Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for foreign affairs, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. A dangerous new level of war has been reached between Iran and Iraq with Iran's latest offensive and incursion into Iraq's sovereign territory. The offensive has the potential of escalating and endangering peace and security in a vitally strategic region known for its resources. Recognizing Iraq's readiness to end the war in a peaceful manner, will the Minister express Canada's position on the offensive and call for a negotiated settlement under the auspices of the United Nations?

● (1200)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, Canada has repeatedly called for an early end to the conflict between Iran and Iraq. The heavy loss of life and destruction resulting from recent violent fighting reinforce the need for both parties to begin to work immediately to achieve a peaceful settlement. We, as a Government, strongly endorse the UN Secretary General's call of February 11 that concerted and determined efforts be made to end that war, and we urge Iran and Iraq to take advantage of the good offices of the Secretary General.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PROCESSING COSTS OF CHEQUES

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my short question is directed to the Minister of Employment. Is the Minister aware that approximately 10,000 people, because of the recent change of pension income, are now receiving cheques in the minimum amount of $1 a week, and that it costs the Department $1.56 to process a $1 cheque to each of those 10,000 Canadians, and that the cost of actually processing it after it is cashed is $1.10? Is the Minister aware of that?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that many inequities exist in the Unemployment Insurance program. That is why the administration of the program is now being examined by the Forget Commission of Inquiry. We expect that there will be a much better mode of operation resulting from the Inquiry. I am also aware that during the time that that Member sat on this side of the House some 27,000 more people in Newfoundland were unemployed as a result of the activities of the Government of which he was a part. Since we have come to office 10,000 fewer people are on the unemployment roll.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Thursday, February 13, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

The petition presented by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) on Thursday, February 13, does not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

POINT OF ORDER

APPLICATION OF SUB JUDICE CONVENTION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Andre) declined to answer a question posed by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) on the grounds that the matter in question is sub judice. The question related to the status of military spouses. I presume that the Hon. Minister declined to answer the question on the grounds that the matter of the status of military spouses has been brought before the courts for a declaration that the Government's policy towards military spouses was contrary to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Beauchesne's Citation 337 says:

(1) No settled practice—

Unlike the practice in criminal cases.

—has been developed in relation to civil cases, as the convention has been applied in some cases but not in others.

(2) In civil cases the convention does not apply until the matter has reached the trial stage.

A few weeks ago we expressed concern that a Minister commented on a matter that had been brought to the attention of the Human Rights Commission. You ruled that the sub judice convention was to be applied in a very narrow and limited way and that—

Mr. Speaker: By the Chair.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): By the Chair, and therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am saying that you should protect the Members of this House who ask questions from an unjustified use or reliance on the sub judice convention by Members of the Government to avoid answering questions otherwise in order, because the Government cannot have it both ways. When they feel free to do so they cannot make comments about matters before tribunals like the Human Rights Commission whose decisions can actually affect individual rights through the imposition of fines, and decline to answer questions because a matter may be before the courts under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which simply involves a declaration as to the applicability of the Charter. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to remind the Government about the proper use of the sub judice convention in line with what you yourself said a few weeks ago.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this is an incredible performance. The other day I heard the Hon. House Leader of the Opposition say that the Speaker had no right to decide what could be asked in the House, but now he is saying the Speaker must decide what can be answered in the House. Mr. Speaker, I answered the question. The question was, "Why don't I sit down and discuss settlement of a law suit initiated by this group?"

Perhaps the House Leader of the Opposition has been away from the practice of law for a long time, but I think even he should understand the inappropriateness of that particular behaviour if I were to do that. I answered the question. The question was put to me and I answered it. He should have heard it.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think if we are going to quote Beauchesne, and the House knows that my colleague, the Hon. Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Andre) needs no help in these matters, the House should know that the Hon. House Leader for the Official Opposition did not quote all of the citation. Under Citation 335, "The Sub Judice Convention" it says:

> The purpose of this sub judice convention is to protect the parties in a case awaiting or undergoing trial and persons who stand to be affected by the outcome of a judicial inquiry. It is a voluntary restraint imposed by the House upon itself in the interest of justice and fair play.

That is the point the House should look to in this matter.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): The Deputy House Leader for the Government has made a constructive comment, and that is the type one would expect in this kind of exchange, rather than the petty and unnecessary comment by the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Andre). If one wants to quote from Beauchesne, I want to respectfully draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, that Citation 337 of Beauchesne also goes on to say:

> (2) In civil cases the convention does not apply until the matter has reached the trial stage.

As far as I am aware the matter in question has not reached the trial stage.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) would allow me to indicate that he is too good a parliamentarian to use some of the language that he just used about another Member. I will leave it at that.

I will simply say to him, as he will know from the ruling I gave before at his own request, there are times when the Chair does have to intervene under the sub judice rule, but those times are very narrow, and it is only by convention when the Chair feels that in certain matters, criminal cases usually, some potential danger would be done by allowing the question or the answer. That is the only time the Chair would get involved in that question. I take it the Hon. Member is making a representation to the Government about the answer that is made and what he thinks the answer should or should not be, but he has not raised a point of order, in that sense.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

AGRICULTURE—FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Agriculture in both official languages to which, pursuant to Standing Order 70(16), the committee requests a comprehensive response.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE—FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling the Fourth Report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. The report deals directly with all the major questions that the prospect of a forthcoming renewal of the NORAD Agreement raises among Canadians.

[Editor's Note: For above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party members of the Standing Committee, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) and myself wish to dissociate ourselves from the NORAD Report which has just been tabled. We do not agree with the recommendations and were denied the opportunity to append our dissenting statement in the report itself. We were also prevented from removing our names from the list of members. We will, therefore, today be issuing our own statement on the NORAD renewal.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND FEDERAL POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND HEALTH CONTRIBUTIONS ACT, 1979

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-96, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF SUB-COMMITTEE REPORT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations and I think you will find a disposition to introduce, by unanimous consent without debate, and have the passage without debate of the following order:

That, notwithstanding the order adopted by the House on January 14, 1986, the comprehensive response requested, in relation to the report of the Sub-committee of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs on Equality Rights, presented to this House on Friday, October 25, 1985, shall be laid upon the Table not later than Tuesday, March 4, 1986.

Mr. Speaker: I take it there is unanimous consent for the introduction of that motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There being unanimous consent, is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 31

BANK RATE INCREASE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 31, I wish to move that the House do now adjourn for the purpose of discussing an urgent matter requiring immediate consideration, namely, the dramatic and perhaps unprecedented increase in the bank rate and its impact on the Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) gave me the required notice of his intention to seek an emergency debate under Standing Order 31. It is difficult for the Chair to contemplate that a rise in the bank rate would constitute the sudden emergency that is contemplated by Standing Order 31. It is, rather, an ongoing problem and, as I have indicated in two recent rulings on January 27 and February 3, the Standing Order is not designed for the consideration of ongoing problems on an emergency basis except in very special circumstances.

I am therefore unable to find that the Hon. Member's application meets the requirements of the Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRANSITION TO NEW STANDING ORDERS—PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we have now had further consultations with respect to certain items. I think you will find that the following motions or draft orders would be agreed to by unanimous consent and passed without debate. These are motions which will help facilitate the transition to the new Standing Orders which take effect on February 24.

If I may be permitted, I would read both of these motions. The first is as follows:

That notwithstanding the order adopted by the House on February 13, 1986, in relation to the provincial Standing Orders, effective Monday, February 24, 1986:

1. All outstanding Orders of Reference before a standing Committee prior to February 24, 1986, shall be deemed referred, with evidence adduced in relation thereto, to the new appropriate corresponding standing committee;

2. All reports, returns and papers deemed permanently referred to a standing committee pursuant to Standing Orders 47(4) and 70(1), prior to February 24, 1986, shall be deemed permanently referred, with the evidence adduced in relation thereto, to the new appropriate corresponding standing committee;

3. Where applicable, budgets of any standing committee adopted by the Board of Internal Economy prior to February 24, 1986, shall be deemed to be the budget of the new appropriate corresponding standing committee, unless otherwise ordered by the new committee;

4. Where applicable, all contracts for the services of staff for a standing committee or sub-committee in effect prior to February 24, 1986, shall be deemed contracts for the services of staff for the new appropriate corresponding standing committee or sub-committee, subject to ratification by the committee chairman;

5. The Sub-committee on CN Pensions of the Standing Committee on Transport shall continue with its current members and powers, provided that the sub-committee shall report to the new Standing Committee on Transport no later than April 11, 1986;

6. The membership of the Striking Committee appointed on Monday, November 5, 1984, shall continue and the said committee shall, within the first ten sitting days following February 23, 1986, prepare and report lists of Members to compose the standing committees and the standing joint committees;

7. The new provisional Standing Orders relating to the committees of the House, adopted by the House on February 13, 1986, shall come into effect the sitting day following the day on which the report of the Striking Committee is concurred in. Until such day, the provisional and permanent Standing Orders 70, 71 and 72, in effect as of September 9, 1985, shall continue to apply for the purposes of committee business.

Perhaps to save time, I will put the second motion now as well:

That, notwithstanding the Order made February 13, 1986 in relation to the Provisional Standing Orders, those Standing Orders relating to Private Members' Business which were in effect on September 9, 1985 shall remain in force, during the present Session, until the day following the adoption of the report of the Striking Committee establishing the membership of the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business, at which time all items of Private Members' Business on that day's Order Paper shall be placed in a draw to establish an order of precedence for twenty separate items, and they shall be restored to the Order Paper at the stage which they had attained when they appeared on the Order Paper on the day preceding the draw and items not successful in the draw shall be placed on the Order Paper after the order of precedence at the stage they had attained and in the order they had appeared prior to the draw. Provided that all names of Members listed on the Order Paper without notice of items of business shall be dropped from the Order Paper.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to ask. I will wager ten to one that no one understood that last motion without at least re-reading the motion. In any event, I trust that the Minister has thought this through. We have looked at it. I think I can agree with it.

I would like to ask the Minister a question dealing with Questions on the Order Paper. He has not addressed that question as yet and I just wondered if he has anything to tell us about that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I really have not had a chance to consult on this. Under the new regime, there is going to be a limit on the Questions on the Order Paper and a requirement of the quid pro quo to which I referred yesterday, a response. My own instinct is, and I think this would be the fairest for everyone concerned including members of the Opposition, that we clean the slate and let Hon. Members come forward to place their items of priority on the Order Paper. They will then be under the new regime and they can decide which ones they want and continue to replace them.

● (1220)

I wish to discuss another situation with the House Leaders, that is, leaving them on.

Mr. Gauthier: Grandfathering them.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We can certainly look at that. However, I would like to discuss the matter with the Opposition House Leaders. I think there are some down sides to that suggestion inasmuch as the costs of printing and the preoccupation with answering questions must be considered. During the experimental period we may wish to look at a way to try to resolve the priority of questions under the new regime. That is the sort of thing which I had hoped to discuss with my colleagues, the Opposition House Leaders, in order to work out some resolution.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think we should be consulting on this issue. However, since the Government House Leader placed on the record how, in a preliminary way, he was thinking of proceeding, we on our side should also place on the record, perhaps in a preliminary way as well, how we think the matter should be dealt with. We think there should be a grandfathering of the questions. That is to say all the questions on the Order Paper should remain there to be dealt with under the rules as they existed before the decision of the House yesterday, unless a Member wishes to bring forward one of these questions to be placed under the four to be handled under the new rules through the priority answering period. I think this would be the disposition of those of our members who have questions on the Order Paper. Very frankly, I will say that the Government should give serious consideration to what I have said in order to avoid the inference that perhaps the Government would not be unhappy to see those questions disappear from the Order Paper.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I take exception to that insinuation, Mr. Speaker. In the first place, if the Hon. Member wishes to discuss matters with me I am always available. When his Party's Whip stood up and asked me a question I tried to be as forthcoming as possible, without being devious or anything else. I simply say that it is a matter I prefer to have raised in our House Leaders' meeting. I would like to say that I am always willing to have a rational discussion about these matters. I do not want the constant insinuation that somehow there is some devious manner of thought going on on this side of the House. It is to the contrary. We are interested in accommodating Members of the House and will do what I think is fair to all Members.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, to clear the air, I wish to say that I had not intended any insinuation. I want to make that perfectly clear. I want to avoid the possibility that anyone would draw the wrong conclusion. I want it to be understood that my remarks were not for the purpose of making any insinuation. I regret that the Government House Leader interpreted them in that manner.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. In speaking on behalf of the NDP House Leader, I wish to say that we are prepared to agree with what has been suggested, especially with respect to the point that further discussions be held concerning this particular problem. I agree with the Government House Leader that this can be worked out. After all, it is an experimental period and there will be good faith expressed on both sides. It being Valentine's Day I am sure the good faith has started already. We are prepared to agree with the procedure.

Mr. Speaker: May I simply say to all House Leaders that the Chair would very much like to see some consensus and guidance from the House Leaders on this question since it is on the Chair's list of matters which have to be dealt with.

Does the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) have the unanimous consent of the House to introduce his motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motions. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 502 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

CHALLENGE '85

Question No. 502—Mr. Allmand:

What is the regional breakdown by CEIC of the Challenge '85 program for the (a) number of applications (i) submitted (ii) approved (b) applications submitted according to whether they are non-profit, municipal or private sector (c) amount of funding approved (d) percentage of allocation that was actually approved?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary in this time of reform to which his House Leader referred a few moments ago just when the Government will answer my questions of April 2, 1985, pertaining to the costs of the Shamrock Summit. When exactly will the Government answer my question in regard to the travel of the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), the former Minister of State for Transport, when she was in the capacity of Minister of the Environment? Surely those questions can be answered. The answer to one of the questions was available to the Parliamentary Secretary at one point some four months ago. However, it was subsequently withdrawn because of a technicality. I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary if the Government will commit itself to answering these questions forthwhith.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I believe that if the Hon. Member had followed the dispute between his Party's Whip and his House Leader, he would have heard that there is now an opportunity for him, subject to negotiations going forward, and if there is unanimity in the Liberal caucus on the matter, to ask that certain questions be responded to.

