number of principles. The Government has indicated its willingness to move forward on such items as: first, a formal acknowledgement and an apology for the events of 1942-43; second, a granting of pardon for those convicted of war-time infractions; third, the reinstatement of citizenship to those whose status was revoked; and, fourth, amendments to the War Measures Act to safeguard against future occurrences of that nature against any ethnic group.

The National Association of Japanese Canadians has commissioned a study by Price Waterhouse to try to determine the value of property and personal belongings lost as a result of the relocation. They have expressed a desire to await the results of that study and to have a complete redress package concluded which would include both monetary and non-monetary considerations.

While the Government sympathizes with that position, we are also aware that there are those in the Japanese Canadian community, including the more elderly survivors, who would like to have the issue resolved and out of the public domain as quickly as possible. Whatever the timing, the Minister of State for Multiculturalism, who I believe is doing an excellent job, and the Government of Canada will honour our commitment to finding a just and equitable resolution as soon as practicable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STANDING ORDERS—PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the proposed amendments to the Standing Orders, laid upon the Table on Thursday, February 6, 1986 (Sessional paper No. 331-7/37A) be adopted and made provisional Standing Orders of the house.

Provided that, unless otherwise ordered;

1. the said provisional Standing Orders shall be in force from 11.00 o'clock a.m. Monday, February 24, 1986 until the House adjourns on the last sitting day in December, 1986;

2. and further to the Order made on June 27, 1985, the provisional Standing Orders thereby adopted shall continue in force during the same period; and

3. the Clerk of the House shall be authorized and instructed to print a revised and renumbered edition of the Standing Orders integrating the provisional Standing Orders and making any necessary amendments in consequence thereof, or relating thereto in respect of the Standing Orders concerning Private Bills, and to make such changes to the Order Paper and Notices as may be required.

He said: Mr. Speaker, when the excellent debate on reform of the House of Commons came to an end on the evening of December 4 last, you said that you had never before so greatly missed the right to speak in debate. I understand that sentiment, because seldom does one have the privilege of participating in a fundamental reform of the central institutions of one's nation. I have had the privilege, which all Members of this Parliament now share, of participating in this process.

In opening this debate today, Mr. Speaker, I am deeply conscious of the honour and responsibility which I have been granted. I know that you, Mr. Speaker, and many other distinguished Canadians, share with me a sincere affection for the ability of the House to capture the best of the Canadian experience and make this place reflect and exemplify the possibilities this great nation holds for her people. It is with this sense of motivation that I participate in this very important debate. I hope that the reforms which we are debating today will soon be in place and that they will lend new vigour to the work and new luster to the achievements of this and many future Parliaments.

I would be greatly remiss if I did not, from the outset, acknowledge the Government's debt, and, indeed, that of the whole House, to the distinguished Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) who is seated in the House at the present time. Wisdom acquired over 25 years of service in this House guided his chairmanship of the Special Commitee on Reform of the House of Commons. The results of that arduous task, contained in the three reports of the committee, have led to the package of reforms presently before the House and to other important administrative reforms now being dealt with by the Board of Internal Economy.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to emphasize the invaluable contribution made by the two critics of the two Opposition parties, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie).

The Committee's proceedings were conducted with great effectiveness and impartiality. All parties demonstrated their goodwill and unstinting co-operation in laying the foundations for the proposals we are considering today.

[English]

I do not think that any praise would be too high for the members of the committee who brought with them a wealth of experience, both in the House and outside of it. Under the inspired leadership of the Hon. Member for St. John's East the committee brought forward one of the most cogent and decisive studies of the House that we have been privileged to receive. May I again congratulate the committee for its work.

This work was an ample fulfillment of the undertaking the Government made during the last election campaign which was subsequently enshrined in the Speech from the Throne. On the initiative of the Government the committee was formed and undertook its difficult and sensitive work in a spirit of nonpartisan co-operation. As a result, last June the House adopted an important package of reforms which have already had a profound impact on the work of the House and its committees.

In September, 1985, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced a broad range of additional reforms which touch on our national institutions, both in Parliament and across the Government. These included a commitment to ensure that almost all order-in-council appointments would be subject to review by a committee of the House. This unprecedented move was coupled with new conflict of interest and post-employment guidelines which now apply to most employees of the federal Government and Crown corporations. In addition, the Prime Minister announced a proposal for a registry of interests of Members of Parliament and a registry of lobbyists. The Government's demonstrated commitment to reform of our institutions cannot be doubted and has never wavered.

In June of last year I participated in the debate which saw the first stage of reform adopted with a laudable degree of unanimity which I hope will also guide our consideration of this new package of reform.

[Translation]

Again, I wish to take this opportunity to express my support for this major body of parliamentary reform that deals with the powers, practice and procedure of this House. The amendments to the Standing Orders which I tabled last Thursday reflect the majority of the recommendations contained in the Special Committee's Third Report. During the past few months, I have had a series of consultation with the Opposition parties, and the document I tabled last week is a reflection of negotiations and consultations, both public and private.

We have approved Members' recommendations in many areas, including the changes that have now been made regarding membership of committee. I believe the amendments have been drafted in a way that responds to the concerns of all three parties.

The nature of these discussions and the spirit in which they were held have made me confident that this debate will be an excellent vehicle for communicating the results of the impartial study accomplished by the Committee.

[English]

I am sure that I need hardly remind Members of the House that the main thrust of the reform initiative taken by the Government was and remains to search for a more relevant and meaningful role for the House and its Members, and particularly private Members. Our system of Government, as it has developed over the last two decades, has placed increasing importance on extra-Parliamentary centres of decision-making and policy development. As a result, policy initiation was no longer considered a part of Parliament's role. Indeed, that role has been diminished so that Parliament was sometimes seen as merely endorsing legislation developed elsewhere.

In recent years, however, primarily as a result of the first two reform packages and the commitment of the Government to involve Members of Parliament in a much larger role, Members have had numerous opportunities to take part in the process of policy development.

The adoption of the proposed Standing Orders will provide the Standing Committees with an even greater number of opportunities. The paramount role of the House and its committees is to ensure that the Government is held accountable every day for its actions and decisions. If these reforms are adopted, the entire array of Government activity will be before Members, giving their consideration a broad horizon over which to range.

The ongoing accountability of the Government to Parliament, which is already most comprehensive, will become complete as a result of these reforms.

Members in the House have, as their principal mandate, the enforcement of Government accountability. For that reason I am sure that all Members will welcome the increased powers of review and investigatiaon being granted to the Standing Committees.

It is because we endorse the views of the special committee that: "The key to restoring confidence in our central democratic institution is to enhance the role of the private Members of Parliament" that we have brought forward the package of Standing Orders which is before the House today. The Government believes that only by improving the influence of the people's representatives in Parliament can Government be made more relevant to the citizens of this country. For this reason an important focus of parliamentary reform must be the role of private Members as legislators and as part of the policy development process.

As a result, the Government has worked to ensure that the recommendations with respect to Private Member's Business will be accurately reflected in this proposed package.

[Translation]

The proposed Standing Orders will make it possible to bring certain Private Members' Bills to a vote, following debate during a period not exceeding five hours. Private Members' Bills or Motions will be considered in turn, according to their place in the established order of precedence. This will make it possible to provide more thorough consideration of motions and of Bills on second reading.

The report stage is reached after substantial consideration in committee, and in most cases, it will be after two rotations of the order of precedence.

Furthermore, debate may be extended at the report stage and on third reading so as to allow all Members concerned to express their views.

I have been particularly attentive to the concerns voiced by the Opposition parties regarding the provisions on Private Members' Bills. In fact, following these representations, we made very substantial changes in our proposals in this respect.

[English]

In this proposal, the role of the private Member as legislator has been significantly enhanced. In addition, the new rules concerning Private Members' Business will ensure that more Members will be able to participate in debate and more new ideas will be able to be brought forward. These changes to the rules relating to Private Members' Business will make it more important and relevant.

Having touched upon the enhancement of the roles of the Standing Committees in policy, management and operational accountability, I would now like to take this opportunity to summarize how these changes are proposed to be brought about.

First, most Standing Committees will be given wide-ranging powers to conduct independent inquiries into all aspects of a Department's activities.

Second, a smaller, permanent membership will be given sufficient facilities to develop an expertise with respect to the function and the mandate of the Department they will be reviewing. The Department's operations will now not only be before the committees during their three-month study of the Main Estimates but will now constitute a permanent order of reference to the committee. As a result, the permanent Members will be able to develop an in-depth and continuing understanding of the Department. Since no parliamentary secretary will any longer be a member of a Standing Committee whose mandate includes the review of his or her Department, such committees will have significantly increased independence.

The new role of the Standing Committees will provide an unprecedented opportunity for private Members to have a real impact in the way in which this country is run.

The enhanced powers of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments contained in the proposed package represents a major effort to restore the important balance between parliamentary and extra-parliamentary decision-makers. This historic reform will provide the House with the power to approve orders to the Ministry to rescind regulations. While all Standing Committees will have the responsibility to review the substance of regulations in respect of Departments under their scrutiny, the Joint Committee will have the power to make reports recommending recision of delegated legislation. The Joint Committee will retain its present powers under the Statutory Instruments Act and will, in addition, be able to recommend rescission on the basis of its study of regulations which is authorized by that Act. The Standing Orders empower the committee to recommend that the Ministry rescind those items of delegated legislation over which the Governor in Council has the power of rescission.

In this way, the decisions of extra-parliamentary decision-makers will come under very close scrutiny. The power given to the House by these proposed Standing Orders will enable it to regain significant control in this important area.

In recent years, public concern has been raised with respect to the manner of making appointments to important managerial and indeed regulatory agencies of the federal Government. For this reason the Prime Minister made a commitment to allow the Standing Committees to review all non-judicial Order in Council appointments.

This historically unprecedented move will ensure that the Government is held accountable for its selection of individuals for important public posts. I believe that all Members will agree that this new power will greatly enhance the work of the Standing Committees. This landmark experiment will provide, for the first time in our history, an open public review of the qualifications of individual appointees to non-elected public offices.

[Translation]

Members will have to assume their new powers in a responsible manner. In fact, they will constantly have to define the borderline between a person's private and public life.

I am confident that the committees of this House will use these new powers in the same spirit that has pervaded the process of parliamentary reform initiated by this Government.

Moreover, once the Canadian public is acquainted with the appointment process, it will be in a better position to judge the qualifications and sense of duty of people who dedicate themselves to the service of this country.

• (1120)

[English]

I have highlighted merely a few of the important reforms, but these in combination with others will have a profound impact on this House and this Parliament. I am very conscious of the historic nature of the course upon which we are now embarking. I am also very much concerned that the reform we now have before us combine to mould this, our most important democratic institution, into a Parliament which is uniquely Canadian.

I believe that these reforms are founded in the best traditions of parliamentary Government and will improve this institution in ways that we may little appreciate at this moment. This debate is but one step along the road of reform upon which the House has been set since the Speech from the Throne. This is neither the beginning of this process nor will it be the end. The Government, with a strong mandate for change, set better management and reform of the House among its earliest priorities.

Reform, Mr. Speaker, is not merely a matter of rules. It is also a question of commitment, the commitment to ensure that the talents of Members are used to the country's best advantage, the commitment to refocus public attention on the House of Commons when making policy announcements and the commitment to bring forward a bold and comprehensive legislative agenda.

This Government has moved to refer numerous policy questions for committee consideration. For example, the Government has brought forward several consultation papers and a White Paper which contained draft legislation. The Government in its first year in office made more policy announcements in the House of Commons than were made during the entire Thirty-second Parliament. As well, the rate of legislative activity has increased in this Parliament.

To our Government, reform does not only mean changes in the conduct of Government business, it also means a new attitude toward the substantive policy initiatives with private Members. Indeed, yesterday, the House passed Bill C-255, sponsored by the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) the latest in a series of motions and Bills proposed by private Members and accepted by the House.

I believe the Government's record in this first session of Parliament gives ample testimony of our continuing conviction that Parliament should become again the central focus of democratic Government in Canada.

This tenacious commitment to reform has carried the recommendations of the members of the special committee forward to the point of implementation. I want to emphasize that the reforms proposed here today are an experiment, and, like all experiments, we cannot foresee entirely their outcome. We can monitor their success and we can seek to make improvements wherever possible. However, let no one here be in any doubt about our resolve to ensure implementation of reform.

We have in this House at this time a rare opportunity not given to many of our predecessors. We hold in trust for future generations the foundations of parliamentary democracy in Canada. In the last generation we have seen the gradual erosion of the power, influence, and importance of this institution and thereby the people's representatives. We now have the chance to reverse that trend. We have it in our power to change, for the better, the position of the House of Commons in a parliamentary system.

Can we rise to that challenge, Mr. Speaker? I am convinced that we can. Have we the courage to enter upon this new and uncharted territory? I, for one, and I am sure I speak the sentiments of the vast majority of Members of Parliament, say yes.

I ask my colleagues on all sides of the House to join me in this initiative. Together with patience and fortitude we shall succeed, and thus bequeath a stronger and more effective Parliament to Canadians.

Let us meet this challenge together, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is raising with the Chair a point of order regarding whether we would vary our practice in this matter by unanimous consent to permit questions to the previous speaker after each of the first three speeches. I take it there is agreement that by unanimous consent we would allow a 10 minute period for everybody participating in the debate, including the first three speakers.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, questions. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the Minister referred to the reforms as an experiment and that he was going to monitor the progress, the weaknesses and the strengths of them. Would he agree to have an ongoing review process put in place now? If somebody in the House felt strongly about certain amendments to our rules not working properly, could we appeal the case to somebody, grieve it to somebody in the House, either the Privileges and Elections Committee or some other committee so that we could get satisfaction? I am thinking particularly of legislative committees that for a number of months have been proliferating. We have no way of going to anybody to make sure that the legislative committees were queued or put in order by the House. Would the Minister answer that question please?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) raises a very important question. Let me respond in two ways. With respect to the precise matter of legislative committees, the Hon. Member will be aware that in the first report, the recommendations of which were accepted, that legislative committees were to consist of between 20 and 30 members. Our experience showed that this put enormous pressure on the Hon. Member who is the whip of the Official Opposition. He has a sense of this as much as anyone, and I know from speaking with the other two whips that this has put pressures on in terms of serving on those committees in a meaningful way. I have talked with members of the committee, including the chairman, who indicates that what was intended and what we have accepted in this set of revisions is that there be no minimum number of members for legislative committees. The striking committee will assess each topic. The number of members on legislative committees will depend on the relative importance of the legislation.

Accordingly, it may be appropriate for certain pieces of legislation to have by way of example seven members on a committee, whereas other topics may be of such crucial importance that we want to get a committee made up of over 20 members.

With respect to the Member's observation of monitoring and the method by which the rules can be dealt with and grievances or points of view put forward, I believe that with the present regime of rules, the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization has that very function. It would be my suggestion that this is an ongoing reference which they will now have under the new rules. We will now make a permanent reference with respect to these matters, including the whole question and rules of the House to the committee.

This committee will become very important as it is the vehicle for which all members, regardless on which side of the House they sit, will be able to put forward their suggestions and recommendations, have a thorough hearing and report and make a recommendation back to the House.

I have discussed this matter—not with any amount of thoroughness, but the matter has been discussed and I think it is fair for me to reveal that some of the discussions took place with House leaders. It seems to me that might be an appropriate thing for all Parties to be involved in, to look at the process a to make sure the legislative committees are working efficiently.

● (1130)

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, in general I think the proposals for Private Members' Business are good, but I am still somewhat concerned about the suggested process for selecting private Members' Bills for voting. According to the proposed new Standing Orders, there would be a standing committee on Private Members' Business which would meet and select from the Private Members' Bills and motions on the Order Paper six that would be votable, and go through a special process. In principle that is good, but I am concerned about how it might work in practice.

First, the majority on that committee will be from the Government side, no matter what Parliament we are in. The majority can decide not to bring in any Bills or motions for a vote which might affect the Government, or might try to avoid any kind of controversial legislation, so that we would just vote upon very bland Bills.

I should like to refer to my Bill as an example, and not ask for any opinion on it. I am referring to Bills such as the one I have had for many years on gun control. In fact, the matter was raised yesterday by a Government Member. How do we see any possibility of Bills dealing with subjects such as that getting through a committee on Private Members' Business? Does the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) think that process will be one where we vote on bland Bills, as we did in the past, such as the one to make the beaver the national animal of Canada, or the one by which the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) was successful in changing the name of Trans-Canada Airlines to Air Canada? I think those were good things, but I hope the process will be advanced further than that. Could the President of the Privy Council assure us that the process will give the House an opportunity to bring to a vote Bills of some significance?

I understand that the Government must protect itself but, for this process to be meaningful, the committee has to deal with matters in a somewhat objective way so that we have a chance to discuss and vote upon Bills which will have some meaning.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, from that point of view, the recommendations absolutely follow the recommendations of the special committee on reform which was chaired by the Hon. Member for St. John's East. In the matter of Private Members' Business, we have tried to reflect accurately, with one exeption, the recommendations of that committee. We are talking about Private Members' Business. Parliament consists of representatives of various political Parties. However, in terms of Private Members' Business, it will reflect the membership of the House from time to time in subsequent Parliaments.

The two representations I have received have been at opposite ends of the spectrum, quite frankly. One was made by the Hon. Member, that we make sure significant items are allowed to come forward. I believe that we will have a chance to see, in this period of provisional application, private Members in control of their own destiny, not influenced by and not having the participation of Government Members, shall we say. They will exercise their judgment, to the benefit of private Members. That is the whole purpose of this kind of private Members' control over the agenda.

The other stream of representations I have received is a concern that somehow matters of great significance will in fact be dealt with in Private Members' Hour. This is the dilemma one faces; we have to make up our minds. Either private Members will be able to bring forward issues of importance or not. I opt for that. My position is that Private Members' Business will not be mere puffery, but I am only one Member among 282.

The Hon. Member's question is a valid one. There has been a suggestion that perhaps there would be an opportunity to steamroll things through Private Members' Hour. I do not think that is a valid argument now, because we have not allowed for the telescoping of the debate. We have also extended the time available for private Members to participate in important issues. There will be 10-minute speeches and virtually an opportunity for all private Members to participate on really significant issues. I think we have reached a very satisfactory accord in respect of Private Members' Business. I am very interested to see how it will work. Notwithstanding my own views in respect of the Hon. Member's proposed legislation, I see no problem in that matter being debated fully and being put to a vote. I do not see how that would offend anyone's sensibilities. He may not be successful on a vote, but at least it would be put to a vote.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in entering this debate I do not want to begin by dealing with the specific proposals for procedural changes which are before us, but generally with the purposes of parliamentary reform. Our object in considering reform ought not to be merely for the purpose of attempting to keep some Members who feel underemployed busy, or to make some Members feel that their work is somehow more meaningful. Our object should not be to make Parliament either an automatic legislative mill or, at the extremity, a mere cockpit for partisan political posturing. Our object must be to seek to make Parliament do better that which it is intended to do.

Parliament is here to consider and make final decisions on legislative proposals and, in doing so, to have the opportunity to alter and present alternatives to such proposals. However, the reality is that when we talk about legislative proposals, we are, to all intents and purposes, talking about those presented by the Government. Only the Government, that is the Ministry, can propose legislation to spend money or requiring the expenditure of money to achieve its purposes. Most of the time for debate is reserved for measures the Government wishes to introduce. The package before us does not change any of these essential facts.

This is consistent with the basic principle of parliamentary Government, that of responsibility. The Government is formed by those having the support of the largest number of Members. This means, with rare exceptions, that the Government is formed by the Party having the largest number of seats in the House, the largest number of Members. That Government must take responsibility for its actions or non-action to Parliament and, through Parliament, to the Canadian people between elections and ultimately directly to the Canadian people which makes decisions on whether a Party forming a Government should continue or be replaced by one of the other Parties in a general election.

Therefore, it could be argued that Parliament's function in our democratic system is primarily to hold Governments to account on behalf of the Canadian people in the broadest sense of the term. If that is the case, then we are talking about having Parliament in a position to examine every action of Government and to provide Government with a framework for operation which meets the needs and expectations of the Canadian people. I submit that everything Parliament does—legislation, examination of the Estimates and seeking information—flows from this basic concept. Surely we must examine all our procedures and all proposals for changes in those procedures in this context.

From what I have said, I think it is clear that we must examine any proposal for change, for reform of Parliament, in the context of our system of political Parties. Our parliamentary system is not simply one of Government and private Members, those Members who form the Government and those who do not.

To suggest this, and there is a disturbing flavour of this in the Government's proposals to change the Standing Orders, overlooks the reality of our parliamentary system, what it is and what I believe it should be. We do not talk of a system of checks and balances in our legislative, executive and judicial structures in the same way as the Americans do. Perhaps, in a more subtle and limited sense, we do have a system with checks and balances here in Canada and in our Parliament, our House of Commons. The balance, the creative tensions in that system are not simply those between the Government and Private Members. They are between Government, that is the Party forming the Government, and the other Parties as well. This is recognized, particularly by the fact that both in law and in parliamentary practice and precedent, the concept of the Official Opposition is enshrined; that is the Party with the second largest number of seats. We have gone even further here in this House of Commons and have recognized formally the position of other Parties if they have a minimum number of seats.

An essential feature of our Canadian parliamentary system—essential to our own Canadian approach to checks and balances—is the existence of parties other than the one forming the Government and their ability, particularly that of the party forming the Official Opposition, to play an active and meaningful role. What happens if that system, even in a well meaning and inadvertent way, is tilted so that this concept of parties testing one another and vying for support through their challenges to Government, alternatives, ideas and people on the one hand, and the Government putting forward its proposals on the other hand, is weakened? Then I say Parliament is weakened and the risks of untested, unchecked and, therefore, bad government is dangerously increased.

Parliament is not simply Government and private Members, it is, particularly today, the Party forming the Government and those Parties in opposition to it. It is clear we must examine any proposals for parliamentary reform in the context of the party system.

Over the years, Parliament has structured all of its activities around the parliamentary system. Constitutionally, most legislative initiatives are in the hands of the Ministry, those who are supported by the Party with the largest number of members. In turn, the Ministry organizes its supporters in the House of Commons in such a way so as to maintain their support, therefore, the confidence of the House, and to see its legislative initiatives acted upon. In order to hold the Government to account and to scrutinize its proposals. The Opposition as well has to be organized in particular ways.

The House, in any process or decision of reform, must ensure it has procedures that facilitate the organization, not only of the Government and its supporters, but of the Opposition as well. Our electoral system reflects this kind of organization. Study after scholarly study shows that the overwhelming majority of the Canadian electorate makes its choice at the polls, to a large degree, on the basis of political party and leadership. While each elector votes individually for an individual member, his or her decision is heavily influenced by party considerations. Candidates are mostly chosen by party processes. Elections are basically conducted on a party basis, and almost every member is elected, whether or not we admit it to ourselves as individuals, largely for party reasons.

Thus when we reach the House of Commons we face a dual situation. We have 282 individual members elected from what are still 282 separate districts. We also have a system that is organized into Government and opposition for the purpose of carrying on the business of Parliament. Both these facts must be reconciled, in the organization of the House and its rules, and if we are to fulfil the expectations of our electors we must bear them in mind.

Having said this, I do not want to be understood to be downgrading in any way the role of the individual Member of Parliament. The people, in making party choices, clearly do not wish their elected representatives to be trained seals functioning only as instruments of their parties, they expect initiative and individual participation to the fullest. Our party system, indeed, depends upon these very qualities for its vitality.

A major factor in the role played by individual Members, the major way in which they have an impact either on the proposals or actions of the Government, or of their party if it is not the one forming the Government, is through something not recognized in the Standing Orders at all, but which is very real all the same. I refer to the party caucuses and the caucus committees.

Bearing all this in mind, I want to make some comments on the Government's proposals. These proposals are, of course, not exactly those made by the Special Committee chaired by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). My colleagues, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), who are intimately involved in the proceedings of that committee, will be commenting more extensively on this. I want to say that all the Members of the committee worked both intensively and extensively and are to be congratulated for the production of their very comprehensive and challenging reports. The proposals now before us are in fact the initiatives of the Government. The report of the committee chaired by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) was the taking off point, but the proposals are in many places quite different than the committee's recommendations.

I want to say in this regard that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has talked with myself and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), as the House Leaders of our respective Parties, about the Government's proposals and he has taken into account a number of our suggestions. This has likely made possible a debate that would be easier and more positive than would otherwise be the case at this time, but there remain a number of considerations for the House before it reaches any decision.

I want to stress that there has been no package deal worked out behind the scenes to simply whiz this measure through without any real debate. The debate today, as far as I and the members of the Official Opposition are concerned is to go on here on the floor of the House of Commons into the pros and cons of the Government's proposal. This is not simply a pro forma gesture aimed at enshrining something worked out behind the scenes. I want to say the individual Member rightly expects to be active and to count for more than simply casting his or her vote at the direction of his or her party whip.

The individual Member rightly expects to be active and to count in the visible workings of Parliament, to take part in a more visible and meaningful way. I recognize and support the importance of their work as individual Members of Parliament. Therefore, we must consider the effect of the proposed changes of the rules on both aspects of a member's work, as someone who is a member of a party caucus and as someone who has an individual standing and is directly elected for a particular constituency.

Therefore, it is important in this debate today, and subsequently, if necessary, that we hear from individual Members of Parliament, particularly those not on the government side, whether they feel the Government's proposed changes in the rules actually improve or retard their ability to do their work as they see it. My approach, and that of the Official Opposition to this debate, is one which is sympathetic to parliamentary reform. However, our members want to discuss openly here in the House of Commons the extent to which the Government's proposed changes in the rules do, in fact, bring reform in the sense of enabling them to do their work in a more vigorous and effective way.

Last June, acting on the basis of the Special Committee's initial recommendations, a number of provisional revisions to the Standing Orders were adopted. Some of these have caused many individual MPs from both the Government and Opposition sides great concern. One problem arises from the decision to do the committee stage of consideration of legislation in legislative committees rather than in Standing Committees. This has led to an incredible proliferation of committees and committee meetings, placing an almost impossible burden on Members wishing to specialize in particular subjects. It is not an infrequent occurrence that meetings of more than one legislative committee or of a Standing Committee considering matters falling within the same general subject area are held at the same time or so close in time to one another that Members concerned are either physically unable to attend meetings or to prepare themselves properly for meetings. It has also happened that the subject under consideration in the House has conflicted with committee consideration; this situation cannot continue.

If the Government wants to enhance the role of the individual MP, I do not think continuing this proliferation of legislative committees and meetings is the way to do it. The private Member of Parliament needs time to reflect, to prepare and to talk to individuals and groups concerned with the subject matter being looked at in committees on which that Member serves. This cannot take place if there are so many committee meetings that the MP is spending all his time at meetings or running from one to the other. To do real committee work the Member must have available to him adequate time for preparation, reflection and contact with the public. The Member also needs time to be able to participate in debate in the House itself, take part in the work of his caucus, attend to the problems of his constituency and meet with interest groups or individuals that want to meet with that Member.

In the United Kingdom only a fixed, a limited number of legislative committees may sit at one time. There are only so many queues or slots for those committees. As a result, Bills are apportioned and scheduled to legislative committees whose meetings are set up so as to minimize conflicts for Members. Some adaption of this queue system will have to be put in place here if the system is to have a chance to work and continue.

Frankly, this is a problem that was not anticipated when the provisional rules were adopted last June, but unless some correction is made that is satisfactory to Opposition Parties, the difficulties that have arisen threaten the continuance of the whole procedural package or the adoption of further changes.

I will have more to say about the proposals regarding committees and the motion before us, but before leaving this point I would also like to say that for any new proposals to be adopted the Government must make a formal commitment right now that it will be willing to join with the Opposition Parties in making adjustments from time to time during the 10-month experimental life of any changes proposed should further unforeseen problems arise. Yes, the Government's proposals are for an experimental period of only 10 months, but we also know too well that even one week is a long time in politics. The commitment I have sought must be made formally in the House of Commons during the course of this debate.

Dealing with the proposals that are before us, I would like to comment briefly on the proposals dealing with Private Members' Business. For many years, private Members have been frustrated by the system presently in place whereby it is possible for any determined group to prevent any given private Member's proposal from ever coming to a decision. It is highly desirable that at least some degree of relief from this restriction be found, and I know that this is the intent of the Governments proposed changes to the Standing Orders regarding Private Members' Business. However, this is not to say that the method for relieving this frustration should be contrary to the fundamentals of our system.

I am seriously concerned that the system now proposed, even with the changes that have been made since the draft Standing Orders were tabled before Christmas, still could be manipulated in such a way that it would contravene the principle that the Government of the day should and must take responsibility for the process by which important decisions on issues of major national concern are taken, and, even more importantly, the principle that all such proposals are given the fullest possible consideration at all stages before the House is asked to pronounce its final opinion. The proposal as it now stands may still, although not intentionally, threaten these fundamental requirements.

Five hours of House time at the second reading stage of many important legislative initiatives may very often be sufficient, whether the proposal is that of the Government or of a private Member. However, I think Members would agree that it would be clearly inadequate on some issues, and this is especially true regarding issues of great social importance on which decisions will be permitted to depend on the personal views of Members as opposed to Party positions, and on which quite naturally they would require more time than usual for explanations of individual courses of action.

I do recognize that the proposal would require that any item once debated would go to the bottom of the priority list thereby giving opponents and proponents alike a period of weeks if not months in which to alert the public at large as to the nature of the proposition. This, however, does not fully meet the guarantee required that issues of great national import receive the full and complete consideration of the House.

Why do I say this? While there is a maximum number of hours provided for consideration of a proposal at second reading and at the post-committee stages, there is no minimum time.

What is proposed is that 20 Private Members' Bills be selected by lot to have some priority and the committee on Private Members' Business will select six of these which will then actually come to a decision by vote after limited debate. This committee would understandably be composed of a majority of Government supporters, and it will be able not only to select the six Bills that will come to a vote but to determine how much debate they will be allowed on second reading stage up to a maximum of five hours.

The Government's proposal to ensure that there is adequate time for public input on each of these measures is based on the premise that each measure will receive five hours of debate, but this is not the case. This is not what a close reading of the revised proposals to amend the Standing Orders tabled late last week actually say. The committee can decide to give a measure, or all six of the measures no more than one hour's debate each on second reading stage. In that case, the Government's proposal to stretch out the time for consideration through a rotation system to allow the public to become informed and state its position will not come into effect at all.

The Government's proposal, therefore, on this aspect of Private Members' Business, must be changed so that every one of the six measures which will be selected for super priority and be allowed to come to a vote get the full five hours of debate, unless there is unanimous consent by the House to do differently. In short, the five hours must be a minimum and not a maximum time for debate on second reading.

As well, there is no guarantee whatsoever in the proposed Standing Orders regarding how one of these items selected for super priority might be treated in committee, and that Government supporters will not try to ram it through in only one or two committee meetings. These problems are compounded by the element of the proposal whereby the House itself would have no opportunity to debate or alter the decision of a Private Members' Business committee with regard to which items must be brought to a vote and how long they may be debated. There is no procedure in the proposed Standing Orders covering this, and in my view it is not enough to say that the House can change anything by unanimous consent.

Let me be frank. This system, even with the changes made, leaves open the potential for abuse either through manipulation of committee work or other forms of perhaps inadvertent connivance by a Government not willing to assume its responsibility for presenting controversial measures to Parliament. For the proposal for Private Members' Business to be one for which our support could be expected, there must be at least one further change made of the kind about which I have talked. There must be no way for a Private Members' Business committee to decide that a measure selected to come to a vote will receive only one hour's debate in the crucial second reading stage.

I would like now to turn to the proposal for the report stage that, if improperly used, could render that stage redundant and could seriously impair the rights of Members to bring important issues before the whole House for determination. I am seriously concerned about the proposed "Note" to be added to Standing Order 81(10). The report stage is intended to be a final appeal to the House as a whole from a decision of a limited group of members; or, in the case of matters of procedural dispute, from decisions by persons of less experience, knowledge and sophistication than those, with all due respect, we may find in the Chair and at the Table in the House at present.

● (1200)

In my view the present proposal is too strongly phrased. I fear it could be interpreted in a way which would be too rigorously restrictive. If the "Note" were to be interpreted literally and rigorously applied, then our legislative process would be seriously unbalanced and would be considered to be most unfair in its operation. It would certainly be inconsistent with our system of checks and balances and the desire to enhance the role of Private Members, not to mention the role of opposition Parties, for whom presenting amendments is a crucial way to formally state how they think the Government's legislative proposals could be improved and to force the Government to take a stand on their alternatives.

I would now like to turn to the proposals in the Government's motion with respect to standing committees. As I indicated earlier, I have some serious reservations concerning the over-all thrust of the recommendations of the Special Committee with regard to committee structure. I welcome the proposals which would enhance the powers of Standing Committees to initiate investigations on subjects of their own choosing.

As someone who has had the honour of serving in the House in almost every conceivable capacity, including as a private Member in Opposition, as a Private Member on the Government side, as a committee chairman dealing with one of the most important things with which a committee can deal; that is, the decennial revision of the Bank Act, as a Private Member who had once been in Cabinet and was then out while his Government was still in office, and now as House Leader of the Official Opposition—I think I have some perspective which I can honestly bring to these deliberations.

As I have said, while I welcome proposals which would enhance the powers of standing committees to initiate investigations on subjects of their own choosing, I have my personal doubts about the utility of having many small standing committees going about their diverse activities while the legislative work in their fields is parcelled off to separate ad hoc legislative committees.

I believe that if the committee system in place since 1968 were to have the enhanced terms of reference proposed by the special committee, and as set out in the Government's proposals we are discussing today, then they would have greater potential for achieving the goals which we desire. Members wishing to specialize in particular areas may do so in the type of framework I have mentioned without the risk of defusing their related activities on legislative, expenditure and policy matters, whose consideration would be divided between separate standing and legislative committees. I am concerned that the system set out in the proposal could—and I hope it will not if it is adopted—lead Members off on tangents and away from the major issues of the day. In this way they would be diverted from addressing important matters in their chosen fields of interest when they are brought before the House by the Government in the most tangible and meaningful form of parliamentary consideration—the form of legislation.

Everyone recognizes that the most effective and powerful committee system in any deliberative body in the world is that employed in the Congress of the United States. I point out that in Congress there is only a single system of large standing committees, each with a comprehensive mandate over not just investigations but Government expenditure and legislation. In the process each makes ample use of subcommittees.

As I have said, from my own experience here in a whole range of capacities I cannot help but wonder whether the proposed new system will not prove to be merely a way of diverting Members from the real issues when presented in the form of Government legislation. In the long run, unless we are very careful, it could be more frustrating than helpful.

There is no assurance from this Government that when a standing committee is holding an inquiry into a subject that the Government will wait until the inquiry is over before presenting legislation to the House and to an entirely separate legislative committee. The Government has given no assurance that when a standing committee is reviewing a Government policy or an administrative decision it will not go ahead and act in any event before the committee completes its deliberations. An example of this is the way this Government first refused any committee hearings with respect to the sale of de Havilland to Boeing and then later caved in and agreed to hold hearings. However, it said it would not take into account the evidence or conclusions of those committee hearings. It then went ahead and to all intents and purposes closed the deal to sell de Havilland to Boeing two days before the committee completed its work. That is not a very good example of how what the Government is proposing will actually work.

At this point I may as well indicate my Party's and my serious concern about the proposal to limit the kind and number of questions which any Member may have on the Order Paper at any one time. The Government has not taken up the Special Committee's quid pro quo of permitting members of committees studying Estimates to submit a fixed number of written questions in advance, nor has the Government shown any interest in improving the speed with which written questions are now answered. As a result, this new limitation on seeking information could seriously impair the rights of Members to seek information on Government activities. We hope for real assurances from the Government with respect to this matter, not merely in the form of promises but in the form of tangible evidence in the way it tables answers to questions which are now lying on the current Order Paper, in some cases for more than a year.

Also, Mr. Speaker, since you, under the current and proposed rules, can direct someone asking a question during the Oral Question Period to put it on the Order Paper, the Member of Parliament to whom this direction is made can be completely frustrated in his or her efforts, if that Member already has four questions on the Order Paper and the Government is stalling in answering them. That outlet which the rules provide will really be limited.

There are many other areas touched upon by these proposals: the timing of Routine Proceedings, the method of taking divisions, the making of Orders in the House, the provision of a registry of a Member's external travels, and many other important issues. I am sure my colleagues will be addressing all these matters, and others, during this debate.

With respect to the proposal for a registry of a Member's travels outside the country, and the payment for those travels by other Governments or non-governmental organizations, we think there is a major gap. There is no requirement to list trips paid for by the Government when the Government sends Members abroad to represent it, or includes Members on its official delegations; nor do trips taken abroad by Ministers and paid for out of public funds have to be included. This means that the proposal in the form presented today for a registry of a Member's external travel could largely cover travel by opposition MPs, which would give a distorted and perhaps unintentionally misleading picture, since the large amount of travel by Government MPs allegedly on behalf of the Government, or through being a part of Government delegations, would not be included.

With respect to the taking of divisions and the length of time bells can ring before a vote is taken, the Conservatives, when in opposition, argued that the ability to control how long bells ring before a vote is taken is important for an Official Opposition to get a Government too secure in its majority to at least listen—not necessarily to change its legislative proposals in question, but at least to allow more time for debate, to allow committee hearings, or to divide a complex Bill into several simpler and more clear-cut propositions in individual Bills. If the potentially unlimited ringing of bells as a possible parliamentary tactic by an Opposition is to be given up, then surely the Government has to confirm at the very least that it will not abuse its majority and prevent the adequate consideration of major legislation and major administration proposals.

I also want to say that the measure before us would give the Speaker new authority to have Members leave the House when they are what we call being "named". However, the proposal before us goes far beyond what is recommended, if I am not mistaken, in the report of the special committee. It not only says, Mr. Speaker, that you can suspend an Hon. Member from the service of the House without motion for the balance of the day, but also if this happens on a second occasion you can do so for a period of five days without any recourse or appeal to the House as a whole. I must say, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to you, and all future incumbents of the Chair, that this goes beyond the recommendation of the Special Committee, and we certainly think it is excessive.

If these proposals, like any reforms, are to work, it will depend on a great deal of effort and good will, especially on the part of the Government. On this point, I look at this Government's track record and, contrary to what the Government House Leader has said, it is not encouraging. I have already mentioned as one example the way in which the Government handled the de Havilland case without due regard to Parliament.

There is an even more troubling indication of the Government's intentions and purposes. I refer to what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in Montreal just yesterday, as reported in a Canadian press dispatch. The Prime Minister was talking about his good friend, Ronald Reagan, the President of the United States, when he said, and I quote: "He doesn't have to face the House of Commons every day. It's an almost ideal situation". Let me repeat that. The Prime Minister, who should be the first among Parliamentarians, said in Montreal last night when speaking of Ronald Reagan: "He doesn't have to face the House of Commons every day. It's an almost ideal situation".

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): If this is what the Prime Minister, who is and should be the first among Parliamentarians, thinks about Parliament, how can we have any real confidence in the Government's intentions with respect to these reform proposals and the way in which the Government would operate if this, or any other package of reform, were to be adopted? If the Prime Minister is going to ignore the Canadian people by ignoring their elected representatives in Parliament, and if he is secretly hankering for the U.S. presidential system, let him be more forthright. Let his Government propose changes in Parliament which will establish not just those changes he wants but all of the checks and balances of the presidential and congressional system.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, what happened to the supposed interest of the Government in lessening the necessity for the confidence of the House to be at stake every time the Government presents a proposal? That is not in these proposals anywhere at all and was not, as far as I recall, anywhere in the speech of the Government House Leader. Let us be frank, if the private Members' role is to be enhanced, one of the prerequisites is that the Government make a formal commitment that it is going to have much less recourse in insisting that the confidence of the House and, therefore, the future of the Government is at stake when Government measures are proposed. That is not a problem in the American system which is liked so well by the Prime Minister. After all, those members stay for a fixed period of time no matter what happens to the Government's legislation. But we have nothing from the Government House Leader on this matter.

In our House of Commons, the Opposition Parties as well as individual private Members have to be able to check and hold to account the executive in order that its actions be properly scrutinized, in order to be able to alter Government legislation and in order to present and have considered meaningful alternatives. The Prime Minister cannot surreptitiously or openly try to weaken the existing parliamentary system on the one hand and, on the other hand, have his House Leader talk about strengthening the role of private Members and of Parliament itself.

The Government House Leader talked earlier this morning about how his Government wants to make Parliament once again the centre of the real consideration of the great issues of the day. But this is not what the Prime Minister said yesterday in Montreal. He said just the opposite. And who speaks for the Government? In our parliamentary system it is still the case that first and foremost it is the Prime Minister and he has just, in effect, cancelled out the well intended, I trust, words of the Government House Leader.

The first step to real parliamentary reform is for the Prime Minister and his Ministers to commit to be in Parliament regularly and frequently to answer to the House, and they have a lot to answer for already.

The Official Opposition and I favour parliamentary reform, real reform, but we received the latest version of the Government's package only late last week and a more detailed study of these proposals has raised new and serious questions in our minds. These questions have been enhanced in concern and intensity by the intemperate and troubling words of the Prime Minister last night. We believe in parliamentary reform but these new questions have been raised and we have not yet received the answers.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) on his excellent speech. I would like to refer him to the "Note" which appears on page 1666 wherein you, Mr. Speaker, seem to be put in an extremely difficult position when it comes to the report stage of a Bill. The Speaker is expected to judge and determine motions which are of exceptional significance and to determine whether or not they would warrant further consideration at that report stage. Would the Hon. Member for Windsor West care to comment as to the difficulty the Speaker would encounter in making such a political decision?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the very concept of a committee is that it is a smaller body to which a question is referred by a larger body. The committee is subordinate to the larger body. The proposal of the Government turns that on its head, because it states that normally the House as a whole will not be able to overturn decisions of what is supposed to be its subordinate body on matters of procedure, and normally will not be able to deal with questions which came before the committee in the form of amendments. As I have said, I believe this turns the basic concept of what a committee is on its head.

It might be argued that there is an escape clause for the Speaker to avoid the problems mentioned by the Hon. Member because the direction to the Speaker has the word "normally" included in it. But what does "normally" mean? It means that the usual, customary, every-day practice is to do what is in the instructions. Therefore, every time a report stage comes forward, there is a risk that the incumbent of the Chair, the Speaker, will have to make a decision—which can well be attacked as being political—to not allow an amendment ruled out of order in the committee to be argued and considered again on its acceptability from the point of view of the rules in the full House, nor in allowing the House as a whole to take a look at an amendment which was presented in the committee.

The Speaker already has the authority, which he uses, to group amendments, and this has saved a lot of time on report stage. It seems to me that we have to give serious consideration as to whether the need is simply a more active use of the authority the Speaker already has to group amendments, rather than putting the Speaker into what could be an untenable position of making decisions which will inevitably run the risk of being considered political because they deal with the merits of amendments as well as their acceptability under the rules rather than some mechanical grouping or organization of the debate.

I think there is peril in this amendment for the rights of the individual Member of Parliament and for Members organized in Parties to have their views considered formally in the form of amendments. Perhaps, in the long run, there is an even more serious threat to the position of the Chair and the appearance and reality it must have of complete impartiality.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one or two quick comments and then ask the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) a question. The remarks of the Hon. Member reminded me of the words of the philosopher: "All is yellow to the jaundiced eye". This reform package may not be perfect, but it is so much better than anything we have had before that every Hon. Member should be dancing with joy. We are not saying it is perfect, but it is certainly a tremendous move forward.

With reference to questions on the Order Paper, I would like to remind the Hon. Member for Windsor West that I had a question on the Order Paper from 1980 until 1985 and never got an answer. At least we are moving ahead with the answers to questions on the Order Paper. My question was not too difficult. All I wanted to know was how many defeated Liberal candidates had been invited to the dinner for President Reagan. It was a very simple question, but I could not get answer in four and a half years.

The last point I would like to make has regard to Private Members' Bills. The proposed reforms represent a tremendous advance in this area. I look forward to the day when we will no longer be talking out important Bills. The Hon. Member mentioned that we should have a minimum period of debate. I would like him to enlarge on that. If no one wants to discuss a Bill, why require a minimum time for debate? If Members do want to discuss it, they can continue for the maximum time, but to impose a minimum time would be defeating the whole purpose. People would be talking simply for the sake of talking. Would the Hon. Member enlarge on what he meant when he said that there should be a minimum time for debate on Private Members', Bills?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who just spoke showed why it was important for me to make the comments which I made previously. He himself has raised what could be a problem, which we on the Opposition side have identified, with respect to the proposal regarding Private Members' Business. Under the Government's proposal the Private Members' Business committee can select six measures of the 20 that are selected by lot, which will be decided upon through a vote. A majority of Members on that committee can say that one of those six measures need only have one hour of debate, or may have a maximum of five hours.

The Hon. Member's House Leader has recognized the concern of opposition Members that the proposal for bringing Private Members' Business to a vote could be used to slip through the House, without adequate debate, a major matter which, first, should be one for which the Government at least takes the responsibility of bringing before the House and, second, there is assurance that it has at least as much debate as a minor Bill normally has under our rules when presented by the Government.

The way this is written, if the majority of the members of that Private Members' Business committee agree, the protection which the Government itself said is necessary to prevent something from slipping through the House without adequate debate of at least five hours, those five hours being strung out over a series of weeks, will not take place. If the Private Members' Business committee formed by a majority, in this case, of Government Members, say that a measure needs only one hour of debate, the protection which his own Government House Leader says is necessary will not come into play. The very first time debate on second reading on one of these six measures comes up in the House there will have to be a vote after one hour, if that is what the committee has decided. There will not be rotation with the other measures which require debate before coming to a vote.

I urge my hon. friend to look at the real concern which I have expressed, not simply because I have expressed it, but because his own House Leader has agreed with what I have said. I, in a constructive way, have been trying to point out a way to help the Government better achieve what it feels is necessary to achieve.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) a question about the proposal with respect to the power of the Speaker to name Members of this House. The Member for Windsor West indicated in his comments that he believed the proposal was excessive. I agree with the Member and I have some very serious concerns about the proposal which, as I understand, was not a proposal by the committee, but was a government proposal.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, there is no greater right of a Member of Parliament than to sit here in the House of Commons. That right is the result of being elected by one's constituents in a general election. That is the greatest right, and I believe that that right should be taken away in only very extraordinary circumstances. Who should have the right to remove a Member from the House? Ultimately, the electors in any particular constituency should have the right to remove a Member from the House. In my view, only the House should have the ultimate right to remove a Member between elections.

With all due respect, Sir, this proposal gives you ultimate authority to decide whether a Member should continue to sit in the House. I do not think that is right. Given the fact that it is on ultimate right, only one's peers in the House should be given the authority to remove one from the House. Under the present system the Speaker can name a particular Member and, on motion, that Member can be removed from the House or suspended for the day. One's peers have to make that decision. The Government is proposing that the Speaker be given the authority to name a Member without resort to motion, not only for one sitting day, but for up to five days on a second naming.

Will the Member for Windsor West expand upon his comments with respect to his position that this proposal is excessive? Does the Member agree with me that the ultimate authority to suspend a Member from the House should rest with other Members in the House of Commons?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, there are arguments on both sides. As a practical matter, the suspension by the Speaker of a Member for the balance of a sitting for alleged misconduct in the House is almost automatic now. The custom is—and I have never seen it happen differently—that when a Speaker names a Member the Government House Leader automatically moves a motion to support the Speaker and all the Government Members vote with him. As a practical matter, a proposal limited to the right of a Speaker to have someone suspended from the House for the balance of a day's sitting does not really change what is happening now. However, it will prevent the naming of a Member and the vote on that naming from blanking out a Question Period, if the incident takes place during Question Period. I think we would agree that for all Members, especially Members in Opposition, the ability to question the Government is something very important and precious.

• (1230)

Finally, I repeat what I said in my speech, that I do not believe there are grounds for giving the Speaker, the incumbent of the Chair, the right to suspend a Member for five days during a sitting on being named a second time. I believe that is excessive, although I can see arguments pro and con for the Speaker being able to name someone on his own accord for the balance of a day. I believe the Speaker in the United Kingdom House of Commons can do that at the present time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments have now terminated.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, this could be a great day for Parliament. I say that it could be because there are a number of conditions attached to that hopeful prediction. My hope arises from the work I have been involved in since being appointed to the Lefebvre Committee on Parliamentary Reform and subsequently the Special Committee on Reform of the House chaired by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath).

In order for this to be a significant day, we must continue the spirit of flexibility, accommodation, compromise and non-partisan debate that accompanied this process since its beginning and should these reforms be adopted, Members of Parliament, both individually and collectively, whether in committee or in the House, will have to actively use these new powers to create a new Parliament. They will, as the popular expression has it, have to "go for it".

May I also suggest that what we have here is only half the package of parliamentary reform. The Government House Leader has acknowledged that we are dealing with the procedural half of parliamentary reform and that there are still nearly 30 recommendations of the committee with which to deal. Outstanding reforms include administrative reform of the House, the organization of Parliament Hill itself, the recommendations concerning broadcasting of the House of Commons and sound availability in committees. That was a recommendation in our second report which has yet to proceed. Other recommendations include the expansion of the CBC parliamentary channel into a Canadian equivalent of C-SPAN. I suggest the adoption of these recommendations would go a long way to better informing the public about Parliament. I understand that on Friday the Government House Leader made a commitment to proceed with these recommendations.

Although this motion is a Government proposal, we are dealing with a procedural package which is very close to what the committee recommended. In some ways it is unfortunate that we must deal with this motion as a Government proposal because it may provoke a somewhat partisan debate. However, even members of the committee had second thoughts and wanted the Government to change some recommendations so that dealing with this motion as a Government proposal was unavoidable. Otherwise, it would have been necessary to adopt the committee's procedural recommendations without incorporating any of the changes recommended by committee members and other Members of the House.

It is unfortunate that the Government did not rely enough on experts who were close to the work of the committee in preparing its procedural package. The Government could perhaps have saved itself some problems in attempting to devise the Standing Orders. In that respect, I think the process could have been better. Furthermore, it is important to note that this motion is the result of consultation rather than negotiation.

The Government has demonstrated some flexibility because it has dealt with many of the criticisms we raised last fall. My greatest criticism concerned parliamentary secretaries sitting on Standing Committees. The proposed Standing Orders strictly prohibit this from taking place. In addition, I am grateful that the Government House Leader has dropped his proposal to have the Government define "confidence", in the myriad and convoluted ways once contemplated by the Government House Leader. Thank God for that.

The Government has also demonstrated a welcome flexibility in meeting the objection raised by my colleagues about the description of Private Members' Business as it appeared in the proposed Standing Orders just before Christmas. If those Standing Orders had been adopted at that time it would have been possible for the five hours that might be allocated to a votable item to be allocated consecutively by the Special Committee on Private Members' Business. I understand that this would not be possible under the present Standing Orders and that a Bill which was allocated five hours would be debated one hour at a time with a full nineteen hours of Private Members' Business in between those hours. If I understand correctly, if Private Members' Business could not be dealt with we would revert to Government business. This reflects a concern of my caucus that there be appropriate "political time" for Private Members' Business.

The committee was also cognizant of the fact that if private Members were to be given the new responsibility of being able to cause a Bill to come to a division and, if passed, become law, the process should have some of the same safeguards accorded to Government legislation. This safeguard gives the public enough time to mobilize and react to certain legislation. Such a requirement to prevent Private Members' Bills from being quickly passed applies to all legislation that comes to the House. Private Members' Business is not being singled out. I am pleased that the Government has moved in that respect.

The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) made a good technical point, that the possibility still exists that the committee on Private Members' Business could make a bad decision and allot only one hour for a matter that deserves five hours of deliberation. This is something the Government might consider because, without sounding naive, the consideration for the allotment of time for many of these questions depends to a great extent on respect on the part of the chairman and members of that committee for what should be debated for the maximum amount of time. Our committee operated in a co-operative and trusting environment and tended to make recommendations with such an atmosphere in mind. We know that such an environment will not always exist, and I suggest the Government consider the point made by the Hon. Member for Windsor West.

I remind the House that the Private Members' Business Committee is intended to be appointed by the Speaker rather than the Government, and that the chairman of the committee will be someone who is selected from the panel of committee chairmen. In many respects then this committee is not an arm of the Government, although it will consist of a majority of government Members. The concerns of the Member for Windsor West and the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) warrant consideration, but the success of this proposal ultimately depends on whether we live up to the spirit of the reform or simply maintain the same old attitude.

In this respect I say to Government Members, whether they be cabinet members or backbenchers, that a lot—the future, the vitality and the integrity of Parliament—will depend on the extent to which you allow this reform to work in keeping with the spirit of the reform itself, not letting short-term political considerations get in the way of what could be a very, very exciting new era for the Canadian Parliament. Much depends, as I say, on the attitude the Government takes to these reforms.

I would like to add some caveats about what has been recommended by the Government; concern, for instance, is in order about the Standing Orders having to do with report stage amendments. I am not so concerned about the ability of the Speaker to rule out amendments that have already been considered in committee. That is something the committee recommended, and I stand by that recommendation. In that sense, as I understand it, we are only going back to a system that was in place some time ago.

I think though that the Speaker ought to have a little more flexibility than is given to him by the proposed Standing Orders. The Speaker should be able to look at an amendment that was considered out of order in committee which in the Speaker's judgment was a bad ruling, because there is such a thing as human imperfection. The Speaker should, in my view, have the flexibility to say that, notwithstanding what happened in the committee, something might be brought forward again, even though ruled out of order in committee. I ask the Government to consider that suggestion.

When I ask the Government to consider these things I am not necessarily asking it to consider them in the context of amending the proposal that we have before us today, but to consider these changes on the assumption that they are going to say or do what the Hon. Member for Windsor West asked, i.e. give a commitment that as we move along, even within the experimental period, there be an ability and a willingness to change things and to say: "Yes, we should have covered that, but we did not. Let us change it." I think that is the kind of spirit we need as we enter into this experimental period.

I see the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is here now. Let me say that I hope the Government will, as we enter into this experimental period, be open to things we discover as we go along. It does not matter how much effort you give to the drafting of these Standing Orders, there is always an odd wrinkle here and there that no one ever thought of, and I think it is very important the Government move with that attitude in mind.

Some of the ways in which the Government's proposal is different from what the committee recommended also need to be put on the record. For instance, substitution on committees. The committee recommended that members be made permanent members of the smaller standing commitees and they, and they alone, have the ability to designate their substitute. That had to do with the notion of building up a sense of tenure on a committee.

The Government has recommended that people who are appointed to these committees be able to name a group of five from which they could draw for substitution. This group of five has to be signified by the whip of the Party in question, depending on which Member is affected. We have two problems. One, we still have the whips involved and that could erode the independence of the member on the committee. Second, we also have the problem of what do independents do. We have an independent Member in this Parliament, at least so called. What does an independent Member do in terms of getting a list of five people to substitute for him on committee? That is just one of a few problems that I wanted to put on the record.

With respect to questions, Mr. Speaker, and this is very important, here is where you clearly run into the dangers of tampering with the package the reform committee put together. On the face of it, limiting Members to four questions on the Order Paper at any given time looks like a very severe restriction of Members' ability to ask questions. I say, I think fairly, that it is more of a restriction on Members who were in the habit of using the Order Paper for questions. It is not something of which I have done a lot so I probably will not feel it as much as other people who have been very successful at using this route for calling attention to issues, but the committee agreed to that, Mr. Speaker, because there was a trade off. We agreed because at the same time in our package we allowed for Members to submit 10 written questions on the Estimates on whatever committee they happened to be working. It was the trade-off, a quid pro quo or whatever it is called. I think the Government has made a mistake in tampering with that recommendation. It made the package more unacceptable to people who were looking to find things wrong with it by giving them a kind of legitimate thing on which to hang their hat. I do not know why we could not have gone ahead with the 10 written questions proposal.

I am glad to see some of the cleaning up that has been done on previous proposals that were adopted. Some of the problems came, admittedly, because the Government adopted the committee's recommendations holus-bolus, particularly the problems that came with legislative committees. The committee had recommended that legislative committees be made up of 20 members. The Government adopted the committee's report and so we got legislative committees made up of 20 members.

We have now in these new Standing Orders, if they are adopted, more flexibility. We could have larger legislative committees. I hope we do not, Mr. Speaker. I hope that a 30 member committee will be used only for constitutional amendments or something like that. I hope we will see smaller legislative committees. I also hope that whoever speaks for the Government next will say why there appears to be no attempt to establish some sort of traffic control with respect to legislative committees.

Does the Government have some process in mind which could be reached between the Parties outside of the Standing Orders for limiting the number of legislative committees, or is this just an oversight? I hope the next person who speaks for the Government will indicate what the Government intends to do about a problem that I believe was raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) having to do with the proliferation of legislative committees.

Finally, some advice to the Government on today's proceedings. If these proposals are adopted, if the spirit of these proposals is lived up to and if in the coming weeks and months the appropriate changes are made when we discover things that were not apparent to us when we passed the Standing Orders, we will be entering into a whole new area of parliamentary politics, a whole new parliamentary process.

I think the Government should consider that it is all right for the House to take the time it needs to have everything said that Members feel should be said before this proposal comes to a vote or to an agreement, whatever the case may be. I hope that is something we could do unanimously or at least by consensus. I think it is very important that it not only be seen to be done that way but that it genuinely be that. For that reason I encourage the Government to listen carefully to the various reservations that, Members have about the proposal before them. I hope the Government will do what it can immediately in terms of actual changes, or commitments that it will be possible for changes to be made. The Government should do what it can about that today.

● (1250)

I also encourage Hon. Members on my right, in the Liberal Party, to see their way through some of the understandable reservations which come from their day-to-day dealings with the Government and to seek a higher ground. I encourage them to try to see this process through to completion. As one who has been involved with it—it seems since time immemorial—I hope we can bring at least one important stage of parliamentary reforms, and there are others to go, to completion today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to enter the debate very briefly. I realize I only have a few moments, and I will not take many more than that. I should begin by complimenting the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) for the tremendous role which he played in this major initiative in parliamentary reform. I pay tribute as well to all members of the committee, to the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) who played a very significant role in developing what is an historic intervention on behalf of parliamentarians with regard to the evolution and reform of our institution, the House of Commons, and, of course, to the very distinguished Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) who has led, with great leadership and sensitivity, Members of the House of Commons to unanimous recommendations with regard to the reform of this fundamental institution. I salute his leadership and the great distinction which he brings to himself and to the House with this report on reform of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Hon. Members will recall that in the Speech from the Throne the Government outlined its intentions to embarks upon a process of parliamentary reform in the following words:

> First, you must critically examine the relationship of Parliament with the people of Canada. Members of the House of Commons will be asked to approve the appointment of a parliamentary task force on reform . . . The central focus of this task force will be the enhancement of the role of the private member. From that perspective the task force will examine and make recommendations concerning the powers, practices, organization and resources of the Commons.

I would remind the House as well that in September, 1985, I announced a broad package of reform initiatives, including a review of Order in Council appointments by a standing committe of the House. Last fall, again, the Government announced a register of interests by Members of Parliament and a proposal for a register of lobbyists. Let me point out that the amendments before the House represent a consensus reached after consultation with representatives of the Opposition Parties.

[Translation]

Those, Mr. Speaker, were the specific recommendations formulated by the Committee. I admit that I was impressed by the role of a Member of Parliament when I came here for the first time in September 1983, which makes me a very junior Member compared with a Member who has now been sitting in the House for twenty-eight years, and I am referring to the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), and there are many more. I was greatly influenced by some of my reactions and observations, and that is why I decided to take action shortly after I was sworn in as Prime Minister. Let me explain:

[English]

One of the first things which struck me as I entered the House of Commons for the first time, as Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, was the fact that this represented democracy, these were the leaders of communities across Canada and yet, in point of fact, the Member of Parliament had less influence in the decision-making process in this town than an Assistant Deputy Minister of any given Department. The erosion of influence and authority which has taken place over the years, as the bureaucracy usurped the executive functions in the decision-making process of the Member of Parliament, was something that had to be arrested and turned around so that once and for all there was a reaffirmation of the principle, dulled over the years, that this House, even with its imperfections, stands tribute to the nobility of the parliamentary system and is the authority of the elected Member of Parliament over the executive at all times and in all circumstances.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I make no pretence as a relatively new Member of Parliament to great understandings of some of the arcane rules which have governed our conduct over the years. I know that people watching us from time to time have difficulty understanding why certain things take place, as do I. I know that most people would agree, for example, that the way Question Period has evolved, and television in the House, have both served to distort and detract from the tremendous contributions in committee made by the backbench Members of Parliament, the contributions which they make to enriching the parliamentary process. However, that is life, and that is the way it has evolved and nothing will change it.

This will throw more light on the parliamentary process. It will enhance and strengthen our democracy, as do initiatives such as that brought forward by the Hon. Member who preceded me. The basis of parliamentary reform—all we are trying to do, and no one says that it is perfect—is to respond in some ways to the present situation.

[Translation]

—the heartfelt concerns, because they were indeed heartfelt, the concerns I read as formulated by my hon. friend from Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), who, I am sure, was speaking for many Members of this House. I found a passage quoted in the very beginning of the McGrath Report on Parliamentary Reform, and it was quoted from something Mr. Blaikie had said:

[English]

I think one of the reasons why a lot of people run for Parliament is that they feel they have something to say. I always thought that if I could just get to say these things in the House of Commons, that would be significant, it would matter . . . However, since I have come to Ottawa, everything I say is suspect, if it is listened to at all. So there is this incredible frustration. What ought to be the pinnacle of exchange of ideas is in fact the black hole in which nobody listens to anybody.

I could not have said it better myself.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I think that comment points out the frustration, and it is a comment tinged with realism. What the Hon. Member was saying to the committee and to all Members of the House of Commons was: "Help me and my colleagues elevate parliamentary debate; help us make once again the Parliament of Canada that instrument of magnificence it once was and can become again, if the role of the Member of Parliament is enhanced". Somebody once said in the House of Commons that Members of Parliament are nobodies when they get outside the House. I say that Members of Parliament are somebodies inside this House and outside this House at all times.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I want to say to my hon. friend that that was not a partisan comment. I can understand. If the term was used, I did not construe it as pejorative because in point of fact the erosion which has taken place over the decades and over the years with regard to the attributions, the responsibilities, the influence and the power of the Member of Parliament, has served to diminish the Member and, in so doing, has served to weaken the House of Commons, and when the House of Commons is weakened, democracy suffers.

What we have tried to do, imperfectly no doubt, is to reach out to the best instincts of Members of the House and say as a new Government, as we did: We can do better. We can arrest the decline of the House of Commons and we can elevate debate. We can make the role of Members more meaningful. We can make certain that Members participate in a substantial way in the decision-making process. We can make sure that when a Member of Parliament from Winnipeg, the North Shore, Cape Breton or Vancouver Island comes to Ottawa, he or she comes to Ottawa to set great questions of national policy, not to respond to the whims of bureaucrats. That is what happened and that is what now must be reversed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I think, as I look at it, Your Honour, we have let the symbol of democracy slip. We now have an opportunity to accept this tremendous document of reform, brought about by the Hon. Member for St. John's East, the Hon. Member for Papineau and their colleagues from the NDP. I say to you, Sir, that though imperfect, this is a splendid document, the acceptance of which will bring honour to the House of Commons, will bring honour to each and every Member.

[Translation]

But above all, it will bring honour to our Canadian democratic system and to all those who are a part of that system.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

SOVIET UNION—RELEASE OF ANATOLY SHCHARANSKY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, today is a day of triumph for human rights activists. Today is the day that gives hope to all who work from depth of heart and genuine concern on issues of man's humanity towards his fellow man. Today is a lesson learned about respect for conviction, personal strength of courage, and ability to cope with intolerance when one's firm belief in the right to practise one's religion freely and the right to rejoin one's family, wherever they may live, is not respected.

Today is a day of celebration as we witness an end to injustice with the release from Russian internment of Anatoly Shcharansky. We rejoice as he crossed to freedom rejoining his wife Avital.

Today we are witness to an act of faith, of hope, and of tenacity by thousands of people throughout the world who took heart with the signing of the Helsinki Accord, but lost hope as the Soviets disregarded their responsibility and obligations as co-signators.

As an early activist and organizer of public demonstrations in the interest of Soviet Jewry, as a member of the Interfaith Task Force of the Canadian Jewish Congress, I take this opportunity to thank the Parliament of Canada, its senior Ministers, and individual Members of Parliament who have brought the issue of Anatoly and of Soviet Jewry to the attention of Soviet ambassadors, leaders at the United Nations, as well as in the Soviet Union.

Today Canadians may take pride in knowing that their efforts have sensitized the Soviets to the importance of the issue of human rights and the emigration of Soviet Jews in the eyes of the western world, as well as leading to the release of Anatoly Shcharansky.

FINANCE

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY TASK FORCE ON TAX SYSTEM

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, as you know, the New Democratic Party has been asking Canadians to make their views known on our tax system through the Tax Probe 86 Task Force chaired by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). What they have found so far is an existing tax system that rewards the rich and punishes middle and low-income earners. For example, advertisements appearing in the Financial Post, the Financial Times and The Globe and Mail, inserted by companies such as Wood Gundy, tell wealthy Canadians that they are able to arrange their tax reports so that they will pay no income tax on an income of $42,000 through the use of the dividend tax credit and other deductions. They can own a cruiser with 100 per cent borrowed funds generating $165,000 in tax deductions over four years. They can invest $12,500 in a hotel and receive a 60 per cent tax write-off in one year and the balance in the next.

The Task Force also knows that the average Canadian family is paying $1,000 a year more from the tax changes in the last Conservative Budget, and that single unemployed Canadians will be paying federal income tax on as little as $7,000 received in unemployment insurance benefits, that is presuming that they still qualify to receive UI. No wonder ordinary Canadians are telling Tax Probe 86 that they want a tax system that is simpler, fairer, and more efficient. That is exactly what this NDP task force will be recommending to Parliament in the months ahead.

THE MONARCHY

THIRTY-FOURTH ANNIVERSARY OF HER MAJESTY'S ACCESSION TO THE THRONE

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, this year is the thirty-fourth anniversary of Queen Elizabeth's accession to the Throne and means her reign in Canada has been the longest in Confederation. In a time when monarchists are becoming fewer, her hold on the affection of Canadians has become more secure. When we patriated our Constitution a few years ago, there was no challenge to continuing the monarchy in Canada. One reason for this was the Queen herself. During these 34 years she has been a model of service to country and devotion to family. She has exemplified the virtues of toleration and adaptability that have made Canada an island of stability in a world of turbulence.

Where other rulers must flee in the night, she remains welcome to our shores. From coast to coast Canadians know this is a better country because we still say "God save the Queen!"

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CRIMES COMMITTED BY PAROLEES

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Almost daily Canadians read newspaper stories about criminals who have been released on parole and repeat violent offences similar to those which they committed previously. We heard the other day of a Scarborough man, on parole after serving 26 months of a 7-year sentence for manslaughter, violently raping a former girlfriend. On the same day we heard of a 19-year-old drifter on probation for sexual offences who attacked and raped a woman beside her three-year-old son. Such sexual offences are violent, despicable acts of human barbarism. In many countries, such acts carry the death penalty.

• (1405)

In Canada today many criminals are being released with little evidence of true reform, and mandatory supervision and parole regulations often allow criminals to get back to the streets where they are a threat to our society.

This Parliament should deal effectively with this issue. We have a moral obligation to initiate effective and compassionate programs for victims not only of rape but of many other serious offences which leave permanent scars on the victims. In many cases Canada's criminal justice system forgets about the suffering of victims. If we believe in justice, fairness, and the law, we owe our society not just prevention but compassion for those who suffer from the acts of barbaric human beings.

SOVIET UNION—TRIBUTE TO ANATOLY SHCHARANSKY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate and offer my best wishes to Anatoly Shcharansky who was today released from the Soviet Union. Anatoly Shcharansky is a leader of Soviet Jews whose role in that country of monitoring the Helsinki Final Accord brought him into direct conflict with the Government and led to his imprisonment.

The courage and bravery of this one individual who endured the pressures of the entire Soviet system to change the principles for which he stood, are a symbol not only for Jews around the world but for people everywhere who believe that basic human rights cannot be trampled. His is a triumph of the human spirit.

I wish also to pay tribute to his wife, Avital Shcharansky, who has for the past eight years travelled around the world so many times to meet with world leaders and with concerned people everywhere, on behalf of her husband and Soviet Jews. Her travels also brought her to Canada where she and her husband have thousands of friends and supporters. Her long journey on behalf of her husband is now over, and I think we all wish her and her husband a period of peace and rest.

However, the long journey for Soviet Jews who have been denied basic rights of movement, of association and of religious freedom, is not over.

[Translation]

There are still thousands of Jews in the Soviet Union. I think the Government of Canada and governments throughout the world should continue to pressure the Soviet authorities, so that Jews living in that country are treated fairly, as human beings, which includes having the right to emigrate if they so desire.

[English]

We do not know yet if Mr. Shcharansky's release marks a change in Soviet policy toward dissidents, but today we can hope and give thanks that one man's agony is at last over.

SOVIET UNION—RELEASE OF ANATOLY SHCHARANSKY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I too want to say something about today's important news concerning the release of Anatoly Shcharansky. The release of Mr. Shcharansky today took place in the context of an exchange of spies between the Soviet Union and the United States and he was inappropriately included in this category.

It is of course true that the only offence Mr. Shcharansky ever committed in his life was his insistence in the Soviet Union that the Accord reached at Helsinki be observed. Mr. Shcharansky is anything but a spy. He has set an example for the world of what it means to be a courageous human being in pursuit of human liberties.

We in the Canadian House of Commons note Mr. Shcharansky's release with a great deal of pleasure. Many of us remember meeting his wife some years ago here in Ottawa when she visited our country as a part of her international attempt to obtain the release of her husband.

I conclude by simply observing that the release of Mr. Shcharansky is an important landmark for human liberty in the Soviet Union. We want to underline, however, that there remain thousands of other citizens in the Soviet Union who would like to have the same liberty. The Canadian Government, and indeed myself, on behalf of Canadians have in the past year presented a list to the Soviet Union of other citizens we would like to see obtain freedom.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's 90 seconds have expired.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

CAPE BRETON—ANNOUNCEMENT OF PLANT LOCATION IN RICHMOND COUNTY

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, I rise to comment on the economy of Cape Breton and eastern Nova Scotia. It is important to understand one thing about this region, and that is that the economic problems of the region were not created in the last 15 months. The problems were created over the last 20 years under the Grit Government that preceded us.

When I grew up in the region there was an unemployment rate of 40 per cent in my home town. The Liberals only knew how to pass out grants, just enough to get through the next election. They succeeded for years; but in the process they destroyed the confidence of these people, never giving them a chance to prove themselves—never deciding to push ahead in a meaningful way with determination to solve the problem.

• (1410)

Our Government has decided to solve the problem. We have achieved a remarkable level of success. For example, a major plant has been announced for Richmond County in Cape Breton, the first major private sector announcement in decades—that's progress! Another major announcement is set for Guysborough County in the near future, the first in decades for that region. That is also progress. We are proving that there is another way—a better way.

We are funding construction of a nautical institute to the tune of $18 million. We have committed $150 million to Sydney Steel. We have committed $40 million to clean up the tar ponds in Sydney, and millions more have been committed to the community of Glace Bay for community improvement and to replace a fish plant. These are the facts.

I want to assure the Grits, who are delighting in the hardship of these people, that they are accountable for having neglected—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

NEW QUEBEC—ROLE PLAYED BY NATIVE PEOPLES

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members must realize that economic development is one of this Government's priorities.

The economic development of New Quebec is a particular challenge, not only because of the size of the region but also because the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement and the Northeast Quebec Agreement have established unique systems that affect the ways in which we can provide for economic development in New Quebec. These two agreements were the first two native land claims settlements in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to be able to inform Hon. Members that work has started on co-ordinating economic development in New Quebec. Representatives of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development are now negotiating with representatives of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion so that the native people in New Quebec can take better advantage of the Regional Economic Development Agreement between Canada and Quebec. Meetings are also being held on a regular basis with the Cree, Inuit and Naskapi to discuss opportunities for economic development.

Mr. Speaker, our greatest hope for economic development in New Quebec lies in the energy and the will to succeed of the native people themselves. Hon. Members may have read in the press about the entrepreneurship and successful business ventures of the Cree in Quebec. Their holding company, Creeco based in Val d'Or, manages funds for vast commercial enterprises, and they have some very ambitious projects in aviation and construction. Activities are co-ordinated by a regional Cree organization which has recently been given administrative responsibilities by the Department of Indian Affairs and Norther— Development

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

LIBERAL PARTY

ELECTION SUCCESS IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am proud to announce in the House today that the New Brunswick Liberal Party has just won a great victory in the by-election held in Edmundston yesterday, a riding considered to be a Conservative bastion and a barometer of electoral trends, which makes this Liberal victory even more significant.

The rise of the Liberal Party in New Brunswick, like that of the Liberal Party across this country, proves that people have confidence and identify with the Liberal Party. The poor performance of the Progressive Conservative Party, both provincially and nationally, has made people realize that this party no longer meets their expectations.

[English]

Yesterday's Liberal victory in the provincial by-election in Edmundston is an example of what will happen throughout New Brunswick when the provincial Tories dare to call a general election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robichaud: The Liberal candidate, Roland Beaulieu, easily defeated his Tory rival by a two-to-one margin. It is truly a remarkable victory and a tribute to the leadership provided by Frank McKenna.

The people of New Brunswick are coming to a new era—an era of responsible leadership under Frank McKenna.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

THREE-YEAR SENTENCE FOR BOY CONVICTED OF THREE MURDERS

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, Canadians were outraged and horrified to learn that a 15-year-old boy in Scarborough will receive three years' punishment for killing three people. The three-year sentence for three murders is, I believe, a travesty of justice. Yet under the Young Offenders Act that is the maximum allowable sentence.

• (1415)

What kind of signal does a case like this send to young people across Canada? Does it tell them that killing is wrong and that criminals are severely punished for crimes they commit? What do we as lawmakers say to the victims of crime who suffer the traumatic consequences of criminal activity? What do we say to the relatives of the seven-year old girl this boy brutally killed?

The Defence Council in this case was quoted as saying: "As a human being, I have difficulty with the sentence. Three years for three murders is hard to accept". Indeed it is.

I applaud the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) for the commitment he has made to reform the sentencing provisions in the Young Offenders Act and I urge him to pursue those reforms as quickly and expeditiously as possible. Canadians can wait no longer.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

CONTENT OF FORTHCOMING BUDGET

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I direct my question to the Prime Minister. In last year's Budget the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister proposed the largest tax increase in Canadian history, and most of it was hidden; hidden gas tax increases, hidden family allowance cuts, and hidden deindexation of the tax system. Will the Prime Minister give an undertaking to the House that there will not again be these types of sneaky tax grabs but that the Minister of Finance will be open and straightforward in his approach to taxes?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance is always very open and straightforward in everything he does. These are, of course, value judgments which have to be exercised and articulated, and in so doing the record indicates whether one is right or wrong. I can remember when the Minister of Finance stood here on November 8, 1984, and made a very important Economic Statement. The Leader of the Opposition predicted that as a result of that statement and economic policy there would be a loss of some 100,000 jobs. In point of fact 580,000 jobs have been created.