It is important to put on the recond as we leave the old regime behind us that we have answered 78.4 per cent of the questions asked during this Parliament.

Mr. Boudria: What does that have to do with what I am asking? Why does the Parliamentary Secretary not say that he just does not know the answer?

Mr. Gauthier: I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Parliamentary Secretary just said something which I do not think is proper. I am not in dispute with my House Leader. I asked a question in good faith. I think there is a valid question to be put as to what will happen to those questions. My House Leader tried to obtain some information from the Government House Leader in that respect. There is no dispute; it is just a matter of trying to get some facts and protection for some questions which have been on the Order Paper for a very long time. I have had one there for more than a year concerning a building which has been sold in the interim. It has not been answered.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

LOBBYING

REFERENCE OF DISCUSSION PAPER TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the document entitled "Lobbying and the Registration of Paid Lobbyists, a Discussion Paper", be referred to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Oganization;

That the Committee consider and report upon the issues disucussed in the above-mentioned document; and

That the Committee report its findings and recommendations no later than March 30, 1986.

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, to refer back to December of last year, a discussion paper on the subject of lobbying and the registration of paid lobbyists was presented in the House. That paper reiterates the intention of the Government to monitor lobbying activities through registration of paid lobbyists. This iniatitive forms a part of the Government's major initiatives on public sector ethics.

These measures announced in the House last September comprise seven components, one being the issue of lobbying. At that time the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) noted that he wished to control the lobbying process by providing, and I quote from his comments, "a reliable and accurate source of information on the activities of lobbyists". I think there would be general agreement in the House that no Bill which is presently being considered, other than the motion with respect to the reform of Parliament, would directly affect the habits and customs of our colleagues here in the House of Commons.

I should note here that the Government does not wish to regulate lobbying because it considers it reprehensible, nor is it aware of any impropriety. As the Prime Minister said, and I quote:

To the contrary, this practice plays an important role; it ensure that Governments, in taking decisions which affect us all, have taken into consideration the many different interests involved. This Government is simply saying that something so important should not be shrouded in mystery.

● (1230)

The measures suggested in this discussion paper would permit persons who are the object of lobbyist attention to recognize clearly the interest represented by that lobbyist. I doubt there is any Hon. Member in the House who would not agree with the basic spirit of the initiative of the Prime Minister with reference to lobbying. It is a very important issue, an especially complex and very sensitive one which affects every parliamentarian.

This issue also affects ministerial staff, public servants, the public and all special interest groups, perhaps. It affects professional and business associations, corporations or individuals who hire another person to lobby on their behalf or, perhaps, to even assist them in their dealings with Government.

This document suggests that a registration system should be based on four principles, and this is the reason we need additional study with witnesses before the appropriate standing committee. The first principle is transparency, the transparency of contact with public officials. In order to ensure such transparency or recognition of the actual lobbyist, we could ask lobbyists to register their names. We could ask them to do this in a public register. We could also ask for the names of their clients and all other relevant information.

The second principle, and the reason for further study, is the principle of clarity. It should state clearly and concisely who must be registered.

The third guiding principle is access to Government. The process with which paid lobbyists must comply in order to deal with Government should not unduly prevent the same people from being in touch with public officials.

Finally, we must have administrative simplicity. Administrative requirements should be kept to a bare minimum. We must not make the registration process so burdensome that it discourages those with limited means, nor should we create a bureaucracy requiring substantial resources.

Given both the importance of lobbying activity and the complexity of this particular issue, I believe that public debate is very necessary. It is against this background that the discussion paper was prepared and subsequently presented to Parliament December last. This is not an example of "backtracking" as referred to by some Members of the Opposition. Backtracking is not intended. What we are trying to do is to protect everyone; Members of Parliament, bureaucrats and lobbyists.

In my preliminary discussions with Members of the Opposition, with bureaucrats and with the public, I have found a need for clarity which is not easily defined. When we look at some of the persons or groups we might consider registering, we must determine, first, whether those groups should be registered.

The issue is so important that it would be undemocratic to present a Bill on lobbying without first seeking the advice of key interested parties, including every Hon. Member of the House of Commons. Bearing that in mind, a Bill is not necessarily the formula which we will finally adopt. There is only one country in the world which has legislation in place—in the form of a Bill which dates back many years—which addresses the subject of lobbyists, and that is the United States. That legislation governing lobbying activities in the United States is in itself restrictive and very narrow in scope.

This was pointed out by the committee which studies the difficulty of defining "lobbying".

Just for a moment let us take a look at other countries. Australia prefers Government directives. I am not saying that that is the course the Government is advocating, but it is an approach which we must review. West Germany uses Standing Orders of the Bundestag, which is its Parliament.

Clearly there is no consensus that the legislative route is the only possible route. The path we have chosen is an open and public debate through discussion and involves all of the parties which could be, possibly even adversely, affected by quick action without consultation. That is why we recommend that the matter go to a standing committee representing all Parties of the House in order that expert witnesses might be called who represent all of the areas and jurisdictions where we might require the listing of the actual lobbyists.

As the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) pointed out at a press conference on the day the discussion paper was tabled, this process will give Hon. Members the opportunity to develop the appropriate measures right from the start. The sensitivity and complexity of the issue make it vital that it is discussed fully and openly before an attempt is made to adopt a registration system for lobbyists, whether through legislation or other means, some of which I have already mentioned.

I have previously noted that any such system would directly involve Members of Parliament, Senators, their staff and a large number of public servants. We would, therefore, be well advised to thoroughly consider the implications of regulations in this area as it directly affects us. As the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) himself has noted, it is essential that Government know the views of those parties involved in order that the system adopted is fair, reasonable and efficient.

By referring the issue of lobbying to a parliamentary committee, we will have the best possible representations from the people who would be most affected either positively or negatively. Indeed, if we are to take seriously the recommendations made by the McGrath Report on Parliamentary Reform, this issue must be studied in committee. We have heard arguments to the contrary, but I believe all Hon. Members of the House will agree that as Parliamentarians we are perhaps in the best position to make recommendations. I believe that open debate and consultations not only are essential but very vital. Only in this way can we ensure that the views of everyone are taken into consideration.

Let us consider for a moment that the Government were to proceed in this area as quickly as some Members of the Opposition seems to be suggesting we do. For the sake of argument, let us completely bypass any idea of any parliamentary committee just for a moment. We know that a number of important issues must be examined, issues, I might add, over which certain Hon. Members of the House would be up in arms should they feel they would not have their say before that discussion was put into legislation or regulation. Issues as fundamental as the definition of a "lobbyist" must be debated. At present, there is no precise definition of the term "lobbyist". There could be a number of interpretations of what we mean by "lobbying".

We might also ask who do we exclude from the legislation or the regulation? And how broadly do we define lobbying activity? After all, "lobbying" could be interpreted generally to include all representations made to Government, including those made by individuals acting on their own behalf. There is also the question of how much information we require from lobbyists and how much of it is made public. We must choose as well from the various means of applying the registration system to lobbyists to determine which activity should be monitored to establish sanctions, exclusions and more. If we do not open these questions to public discussion we run the risk of producing legislation which might be too narrow in scope. On the other hand, it might be too all-encompassing, classifying far too many individuals as lobbyists and forcing them to undergo the inconvenience and cost of registration. Too much intervention and too much regulation, with the accompanying large bureaucracy, must be avoided. The discussion paper, as thorough as it is, does not settle the issue. The various options it proposes for registration of paid lobbyists will serve as discussion points for the consultation process leading to the adoption of a system adapted to our needs.

I have mentioned already, but I believe it bears repeating, that a Bill bringing about the registration of paid lobbyists could negatively affect the fundamental democratic rights of the public in their efforts to make representations to the Government. This should be reason enough to convince anyone that we must consult openly, widely, and carefully before taking any decisions on this matter. We must also realize, and all Members are conscious of this important factor, that any legislation on lobbying will have an effect on our basic rights and conduct as parliamentarians.

By referring this motion to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, it is intended that the committee will report its findings and recommendations no later than March 30, 1986. We are not looking for a long delay. We are looking for adequate time to ensure the protection of our colleagues in this House and those who rely on their ability to make contact with Government in order to advance the positions for which they stand. Quick action without this sort of consultation could create problems which would deter the democratic process. Therefore I ask my colleagues for speedy passage into committee, a quick response, and a report by March 30.

It is the intention of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to then bring in the necessary legislation, directives or guidelines. I am sure that either one of the Opposition Parties might have a different view on whether we should legislate, direct, or create a registry behind the curtains here where we could refer on a voluntary basis those are preceived to be lobbyists according to the definition which will flow from committee study. There is no way anyone can stand on a precedent or custom established by a system implemented in other countries and say that this has proven to be a good system to register licensed lobbyists.

If anyone has the answer to the questions I have raised today on behalf of the Minister, I would very much appreciate receiving a presentation. I hope the discussion which follows will give us the answers on how to proceed on March 30, not 1987 and 1988, but March 30 of this year. We are asking for only five weeks. We look forward to receiving input from right across Canada. In paticular, we look forward to input from Members of Parliament on both sides, the Senate, and the Public Service in order to come up with a system which lets everyone know where everyone else is coming from. It will be a system which is fair to both the elected representatives and the people of Canada who should be able to approach their MP to carry out their wishes. I am looking forward to the comments of Members of the Opposition.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in this debate on behalf of our Party. Before I commence my remarks I would like to make a very few brief comments on the Parliamentary Secretary's speech. He said he had preliminary discussions with the Opposition on this issue. I find that fascinating, because the first time in my life I have spoken to the Hon. Member was approximately 15 minutes ago when I asked him how long his speech was going to be. If he considers that consultation on the process, then perhaps that defines what the Government Party thinks consultation is. I do not consider it to be consultation.

He also indicated that it was the Opposition who wanted a Bill immediately and that his Minister preferred a consultation paper. Now, that is not a nice thing for the Member to say about the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), because it was the Prime Minister who, in this House, in September of 1985, said that he asked his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté), to prepare on an urgent basis legislation to govern lobbying activity. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will apologize profusely to the Prime Minister for having made those nasty remarks about him. We in the Opposition, of course, would never make such remarks about the Prime Minister, as you know, Mr. Speaker, because they would perhaps be construed as partisan. I would never want to be accused of that.

The Parliamentary Secretary also said the lobbyists could potentially include everyone or every constituent. He must be speaking of a different issue than the one I want to raise today. The document we are talking about at the moment is entitled Lobbying and the Registration of Paid Lobbyists, a Discussion Paper, and I put emphasis on the word "paid". Since when is the average constituent looking to get paid to go see their Member of Parliament concerning their lost unemployment insurance cheque or other similar issues? I say to the Parliamentary Secretary that he should have reviewed those notes that were prepared on this issue. Obviously we are talking here about paid lobbyists, not the average constituent raising issues with his or her Member of Parliament. His own Minister raised that issue some time ago and the Prime Minister did as well.

What we are talking about here is not the fundamental right of Canadians to address their Member of Parliament. The last thing any Member of this House of Commons would want to do is create an impediment to a constituent addressing a problem. As you know very well, because of your vast experience in the Parliament of our country, we have done exactly the opposite over the years. All Members have collectively attempted, and to a great degree succeeded, to improve their dialogue with their constituents by better telephone access, by the establishment of constituency offices, and by the hiring of staff in those offices. With the modern equipment which now links the constituency office with the offices on Parliament Hill, Members of Parliament can be far away from but at the same time very close to the people they represent. They can be apprised of their views. Their constituents can have full access at all times.

We all know that lobbying a Member of Parliament is the democratic right of everyone, but that is not what we are discussing. As I said earlier, the document is entitled "Paid Lobbyists". That is the issue with which we want to deal.

Mr. Domm: That is not what we are talking about.

Mr. Boudria: Well, the Member says that that is not what we are talking about. I will review the title with you——in the other official language: "Le lobbying et l'enregistrement des lobbyistes payés", Mr. Speaker. I said it slowly so the Hon. Member will understand. So we are talking about people who do this kind of work for a salary or some form of remuneration, not about the voter who goes to see his Member to get something done.

[Translation]

[English]

Lobbying has been recognized in statute in one form or another in the United States since 1893. There is a long history of such legislation elsewhere which we can use for examples. The present law of the United States dates back to 1946. That again provides quite a bit of precedent.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention an article by Jean Pelletier, in which he describes the present lobby structure in the United States. He says, referring to Washington:

> In this city, lobbying is the biggest industry after government. Some people estimate there is at least one lobbyist per US civil servant.
> Lobbying, which consists in putting pressure on legislators, regulatory agencies and Government bodies, is to the American political system what the monarchy is to the Parliament at Westminster.
> The classic example of lobbying remains the National Rifle Association (NRA). This particular lobby alone occupies an impressive block a stone's throw from the White House, where hundreds of lobbyists, both men and women, spend most of the day trying to prevent any legislation or regulation from prohibiting the possession of firearms by Americans.

Mr. Speaker, we know that in the Unites States, this type of activity is far more widespread than it is in this country. In the United States, lobbying has existed for a long time. However although there are differences, lobbying also exists here in Canada. We cannot pretend or claim there is no lobbying in this country. Some of us know a rather famous lobbyist, Mr. Frank Moores, and I will get back to this later on in my speech, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

I bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, an article in The Globe and Mail which refers to lobbying in the United States and the requirements there. In reference to lobbyists it says:

They are required to register as lobbyists with the Clerk of the House of Representatives or the Secretary of the Senate before they begin their lobbying activity.

They must also report under oath each quarter all the money they have received and all they have spent in pursuit of lobbying.

That is very important, "all they have received and all they have spent". It continues:

They have to say whom they gave money to, for what purpose, and what legislation it was that they opposed or backed.

In the United States lobbyists must give a considerable amount of information and, in my view, that should be the case in Canada as well.

Many people have attempted in the past to define what a lobbyist is. The Parliamentary Secretary referred to that in his remarks. Clearly, a lobbyist, first and foremost, is a person who is paid to influence a public policy on behalf of others. They attempt to have legislation or regulations either enacted or withdrawn. I am sure that we all know what a lobbyist is, and we could find the expertise to put it down on paper.

Not only do we want paid lobbyists to be registered, we also want to avoid creating a structure which will impede the ability of nonprofit organizations to speak to Members of Parliament about important issues. We do not want the structure to be so cumbersome that nonprofit groups will not be able to register. Whatever we do must be done in such a way as to ensure that the people who register as lobbyists are credible, and that they do not have a record which will cast a bad shadow over that occupation.

We must know how many lobbyists there are, how many people work for the lobbying firms, who pays the lobbyists, who they are lobbying, and how much is spent in the lobbying process. That is a very important issue. There are certain lobbying activities which we have already enshrined into law. The Criminal Code, in Section 108, addresses how much a Member of Parliament may be influenced without it being construed as a wrongful activity. This is also addressed in the Senate and House of Commons Act in a way. However, there is no legislation or regulation at the present time which registers the lobbyist.

What we are dealing with today, Mr. Speaker, is a commitment by the Prime Minister of Canada. I will admit that it was a hasty commitment on his part. The Prime Minister was in some political difficulty last year over the rash of "cronyism" that had plagued his administration in the previous year. However, that was not my fault as an Opposition Member, that was his problem. He gets danger pay and should be able to administer the Government in a proper way.

On Monday, September 9, he tabled in the House a comprehensive document all wrapped up in a blue ribbon apologizing to the people of Canada for all the wrong things that he and his Government had done in their first year in office. He pledged to the Canadian people that the Government would no longer partake in partisan political activities by appointing its friends to boards of directors of Crown corporations and so forth. The Prime Minister pledged that the lobbyists which had caused such controversy in the prior months would be registered. The Prime Minister himself stood in the House and asked us all to give our support to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in the introduction of legislation on an "urgent basis", to govern lobbying activity. I wanted to bring that to your attention, Mr. Speaker, and make it quite clear, because I know that is what you want me to do.

I note that the hour of one o'clock is fast approaching. I would like to continue my remarks after the break for lunch, with your permission.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2:00 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): At one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) had the floor.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to continue this afternoon with the remarks that I commenced this morning on the issue of lobbying.

I was talking about the promises that were made by the Prime Minister in September, 1985, when he said in the House very clearly that he wanted his Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to immediately bring forward legislation pertaining to lobbying. It is evident that this is yet another example of a broken promise. We heard many promises during the election campaign and our ears are still sore from having listened to them. Nevertheless, this promise made by the Prime Minister with respect to lobbying was broken by his Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. One can only conclude that: either the whole scheme was ill-prepared by the Prime Minister or his Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs disobeyed him. If both are wrong, then we can only determine which Tory made the mistake.

Let me deal with the whole issue of Crown corporations and lobbyists.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, lobbyists should not have the right nor the privilege to work for Crown corporations. I am not the one who said so, for that is what the Prime Minister indicated in a letter he sent to the various Crown corporations through Clerk of the Privy Council and Secretary to the Cabinet Paul Tellier. I quote part of Mr. Tellier's letter to the Crown corporations: "The Prime Minister has asked me to inform you that the Government will soon introduce a Bill governing lobbying." That was on September 6 last and, of course, you already know that there is an error.

And this passage further on, Mr. Speaker, because it is very important: "He has also asked me to advise you of the Government's wish that, in the future, intermediate agents contractually paid by Crown corporations should not interevene between them and the Government."

It is therefore quite clear that last September the Prime Minister did ask the Clerk of the Privy Council to make sure that Crown corporations would no longer hire lobbyists. Mr. Speaker it is important for the simply reason that Ministers themselves are responsible for people who are expected to lobby the Cabinet. In my opinion, it is quite improper for an agent acting against a Minister to lobby the Cabinet. Indeed, that is probably why the Prime Minister decided to put an end to that practice.

The whole thing turned sour, Mr. Speaker, because some Crown corporations toed the line while others did not.

[English]

I draw to your attention an article in The Citizen dated January 8. It states the following about lobbyists hired by Crown corporations:

> There is also the odour of abuse in a Crown corporation's recruitment of a lobbyist. Currying favour by hiring some politically-connected go-between smacks of patronage.
> Banning the practice is the obvious remedy. Last fall, Cabinet Secretary Paul Tellier relayed Prime Minister Mulroney's instruction to Crown corporations: They must not hire "paid intermediaries" to deal with the federal Government.

● (1410)

> Pardon us if we mutter some doubt. But we do not believe the Cabinet's edict has stoppered the natural and insatiable appetite of Crown corporations for information about their political masters.
> Petro-Canada, for one, has lately hired Frank Moores, who currently labours as an Ottawa lobbyist. One report suggested he will advise PetroCan on East Coast energy affairs, and the advice of a former Newfoundland Premier on such matters would be indubitably valuable.

It could be that the former Premier's advice is valuable, but that is not the point in the entire discussion. This former Newfoundland Premier is now a paid lobbyist. Petro-Canada has been ordered not to hire paid lobbyists, but it hired someone who most other mortals know as a paid lobbyist and called him a paid consultant. Then Petro-Canada can say to the Prime Minister: "We did not disobey you. We did not hire a lobbyist; we hired a lobbyist and called him a consultant. That makes us pure".

That was clearly not the intention of the Prime Minister. I do not know whether the Prime Minister has appropriately scolded Petro-Canada, but I hope he did because it was improper. Although the Prime Minister is not of my political persuasion, he gave an order and, as chief of our Government, I would expect that Crown corporations would obey what he said. Notwithstanding the fact that he and I may disagree, we both agree that he is the Prime Minister of the country. Obviously, he was elected to do that job. We would expect that Crown corporations, which sometimes think they have no masters, would at least remember that they do. When people elected to direct the country collectively in the form of a Cabinet decide on a policy, Crown corporations should understand that they must obey and avoid circumventing the process and using underhanded schemes such as the one which was used to hire Canada's most notorious paid lobbyist.

How did we get into this discussion today? There is one person in the country who has probably caused more controversy in the issue of lobbying than anyone else before. As a matter of fact, he has probably caused more controversy than everyone else combined who did the job before him. I am referring to the same individual, Mr. Frank Moores.

I should like to refer to an article by Michael Harris which appeared in The Globe and Mail. He talked about the lobbying activities of this particular individual and how, in his view and mine, our country is not well served when certain people exaggerate anything they do. We must remember that the individual sat on the board of directors—or as a political appointee, in any case—of Air Canada. The company for which he works or is associated with was known to be lobbying or working for Nordair and Wardair, competitors of Air Canada. In part the article reads:

> The Globe and Mail has also learned that Mr. Moores is the consultant for British Aerospace and Messerschmitt-Bolkow-Blohm . . . of Munich. Both firms are part of a consortium interested in selling the A320 passenger aircraft to Air Canada when it replaces its aging fleet of 35 Boeing 727s.

In other words, this person placed himself in a position where he was sitting on the board of directors of Air Canada and working in some way, shape or form for two competitors of Air Canada, and where he was part of a company which was lobbying to sell aircraft to Air Canada and perhaps to others that was manufactured in Europe. That at least gives the appearance of something which is improper. Perhaps nothing illegal was committed; that is quite likely the case. We are told that the individual may have removed himself from meetings when that matter was discussed, but the perception out there on the part of the people of Canada is that of a close friend of the Prime Minister being engaged in several conflicting lobbying activities simultaneously and sitting on a government body at the same time. It does not look right and should not be done.

As a matter of fact, I have another quotation to which I should like to refer. It was apparently made by someone else in the lobbying business who said the following, according to the same article:

"Frank is running an escort service," one competitor said in an interview. "He packs the client's bag, carries it through the right door, and then makes his case for him. Frankly, he's marketing his connections, and if it doesn't stop, this whole profession is going to be under a cloud."

Those were the words of someone else in the same kind of business, that is to say, people who lobby others.

We also know of the very famous case where a group had attempted for a long period of time to obtain an audience with a cabinet Minister and did not succeed in doing so. By coincidence, once this group that owned a fishing boat and wanted a fishing licence hired the same individual, suddenly a meeting was made available with the Minister. Of course the group had to pay $2,000 for the services.

Of course the frightening prospect is that Canadians might want to know whether they have to pay someone $2,000 per day in order to meet with a cabinet Minister. We know that is not generally the case. Not even I, being somewhat partisan, would accuse cabinet Ministers of refusing access to people who do not do that. That would be irresponsible, but the mere fact that the process happened so that a group could have access to a Minister leaves a cloud hanging over that profession at the moment. It is unfortunate for that profession and for all Canadians who read about this kind of thing in the newspapers. It leaves a suspicion in the minds of Canadians that in order to have access to the people they elected, they must somehow use a mechanism which they cannot afford, should not need or do not want. It is not the way all of us in the House would want to be perceived.

I should like to talk briefly about the types of lobbyists. It has been indicated in the document before us that there are three different categories of such people. Some of them are associations which are there to serve their members, such as the National Farmers Union, the Canadian Petroleum Association and others. They have personnel on or in the vicinity of Parliament Hill to inform Members of Parliament on the needs of their industry, their non-profit group, their social welfare group and so on. They often contact Members of Parliament to air their views. There is another group which calls itself consultants. There is some dispute as to whether or not these folk are lobbyists. Sometimes they instruct someone on how to prepare briefs, how to approach Ministers or elected representatives, but will not actually meet with them. Granted, there is a grey area there as to whether or not they are lobbyists. Also there are the others who are referred to as hired guns. In other words, these people personally knock on doors of elected representatives or bureaucrats and voice the opinion of either a corporation or some sort of group and are paid to do so as an agency or as the person doing the job. Again, there is nothing wrong with that process if it is done properly.

The present situation leaves a cloud over the industry, and that is bad. Most people that do this kind of work for a living—as a matter of fact probably nearly all of them are honest people just like nearly all other people are honest people. The present system where they are not really held to account for what they do leaves a cloud of mystery which is not good.

I will draw a parallel for you. I am sure you recall the days prior to the present election finances legislation. There was in various constituencies across Canada people who would raise funds for election campaigns. Nobody was quite sure who they were. They were this theoretical mystical backroom person with the big cigar who went to collect the money. Nobody knew what he collected or from whom, or what it was used for. There was a kind of a mystery about that. Maybe it was all right, but people felt uneasy about it. There was just a general cloud over that whole process.

This Parliament some years ago decided that was not good for our country. They said, why don't we demystify all this? Why don't we make it all public? That way if business "A" wants to give $100 to candidate "B" in such and such a riding, that is public. I can find out about the contributions to a campaign of a Member across the ways and he can investigate mine. In that way we are held accountable to each other, to the media and to the public of Canada. Any citizen can walk into the elections office here in Ottawa on Conventry Road and ask to see what any Member of Parliament spent during the last election campaign. That is public information.

No more is there that cloud over election spending. The minute anyone is suspected of doing something that is even slightly out of line there is an investigation. Some people have even claimed that those investigations have actually gone overboard. However, be that as it may, we have cleansed that system. We have done a good job of it. It does not mean that nothing goes wrong any more, but I venture to say that this system has improved matters considerably.

For the same reason we need to legislate on this issue because the honest people that do this kind of work for a living, that go to work in the morning, knock on a door of a Member of Parliament on behalf of the agency that they represent, explain to them why such and such a piece of legislation is important, why such and such a regulation should be omitted, deleted and so forth, are engaged in a legitimate activity. But there is an uneasy cloud around at the moment. There was always some sort of an uneasy cloud, but the cloud has grown thicker, especially over the last year or two. I have indicated to you some of the reasons why that has happened, perhaps there are others. The fact that the machinery of Government is getting ever more complicated is another reason why this is happening.

[Translation]

We must register the names of lobbyists, their salary, who their clients are, what kind of fees are paid, what their expenses are, in order to avoid the kind of situation we are seeing today, a situation I think is unhealthy in our society.

[English]

There are some people who are against the registration of lobbyists, that would argue with you, Mr. Speaker, or with others, saying that the public regisration of lobbyists is what they advocate, but the registration of lobbyists as such would make a special class of privileged people. This special class of privileged paid lobbyists would, in fact, have greater access to elected people or to people in the bureaucracy or elsewhere than others who are not members of that special class.

I would like to argue with you, Mr. Speaker, that that is not the case. First of all, it is not all members—I don't think it is all Cabinet Ministers and it is not all of public officials—that give any kind of a special recognition to someone who is a lobbyist. That obviously is not the case. If that were the case everyone would be defeated every election because that would not be proper, so that is not happening at the present time.

People who are lobbyists right now unfortunately are, to a certain degree, in that special class. It would not create a change to register them. They would still be paid lobbyists, but that is what they are now. The whole process would be cleansed, made much better, not only for you and I as members of this House, but it would restore confidence in the Canadian people in a system that is beginning to be tainted by some unfortunate events.

To those who say that it is only that special class that would have access to Ministers, I would ask, why is that not the case right now? Notwithstanding the problems and notwithstanding the fact that certain people say they had to hire lobbyists in order to get a meeting with certain individuals, that certainly is not the case with all Members and certainly not the case with all cabinet. It would be wrong to generalize and say that that is so.

In closing I would like to reflect with you on the U.S. experience, particularly to alleviate some of the concerns that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Domm) had a while ago when he was asking, "Who is and who isn't a lobbyist?" I brought to his attention, of course, that the issue here is paid lobbyists, and not an individual constituent who was airing his or her grievances. Under the U.S. legislation, and I draw this to your attention, those who are not included as lobbyists—it is important to think about this because we could use at least portions of that example and give it a Canadian application—are the following:

> Communications by an individual to express a personal opinion or for redress of grievances. Only organizations, not individuals are covered by the Bill... communications which seek only to determine the existence or status of a legislative matter such as whether a Bill has been introduced or whether hearings have begun.

In other words, a person or consultant who merely phones the Clerk of the House to ask whether today we will be discussing Bill C-90, or some other piece of legislation, is not considered to be a lobbyist. That is merely an information request. Again, using the American example and I think this is one that perhaps all of us can use at committee when we discuss the issues:

> A communication to federal officers or employees made in response to a specific request by the officer or employee.