GAP BETWEEN THE RICH AND THE POOR

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to present not a value judgment to the Prime Minister but a statistical fact, namely, the growing gap between the rich and the poor. Last year's Budget exacerbated that gap by exempting wealthy Canadians from capital gains and allowing the deindexation of the system to work in their favour, while imposing the largest tax increase ever on average Canadian families. Will this year's Budget further exaggerate and exacerbate that gap between the rich and the poor, which is not a value judgment but a fact?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot consider or contemplate anything more difficult or more inappropriate than the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition using the term "poor". It ought to be used in reference to someone who does not have a job. That is the most important element of our society. It is to this we have directed our attention.

Mr. Broadbent: Wait a minute.

An Hon. Member: More important?

Mr. Axworthy: Why don't we try old people, those over 65?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mulroney: I will just give you, Mr. Speaker, two indications of two elements of society. When we came to office 85,000 of our elderly were not entitled to the benefits which were added by the new Progressive Conservative Government in the autumn of 1984. Those widows and widowers now receive substantial benefits from the Government of Canada.

With regard to the unemployed, on the month of January 129,000 new jobs were created. That is the largest number since Statistics Canada started to compile records in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has just given a new definition of the poor which does not include the elderly, widows or single-parent families. Truly, an extraordinary definition!

INQUIRY IF CONSERVATIVE BUDGET WILL AGAIN ENLARGE GAP BETWEEN THE RICH AND THE POOR

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I shall repeat my question: Will this year's Conservative Budget once again widen the gap between rich and poor in Canada? That is the question!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is wrong once again. I did not give a new definition of the poor. I said that people without jobs were among the least well-off in our society. And we are trying . . . I know the Liberals are against job creation, but we support it. Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to 85,000 widows and widowers who were not eligible for federal income supplements and who have been included in the plan as a result of Government intervention.

Mr. Malépart: What about single people?

Mr. Mulroney: And furthermore, 580,000 Canadians have found jobs since this Government was sworn in.

• (1420)

[English]

REQUEST FOR FIVE-YEAR ECONOMIC PROJECTION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will ask my question of the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister assure us that the Minister of Finance will break with the unfortunate precedent he set last year of not giving the hard data and five-year projections which underlie his Budget? In other words, will he ensure that we have the data underlying assumptions on economic performance, including interest rates, oil pricing, and the projected rate of inflation for five years?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the data supplied by the Minister of Finance will indeed be accurate and, I think, helpful. It will be reliable, and we will not add $200 million to it while walking into the House of Commons.

TAX ON OIL

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister may not know that the Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability said that the only way a Government can be held to account is through providing five-year projections. We set that precedent. We went with five-year projections.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is revisionist thinking.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, both sides. Order! Just a question, please.

Mr. Johnston: I will go straight to my question; I think the point has been made. With respect to oil pricing which should be in those projections, will the Prime Minister ensure that no part of the lower oil price, which should be of benefit to the consumers of Canada, will be skimmed off by the Minister of Finance in his forthcoming Budget?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is a chintzy question which is unworthy of my hon. friend. All he need do is wait for the Budget and I think he will be well pleased.

FAIRNESS OF BUDGET MEASURES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question pertains to the budget announcement of the Minister of Finance. Canadians will recall that last year the Minister of Finance assured us that the Budget would be fair, and in fact we got a Budget which increased taxes on ordinary Canadians, whacked pensioners, and provided special loopholes for the rich. Will the Prime Minister assure us that the Budget which will come down later this month will in fact be fair, and will he live up to that commitment?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, not only will the Budget be fair, it will be effective. In November of 1984 my hon. friend said that in terms of jobs the net effect of the program during the next fiscal year would unquestionably be a net loss of between 50,000 and 100,000 jobs. In point of fact 450,000 jobs were created, so the Hon. Member was slightly off again.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I know it would come as a great shock to the Prime Minister's system, but I do wish he would try to answer the questions he is asked today.

LIMITED PARTNERSHIP LOOPHOLE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister did depart from his script about jobs long enough to say that the Budget would be fair. There is one special loophole in the tax system now associated with limited partnerships which provides millions of dollars in tax benefits to people who use it. In the case of the Western Pulp Partnership, this specific loophole provided $100 million in tax write-offs. Will the Prime Minister assure us that this kind of unfairness will be removed from the tax system?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know that the NDP gets twitchy when it sees good job-creation figures. The NDP does not like prosperity, but Canadians like prosperity, and they are going to get a lot more of it with this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1425)

Mr. Mulroney: With regard to tax fairness, I agree that my hon. friend and I, during the television debate, were the only two of the three Leaders in favour of it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That's not so.

Mr. Mulroney: In point of fact this Government has shut down more loopholes that were introduced by the Grits for their fat friends, and we brought in a minimum tax whereby 100,000 rich taxpayers who never paid a nickel in tax now have to contribute to the national welfare.

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister is getting close. He almost answered the question that time.

REQUEST THAT LOOPHOLE BE ELIMINATED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the specific loophole that I mentioned was described by the Minister of Finance himself as a benefit: "Available only to a small circle of taxpayers and one which jeopardizes the integrity of the tax system". He simply went on to eliminate advance rulings but kept the loophole in place.

Will the Prime Minister assure us that the Government will not simply be content with removing rulings but will remove the loophole so that we can have some fairness in the system?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we always take my hon. friend's representations seriously in this and other areas. I do so again in regard to the specific observation that he makes. However, I know he will want to acknowledge in the House at his next opportunity that the Government has shut down more tax loopholes than any other Government in Canada in a comparable period of time, ever.

THE BUDGET

ANALYSIS OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS—REPORT OF TASK FORCE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister.

Since the fall of 1984, a task force of senior officials and representatives from the private sector, chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister, has been analyzing Government programs in terms of any Budget cuts that would be feasible.

Considering that this work was done with public funds, could the Deputy Prime Minister give this House the assurance that he will table a copy or copies of the reports of his task force before the Budget is brought down as scheduled on February 26?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is a bit confused. The program review task that was mandated by the Prime Minister in September, 1984, was not for the purpose of cutting expenditures—

An Hon. Member: Slashing.

Mr. Nielsen: Nor was it slashing. It was a management exercise determined to identify and eliminate overlap, duplication, and to provide more effective service to the Canadian public of a wide array of programs throughout the entire Government.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT REPORT BE TABLED

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, this is all very interesting, but the Deputy Prime Minister did not answer my question.

And if it is all as neat and clean as he appears to be saying, does he intend to table a copy of this report in the House so that the general public and Hon. Members will know whether he is telling us the truth?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the translation of the last part of the hon. gentleman's question came across accurately but I can assure him that at the appropriate time, in the appropriate way, all of the information that has been so laboriously gathered by mixed study teams of private sector and public sector individuals will be made available for the judgment of the public.

Mr. Garneau: Twenty-five years from now.

FINANCE

APPLICATION OF MINIMUM TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He will be aware that various accounting firms and tax advisers are outlining to their clients ways and means of beating the minimum tax. Will he indicate what steps he or the Minister of Finance is taking to ensure that ways are not found around the minimum tax so that every taxpayer of upper-income means will pay a fair minimum tax?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that anyone can give a guarantee in regard to the ingenuity of Canadian tax specialists in that regard, but I can assure him that, in response to observations made not only by my hon. friend but by many members of this Party, that we will be taking steps to ensure that the full degree of fairness is exacted in regard to those taxpayers. If my hon. friend has any suggestions I would be happy to hear from him.

• (1430)

USE OF LIMITED PARTNERSHIPS TO AVOID PAYMENT OF TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Prime Minister. I do have a suggestion I would like to pass along. The SRTC, when it was brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance, was closed off as a loophole. The Minister has now been alerted that the limited partnership provision in the Tax Act is being abused by countless—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Riis: Having found in Tax Probe 86 that firms across the country are now finding ways and means of using the limited partnership to avoid tax—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Riis: —what is the Government going to do about it?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order. I will allow the question because it was heard. May I remind Members that preambles to supplementary questions are not appropriate.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend is betting on the ingenuity of the accounting profession in this regard, I will bet on the integrity and the ingenuity of Michael Wilson.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

CAPITAL INVESTMENT BY RAILWAYS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Is the Minister aware that CN and CP are not keeping their promises of capital investment in the west or their commitments for investment in the west made at the time of the rewriting of the Crow rate legislation?

Mr. Blaikie: I told you they wouldn't.

Mr. Ouellet: If the Minister is aware of this, is he now ready to withhold payment under the Western Grain Transportation Act?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Member somewhat answered his own question. There is a provision within the legislation to ensure that the investment takes place.

I think that in fairness though the Hon. Member would agree that with the downturn in traffic, particularly in grain traffic, the capacity problem does not exist in the same magnitude as it did a few years ago. Given CN's cash flow difficulties—

Mr. Benjamin: And CP's.

Mr. Mazankowski: —and CP's, there may be a sort of deferral. I do not think that, in any way, shape or form, will relieve them from the commitment and obligation that they have in the long term as a result of the passage of the WGTA.

FUTURE OF CN INVESTMENT PLAN

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Are we now to understand that because of government cuts CN will not go ahead with its investment plan in the west, thereby very substantially jeopardizing double-tracking and a series of commitments to modernization and computerization that will improve efficiency and, above all, safety?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the matter has absolutely nothing to do with Government cuts. It has to do with the reduction in the flow of traffic.

As a matter of fact I believe CN grain traffic movement is down by some four million tonnes. That represents a $100 million loss in revenue. Surely the Hon. Member should be aware of that.

TOURISM

EFFECT OF GASOLINE PRICES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Tourism. He said today at his press conference that high gasoline prices were an irritant to American tourists when they considered visiting Canada, for example, to see Expo 86.

Is the Minister aware that the Manitoba Motor League in the Minister's own province has been advising Canadians when they are going out west to Expo that they should travel through the United States instead of Canada because of the high gasoline prices in Canada?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of that. I would not necessarily say it is irresponsible of the Manitoba Motor League, but I clearly think it is not a good way to promote tourism in Canada by having Canadians travel through the United States on their way to Expo.

An Hon. Member: What about market forces?

Mr. Murta: What I said in my press conference today is that there is not, from a point of view of American tourists, one single thing that would deter them from holidaying in Canada, and gasoline fits within that parameter.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ACT TO REDUCE PRICES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Let me remind the Minister, Mr. Speaker, that these are Canadian tourists. Will the Minister do more than just sending a wimpy telex to the oil companies, as the Minister of Energy did, go to bat in Cabinet for the tourist industry and get these outrageous gasoline prices lowered right away?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, the Government has done more and is doing more at the present time for the tourist industry than any other Government in the history of the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murta: We have put into place what I believe will be a first-class advertising campaign in the United States. We have more research information on the American market at present that will be targeted specifically to Americans. We will have more Americans, and more tourists generally, in Canada this spring, summer and fall than we have had in years.

AIR SAFETY

DEREGULATION—REQUEST FOR DELAY IN IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The Minister will be aware that last week in Washington two expert witnesses, appearing before the first U.S. congressional hearing on the Arrow crash at Gander that killed 248 servicemen, testified that deregulation in the United States air industry is the underlying cause of inadequate maintenance, inadequate training, and decisions to defer maintenance in both charter and scheduled airlines.

Given this evidence, will the Minister now agree to delay the implementation of deregulation of Canada's transportation systems, as promised by him for April, until the Standing Committee on Transport has been given an opportunity, denied until now, to examine fully the relationship between declining safety and U.S. airline deregulation?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that there are views counter to that one. I would ask the Hon. Member to consider the statement made by the President of the Airline Pilots and Owners Association which indicated there had been a significant improvement in aviation safety in the United States with the advent of deregulation.

Mr. Benjamin: No, it didn't.

SAFETY INSPECTORS—AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am interested in developing a Canadian view before we commit ourselves to a possibly very dangerous course.

Mr. Mazankowski: Why do you keep referring to the United States then?

Mr. Tobin: Does the Minister agree or disagree with the Auditor General of Canada, Mr. Kenneth Dye? In his last report to Parliament he said with respect to safety inspectors that "none of the regions of Canada was able to inspect all the carriers in its jurisdiction at least even once a year".

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to point out that that happened during a Liberal regime, and we are trying to correct that situation.

INQUIRY WHEN PRIME MINISTER WILL RESPECT COMMITMENT TO POPULATION OF DESBIENS, P.Q.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. During the election campaign the Prime Minister told the residents of Desbiens in Quebec that he would go there himself to settle the problem related to the closure of the pulp and paper plant. Here is my question: The residents of Desbiens had to come to Ottawa, they are now in the House with us this afternoon, and they want to know when the Prime Minister will live up to his August 8, 1984 political commitment to the people of Desbiens.

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Government did make a commitment to the people of Desbiens. Last May we offered $4,598,000 to the company and since then the management have asked us to wait because they are seeking new partners to get those people back to work.

INSISTENCE THAT PRIME MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the people of Desbiens have been out of work for 50 months already. When will the Prime Minister live up to his August 8, 1984 political commitment to those people?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that displays are out of order.

Mr. Benjamin: What display? That is a newspaper clipping.

[Translation]

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, this is a good example of someone who does not listen to the answer. We made a commitment and honoured it. We made a firm offer and I sincerely hope the people of Desbiens will find a partner. That is what we ask for. The funds are available and we want to help those people.

HUMAN RIGHTS

SOVIET UNION—RELEASE OF ANATOLY SHCHARANSKY—PLIGHT OF PRISONERS OF CONSCIENCE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister will know that three Members of this House visited Moscow last year to see the mother of Anatoly Shcharansky.

● (1440)

All 274 members of the Canadian Parliamentary Group for Soviet Jewry rejoice in Anatoly's release today, to be reunited with his wife, Avital.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Attewell: Will the Minister indicate what new initiatives he will take to help liberate the tens of thousands of refusniks and prisoners of conscience whose basic human rights are being violated by the U.S.S.R.?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me take the opportunity to express on behalf of the Government of Canada how welcome is the news that Anatoly Shcharansky has been released.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I also pay tribute to the several Members of the House, past and present, who used the influence of their offices to try to encourage the Soviet Union with regard to this case and the broader case raised by the Hon. Member for Don Valley East. With regard to his specific question, I have had meetings within the last week with representatives of the Jewish community in Canada who are particularly concerned about the situation of Jews in the Soviet Union. We are looking at all effective ways in which Canada can try to secure the release of more Jewish persons from the Soviet Union. I emphasize—and I think it is shared by all Members of the House—that we want to focus upon practical efforts, practical infuence which Canada can bring to bear.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SITUATION IN LATIN AMERICA—REPRESENTATIONS MADE TO UNITED STATES

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Today, many Canadians are concerned about the situation in Central America. Yesterday, the four Ministers of External Affairs of the Contadora countries and four other Ministers of External Affairs from other Latin American countries made representations to the United States, asking it to stop helping the Contras in Nicaragua and to resume bilateral talks with Nicaragua.

Does the Secretary of State for External Affairs intend to make representations to Mr. Schultz, the U.S. Secretary of State, and ask him to be more flexible so that we can get lasting peace in Central America?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government has always tried to urge the United States to take a position that could lead to a successful outcome with the Contadora group.

We intend to continue in this vein, and today, I want to take advantage of the fact that Mr. Wagner, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Peru, who attended yesterday's meeting, is here in Canada, to get first-hand information on the talks that took place yesterday in Washington.

POSSIBLE OPENING OF EMBASSY IN NICARAGUA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Does he intend to take advantage of the Budget period to ensure that funds will be earmarked for opening an embassy in Nicaragua, considering that hundreds of Canadians are now putting pressure on both the Minister and other Members of Parliament to make this positive gesture as soon as possible?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a situation where we intend to follow the example of my hon. friend, who did not open an embassy in Nicaragua while he was Minister of External Affairs.

We think that the present arrangement is quite adequate as far as Canadian interests are concerned, and we also believe that as far as spending priorities go, ours should be to give aid directly to the people in Central America who are in need.

YOUTH

CANCELLATION OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Youth who, last week, defended the elimination of Katimavik by saying that during her regional consultations throughout International Youth Year young Canadians indicated their support for the sacrifice of such programs in the name of deficit reduction. We have looked at those consultation papers, and there is no mention of deficit reduction. Would the Minister indicate to the House what consultation process she referred to and just which youth recommended the elimination of Katimavik?

[Translation]

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, the many young Canadians who want a promising future, not a nine-month future, who want full-time jobs with the skills required to take an active part in the economic life of this country, those are the young Canadians we consulted, that is what they told us this year, and that is one of the reasons why we made the hard decision announced some time ago.

INQUIRY IF GOVERNMENT WILL ANNOUNCE LESS COSTLY YOUTH PROGRAMS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister wants to name three. She keeps suggesting that Katimavik is too costly. Would she tell the House whether there are other less costly youth programs lasting nine months?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, we created close to 80,000 jobs for young people over the past year. That is what matters to them, that is what they want. That is important to the Government and we intend to continue.

THE PHILIPPINES—AFTERMATH OF ELECTIONS—SAFETY OF CANADIAN CITIZENS

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Should either an insurrection or a coup follow the final announcement of the Philippines presidential election, what actions can the Canadian Government take to assist the 1,500 Canadians known to be in that potentially explosive country?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me make it clear, first, that we believe there is no reason for anyone to come to the sort of conclusion which was part of the premise of the Hon. Member's question. Canadians are watching the electoral results in the Philippines and are trying to come to an assessment about the consequences afterward. I look forward to having the opportunity to consult with a Canadian Senator who is a member of the observer team. There is always—

Ms. Copps: Why didn't you send him yourself?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): There was—

Ms. Copps: You refused to send him down as an observer.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I think I heard something, but it was only Hamilton East.

Mr. Ouellet: What a shame from a former Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANCELLATION OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Katimavik is the responsibility of the Hon. Secretary of State, he might want to correct the confused reply of the Minister of State for Youth last week and explain to the House and the people of Canada why, without prior consultation with the Katimavik board and staff, he broke faith with thousands of young people who had already applied for the program by cancelling this award-winning program one full year in advance of the end of the contract.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, my colleague's interest in Katimavik is commendable, but I would be more impressed if he were as convincing in deploring the fact that his Party responsible for the unemployment plight of young Canadians which has forced us to discontinue programs—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, I wish Members opposite were as energetic in creating jobs for young people as they are in discrediting programs for 2,000 youths. My colleague the Minister of Employment and Immigration has invested in excess of $200 million to create jobs for youths. That is what we have done and what we will continue to do.

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RECONSIDER

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister, given the abysmal performance of the Minister of State for Youth, who last week clearly demonstrated her lack of understanding of the program, now reject her advice and agree to reconsider it at least, after receiving advice from people who are competent?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the decision concerning Katimavik is final. We thought we would be better advised to invest in job-creation programs, and that is what young Canadians want. After that we will see, we are now holding consultations. I appreciate the fact that the the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie supports our employment programs, and I simply want to say that we will make further studies. But again I would suggest that young people want us to spend money to create jobs, and that is what we are planning to do.

HOUSING

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET COMMON FRONT ON SOCIAL HOUSING

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour, responsible for Housing.

The Minister often says he wants to consult with everybody about housing. Is he going to meet with the Front commun sur le logement social, which consists of 85 community organizations from across Quebec, and which has asked to meet with the Minister before he signs an agreement on subsidized housing programs with the Government of Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge I haven't had that request, but I would certainly be interested in meeting with anyone involved in housing in Canada. During our consultation we met with some 21 national organizations, of which the Hon. Member is quite aware. I could name some of them: the National Anti-Poverty Organization, FRAPRU, the Native Council of Canada, the Co-Operative Housing Foundation of Canada, the CLC, the Canadian Home Builders Association and the Canadian Real Estate Association.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Supplementary question.

TELEGRAM SENT BY ORGANIZATION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Since the Minister says he has not seen the telegram that was sent by them on January 15, will the Minister arrange to meet with them if I send him a copy of that telegram, before he signs an agreement with the Government of Quebec about social housing?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to comment on a telegram I have not seen, but I would be interested in seeing the telegram if the Member would like to forward it to me.

INDUSTRY

PROMISE MADE TO PEOPLE OF DESBIENS, P.Q.—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister, and I think he should answer it, because his credibility is at stake.

The Prime Minister will recall that in the summer of 1984, he gave his word to the people of Desbiens that he would settle the problems existing in that area.

In May 1985, not only did the Prime Minister give his word but he signed a letter to the people of Desbiens, giving them the assurance that he would continue to—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Please, does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Lapierre: What does the Prime Minister intend to do to keep his promise and honour the letter he signed, now that the people of Desbiens are discouraged since they did not get the positive answer he promised them.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the answer given by the Minister of State (Small Businesses) applies here. However, I would also like to point out a very important fact, and that is that since the election, 156,000 new jobs have been created in Quebec, which means they were created at thirteen times the rate the Liberals were creating jobs.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, these statistics are not doing the unemployment rate in Desbiens any good.

I may remind the Prime Minister, and in fact I would like to ask him about the attitude taken by his Minister, the Secretary of State, who is threatening—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. If the Hon. Member has started a question I cannot hear it because of the noise of his colleagues. May I hear the question, please?

Mr. Tobin: He asked a question, smarten up or—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Out, out!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a supplementary question immediately, please?

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is very simple: I want to ask the Prime Minister what he intends to do. At this very moment, absolutely nothing has been done. They announced a project that turned out to be a dud.

This is what I want to know: Does the Prime Minister intend to keep his word, yes or no?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Yes!

RAILWAYS

FUTURE OF PASSENGER SERVICES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): I have a question directed to the Minister of Transport. I wonder if the Minister of Transport would agree that it would be a shame if the recent tragedy in Hinton were allowed to cast any kind of shadow over the future of passenger rail service in Canada, and whether he would take this opportunity to reaffirm the future of passenger rail by announcing today the date for the purchase of the new transcontinental equipment. We know the locomotives have already been purchased, but regarding the transcontinental coach equipment, when will that be announced?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can indeed reconfirm this Government's commitment to a viable rail passenger service in this country. As I indicated yesterday, we will be introducing rail passenger legislation in the House in the next few days. As the Hon. Member has indicated, some locomotives have been ordered, others are being called for tender. With respect to the purchase of the new rolling stock there are still some engineering and other details that have to be worked out. I regret the delay, but it certainly is not a lack of good intentions on the part of the Government but, indeed, the logistics that we have to go through.

VIA RAIL

WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE SHOP

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, also with respect to the future of VIA Rail, I wonder if the Minister could tell the House, and particularly Winnipegers, whether or not the plans for the VIA Rail maintenance shop in Winnipeg are nearing completion, ie. are they nearing the state of being no longer deferred? I would like assurances from the Minister that what I have heard about the next shop being constructed in Vancouver isn't true and that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. This is a little long.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that every step necessary will be taken to ensure that VIA will operate in a safe and reliable fashion in offering good service to Canadians from coast to coast.

AIRPORTS

REPORTED TRANSFER OF JET FLIGHTS FROM DORVAL TO MIRABEL

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. There is great concern in Montreal that the Government will transfer all commercial jet flights from Dorval to Mirabel, causing great inconvenience to the travelling public and seriously harming businesses that are related to the air travel business. Will the Minister make a commitment that no decision will be made in this matter until a committee of this House has had a chance to study all options in consultation with the public in Montreal?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I always thought the Hon. Member was an ardent supporter of Mirabel. I can assure him and other Members of the House that we will be meeting with the representatives of the area around Dorval. As the Hon. Member has indicated, it is a very serious matter and I can assure him it will be looked at in an equitable and balanced way.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): We are discussing parliamentary reform and the Minister knows that the great majority of Members from Montreal are on the opposition side and not on the government side. That is why I asked him if he would refer this matter to a parliamentary committee where all parties in the House can look at the options and discuss them with the businesses and the travelling public in Montreal. That is my question.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, while I do not want to minimize the importance of the issue, it might have been more appropriate to refer the whole question of Mirabel to a Standing Committee before it was built.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Government Members are now costing their own time. The Hon. Member for Athabasca.

FISHERIES

FRESHWATER NET SIZES—ROLE OF LOCAL AUTHORITIES

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. The Minister will know that the present regulations at the federal level do not allow provincial authorities to set the mesh size or net size for freshwater fishing in provincial lakes. The Minister is working on this. When will the decision be made to allow the local authorities to set mesh size?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, in the context of discussions on the administration of the freshwater fishery arising out of our meetings in Halifax at the First Ministers' Conference, this is an important issue, a question of joint jurisdiction, and the delegation of such authority is at the provincial level. I will take the Hon. Members' suggestions as an important representation.

ADVICE ON PRIVATIZATION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has turned over control of an important segment of the Canadian economy to the Americans when he sold de Havilland to American interests. Now it has come to light that he is seeking his advice on privatization from American companies. Will the Prime Minister put a stop to hiring Americans to advise the Canadian Government on how to turn over the Canadian economy to the Americans?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The Hon. Member is outdoing his Leader he is wrong on both counts.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

GRANT GIVEN TO GRAND CANAL COMPANY

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Science and Technology. Is the Minister prepared to rescind the $30,000 grant that one of his regional officers gave to the Grand Canal Company the other day in view of the fact that the decision was apparently made without the Minister's knowledge or approval?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I must assume that the Hon. Member knows that the National Research Council operates independently from the Ministry and at arm's length. I report on behalf of the Research Council to Parliament. I have no authority to direct the Research Council to retrieve that money, nor do I believe that the money was wasted.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Monday, February 10, 1986, do not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

POINT OF ORDER

DISPLAYING OF OBJECTS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Chair must admonish the House or individual Members from time to time. I would like to ask your advice, Sir, with all respect, as to when it has become a display for an Hon. Member, namely the Hon. Member for Yorkton Melville (Mr. Nystrom), to wave in the air a Xerox copy of a newspaper clipping unless he was displaying something that none of the rest of us saw?

Mr. Speaker: With equal and due respect, I advise the Hon. Member to read our rules and practices on this matter. It is not unusual for Hon. Members to have notes in their hands but it is clearly against the rules of the House to hold up any matter in any way for display.

Mr. Benjamin: Come on. I have a further point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member may wish to read the rules.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, in that event, Sir, on the same point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benjamin: Then it would seem to me that the Chair will be required—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member asked me a question and that is my response. If the Hon. Member wishes to pursue it further, he should pursue it with me privately.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, question No. 481 will be answered today.

DEATHS ATTRIBUTED TO TOBACCO RELATED DISEASES

Question No. 481—Ms. McDonald:

Since World War II, how many deaths in Canada were attributed to tobacco related diseases?

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

Since tobacco usage is not reported as a cause of death on death certificates, Statistics Canada is not able to provide the number of deaths attributed to tobacco.

[Translation]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question unumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, i rise on a point of order. Since the House adopted Bill C-255 yesterday, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary if we could proceed with question

No. 386, dated May 31, 1985, which asks for information the House has approved and the Government was supposed to provide, and I am referring to the actuarial tables and everything that involves for future pension plans, so that we know where we are going and what the rates are. The Government approved the Bill yesterday, and so I think the Parliamentary Secretary should now make the requisite information available to the House.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that we are presently debating a change to the Standing Orders which will cut down on the number of questions on the Order Paper and will allow for faster answers. We would hope to have the support of his Party in this very important manoeuvre.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STANDING ORDERS—PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn:

That the proposed amendments to the Standing Orders, laid upon the Table on Thursday, February 6, 1986 (Sessional paper No. 331-7/37A) be adopted and made provisional Standing Orders of the House.

Provided that, unless otherwise ordered;

1. the said provisional Standing Orders shall be in force from 11.00 o'clock a.m. Monday, February 24, 1986 until the House adjourns on the last sitting day in December, 1986;

2. and further to the Order made on June 27, 1985, the provisional Standing Orders thereby adopted shall continue in force during the same period; and

3. the Clerk of the House shall be authorized and instructed to print a revised and renumbered edition of the Standing Orders integrating the provisional Standing Orders and making any necessary amendments in consequence thereof, or relating thereto in respect of the Standing Orders concerning Private Bills, and to make such changes to the Order Paper and Notices as may be required.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Just prior to the lunch break at approximately 10 minutes to one, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) appeared in the House and made a speech which lasted about 10 minutes. As I understand it, on the basis of the unanimous consent which was given in the House, it was agreed that Hon. Members would be permitted to have a 10-minute question and comment period after every speaker. I am asking for the opportunity now to ask the Prime Minister questions, and if he is not here, to make comments on the remarks of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member will know that we have ruled on this matter before. In fact, the unanimous consent that was requested earlier did not apply to all Hon. Members. I think the Hon. Member may be confused. It only applied to the first three speakers who are not normally subject to that practice.

When a Member is not here after lunch break or upon resumption of a debate there is a difficulty but if the Hon. Member reads the Standing Order he will find that this clearly contemplates questions, comments and responses. It has therefore been the view of the Chair before that it is difficult to imagine how one could have responses if the Hon. Member is not here. Therefore, as a matter of practice and habit in the past, the question and comment period has not been allowed. That is the way it has been ruled by the Chair in the past.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has put his point. I have found that he has no point.

Mr. Nunziata: I would ask the Chair to cite the rule.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member would like me to cite the rule. It would be in order for the Hon. Member to cite the rule in raising his point of order. However—

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) knows that I am standing on a point of order raised by her colleague. It would be difficult for her to raise a point of order while I am responding to another Member.

May I refer the Hon. Member to Standing Order 36(1) which reads as follows:

Unless otherwise provided in these Standing Orders, when the Speaker is in the Chair, no Member, except the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, or a Minister moving a government order and the Member speaking in reply immediately after such Minister, shall speak for more than twenty minutes at a time in any debate. Following the speech of each Member a period not exceeding ten minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses thereto.

This matter has been ruled on many times. This is not a new ruling. The Chair has ruled before that it is not possible to put questions to an Hon. Member who is not here.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a separate point of order. Today I received in my office a document entitled Projected Order of Business which referred to Government Order No. 81. At the bottom of Government Order No. 81, it says the following:

—all speeches are subject to a 10-minute question and comment period.

I would like to take this opportunity to comment on a speech made—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I told the Hon. Member exactly what our rulings and traditions have been. Therefore, shall I recognize the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr.

Penner) on debate or does the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) have a separate point of order? Debate.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, parliamentary reform is certainly a noble concept to contemplate. It is one to which everyone rather readily gives all of the appropriate lip service. However, I have noticed that there was always a certain degree of surprise and even amazement when ideas for parliamentary reform have to be put into practice or implemented because it turns out that this means change. Today, it means changing some of our Standing Orders, the rules by which we conduct ourselves in this place from day to day.

• (1510)

One can certainly speak of parliamentary reform in most eloquent and, perhaps, poetic terms, but when it comes to changing the Standing Orders it is rather more prosaic, mundane and down-to-earth. It is surprising how quickly enthusiasm for parliamentary reform can be replaced by a certain measure of reluctance to proceed.

That reminds me of something which was said of a certain leader of the day. It was said of him that he loved people; it was individuals he could not stand. We love parliamentary reform, but we seem to have trouble with our Standing Orders and changing them. I want to say to the House that we badly need some changes.

The Canadian people certainly are not overly impressed by the way in which we conduct ourselves in this place and how we conduct what they consider to be the important business of our nation. Now that we have television they have witnessed or heard about some rather strange happenings in this place. For example, they have seen the storming of the Chair. There have been long bell-ringing incidents and questions on the Order Paper, inquiries from Hon. Members, which are not answered for years. There are petitions which are read, petitions containing the signatures of our constituents with respect to matters of concern, grievances. The constituents ask: "Whatever happened to that petition? What became of it?" We have no answer to that question expect to say that it went missing in action.

Mr. McGrath: Limbo.

Mr. Penner: That's right, limbo.

Then there are the Members of Parliament who do not occupy the front benches of the Government or Opposition and who often appear to the Canadian people to be mere spectators to all which is taking place, either cheering or jeering as the case may be.

It is certainly exhilarating to talk about reform. It is a kind of mountain-top experience, but we now have to get down into the valley of reality. We have to try to revise some of our Standing Orders. When we do that, the approach suddenly becomes not so high sounding. Rather, there is a good deal of suspicion and uncertainty. Questions are asked such as, what is in these rule changes which will aid the Opposition in doing what it is supposed to do? What is there in these rules which will further strengthen the hand of Government? Are there some hidden snares which we have missed and which are designed to trap political Parties, especially those in opposition?

Have you ever noticed, Mr. Speaker, that there seems to be a failure to ask other important questions such as, what is best for Parliament? How can we restore to this institution the type of respect and dignity which I believe it deserves? That was the approach taken by the committee headed by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) who has been given praise for the outstanding work he has done for this House. When the members of the committee did their work they were not trying to pit opposition Parties against the governing Party but to do something for Parliament and something for the Members of Parliament. They wanted to find out how we can better enable Members of Parliament to serve their constituents and to work for the national good.

There is a danger in this House for members of political Parties to become too self-serving. I do not think there is anyone who will speak in this debate who is seriously seeking to destroy or undermine the partisan nature of this place. That is too silly to even contemplate. We know that the Government was elected to govern, and it had its supporters. It was elected to propose policies and programs of legislation to Parliament. The Opposition is here to ensure that the Government is accountable and to attempt to change the Government's course of direction when opposition Members or Parties consider that course of direction to be undesirable or disastrous. In that there is bound to be a clash. It is sometimes noisy and emotional. Sometimes it is not all that pleasant to observe. However, I tell Hon. Members that it is a lot better than fighting in the streets. We know that there can be excesses. There can be excesses in our partisanship. Therefore, our rules are designed to strike a fair and appropriate balance between the Government and the Opposition and among all political Parties.

In all of this there is one important aspect which may be forgotten, that is, the Member of Parliament. They want to exercise at least some degree of influence over public policy. They want to and are able to innovate and initiate. Those persons who are elected to this place need some room to live, more and have their being. That is what the McGrath Committee report was trying to achieve. Of course, nothing would help more than if we had some major attitudinal changes. However, leaving that aside, it cannot be brought about by any rule changes. Therefore, we must get on and do the best we can with our Standing Orders.

The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), who was the representative from our Party on the McGrath Committee, and I have considered carefully and seriously the entire package of changes to the Standing Orders. We have looked at them with care. The Hon. Member for Papineau will speak for himself on the specifics, but our general view is that there are more pluses than minuses in these proposed changes. It is our view that this is a positive approach and a positive response to parliamentary reform.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I hope that is both the good news and the bad news.

Mr. Penner: I suppose the Government House Leader wonders whether the bad news is yet to come. Of course we will suggest some modest changes. However, over-all we think that it is a good package of revisions contained in the proposals which have come from the Government.

For example, I ask Hon. Members to consider Standing Order 1, with which probably few Members and many Canadian people are not aware. Up until now, in seeking precedents for our procedures we have been limited, or restricted, to those practices which have been established in the Parliament of the United Kingdom. This revision to Standing Order 1 will allow us to draw upon experience elsewhere—elsewhere in Canada and elsewhere in the Commonwealth where parliamentary institutions are alive and well and flourishing but are somewhat different. That is a positive change. It will help us all a great deal as we evolve. Parliaments must evolve. They cannot just stay the way they are. They have to undergo continuous change.

I would now like to speak about the issue of the bells. I am delighted to say that if we adopt the changes to the Standing Orders, as I am convinced we will, we will then solve the problem of the long bells. The long bells are of rather recent history in the Parliament of Canada and I think that problem came about as a result of many factors. Some day some one will write the history of the long bells, I suppose, but I believe there was excessive partisanship involved and some poor judgment from many different quarters. Now that is behind us, or should be very shortly. I believe that at the time the problem should have been nipped in the bud but it was not. It was allowed to become a blunt and rather crude instrument for expressing our position to something proposed by the Government. Worse than that, it made the Canadian Parliament something of a laughing stock, a joke. Imagine having bells ring for days on end and Members of Parliament not coming to their seats to divide on a question which had been put to it? Whoever heard of such a practice?

The provision for the ringing of bells had always existed so that Members of Parliament, under certain difficulties, bad weather or having to travel great distances, could get back for a vote. Sometimes there were reasons for the bells to ring for many hours but it had more to do with geography than with opposition to a particular proposal before the House.

Perhaps even worse than those items I have mentioned, the long bells became a precedent for others. I remember being in the province of Manitoba at a time when that Parliament was in the midst of a bell ringing crisis. The issue was the extension of linguistic rights to the Francophone minority of Manitoba and I arrived there for a parliamentary conference in the midst of the ringing of the bells.

We now have a proposal for up to a 30 minute bell, and it does not have to be that long. If there were some good reason why the division could not take place, if, for example, we had a minority Parliament and Members of Parliament were caught in a snowstorm in Toronto and could not arrive for the vote and there was some danger that a Bill or other measure would be lost, there is an allowance in the proposed Standing Orders for the division to take place the following day before six o'clock. That is a plus for Parliament and for Hon. Members of this House.

Reference has already been made to the power of the Speaker to name a Member without having to seek a motion of the House. I entirely agree with the Opposition House Leader that when a Speaker names a Member for creating disorder, in fact the decision has already been made and the placing of a motion before the House simply delays getting on with the business of the House. It should be in the power of the Speaker to name that person and that person should, having been named, leave the House of Commons for the remainder of that day.

This particular rule among our Standing Orders is a vestige or remnant from the days when the Speaker's rulings could be appealed. That is now no longer possible except in this one case where a Member is being named. So we accept that proposal.

I would, however, say to the House Leader that I believe, along with many of my colleagues, that if the same Member is named on a subsequent occasion in the same session, it is excessive to ask that Member to leave the Chamber for a period of up to five days. That in my view is, or could be, an excessive penalty, and I would like the House Leader to perhaps consider that particular point.

I know that some of my colleagues have not been happy with legislative committees. I take a different view. I believe that the introduction of the system of legislative committees has been a positive step for this House and for Members of Parliament. It really means that standing committees, which now have their own work schedule agreed to among the various Members of the Parties in the committee, will not have their work schedule interfered with by having a Bill introduced which they must deal with expeditiously. They will be able to carry on with their work schedule as they wish. The legislative committee can then focus its attention on a particular statute following second reading. It can insist that those public witnesses who appear before it come with specific matters related to the clauses in the Bill. I beleive that the chairmen, in co-operation with the clerk of those legislative committees, should be careful to instruct witnesses that they are not there to render broad and general briefs about the state of the nation. They are there to talk about that Bill. I believe that the chairman of the legislative committee should call the witness to order if he or she ranges widely over many subjects.

The concern of my colleagues has been that we are over-taxing the legislative committee system. There are too many. We need a traffic control system. I am not going to dwell on that. Members on the Government side have made the same point. It is not something which needs to be put into our Standing Orders. It is a matter of some sort of scheduling system which can be worked out among the House Leaders.

I am also pleased with the Standing Order which states that parliamentary secretaries will no longer be members of standing committees. I believe that very frequently when standing committees look at a particular issue or problem to which they have agreed they will study for a particular period of time, that partisanship tends to subside and to be put into proper perspective and the issue or problem becomes paramount. These committees become what I would describe as "issue oriented". The parliamentary secretary certainly has a role in the legislative committee, because it is a Government Bill in most cases and he or she would want to be there to protect the position of the Government. However, I believe, we want to reduce the level of partisanship in the standing committee and have it involve itself more in important public policy issues. The parliamentary secretary would have less of a role there than he would in the legislative committees.

I would also like to say that it is a plus for committees to be able to review Order in Council appointments. We all recognize that in a parliamentary system—and this is not a congress but a parliament—that we do not have the power of a veto. I think it is a great step forward to have a committee examine an appointee for competence. That will help in a great way to discourage the more unsavoury and objectionable aspects of patronage.

I will simply conclude with two brief points. First, I am delighted that this is an experimental approach to changing our Standing Orders. We will see how it works. There are bound to be some problems and difficulties. There is now a Procedure and Organization Committee to which Members of Parliament can refer difficulties and problems as they go along. But having carried out the work of an important parliamentary reform committee and having implemented some of those recommendations and Standing Orders, once they are approved, no one in this House should believe our task is finished. The reform of Parliament has to be what is sometimes referred to as "an ongoing process". I think we have to continue to attempt to improve that which we are doing. We have to continue to examine our procedures, asking at all times those very basic questions, is it good for Parliament? Does it make Parliament a more effective instrument for serving the public's well-being? Can we represent our constituents better? Can we do a better job for this nation?

If we keep those ideals in mind when we get to the practical aspects such as amending our Standing Orders and changing the administrative arrangements, I believe that over a period of time we will have a Parliament in which Members can take a great deal more pride. As well, those who watch us will be able to say that Parliament is serving them well.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do understand that an effort is being made to have as many members of the committee as possible comment on this report. Since I was not a member of the committee, I hope Members will accept that I have a serious interest in the issue of parliamentary reform. I support the fact that progress has been made in the discussions among the House Leaders of the three Parties and that some of the difficulties which were perceived when the matter was discussed with the caucuses have been resolved, allowing this piece of parliamentary reform to go forward.

I think the members of the McGrath committee should be congratulated for the work they have done. I hope that people across Canada recognize that this is part of a genuine effort by the House of Commons to move forward and to respond to the criticism of people who say that we are redundant, stuck in the mud, or cannot come to grips with the problems we will face in the future.

I was looking at the report of the Macdonald Commission today. It talks about the need for flexibility and the need to be more adaptable to change. I do not agree with a lot of its remedies, but I think the problem it describes is a very valid one. I think that the House of Commons, an institution of which I am a recent Member, but nonetheless for which I have a great deal of respect, must be able to adapt to change. I hope that this is the beginning of a process of change rather than the final episode.

In speaking to people in the country I find it difficult to explain what we do. This could be remedied by greater television coverage. It is difficult to explain to the public why only 30 or 40 Members of the House are here discussing this particular and important issue. Most of the other Members, I hope all of them, are in fact working right now in their constituencies, in committees, attending meetings with groups, doing work on behalf of their political Parties, which is part of their job, handling correspondence, and so on. Members are working even when they are not in the House of Commons, but that is often difficult to explain.

If the House is seen as degenerating into an overgrown kindergarten, as constantly bogging down because of the use of the rules to ring the bells and bring proceedings to a halt, or to engage in what the public views as procedural obfuscation, and, on the other hand, if the House or its committees are not seen as coming to grips substantively with important issues such as equality for women, the impact of technological change and the future of multicultural minorities, then we will become increasingly irrelevant and increasingly perceived as being unworthy of the many millions of dollars spent every year in order to maintain the Parliament of Canada.

I want to read one section from the proposed draft rules. I recognize that these may have changed a bit. It seems to me that this is one of the most important parts of the changes which are now taking place. This package contains some things which would enable the Government to speed up some proceedings of the House. It contains some measures which private Members want, such as the provision for Private Members' Bills to be voted upon even without unanimous consent. The fact that the passage of the Private Members' Bill of the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan), which relates to reporting of public pension funds, was such a rare occurrence indicates that that private Members' procedure was bogging down. That matter was under anxious discussion over the course of the last few weeks.

According to the draft Standing Orders, the standing committees will have the following role and mandate: They will be empowered to study and report on all matters relating to the mandate, management, and operation of the Department or Departments of Government which are assigned to them from time to time by the House. In general, the committees shall be severally empowered to review and report on the statute law relating to the Department assigned to them, the program and policy objectives of the Department and its effectiveness in the implementation of same, the immediate, medium, and long-term expenditure plans and the effectiveness of implementation of same by the Department, and an analysis of the relative success of the Department as measured by the results obtained as compared with its stated objectives. It goes on to mention other matters relating to the mandate, management, organization, or operation of the Department as the committee deems fit.

That is a wide-ranging addition to the powers of the standing committees. My experience in the Ontario Legislature before I came to this House was that the Estimates procedure was sufficiently prolonged that it allowed the kind of study which is consigned to committees in these Standing Orders with regard to Estimates. Under federal procedures the Estimates process does not permit that. Often the Minister, the deputy minister, and the other senior officials of a Department may only appear before a committee for one or two sessions, for perhaps five or six hours. That is simply not enough time to study the role and mandate of a Department, its program and policy objectives, its relative success, its long-term expenditure plans, etc.

The limitation of Estimates consideration in this House to a short period from the tabling of Estimates around the beginning of March until the end of May, also puts a constraint on what committees can do. Members find themselves running from one committee to another in order to raise a few regional issues which they did not have a chance to raise in the House of Commons. I believe that with smaller committees and a broader mandate we have the potential for having more powerful committees, which is one of the purposes of the reform.

I want to appeal to the people here in the House in the hopes that having that appeal on the record will have some influence on the future. The spirit of these reforms must be respected. In the Committee on Regional Development we had a fracas over how deeply we would look into the sale of de Havilland. We know from such experiences that the spirit of giving relatively free powers of inquiry and investigation to standing committees will be thwarted if government Members use their majority to prevent initiatives which will come from the Opposition. There will have to be some give and some take. I do not pretend that everything the opposition Parties will want to do will be accepted, but there will have to be some acceptance of their initiatives. These initiatives must not be thwarted because a Parliamentary Secretary feels a bit uneasy, or the Minister does not like the committee poking around in what is going on in the Department or, God forbid, because a powerful deputy minister mutters between clenched teeth to get the committee off his back.

We are looking for ways of redressing the balance between a powerful executive and a powerful administration on the one hand, and a House of Commons which has had more and more difficulty in having its views enforced and in having a genuine influence on public policy. I have been around long enough to know that not every representation made by a committee, even one acting with unanimity, is going to be accepted by the Government or is going to have impact on the bureaucrats. However, many of those representations will have an impact, albeit delayed.

With regard to the spirit in which these reforms are going to be put forward, we must look at some of the practices of committees as well. When there is disagreement in a committee it should become a convention of the House to allow opposition Members more than a few lines in the committee report to express their point of view. There should be, de facto, a form of minority report which can be reflected in the report of the committee rather than Members having to communicate directly to the press. In order to work in the spirit in which these reforms came about, if difficulties are discerned in the next 11 months, the Government must not use its majority to stifle action to make changes where problems are perceived.

I would now like to take a few minutes to comment on one or two specific items. It is not clear whether standing committees will continue into the period of a new session or whether there will be a hiatus every January when a new session begins due to a rule which prevents committees from continuing because the Striking Committee will not have had a chance to meet.

I commend to Members the difficult experience we had with the Standing Committee on Regional Development which was seized with the matter of de Havilland before Christmas but then had to be rescued from oblivion by an agreement between the House Leaders at the eleventh hour on the final day before we rose for Christmas. If that had not occurred, the committee would not have been able to meet until the third or fourth week of January.

According to the old rules, beginning in January the committee did not exist until the Striking Committee recommended its coming into force, it had organized itself, chosen a chairman and finally got down to business. Without any assurance of being able to continue, we were unable to make arrangements for organizing witnesses prior to rising at Christmas, and that certainly contributed to some of the difficulty and confusion in the work of that committee.

If the rules do not address this situation I urge that they be changed so that next January or the beginning of the next session, the committees and their membership be prolonged until such point as the Striking Committee has recommended a new set of names and that report has been adopted by the House of Commons. That would ensure continuity for 365 days of the year.

I am pleased that legislative committees will not be required to have a minimum of 20 members. When one considers our other responsibilities, I hope that many legislative committees may be a lot smaller.

I believe that the requirements in the proposed Standing Orders that legislative committees be struck at the time of first reading will lead to confusion. Journalists will write that there is a proliferation of committees and that the traffic is too heavy. I believe two alternatives can be considered, if not now, then after a year's experience, in order to lighten the traffic of legislative committees.

First, we should agree that no more than a certain number of legislative committees should be working at one time. For example, perhaps the maximum number of legislative committees could be six. If there is a seventh or eighth piece of legislation before the House which has passed second reading, it should be put on hold until one of the six current inquiries has been concluded.

Second, I believe that the legislative committees should be struck at the time second reading is concluded rather than being struck after first reading. A 24-hour or 48-hour delay is all that is needed for the legislative committee to begin its work. If urgency is essential, there is no problem with the House Leaders or the Striking Committee informally deciding who is likely to be a member of the legislative committee when second reading is concluded. This would clear the Order Paper of lengthy lists of members of legislative committees that are not due to meet for many months, until the particular Bill that has been given first reading finally gets through second reading stage.

Third, on an experimental basis I think we should require the presence of Opposition Members for a quorum for a committee or, failing that, the consent of at least one opposition Member for a committee to work and act as though it has a quorum. For example, if no Opposition Member can be present for a meeting but agrees that the work of that committee can proceed where a quorum is required, I suggest that there should be written consent in the hands of the clerk at the beginning of a meeting.

I am concerned that section 78 will mean that committees will be open to misrepresentation with respect to their spending. These committees are faced with large amounts of fixed costs with respect to clerks and staff. As I mentioned in December, there is a cost of some $1,000 per staff person per meeting. Those are fixed costs rather than discretionary costs which the committee can control. While it is not in the Standing Orders, I suggest that this matter be considered in order that the committees be tagged with the discretionary costs that they have entailed and not with the fixed costs.

I want to reiterate my concern about the scheduling matters. I hope that smaller committees will mean a great deal more flexibility as to when they meet so that there are not artificial distinctions which force them to meet in the evenings when I believe most committee members would prefer that they work during the day. Furthermore, I believe it is in the interest of public scrutiny that the press have access to the work of committees during the day.

The television arrangements should be revised quickly in order to permit a radio feed to committees and to allow selected committees, which may be selected in consultation with House Leaders, a committee of chairmen or the liaison committee, to meet in a committee room that can accommodate television cameras to record their operations. Those televised meetings could then be broadcast over the parliamentary channel, perhaps when the House of Commons is not meeting.

I have some real concern about the handling of questions. It is proposed that a Member have a right to no more than four questions on the Order Paper at any one time. The Table Officers are being given the right to decide whether a lengthy question should be divided, which means that a Member who thinks he or she has 4 questions may have 10 or 15 questions, depending on the discretionary decision of the Table Officers.

Members usually ask for a response within 45 days, which effectively means that over the course of a year a Member will have a right to a maximum of 35 questions if the Government answers within 45 days. If those questions are relatively short because of a decision by the Table in the interest of getting replies from the Government, I suggest we have unreasonably interfered with the right of opposition Members in particular to use the parliamentary question as a means of eliciting information from the Government. While I am not suggesting that this right be unlimited, one might consider giving an allotment of questions to a caucus in addition to the four questions per Member so that the caucus can decide if it wants to give further questions to a Member who has depleted his or her allotted questions. In any event, I suggest that more flexibility is needed in this area.

I also question the requirement that all petitions should be in a form which is acceptable to the Table and that they be first considered by the Table. I believe we are far too restrictive about petitions. If people want to say in simple words that they petition the House of Commons, that is all that is required for a petition to be acceptable. I am not against a requirement of 25 signatures or a minimum number of signatures, but we should not inhibit the public's right to petition Parliament by restricting them to medieval, anachronistic or archaic wording.

I hope that my arguments are helpful. I recognize they are of minor importance, but what is of material and major substance is that we are making a determined step forward in an attempt to reform this place. I hope that determination continues not just for the life of this Parliament but for the life that all of us hope to spend in this Parliament in future decades.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in this debate today—one for which I have been waiting for some time—and to review the work that has been done in the past as well as an opportunity to move ahead with some of the most significant reforms that have faced the Parliament of Canada.

● (1550)

Let me first begin by commenting briefly on the comments made by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner). I was very pleased to hear the very positive approach he took to the report and to the initiative with which we are dealing today.

I also want to thank my constituents for their patience in allowing me to work on this subject. When I first started working on parliamentary procedure some five years ago, they found it a little difficult. They could not see immediate results and often questioned me about why I was spending so much time and effort on a subject that did not seem too practical.

What we see today is a demonstration of our commitment to this subject and to Parliament. We see the potential of the House of Commons, the potential of Members of Parliament and the potential that all of us have if we are given in which to work and the right kind of environment in which we can put forward ideas and suggestions. Hopefully we can make a positive contribution to our country.

I want to pay a tribute, as others have done, to the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). As the Chairman of our special committee, there is no doubt he provided dynamic and aggressive leadership. I have to say that in my six years on the Hill it was a committee on which I have enjoyed serving more than any other committee. The work was very exciting. I enjoyed the debates and the strong, tough arguments that took place but not on a partisan basis. It was not at all uncommon to see the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and I together against the Chairman or someone else together with me against the Chairman. It was a group of Members who were trying very hard to put the best interests of Parliament and of their country before their own. It was the most exciting and dynamic experience of which I have ever been a part. I appreciated working with the Hon. Member for Papineau who represented his Party on the committee. His contribution was a very good and lively one.

I want to mention also the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) who represented the New Democratic Party. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) referred to the Hon. Member this morning. I thought it was significant that he recognized the work that the Hon. Member contributed to the committee.

Let me thank the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn). He had a tough go in the negotiations, but he stuck with us on the issue and, as a result, we have the debate today.

Last let me come to the Prime Minister. I sincerely believe that if it were not for his commitment to parliamentary and procedural reform, this debate would not be happening today. He stuck by us. He fought. He had tremendous courage throughout the debate and the discussions. I can remember the naysayer saying, when the report was first tabled, that the Prime Minister would never accept it, that he would never let it happen, that he would let it die.

But the Prime Minister did not let it die. He aggressively pursued the matter and encouraged the Hon. Member for St. John's East. He aggressively encouraged other members of the committee and Members of Parliament to pursue the issue and to get on with what he saw as a really important opportunity for parliamentarians.

The Prime Minister was willing, as he has admitted time and time again, to suffer some personal embarrassment to allow private Members or back-bench Members to stand up in this House and make the kinds of motions and statements they want to make and to pursue legislation they want to see pursued. He feels that is the kind of Parliament we should have. I respect and admire his leadership on that issue.

I want to touch on some of the work that I particularly enjoyed and think is important. I do not mean in any way to diminish other parts of the report. I want to highlight the parts for which I have a particular fondness. The area of committee work is one. Since arriving on Parliament Hill, I have spent quite a bit of time in committees. I have found the committee work to be one of the most profitable areas for a Member to work in. So often we found ourselves frustrated by a system that was cumbersome and that made our work futile. Very often we did not feel we were accomplishing the kinds of things that we as Members of Parliament wanted to accomplish.

The first change this report recommends that I think is important is to give committees more freedom and scope to look into matters that concern them. They can also get more involved in the legislative and drafting process. That is significant. I know the time spent on that part of the committee review was spent in very serious discussion which had a lot of implications. We felt strongly that we wanted to see the committees in the Parliament of Canada play a much more dynamic and unique role in our institution.

Another element important to the committees was the ability to hire experts. Often, as committee members, we felt frustrated by the process. We did not feel that we were backed by adequate expert staff to deal with the experts we face on various issues. I am sure all of us at one time or another in committee have dealt with witnesses we did not feel qualified to question. As a result, some of our work has not perhaps been the kind of work we hoped would come forward. With this provision, Mr. Speaker, we will see some changes made to the committee process. The whole question of Order in Council appointments is significant. When we looked at this area we looked at what the Americans have done and how they have dealt with it. We felt strongly that in Canada we, as Members of Parliament, must have the right to look at the people who are receiving some of these very important positions, which affect the policy and the direction of our nation. Up to now these appointments have been made and this policy has been exercised with virtually no scrutiny by Parliament, with no questioning of competence, expertise or ability of the person called upon. With this change, we will see quite a difference in the type of appointments that come through.

Individuals who accept an appointment will know they may well face a scrutiny of their abilities and their talents. There will be more hesitation in accepting an appointment simply because of the salary, the status or whatever goes with a particular job. It is certainly our goal and my goal to see good quality people coming forward for jobs. People will be put under scrutiny, and we will have better people to fill these important roles.

Another area that affected the committees to a certain degree, certainly one committee of the House, was the whole business of reviewing regulations. Those have been a constant thorn in the side of Members of Parliament. Some Members have distinguished themselves over the years by looking into regulations. But they often faced frustration and futility. Now we will see some changes.

The committee wanted to see smaller committees. We wanted to see committees shrink in size. In today's bigger and better society, it seemed to be a little twist out of the ordinary, but my experience is that it is a good idea. The committee that drafted this report resulting in the motion we are dealing with today, was a small committee. One built very strong relationships with the people one worked with. This tends to break down partisan lines. We reinforced and encouraged each other to do better and more thorough work, even though in some cases it was a little uncomfortable. After the adjustment period through which all of us will have to go after the introduction of these new rules or new ideas, it will be one of the most significant changes. The net result will be that committee members will be trying hard to get on that particular committee and will be struggling to keep their membership. I think we will see better work as a result.

Another area which has been fairly topical today is that of written questions. It has been a constant frustration for Members of Parliament on all sides of the House to have to sit around and wait for an answer which may or may not ever come. It begins to feel like something one does to use up a little time and pass the day. None of us want to waste our time that way. I am pleased to see those changes coming forward.

I should like to refer to a situation in the last Parliament which struck me as being somewhat frustrating. One of our Members died and, after a period of time, there was no office or staff on the Hill to represent his constituents. As a result, neighbouring Members of Parliament tried to pick up the work. However, the truth of the matter was that constituents in a riding in Canada had no representation in the House of Commons for a considerable time. That has happened in the past, and I think it must cause all of us as Members of Parliament some concern. I am pleased to see that we are extending the staff provisions for six months so that constituents will have a chance to come to an office and talk about their concerns. No one should be in a position of having nowhere to go or having to know someone else to deal with. Although it is a very small reform in some ways, it will mean a significant difference to a number of people if such circumstances arise again.

Mr. Speaker, you have been given much needed power in terms of the disciplining of Members. I am sure the Speaker will find that power to be difficult to use at times and will be somewhat uncomfortable. However, the truth of the matter is that we feel very strongly that the Speaker, in order to establish authority in the House of Commons, has to be able to do something without relying on someone else to pass a motion or an amendment. Throughout history Speakers have been left in rather uncomfortable positions at times, and we certainly do not want to see a repeat of that. This is why we went ahead with the provision. It will be a difficult situation. References were made earlier this morning to some of the implications and some of the dangers. Members of Parliament elect the Speaker because we have confidence in the individual. This means we will also have confidence in his or her ability to use that new power.

Another area which has been much talked about over the last little while is the whole area of confidence. It was one area with which we as a committee found it difficult to come to grips. I am sure most Hon. Members know that we ended up having a discussion about it but not making a direct recommendation in the report in that particular area. We want to see the whole concept of confidence being removed except in extreme cases such as the Budget and particular Bills or laws which are important to the Government of the day. We wanted to see an ability on the part of Members of Parliament to vote according to their consciences and on behalf of their constituents from time to time. We wanted to see that practice develop a little. Of course it is the kind of thing which will be an uncomfortable transition for Members of Parliament. We can change the rules, but to change attitudes is another story. There has been a very strong hesitancy on the part of Hon. Members over the last little while to vote against their Parties, and for very obvious reasons. The minute Members do that, they are targeted in the press as mavericks or as being at odds with their Party or with the leadership of their Party. As a result, Members who may have felt very strongly about a particular issue were not prepared to take those kinds of risks. In order for this to come about, there will have to be a change in the attitude of each of us in this institution. There will have to be a change as well in the attitude of the Government or of the Cabinet of the day. In addition, there will have to be a change in the attitude of the press to ensure that it does not set up the individual as some kind of martyr or maverick who is about to take on his Party and fight his leadership. If we really want to see the free vote come to Parliament, it can only come when it is accepted as a legitimate role and responsibility of a Member of Parliament in certain circumstances.

I should like to talk for a couple of minutes about a subject of which I am very fond, that is, the whole area of Private Members' Business. When I was elected to the House, I felt strongly that I could do some positive things or take some positive action, not simply sit back and respond to the legislation placed before me or react to the debate which someone else put on the table. I wanted to be able to play some kind of role or to take some kind of leadership in the issue. With these new private Members' provisions, for the first time we as Members of Parliament have a real opportunity to do that. The first thing we will do is to have our Bill selected in the draw. Then we take the motion or Bill we want debated before a committee of our peers, Members of Parliament. Then we argue why our particular Bill should come to a vote. I love the dynamics of that. I love the opportunity for Members of Parliament to appear in front of a group of back-benchers, such as the individual who is making the presentation, and say that the issue is an important one and why they think it should go forward. The decision will be made by our peers, the very people with whom we work in this institution, the very people who are faced with many of the same problems and frustrations. I see it as a very dynamic opportunity. It will change our attitude toward the House of Commons and our attitude toward the kinds of things we want to accomplish.

It was made clear this morning that it puts tremendous responsibility upon the members of the committee. The members who will be making the decisions will be faced with some very tough ones. They will have to decide the criteria upon which they want to make a decision. The decision cannot be based upon personal attitude or upon personal ideas about a particular Bill. They will have to look at more than that.

I see that my time is running out, but I should like to refer to the idea that I can now have a Bill come to a vote in the House of Commons. I am not faced with standing and making a speech, only to know that no one is listening, no one cares and no action will be taken on it. I feel that for once there will be an opportunity to make a contribution, to put something forward and to see it come to some sort of resolution. This does not guarantee that I will win, but it gives me a chance to see something I have done come to a vote. As a result, Members of Parliament will now have a much more direct influence upon what goes on. They will be able to provide some leadership. They will be able to test some of their important ideas. They will be able to do a number of significant things.

I should like to touch quickly upon something that I mentioned earlier. It has been said that one can reform the asylum but that it is tough to change the inmates. That is what we are faced with. We can make the kinds of changes to the institution we want, but until those reforms really become a part of what we are doing, we have a real problem on our hands. There is a change in responsibilities.

The first change will affect Members of Parliament. If we do not make those changes in attitude and use our new freedom and influence, there is no point in changing the Standing Orders. Second, the Government or the Cabinet has to respect the input and ideas of individual Members of Parliament, because it may find that those individuals with new influence and power can suddenly put pressure upon the Government. I think it will change the dynamics of the way in which Parliament works. Third, as I mentioned briefly before, the press itself will have to change the way it looks at Members of Parliament working in the House.

The most important thing that I can say is that this is a significant day for Parliament. We are seeing changes that are profound and that will change this institution and the way we think about ourselves and about our role as Members of Parliament. I am looking forward to passing this motion and stepping into the new period, the transition and the test time, to have the kind of Parliament that I think all of us hope for, dream for and work for.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member talks about attitudes being the tool which will bring the new changes that he foresees in Parliament. I wonder if he could elucidate for us what he sees the role of Cabinet to be in this particular new system. If you look at some of the recommendations in the original McGrath Report, for example, on the issue of Order in Council appointments, you will find that the commission suggested that Order in Council appointments would be subject, not only to review, but also to a decision-making process through Members of parliament, that is, if Members themselves did not agree with the specific appointment they would have the power to overturn that appointment.

I could be wrong and perhaps the Chairman could elucidate this further for me, but in the current Bill that is before us we have the power of review, however, there is no power to overturn a Cabinet decision. Frankly, I think that if we believe that this particular document is going to lead to a parliamentary reform, in essence we are buying a pig in a poke, because we do live in a parliamentary system. The Cabinet, the executive of the asylum, remains the same. The ordinary inmate may in fact be more democratized in the process, but as long as we have a Cabinet that is the bottom line, and a Cabinet that is the chief decision-making corpus of the asylum, then the heart, the soul and the guts of the asylum remain untouched. Maybe I am a little more cynical than others, but I think that, as long as we are governed by the parliamentary process and governed by the Cabinet process, this notion of attributing more power to private Members is, indeed, an illusory notion. I would hate to think that we would be making all of our efforts in parliamentary reform with the illusory notion that more power is being given to the private Member. I think that more power to the Private Member will not accrue from this particular Bill because we are still stymied by the role and the authority vested in Cabinet, and specifically in the Prime Minister's Office. I wonder how this Bill addresses those specific concerns?

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I would like to try to address the Hon. Member's comments for a moment, if I can. First of all, I want to start where she left off. She said that she does not see this particular motion changing the dynamics or the role of a private Member of Parliament. I can say that, after having worked on this report, having spent five or six years looking at what happens here, I think we are facing more significant changes to the role of a private Member of Parliament than we have ever seen in the Canadian House of Commons.

Now, if we talk about the committees' role, for example, the advantages that the committees have; the expanded power, the expanded ability to look into subject areas, the expanded ability to hire expert staff, the expanded ability to go ahead with the kind of work that I think is important, those are the kinds of things that really will change the dynamics of Members of Parliament in this institution, that is, to go back to the specifics that the Hon. Member referred to, the veto power of a committee in dealing with Order in Council appointments. I should point out that, as I recall it, in the original report there were some 64 appointments that would be subject to veto. Now those have been changed. A colleague from her own Party, I think it was the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) talked about this particular subject at length. One of the comments he made—and I think it is a very relevant one—is that we are not in a Congressional system where you have the difference between the executive versus the Congress, and as a result the executive can make the appointment, but we have the opportunity to review it. The question that I put to the Member is this: If the Cabinet comes forward with a recommendation for an appointment but then that particular individual receives a highly critical and negative report from the committee, then I think it would have the same impact and the same power as a veto itself. Even though we could have gone to that extent—and we did talk about it in our original report, but there were some dangers to that, as was mentioned by her colleague from Cochrane-Superior—in fact, with this kind of an opportunity to come forward with a negative report or a critical examination of an individual, we are taking a very dramatic step forward, and certainly a step that I know very, very few people on the street expected to see taken. So we have made significant progress. This is a dramatic change. We are going to have time to test it, we are going to have time to see how it works, but it is certainly a step in the right direction, and I am sure the Member herself would not deny that.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Hon. Member. I have a press report here that quotes the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). It reads as follows:

> It's true that he makes fine speeches and I really like him. His media relationships are more distant, more sporadic. He doesn't have to face the House of Commons every day. It's an almost ideal situation.

The person quoted is the Right Hon. Prime Minister, and of course he is referring to President Ronald Reagan. It would suggest to me that the Prime Minister does not hold our system in high esteem. I would like to ask the Member who spoke for the Government about certain comments made by the Prime Minister during his speech just before the lunch hour. As he knows, the Prime Minister made a very rare appearance in the House to make a speech. He appeared at ten to one, knowing, of course, that the House would adjourn at one o'clock, and then did not reappear at three o'clock in order to give Government Members and other private Members an opportunity to question him.

I would like to ask the Member if the Prime Minister is truly serious about enhancing the role of the private Member, and if he is really sincere about parliamentary reform, why would he say that the President of the United States has an almost ideal situation because he does not have to face the House of Commons every day? Why would he not come back to the House in order to answer questions from private Members? Would you not agree with me that his actions lead one to question his credibility seriously?

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I am really glad that the Member has asked me this question because it really gives me an opportunity once again to talk about the role of the Prime Minister in the reform package that is before us today. If this Member had taken the time and looked back—he may well have done that—on the history of the reform of the Parliament of Canada, he will know that it is very rare for a Prime Minister to make a commitment and to take the time and have the energy to bring about real reform. This particular Prime Minister has never hesitated, from the day that the motion came forward in this House, to establish the McGrath task force. He has continued steadfastly to make commitments and statements in public about the importance of reform. He has pushed it and prodded it and kept it going until we ended up debating the motion here today. I do not remember the last time that I saw a Prime Minister come in and take part in a debate in the House of Commons without being the lead speaker. In other words, the Prime Minister came in here today, sat in his place and spoke as another Member of Parliament very much concerned about the whole process of parliamentary procedural reform. He talked about the importance and the dynamic need for Members of Parliament, private Members of Parliament, back-bench Members of Parliament, to take part in what is going on.

There is an old expression which says that actions speak louder than words. The Member has been around here long enough to know that from time to time quotations that appear in newspapers, on the radio or on television, are not necessarily in context, are not necessarily accurate. The thing that really counts, and it counts to every Member that is in this House of Commons, is not so much what we say but the actions. The Prime Minister, more than any other parliamentarian, has demonstrated his desire and his fight for real reform in Canada.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): I want to start by saying that I do not believe that everything in the package of rule changes before us is reform, and consequently to oppose some of these items is not to oppose reform. I would say about two-thirds of the package of rule changes is good, and I would describe it as reform, and I am ready to support it. However, some major proposals in the package were not even recommended by the special committee of which the Hon. Member who just spoke was a member.

As the Hon. Member and others have said, we can make all the changes in the rules that we like, but if the attitude of the Members with respect to those rules does not change, we will not have much meaningful reform. If the attitude of the Government with respect to the role of Parliament does not change and if the attitude of government back-benchers and opposition Members does not change, we are not going to see very much reform despite the technical changes to the rules that have been proposed today.

We know that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and some of the Ministers very often make great rhetorical statements about this or that, but they end up doing exactly the opposite. It was very surprising to read in the newspaper this morning that the Prime Minister said yesterday that, in his opinion, the President of the United States is in the ideal situation because he does not have to go to Parliament. The Prime Minister came to the House today to make a speech in this debate to try to counteract the negative statement he made yesterday, but it indicated to me that he really does not know what this is all about. He is for parliamentary reform, but when very real situations arise in which parliamentary reform should be applied, it is not being applied.

We did not see parliamentary reform applied with respect to the closure of the Gulf refinery in the East of Montreal. We wanted to have that issue examined by a parliamentary committee, but that did not happen. As a matter of fact, the decision was made by one Minister, almost in contradiction with several other Ministers and Members of Parliament from Montreal who were very closely related to the problem at hand, and there was no examination by Parliament. We did not even see the documents that were prepared by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs touching on that issue, documents which Members of Parliament needed to discuss the matter fully. The same thing happened with de Havilland. We had to push and fight with the Government to get that matter examined by a parliamentary committee. Finally the Government agreed to it, but then it went off and made the decision even before the parliamentary committee had a chance to report.

Just today I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) if he would make no decision with respect to the transfer of commercial jet flights to Mirabel until a committee of the House has had a chance to examine all the options and to consult with the public in Montreal on those options. He would not make such a commitment. The Minister said that the Government, in its wisdom, would do what it had to do and would make a decision. With those kinds of answers to specific questions, one wonders what is really meant by the Government talking about parliamentary reform. As I said, a lot depends on the attitude of all Members on the Government side and on the Opposition side.

I indicated previously that I thought that about two-thirds of the package was good. I think the proposals with respect to petitions are good. In the past, when we presented petitions on behalf of our constituents, we never knew if the Government was going to answer them. Our constituents often asked us what had happened to the petitions we presented in Parliament with respect to family allowances, de Havilland or other issues. The new rule change will oblige the Government to give us some kind of reply.

I also like the proposals with respect to the Private Members' Business. I think it is very good that Private Members' Business will be given more attention and that six Bills will be allowed to proceed to a vote. However, I do have some reservations about which I put questions this morning to the Hon. House Leader. We will be testing this procedure over a number of months. We will have to wait to see how the new standing committee on Private Members' Business chooses the six Bills that will come to a vote. We will want to see if it chooses only those Bills which will cause no problem for the Government or have no great issues associated with them or if the Government will choose all Government-sponsored Bills or only Bills regarding one subject matter. I am willing to give that a chance. On the whole, I think the proposals for private Members' Business are good ones.

I think that the proposals for written questions are good ones and I think that the proposal to limit the bells is a good proposal. I would like to remind the House that the abuse of the bells was not started by this Opposition Party but by the Party now in government—

Mr. Holtmann: Oh, wait a minute!

Mr. Allmand: I was here, my dear friend. While we may have repeated it, we never repeated it to the extent it was used when it was first started. I was here when those bells rang night and day for almost two weeks. That was an abuse and I am glad to see that the rules will be changed to bring that abuse to an end. There has to be another way to oppose the Government when it is hell bent on destruction and on doing something the Opposition thinks is wrong other than ringing the bells forever.

I also agree with the proposal that allows the Speaker to suspend a Member for a day when the Speaker names him for misbehaviour without the requirement for a vote of the House. I do not think that a vote of the House should be necessary. We abolished appeals on Speaker's rulings a few years ago, and I think it is logical that we abolish the vote on suspending Members for a day when the Speaker names them. On the other hand, although that is quite a step forward, I do not agree that we should be allowed to suspend a Member for up to five days for a second infraction. Perhaps there should be a stiffer penalty for a second infraction, but I am not willing to jump that far in one set of amendments. Let us see how the new rule works. If it works well, then at the end of the trial period we could consider something for those who misbehave more than once in a Session.

Those are some of the good things about the proposals. Now I will mention some of the proposals that I do not believe to be reform. Up until today, I have not been convinced and I am still not convinced, having listened to the debate, that legislative committees spell reform. No one has been able to convince me that by having another layer of committees called legislative committees, we have reformed the House. I would like to relate to the House the experience I had with a legislative committee in the last month.

The legislative committee dealing with Bill C-62, the Bill for employment equity, was composed of 20 Members of Parliament. There were two from the Liberal Party, two from the NDP and 16 from the government Party. During the hearing of witnesses, there were usually between five and six government Members and two or three opposition Members present. There was a core of Government Members and opposition spokesmen who were present for the hearing of witnesses.

Once we began the clause-by-clause voting on the Bill, almost the entire committee was present. However, a large number of Government Members who had never heard witnesses and did not know what the Bill was about sat in and simply voted against amendments put forward by Opposition Members without any consideration of what was said during the hearing of evidence and without any consideration of what our arguments were. As a matter of fact, during the clause-by-clause voting on that Bill, only three Government Members, the Parliamentary Secretary, the Chairman of the standing committee and one other Member, were au courant with the Bill and the issues. As well, there were two members of the NDP and two members of the Liberal Party who had gone through the whole process. There were as many abuses in that legislative committee as there were in the standing committees a number of years ago when the Party in power simply changed the members present at every meeting and shoved them in simply to vote for the Government's clauses without any regard to the evidence as none or very few of them had heard that evidence.

That was my experience with a legislative committee. I do not consider that to be reform. I consider that to be reactionary and a step backward from what we were doing a number of years ago. People have said that Members of the House of Commons will be fighting to get on these new standing committees, that they will be small and that they will be dealing with issues. To me, the principal work of the House is legislation. I will want to be on the legislative committees. I will not spend my time on standing committees studying some obscure issue. If there are legislative committees sitting, it will be important for me to sit on those committees. That is where the action will be. To lay a complete new layer of committees on top of the existing layer of standing committees is a mistake. It has not been demonstrated that this is reform. It is something based on the supposition that a certain number of Members on a standing committee will be studying some important questions relating to, for example, employment, and there will be another set of Members examining a Bill put forward by the Minister of Employment and Immigration on employment equity, let us say. It is proposed that there be two completely different sets of Members dealing with the issue and that they will be able to work at the same time. However, that is not possible in a House which has just 262 Members. It might be possible in Great Britain where there are over 600 Members and where the number of legislative committees is limited to five at any one time. It will not be possible in our House of Commons. Not only have the opposition Parties with their small number of Members found it difficult to man standing committees and legislative committees, but even the Government with its large membership has found it difficult. As a matter of fact, the Government keeps rotating them around without really knowing what is going on, as I just pointed out with respect to the legislative committee on Bill C-62 which deals with employment equity.

We have seen the system working for a few months now. I do not think it has worked well. However, we are now going ahead in a somewhat more permanent way, although it is still not completely permanent. I am willing to bet that it will not work well unless a limit is placed on the number of legislative committees which can work at any one time, as is the case in Great Britain. There, pieces of legislation have to queue up to to go to one of these legislative committees. That, of course, slows down the process, but there are only a limited number of Members here to study all these issues and all these Bills. Legislation just cannot be proliferated. It cannot be expected that it will be given close attention by Members of Parliament and by community groups which want to comment on legislation which is before a committee. We cannot expect all that to happen with just 262 Members of Parliament. When we take out the members of the Government who sit in Cabinet, and there are about 30, the Chief Government Whip and the Leaders of the Opposition Parties, we are left with a limited number of Members who must work in these committees. As a matter of fact, I met with a member of the Government this past week who told me that he comes to Ottawa only one day a week. He comes on his duty day and spends the other four days of the week in his riding. This is what he admitted to me. He said: "Why should I come to Ottawa? I am not going to sit in those committees and never say anything or do anything. I get more done in my constituency". I really do not know about that situation. We are elected to be legislators. One hopes that if we were to have real reform, then people such as that would have a role to play.

I would now like to deal with the new rule with respect to examining Order in Council appointments in committee. When the Prime Minister first made his promise on the matter during the election campaign I thought he was proposing something similar to the American system. However, what has been put to us for consideration is that we consider the appointment after the fact, after it has been made. I am wondering what this will amount to. After all, the person will have been appointed already as, let us say, Chairman of the National Parole Board or President of Air Canada, and we will then call that person to appear before the committee and examine him. I think what we will find out is that Government Members will defend the appointment no matter what. Likely, members of the Opposition will attack the person if he or she does not have the proper qualifications. However, if the appointee has the qualifications, then the time of the committee will not be wasted by calling that person before it. What can members of the committee do? Make a report that the appointment was not a good one? Will Government Members really do that the closer we get to elections? I doubt it. I do not consider that much of a reform either.

I would now like to deal with the proposal in regard to the declaration of interest by members of Parliament, and especially the requirement to list trips which we take abroad. I am quite willing to list all the trips that I take, not only those sponsored by non-parliamentary associations and by my political Party but all of them. In putting forward this proposal I do not know why the Government has not made it necessary to include all trips which are taken by Government Members with their Ministers to conferences such as those held by the OECD, the ILO or all sorts of other ones which are held around the world. We frequently see planes flying off with two or three Government Members. Now and then a member of the Opposition will be taken along, but that is a rare occurrence. Why not make it a requirement to declare all these trips? By the way, this proposal did not come out of the special committee chaired by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I believe it must have come out of the office of the Government House Leader, or somewhere else.

It was proposed in committee that there be more votes which would not be considered votes of confidence. That means that the House could vote on certain matters and defeat a clause in a Government Bill, or even defeat a Government Bill, without putting the Government in jeopardy and without having the Government resign because of the defeat. If the rules were changed in that respect, then it would be more likely that Members would express themselves as they really believe the issue dictates and not simply as their Whips want them to. There is nothing in the package of proposals that is before us on that issue.

It is said that the new standing committees will be free, that they will conduct in-depth studies and issue reports in which will be put forward what the committees really believe should be done. I have my doubts in this respect. If those reports are made to the House and are subject to a motion for concurrence, then Members can always move concurrence in the report of a standing committee, for example on employment and immigration, and I can move concurrence in the report of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, but the majority of Members on those committees will not feel free to make reports which are contrary to Government policy, despite what they have heard from witnesses in committee. If this is the case then there will be no free vote; or a vote on such reports would involve confidence in the Government when concurrence is moved and voted upon. We will be watching this matter during the trial period to see if there is any movement in that direction.

Finally, I was disappointed to see that there is no provision for televising the proceedings of committees. I think this would help the work of committees and give them more importance. If the proceedings were televised, then some of the focus would be taken off the House, especially Oral Question Period.

To conclude, as far as I am concerned the opinions of Members of Parliament with respect to rule changes are not just a matter of party policy. It is something that affects every individual Member of Parliament. I think the rules should be such that they allow Members to dissent from their Parties and still have some provision in the rules for them in doing that. To push my thinking a bit further, I do not think we should make any rules today which would not provide well in a minority Parliament. In the 20 years in which I have been here there have been, I believe, four minority Parliaments. In the first one there were four Parties in opposition and it took only two of those Parties to join together to defeat the Government. On another occasion there were three Parties in opposition, and in another Parliament there were two. When we formulate our rules we must do so in such a way that all those people who are elected will have a fair and equitable chance to participate in debate and to raise their side of the issue. In my opinion that is the real goal of reform.

I think the purpose of Parliament should be to discuss the important issues of the country at length. There should be an opportunity for all sides of the question to be put forward, and then we should vote. We should not debate the matter forever, although it should not be rammed through. There should be an opportunity for debate and an opportunity for all sides of the issue to be made public. In formulating the rules in this respect I do not think we can focus on just the Government Party and on the Official Opposition, or the fact that those two Parties are run completely by either the Prime Minister or the Leader of the Opposition. There has to be room for the individual Member to express himself in opposition to his Party when he wants to do so. That is Parliament. We are all elected in our constituencies by electors who elect us to Parliament for specific reasons.

● (1640)

I agree with about two thirds of what is in this package. There are some important proposals with which I do not agree. I would hope that the Government House Leader and Government Members would reconsider some of the points they have put before us. If they really do believe in parliamentary reform, they should certainly not ram this package through. It should be subject to a wider range of opinions. Our House Leader has been involved in consultations, as well as other House Leaders, but I think this is something that needs more consideration.

Mr. Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) and then the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie).

Mr. Blaikie: I rise on a point of order. With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I think if you read the rules with respect to the time for questions or comments, you will see that it is incumbent on the Chair to recognize a member of a Party other than that of the Member who just spoke, if such Members are rising, which I am doing.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the Hon. Member's point. It is not in the rules that way, but it has sometimes been our practice.

Mr. Blaikie: It is in the rules.

Mr. Speaker: No, it is not. What I have been doing today is making no assumptions about Party on the assumption that we were talking about matters of parliamentary reform and that Hon. Members would want me to do that.

However, since earlier two questions were put by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East and the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata), I am sure the Hon. Member for Hamilton East is prepared to wait and allow the first question to be put by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie).

Mr. Blaikie: I just wanted to say one thing very briefly, Mr. Speaker. I was glad that the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) concluded his speech by speaking about the kind of Parliament he would like to see, because if I had to do the very dangerous thing of singling out any Member of Parliament who, I believe, over the years has embodied the kind of Member of Parliament of whom we want to see more as a result of this reform, then it would be the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East. As a government Member, he was known on many occasions to have expressed an opinion different from that of his Party and to have voted differently from his Caucus. He has acted in this Parliament with the kind of integrity and independence of judgment of which we would like to see more in this place.

Mr. Nunziata: That is what the Liberal Party is all about.

Mr. Blaikie: Well, that is another matter. What I would like to say is that I hope the Hon. Member could see his way clear to supporting the package, with that in mind.

With respect to the point he raises about legislative committees, I hope that very soon someone from the Government side will rise and say that this matter of putting a limit on the number of legislative committees which can sit at any time is a legitimate issue. It is not a big deal. It is something we can handle by mutual agreement. For God's sake, let someone get up and say that that can be done so that this is no longer an issue.

I think the Hon. Member should also admit for the record that he has not liked the idea of legislative committees from the beginning, and this is part of the problem. It is not something new that has come up as a result of our experience with it. I think he did not like them in principle, to begin with. But I hope the Hon. Member will give them a chance under the ideal conditions, that is, under the conditions which the committee had in mind. We have not really tried them under those conditions. We have tried them in rather anomalous conditions. I hope the Hon. Member would give them a chance to work as we conceive them; then if his criticisms persist, so be it.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, we are willing to give them another chance to prove themselves. I hope, as the Hon. Member suggested, that someone will get up to say that no more than five legislative committees will sit at the same time because I think that is what they have in Britain.

Mr. Blaikie: Eight in Britain.

Mr. Allmand: Is it eight in Britain? Well, they have over 600 Members.

Mr. Ouellet: No, no, six.

Mr. Blaikie: Well, they have eight slots.

Mr. Allmand: Five or six would be reasonable here. Let me say that the reason I opposed them in principle at the beginning was that I felt that if we develop a number of Members who become expert in transport, external affairs, defence, employment or the environment, then why should we then decide to send a piece of legislation dealing with that very same subject to another group of Members who are not experts and have not studied those issues? The answer I have received so far is that those people on the standing committee can then all go over and sit on the legislative committee. If that is the case, I wonder then why have the two sets of committees?

Mr. Blaikie: We will need more experts, Warren. You will have to distribute the expertise. You can't be the only expert forever.

Mr. Allmand: However, I am willing to give it a chance.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to speak in a non-partisan way, and I echo the comments made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). I must say, however, that I was in committee with another member of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), who said that as far as he was concerned, he did not intend to participate in committees with very few members because he thought it was a waste of his time. He did not see that the job would get done in small numbers. So I believe there is probably a fair degree of concern in all Parties as to how the new committee structure is going to work with 28 potential committees operating.

I would like to ask a couple of specific questions about rule changes as they relate to two issues which are obviously of concern to every Hon. Member. First, with respect to the issue of naming of Members, in the Standing Order we have in front of us, or the projet de loi, it is suggested that the Speaker be given the power to name a Member without necessarily calling a vote on the first occasion. On the second occasion, he can eject a person who is named for one week. I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether he agrees with that proposal since that was not the intention of the McGrath committee?

The second question, I think, relates to private Members' rights with respect to Standing Order 22. Under the current system, all Hon. Members are allowed 90 seconds for a statement under Standing Order 22. It is suggested that that be reduced to 60 seconds, with the intention of hearing more Hon. Members. However, it seems to me that if we are talking about the rights of private Members, and if we are concerned about giving more private Members an opportunity to speak, then we should abandon the current system of having a sort of perceived quota for each Party. For example, in the first 15 minutes of Question Period, approximately six statements under Standing Orders are made by the Government Party, three statements are made by the Liberal Party and two are made by the New Democratic Party. It seems to me that if we are really abandoning the notion of party policy, the statements under Standing Order 22 should be accorded on the basis of the people who are there and their own involvement and interests. I think if you will look at the record, Mr. Speaker, you will find that it has been members of the Liberal Party who have consistently stood up in large numbers on statements under Standing Order 22. Unfortunately, it is the same Members of the Government Party who again and again rise on those statements. I wonder if the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) could comment on the possibility of throwing aside party lines when it comes to the issue of Standing Order 22 if the time for the statement is going to be reduced to only 60 seconds?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I must say that I think that one minute is too short for statements under Standing Order 22. I would prefer 90 seconds. What I think will happen when we limit Hon. Members to 60 seconds is that all of their statements will be written and there will be no spontaneous statements spoken extemporaneously from one's seat because the Hon. Member will be fearful of being cut off before he gets his complete thought on the record. Everyone will write these statements down and more and more people will read their Standing Order 22. I think that is unfortunate. I agree with the principle of getting more statements under Standing Order 22 in, but I do not think it is a good idea to have them limited to one minute.

With respect to naming, I said in my remarks that I believe the Speaker should have the right to expel an Hon. Member when he names him or her without a vote of the House. However, I hesitate to agree with the new development of allowing the Speaker to expel an Hon. Member for up to five days on the second offence in a session. I would like to see us experiment for a trial period with this new procedure of the Speaker suspending a Member who is named for one day without a vote. If it works, then we can consider going to a tougher penalty on a second or third offence. I think we are going too far too fast without really knowing how it is going to turn out at this time, so I do not like the five-day provision at all.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. The period provided for questions and comments has now expired. The Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault).

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, if I could just comment briefly before I start my speech? I am sure that as far as the proposals by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), are concerned, the same could apply to Question Period, so it could be half and half. On this side of the House, we would have more time for putting questions to the Government if I follow the Hon. Member's—

• (1650)

Mr. Speaker, I am indeed delighted to be taking part in the debate on the proposed amendments to the Standing Orders, something we have been waiting for since September. Since I sat on the Special Committee on Parliamentary Reform, I am delighted to see that the Government has decided to support the Committee's recommendations.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that if anyone deserves the credit for today's debate and the fact that we are about to see a new Parliament, a new face with of course a change in attitude, the Prime Minister does. You know, when the boss says no, it is hard to change anything in a business. And the House of Commons is like a business. There is a boss, and the boss is the Prime Minister. I am sure he will not hold it against me if I reveal a caucus secret today, but the fact is that on several occasions in the Conservative caucus the Prime Minister did raise the issue of parliamentary reform. It is almost unheard of. This Prime Minister will rank high in the history of Canadian Prime Ministers because very seldom have we heard about a Prime Minister deciding just like that to transfer certain powers to Members of Parliament. I would suggest he deserves a round of applause from all of us.

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, I must say as well that the committee staff have worked closely with the committee members. I think those people deserve congratulations, because they are the ones who did all the research—including the deputy clerk—and followed the committee, and I can say that without them the committee would not have been able to do the outstanding job it did. I take this opportunity to thank and congratulate them. I am sure they are pleased today to see the Government going ahead with parliamentary reform.

Of course, I have to mention my committee colleagues. And then, Mr. Speaker, the staff have been very patient with me, for as a recently-elected Member every procedural question was something new to me. They were a great help. To them and to all my colleagues I express my appreciation and, I might as well confess, I have become an addict of parliamentary procedure. The chairman of our committee, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), kept us working very hard, but it was quite interesting. As I said before, I extend personal thanks to the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) who acted as my translator and was of great help to me. Mr. Speaker, I must admit that I am slightly upset over the official response of the Leader of the Opposition. We are talking about parliamentary reform, and the committee was responsible for finding ways to change the Standing Orders just so private Members would play a greater role. Indeed, we are now debating changes to the Standing Orders of the House of Commons because the special committee was given instructions by the Prime Minister to extend the powers of private Members.

I am somewhat disappointed to see that the Leader of the Opposition missed a good opportunity to say at last that it was not because he was on the Opposition side that he had necessarily to be against the Government, and perhaps the reverse is true. I suggest that we all have a sort of conscience to develop on this level. I must say that the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) have in part contributed to lessen the impact made resulting from the reply given by the Leader of the Opposition. Mr. Speaker, his reply was, I felt, a little to partisan-oriented. The more so because for the first time the committee had heard the three party leaders as witnesses, and they were all in favour of these proposals. That is why I was rather disappointed with the answer given today by the Leader of the Opposition.

I am sure that the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) will arrange everything when he rises in the House tomorrow morning.

Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that my Argenteuil-Papineau constituents who watch only the Oral Question Periods, were quite disappointed recently with the lack of décorum. As a matter of fact, they said to me: It is the same as before. How is it that there are so many confrontations in the House of Commons? You just cannot . . . Well, that's the Parliamentary system. As the Prime Minister was saying, we are not going to change the Oral Question Period and the very biased approach of the various parties.

Personally, I told them that it is the part which presumably the House has to play, and that a lot of work is being done outside the Oral Question Period. But it is very frustrating to try to convince our constituents that we are working very hard, that there is more to parliament than the Oral Question Period. I had to tell them: "Personally, I sit on the Standing Committee on Agriculture and on the Committee of Transport, and I have all sorts of work and research to do in connection with that". In the past, when our constituents could not see us during the Oral Question Period, they felt that we were doing nothing in Parliament.

I feel, therefore, that the proposals to enhance the parts individual Members have to play will greatly justify the use of our time here.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that you will also be satisfied with the latitude you will enjoy from now on in procedural matters. You will therefore be able to set your own precedents and we shall not always be forced to refer to rulings made in the British House of Commons.

I think that, under the new Standing Order 1, Mr. Speaker, you will have the opportunity to give a Canadian character to this House and make typically Canadian rulings. In my opinion, this is long overdue.

As our servant, since, as you are always saying, you are the humble servant of this House, you will have increased powers under the new rules, and from now on, your authority will be recognized by the Members of this House. I am certain that you know what I mean, Mr. Speaker, by the word "authority", and the fact that you will now be the boss of the House of Commons, its true boss . . .

An Hon. Member: The Daddy!

Mrs. Bourgault: Yes, the Daddy.

Mr. Speaker, as a Government backbencher, I am also very pleased with the emphasis which will now be placed on Private Members' Business.

In French, we say "simple député", while we say "private member" in English. In my opinion, it is not quite the same. The term "simple député" does not really translate the notion of "private member". I simply want to point out in passing, Mr. Speaker, that we work for weeks trying to write a motion and have it debated and trying to convince the Government and our colleagues to support our views.

Mr. Speaker, when the Leader of the House proposed a special debate on parliamentary reform some two months ago before presenting these amendments today, I took part in the debate and said that I was very curious about what happens to all the bills and motions moved by private members when, as we say in parliamentary language, they simply die on the Order Paper between 5 and 6 o'clock. The process is quite frustrating.

Mr. Speaker, I think that I am good at selling my ideas. I am interested in the role of voluntary work in our society and I have already proposed two motions in the House on this issue. I can tell you that, under the new rules, I shall rely on my personal staff and my selling ability to convince my colleagues of the Special Committee on Private Members' Business to accept my idea. If it is not accepted, I shall say, too bad, I cannot think that, just because I have introduced a bill, it is the best and is certain to be adopted. We have to be realistic. However, I shall still have the feeling that my bill can go further than with a one-hour debate and that it might have a chance of being referred to the committee for further study. This is something interesting which will benefit the Members of this House. I think that it will also benefit the Government, which will perhaps be able—

I see that you are looking at me, Mr. Speaker; has my time expired? Do I still have between five and ten minutes left?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, but—

[English]

The Hon. Member will have 10 minutes left for debate when the matter is next before the House.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members, Business.

ADVISABILITY OF AWARDING EDUCATIONAL BURSARIES TO ATHLETES

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of awarding educational bursaries to members of teams who represent Canada at the amateur level in international competitions.

He said: Mr. Speaker, let me give some background before I deal with the motion before the House. I want to make clear at the outset that there are athletic assistance programs operating in Canada which use a system of A, B and C carded athletes. Carded athletes can depend on a certain amount of financial assistance to continue their university education.

The reason for my motion arises from my travels throughout my riding last summer. I went to a baseball tournament in Lac la Biche last summer at which a team representing Canada was made up of young athletes from across the country. I discovered that this team was hosting an international meet to be held in Edmonton. They were hosting teams from such countries as Korea, Japan, teams from the college circuit in the United States, Cuba and Mexico. It was truly an international meet. I discovered to my amazement that a number of athletes representing Canada would be unable to return to university that September because they were spending the summer representing Canada in international amateur competition. Most of these young athletes were university students who worked during the summer in order to pay for their university tuition. They gave up their summer to represent Canada in this international competition that they were hosting in Edmonton.

In 1961, the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act was passed to promote, encourage and develop fitness and amateur sport in Canada. There are two program directorates that function chiefly through the provision of financial assistance to national sport and fitness oriented organizations in Canada. The first is Fitness Canada. It initiates and supports research programs and the development of instructional and promotional materials designed to increase public awareness of benefits of fitness. In 1984-85, a total of 86 national associations, special agencies and programs and 18 universities were allocated $7.7 million in federal funding in support of fitness related projects.

The second directorate is Sport Canada which provides funding and services to national sport bodies, amateur athletes, university researchers and sport scientists as well as other members of the sport community. It has an annual budget of some $50 million and is the major supplier of funds for Canadian sport.

Sport Canada funds and works closely with the 85 national sport organizations in Canada, which include the national sport governing bodies responsible for specific sports, arm'slength agencies such as the Coaching Association of Canada, multi-sport agencies such as the Canadian Inter-university Athletic Union, and specialized agencies such as the Sport Medicine Council of Canada. Its focus is on high-performance sport and contributions to the preparation of Canada's athletes for major international competition. Sport Canada also has an important commitment to the development of a strong domestic sports system which provides general opportunities for Canadians to participate in competitive sport.

Contributions are made to all recognized national sport organizations. These NSOs are eligible to receive core funding assistance in the areas of association management, technical development and high performance sport.

In 1984-85, Sport Canada distributed a total of $35.5 million in financial contributions among its various client associations. National sport organizations are voluntary organizations that are responsible for the development of their respective sport disciplines within Canada and for the preparation of high performance athletes and teams representing Canada in international competition. These are broken down into three groups, and this is where I believe Canada is falling behind. The first group is 27 sports on the 1988 Olympic Summer Games calendar. Those athletes involved in those sports who have A, B, or C carded athlete status are eligible for funds to help maintain the standard of living and continue their education while preparing for that sport. The second group includes 10 winter sports that will be featured at the Calgary Games.

Finally, there are 21 non-olympic disciplines. These include football, curling, free-style skiing, softball, baseball, raquetball, rugby, Canada five-pin and Canada ten-pin bowling, white water canoeing, karate, cricket, water skiing, squash, ringette, golf, lacrosse, parachuting, four-wall handball and soaring. Disabled sports are also included in this group.

Athletes participating in these sports are not recognized as athletes for A, B or C card purposes. One can only apply for this status when specifically recommended and can only be eligible for carded status after consideration by a review committee. In most cases these athletes are not eligible for carded athlete status whether or not they represent Canada in an international competition.

For example, those young amateur baseball players who hosted an international tournament in Edmonton last summer were not eligible for any assistance over and above their travelling expenses, accommodation and some pin money. Some of them had to give up a year of university in order to work and earn the money they would have earned during the summer they represented Canada on a national team.

In 1984-85, over $13 million was provided in core funding for the summer olympic sports. The 10 winter olympic sports received approximately $5 million in "best ever" programs and an additional $4 million in core contributions. Recent additions to the olympic sports group include rhythmic gymnastics and synchronized swimming which were added to the 1984 Olympics. Prior to that, can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, the young ladies who participated in the synchro swimming, and the young ladies and young men who participated in rhythmic gymnastics were not supported in any way by their Government other than through the amateur sports councils until those sports were recognized. We know there were a lot of international meets, particularly in synchronized swimming. These young ladies had to spend all of their extra time and their summer months preparing for those meets. They had to have financial support from their families or they could not participate, and that is a shame.

I have tried to add up all the non-olympic sports where young Canadians would be involved in international competition and did not receive funding to continue with school. At the most we are talking about 210 young athletes. If a $5,000 bursary were awarded to each one of those athletes who made a team and who gave up the normal period in the summer when he or she could earn money to go to university, say $5,000, you are talking about less than $200,000 in total to satisfy a need which I think we have overlooked in the sports area.

I shall not talk any longer because I hope my colleagues will see fit to allow this motion to go to committee for further study. I implore Members to think about it for a moment. It is not a costly item but it is one that would serve a real purpose to encourage young people not only to participate in amateur sports but also to signal to them that we do appreciate their taking time off during the summer to represent Canada in international meets.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to be able to participate in this debate, although I had not intended to speak on this important issue. I do agree with the Hon. Member who put the motion that this is an issue that should be discussed before a committee.

I think there are a number of young athletes who are prevented from participating at the international level or from pursuing scholastic endeavours as a result of the current discriminatory nature which permits funding only of those sports recognized as olympic designated sports. I think about roller skating. One of the world champions in roller skating came from my own community of Hamilton.

I have some concerns about the specific wording of the motion which reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of awarding educational bursaries to members of teams who represent Canada at the amateur level in international competitions.

I would like to see this issue dealt with in greater detail in committee because I think there is a slight danger in introducing the notion of educational bursaries into the question of funding at an international level, which suggests athletes and students are necessarily synonymous. That is not always the case in international competition. There may be a number of young athletes who of their own choice or for other reasons have not decided to pursue post-secondary education and who are out in the workforce in the normal way.

This motion while it would obviously respond to the needs of students pursuing athletic endeavours on the side would not respond adequately to those people who are pursuing an athletic endeavour in holding down a full-time job at the same time.

My second concern deals with the notion of introducing a kind of bursary system at the post-secondary level which is directed to those who participate in sports. I think we have seen in the United States very adequate evidence to show that often the quality of education or the quality of scholarship decreases as the level of participation in sports increases. This is not always the case and we have many fine athletes who have been able to combine academia and athletics. We also have a situation where athletes are encouraged to go to university. They get degrees in basket weaving and other creative endeavours at the university or post-secondary level in the United States, all the while using that particular bursary as a vehicle to pursue a sports endeavour.

I think it is pretty clear that in Canada, because we have tended to stay away from specific sports targeted bursaries for post-secondary education, we have been able to avoid the trap into which many universities and colleges in the United States have fallen. I think particularly of the college football system in the U.S. In a number of colleges and universities, coaches in particular have so abused the process that some of them have actually been forced out of their particular conferences and divisions. They have abused the process to the point where bursaries led to pay offs and to other under-the-table apportionments to encourage the various football players to go to a specific university.

If you are talking college football, Mr. Speaker, in the United States it is a very serious business indeed. Often the question of scholarship falls by the wayside. That is why I have some concerns about a motion that would tie the question of international competition to the issue of educational bursaries.

Certainly the Member has raised a very valid point about the financial prohibition that is, in essence, placed on those athletes who want to compete internationally, but I think it would be more effective if the Member dealt with that as a specific issue.

The notion of introducing educational bursaries for athletes at a time when transfer payments that the federal Government directs toward provincial Governments across the country are seeing a reduced number of dollars being put into them for the purpose of post-secondary education, would make it pretty difficult for those same universities to then swallow a program where we were directing larger sums of money toward bursaries for specifically designated athletes. That is why I think we should keep the question of athletics and scholarships, two questions, separate and apart.

I believe the merit of the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), which is essentially to provide some kind of a vehicle for international competition, is valid. It does merit further consideration in a committee setting.

I would, however, reinforce my concern about specifically tying educational bursaries to athletic records. I think that in Canada we have been lucky not to have fallen into the kind of trap of absolute non-academia that we have seen in the United States. We would not like to see our colleges and universities here swamped with so-called scholars who have no business being there. That is the possible sequitor that would result from the adoption of a motion where educational bursaries would be presented to members of teams who represent Canada at amateur level in international competitions. It may inversely force athletes to go back to school when really they have no business or should not or choose not to be there simply because they want to have the funding to be able to carry on their athletic endeavours.

Rather than tying the two together the question is funding for athletes. What we should be looking at rather is a motion that would permit those athletes currently operating in non-olympic designated sports at the international level, which includes roller skating and a number of sports cited by the Hon. Member, to have access to the same level or similar levels of government funding for international competition as are currently available to our olympic participants.

I know there are a number of sports that are trying and that have tried for a number of years to be recognized as olympic sports. Obviously participants in these very valid and effective sports are being cut off from Government funding because they have not been included in the rostrum of accepted and recognized olympic sports.

While I support the spirit of the motion, I do have some reservations. I would be very happy to see the matter go into committee.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to enter the debate. I agree with the Hon. Members who have spoken before me that this matter should be considered in committee. The Hon. Member has brought before us an important matter which has to do with young people who have an opportunity to represent Canada internationally in sports competition. As a result of a commitment to their sport, such young people dedicate their summers to training and competition and therefore lose the opportunity to earn money for their tuition or for room and board in the fall. I think this matter deserves attention and a response. It makes a great deal of sense that this Private Member's Motion goes to committee where it can be examined in detail. Young Canadians who demonstrate that kind of commitment to sport should receive recognition and support from their government bodies.

• (1720)

However, I do have some questions with regard to the motion, even though I feel it should be examined and studied in committee. We already have some assistance programs for athletes such as the Athletic Assistance Program. One of the limits of such programs is that they focus upon olympic sports only. Any re-examination of the question of financial support for people involved in international competition on behalf of Canada must raise the question as to why the support is focused on olympic sports only. Why can we not broaden it to include non-olympic sports such as baseball, softball, lacrosse and others? Why discriminate against those who compete in sports which are not part of the Olympic Games? Those questions need to be addressed at committee.

Also we should look at why the funding or support should be limited to students only. What about young people who compete in athletic events and happen not to be students? Do they not deserve the same kind of support for their commitment and endeavour? I think we should look at that as well. In addition, if we were to consider some additional financial support for students or other people in respect of their efforts to represent Canada abroad, any funding for such endeavours should be from new funds. Rather than taking away funds from existing sports programs for amateur sports or fitness, which are skimpy enough as they are, and spreading them thinner, it would be important, if we are to undertake new initiatives, to look at new funding being allocated for new purposes.

I support the motion going to committee for study. I think the Hon. Member has raised a legitimate question. He asked what support we were willing to offer to young people who represent us abroad. Of course that needs to be studied, and there are other questions which need to be answered in the process.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the motion now before us deals with an important issue. Sir, are we ready to help our young students who represent Canada in international competitions? These young people who take part in international competitions miss an opportunity during summer to earn money to pay for their tuition in the fall. Is there something we can do to help those young people and acknowledge their involvement in the world of sports?

Mr. Speaker, this is an important issue, and I want to support a thorough examination of that issue at Committee stage.

But there are questions we want to ask. There are programs already in place to support sport activities. However, existing financial help is focused on Olympic sports. Why not add other sports, is non-olympic sports, while we are looking at financial assistance programs for athletes who compete internationally? Why is our help limited to students only? Why not also help those young who are not student?

Finally, Mr. Speaker, if the motion is referred to Committee for its recommendations to be considered, do we have any assurance that the money that will be earmarked for that purpose will be new money, because existing programs need more funding to reach the goals of concern to us in today's program. When another goal is added to programs, funding must also be increased.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good motion in my view, and it is an excellent idea to refer the problem to Committee for more thorough consideration.

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that this Government believes in the promotion of excellence in Canadian amateur sport. During fiscal year 1984-85, Fitness and Amateur Sport Canada invested well over $65 million in the promotion of fitness for Canadians and the efforts of our amateur athletes. Sports Canada administers most of those funds, that is $50 million, with a view to supporting our best athletes in individual and team sports, at the national and international level.

[English]

Sport Canada receives its mandate from the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act of 1961. Let me refer to that Act wherein it is indicated that it is to promote, encourage and develop fitness and amateur sport in Canada. In the 25 years since the enactment of that Act, sport and fitness have become an integral part of the Canadian way of life. No longer need we fear that proverbial 60-year old Swede. I am sure that all of us saw joggers working up a sweat today during their lunch hour along the Rideau Canal and up here on the Hill. Canadians have become more conscious of fitness and of the importance of a balanced diet. Certainly fewer of us smoke than was the case 25 years ago.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in passing, I would like to mention the Department's major contribution towards improving the general level of fitness in this country. We have all heard about "Participaction", and when I look around, I think we all need to get out and get some exercise. However, there are two points I would like to bring to your attention: first of all, the remarkable contribution of our amateur athletes to international sport; and second, the way they are supported in their endeavour by Sport Canada. As we see it, the two go together: individual effort and achievements at the amateur level must have our support if they are to be successful.

However, as is the case in all financing programs, a choice must be made, and we must decide how to support amateur sport in a way that is satisfactory to Canadians. What criteria are we to use? What kind of priorities must be established so that we can manoeuver within the budgetary restrictions we must live with today?

I have said this before and I repeat: Sport Canada's aim is above all to promote excellence in amateur sport. We all believe that Canadians want to help our amateur athletes achieve the highest possible performance levels. And we will always remember with pride our participation in the 1984 Olympic Games!

• (1730)

Who can forget the thrill of seeing Gaétan Boucher, Canada's greatest Winter Olympian at Sarajevo, with his powerful, gliding stride and gold medal winning speed on the speed skating oval? There was Alex Baumann, at the Los Angeles Summer Games, with two swimming golds in world record time; Linda Thom of Ottawa, winning the first gold medal for Canada at Los Angeles in shooting; Lori Fung of Montreal, coming from behind to win the all round rhythmic gymnastics gold; Alwyn Morris and Hugh Fisher with the gold in the two-man kayak event; and the magnificent effort of our rowers in beating the Americans in the men's eight with cox event; and so many others: 44 medals in all, 10 of them gold. Canada's best olympic showing ever.

[Translation]

I would like to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to announce that one of my fellow citizens who is now in Tignes, France, won the most points for acrobatic skiing in the last few days. I am referring to Lloyd Langlois from Magog, in my riding, who is with two of his fellow Quebecers from Beauport Lake, the Laroche brothers. I am expecting more news from France, and even if they do not win the championship, I think I will be as proud as ever of what they achieved during the last few days.

Our international class athletes have worked very hard to reach this level of excellence and they have achieved remarkable results, for instance, at the Commonwealth Games, and also at various other world championships. These young people deserve our unqualified admiration for their good work and dedication to their sport. We must not forget that they often have to compete with representatives from other countries who are heavily subsidized in various ways by their governments.

Sport Canada also recognizes the importance of financial assistance, which should be given to our international-class amateur athletes on a firm and continuing basis, with sound long-term planning. That is how we will be able to maintain the performance of Canadian athletes at international levels. The results themselves are the best testimony to the soundness of this approach. In recent years, Canada has been gradually improving its international performance, which reached its peak at the 1984 Olympic Games.

[English]

If we are to maintain and improve on these achievements, we must spend our sports dollars on continuing to develop such excellence. We therefore must support excellence in our young, promising athletes as well as our international athletes at their peak.

[Translation]

To develop this high degree of excellence among our young athletes, Sport Canada subsidizes and is working very closely with 85 sports organizations, and it also provides special subsidies to Canadian amateur athletes under the Athlete Assistance Program.

[English]

Which sports qualify? To qualify for funding, a sport must meet the following criteria: First, it must hold a world championship or a world level competition at least every two years. Second, it must have a year round training program for each athlete or team. Third, it must have a monitoring and evaluation program for each athlete, with monthly reporting to Sports Canada. Fourth, it must have a formal selection process for national teams with published rules and an appeal process. Finally, in the international sports category, its national team or individual athletes must compete in at least two international competitions with at least 20 participating countries each year.

[Translation]

Through the Athletic Assistance Program we now offer financial aid to levels A, B and C athletes. We now have about 140 A-level athletes, which means they rank among the world's eight best in their sports. One hundred and thirty other athletes are at level B, therefore among the sixteen best athletes worldwide. The other 540 under the AAP are at level C, which designates international class athletes likely to qualify for levels A or B. Monthly assistance to athletes amounts to $650 at level A, $560 at level B and $450 at level C.

[English]

This is, of course, another level of competition beyond the A, B and C levels. It consists of a group of athletes whose numbers are impossible to estimate accurately. Included in this number are the thousands of aspiring hockey players in this country, as well as the athletes who participate in the Canada Summer and Winter Games, Canada's major events for developmental sports. All of them have a demonstrated interest in seeking, and have a good chance of reaching higher levels of achievement in their chosen sport.

[Translation]

Total financial assistance through Sports Canada is subject to current budgetary cutbacks and restrictions.

At the same time it would not be very wise to give our world class athletes just enough to cover their accommodation expenses. They should also get additional equipment if they are to represent us and compete successfully in international sports events.

International recognition does not come cheap, particularly in the case of sports teams. There are a number of expenses such as training for athletes, travels to take part in international competitions and events, the costs of accommodation, place tickets, hotels and the like. In addition, coaches must be paid and, in many cases, hired because international level training is a full-time job. To that must be added expenses for medical and scientific services such as physicians, physiotherapists, dieticians, and certain medical and related services.

All that is quite expensive! Still this kind of assistance is a must for our athletes and it is one of the reasons why Sports Canada has recently gained international recognition.

[English]

Sport Canada currently spends roughly 10 per cent of its annual budget, or about $4 million, through the AAP. The support services outlined above cost many millions more. The AAP has been very effective and in itself is, we feel, another factor in our international success. Let us not forget, however, the main factor. Living expenses and top quality back-up are not enough.

The dogged motivation, the determination to succeed, have to be credited to the athletes themselves. It is their dedication, their individual sacrifice, their many hours of hard work, that ultimately achieve international results. Excellence is not just a matter of a year or two or slapdash training. It is the result of many hours on the practice field from a very early age. Only in this way can bodies be honed to the highest levels of achievement.

• (1740)

We are not dealing only with bodies and it is an important principle that we also provide for the development of the minds of these young people. All of our elite student athletes are given free tuition at any recognized Canadian educational institution under the AAP. Sport Canada makes sure that our athletes prepare for a lifelong career because life does not stop after athletics. This provision of the Athlete Assistance Plan can serve to introduce another important aspect of the Sport Canada program, the close working relationship with the Canadian Inter-University Athletic Union or the CIAU.

[Translation]

The Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union—CIAU—is the main university sports organization in Canada and includes most Canadian universities. National university competitions in twelve sports are organized each year for the 45 CIAU-member universities: track and field, basketball, football, gymnastics, hockey, lawn hockey, wrestling, swimming, diving, soccer and volleyball. Co-operation between Sports Canada and CIAU enables accredited athletes to train while attending university. Sports Canada and CIAU co-operation also makes it possible for the student-athlete to meet the standards of the program and have access to the best in terms of coaches, training and support services. Canada has chosen to achieve athletic excellence by stessing peak performance of both body and mind.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the situation concerning bursaries for athletes attending Canadian universities? Several universities have indicated that they are in favour of these programs. It is unfair that Canadian athletes should be tempted into going to universities South of the border where they often find better facilities and better conditions as far as scholarships are concerned. Why do they decide to attend universities outside their own country? It is getting increasingly clear that they do so because they are being offered better scholarships. I need only mention our young hockey players who by the hundreds are being awarded scholarships in American universities every year.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize two points. First of all, within the limits of available funds, we feel that the Athlete Assistance Program is the best way to provide Canadian athletes with an education in a Canadian surrounding and make it possible, if they so desire, to develop as athletes on the Canadian Sports scene. We feel also, just as universities do, that any bursary program the end result of which would be to jeopardize the scholarly achievement of athletes is unacceptable for Canadians. Universities are also very concerned about upholding the value of their degrees. It is not desirable to put together a comprehensive educational bursary program based on academic success of the students without guarantees that these bursaries will go to students whose legitimacy is attested by the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union.

[English]

We are all only too well aware of the abuses that have taken place in the United States. We do not want to follow that example. We therefore intend to continue our excellent working relationship with the CIAU and will continue to support our athletes through the AAP, co-operation with that organization.

Sport Canada seeks to encourage a balance between athletics and scholarly activity in the lives of our athletes. There must be a place for both academic and athletic excellence in their development. Sport at one end of the scale must carry as much weight as a subsequent career at the other end because, as we have already stated, life after athletics goes on. This is how we help our athletes prepare for both of these aspects of their lives. This is the Canadian way.

[Translation]

We have already referred to the total cost of these programs, as well as the limited availability of our funds. However, there is another source of financial support which amateur sports in Canada could tap, namely, the private sector.

[English]

We have had a good deal of success in our efforts to involve private companies in a partnership with amateur sport. The Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) has made this one of his priorities. Recently, he announced the creation of an organization to attract corporate support.

[Translation]

Perhaps I could deal now with some sports which are not convered by our programs, but you are signalling that the time allotted to me has expired, Mr. Speaker.

In conclusion, let me remind the House of our athletes' numerous achievements on the international sport scene. From figure skating to swimming and cycling, our athletes have demonstrated tremendous talents. However, without the assistance provided by Sports Canada in very close cooperation with national and private sports organizations, many of our athletes could not have achieved their potential and we could not share today with hundreds of our young athletes the pride and emotion of their performance.

We are eagerly preparing for the Winter Olympic Games in Calgary in 1988 as well as the Summer Olympic Games in Seoul where, I am sure, our athletes will collect a great many medals.

Mr. Speaker, we will do better than ever.

[English]

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to comment briefly on the motion put by our hon. friend to have the appropriate committee study the entire question of offering scholastic bursaries to amateur athletes. I believe the discussion merits looking into further. There is no one in the Chamber who would dispute the fact that when we talk about the sporting world and athletes, we find quite often that the unrecognized and valiant heroes in the community are amateur athletes. There are many Rockys in the country who perhaps do not have the training, resources and proper coaching that require the moral and financial support that we as a nation can offer.

Of course, there are pros and cons with respect to tying athletic programs to our educational institutions. That is why, rather than talk this motion out or simply ignore it, we should meet it head on and have a good solid debate so that we may hear from the two schools of thought on this matter and perhaps reach a consensus.

Back in 1980, representatives of various Canadian athletic associations initially approved the entire concept of a bursary for athletics and then rejected the idea of athletic scholarships. In 1981, the Ontario University Athletics Association and the Ontario Women's Inter-Collegiate Association announced a boycott of all national championships involving institutions offering first-party scholarships.

There has been an ongoing debate regarding whether or not we should offer scholarships to amateur athletes. There are those, arguing in favour of it, who claim that athletic awards are an acceptable and desirable practice when funded by Governments, corporations and schools. There are those who say that the primary objective of athletic awards is simply to upgrade the standard of competition. There are those who say that unless we begin to counter what is being offered in the United States, we will lose the cream of the crop of our athletes. They point to the fact that there are over 1,000 Canadian amateur athletes training in or attending universities in the United States at this moment.

On the other side of the ledger, there are those who claim that if we get into the areas the American universities and college systems have entered, then we will also have a litany of abuses including an over-emphasis on athletics at the expense of academic excellence, falsification of student records, federal investigations into fixings of games and so on. They believe that the recruiting of athletes and their subsidization are two totally independent concepts. They also point to the numerous scandals in the United States where athletes are suing universities for failing to provide a reasonable education after their athletic careers have been long terminated. There is also a fear that universities can become sports factories, if you will, with athletes entering university programs only with a professional sports career in mind and coaches basing success on the number of athletes chosen for the professional ranks.

There are obviously two schools of thought on the issue. There is no one in this House who disagrees with the fact that we should be financially and morally sponsoring our amateur athletes, no matter in what field of endeavour they participate. The real question is: How do we financially aid and support these athletes? Should they be tied down to our educational institutions?

I feel it is fitting that this debate be looked at by parliamentarians. We realize that the athletic associations of Ontario and Quebec, for instance, are opposed to tying athletic performance to university scholarships. Eastern Canada and western Canada have also had a difference of opinion on the matter for their various reasons. Therefore, if there exists a divergence of opinion across the land, then what better place is there than the Parliament of Canada, which is representative of all regions, to focus on the issue? It is not only a federal issue, since we all realize that education falls within the parameters of the provincial Governments. I think the debate should start here. I think that the athletes, the coaches, the sponsors and the numerous volunteers involved in amateur athletics would certainly welcome the opportunity to come before the appropriate committee of this House and present their evidence both for and against.

We should also take a look at the status of amateur athletes right now. There are those who say that athletic performance should not be tied to academics. Yet, they seem prepared to put sporting, especially in the amateur ranks, in the hands of tobacco companies or beer companies. Of course, there are those who say that that is in conflict with the whole issue of training and health associated with sporting activities. So there is a divergence of opinion with respect to amateur sports.

It is high time for us to take a look at the issue in a very real way. We should applaud the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) who moved this motion. I do not think it should be defeated. I do not think it should be talked out or ignored. That would be the easy way out of an issue which should receive the attention of the House, and through this House the attention of sporting communities in the country. Let them in concert with Parliament set a direction, a vision, for amateur athletics. Let us not lose the momentum which this motion gives us. If it can perhaps trigger and instigate a debate, then perhaps once and for all the matter can be laid to rest. Let us be courageous and respectable enough to take a look at the issue in the context in which it should be looked at. With those remarks I resume my seat and look forward to seeing the motion referred to committee.

Mr. Moe Mantha (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to speak to this motion. I wish to commend the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) for his interest in Canada's amateur athletes. As he is well aware, I have an athletic background, just as Your Honour has an athletic background. I remind Hon. Members that you were a good Football player playing on the Edmonton football team in the early days. I played hockey for years. As Hon. Members know I have a son who plays hockey for Pittsburg. I own a golf course where that recreational sport golf can be played. I have to get that plug in.

An Hon. Member: Is this a free commercial?

Mr. Mantha: I also have another young lad who played hockey for Cornwall. I have two girls who skate, play golf and are participants in the world of sport.

The motion which has been introduced today gives us a welcome opportunity to discuss the state of amateur sport in our country. As we meet here today amateur athletes across Canada are preparing for competitions. A relative few are fortunate enough—perhaps I should say skilled and dedicated enough—to be preparing for the 1988 Olympics. Most sports are seasonal, but training for them is not. It is a year-round commitment, the likes of which few non-athletes can appreciate. It gives me pause to think that olympic athletes can condition themselves to peak physically and mentally at four-year intervals. Personally, I have difficulty planning more than a couple of weeks in advance.

Mr. Keeper: We can see that!

Mr. Mantha: As Hon. Members know, the 1988 Winter Olympic Games will be hosted by Calgary and the Summer Olympic Games will be held in Seoul, South Korea. We are all looking forward to these Olympics, especially after the tremendous results Canadian athletes posted in the 1984 Games in Sarajevo and Los Angeles. Of course, Gaetan Boucher stole the limelight with two gold medals and a bronze. In so doing he established himself as this country's greatest ever winter olympian, not to mention a national hero. While Mr. Boucher was excelling through sheer power and speed on the ice, Brian Orser was winning acclaim for élan and grace. His silver medal surpassed all previous Canadian olympic performances in men's figures skating.

Our successes at Sarajaevo merely set the stage for the Summer Games in Los Angeles. That is where Canada came of athletic age, taking an incredible 44 medals: 10 gold, 18 silver and 16 bronze—our best results ever. Los Angeles seems to hold some kind of magic for Canada. Our previous best medals total, 15, also came in that California city, but 52 years earlier in the 1932 Olympics.

Some household names emerged from the 1984 Summer Games. There was Linda Thom, whose exciting opening day win in the pistol shooting competition started things rolling. Then there was Sylvie Bernier whose ten straight perfect dives earned her Canada's first ever gold medal in diving. Swimmer Alex Baumann took two gold medals. I might add that he lives in the riding next door to mine in the City of Sudbury. A gold medal, a silver and a bronze went to the amazing Anne Ottenbrite. Victor Davis shattered his own world record to win the gold medal in the men's 220-metre breaststroke. Cyclist Steve Bauer took a silver medal, as did boxers Willy DeWitt and Shawn O'Sullivan. The two fighters are continuing, and one is from the riding of my colleague, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway). Ben Johnson won the bronze medal in the 100-metre dash; and the women's relay team took the silver in the 4 by 400 relay race.

The list goes on and on. I cannot begin to do justice to all the medal winners. Suffice it to say that their names are in the record books and that they have given Canadians a lasting sense of pride. The credit for these successes must clearly go to the athletes. However, I think all Canadians can take some satisfaction in knowing that our amateur athletic development programs are paying off handsomely.

Canada has made steady progress on the international amateur scene since the introduction of the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act in 1961. There is no reason to believe that we will not continue to march forward in the years ahead.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—BROADCASTING OF SONG LAUDING SUICIDE

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, on three separate occasions last month I rose in the House to express my concern over the irresponsibility of the CBC in continuing to broadcast the song "What It's Like to be Dead", in which children expound the virtues of death. When I requested that the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) intervene to ensure that this song would not be broadcast again, I was reminded of the constraining provisions in the Broadcasting Act which grant ultimate responsibility for program selection and content to the broadcaster.

I do recognize the need for an arm's length policy and support it. However, as a representative of the people, I feel that the CBC is ultimately responsible to Parliament and to the taxpayers of Canada. Without the taxpayer, there would be no CBC.

I suggest to Mr. Juneau, President of the CBC, that his officials must be more responsible in their choice of programming. The song "What It's Like to be Dead" transcends the limits of acceptable broadcasting. Although I appreciate the satirical nature of the Frantics, I know that most Canadians believe that suicide, especially teenage suicide, is no joke nor a laughing matter. The fact that the issue of teenage suicide is satirized at all tells me that we as a society do not comprehend the gravity and scope of this modern social problem.

Do we hear comedy troupes satirize wife beating or child sexual abuse on prime time radio? These are issues which Canadians have come to accept as being serious, serious enough that Governments and social agencies have effectively implemented programs to deal with the problem. I believe that the issue of teenage suicide should be treated in a similar fashion and not as a subject of tasteless humour. When I first started investigating the issue of teenage suicide, I was unaware of the size of the problem and its far-reaching effects on the families and friends of the victims. I decided to investigate speeches in Hansard of past Parliaments. I found to my amazement there has been no substantive debate on this issue since 1970s. As Parliamentarians, can we not let teenage suicide become the taboo of the 1980s, relegating it to the closet and pretending it doesn't exist. It does exist and it is a problem.

Let us consider some of the alarming statistics. Teenage suicide is up 400 per cent since 1970. Suicide is the leading cause of death among teenagers in Canada. More Canadians take their own life than die from either diabetes or sclerosis of the liver. Canadians are more likely to commit suicide than Americans. Research shows that of the people who commit suicide only 5 per cent have a history of mental illness. The Quebec Suicide Prevention Centre estimates that the suicide rate could be 10 per cent to 15 per cent higher when "doubtful" accidents are taken into account.

Literature on suicide too often focuses on the symptoms and statistics without mentioning the thoughts and feelings of young people who are locked into depression, who are devastated by the loss of a girlfriend or boyfriend, or peer or school pressures. The vast majority of suicidal teenagers feel that their parents and their elders do not understand or appreciate them. Adults tend to view teenage problems as little problems which will go away. It has been said that acne, sexual behaviour, school grades and career choices make it tough enough to be a teenager. On top of that there is a whole new set of pressures facing kids today at the next fragile stage of their lives.

The question remains if there is a problem, what do we do about it? Dr. Dianne Soyer-Solush of the Toronto East General made the following recommendations in a recent report on suicide in Canada: First, to introduce suicide prevention programs in public schools, as is presently done in three American states; second, that courses on suicide and suicide prevention be a mandatory part of physicians' training; third, that national standards be established for crisis centres across Canada. The time has come that we recognize the problem of teenage suicide and deal with it.

Mr. Juneau states, with regard to my complaint: "We would certainly never broadcast material which did constitute such an invitation because all of us recognize that teenage suicide is a terrible thing". I only wish he believed that statement. If he believes it, why would he, in a recent letter to me, condone broadcasting of this song without at least seeking some professional advise or, as I did? As a Government we must be committed, not only to inform people about this problem, but to set aside scarce resources from our Budget to ensure that our actions are effective.

In closing, I support the arms-length principle but, because of it, broadcasters must be more responsible in screening the content of their programming. Radio and TV are powerful mediums. They can alter people's attitudes and perceptions on this and many other issues. The public airwaves should be used responsibly for the good of the people.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock) has raised a sensitive issue and we are all, I am sure, appreciative of his concern over the broadcast of the song "Neat to be Dead" on the CBC.

However, I would like to reiterate what the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) emphasized previously in the House, that is, that broadcasters themselves are responsible for program selection and content subject to the general rules and regulations of the CRTC. Consequently, responsibility for CBC programming matters lies entirely with the CBC's management and board of directors. The Minister of Communications has no direct power of intervention in such matters.

Neither I nor the Minister, and I am sure no Hon. Members, would wish to set the potentially dangerous precedent of restricting the CBC's right to programming autonomy by becoming directly involved in this particular programming matter, as sensitive as it is. Moreover, the Minister assured the House that he would inform both the CBC and the CRTC of the concern about the song "Neat to be Dead" which was expressed in the House. I was pleased to hear that Mr. Juneau responded, although the response was not entirely satisfactory.

I learned, Mr. Speaker, during a recent visit of Finnish parliamentarians to Parliament Hill that one of the regulations within the Finnish broadcasting system prohibits programming which might be injurious to mental health. I do not know whether that sort of regulation would be useful, or whether the CRTC would want to address it. On the other hand, I heard the Hon. Member say that only 5 per cent of those who commit suicide are believed to be suffering from mental illness.

The Hon. Member has certainly underscored the sensitivity of the topic matter and the Minister appreciates his concern. However, Mr. Speaker, I would like us to keep in mind the democratic principle of freedom of expression. The Charter of Rights guarantees freedom of expression for Canadians and the Broadcasting Act itself states clearly: " . . . the right to freedom of expression and the right of persons to receive programs, subject only to generally applicable statutes and regulations, is unquestioned".

• (1810)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, having been myself in broadcasting, I can tell this House that decision-making on programming is often a difficult process which involves trying to offer programs which will be as attractive, exciting, dramatic or humourous as the public demands or finds acceptable. It is not always easy to ensure that a specific program will offend no one. If a program makes part of the audience uneasy or is found to be in bad taste, it is certainly not what the broadcasters wanted. After all, Mr. Speaker, whether they are public or private, broadcasters must answer the questions of their audience.

Mr. Speaker, all broadcasters, and I speak from experience, treat their programming responsibilities with respect and with an eye to the future. I am not speaking only about the programs themselves, but also about public reactions to these programs. I believe that the CBC is seriously considering the issue raised by the Hon. Member and that, in so doing, it is taking its responsibilties very seriously.

TEXTILES AND CLOTHING—COMMISSION'S RECOMMENDATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I am rising today to discuss a question asked on January 20 during the Question Period to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens).

My question relates to the report of the Textiles and Clothing Commission and the various comments which I have read or heard recently. I also want to make a few points in this regard.

Over one year ago, on January 30, 1985, I informed the House that the crisis in the textile and clothing industry had continued and worsened for then years because of the massive imports from low-wage semi-industrialized Pacific rim countries.

In its last report published in late December, the Commission states that, during the period from 1972 to 1982, 31,977 jobs were lost in Canada.

Most of these jobs were in Quebec. The Commission also blamed the Liberal Government for not having implemented its recommendations.

On page 84 of its report, the Commission says that the Liberals ignored its recommendation that existing agreements and quotas be extended until the end of 1990.

A new Federal textile policy should contain reference to the fact that imports are not to increase by 13 per cent a year, as in the last four years, when the market increases only by 1.5 per cent a year, and it should be modelled on clause 3 of the Multifibre Agreement, as is the policy of the European Economic Community to regulate imports.

I also take the liberty of suggesting to the Minister that he should include leather garments in the next agreements, as suggested by the report, and that any unused quotas should be eliminated.

Mr. Speaker, you will know that according to a Quebec Government study, in Quebec only, 30,000 jobs would be lost in the textile and clothing industries, were free to arranged with the United States.

It must also be emphasized that the textile and clothing industries are interrelated, because the clothing industry accounts for 40 per cent of the textile industry's market.

Incidentally, CIRB's Chairman, Mr. Tsai, mentioned last week in the Board's fourth and most recent annual report that it will have committed $267 million during its mandate.

The Industrial and Commercial Development Program is the second feature of CIRB's mandate, and its goal is to consolidate and diversify the economies of areas that are strongly dependent on the textile, clothing and footwear industries. The subsidized companies will invest a total of $358.4 million, including $97.1 million in contributions from the Industrial and Commercial Development Program. CIRB's contributions that have been approved since the inception of the program should help create 4,834 direct jobs, 672 of which would be in Drummondville.

Also, in 1984-85, restructuring plans for 100 businesses have been approved representing $134.1 million in investments with $39.4 million in financial help from the CIRB.

The textile industry is doing its share in the area of modernization, with respect to technology as well as management and creativity. Let me remind you that over the last decade, upwards of $2 billion have been invested with the purpose in mind. The industry is asking that the multifiber arrangement be implemented with more firmness and closer monitoring. This objective, coupled with a wiser use of macro-economic policies, will enable the private sector to plan and invest with confidence.

In my constituency, people are striving to find solutions for improving productivity in the textile industry genrally. Indeed, constituents of mine have take the initiative of requesting a feasibility study for a center for applied research in textiles. Also, constituents of mine are now doing that survey with a sampling of 200 industries. It must be hoped that such a project well not be doomed by improper decisions, as was the case under the previous administration.

Further more, I would like the Minister to consider imposing an overall quota on imports from all countries, under section XIX of the GATT.

Should there be further plant shutdowns, think of the cost of retraining those workers under the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program. It should be said that subsidies are given to grain, milk and red meat producers because those products are considered necessities of life. Then, we could very well subsidize clothing which is also a necessity.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would humbly submit to the Minister a proposal to include in the long term plan he was referring to on November 29, 1984, one aspect that the inquiry failed to mention, namely a labelling policy that might inform consumers as to the nature of the product and the origin of the garmen they are purchasing.

● (1815)

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, this evening I would like to answer a question by the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault) concerning the implementation of recommendations made by the Textile and Clothing Board.

Mr. Speaker, first of all I can assure my hon. friend that the Government is fully aware of the importance of the textile and clothing industry for the Canadian economy, and especially for the economy of the provinces of Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and Nova Scotia. In fact, one or both of these sectors are represented to some extent in all our provinces. Textile and clothing ranks second in Canada in the manufacturing sector, after food and beverages, and provides direct employment for 172,000 workers, while shipping products estimated at more than $10.5 billion. Quebec alone has over 96,000 workers in this sector. The clothing industry is concentrated in Montreal, where it represents 24 per cent of all manufacturing jobs. Many other Quebec communities, including the riding of Drummond, depend to a large extent on the textile and clothing industry. The clothing sector is also of considerable importance for Winnipeg, where it represents 17 per cent of all jobs in the manufacturing sector.

Considering the very substantial contribution of the textile and clothing sector to our national and regional economies, the Government has committed itself to maintaining a viable textile and clothing industry in Canada. To do so, the Ministers responsible have met several times with representatives from both industries to discuss the negative impact of the sudden rise in clothing imports from countries with low production costs that occurred in 1983 and 1984.

In addition the Textile and Clothing Board was asked to carry out an exhaustive investigation in the situation of those two industries, and it eventually made public the report mentioned by the Hon. Member.

The main conclusion of the TCB report is that imports from countries where wages are low or where industries are government-supported are causing serious damage to Canadian producers and that the situation can only get worse in the future. This situation can be explained by the fact that the clothing industry is labour-intensive and that our workers are much better paid than those of Asia, South America and Africa.

The main recommendations of the report are aimed at improving Canada's import restriction system within the multifibre agreement to which our country is signatory. As my colleague pointed out, this agreement is due to expire at the end of July this year. But we expect it will be renewed. It provides for negotiations between importing and exporting countries to arrive at bilateral textile and clothing agreements with which both parties can live. The TCB also repeated an earlier recommendation urging the Government to freeze import levels by implementing worldwide quotas under Section XIX of GATT so as to prevent further damage—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Parliamentary Secretary, but her time has expired. The Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry).

CORPORATE AFFAIRS—MARKETING OF PHOTOGRAPHIC DEVELOPING MACHINES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, if the Parliamentary Secretary is able to finish in 30 seconds, she can do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are no points of order at this time. I have already indicated that I regretted to inform the Parliamentary Secretary that her time had expired.

Mr. Parry: Thank you for setting me straight, Mr. Speaker. I always appreciate your guidance.

It is a sad duty for me to raise in this forum the question of the developing machines marketed by the now notorious Key Independent Systems in Canada. It arises out of my question in the House on November 29, 1985, concerning the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, although the Minister was not present at the time and I had given advance notice of my question. The answer which I received from the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) was that the Minister would get back to me with a response. Indeed that happened, but not in any way which I could deem satisfactory or not in any way which shed any light on this very sorry story of the swatch which the company had cut through independent businesses in Canada and the damage which has been done, not only to its own reputation but to individual entrepreneurs in several parts of the country.

The response which I received from the Minister just five days later indicated that the matter was under examination and that it would be inappropriate to comment further. At this time it is very appropriate to comment further because it is now the second anniversary of the information, as I understand it, being laid which led to the initiation of the investigation by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs of the operation of Key Independent Systems and its financial partners in the retailing of these machines, namely, the financial subsidiary of Société générale, one of the largest banks in France. Perhaps unfortunately for some of my own theories it is now effectively under the control of the French Government.

The history has been a long, sorry one, and that is why I feel it is incumbent upon the Parliamentary Secretary to let the House know, as we are all eagerly awaiting it, the action which the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) has taken and will be taking.

It appears that as a result of the non-performance of these machines, which were marketed with guarantees and with promises of performance that were glowing and which have now turned out to be extravagant and even false, approximately 40 businessmen in Canada have gone bankrupt. I think that it is sad, a tragedy which is deserving of Government examination, and certainly deserving of government intervention. Indeed, the aggrieved owners and former owners of these machines have formed an association. They have an executive director. That is surely an indication of the damage that was done. It was stated in a letter from the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty), that KIS advertised that a company developing 30 rolls of film a day would reap $100,000 a year in profits. A London, Ontario company which averaged 29 rolls a day is now bankrupt. I could go on, although I do not want to use up the time that way. There are several similar examples of people who did their utmost to keep these machines working, replacing defective parts with higher grade materials, following all the service recommendations and instituting additional preventive and restorative maintenance of their own, but who still could not get anything like the performance out of these machines that Key Independent Systems was promising.

There are further marketing scandals related to that company. It has apparently been marketing a key-cutting machine in Ontario, which Ontario Hydro has not approved for connection to the provincial electric utility. It has apparently been bringing in used machines from the United States for sale in Canada as if they were new. We know that the financing contracts were sold instantly by the company to Société générale, the finance subsidiary. It appears from the statements by the Ontario KIS owners association that—through what means we do not know—somehow this company has been replacing its Canadian personnel with personnel imported from France. That is something that the Government, although it does not fall within the purview of the responsibility of this particular Ministry, should be concerned about.

The lending practices of this financial subsidiary should be investigated. Apparently there was some guaranteed agreement between the finance subsidiary and the parent, Société générale and the KIS company in France, that forced the financing company to finance these machines, thus effectively interposing a third party—who presumably acted in good faith though not with the best of judgment—into the deal between KIS systems and the Canadian independent businessmen who were still using those machines. What is even stranger and even more worthy of attention by the Government is that once the original investigation had started, it was found that there was nothing in the legislation that could be used to stop either the financing or the sales practices of this particular company. Those are the questions I would like to put to the Parliamentary Secretary, and those are the questions to which many small-businessmen and women deserve answers.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Domm), I have been asked to respond on his behalf to the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) and to the concerns expressed by other Hon. Members regarding this matter.

KIS Minute Canada sold a number of photo-developing machines to business people across Canada which were purported to be capable of processing a certain number of films in a given time. Many of these businesses were dissatisfied with the equipment sold to them and have indicated to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and to the media, that poor service for the equipment and machinery malfunctions prevented them from achieving the capacity of the equipment claimed by the company. Many of these purchasers have formed KIS owner associations and are actively pursuing redress through civil litigation and other means. The company maintains that the equipment can produce at its rated capacity and has identified KIS owners who are satisfied with the equipment.

The Department is also aware of complaints by KIS owners alleging that there was improper use of testimonials by the company, and that sales representatives of the company have misrepresented the earning potential of the machines. The Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act is examining these allegations in relation to the misleading advertising provisions of the Act. As you know, the confidentiality provisions of the statute prevent the disclosure of information related to the consideration of such matters. Accordingly, it would be inappropriate for me to comment on the nature or progress of the director's examination. However, I can indicate that at the conclusion of any inquiry, the director may refer the matter under Section 15(1) of the Act to the Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Crosbie). It is he who determines whether or not charges should be laid.

The Hon. Member should bear in mind, however, that if a prosecution were to ensue, it would take place before the criminal courts. Consequently, each element of an offence would have to be established beyond a reasonable doubt. This requirement can place a difficult burden on the conduct of inquiries.

I can also state that Departmental officials have met with some of the complainants to review their concerns. I can assure the House that the matter is receiving a careful and complete examination of all the facts available. Should charges be laid against KIS Minute Canada or its principals, the Minister will be pleased to inform Hon. Members.

SHIPBUILDING

GOVERNMENT ACTION URGED

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise again with regard to an issue that I have raised before on the floor of the House of Commons under Standing Order 22 as well as in Question Period. I am urging the Government of Canada to take some positive action with regard to the Canadian shipbuilding industry.

Members ought to know that on August 2, 1984, the Atlantic Progressive Conservative caucus met and discussed the issue of shipbuilding. At that time they promised: "A top priority of the Progressive Conservative Government will be to create a more viable and prosperous shipbuilding industry".

That was on August 2, 1984. Since that time nothing has taken place with regard to the shipbuilding industry in this country. All we have had is the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) give various platitudes, but again no action. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) talks on the one hand about jobs he wishes to create when he in fact is secretly dealing behind the scenes with individuals to buy ships offshore, depriving Canadians of jobs in our shipbuilding industry across the country.

I find the actions of the Government to be totally irresponsible. A major sector of our economy is the shipbuilding industry. I cannot understand why the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, and the Minister of Transport cannot proceed with some action in this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

THE PHILIPPINES—DOUBT ABOUT OUTCOME OF PRESIDENTIAL SYSTEM

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a week since the Philippine elections took place, and the National Movement for Free Elections, which is an independent citizens body of a half million volunteers, has declared Corazon Aquino the winner. Cardinal Sin said that this movement is doing its best to restore freedom to the Philippines, yet the Government Commission on Elections has Marcos ahead. However, the Commission is Marcos-controlled.

• (1405)

The Legislature which is doing the final count is Marcos' controlled. Whom are we to believe? U.S. observers have told President Reagan that they must be wary of Marcos' claims to victory.

Now is the time to speak out for freedom in the Philippines. It is incumbent upon the Canadian Government to put pressure on our friends, the Americans, to send a very strong message to Marcos that he must respect the results of free elections in the Philippines.

ENERGY

USE OF TAX REVENUE

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, at the moment it seems that the price of gasoline is on the minds of many B.C. residents. My constituency of Fraser Valley East is no exception.

Recently the Valley Times newspaper handed me petitions from over 4,000 residents. All of these Fraser Valley East residents are concerned about the cost of gasoline in Canada in comparison with the United States. They think that our tourism industry would be strengthened if both the federal and provincial levels of Government lowered their rates of taxation on gasoline.

All of the petitions unanimously endorsed the suggestion that both levels of Government should find alternate sources of revenue. Unfortunately, none of the petitioners nor the various constituents to whom I have spoken have put forward any suggestions on what other sources of revenue are available to the Government. It seems that it is very easy to tell the Government it should or should not follow a particular course of action, but it is far more difficult to suggest alternatives.

For example, I doubt if the majority of Canadians would be enthusiastic with someone suggesting that their incomes should be taxed at a greater level in exchange for everyone being able to purchase cheaper gasoline. No matter what kind of taxation is levied, the Government needs as much revenue as possible in order to pay off our massive deficit.

I have the distinct impression that the average Canadian does not realize the effect which the budgetary deficit is having on the treasury of the Government of Canada. Over one-third of the federal Government's income is used to pay for the interest charges on the national debt. This is the predicament we inherited from the previous Government. We are now desperately trying to correct it.

FISHERIES

REPATRIATION OF COD FISHING QUOTA FOR NEWFOUNDLAND FISH PLANTS

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista-Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I would like to shed some light on erroneous statements made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) with respect to cod fishing in Newfoundland.

For many years succeeding Liberal Ministers of Fisheries gave away 3,700 tonnes of northern cod to the Spanish fleet in spite of its over-fishing record. Now that the quota has been repatriated, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) has decided to allocate it to where the need is greatest, namely, 2,000 tonnes to the Harbour Grace Plant, and 1,700 tonnes proportionally split among FPI, National Sea, and the Independent Offshore Group.

Special consideration of Harbour Grace was justified because of the employment potential for a large part of the Trinity-Conception area. Existing assets of the Harbour Grace plant had been inadequate to interest a buyer acceptable to the receivers, so the plant was in danger of not being re-opened.

This special allocation, Mr. Speaker, was not unique. The Hon. Pierre deBane did the same thing for the closed Georgetown plant in PEI in 1983 or 1984. We have even kept that allocation available, but no one has come forward who is prepared to re-open the Georgetown plant.

The previous Liberal Government kept Atlantic Canadian fish plants open through multi-million-dollar bail-outs with taxpayers' money. Our Government has demonstrated in Harbour Grace that by judiciously allocating the resource and creating an hospitable climate for foreign investment we can encourage the expansion of opportunities for Canadians.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EFFECT OF REGULATION CHANGE ON ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address the recent ruling by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to have pension income included when making application for unemployment insurance benefits.

This ruling clearly discriminates against Armed Forces members who have served for 20 years or more and are still actively looking for work but collecting a pension. These people are still making contributions to the unemployment insurance fund. The Minister should consider waiving this rule completely for Armed Forces personnel or, at the very least, increasing the amount allowable per week before deductions commence on unemployment insurance benefits.

This ruling also discriminates against those individuals who have opted for early retirement and to make way for younger employees. They would collect unemployment insurance as a cushion for one year. There are many individuals who take advantage of early retirement after putting in 40 years and more. Many of them were told that as long as their claims were in before the new regulation came into effect, they would be exempt. Of course they soon realized on January 5 that this was not the case.

This misleading information coming from the Minister's own Department led people to believe that if they took early retirement, before January 1, 1986, they would be exempt from having their pension benefits included when making application for unemployment insurance. It is simply not fair that these people should suffer when they acted in good faith on information obtained from the Government.

DISASTERS

HINTON RAILWAY ACCIDENT—CONDEMNATION OF MEDIA REPORTS ON POSSIBLE CAUSE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the tragedy of the railway accident near Hinton, Alberta, should be sensational enough for the media in their drive to be first with the news, for increased circulation, and advertising revenues. However, when the media continue to report for days afterwards speculations and opinions, unsupported by any verified evidence, as to the cause of such a tragedy, then it becomes a trial by media.

News reports are encouraging conclusions in advance of evidence, by way of innuendo, inference, supposition and unsupported opinion as to the cause of the accident. The public statements made by individuals with some responsibility in the matter come out as self-serving and, to be blunt, as protecting their own rear ends. The statements are then wildly reported by the media when the media have neither the time nor capacity to investigate and report upon the validity of such statements, or issue disclaimers.

It is now time for the media to cease such unprofessional reporting of speculation in search of drama. It is time for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to tell officials of CN, his Department and agencies to shut up and save their opinions and evidence for the judicial inquiry. It is time for all of us to wait for the evidence, findings, conclusions, and final recommendations of the inquiry, without bringing even more distress upon mourning families and an already sad population.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put on record this Government's excellent performance since September 4, 1984. Since the election, 585,000 new jobs have been created in this country. Inflation has been maintained at the 4 per cent level for a year and a half, and prices have never been so stable since 1971. Consumer confidence is reaching near-record highs. The retail trade has cashed in on its best Holiday season in years. Oil and gas drilling operations have increased by 25 per cent over last year. Furthermore, the value of manufacturing orders have risen by 14.9 per cent, thanks largely to increases in the producing industries such as the manufacturing and building sectors. Total production has increased by 4.9 per cent over the last year, and by 6.1 per cent since the election. The chartered banks' prime rate is three-quarters of one per cent lower than on election day. The value of building permits has increased by 26 per cent during the first 11 months of 1985, generating $3.7 billion in additional income for the construction industry.

Such is this Government's record, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of all Canadians.

EMPLOYMENT

ATLANTIC CANADA—CREATION OF JOBS SINCE 1984

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I described for Hon. Members of the House the progress being made by the Government in reversing the economic decline which characterized Cape Breton and eastern Nova Scotia over the last number of decades. Today I want to compliment the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) for his success in addressing the unemployment problems of Cape Breton, eastern Nova Scotia, and Canada's other regions.

Let us look at more facts. Mr. Speaker, did you know, for example, that more jobs have been created in 16 months in Atlantic Canada than were created in total between 1980 and 1984?

In Newfoundland, 6,000 jobs have been created in 16 months, compared with 2,000 in 55 months under the previous Government. The Progressive Conservative Government is creating jobs in Quebec at a rate 13 times faster than the Liberal rate. Since September, 1984, 239,000 jobs have been created in Ontario and 90,000 jobs have been created in the Prairies.

In Alberta, the unemployment rate has fallen from 12 per cent to 8.5 per cent. In British Columbia, 51,000 jobs have been created. That is a record to be proud of. We are delivering in a big way on our promise of economic renewal, and we will take even more seats.

INDUSTRY

DESBIENS PLANT—ELECTION PROMISE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, we had the visit of employee representatives from the Desbiens plant in the Roberval riding. I must say that when they left, these people were quite disappointed with the attitude of their elected representative and the Minister of State responsible for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) who, instead of showing interest in the reopening of this plant, found nothing better to tell them than to find new buyers. As though the employees themselves, in such an isolated area, could find buyers, when it is the duty of the elected member of Roberval and the Minister to do his job and defend the interest of his constituents.

In view of the fact that the Prime Minister has confirmed that he would indeed fulfill the promise made in that riding, the people would like to know whether the Prime Minister will keep his word for once and help these people go back to work.

CALCULATION OF PENSIONS AS INCOME

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last month the Minister of Employment and Immigration implemented a very callous decision to disqualify from full unemployment insurance anyone who receives a pension. I want to ask the Prime Minister to overrule the Minister of Employment and Immigration and restore equity to the system. It has been a very callous, unfair decision involving hundreds of thousands of Canadians.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and I have both responded to that identical question two or three times last week, as well as a number of times in previous weeks.

Mr. Deans: Not very well.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I will repeat the answer to the question, but I think the Hon. Member could look at Hansard and find the answer there. The simple answer is that this proposal was put in the November 8 statement. It has been referred subsequently to the Forget Commission. We are awaiting a report of the commission and we will make our decision following that.

CALL FOR REVOCATION OF DECISION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister and his colleague have made the decision before the Forget Commission has had a chance to report. I direct my question again to the Prime Minister. The Deputy Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have written the Minister of Employment and Immigration to protest the heartless nature of this decision. In that circumstance, will the Prime Minister restore some unanimity to his Cabinet, and also restore some justice to the system, by revoking that decision of the Minister of Employment and Immigration?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me clarify what the Hon. Member said in the preamble to his second question. I said, quite clearly, that this was introduced in the November 8 statement. Subsequent to the November 8 statement the Forget Commission was appointed, and once appointed we referred this matter to the Forget Commission. The Forget Commission has been established—if the Hon. Members want to listen to the answer to the question I would welcome their attention. The Forget Commission has been established to review a wide range of matters in the unemployment insurance system, one of which being this particular matter.

REQUEST THAT DECISION AFFECTING UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS BE REVOKED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the decision was already in effect before the Forget Commission's report, and I repeat that once more, the Government has betrayed Canadians. There are people in this country who have been paying unemployment insurance premiums for 30 or 40 years and who cannot receive their benefits now because they have to retire sooner than they expected. Are the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister going to revoke this cruel and unnecessary decision?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I indicated that this problem—

[English]

This matter has been referred to the Forget Commission, as I have indicated, and we will await the report from the Forget Commission prior to making a decision on this.

Mr. Deans: Well, you made the decision.

EFFECT ON ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. We learned this morning that the Minister of National Defence and the Secretary of State for External Affairs both wrote to the Minister of Employment and Immigration protesting this cut in unemployment insurance benefits for Armed Services personnel who take early retirement. Since the Prime Minister is ultimately responsible for all policies of the Government, and as this is a cabinet decision, why is he persisting in this unfair and callous decision when he has appointed the Forget Commission to study unemployment insurance? Why does he not settle the problem between his Ministers, withdraw the issue and refer it immediately to the Forget Commission? Only he can answer this question, not the Minister of Finance.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who has been in this place for many, many years—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): And for many more years.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I think he is showing how many years he has been in this place. What we have understood from the comments made by the Hon. Member as well as other Hon. Members is that there are a great many very complex issues and problems that are related to the unemployment insurance system. The Hon. Member has referred to one of them, but he knows that there is a wide range of problems that must be dealt with. That is the reason the Government established a Royal Commission for the first time in many years to look at the unemployment insurance system. We will deal with these matters in an objective way, based on full and complete analysis, rather than adopting the Hon. Member's shooting-from-the-hip approach on one particular issue. He knew that he identified only a very small part of the issue when he raised the question.

CABINET POLICY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, it is not acceptable that the Minister of Finance should answer this question. There has been a dispute between Ministers and only the Prime Minister can answer for his entire Cabinet.

We know that the Prime Minister idealizes the President of the United States and would rather have his system, but he has to answer this question. Will he withdraw these policies criticized by two of his Ministers and the former Minister of National Defence and refer them to the Forget Commission which the Government appointed? Will he answer the question rather than the Minister of Finance?