In other words, someone in Government obviously does not have to phone a lobbyist in order to respond to something that has been asked of him to start with. That is covered in the American example. Very appropriate, as you undoubtedly recognize, communications submitted for inclusion in a report in a legislative committee or hearing are excluded. Again you do not have to be a lobbyist to appear before a parliamentary committee. It is a fundamental right of any Canadian to respond to an invitation of a parliamentary committee or to appear as a witness before that committee.

Let me quote another exclusion.

> Communications to a federal officer or employee having to do with federal regulations, executive orders or contracts.

That is a little bit more complicated here in Canada, as you undoubtedly recognize already, simply because the lobbying here in Canada, unlike in the American system, would likely not all be done, and is likely not all done at the present moment, exclusively with members of this House or members of the other House. It is likely far more widespread, not in terms of numbers but in terms of the different categories of people affected by lobbyists. That is because of the structure of our Government. That must be modified in order to give it a Canadian application. I read on:

> Unpaid communications made through a speech or address, or a newspaper, book, periodical or magazine published for distribution to the general public or to the membership of an organization.

In other words, these guidelines would not stop a right-to-life group or any other group for that matter from putting people on their subscription lists and sending them their monthly new letters. The analysis goes on to read:

> Also exempt are communications made through radio or television or through a regular publication of an organization for purposes substantially unrelated to influencing legislative matters.

That does not require much further explanation.

It goes on:

> Communications to a representative or senator, or his or her staff, made by an organization whose principal place of business is located in the state represented by the senator or congressman.

Of course, in adapting that to the Canadian system, that would probably mean that an organization or business based in my riding could contact me, their own Member of Parliament, without having to be organized or registered as a lobby group under what has been proposed. Again, I believe that provides the answers for which the Parliamentary Secretary was looking when he made his remarks today.

There is enough historic precedents elsewhere for Members of the House to have a fair amount of information on which to base a proper Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in his speech today the Parliamentary Secretary said the Opposition was too hasty and wanted this Bill right away before even consulting with the Members of this House. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, this has never been the case. My own position as Opposition critic in this matter is as follows: The Prime Minister had made a commitment which he failed to meet. Now you may say; But it's much better this way, it's better to have a consultation document before the Bill is tabled, and my answer to that, Mr. Speaker, is that if that is the case, the Prime Minister did not stop to think long enough before he made these proposals in the House.

If that is not the case, if the Prime Minister was right in making his statement last September, then the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) is wrong, because he said it was premature to draft a Bill right away, and that it was necessary to consult with various groups and the House before drafting this legislation. In any case, it is either one or the other, they cannot both be right or wrong, since the Prime Minister's opinion directly contradicts that of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and vice versa.

In concluding, I would like to bring the following to your attention, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to take up more time than is necessary to speak to this matter today, but I nevertheless want to point out that the people in our political group in this House intend to take an active part in the debate in committee. We do not want any unnecessary delay, and we intend to observe the March 30 or March 31 deadline. We want a Bill that will not only enhance the credibility of the people who do this kind of work, the lobbyists, but we also want to restore the credibility, not only of this Government but of all the Members in this Chamber and in the other place, and that of the Public Service which is often subject to lobbying by people who do this kind of work.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the parliamentary committee will be able to start its work very shortly, that it will have the privilege and the authority to invite as many witnesses as possible in order to be properly informed, that Hon. Members will take an active part in the committee's proceedings and will help committee members draft the legislation in the best possible way they can. As far as I am concerned, I think the Bill should not only provide for registration of lobbyists but also for making this information public, including the salary and expenses of lobbyists as well as the names of their clients and the people whom they are lobbying. If we proceed with these objectives in mind, I am sure the result will be a piece of sound legislation that will benefit all Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some brief remarks on behalf of the New Democratic Party on this report and its reference to the Parliamentary Committee. The report entitled Lobbying and the Registration of Paid Lobbyists is a pretty thorough one, and I am not going to repeat all the suggestions made in it.

I note that the Hon. Member who just spoke dealt with a number of the matters included in this report and made a number of suggestions including that Lobbyists not only be registrered but that their names be published and their salaries and clients be registered along with who they lobbied. He made some concrete suggestions and no doubt the committee will consider them.

I am proud to speak on behalf of the NDP. I think it was Barry Mather, a Member of Parliament from Surrey, British Columbia, who proposed one of the first private Member's Bills to deal with lobbyists. I know that the late Hon. Walter Baker also took the matter up, as did the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). This is an example of ideas put forward by individual Members which are beginning to come to fruition. Ultimately there will be a Bill on lobbyists.

Lobbyists have sort of a bad name. This goes back historically to the bad old days. I believe the word "lobbyist" comes from the fact that these people hung around the lobbies. There are a lot of people who hang around our lobbies, but they are not lobbyists in the traditional sense. Most of them are our employees or members of the media.

According to the Oxford Dictionary, a lobbyist is someone who frequents the lobby of a legislature. There are certain parallels with that today. There are lots of lobbyists all around Ottawa these days. The rich and powerful are the ones who tend to have lobbyists, so things have not changed much. The rich and the powerful are the ones who can afford lobbyists.

It is true, there are some organizations that have had Government funding like native and poverty organizations that are now beginning to have lobbyists. However, they are in a minority as compared to the Canadian Petroleum Association and some of the other big lobby groups here in Ottawa.

We in the NDP support the registration of lobbyists and we support the referral of this report to committee. We feel that anyone who comes to the Hill to approach MPs or public servants representing certain interests should have to declare for whom they work. We feel that all groups should be made to register, not just private-sector groups but both profit and non-profit groups and foreign and domestic groups.

Hon. Members will note that I mentioned the lobbying of public servants. Let us be honest. In Ottawa, under the Canadian parliamentary system, there is a strick Party system. It is not as useful to lobby individual Members of Parliament as it is to lobby individual congressmen in the United States. Individual Members of Congress have more power than Canadian Members of Parliament. Generally speaking, Canadian Members of Parliament do not have very much power. They are part of a part system. They can speak out and they can try. They can get Bills and so on. We are reforming the rules to give them a little more power.

However, lobbyists are not stupid. They go for the people who have power and influence. They go for Ministers of the Crown who have power. In particular, they go for the civil servants in Ottawa. That is who they lobby. They do this because in our system the civil servants are making up the Bills, shaping policy and making recommendations to the Government. Those are the people lobbyists zero in on. In my submission that is who the committee should zero in on as well. We should look at lobbyists vis-à-vis civil servants. There should be fashioned a system of registering paid lobbyists in recognition of the fact that these people are lobbying civil servants. I think we all agree that we want a fair system. We want things to be out in the open. I think that is the whole thrust of this effort.

I also suggested that there is more than just the private sector groups to be considered. There are some profit and non-profit groups which are lobbying. There are also foreign and domestic groups, which presents a more difficult problem. Foreign governments are not lobbyists, although they lobby in the traditional diplomatic way. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), who just spoke took a trip to Taiwan, which he acknowledges. He did so on behalf of the Taiwanese Government. It was a free trip. One does not receive free trips for nothing, at least not in the long run. The Taiwan Government will expect some sympathy on behalf of its causes, which is what it wants from the Hon. Member and from his Liberal colleagues. I might say that the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, who is a good spokesman on the issue of patronage, really destroyed his credibility by taking that particular trip. This is a matter at which the committee must look; it must consider whether or not foreign Governments and foreign agencies should be caught in this legislation.

Provincial Governments also have lobbyists. For example, the Governments of Saskatchewan and British Columbia have offices in Ottawa. They are in place to lobby on behalf of the provincial Government. Should they be registered? Should they be controlled under these provisions? That will be up to the committee to consider.

There is also the matter of Crown agencies to be considered. No one likes to talk about it but they really have lobbyists. I think of Petro-Canada, the CBC and Eldorado in this regard. They all have people on the Hill. If one wishes to get in touch with them they can, or if they wish to get in touch with someone they can do that as well. They can fill one in on what their interests are. That is lobbying. The committee will have to consider whether or not it will exclude Crown agencies from lobbying. It will have to recognize the fact that this exists.

As I understand it, the rationale behind the registration of lobbyists is to ensure that politicians and public servants operate in the public eye. They must be clearly perceived by the public to be operating under a certain code of ethics.

I have recently noticed that in Canada a system is developing in which senior public servants move in and out of Government Departments. Years ago people like Dr. O. D. Skelton stayed in Government Departments for years and years. They were the great mandarins of our civil service, mandarin being the Chinese word for advisor. These people tended to stay in Government throughout their whole careers as civil servants. They were very distinguished civil servants, probably the best in the world. We now see people like Simon Reisman who come and go. When they go back to the private sector they have great inside knowledge of Government.

I know this subject is not in the lobbying document, but the conflict of interest rules and the existence of this type of behaviour pattern are matters which the committee should take into consideration when considering a Bill with respect to the registration of lobbyists. It is not an easy matter to deal with; it is a difficult one. People must have the freedom to hold jobs. However, there may have to be some restrictions with respect to what they can do.

Lobbying has a history in Canada. I said it had a bad name because it always represented the most powerful, and that it was sometimes thought to be representative of fairly sinister interests. When the Canadian Pacific Railway was about to be built there was a great debate in Parliament. There was the Pacific scandal, the great scandal of the day. At that time it was revealed that there were lobbyists around here on behalf of the groups that wanted to build the railway. These groups were contributing money, I believe, to the Prime Minister's political Party. Of course there was a great scandal. That was the time when Canadians first became concerned about lobbyists. In those days lobbyists lobbied Members of Parliament and cabinet Ministers. Today they lobby civil servants as well as cabinet Ministers.

I have to say that we in the NDP consider the Senate a big lobby. In fact it is comprised of 102 paid lobbyists, as far as I can see. One just has to look at the banking committee of the Senate and the bankground of the Senators who sit on that committee. Some Senators, such as Senator Davey, lobby for the Liberal Party full-time. He is virtually a paid public organizer for the Liberal Party. Others lobby for their own corporate interests. Some of them serve on numerous boards of directors. Hon. Members know my Party's view of the Senate.

Mr. Jardine: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Waddell: I am not saying anything about the Senate, I am talking about the lobbying.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Jardine).

Mr. Jardine: Mr. Speaker, I think it is acknowledged that we do not take the name of the other place in vain, such as the Hon. Member has been doing thus far.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi has a good point. I was waiting for the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), who is well-versed in the rules of this place, to bring his remarks to a halt in terms of the Senate.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate what the Hon. Member has said. Hon. Members know that I consider the Senate to be a scandal. It is composed simply of a group of paid lobbyists. I will not refer to the Senate further.

The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell mentioned that we are now seeing a new type of lobbyist in the form of high-powered consulting firms. Frank Moores is a perfect example of this. These are firms which make money as a result of their influence with the present Conservative administration. The situation needs to be defined more completely.

The allegations of Mr. Moores supposedly lobbying and getting paid by some fishermen to have a meeting with the Minister really goes beyond the bounds. I suspect the committee will consider the matter. I know there are other sides to it as well. However, I expect the committee will hear about that. There is nothing the matter with someone such as Mr. Moores lobbying and working as a consultant as far as I am concerned. What we want is to have everything out in the open. We want a certain equality in terms of people who have influence. We do not want an old boys network with the old boys getting paid for influencing the Government.

There are other experiences in other jurisdictions, as the Hon. Member and the report point out, such as Australia and the United States. Again, I say that the American example is not quite the same because of the power of individual Congressmen. Because of the Party system and because of the Party discipline Members of Parliament in Canada do not have that type of power. It is the civil servants in Canada who stay much longer—even though some of them are moving in and out—than American civil servants who tend to come and go with the administration. So I am sure the committee will look at that area.

I would like to add a few personal observations. I do not believe that registering lobbyists will solve many problems. I believe what we should be doing is looking for further ways to encourage what I would like to call the "equality of viewpoints" to be presented to Government. I have been on the Hill for almost seven years and I have seen the influence of the big oil companies as compared to that of the Consumers Association of Canada. There is no comparison. I have seen the big oil companies take out advocacy advertising saying: "We are doing this for you up in the Beaufort Sea". They are not advertising Chevron at the pump to sell gas. They are advertising a kind of image of themselves as good people, all tax deductible, no doubt. They are lobbying Canadians generally in that way to show us what good people they are. Quite frankly, I would like to see the Canadian Consumers Association get off its butt and be more active in lobbying for the average Canadian consumer here in Ottawa. However, the scales are unbalanced because one group has so much money and power and the other group has very little of either, and is so diverse.

I would like to quote the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) when he spoke in debate on second reading of Bill C-48, a Private Members' Bill put forward by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I quote from Hansard of January 27, 1986 at page 10214:

> My concern is that by moving to register lobbyists, we are making a statement about politics in Canada. We are defining the kind of politics we regard as entrenched in and part and parcel of the life of Canada. I do not say this out of any naiveté. I realize lobbying has gone on from before Confederation. I know many hundreds of thousands of dollars are spent in the financing of paid lobbyists here on the Hill. However, my concern is, to put it simply, that by moving to register lobbyists we are accepting a certain view of politics which I want to reject. There have always been competing views of the political process here in Canada. By moving to register lobbyists we are saying that a particular view of politics has won the day. I call that kind of politics "brokerage politics" or small "l" liberal politics, that is the view of politics that sees the role of Government, indeed of Parliament, as engaging in a series of trade-offs between the interests of various groups in the country. There are other views of politics which have existed alongside that view. That is, the politics of competing ideas; competing ideas about the common good; competing ideas about the public interest; competing ideas on many levels. There is also what I might call the co-operative model. This is the reason that some countries have not gone so far as to register lobbyists. They say they do not really need to do that because they have more of a consensual or co-operative view of politics. They sit down with various sectors and work out a consensus between them.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill, who is a very deep thinking person, is saying that by moving to register lobbyists we will be giving a kind of legitimacy or sanctity, if you will, to an element of our political process which is debatable. We are, however, prepared, as a first step to a little better system, to bring under control and make more visible the high powered lobbying which goes on here on the Hill so that Canadians know more about it.