Some Hon. Members: No guts.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there were a number of questions regarding the subject of my portfolio yesterday that the Right Hon. Prime Minister answered so I think it is only fair that I should respond to some of the questions that are being put today. The Hon. Member is referring to some speculative reports in newspapers and—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We got the letters. Come on!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I would ask the Hon. Member to consider, based on his experience and the knowledge that he has as a Minister in the previous Government, that there are a number of problems with the unemployment insurance system. He knows that well from his own experience. That is why we have appointed the Forget Commission and we are going to wait for the Forget Commission to return to us a range of recommendations on a range of issues—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

SITUATION OF RETIRED FORCES PERSONNEL

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I know the Prime Minister prides himself on being fair and just, and I do not say this facetiously. We have in our possession the letters from both the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of National Defence to the Minister of Employment and Immigration regarding the situation in which servicemen find themselves, which is that after 30 years of service it is compulsory that they retire. Does the Prime Minister think it is fair that these folks who are being denied unemployment insurance benefits should wait beyond the fall of 1986 for the Forget Commission to report, and be denied unemployment insurance while the Government waits for the report and then determines whether it wants to legislate, or not?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, since this subject matter falls under my responsibility, perhaps I might be permitted to answer. As the Minister of Employment and Immigration has replied to the House to precisely the same question on several different occasions, she has received representations from a great many individuals and organizations in respect to this matter. There is more than just this problem with the Unemployment Insurance Commission so the matter has been referred quite properly to the Forget Commission for its adjudication and advice to the Government, advice we look forward to receiving and acting upon in the near future.

• (1425)

I do not know why it is necessary for Hon. Members to keep repeating, repeating, and repeating the same question—

Mr. Orlikow: Because those people have been cut back, that is why.

Mr. Andre: —in view of the fact that it is out of order according to Citation 359 of Beauchesne.

Mr. Deans: Why are you criticizing the Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Deans: Why are you attacking the Speaker?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I take it the Hon. Minister is presenting his candidacy for Speaker. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), supplementary question.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, since that Minister is in charge of fairness it is no wonder that we are all in trouble.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NOVA SCOTIA ANNUITANT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister specifically: What do you say, Mr. Prime Minister, to Mr. Edward Gale of Lower Sackville, Nova Scotia, who at 47 was released after 30 years in the Armed Forces and is not receiving his unemployment insurance benefits because he is receiving an annuity from the Armed Forces of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oops!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: They are right, they flushed me out. I was so terrified I did not dare answer the question of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East. He scares the hell out of everybody around here.

Mr. Allmand: Come into NDG and say that, smart guy!

Mr. Mulroney: I think the hon. gentleman knows full well that the case will be responded to, as my colleagues have indicated, with fairness, particularly in regard to those who have served their country.

Mr. Rodriguez: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: It's my birthday, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Nine out of ten for acting!

Mr. Speaker: I have a distinct feeling there were caucus meetings this morning.

Supplementary question, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Does he think that it is right and just that these people who are being denied unemployment insurance benefits because of serving their country in the Armed Forces of Canada should have to wait until the report of the Forget Commission—which has been given an extension—and while the Government decides whether or not it will legislate, before they are eligible to receive unemployment insurance?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Allmand: He thinks it's a laughing matter!

Mr. Mulroney: —we have inherited a very corrosive social situation from the Liberals—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: —brought about by a colossal deficit initiated by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition when he was Minister of Finance, with which we are trying to deal.

Mr. Rodriguez: But you don't pay anything for this.

Mr. Mulroney: Calm down, calm down.

Mr. Ouellet: Who is the Speaker here?

Mr. Mulroney: In the process of dealing with it, we will deal with it in fairness on behalf of all Canadians. We will respond to the inquiry of my hon. friend in that same spirit of fairness.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SITUATION OF FORMER BRITISH COLUMBIA BANK EMPLOYEE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I hope for the sake of the workers—literally thousands of them, men and women—in the Armed Forces and in the regular labour force, and for those people who have been terminated from benefits, the Prime Minister will stop misleading the House—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Ms. Copps: —by saying that the matter has been referred to the commission.

Does the Prime Minister think it is fair that a secretary with the Bank of British Columbia, who worked there for 36 years and who was terminated at the age of 54 so that she could be replaced by a 24-year-old, cannot collect unemployment insurance benefits even though she has paid into the plan for 36 years?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has raised a particular example. I am sure she has not given us all the information as to why this person is not able to collect unemployment insurance.

Ms. Copps: Your policies!

Some Hon. Members: Shush!

• (1430)

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Possibly if the Hon. Member had some patience and didn't want to take advantage of the situation she raised for political reasons, she would like to discuss it at a later date and we would give her an answer in a reasoned and objective way.

Ms. Copps: The reason this woman was terminated from benefits was as a direct result of the economic statement of the Minister of Finance in November, and he should know the effect his policies are having on thousands of Canadians.

SITUATION OF HAMILTON STEEL WORKER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): If the Minister of Finance does not believe the case of this particular woman, will he believe the case of another worker who in fact worked for the Armed Forces for two decades and again is denied benefits? Will he believe the steel worker in Hamilton who came before the Forget Commission—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rossi: Who do you believe?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister may choose to answer that question if he wishes.

Mr. Nystrom: Who does Brian believe? Brian believes Ronald Reagan.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CIA BRAINWASHING EXPERIMENTS—TESTIMONY OF CANADIAN PUBLIC SERVANT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question on human rights for the Prime Minister. He knows that for over a year I have been writing to him and the Secretary of State for External Affairs urging Canadian Government support for the nine Canadians who, unfortunately, were victims of CIA brainwashing experiments in Montreal. Last October I warned how sad it would be if one of these victims should die before justice was done. Regrettably, with the sad death of Florence Langleben, that has now occurred.

Could the Prime Minister tell the House why the Government refuses to have the Canadian public servant, Mr. John Hadwen, testify in the U.S. proceedings when such testimony is deemed to be crucial in defence of the Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are willing to allow Mr. Hadwen to be available in that regard.

Mr. Benjamin: That's news.

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend is quite right when he indicates that he has raised this matter repeatedly. Pursuant to some of his interventions, I have spoken with the Secretary of State for External Affairs who is himself very personally committed to a resolution of this matter and he has raised it on three separate occasions with Secretary Shultz in an attempt to obtain a resolution.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INTERVENE ON BEHALF OF VICTIMS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Prime Minister has now intervened. I simply point out that when I requested the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the last 10 days to have this Canadian public servant testify, he refused to do so at that time. Instead, he offered written testimony which, of course, is legally useless.

Since the lawyers representing the Canadians in the U.S. proceedings have written to the Secretary of State for External Affairs three times last fall and received no reply to two of those letters and only a partial reply to the third, will the Prime Minister himself now directly intervene in these important proceedings by ensuring that all letters which have been sent to the Secretary of State for External Affairs in defence of these Canadians are responded to promptly?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I will be happy to, Mr. Speaker. I should say, however, that I am personally aware of the personal, continuing, and abiding interest of the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the resolution of these matters. He is absent today but I will, of course, bring the representation to his attention immediately.

I can tell my hon. friend that when these matters are ultimately resolved—in a manner favourable to Canadian citizens, it is to be hoped—no one will be happier than the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

INTEREST RATES—STATEMENT BY GOVERNOR OF BANK OF CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION—IMPACT

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, on January 13 of this year, the Minister of Finance stated in the House that it was not this Government's policy to increase interest rates in order to protect the dollar. Following this irresponsible statement, the dollar fell two cents within a few days, thus obliging the Government to borrow $2.5 billion on the international market.

Yesterday, the Governor of the Bank of Canada said that interest rates would remain high as long as was necessary.

First of all, could the Minister of Finance inform the House today whether, contrary to what he said on January 13, he agrees with the Governor of the Bank of Canada? Second, what impact will interest rate policy announced by the Governor of the Bank of Canada have on the budget deficit?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what the Governor of the Bank of Canada also said is that the alternative to not doing what we did in the markets last week would have led to higher rates. I would say to the Hon. Member that those higher rates would have stayed around on a much more permanent basis than I believe the rates we have to date. That is the nature of the type of action we took in the exchange markets and the interest rate markets last week. It was a package approach to a problem which had to be dealt with, and dealt with in a firm way.

We felt that that was the essential way to go in order to dampen the degree of speculation that was there and to get back to a degree of stability. It is very important for this country to continue to achieve our tremendous success of the past year in getting—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming a speech.

POLICY ANNOUNCED BY BANK OF CANADA GOVERNOR—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is saying the exact opposite of what he told the House on January 13. Today I would like to ask the Minister,—and I wish he would give me a clear answer—does he agree with the policy announced yesterday in committee by the Governor of the Bank of Canada, a policy that has been widely reported in the press?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would stick around the House more, he would be here at the time when I am making these statements.

Mr. Deans: That's not fair.

Mr. Garneau: Answer my question.

Mr. Nunziata: Cheap shot, Mike.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I made a statement in the House last Thursday in which I indicated quite clearly that the actions which were taken by the Governor of the Bank of Canada were fully supported by this Government, and I still stand by that statement.

CANCELLATION OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, if I could get his attention. The Prime Minister will know, I am sure, that Katimavik creates a thousand jobs in addition to the 2,000 opportunities for youth to develop skills and education. Every dollar the Government puts in generates $2.43 worth of productivity. Why is the Government cutting this program?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it was a value judgment. Indeed I am sure the Program did have a noble motive when it was first brought about, but in the very difficult economic climate in which we find ourselves it was the value judgment of this Government that the $20 million could be better spent in securing more employment for more young people in Canada.

CREATION OF JOBS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister realize that for the 3,000 people per year who benefit from the program, the actual cost to the Government runs at only $6,800 per year? We cannot buy better than that. It generates $60 million worth of community projects over four years.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, come on.

Mr. Deans: How can we possibly produce more for less?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first I should point out that it is not 3,000 people who benefit from it, it is 2,000.

Mr. Deans: No, it's 1,000 employees and 2,000 youths.

Mr. Mulroney: We are talking about creating jobs for young people.

Mr. Deans: Three thousand.

Mr. Mulroney: I think that is the same objective my hon. friend has. That is why, for example, youth unemployment, with which we were all very concerned during the election campaign, has come down 2.8 per cent since this Government was sworn into office. One of the reasons we were able to do it was because we made the tough choices—

Mr. Blaikie: Because they are getting older.

Mr. Mulroney: —of getting rid of some programs which had some value in the past but which no longer respond to the changes. I point out to my hon. friend—because it is of interest to him in particular—an interesting statistic. Of the number of jobs created in the 55 months under the previous Liberal Government—

Mr. Deans: Oh, no.

Mr. Mulroney: No, it is important—83 per cent were part-time, and of the 583,000 jobs created under this Government, 83 per cent are full-time.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Today we learned that the price of gasoline at the pumps in the United States has dropped dramatically. A survey of three American cities shows that consumers are paying 37 cents, Canadian, a litre. It is obvious that Americans are feeling the benefit of falling crude oil prices. Will the Minister tell us just when Canadians will feel a similar price drop? When can we expect a benefit from falling world oil prices in a substantial way?

• (1440)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to see the Liberal critic rise on this question. I thought he was going to congratulate this Government for going to Newfoundland yesterday and announcing $34 million worth of development projects aimed at training young Newfoundlanders for work in the offshore.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: In response to his question about gasoline prices, I have answered that many times in the House. Canadians will receive the benefit of falling world prices as the inventory which was purchased before Christmas at very high prices is processed, refined, loaded, shipped, stored, transported, and finally arrives at the gas pump.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the U.S. is feeling the benefit of lower prices now. Nova Scotia, the only province where oil companies must make application to a tribunal to increase prices, refused to increase prices. When is the Minister going to do something substantial to reduce gasoline prices in Canada? When is she going to stop waffling and get on with what she should be doing?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I again remind the Member that it was this Government which deregulated oil prices so consumers would benefit from declining prices. It was his Party which increased gasoline prices 80 per cent under a regulated system which they imposed on consumers.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE AGAINST STRIKE

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, small businesses across Canada have been concerned recently about the threat of a postal strike. In the absence of the Minister responsible for Canada Post can the president of the Treasury Board reassure this House that small businesses, indeed all Canadians, do not have to fear the possibility of a strike interrupting their activity and the economic recovery they are now enjoying?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there is now a verbal agreement between management and union representatives. This agreement, which seems fair and satisfactory for both parties, is still subject to ratification by the union. I can assure my hon. colleague that the negotiations are still going on.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PENSION INCOME OF RETIRED ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In answer to my colleague from Nickel Belt a few minutes ago he said we should wait for the Forget Commission which will not report until the fall. As he knows, a worker needs 20 weeks of insured earnings in the previous 52 weeks before they qualify for unemployment insurance. In light of this, will the Prime Minister err on the side of retired Armed Forces personnel and withdraw the regulations concerning pension income being regarded as earned income for unemployment insurance purposes?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think this is the same question that we have had probably eight times so far in this Question Period. The answer is still the same, and I would refer the Hon. Member to Hansard for previous Question Periods if the answers are not good enough in this Question Period.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will recognize the Hon. Member for a supplementary but preferably not exactly the same question again.

SITUATION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA PENSIONER

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the Minister of Finance did not understand, but I will accept your advice. What can he then say to Mr. Leonard Luoma of Royston, British Columbia, who, because of the change in regulations, will lose some $381 a month? He is retired from the Armed Forces and that represents one-third of his family income for seven months of the year.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member knows that is effectively the same subject and the same question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The only reason for saying what I am saying is that there are lots of Members who have lots of questions. I presume it makes sense to get as many in on as many subjects as possible. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Saint-Marie.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

NEW REGULATIONS CONCERNING PAYMENT OF BENEFITS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

I would like to explain to him that, like in so many other ridings, in my constituency, a 61 year old woman has accepted early retirement so that a young worker would not be laid off.

Can the Prime Minister tell us why his Government has changed the rules of the game in mid-course and prevented such people from receiving unemployment insurance benefits?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will grant the Hon. Member a supplementary but that is the same question as has already been asked several times.

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have a long list of people who want to ask questions. Does the Hon. Member have a question on a different subject?

MAINTENANCE OF ACQUIRED RIGHTS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary, since the Prime Minister has asked you not to let him reply—

My supplementary is to the Prime Minister: Can you tell me why you did not maintain the entitlement of those who took an early retirement before the date of the announcement?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nunziata: He has the right to ask a question.

Some Hon. Members: Quiet!

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, it sounded to me like the same question. Order, please. To me it sounded like the same question. I will check the "blues" and, if I was wrong, I will come back later on. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso.

FISHERIES

SEAL HERDS THREAT TO ATLANTIC FISHERY

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. As he knows, the growing harp and grey seal population off Atlantic Canada represents a serious threat to the continued viability of the Atlantic fishery. Can the Minister tell us when we can expect a decision on how we are going to deal with this growing seal population?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the grey seal population off the Atlantic coast has increased by approximately 50 per cent over the past six years. This not only threatens the level of cod stocks through the direct devouring of those stocks by the seals, it also causes damage to fishermen's nets and gear. As well, the parasitic infestation alleged to be caused by an excessive grey seal population is of concern to the fishermen. I am waiting upon the report of Judge Malouf of the Royal Commission on Seals and Sealing. I will then submit appropriate recommendations to Cabinet to deal with this problem.

SOCIAL SECURITY

CHILD CARE SERVICES—GOVERNMENT AID—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister.

It has to do with day care and his 1984 promise to provide financial assistance for day care services.

Particularly with respect to the $300 million claimed by groups working in that field, will the Prime Minister honour his promise and give immediate financial assistance to such services throughout Canada?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister made a commitment during the campaign, and under his instruction and leadership that commitment has been fulfilled to the point that the task force on child care has been appointed. The Hon. Member will recall that we had an exchange yesterday in committee on this same point. The Government looks forward to receiving recommendations from the task force, and I think it is important that we do not pre-empt those recommendations which Members in her own Party, I am sure, want to make to that task force.

GROUPS' REQUEST FOR FUNDS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary concerns the promises the Prime Minister made. Will these promises of direct aid be kept? It is needed now, not in the future. Will he tell us what "priority", and "immediate", and "taking leadership in giving federal funds" mean if they do not mean infusion of funds now which the groups are asking for in the coming Budget?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the task force has a very clear mandate, and the Hon. Member's references have been accepted by all Parties in this House. The question of how we are going to put together a good child care system is exactly what the task force has been charged with determining. I asked the Hon. Member yesterday to have an open mind on these matters and not be restricted by her own thinking and the views her Party has put forward. The Prime Minister has given leadership, it is a priority of the Government, and we will proceed as we said yesterday we would.

TERMINATION OF FISHING VESSEL ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. Late Friday afternoon last the Minister announced the termination of the Fishing Vessel Assistance Program under what he acknowledged was pressure from the U.S. International Trade Commission. Can the Minister tell us which of the other programs identified by that Commission as irritants does he intend to terminate to satisfy both the U.S. administration and the desires of Canada's free trade negotiator?

● (1450)

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member will check the record I think he would find that he asked almost an identical question two days ago. In fact I did not in any way indicate that the decision to terminate the Fishing Vessel Assistance Program was directly attributable to the United States counterval initiative.

In fact the decision was taken subsequent to a thorough review of that program and in the context of this Government's desire to continue to create more new jobs in Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada, as has been our record in the past 16 months.

Mr. Tobin: As we say at home, Mr. Speaker: "You would want the face of a robber's horse to make that statement". His own press release contains a reference to satisfying a U.S. irritant.

DEPARTMENTAL REORGANIZATION INQUIRY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister confirm that tomorrow he plans to announce by way of a press release, rather than a ministerial statement in this Chamber, the reorganization of the Department of Fisheries, including additional staff and program cuts?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, if the accuracy of the Hon. Member's suggestion he has just made is as valid as the other assertions he made in the House, he will prove to be sorely disappointed.

TAX AVOIDANCE BY LIMITED PARTNERSHIPS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He will be aware that during the Tax Probe '86 hearings the abuse of the limited partnership provision of the Income Tax Act is being identified as the best new method of tax avoidance.

Is he aware that this abuse is taking place across the country and does he plan to end it either before or in his Budget?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe the record of this Government in closing areas of tax abuse is well known. This wide range of areas includes the original limitation of rulings, unlimited partnerships, SRTCs, carve-outs, income splitting which helps upper-income Canadians and the financing of yachts and motels. We have acted very quickly to deal with these problems as they have arisen.

We have very clearly set out our policy with respect to the question of minimum tax, and that minimum tax will be implemented shortly and will be effective for all of this year. We have acted promptly in all of these areas.

I am interested in the comments by the Hon. Member. If he wishes to elaborate on those, as he knows it is a very complex area and I will be glad to sit down with him.

EVALUATION OF TAX EXPENDITURE PROGRAMS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the limited partnership abuse is likely to cost the Government of Canada many hundreds of millions of dollars, like so many other provisions. Does the Minister of Finance not think it is time that a process be introduced so that every tax expenditure program is evaluated to ensure that the people of Canada are getting good value for their money?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): First, Mr. Speaker, the ministerial task force under the chairmanship of the Deputy Prime Minister has been doing that to a large extent during the course of the past 16 months. Furthermore, last summer we released the book that set out very clearly the cost of tax expenditures that are in place now. We are reviewing these on an ongoing basis. I have indicated to the Hon. Member on a number of occasions that I welcome the suggestions that he and his Party would like to make.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

FREEZE ON HIRING AND DISCRETIONARY EXPENSES

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Will he explain to the House the implications of his recent announcement of a freeze on hiring and discretionary expenses in the federal Government?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I believe all Members are well aware that toward year-end there is always a bulge in federal spending. If we look back over the years, we see that in the last month of the year rather than the normal expenditure flow of $8 billion to $9 billion there is a bulge of an extra $5 billion or $6 billion.

It is in the spirit of good management of public funds that we have decided to impose the freeze to ensure that public funds are well spent to avoid as much as possible the recurrence of that bulge.

TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE CLOSING OF MARINE INDUSTRIES RAIL DIVISION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Is the Minister aware of the fact that, after Bombardier, after CSF Foundries, and after Canadian Steel Wheel, another Quebec plant, Marine Industries, has just announced that, as a result of the Canadian Government's inertia with respect to new contracts in that field, it will have to close its railway car division and throw some 1,000 workers out on the street? What does the Minister intend to do about it?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member has heard the statements made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister indicating the number of jobs that have been created in Canada, and indeed in Quebec and the Province of Montreal—

Mr. Nystrom: The province?

Mr. Mazankowski: The city of Montreal.

An Hon. Member: You had it right the first time.

Mr. Mazankowski: Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the Government is vitally concerned about jobs in the city of Montreal, particularly the East End of Montreal.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF VIA RAIL REQUIREMENTS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Those figures do not solve the problem of Sorel workers. How can the Minister explain the fact that, after 15 months under Conservative administration, VIA Rail still needs 50 locomotives and 200-odd new passenger cars and yet is still waiting for Government authorization to buy the new equipment it needs, and that the only 20 locomotives which have been ordered have yet to be delivered?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, locomotives have been ordered and other lcomotives are being tendered. A consortium has been established between the UTDC and Bombardier for the building of the rolling stock and we hope to be in a position to make an annoucement very soon with respect to the acquisition of the rolling stock. That should be most helpful to the Hon. Member.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S FORTHCOMING VISIT TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns reports that the Prime Minister has decided not to seek an invitation to address the United States Congress. Will he say whether that is the case and, if so, would he reconsider that decision, given the fact that many people in Canada were looking forward to the Prime Minister using the opportunity to address the United States Congress on important environmental issues such as acid rain?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my itinerary is still being planned. If I decline, it will only be for reasons of modesty.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: That will be the first time.

Mr. Deans: In other words, you are going.

POLLUTION OF NIAGARA RIVER

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I encourage the Prime Minister not to do anything unusual by being modest. Will the Prime Minister include on the agenda for discussions with the President not just the question of acid rain but the other serious environmental problem of the pollution of the Niagara River? Would he put that on the table with the President?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be delighted to make sure that acid rain is on the agenda, as it has been since I began meeting with President Reagan, and that the other environmental issues are discussed as well. Furthermore, I will bring along to the President the affectionate regards of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

SOCIAL SECURITY

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, earlier this afternoon the Prime Minister referred to "the corrosive social policies of previous Liberal administrations". I believe those were his words. Those happen to be the same policies that the Prime Minister adopted when he became Leader of his Party and used during the election under the heading of "sacred trust".

Has he finally revealed his true colours and is this the philosophy that will be revealed in next week's Budget?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the only time old age pensions were cut in the history of this country was when the Liberals introduced 6 and 5. That is the only time that the elderly were deprived of their due.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Right in front of us, wearing the red tie, is the father of the Canadian deficit. He took a surplus and transformed it into a deficit that now crushes Canadians. We are taking that burden off the backs of Canadians and creating new jobs all around.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The spontaneous vocabulary of the Prime Minister earlier this afternoon revealed the true man and the true colours of his Party.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister intervene to resolve the split between the Minister of National Defence, Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and come down on the side of Canadians who are being cut off from unemployment insurance? Will he do that?

• (1500)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will intervene as soon as the Right Hon. Member gives me the secret of resolving his problems with the Member from Shawinigan.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions, with the exception of one, presented by Hon. Members on Tuesday, February 11, 1986, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

Order, please. Members who wish to have a conversation in the back, please have it somewhere else.

The petition presented by the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) does not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

Point of Order—Mr. Gray (Windsor West)

POINT OF ORDER

QUESTION PERIOD—REPETITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During the Question Period you told certain Members that their questions could not be allowed because they were the same as questions that had been asked previously in the same Question Period.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that there are many precedents during your speakership when successive questions on the same subject, and in just about the same, if not, identical words, have been allowed by you.

I will give you an example when an entire Question Period and every single question asked by the Official Opposition and the other opposition Party has been on the same subject, namely the deindexing of the old age pension by the Conservatives.

I want to say that if you do not revert to the practice that you yourself have allowed on many occasions since becoming Speaker, you will make it impossible for members of the Opposition to maintain a sustained inquiry into a subject of importance to them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I might add, Mr. Speaker, the subjects in question are of importance, not only to Hon. Members but to the Canadian people.

Mr. Gormley: Prove it.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the approach you have been following in the past where you have allowed Members to decide for themselves what subjects they consider important is one that I say, with the utmost respect, you should follow. After all, you are not telling members of the Government that they cannot repeat over and over again the same answer, even when they do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): You are not telling Government Ministers that, even when they give the same answer to a question that has nothing to do with the question.

A basic principle of the concept of the speakership is that the Chair must be impartial, and must be seen to be impartial.

If you do not revert to the practice you have adopted and followed in allowing questions throughout the Question Period on the same subject and in the same words you, yourself, Mr. Speaker, will inadvertently, I am sure, be doing a disservice to that essential principle.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it is always very difficult to comment on events in the Question Period without appearing to be reflecting on the role of the Speaker. I recognize that. I do, however, want to indicate that I share certain of the concerns that were expressed. I am sure that they will be taken in the mood in which they are intended to be taken.

It is necessary, and we concur in the view expressed by the Speaker in the past, that questions should be shorter than they had been previously and preambles should be virtually non-existent in the supplementary question.

We have tried, and I think it is fair to say also that the Official Opposition has tried, to live by that request of the Speaker.

It is, however, as was said by my hon. colleague, extremely difficult to develop and sustain a political attack if one cannot repeat, if not exactly, certainly in the substance, questions that are deemed by the Opposition Parties to be of importance.

I would ask simply that in exercising your discretion, which you must do always, that you bear in mind that the rules of the House are not intended to straighjacket the Members. Rather they are intended to permit a free flow of opinion and the opportunity for questioning with regard to the Government's performance. I ask that we do, in fact, attempt—not to go back exactly where we were before, I think that might be wrong—to exercise caution in any changes that we make during the Question Period.

I would have spoken to this matter during the debate a little later but, since it was raised now, I think it is probably important that we all be on the record at the same time.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I just want to add a few words with respect to the comments raised by the opposition House Leaders.

I know Your Honour is now receiving representations from all Members with respect to the whole question of the rules of Question Period. I think this is a worthwhile re-examination of this very important part of our parliamentary day.

The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) has made a representation with respect to the whole question of repetitive questions. I am sure he would acknowledge that repetition for the sake of repetition or histrionic effect is not desirable.

We want to make sure that there is an understandable and consistent set of rules which everybody understands and which are fair to all Members of the House, both Opposition and Government Members. The point being, Sir, that the rules contained in Beauchesne are quite specific with respect to the parameters—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): There are no rules in Beauchesne. They are views of previous Speakers. Stick to the facts.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: My colleague, the Opposition House Leader says there are no rules—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Stick to the facts.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I had the courtesy of listening to what my colleague had to say, notwithstanding the fact that I did not agree with everything he said. I at least heard him out. I think that courtesy should be extended to all members of this House.

What we want to do, Mr. Speaker, is make sure that questions are germane to national issues and that there is an opportunity for as many Members as possible to participate in Question Period. There is great merit in you having a chance to review the representations you receive from Members, both from the Opposition and from the Government side. I think, Sir, if you see your way clear to addressing that issue, either before we rise for the mid-term recess or shortly thereafter, we will all benefit.

Mr. Speaker: That is exactly what I plan to do. I had hoped to be able to do it this week, but I have received some other representations that I want to consider. I, therefore, plan to say something to the House on the first day back, on Monday, after the recess.

I take the point of the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). It has been a difficulty for me from the beginning as to what one does when citations from Beauchesne are continually quoted by various Ministers. It became our practice in the last House not to apply the absolute hard and fast Beauchesne rule about not allowing a repetition of a question. That is true.

At some point, as I have tried to say in the past, and this is certainly the way I think, when the answer has reached the point where a Minister is saying: "I have answered that question three or four times and that is the answer I am going to give," that simply going on with the same question and the same answer makes it difficult for other Members who want to get their questions on.

An Hon. Member: What other Members?

Mr. Speaker: That is what I think. I will be glad to consider it again.

If the Hon. Member for Windsor West is asking me on behalf of his Party to consider the position that all members of the Opposition who are each entitled under our practices now to three questions should be able to put exactly the same question 25 times, if that is the argument he is making—

Mr. Andre: It is called badgering the witness.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that is the argument he is trying to make to me. I am sure it is not. I think even he recognizes that somewhere in the middle is the desire to let Members do what they want to do which, as the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), said, may be tactically to repeat a question, and at the same time to respect the right of other Members to get their questions on the same day. It seems to me that is the balance the Chair has to find.

• (1510)

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a point by way of clarification. I say with the utmost respect that if a Member asks the same question as another Member, he is not preventing anyone from asking a question. Because of the informal principles under which we operate here, the distribution of questions would be exactly the same.

All that is happening is that he asks a question which he thinks is important for himself and for the people of Canada. I make this comment with the utmost respect, and I say further that what is in Beauchesne under the so-called citations is simply the views of previous Speakers; they are not binding rulings.

Mr. Speaker: For my clarification, is the Hon. Member for Windsor West saying that I should rule that if every single member of the Opposition simply wants to get up on the same day and ask exactly the same question, word for word, it should be allowed? Is that the representation the Hon. Member is making?

Mr. Nunziata: Of course not.

Mr. Speaker: I need to know precisely what representation I am to consider.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, may I just intervene for a moment? Why should you rule on our questions? That is what you just asked.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Because the Chair is obligated under the rule to decide whether questions are admissible; that is its obligation.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, why should you rule as to whether opposition MP "A" or "B" has a repetitive question? It is up to him to decide whether or not he wants to put the question and the way he puts the question, and you will have to receive the question as acceptable within the rules of the House. I do not think it is up to you to decide whether or not it is repetitive, any more than you editorialize the answers.

Mr. Speaker: My practice, if the a Minister makes an answer which is simply a repetition of a previous answer, is to cut him off sooner and sooner. That is what I practice.

May I simply say to the Hon. Member that he has to cope with the fact that we have rules and traditions. One of the rules, which the Hon. Member for Windsor West says does not exist, is a codified version which says that to repeat a question is out of order. We have not applied it strickly, but I therefore repeat—and maybe the Hon. Member wants to discuss it in private, and I need to know the answer—that if Opposition Members used the Question Period to put the same question and to get the same answer every single time, is the Hon. Member saying that that would be a reasonable use of Questions Period in the view of the Official Opposition?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to say that is a decision to be made by the individual Member, and if there is any reaction to that, it should be from his or her electorate and the Canadian people.

PETITIONS

REINSTATEMENT OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of people who are outraged at the Government's decision to curtail the funding for Katimavik. They make the case that it in fact has helped over 20,000 young Canadians develop their social skills, as well as employment options. They call upon the Government to reinstate, with full funding, the Katimavik program for the young people of Canada.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present, on behalf of 500 young people living in Ottawa, a petition in opposition to the Government's decision to eliminate Katimavik. In the petition they suggest that Katimavik is a unique program which will not be duplicated. It is not simply a job-creation program, it is a youth life experience program, and it cannot be duplicated, no matter how much money the Government might want to spend.

EFFECT OF FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS ON AGRICULTURAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, today again, I would like to present to the House 11 petitions bearing a total of 148 names—these bring the total from my riding to 3,545 voters—expressing to the Government their disapproval of the free-trade policy and their concern about the consequences of such a policy on farmers in the riding of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. The petitioners ask the House and the Government of Canada not to sacrifice agricultural programs during negotiations with the United States of America.

POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to present a petition on behalf of approximately 900 residents of Mississauga North, specifically from Hargood Place, Streetsville and East Ridge Avenue in Meadowvale. They call upon Canada Post to offer better service. They are extremely dissatisfied with the service offered by Canada Post Corporation.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from concerned residents of Carrot River, Saskatchewan, who humbly pray that the Government makes changes to the Young Offenders Act.

Introduction of Bills

POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 600 citizens of Winnipeg and of other parts of Manitoba. They point out that when Canada Post became a Crown corporation, its mandate was to maintain and improve existing service, to improve labour relations and to eliminate the deficit. Therefore they say: "We, the citizens of Canada, protest service cut-backs and demand that service receive first priority in conformity with the mandate".

POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF CN SHOPS—MONCTON

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is again my duty, today, to table another petition from people in the riding of Westmorland-Kent, concerned about the continuing uncertainty surrounding the future of the CN shops in Moncton.

The petitioners would like to receive the assurance that jobs will be protected. More that 1,000 jobs are at stake and the unemployment situation in New Brunswick is deteriorating every day. We would simply like to have the assurance that these jobs will be protected.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a couple of petitions from my riding and from other neighbourhoods in Winnipeg. These petitioners call upon the Government to reinstate the full indexation of family allowances. I would like the Government to take note of the fact that these petitions are still coming in, even though it has passed its legislation.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES AND REPEAL OF TAX

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the people of Spadina also do not accept the Government's decision. They still feel that the deindexing of the family allowances is unfair to low-income people and are petitioning the Government, as so many hundreds of thousands have, to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

CANADA POST CORPORATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-263, an Act to amend the Canada Post Corporation Act (exclusive privilege).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, this Bill would allow the private sector to compete with Canada Post in offering mail service. After hearing two petitions on this subject today, I suspect there might be support for it in the House. This provision was contemplated in the recent report of the Marchment committee on Canada Post as a possibility after 1990, if the problems in that operation are not resolved by then.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

AN ACT RESPECTING THE ARCHIVES OF CANADA

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-95, an Act respecting the Archives of Canada and records of government institutions of Canada and to amend the Copyright Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When will the Bill be read for the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, question No. 507 will be answered today.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STANDING ORDERS—PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

The House resumed from Tuesday, February 11, 1986, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn:

That the proposed amendments to the Standing Orders, laid upon the Table on Thursday, February 6, 1986 (Sessional Paper No. 331-7/37A) be adopted and made provisional Standing Orders of the House.

Provided that, unless otherwise ordered;

1. the said provisional Standing Orders shall be in force from 11.00 o'clock a.m. Monday, February 24, 1986 until the House adjourns on the last sitting day in December, 1986;

2. and further to the Order made on June 27, 1985, the provisional Standing Orders thereby adopted shall continue in force during the same period; and

3. the Clerk of the House shall be authorized and instructed to print a revised and renumbered edition of the Standing Orders integrating the provisional Standing Orders and making any necessary amendments in consequence thereof, or relating thereto in respect of the Standing Orders concerning Private Bills, and to make such changes to the Order Paper and Notices as may be required.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Thank you very much, Mr. speaker. It was my understanding that in the rotation we were next. If I am out of order, of course, I certainly wouldn't want to interfere with my colleague.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: I do not wish to contravene your decision, Mr. Speaker, but when this motion was debated, an NDP Member had spoken. The Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault) was recognized and it rested with the designated Liberal Member, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) to rise.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As the Hon. Member no doubt knows, the order of the speeches made in the House is entirely left to the discretion of the Speaker and the information given to me is not consistent with the information just provided by the Hon. Member for Bourassa. The member who spoke before the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault) was the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

I will therefore recognize the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, let me just say this. I understand that my colleague has other pressing business that he has to undertake immediately and I would be willing to have him speak ahead of me if that would facilitate the opportunity for the Member who was a very important part of the committee to get his views on the record.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by thanking my hon. friend from Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) for letting me speak to the Government's motion at this time. I will be as brief as possible so that he can make his own vital contribution to this debate.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

The purpose of reform of the House of Commons in 1985 is to restore to private members an effective legislative function, to give them a meaningful role in the formation of public policy and, in so doing, to restore the House of Commons to its rightful place in the Canadian political process.

I think that in this short sentence, the Chairman of the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons has described very succinctly the objectives that he and all other members of this Committee had in mind when they set themselves the task of proposing a major set of parliamentary reforms to their colleagues in the House.

I may say I am delighted with the positive response the McGrath Report has received from the Government. Clearly, many of the objectives pursued by the Committee have been approved by the Government, and the motion before the House today reflects, as far as I can see, a very positive response on the part of the Government. I think that one of the goals we were pursuing in committee was to provide Members on both sides of the House with greater freedom to act. Freedom not only when it is a matter of examining legislation initiated by Ministers but also when we are considering the Estimates submitted to Parliament each year.

The McGrath Report contains a complete chapter on what we refer to as the confidence convention, and the report makes it quite clear that confidence votes should not be a daily occurrence, not even every other day or every week, since they would restrict the freedom of parliamentarians, both on the Government side and in the Opposition. In this connection, I would like to quote our hon. friend, the Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen), who said:

> Experience has been that the longer a Government is in office the more every vote is maybe not a vote of confidence but a vote of reputation, which is close to confidence, and therefore you have to have uniformity.

The members of the McGrath Committee agreed that obviously, if the various party whips were to take action whenever we were considering a Bill or whenever a motion was tabled in the House, the freedom of both Government Members and Opposition Members would be curtailed. We have therefore expressed the hope, and of course it cannot be more than that because we cannot enshrine such thoughts in a regulatory text, but nevertheless we have expressed the hope that on occasion, and we went so far as to say it would be desirable, Opposition Members would be able to vote for a Government motion, and conversely, Government Members would be able to vote against a Bill introduced by the Government, and would be able to do so without being disciplined by their respective parties or being called renegades or disruptive elements within the party by their parliamentary colleagues. And so, agreeing as I do with this objective of the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons, I want to tell you right now, Mr. Speaker, that I will vote in favour of this Government motion. I will do so because I believe that the Government recommendations as a whole are important and tantamount to a giant step towards improving our parliamentary procedure.

Very briefly, I would point out a number of progressive steps we will be taking by endorsing the motion now under consideration. First, as some of my colleagues have indicated, the standing committees of the House of Commons will have more powers. In our opinion, Members do most of their work in committees.

We all know that daily television broadcasting covers proceedings during the oral questions period, but that does not properly reflect all the work done in parliamentary committees by Government and Opposition Members alike, day after day and week after week.

These extended powers given to the standing committees of the House will go a long way towards enhancing and justifying the political existence of a good many of us.

Second, I think that the McGrath committee wanted to make sure that some of the activities of Hon. Members in the House would be meaningful rather than simply routine proceedings.

That is why we welcome the fact that the Government has accepted three major recommendations from the McGrath report which will help Hon. Members to make more useful contributions in the future.

I am referring first of all to the written questions which Hon. Members submit periodically. Too often in the past have Hon. Members examined rather thoroughly a given issue to submit a series of written questions which have remained unanswered for weeks, months, or even years, during this Parliament as well as previous ones.

From now on, the Government will reply within 45 days to allowable written questions submitted by Hon. Members. Of course, the Government has extended by 15 days the 30-day period which we had suggested, but I do not think it is enough of a drawback for us to oppose the Government's response. I think that 45 days is a reasonably short delay, and we should be pleased with this positive response concerning written questions.

Also, the Government from now on will have to reply to petitions. Everyday, following the Oral Question Period, we see Hon. Members rising in the House to table a petition from their constituents. Until now, these petitions ended up on shelves and were never heard from again; nobody payed any attention to them anymore.

From now on, the Government will have to reply within a reasonable delay to those who have submitted petitions.

Finally, thanks to a much more flexible procedure, it will be possible for Private Member Bills to be adopted. Again, this is a major improvement resulting from the McGrath Report. I want to congratulate my colleague the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) who has done a tremendous job on this issue and who has managed to convince us all of the need to correct a flaw in our Standing Orders which had seen a great number of hon. Members submit bills over the years without ever seeing their work rewarded by Parliament's approval.

I am not saying that all Private Members' Bill will be adopted; what I am saying is that, thanks of this more flexible procedure, it will probably be possible for a couple of Private Members' Bills to be adopted by the House every session, instead of once every five or ten years as before. I suggest that this is already a major improvement and an incentive for several of us to introduce bills which have a least a theoretical chance of being adopted by our colleagues.

I should like to mention also that I am fully satisfied with the decision of the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to submit to Parliamentary review all appointments made by the Governor in Council.

I think that the McGrath Report made it clear that we would have liked Members of Parliament not only to be able to review some of these appointments made by order in council, but also to have a right of veto in certain cases.

I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that this has given rise to different legal interpretations. Some legal experts have maintained that, constitutionally, the Cabinet could not abandon its responsibilities and allow Members of Parliament to veto is appointments by order in council. However, what we should keep in mind is that, even if there is no veto, we, parliamentarians, shall still be able to examine and review these Cabinet appointments, and I think that this represents a substantial improvement in our procedure of political appointments. I must say that the Prime Minister is innovating in this field and I am quite pleased with this decision because it is obvious that he has all the powers in our political system. He has full authority and could have refused to share it with parliamentarians. I think that this represents a giant step towards a healthier political administration, and I therefore hope that political appointments will also be more relevant in the future.

Finally, I would like to say, because I do not want to tax the patience of the House, that one of my most difficult decisions as a Member of Parliament and of this committee was to examine and dispose once and for all, at least I hope so, of the famous question of the bells. If we accept the procedure proposed in this Government motion, we shall be making a radical change to a parliamentary procedure which has existed for a very long time. I have no need to remind the House about the time we lose when there are recorded votes in this House because of the procedure under which the bells ring to call in the Members and then a Clerk of the Table rises to recognize and name each Member in his turn. After a study sponsored by the McGrath Special Committee, we realized that we were losing many hours each session simply by maintaining an old voting procedure. I therefore trust that the Government will follow up this recommendation of the McGrath Report as soon as possible to install an electronic voting system which will be much more modern, effective and sophisticated than the present one.

But beyond that matter of the mechanical aspect of voting, I must say there is that unfortunate practice that filtered in some time ago which is to use the division bells to oppose the Government, to prevent the House from debating and to delay a vote that normally should be held within a reasonable period. I must remind the House that during the previous Parliament, Members of the Committee on Parliamentary Reform who considered the issue and made a series of recommendations, the so-called Lefebvre Report, chose not to deal with that matter of the bells. Members of the McGrath Committee are to be commended in my view for dealing with such a basic issue. And I must add that, being in the Opposition, it is very hard for me to let go a tool that occasionally could be very useful to bring the Government to a halt. I am aware that this Government, when they were the Official Opposition, knowingly used the bells on occasion. But this being said, it is my personal view that such an abuse of the bells is unworthy of our parliamentary system and must not be repeated in the future. This is why I unanimously voted with my colleagues on the McGrath Report for a ban on such an abuse of the bell system. My hon. friends opposite have no cause for rejoicing, for certainly the Opposition will have the ingenuity needed to find other ways to oppose Government measures as occasion arises, other methods to show the Government it can be wrong in some respects. But I do not feel it is normal and acceptable that ringing the bells should become a parliamentary practice because as you know, Mr. Speaker, in all our Commonwealth countries that incident of the bells has been very unfavourably viewed. People were wondering what was going on in Canada, what was happening to our parliamentary system. It is therefore my hope that once the motion is accepted and we have a new way for voting, that practice of misusing the bells will disappear from our political life, thereby improving the dignity and efficiency of Parliament.

I will conclude by saying I share the view of my colleague, the Opposition House Leader, that certain recommendations in the McGrath Report that have not been accepted should be seriously considered by the Government. Certainly this motion can always be improved. Of course, it will be in force for ten months only. This will enable us to see to what extent our recommendations are worthwhile and can work.

But there is one I would like to bring to the attention of this Parliament. In the McGrath Report, we proposed that all Members of this House, and especially Opposition Members, be allowed to submit ten written questions the day before consideration of the Main Estimates, so that members of the various Standing Committees of the House responsible for scrutinizing the Estimates for each department will be in a better position to do their work. This is not a dilatory tactic to annoy the Government or public officials, but basically a way of giving backbenchers a useful mechanism for enhancing their task of reviewing the Estimates. In fact, this recommendation comes to us from France, from the French National Assembly, where they have this mechanism by which all members of the National Assembly can carry out a truly thorough review of the budget estimates for each of the French ministries.

We approved this proposal because we believe it is essential if we are to enhance the role of the individual member. Now I would like to say to the Government that when it allows Members to submit no more than four written questions to the Government, and rejects the 30-day period in favour of an extension to 45 days, while completely ignoring our recommendation for ten written questions on the Estimates, I think it is, to a certain extent, upsetting the balance between the new powers conferred Government backbenchers and Opposition Members. And I believe it would be useful to review this point and provide that when the Estimates are tabled, all Members of this House have a chance to submit a number of written questions to which officials would be asked to reply within a reasonable time frame.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I believe that this Government has shown its good faith in tabling this document. Above all, it has shown the Chairman of the Committee, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) that it was in earnest when it gave him this mandate, and I believe the Government deserves our praise for having submitted these proposals, and I hope that all Members of this House will benefit when the new Standing Orders become effective and that this institution will be able to operate in a way that is more in keeping with today's demands, and become a more effective and more satisfying endeavour for all Canadian parliamentarians.

[English]

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the genius of our type of parliamentary democracy which has been nurtured by 1,000 years of tradition is its ability to adapt to changing times. That, Sir, is what we are addressing today in the motion which is before the House. Today, we are taking a giant step in parliamentary reform. In my view, it is the beginning of the most ambitious and comprehensive attempt which has ever been made to reform this House in its more than 100 years of history. More importantly, what we are attempting to do in the package which is before the House is to enhance the role of the Private Member.

I have already made reference to the role of my six colleagues who worked with me long and hard on the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons. It would be remiss of me, and I am sure my colleagues who sit with me on this side of the House will understand, if I did not pay particular tribute to the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet). He joined the committee representing the Official Opposition as its first Vice-Chairman. He brought to our deliberations more than 10 years' experience as a senior Minister of the Crown. He will understand if I say to him that among other things he was known as a very partisan Minister of the Crown. I know from personal experience because I had the honour to be his critic for a number of years. However, when he came to the committee he was able to rise to the occasion. He was able to rise above the petty partisan political considerations of the day and look at the greater challenge which was before us in the mandate which we had from the House. His leadership, together with his colleague and my friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), made it possible for us as a special committee of this House in more than 50 meetings to arrive at all of our conclusions without division. We operated by consensus. Of course, that does not always mean unanimity. I can say without any fear of being contradicted that most of what is in that report does, in fact, represent unanimity.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill brought to the committee the perspective and the tradition of reform which has characterized the New Democratic Party and the CCF Party which preceded it. He, Sir, brought an element of dedication to our committee which we truly appreciate, an element of leadership which helped us arrive at our conclusions.

I do not want to be critical of the speech made by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). I understand where he is coming from. I understand his concerns. I suspect that if I were the House Leader for the Official Opposition I would probably have made the same speech. I want to quote to him from a book written by the Hon. John B. Stewart, who was for many years a distinguished Liberal Member of Parliament and who now enjoys the distinction of being a member of the other place. He wrote what I consider to be one of the definitive works on the House of Commons. He said, and I commend these words to the Hon. Member for Windsor West:

● (1550)

> Over the years Canadian parliamentarians were loath to make an examination of their forms and procedures. They hid indifference, perhaps even laziness, behind a screen of adoration for a British model long after the British themselves, out of concern for the genius of the system, had reformed the model radically.

He then goes on to quote Francis Bacon. He said, and I quote:

> Yet there still may be a lesson for us in Francis Bacon's admonition against obstinate traditionalism: "He that will not apply new remedies must expect new evils, for Time is the greatest Innovator."

This is not the last word. This is not the beginning of some kind of a new system of parliamentary reform which is going to be carved in stone. These are merely the best efforts of seven Hon. Members of this House who applied themselves to the challenge which was presented to them by this House.

To the credit of the Government, in accepting that challenge and in giving us the broad mandate in the first instance, it has stuck closely to the recommendations of the committee. Indeed, I know the Hon. Member for Windsor West would be the first to agree with that. If we examine the initial response of the Government—and the Government has its responsibilities—and examine the response now before the House, we will find the Government has come a long way. It makes me very proud to stand in my place today and make reference to that fact. We had a special debate in this House on December 4. The House agreed to set aside its time and give special additional hours for that special debate. What we have in front of us today is a result of a Government which listened to Hon. Members who participated in that special debate.

Indeed, most, if not all of these suggestions which were made during the course of that special debate, have been incorporated in the proposed Standing Orders which are now before the House. But it is not the last word. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), the distinguished House Leader for the New Democratic Party, would be the first to admit that only by trial will we be able to determine how effective these reforms will be. They have to be tried by all of us, including yourself, Mr. Speaker, including the distinguished officers of the Table, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), Members of the Government, the front bench Members of the Opposition and all of us private Members of the House. It is—and I do not apologize if I sound partisan—to the credit of the Prime Minister and of the Government that the challenge was accepted and these changes were brought in.

We have come a long way in the last seven months. It was just seven months ago that we brought in, as a special committee, our final report. We have moved this House further by way of reform than it has ever been moved in its entire history. We are now operating under provisional rules pursuant to the recommendations of the first report. We are about to embark upon a new set of provisional procedural reforms in the new Standing Orders which will incorporate the recommendations of the second and third reports.

We are today taking a giant step. I suppose it is not too melodramatic to say that we are charting a course into unknown waters. What we are trying to establish here is not something which is going to blindly follow the traditions of Westminster or meekly try to imitate the traditions of Washington and the Congressional system. What we are trying to put in place is something, in my view, which is, or will be, uniquely Canadian.

One of the things we talk about in the report is the need for attitudinal change. We cannot regulate attitudes and we cannot legislate attitudes. Attitudes must be changed by the individual. For these reforms to be effective, for these reforms to give us the kind of Parliament we all want, there has to be major attitudinal changes undertaken by Hon. Members of the House. If this House is to assume its rightful role in the life of this country, then I believe that we as Hon. Members of the House have to conduct ourselves with due regard for where we are and why we are here. I say that as one who, during my time in opposition, was perhaps a great offender of decorum. I was an aggressive Member of the Opposition. I would like to feel I was a good Member of the Opposition but I will be the first to admit that I was an aggressive Member of the Opposition. I understand the role of the opposition. When I say that we have to have attitudinal changes, due regard for where we are and why we are here and due regard for the decorum of this place, I do not mean that we all have to be a bunch of powderpuffs. There has to be aggressive debate and confrontation during Question Period but we have to put real questions and we have to have real answer.

One thing we are attempting to do here is take the emphasis off the Question Period, and perhaps that in itself will constitute a reform of our Question Period. It is now the be-all and end-all of the Parliamentary day. The Prime Minister knows, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) knows, and most of us in this House know there is much more to this place than the 45 minutes when the media join us for Question Period.

What I like about these reforms is that it will put the emphasis where it belongs on the hard work which is done in committees of this House. In attempting to reform the committees of this House, the Government, to its credit, has seen the need to make the committees independent of the Government, and not only independent but to be seen to be independent of the Government.

What we have said in our recommendations which the Government has accepted and the House is about to endorse, is to let the media decide if and when it wants to televise or broadcast the proceedings, or whatever part of the proceedings of a committee it wants to tape in its own editorial wisdom. I believe that fact will go a long way towards changing the emphasis which now is placed—in my opinion, to the detriment of Parliament—on the 45 minutes when we meet here for Question Period.

I do repeat, however, that we do have to have due regard for the decorum of this place. Our decorum, how we conduct ourselves, cannot be changed by the Standing Orders, nor by fiat. That can only be changed by the collective will of this House. It is that collective will which these reforms call upon. These reforms are begging to be addressed in terms of reforming ourselves.

What we have before us are the procedural reforms. They represent the bulk of the recommendations of the second and third reports. They do not represent the entire report. Reference has already been made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill to the non-procedural reforms, and there are 29 of those. Some of them are important and some are not so important, but as a package they are all important in terms of how we attempt to improve the image of this place, for example, in electronic voting.

I happen to believe that electronic voting will be a major reform. Not only will it make us more efficient in our use of time, but also in how we approach a vote. It will help to ease the heavy yoke which has tended to strangle this House over the years through the interpretation by the whips of the confidence convention. Not only do I think it has to be changed, most importantly the Prime Minister of this country thinks it has to be changed and he is committed to making the change. He, Sir, has wavered not one iota in that commitment. When he came to this place he was struck by the need to make changes. It is not mere coincidence that the first priority in the Speech from the Throne opening this Parliament was the striking of the special task force to reform this place and enhance the role of the Private Member. I believe electronic voting will go a long way towards doing just that.

There are other reforms, of course. I am sure most Members would be surprised if I were to tell them that during the last Parliament we spent more than two full sitting days walking behind the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod between this place and the Senate. This is an archaic ceremony which was done away with in Westminster almost 20 years ago. We are the only major Parliament in the Commonwealth to still use that procedure. We are not saying do away with Royal Assent because that would fundamentally change our Constitution and our system. We are saying retain it for special occasions like changes in the Constitution. However, when a Bill requires Royal Assent, let us send a messager to Government House and let the Governor General sign it so we can get on with the business of the nation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: That is better than taking up not only our time but the time of Their Lordships who sit on the Supreme Court of Canada. I noticed, Mr. Speaker, that you were rather enthusiastic in your applause for that particular reform. This does not require any great change because there is already a movement in the Senate in this regard. All it requires is a meeting of these two Houses to come up with a procedure which will bring us into the 20th century. That is really all we are talking about.

I could go on about the role of the new Board of Internal Economy. We are taking control of our own affairs, presided over by your distinguished self. We now have a Board which administers the Budget of this House comprised primarily of Private Members. Out of nine Members there are only two Ministers, as opposed to the previous Board which was comprised of four Ministers and the Speaker.

I mention that Board not only because of the importance of taking control of our own affairs in this place, but also because of the importance of the Board as a means to implement the non-procedural reforms of this House. If I have one concern to state to the Government House Leader it is about the inability of the House, under the motion before it today, to address the non-procedural recommendations of these two reports. So we rely on the good word of the House Leader who stood in his place on Friday and said he would unequivocally proceed, through the Board, with the implementation of the non-procedural reforms. The ball is now in the court of the Board of Internal Economy. I would like to say to that Board that I hope it will be able to report before we adjourn for the summer recess to update this House on where we stand on this matter. These non-procedural reforms are important not only symbolically but because they are true reforms.

I will close by paraphrasing an editorial which appeared in The Globe and Mail last June when we brought in our final report. It said in part that this report was the coming of age of Canada as a distinctive parliamentary democracy. It put parliamentary reform right up there with the patriation of the Constitution and the drawing up of the Charter of Rights; and, Sir, I may add, with the Prime Minister's dedication to national reconciliation and national renewal. I believe this Prime Minister will be remembered for doing just that. He will be remembered for bringing in parliamentary reform. I want to say to him and Members of this House how grateful I am for the honour bestowed upon us, and I suspect I speak for my colleagues, when he gave us this challenge and asked us to take on this responsibility. I also want to thank him for the demonstration of confidence as exemplified by the motion which is before the House today. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that it is about time this House took its rightful place in the public affairs of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Questions or comments.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I may not have a chance to participate in the debate because, as you know, there is a great Summit de la francophonie and some of us have to go for a briefing session at 4.30. However, I would like to make a comment or two and ask my hon. friend a question.

I am in full agreement on the question of electronic voting. However, I do not think we should remove the "glamorous" part of the voting procedure. Does the Hon. Member think we should keep the voting procedure for certain great occasions? For example, the Speech from the Throne, the Budget Speech, and those which are well known to be votes of non-confidence, or, a marriage of the three? He has said that while we should dispense with Royal Assent as we do it now, we should keep it for certain cases. I am in the strange position of being extremely conservative in regards to changes in our institution. I have always said that one of the best systems in the world is the British parliamentary system. I have stood by that for the last 22 years. I say it in French and English and I say it in Quebec or anywhere else. It is a great system. Therefore, when you move from that system to another system you have to be careful not to have a part of both systems, that is the congressional system and the British parliamentary system.

The Hon. Member talked about the Board of Internal Economy. This is an idea that I would like to float around. As you know, I have the honour to chair the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services. This position, by tradition, is taken by an opposition Member.

I came to the conclusion that if this Board of Internal Economy is going to have that kind of power, perhaps we should look into the possibility—not for me but for my successor and I am ready to step down if this was a problem—of having the chairman of that committee sitting on the Board of Internal Economy. If the debate does not terminate today I would like to have an opportunity to say why I feel that way.

My third point is this. Having read attentively, as I do from time to time because that is the way I learn English, both versions of these changes, I found something which is troubling. First, it troubles me to give to the Speaker, whoever it is, so much power to expel a Member. However, I would like to know, if I was to be unruly some day, if the Speaker is going to expel me according to the French version or according to the English version? In the event of a Member being named on a subsequent occasion in the same session, then Mr. Speaker, or perhaps Madam Speaker some day, will suspend the Member for a period of not more than five sitting days. In French it says we can only expel for five days the second time.

• (1610)

[Translation]

Because the French version says: "Le député qui est désigné par son nom une deuxième fois au cours de la même session est suspendu du service de la Chambre durant au plus cinq jours de séance."

I therefore wonder what will happen if a Member to be expelled is a francophone and the debate is in French. I am afraid that Mr. Speaker will have to make a very important ruling, and also a very unfortunate one, according to the version chosen—

[English]

We will have to revise the two texts so we will know what the real intention is. What did the Hon. Member intend by saying that a Member should be expelled for five days the second time?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, dealing with the last part of my hon. friend's question, whether it is in French or English I know that the subject of naming will always be academic with him, because I am sure he is too good a parliamentarian to be named.

This is one of the changes made by the Government. We do not consider it to be a major change and frankly I would have preferred to see disciplinary action beyond one day's banishment from the House to be handled by the House itself.

However, I have no problem with this change. I know it is something that the Standing Committee will want to consider because it is charged with the annual responsibility of reviewing these rules under previous recommendations.

Mr. Prud'homme: It is different in French and English. What exactly is your intention? It does not say the same in French.

Mr. McGrath: I am not in a position to address that because I am not familiar with the French text. However, I know that the Hon. Member's question has been taken note of and I am sure the learned members at the Table will have an answer for him.

I want to refer to his question regarding electronic voting. I believe there are occasions when Members of the House should stand up and be counted. For example, when there are changes to the Constitution, or great debates such as the restoration of the death penalty in this country, I believe Members should be prepared to stand up and be counted. We should reserve what the Americans call "roll call votes" for special occasions.

However, by and large, when dealing with business of the House I believe we can deal with it much more expeditiously if we have a system of electronic voting similar to what they have in the House of Representatives. If Hon. Members want to see how the House of Representatives conducts itself and how an electronic vote is taken, I suggest to Hon. Members that in upcoming weeks they can see the House of Representatives on the C-SPAN network which is now part of the OASIS system. I believe that this week, Question Period is also to be carried on that network.

Certainly I believe that there are occasions for roll call voting. I see the distinguished Clerk of the Table, one of two who is charged with calling the names in this place, looking at me with great scepticism because it means he will always have to remain in training.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to the goal of attempting to remove the emphasis from Question Period by allowing greater emphasis on committees. Specifically he referred to television and said to let the media decide when to televise.

It is my understanding that this question has not been dealt with up to now or referred to the Board of Internal Economy. What is the status of that issue at this time, in his view?

Mr. McGrath: If the Hon. Member will look to the Government's response to the second and third reports, which was brought in on October 9, he will see that the Government accepts in principle the recommendation that the House of Commons televise its proceedings, and it refers the matter to the Board of Internal Economy. It says that the Government is in favour of the recommendation in principle and will undertake consultations with the Opposition Parties to seek agreement in implementation. I hope that satisfies the question.

Mr. Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I first want to indicate a degree of trepidation in following the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) in this debate, inasmuch as it was very much a result of his guidance as chairman of the committee that we are at this point in the transition in the rules and procedures of the House of Commons. As I have said before in discussing reform, I believe the way the committee operated is an ideal example of how the House of Commons could operate under normal circumstances.

The committee had two purposes. First, it attempted to seek consensus, and I believe that is a very important part of parliamentary life. A politician is not really worth too much unless he or she develops the capacity to recognize in his or her colleagues an ability to formulate views and express them with conviction, regardless of which side of the House that colleague sits. I do not know how long I will be in the House, but I hope that during my time here it will begin to reflect the way the committee itself operated.

The committee also operated with a sense of respect for each other. It did in fact seek the position of each member on the committee and carefully sought a view that would be sustained by each, though it may not have been their first choice. In doing that it set an example, not only for the House of Commons but for other committees of the House.

This achievement was largely a result of the leadership of the Hon. Member for St. John's East. I recognize that it was shared by the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). The recommendations of the committee reflect that very conscious view of consensus and are, in large part, the result of a group of individuals who came to know and respect each other's views, even though they may not have always agreed.

Unless the House of Commons is able to adapt itself to that kind of environment, these changes in the rules will become an impediment rather than a help. While many of these rule changes are not radically different from the rules we have in place, they are intended to operate within an atmosphere of respect during tough partisan debate. I must say that such an atmosphere of respect has been lacking from time to time within the House of Commons. As I travel across the country it distresses me to hear people make disparaging remarks about what they see in the House of Commons.

I hope Hon. Members will remember why they are here and who sent them. The people who send us here have the right to expect that while we engage in tough partisan debate over issues of significance and importance to the future of this country, we will not do so in a personal or abusive way. Such an atmosphere distresses me, and I suggest to the Hon. Member for St. John's East who chaired the committee—and he nods in agreement—that no change to the rules will change the attitude. It is indeed an attitudinal change that is needed here as much as a rule change. Such a change in attitude will result in these rules enhancing the opportunity for back-benchers, committees and all Hon. Members to have proper exchanges of opinion while maintaining self-respect. I think that is of vital importance within this House.

● (1620)

There are certain things within the rules that I, frankly, have no idea how they will work. I have looked at them. I concede that if everyone works and puts his or her best efforts forward the rules will not impede the opportunity for the kind of political exchanges that are necessary. There are certain things that I hesitate to endorse fully because I am a little reluctant about them, inasmuch as I cannot see into the future and anticipate how they will be interpreted. That concerns me.

I am convinced that ours is not to try to anticipate every single impediment, every single nuance, every single interpretation or to cross each "t" and dot each "i". We cannot do it.

We have to have some confidence in our ability collectively to be able to recognize when something is not working well, and to make the commitment now that when it can be shown something is not working in a fair and equitable way that we will change it right there and then, and not leave it in place as an irritant to create unnecessary confrontation both here and in committees.

My own endorsement of the changes is predicated on our understanding, and clear understanding, that if it becomes necessary to alter the rules as they are being used or interpreted because they do not conform to what would be fair and equitable in the circumstances, then we will set about to change them immediately and not wait until the end of the trail period, suffering all of the aggravations that naturally grow up within politicians as they attempt to go about doing their business, mcuh of it diverse and spread out. I start from there and say with that caveat it is of importance for us to give this a fair trial.

There have been comments made about the new powers given to the Speaker. There are very few new powers being given to the Speaker in actual fact. The Speaker has always had absolute power within the running of the House of Commons. The Speaker must, out of necessity, have the right to exercise good judgment on all occasions. The Speaker must, out of necessity, have the final say in any dispute that arises within the House over a question of the interpretation of the rules. Without that kind of confidence and without that kind of authority, then no speaker, regardless of his or her ability, would be able to operate.

I say quite bluntly, and I say it to the Speaker now and in private frequently, that we are not always going to agree on every interpretation of everything that happens. Of course we are not. We are human and there will be differences of opinion, and they will arise. I will never, I say it and I hope other Members will recognize it for themselves, countenance any abuse heaped upon the Speaker as a result of the Speaker exercising his or her proper authority.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: That kind of confidence requires in return great care in the exercise of that authority. As well it requires an understanding of the mood of the House and its continually changing mood; an understanding that the rules are written now, but the interpretation of the rules has to take into account precedent, to some extent. Interpretation has to take into account they way in which we have normally done things, though in fact the rules themselves may indicate some drastic change would be permissible to make sure that if change is going to take place, it takes place over time and with care, and that the Members are encouraged to be part of the change rather than feeling that they are somehow being unfairly inhibited by the change.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Members, read the rules, for heaven's sake, read the rules. They are a little difficult, I admit. The wording is not always easy to understand. The cross-referencing may take time, but there is no point in feeling aggrieved, aggravated, or being red-faced, as I have from time to time, only to discover that you were wrong, that the rules, in fact, said quite clearly that you could not do what you said you wanted to do and what you claimed you had the right to do.

I say to other Members, as I have said to myself over the time I have had this particular role to play, that there are two times you rise on a point of order. There are only three points in the House of Commons on which a Member can rise. You can rise on a point of order. They are infrequent, I might add. They are used and abused often. The Speaker has to exercise some degree of understanding inasmuch as there are certain things better said and said quickly than left to fester, and I know that is the way it is being approached by the incumbent of the Chair.

There is then a point of privilege. I do not remember in recent times hearing a legitimate point of privilege, though I have heard many people rising with legitimate grievances. I cannot truthfully say that I have heard, within the very narrow definitions allowed, any legitimate points of privilege.

Then there is the most often used point, frequently couched in the terms of a point of order or a point of privilege, and that is a point of view.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: That is the one everyone wants to express all of the time. A point of view is what a Member rises on when he or she says: "a point of order" or "a point of privilege". What they really want to do is to express a point of view. That is exactly what the House of Commons is here for. Therefore, we must attempt as best we can to accommodate the right of each and every Member to express his or her point of view.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Having said that, and having got that little bit of applause which, frankly speaking, I rarely ever get, I feel that perhaps it is time to quit, but I better not because I have a couple of other matters I want to say.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: There are certain matters, and I draw them to the Speaker's attention, that I think will require consultation. I hope during this trial period the House leaders, together with the Table officers and the Speaker, will meet regularly and discuss the progress that is being made in the implementation and exercise of the new Standing Orders. I say to the Speaker that it would be to everyone's advantage if he were, on a regular basis, to convene such meetings. He has done so in the past, and I hope he will do so in the future, not only with the House Leaders of the three Parties but also with the Table officers from time to time to discuss how the rules are being interpreted and whether or not the interpretation is the kind of interpretation that those of us who are responsible for the political operation sense is fair and just.

I would like to think that we will take part in that and in that process we will influence, not unduly, but in a fair way the way the rules are enforced, rather than to have rulings made that may simply cause further aggravation. I ask the Speaker to bear that in mind.

It is true that there should not be an occasion when Members rise in the House of Commons and address the Speaker with regard to rulings having been made. The appropriate place for such discussions are in the chambers of the Speaker. It cannot always be at the behest of individual Members that that discussion should take place. I ask the Speaker to exercise perhaps some additional authority from time to time and invite those of us who are involved regularly in the interpretation and enforcement, if you will, of the Standing Orders to join together to have a little brief review of where we are going and what we have done. I think that would be helpful.

In that regard I draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that I have some concerns yet about the way Private Members' Business will operate, particularly in its early going. I want to be sure that a week from next Monday, when we return, assuming that the new Standing Orders are in place, we are not confronted with an immediate Private Members' Hour, unless we have carefully worked out a method of drawing and a method of establishing precedents and unless Members have been given fair warning as to when they will be expected to participate. There will have to be some discussion about the way in which the new Standing Orders with regard to Private Members' Business will be implemented, in order that we do not get ourselves off on the wrong foot, and I do not doubt that that will happen.

At report stage, although the Standing Orders say that the Speaker has the power to rule inadmissible amendments proposed or ruled out of order in committee, I ask again for some care in the exercise of that power. I am sure it will be done in any event, but I put it on the record so that it can be referred to. It is possible, though unlikely I admit, that in a standing committee a clerk may misinterpret a rule in giving advice or a chairperson of a committee may interpret an amendment in such a way as to rule it out of order, but that with the benefit of discussion and hindsight it could be ruled in order. I do not want Members of Parliament to be forbidden from proposing amendments ruled out of order. However, I ask that the Chair consult on what the amendment was intended to do before making a final ruling. That will not happen on every occasion, it will not be necessary on every occasion, but there will be times when that would seem appropriate. I would ask the Speaker and those who advise the Speaker to keep that in mind when we are looking at the report stage of Bills being brought back from committee.

On the question of legislative committees, my friend and colleague, the House Leader of the Liberal Party, has indicated on a number of occasions their concern—and I echo it as our concern—over the proliferation of legislative committees. It would not serve Parliament well if by virtue of smaller committees we simply had more committees, all operating at the same time, each conflicting with the other. It does not serve Members or the process well if we are to have, particularly with a quite small Opposition, legislative committees struck and all meeting simultaneously. The end result of pursuing that kind of approach would be that we who are in the House would then be required unnecesserily to delay the passage of legislation in order to allow the backlog to be cleared up. I do not want to be put in that position. I do not want to be debating for days on end some inconsequential change to some piece of legislation which no one understands, simply to allow that the legislative committees will not be struck and to guarantee that they clear up their backlog before they get this additional work heaped upon them. The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) have raised this question. They have suggested perhaps a queueing arrangement, something similar to what now goes on in Westminster. I would commend that some variation of that be worked out among the House Leaders, together with the Table Officers and the Speaker's office, so that we can in fact have an orderly transition and that we do not end up with Members running from one committee to the next, being frustrated all to hell as a result of their feeling that their own individual concerns are not being met.

On the matter of electronic voting, I have had the privilege of viewing a presentation with regard to that. I sense that further discussion is required on how it will happen and if it will happen immediately and on things which I think should be and will be discussed further. I look forward to discussing them with the Chairman of the committee, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), tonight and on subsequent evenings.

In closing, let me say that it is not easy to accept change. It is always more comfortable to leave things the way they are. It is always easier for Members to operate with rules with which they are comfortable and about which they are knowledgeable, but change is necessary. These changes are the ones which our peers decided would make this place work better. As I said when I first spoke to this a long time ago, I put my faith in that committee. Although I recognize, as they have said, that not everything they have recommended is necessarily absolute and guaranteed to work the way they might have hoped, it will work better if we all agree to co-operate. I feel quite confident that whatever difficulties could arise need not arise if we are prepared to consult one with the other and to seek the compromise for which the committee has become famous.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by thanking the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Jardine) for allowing me to speak before him. I have an engagement in my constituency this evening, and this should allow me to drive there without killing myself on Highway 417, as I think it is called.

The Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) referred to the fact that the Government listened to those who spoke and made some changes by presenting their motions in the special debate on December 4. I would say that this is the first time we have an actual motion on which to speak and we have to make a formal decision abot the rules. Until recently, it was the Government's response to the McGrath Report. I hope the Government shows the same open-mindedness about the comments which are being made today. We are talking about parliamentary reform and we are saying that the views of individual Members count. I certainly hope that the observations which have been made by my colleagues and we will be taken into consideration in the final discussions that will formulate the rules.

I also take not of the fact that many Members, including the Hon. Member for St. John's East, stated that a major change in attitude would be required for these rules to bring about the kind of reform for which everyone sincerely hopes. Yesterday I heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) say that when he first came to the House he understood that an assistant deputy minister had more power than an individual Member of Parliament. When I was listening to him, I could not help but think—maybe, maybe. I recognize that the change of attitude which has been mentioned so often today will be necessary. It is not only the rules, the Standing Orders of the House, which will change everything overnight. If we have the same attitude as that which prevailed, for example, in the sale of de Havilland, we will not get very far.

I note that the committee could not really address the issue of confidence, which is at the heart of having a saner House of Commons. We saw a very striking illustration of the partisan nature of our parliamentary system, which was very difficult to avoid in the Regional Economic Expansion Committee that evening when the Government Members lined up behind their caucus chairman, who came in with a four-page written speech, and they voted down a list of witnesses that had been agreed to unanimously by the steering committee. Another thing that annoys and infuriates me, and which is an illustration of what I want to say, is when in this House of Commons we have to stand up and—I would ask the Government Whip to give me the opportunity of concluding my remarks. Perhaps he will be more impressed by what I have to say in a few minutes.

I was going to say that what annoys and infuriates me is when, in Question Period, Opposition Members stand up and ask the Prime Minister, "Will you allow a committee of this House to study such and such a matter?" It seems to me, as a Member of Parliament, very demeaning to ask the Government to allow a committee to study any particular question. I certainly feel, and I think probably 99 per cent of the Members in this House would feel, that a parliamentary committee, certainly the new kinds of parliamentary committees we are talking about which we propose in this reform, should be able to undertake a study when they see fit to do so. We should not have to ask the permission of anybody to undertake that kind of study.

Let us be clear about things. Even with these new kinds of committees where we hope to create a team spirit and a consensus as to ways of approaching matters, if the majority of Members decide not to have a hearing about a particular subject and follow the wishes of their caucus in that respect, the committee will not be undertaking the hearing and we will be back here in the House again asking the Prime Minister and the members of the Cabinet for permission to hold a hearing. We will be back to square one.

It is principally to the matter of committees that I want to address my comments. Broadcasting of committees is a fundamental element of giving power to Members of Parliament and power to parliamentary committees, and, as the Hon. Member for St. John's East said earlier, taking the emphasis off Question Period. He recognizes it, I recognize it, and I think everybody else in the House recognizes the overwhelming influence of radio and, in particular, television. Therefore, I hope that a quick decision will be made by the powers that be in the House which will allow the televising of committee meetings. That will be, to me, one of the most fundamental reforms. With the watchful eye of television on you there will be a tremendous power which will require Members of Parliament to come to committee prepared, which will require them to be responsible in their questioning and responsible in their interventions.

Another thing to which I want to address myself, and it relates to committees, is the election and the role of the chairpersons. I would refer to page 15 of the McGrath Report where there is a quotation of the Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), who said:

> The power of committees should be increased dramatically with a view to several committees chaired by Opposition Members.

Now, the McGrath committee did not deal with this question of who will be chairing these committees. It is not in the Standing Orders, but to me again this is a fundamental element of reform. I have had casual discussions with the Hon. Member for St. John's East and I think I am not misunderstanding him in saying that he agreed with me that a good number of committees of this House should be chaired by Opposition Members. I think the figure that we talked about at the time was a proportional number of committees based on a proportion of seats that the Opposition has in this House. There are 70 opposition seats out of 282, so it would be normal that 25 per cent of the committees, beyond the traditional committees which are chaired by the Opposition, such as the Committee on Public Accounts, it would be appropriate that 25 per cent of the committees of this House be chaired by opposition Members. This is something again which is not in the rules, but it is something that I believe to be in the true spirit of reform. The committee chairmanships would be accorded to Government and to opposition Members based upon seniority, based upon knowledge of the subject matter, and then I think we can arrive at the kinds of committees that we all would like to have.

I also feel that the chairpersons of these committees should play a role similar to that of the chairpersons of the special committees or task forces that we have known in this House. In other words, the chairperson will not just be a traffic manager, an impartial observer who decides who questions next and who rules on points of order and so forth, but a person who will be taking an active part in questioning and, indeed, hopefully, will be trying to stimulate the kind of consensus and broad over-all approach that we feel should occur in these committees.

That leads me to the question of the problem of the legislative committees, which was previously referred to by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). We all feel that the standing committees should be developing expertise in their subject areas. Well, if this is the case and expertise is developed in the standing committees we may have a great proliferation of legislative committees where, for example, in the area of criminal law you may have three or four Bills. We have had three or four Bills dealing with various aspects of criminal law or justice before this House in the fall. The people on the standing committee cannot possibly man all of the legislative committees. You end up then with people on the legislative committees who have little or no understanding of the subject matter at issue, or certainly have not built up the expertise which the members of the standing committees have developed.

Therefore, it will be necessary to arrive at some kind of system whereby we will limit the number of legislative committees, and there are a number of models which have been referred to. The Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) referred to a traffic control system; so some sort of compromise or solution has to be found.

I would like to deal briefly with the committee on research, science and technology. I am the Liberal Opposition critic for science and technology. All I can say is that it is high time we had a committee of this nature. People in the universities across Canada, people in industry, the science community, for a long time have favoured the establishment of such a committee. I believe that science policies will have a fundamental impact on the future of the country. To my mind, science policies are related to industrial and social policies. They have broad ramifications. Technology is not limited to a small number of high-tech companies. It has applications in all sectors of the economy, including the resource, fishery, forestry, mining and agriculture sectors.