I believe that ordinary people should be able to lobby Parliament more often. They can lobby their Members of Parliament at home in the constituency, that is true, but if we look at a city council and compare what happens in this House to what happens in a city council or a town council, we see the town council as being more immediate. There is a lot more life to that than there is here in Parliament and it is more immediate. When there is a lobby in Parliament by the people, for example, the senior citizens who lobbied to change the Government's Budget on deindexing of old age pensions, it took a long time. There was a time lag for that lobby to come through. Right now there is a lobby just beginning to come forward with respect to lowering gasoline prices. There is always a delay of a month or two months.

Perhaps Parliament should go out to the people. Instead of being stuck here on the Hill where only the rich and powerful can come and lobby us, perhaps Parliament should sit one week of the year in places like Halifax—in a large auditorium or high school—and debate a specific topic, for instance Atlantic development or regional development. Perhaps there could be one or two Question Periods in Halifax. Another week we could go to Quebec or in an alternate year to Toronto. We could alternate between the other regions of the country. There are three prairie provinces and British Columbia is, of course, a separate region. We could go there one week a year as a Parliament. That would be a way in which we could be lobbied much more directly by the ordinary people. Canada is a large country, the second largest in the world. Ordinary people should have access to its Parliament.

I only toss that suggestion out as an idea whose time, obviously, has not come. But one never knows, perhaps there will be a demand for Parliament to decentralize so it can be lobbied by the ordinary people.

Let me sum up, Mr. Speaker, by saying that we are in favour of the report going to committee. There is plenty of meat in it. There is additional material which the committee should consider, much of it brought up by the Hon. Member who last spoke with respect to the question of salaries, clients and other touchy questions which should be considered. I have asked the committee to consider other lobbying agencies such as Crown corporations, provincial Governments, foreign bodies and so on. I have suggested a focus on the lobbying of some of the senior levels of senior servants. Those are the kinds of things the committee should consider before bringing forward an appropriate Bill to this House of Commons.

Mr. Gauthier: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are no questions or comments. Does the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) want to speak on debate?

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry there are no questions or comments because I would like to put a question to the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). He did take a shot at my colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). I do not want to reciprocate but I would like to remind the Hon. Member that many of us in our careers have accepted trips, and he, as well as myself, accompanied a delegation to China.

Mr. Waddell: From a recognized Government.

Mr. Gauthier: From a recognized Government, yes, but he was nevertheless there as a guest of the country. So I do not believe it is appropriate or proper for him to bring up such a question to the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell who went on his own to look and see for himself what was there. I do not see the purpose of bringing this into the debate.

I would like to say a few words on the motion. The last time we discussed the subject on January 27 I said I wanted to address the House on the matter of lobbyists and the need for openness, accessibility and especially the registry, of which I am very much in favour and which should be part of our system.

When we talk about openness, clarity, accessibility and simplicity I believe strongly that lobbyists should be registered and available to all of us who are asked every day by all kinds of groups to meet and discuss with them their points of views. On the point of registry, I would like to make it clear I favour a register which would not only contain the name and the company for whom the person works but perhaps also his working conditions and salary so that we all know how much he is receiving for the work he is doing for the company or group in question.

The second point worth mentioning is that the committee will have to decide whether to do this through legislation or leave it to the lobbyists to regulate themselves. The committee must address this question and come back and say, "We are dealing with a professional discipline which is controllable and wants to register its members. That would be acceptable to me. If not, I guess we will have to legislate. The legislation will have to include prerequisites for lobbyists so that the register is open to us so that we know who and what we are dealing with.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We can now allow questions or comments.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I want to say but a few words on the matter of lobbyists and lobbying generally. I suppose it can be said that Members of Parliament are a sort of full-time lobbyists for their constituents and various interest groups. There is nothing new about that. It is part of the job of an MP to make representations in caucus, to Cabinet Ministers, Deputy Ministers and various and sundry boards. I just want to point out that there are really two kinds of lobbying, public and private. Public lobbying involves a large number of national, regional and provincial organizations of various kinds which come to Ottawa and hold demonstrations. They demonstrate in front of Parliament, they go and see their MP, and they leave. Private lobbyists, corporate lobbyists, maintain full-time people.

Mr. Andre: You mean like the CLC?

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, exactly. The CLC, the National Farmers Union, the Prairie Wheat Pools, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the Canadian Automobile Producers Association, et cetera. However, one thing I have never seen in the almost 18 years I have been here is the board of directors and shareholders of Canadian Pacific or INCO or General Motors or the banks publicly lobbying by way of a demonstration in front of the House of Commons. In fact, I doubt if very many, if any, shareholders really know what the heck their board of directors and officers are up to. I doubt if any shareholder of those corporations knows about or even questions the lobbying activities of the company he owns shares in, or those companies' contributions to a couple of political Parties, which I will not name.

Mr. Kempling: Come on, name them.

Mr. Benjamin: I doubt very much that at any annual meeting of shareholders the officers or the chairman of the board report to the shareholders that they gave "x" dollars to this Party and "y" dollars to that Party. I doubt that ever happens. I have been tempted to buy one share in Canadian Pacific Limited and just go and ask a question at the annual meeting and then get thrown out. Thank goodness contributions to all political Parties are now public. However, major corporations in the private sector carry out private lobbies, and we have to know who they are and where they are from.

The only thing I tell individuals and groups who come to my office to lobby me, and they are welcome any time, is that if I agree with what they want, I will support their case in caucus and in this House. Lobbying is a perfectly polite and honourable word. There is nothing wrong with it. It is an element of the art of persuasion. However, if I do not agree with people, I say so. I tell them not to ask me to support them because I think they are wrong. People have lobbied me about a problem in my own province when the NDP was the Government. I told them that what they have to do, in addition to their demonstration, is to go to see individual Members of the legislature, particularly on the government side. If most or all of those Members agree with the case put forward, they will raise hell in their caucus. To be quite honest, I have said to many organizations and individuals who have come to see me in my office that I agree with them, they have no problem with me or my Party, but I urge them to go to see individual Members on the Government side. If those Members have the intestinal fortitude, they will raise hell in caucus and force a Cabinet Minister or the Cabinet as a whole to change its position. That is what it is all about. In that sense I disagree with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: He is going to like the way I disagree with him.

Mr. Boudria: I am sure he will.

Mr. Benjamin: There is one area in which Members of Parliament have quite a bit of power if they choose to use it, if they have the intestinal fortitude. It might mean they do not get appointed Parliamentary Secretary for a while, or they may never get in Cabinet. I do not know anything about the Government caucus since I have never been privy to or listened in on a Liberal or Conservative caucus. However, I conclude they are a democratic organization, and if a majority of the Government caucus overrules an individual Cabinet Minister or the Cabinet as a whole, then I think that Minister or the Cabinet would be in some difficulty if they refused to pay attention to a group with a sound case.

I am sick and tired of Members on the Government side, in both the old Parties, who tell people they agree with them, they have a good case, but when it comes to their own caucus meeting they sit there like sheep. So Government Members do have some power, if, as and when they choose to use it. Unfortunately, that occurs all too infrequently.

I have said the same thing to my colleagues in my Party when we were the Government in Saskatchewan. I have told public and private lobbyists to go to see the Government MLAs and MPs as they are the first ones you have to convince. I have yet to see representatives of corporations marching in front of the House of Commons. You do not see boards of directors and shareholders coming to see Members of Parliament. You may see the odd officer of a company, but they do their lobbying behind the scenes with the Cabinet. That is what I call private lobbying. There is an essential difference between public and private lobbying. The public is entitled to know about all kinds of lobbyists.

I am not sure if it is necessary to register a group of people sent here by an organization for two days to lobby MPs, Cabinet Ministers and Deputy Ministers. There would be more registrations and deregistrations than you could shake a stick at. Often groups come here for one day or one week with regard to a certain issue and may not come bak again for years. They cannot really be called paid lobbyists. They got their plane ticket and their hotel room paid for and they spent a lot of money out of their own pockets. I do not think they could be called private, full-time, paid lobbyists. I hope that is taken into consideration when this matter reaches committee.

In considering this matter it is incumbent upon MPs from all sides of the House to do one of two things. If they agree with the people who are presenting their case, they should say so and work like heck to try to accomplish what the people want. If Members disagree, they should have the honesty and courage to say so rather than trying to work both sides of the street. Even though people may disagree with you and be angry with you, they will at least respect you for honestly telling them that you do not agree with their case and will not, therefore, support it. Once you tell them that in a straightforward manner they will never bother you again. They know who not to lobby, which also saves some time and effort for the Member of Parliament.

It is important that those who lobby most of the time and those who lobby all of the time be registered. We must know who they are and who they represent. I hope the committee will take some of the things I have said into consideration. I hope that my colleagues on the government side and the Official Opposition, if and when they ever get back into Government, will take that into account because Government back-benchers do have some power if they have the courage and conviction to use it.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on this subject. The hon. gentleman who just spoke made perhaps the most important point made in this debate, other than those made by the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). The important point was that the largest group of lobbyists on the Hill are Members of Parliament. If they are not lobbyists, there is something seriously wrong with our system. If it is possible for an individual or a company to lobby a Cabinet Minister to use his authority to accomplish something, there is something wrong with our system.

Too often Governments and Members of Parliament pay too much attention to organized lobbyists and not enough attention to doing their jobs. While doing their jobs they are the most effective lobbyists in the country. When you look at regulations passed by Cabinet Ministers you can see the effect that they have on ordinary Canadians who are not represented by organized groups of lobbyists. Members of Parliament should represent the ordinary people in each and every instance.

Saying that it is necessary to register paid lobbyists indicates to me that there is something wrong with the system. There is something wrong with the Government and with the way in which it operates. An example is a lobbyist who was paid to represent a fishing captain and get him a licence to operate a boat on the East Coast of Canada. To be honest about this, I am sure that Members of Parliament do the same thing daily for constituents. They try to get things done for their constituents if it is not against regulations. There are some Government regulations which should be overruled.

Sometimes a Member of Parliament fights in court on behalf of a constituent to try to overcome a regulation or a ruling of a Department or a Minister. However, if someone has to pay a lobbyist to go to Ottawa and speak to a cabinet Minister for him, there is something wrong with the system.

I disagree with the hon. gentleman who spoke a moment ago and suggested that the Parliament of Canada should go to Halifax, Nova Scotia, or Vancouver, British Columbia. Members of Parliament come here from all over Canada and they are supposed to know what is going on in their constituencies, what the people are worried about, and how legislation will affect the people they represent. When things are done by Cabinet Ministers in response to a very effective lobbying group, things which adversely affect a Member's constituents, it is the role of that Member of Parliament to stand up and be counted and represent the majority of people in this riding. I could give many examples of things which happened under the present Government. In response to the very well organized lobby of interest groups who profess to represent a certain part of society, the Government imposes restrictions on works programs or the Public Service under the guise of affirmative action. However, as a result of that action it discriminates against the poorest of the poor in our constituencies. That is not right but it happens all the time.

When the Government takes action as a result of an organized lobby and it adversely affects people who are not represented by lobby groups, it is the Member of Parliament who should be on the firing line. Unfortunately, there is no impartial person to ask where Members of Parliament were when the Government or a Cabinet Minister took certain action.

I suggest that historically, the ones in this Chamber who responded the most to organized lobbies are the members of the New Democratic Party. One month they support an issue and another month they are against it. For instance, their Leader will issue a letter saying that he is opposed to the seal hunt because of a lobby, while the next year he will issue a letter saying he is in favour of the seal hunt because of a lobby. I could give further examples, but the fact is that the buck stops with Members of Parliament.

I cannot imagine how some lobby groups can function or how a Cabinet Minister can listen to someone who is paid to act on another's behalf. I cannot imagine that a Cabinet Minister is actually so incompetent as to pay attention to a paid lobbyist against the wishes of the people, of his Department or against government policy. I do not know who these lobbyists are but this lobbying takes place and if paid lobby groups are being organized as a result of a Conservative Government, I agree that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs should require these people to be registered.

Why would organizations want to pay a lobbyist to act on their behalf when the organizations themselves can go to their Member of Parliament? Perhaps their request of a Cabinet Minister is unusual and they require the use of a lobbyist. While I do not know what purpose it will serve, I am not opposed to making a list of registered lobbyists.

When one considers the question of lobbying one realizes that when Members of Parliament are doing their jobs, as I believe many are, there is no need for paid lobbyists. There should be no need for organized groups to be paid by other groups in order to present their case to Cabinet Ministers or Members of Parliament because Members of Parliament should know exactly what is happening in their constituencies. Members of Parliament are being paid handsomely to act on behalf of their electors. Members of Parliament should be the chief lobbyists for the people who elected them as their representative.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have a number of comments and a question for the Hon. Member. He is very knowledgeable about this issue as a result of his vast experience as former Clerk of the House of Assembly in the Province of Newfoundland. Undoubtedly, he is aware of the lobbyist in this country who, I suggest, has generated some controversy recently.

Does he believe that the legitimate activity of lobbying has perhaps been tarnished by one individual's involvement in so many different areas? This lobbyist simultaneously represented several different agencies which occasionally came into conflict. He had been dismissed from one Crown corporation because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) no longer permitted it to hire lobbyists but joined another Crown corporation as a so-called consultant. I am talking about Petro-Canada hiring Frank Moores.

Does the Hon. Member not believe that when this takes place frequently it creates unnecessary controversy and perhaps has brought this whole activity to the forefront, much to the detriment of other people who have represented Canadians and organizations in their quest for better representation?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, two things come to mind in responding to a question concerning Frank Moores, the former Premier of Newfoundland and a very successful businessman. First, when the general public in Canada is told repeatedly that someone's lobbying firm or consulting firm has been successful in many areas, it is perhaps the best publicity one could give to that firm. We should always keep in mind that the best way to advertise a certain brand is to keep repeating the name.

In that sense, a firm owned by Frank Moores has received much free publicity throughout the country. I imagine that it will continue. I see the hon. gentleman shaking his head. He does not understand what I am talking about.

Second, I do not fault Frank Moores for being appointed to these various companies. Somebody had to do that, somebody had to appoint him to a Crown corporation. Perhaps our criticism should be directed toward the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) or toward the Cabinet Ministers responsible. However, we all have to admit that Mr. Moores has been very successful. It appears that he will continue to be successful, as he has always been in business and, unfortunately, in politics as well in the Province of Newfoundland.

• (1530)

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, keeping in mind the previous question of the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) relative to the fact that the reputations of companies are tarnished by certain kinds of lobbying, there is a broad understanding, and it has been widely reported, that the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell at one time gained some kind of employment around the Hill through some lobbying. Could the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) tell us whether that would have tarnished either the reputation of employees on the Hill or the reputation of Members of Parliament and whether that is the kind of lobbying to which he referred in his speech?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: What a cheap shot.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It is St. Valentine's Day; let us cool it for a minute.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the hon. gentleman's question. He said that the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, as a result of lobbying, obtained a job on the Hill. I was thinking for a moment that perhaps he was talking about his position as the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. In that event, the lobbying was done by the Hon. Member himself in getting elected. The only other position held by the Hon. Member on Parliament Hill was that of a busboy in 1966.

Mr. Gormley: Which his MP got him.

Mr. Baker: What a marvellous act on the part of whoever was the Member of Parliament. Let us give him a good pat on the back.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since there are no further questions or comments, is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Hnatyshyn) agreed to.

PENSION BENEFITS STANDARDS ACT, 1985

The House resumed from Friday, February 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-90, an Act respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about the legislation and pensions generally. Some specific points need to be made about pensions, whether they be public or private. National and provincial pension legislation should provide for complete portability. There should not be any ifs, ands or buts about that. When I was a youngster—

Mr. Friesen: How long ago?

Mr. Benjamin: Back in the dirty thirties. Everyone who changed jobs, if they could get one, more than once or twice in their lifetime was looked upon as some kind of a ne'er-do-well. It was an accepted custom of society, until after the Second World War, that one did not run around from job to job. Most people did not do that. They were long-term employees, small businessmen or whatever. They had pension plans or, if they did not, they tried to set up one of their own. However, that is not the situation today. It is an accepted norm of today's society that persons may enter and leave from five to six different occupations during their years of employment from the age of 16 to 65 or more.

Both the federal and the provincial Pension Benefits Standards Acts should indicate that as and when an employee leaves employment with one firm and moves to another, his contributions and the contributions of his employer should move with him automatically to the new pension fund with his new employer. This would mean that throughout the working lives of employees their pensions would follow them. I am not talking about the old age pension or the Canada Pension Plan because they follow employees, but it seems to me that the same principle should apply to private pension plans.

The legislation proposes that an employee is not eligible or may not be eligible for the first two years for coverage under national pension plan legislation unless there is a separate agreement for him to be eligible sooner than that. I believe the legislation also indicates that there is another two-year period in which an employee can be excluded from being eligible to be a member of the pension plan which comes under federal jurisdiction. This means that an employee could have up to four years of employment without being eligible to be a member of the plan. Surely that is worse than an anomaly. It is a grave error of omission and commission by Parliament.

All pension plans subject to the jurisdiction of the Pension Benefits Standards Act should allow for a period of time, equivalent to three months probation but not more than six months, and once the employee, whether he is a unionized employee or a management employee, has served that probationary period, he becomes eligible to participate in the plan. There should be no ifs, ands or buts. The two-year provision which can amount to four years has no place in national legislation.

I should like to refer to something else which is sorely lacking in national pension legislation as well as the legislation of most provinces. As far as I know, Quebec is the only province which prohibits the withdrawal of so-called surplus funds from a pension plan by an employer. Pension plans under the jurisdiction of national legislation and also those under the jurisdiction of provincial legislation should prohibit the removal of surplus funds from pension plans by the employer. There should be an independent board of trustees for those funds. I am far from being any kind of an expert, still somewhat of an amateur when it comes to pension funds and listening to actuaries, but I have learned something in our meetings on the subcommittee on Canadian National Railway pension funds. I found out quite a few things that I did not know before. The argument put forward is that when there are deficits the employer has to make them up, and, therefore, when there are surpluses the employer should be entitled to remove those surpluses. Well, Sir, I think there are a number of fallacies in that kind of argument, one being that if there is a deficit then obviously the fund will only be able to pay out less money to the pensioner. Obviously the pensioners cannot put in extra money to make up the deficit.

If a pension plan is in great difficulty and has deficits because of a downturn in the stock and bond market and investments, then, of course, if the money is not there, ergo, benefits will have to be proportionately smaller. There is nothing much that anyone can do about it. That is such a rare instance that it in no way justifies the ability of an employer to withdraw surplus funds because those funds, I submit, are in trust for the employees when they go on pension, whether it is the president of a company or the most junior person eligible for that pension. That is nobody else's money but theirs.

We have had some instances in just the past few weeks when two major employers in the Province of Ontario have withdrawn substantial funds from the pension plan of their employees on the basis that there were surpluses. It is not their money, and I do not think it should be considered their money under the law. That money does not belong to the employer, it belongs to the pension fund, which means it belongs to those who are presently on pension or who will become eligible for benefits under the pension plan.

Some time ago my colleague from Toronto put a question on the Order Paper to the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) on withdrawals by employers from pension plans from 1980 to 1984 inclusive. Sir, they requested permission to withdraw $58.5 million. They got permission to withdraw almost $39 million from a total of 22 requests that were approved. Well, there were 23 requests, 22 of the 23 were approved, to withdraw funds from a pension fund that does not belong to the company under any kind of standard of morality, business ethics, or employee-employer relationship. Sir, this year we get two major examples in Ontario where I think something in the order of $70 million dollars was withdrawn. In the case of Mr. Black in Dominion Stores, $68 million was withdrawn from an employees' pension fund because it was said to be a surplus. Why? As I understand it Mr. Black sold most of his stores to someone else. Hundreds of employees are without a job, without severance pay. It seems to me that while the Premier of Ontario and the Minister of Finance for Ontario expressed grave concern about that kind of action, they now tell us, as reported in today's paper that Ontario will not move on pension surpluses. Sir, if they will note that is Ontario's business, that is the business of the Legislature, but, by the Gods of war, there should be no way under federal legislation that funds can be withdrawn by an employer because they are supposedly surpluses.

If a pension fund had good investment practices and made surpluses, that is when you could start paying some indexing for inflation. That is when you could make larger ad hoc payments to those who have been on pension the longest and are getting the least. That is when you could have funds available which would earn money for those who are yet to be retired. Surely, Sir, that is fundamentally wrong in principle, and no employer, no union, should be allowed to touch or make withdrawals from a pension plan just because there is supposedly a surplus. In fact, Sir, there should be as big a surplus as we can get in pension plans of all kinds, public or private. If they can accrue those surpluses, then surely those surpluses are there for the benefit of those already on pension and those yet to be pensioned. Surely you could build in even a minimum of inflation protection, a minimal measure of indexing.

I find it incredible and reprehensible that any so-called national business figure who is lauded as a good corporate citizen, and so is the corporation, could be so small and mean minded, so grasping at the expense of long-time, loyal employees, both management and non-management, as to raid their pension plan to the tune of $68 million. That situation is a problem for the Ontario Legislature to solve, but we must make damn certain that there is no such practice allowed under federal legislation. There are probably 1,000 or 2,000 pension plans that come under the jurisdiction of the legislation of the Parliament of Canada.

I want to say something also about survivor benefits. I find it strange, to put it midly, that, in the case of survivor benefits, a person who has retired gets 100 per cent of his benefits or whatever he is entitled to; if that pensioner's spouse dies, that pensioner continues to get 100 per cent benefits; but if the pensioner dies, the spouse gets only 50 per cent, if the spouse is lucky, if the pension plan that they are in happens to provide for survivor benefits. I just cannot find any logical reason to justify that. Now we get a reason, and the reason that is given to us—and we ran into this in hearings on the CNR pension plan, which is also applicable to the CPR and a bunch of others—is that it costs too much money. Now, is that not terrible? I do not understand. When a spouse dies, the pensioner receives 100 per cent of the pension for the rest of his life. However, when the pensioner dies, the spouse receives only 50 per cent of the pension for the rest of her life. In fact, there are even plans that cut the spouse off when she reaches the age of 70. Surely that is immoral in a modern society such as ours.

It seems to me that these are the kinds of inadequacies which are in the laws that govern private pension plans. When I refer to private pension plans, I refer to plans other than the Canada Pension Plan and the Old Age Security. There are other pension plans which are called public pension plans and they come from Crown corporations and federal, provincial and municipal Governments. There are private plans that come from Canadian National, Canadian Pacific, International Nickel, General Motors and the like.

Another thing that should be in the national legislation is that no corporation should be allowed to hide behind loose laws in individual provinces. If corporations do business in more than one province, they should be governed by the national legislation. If they were not, they could evade the requirements of the law in Quebec by not applying them to their employees in other provinces. Those employees will not be protected as well as they are under the legislation in Quebec.

Surely it is incumbent upon us to update and upgrade substantially the Pension Benefits Standards Act because the standards need to be improved and made equitable. If we do not do that, we are not doing our jobs. It is long overdue. Members of Parliament from all Parties have said the same thing. Surely the situation as it is can no longer be allowed to continue. Pension money belongs to the pensioners and to those who are presently working and will be eligible for pension benefits at a later time.

We may come up with this at the subcommittee meetings, and I do not want to prejudge that, but I think that pension funds should be in the hands of independent trustees so that there is no chance of having the funds raided and no chance of a conflict of interest, perceived or real. As well, perhaps it would be a good idea to divide the pension fund between those who are already on pension including a proportionate share of unfunded liabilities and those who are currently employed including a proportionate share of unfunded laibilities. In that way, those who are already on pension are fully protected and those who are still employees will be allowed to bargain for the benefits and their share of the pension that will go to them when they retire. I submit that that is the least Parliament could do. It would be a major advance and would set a standard for eight or nine provinces and many other countries. I think we should do no less than that. Most employees and employers contribute equally and it is in their mutual interests and the interests of the entire nation. They would be less likely to fall back upon municipal, provincial and national Governments for additional assistance if they have already earned assistance. Pension plans are a deferred wage to which employees and employers mutually contribute. I hope that that is what this legislation will do.

We have heard of early retirements. Now we are beginning to hear of early, early retirements. Early retirement occurs between the ages of 60 and 65. Early, early retirement occurs between the ages of 55 and 60. I presume that an early, early, early retirement would occur between the ages of 50 and 55.

From what I have been able to find out, early retirement usually occurs at the behest of the company and is negotiated with the unions and an agreement is made regarding severance pay, the golden handshake or a lump-sum payment. At the time early retirement begins, whether it is at page 45 or 55, all contributions to the pension fund then become the responsibility of the employer. If employee representatives wish to negotiate something different from that, that is fine. They have the right to do so. However, there are a lot of companies including the federal Government that are trying to persuade people to retire at age 50 or younger. It seems to me that what is available to those early retirees by way of a pension should be the same as what would be available to someone aged 65. It is the responsibility of the employer to make sure that that to which the employee is entitled has been paid by the employer because the employer is the one who is trying to get rid of the people early and is therefore responsible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a few words to say in addition to what the Hon. gentleman has said. When he talked about the Canadian National pension scheme, I was thinking of layoffs. When an employee of Canadian National or a Crown corporation associated with Canadian National is faced with a layoff, there are reciprocal portability agreements with certain provinces under the section of this Bill that deals with portability.

The portability agreement is fine if one is laid off from CN Marine after having had prior service with the New Brunswick Government or an agency thereof, the Quebec Government or an agency thereof or the Manitoba Government or an agency thereof. In those cases, there are reciprocal agreements and portability but if one just happens to be from Newfoundland, Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island, one is left out in the cold.

Soon there will be 200 or 300 layoffs and probably through a decision made by the Government the railway will finally close. Then there will be hundreds of layoffs but no reciprocal portability agreements. What is good for some Canadians is not good for other Canadians.

It surprises me that Crown corporations and cabinet Ministers do not take the initiative. There has not been one letter that has gone back and forth between the Newfoundland Government and the federal Government asking to take care of these 300 or 400 people who are getting laid off by Canadian National and CN Marine, yet Premier Peckford, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) are such great buddies.

If a worker just happens to be from Quebec or Moncton or have prior service with the Manitoba Government, he is fine and can transfer his pension. He can add up his years of service so that he may qualify for a pension using the reciprocal agreement. However, it is different for everyone else based upon which Government they were associated with. Goodness help you if you work for the Newfoundland Government, as most of the CN Marine employees did. They either worked for the Newfoundland Government before or they worked for the Nova Scotia Government before, and those two Governments refused to have a reciprocal portability agreement. Therefore, it is a sham when one talks about portability and Canadian National and provincial jurisdictions.

Are you motioning to me that my time has expired, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes. It is four o'clock. Would Hon. Members like me to put the question or does the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) wish to carry on when this matter is resumed?

Mr. Baker: I wish to carry on, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When we return on February 24 the Hon. Member will have 17 minutes left in which to debate this matter and there will be a 10-minute question and comment period.

It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

IDENTIFICATION OF CRIMINALS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic) moved that Bill C-260, an Act to amend the Identification of Criminals Act (publication of cards), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the Identification of Criminals Act is a very useful piece of legislation to law officers in the conduct of their duty. I believe it was first enacted by Parliament in the early part of this century. It is only a short Act with some three sections in it. It allows for any person in lawful custody, or any person who has been charged with an indictable offence, and certain other persons, to be subjected to the identification and measuring process known as the Bertillon Signaletic System for the Identification of Criminals. What this entails is the taking of photographs, fingerprints, and the writing of a description of the person's height, weight, visible distinguishing marks, et cetera. The police are empowered to use necessary force to undertake this identification. The Act allows for the publication of this information in the execution or administration of the law.