The Government is not organized to focus on technology and how it affects all areas of our economy. Parliament has not been so organized up to now. I feel that one of the most important roles of this science committee will be to address technology with an intersectoral approach. It will be able to take a look at the interconnections between science and technology and the effects they have on many areas of the economy. This can only be done in a committee of this nature. I know that I am not alone in being delighted to see the creation of this committee.

Adequate resources for the committee are required. Again, I have been told that some Members of Parliament have in the past been reluctant to set up a science committee because they felt that they would not necessarily have the knowledge and expertise to deal with such a complex issue. I know there will be a system for establishing budgets. Perhaps I am already putting in first dibs on those budgets. Certainly this is the area in which the most research resources will be required if we are to have an effective committee.

I would also like to deal with the human rights committee. As the Government's motion is presently drafted, the human rights committee seems to be mandated to deal only with the reports of the Canadian Human Rights Commission. There are many Members of Parliament who are concerned with human rights not only at home but abroad. It is my hope that this committee will be able to cover the Canadian participation in international human rights affairs and will be able to deal with questions like the Helsinki Final Accord, the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe. I hope that it will deal with the United Nations and its Commission on Human Rights and that it will be able to interact with various interest groups rights across Canada that are concerned with the question of human rights not only in Canada but on an international level. This would add a great deal to the workings of the House, because in the past several years we have had to set up a number of informal committees and have had to meet with people outside of the committees of the House to discuss matters around luncheon tables. However, there has been no way for the concerns of these people to be registered on the record of the House or its committees. We will be creating such an avenue and I think this will help the House considerably.

I will conclude by stating one more point. The motion as it is presently drafted has not removed some of what I would call the archaic terms which are used when referring to people who will occupy the chairs of various committees of the House. The rules refer to chairmen on all occasions and we will be creating a panel of chairmen. Perhaps a modification is called for here. It would be more appropriate in today's day and age to refer to this panel as a panel of chairs.

[Translation]

The same is true in the French version for the "Comité des présidents". It would seem normal in 1986 to change this to the "Comité des présidents et des présidentes de la Chambre".

[English]

I have also noticed that petitions in English use language which is somewhat archaic. Average Canadian citizens must continue to pray to the House of Commons. In French, much more modern language is used. It would seem to me that if we are talking about bringing this House into the 20th century or perhaps even the 21st century, the language we use in our Standing Orders should reflect the same mentality. However, this change does not have to be made immediately. These are temporary rules and this is something which could be arrived at over the course of the next 10 months while rules are in the experimental stage.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to speak on this very important subject. I look forward to the implementation of these rules and I sincerely hope that the contributions of all Hon. Members of the House will be enhanced in the way we all wish to see them enhanced.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like the Hon. Member to elaborate on the issue he raised regarding the involvement of committees and the new spirit of co-operation in light of the problems surrounding full access to information on the de Havillant question.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I would answer the Hon. Member simply by stating that it is hoped that these committees will be able to determine on their own what matters are appropriate for their consideration and that there will not be a three-line Whip. It is hoped that party Members who serve on these committees will not be taking orders from their respective caucuses. If the practice used by the Regional Development Committee which wanted to study the de Havilland issue continues, I fear that we will not be making much progress.

I think many Hon. Members have recognized that a change in attitude is just as important as a change in the rules. I would hope that in a true spirit of reform, the members of these committees will be working independently and not taking instructions from their caucuses. I do not think that is what is intended by reform. However, only time will tell if this proves to be the case.

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jardine: I know this kind applause is not for this speaker nor is it for the Speaker in the Chair but, rather, for the reform which we are discussing today. The importance of parliamentary reform for the House was indeed underscored by its being the first item mentioned in the Throne Speech of the Government. That point has been made before. It was made yesterday and again a couple of times today. Personally, I do not think that the point can be made enough times.

The importance of reform was further strengthened when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself rose to speak on the issue. Not only did he speak on the issue yesterday but he was present during the presentation made by the Chairman of the committee today and lent his support to it.

• (1700)

There can be no doubt about the resolve of the Government and of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to proceed with reform, thereby enhancing the role of the private Member of Parliament. It is also worth noting the words of the Chairman of the special committee on reform who said, upon being appointed chairman, that he considered it to be the most important undertaking with which he had been associated in his 28 years on the Hill.

I am most pleased to have this opportunity to speak briefly on reform since I had the privilege of attending a number of meetings as an alternate member of the committee. I would like to say—and I do not mean to be repetitive in praise, and I certainly do not mean it as false praise—that I doubt very much that we would be at this point at this time had it not been for the leadership and direction of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) who chaired the committee. It was not by accident that there was a strong bond of collegiality among the members and a great willingness to resolve all points by consensus. In fact, this was really my first exposure to a parliamentary committee at work. In retrospect, not only will I say that I was spoiled but perhaps I was ill-prepared for other committees to which I was later appointed. Unfortunately, I did not always see that same sense of purpose and collegiality at work in those other committees.

While I have had occasion to speak before in the House, I have not taken the opportunity to pay tribute or recognize in the House the good people of my riding of Northumberland-Miramichi through whose valued support I am here today. With the indulgence of Hon. Members I beg leave at this point to describe briefly that beautiful place in the Province of New Brunswick called Miramichi from whence I come. Hon. Members might ask why I would take this opportunity to speak about that subject at this time. Frankly, I cannot think of a better time to speak about my riding and the importance of my being here representing those people as we consider today the reforms which are being discussed in the House, reforms which will make other Members of the House and myself more effective Members.

Miramichi gets its name from the Micmac Indians. It was the name of a river and it is now used to describe the entire valley region. Today, it is the oldest Indian place name still in use in Atlantic Canada. Natural resources form the backbone of the Miramichi economy. The region depends greatly on the forests and wood-related industries for its livelihood. In recognition of this fact the Miramichi was named Canada's forestry capital in 1980.

It is not just forests that comprise the economic fibre of the area. There is agriculture, including vast areas of peat moss bog, commercial and sports fishing, and also a most important defence establishment. The Miramichi region is a gateway to Atlantic Canada, the United States and the rest of the world with its transportation links of rail, air and sea systems. The communities of this beautiful area are peopled with the descendants of English, Acadian, Irish, Scottish and Indian stock who have worked and lived in harmony since the area was first settled. They look forward to making their contribution to the province and to Canada.

I will just mention the names of two well-known people from the area. They are Beaverbrook, who took his name from a small community on the Miramichi, and Cunard. Lord Beaverbrook wanted to be known as Lord Miramichi, but his critics said that too many would make fun of him if he were to take the name. However, now that the Miramichi becomes more prominent and better known, more people will know how to pronounce that Indian word—Miramichi. As well, the Cunard shipping line, the builders of the Queen Elizabeth II and the Queen Mary, got its start on the banks of the mighty Miramichi.

Referring back to the matter at hand, I would again mention the words of the Hon. Member for St. John's East who said that what will come out of the reform process is a Parliament which follows neither the traditional model of Westminster nor the Congressional system but one which will be uniquely Canadian. What encourages me most about that statement is that this reform is not something that is being driven by one side of the House. Earlier, I mentioned consensus. I would like to refer to the contributions made by members of the Opposition and, in particular, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), and the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner). Yesterday, the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior made an eloquent statement in support of reform. He was an alternate member of the committee and was most active even though he was not permanent. This type of support and spirit from these experienced Members of Parliament will give us a Parliament which, indeed, will be uniquely Canadian.

With respect to the report I would like to say a few words on the subject of committees since this is where a private Member should have the opportunity of real input and influence. The adoption of the recommendations of reform of the committee system will surely make the words of Professor Gillies, who appeared before the committee as a witness, ring true. He said that the one place where the problems of Canada can be dealt with is before the committees of Parliament. A reduction in the number of members in most if not all of the standing committees will indeed enhance the work of committees, giving individual members greater input, interest and a sense of participation. It may seem like a small item to mention the meeting times of committees and the changes which will be introduced as well. It is proposed that the standing committees sit at times other than when the House is sitting. Indeed, Members are torn between their responsibilities in the Chamber and in committee. We have all been faced with too many demands and too little time.

With respect to the issue of public recording, this is an area in which I initially had some doubt. I had reservations with respect to putting cameras and audio equipment into committee rooms because we have seen all too often what can happen in the House during Question Period. One sometimes questions the seriousness of Members when they stand up and pose questions to members of the Cabinet. I hope that the introduction of cameras into committee will give Canadians a true appreciation of the work which is done there, the importance which Members place on that work, and not just provide an opportunity for certain Members to grandstand. Having said that, I am confident, as we have heard support from both sides of the House with respect to reform, that people will take it seriously. The use of parliamentary committees to review draft legislation before second reading would indeed make Members more familiar with the contents of a Bill before it receives approval in principle.

I remind Hon. Members of the expression: Many are called but few are chosen. These measures are being brought forward in an effort to make not just Parliament more meaningful and more effective but also the role of the private Member. His goal will be not just to sit one day at the Cabinet table in order to achieve a sense of accomplishment, but rather as a Member who plays a key role on a committee which will satisfy his sense of self-worth. With these measures, which I support whole-heartedly, I look forward to the months and years ahead so that I may sit here in my place as the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1710)

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Jardine) whether he has any comments to make on the decision to allow the Speaker to eject an Hon. Member for up to five days?

Mr. Jardine: Mr. Speaker, I do not mind answering that question put by the Hon. Member because I respect the traditions of the House, little as I know about it, I have to admit, in the few months I have been here. In respecting the traditions, I believe all Hon. Members have a certain responsibility as we sit in the House. If we abdicate that responsibility, we have to understand what we are doing. We have to appreciate the fact that the rest of the House will not accept it. I believe that five days is very conservative. I suggest that five days should be the minimum length of time, certainly for a second offence, if we can call it that, to the rest of the House. So if the question is whether I support the rejection of an Hon. Member for five days, indeed, I do.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member could clarify. I think he is trying to make the point that the House in fact makes a decision with respect to the behaviour of individual Hon. Members. Does he feel the expulsion should be made by the House or by Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Jardine: Mr. Speaker, great trust is put in the wisdom of the Speaker. The Speaker is elected by Hon. Members on all sides of the House. In placing that trust, I believe we have to give the Speaker more responsibility in order to enforce these few rules. They are not at all too restrictive, by any means. Yes, the Speaker should have the authority.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I just have a comment. I appreciate where the Hon. Member is coming from. I share her concern to some extent. I would just like to tell her and the House that up until a few years ago, it was relatively rare for an Hon. Member to be named and ejected from the House. Indeed, I recall that during the nine years of the speakership of Speaker Lamoureux there was not one Hon. Member named. I would like to see the House get back to that system of decorum. If we do, we will have no concern about this new power we give to the Speaker.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member suggested that because we are electing the Speaker, this particular new measure will in fact be workable. I wonder if he would then support the position that the election of the Speaker should be carried out at the same time as the introduction of this particular measure?

Mr. Jardine: Mr. Speaker, all things happen in due course and I do not believe there is any need to push one before the other. I think it is a case of letting us walk before we start running.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I have another question as it relates to the issue of the newly vested powers in committee with respect to reviewing Order in Council appointments. I wonder if the Hon. Member supports the position taken by the McGrath Committee in this regard or whether in fact he supports the position as presented by the Government?

Mr. Jardine: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for all of these good questions because it gives me an opportunity to stand up and be recognized. I have such faith in the Chairman of this reform committee that, indeed, I support all of his recommendations.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member supports the recommendations of the McGrath committee, as I do with respect to this particular measure, I think he should be aware of the fact that the McGrath committee suggested not only that the committee be given the power to review Order in Council appointments but that there be vested in that committee the power of veto. I wonder if he believes in fact that that power should be vested in ordinary Hon. Members? If he does so believe, why then is he supporting the current legislation which does not make a provision for such a veto?

Mr. Jardine: Mr. Speaker, I must say I am not sure I got the gist of the question. I do not know whether the Hon. Member would want to repeat it to me.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, basically, the question is that the McGrath committee made a recommendation that ordinary Hon. Members be given not only the power to review Order in Council appointments but, if they find an appointment that is not a worthy one, they have the power of veto. In the motion before us, the committee is being given the power of review, and it may review all of the appointments in the world but it cannot really do anything about them. So the second aspect of the McGrath Report, which was to give ordinary Hon. Members of Parliament some power, has been nullified because we only have the power of review. It can be the absolutely worst appointment in the world and we can talk about it but we cannot do anything. That is why I would have preferred to see the actual report implemented as suggested by the able Chairman.

Mr. Jardine: Mr. Speaker, your hon. colleague made the comment about a "paper tiger". I do not really think it is a paper tiger. The committee can review all appointments. If there is a particular appointment about which the committee feels very strongly, I believe it would be listened to by the Government.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak in support of this motion. It is the culmination of a very long process. A lot of thought and care has gone into it from Hon. Members on all sides of the House.

Such criticisms as I have are minor. They are with respect to matters which I am sure can be resolved with some work and good faith on the part of everyone. I was here when the talk of reform began. It was at the time when Mr. Baldwin was the House Leader for the Conservatives and Mitchell Sharp was our House Leader. At that time the reform foundered on the rocks of control of supply. The issue then seemed to have collapsed for a while but has now been picked up again and I think the proposals we have before us are really very progressive and should, indeed, enhance the role of the private Member.

The occasions in the House when we think and talk as one Canadian to another on matters which are of importance to all of us are rare, but they are very welcome. We were all elected to work for the public good and all of us do that in so far as we can. The Parties have different policies and viewpoints. In fact, from the argument going on opposite, it would seem that even within that Party there seems to be a rather vigorous expression of opinion going on. But Parties have strong differences of opinion, and vigorous debates will always be part of our life here.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I should wait until the Minister and his colleague have finished their conversation because it is a little hard to proceed with the noise.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) may proceed.

Miss Nicholson: As I was saying, political Parties have different policies and viewpoints and strong differences of opinion, and vigorous debates will always be part of our life here. The Government introduces legislation and programs and in a democracy it is the duty of an Official Opposition to ensure that these are scrutinized, that when debate degenerates into—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Mazankowski: Dissension in the ranks.

Miss Nicholson: I thought that earlier on the Chairman of the committee made a very eloquent appeal for civility in this House. I think there is nothing more important than civility in this House, especially in a debate of this kind. I do not think jeers from Ministers assist that. We have been talking about enhancing the role of the private Member and we have a Minister with nothing better to do than make cheap wisecracks. Nevertheless, I will attempt to continue in the way I started because, in spite of discouraging evidence, I still think most Members in this House are serious about reform. The contemptuous attitude that some individuals show to their colleagues is the exception rather than the rule. Indeed, as the Hon. Member who chaired the committee said, this House will only function well when Members show respect for each other.

● (1720)

When I was first elected in 1974, most matters in this House were agreed on by consensus. We very rarely had the bitter divisions among House Leaders that we have seen since. Again, in spite of what I am seeing opposite me at the moment, in spite of the discourtesy I am seeing across the way at the moment, I still share the hope of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) that we will return to civility and again have a House where, when we have school children in the galleries, we are not ashamed of what they are seeing but we are proud of what they are seeing.

There are a number of examples of situations where Members on all sides of this House work well together. This happens in committees with subject matter references, for one thing. It also happens in the Standing Committee on Public Accounts which traditionally has operated in a very non-partisan fashion. I am pleased to see a former chairman and a former vice-chairman of that committee in the House today. In committees dealing with Estimates and legislation, the attitude has traditionally been confrontational. Some of that is inevitable. However, we can work to reduce unnecessary conflict.

The suggestion put forward that the standing committees hear witnesses and examine the subject matter of a Bill before second reading is an interesting one. If that were implemented I would hope one could get a much more non-partisan understanding of the Bill on second reading, and therefore a better second reading debate. It still might be vigorous debate but at least it will be based on understanding and commitment. At that point, indeed, a legislative committee should be able to do its work very promptly and not need to hear witnesses other than technical witnesses. So the idea of a legislative committee is one which I support, but its implementation needs to be worked out.

Our legislative committees got off to a bad start. There were far too many. For example, before Christmas we had eight sitting at one point. In the British House, where they have 600 Members, I think five is the maximum that can sit at the same time. As well, the legislative committees suddenly came into being but the previous step, where the subject matter of the legislation is examined in the standing committee, had not taken place. Therefore, there were many angry exchanges in legislative committees because we suddenly found that witnesses were being cut off but we had not really had an opportunity to test the pulse of the public. However, those are administrative matters which can be dealt with, given some goodwill and some care.

To turn to some of the other changes in this motion before us, one very positive factor is the review of delegated legislation. There are a lot of good opportunities there for serious Members to do some good work.

The 45-day limit for answers to a certain number of written questions is good. It puts some pressure on the Government to take seriously Members' questions, and in those circumstances setting a limit to the number of questions on the Order Paper from a Member at a given time is also reasonable.

The supply debate I think can be expected to go better based on this motion before us because the fact that the Leader of the Opposition can concentrate on the Estimates of one Department might make for a very much more intensive and careful examination. I think examining expenditures is an extremely important part of the work of this House. It is important for democracy. The more that Parliament really shows that it cares about control of the public purse and that the executive of the day cannot just write blank cheques, the more faith the public will have in our efforts to ensure that their tax moneys are spent wisely. Control by Parliament should be not just words mouthed by politicians, but should be a very real experience if the role of the Member of Parliament is to count and if people are to have confidence in the fact that we take seriously the fact that they work hard for their money and are entitled to know where it goes.

The new rules about Private Members' Bills are interesting. They will also need some working out. We will have to be very clear about how the five-hour debate is managed. Again, that is a relatively small administrative matter which can be dealt with.

The reduction of statements under Standing Order 22 from 90 seconds to 60 seconds is good because it allows more people to participate.

The final matter I would like to comment on is something that is not in the motion before us but was a recommendation of the committee, that is, the proposal that the written questions about the Estimates could be put forward by a standing committee and that answers to the committee would be back before May 1st. The written material could then be used by members in committee. That is a very interesting proposal. It would make for a much more intelligent and informed level of questioning in the Estimates debate. In my view, the more you increase the opportunities for relevant, informed debate, the more you reduce the tendency to make cheap shots and partisan cracks. Although the Government did not put this one in the motion, I hope the issue is not closed and will be looked at again.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions and comments?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member discussed the question of Standing Order 22. I gather her position is that the reduction from 90 seconds to 60 seconds is good because it allows more people to be recognized. On the other hand, does she believe that a shorter period of time—and 60 seconds appears to be fairly short to me—would allow a Member sufficient time to make a point on issues which are sometimes complicated? I would like to hear her comments. I understand that there is a quid pro quo, that more Members will be able to speak, but will there be more people discussing issues with less time to do a proper job?

● (1730)

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I cannot see that the cut from 90 seconds to 60 seconds is that important because Standing Order 22 was designed for very short, crisp statements as opposed to the thoughtful kind of speech that Members can develop on other occasions. I do not share the Hon. Member's concern.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to make some brief comments with respect to this motion to amend the Standing Orders of the House. There are a great number of very significant changes being brought forth and an enormous amount of credit goes directly to the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and his outstanding committee for their hard work and effort in preparing the report on which these amendments are based.

I also want to add my own personal congratulations to the Chairman and the members of the committee for that fine work.

These amendments are particularly significant to Members of Parliament and private Members specifically. Hopefully we will find that they are significant to the general public as well. I suspect that at this stage the significance of these amendments will be lost to the Canadian people generally, but there is one particular aspect of these amendments for which the people of this country have long been looking. Those are the amendments with respect to the review of Order in Council appointments. This review process is long overdue. It was a significant issue in the election campaign of 1984 and is an issue of concern to the general public who believed that there needed to be a significant and substantial change to the process by which Order in Council appointments are made.

I believe it is to the Government's credit and particularly to the credit of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that action was taken virtually immediately upon the calling of the Thirty-third Session of Parliament in November, 1984.

The House will recall that there was reference to setting up a task force on parliamentary reform in the Speech from the Throne and subsequently the task force was put in place. The task force came up with recommendations upon which these amendments are based and the Government responded and substantially adopted the recommendations that were made by that committee.

Today, we are about to implement a review of Order in Council appointments with the exception of judicial appointments.

I suggest most Members have heard complaints from the public since September 4, 1984, about what has happened to the appointment process. The public was anxious to see quick action with new procedures being put into place and could not understand why it was taking so long or that there was any delay at all.

The changes that I trust will be implemented this afternoon are revolutionary to the whole sense of our parliamentary system. The fact is that no change like this has ever taken place in the British parliamentary system and it is the first time that there has been a review process for Order in Council appointments or any federal government appointments.

Of course, the Americans have a type of review process. They review federal judicial appointments through their Senate committee and a requirement under their Constitution for the advice and consent of the Senate when the President makes those appointments. They also have confirmation hearings for members of the federal Cabinet in the United States. However, there is no similar process where all types of appointments made by the American federal Government can be reviewed. Therefore, not only are these changes revolutionary as far as the British parliamentary system is concerned, I believe they are revolutionary as far as democracy is concerned.

These changes will not as yet require a review of all appointments. For instance, judicial appointments do not require this review. The House may recall that last week I introduced in the House a Private Member's Bill calling for a procedure for the review of federal judicial appointments. That Bill was talked out at the time, but I am hopeful that we will see some form of recognition of that process as well.

However, the fact that we are implementing a form of review for the first time is a most significant step. While this form of review and its implementation may not please everyone, I hope that it represents one more step in the process of improving the concept of the review of appointments.

Perhaps we could consider some of the review processes that are used municipally in this country. For example, efforts are made to try to make appointments accessible for everyone in an attempt to ensure that people with the highest qualifications are chosen for those jobs. In some cases, there is a process for advertising openings and vacancies on boards, commissions and committees. There is a process for making written applications where a review panel or board considers those applications and makes a short list. That review panel conducts advance interviews according to that short list and makes recommendations to a municipal council which accepts or rejects that recommendation. I believe that is a good process that could be adopted, at least in part, for our parliamentary system in the future.

I want to emphasize that these changes represent a revolution by evolution. It is a gigantic step forward because it is the first time in British parliamentary history that any sort of review process has been put in place. It is a great tribute to the Hon. Member for St. John's East and his colleagues in the committee. It is a tribute to the Government and particularly to the Prime Minister without whose unfailing support we would not have this process. I suggest that in future, as the public learns to appreciate and understand this process, it will be one of the hallmarks of the present Government's years in office.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, just for the purpose of historical accuracy, I am somewhat surprised that the Hon. Member said that this is the first time in the history of Canada that we have had such a review. Is he familiar with a review chaired by the former Member of Parliament from Pontiac-Gatineau, Tom Lefebvre? This was begun and struck by the Liberal Government in 1982.

• (1740)

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's comments. When I was referring to a parliamentary review process, I was not referring to the committee which looked into the question of reforming the rules or the Standing Orders of the House, but rather to the fact that we are setting in place today, I hope, a process whereby Government appointments to boards and commissions etc. will be reviewed by a parliamentary committee. That has never happened before. It may have been recommended before, but it has never been put in place before.

That is the historic fact we are witnessing here today and one which we should all applaud.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, let me begin my analysis of the situation by saying that I would hate to think I am a little more cynical than some of my senior colleagues, but in looking at the whole process of parliamentary reform it seems there has been an issue not addressed in the debate today, that of the role of the private Member, specifically in a parliamentary democracy.

As long as we have a Cabinet and a Parliament which derives the majority of its responsibility through Cabinet decisions, most of them made by the so-called P and P Committee or the inner Cabinet, any discussion of expanding the private Member's role in committee, expanding funding capabilities for private Members, expanding study possibilities for private Members, while on the surface bears further study and deserves support, lends a false sense of the role of a private Member to the public at large.

I think it is pretty clear that as long as we remain in a parliamentary system where the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Cabinet are the bottom line, no matter how many committees we strike, how much money we give the chairmen, how much we open up the process through TV or through other mechanisms to allow the public to see the workings of the House, until we change the fundamental principle of Cabinet responsibility and ministerial responsibility that has been based on the traditional British system, most of these so-called reforms will merely become a House of cards. I refer specifically to the particular motion the Member just discussed with respect to review of appointments.

The Government, embarrassed as it was, by the profligate numbers of appointments made in its first year of Government, particularly in light of the Prime Minister's own self-confessed virginity on this issue during the political debates, has come forward with a position paper which says that ordinary Members will now have a chance to review every Order in Council appointment.

There are prescriptions however, Mr. Speaker. Members must review appointments within 30 days of their being recorded in Hansard. We know that if the appointments continue at the rate we saw in the fall of 1984 and the spring of 1985, it will be very difficult for Members to review all those appointments within the prescribed 30 days period.

The committee however, is powerless, the committee is neutered when it comes to doing anything about inappropriate appointments. I think this goes beyond the partisan political issue because previous Liberal Cabinets were not prepared and the current Conservative Cabinet is still not prepared to relinquish any of its bottom line authority and power.

What we are talking about is developing a system to permit private Members on all sides of the House not only to put more into the process but to begin to wield more influence in the decision-making of Government.

Particularly in a majority Government system we know that unless we move away from the notion of a Cabinet, unless we move toward a kind of Congressional system as we see in the United States, and if we move away from the notion of caucus solidarity, we will forever be creating committees which may have the power to issue a press release, the power to hire a researcher, but the substantive power of those committees is lost in the Cabinet shuffle.

I think about the committee on day care which was announced with much fanfare by the Government just this last week. We know the Government is spending $1 million to send parliamentarians across the country to look at a very critical issue, the issue of day care. It looks good. The Government says that it is spending $1 million because it is concerned about the issue.

But let us look at the fisheries committee. I gather its budget was in the neighbourhood of half a million dollars. That committee travelled across Canada. It took presentations from fishermen and people in the field. Committee members spent many hours in the community and came back with what is considered to be a reasonably good report. Yet on the most important issue facing the fisheries committee, the issue of factory freezer trawlers, the decision was not made by the committee, the decision was not made by the people who travelled across the country to hear hundreds of presentations, the decision was made by the Cabinet without even waiting to hear the results of the committee's work.

We can, however, diffuse our efforts. We can set up 28 standing committees with a minimum of five and a maximum of 7 or 11 members, but if we remain in the confines of a parliamentary system that sees the Cabinet with its ministerial budget and ministerial power, and as long as we do not have private Member all-Party input into the Priorities and Planning Committee, then any motion of expanding the role of the private Member by mere tinkering with the parliamentary system is illusory.

I have only worked as an Opposition Member both in the Ontario Legislature and in the federal House. I think that Members on all sides of the House who presented this report and who did the work are very sincere. I think they are seeking a chance for the private Member to have a greater involvement in the process. I can appreciate, particularly on the Government side with its very large majority, that many Members are frustrated. They may feel that their work is not recognized and that the hours they spend in committee are often ignored by the public and their peers.

I would suggest that if we are truly concerned about parliamentary reform, we must attack the issue at its heart, namely, on the question of Cabinet responsibility. When we tell a committee that it has the power to review Order in Council appointments, that power must not simply be window dressing with more budgets, more time and more television coverage. That the power must say to the committee: "We, the Parliament of Canada, vest in you the capability to say yea or nay. You are the bottom line. You are the seal of approval". Cabinet and the Prime Minister make the recommendations. They suggest an Order in Council appointment, but it is ultimately the Parliament of Canada, in majority or minority, through committees, that has an opportunity to have the final say.

Without that particular final authority and without the veto power that was suggested by the committee, the Government has effectively neutered what could have been a very useful tool in the process of parliamentary review.

I have a number of other concerns and I believe that these should be shared by all Members. There may be times in the future when Government Members will be sitting in opposition. They may want to look at the issue from an opposition perspective or they may want to look at it from the perspective of the protection of the rights of the individual Member, but I am extremely concerned about two particular motions as they relate to the so-called naming of Members.

We are suggesting that in the next Parliament we will have the election of a Speaker, which is not the case at the moment, although we have a sort of measure by which we can approve the selection made by the Prime Minister. Without a secret ballot selection of a Speaker, what we are saying in this motion is that the Speaker is now invested with the power of being able to name any Member and being able to eject a Member from the House without calling for a motion from the appropriate source. In other words, Mr. Speaker, it is not the Parliament that ultimately becomes the arbiter of what is right and wrong in the House in terms of a vote, it is simply the Speaker, who is an unelected person, who has been appointed by the Prime Minister without the process, as suggested by this committee for an elected secret ballot vote.

I agree that if we had a secret ballot vote there would be some recourse whereby we could say to the Speaker: "You have an opportunity for a naming in an instance", but I would also suggest that not only are we investing in that same Speaker the opportunity to name an individual without a vote in this House, without an opportunity to seek the consent of the Members, whose job it is not only to keep this place orderly but to keep the debate going, but the Speaker has been given the opportunity or the responsibility of naming a Member for up to a week at a time.

It seems that when we are talking about an ejection of five days' duration, and when we are talking about cutting off not only that Member but the constituents of the particular riding, we are denying them an opportunity to have a voice in Parliament for a whole week. It could be the week following the Budget. It could be the most important decision-making week in Canada. It could have been the week of the Constitution. Not only is the Member denied the opportunity to participate, but the constituency and its hundred thousand voters are being told that they cannot have a say for a week, and that decision will be made by a Speaker who at the moment is not elected in a democratic form by the House.

I suggest that the particular measure is punitive. I do not think it is in the best interest of any Member, including Government Members, to vest that in the Speaker alone with no recourse or suggestion that Parliament move a motion. We are small numbers in the Opposition. Chances are that if a motion were moved today by the Government House Leader to have the Hon. Member for Hamilton East ejected, the motion would probably pass. It should not, but I suspect it would probably pass. However, in that case the responsibility for the naming becomes the responsibility of the mover of the motion. It becomes the responsibility of Parliament and the democratic process in which every Member of the House—211 Conservatives, 40 Liberals and 30 New Democrats—can stand up and say: "we choose to keep that Member within our ranks" or "we choose to eject that Member". As a result of this particular motion, not only does the Speaker have the authority to eject once but he has the authority to eject a Member for five days.

I think mention has been made of the translation problems in that the English version of the particular motion suggests a five-day suspension for all subsequent so-called namings, but in the French version there is confusion because it only speaks of a second naming. Something must be done to change the Bill in that particular regard.

We believe in Parliament. Parliament is the seat of democracy. At the bottom line should be the motion being moved either by the Government or by the Opposition in other cases. I have very serious concerns about this measure which was not in the McGrath Report. The five-day naming was not an invention of this all-Party committee. It was added by the Government in this particular motion. I find it excessive, I find it punitive, and I think it is not the kind of responsibility which should be accorded a Speaker, particularly when in this Parliament we still have a Speaker who is not elected by secret ballot.

I have some other concerns about the issue of petitions and Order Paper questions. Each of us is here to represent our ridings. There have been a number of suggestions that the number of petitioners must rest at a minimum of 25 for a petition to be valid in the Parliament of Canada and that anything less than 25 is not acceptable for the purposes of petitions. It has also been suggested that because of the overabundance, I guess, of Order Paper questions—although it seems to me that there are not that many questions in relation to the number of Members in the House—we should somehow be restricted in the number of questions we can ask. I am not sure of the number; I think it is four questions per session which we will be allowed to put on the Order Paper as a result of this particular measure.

Mr. McGrath: At any one time.

Ms. Copps: In any case, it seems that these particular issues—the first being a minimum of 25 voters on the petition and the second being the maximum of Order Paper questions being allowed at any time—are an infringement upon the ability of the ordinary Member to get to the bottom of an issue. It may not be an earth-shattering issue. It may be a local question about the status of the Hamilton Airport. It may in fact be a small petition because there may not have been hundreds of thousands of Canadians rising up on the issue. However, if I receive a petition from 17 members of a senior citizens' club, which has a total membership of 20, those senior citizens have every right to petition Parliament through their Member.

I am not sure whether the committee was confronted with overpowering evidence about excessive petitions or whether the committee was presented with overpowering evidence about excessive Order Paper questions. It seems to me that if we look at the Order Paper, most Members only ask one or two questions at a time. In fact, oftentimes those questions are not answered. I know the committee Chairman will say that as a result of this particular provision we will get answers quicker. Well, I lived in a Parliament which required automatic answers to Order Paper questions. If the House thinks that that will be the panacea for getting information, I can tell it that it is not. Essentially what happens is that if the Minister, the Cabinet, the Government, the seat of responsibility and the seat of power, do not want to answer the question, they bring back an answer within the prescribed two-week period which may just be a regurgitation of the question put another way to satisfy the provisions of the Standing Orders.

I return to the point that if we are truly concerned about parliamentary reform, we have to look for reform, for change and for a new direction in the heart of the organism, which is Cabinet. Far be it from me to belittle the work done by committees.

[Translation]

We are now in a situation where the Liberal Party has only 40 Members. We know that with these new provisions and even those to which our Party agreed to for a temporary period, we find ourselves in an impossible situation. There are 28 committees on which, according to the new provisions, we should have not only one representative but also five substitute Members named by that representative. Given all those committees, if our Member does not name five substitute Members within a certain delay, he or she will no longer be entitled to sit on that committee.

Now let us see how these figures work out in the case of the Liberal Party: we have 40 Members, there are 28 committees, each with one Member and five substitutes, so what is 28 times 6? As you can see we would need at least a hundred-odd Members just to assume our committee responsibilities.

Sure enough, Mr. Speaker, there will be no problem after the next election, but we have to face the reality of 1986!

Mr. Speaker, Government Members might be well advised to consider the situation. They have no worries now with their 211 seats, but they should not forget that after the next election the situation might be reversed.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that my responsibility is to represent my constituents and I think it would be better to have fewer committees whose responsibilities and reports would be accepted by Cabinet. I am not interested . . . Even last week I was on the labour committee which is a sub-committee of a sub-committee. We got together to consider the question of part-time and shared work. One of the Members of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), said—and I shared his views—that he had no intention of sitting and studying the question of shared work if there were only four or five of us on the committee and if we did not have any assurance that our reports would be accepted by the Government. I would have liked to see fewer committees, but at least some kind of Cabinet guarantee that committees will be struck in a non-partisan manner. For instance we might have six or seven committees, six large committees to study six of the major issues in Canada today, be it employment, structural changes to our employment system, environment, whatever, we should select specific and wide-ranging subjects, major issues in this country, and those committees would have a Cabinet guarantee that their recommendations will be accepted and implemented through legislation. But if there is not going to be any change as far as Cabinet is concerned, then all we are doing here is supposedly meant to improve conditions for Hon. Members of the Opposition parties as well as the Government. But all things considered there will be no meaningful changes, we will continue to operate within the parliamentary system. If we are prepared to make changes, is that really what we are doing? Certainly not with the kind of cosmetic changes proposed in the document under consideration.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) whether he could advise the House of the business scheduled for tomorrow? In other words, are we going to continue dealing with this motion, or is there something else on the agenda?

[English]

Mr. McGrath: I would ask the House if it is the disposition of the House to proceed with this motion today, because I am sure if that is the disposition of the House we could refuse to see the clock for a few minutes to allow the Hon. Member to conclude her speech.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I think we have made considerable progress on the debate yesterday and today. It is quite evident that the members of the New Democratic Party are in support of the Government's position and the Standing Orders as brought down. There have been obvious indications from the Liberal Party that they are in support. We will be calling the same matter at eleven o'clock tomorrow for further debate, if, in fact, the members of the Liberal Party feel it is necessary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock p.m. this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

The House adjourned at 6.03 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, February 13, 1986

The House met at 11 a.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STANDING ORDERS—PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

The House resumed from Wednesday, February 12, 1986 consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn:

That the proposed amendments to the Standing Orders, laid upon the Table on Thursday, February 6, 1986 (Sessional Paper No. 331-7/37A) be adopted and made provisional Standing Orders of the House.

Provided that, unless otherwise ordered;

1. the said provisional Standing Orders shall be in force from 11.00 o'clock a.m. Monday, February 24, 1986 until the House adjourns on the last sitting day in December, 1986;

2. and further to the Order made on June 27, 1985, the provisional Standing Orders thereby adopted shall continue in force during the same period; and

3. the Clerk of the House shall be authorized and instructed to print a revised and renumbered edition of the Standing Orders integrating the provisional Standing Orders and making any necessary amendments in consequence thereof, or relating thereto in respect of the Standing Orders concerning Private Bills, and to make such changes on the Order Paper and Notices as may be required.

Mr. Speaker: Given the presence of the last Member who spoke, are there any questions or comments?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I had about three minutes left.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize. My understanding was that the Hon. Member started her speech at 5.40 p.m. and spoke until 6 o'clock. If that is a misunderstanding, I am sure the House is prepared to allow the Member to continue for three or four minutes. I am perfectly happy to find two or three minutes left in the Member's time. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the light of the new spirit of co-operation and civility, in my last couple of minutes I would like to say that I hope that our new committee system and our reform will work as well as the hockey game did last night. Although we may not have enjoyed the outcome, there was a terrific spirit of congeniality and conviviality on all sides.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: I am sorry to say that the New Democratic Party sent only two Members, but that was up 50 per cent from the participation of the New Democratic Party last year. We had a great game. The only problem is that, unfortunately, as is often the case in this Parliament, the Government won.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: I am saying this somewhat in jest, but when Members have a chance to get away from Parliament, out playing hockey and doing other things, it gives us a chance to appreciate the kind of co-operation that it will take to make the new system work, notwithstanding some of my concerns that I outlined in my speech yesterday.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in my hon. colleague's comment with regard to the hockey game last night. Could she explain to me how the New Democratic Party being represented by two Members could be up 50 per cent from last year?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: That obviously would have required us to have sent a partial Member last year. I am not absolutely clear about this. Perhaps it is part of the way the Liberals make their calculations, which may then explain why they are in the difficulty they are in. I am not sure.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, if the Member had played last year or this year, he would have known we had a terrific representation in the person of the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry). Since the Hon. Member had never been on skates before in his life when he was a hockey goalie last year, that was, indeed, only half participation.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. I do not know whether the Member agrees with the registry of Members' external travels. There is no requirement at this time in the proposed modification to the rules to list trips paid by the Government when the Government sends its own Members abroad, either with a Minister or with some other official delegation.

We feel that would put members of the Opposition in a somewhat difficult situation. We would have to declare our external travels and put forth any expenditures that were incurred at that time and the sources. Members on the Government side, however, would be protected in that if they travel with a Minister or with an official delegation of Government they do not have to reveal these trips. What does the Hon. Member feel about this?

Ms. Copps: I think, Mr. Speaker, the Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has pointed out one of the difficulties in this motion. The McGrath Report itself came up with a number of recommendations, many of which are supportable and will be supported. However, in the transition from the McGrath Report to the proposed motion a number of Government changes have been injected, one is the notion of the five day naming. A second one is the notion of the registry.

I personally have no problem with any registry. I think Members of Parliament on all sides of the House should be open and above board at all times. I think it creates a somewhat specious view in the minds of the public if on the one hand you have a registry where Members of Parliament, government Members or opposition Members, can travel to Barbados, to Geneva or to Stockholm at the expense of taxpayers and have no public accountability through the registry, while on the other hand you can have Members on a mission or a fact finding tour sponsored by a group, other than the Government, who are fully accountable. I think the accountability should be across the board. That should include a full docket for Ministers as well as for Members of the Government and Opposition for all trips outside the country. It should not be restricted only to the notion of non-government funded trips.

I know from trying to track down Members from time to time that a number of Members are off on trips all over the world. I am not quite sure of the reason because they are with a Minister, it is not necessarily a subject for public discussion.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I just want to respond to one remark the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) made yesterday in a speech to which I listened with care and interest. She claimed that the proposed system by which Government appointments will be reviewed by the committee would be neutered, that there will be no effective authority on the part of the committee and, therefore, it is not a useful reform.

I say briefly for the record that I do not understand the reform in those terms at all. The real effectiveness of the review will come from publicity. The light of public discussion in meetings and through the media will shine upon the appointment, and I think that will be a safeguard that any Government will keep in mind when the appointments are put forward.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that there is good reason to believe this is the real effectiveness of the system now employed in the United State Senate. While there is a vote required so that the appointment can be confirmed or denied, the real power of the Senate lies in the publicity given to some nominations, the kind of discussion that is stimulated and which, in the past, has caused some nominations to be withdrawn.

I do not accept the claim that the committees and the review process have been neutered. I understand the Hon. Member's points but it seems that she has not given sufficient recognition to the effectiveness of the publicity which will arise from committee hearings.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member hearkens back to the discussion which occurred in the House yesterday, one of the difficulties I pointed out was that there would be no veto power for the committee. The second difficulty I pointed out was that in the proposed motion the Government has a certain prescribed period—I believe it is five days—in which to depose the Order in Council appointments, presumably after Cabinet has made its decision. Subsequent to that there is a maximum 30-day period for examination.

If we look at a period wherein there might be hundreds of appointments, for example, a summer period of two months where we might see 2,000 or at least hundreds of appointments—

Mr. Boudria: Try the day before Christmas.

Ms. Copps: Or the day before Christmas. The way the current motion is established, we would be allowed to review all those appointments, and the review must be complete within the 30 days following the five days of the deposition. It seems that if we want to do a real thorough analyis and have the kind of public exposure about which the Hon. Member spoke, at the very least there should be no time limit on the period of review. The 30-day period actually hamstrings or handcuffs Members who may in fact want a very throrough review of several hundreds of appointments. In that regard I agree with the Member that some kind of public exposure is in and of itself a good thing.

We see that at the moment there is some public exposure when appointments are made, if they are not made the day before Christmas. However, on balance, if we introduce two elements which include the possibility for a veto of the committee and no time limit for review, we would have a better motion. It would speak to the issue of diffusing power from the Cabinet. Essentially at the moment we are reinforcing the notion that the Cabinet ultimately makes a decision for every Government action. If we are moving toward a reform system, some of that reform will have to entail taking away specific powers which rest now in Cabinet. This is why I think the veto power would be an indication that the Government was prepared to go in that direction.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to make a modest contribution to this important debate on the proposed amendments to the Standing Orders that govern the proceedings in the House of Commons. First of all, I want to say that on this side of the House, at least as far as the Liberal Party of Canada is concerned, we welcome these reforms of the Standing Orders of the House. I believe that the proposals before the House today are part of a number of changes that have been proposed from time to time in the House of Commons, also by the previous Government. In fact, Members who have been sitting in the House as long as I have will recall a major reform that was introduced in 1969.

Today, I think we should give credit to all Members on the Special Committee on Parliamentary Reform, chaired by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). Actually, I think the recommendations of the Hon. Member for St. John's East and his Committee would probably have been adopted faster than the Government's proposal, and I will get back to this point later on and explain my reason for mentioning it.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, on the subject of parliamentary reform, I would like to say a few words about the context in which I feel such reform should take place. The most visible part of that context is the parliamentary system in this country which is based on political parties. In Canada, our political parties represent certain tendencies, certain parts of the political spectrum, which may vary from left to right with all the variations in between. Traditionally, political parties in Canada have over the years represented certain specific political positions with which voters identify. In fact the Canadian electorate fully expects political parties in the House of Commons to live up to their election promises. In other words, let them follow up on their election platform. So people expect the Government to try to implement measures advocated on the hustings. Opposition Members are also expected to scrutinize every Government move and stick to the views they publicly defended, just so they will be true to themselves.

That is why I say that private Members should play a significant role but, as I see it, it is given short shrift because I maintain that political parties have primacy in our parliamentary system. The logical conclusion therefore is that the private Member's role does not weigh much in the balance. Well, not quite! Private Members do play an important role in our system because within their own caucus they help hammer out the policies of their Party and, through their contributions both in the House and in committees, they also do their share to draft and finalize legislation. Still, evidence about the way Canadians choose their Governments—particularly since the early 60s and given the ever growing presence of the electronic media—makes it clear that they cast their votes for political parties rather than for candidates. In my judgment, this factor cannot be ignored in any Parliament reform.

So what are the objectives of the reform? I would simply refer to a very straightforward statement made by the House Leader of my Party, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), who said: Our object must be to make Parliament do better that which it is intended to do. In my opinion, however, this does not mean that by improving Parliament, we want to make it a machine designed to adopt bills non-stop and full steam ahead. I feel that this would be a mistake. While a number of bills can go through all stages very quickly because they are straightforward or because they are fully supported by all parties in the House, or because their contents are generally felt by the public to be fair, equitable and reasonable, others must be fully and thoroughly considered during a debate which may last quite some time, if necessary.

This reform of the House should not either make it possible for a limited number of opposition members or even for an opposition party to frustrate the will of the majority. I want to make it perfectly clear, therefore, that I fully support the Government's right to introduce its program as it sees fit, because a majority Government has received a mandate from the people.

What should we aim at? What is needed, in my view, is a balance between the right of the Government to carry out its program and the right of the opposition to bring to the people's attention the fundamental issues and to initiate a meaningful debate on matters and policies that are likely to result in major direction changes. I suggest that this reform should also aim at improving the public's awareness of the House's proceedings, because in a democratic system, the public's input is essential. And since the people are not themselves present inside the House, but are present through their elected representatives, they should be able to see what is going on here. I wish television and other media had access to the committees of the House to allow the public to see and editorialize on its own what is going on and not have to rely solely on members of the press gallery who, even though we must admit they do a very good job, act as intermediaries between the public and us, in the House of Commons.

That being said, I would like to state once again that generally speaking we support the Government proposals.

• (1120)

[English]

On this side of the House we agree generally with the reform as introduced by the House of Commons. When I say "generally", it means, of course, there is a caveat. There are a number of items that we would like to see modified.

The first thing I would like to say from a philosophical point of view is that if this report was a straight translation of the report of the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons, chaired by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), it would be easier to pass it through this House because all Members would feel that we were adopting a unanimous report of a committee on which all Parties were sitting. We cannot say that these proposals originate from the committee as they have been modified. The Government has to realize that these are Government proposals.

We do want changes but how are we going to accomplish this? We look at the motion before us and we realize that this motion does not allow amending several of the proposals. How do we go about it? I am happy to see the Government House Leader in the House together with his deputy, and I would like to explore with them how we can achieve that. What my Party would like to see is a change in our rules passing through the House of Commons rather swiftly. Personally I would be happy to go home to my riding for the recess with the pleasure of knowing that we have adopted new rules. If we are to achieve that how do we do it?

I suggest the easiest way would be for discussions to take place between the House Leaders of our three Parties. I gather that discussions are likely to take place soon, and that is probably the best route. Otherwise there is a more cumbersome way that might have to be used, and that is to amend the motion that is before us and refer the proposals back to a committee where obviously specific amendments to some of these specific proposals could be introduced. I say this is too long a process. It would border on the adversarial, and I do not like it. Therefore, I suggest very strongly that discussions take place today while this debate is going on. We should come to some agreement to iron out some of the difficulties—and there are not too many of them, some are menial—so that we may conclude these discussions between Parties with a proposal which would reflect the desire of all Parties. In this way we would follow the tradition over the years of having the rules of the House adopted in a rather unanimous fashion, with few exceptions. We should strive to establish a set of rules with which everyone would agree. It would certainly improve the climate in the House of Commons. This is a goal worthwhile pursuing.

[Translation]

Therefore, in my opinion, it would be quite worthwhile if the Government met today with the opposition parties and tried to bring in the few changes they are seeking so that we end up with a product that will be acceptable to all. Because it must be recognized that to this day, there have not been any agreement, secret or public, to adopt these changes to the rules without ample debate, which, in my opinion, should result in some adjustments. If we can come to an agreement, I am sure that when we leave at the end of the day, on Friday, we will have new rules, which is what I wish personnally.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to be more specific, I would like to mention some of the changes that have been suggested by some of my colleagues. First of all it becomes clear after listening to those who spoke in the House that many members referred to the problem we are facing regarding the proliferation of legislative committees.

This proliferation is causing tremendous difficulty, especially to opposition parties in view of the unbalance existing in this Parliament between the number of Opposition Members and Government Members. Indeed, by reducing the room to manoeuvre of opposition parties, the proliferation of legislative committees is affecting the quality of legislation, and in the end the public is the loser. In my opinion this is also affecting the climate in the House of Commons whereas the opposition parties with a small number of Members are hardput to believe that they have an important role to play in the development of legislation.

As we have followed the model of British legislative committees, I would suggest that we go a bit further and follow even more closely the British system, under which there are only eight legislative committees and bills must queue up before going before one of these committees. I believe that we should limit the number of legislative committees, which would certainly allow the opposition parties to do a better job and also stop Government backbenchers from feeling pressured by the great number of bills being referred to committees as no member of this House, whatever his party, can give the required attention to some of the proposals before those committees. This is one thing which should be improved in my opinion and I hope that it will be discussed among the parties.

There is also the registration of trips abroad by Members of Parliament. I think that this is an excellent principle and a very good proposal. However, I am surprised that the proposal involves registration only for the exceptions, that is trips paid by individuals, foreign countries or companies. The major weakness of this proposal is that the most frequent type of trips would not be registered. Trips by Parliamentary delegations would not be registered, whether they are organized by the Secretary for Parliamentary Relations Secretariat or by various organizations, and this even applies, Mr. Speaker, to the delegations that you yourself are sometimes called to lead in other countries, to trips by Ministers or Government representatives, and I am of course speaking about the trips made with the taxpayers' money on official business. These would not be registered either. However, it would be very useful, as we have seen. During the present session, Ministers were already questioned by some members who were not convinced that public money had been spent sparingly enough. Consequently, I suggest that all trips—except the private trips abroad taken by a vacationing Member, which are is private business—relating to the duties of a Member or a Minister be registered. In my opinion, the Registry should be easily accessible. The data should be computerized to allow a quick check by anyone interested as, I believe, foreign travel undertaken by a Member of Parliament in that capacity is a public matter about which any Member of the House, or member of the public or the press should be able to obtain information. Each Member is responsible to his or her voters.

I would also like to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, on one of the proposed Standing Orders which would give the Chair important powers to maintain order in the House. Some of my colleagues have already pointed out that giving the Chair the authority to exclude a Member for five days, as proposed under the new rules, was excessive. It seems to me that expulsion of a Member by the Chair, for one day, is quite sufficient. First of all, it prevents the Member from pursuing the objective he or she had in mind when he or she created the disorder. We all know that the following day the argument will have lost much of its impact, especially in these days of electronic medias, and consequently this is enough of a sanction.

Moreover, the publicity surrounding a suspension is bad generally for a Members's image. Indeed, one has to recognize the important principle that there must be some sort of order in the House of Commons, and that the Chair must have the means to enforce it. However, it seems to me that the power to suspend a Member for one day is enough. Going any further would be depriving the Member and his constituents of the basic right to be represented in Parliament.

If I may, Sir, as one who has been a Member for 17 years, I can state that past experience has shown there is no need to give the Chair the authority to suspend a Member for a period of five days. Under the present system, when the Speaker names a Member, it rests with Government to introduce a motion to suspend that Member from the service of the House. But I do not recall any instance during the 17 years I have been here, of the Government introducing a motion to suspend a Member for more than one day. Recently, for instance, the Government could have suspended a Member for three, four, five days, or the whole session, but it never did so. All this is to say that I do not see the need for that, and I would be surprised if you yourself, Sir, without putting words in your mouth, would support such a measure.

I would also like to deal briefly with private Members business or bills. In my view, there must be a guarantee that the new system will be tighter than the one that is proposed—that it will not give the Government an opportunity to have important measures accepted as items of private Members' business, because it is a basic principle that the Government must be accountable to the people at all times. It has already been suggested as an example that amendments or a return to the death penality could pass in this House under the guise of a private Member's bill.

This then is all I will say about other changes that seem important to us in those proposals. Besides, other colleagues of mine have already referred to them. I will rather repeat before concluding, Mr. Speaker, that it seems essential to me that this package get the unanimous support of the House so that everyone will be happy, will comply with our Standing Orders and will also respect the Chair who has to enforce them. And it will be easier, Mr. Speaker, to enforce the Standing Orders if the political parties are in agreement when they are passed. As I said, I ask the Government to meet with the Opposition parties or in short to call a meeting of House leaders to discuss some of our problems. I am sure, and I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that if the parties seriously tackle the issue, we will come to an understanding and we could have before tomorrow afternoon a fine set of new Standing Orders acceptable to all and I hope for you, Mr. Speaker, that they will be scrupulously complied with by everyone.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, with his experience, I should like to ask the Hon. Member whether he could enlighten us on the problems which have arisen in the committees and how they could be solved or aggravated as a result of the proposed changes.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): There are surely several problems dealing with the operation of committees I do not want to be more specific. But surely the major problem resulting from some of the proposed changes and as experienced during the past few months, is the proliferation of legislative committees which I would say is excessive. As a consequence, a standing committee and a legislative committee may be sitting simultaneously to deal with the same matter. Therefore, a Member who is sitting on both committees has to choose between attending a legislative committee to deal with a bill or attending the standing committee to discuss other matters or some orders of reference received from the House. That is only part of the problem. The other part is the fact that from time to time, and this has actually happened, several legislative committees are sitting simultaneously.

Now this will never be an ideal situation, even when we have a better balance of representation in the House than we have today. But in times when the Opposition is not as well represented as it usually is in the House of Commons, this can be a major problem. Once again, if the Opposition is to make a constructive contribution towards improving the legislation referred to a legislative committee, we cannot let several committees sit simultaneously, and we will have to prevent the proliferation of such committees. I may recall my earlier suggestion, which is that if we want to adopt a model, which happens to be the British model in Westminster, we should adopt it in its entirety, and not just take this concept of a legislative committee and apply it in a way that does not work satisfactorily.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make the following comment and ask my hon. friend, the Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) what he thinks about it.

We know that in the report prepared by the parliamentary committee chaired by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), the recommendation regarding order-in-council appointments suggested that in addition to having a procedure for review of appointments by a parliamentary committee, the committee would also have the right to veto appointments to certain positions.

Mr. Speaker, I think Hon. Members would prefer to have this veto right applied to all positions.

I also think the Hon. Member for St. John's East wanted to strike some kind of balance, and in his report he and his colleagues elected to set up a system by which certain positions would not only be scrutinized but would also be subject to veto, including positions that are connected directly with the House of Commons: the Clerk, for instance, the Commissioner of Official Languages, and so forth. I think there were about 40 positions that would not only be subject to scrutiny but also to veto.

I would therefore ask the Hon. Member whether he would care to comment on whether we should have this veto right for all order-in-council appointments, or just for certain positions, as recommended in the report by the Hon. Member for St. John's East, or not at all, as the Government has proposed in the amendments before the House.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, that is one of the shortcomings of the project under consideration. Had the Government chosen to present the special committee report as it was, Opposition Parties would have adopted it without a fuss because we did attend those meetings and agree to the contents of the report.

Unfortunately, I repeat that the Government picked out the provisions it could live with and rejected others it did not like. So we ended up with lopsided proposals, whereas the report presented by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) did strike a fair balance.

With respect to appointments, Hon. Members will not have much more to say under these new provisions. In fact, we do not gain anything. Members will be allowed to call appointees to appear, but in many instances we can do that as it is.

Let us say we want to look into the appointment of a major Crown corporation president. We ask the president to appear before the committee. We can do that now and ask him questions. Under the new provisions, we would do the same thing, but in a different way.

If in some cases the committee had a veto or suspensive power concerning an appointment, as advocated by the Special Committee on Reform of Parliament, then the Government would show it is aware of the fact that it has given or transferred some of its powers to the House, to private Members. But it has not done that.

As it is, it is nothing more than window dressing, a sham, because we already have the power to call as witnesses before the committees the presidents and senior officials of most Crown corporations. This, therefore, does not add much.

What was needed was a legislation with sharper teeth, but the Government dared not, or did not find desirable to act in this direction.

Mr. Speaker: Debate. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) has the floor.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal also with this motion, the purpose of which is to adopt provisional Standing Orders of the House for a trial period of about one year.

Some may wonder why members of the Official Opposition rise in the House one after the other to deal with this motion concerning changes to the House's procedures, when these changes are usually adopted very quickly because of a consensus arrived at between the various parties' House Leaders.

• (1140)

We are rising one after the other to put forward very often the same type of arguments, so that people watching us on TV or Government Members could easily conclude that it is repetitive and that the debate is being extended needlessly. But, Mr. Speaker, is that not the very essence of Parliamentary debate? What role could a member or a party play in the House if, whenever there is a difference of opinions, he or she is not allowed to repeat his or her points to the limit and thereby bring about some changes? Indeed, these changes to our procedural rules, even though they are to be provisional, could easily become permanent if the Government chose to proceed, as it is doing now, by using the weight of its majority.

Mr. Speaker, I have not been here that long, but I have had the honour to sit in another Parliament which undertook a complete reform of its parliamentary procedure following what was then called the Lavoie Report, after the representative of Laval who was also Speaker at the Quebec National Assembly. As is the case here with the McGrath Report, we then had the Lavoie Report, which was studied by Members of all the parties and which, in my opinion, had to a great extent met its objective of developing a consensus among the parties on a new parliamentary procedure. To my knowledge, various Parliaments have examined not only the changes that were made, but also the effects that this has had on parliamentary debate.

We are often tempted to compare parliamentary procedure in the House of Commons or in provincial legislatures with the procedures in the American Congress, and to compare the role of a Member of the Canadian House of Commons, the Quebec National Assembly or the Ontario Legislative Assembly to that of a representative in the American Congress. I believe that it is a serious mistake to try to make such a comparison because our Parliamentary systems are completely different and our rules must reflect this difference. It could be said that the major role of Parliament would probably be to debate general policy for public administration.

It could be said that second role of Parliament is certainly to legislate and that its third role is to vote supply and control expenditures.

It could certainly be said that through our debates and parliamentary committees, we try and reach a national consensus on various subjects. I would also say that most of the arguments and much of the disorder take place when Members try to fulfill their role, under our adversarial system which is to make the Government act openly, that is to say to force Ministers to answer for their Department, make them acknowledge in this House and in front of the public the actions they took and explain the reason why they have taken them. Very often, that is were the problems arise, as the Government tries to use its majority to avoid this type of questioning from the Opposition. Under our system, we have opposing teams facing each other. Even the physical set up of this Chamber, Mr. Speaker, is designed that way. It is not quite like that at the present time, because of the results of the September 4th election, but normally you have the Government on your right and the Opposition on your left. The rules and the parliamentary tradition require that the Opposition House Leader, the Government House Leader, the Government Party Leader and the Opposition Party Leader reflect the ideas of their respective caucuses. Consequently, whether we want it or not, we have two machines facing each other. Our whole system revolves around that notion. It is fine to talk about the role of the private Member, but we have to put it in that perspective. That is why it is not possible, in my opinion, to give a Canadian Member of Parliament the same role and responsabilities given to a representative in the American Congress, because our systems are entirely different. There, Members can propose bills, through their committees, even if they involve expense of public funds. There are all kinds of differences.

Therefore, the rights of the Government and those of the Opposition are set out in parliamentary rules, and in order that each group may adequately fulfil its mandate, we must have fundamental guarantees, and not only for the benefit of today's Opposition. The Conservatives sat on this side for a number of years, and no doubt will come back to it shortly. It is my view that our parliamentary system must protect the fundamental rights not only of individual Members but of the groups within which such Members are working. I have served long enough in political parties to the right of the Chair to know that the Government Member's fundamental role is often played within the caucus. It is so true that it is an important feature of our rules and of our parliamentary system that here, in Ottawa, as in the Legislative Assemblies, contradictions that are publicly aired between Ministers or Government Members or between Opposition Members make the headlines.

I have spent a few days with a delegation of Government Members, Members of all sides of the House who went to Washington to study tax reform. We were privileged to be hosted by the Special Committee which deals with all tax legislation, and so forth. Mr. Speaker, we saw things that do not happen very often in our committees—Democrats and Republicans fighting together against other Democrats and Republicans, who happened to be the Opposition within the committee. Here, the rules are so different that a Government Member who would go to a parliamentary committee and launch an open attack against his or her Minister would no doubt experience the treatment that some Members apparently got recently. He or she would be gagged. And this is normal, because we are teams fighting each other—a Government made up of a majority of Members and dependent on that majority to maintain its position, and an Opposition.

• (1150)

Now parliamentary rules must reflect that. This is the reason why I submit that in my concept of the British parliamentary system, if we want to change it, I would be ready to discuss it. I do not underestimate the advantages of certain procedures in existence in the United States or in other parliamentary systems. However, as we live under a British parliamentary system, we should be very careful to safeguard the fundamental rights of the Government.

The Government has the right to legislate. The Government has a fundamental right, it has received the support from a majority of voters and thus has a majority of Members. It is entitled to govern.

However the right to govern does not mean that it can stop the Opposition from preventing the passage of some bills. As we see it now. It can be tiresome for a backbencher who would like everybody to be kind and helpful and to ease up the passage of those rules. However, I do not suggest that there are bad things in them, there are many good ones. However, the only tool the Opposition has is this Parliament where the proceedings are held. It would not even be necessary to have so many Members here if the Government made a decision which would have to be approved within half an hour. Surely our Parliament is here for having discussions and as under our parlamentary system some Members are for and some are against, such discussions can only be spirited.

We do not agree on fundamental issues. And the problem is that when we do agree, things go down easily and no one notices. But what catches the eye of the public opinion? Only those issues on which we disagree. That is why people often say to us: The Opposition is wasting the time of the House. But I think it is important to see things in a global perspective.

Consider for instance the matter of old age security pensions which was debated for so long in this place. Can you think for one second, Mr. Speaker, that if we in the Official Opposition had just been content with two or three questions and, seeing that the Government was not amenable to our point of view, and we had said: Well, there is nothing else we can do, we have no right to come back for three or four days in a row on the same question and to annoy all Government backbenchers, can you think for one second that the elderly people in Canada would now have fully indexed old age security pension? Do you think that in the case of family allowance, for instance, even if we did not succeed eventually, in spite of a previous commitment by the Government, do you think that we in the Opposition had no right to belabor that matter regularly?

I could mention a number of other instances, and I will therefore, before I conclude, mention also some of the suggestions that were put forward. And there again, Mr. Speaker, I will not mention those issues on which we have agreed, but rather those which warrant a careful approach.

This happened with the legislative committees and that experience was referred to by my colleagues. Especially when the Opposition, as is now the case, is made up of only 40 Honourable Members; however it does not mean that the institutional role of the Opposition should not be fulfilled. As a matter of fact, when we had so many legislative committees, my colleague of Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) literally had to run from one committee sitting to another, sharing has time between the Standing Committee studying matters related to immigration and two other legislative committees which were considering bills dealing with issues coming under her scope of activity. Finally, one has only 24 hours in a day to eat, rest a little and mostly, as a member, do research work. After a week of that strenuous regime, a Member is faced with the problem of finding time to read and do research in order to properly discharge his on her duty.

That is why we believe that this proliferation of legislative committees is not in the Parliament best interests and that their number should be limited or at least, that a more restrictive use should be made of them.

I am also concerned with the matter of maitaining a registry of trips taken by Members of Parliament. I agree that there should be a registry and I think it is a very good idea; I would even say that it is essential, and I know that my colleague from Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) has often raised this question with me, even before I came here as it was one of his pet projects. So, maintaining a registry is certainly a good idea.

But why maintain a registry of a very restricted number of trips by Members? If I am a member of a delegation of the Association internationale des parlementaires de langue française, to which I belong, and leave with the delegation for a francophone country of Africa, say, I do not see why my name should not appear on the registry for anyone to see, including the media. The same thing could be said about a Government Member who would accompany a Minister travelling to the Francophone Summit, why should that not be recorded in the registry? I think the only exception would be trips made by a Member at his own expenses, whether he is on holidays or decides to travel to study something at his own expenses. That would be the only exception, everything else should appear on the registry.

Another matter which I find rather intriguing and which should be of some concern to you, Mr. Speaker, is the authority which the Chair would have to suspend a Member for five sitting days, without any kind of motion. This brings me back to what I said a moment ago: there is a reason why this institution is called the House of Commons. You know, that name just did not happen to drop from the sky, it could have been called the House of Lords, the House of Academics, or even the House of Canadian VIPs. No, Sir, it is known as the House of Commons because we represent the people and all classes in our society, and debates can be nothing but lively. I often come across some of my friends who have nothing to do with politics, they watch television and say: My God, what a lively place, you cannot even agree with one another! Well, if we all agreed, we would not need Parliament. Just look at municipal councils with five, six or ten aldermen. Their meetings can go on until midnight or one o'clock in the morning. Obviously, as soon as a bunch of people meet in the same room to discuss a matter, they may or may not agree, and if they do not, they will have to argue their points according to certain rules of parliamentary procedure, and that is why we need those rules to protect the rights of Members.

In the course of parliamentary debate, in which there may be considerable animosity . . . For instance yesterday, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) did not, we felt, give a clear answer to a question he was asked about unemployment insurance. He gave the impression that the rules had not been changed and that the matter had been referred to the Forget Commission, while letters had been received, and of course all members received the same representations, complaining that people were not receiving unemployment insurance benefits if they were drawing a pension. In a case like that, the debate tends to get heated. We cannot just go along with the fact that the Minister rises in the House and knowingly or unknowingly fails to reflect a situation that was quite obvious. Mr. Speaker, it is quite understandable that in a case like that, Opposition Members are furious, and that is what we are here for. Our role is to act agressively enough to make the Minister reconsider and give us the information, and also to make sure the general public is informed.

If in the course of debate, Members happen to raise their voices or if on the spur of the moment, because a Member is absolutely convinced that he is right, he uses words that are unparliamentary, Mr. Speaker, you will call him to order, and you may do so once or twice, but to give the Chair the authority to expel a Member from the House for five days . . . If I were in the Chair, that is one prerogative I would not want to have, because it is a dangerous one, and I am thinking of what might happen in a major debate. When Maurice Richard was benched for five consecutive games before the Stanley Cup play-offs, it caused a riot at the Montreal Forum. Imagine, in a crucial debate, imagine the pipeline debate, if the Leader of the Opposition, John Diefenbaker, had been expelled for five days, imagine what the reaction would have been in the House!

So this is one prerogative which I consider excessive, and I feel we ought to find a way to changing this particular Standing Order, and if we could do this outside the House, in Caucus, and with representatives of the various parties, I think it would be in the best interests of all concerned.

• (1200)

Ms. Copps: Given the good knowledge that the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) has not only of the federal but also the provincial political scene, I would like to ask him to clarify his views on the matter of the five-day suspension. I think that other Hon. Members might want to speak about it. When he mentioned that the Opposition Leader was really involved in the pipeline debate, will the revised Standing Orders, the proposals that are now before us, in effect cut off debate or not?

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, the incumbents change but the office remains. What I wanted to emphasize when I made a comparison with the pipeline debate ... In fact, to everyone who followed politics in the late 50's—my colleague from Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is too young to have been around when this debate took place, but it was towards the end of my academic studies—that debate was a turning point in Canadian politics and even probably brought about the change in Government in 1957 and 1958. That debate was really lively and hot and I wanted to underline that the new Standing Orders would give the Chair such huge powers that I cannot see how a Speaker could apply them while maintaining order and decorum in the House. That would undermine the non-partisan role of the Chair because it could easily be argued that the Speaker suspended a Member of Parliament for five days under the pressure of the parliamentary majority which is in power. Even today, under normal circumstances, a Member is expelled for one day on the House's initiative and not the Speaker's. I think it is very significant that in our parliamentary system, the Speaker or the person who is in the chair in the House of Commons or any other Legislature at the provincial level, is the humble servant of all Members of Parliament. He does not act as a judge who gives rulings but he is the servant of all Hon. Members. This has been reflected traditionally in all kinds of rules and interpretations. Therefore, when a Member is suspended, it is by the House itself by means of a vote.

I know that the procedure has been made easier in other jurisdictions. However, this custom results from the fact that since the Speaker is the servant of all Hon. Members, he cannot both take action persona proprio motu, as both judge and jury. He may designate a member by his name and it is the House itself that will expel him for a day by upholding his decision. I find it excessive to give the Speaker such a power ... If the objective is to save time, we might replace this by a vote to be taken immediately, within ten minutes. At the present time, the vote must be taken within the next thirty minutes, which I find excessive as I said. However, as concerns the question you raised, I think that the principle that must prevail in our rules is that the Chair is not a judge but the servant of all Hon. Members and that it should not be put in such a situation that it could be easily accused of bias.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I want to go back to the other question raised by my hon. colleague for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) and the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). It concerns the committees in which all members are involved. The Hon. Member might share his experience with us as I think he is a member of several financial committees which seem to be non-partisan and one of which is chaired by an Opposition member.

Could he tell us if the multiplication of committees will be a good thing or if it will be too difficult to find a sufficient number of members within the Opposition's ranks.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I find the question asked by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) quite interesting. First, why did we appoint Standing Committees, and not only here but in other legislatures? Because we wanted some questions to be examined in depth by groups of Hon. Members; after a while they become in a way experts in agricultural matters or in international affairs. If you have been for a long time a member of the Committee on Agriculture, even if you are not familiar with the farm community and agricultural problems at the beginning, after two or three years, you become fairly well briefed on the subject. Standing Committees are composed of Hon. Members who chose in the first place to become members and who said so to their House Leader, who agreed. Secondly, they have not only an interest in the subject because they chose that committee, but they develop expertise.

If we appoint more and more legislative committees, it means that at a certain time—it was the case with the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs—it becomes impossible for three or four persons to cover the whole area. The Hon. Members who become experts in Standing Committees become useless when Bills dealing with a particular subject must be examined because it becomes impossible to cover the whole area, in particular in a situation like this one, where every Hon. Member, in particular Opposition Members, both on the Liberal and on the NDP sides, must be a member of two or three committees.

If this is a means this majority Government is using in order to have its bills adopted quickly, it should come right out and say so. But if such is not the case, and if it is sincerely seeking new mechanisms for individual members to get more directly involved in the consideration of the many bills, there should be a procedure, as suggested earlier by my hon. friend from Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), to determine which legislative committee will sit, where and at what time, and set up a work schedule which will make it possible for these people to carry out their duties both as members of the House and members of the committees.

Ms. Copps: I should like to ask him next—about the committee issue. On the basis of his experience sitting on the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, does he feel that committee members are more efficient when they address a general problem with a great many ramifications, or when they concentrate on only one or two subjects? For instance, when it dealt with the failure of the Commercial Bank of Canada, the committee spent a lot of time studying the problem thoroughly. On the other hand, other committees are exposed to such dissipation that members who are supposed to attend do not because nothing concrete ever comes out of their proceedings. That is why there were problems during the trial period.

Would the Hon. Member agree that if we were to accept the proposal as it has been implemented during the trial period this year with the new committee system, it would be a good idea to be able to review the whole process before the end of the 10-month period, as suggested in the motion?

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, if we take for example the committee which considered the failure of the Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank, this Committee had to examine those issues just about at the same time as it was considering the Green Paper on the Reform of Financial Institutions.

Only to give an example, while the date when this committee would meet had not been chosen at the time, if the Committee had also had to examine Bill C-84 and C-80, which dealt with financial matters, it would have been complete chaos. It would have been completely impossible, not only to make an in-depth study to see where the Government had made mistakes in the bank failures, since the Government had to bear its share of responsibility in this affair and it was our duty to say so to the Canadian people, but we would also have been unable to make an in-depth study of the amending legislation, for instance to deindex personal income tax tables and provide for substantial tax increases. The committee could not have reviewed such legislation at the same time.

I am not saying that this is the intention of the Government at this time, but it would certainly become extremely tempting for a parliamentary majority to use this mechanism to prevent the Opposition from doing its job. This could provoke a strange backlash if the majority were to impose by force these new rules instead of doing so by consensus. It could come back to haunt them and they might be the first to critize the rules when they change sides three years from now.

• (1210)

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask another question on another matter, namely petitions and Order Paper questions. Certain changes have been proposed of which the effect would be to cut off a Member asking his fourth question or presenting a petition with only 22 or 23 signatures. I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) whether he agrees with me that, if a few people in his constituency want to present a petition about a problem which exists either in their riding or in Canada as a whole, they should be entitled to do so in the House of Commons without any restrictions being imposed because there are not as many of them as big companies, for instance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) has the floor, but unfortunately for us, he has only a few seconds left.

Mr. Garneau: I shall only say in reply to the Hon. Member that the formula for presenting petitions uses the proper language with respect to an ancient and basic right and so on. I think that the fact that for years we have been required as Hon. Members to use such a formula precisely reflects the reason why the right to fill in and table petitions in the House should be upheld.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Debate. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to speak briefly on the reform of the House and I do so in all humility being a new Member who was elected at the last election. I cannot pride myself on having the expertise gained with years of experience by some of my colleagues on both sides of the House. However, I had the opportunity in the past to sit in another legislature, namely the Ontario Legislature, where for a few years I had the privilege of representing my constituents in that House so that I can compare at least two different forums and try, if you would allow me, to tell you about the good points which relate to both Houses and indicate where the present system needs to be improved.

[English]

The first thing I want to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, is the structure of legislative committees as we now know them. Under the last reform of the House of Commons, the House adopted a system which provided for new committees. This looked extremely good on paper, of course, because we could then strike a committee of people who had a particular interest in the topic or in the piece of legislation. That committee, with its expertise and knowledge, could deal with a Bill about which it knew something.

One would ask what could be wrong with that. Well, nothing is wrong with the structure. However, unfortunately, whether or not it was inadvertent, the system was abused. At this time some Members of the House are members of so many committees that it would be physically impossible to attend all of their meetings even if they were awake 24 hours a day and never left the Parliament Buildings.

[Translation]

I will give you an example, Mr. Speaker.

I for one am a member of the Standing Committee on Agriculture. This Committee does plenty of work for people in my constituency and a great many other areas in Canada—that work is very important as we know. I also sit on the Committee on Public Accounts, which reviews Government expenditures. I also have been appointed to many other committees, and I will tell you about some of them. I sit on the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, which has a very important role as you would say. I sit also on the Committee on Procedure and Organization, the Legislative Committee on Bill C-45, the Committee on Bill C-87, the Committee on Bill C-256, the Committee on National Resources and Public Works. Thus, as you may see, Mr. Speaker, I sit on seven or eight different committees of this House.

Besides, as every other Member does, I have constituents—there are 100,000 of them in my constituency—with all the problems faced by constituents everywhere. Since I represent a rural constituency, we all know this entails a lot of travelling around, and I see some Members opposite agree to that, because they are in the same situation. We must also sit in this House to represent our constituents in this, the highest court in the land. Also as Members of Parliament, we have to meet in caucus with members of our own political parties. In that respect, I chair the Ontario Liberal Caucus. So this entails rather frequent meetings.

I also sit on this party's caucus' executive, which meets twice daily to plan questions or issues which must be raised in this House, and so forth.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think you realize that something that was well intended has in fact become a parliamentary monster, and it is absolutely impossible for a Member to do his work under the circumstances. The number of those committees must therefore be reduced at all costs, and it must be ensured that those who have been elected, even in a minority party in this House, can go on performing their duties not withstanding.

[English]

I want to raise with you the issue of Order in Council appointments. The committee chaired by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) published a report of the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons. I believe that by and large that was an extremely good report. I want to congratulate the Member for St. John's East and the other members of the committee who worked so diligently to prepare that reform package. However, I resent the fact that the Government chose to adopt only those portions of it which it saw as advantageous to it and neglected to adopt those portions which were perhaps less favourable to the Government of the day.

The governing Party should remember that, although it is presently sitting on the Government benches, that situation is not permanent. On occasion Parties change positions in the House, as they did in the last election, and as they will again. If I may be partisan, I hope that will happen sooner than later. While trying to keep my tone rather non partisan, I do say that the governing Party should remember that these rules are made for the House as a whole rather than for the Government. The rules should be designed to enhance the role of Members regardless of which side they sit on.

The Government adopted only certain portions of the report, and one of the portions it omitted has to do with Order in Council appointments. Under the provisions of the report of the Member for St. John's East, nominations by Order in Council would be reviewed by a parliamentary committee. That is what the Government wants to do at the moment. However, the committee recommended that there be a right of veto over certain political nominations, certain nominations by Order in Council. An example of this would be the officers of this House; the Clerk of the House, the Auditor General, the Commissioner of Official Languages and a certain number of others.

I think it is important to note that in order for those people who are charged with the functions I have just described to function properly, they and many others should have the support of all political Parties and, really, all Members of this House. What better way is there to ensure that those appointees enjoy that confidence than by giving a committee of Members of this House a right of veto over those appointments. Unfortunately, the Government did not see it that way. It chose to give a right of examination, which is good, but certainly not as effective as giving a right of veto.

I would like to speak briefly on the travel registry, Mr. Speaker. I am sure all Members would probably wonder why, if I do not, having been the personal subject of a minor amount of controversy on the topic.

Last fall, Members will recall, I had the opportunity, having been asked by a fellow Member of the House of Commons from another political Party, to join a parliamentary delegation visiting Taiwan. The delegation was composed of Members on both sides of the House; seven Conservatives, two Liberals and one with no political affiliation.

I did some research, asking whether the trip was precedent setting. In other words, was it the kind of trip that usually happened. I learned that Members of Parliament had been to Taiwan on six or seven different earlier occasions. I inquired whether the trip was partisan or non partisan.

There were people from both sides of the House involved, and that sounded all right. I wanted to know whether the trip was to be paid by another country, non-profit group or the Government of Canada. I learned that the trip was to be paid by a non-profit organization in the host country. That sounded all right as well. Finally, I asked who had gone on previous trips, only to discover that approximately a dozen present Members of Cabinet had been on the same type of trip to Taiwan.

Along with the other Members, I went. It was a very interesting trip. I informed my electors of the trip before I left through a press release. Some would say that was probably the mistake I made, but I had nothing to hide.

As things turned out, Mr. Speaker, some controversy arose over the trip; not in my view because I had gone, but perhaps because I had criticized others in the past who had partaken in certain ventures that caused large expenses to the Government of Canada with little or no benefit.

Pursuant to that particular episode, the Government decided to study the possibility of having a travel registry. The purpose of this registry was to ensure that everyone knew where Members were going and who paid for the trips.

I draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that a Cabinet Minister could, right now, fly to Europe every third or fourth day all year round on an Armed Forces plane and never register that fact under this proposed registry. In other words, a Member of Parliament or a Cabinet Minister could take 75 trips a year to Europe and not have to register them. On the other hand, a Member who takes a trip, such as the one I took last year, would.

There is nothing wrong with any Member having to register the trips they take. Why is it that a Cabinet Minister or a government member or others can travel with a member of Cabinet on a government jet or on an Armed Forces plane outside the country and not have to account for it to anyone, while an opposition backbencher has to account for every move he or she makes?

I will not be so cynical as to claim this whole process is an attempt by the Government to stop members of the Opposition from doing anything so that they can themselves partake in those activities to a greater extent because they, being on the government side, have very little if any accounting to do for that kind of activity.

If the Government wants to have any kind of fairness at all, it is very important, and I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you will recognize this, that all trips taken for all reasons outside Canada by any elected person in this House be accounted for.

As I indicated in the past, I have nothing to hide. I never attempted to do so. That is the way it should be for every Member of the House of Commons. Let us register where we are going every time we leave the country and who is paying—if it is not ourselves on a personal holiday—whether the Government of Canada, a Government of another country or a group. Everyone should be able to view the document and to question whether a Member of Parliament has been to Europe nine times in 13 months, or if a Member has not gone any place in the last four years. There may be very worthwhile reasons that a Member had to go to Europe that frequently, but he or she should be able to account for it. Some correction is needed in this regard.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the new Standing Orders regarding the suspension of a Member from the service of the House. I am speaking as a Member who may on occasion have come close to being asked to withdraw from the House, although this has never happened yet in the course of my political career, neither at the provincial level nor here in the House, and I hope it never will. And I say this with my usual sincerity, the same sincerity I apply to getting my views across in the House and making the Government account for its actions, but I certainly hope I will never see the day that I am suspended from the House by order of the Speaker.

And I can understand, let us say I could tolerate a situation where the Speaker could have a Member removed from the House or suspended from the House for one day. In fact, that is what happens in the Ontario Legislative Assembly.

However, I prefer our system where the Members themselves decide whether a Member should leave the House. I think this enhances the role of the Speaker, reminding us that he is the servant of the House, not its master. I am sure that you, Mr. Speaker, will agree.

But to recommend that the Speaker have the authority to suspend a Member for five days . . . I am sure that you, Mr. Speaker, being the reasonable person you are, would not want such authority. To have such power is a dangerous thing! It is dangerous because, I believe this would mean the Speaker would no longer be the servant of the House, as I said before, but its master. I am sure that is a role that neither you, sir, nor your successors in the Chair would wish to have. I just wanted to raise this point, Mr. Speaker, which is in fact the most contentious aspect of the amendments before the House today. I would urge the House leaders of all three parties to meet before the end of this debate and withdraw this particular section from the proposed amendments. I feel it is totally inadmissible, being the most contentious of all the recommendations made for parliamentary reform. It is a symbolic gesture, Mr. Speaker, but it is important to each and everyone of us.

The constituents in Glengarry-Prescott-Russell elected me to represent them in the House and not outside the House for five days, and especially not by order of another Member, even if that Member happens to be the Speaker. Should the electors of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell ever decide they want a Member thrown out of the House they can always resort to the electoral process, as can others in all constituencies in Canada, and they have been known to do just that.

I insist on this point, Mr. Speaker, because it is very important, and I would urge Government Members to express their views about this since it is a non-partisan aspect of the proposed changes to the Standing Orders. I think we are now dealing with the most significant proposal and, with all the conviction I can muster, Mr. Speaker, I must say I do not agree that anyone—except our electors—should enjoy the privilege of throwing a Member out of the House, especially not for five sitting days.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) about the point he has just raised at the end of his remarks, namely that under the new Standing Orders the Speaker would be allowed to name a Member and suspend him from the proceedings of the House, first for one day and then, as a result of successive incidents which would prompt the Chair to name him a second time, for five sitting days.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member and the House know very well that the suspension of a Member is the object of a procedure whereby the Speaker names the Members. Second, normally in support of the Speaker, the Government must move a motion. The motion calls for a division and it is only after the vote that the Member involved is suspended and must leave the House. As far as I know there is nothing in our present Standing Orders which would prevent the Government from introducing a motion pursuant to which any Member might be expelled or suspended from the House for one, two, three, five days, a week or more. Nothing in the Standing Orders provides that the Member must be suspended for the rest of the sitting day. I stand to be corrected, but in my brief experience here in the House I have never heard anything about a Government moving a motion to suspend a Member for more than the rest of the sitting day. Nowhere in my research did I find one instance where a motion was introduced to suspend a Member for more than one day.

That is why I would suggest the Hon. Member is quite right to say that it would be giving a lot of authority to the Speaker, the kind of authority which perhaps the Chair itself would not want to have. I would like to support him and I will have the opportunity to deal with this issue in a speech this afternoon. I agree with the statement he has made to the effect that the Government could try at least to reduce this power which I feel is excessive and give the House the authority to ask an Hon. Member to withdraw from the House.

I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, if I may. He said that his constituents were the only ones who could deprive him of his right to speak out in the House, and I agree with him that he could be deprived of this right following an election, but I am sure—and I would like him to confirm this—that he has enough democratic sense to realize that if he has caused a disturbance which his peers feel is serious enough to warrant a warning or an exclusion, his peers in the House, his own colleagues, could move a motion to express their condemnation of his behaviour or conduct in the House, or could they not?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is quite right in that obviously a member who creates a disturbance makes it impossible for the House to operate, and in so doing, is abusing the privileges of all the other members of the House. A member who behaves like this prevents the constituents of all the other Members from being represented. Which means that all other Members together have the power, the privilege and indeed the duty to expel this member in order for their constituents to be represented in the House. I will even go as far as to say that it is not only the privilege of other members to propose such a motion, but also that it is their duty to suspend an unruly member. However, as was mentioned by the Member of Ottawa-Vanier, as far the government has never suspended a member for more than a day, namely the day of his misconduct. Why then does the Government want to give this privilege to the Speaker when we know that it would never use it itself? Would the Government like to give the Speaker a responsibility which it would not assume when it could have done so? That, Mr. Speaker, is the crux of the matter. The Government, even with its current majority, or any previous Government with a different majority, has always been reluctant to use this power and throw out a Member for more than a day, the day in fact when his conduct in the House was unruly. Why is that so? There are several reasons for it. First of all, Government Members themselves recognize that the suspended member's constituents have the right to be represented in this House. Therefore his suspension should only last until order is restored, after which the debate should resume, Mr. Speaker.

As you can see Mr. Speaker, even a Government with a very large majority is reluctant to use a power it wants to give to someone else. Does it mean that they are trying to force the Speaker to do something that they did not have not the courage, or did not deem necessary to do? I ask this question in all sincerity. The answer is probably no; it is probably not what the Government wishes to do. I will even give it credit by saying that it is not the case.

If it is not the case, Mr. Speaker, why do not they take this opportunity to withdraw this part immediately, because obviously this is a mistake which the Government House Leader has made. These things happen Mr. Speaker, when only half of the recommendations of a Parliamentary Committee report are accepted with subsequent deletions and additions. Had the Government decided to introduce the McGrath Report in its entirety, all this controversy would not have taken place today. When additions are made at the last minute, a problem such as the one the Government must now face with regard to that portion of the project, can arise.

Mr. Gauthier: Exactly!

Mr. Boudria: Naturally, it is because these additions have been made at the last minute without prior consideration in Committee. So it is a mistake, and I am even willing to admit that it is a mistake on the part of the Government. I think that part of the proposal should be withdrawn.

• (1240)

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Hon. Member of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). One is related to the Order Paper Questions. Would he know if as a result of these changes, fewer than four questions can be addressed to the Government at the same time? I would like to ask him whether he agrees with this initiative. If not, why?

If you allow me, Mr. Speaker, I will now ask my second question. It relates to the registry, a recommendation which has been added to those of the McGrath Committee report, according to which any member travelling abroad will have to make public all the details concerning their trip, namely where they went, and so on. I resent the fact that the Government—it might have been done on purpose—has decided not to include on the list members accompanying Ministers or even Ministers who travel abroad. Why should all the members of all parties abide by that rule with the exception of Ministers and those accompanying them?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I should like to provide the Hon. Member with a short answer with respect to written questions appearing on the order paper.

It says a Member may only ask four questions at the same time in the House, and I am afraid it is not quite clear what exactly is a question. For example, I have questions on the order paper which are two or three pages long. Will this be considered as 25,4 or one question? It is not all that clear.

However, assuming that a question in several parts could be considered as a question under that new procedure, it would be satisfactory as long as the Government provides answers. Because there is a problem, Mr. Speaker . . . I have now about 25 questions on the order paper, but the problem is of course that the Government does not answer them. Very briefly, I will tell you that I have this question on the order paper since February 28, 1985: What are the salaries of the Prime Minister's staff? I have a question about the Quebec Summit last year which I put on the order paper on April 1 and it has not yet been answered.

If the Government answered the questions more expeditiously it would probably be more satisfactory, subject to the interpretation, as I indicated a few minutes ago.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order! The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I wish simply to rectify a comment I made earlier when I said that inasmuch as I knew, the House had never suspended a Member for more than a day. Somebody immediately called me to say that I was wrong. That is why I want to quote citation 25, in Beauchesne's Fifth edition of Parliamentary Rules and Forms, about calling a Member by name. It says:

(5) The penalty common in Canada is suspension for the remainder of the sitting day. On one occasion the House decided upon a seven day suspension—

Mr. Speaker, I think that that was in 1944. It happened only once in our history, but I wanted to tell the House so that Members would not be misled by my earlier statement.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes to clarify what I said yesterday in commenting the speech of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) from Newfoundland, who is also chairman of the committee.

First, I would like to congratulate the members of this committee, especially its chairman, the Hon. Member for St. John's East, as well as the co-chairmen, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), and the other members, they presented to the House of Commons a report in both official languages entitled: "Report of the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons". They worked with patience and integrity and they did a great job.

I must say that the recommendations made to the House were of course not all implemented or endrosed by the Government, which then presented, as it was entitled to do, not only the comments on the report which are now required by the Standing Orders, but also this proposal which we have been asked to approve.

Many things strike me, Mr. Speaker, and as I said yesterday, there are some points which should be clarified in the French and English versions as concerns the first point on which I would like to say a few words, namely the expulsion of Members from the House by the Speaker.

First, I must say that for a Member to be expelled is the ultimate punishment. I have always said and continue to believe that the Speaker of the House and his representatives, such as yourself, have an ultimate power against Members of Parliament in case of total disorder. However, since this is an ultimate weapon, they must show a lot of discretion in using this power and do so only after showing a maximum of patience, after reminding a Member on whatever side of the House of his duties as a parliamentarian, and after having appealed to him because, in fact, the Speaker is not the master of the House of Commons, but its humble servant whom we have chosen and whom we shall soon elect ourselves to lead the debates. He is therefore not the master of this House, but he is the one who, humbly, after being chosen by his peers, has to maintain order in the House. However, he does so at the request of the Members. One of us is asked to become Speaker and to ensure that there is order in the House. And if this indeed becomes impossible, he will be given the ultimate weapon of asking that a Member be expelled. Until now, this ultimate weapon of the Speaker is subject to a motion introduced by the Government and calling for a vote because it is so radical a punishment that the Member in question has to be judged by his peers following a ruling by the Speaker, who must, with patience, and even with paternalism or maternalism as the case may be, appeal one, two or three times to the Member in question. He must even if possible humiliate him before his peers and say: I know that the Hon. Member is an intelligent man or women, and I know that the Hon. member would want me to do my duty, which is to maintain decorum in the House. I know that the Hon. Member will understand the difficult situation in which I find myself, but I have to name him a first time. If the Member insists, the Chair, which always has the supreme stick of suspension must have the patience to dialogue with the Member, to calm him down, to ease the atmosphere of the House rather than inflame it. But if the Member will not hear reason, the Speaker then says. "I name you for a second time". And the third time, it is the supreme stick falls down, suspension from the service of the House.

Therefore, it is so final that personally I believe that such a punishment must remain within the hands of Members. The Government has deemed fit to ask us to transfer to the Chair the use of that ultimate punishment, to give it authority to name a Member for a first time, to exclude him for one day.

And where, in the English version, a Member would relaxes, well it is provided that—

● (1250)

[English]

The Standing Orders indicate that on a subsequent occasion in the same session the Member shall be suspended from the service of the House for a period of not more than five sitting days.

[Translation]

Well, I think this is clear in English.

[English]

In English it is very clear. However, the first part refers to the Member being once named. What does the word "once" mean? Does it mean the first time, the second time, the third time? My interpretation of the word "once" could mean all of that. It should be made clear that this applies to a specific Member once named for the first time, etc., etc.

As far as I am concerned, there can be a few misinterpretations in the English text. It is not as clear as I would like it to be. I believe English is a precise language, but in French the rule is very clear. Why do we not use the French translation of the English text and put it back into English? If we do, it will not read the same as it does now because the first part of the French text says "Pour la première fois"—for the first time. In English the text should read "for the first time".

[Translation]

It is so elementary—

[English]

It is clear to me.

Where the rule is not clear in the French version is in the second part of it. In English, the second part of the rule refers to a subsequent occasion, and I would imagine that that is clear unless I am corrected by some of the scholars who are here. There are a great many here who are proficient in the other official language, the one I am speaking. If I am wrong, it is because that is the way I learned English.

By the way, I learned to speak English in the House of Commons. It did not cost Canada a penny. When I arrived here, I did not understand a word of English; I speak English. I learned it here without any schooling. It did not cost the taxpayers a penny.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Prud'homme: I do not say that for the applause. For some Hon. Members, I have to agonize as the Chairman of the Members' Services Committee for the language training school.

If I may say so, one of the best ways to learn the other language is by listening to it in the House. Now I am speaking English. If Hon. Members would like to practise, they could listen in French and It would almost be like an immersion course. Gradually they will be able to catch some of the language. As well, when speeches are boring—and I hope that mine is not—Hon. Members could follow English text line by line with French text. The same thing could be done while attending legislative committee meetings. Hon. Members would learn new phrases and new terminologies that way. In any event, I am not here as a teacher but I do mean to do a little humble duty.

Before this is disposed of, I would like the language of the Orders to be clearly understood. I would like to give a chance to those Members who would like to switch channels now—

[Translation]

In French . . . in French—

The French version says: "le député qui est désigné par son nom une deuxième fois". And what does happen, Mr. Speaker, the third time? We have on idea, because that is not clear. It is so clear in French "pour la première fois", it is not clear if we want to suspend him several times. And one of the risks, Mr. Speaker, after having pondered over that last night, because I was asked to speak on that, but this afternoon rather than this morning, when it is said:

[English]

—during the course of a session—

[Translation]

"During the course of a session." There should be a definition of what a session is. You know very well—

[English]

I am certainly not going to preach and say that the Liberal Government was better. A session has never been defined. In the past, sessions could last two and a half years, three years or three and a half years, if my memory serves me well, and my Whip will correct me if I am wrong.

For many years, I felt as I am sure most new Members do that a session was to last a year and that there would be four sessions per Parliament. However, bad practices were introduced by past Governments, and I imagine even by some of my own Liberal Governments. In the past, sessions lasted far too long. That now means that there is a danger for an Hon. Member who is more fiery than I may be and less ready to listen to all calls to be reasonable. Such a Member might be frightened to participate in debate in the House of Commons because if he is suspended a first time, how vigorous may he be later on in a very difficult debate?

I may remind my esteemed new colleagues of an unbelievable event that took place here one night during the constitutional debate. Many Members who were then on this side of the House went up to the Chair and, while the Chair was reading the motion, shook their fists at the Chair. As well, during the pipeline debate the mace that is a symbol of authority was almost broken. Those Members were not named by the Chair and the ones who stormed the Chair were right where the pages are, or even closer, with their hands up against the then Speaker, our now happy Ambassador to Portugal, not the proposed Ambassador to Portugal.

We have to be very careful with two things. First, we have to be careful with what we mean in both French and English because the translations are not the same. Second, we have to define what is meant by a session. We have to be precise about that, otherwise there might ultimately be a dangerous tool in the hands of the Speaker. We want the Speaker to have that tool so that he is able to deal with an unruly House and expel a Member once for a day and another time for five days. I am not clear about the language there and I would like it to be made much clearer.

I turn now to the days we sit. As of last Monday, I have been in the House for 22 years. I have an old pet project. I believe that the time has come for us not to be frightened, as some Members are, of public opinion. We should explain to the public what it means to be a Member of Parliament in Ottawa. Later on, I will deal with the question of explanations of trips abroad, but right now I will concentrate on what a Member of Parliament is.

A Member of Parliament is someone who works in a Parliament which sits 10 months a year, more or less, for five days a week. In Quebec, for instance, and I am not blaming our provincial counterparts, the Legislature sits for three days a week and perhaps three or four months a year. The same is true of other legislatures. However, we sit five days per week. But, if we are to be good Members of Parliament, we must look after our ridings. I can tell new Hon. Members that if they look after their ridings they will have a hell of a good chance to come back here, but if they neglect their ridings and be too attentive to Ottawa, they will have less of a chance to return.

A good Member of Parliament who is attentive to his duties has to go to his riding on the weekend. Because of this, I have always thought that the House should not sit on Friday afternoons. I lost again because that has not been proposed here. I am not in favour of cutting off debate and providing less time for Government business. I can remember being here every Friday afternoon for 22 years, because I enjoy what I call the Friday-afternoon club. There are very few of us who are here. We get to know each other better. In fact, Mr. Stanley Knowles was always here to represent his Party but he was always alone. He gave a holiday to everyone else and told them that he would hold down the fort on Friday afternoons.

We know that duty calls in Ottawa, but at the same time we would like to be in our ridings. I believe it is nonsense to have the House sit until five o'clock on Friday afternoons. We should adjourn much earlier. The hours that we may lose could be picked up on Friday morning by sitting from 10 o'clock until two o'clock with no lunch hour and the one hour of Private Members' Business we lose could be picked up on Tuesday evening by providing two Private Members's Hours rather than one on that day.

I think the time has come for Hon. Members to start a petition asking that the House adjourn early on Fridays. I am ready to start up a petition along with all of my colleagues from the Government side and the NDP who believe that this proposal makes sense. After all, if we cannot keep our own house orderly, we do not deserve—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. Speaking of closing, it is now one o'clock. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) will have three minutes left in his speech when we resume.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROSTITUTION—IMPACT OF BILL C-49

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-49, the Conservative Government's Bill on street soliciting passed in this House has merely evaded the actual problem of prostitution. If the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) had listened to a radio program by CJRC journalists sometime ago, he would have realized the extent to which the new legislation benefits organized crime and encourages soliciting in bars and public places.

Mr. Speaker, thanks to Bill C-49, the owners of establishments where prostitution takes place, escort agencies and pimps and procurers are getting rich.

An article in yesterday's Le Droit mentioned that escort agencies cover 17 pages in the regional 1986 telephone directory compared with six in 1985 and three in 1984. Mr. Speaker, this means that all these go-betweens are exploiting young persons who are rejected by their families at an early age and find themselves on the street. They are getting rich at the expense of individuals who are either lured by the promise of easy money or have to finance a drug habit or just support their families and have chosen prostitution as a way out of their problems.

Prostitutes have as many reasons for what they do as the customers, but encouraging organized crime is no way to deal with the problem.

The Minister of Justice promised that this spring, at the end of March, he would table a comprehensive paper dealing with adult and child prostitution. We are of course anxiously awaiting this paper, and we hope that unlike Bill C-49, it will—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

THE PHILIPPINES—REPORTS OF FRAUD DURING ELECTIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to voice growing Canadian concern about the outcome of the Philippines elections.

Reports from four independent sources continue to state that massive vote fraud is favouring one side over another. Since Canada had an observer present who has prepared a report, I would like to urge the Government to forward this report to the Government of the United States as a reflection of our concern that democratic processes be scrupulously followed.

The Philippines are a significant trading partner of Canada. They are an emerging nation on the Pacific Rim which will have important relations with Canada in the years ahead. A substantial number of people who have come from the Philippines are now living in Canada.

We wish to see the Philippines taking their place as a political democracy with the institutions and democratic processes which mark democratic nations. The Philippines cannot attain this status while staging show elections and remaining a client state of the United States. Canada, as a former colony, knows what is needed. We should take an abiding interest in assisting other nations to shed their colonial status and emerge as fully-fledged democratic nations.

I trust the Government of Canada will effectively transmit this message to Manila and to Washington.

AERONAUTICS

NECESSITY OF MAINTAINING FULL ACTIVITY AT DORVAL AIRPORT

Mr. Gilbert Chartrand (Verdun-Saint-Paul): Mr. Speaker, in recent weeks, the press has been referring to a report that is to be submitted this March to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski). The report is said to recommend a reduction in activity at Dorval Airport, short of closing the airport altogether.

If this recommendation is correct, it defies all logic and would certainly be disastrous for the entire Montreal area. The airport provides direct services to a population of four million and work for 14,000 employees. It is a focal point for the economy of Montreal and of Quebec as a whole. It is estimated that over 100,000 jobs are dependent on the airport, either directly or indirectly.

Transferring domestic flights to Mirabel is not a solution, Mr. Speaker. Not only would services deteriorate because of the greater distance from downtown, but Montreal might well lose its leading position in the aeronautics industry. Furthermore, some carriers might take advantage of this opportunity to concentrate their operations in Toronto instead of moving to Mirabel.

If all flights with connecting flights departing from Mirabel were routed to Mirabel in the first place, under-utilization of Mirabel would be less acute and people would stop talking about taking away from Dorval the air traffic for which it was created in the first place.

Mr. Speaker, I am speaking on behalf of the mayors of Montreal's West Island who are demanding that operations at Dorval International Airport be fully maintained.

PORNOGRAPHY

SUPPORT FOR STRENGHTENING LAW AGAINST DEPICTION OF PORNOGRAPHIC VIOLENCE

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend my colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), as well as the members of the Fraser Committee, on their proposal to amend those Sections of the Criminal Code that deal with pornography. Most Canadians agree that pornography is dehumanizing. It degrades both the men and women that it depicts. Of particular concern, however, is the brutally violent pornography which is becoming increasingly prevalent in our society. I refer particularly to that material which depicts the sexual abuse of women, and even more despicably, of children.

The present laws dealing with this type of material are subjective and ambiguous, making their enforcement very arbitrary and ineffective. The proposal of a three-tier system, while it may not be fully satisfactory to everyone, is certainly a step in the right direction.

Although many people are still disappointed that any pornography would continue to be available even to adults, the majority of concerned Canadians are relieved that the production or possession of pornography involving children or depicting violence against women will soon be punishable by up to 10 years in prison.

Pornography serves to perpetuate unacceptable myths about women, and if Canadian women are to attain the equality which they deserve, these sterotypes must be destroyed. This proposal is a good start toward that goal.

MINES

NECESSITY OF GOVERNMENT STUDY OF ASBESTOS

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, again asbestos is on trial as a result of the United States Environment Protection Agency's latest recommendations that asbestos be totally banned from that country within the next ten years.

It seems to me that such a decision is grossly exaggerated because it has been clearly and scientifically established that asbestos can be used in total security.

I come from one of the major asbestos-producing region and I can formally certify that the people who work in asbestos mines and depend on them for their livelihood are just as physically and mentally fit as the residents of any other Canadian community.

Asbestos substitutes are not the solution because the potential impact of their components is unknown.

On the plus side, asbestos has been analyzed, tested and tried in every imaginable way over the past decades. It has been acknowledged throughout the world that most often its properties are irreplaceable and a boon to the security of users in various sectors.

The logic of the opponents of asbestos is quite questionable and very discriminatory indeed, for the unavoidable conclusion would be that the ban be extended to cover a number of products which are just as hazardous and even more dangerous and harmful than asbestos when they are improperly used.

There are many such examples, but I will mention just a few: dynamite, nitro, radioactive materials, and a host of other products.

Mr. Speaker, it is imperative that the Government vigorously intervene in—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

STANDING ORDERS

CHANGES PARLIAMENTARY REFORM WILL BRING TO HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Today, Mr. Speaker, I should like to help Canadians realize how different Parliamentary life will be following the implementation of the provisional Standing Orders of the House.

Mr. Speaker, we have just set in motion the Parliamentary reform process, and gradually over the next few days, there will be a change of attitude and a greater involvement on the part of Canadian men and women in future legislation.

Part of this change will result form the fact that individual members will no longer be compelled to vote along party lines, except in the case of non-confidence motions.

This will translate into an enhanced participation and an increased responsibility for individual members of the House. There will be also a change of attitude among Canadians. They will get involved more, they will express their opinions on the various bills, and try to influence us one way or the other.

Such will be the change of attitude.

Our contribution will be enhanced and our responsibilities increased.

Mr. Speaker, I believe elected members will be more representative of their communities. They will better express the views of their constituents and vote according to their conscience.

RAILWAYS

CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO STATE OF RAIL TRANSPORTATION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, again the papers are carrying pictures of yet another train wreck. Thankfully, this time no life was lost, but a major pollution hazard exists.

I rise again to call upon the Government to begin immediately an inquiry into the state of rail transportation in Canada as part of a comprehensive independent study into transportation safety, security, maintenance, inspection, and enforcement.

• (1410)

The Minister knows all about the massive lay-offs of rail car inspectors, shop maintenance workers, and maintenance of railway employees, by both national railways. He also knows that trains are traveling on split rails every day and that line maintenance is inadequate. Denial of a problem cannot solve it. The Minister knows a public inquiry, which could be held now, would uncover and display to the Canadian people serious deficiencies in safety standards which the public would then demand be corrected. He is worried that such repair may be expensive.

While the Minister brags about the safety record of Canadian transportation companies each time we have a disaster, safety continues to be sacrificed to save money. If the Minister is satisfied with the present safety performance in all modes, we are not. We know we can do better. We call upon the Government to have a complete independent inquiry into the state of transportation and security in Canada. We also call upon the Government to create a multi-modal safety board to monitor safety and investigate accidents independently.

PRICE OF GASOLINE—POLITICAL POSTURING CRITICIZED

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, the political posturing over consumer prices for gasoline and fuel oil is accomplishing nothing. It is destroying public faith in the system. What Canadians need are facts, not political rhetoric from elected representatives. What are the facts? Refiners in Atlantic Canada use foreign crude oil. The price of foreign crude is falling. When these refiners receive the benefit of lower crude prices they should, indeed must, pass these benefits on to consumers.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has made the Government's position clear. When lower-priced oil supplies are utilized, then consumer prices must reflect the lower cost. This should happen before the end of March. How can anyone challenge the common sense of that policy? It is easy for politicians to play on public perceptions of profiteering, but honesty in oil pricing and everything else is still the best policy.

EMPLOYMENT

SITUATION IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, recently the Prime Minister has been bragging about an increased number of jobs in Canada. New Brunswick has no reason to applaud the Government for its so-called achievements. People have nothing to applaud, because if jobs were created they were surely not in New Brunswick. The rate of unemployment in the province has risen from 15 to 15.3 per cent, that is the second highest rate in Canada after Newfoundland.

Therefore I cannot understand that with such a high rate of unemployment, the Government does not make further attempts to create jobs or to at least guarantee the jobs of those who are in danger of losing them, such as the hundred employees at the CN shops in Moncton.

For the people of New Brunswick, the Prime Minister's election promise to create "jobs, jobs, jobs" has not been kept. If the Government is unable to create jobs, it should at least stop threatening the ones that exist.

BUDGET

IMPORTANCE OF CONTENTS

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia-Matane): Mr. Speaker, as we all know of course in a few days from now this Government will, through the agency of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), deliver what could be a historical budget. The people of Canada already fears that this will be a financial exercise of great firmness that will require an uncommon measure of courage from any Government. On this occasion, Mr. Speaker, all the Members in this House, including the Opposition Members, will have an opportunity to show a genuine maturity, a real spirit of understanding, in other words that kind of responsibility which every Canadian man and woman expect from their elected representatives.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, as are most citizens in this great and marvellous country, that we can and must put an end to that chronic financial drain which is the Canadian deficit. It is there facing us because too many politicians in the past have unfortunately preferred the more comfortable position of burying their heads in the sand.

Mr. Speaker, if this country is to come out victorious of the war against the deficit, we need the full co-operation of the Canadian people. We can give back to this country the economic vigor and strength it used to have.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE—STATEMENT BY OFFICIAL OF PETROLEUM MARKETERS ASSOCIATION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday James Conrad, executive vice-president of the Petroleum Marketers Association of Canada, said that retail pump prices across Canada are at least 5 cents a litre higher than they should be. What is the Minister doing right now to give Canadian consumers and motorists the benefit of the lower oil prices which, according to Mr. Conrad, we should see at the pumps today?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I read Mr. Conrad's assessment with some interest. I would like to point out that there is nothing to prevent Mr. Conrad and the dealers about whom he is talking from importing the cheaper products if they should so desire.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ACT TO HELP CONSUMERS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Conrad says that the dealers he represents are prevented from doing that by actions of the big oil companies. Mr. Conrad said that the high Canadian prices are the result of "consciously parallel actions by big Government and big oil. They have got together to divide up the economic pie, and in the process they're taking money out of pockets of consumers".

Why will the Minister not act now to help consumers get that money back in their pockets? Why is she washing her hands of her responsibilities in this serious situation?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have already explained to the House that it was this Party which deregulated the industry so that consumers could benefit from those prices. I want to see the Hon. Member's face when he sees gasoline prices start to tumble in the next few weeks.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that a few minutes ago the Conservative Member for Halifax West got up in the House under Statements pursuant to Standing Order 22 and said that the big oil companies are not giving the people in his province the benefit of lower prices?

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Why will she not act on the basis of the statements of her own Member? Can she not listen to someone on this important question and help consumers? Why is she standing idly by on this?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that he has misquoted my colleague on this issue. I am really surprised that he would stoop to that kind of activity in the House of Commons. I have already told him that all of the oil companies have assured me that the price decreases when they show up at the pumps will be passed on to consumers.

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the bank rate hit 12.10 per cent as of two o'clock. This is an outrageous situation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. When we get the prime rate in, we may have the highest real interest rates in the history of the country while we have stable inflation of 4 per cent. This is outragerous. What is the Minister of Finance going to do about it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has a very short memory. Real interest rates hit a record high when he was on this side of the House. That is when people were paying 22 per cent and 25 per cent interest rates across the country. I ask the Member to think about that.

I have answered his questions on this issue last week and earlier this week. Both the exchange markets and the financial markets are in very unsettled conditions. We are doing what we can to stabilize those conditions. I believe that, once stability does return, we will see a return to a more normal level of interst rates.

FORTHCOMING BUDGET

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the Minister cannot be allowed to fudge that issue by arguing about nominal, as against real interest rates. The real interest rate will be between 8.5 and 9 per cent which could easily be the highest in Canadian history. During the period—I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I know that preambles are not allowed.

What is the Minister going to do in this ridiculous and outrageous situation to protect farmers, home owners, and consumers? What is he going to do in his Budget to ensure that they will be protected and not savaged by these rates?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that I cannot say anything to him today with regard to what will be in my Budget in two weeks. Surely he understands that.

As I have indicated many times in the past, we are trying to generate a degree of stability in the exchange markets and financial markets of the country in order to get interest rates back to a normal level. I can assure the Hon. Member that I have no intention of seeing conditions persist that will leave interest rates up at the levels they are at today.

• (1420)

One final comment, Mr. Speaker. Twenty-five per cent was what the interest rates were in 1982. The inflation rate was, I think, 12 per cent or 13 per cent. That left real interest rates at 12 per cent or 13 per cent. That is what they were when the Member was in office.

THE ECONOMY

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. To quote the Chairman of the Finance Committee, why, in order to scorch a few money speculators, did the Minister of Finance have to burn Canadians, burn small businesses, homeowners, fishermen and farmers, with high interest rates? When is he going to stop inflicting this kind of high interest rate pain on Canadian citizens?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I responded, I believe, to the same question from the previous questioner. The Hon. Member knows full well that in order to deal with the degree of speculative activity that there was in the market-place, it was necessary to approach this with a combined approach that dealt with the exchange market as well as the financial markets in Canada because of the very clear linkage.

What we have done, we have done to ensure that the results of the weakness in the exchange rate do not get transmitted in a permanent way into high interest rates but that we keep that level of high interest rates for as short a period of time as possible.

Mr. Deans: What about those trapped now?

IMPACT ON ECONOMIC RECOVERY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Finance. He will know that the spectre of interest rates increasing on a weekly basis will paralyse any initiative people might take to invest in new homes, new business lines or in making new investments. How does the Minister of Finance expect economic recovery to occur if people are stopped from purchasing goods and services as a result of a fear of increasing interest rates?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in November, 1984, and in May, 1985, we set in train a series of economic policies. The Budget that will be brought down in a couple of weeks' time will continue the same economic policies that have led to a significant degree of job creation of over 1,100 jobs a day. Since we came into office 580,000 jobs have been created.

This is the direction we will continue to go. It will require a tough Budget in two weeks' time. It will require a Budget that will stay the course on the policy actions we have been taking over the time that we have been in office. The result of these has been a very successful performance in the economy. Success is paying off, and we are going to continue that track.

MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in light of this hard Budget and all the news that is coming up, what advice does the Minister of Finance have for people who are renewing their mortgages? Thirty thousand Canadians this month will be renewing their mortgages at higher than ever mortgage rates.

Some Hon. Members: Higher than ever?

An Hon. Member: Where have you been?

Mr. Riis: What advice does the Minister have for these people?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member allowed his tongue to slip a little there. We do not have higher than ever mortgage rates. He knows that.

Mr. Deans: They are too high.

Mr. Riis: He knows that we do not have higher than ever mortgage rates. What we have are mortgage rates that are below what they were—

Mr. Deans: Much too high.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have mortgage rates that are lower than they were when we took office a year and a half ago.

Mr. Deans: Not by tomorrow they won't be.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Our policy is to get mortgage rates down, interest rates in the broadest possible sense down, to more normal rates. I cannot say how long that will take. I think if we can develop a degree of stabilty in the markets we will see that this period of high interest rates will be short-lived.

Mr. Riis: That is what Allan MacEachen said.

Oral Questions

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy. Canadians have heard all the Minister's excuses, but they are not buying any of them. The fact is Canadians are paying much more for gasoline than are American motorists. Obviously the cheaper crude has worked its way through the American system. What is wrong with our system? Why are we not benefiting from falling world oil prices?

• (1425)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, what is right with our system is that we replaced the National Energy Program, which created artificially high prices for consumers.

Mr. Waddell: It was lower than the world price.

Miss Carney: What is also right with the system which the Government has put into place is that consumers will get all the benefit of those lower prices, particularly in the Member's region which depends upon imported crude, as soon as those price decreases move through the system. I have told him that continually. He knows that there are already signs of price declines in his own region. I want him to be able to come back to the House and report what those declines are in two or three weeks when they start showing up.

OIL COMPANIES' ACTIVITIES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, there are no declines in my region of the country. Today, in Saint John, New Brunswick, the price is 60.8 cents per litre for gasoline. If the Minister believes in the market sensitive price system, why is she supporting the market manipulation of the oil companies?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should be very aware of the fact that the system imposed by his Government was very harsh on consumers. I have continually reminded him that gasoline prices went up 80 per cent under the Liberal administration, and I have continually reminded him that the oil companies have assured us that the price decreases in the system will be passed on to consumers. We expect that those price decreases will start showing up toward the end of February or sometime in March.

PRICE CONTROL

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. Is the Minister aware that under Section 31 of the Combines Investigation Act it is illegal to control the price of gasoline through consignment sales, exactly what Petro-Canada has been doing with George and Cora McAra of Gravenhurst? Will the Minister tell the House, with practices like these going on in the industry, how she can say to Canadians that lower world oil prices will quickly pass through to Canadian consumers?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I read with great interest the fact that the Leader of the New Democratic Party in Manitoba is threatening action against oil companies if the price decreases to the consumer are not passed on by April 1. That is how long, apparently, the NDP Leader in Manitoba feels it will take for price decreases to work through the system. If April 1 is good enough for Mr. Pawley, it is good enough for me.

Mr. Waddell: At least he has the guts to set a date.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PRICE OF GASOLINE IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, given that prices went down in Buffalo today and that there is no lag in the United States, why is there a lag in Canada? Could the Minister tell the House exactly, in number of days, how long it takes to go through the Canadian system from the time world prices per barrel start to go down in Canada? Exactly how many days does it take?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member should be aware, the United States, with its larger population, has smaller inventories and shorter supply lines and therefore price decreases tend to show up more quickly. He will remember that last year price increases in the fall showed up more quickly there than they did here in Canada. Since he has raised the isse of the guts of the Manitoba Premier—

Mr. Waddell: No, the guts of the Minister of Energy.

Miss Carney: —I would like to suggest that if he really had the intestinal fortitude which the Hon. Member is claiming, he could promise to remove the eight cents per litre gas tax which Manitobans are now paying.

EFFECT OF REGULATION CHANGES ON FORMER ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Why has the Minister not listened to the Deputy Prime Minister and to the Secretary of State for External Affairs when they asked her, in writing, to change her rotten unemployment regulations which deny unemployment insurance benefits in whole or in part to retired Armed Forces, RCMP and other public and private personnel?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I realize the Hon. Member is preoccupied with divisions, which of course are very apparent, between the Leader of the Opposition and the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice. However, I want to assure him that I speak with my colleagues and that we carry on conversations all the time. I would like once more to remind the Member, and all other Members, that the decisions with regard to the changes in the unemployment insurance regulations were announced on November 8, 1984. That is over 15 months ago. The implementation date for those regulation changes was announced in December. The change with regard to severance and UI income took effect—

● (1430)

Mr. Deans: That doesn't make them any better. Do you think it matters which date you annoucned it?

Mr. Orlikow: Why don't you answer the question?

Miss MacDonald: —on March 31, 1985. There was a year's lead time given for the implementation of the pension UI regulation. That came into effect January 1, 1986.

Mr. Orlikow: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the Minister may get a chance to complete that answer on the supplementary.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): I can't see the Deputy Prime Minister putting up with that kind of statement. Why does the Minister of Employment and Immigration continue to insist on enforcing her unfair unemployment insurance regulations which, for example, bring Mr. John Mitchell, one of my constituents with a family of five in Pembroke, Ontario, $2,000 below the poverty line? How does she justify that? Is that her sensitivity to retired people?

Mr. Deans: Because she announced it. Tell him that you announced it before. That's the justification.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Initiatives this Government has taken is to set up the Forget Commission of Inquiry to look into all the inequities that people see, or are taking place, in the administration of the unemployment insurance fund—

Mr. Deans: When did you announce that?

Miss MacDonald: —something that the previous Government never got around to doing. I would say that the indication of concern about the operation of the unemployment insurance program is extremely widespread, as is shown by the number of representations that have been made to the Forget Commission—

Mr. Orlikow: And to which you are not listening.

Miss MacDonald: —by individuals and by organizations. I can assure him the Forget Commission will undertake to look at all of those inequities which are raised by him and other Members of Parliament.

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR PROPOSED MEASURES TO AVOID EXCESSIVE PETROLEUM PRICES IN QUEBEC

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is the Minister aware that the three cents a litre difference between the price of gas in Quebec and Ontario is due to the higher price of refining and marketing imposed by the oil industry? What action will she take to ensure that excessive prices are not charged by the oil industry in Quebec compared with prices in Ontario? When will the Minister publish the O'Farrell Report on competition in the Quebec industry?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member shows a massive lack of knowledge of geography because one of the best advantages that Quebec has is the fact that its refineries have access to imported oil coming in at much lower prices. Quebec is clearly going to benefit from the lower prices—

Mr. Orlikow: Why doesn't the consumer get that benefit?

Miss Carney: —that this Government has put in place.

An Hon. Member: When?

Miss Carney: Before April 1.

PRICE IN OTTAWA

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): As a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, is the Minister not aware that in Quebec, as here in Ottawa, which is served by Montreal refineries, people are still paying the same prices as they were before the price of oil started to come down? They are paying 3 cents a litre more for production and marketing costs in Ontario. When is the Minister going to take action? Are people in Ottawa going to continue to be hosed at the pumps because of a special dispensation to oil companies given by this Minister?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Hon. Member is ignoring the fact that the Liberal Party in Quebec has recently increased the price of gasoline by increasing the price of taxes.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants on a supplementary to a previous question.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

TIMING OF IMPLEMENTATION OF REGULATION CHANGE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, because I was trying to catch your eye earlier. I'm so very glad the Minister had a chance to reply in part earlier to the questions from the Member for Renfrew-Nippissing-Pembroke. The Minister listens to colleagues and Members on all sides of the House who have expressed a real concern on this very controversial issue. I, and other Members representing all Parties, have appeared before the Forget Commission—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the Hon. Member does have a question, please.

Mr. Nowlan: Since the Forget Commission is also concerned about the narrow issue of the mandatory retirees, I would ask the Minister, and appeal to her historic concern and compassion for the underdog—and I say that seriously—that she ask her officials to grandfather the change in the interpretation—there is no law change, there is no regulation change—until the Forget Commission has had a chance to report on the full question of UIC, or alternatively would she direct the Forget Commission—

Some Hon. Members: More, more, more, more.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members for making representations to the Forget Commission. I think that is the way in which we want to see this Commission of Inquiry operate, and I know that—

Mr. Deans: Put in a grandmother.

Miss MacDonald: —we have also asked the Forget Commission to look particularly at the aspect of who contributes to the unemployment insurance fund, under what conditions, whether or not those who pay into the program with no expectation of ever receiving benefits—

Mr. Deans: How about his question?

Miss MacDonald: —should continue to contribute. All of those matters are now before the Forget Commission of Inquiry, and I am sure that the commissioners will listen not only to those representations but to the ones which have been made by the Hon. Member.

RAILWAYS

DERAILMENT OF TRAIN TRANSPORTING SULPHURIC ACID

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It concerns the derailment of the CP Rail "acid train" which dumped thousands of litres of sulphuric acid into two small remote lakes north of Orillia, Ontario. I would like to ask the Minister whether he is fully satisfied that the railway companies are carrying out satisfactorily, or adequately, their responsibility for maintenance: maintenance of road beds, rails and rolling stock. Would the Minister not agree that if maintenance standards were adhered to we could dramatically reduce the number of derailments that take place every year?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in late January I wrote to the CTC asking them to advise me whether, in fact, during the course of their investigation of the recent rash of derailments there was any common thread with respect to the causes of the accidents that have been occurring in the recent past.

Mr. Deans: Lack of deregulation.

Mr. Mazankowski: They had indicated that that was not the case. As a result of the accident which the Hon. Member referred I have today contacted the CTC and asked them to undertake a comprehensive review of all railway accidents and derailments going back to 1984 and to report back to me within 45 days. I have requested them to focus on such items as maintenance, inspection and operating practices to determine whether, in fact, there is any deficiency in any of those areas and if, in fact, there is any common element of the causes of the accidents that have occurred in the recent past.

REQUEST THAT INDEPENDENT INQUIRY BE ESTABLISHED

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Supplementary, Mr. Speaker, to the same Minister. Railway employees throughout northern Ontario have told me for years, and continue to tell me, that maintenance is a major factor in the rash of derailments that we have every year. I wonder if the Minister would agree to initiate an independent inquiry into the maintenance standards that are practised by the railways. Once having that information, and changing the situation that exists today, would he not agree that we could improve the situation and have a safer railway system.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1440)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that the CTC is a quasi-judicial body. It will be asked to investigate as a result of my instructions today. I think the Hon. Member should also be aware that since 1979 derailments have been reduced by more than 20 per cent. Railway accidents have in fact declined since 1980 by some 30 per cent. Injuries are down by 31 per cent.

Fatalities are down by 42 per cent. Notwithstanding the fact that there has been a rash of derailments in the last little while, the record over the last four or five years has been pretty good.

POLLUTION OF LAKE BY SULPHURIC ACID

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. The Minister is aware of the recent derailment which occurred and also that the train was carrying sulphuric acid. Of course this happened in my own riding at MacTier. I am wondering if the Minister could bring us up to date on what is being done to cut down on the sulphuric acid and diffuse it into the lakes which have already been polluted. I am also wondering if he could let us know when the CP rail line, which is one of the main lines of the CP, will be back in operation.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that five cars are leaking. Some 150 tonnes of limestone and soda ash which will be used as a neutralizer in the clean-up operation are on site. The clean-up operation is to begin this afternoon. The line is temporarily closed to traffic, and as soon as the site is cleared it will be opened. CTC officials are on the scene investigating, as are officials from the Department of the Environment and CP. Early evidence would indicate that the accident was caused by a broken wheel.

FINANCE

BANK OF CANADA RATE INCREASE—DIFFERENCE BETWEEN CANADIAN AND U.S. RATES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance.

The Bank of Canada has just announced an increase in the Canadian prime rate.

The prime rate is now three per cent higher in Canada than in the United States.

My question is this: How can the Minister justify such a difference in the prime rates of these two countries? Why this difference of over three per cent between Canada and the United States?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I responded to this question on two or three occasions in the past week or so. I indicated to the House that the actions we took last week to stabilize the markets and to deal with the speculative pressures that were in the market-place had to be a balance between action on the exchange rate and action on interest rates. The whole purpose of this is to bring a degree of stability back into the market-place so that we can get a more normal level of interest rates consistent with the strength of the economy.

I would remind the Hon. Member that in the past 15 or 16 months the economy has been the strongest of any western industrialized nation. There have been 580,000 jobs created. Investment has been growing at a rate of 11 per cent and housing starts have been growing at a rate of 25 per cent. Inflation has been stable at 4 per cent. What we want to do is get back on track and we will—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again this is becoming a speech.

IMPACT OF HIGH INTEREST RATES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, in view of this reply, coult the Minister of Finance now answer the question adked by the Chairman of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, who is a Conservative? His question was this: Why burn Canadians with a higher interest rate to eliminate a few speculators? Could he reply to this question now?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is an exact repeat of a question that was just put to me by the Hon. Member who sits immediately behind the Hon. Member who just asked the question. Surely the Hon. Member could simply turn around and ask him what was the answer to the previous question.

YOUTH

PREOCCUPATION OF MINISTER'S OFFICES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Youth.

I have here a secret document from the minister's office which clearly shows that her office is more concerned with using young people for election purposes then with meeting their needs.

Can the Minister reply and explain why the people in her office have not proposed to Cabinet real job creation policies to meet the needs of young people?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Sainte-Marie is referring to a document, but I have no idea which document he means. I do not even know if it is legitimate. If he can be so kind as to send it to me, I shall examine it and give an answer later.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, if the people in her office had done their job properly, they would have seen the article in the newspaper Le Droit today. Her employees should have told her about it.

YOUTH EXPECTATIONS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary to the Minister is the following: Would she have read the document if she had been aware of it and does she not believe the young Canadians deserve a real Department to protest their rights rather than a Department which is there only as a smokescreen and for electoral purposes?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I indeed saw an article in the newpaper, but this does not tell me which document the Hon. Member has in his possession. As I do not want to mislead the House, I am not going to comment a document when I do not know what it contains. However, since the Hon. Member says that we did not implement any program to reduce unemployment among young people, I shall remind him that, between 1980 and 1984, when the Liberals were in power, youth unemployment rose by 5,000 each month, for a total of 285,000. Since we have been in power, we have created 5,000 jobs a month for young people for a total of 80,000. And this is going to continue.

FISHERIES

REDUCTION OF POSITIONS IN DEPARTMENT

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans confirm that the 200 positions that he announced cut from his Department today are only preliminary cuts and that he in fact intends to cut habitat protection programs, fisheries regulation and enforcement programs, fisheries management programs, fisheries inspection programs, offshore observer programs, small craft harbours programs, aquaculture programs, fisheries research programs, and fisheries resource development programs?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, of course I would not confirm that. It sounds to me as if the Hon. Member is on a witch hunt. I only wonder if he concurs in our decision to streamline the headquarters operations of the Department to give visibility and coherence to our world-class scientific effort and to strengthen the managerial linkages between head office and the regions which the Department serves, including our own region on the Pacific coast.

USER CHARGES INQUIRY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, if anyone thought that that would occur because of the present cuts, it would be completely irrational. Will the Minister confirm that he will be announcing shortly not only more staff and budget cuts but he will also be imposing user charges against people in the fishing industry in the form of fish landing taxes, higher moorage rates, higher licensing fees, and higher fisheries inspection service costs?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is filled with malicious speculation this afternoon. He knows that when the Government is ready to announce any initiative, it will make that announcement. At the present time no such initiatives are contemplated.

YOUTH

CONTENT OF DOCUMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Youth. Does she agree with the position taken by her chief of staff that in order to save her own Department she should call in:

> IOUs and/or Irons in the fire.
> (i) Ministers and "heavy" MP's who "owe" Andrée Champagne—
> (ii) Ministers and heavy MP's with grant requests under "active" consideration, i.e. not yet turned down—

[Translation]

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier . . . I am just now getting the document. I have not read it yet. I cannot verify the accuracy of this document with others at the Department. I shall do so and I shall reply to the questions after I have had an opportunity to do what is necessary.

[English]

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTERIAL OFFICIAL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the $25 million or $26 million she spent last year on window dressing, does the Minister agree with her chief of staff who has said:

> Youth do not look to the federal government to provide leadership in resolving many issues . . . Even if they did, this is not the role of government. Will we next want to create a programme to help women through menopause?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, what I do agree with is that 80,000 jobs have been created for young people in the last 15 months, and that is a lot more than the Liberal Party could ever have said. We will continue to do that, and I will not comment on a document that I have not had the time to study.

PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

PRENTICE-HALL TAKEOVER

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for Investment Canada. The Minister will remember that the announcement by the Minister of Communications with respect to book publishing policy last July fanned the flames of ardent desire and hope in the hearts of the Canadian cultural community. Will the Minister confirm that his announcement that Prentice-Hall will be exempt from this book publishing policy has put out that fire?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, of course I have no way of telling what fire might burn in the ranks of the NDP. If the Hon. Member is referring to the Southam report, I am sorry if she has been misled by it. The reporter simply asked me what our general disposition was with respect to the Prentice-Hall case. I said that we cannot comment on the matter. The Hon. Member must bear in mind that this was a deal made in December of 1984 when the Foreign Investment Review Agency was still in effect and that the process would naturally fall under whatever the precedents were and the law was at the time.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister would give an answer to the cultural community, which is very concerned about this matter, both as to the specifics of Prentice-Hall, which has dragged on for months and now years, and as to the publishing policy itself. How can we have a realistic cultural sovereignty policy if nothing is going to happen and if cases are going to be overturned?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, let me assure the Hon. Member that there is considerable happening as far as Investment Canada is concerned. However, she will have to accept that in the past these cases have taken generally a great deal of consideration. Sometimes the cases have been approved and other times they have been turned down. Let me assure the Hon. Member that the policy of the Government is the policy as enunciated in July by my colleague, the Minister of Communications, with respect to the publishing business. There is absolutely no question about that.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

TARIFF PLACED ON PRODUCT NOT PRODUCED IN CANADA

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Finance I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. There is a small company in Surrey which manufactures wire products largely for export and which uses off-shore stock which it imports because there is no Canadian company which manufactures that type of stock. Can the Minister tell the House why a simple phone call from Stelco can induce tariff officials to prevent a one-item tariff change or duty remission on a product which this company, or any other Canadian company, does not manufacture, which thereby vetoes the jobs of employees in western Canada and the future of a good export market?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's concern about this particular matter. As he knows, it is a matter which falls under the responsibility of my colleague, the Minister of State for Finance, who is responsible for tariff changes. I will raise this with her the next time we discuss matters of this sort. We will get back to the Hon. Member with an answer.

PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

PRENTICE-HALL TAKEOVER—APPLICATION OF FIRA CRITERIA

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion also in relation to the Prentice-Hall case. The Minister's colleague, the Minister of Communications, has stated that at this point the FIRA criteria will now apply to this particular case. If that is so, will the Minister be following the precedent set by FIRA, which was to insist upon divestiture or, at the minimum, joint Canadian ownership, in every book publishing case which comes before him? Are those the criteria that will be now applied?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised that the Hon. Members refers to precedent. As we checked precedent with respect to the publishing industry, we found that under the Government of the Hon. Member sometimes they were approved and sometimes they were turned down. In fact that is one of the difficulties with which we now have to live. There was no clear precedent set by the former Government.

REQUEST FOR EARLY DECISION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is wrong in his facts—indeed, as he normally is. The fact of the matter is that the key cases involving Bantam Books and Gulf & Western were turned down. If it is now FIRA criteria which are to be applied, will the Minister return to the efficiency of FIRA and make a decision sooner rather than later since we have waited a full year already? Under his new regime he promised efficiency and we are getting nothing but delay.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, it is almost laughable to hear the Hon. Member opposite talk about efficiency. When his Government was in power the fact is that there was a backlog in FIRA three times as severe as any backlog we have lived with. At the present time I am pleased to tell the House that, as far as applications are concerned, we have been able to process them not only within the new limits but within a much shorter period of time than they were ever processed before under FIRA or otherwise.

INDIAN AFFAIRS ### SERPENT RIVER INDIAN BAND—HIGH INCIDENCE OF DISEASE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Studies released today detail the very high incidence of disease among members of the Serpent River Indian Band as a result of an old acid plant which was closed in 1963. In 1969 the federal Government sent in the Army and blew it up, thus spreading the contamination. Since these people appealed to the Minister and his colleagues in the Departments of National Health and Welfare and the Environment for help some time ago, why has the Government been so slow to respond by cleaning up this dangerous site, thus protecting the health of Indian people?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, yesterday morning I met with the Chief and other members of the community. We indicated and agreed upon a course of action which would have the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister of the Environment and myself met after there has been an opportunity for the advisory committee, which was set up by the Indian community, to consider that report. I indicated to the Chief, and to the community, that we would undertake a commitment to clean the site up according to whatever options were made available, discussed, and decided upon by the advisory committee, in consultation with the other two Ministers.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR CLEANING UP CONTAMINATED SITE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, to be very clear I would like to ask the Minister this. Is the federal Government prepared to accept full responsibility for cleaning up the site? Will the Minister tell the House when that will be done and completed?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Chief asked me if I would commit the federal Government to seek a solution to the cleaning up of the site. I indicated that I would. Of course the timing is related to the discussion of the report and the operation of the advisory committee. It was a very good and very positive meeting. I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his interest.

REDUCTION OF POSITIONS IN DEPARTMENT

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is the only federal government Department which has sole responsibility for a natural resource. Other Departments have shared jurisdictions. Why is the Government of Canada cutting this very Department at a time when the fishing industry is in such trouble? Is it just to satisfy the Americans?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. In fact, as the Hon. Member should know, the size of the budget of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans increased from $300 million a year in 1980 to $600 million a year by the time his Government left office. That in itself is sufficient reason for taking the very positive initiatives which were announced today. However, I would remind the Hon. Member of the words of his Leader who said, on July 24, 1984:

> There must be a reduction of our Government expenditures . . . There is a lot of space to reduce and cut expenditures and duplications . . . I believe that this reduction in expenditures could save us billions of dollars.

Those are the words of the Leader of the Hon. Member's Party.

EFFECT ON MARKETING DIVISION

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, it could have been an increase in the amount of money but not an increase in the number of people working there. The only guaranteed government office he has now is what he calls the redeployment counselling centre for surplus workers. That is all that is left. The Minister says this will have no effect on the fisheries. Who will do the job now of domestic fish promotion in Canada since as of today he has laid off practically all of those workers in the marketing division?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, again the essentials of the Hon. Member's question indicate his ignorance of the facts. In fact, we have not laid off all of the officials in the marketing promotion division. We have strengthened the management contact with his region of Newfoundland. We have enhanced the scientific program by consolidating and eliminating a lot of duplication.

● (1500)

Generally speaking, we will see a significant increase in the delivery of services to fishermen, not by bureaucracy in Ottawa but by the genuine delivery of the services they need at the regional level.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions, with the exception of four presented by Hon. Members on Wednesday, February 12, 1986, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

Petitions presented by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) do not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

The petitions presented by the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), by filing with the Clerk of the House, also do not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

POINT OF ORDER

USE OF PRIVATE DOCUMENT

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my point of order relates to something that just happened in Question Period. A short while ago, my colleagues across the floor walked out because someone apparently inadvertently listened to their private discussion in caucus. Today, someone was reading from something that was considered to be a private document. The other day we saw something in the press regarding private documents as well. I understand that there was quite a foo-fa-raw about that. Perhaps we should be looking at these items as well.

Mr. Speaker: That is a representation.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, will the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) outline the business of the House for the rest of this week and for the week of February 26? In so doing, will he tell us the exact hour at which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will commence his Budget presentation on February 24 and tell the House when the six-day Budget debate will begin?

Finally, will the Minister also tell us the day when the Main Estimates will be tabled and whether the Government will, at that time, table a reconciliation between the figures in the Budget and those in the Main Estimates in order to avoid any confusion and assist in their study by the House and the Canadian people?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by indicating to the Hon. Opposition House Leader that we will continue with the motion in my name respecting reform of the House of Commons. Hopefully we can make progress on that and resolve it even today. As I indicated previously, we will follow that with the motion in the name of my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) dealing with the reference to committee of the paper on registration of lobbyists.

There are other items of legislation, such as Bill C-90, that will follow.

In the interim I was going to use the opportunity to carry on with Bills that I indicated in the last announcement with respect to House business. I will discuss with Opposition House Leaders the other items on which we may be able to make progress and will bring that to the attention of the House at the earliest possible date.

In terms of the Budget, I have already indicated to the Opposition House Leaders privately and would like to announce to the House and the people of Canada now that my colleague, the Minister of Finance, will be presenting the Budget on February 26, 1986, at 4:30 p.m., Eastern Standard Time. It is my intention at this time to proceed with the normal Budget debate immediately following the presentation of that Budget. It is my intention, subject to the consideration of other factors and consultation with Opposition House Leaders, to have continuous debate on the Budget until its conclusion.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, have the stock exchanges been informed that the Budget will be brought in? The Vancouver exchange will not be closed.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): At 1:30.

Mr. Deans: Thank you.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Can the Government House Leader answer my final question? When will the Main Estimates be presented and will the reconciliation of the figures in those Main Estimates in the Budget be presented to the House at the same time?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the Estimates will be tabled on February 27, 1986. There will be a reconciliation that will astound my hon. friend.

THE ADMINISTRATION

REGULATORY REFORM—CREATION OF NEW MINISTRY

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I rise to announce one of the key initiatives of the Government's agenda for economic renewal.

Today I am introducing the first statement of regulatory policy ever articulated by a federal Government and the first strategy for implementing meaningful regulatory reform on a national basis.

Regulation is the chief instrument used by Parliament and by Government to constrain private behaviour and limit freedom in the common interest. Obviously, it is difficult to think of regulation as anything but good if it advances an aspect of the common interest—for example, controlling the safety of baby cribs, the quality of the environment and the regulation of monopolies.

Can it ever be bad? The insight of regulatory reform says that even regulation that seems otherwise good can sometimes balance out against the public interest.

Regulation begins to go against the public interest when it overwhelms personal freedom, undermines personal responsibility, penalizes hard work or stifles the creativity of conscientious Canadians.

Our awareness that there had been years of indiscriminate regulatory activity led this Government, in the fall of 1984, to identify regulatory reform as a key element of our agenda for economic renewal.

In this context, the Task Force on Program Review last year conducted the most comprehensive and intensive regulatory review ever undertaken at one time in any jurisdiction in Canada. Its work on regulatory programs was complemented by a separate study of policies affecting federal regulatory agencies carried out under a special mandate given to me in September, 1984, by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). This work has been integrated into the over-all regulatory approach I am announcing today.

As you know, Sir, the hard word of the program review was carried out by study teams made up of individuals drawn more or less equally from the private and public sectors. The private sector volunteers represented the professions, big, medium and small business, labour and consumer interests. Their mandate was to make federal programs simpler, more understandable and more accessible to the public. The emphasis of their work was on better service to the public, less red tape and greater efficiency. They were not simply concerned with cost cutting. They did an outstanding job, and on behalf of the Government of Canada, I express deep appreciation for their dedicated service.

Let me now turn to the findings of the regulatory review. The study team's diagnosis was certainly none too comforting. The scope of federal regulation is mind-boggling. There are 146 full-scale regulatory or regulatory-related programs and that figure does not even include the Criminal Code. The programs are administered by 35,000 public servants at a cost in this fiscal year of $2.9 billion. In the latest consolidated version, which is already out of date, the regulations fill over 10,000 pages in 19 volumes and weigh nearly 40 kilograms or, for comparison's sake, close to the weight of a 100 pound sack of flour. New federal regulations or amendments to existing regulations have been churning out at a rate of more than 100 per month. The preceding Government lost control of the regulatory system; their best estimates of its scope were understated by half. We found that there was no planning mechanism for regulatory activity and no effective system for controlling its growth. Getting these problems under control will be an important part of our new regulatory reform strategy.

At nearly $3 billion, the direct cost to the Treasury of federal regulatory activity is bad enough. However, it pales in significance compared to the cost to the economy of federal regulation; that is, the price paid by individual citizens, companies, non-profit organizations and so on as a result of regulation-imposed costs. The program review estimated the cost of federal regulation to Canada's economy to be at least $30 billion per year, a dimension which has been missing from decision making on new regulatory proposals until now.

Sir, the figures I have quoted refer only to federal regulation alone. The study team found that the scope and cost of regulatory activity by provinces and municipalities is at least as high. So as individual Canadian citizens, we not only pay taxes to three levels of Government, we pay a huge indirect regulatory price to at least three layers of regulators as well.

The major conclusions of the study team were as follows.

First, the cumulative effect of regulation at the three levels of Government constitutes an enormous impediment to economic growth, initiative, enterprise and personal freedom in Canada.

Second, federally elected representatives do not have adequate control over regulation and the regulatory system.

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. Nielsen: Third, the public has too little access to and involvement in the development and review of regulation. Now, that is quite an indictment and we intend to do something about it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The regulatory review did not prescribe wholesale deregulation as the desirable solution to the problems it found, however, it did identify a large number of existing regulatory programs needing reform in the sense of substantial improvement. With the benefit of the regulatory review's diagnosis and recommendations, the Government has decided to implement a comprehensive regulatory reform strategy. That strategy will have several elements. Indeed, the program review should itself be seen as the first element in the over-all strategy. Today I am pleased to announce two additional elements of that strategy: The adoption of the "first-ever" federal regulatory policy, and, on behalf of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), I am now announcing the appointment of a Minister responsible for regulatory affairs.

[Translation]

The fundamental objective of the Government's policy is to promote economic renewal and job creation by improving the management of regulations established by the Government, eliminating those that impede growth and encouraging the private initiative and the independence of businesses through an improved regulation framework.

[English]

The policy consists of 10 guiding principles.

First, a reformed approach to regulation is and will remain a necessary and important instrument for achieving the Government's social and economic objectives. However, the Government intends to "regulate smarter".

Second, the Government recognizes the vital role of an efficient marketplace and a dynamic entrepreneurial spirit and that regulation should not impede those values without the most persuasive justification.

Third, the Government intends to limit as much as possible the over-all rate of growth and proliferation of new regulation while protecting the public wherever appropriate.

Fourth, priority is to be placed on reform, but there will be no program of wholesale deregulation.

Fifth, the Government will ensure that regulatory benefits clearly exceed costs before proceeding with new regulatory proposals.

Sixth, regulation will be brought more fully under the control of elected representatives.

Seventh, the Government will increase public access to and participation in the regulatory process.

Eighth, the federal regulatory system will be streamlined and made more efficient.

Ninth, the Government will place priority on increased regulatory co-operation with the provinces.

Tenth, a Minister for regulatory affairs will be appointed while individual Ministers with regulatory mandates will exercise their responsibilities in conformity with the spirit and objectives of this policy.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that anyone familiar with regulation will recognize the significance of these ten broad policy principles. For the average citizen they boil down to the Government's intention to stem the growth of regulation, especially economic regulation, and wherever possible to get the existing regulatory burden off the backs of productive Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1520)

Mr. Nielsen: The policy makes clear our intention to tilt our regulatory emphasis in the direction of economic efficiency, market flexibility, and personal freedom. Yet it also confirms our intention to protect the public through the use of regulation wherever it is the best and most economical instrument for doing so. This Government knows that Canadians know best how to run their own lives. They want a Government to support their efforts, not to direct them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: We are eager to reform all those regulations which second-guess business judgment or stifle initiative. In that respect, the policy is particularly oriented to small and medium-sized business which is the main creator of new jobs in our economy.

The new Minister for regulatory affairs will be responsible for over-all implementation of the regulatory policy and regulatory reform strategy. The Prime Minister has asked me to inform the House today that that Minister is the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn), our most estimable House Leader.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Members will know that the President of the Privy Council is also Chairman of the Special Committee of Council which has the job of reviewing and approving regulatory initiatives. The special committee itself will be given increased authority and responsibility for regulatory matters under the new policy.

The Minister responsible for regulatory affairs and the Special Committee of Council will be supported by a distinct regulatory affairs secretariat to be located in the Privy Council Office with a net saving of person years by virtue of the closing of the two offices heretofore responsible for regulatory expertise; namely, the Office of Regulatory Reform and the Technical Advisory Group, both of which were located in the Treasury Board.

Today my purpose has been to launch our new regulatory reform strategy and to underline the importance which the Government attaches to meaningful regulatory improvement. There are several additional and quite distinct dimensions to the over-all concept of regulatory reform which will be made clear over the next few months. These include special provisions for public participation and access, a package of regulatory improvements, system reforms, a federal-provincial initiative, and important reforms affecting regulatory agencies. Taken together, the various elements of the Government's regulatory reform strategy will comprise the most comprehensive and coherent regulatory reform initiative ever undertaken by one administration in any jurisdiction in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: It will place Canada's federal regulatory policy and practice in the forefront of western countries. Most important of all, Sir, the regulatory reform strategy provides a further demonstration of this Government's commitment to economic renewal through more efficient, more open, more accountable, and less intrusive Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I will try to match the excellent performance of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) en français by making some of my remarks in the language of Shakespeare.

First, I would like to thank the Deputy Prime Minister for providing us with a copy of his statement well in advance. This has not been customary for all Ministers on the other side of the House. This is a very good example which should be adhered to by other members of the Cabinet when they have statements to make in the House.

This being said, I would like to thank the Government for letting us know that it intends to do something about regulation in the country. This document says just that. It says the Government intends to do something, but it does not say much about when or how it will do it. In fact, without being too vicious, I have rarely seen so many words—12 full pages of them—that say so little on the specific direction and methods the Government will take to solve the problems that have been outlined. Some directions are shown, but little is said about how the objectives are going to be attained and when.

On the first page of his statement the Minister gives us the impression that this is the first time the Government of Canada is doing something about the proliferation of regulation. The Hon. Member for Simcoe-North (Mr. Lewis) is nodding in apparent agreement with this statement. Memories are short. I am certain that if the Deputy Prime Minister and other members of the Government looked back they would remember that regulatory reform was started under the Liberal Government awhile ago, not only with rhetoric but with specific measures. For example, perhaps they will remember the Office of Regulatory Reform which was put in place by a previous Government. That organization had the mandate to publish regulatory agendas of Departments showing plans as to when regulation was to come about and inviting public input. Perhaps the Government has taken some inspiration from these past moves. There is one thing which we would like to know which is not in this statement. I understand that this program has been stopped. If I am right, as I think I am, I would like to know why that is.

Finally, I would like to go into some specifics. Let us look at the 10 guiding principles on pages 8 and 9. This is where the meat, if any, is found. I do not want to go through all of the items, I just want to indicate how some of them are vague. The first item simply says that the Government intends to "regulate smarter". What else does the public expect from the Government? However, if the Government intends to become smarter, that may be welcomed by the public.

The second big guiding principle is that the Government recognizes the vital role of the marketplace and wishes that regulation should not impede those values without justification. We all agree with this. I would say that this is sort of a motherhood statement. The same applies to number five: "The Government will ensure that regulatory benefits will cearly exceed costs—". We would not expect the Government to say the contrary.

Let us move to number six where, I believe, we find an important point. It says: "Regulations will be brought more fully under the control of elected representatives". This is definitely welcomed. It is needed and would be an improvement, but why is the Government saying that at the specific time it is doing exactly the contrary? For the past few days, and even today in the House, we have seen Members attacking the Government, especially the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), because regulations regarding unemployment insurance have been changed, something that affects people in the country. The Deputy Prime Minister knows that. He has written his colleague a letter. Members of Parliament were not consulted. As a matter of fact, back-bench members of the Government are angry at their own Ministers for having proceeded in such a fashion.

I hope the Government will state not only that it wants elected representatives to have more control over regulations but that it will end up doing that instead of the contrary. If the ordinary back-bench Member of Parliament is to have some input in regulation, may I suggest, as an improvement, that instead of having one committee of the House looking after regulations arising from legislation maybe the Members of Parliament who have passed a certain Bill in a certain committee should be the ones to look after the regulations that follow a certain Bill. It makes sense to me. Maybe the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) would like to look into this suggestion.

Another item of these guidelines says that the federal regulatory system will be streamlined and made more efficient. I am all for this. I believe it is again some sort of motherhood statement, but let us be wary and make sure that streamlining regulations will not again bring us tainted tuna, buffalo meat that is not proper for consumption, veal that has been injected with steroids or wine adulterated by antifreeze or other products. It is very important that regulations be stringent enough so Canadians are protected. I am sure the Government would like to bear this in mind when looking at the way regulations are made.

Finally, there will be the appointment of a Minister for regulatory affairs. This may be a good thing. I am not sure. It will depend upon the relationship between the Minister and other members of the Cabinet. I presume the new Minister will be co-ordinating the efforts of other Ministers. Obviously each Minister will have to have some responsibilities with regard to regulations arising from Bills that his Department brings forward in the House. It may be good, it may not. The whole scheme may be good.

I am going to put an old saying on the record. The proof of the pudding will be in the eating. Let us wait and see.

[Translation]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I will sum up my remarks by saying that we have before us a document which expresses good intentions in the area of regulations, a document which remains somewhat vague all the same. As I said, it is a shower of words in a vacuum of ideas. There is not much specifics in there. We have to go through a dozen pages before finding three or four points which give a certain direction to what the Government intends to do.

As a matter of fact, this document can be summed up this way: The Government has apparently decided to act in the area of regulations, and the general thrust seems to that be of reducing their quantity.

It does not say how or when the Government will act.

The Deputy Prime Minister's statement in fact seems to be saying: We will seek to do what is right and avoid what is wrong. Yet, it does not provide much infomation on the way the Government will achieve this.

Perhaps the Government could have thought this thing over before coming to the House, in order to give us better indications on what it is really planning to do.

Nevertheless, this is a first step, and I want to congratulate the Deputy Prime Minister for bringing to the House this important document.

[English]

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I read the statement provided in advance by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen). I want to thank him first for having done that. It is a practice the Government has been following that is a very useful practice in the preparation of some reasonable responses.

I want to begin by saying that, in a sense, this reform, like many reforms, is acceptable. The idea of reform itself is a good idea. I think the Government in bringing forward the reforms is, in many ways, in step with the public's desire to see things being changed that have been in place for a very long time. There is no question that there are a large number of regulations. The Deputy Prime Minister makes that point in his report, and he is absolutely right.

Over the years we, in this Party, have advocated such things as tax reforms and reform of labour standards. We have advocated and supported reform of Parliament. We will in a very general way certainly be interested in participating in the reform which the Deputy Prime Minister has indicated he intends to have the new Minister for regulations or some similar name undertake.

It is a positive step if Members of Parliament are involved in the process all the way through. There is no question about it that regulations have a way of growing on their own without any checks and balances, and the necessity to review those regulations and to determine the effectiveness, appropriateness, usefulness or necessity for the regulations is a process that we in this Party would subscribe to.

Having said that, I want to discuss for a moment or two the whole question of regulation, and put to the Government some concerns that we have about possible courses of action which might be taken that would not be desirable.

It is not always easy to identify the more positive aspects of something. The Deputy Prime Minister I am sure would agree that it is easier to identify the possible negative effects. I want to highlight those in order that we do not run afoul of them during the process of review of regulation and deregulating, as the Government has indicated it will do.

Let me read from a document that we prepared in response to the freedom to move document. It is an extract from what the Canadian Labour Congress put in its brief in that regard dealing with regulation. It reads:

Government regulation is an attempt to state certain minimum social standards of behaviour that apply to any activity in our society. These minimum standards are a reflection of the social nature of economic activity, the role of Governments and taxpayers and workers in making that activity possible and the minimum rights that accrue to them as a result. Regulation, then, is not a "cost" that can be measured against a hypothetical unfettered market situation, but an assertion of general social rights that are as legitimate as the right to engage in business or the right to earn a profit.