What Bill C-260 addresses is the case of someone who is subject to this process and is subsequently found to be not guilty, in other words, someone who is innocent of any wrongdoing. I do not wish to address the case of a person who is found guilty of an offence for which he or she has been charged. In such cases the records will be kept, presumably, for ever and ever. However, I suppose there must be some housekeeping operation at some point in time when the records of those who are deceased are thrown out. As far as I know, these fingerprints and mug shots stay in the possession of the police for ever and ever. If someone is found guilty of an offence, then it is quite right to suggest that part of the penalty he or she pays for such a transgression of the Criminal Code is that he or she will have on record with the police these measurements taken pursuant to the Identification of Criminals Act. We are not arguing the case of a person who is found guilty. In that case it is, in my opinion, right that these measurements and cards stay on file with the law enforcement agencies.

What we are dealing with here is the case of an innocent person, and I would like to illustrate my point. Let us say that there is a bank robbery on Sparks Street and witnesses to the robbery describe the criminal as a very distinguished-looking gentleman, middle-aged, five foot nine in height and just a little on the overweight side. Let us say also that there is prima facie evidence in the mind of the investigating officer that the guilty person might be you, Sir, and he comes and lays a charge against you and subjects you to the measuring process and the taking of your fingerprints, et cetera. Then, and it might well be because I, Sir, could not conceive of your committing any criminal offence, someone else comes forward and admits to the crime, and the charges which have been laid against you are dropped. Or, alternatively, let us say that a trial is held and Your Honour demonstrates your innocence. You say that at the time of this particular robbery you were sitting right where you are today and you have a perfect alibi. Let us say that you are found not guilty by the courts.

Under the present system and the Act, you would be fingerprinted and photographed and your record would stay with the police for ever and ever. I think that is wrong. That is something that should not happen. Innocent people should not have these types of records kept about them. If we say that it is okay the way it is and that these records of innocent people are kept, then following logically on that is the fact that similar records should be kept of every Canadian. Therefore, every Canadian should be fingerprinted, have his or her photographs taken and have these records available at all times to the police. I am sure that would make the jobs of the police a great deal easier. However, I do not think too many Canadians would agree with the idea at all. In my opinion, they would be quite right.

What is the difference between an innocent person, one free from all guilt and who has never been charged with a criminal offence, and a similarly innocent person who has been charged with an offence through some inadvertency and who is found by the process of law to be not guilty? Why should records be kept on that person? Obviously, that is not right. If we cannot condone the taking of fingerprints and the keeping of similar types of records of all citizens, then we cannot condone the keeping of records of people who have been charged but who have been subsequently found not guilty. I would suggest that these people would be victims of an inadvertent error in the judicial system.

These days we hear a great deal about the victims of crime and the way in which they should be treated. They have missed out on the judicial system and we are trying to redress that. In my opinion we should also look to the victims of error in our policing system and our judicial system. Something along the lines I have just described is bound to happen on occasion. We know that nothing can be perfect. However, I do not think that people such as this should be subjected to something to which ordinary Canadians are not subjected. It is certainly contrary to the spirit, if not the letter, of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It is certainly contrary to the spirit, if not the letter, of the Privacy Act.

Bill C-260 calls for the sealing of these measurement records of people who have been found not guilty, where charges have been dropped or where they have gone to trial and have been found not guilty. The Bill might equally have called for the destruction of such records. If one is going to seal them indefinitely, then one might as well destroy them. I will return to that in a little while.

This is not a new idea on my part by any means. It has been given consideration in the past by Parliamentarians much more eminent than myself. The Hon. J.-J. Blais, who had given distinguished service in this House as Minister of Supply and Services and as Minister of National Defence, in 1973 introduced Bill C-237 which sought to do similar things to those which I propose in Bill C-260. At that time the Hon. J.-J. Blais was a private Member.

I would fully expect either the subject matter to be referred to committee or the Bill itself. We have heard a lot about the spirit of parliamentary reform. We have had new rule changes which were adopted yesterday. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spoke three days ago about the enhancement of the role of the private Member and how their Bills ought to be decided upon. They ought not just to be talked out. So I expect this Bill will go to committee and I do not expect that any of my colleagues will go against the express wishes ofthe Prime Minister to see matters such as this dealt with. That would be inconceivable to me and I do not believe any of my colleagues would want to go against my wishes, which just happen to correspond with those of the Prime Minister.

When the Bill does go to committee, there are a few things which will have to be discussed. I have already talked about the question of destruction versus ceiling. There might be a provision we would want to put in the Bill that if we adopted the ceiling route, under special circumstances, say, by order of a judge, those records can again be made available. I can see where that might have certain advantages.

The Act itself also calls for fingerprinting in cases of assumed contravention against the Extradition Act and the Fugitive Offenders Act, and that has to be brought into it as well. We have to decide how we are going to deal with fingerprinting and photographs in those particular cases. The publication of these records before the matter goes to trial must be dealt with. That was looked at in a former Bill several years ago. In the case where there is an indictable offence but it is the Crown's option whether it wants to proceed by way of indictment or summary conviction, it may be that it is dealt with by way of summary conviction and we end up with a summary conviction. What do we do in that particular circumstance?

With respect to the penalty for illegal publication, the Act, as it stands, only allows for publication in certain cases in the execution and administration of law. I have seen these cards published in biographies, often biographies of criminals. If they are used, they are used in a manner contrary to the Act and ought there not to be a penalty for illegal publication of these signaletic cards?

Those are the things which will have to be dealt with in committee.

In conclusion I say that it is necessary that we protect innocent citizens against the excesses of the state, even if those excesses are inadvertent. Therefore, for the reasons I have outlined, I would urge ready passage of Bill C-260.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak very briefly on Bill C-260 as proposed by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). I suppose it is difficult for anyone to be against the principle of removing records of any individual who has not been proven guilty of any offence. Of course, under our judicial system, everyone is innocent unless proven guilty. The record remains of anyone against whom there is not sufficient evidence, or in the case of mistaken identity. However, I have another concern and it pertains to fingerprints, and I will just limit my comments to that subject for the moment. Fingerprints are not only used to apprehend or identify a criminal suspect although, of course, that is the primary purpose. There are uses for fingerprints, such as identification of victims. In that regard, I have a good deal less difficulty with the police agency having someone's fingerprints for that purpose once they are on record. There are two points with which I agree, and that is, in the case where it is a simple case of mistaken identity. Of course, the Hon. Member has a very good point. What logical reason would there be to keep an individual's card on file when that individual, for instance, was wrongly apprehended as in a case of mistaken identity? That, indeed, is a very good point. On the other hand, there have been cases in the past where information has been obtained by fingerprinting an individual for whatever small or meaningless offence. It has been a very useful tool in rendering justice later. The example which comes to my mind is the case of Richard Ramirez in California. He apparently killed 16 people in that state at one period of time. It was quite a notorious case about which we have all heard. His fingerprint was found on a car from a previous event for which the individual had apparently not received a conviction. The police found a subsequent fingerprint near one of the victims, matched it with the previous print and in that way succeeded in apprehending someone who had committed not just one murder but the murder of 16 people. So we can see that there have been cases in the past where that information has been useful. Notwithstanding that, I am quite prepared personally, at least, to see the matter referred to a parliamentary committee so that we could have more information on that topic in order to more fully develop a system where at least in some cases we could do what the Hon. Member advocates.

In closing, I would just like to congratulate the Hon. Member for his worth-while initiative. I do have a certain number of reservations but the principles of what the Hon. Member is trying to do are, indeed, quite appropriate. There is one other Hon. Member who has indicated he wants to speak. I will, of course, give him that chance, as well as other Hon. Members, because I do not believe we want to delay this matter unduly. I believe we want to send it to a parliamentary committee as soon as possible.

[Translation]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I endorse the principle underlying the measure sponsored by my colleague, but still I do not want to take too much of the time of the House to comment on this. I might simply tell him that I have reservations about some of his comments, but the general principles deserve our support.

I also commend him, at least for his good intentions, and I hope that a parliamentary committee will make a detailed study of this matter while keeping in mind what I said earlier about the use of such information and the fact that innocent individuals should not have criminal records, particularly in cases where it is a simple matter of mistaken identity and the like, such as might be used against them in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for allowing me to comment on this matter.

[English]

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) spoke about the reference of the subject of this Bill to committee. I want to assure him that under this Government a lot more Private Members' Bills and motions will be referred to committee. I think he will find that our record far exceeds that of the previous Government in this area. We realize that they cannot all be referred to committee, but we will certainly do our best to accommodate private Members, their ideas and suggestions, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has been very forceful in making that point.

While I think it is admirable for the Member to attempt to improve our criminal justice system, I do see certain technical flaws in the proposed legislation. I must say that I see so many problems, and this is after a very brief perusal of the Bill, that I do not think it should be supported in its present state. The present Act is very short, only 3 sections. However, as short as it is, it is not terribly clear just what is to occur. I will amplify on that shortly, but I raise this point because I am convinced that the proposed changes cannot be understood, and may turn out to be quite difficult to implement, given the terseness of the Act to be modified. The heart of this Act as it is presently worded is Subsection 2(1) which permits subjecting individuals to "the measurements, processes and operations practised under the system for the identification of criminals commonly known as the Bertillon Signaletic System, or to any measurements, processes or operations sanctioned by the Governor in Council having the like object in view". While I understand that, in practice, what is commonly done is to fingerprint and photograph individuals, I cannot understand how that flows from what is set out in the statute. This may be an aside, but in this day and age when we think it is important to let citizens know what their rights and obligations are, I would think it would be more to the point to state simply and clearly what it is that citizens are subjected to. It would also help the police who have to act under this legislation. Indeed it could even help us in our tasks.

More to the point, I believe it is important to clarify this before any consideration could be given to the proposed new Subsection 2(4). This is so because whatever it is that might be required to be sealed, should an acquittal or discharge result, could easily have found its way into a variety of files and hands. Consequently, it would be imperative to know precisely what information must be sealed, so that whoever has the duty or responsibility to follow the mandate of the amended Act can fulfil this duty. As an example, I would point out that it is my understanding that when a police force obtains fingerprints they send them to Ottawa to see if a match can be made with fingerprints on file. If, after several months or years, a person is discharged or acquitted, would it not be difficult, time consuming and quite costly to trace this material and arrange for sealing and non-publication? If these prints were incorporated into a document or report, would it be sufficient to somehow sever them or would the entire report or document have to be sealed? This situation could easily arise where a fingerprint expert has analysed and compared prints. What would happen if the prints were introduced in evidence and became part of the court record?

I raise another possible problem, Mr. Speaker. The proposed amendment would require the sealing and non-publication for any purpose to anyone. This would apply to whatever it was that was taken pursuant to the Act. I will pass over the fact that the proposal omits to specify who is to have the responsibility to ensure sealing and non-access and how that person will know whether there has been an acquittal or discharge. I will ask simply, what it to happen to the materials that are sealed? By that I mean, what is the person who has sealed these records to do with them? Is that person required to keep them under seal forever? This is not a facetious question. At the moment, the Act entitles these measurements to be obtained pursuant to Subsection 2(3). Once taken, they can be published for purposes connected with the execution or administration of the law. The Act does not specify what is to happen to these records in the future. However, it is my understanding that most law enforcement agencies have developed policies to destroy this information as time goes by.

I would think that imposing a requirement to seal and not to publish for any purpose to anyone would inhibit, if not actually prohibit, a destruction scheme. Thus, I would think that if we were to deal with what is to happen to these records once taken, it would be necessary to develop a complete scheme of disposal. Otherwise, sealed records would accumulate over time and result in a serious administrative problem. I might also note that if electronic storage media are used or microfilm or micro fiche, technical problems relating to sealing would be easy to imagine.

There are sections of the Criminal Code which bring into play the provisions of the Identification of Criminals Act. Section 455.3(3) for instance, permits police to require individuals to present themselves for purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act when release on an appearance notice, promise to appear on recognizance. Should measurements be taken as a result of this provision, would they be covered by the proposed amendment? I do not know. I suggest the question needs to be examined, in the first place, as to whether they should be and, in the second place, whether they would be with the proposal as drafted.

The duty to seal and not publish would arise only if a person is acquitted or discharged with respect to the charge for which the measurements were taken. I see several problems with this. In the first place, the discharge or the acquittal do not cover all the dispositions available which fall short of a conviction. For instance, the Act might come into play before a charge is laid, and indeed a charge might never be laid. Even if a charge was laid it may be disposed of in any number of ways; a stay of proceedings, a withdrawal, or there may be a non-suit, et cetera. These possibilities have to be looked at so that the purpose of the proposed amendment could be achieved for all equally meritorious cases.

Second, as drafted, the amendment would apply to individuals who may be acquitted of the offence charged and for which the measurements were taken, but nevertheless still convicted of another very serious offence. This could occur, for instance, when a person was charged and tried for first degree murder, acquitted of that offence, but convicted on the lesser offence of second degree murder or manslaughter. Another way in which this could happen is if the person was "processed" with respect to a particular charge which was subsequently dropped in return for a guilty plea to a completely different matter or to a different charge arising out of the same affair. As proposed, the amendment would appear to require the sealing of information in these situations.

As to discharges, there is no suggestion at all that a person awarded either an absolute or a conditional discharge has been wrongfully charged. Indeed, a prerequisite to the awarding of a discharge under Section 662.1 of the Criminal Code is a finding of guilt by the judge. Furthermore, it should be noted that the conditional discharge may ultimately result in a conviction should the conditions of the consequent probation order be breached. Thus, to seal at the time of discharge would be premature. Secondly, the conditions of a probation order may be such that to ascertain a breach, identification material may be required. For instance, the probation order associated with a conditional discharge may require the individual to remain within the jurisdiction of the particular court. Proof that an individual left the jurisdiction of the court may only be possible on a comparison of fingerprint data. In any event, I would be loathe to suggest that a person who has already been leniently treated by being granted a discharge has a claim to say that records with regard to that charge should be sealed in order to protect that person's reputation. It may be that the term discharge refers not to an absolute or conditional discharge under Section 662.1, but to a discharge by magistrate after a preliminary hearing under Section 475.