I say that because it must surely be against that kind of a backdrop that the Government undertakes its review and undertakes its new approach. Clearly we cannot see regulations simply as a cost to be borne. We have to look at them in terms of the benefits one derives, that society derives, from certain kinds of regulations. Although it may be that certain regulations do in fact impose a tax, that tax being a cost, or that certain other regulations do inhibit freedom of choice, by their very nature they are necessary to protect the public from inappropriate actions that can and, sometimes have in the past, been taken by others who do not have but themselves in mind when they make their decisions.

Many of the regulations were brought about as a result of actions in the market-place or in other parts of society that were deemed totally inappropriate by society as a whole.

Mr. Riis: Pollution.

Mr. Deans: As my colleague says, pollution regulations for example. For many, many years we were unable to identify the sources of much of the illness that is created in certain parts of the country. It only came laterally to the minds of many that these illnesses were the result of pollution that had been unrestricted. Therefore, regulation of one kind or another has to be put in place. We must keep that in mind as we look at the whole question of regulation, what it is intended to do, where it came from in the first place and what caused it to be put there. We cannot rely solely on the goodwill of others to ensure that safety standards and protections will automatically be maintained if regulations are eliminated or abolished. That will be the way that this Party will approach the question of the review of the many regulations which are in place. In fact, I would venture the opinion that, although the Minister says that there are countless volumes of them, we have to look carefully to try to understand what caused the regulation to be put there in the first place and then make sure that there is in place some alternative means of protecting the public from an unacceptable action taken either against them or by someone inadvertently which causes them harm.

● (1540)

There is potential danger to Canadians in a wholesale program of deregulation. We have seen evidence of that in other parts of the world. We have to guard constantly against the tendency of Governments on the right to believe that somehow or other getting the Government off the backs of people, which is the phrase most frequently used, frees those people to do things they would be desirous of doing without any detrimental effect to themselves or to anyone else.

For example, the deregulation of banks by its very nature causes people to have concerns about whether or not banks are safe, stable and using good and sound practices. That is not necessarily a particularly desirable thing for Government to do. If the deregulation of trucking, as it inevitably does, means that we will be able to send something more cheaply from point "a" to point "b", there will not be any guarantees of the safety standards necessary to guarantee that if we happen to be on the same highway we will not be the unwilling victims of accidents caused by a lack of proper maintenance. We must weigh that, and I come to the conclusion, therefore, that the deregulation of trucking, if it takes place in any wholesale way, has to be measured carefully against the potential for danger.

There is no doubt that one will be able to take a cheaper flight from here to some other point if the airlines are deregulated. However, will the airplanes be as safe? Will the necessary maintenance have been done? Will the checks and balances still be in place to guarantee that when we are up there we will get down safely? I think the record shows that there are some serious safety questions emerging in the United States now as a result of the deregulation of the airlines.

Over the course of the last few days we have been dealing in the House with a very serious accident. The Government has indicated, through the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), that it intends to move toward deregulation of the railroads. But at what cost? It is becoming increasingly more apparent that the safety standards and inspection procedures are questionable even now. I predict that the deregulation and the necessity for cutthroat competition, which will supposedly result in lower costs, will result in a very dangerous situation. There is the potential for a very dangerous situation when it comes to safety and maintenance of the rolling stock and rail beds.

What good does it do to be able to buy a cheaper can of tuna if in fact it is cheaper as a result of not having been properly inspected? Of course that would flow from deregulation within that particular industry. While I accept the need to look at regulations very carefully and the proposal for reform of the regulations and the regulatory system, I caution the Minister that reform must always take second place to safety, that reform must always take second place to consumer protection, and that reform must always take second place to the paramount importance of guaranteeing that the public of Canada will be protected from abuses which flow from a market system that makes it very difficult to maintain a proper level of safety and maintenance. What becomes at risk, particularly in certain consumer areas when one starts to attack regulations, is the reputation built up over many years and acknowledged by the world of the quality of Canadian produce which we sell. As we are looking at the potential for deregulation, we must always bear in mind that there are other costs far greater than the cost of maintaining, updating and publishing the regulations which protect us from abuse.

I do not envy the Minister his role, not for one moment. It will be a very difficult task. To the extent that the Government is sensitive about the matters I have raised—and I have only touched the tip of it—there may well be room to reduce the amount of regulation which is currently within our society. I will be the first to applaud when we uncover the areas where it can be done without social costs. However, I suggest that the Minister bear in mind that the free market system, the one which he and his colleagues are so eager to promote, carries with it certain dangers that can and have in the past resulted in inferior product and inferior work. With that in mind, the cost to Canada of deregulation in certain areas and the cost to individual Canadians of deregulation in certain areas, therefore, could turn out to be far greater than the cost of maintaining the regulation now in place which has been identified by the Deputy Prime Minister in his statement.

With those few words, I say that obviously we will want to take part because we believe that there must be a watchdog function. There is an absolute necessity for a vigilant review of what the Government proposes to do, of why the regulation was put there and of what would be the consequence of its removal, before we will subscribe to any change. I wish the minister well. I do not know where in heaven's name he will find the time to do this in addition to the responsibilities he now has. I know, from dealing with him on a daily basis, that it is difficult enough to find time to meet now. How we will find time to meet after he assumes this responsibility is somewhat confusing. However, I want to tell him, as I always do, that I am available at six o'clock in the morning for House Leaders' meetings. I am always here or hereabouts. If he cannot make it to my meeting at six o'clock in the morning, perhaps he can plan other ones.

Mr. Prud'homme: Are you not just arriving home by 6 a.m.?

Mr. Deans: No, I am on my way back.

• (1550)

We are in support, but it is very qualified and the qualification that I place under the qualifications that I have mentioned—there are so many of them that I could stand all day and list them, I do not want to do that, it is not necessary. I think I have made my point.

PETITIONS

LICENSING OF SATELLITE TELEVISION SYSTEMS IN CONDOMINIUMS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and my duty to present to the House a petition signed by 1,555 residents of the Crescent Town community in my riding, calling on the House to amend Bill C-20, the communications Bill, in order to exempt satellite television communication systems of condominium corporations from the requirements of licensing by the CRTC so the condominiums will be treated in the same way as homeowners.

POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF CN MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is once again my pleasure to present today petitions supporting the initiative undertaken by the SOS—"Save Our Shop"—Committee regarding the future of CN shops in Moncton.

Over 200 people from the federal constituencies of Westmoreland-Kent and Moncton have signed these petitions, Mr. Speaker, in order to express their deep concern and demand that the jobs at CN shops in Moncton be protected.

[English]

REINSTATEMENT OF FUNDING FOR KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have received a large number of letters from a variety of young people who have been involved in Katimavik, and they all call upon this Government and the House to reinstate full funding for the Katimavik Program for young people of Canada, as its value to them is very great. We would like to pass it on to other young Canadians.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of people from Kamloops, British Columbia, who are still hoping that the Government will come to its senses and reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind the unfair tax increases that were in the last Budget as we await day by day now the tax increases in the new Budget. Nevertheless they continue to try.

POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by about 600 residents of Winnipeg and other parts of Manitoba who demand that Canada Post Corporation make improved and expanded postal services its number one priority. The Government should refrain from interfering with the operation of Canada Post so that it can expand into revenue-generating services which will lessen the dependency on Government subsidies to offset the deficit of the corporation.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, question No. 477 will be answered today.

Order Paper Questions

[Text]

CSIS BUDGET

Question No. 477—Mr. Robinson:

1. Did the Government recently allocate a budget of $116 million to the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) and, if so, what portion of the budget was used for the surveillance of groups and individuals in (a) Canada (b) the Province of Quebec?

2. How many CSIS officers were designated for surveillance of groups and individuals in (a) Canada (b) the Province of Quebec?

3. How many files on groups and individuals in (a) Canada (b) the Province of Quebec are kept by the CSIS?

4. Does the CSIS keep files on (a) the Société Saint-Jean-Baptiste de Montréal (SSJB-M) (b) the Mouvement national des Québécois (MNQ) (c) Mr. Gilles Rhéaume of the SSJB-M and the MNQ (d) the Groupe de recherche sur la paix et le désarmement de l'Université Laval (GRPD-UL) (e) Mr. Louis O'Neil and Mr. Eric Poole of the GRPD-UL?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): 1. The Government has allocated a budget of $116 million to the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) to fulfil its duties and functions under the CSIS Act.

(a) and (b) It is not in the national security interest, however, to specify what portions of the budget are allocated regionally or to specific threats to the security of Canada as defined in s.2 of the CSIS Act.

2. (a) and (b) As specified in s.12 of the CSIS Act, the Service collects "by investigation or otherwise, to the extent that it is strictly necessary" . . . "information and intelligence respecting activities that may on reasonable grounds be suspected of constituting threats to the security of Canada". It would not be in the national interest for security reasons to reveal any specific details in relation to CSIS' investigations.

3. (a) and (b) S.12 of the CSIS Act authorizes CSIS to "retain information and intelligence respecting activities that may on reasonable grounds be suspected of constituting threats to the security of Canada". It would be improper for security reasons to comment further on separate files held by the Service.

4. See response to question 3 above.

[Translation]

Mr. Lewis: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the other questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question indicated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STANDING ORDERS—PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn:

That the proposed amendments to the Standing Orders, laid upon the Table on Thursday, February 6, 1986 (Sessional Paper No. 331-7/37A) be adopted and made provisional Standing Orders of the House.

Provided that, unless otherwise ordered;

1. the said provisional Standing Orders shall be in force from 11.00 o'clock a.m. Monday, February 24, 1986 until the House adjourns on the last sitting day in December, 1986;

2. and futher to the Order made on June 27, 1985, the provisional Standing Orders thereby adopted shall continue in force during the same period; and

3. the Clerk of the House shall be authorized and instructed to print a revised and renumbered edition of the Standing Orders integrating the provisional Standing Orders and making any necessary amendments in consequence thereof, or relating thereto in respect of the Standing Orders concerning Private Bills, and to make such changes to the Order Paper and Notices as may be required.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I wish to inform the House that because of the minister's statement, the sitting today will last 41 minutes longer. Therefore, the Private Members's Business hour will start at 5.41.

When the House adjourned at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) had three minutes left.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I shall ask for a minute of two at the end.

But earlier today, when I finished at 1 p.m., and I was saying that all Members in the House—

[English]

—in a very orderly fashion find a way by which at long last we will stop sitting on Friday afternoon for the reason that I expressed this morning. I have received a lot of support for that from many Members, especially from the majority over there. I think that instead of finishing at five o'clock, because it looks bad if we do not, Members should go to their district. A federal Member of Parliament needs to be here five days a week and to look after his constituency on the weekend. I think we could find some consent on this.

There is another subject I would like to touch on because the famous McGrath Report did not touch on it. It is the question of the prayer in the House of Commons. Ever since I have been a Member of Parliament nobody has wanted to touch it because there was no agreement on it. Everybody agrees that we should change the prayer of the day because it does not reflect the multicultural population of Canada, but no one can agree on a prayer.

When I was at the Ottawa University in 1957 I created quite a shock and a scandal because I felt that in recognition of the multiconfessional aspect of the people attending the University of Ottawa we should have one full minute of silent prayer, so that everyone could call on whatever God they believed in to help them in their deliberations. Here we do it in secret; we do not even do it with the door open. I wish Canadians would ask for it. I have no objections to praying for the entire Royal Family, but it is difficult to believe how unCanadian and unmulticonfessional the prayer is.

If I had more time I would have liked to speak about the election of the Speaker. I believe very strongly in the sense of reform.

I see a very prominent member of the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services, and I think the time has come to ask the Chairman of that committee, whoever he may be—at the moment I have the honour of having been chosen but I am not talking for myself—with your kind indulgence, Mr. Speaker if I could finish in an orderly fashion—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I understand the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prudhomme) requires unanimous consent to proceed. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Prud'homme: I will not abuse the privilege which Members are giving me.

I would think that now that we have a new Board of Internal Economy, in order to have some input by the real back-bencher, the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services should also sit on it. It is for the advantage of the Members.

I would also like to speak about the question of the lobbyists disclosure. I can imagine how strong the lobbyists are in this country because they succeeded in lobbying so strongly that the law that we were to see brought in will not take place.

There is also the question of conflict of interest of Members of Parliament conflict of interest that we are looking into in our Members' Services Committee. I think this is quite a severe task to do and we would have liked to speak about that.

I will conclude by saying that the committee has done an excellent job. We are very happy with the majority of its recommendations. I would hope that those who are deliberating with each other about what will be changed will have the necessary flexibility to allow us to dispose of this package. I know that while we are talking at the moment there is some deliberation taking place at another level where the three Parties are represented, so we may find some agreement in order to develop new rules. I will conclude by thanking you for having given me a little more time to put some of my thoughts in front of my colleagues.

• (1600)

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi).

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) mentioned the committee proceedings, what takes place in parliamentary committees. I would like to ask the Member for Saint-Denis if he could comment or be more specific on the work of parliamentary committees.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, so that we can entertain as many questions as possible, yes indeed, I think that the difficulty might be to reconcile the idea that from now on there will be smaller committees——that from now on there will be smaller committees but at the same time we do not know how many legislative committees there will be. I suppose we always start with what we know best. I would like to have the honour of chairing, at the request of the Speaker, a legislative committee on the employment equity Bill along with a good group of people.

[English]

At the same time as there are legislative committees, there is also a multiplicity of other committees. There are 211 Government Members, so we must have that kind of flexibility. Canadians, in a very democratic way, chose 211 Government Members and only 40 official Opposition Members and 30 NDP Members. We must have the necessary flexibility and we must not have too many legislative committees.

The other committees, the standing committees, sit at night. This makes no sense. A Party's expert on a standing committee is of course the best Member to sit on the legislative committee. When I was a younger Member, I was happy to report to my electorate that I was the only Member of the House of Commons sitting on seven standing committees, until I received a letter from an oldtime Member of Parliament who told me to start looking into my work in an orderly fashion. He told me that if I tried to be an expert in everything, I would end up being an expert in nothing. He was absolutely right. I liked to please my Whip, so there I was running around. The Whip told me he needed a Member in this committee and I arrived at the committee and adjusted to the subject matter of it. Then the Whip said he needed someone to vote in another committee and I went. That made no sense.

We like to believe that we know everything, but I think we should become experts in a few subjects. If we really know the subject matter, we will be able to defend the interests of Canadians who elect us and want us to defend them. That is why we are here.

I look forward to having the kind of flexibility in the system that will not allow legislative committees to multiply unduly. Even though standing committees and legislative committees are not supposed to sit at the same time, a member of a legislative committee will have to attend committee meetings while the House is sitting and then at night he will have to attend meetings of the standing committee. This makes no sense.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), and you will agree that he is acting wisely, based of course on his intelligence as well as his long experience of representing his constituents. In his wisdom, the Hon. Member told us that it was most important for each Member of the House to spend time meeting people in their constituencies, and he in fact alluded to a rescheduling of the fridays. I would like the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis to elaborate somehow on this restructuring of Fridays which would enable Hon. Members to spend more time in their constituencies.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, we have indeed discussed that matter for years, but a prominent Member of Parliament was always reluctant and said: No, we should sit five days a week. But I have the feeling that we could now reach a conclusion, as I have noticed this morning a lot of support in favour of rescheduling our sittings so that on Fridays Members of Parliament could be free at least by 2 p.m. without the Government wasting time that it considers appropriate.

It is therefore just a matter of rescheduling the sittings of the House. The people of Canada do not have to tell us . . . The Canadian people are surprised that Members of Parliament are not even able to organize their own schedule.

It would just be a matter of meeting at 10 o'clock on Fridays, or even 9 o'clock and adjourning at 1 p.m., or starting at 10 o'clock and adjourning at 2 p.m., instead of 5 p.m. when there is no one left in the House or just three or four Members, which is often nerve-wracking for the whips because a Member might just decide to ask if there is a quorum, and that is most annoying.

And I strongly believe that as adults—

[English]

I strongly believe that we should put our own house in order and be flexible regarding Fridays without taking any time away from the Government or from private Members. All we have to do is to look around us on Friday afternoons between four and five o'clock. It is a disastrous afternoon.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have three or four questions I would like to ask, and I will try to be very brief.

I wish the Hon. Member would tell us what he thinks about registration of Members' trips? Second, electronic vote versus recorded vote. I know his views on the subject differ from mine. Perhaps he would like to elaborate.

Third, the Government proposal includes a recommendation to limit the number of questions that can be put on the Order Paper. The number will be limited to four, and the Speaker will be able to say to a Member: your oral question should be placed on the Order Paper, and invite him or her to do so.

What happens if the Member in question already has four questions on the Order Paper? Will his oral question have to wait or has the Hon. Member already considered it might be possible to maintain the present formula, which has not been abused by Members, and also that one should not limit the number of written questions on the Order Paper of the House of Commons?

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I am starting to regret the fact I did not put in my name for the McGrath Committee, because then I would have had a chance to elaborate on all these questions.

It is true that as far as the vote is concerned, my Whip and I do not see eye to eye.

• (1610)

[English]

The Party Whip would like to go on as is, and I think we should have electronic votes with the exception of votes on matters of great importance, on which all Members should have the opportunity to rise and be counted. I will not say which issues are of great importance. Each of us has our own issues which we feel are of great importance including the death penalty, abortion, the Budget and votes on non-confidence. Yes, I believe there should be electronic voting but with exceptions. Therefore, I am not totally in agreement with my very competent and tough Whip who does a good job.

[Translation]

As to trips by parliamentarians, I think the time has come to stop all this hypocrisy. For years I have wanted to do this, because people see it as a big mystery, and Mr. Speaker, I really do want to answer that particular question, because it affects all parliamentarians, and I am sure that I will have the unanimous consent of the House for saying what my experience has been in the last twenty years.

We are federal Members—

[English]

We are federal legislators. If I were not interested in international affairs, I would have run provincially. As a Member of the House at the federal level, I believe that it is my duty to be interested in international affairs. I am sure we would be able to explain that to the people who question these trips taken by Members. I am not afraid to explain that to members of the press if they give us a fair trial and I am not afraid to explain it to the people if we are given a direct connection, as we have now on television, with the people.

It is important that federal Members get to know the world and it is important that they introduce Canada to other parts of the world. I am not talking about Europe but more especially about the non-allied countries. When a Parliamentarian meets a counterpart in the eastern part of the world, he knows that that counterpart is directly connected to power.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that is my experience. When we meet parliamentarians in all the international bodies, usually they are directly connected to the Head of State or to those who run their countries. These issues are not as sophisticated as all that. And the contacts parliamentarians can make can only benefit Canada, and they can also be useful in showing others how we operate in this country.

We are being asked everywhere: How do your parliamentary committees operate? What does such a thing mean? What does that mean, officers of the table? Those people have not experienced the same development as we have in Canada which is a very fortunate country. Therefore we should not be afraid to go on those trips. And then on our return to the House, we should be given the opportunity to use 20 minutes of House time to report.

[English]

That is what there is in the Senate. Every parliamentary group which travels abroad has the flexibility to report back. In this way people can read what went on while it was away. Accordingly, I think the time has come to cut off the secrecy with respect to parliamentary trips. We are grown up men and women; we can take our responsibilities seriously. We can explain. If we cannot, and if we chicken out, then all we have to do is not to accept a trip abroad. If there is some mystery involved, then one does not have to go.

I believe that a book should be kept somewhere, perhaps in the Speaker's Chamber or even with the Clerk of the House, in which Members would write: "I, so-and-so, was the guest of such-and-such government", or: "I, so-and-so, went to such-and-such as a member of a delegation". I do not think this record book should be kept just for certain trips. For example, this Friday I am going to represent my Party at the Francophone summit.

[Translation]

With respect to the Francophonie Summit, I have been asked to represent my party. There will be 1 NDP member, 8 PC members and four ministers. I do not see why that should be registered in a book even if it is an official delegation. Then all the members are treated on the same footing.

[English]

On the question of trips, it is a well known fact that every time a Minister goes abroad he or she brings along what I used to call the favourite Member. Nobody knows of this until several months after the trip when a colleague will say to the Minister: "I heard you went to such-and-such with so-and-so". Why should that fall under this veil of mystery, as if something not quite kosher had taken place? I appreciate the openness. I think that is what we should defend. Canadians want openness. I believe the men and women of the press will know what openness means. They will also know that everyone is being treated equally.

My colleague asked me questions with respect to electronic voting and trips taken by parliamentarians. As far as questions on the Order Paper are concerned, I agree with the Hon. Member. I have not made up my mind so I will leave the matter to the House Leaders who, at the moment, are deliberating on the matter.

I conclude by saying that the time has come for us to deal with these matters. Last night I spoke with God and she told me that she would prefer Members of Parliament to pray in public. What is so mysterious about the prayers of parliamentarians? I think we should have open doors and an open confessional which will truly represent the multicultural aspects of our country.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I rise with some hesitation because of the eloquence and inspiration which has been provided by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). It is always a pleasure to listen to a Member, who has such great experience and longevity in the House of Commons, give us the full benefit of his wisdom. I mean that with all sincerity. It is unfortunate that the rules of this place allow only a 20-minute presentation. We could have spent much more time listening to someone who has such a great wealth of ideas and views expound upon how we can improve our working place and how we can make it a better and more effective arena for the representation which we are all here to perform.

I offer my more limited credentials in this debate. The other night while I was picking up some papers from my home town, where I was reporting on the recently called election, it dawned on me that it has been some 13 years since I first found myself in an elected assembly. While that may not be long by comparison to the time which my friend, the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle), has spent here, the fact of the matter is that 13 years does give one a certain sense of both the privileges which one has in being a member of an elected chamber and the strangeness of life which ensues once elected. As we all know there can be no greater honour than having a group of one's fellow citizens choose one to come to this place full of grand hopes and expectations about what we can achieve, only to find oneself convoluted and convulsed by all the strange and exotic mysteries of how to make it all work.

After 13 years one thing which has impressed me greatly is how, over the years of evolution of parliamentary procedure, a remarkable balancing act has taken place. What we do not recognize is that Parliament is really a whole series of dichotomies, a whole series of opposites. There is the Government versus the Opposition, which is the standard type of see-saw we see. There are many others. There is the executive branch versus the legislative branch. One tries to make decisions while the other tries to hold the decision accountable. Obviously, there is an important balance between the interests of the individual Member of Parliament and those of his or her caucus. These factors also have to be balanced out. Every day that we show up for business in this place there is a balancing act taking place. There is an attempt at trying to find some type of harmony of symmetry with the issues of the day. There is an attempt at trying to find some way of making it all work so that things do not get out of balance. That is why a debate with respect to the rules is so important. The rules can substantially shift where the priority, the emphasis, the weight, the power and the influence lie in Parliament. If one makes a wrong choice with respect to the rules, if one shades them too far in one way, then one gives distinct advantage to one of the particular balancing acts about which I spoke. We know, for example, that if a football league decides to change the rules which apply to wide receivers and it prevents the defence from bumping them as they come off the scrimmage line, then one immediately gives advantage to the offence. Similarly, one can change the rules and all of a sudden the defence will have an extreme advantage.

The questions we have to ask are: Where do these rules come down? How do they affect the balance in terms of the workings of Parliament? How do they affect the rights of individual Members versus those of the collegiality to which they belong? How do they affect the balance between the Government and the Opposition? How do they affect the balance between the executive branch which makes decisions and the legislative branch which holds them accountable?

Certainly, the stated purpose of these rule changes as articulated by the special committee and the Government House Leader in presenting them to the House is to give greater emphasis to the individual Member of Parliament. Of course, that strikes music to the ears of individual Members, which is why I think that in many cases there is a natural inclination to support these particular proposals. We must also ask ourselves to what degree they may shade or push even further out of balance some of the other legitimate and important functions of this place. The role of Parliament is not just to have individual Members arrive here to present their own particular case. Obviously, the most important function is to hold accountable the actions of the Government. That is what makes us so distinctly different from any other form of Government.

The other day the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that he wishes he had the same rights as the President of the United States and that he would not have to show up for Question Period every day. I suppose anyone who serves as a Minister would share those feelings. For them, Question Period is like the Garden of Gethsemane. It is the time when one is held to account. Anything which would change that would not only be unnecessary but it would cut into, and erode, some of the central principles of Parliament. However, when one looks at the changes about which we are speaking there may also be similar problems with respect to accountability. It must be asked: To what degree the law affects this place, as it does from time to time, in terms of keeping Government honest, open and responsible? It must also be asked: To what degree will the ability of a combined mass of Members coming together, whether in Question Period or in debate, be affected by these rule changes?

This is why the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) raised some serious cautions in his presentation. He raised them with respect to the functions of the committee and of the individual Member. He said that, in fact, we may be eroding or drawing down the capacity of Parliament to work as it should from time to time as the great crucible in which the issues of the day are exposed and in which the Government is held accountable.

Let me talk for a moment about the role of committees. I have been a member of many different committees and have seen how they operate. I believe that these rule changes fall short of achieving the objective that was established. Let me give some examples.

I thought that the committee in the last Parliament dealing with the problems of the handicapped played an invaluable role. It was chaired by the former Member for Don Valley West and was very much influenced by the former Member for Brandon-Souris, the late Walter Dinsdale, who died in office. He had a very sincere and incredible knowledge of this area. Those two Members were able to use that committee as a forum for drawing public attention to a series of issues that had been long neglected. As a Minister of that previous Government, I can testify as to how influential that committee was in putting those issues on the table and setting them on the agenda for Cabinet discussion. That committee achieved a remarkable record of success over three and four years of bringing forth legislation, regulation and initiatives on behalf of handicapped people.

Similarly, I can think back to my days in the provincial House when I was a member of the family law committee that worked for two years to overcome an incredible wealth of prejudice that had long existed in terms of property rights of men and women in marriage. Over a period of time, through the force of its public exposure, it was able to mobilize public opinion and eventually bring about major legislative change.

I also think of the recent action of the Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations, whose chairman is in the House today. Last summer that committee served as a forum in the debate on star wars for a number of concerned Canadians. It gave them an opportunity to present their views and it ultimately mobilized public opinion, which obviously influenced the Government's decision about whether it should take part in star wars research.

These are issues in which parliamentary committees played an important role. They were able to fulfil that role because they had the ability to link with a high level of public identity and exposure. These committees were able to attract the attention of the media because of their partnership with the public on specific issues, which also mobilized the public constituency in the country.

I am concerned that there is nothing in these rule changes that will allow the new committee structure to provide for that kind of link with the public. One of the problems in the House of Commons is the incredible focus that is placed on Question Period. It is generally referred to as "show-biz time" because that is where all the media attention is focused. I defy Members to find any report of speeches made in the House or the work in committees reported in the local news, the national television news or even in the newspapers. It seems that Parliament has been turned on its head, and I suggest that the committee and these rule proposals have failed to address how to put Parliament back into its proper perspective as a debating forum rather than the show-biz arena with 45 minutes of comedy routines.

I understand the attraction of Question Period. Television has made the difference because the television audience does not enjoy talking heads, it enjoys conflict. That is why wrestling and other sports events are so popular; people like the one-on-one, hand-to-hand combat. To a great extent, Question Period has that quality.

I doubt very much whether people are educated or better informed by watching Question Period, because the question and response system is presently designed as a partisan form of game playing, with some rare exceptions. It is like a game show on television, competing for audiences during that particular time slot. This detracts from the role that Parliament should play in its committee and its debate on legislation.

We are concerned that the rule changes should not be implemented in an ad hoc manner but should reflect the broader perspective in order to make his place a far more relevant and significant institution for the debate of public issues. That is what I believe Canadians want, rather than relegating Parliament to the level of a game show or soap opera. It may be advantageous for attracting audiences, but ultimately Parliament must be a place for debate. I do not believe that the rule changes have addressed that issue at all.

We have heard much rhetoric about the role of committees but I suggest that those committees are only as good as their individual members. Furthermore, those members are only as good as their access to research, their staff and their ability to present informed questions about issues of importance to them.

We know that the daily routine of Members of Parliament makes it difficult for them to find the time to do the necessary research to prepare for committees. They have far too many phone calls and constituency problems and caucus meetings to be able to obtain that substantial and useful information. Yet, the Member of Parliament is expected to become a paragon of wisdom under the new committee system and to take on new legislative initiatives and new levels of accountability. The rules do not take into account how the Member of Parliament will be able to get better access to research information and better staff resources. Unfortunately, this involves spending money and increasing the bureaucracy of Parliament.

I believe it is self-defeating to provide more responsibility to a Member of Parliament without providing the wherewithal to meet that responsibility. We are not taking a great leap forward if these reforms cannot be achieved because there is no capacity to meet those demands. That is why I believe parliamentary reform must take more than greater responsibility into account. We must also provide the means of meeting that responsibility.

What about the role of individual Members of Parliament representing their constituents? I was a Minister for almost five years, particularly in the portfolio of Employment and Immigration, in which there are numerous requests from Members of Parliament concerning immigration cases, unemployment insurance cases and job creation cases. Much of my time was spent acting almost like an ombudsman, trying to arbitrate the decisions of the bureaucracy brought to my attention by Members, as they legitimately should.

I ask all Hon. Members if they are satisfied that the system works effectively and they are able to deal effectively with the case work they receive in their constituency offices on the weekend? My colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis, said that if you are one of the Ministers' favourite sons or daughters, you may get a response. However, there are 282 Members in this House and all of us, to a greater or lesser degree, have individual cases of concern, whether it be immigration, pensions or unemployment insurance. What is the turn-around time? Three months? Four months? Some go on for six or seven months. Some immigration cases go on for a full year. I would suggest that if we are really concerned about how to achieve a greater role and responsibility for the individual Member, we have to recognize that a large part of the role is acting as a court of last resort for individuals frustrated by the bureaucracy. They cannot get access or fair decisions. The time honoured role of an MP is to provide that court of last resort and bring the issue to this Chamber or a Minister's attention.

However, the process, once the issue is brought here, is archaic and obsolete. Some Government Departments have two or three hundred correspondence secretaries handling these cases and telling people that, yes, the Minister has received their letter and we will get back. I do not have to go through it; any Minister knows exactly how the game is played. This is wrong. It is ineffective, and there are better ways of doing it. One technique we began to experiment with in the Department of Transport was establishing the office of Inspector General. That officer did not report to the Deputy Minister, but rather had direct access to the Minister and any level of the bureaucracy. Grievances and complaints could be raised in that way, and it would at the same time provide a focal point for Members of Parliament to refer these cases. That would be that persons' full-time job. When a particular problem in a given bureaucracy is identified, then they would have the right and responsibility to get it corrected. Why are we not doing that kind of thing to make the job of an individual Member of Parliament more successful?

I would just use the time remaining to say that I welcome with relief the opportunity of dealing with government appointments in committee. As Members of this House will know, we have been asking for close to five months to have the new trade negotiator, Mr. Reisman, appear before the committee so we can find out what his mandate is. We have been told consistently by the Prime Minister and others that that would not happen until these rules were established. Perhaps the time has now arrived and the day of reckoning will soon be here for Mr. Reisman and his points of view on trade. However, why do we have the power simply to hold hearings? I think we all realize that something like this is only significant when there is some power attached, some decision-making responsibility. The U.S. Senate has a very important function, it is called advise and consent. It is that ability to consent which is a very important bargaining point in establishing the rights of the legislative branch to hold the executive branch accountable. We have not gone that far. We have not given our committees the opportunity to restrain or restrict an appointment they consider to be totally unacceptable. Therefore, the process is, in part, meaningless. It may make certain information public but it will not give us the opportunity to ensure bad appointments can be withheld or stopped.

With those thoughts about where Parliament should go, I would say that the steps we are taking here are useful, but they are by no means the reforms which are necessary to make this place a modern place of work for all of us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: I should like to congratulate the Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) for his statement and ask him his views and his position concerning the power given to the Chair to suspend a Member for up to five days as a result of a decision.

[English]

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I have to confess to some concern about that kind of power. As we know, the Speaker is the servant of the House.

Mr. Gauthier: First Commoner.

Mr. Axworthy: The extremely serious decision to deny a Member the privilege of occupying his seat should be taken by the House. Presently the Government House Leader must present a motion to expel a Member. While some may say that this is almost automatic, it is not necessarily so. I have been in this House when the Speaker's ruling was obviously seen to be the wrong one. After tempers had cooled, we found ways to rework or rearrange the decision. The Speaker is human, and all too human at times. We recognize that. I would refer to the comments made yesterday by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). She asked what would happen if a Member was expelled at the time when there was a major crisis in the Member's riding which was of extreme importance and he or she was denied the opportunity to speak.

I think in this case the changes have gone too far. Our House Leader on this side took the position that some rule changes should be carefully reviewed again before they are agreed to by this House.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in congratulating the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) on his remarks. I know him to be a hard-working Member and he has assiduously tried to fulfil his House, committee and constituency duties. I would like him, as a Member from Western Canada, to comment on the challenge to a Member in trying to cope with a series of legislative, standing and special committees, as well as task forces. This is in addition to the many other functions he has as Member of Parliament. How does he reconcile this with an increased workload for every Member of the House? Does he not think we should adopt the British system of queuing our legislation so that we have at the maximum seven or eight committees instead of 15 or 20 sometimes?

Mr. Lewis: Without the staff you used to have.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I thought for a moment our Whip was going to ask me how I, as a Liberal Member from western Canada, get by. It is a matter of sheer survival. In some ways the rules in which I am much more interested are those concerning the game laws in the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, in order to stay alive.

The Hon. Member raises an important point. About two weeks ago I had a conversation with a former Member of Parliament who represented a Winnipeg constituency back in the 1940s and 1950s. We bumped into each other. He was reminiscing about his days in the House and he talked about the time when Members would get on the train to go back to their constituency, having been in Ottawa for three or four months. The conclusion he came to was that modern-day communications have not been of great help to Members of Parliament, that they have in fact substantially increased our workload. We are overloading the system. I do not think that the human psyche, temperament or physiology are really built to handle all the responsibilities a Member of Parliament is expected to handle, to say nothing of a Minister of the Crown with administrative duties. We have to be a little more realistic and recognize that to do a good job you need the time and the resources. It is foolish and foolhardy to think that somehow you can have an ever-expanding set of demands without having something to give. So what gives, the time you spend in your constituency? The time you spend with your family? That, quite frankly, is what usually gives. That is the real poison in the system. When you have a highly efficient and demanding Whip and a highly demanding set of committee responsibilities, you start shaving off time spent with your wife, children, and friends. You can no longer find extra moments for reflection and thinking. That must, after all, ultimately be the basis of strength.

We need a way of organizing the committee system to allow forward planning of one's time as well as much more careful consideration of travel requirements. There is a psychology that virtually every committee which is established must cover almost every city, town, village, and hamlet. If a committee does not go to a particular town, that town feels it has been ignored. As a result, there are many travelling road shows. Sometimes Members are expected to join three or four of those a year. Not only does the time spent in your office diminish, but the lack of personal time becomes a very major impairment.

In the consideration of these rules I strongly urge that one be more realistic and fair to Members of Parliament with regard to the responsibilities of committee work. If we are not going to do that, the least we can do is to ensure that Members have the resources to meet those demands, which resources we certainly do not have at the present time.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I want to pursue the point of having numerous standing committees going about their work while, at the same time, there are legislative committees dealing with the same subject matter. That makes it very difficult for Members as it is impossible to be in two places at the same time. I am thinking of the de Havilland committee, for example, which had expertise available to it. Members who were interested in this very important subject were called upon to attend legislative committees dealing with subject matters related to trade, the high technology industry, and the aviation industry at the same time.

We would like the assurance of the Government that these new rules will be put into effect with some sensitivity to the fact that Members of Parliament cannot be in two places at the same time. If a committee studies a subject which is of importance to Members who are required to attend other committee meetings at that time, we would like the Government to postpone making its decision until that committee has reported. I know the Member has experience in these matters. What is his experience in terms of task forces and special committees and how they should relate to House business?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, as we have observed many times in this House, there are occasions when it becomes more like a three-ring circus than a serious legislative forum. Our Party Whip has put his finger on one of the serious flaws in this package of proposals. It is not realistic to believe that that can happen.

I suggest that there should be some machinery for administering the special legislative committees, whether through a committee of Whips or delegates from each caucus. If we are seriously talking about Members of Parliament having more control over their own destiny and time, it should be worked out in a way that is equitable and fair to all, rather than simply leaving it to the whims of the Government House Leader who is under pressure from his Cabinet colleagues to get legislation through. There must be some countervail to that. Perhaps a formal committee of the House, set up under the House Leaders, to administer the allocation of time for committees would be a proper way of ensuring that it is not abused.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I welcome this opportunity to take part in this debate on the parliamentary reform proposals. I am sure that over the years, the experience I have acquired here in the House is quite considerable, but unfortunately, it would take more than fifteen or twenty minutes to elaborate on its various aspects.

However, I can inform my hon. colleagues that parliamentary life is a very complicated one, and that I am delighted the Government has finally decided to try to improve and enhance it, especially in terms of the role of the individual Member.

I must of course congratulate the members of the McGrath Committee, and especially the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), who so ably chaired the Committee's meetings, who produced this weighty and well-structured report, and who, I hope, will be ready to guide parliamentarians whenever further parliamentary reform will be necessary.

I have always maintained that the Hon. Member for St. John's East is a great Canadian parliamentarian, and he has demonstrated this, not only in the way he drafted and structured his report but also ever since he became a Member of the House of Commons. I have seen him at work for over twenty years. He is a lively speaker, a very active parliamentarian whose speeches are often colourful and always well-crafted. I would suggest his time and talents could be put to good use in areas other than his present concerns, and I think this would certainly benefit the House as a whole.

I wish him every success for the future, Mr. Speaker, and he has my full confidence and high esteem.

We talk about enhancing the role of the individual member, because that role has lost much of its effectiveness in this House.

If we take a brief look at the history of Parliament, I think that the British parliamentary system or at least the rules within the Commonwealth have formed the basis for the Canadian parliamentary system, except that over time, the Mother of Parliaments has introduced improvements and reforms which we may have overlooked in Canada, although our Parliament is so closely modelled on that of Westminster.

I always tell my colleagues, and I was listening to my hon. friend from Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) with whom I have had the pleasure of sitting in this House for many years, I have always said that to any Member who has been sitting in Parliament for a number of years, the happiest day of his life as a Member is the night of his election when, in the middle of an enthusiastic crowd, he is on cloud nine, with music and dancing and a general euphoria all around. It is absolute heaven.

However, after the enthusiasm of the election campaign fades and he buys a new suit to pose for the cameras at his swearing in, his first session in Parliament begins.

I think that this Member, now sitting in his seat, probably lost in a single week all his illusions about his role as a Member in the House of Commons. The very same Member, who during his election campaign said what he was going to do and how he was going to make Parliament sit up and what he was going to tell the people who are responsible for forming the Government. Now all of a sudden he feels useless, and his feelings of inferiority will become harder and harder to hide, and that is why over the years, we have seen many legitimate complaints by newly elected members who become frustrated with the role they have to play in Parliament.

● (1650)

Today, being a parliamentarian is very exciting. It is a very important task but it is also very frustrating. There are a number of reasons for this, Mr. Speaker. First of all, there is the whole matter of the constraints put on the Member by his political party. Allegiance, the convention of confidence, and the structuring of Government Members all mean that these Members can do absolutely nothing unless they bow to those constraints. A Member may not, for whatever reason, vote against his party, especially if he is on the Government side, unless he wants to lay himself open to severe disciplinary action or even suspension from his party.

I can tell you that during the years I sat in this House I had occasions to vote against my Government on certain issues which were very important to my region and the riding I represent. There was some knuckle-rapping all right, but I was not alone, four of five Members from the National Capital Region did the same, a gesture which was then described as being odious. But I must say that things would be different if Members had more leeway, especially when a problem crops up in a region; the problem might be solved through a private Member's Bill, all the more so if the Member has been able to convince his colleagues that it will benefit not only that region but the country as a whole. I think that the Member's role would be immediately enhanced, and he would be able to make Canada a better country to live in because he would then be echoing the aspirations of the great population of Canada from sea to sea.

Well, we do not have that much leeway. More often than not the Member feels quite powerless, he cannot even have a railway crossing removed even after campaigning on that issue in his riding. You are practically helpless, and all you can do is to attempt through a hard lobbying campaign to convince certain Ministers to make the change you are fighting for to improve the life of your fellow citizens or your constituents. But even that does not work out, Mr. Speaker, because the shackles are still there, the technocrats wield unbelievable power. Even when it comes to drafting legislation and deciding what should be in it you cannot get to first base, you are at their mercy for the simple reason that the technocrat is the one who decides the kind of political direction to be taken with respect to certain problems in Canada.

I am quite pleased to learn that Members will have more power, particularly in committees which are, in my view, the backbone of the House of Commons. The House of Commons is nothing more that a forum where bills are debated, analysed and screened as much as possible, a place where the remarks and views of Members may or may not lead to improved legislation.

I said earlier, I think that it is time for us to find a way, and I am very glad that this is being done, to make the role of Members of Parliaments more relevant, because we have all had this feeling of uselessness in the House of Commons and often in the committees. Even though we say to our constituents that we must be visible, that the role of a Member of Parliament is to be visible and present in his constituency, we know quite well that the House of Commons sits about 10 months each year, five days a week. How can a Member of Parliament be attuned to the needs and demands of his constituents and his region? It is impossible, Mr. Speaker! This is why, as statistics show, many Members are elected to the House of Commons, but few remain for long, maybe not through any fault of their own, but because they did not have the time to do the job of a real Member of Parliament, which is simply to be an ombudsman and a representative of his constituents in the federal Parliament. They are not able to do so because they spend all their time in Ottawa, because, often, they have to move their family to Ottawa, because they do not have any time to go back to their constituency. After four or five years, they are defeated simply because they have been completely cut off from reality and from the aspirations of their own constituents. This certainly shows a weakness in our parliamentary system. When we bring about reforms, we have to be very carefull not to be in too much of a hurry for the simple reason that reform often requires other reforms, but those are not brought about and this often unbalances the whole system. I am very happy that the role of Members will be increased, but I am really anxious to see how this will be done because the recommendations of the Committee have not all been implemented. I hope that many others will be because it would benefit Canadian Parliament. I also hope that Members of Parliament will regain the role they had early in the Confederation, that of representatives of the people. We have become second-class citizens inside this House. We all legislate by lobby, by consensus, by Gallup poll, through the technocrats, through those who provide guidance and even political advice to the Government. We should give more influence and more relevance to the Member of Parliament so that when we legislate, it is in the best interests of Canadians. Perhaps one day, Mr. Speaker, we should perhaps even stop trying to legislate during four or five years and try to go back to improve the statutes which have already been adopted to correct the abuses and restrictions that some of them may have imposed on some groups in our society. In think that, in this way, everyone will take part in the development of Canadian legislation and will be happy to have been able to do so. It is essential for the Member of Parliament to regain his former role, and in this way, we can build a better Canada.

We will have fewer protests, fewer claims, because Canadians will be happier about the situation.

In the years 1930, 1933, 1935, 1940, and I could go as far back as the early years of Confederation, Parliament was not sitting ten months a year, Mr. Speaker. It used to sit three or four months. Perhaps, what with a larger population, greater organization, Parliament can do with six or seven months of session.

But we cannot govern Canadians by legislating ten months a year. If we legislate without knowing the aspirations of the people—and the aspirations of the Canadian people are only expressed here, in Parliament, through their representatives, Members from the 282 constituencies that make up Canada's electoral map.

I tell you in a non-partisan way that many Members realize their uselessness in this House because they have not been given a sufficiently important role.

I appreciate the intention to increase the efficiency and role of the committees, Mr. Speaker. But there again, it is recommended that 26 committees be created, I believe. There are 18 standing comittees, and the other ones, with seven members. This meant that quite a number of Members will still be sitting on those committees. If we add the legislative committees, and God knows how many legislative committees may be sitting at the same time, it then means that you are keeping almost all of Parliament busy, excluding the Ministers! There is nobody left in the House, because everybody is kept busy elsewhere . . . You might say this is hypothetical, because all committees cannot sit at the same time. I agree. But I am also sure that if we had the facilities needed to have Members sitting, and I am talking about rooms that could be made available to committees, there would be days when 25 to 30 committees would be sitting at one and the same time.

Mr. Speaker, this is why I am very pleased to see that the Member's role will be enhanced, "revalorise" in the French version, and I like the word very much because it means the Member was not of a very great value before we came to use the word "revaloriser". I am therefore very happy that the term was used by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), if I am not mistaken, and that the House will become what it should always have been, an essential body for governing all Canadians by making laws, drawing up laws that meet the aspirations of the Canadian people.

And if we do not reach that goal, if again Members are prevented from fully playing their roles—I heard speeches, and almost everybody is singing the same song, it is absolutely vital to enhence the private Member's role.

Before I conclude, Mr. Speaker, I heard among other things, remarks concerning the suspension of Members. It is my view that Members will have their way because this is part of parliamentary life. There are people who are more aggressive than others. There are people who feel more strongly than others that they are being wronged, for the simple reason that they are under heavier attack or because problems come up in their constituencies and apparently the Government cannot or will not listen to them.

I even read in the committee report that the intention was, that it was being considered that it might be better to pass legislation in this House to fine them, like when you go through a red light.

It should be realized, as this has been suggested, that Members are grownups, and responsible people, the proof being that they were elected. When we are told that Members are not very relevant, it must be kept in mind that there are 282 of us from all across Canada. If you divide our total population of 26 million people by this number, I think it shows that each one of us represents a very substantial segment of the Canadian population. Well, Mr. Speaker, that was the modest contribution I wanted to make on the subject of these proposals for parliamentary reform, which I hope will be put into effect as soon as possible—time tell how important these reforms will have been—and if they are not, I hope they will be discarded without further ado.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a very brief question to the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle). In the course of my research on the subject of the Speaker's authority to name a Member and to suspend him from the service of the House for the remainder of the day, I was able to find only one instance in the history of this House. It was in 1942, when the Member for Laval-Deux Montagnes was suspended from the House for the entire day, and a second time for seven days. Never in the history of this House, either before or after, as the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer is aware, has this disciplinary measure been used more than once. I wonder . . . I am not sure whether the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer was for or against the five-day suspension. Could he tell us exactly where he stands on these additional powers of the Speaker? Does he think it is putting the Speaker in a rather embarrassing situation, when we realize that the Government has never used this particular measure?

Mr. Isabelle: Of course, Mr. Speaker, I think the question asked by my colleague from Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is both important and delicate. I would not want the Speaker of the House to experience problems in the discharge of his difficult duties, but the one thing I can say for sure—and I said so when some Hon. Members showed aggressiveness for reasons I would rather not delve into—is that a temperamental Member may get carried away at times, but I do not see why anyone should be thrown out or suspended for five days. I think that is more than anyone can say about a Member who has been suspended for five days, but I would rather see him pay a fine. I would like that to be left to the discretion of the Chair, we should maintain our time-honoured tradition whereby the Member is suspended for the rest of the day, but no more.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: On debate, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I have just a few comments to make, because I understand someone else wishes to participate.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize for interrupting the Hon. Member, but at this point I should like to give notice of The Royal Assent.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Government House
Ottawa

February 13, 1986

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 13th day of February, 1986, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,

Leopold H. Amyot,
Secretary to the Governor General.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This being Friday—

Some Hon. Members: It is Thursday!

Mr. Waddell: This being Thursday, I was going to ask Your Honour how you pronounce p-u-i-s-n-e.

Mr. Speaker: I was going to ask the Hon. Member the same question. Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate.

• (1710)

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, before you interrupted me I was about to suggest that one of the first changes that should be made to the rules of procedure is to have a permanent Speaker, but that came off my time, I think.

Mr. Speaker: Let me be very clear. If the Hon. Member feels that way, it will not come off his time.

Mr. Baker: Just a few words, Mr. Speaker. I say in all honesty that I think one of the primary things that should take place in a legislature under the British parliamentary system in the 1980s is certainly to have a full and complete debate on the proposition of having a permanent Speaker. Perhaps that is one of the two important subjects that should be dealt with in a debate in this Chamber such as this.

The other thing that should be dealt with is a subject that some Members do not want to deal with, and it is this. I was listening to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) the other day when he said that he would like to restore the power to Members of Parliament in this Chamber. He said that he would like to bring this House of Commons into the 20th century in the great British tradition. The other part of the question that has to be dealt with, if that is what the Prime Minister wants to do, is, first and foremost, that Members of Parliament will have to allow an impartial body exterior to this Chamber to have the power to make changes in the procedures of this House.

Members here in this House and members of the committee would say, "Well, that's a terrible thing to suggest". Not so, Mr. Speaker. If you were going to follow the British tradition or the traditions of any legislature under the British parliamentary system you would, first and foremost, have to accept that as being necessary for complete change, because that is exactly what the other legislatures—if I can refer to them generally—have done. They are Parliaments, but they are more than Parliaments—from the French word to speak—because they do more than that, they legislate. That is their primary function. How is that accomplished, Mr. Speaker? It was accomplished, first of all, by that body of Parliamentarians saying, "If we only allow ourselves to be restricted by our own suggestions, then we will never change and we will never get to the point where this Parliament become a legislative body". When the Prime Minister said, "Well, now, we would like to get back to what the British parliamentary system was in this country", what he would have to be suggesting, in order to do that, to do what the British and the Australians have done, is to do what any legislature has done, and that is, to have an outside body recommend and implement rule changes in this legislature.

The other aspect is the question of a permanent Speaker. I think that all Members will agree that we have been particularly fortunate in this country over the last 10, 12, or 15 years. I believe that at any moment in time during that period either political Party could have instituted the position of permanent Speaker and there would not have been objections from the other side of the Chamber. I do not think there would be objections, because if you examine the role of the Speaker and what the Speaker is asked to do in this particular legislature, it is to try to provide a mix of customs in this House supported by the Standing Orders, the traditions of rules and procedures, and then you find, and I am sure you will agree, that he is in a particularly precarious situation. I would like to read into the record Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fourth Edition, 1958, at page 147: It reads as follows:

A question oral or written must not: be ironical, rhetorical, offensive, or contain ephithet, innuendo, satire or ridicule.

That's rule number one. Now, let us take number two:

A question oral or written must not: be trivial, vague or meaningless.

If that weren't enough, it says:

A question oral or written must not multiply, with slight variations, a similar question on the same point.

Then you have to look at the next one:

A question oral or written must not: repeat in substance a question already answered, or to which an answer has been refused.

An answer that has been refused, that's about all the answers you get here, the answers that are refused. Then it says:

A question oral or written must not: inquire whether statements made in a newspaper are true.

Now just imagine, Mr. Speaker, you have not really been doing your job, have you?

Mr. Speaker: No.

Mr. Baker: It continues.

A question oral or written must not: contain an expression of opinion.

Mr. Speaker, you are supposed to rule 90 per cent of the questions out of order. A question cannot be hypothetical or contain inferences. Then it cannot be framed so as to suggest its own answer. It cannot refer discourteously to a friendly foreign country. It cannot contain or imply charges of a personal character. It cannot relate to matters which passed outside the walls of the House, or relate to any Bill or motion before the House. It cannot ask the Government's opinion on matters of policy. It cannot ask what advice the Minister proposes to give the Crown. It cannot seek information about matters which are in their nature secret, such as decisions or proceedings of the Cabinet.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure you would have to agree that you have broken every single rule in Beauchesne in this Chamber. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, what is on your mind is, "You, Member for Gander-Twillingate, you have broken them yourself in asking the questions". Mr. Speaker has just said, in case it was not picked up, that I should read the section about relevance in debate. If I cannot read from Beauchesne on the rule changes I would like to know what is relevant and what is not in this debate. Mr. Speaker, I could go on. If we look at our rules of procedures—

Some Hon. Members: Go on.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Go on? Okay. Here's a good one on page 5 of the same edition:

No member shall walk out of or cross the House, or make any noise or disturbance.

Then:

When a member is speaking, no member shall pass between him and the Chair, nor interrupt him . . .

The next one reads as follows:

When the House adjourns the members shall keep their seats until Mr. Speaker has left the Chair.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if you were to follow the rules in Beauchesne that you should be following as the Speaker of this House then, of course, Mr. Speaker, you would have some difficulty with our traditions, with our customs, but you have to provide a mix. It is a very subjective position. You make a value judgment, Mr. Speaker, with practically everything that happens in this Chamber. As to the proposition about making rule changes for Members of this House, I would like to disagree with that very briefly. The rule changes to be made in this Chamber are not for Members of Parliament, they should be for the people of Canada. They should be for the Parliament of Canada. Members of Parliament come and go, as you know. They are here one year and gone the next. The turnover here is 30, 40 per cent with each election. Some Cabinet Ministers think that they have not been appointed, they have been anointed for life. Certain Members of Parliament actually believe that. The changes to be made in this Chamber should be for the benefit of the people of Canada for all time and for the benefit of Parliament. There is an overriding principle here that we agree with in opposition. That basic principle of our democracy is that a Government is elected to govern.

• (1720)

Mr. McMillan: How profound.

Mr. Baker: The Minister is saying that that is profound, but sometimes it is forgotten that a Government is elected to govern. Therefore, the entire principle of our democracy is that the Parliament of Canada has only one function, and that is, to make the Government accountable to the people.

With the flow of legislation and the interruption in actions of the Government, the Parliament of Canada—

Mrs. Sparrow: He's really winding up.

Mr. Baker: The Hon. Member is saying that I am getting wound up here. It is a very important subject, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure you will agree with me.

We have to remember that the Government has to govern. The Parliament is not here to prevent the Government from governing but to make the Government accountable to the people of Canada through Parliament, and that is the main point.

How do we go about making the Government of Canada accountable to the people of Canada? It has to be done through Parliament. A Minister should never be able to rise in the House to make an announcement on a policy change or change through Order in Council that will affect people throughout the country with no accountability to the people of Canada.

Nowhere in our rules of procedure or in the operation of Parliament does it say that a Minister has to answer to anything. Not in Question Period, in a committee or elsewhere does a Minister have to answer to the people of Canada on a policy.

An Hon. Member: Election day.

Mr. Baker: The hon. gentleman reminded me of election day. If that is the only way Ministers can be accountable, what is the purpose of Parliament?

I would return to my original suggestion that we look at other legislatures which are under the British parliamentary system. There we see a system which is completely contrary to the one which has evolved here. The actual action of accountability takes place in various forms, but it certainly does not take place in a chamber such as this. It takes place in committees that can originate their own terms of reference and in customs that have been developed in those legislatures.

If Hon. Members were to watch Question Period occurring in another legislature under the British parliamentary system, they would see that Government Members are just as critical of the Government as Opposition Members. You know that to be a fact, Mr. Speaker. Because of that, the tradition of the Speaker being able to recognize first a Government Member, then an Opposition Member, another Government Member and then another Opposition Member evolved. Is that not correct, Mr. Speaker? Of course it is. That would certainly not work in this Parliament with Government Members who have planted questions that waste the time of the people of Canada.

Hopefully we will arrive at such a stage one day. However, what I have to say is very basic and it is that if we really want to change the rules and procedures of Parliament, we should allow an outside body to make recommendations. It may be terrible that I am suggesting this to Members of Parliament, but I am only doing what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said he was doing the other day. I am looking at the great traditions of our parliamentary system. We should allow an outside group to make recommendations on the condition that they be implemented by Parliament.

Let it not be forgotten that our function is to make the Government accountable to the people of Canada. Members of Parliament should realize that they are only here for a short period of time. Hopefully, opposition Members will be here a lot longer than government Members.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the matter the Hon. Member raised regarding the Speaker. While you are in the chair, Mr. Speaker, this is a good opportunity to do so.

I am one of the Members of the House who have perhaps had some run ins with the Chair in the last couple of weeks when posing questions.

Mr. Gauthier: Run outs.

Mr. Waddell: I am not going to run out of the House. You have my confidence, Mr. Speaker, and I want to say that now since you are in the chair. I do not like the fact that some of the newer Members of the House are running to the press with critical comments about the Speaker. I do not think that that is the way Parliamentarians should handle things and I do not think that that is the way we should treat the Speaker of the House because the Speaker is our servant.

Perhaps Hon. Members will say that I should not talk about this because I have had some run ins with the Speaker, and it is true. However, I have never been publicly critical of the Speaker and I never will. Quite frankly, there have been occasions on which my supplementary questions have been too long.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Waddell: It is true that we should be cutting back on them.

The Hon. Member made some remarks about a permanent Speaker. I do not think that we should have a permanent Speaker. I think we should choose our Speaker from among us because the Speaker has to be part of the House and part of the living House. There is a danger that a permanent Speaker would become a bureaucrat on the job.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who just spoke and who received the support of some Hon. Members has just disagreed with the most respected authorities in the area of political science and parliamentary review in the British Commonwealth and certainly in North America—

Mr. McMillan: Name one, George. One author.

Mr. Baker: The Minister says that I should name one. I suggest that in his spare time, he read the journal entitled The Parliamentarian or any of the recent literature—and by recent, I mean written in the last 20 years—that has been written on the subject.

It is interesting to see that a Cabinet Minister is disagreeing with me. Now I think I really have a point. It would be like arguing that the Officers of the Table should only enjoy tenure of office while Parliament is in session and be dismissed when Parliament is not in session. That is the same thing, no matter how we look at it. The more one reads about it and studies it, the more one realizes that there is only one solution to the problem.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: It is not a problem, but I think, Mr. Speaker, you would have to agree that it is funny that the same Cabinet Minister who is disagreeing with me now is the very person who disagreed with having an outside body propose changes to our procedures in Parliament.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member could assist me as I pore through those learned journals by giving me the name of one author so that I could find the relevant material more quickly.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member does not realize this, but while I was the Chief Clerk—

Mr. McMillan: Name one.

Mr. Baker: Just listen now. While I was the Chief Clerk of a provincial legislature—

Mr. Prud'homme: You wrote them.

Mr. Baker: —and the Secretary of the Canadian Branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, I did, under my own name, write an excellent article in The Parliamentarian, and I would recommend it to the hon. gentleman at any time.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House to express my support, of course, for reform generally and the principle of reform, and if I am somewhat hesitant to declare my support for the amendments as submitted, it is because I have some reservations, and I think they are quite justified, about three or four points which I consider very important. Mr. Speaker, the main goal of these reform proposals should be to enhance the role and powers of each Member of the House, especially the backbencher.

Mr. Speaker, I think that to a certain extent we are just deluding ourselves and others by claiming that the individual Member or backbencher will have greater powers as a result of reforms like the proposals before the House today. When I say we are deluding ourselves, I say this because I have been sitting in the House for thirteen years, and the British parliamentary system is designed in terms of parliamentary groups and not in terms of individuals. And in this House, it is the parliamentary groups,—the group of the party in power and the Opposition party groups,—who conduct the exchanges in the House and debate the questions of the day. The role of the individual Member is, as we said earlier, to hold the Government accountable to the Canadian people, and that forms the basis of our democratic system which harks back to the British system and British traditions. So when we say that we are going to enhance the powers of the individual member, I think we are in fact deluding ourselves, and perhaps dangerously so, because in my view, we as Members of this House, as full Members, have the power to use the rules and traditions and to do whatever else we can in the way of influencing the order of business in the House, to obtain from the Government the accountability we need to be able to carry out our task.

That being said, Mr. Speaker—I said so earlier, and I know I do not have much time to repeat this—I would simply tell the House that as Whip of my Party, the Liberal Party and the Official Opposition, I did run into some problems with the provisional Standing Orders of last June. There were quite a few difficulties concerning legislative committees, for instance. I think it was necessary to review the legislative committee system over the past six or eight months, and we were unable to change or modify this approach because both sides were reluctant to do so and the Standing Orders made no provision for this.

So I see in this reform an opportunity to ask the Government—to demand, if need be—to guarantee that during the ten month period when these Standing Orders will be in force we in the Opposition will be able, with the Government guarantee, to reconsider now and then some of the measures to be adopted which might indeed need to be adjusted as we go along. Therefore I think that if the Government is in good faith, if it is prepared to give us the assurance that it will listen to us and perhaps even take part in improving the rules or helping smooth out some of the difficulties, then I would consider that a very constructive step.

The second point, Mr. Speaker, and it has been debated at length over the last three days, is the question of allowing the Chair to suspend a Member for five days after he has been called to order for the second, third or fourth time and been named by the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I have no problem with the Chair's power to name a member once and ask him or her to withdraw from the House. But I have quite a problem with the additional power which you would have to exclude a member from the House for five consecutive days. I suggested earlier that this change is not in line with our practices, customs and traditions either as the House of Commons or Government. I just cannot see why you should be given this power or authority.

Mr. Speaker, I see that that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is back. I am told that he is about to make a few remarks. I am quite willing to defer to him at any time. Of course, I could certainly elaborate on the problems which I foresee concerning for instance the Private Members' Hour. I suggest adjustments will have to be made so that every Private Member's Bill be dealt with equally and equitably, that no committee should have the authority to limit the number of hours devoted to the consideration of a bill, but that every bill should be debated for a minimum time and for a maximum of five hours.

Mr. Speaker, I see that the President of the Privy Council wishes to rise, so I willingly defer to him. But I want first to thank the Chairman of the committee who has prepared the reform report we are dealing with today. I congratulate all the members who sat on this committee, especially the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) for their contribution. Mr. Speaker, we are very much interested in the reform and we will listen gladly to what the President of the Privy Council has to say.

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to seek the unanimous consent of the House to have myself, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) address the House at this time and conclude this debate. I would now ask for that consent.

Mr. Speaker: May I be clear that, if the Hon. Members go beyond 5.41 p.m., it is the intention of the House to guarantee Private Members' Hour, even if it should begin two or three minutes later than might otherwise have been provided? If that is the unanimous consent sought, fine.

Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I know there have been agreements. We have participated in the debate. If some Hon. Members would like to ask brief questions after the House Leaders have concluded, will it be possible to do so?

Mr. Deans: Yes, of course.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: I think I have a sense of the request. We will now proceed to hear the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn), after which we will proceed to Private Members' Hour.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the points which have been raised during the course of this debate. I wish to congratulate every Member who participated in it. I think it has been a full debate, which was asked for by many Members of the House. We have had the benefit of hearing a number of points of view.

As I mentioned earlier, I have had the opportunity of consulting with my opposition House Leader colleagues about the way in which we could respond to the matters which have been raised in this debate. As a result of those discussions, we have been able to arrive at a consensus. There is a disposition to conclude the debate at this time.

I would like to indicate at the outset that I will be seeking consent at the time that the package is adopted to have the following changes deemed to be adopted in the proposed Standing Orders. I think the best way of doing this is to read them. They state:

That the proposed amendments to the Standing Orders laid upon the Table, Thursday, February 6, 1986. (Sessional Paper No. 331-7/37A0) be amended

(a) at page 1646 of the Votes and Proceedings of February 6, 1986, by striking out the lines thereon relating to Standing Order 16 and substituting the following therefor:

"(6) (a) The Speaker shall be vested with the authority to maintain order by naming individual members for disregarding the authority of the Chair and, without resort to motion, ordering their withdrawal for the remainder of that sitting, notwithstanding Standing Ordere 8".

● (1740)

(b) at pages 1649 and 1650 of the Votes and Proceedings of February 6, 1986, by striking out proposed Standing Order 38(2) and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) Unless previously disposed of, selected public bills at the second reading stage or selected motions shall receive not more than five hours of consideration and, unless previously disposed of, an item having been once considered, shall be dropped to the bottom of the order of precedence and again considered only when it reaches the top of the said order.

Provided that, unless otherwise disposed of, at not later than fifteen minutes before the end of the time provided for the consideration of the said item any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted and every question necessary to dispose of the selected motion or of the selected bill at the 2nd stage, shall be put forthwith and successively without further debate or amendment."

The effect of those changes will be evident from the document itself, inasmuch as they deal with two aspects of concern that have been raised. One was to assure that in terms of Private Members' Business there will be no arbitrary curtailment of the time available for discussion of Private Members' Business unless it is done by the consent of the House. I believe that is a fair and reasonable proposition. We will then make sure that we will be guided by the wish of the House with respect to the length of that debate.

The second is one which, I think is fair to say, I have have spoken to you about. You indicated that you were quite happy and satisfied with respect to the change. We are removing any second naming offence under the rules of the House of Commons. We will proceed on the basis that you will have the power and ability to name, as recommended by the committee chaired by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath).

That is the effect of those two items. These changes address the concerns raised during the debate with respect to the extended expulsion of Members for breaches of order and with respect to the length of time to be provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business.

Members have also raised concerns with respect to the length of time to be provided for statements under S.O. 22, the selection of report stage amendments and the number of questions that Members will be permitted to place on the Order Paper. The provisional Standing Orders are being brought forward on an experimental basis for a trial period because we are all aware of the fact that there will be a need from time to time to modify or make improvements in the rules as we gain experience with their operation. I simply want to reiterate the comments that I made in opening this debate, that the Government will carefully monitor the workings of the House rules and I, in co-operation with the Opposition House Leaders, will not wait until the end of the trial period to make any necessary changes. Instead, in the true spirit of reform, we will attempt to fine-tune the rules from time to time to ensure the success of this experiment.

Some Members have suggested that information about Members travelling on Government-sponsored business should be required to be disclosed to the register of Member's travel. I thought, at this point, that it might be useful to remind Members that the public disclosure of that information is currently required under the provisions of the Senate and House of Commons Act. In order to conform to the provisions of the Act an Order in Council is required to be passed every time that a Member travels on a Government-sponsored trip. Upon passage of the Order in Council, the information is made public.

I know that Members on all sides of the House have raised concerns about the matter of monitoring legislative committees and the demands on Members' time. The House Leaders have discussed this matter and we have agreed to monitor committee activities on an ongoing basis to ensure the smooth scheduling of committee work. We will undertake this work as part of our regular negotiations on the legislative agenda.

In summary, I believe that with the changes that I have outlined and with the commitment of all House Leaders to co-operate to ensure the success of reform, the House is now ready to proceed with the proposed Standing Orders and with what I believe to be a very important turning point in the development of the Canadian House of Commons.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, when I opened the debate a few days ago on behalf of the Official Opposition, I said that as far as I and my colleagues were concerned, if we and especially the Government were serious about the role of the private Member, then the test would be the extent to which the Government was willing to listen to what private Members, particularly in the opposition, had to say in the course of that debate on the Government's formal and latest proposal for amending the Standing Orders.

During the course of that debate private Members, particularly on the Opposition side, raised a number of concerns. Principal among those concerns were the ones enumerated by the Government House Leader in his statement. Of course, some of these concerns were greater than others and those which appear to be of immediate concern are reflected in the Minister's proposal for amending the draft Standing Orders.

With respect to the others, I must say that as far as we are concerned, the changes in the rules are very much on trial. The period of 10 months in which they will go into operation is not necessarily, in our view, just the first step in making them permanent. We will be watching the entire package very closely, not only the measures the Government House Leader says he will keep under review. The test of any organization, whether it be a legislative body or a country, for that matter, is the way minorities in that system are treated.

Therefore, we believe that the litmus test for assessing the way these rule changes work is the way individual Members of Parliament on the Opposition side fare under the rule changes both as individuals and particularly as members of organized Party groups. As I said in my remarks a few days ago, our system is not based on Government facing off with private Members but on Government facing off with Members organized in Parties. We believe the litmus test will be not only how this system works for us as individual Members in Opposition but, in particular, how it works for us as Opposition Parties.

Therefore, it is important that we be ready to assess how it is proceeding and to make changes as soon as problems are seen to arise. We will be assessing how ready the Government will be to respond to our concerns. In particular, we will be looking to see how effectively the House Leaders, as part of their ongoing work, are able to monitor the operations of the committee system, particularly the legislative committees, to avoid the conflicts and proliferation which have disturbed so many of us.

• (1750)

As well, Mr. Speaker, and I am coming to a conclusion, the Government House Leader properly pointed out that travel by Members of the House on Government business has to be recorded and disclosed under the House of Commons Act through Orders in Council. However, I invite him to work with us on a system whereby these Orders in Council, as a matter of course, are brought into the hands of the Registrar of Members' travel so that they will be as available for inspection as the material which Members file directly with respect to other kinds of travel.

Having said all that, I want to conclude by stating that what we have seen today is very much the result of all of us, especially the Government, taking into account what was said during this debate by Members of Parliament, particularly on the Opposition side. I am glad to see this response and I look forward to the test period for these rules being fruitful and useful. However, I say to the Government: Please do not think that this is for us merely a first step toward making anything permanent. These rules are very much on trial and the test for us will be how fairly we see these rules waching for us as members of the Opposition, both individually and in groups.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to speak twice in this debate. However, let me say simply that I think what you are seeing here today is the result of parliamentary reform. It is the change in attitude which is necessary if we are to make parliamentary reform acceptable to everyone. I have no doubt at all, if the mood which prevails now continues throughout the year, that we will resolve whatever problems arise. We will find a way to accommodate the needs of the Government, taking into account the needs and desires of the Opposition. I look forward to the challenge of the new rules. I hope they work in the way which the committee that worked so hard to draft them intended them to work. I hope they provide for back-benchers and others a better opportunity to participate in the process. It certainly would be my wish, and I am sure that of the other two House Leaders, that that would be the case. I look forward to the end of this year, when we are asked to review them, to a review which may require some further adjustment but which will make these the permanent rules governing the actions and efforts of Members of the House of Commons.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, before we proceed I would like to ask a question of the Government House Leader. If we adopt the motion, the standing committees as they are now, as well as the legislative committees, will fall. Does the Minister have a motion to reinstate these committees as they are now for the rest of the week or until this is operative? Has he given that any thought?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, that is a very good point. These rules come into effect on our return from the recess on February 24. We are now preparing the necessary motions with respect to the transitional requirements. By way of example, there are certian references to existing standing committees. In order to get over this transitional period we will suggest to the House tomorrow, probably after Routine Proceedings, that we have the consent of the House to make certain extensions. We will then reorganize the rest of the committees on the new basis.

With respect to Private Members' Business, there will have to be a period of time in which the Table Officers can organize things under the new rules. We will be proposing tomorrow, and I have discussed this with the Hon. Member's House Leader, that we extend Private Members' Business rules for a sufficient period of time to allow the Table Officers to implement the new system. We will have transitional motions which I hope to bring forward to the House after Routine Proceedings tomorrow in order to cover the various problems the Hon. Member so correctly identifies.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I still need one explanation because members of my Party will be asking me about this. Questions on the Order Paper, I take it, will be proceeded with in the traditional manner and allowed to stand as they are now?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is a matter of negotiation.

Mr. Gauthier: Suppose a Member is allowed four questions on the Order Paper. If the Speaker decides that a question being put should be referred to the Order Paper, how do we cope with that directive when the Member already has his four questions on the Order Paper? I am just putting that to the Minister because I think it is going to cause some problems and I had wanted to mention that in my speech.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The new rules clearly limit the number of questions any one Member can have on the Order Paper at any one time. Those rules also obligate the Government to respond within a certain time. There is an exchange of friendly services there. I do not want to get involved in a procedural discussion right now, but I am not aware that the Speaker can direct a Member to put anything on the Order Paper. He can suggest that it be put on the Order Paper. Without attempting to articulate the Speaker's ruling, I think that probably is the situation that applies here.

Mr. Speaker: I take it there is consent that the motion regarding the amending of the sessional paper shall be put?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Hnatyshyn) agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Hnatyshyn, seconded by Mrs. McDougall, moves:

That the proposed amendments to the Standing Orders, laid upon the Table on Thursday, February 6, 1986 (Sessional Paper No. 331-7/37A) be adopted and made provisional Standing Orders of the House.

Provided that, unless otherwise ordered;

1. the said provisional Standing Orders shall be in force from 11.00 o'clock a.m. Monday, February 24, 1986 until the House adjourns on the last sitting day in December, 1986;

2. and further to the Order made on June 27, 1985, the provisional Standing Orders thereby adopted shall continue in force during the same period; and

3. the Clerk of the House shall be authorized and instructed to print a revised and renumbered edition of the Standing Orders integrating the provisional Standing Orders and making any necessary amendments in consequence thereof, or relating thereto in respect of the Standing Orders concerning Private Bills, and to make such changes to the Order Paper and Notices as may be required.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Hnatyshyn) agreed to.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING CHILD ABUSE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal) moved that Bill C-261, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (child abuse), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure for me to have this opportunity, finally, to present to the House of Commons Bill C-261 for the purpose of giving it second reading. The purpose of the Bill and this opportunity is to draw the attention of the House of and the public to the serious concern we have as Parliamentarians and that we should have as Canadians about the seemingly rising problem of child abuse.

I would hope that the utilization of the material in the Bill will heighten the awareness of the House and of the various committees associated with it to the problem of child abuse and to the fact that it is time that we as Members of Parliament did something and took some action.

I understand there is a disposition at some time during the proceedings to move a motion to have the Bill withdrawn and to move the substance of the Bill to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. I am also aware that because of the Royal Assent that has just been given our allotted time is shortened somewhat. I hope all those who wish to speak on the matter will bear that in mind when making their comments.

I would like to give a brief background of how I became aware and concerned about the substance of the Bill. On my arrival in Ottawa as a Member of Parliament some seven and a half years ago I noticed what seemed to me to be the alarming incidence of reports on child abuse contained in the national newspapers. This Bill is my response to the issue.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it took a substantial amount of time to prepare the Bill after much research and consultation with fellow Parliamentarians and with people who were and continue to this day to stress the importance of dealing with this serious issue.

I would like to pay tribute to the office of the Law Clerk, who co-operated substantially in the drafting of the Bill, and to the Parliamentary Counsel. In addition, I would like to thank my parliamentary assistant, Miss Pike, who spent countless hours helping me in the development of the Bill and working with me to ensure that this day finally came to fruition.

It is also appropriate at this time to state unequivocally that the Badgley Report contributed significantly to the drafting of the Bill and to the terms and conditions of it. I want to acknowledge the efforts of the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) who participated not only on the Badgley Commission but who has been a ceaseless and tireless worker in her efforts to ensure that the plight of helpless children is brought to the attention of the proper authorities.

I hope that at the end of my remarks the House will recognize that I am simply requesting that it take the material in the Bill into consideration. It is not perfect. It does have some warts and I recognize that but the purpose of the Bill is to make the House and the country aware of the concern we share.

I anticipate that sending the subject matter to the committee by withdrawing the Bill will accomplish the concern expressed in the the Bill itself.

As the Badgley Report indicates, the special legal status of children is based primarily on three considerations: first, the special needs of children who, by reason of their age and immaturity, need the care and guidance of others in order to develop into healthy, responsible adults; second, the substantial vulnerabilities of children to persons older and in many cases more powerful than they; and, third, the actual or presumed incapacity of children to perform legal acts of daily life.

Child abuse can range from being exposed to sexual intercourse, to deprivation of basic needs and to death. There are three main types of abuse: physical abuse or battering, failure to thrive or neglect, usually involving food or water deprivation or inadequate hygiene, and sexual abuse involving incest, violent molestation and pornographic exploitation.

Child abuse knows no bounds. It cuts across all economic, religious and geographic levels. The myth should be dispelled that it happens in only low-income, uneducated families. The facts speak differently.

Child abuse, both sexual assault and battering, is still largely a whispered crime. Many people choose to ignore that it happens or choose to make excuses for it. More people are beginning to address the issue, but for the most part, victims live in an aura of silence and fear.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the basic principle should be that everyone must be able to live in complete security in his own home. The home should not be a place where there is violence or sexual abuse.

[English]

Statistical evidence from all regions in Canada indicate an alarming increase in child abuse cases coming to the attention of the authorities. The question exists: Do the rising figures show a growing rate of child abuse, or are they a reflection of growing awareness of the problems that exist and a willingness to bring these incidents to the attention of the authorities? The secrecy of the crimes make the proportions of the problem an unknown quantity.

The concept of child abusers as strangers largely underestimates the type of people who abuse children. Abuse is inflicted by relatives, such as parents, aunts, uncles, cousins, by people in guardian positions such as step-parents, legal guardians, or by those in a position of trust, such as baby-sitters, teachers, family friends and acquaintances.

Abuse manifests itself in a wide variety of social, psychological and behavioural ways. An abused child may suffer from an inability to form social relations. It may have difficulty relating to authority. It may suffer from child-parent conflict, have a poor self-image, become suicidal, suffer a variety of health problems, and even suffer sexual diseases. It can develop phobias, have eating problems, suffer mental health problems, have trouble sleeping, turn to drugs or alcohol, become aggressive and assaultive. Unfortunately, some of these problems can continue throughout a lifetime no matter how much counselling the child may receive afterwards.

The Committee on Sexual Offences Against Children was established to examine the adequacy of our laws to protect children from sexual abuse and to offer recommendations on our legal shortcomings. The report offered specific recommendations to be implemented in the law as well as revisions that would clean up outmoded concepts or gender discrimination. The findings of the Badgley Report were influential in the development of the sexual abuse portion of Bill C-261.

The report indicated that one out of every two females and one out of every three males are at some point in their lives victims of unwanted sexual activity. In a substantial number of cases, this occurs under the age of 18 years. The Badgley Report indicated the following:

> There is no basis for the alleged harmlessness of unwanted sexual acts committed against children or for the belief that most of the offenders are harmless individuals. We have found that young victims are encouraged, seduced and intimidated by sexual offenders. Some of these children sustain physical injuries. Many experience enduring emotional and social harms. Our findings clearly show that these children have special needs and vulnerabilities which must be recognized and protected by the criminal law and that existing provisions do not adequately accomplish these purposes.

The principal victims of sexual offences are children and young people, and females are twice as often victims as are males. In the majority of cases a sexual offence against a person occurs before that person is 18 years of age. The age of battered children is dropping, and pre-school children are particularly vulnerable to abuse as they are not subject to the watchful eye of teachers or of other authorities.

The Badgley Report provided alarming figures regarding the relationship of children and youth to their offenders. Almost one in four of the sexual offences was committed by a person prominent in the child's life or to whom the child was vulnerable. About three of every five offences were committed by persons the victim either knew well or was acquainted with.

Badgley also reported that young persons were at greater risk from blood relations and persons in positions of trust than from other persons. The greater proportion of sexual offences committed by persons in a position of trust was against a child under the age of 12. A full 86 per cent of offences by a person in a position of trust concerned a child 11 years of age or under.

Reports of child abuse are growing. Last year, in Ontario, reported cases jumped by 19 per cent. This figure includes five deaths as a result of abuse. In Nova Scotia, the number of reported cases doubled in 1984 over the previous year. Authorities in Saint John, New Brunswick claim sexual offences against children and young people are among the fastest growing crimes. In Saskatchewan, there was a 300 per cent increase in the number of reported cases of abuse between 1979 and 1984. This figure also includes a dozen abused-related deaths. All across Canada abuse statistics are jumping. Sexual assault homicides are also on the increase in both real and proportional terms. These figures have more than doubled between the early 1960s and the late 1970s.

My Bill can be divided into two parts. The first part introduces new provisions regarding sexual abuse to a person under the age of 16 years. The second part lengthens the terms of punishment for assaults inflicted upon persons under the age of 16 years.

I should like to take this opportunity to deal in depth with the fundamental provisions of the Bill, but time does not allow me to do so. In conclusion, let me indicate that immense frustrations are felt by people all across the country. There is a concern that most cases of child abuse go unreported. Efforts must be made quickly to protect children in conjunction with efforts to make the public more aware. They must complement the efforts of our social agencies and our law enforcers. It is my hope that the Bill will bolster and contribute to the deterrent aspect of the law. Deterrence is a part of our justice system and is a major factor in the arrest of this crime. If awareness is created because of the Bill, it will be a positive step forward. My position is simply that if the Bill or awareness of the material contained in it, which will hopefully be referred to committee, should save one child from abuse, the substance of the Bill and my efforts will have had some purpose.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for bringing forward this initiative. I should also like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) who has been extremely constructive in her work on this issue, not only here in Parliament but when she was in fact a representative on the Badgley Commission. I am speaking today as a private Member, but the Hon. Member for Outremont has expressed extreme regret that she could not be here because of a prior commitment and has certainly armed me with a number of facts, figures and questions which I will bring to the attention of the House in anticipation of this particular matter being referred to committee.

One question the Hon. Member for Outrement would like the Government to answer concerns the amendment dealing with the issue of imprisonment of clients of young prostitutes. A number of Members sat on the committee looking at the changes in the prostitution laws. In fact, the Hon. Member for Outrement presented an amendment to the committee studying Bill C-49 which would have included imprisonment of two years for clients of young prostitutes. It was an attempt to suggest that the clients of prostitutes should face certain sanctions, particularly clients of young prostitutes. That is one issue with which this particular Bill deals, but it is also an issue which was rejected by the Conservative Party only two months ago. If the Hon. Member for Outremont had been here, I think she would have said the following:

[Translation]

This is exactly what I wanted to do in my amendment, but it was rejected out of hand by the Conservatives.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues opposite have an unfathomable logic, it is true. The problem is that, two months ago, when the Government had a chance to amend Bill C-49, it decided to reject the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin), maybe because she is not a Government Member. The Government has finally accepted this idea, and we are pleased to support it. However, I would like the Government to say for the record why this same amendment was rejected two months ago.

[English]

I have a couple of concerns about the reference of the Bill. Hon. Members who have studied the issue will no doubt share in my concerns and questions. Let us look at Bill C-261. In Clause 1 there is a call to increase the age of consent for a person to have sexual intercourse from the age of 14 years to the age of 16 years. Bill C-261 calls upon the Government to amend Section 140 of the Criminal Code so that it will become illegal for a 14 year old or a 15 year old to engage voluntarily in sexual intercourse. However, in the same Bill it is suggested that the age of consent should be raised to the age of 16 years, except if the partner is three years older or younger than the person in question. We find ourselves with the rather confusing situation of the law saying that it is all right for two consenting teenagers to have intercourse, but if one teenager is four years older than the other one, it is wrong. We should address the issue of the age of consent. If the age of consent remains at 14 years, as it is in the current Criminal Code, that is one particular point of view. If the age of consent is raised to 16 years, that is another particular point of view. We cannot bring in a Bill which changes the age of consent to 16 years except when two 15 year old teenagers are involved in a relationship. Essentially that is the effect of that particular provision. I think there is some confusion and inconsistency which will be dealt with in the reference to committee.

In trying to develop laws which we perceive as flexible, sometimes we create labyrinths that would be an absolute horror show for the courts to pursue and, in fact, would be in violation of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. To suggest that the age of consent be 16 years except under circumstances where either of the parties are within three years of the age of the other is incomprehensible to most people.

As well, I hope this reference to committee will spur the Government on to begin its response to the Badgley Report, something which has been a long time coming. I know that the Hon. Member for Outremont has been promoting this issue in the House for the last number of months. In fact, she was waiting with eagerness to hear of the news release issued by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) only yesterday and received by Members on all sides of the House today, the day before Valentine's Day. In this news release, the Minister of Justice announced a contribution to the Canadian Council on Children and Youth. He announced that he will be setting up a fund for a private-sector mechanism to follow up on the major concerns raised by the Badgley and Fraser Reports and that he is giving $25,500 to the Canadian Council on Children and Youth of Ottawa. This $25,500 is to be used to have the Council reach out to the private sector and find out about its response to the Badgley Report.

It seems to me that in seeking a private-sector response to a problem which is of incredible public dimensions is carrying the Conservative notion of privatization a little too far. There have been extensive consultations, as evidenced by the Badgley Report. We have heard from community groups and individuals from across the country. Now is the time for the Government to bring forward some specific changes to the Criminal Code. I would hope that the reference to committee of this Private Member's Bill would precipitate the receipt of some answers from the Government rather than another study to look into the private sector's response to the Badgley Report.

Certainly, the Hon. Member who presented the Bill has the will to get to the root of the problem with the legislation. However, I would further point out that all of us, in our daily lives, have to reach beyond the simple issue of changing laws. Again, the Hon. Member for Outremont has said:

[Translation]

Obviously, the answer to family violence does not reside simply in a new definition of existing criminal offences, but in a change of attitudes as concerns enforcement of the law.

This means, Mr. Speaker, that if the rules are changed to say that someone will be sent to prison for 10, 14 or 15 years, this will not change public attitudes to this problem because, as mentioned by the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett) most of the incidents and cases of abuse occur within the family or among people who know these children and who will never be reported to the authorities.

In my opinion, one thing that we should begin doing in our constituencies is to become more open to discuss these problems and be better informed of the fact that these children or families need our support. It is by changing attitudes, not by changing the law, that we can bring about real change. For instance, when I was sitting about two years ago on a provincial committee examining family abuse and violence in Ontario . . . Mr. Speaker, even two years ago . . . it is a good thing that the situation has changed, and it did because of our study. However, two years ago, when police officers were sent to school to get acquainted with the problem of family violence, they were told to consider the problem as a private and domestic problem and not as a criminal act.

Conditions are now changing. Heavy pressures are brought to bear not only by legislators but also by people who say: "Abuse or violence in the family is illegal. It is not a matter or a problem that should remain within the family".

Mr. Speaker, I think that public conscience about child abuse in 1986 has reached the same level as attained by domestic violence five years ago, that is domestic violence is now being discussed more openly by authorities and by people.

We are always rather discreet when discussing sexual abuse especially when families are concerned. This is what we should do and I think this is a good reason to make that order of reference to the committee since we will begin to discuss not only an amendment to the legislation but also an attitudinal change in Canada. This will emphasize a problem so enormous that many people will not acknowledge its existence.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that even if there are some deficiencies and a few problems with the Bill as it now stands, the Members of our party are surely ready to defer it to the committee because we would like to ask the Government where the answers are to the Badgley Report. Where are the answers for families with problems? Amendments to the legislation will not be enough but social services should also be made available. We know, for instance, that the federal Government is reducing transfer payments to the Provinces as related to social welfare and education.

Mr. Speaker, this will have a far greater direct impact on the offer of services for families. The advice for instance, the possibility of somebody stepping in when parents abuse their children. This will have just as clear and strong an impact as would have any committee. I therefore think, Mr. Speaker, that this is a step in the right direction, but we should also have the financial support of the federal Government, with that referral to a committee, with the work that is still being done in that area by the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin), and I think we will get there little by little. But there are still a number of things to be done, and I appreciate this opportunity to take part in the debate.

I am disappointed that the Hon. Member for Outremont could not be here, but I am most confident that all my colleagues from the Liberal Party will support the referral to committee of that most important issue, which is a partial response to one part, the legislative part, of course, not the economic and social part, but we require changes if we are to meet the needs that have been most clearly identified in the Badgley Report in 1984.

[English]

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to speak on behalf of the New Democratic Party on this private Member's Bill dealing with child sexual abuse. I would like to commend the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett) for bringing this important subject and on the whole very reasonable proposals for changes in the law to the House for discussion. I will certainly support the reference of the Bill to committee for further study.

In reading the recommendations, the survey results and the vast amount of research that came from the Badgley Report, most people were struck by the extent of the problem of child sexual abuse. We all know that it exists, but I do not think the people understand just how pervasive it is. One-half of Canadian women and one-third of Canadian men have at some time been victims of a sexual offence. In the great majority of cases, 80 per cent of the time, these offences have occurred during childhood. It is children who are particularly vulnerable, and an increasisng number of them are very young children.

This is not to say that the problem itself is increasing. Badgley warned against being alarmist about this. The problem has existed for many, many years. It is not getting worse, but it has always been bad and very vigorous measures are needed to deal with it.

Of the victims, three-quarters of the women and nine-tenths of the men did not seek any assistance or make a report after the event in question. Many of the offences committed did not cause physical harm, but the psychological harm caused has been enormous. People suffer for years and years after the fact with psychological problems, emotional problems, problems in marriage and problems with relationships. Child sexual abuse often results in alcohol and drug abuse among victims.

Some of these offences are themselves physically serious, although these are a minority. Four per cent of girls were raped and a similar number of boys were homosexually raped. Twenty per cent of females were victims of exposure and 9 per cent of boys were victims of exposure. Some people may think that that is always a harmless offence, but the Badgley Report tells us otherwise. It tells us that it is a myth that exposure may be an unpleasant event but is not something to worry about. Eight per cent of the females and 4 per cent of the boys who were victims of sexual exposure were also sexually assaulted. In spite of the great seriousness of these offences and the importance of the Badgley Report, in the time the Government has had we have not seen the action which we should have seen. I would point out to Hon. Members that the Government has had a year and a half since Badgley reported in the summer of 1984. I would now like to quote from the conclusions of the report which state:

● (1840)

Sexual offences are committed so frequently and against so many persons that there is an evident and urgent need to afford victims greater protection than that now being provided. The findings of the National Population Survey clearly show the compelling nature of the fears and stigma associated with having been a victim of a sexual offence.

Badgley continues:

What is required is the recognition by all Canadians that children and youths have the absolute right to be protected from these offences. To achieve this purpose, a major shift in the fundamental values of Canadians and in social policies by Government must be realized.

The report adds that if no action is taken, or if only token action is taken, then the risk is intolerably high that sexual abuse will continue.

Among the recommendations in the Badgley Report, the first two are of particular importance. They have been singled out throughout the report for comment. The first proposal was that owing to the complexity of the problem because of the number of agencies, the levels of government, the different professions, the medical people and police who deal with victims of sexual abuse, there be an office of commissioner for the implementation of these recommendations. This commissioner would report to the Prime Minister, would be responsible for legal and social reform and co-ordinate the work with voluntary agencies and other government Departments. The second proposal is that there be extensive public education and health promotion on the issue for prevention purposes.

I stress these two very positive recommendations of the report which Badgley recommends become law. Of course, the proposals we have before us today are with respect to changes in penalty. That is one way in which a society can say: "We disapprove of this. We do not want you to do it and we will punish you if you do". So society can make its views very clear.

Education is also extremely important, as are all types of support services. I regret to say that the Government has been very negligent in not acting on these matters. Unfortunately, the Hon. Member is not in a position with a Private Member's Bill to spend any money, nor is he in a position to advocate further reforms. What is needed is vigorous Government attention to the problem.

I would now like to deal with some of the specifics in the Bill. First, I would like to deal with Section 146(1) regarding the position of authority offence. This is interesting new concept. It breaks new ground in terms of our legal provisions. It is similar to the recommendation Badgley makes but it is not exactly the same. The wording is not as specific as that of Badgley who warned against the continued use of vague language. The position of authority offence is an important one because so much of sexual abuse is committed by people in positions of authority, whether it be authority by age, authority because one is a parent or some other adult in the family, or because someone is known to a child and is in a position of authority. This makes children particularly vulnerable. The stigma is great, as is the aftermath, because the victim has to continue to interact with the aggressor in the situation.

Section 158(1) would give protection to the victim. This is similar to those provisions which forbid the evidence of a victim of a sexual assault, generally, having had previous sexual activity with another person brought into court except under particular circumstances. My concern here is that the wording is not strong enough to protect victims of sexual assault. We have a long history of victims who have been placed on trial and their past history has been brought up and related at great length to the courts. Thus, the victim becomes the person being scrutinized.

Section 140 deals with the age of consent. The Bill would have the age raised to 16. There is also a proviso with respect to a three-year age difference. This is, of course, a contentious matter which could clearly have enforcement problems, especially with the three-year difference. Badgley recommends an increase in the age of consent to 16 but does not recommend the three-year difference. The reason for raising the age of consent to 16, even in a time when sexual mores are changing, is because of health considerations, quite apart from any moral ones, which are sometimes debatable in that some people share them and some do not. However, the health requirements apply to everyone. The dangers of pregnancy are much greater for girls under 16, as are complications in cases of abortion for young women who are pregnant.

Section 146 deals with physical contact for the purposes of sexual gratification or sexual stimulation. It provides for different levels of penalty depending upon the age of the victim. This provision is a gender-free provision. I would like to note that the gender-free world in criminal law can be rather foolish and sometimes go too far. We certainly want equality of opportunity. We want men and women, boys and girls, to be free and equal members of society. However, there are physical differences between the sexes. I am disturbed by some of the criminal cases we have seen in which judges have said: "This is discrimination in the law because it is an offence for a sexual act against a girl under 14 but not for a boy under 14". The judges have said that this is discrimination against men who commit these offences against girls. It is absolutely preposterous. Boys under the age of 14—boys at any age—do not get pregnant. There is a physical difference which requires that there be particular protection for girls. One hopes that the legalists will not be so caught up in the concept of equality and that they will treat this as a challenge, a vision, and not miss the important fact of life that protection is really needed for young girls.

Finally, I would like to deal with Section 245. This is a section which specifies a higher penalty for sexual assault of child victims as compared to older victims. This is the area in which I had the most reservations because sexual assault is reprehensible no matter what age the victim is. I think we would probably find some sexual assaults more repugnant than others, especially in the case of very young children, disabled persons who are unable to defend themselves or, similarly, very elderly people who are unable to defend themselves. Otherwise, I do not see why age should be a factor. Sexual assault is repugnant in any circumstances. I have reservations about making differences in penalties.

I would like to make a final comment on the issue of penalties. They are high in the Badgley Report and in this Private Member's Bill. We must realize that raising penalties for offences will not necessarily give people any greater protection. We know that people receive greater protection from the probability of being detected and dealt with as an offender. That seems to have more effect than the length of the penalty. Raising the penalties should not give us a false sense of security. It should not make us think that this will somehow give people protection. I do not think that differences of this sort will have any kind of impact. We know that if 10-year imprisonment penalties were brought in for parking offences, then people's parking offences would certainly go down since that type of difference would make people change their ways. However, an offence with an already heavy penalty will not be much more of a detriment if two or three years is added to the penalty. People do not read the laws and check to see whether penalties are 12, 14 or 15 years and gear their behaviour accordingly. People do not make decisions in that way.

If we want to give protection to children, which I am sure all Members would want to do, what we have to do is provide education, prevention and work with the provinces and the voluntary agencies to do all of those things in order to provide a really safe environment for the children of Canada.

● (1850)

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I would like to move a motion with respect to this Bill. I move:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-261, An Act to amend the Criminal Code (child abuse), be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs."

I would also like to make some comments on this Bill, time permitting.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Do I take it that the motion is before us at this time and, if so, who has seconded the motion? Did the Hon. Member actually put the motion or is it just for discussion purposes?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Before the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) rose to bring this matter to the attention of the Chair, I believe the Hon. Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Hicks) seemed to indicate to the Chair that he was putting the motion forward for the purposes of discussion. That is my conclusion. It not being seconded at this time.

Putting it forward for discussion will enable him to continue to speak until 57 minutes, otherwise he would not be able to speak. That is the inference I draw from his putting the motion. Perhaps the Hon. Member can help the Chair, if I am correct in that sense.

Mr. Hicks: I believe so, Mr. Speaker. But for clarification, can the Bill be seconded and voted on at 7:56 p.m.?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It can be seconded and voted on at 7:56:59 p.m., as long as the Hon. Member watches the clock, and, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier will tell us, there is a seconder.

Mr. Gauthier: And with seeing the clock at 6:57 p.m., rather than 7:57 p.m., Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The only real clock in the House is the Speaker. The Hon. Member for Scarborough East.

Mr. Hicks: For a moment I thought I had an extra hour to speak on this Bill. It gives me great pleasure to have the opportunity to address this subject because I have spent 30 years in education. With such a background, I think one becomes very aware of some of the problems. I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett) for bringing this Bill forward to the House after a great deal of hard work.

I also want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) and the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), both of whom appear very concerned and made some very worthwhile comments.

The purpose of this Bill is to provide further protection to children under 16 years of age from sexual offences. Several new, non-existent offences would be created, based principally on the prohibition of physical contact with children for the purpose of sexual gratification or stimulation.

A few years ago, the Department of Justice, together with the Department of National Health and Welfare, appointed a committee to consider the problem of sexual offences against children and youths. The committee, under the chairmanship of Dr. Robin Badgley, reported in August, 1984. While this committee was working, a special committee was formed by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), under the chairmanship of Mr. Paul Fraser, to report on issues in pornography and prostitution. Several Members have already alluded to many of the facts outlined in these reports.

The Badgley committee assumed that the principal way in which to deal with the sexual abuse of children would be to invoke the criminal law. Consequently, the Badgley committee proposed the reform of the sexual offences as part of their recommendations. The Badgley committee recommended that the offence of under-age sexual intercourse be retained and treated as almost self-evident that having sexual intercourse with a girl of 13 years or less should continue to be a crime. It was also recommended that the Criminal Code be amended to specify that the consent of a child under 16, rather than 14 as at present, is no defence to a charge under Section 146. I believe that was also alluded to very well.

Although I have many other comments, I will sit down and allow this Bill to be seconded and voted upon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I understand that the Hon. Member for Scarborough East is now putting his motion. The motion is as follows: Mr. Hicks, seconded by Mr. Redway, moves:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-261, An Act to amend the Criminal Code (child abuse), be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the main motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Hicks) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion, as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Accordingly, the order is discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—LAKE ONTARIO—UNITED STATES PROGRAM TO CLEAN UP CHEMICAL DUMP

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, some 20 per cent of all Canadians draw their drinking water either from the Niagara River or from water that has passed through the Niagara River. Along the shores of the Niagara River on the American side there are many toxic chemical dumps, but four in particular stand out in my mind, and I suspect the minds of most people who are familiar with that problem. Those dumps are the Love Canal site, the Hyde Park dump, the S Area dump and the 102nd Street dump.

All of these create a great potential danger for Canadians and Americans who draw their drinking water from the Niagara River, Lake Ontario and down the St. Lawrence River to the Atlantic Ocean. I have described those dumps as four obscenities on the American side of the Niagara River. I also think of them as a gigantic catastrophe that is waiting to happen.

In November last year, the United States Government, the Government of the State of New York and the owners of the Hyde Park dump, Occidental Chemical Company, came to an agreement relating to the clean-up of that particular dump with a view to ensuring that there would not be the potential of seepage of these toxic chemicals into the Niagara River and Lake Ontario.

Shortly thereafter, on November 28, I addressed a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Gurbin) about that agreement. He indicated to me at that time that first, the agreement provided for the clean-up of certain chemicals in those dumps and for the containment and destruction of certain of those chemicals. However, we are all aware that there are a great many chemicals in that dump, at least 25 toxic chemicals. We are concerned whether all of those toxic chemicals or just a portion of them are being cleaned up.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary indicated at that time that the position of our Government, as we all hope and desire, is that the agreement is not just to contain the chemicals but to remove and destroy them. He also indicated that the Minister and the Department of the Environment in Canada were assessing the whole agreement to see whether or not it solved the problem of the Hyde Park dump as far as we in this country were concerned. He also indicated that there were 60 days after the agreement had been reached before the American Courts had the opportunity to approve or disapprove that agreement. That period of time has obviously passed since November 28, so I hope the Parliamentary Secretary is going to shed some light on this situation.

First, will he tell us whether or not that agreement was satisfactory to Canada, whether it will contain not just the toxic chemicals but also provide a mechanism for destroying them. I hope he will also tell us the details, if any, of the approval by the U.S. Courts on this subject.

Since I asked that question, there have been other developments. The head of the Environmental Protection Agency indicated his concern that the Super Fund which the American Congress set up to clean up chemical dump sites across the U.S. is in danger of running out of money. He indicated the money will probably run out in April of this year, and no more funding will be available. There are, of course, three proposals for providing more funds. There is a proposal before the U.S. House of Representatives which would provide some $10 billion by way of a tax on the petrochemical industry. There is a proposal before the U.S. Senate for a fund of some $7.5 billion financed by a manufacturing tax. There is a proposal by President Reagan for a fund of $5.8 billion to be funded by a petrochemical tax as well.

When I was in Washington in September of 1985, this matter was up in the air and there has not been agreement since then. We are now six months along the road and if there is no agreement now or in April of this year, the Super Fund money will disappear. That includes the funding to clean up some 2,000 dump sites in the U.S., 105 of which are around the Great Lakes. I hope the funding to be provided by this agreement we are talking about for Hyde Park is not dependent on the Super Fund. If it is, we are going to face another potential setback, or even disaster, before we can get the Hyde Park site cleaned up.

That site, of course, is only one of the potential problems along the Niagara frontier. The other three I referred to are just as dangerous. I hope we will hear from the Parliamentary Secretary tonight some words of wisdom, encouragement and hope, indeed, definitive words concerning a clean-up, first of all of the Hyde Park dump site, a clean-up of the Love Canal dump site, the S Area dump site, as well as the 102 Street dump. If we are going to have safe water for about four million Canadians who draw their water from the Niagara River and the Great Lakes, we have to get those dumps cleaned up, and fast.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I doubt any Member of Parliament could have made the point more forcefully or clearly than the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway). I will try and deal with the specific points he has raised.

February 24 is not 60 days from November 28. It happens to be the end of the 60-day period which the U.S. Court defined for public comment on the proposal. I regret to have to inform the Hon. Member that our position and the final determination of the U.S. Court is keyed to February 24. I cannot offer him any more specific comment than I did on the day he asked me the question.

The second point, to amplify and precisely explain what the Hon. Member said concerning the danger which exists in the four areas referred to, in fact in the Hyde Park area alone there is probably a ton of dioxin. As the Hon. Member has mentioned, this is one of four specific areas, but there are many other point sources that have been identified along the American border as well as the Canadian border. On balance, probably about 90 per cent is coming from the American side. However, we both take water, and that area serves between four million and six million people for drinking water supplies. It then runs down through Lake Ontario and out into the St. Lawrence River. The Member has very clearly identified the situation in the United States.

The dependency of the super funding for this, as far as I know, is not really an issue for this specific resolution. This is a court determination of a settlement with a chemical company that has a responsibility. This is really what is being worked through now. The EPA is very much involved, as are the American courts. My understanding is that the total job is very much dependent on the Super Fund. One of the Bills which the Member mentioned has passed one of the Houses. We do not know where they will all end up.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear that we are talking about a very complex and untried type of situation in terms of the technologies and the clean-up that needs to be done. I will correct any impression that was left that we are only interested in some of the chemicals. The final position of the Canadian Government is that none of the chemicals which exist in that dump site or other dump sites can be allowed to escape through the dump sites and into the Niagara River. That is our final position and that is what we must aim for.

The question is how we are going to reach that goal and how effective is the initial stage of the solution that is being discussed. What is being discussed is a containment proposal which, along with the containment, removes chemicals that would have otherwise seeped through which will, in turn, be destroyed.

The technologies that are important here have to do with the problems that will exist in dump sites in both the United States and Canada in terms of massive volumes of contaminated soil that would have to be transported if we were talking about excavation and removal. We must develop technologies that will extract the chemicals from those sites so that we can avoid other serious dangers involved in transportation. We would still end up having to eventually destroy those chemicals. It is a continuum, Mr. Speaker. Our position is final. We do not want any more of these toxic chemicals in the Niagara River.

JUSTICE—ENQUIRY WHY ANGLOPHONE APPOINTED INSTEAD OF AVAILABLE FRANCOPHONE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on February 4, 1985, we asked the Minister of Justice why he failed to appoint six bilingual francophones to the Court of Appeal of Ontario, in view of the great number of French-speaking lawyers and judges available. That question, Mr. Speaker, was in no way aimed at disparaging a judge who is known for his qualifications and credibility. It was simply aimed at understanding the behaviour of a Government that ignored the dearly acquired rights of 500,000 French-speaking Ontarians. In any event, Mr. Speaker, the Minister answered that the important thing was to appoint a first-class person, in other words there was no first class person among our Francophone jurists.

Mr. Speaker, since 1953, the tradition in Ontario was that at least one bilingual French-speaking judge should be appointed to the Ontario Court of Appeal. Although this gave no additional rights to the Francophones, French-speaking Ontarians were proud of having such a representative, until their rights would finally be recognized.

It was therefore in May 1984 that the Ontario Government finally passed the Courts of Justice Act, 1984. As we know, that Act allowed the 500,000 French-speaking Ontarians to be heard by a judge or judges speaking their own language. For French-speaking Canadians, that new Act was a giant stride along the road to rights they had always been denied.

The Mulroney Government comes to power and with it a 33-year old tradition disappears. In fact, by appointing Justice Horace Krever to the Ontario Court of Appeal, the Minister of Justice of the Conservative Government has broken with this tradition and, I feel, violated the right of Franco-Ontarians to have a sufficient number of permanent Francophone judges to hear their cases in their own language.

Mr. Speaker, the next day, on February 5, in reply to another question, the Minister answered: There are 18 judges at the appeal level in Ontario, three of whom are bilingual, or 17 per cent. There are an additional four bilingual judges who can be used on appeals from the High Court. Of these seven, four are Francophones. In 1985 there were two appeals among 1,400 applications which required a French panel. What the Minister omitted to say was that of those 18 judges, 16 are permanent and two are supernumerary. Of the 16 permanent judges, only two are bilingual, while three judges are needed to hear a case, to form the minimum quorum of three judges at the Court of Appeal—what is referred to as a panel. The Minister therefore admitted that he felt like using a supernumerary judge or the bilingual judges from the Superior Court to constitute the so-called panel.

Mr. Speaker, this is absurd, especially since the problem could easily have been avoided by appointing a bilingual Francophone judge to the Court of Appeal! Furthermore, when he stated that only two appeals had been heard in 1985, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) forgot that the 1984 Courts of Justice Act is not in effect throughout Ontario, but will be by the end of July. By his comments, the Minister also quantified the rights of Canadian Francophones. He, of all people, should know that one does not quantify a right and that rights are given freely and generously to all.

Mr. Speaker, on February 5 last week, I also asked the Prime Minister what he thought of this appointment and whether he agreed with his Minister of Justice that no bilingual Francophone could be found for this position. I was frustrated if not shocked at the Prime Minister's reply. He claimed he had personally contacted a Francophone judge or lawyer—he was not sure—he said he was distinguished and that for health reasons he had been unable to accept the appointment. He had to decline, according to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker, these comments do not make sense, to say the least, when we know that in the Province of Ontario we have at least fifteen very good lawyers and fifteen judges in the courts at the present time who could easily fill the position of Judge of the Court of Appeal and would make very competent and, incidentally, very healthy legal experts.

The Court of Appeal of the Province of Quebec has a total of 15 bilingual permanent judges, four of whom are Anglophones, while the 1984 legislation on judicial courts in Ontario gives Francophones the right to be heard in their own language by a judge who speaks that language. Why do we not have at least one judge—one is not very much to ask for—one permanent bilingual French-speaking judge to the Court of Appeal? Is that not a blatant injustice to French-speaking Ontarians?

Mr. Speaker, in an interview with the media, the Minister of Justice claimed that all the fuss about the appointment of a French-speaking judge to the Court of Appeal is nothing but a charade to discredit him for being unilingual. That statement goes to prove that actually the Minister does not understand anything about Francophones. He does not understand anything about the daily reality of 500,000 French-speaking Ontarians. Francophones are not concerned about the Minister of Justice being unilingual. What francophones care about is the rights they are being deprived of by the Minister of Justice. This is not a political issue but a matter of justice and equity, supported by the non-political, and I repeat non-political association of the French-speaking legal profession in Ontario, by the once again non-political Commissioner of Official languages of Canada, and also by one of his own colleagues, the Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon).

Mr. Speaker, for all those reasons, it is clear the Minister of Justice does not care about French-speaking Canadians. By gulping his words, the Prime Minsiter has shown that Francophones cannot depend on this Conservatives Government to safeguard their rights. This could not be more tragic, when we think of the numerous efforts of the French-speaking community in Ontario to acquire those rights.

By appointing a unilingual English-speaking judge to a seat that was traditionally reserved to a bilingual French-speaking judge, the Minister has broken a 33-year tradition. It is sad that this Government's vision, in the context of a bilingual country, is very much different from the approach and views of that government.

Mr. Speaker, I would conclude by saying that we do not ask for much, we are only asking for justice, we are asking that one of the members of the Court of Appeal of Ontario be a bilingual francophone.

Mr. Bernard Valcourt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, it is amazing that the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), whom I was told had a reputation for being a defender of the rights of French-speaking minorities not only in Ontario but all across Canada, to see him use the appointment of Mr. Justice Krever to score political points on the back of the Government, tell all Canadians that the Conservative Government does not care about francophones outside Quebec, and suggest that only the Liberal Party cares about them. As Parliamentary Secretary and also as a French-speaking Member of Parliament from outside Quebec and an Acadian from New Brunswick, I can assure the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) that, as long as the Government Members will remain alert, which they have always been, as I can see every day, Canadians have nothing to fear.

When someone rises as the Hon. Member has just done to embarrass someone who has been appointed to the Court of Appeal, in this case, Mr. Justice Krever, whose ability the Hon. Member is not questioning as he speaks only of tradition, he should also look at what services are available to Franco-Ontarians. Everyone is entitled to be heard in French by Ontario courts, French-speaking magistrates are always available. Seven members of the Ontario Supreme Court are perfectly bilingual and four of them are francophones.

The appointment of Mr. Justice Krever is the result of consultations with the Chief Justice of Ontario and the Attorney General of Ontario, Mr. Ian Scott, who has even supported publicly the appointment of Mr. Justice Krever and confirmed that he was consulted from the very beginning about the whole procedure. The Ontario Attorney General even added, Mr. Speaker, that he did not understand why the federal Liberal Party was raising this issue and using it to try and suggest that we do not care about francophones outside Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, when someone speaks about an obvious injustice, we have to look at what is in fact happening. The information at the Department of Justice is that Franco-Ontarians can be served properly in their own language by the Court of Appeal and the Ontario Superior Court, and the appointment of Mr. Justice Krever was approved by chief justices throughout Canada, including the Chief Justice of the Quebec Superior Court. This attack on the character of Mr. Justice Krever is sure to be embarrassing for a man who has devoted so many years to the service of justice. He was appointed because of his ability and because he was the best choice.

Finally, I can assure you that the rights of all francophones in Canada are a priority consideration for the Minister of Justice, whatever the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier might suggest, and that all francophones can be heard in their own language in Ontario.

STATUS OF WOMEN—PORTRAYAL OF WOMEN IN THE MEDIA. (B) APPOINTMENTS TO CRTC AND CBC

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, on February 3, I raised a very important question with the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) regarding the report on industry self-regulation entitled "Sex Role Stereotyping in the Broadcast Media". The report shows that effectively there has been no progress made in improving the portrayal of women and participation of women in the broadcast media. The Minister did not care to comment upon the report, although previous reports have also shown no progress. They have been available for many months, particularly the "Media Watch" report and the report by the CBC itself.

The Minister gave his assurance that decisions of the Government would be based upon discussions held in hearings which are to be scheduled in three Canadian cities. I have to ask: Why three more hearings? The question has been studied far too long without action. The problems have been documented for years. I asked him another question about action the Government could take immediately and had entirely at its disposal, and that is with the appointments to the CRTC and the CBC, which should be half and half, men and women, according to our notion of equality of the sexes.

The Minister gave a very poor reply here as well. He mentioned the name of one woman whom he had appointed. Well, there are seven men and five women on the CBC board, and there are three vacancies. There is certainly an opportunity to have equal representation. I hope that among the next appointments there will be people who know something about the subject of the failure to give adequate portrayal of women and who will use that opportunity to put pressure on the CBC. This is one thing Government can do in its appointments. It cannot interfere in the operations of the CBC. That would be entirely improper. However, it could appoint people who will say that equality for women demands fair treatment in the broadcast media.

With regard to the CRTC, there is also an underrepresentation of women. There are currently 14 men and seven women appointed. Canada, in making recommendations to the United Nations for the plan of action, recommended in its communication section that half the appointments be of women to Government appointed boards in that field. It is quite wrong that the Government has not acted here. It is hypocritical when we consider that this was a Government of Canada recommendation to the United Nations.

What are the facts? In the two years of so-called self-regulation, which industry asked for, they said: "We don't want Government regulation, don't touch the Broadcasting Act, don't make us do anything. We will reform on our own and in two years we will show you what a wonderful job we have done". It has done almost nothing, and some statistics show a deterioration of the situation.

Let me begin with CBC English channels. I will start with one statistic in the area of drama; how men and women are shown at the place of work. Who is the supervisor and who is the employee reporting to a supervisor? In 1981, 71 per cent were male supervisors, 26 per cent female. In 1983, the number of men had increased so it was 81 per cent male and 16 per cent female. On The National, the major newscast of the country, in 1981 there were 8 per cent women reporters. It rose to a grand total of 18 per cent, one of the few statistics to show any increase. That is only to 18 per cent. Of the interviewees, 16 per cent were female 1981 and only 13 per cent in 1983, a deterioration. The anchor people were all men and all the substitutes were men.

On the expert witnesses, we do not get information year by year, but the average is 5 per cent. It is certainly an insulting notion that 5 per cent of the expertise in Canada is female and the other 95 per cent is male, that somehow women are not as capable as men.

Even for random interviewees, only 36 per cent were female. Women, who only have to be alive and have a comment to make, are underrepresented. For the French network, in drama the situation in 1981 was 77 per cent male, up to 78 per cent in 1982. Women were badly underrepresented.

[Translation]

On the French network in 1980-1981, announcers on newscasts and other current events programs were men and women, respectively 57 per cent and 43 per cent. In 1981, 1982 and 1984, 82 per cent were men and 18 per cent were women, therefore a drop in the representation of women. In 1980, 29 per cent of interviewees were women, but that figure dropped as low as 15 per cent in 1984.

The percentage of women reporters in 1980 was 20 per cent, dropping to 12 per cent in 1984.

[English]

These are appalling statistics. For children, the cartoon characters are 61 per cent male and 16 per cent female. Even the portrayal of who is alive and doing things in cartoons for children overrepresents men. To add to those statistics, 23 per cent of neither sex. Therefore, women are very, very badly underrepresented. Voice-overs in English advertising, 91 per cent had a voice-over, of these 90 per cent were men and only 6 per cent women and four of both sexes.

[Translation]

And the same thing goes for French advertising.

[English]

Women are twice as likely as men to be shown partially clothed. Women are shown as sex objects on television. As far as age distribution goes, there are fewer women and younger women as well. The study showed very few trends because it was an expensive study and it would be very hard to replicate. We are concerned that the CRTC has not provided the material in a way that it can be replicated so that progress reports can be made.

There have been vigorous recommendations for action. I would hope that the Government would begin to act on this serious question. If women are to be equal in Canadian society, they must have equal access to the airwaves. Women's events must be covered equally with those of men and women must be seen as experts and as full participants in Canadian society. There are many recommendations from Media Watch and other women's organizations as to practical measures the Government could be taking to that end.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has raised an important issue and we are all, I am sure, appreciative of her concerns about the problem of sex-role stereotyping in the broadcast media. I would like to provide some background information on this issue to the House.

In September 1979, at the request of the Government, the CRTC established a task force on sex-role stereotyping. In September 1982, the task force released its report entitled "Images of Women" which called for industry self-regulation with public accountability to improve the portrayal of women in the programming and commercial content broadcast by the Canadian broadcasting system. This report was the culmination of three years of co-operative effort among members of the broadcasting and advertising industries, the public and the CRTC.

As recommended by the task force, a two-year period of industry self-regulation, beginning September 1, 1982, was undertaken. The CRTC has recently released a report summarizing the initiatives taken during this self-regulatory period as well as the results of an independent content analysis of Canadian broadcast programming conducted at the request of the CRTC.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member asked the Minister of Communications what was the Government's position with respect to the report on the self-regulation period which has just ended. I would like to repeat the remarks made by the Minister in the House, and more particularly that it is too early for the Government to make any comment about it. The third phase of the process recommended by the CRTC task force is that the report be used as the basis for public discussions on the efficiency of industry self-regulation. With that in mind the CRTC has announced that public hearings on that subject will be held in April and May in Vancouver, in Montreal and in the National Capital Region. After these hearings the CRTC will assess the efficiency of self-regulation and decide whether new measures might be considered.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member also asked the Minister of Communication about the Government's intention concerning the appointment of women to the CRTC and the CBC board of directors. The Minister clearly indicated that increased woman representation and participation in these areas was a major consideration and that he would keep that in mind when vacancies occurred. In this connection, the Minister mentioned the recent appointment of Mrs. Lorraine Duguay as Director of the CBC. I am sure that the House shares the Minister's eagerness to appoint competent women such as Mrs. Duguay to important positions.

[English]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make clear to the House that the Government recognizes that the problem of sex-role stereotyping is a broad and complex one and one that will not disappear overnight. Indeed, as members of the CRTC task force have noted, societal attitudes toward women must change dramatically before that goal is entirely realizable. I would, however, like to reassure the House and the Hon. Member that the Government is following the CRTC's activities in this regard very carefully.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 22

[English]

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), seeing his popularity and that of his Party decline on a daily basis, has decided that he has had enough of bad news. From now on it will be good news, even if he has to make it up himself. He no longer wants reported by the Parliamentary Press Gallery how incompetent are his cabinet Ministers and how terribly annoyed he is that the press will not partake of breakfast at Brian's. From now on the message will be brought directly to the regional media, bypassing the Parliamentary Press Gallery.

Over the last few days cabinet Ministers have been seen ducking the media, leaving the House by the side door, the back door, or a crack in the wall—everything except the front door. The assistant to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) has even sent a letter to the local media explaining how they could benefit from media clips directly—not that second-hand stuff from the Parliamentary Press Gallery, in other words, the unbiased truth according to Brian.

Lately the Prime Minister extolled the virtues of the U.S. system where the Leader of the Government does not answer to the legislature at all. The Tories during the election campaign promised that they would be accountable. A little more than a year later, Ministers do not answer the press, the Prime Minister avoids answering in the House, and substance has been replaced with pre-recorded clips to be sent to the regions of Canada.

Perhaps the most interesting development in the media strategy is the fact that the Prime Minister, who does not have time to be accountable to Parliament—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

HOUSING

PLIGHT OF HOMELESS IN TORONTO

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the death of Drina Joubert is being examined at an inquest which opened on Wednesday in Toronto. Drina Joubert died on December 16 of cold and exposure in the cab of an abandoned truck in downtown Toronto. Toronto residents, who are shocked and shamed by her death and the three other deaths this year from exposure of homeless people, have formed a coalition called "Housing not Hostels". The concern is for the 6,000 to 10,000 homeless people in Toronto who cannot find accommodation now that the low rental places have been converted or destroyed. The coalition organized a march on Tuesday to City Hall to remind the public about these unnecessary deaths. It was led by several leading church people of the city of Toronto. The coalition is appearing at the current inquest, through a lawyer, in order to cross-examine witnesses, because of its conviction that it was not exposure that killed Drina Joubert but the impossibility of her getting a decent home in which to live.

Hostels are not the answer, they are the last resort. They give no privacy, no room to store belongings, they are overcrowded and there is no security while staying there. What they are demanding is that this Government and the other Governments of Canada provide housing, not hostels.

Mr. Speaker: I should like to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

SUGGESTION WESTERN PARKWAY BE RENAMED SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD PARKWAY

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the lack of recognition in Canada of our first Prime Minister, Sir John A. Macdonald. In most nations, a country's early leaders are honoured through national holidays or the naming of a prominent landmark in the capital city after them. In the case of Sir John we have neither. There have been several unsuccessful Bills introduced since 1979 to designate a national holiday in honour of Sir John A. Macdonald. The failure to reach agreement on these Bills may have had something to do with the fact that no one could agree on the exact date of Sir John's birthday, which is either January 10 or January 11, 1815.

As the Member of Parliament for Ottawa West I have the honour of representing essentially the same area that Sir John did toward the end of his political career. It appears to me that, if we cannot agree on a holiday, surely we could agree on designating an Ottawa landmark in his honour. We have, for example, Colonel By Drive in the city of Ottawa. In my opinion the time has come to start thinking about naming one of Ottawa's other federally administered roadways after Sir John A. Macdonald.

I therefore call upon the National Capital Commission, at the earliest possible opportunity, to designate the scenic western portion of the Ottawa River Parkway, mostly located in my riding and Sir John A's old riding of Carleton, as the "Sir John A. Macdonald Parkway". At the same time I would suggest to the Commission that it consider naming the eastern portion of the Parkway after that other great Father of Confederation, Sir Georges Etienne Cartier.

Mr. Speaker: I would advise the Hon. Member his time has expired.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HEALTH

YOUNG PEOPLE'S NEED FOR BETTER ENVIRONMENT AND QUALITY OF LIFE

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the House to the conclusions of a study made public by the Department of National Health and Welfare on February 6 last. This study by a Queen's University social programs assessment group focuses on the troublesome problems experienced by Canadian youths. Among other findings, Mr. Speaker, nearly 50 per cent of young Canadians aged 9 to 15 do not eat properly; 25 per cent of 15-year-old teenagers smoke cigarettes and 30 per cent of them regularly drink five or more glasses of alcoholic beverages at a stretch. In addition, Mr. Speaker, 10 per cent of youngsters aged 12 smoke cigarettes, and 20 per cent of 15-year-old youths admit using cannabis.

Mr. Speaker, there is no denying that it is a social problem which concerns us all. Governments must co-operate and work together with health organizations, parents and school authorities, but it is even more imperative and urgent for each and everyone of us to do the utmost so that our troubled youths might live in a healthier environment and enjoy a better life.

GRANT MADE TO GRAND CANAL COMPANY

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): The question is how to throw away $30,000 of taxpayers' money? The answer is, it is very simple. You just give it to the Grand Canal Company to conduct a study on water diversions and water exports. This is the strange way the Government goes about cutting the deficit.

The Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) cannot hide behind the excuse that this money was given by a regional office without his knowledge.

The Minister is responsible for the operations of the National Research Council. If he does not want to throw away $30,000, if he does not want to squander taxpayers' money, if he really is serious about cutting the deficit, then he has a clear choice and the power to make the necessary decision: to rescind the $30,000 grant and to ensure that the National Research Council, or any other agency under his responsibility, will not squander money on studies dealing with the export and diversions of our water resources. The message should be loud and clear. There should be no wasting of public funds to study projects that will wreak havoc on the ecology, on native lifestyles, and on Canada's long-term water interests.

WOMEN

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, five years ago today, women from all parts of the country came to Ottawa, spontaneously and with great enthusiasm, to show their interest in improving women's legal rights as they have evolved since the suffragette movement.

By their sheer numbers, they showed politicians how determined they were to ensure the Constitution would be an effective tool for the advancement of the status of women.

[English]

We in the New Democratic Party are proud to say that we worked together with the women of Canada to ensure that Section 28 was included in the Constitution. We are continuing to speak up with the women of Canada to make the legal promise of equality an equality in fact. Unfortunately, even the progress toward formal legal equality has been painfully slow. Much remains to be done.

On the occasion of the fifth anniversary of the ad hoc conference on the Constitution, we are challenging the Government to provide stable funding to the Legal Education and Action Fund, implement the recommendations of Equality for All, establish an ongoing equality audit of laws and practices, give more importance to judicial education on equality, and appoint more women judges. I was part of that movement five years ago here in Parliament and I hope we will be seeing many more women who were part of the women's move to Ottawa here with us in the House.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SIGNING OF ACCORD WITH WHITE BEAR BAND OF SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce in this House that an age-old problem with the White Bear Indian Band in Saskatchewan has been resolved.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) and Chief Brian Standingready, accompanied by 12 advisers, signed an agreement on Indian land claims representing a total value of more than $19 million.

[English]

The original grievance arises from alleged irregularities in the sale of former reserve lands of the Pheasant Rump and Ocean Man Bands when they were amalgamated with the White Bear Band in 1901.

[Translation]

The settlement shows the federal Government's good faith in its negotiations with official band representatives.

I want to congratulate the Minister and the band leaders on concluding this agreement.

[English]

As part of the settlement, the band will reacquire part of the former reserve lands when property known as the Lee's Ranch, comprising some 12,000 acres, is added to the reserve holdings of the White Bear Band. This land, coupled with a sizable cash compensation and other benefits, will pave the way for the White Bear Band to channel its skills and energies into achieving its goals of self-government and economic independence.

THE BALTIC STATES

LITHUANIA—COMMEMORATION OF INDEPENDENCE

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, on February 16, 1918, Lithuania became an independent kingdom, and by November of the same year Lithuania became an independent republic. For years following this historic declaration, Lithuania resisted attacks by Bolshevik troops and mercenary forces.

The years that followed were hard for this tiny nation that experienced the ravages of war and dislocation of its economy. Yet, despite this hardship, Lithuania maintained her dignity and resolve. By 1940, however, the Soviet Union overran the three Baltic States and forcibly annexed them to the Soviet Union. The popular Soviet version of these events is that the peoples of the Baltic States joined voluntarily. Historical fact is that this revision of history in Soviet textbooks is nothing more than a hoax.

To Canadians of Lithuanian origin, this day commemorates the brief period of democracy enjoyed by their homeland. This day also gives reason for all Canadians to recall just how precious the gift of democracy is and how swiftly it can be lost. Let us join with Canadians of Lithuanian origin to commemorate this day and to pay tribute to their national courage and resilience. Freedom and democracy are non-negotiable commodities and they must be restored wherever they are denied.

AGRICULTURE

SUGAR-BEET GROWERS—CALL FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, today Manitobans learned that the Manitoba Sugar Company, the only operational sugar refinery in western Canada, will lay off 70 of its 95 employees unless the federal Government announces a new sugar policy. Mr. Bill Siemans, President of the Canadian Sugar-beet Growers Association, has stated unequivocally that time is running out. If sugar-beet growers do not have an answer by March 1, the whole industry will be in jeopardy.

In western Canada this industry provides close to 1,600 jobs. Over the years growers have invested heavily in specialized machinery to make their industry efficient and productive.

The Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) has had over a year to find an answer to this issue. Yet his office can give the sugar-beet growers or refineries absolutely no assurance that there will be a policy decision by March 1. By this inaction, the Minister and his Government threaten the livelihood of hundreds of communities in western Canada. The western Ministers of the Government obviously do not have the clout to get a sugar policy through Cabinet.

All Members on this side of the House call upon the Government to give this issue immediate consideration and announce a decision before the Budget so that we can continue to have a thriving sugar-beet industry in western Canada.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The prime rate is at 13 per cent, nine percentage points above the rate of inflation. Canadians want to know what is going on—small businesses, farmers, and people entering into mortgages. My colleague from Winnipeg-Fort Garry told me that a restaurateur in his riding has to serve 800 more breakfasts per week to pay the costs on his renewed mortgage. The Minister said yesterday that interest rates would return to normal levels. What, in the Minister's view, is a normal level? When will we see it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have commented on this matter in the House before, as Hon. Members well know. I am not able to be precise about it, as the Hon. Member also knows, since he has tried this type of question on me before.

The point I would like to make to the Hon. Member is that once we are able to achieve stability we will return to more normal levels. That will be achieved once we try to withdraw ourselves from some of the instability in the international market, about which the Hon. Member is only too well aware. Canada will always be a part of that because of the open economy which we have.

PRIME RATE IN UNITED STATES

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the United States is certainly a big part of the international market. The prime rate in that country has held steady at 9.5 per cent, some 3.5 percentage points below the rate in Canada. With the size of the U.S. deficit and with the inflation rate there approximately the same as here, why is the Government inflicting this interest rate hardship on Canadians?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there are two ways which we can go here. We could allow the speculative pressures to take a much heavier toll on the market-place, which would lead to a higher level of inflation. That in itself would lead to a permanent level of higher interest rates than we have been experiencing prior to this upset in the market-place. What we have done is we have taken short-term action in order to put things back on a more normal and more stable basis which, I am sure, will come about in due course. I am sure the Hon. Member will be able to display some patience.

[Translation]

BANK RATE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, speculation is the result of a lack of confidence in the Government's policies.

If the Minister is so confident about his policies, could he give the House the assurance today that he will keep the bank rate from going up again next week, and that the rate will be allowed to fall immediately after the Budget is brought down?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have the greatest confidence in the policies of our Government, and I have here a press release in which this Government announces the creation of 2,500 jobs in the Montreal area at SPAR Aerospace and Pratt & Whitney, and that is our Government's policy.

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS RENEGOTIATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, a few months ago in the House, the same Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister were bragging that the prime rate had gone down since they came to power. After 16 or 18 months in power, it is back to where it was in September 1984. All interest rates in Canada have gone up, while in the United States they have remained stable. Only one rate did not go up and that is the interest paid on Canada Savings Bonds.

I would like to ask the Minister of Finance when he intends to adjust the interest rate on Canada Savings Bonds. This morning we heard that more than 1 billion dollars' worth had been redeemed last week. Why penalize Canadians who opted for savings bonds and are now being forced to redeem them and buy Treasury bills with a return of 3.5 per cent more?

• (1120)

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I share the Hon. Member's concern about the small investors who have put their savings into Canada Savings Bonds. This is something we are looking at at the present time. As we see how things develop, we may well have an announcement to make.

[Translation]

INTEREST RATES ON SAVINGS BONDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Does the Minister realize that every day the Minister delays adjusting the interest on savings bonds means he will have to add 300 million more to his weekly Treasury bills this week, on which the interest is very high, nearly 12 per cent? Why doesn't the Minister announce today he will adjust the interest rate on savings bonds, which would mean a saving for the Treasury and at the same time would give Canadian taxpayers who have opted for this type of investment a little more equity in the system?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I don't know that I can add much to the first answer I gave to the hon. gentleman. It is basically the same question.

INCREASED INTEREST RATE SOUGHT FOR CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the astronomical change in interest rates as well. The Minister knows that the banks increased their prime yesterday to 13 per cent, which is the highest in 17 months. That means that the Government is now hitting homeowners, farmers, and those right across the country who are looking for jobs. What happens to the holders of Canada Savings Bonds? Given the fact that tens of thousands of Canadians bought those bonds in good faith and they are now cashing them in at the rate of $1 billion a week, will the Minister announce today an interest rate increase for the holders of Canada Savings Bonds?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I guess the Hon. Member prepared his question before he heard the previous question.

Mr. Broadbent: No, not at all.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The question is identical; the answer is identical.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has said that the answer is identical but, as someone has just pointed out, he did not answer the other question.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCE INTEREST RATE CHANGE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): The Government has already hurt thousands of Canadians because of its high interest rate policy. It is now taking this irresponsibilty out on the holders of Canada Savings Bonds. Will the Minister give us a commitment by the end of the day that the Government will announce some change in the interest rate for the holders of Canada Savings Bonds?

Mr. Benjamin: Say yes, and sit down.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have responded in what I thought was a pretty full way. I indicated that I had the same concern expressed by the hon. gentleman about the small investors who are holding Canada Savings Bonds. As we study this situation over the next little while, we may well have an announcement to make. In the meantime, surely the Hon. Member can give me some time to review the matter in view of the current market conditions.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, if he is not going to give us any early action which will help the holders of Canada Savings Bonds, perhaps the Minister of Finance can deal with another question.

COST TO ECONOMY OF INCREASED INTEREST RATES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): The Minister of Finance has said for weeks now that this constant increase in interest rates was simply a matter of a "blip", a temporary action by the Government.

An Hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Broadbent: Since for at least six weeks we have had a remarkable and alarming increase in interest rates, is the Minister of Finance now prepared to tell the people of Canada exactly what it is going to cost us?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): There will be a Budget which will come down—I think we have a date and time now—at 4.30 p.m. on February 26.

Mr. Axworthy: I hope so. Will you be here for it?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I would encourage the Hon. Member to be in his seat in the House so he can receive all of the—

Mr. Broadbent: You will be here for it, eh?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Yes, I will be here for it.

Mr. Axworthy: Don't forget, now.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They are just worried because they are not all there.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member must realize—and I am sure he does—that this Budget is not going to be an easy Budget for us all. It is going to be a Budget which faces up to the realities of the country, realities which previous Governments have ignored, but realities which must be faced if we are going to have a healthy economy and if we are going to get the level of interest rates back down to the level which I think the Hon. Member would like to see.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EFFECT OF REGULATION ON EARLY RETIREES

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment. Two members of the Forget Commission have now publicly disagreed with her unfair changes to the UIC regulations which deny benefits to early retirees looking for new jobs. Several members of her own caucus, including two senior cabinet Ministers, disagree with her stand.

Does she not realize that every day she lets her pride stand in the way of withdrawing those unfair regulations, the more she is hurting Armed Forces and RCMP retirees, as well as others in the public and private sector forced to look for new jobs in mid-life? Why does she not withdraw these unfair regulations now? Where is the justice?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is sitting on the opposition side of the House because of what happened to this country during many years of Liberal mismanagement. There are 211 active Members on this side, and they are making a tremendous contribution in the views they put forward and in the way they represent their constituencies. They were elected to come to grips with the economic mess this country was in, and they are doing that.

Not all the decisions to be taken are easy ones. Not all our decisions will be easily acceptable to Members of the Opposition. However, we are trying to turn this economic mess around and we are making gains. Jobs are being created and confidence is being restored. Unemployment is down, and that is the best way to come to grips with the problem.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming a speech.

Mr. Hopkins: She is not listening to any of those Members, Mr. Speaker. She brought in these unfair regulations before she appointed the Forget Commission and it is equally valid for her to withdraw them while the Commission is still sitting.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister really want to go down in history as the one who cheated Canadian Armed Forces retirees and others in the public and private sectors who have paid premiums over many years? Is that her idea of justice? Why does she not listen to her own back-benchers? She does not even listen to her cabinet colleagues.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would hate to go down in history as a member of a Liberal Government which saddled the children and grandchildren of this country with a debt they will never be able to pay. That is the kind of legacy left by that Member's Government.

We look forward to the recommendations of the Forget Commission. We have asked them to look at all of the perceived inequities in the unemployment insurance program. We are prepared to receive those recommendations at any time. However, I will forbear to ask when was the last time that the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice ever met and discussed matters with the Leader of the Opposition.

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR HOLDERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. We have learned that Canada Savings Bonds holders are cashing them in at the rate of $1 billion a week. He says he is going to look into that, study it and so on. The Minister acted very quickly to burn speculators, so why does he not act quickly to save CSB holders rather than simply let them fry out there?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that kind of rhetoric really does not do anyone any good. I indicated to his Leader that this matter is under active review. That is the way it is going to stand.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, let us remove the rhetoric. What on earth is there to review? What on earth is he looking into? What on earth is there to study? People are cashing in their bonds at the rate of $1 billion a week. They were prepared to invest in this country and now he is hanging them out to dry. What is there to study?

• (1130)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has his figures a little bit wrong. He said $1 billion a week. That is not quite an accurate figure. There are some people who are cashing in their savings bonds. We are looking at the impact of that. We are also looking at the impact of the lower than market rate in relation to the smaller holders of Canada Savings Bonds who do not normally switch. We want to maintain their loyalty to this particular instrument. However, when that decision is made we want to be sure that it is the right one.

ENERGY

EAST COAST OFFSHORE DRILLING

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. That Minister and the Minister of Finance applied pressure to the consortium of Husky and Bow Valley to reduce drilling under the Petroleum Incentive Program from ten wells to seven wells off the East Coast of Canada. Through their manipulations, the two Ministers ensured that only two of these wells would be applicable under the grandfather provisions of the Petroleum Incentive Program. Will the Minister state now that all ten wells which Husky-Bow Valley proposed to drill are eligible for funding under the Petroleum Incentives Program and that the Government will approve that funding?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, this matter is before a committee of the House, so I do not know whether you wish me to respond at this time. At no time has the Government asked any company operating in Canada's frontiers to reduce its activities, as the Member well knows. We are discussing with the company which wells will be eligible for grandfathering during the remaining period of the PIP regime.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Government is retroactively applying the provisions that it wants to implement under the Petroleum Incentives Program and is contradicting testimony. Will the Minister not admit that while she was telling Canadians that she was interested in fostering exploration and development on the East Coast of Canada, she was working secretly to cut back on drilling and exploration?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is getting carried away. He knows better than anyone else that the reason for the slackening of activity off the East Coast has been the outlook for oil pricing and the fact that the geology has been poor. It was only under the Liberal Government that companies were encouraged to drill for dollars rather than geology. Our regime encourages them to actually look for oil and gas.

TREATMENT OF PENSIONS AS INCOME

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. She said a few moments ago in the House that she is looking forward to the report of the Forget Commission. One of the commissioners, Mr. Roy Bennett, said that the recent Government cut in unemployment insurance benefits for people on pension income was "not well founded". Since the commission has already decided that, why does the Minister not do the right thing and at least put a temporary freeze on this cut-back?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I have mentioned on a number of occasions in the House, the decision with regard to this regulation was taken 15 months ago, long before the Forget Commission was set up. Subsequent to that we have recommended to the Forget Commission that it look at all aspects of premiums, contributions, including who pays them and under what circumstances, and to give us its recommendations. I look forward to receiving the recommendations of the Forget Commission. When the Commission is prepared to make its recommendations, I will be glad to receive them.

EFFECT ON PENSIONERS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, that is absolutely inconsistent. The Minister is saying that she is prepared to forget the Forget Commission on this particular issue. Therefore, will she come with me tomorrow to my constituency office in Vancouver, where I am having an open house, where there are many pensioners who are affected by this terrible change? Would she come and face those people directly and listen to them?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, under most circumstances I would be glad to accompany the Hon. Member. However, I already have a very full schedule for tomorrow. Perhaps he and I can get together at some future time. This being St. Valentine's Day, perhaps he will write me a note to that effect, and I will be glad to take it into consideration.

INSTALLATION OF RECORDING SYSTEM IN LIBERAL CAUCUS ROOM

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Public Works. Prior to asking the question, I am sure that all Members would want to join me in wishing the Minister of Public Works a very speedy recovery.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: My question for the Acting Minister is with regard to the tampering with the electronic system in the Liberal caucus room. The Minister was notified over a week ago, both orally and in writing by myself, of the request for the production of documents pertaining to the installation, corrections, and alterations to that system by EMI Connors Electronics Limited. Does the Minister intend to comply with this request? If so, when, and if not, why not?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Acting Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Hon. Member could address that question and that request to the person responsible for these facilities, the Speaker of the House of Commons.

INQUIRY WHETHER DEPARTMENT HAS AYOUB REPORT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary, and I hope the Minister will listen carefully. I asked for papers in the possession of the Department of Public Works, and only those. Would the Minister inform the House whether his Department has the Ayoub Report? Does he have any other reports on the installation? Does he intend to table them in the House? My question is quite straightforward: Yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Acting Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that you are fully aware of who is responsible for those facilities. I again suggest that the Hon. Member ask the Speaker of the House for that information.

PROPOSAL TO LOCATE ARMAMENTS FACTORY IN CAPE BRETON—MIDDLE EAST PEACE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Government's Green Paper on international relations stated that Canadians have a profound interest in peace in the Middle East, and stressed our potential mediating role in that region. How can we possibly maintain credibility in that crucial mediating role if we allow a West German company to do here what it cannot do at home, to export arms to Arab states in the Middle East region?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in his preamble and question the hon. gentleman is leaving an absolutely false impression, for whatever motive he may have. The fact of the matter is that, pursuant to initiatives taken by the Government, as announced by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, several hundred inquiries have been received with respect to the establishment of businesses in the Cape Breton area. All of these are being considered. Thyssen is one of them.

GOVERNMENT'S JOB-CREATION POLICY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, why would such a proposal even be considered? The Government should realize that this kind of unstable military production, which is vulnerable to changes in world politics, is exactly the wrong way to develop the solid, long-term jobs that Cape Bretoners need in the future.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member again leaves a totally false impression through the manner in which he framed that question. He also displays a rather broad ignorance of the beneficial results that are flowing from the position taken by the Government, announced by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, to bring employment, jobs, and business activity to a part of the country which is sorely in need of them.

ENERGY

BENEFICIAL EFFECTS OF DEREGULATION POLICY

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On November 1, 1985, the federal Government reached an agreement with the producing provinces on the pricing and marketing of natural gas. Could the Minister inform Canadians and Quebecers whether her new policy on deregulation will soon start producing results?

• (1140)

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to respond to the Hon. Member for Drummond by saying that consumers are benefiting under our new agreement because, as contracts come up for renewal, buyers and sellers can negotiate new pricing. When Mr. Ciaccia, the Energy Minister of Quebec, was here yesterday to sign the $31 million conservation program between our two Governments, he told me how pleased he was that the savings to Quebecers already amount to millions and millions of dollars. I am glad that the constituents of the Hon. Member for Drummond are sharing in that saving because it was this Government that financed the gas lateral in his riding.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Contrary to the bland assurances of his Leader, the Minister has finally admitted that a free trade deal with the United States will affect thousands of workers in every region of Canada. We still do not have the hard information upon which to base the kind of judgments and negotiations to make a proper adjustment.

Is the Minister prepared to tell us how many workers will be affected, what industries, and what regions? When will the Minister and the Government give us the facts about the dislocations and provide the House with the information we need to give proper planning for workers in this country?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's preamble is as inaccurate as the headline in The Toronto Star on which he bases his question. I can tell the Hon. Member where the dislocations will be. There are estimates which show that for every 10 per cent that Canada loses in its ability to export to the United States of America, some 250,000 Canadians men and women will be out of jobs. The people who want us to maintain the status quo will cause that to happen. If we lose markets to the United States, the jobs of some 2.5 million Canadians who depend on exports to the United States will be in jeopardy. I am sure the Hon. Member does not want that to happen.

Mr. Axworthy: In case the Minister has not noticed, this past year we had a $20 billion surplus with the United States. That is a pretty good record and I think we are in danger of losing that because of the inaction of the Government.

ESTABLISHMENT OF TASK FORCE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister provide for the development of a major task force of labour and business to begin looking at the potential job loss and preparing proper adjustment programs so that workers will not be the victims of the Government's actions?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that the exact committee about which he talks already happens to be established under my colleague, the Minister for International Trade.

I want to tell the Hon. Member that in 1983 and 1984, through the inaction of the previous Liberal Government, some 86 single-industry towns shut down in Canada. Our Government will take action to enhance trade with the United States and other countries in the world because Canadian jobs depend on that.

AGRICULTURE

MANITOBA SUGAR-BEET INDUSTRY—DELAY IN ANNOUNCING POLICY

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It concerns threatened lay-offs in the sugar-beet industry in Manitoba.

The Government promised a sweetener pricing policy to farmers growing sugar-beets and corn, which was to have been brought forward by last September. The delay has already resulted in 70 lay-offs, with 125 more later this year.

Can the Minister account for that delay that has brought such insecurity to farmers and workers in Manitoba? When will he be announcing that pricing policy?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I thought the Hon. Member was going to rise in the House and join with thousands of other farmers across the country in congratulating the Government on the action that it took a couple of weeks ago in delivering the long-term dairy policy.

The difficulties in the sugar-beet industry are complex and complicated. They are somewhat similar to those complications that are found in the dairy industry. Therefore, if we are going to deliver a good and effective policy we must take the time to consult. We must make certain that we get the policy right.

Mr. Benjamin: I did not know that dairy products were being made out of sugar-beets, but I guess that is what the Minister of Agriculture is going to arrange.

REQUEST FOR EARLY ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, since farmers will not be planting sugar-beets and corn until they have that pricing policy, will the Minister make a commitment today that he will announce that pricing policy so that farmers can make their plans and workers can save their jobs?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member does not fully understand the sugar-beet industry. If he did he would know that sugar-beets are a very valuable feed source for cattle, including dairy cattle.

He should realize that there is no question about the 25,000 corn growers throughout Ontario and Quebec. They will certainly be planting a crop this year, but if it were not for the action taken by the Government last year there would not have been a 1985 beet crop planted in Manitoba and Quebec.

We are very concerned about the well-being of the 1,400 beet producers left in Quebec and western Canada. We will take the time to make certain that we get the policy right.

UNITED STATES FIXED EXCHANGE RATE PROPOSAL

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In his State of the Union speech, the President of the United States indicated a move toward a fixed exchange rate as a significant movement toward reform and stability in the way nations treat their currencies. The United States has been co-ordinating economic and monetary policy among its major trading partners since last fall. At what stage are the negotiations, and will we be moving toward a fixed exchange rate and burn the speculators?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the ultimate resolution to the matter of fixed exchange rates to which the Hon. Member refers is some way down the road. We are looking for a greater degree of stability in the exchange markets, and the benefits for Canada would be obvious.

I want to point out to the Hon. Member that we must deal with more than just the exchange rate problem. We must address the fundamental problems that face industrial economies, including the imbalance in the fiscal positions and the rigidities in market systems such as is the case in the European countries, and Japan to a lesser extent.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

SOCIETY OF MILITARY SPOUSES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Associate Minister of Defence. More than four months ago the Minister promised in the House to meet immediately with the president of the Society of Military Spouses. He has not only refused to meet with them, he has been instrumental in blocking a grant that would have been coming their way from the Secretary of State. Why is the Minister afraid of Lucy Richardson and the military spouses of this country?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that Mrs. Richardson phoned my office and said that she was prepared to attend with her lawyer to discuss a settlement of the lawsuit. Given that the Minister of Justice is in fact a party to that lawsuit, the legal advice from my officials in the Department was that it would be most inappropriate to discuss any settlement since the action was initiated by OSSMN and we feel that there is no basis at all for that particular action.

Ms. Copps: Mrs. Richardson happens to be in the gallery today. What the Minister has just said is an absolute lie.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

An Hon. Member: How long have you been here?

Mr. Speaker: Order. First, reference to the gallery is out of order, and, second, the Hon. Member knows that she must withdraw what she just said.

Ms. Copps: I withdraw, Mr. Speaker. It is an absolute untruth, and I would like to ask—

Mr. Speaker: Order. No. The Hon. Member said she withdrew that, then replaced it so that it was not exactly a withdrawal. I simply ask the Member to withdraw that, put no further preamble of that kind, and simply put her question.

Ms. Copps: I withdraw.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET SOCIETY'S REPRESENTATIVES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, given that the Minister is mistaken, will he meet with Lucy Richardson after Question Period today along with representatives of the military spouses who are here in good faith to try to negotiate an agreement in anticipation of the response of the Charter?

● (1150)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am not in the habit of doing so and I am not aware of circumstances where Hon. Members, in view of a declarative statement, would in fact make that accusation. I would ask here to provide some evidence. I can provide evidence on my side of staff members who can verify the statement I just made.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): She has withdrawn that?

Mr. Andre: No, she replaced it. I resent that comment from that Member who ought to know better. She has been here a few months now.

Mr. Gauthier: You don't need to lecture.

Mr. Andre: Let me say that I cannot discuss something which is sub judice; I just cannot discuss it. She ought to know that. It is clearly stated in our rules. Perhaps she might spend the break reading them.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

NATIONAL REFERENDUM REQUESTED

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the contribution which Canada can make to ending the nuclear arms race. I am asking this question on behalf of Paul Gross of Carleton University in my riding, and on behalf of millions of young Canadians from coast to coast. Will the Government support a national referendum asking Canadians whether Canada should become a nuclear weapons free zone, thereby ending all research, transport, testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons systems and their components within our boundaries?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the House has addressed itself to that question before. As a matter of fact, if I recall it correctly, it was on the basis of a motion which was placed on the Order Paper by the New Democratic Party, and the House expressed its view on that motion.

DECLARATION OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS FREE ZONES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the encouragement which the United Nations Special Session on Disarmament has given to countries to declare themselves nuclear weapons free zones, and since 50 municipalities across Canada, and now the Manitoba Legislature, by unanimous resolution have declared themselves nuclear weapons free zones, will be Government go a step further and allow Canadians, through a national referendum, to say what they think in order to declare Canada to be a nuclear weapons free zone?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member enjoys the support of his Party, which I am sure he does, all he need do, in order to bring that question to this national forum once again, is to place another motion on the Order Paper addressing that subject so that the House can express itself.

THE ECONOMY

LE CONSEIL DU PATRONAT DU QUÉBEC—THE DEFICIT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

This week, the Quebec caucus received an impressive amount of formal representations from the Conseil du patronat du Québec. The message was quite clear. The Council is very proud of our economic achievements, and it says that the only way to continue in this vein is to control the deficit and bring it down even more.

Is the Minister of Finance in a position to give the Conseil du patronat du Québec the assurance today that this is what is going to happen?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are going to have a Budget that will have to "make ends meet". In this Budget we are going to face up to our responsibilities. We will continue along the same path we took with our economic message in November 1984 and in the May Budget. We will not flinch from this task, Mr. Speaker, because we have major problems to deal with in connection with our fiscal position, and we will have to deal with these problems in the next Budget.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST THAT PETRO-CANADA SURPLUS BE REFINED BY MONTREAL GULF REFINERY RATHER THAN IN ONTARIO

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Yesterday, when you met with your Quebec counterpart, the Quebec Minister of Energy suggested that Petro-Canada make arrangements to have the surplus that cannot be refined by the Petro-Canada refinery in Montreal East, refined by the Gulf refinery, instead of diverting the surplus to Ontario.

Could the Minister give the House the assurance that she will take action along those lines right away?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, yes, yesterday I met with the Energy Minister from Quebec and we discussed a number of issues in common. He discussed the possibility—but there was no assurance—that there might be a buyer for the refinery. I said that I would do whatever I could to be helpful. Since no deal has been concluded, it would be premature for me to say what role Petro-Canada could play.

MONTREAL GULF REFINERY—REQUEST FOR PROTECTION OF JOBS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I would like to know whether the Minister realizes that the Gulf refinery employees, the Government of Quebec, the people of Montreal East, and the Lavalin and SNC companies are actively trying to save 450 jobs? Could the Minister inform the House why she and her Government are not urging the management of Ultramar to sell the refinery to prospective buyers in order to save jobs and save oil consumption in Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows there is no way the Government of Canada can enforce a company to do anything, such as he suggests, it does not wish to do. I want to remind him that today, in Montreal, our Government has announced plans for 2,500 new jobs in the Montreal region, under programs administered by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and by the President of the Treasury Board.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

PROPOSAL TO MANUFACTURE ARMAMENTS IN CAPE BRETON

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence. Considering that Canada has a declared policy of not allowing arms exports to countries at war or in imminent danger of war, which include Jordan, Syria, Libya, Iran, Iraq and other Arab countries, will the Minister of Defence release details of the Thyssen proposal for manufacturing arms in Cape Breton and exporting to those countries and also the General Motors proposal?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman wishes to familiarize himself with the activities of the company which he mentioned, I am sure the public relations department within that corporation would be only too happy to provide him with the fullest information on the range of its activities throughout the world.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Minister knows that the Government is engaged in discussions on a matter which concerns foreign policy, I will ask him again. If he won't release the information directly, will he refer the subject matter, that is the Thyssen proposal and the GM proposal to the Canadian Government, to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the very far-reaching nature of the changes which were made to our Standing Orders last night, that option would be available to the appropriate legislative committee.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

AUTOMOBILE EMISSION CONTROL SYSTEMS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. As the summit meeting between the Prime Minister and President Reagan in Washington approaches, and as domestic car emissions contribute to the problematic question of acid rain, could the Minister assure the House that the Government will keep its promise of having new emission control systems in place for the car industry so that for the 1988 models which will come on the market in September, 1987, these will be cleaner in reality rather than just a promise?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I can give the Hon. Member that assurance. With all due respect to him, I think some of the statements he has been making outside the House have been misguided. The policy all along has been to introduce in September, 1987, for the 1988 model year, the new regime for exhaust emission controls. As it turns out, some automobile companies are introducing their new models for 1988, not in September but in January. In any event, the policy stands.