I could repeat several of the points made previously about trial dispositions, but I will state simply that it sometimes happens that notwithstanding a discharge after a preliminary hearing, charges against a person are subsequently pursued. These are provisions in the Code to allow for this. For instance, Section 507(3) recognize that an indictment can be preferred with the consent of an appropriate judge or attorney general even if a preliminary inquiry has been held and the accused has been discharged. In short, Mr. Speaker, a discharge in this sense does not necessarily dispose of the matter, nor does it imply a wrongful charge.

I have mentioned briefly certain problems which might appear to some to be technical points. However, I suggest they are significant and that a more profound analysis may reveal even more. We do not often amend an Act, and I suggest that before we do we should be reasonably confident that the change will not create more problems than it solves. For this reason, I cannot support this Bill.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, some of the remarks of my good friend, the Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) really beg the question. The Bill before us has to do with those who are acquitted, period. If someone is charged with a criminal offence they are fingerprinted and all other identifying marks are noted. If the person is acquitted of that charge, then recharged with a lesser offence and convicted, they are still guilty of a criminal offence and, of course, their fingerprint records remain in place. The remarks of my friend are not appropriate in the context of what the sponsor of the Bill is attempting to do.

I suspect that my fingerprints are still on file from when I joined the Army in 1943. I do not know, and I do not particularly care. My fingerprints have been in places about which I would not necessarily want to brag, but I did not commit any crimes that I know of.

If someone is arrested, fingerprinted, charged, and acquitted, and if that person has an otherwise clean record, surely that person is entitled to have his or her record expunged, including the fingerprints. At least, as a minimum, there should be a waiting period of three or five years. If a person is never again charged of a criminal offence the record would be automatically locked up. Even more appropriately, if the person is arrested, charged, and found not guilty, the only way in which that record should be available to any police force or investigatory agency would be by getting an order from a judge to allow them to examine the record.

I think of people who travel from one country to another. If your name is on the computer list of the RCMP, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, the FBI, the CIA, Interpol, or even the KGB because you were charged with, although perhaps not convicted of, a criminal offence, you will have a problem moving from one part of the world to another. That has occurred in many instances.

I am reminded of the terrible tragedy at the Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto. The judge at the inquiry said unequivocally that the particular nurse in question was wrongfully charged and wrongfully tried. However, there is still a record with fingerprints and all. Surely that should not be allowed to haunt that innocent person for the rest of her days.

The Parliamentary Secretary spoke about how long these files should be kept. Of course they should not be kept forever. That also begs the question. The file will only be kept for as long as the person is alive. That is a long way from forever. That is another argument which was put forward by the Parliamentary Secretary which does not hold water.

My colleagues and I would be quite happy to have the subject matter of this Bill referred to the parliamentary committee. As far as we are concerned, it can be given that approval right now and we can all go home early.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, before I begin to discuss the Bill introduced by my colleague, it might be appropriate for me to take this opportunity on this rather special day to wish my colleagues who are present in the House a very happy St. Valentine's Day.

Mr. Benjamin: And love and kisses to you, too.

Mrs. Collins: In modern days we associate St. Valentine's Day with chocolates, perfume, and romantic love. The origins of this day had a lot more to do with compassion, caring, and understanding, qualities which we would all like to possess, not only in our private lives, but in our public lives as well. I suppose if I were to practise those qualities I might be persuaded to support my colleague's Bill. Although I would certainly like to commend my friend for his efforts to improve our criminal justice system, something I am certainly very concerned about, I cannot support it in its present form.

I can certainly sympathize with the Member's desire to ensure that the reputations of individuals wrongly charged with offences are fully protected, but I believe that the measures he is proposing would not have this effect. I agree with my colleague from Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) and fully support the contention that we must protect innocent citizens against the excesses of the state.

As I will point out later, should this Bill be passed, in some instances, although not in all, the proposals may lead to the very opposite. By that I mean that in some instances the sealing of records could prevent individuals from conclusively establishing their complete innocence with regard to an alleged offence in the past.

While I believe that the reputations of individuals charged with an offence should not suffer if no conviction results, I believe that the most effective way to vindicate reputations is through the public pronouncement of "not guilty" after an open and public trial. This is the principal mechanism in our system which is designed, not only to protect reputations, but to protect or guard against the deprivation of life, liberty, or the security of the person except in accordance with the principle of fundamental justice.

I emphasize the protection of reputation because, as can be seen from the explanatory note in my colleague's proposed Bill: "The purpose of this Bill is to protect the reputations of those who are wrongfully charged with offences for which they were subjected to the fingerprinting and police record process by prohibiting the publication of such records when an acquittal is entered or the charge is dropped".

For reasons that I hope to make clear, Mr. Speaker, if this Bill is passed it could lead to instances where the determination of the guilt or innocence of individuals would be impeded through the lack of access to this information. In these cases reputations may be affected through not being able to dispel the suspicion.

As we know, the purpose of the Identification of Criminals Act, is to empower the taking of appropriate identification of persons in lawful custody who are charged with or under conviction of an indictable offence. it is my understanding that the authority granted under this Act is invariably employed to subject individuals to fingerprinting and photographing prior to conviction. In other words, the Act is applied mainly to individuals being charged with offences when they have not yet been convicted. Indeed, because of the effect of certain Criminal Code sections, a person may be required to subject himself or herself for the purposes of this Act without either being in custody or charged with an indictable offence. This can happen through the effect of Section 453.3(3) of the Code which reads:

An Appearance Notice or Promise to Appear or a recognizance entered into before an Officer in Charge may, where the accused is alleged to have committed an indictable offence, require the accused to appear at the time and place stated therein for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act, and a person so appearing is deemed for the purposes only of that Act, to be in lawful custody charged with an indictable offence.

Mr. Benjamin: That is gobbledegook.

Mrs. Collins: That is the way the Criminal Code is stated.

This section may be used to require a person to appear before the charge is actually sworn before a Justice of the Peace. However, regardless of whether or not the identification measures are applied to a person charged and in custody or not yet formally charged and not in custody, the plain fact is that an individual at this stage of the proceedings is not yet a criminal.

Consequently, I suggest that if a desire to protect reputations of individuals who are never convicted of an offence is behind this Bill, it would be more to the point to amend Section 1 and have the titled changed. For instance, the Act could be called the Identification of Suspects Act. This would be more in keeping with a certain view of the presumption of innocence and of course would not have the effect of implying a prejudgment either of the matter under investigation or the individual in question.

I stated earlier that from the perspective of reputation, the concern of my colleague and certainly myself, the sealing of this information might work against an individual's interest. For example, I believe we are all culpable with respect to human memory, sometimes frail and sometimes imperfect, and someone might recollect the fact that someone whom they heard was accused of an offence was convicted of it. They may not have become aware of an acquittal. Should it become necessary, the existence of identification data may be able to link an individual with a record of acquittal, and thus an inaccurate impression could be corrected.

Another possible situation involves clearing suspects without personal police contact. Should an unknown perpetrator leave a fingerprint—I had a break-in in my office last week, with fingerprints—many individuals who might otherwise be suspected for a variety of reasons could be eliminated if identifying print data was available for comparison.

Finally, in rare instances, the existence of fingerprints and photographs may allow police to determine the actual culprit when, if this data is absent, suspicion and possible conviction of an innocent person might otherwise result. My colleague mentioned such a rare case in California that might occur.

Apart from protecting the innocent, the existence of identification data might lead to apprehending an otherwise undetectable culprit, thus adding to the protection of society in general and the vindication of the victim.

My colleagues have mentioned the concern about the use of the information. If one looks at the Act as it presently exists, it is very limited with respect to the way in which this information can be used. It can be used only in the execution or administration of the law. No case or instance has been brought to my attention where this has been abused.

Obviously, there is strong evidence to indicate that perhaps we should look at that particular section of the Act and amend it or make changes to ensure that this information is very limited in its use.

My colleague also suggested earlier that, despite the fact that he is suggesting in the Bill that records be sealed, there might be circumstances when they could be unsealed. It seems to me that he has almost argued against the case. We would be in a state of confusion as to when this information should be sealed or unsealed in the future.

For these reasons, I believe that this proposal would do little to clear reputations and may indeed contribute to problems of making it more difficult to establish innocence through acquittals, in some instances; in other instances, to make it difficult to eliminate suspects; and finally, by making it difficult to clear other suspects by establishing the guilty party.

Despite the sense of the day, of caring and compassion, I must advise my colleague that I am unable to support this Bill. However, I am sure that if there are circumstances whereby he could show that people are being truly injured, my colleagues and the Government will certainly be willing to look at it again in the future.

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise this afternoon on behalf of my constituents in Nepean-Carleton and share with Members of the House some thoughts on Bill C-260, an Act to amend the Identification of Criminals Act.

I listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) who proposed the Bill. The purpose of his initiative is to alter Subsection 2(3) of the Identification of Criminals Act in order to protect the reputations of those who are wrongfully charged with offences for which they were subjected to the fingerprinting and police records process.

He also intended to prohibit publication of such records when an acquittal is entered or the charges dropped.

The Subsection he wishes to change reads:

(3) The signaletic cards and other results thereof may be published for the purpose of affording information to officers and others engaged in the execution or administration of the law.

He was suggesting that this clause be replaced by one which reads:

(4) Where a person subjected to the measurements, processes and operations described in subsection (1) is discharged or is acquitted of the offence with which he was charged, the signaletic cards and other results of such measurements, processes and operations shall be sealed and shall not be published for any purpose to anyone.

I want to emphasize the word "seal". I was somewhat surprised during the Hon. Member's presentation on the Bill that he did not intend that the information be destroyed. I find it difficult to understand why one would want it sealed because one would anticipate that, if certain records were taken and the individual was found innocent of a charge, everything associated with it would be destroyed.

I believe all Members of the House want to compliment our colleague from the Western Arctic for bringing this matter to our attention so that we may think about it, analyse it, consider its merits, its shortcomings and limitations.

As we consider his proposed amendment we are compelled more than ever to be deeply concerned about information which is on file about us as individuals who may have access to it and the manner in which that information might be used at any time or under any circumstances.

We are all concerned about that broad issue in our society. We could have a tremendous debate, for instance, about the public awareness of something as simple as our SIN numbers.

There are many pros and cons about their use on credit cards and other such places as a means of referring back to a variety of central files, whether it would be income tax files or others.

The Bill may have a certain appeal, but before we move to its adoption or to send it to committee, perhaps there are several factors we ought to consider. Anyone exposed to the criminal system may find it disconcerting, and perhaps humiliating and degrading, to be fingerprinted, photographed and perhaps to have other measurements taken. However, I am not entirely sure that a decision to seal these results would change much of one's concerns about the segments of the Bill in question.

There are many Members in the House who are lawyers, but perhaps one does not have to be a lawyer to realize that in the field of criminal practice many individuals are wrongfully charged and, thankfully, found innocent in the course of time. I presume those are the kinds of persons to whom the Hon. Member for Western Arctic is referring. Beyond that, there are also individuals, young offenders or young persons with very clean records who might be found to have an involvement in a criminal offence and under the circumstances, so to speak, might be given a break. Police and prosecutors often exercise discretion in favour of an individual by not proceeding with a charge. In many instances the person benefits, learns a lesson and is not seen again in the criminal justice system. All of us are grateful for that human dimension in our criminal system, as I am sure is the Hon. Member for Western Arctic. Sometimes that person may reappear before the courts for a variety of reasons, not the least of which might be pertinent to a decision as to whether or not to exercise discretion again. Information on the person's background is therefore necessary. I believe this is reason enough not to support the proposal.

However, I should like to consider it further. I would suggest that even the most tender-hearted of my colleagues here this afternoon might wish to consider the possibility that the passage of the Bill might lead to harsher treatment of novice offenders. Such a provision might motivate both law enforcement officers and prosecutors to strive for convictions in order to establish a legitimate base to maintain records against individuals and to avoid the administrative difficulty or inconvenience of conforming to the Act as it might be amended. This is not to suggest that this would be invariably the case or inevitably the result. However, it might be sufficient to tip the scales in any number of doubtful cases. Thus, some individuals might be convicted of an offence where they would otherwise be let off with a warning. Is that a penalty which we are prepared to accept at this point in time?

Most of us, and I include myself in these comments, see the accumulation of personal information in institutional and Government data banks as disturbing and infringing upon our notions of privacy. We all realize, however, that there may be occasions and situations where it is quite proper that information on us or on others should be maintained. Earlier in the debate we heard the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) outline a situation in California where the availability of the fingerprint led to the identification of a notorious criminal for acts which were really a disgrace to mankind. It is no easy task to achieve the proper balance between the privacy interests of the individual citizen and the legitimate needs of society. How does one find that, particularly as these interests and needs bear on the investigation and enforcement of the criminal law?

There is an aspect which the Hon. Member for Western Arctic did not raise in his introduction. On the face of it, the proposed legislation would appear to be a straightforward and legitimate attempt to rebalance the interests and concerns which I raised a moment ago. I would like to point out to him that it may not necessarily be that simple. Also I would like to share a moment or two to review with him and others in the House the findings of the Law Reform Commission. Recently the commission examined this very subject and discussed it in its working paper No. 34. The commission recognized that there was a fear that such records may somehow fall into the wrong hands or be misused in some way which would prejudice innocent civilians in the pursuit of individuals or legitimate endeavours. It also noted that the very knowledge of the existence of such information might be a source of anguish and discomfort. I think the Hon. Member for Western Arctic would echo those sentiments. The commission appreciated or shared those concerns but it concluded on page Nos. 68 and 69 of its report:

> We are not persuaded that the retention of investigative test records or samples poses a threat to the rights of the individual which is of sufficient significance to require their destruction simply because the subject to whom they relate has been acquitted of, or not prosecuted with respect to, the offence charged. Rather, we are inclined to believe that the destruction of some records in these circumstances is more likely to hamper the legitimate function of the police in the detection of crime and the protection of society as a whole than to constitute a useful and valuable safeguard for the privacy of innocent individuals.

Fingerprint records, for example, might be crucial in the investigation of serious offences committed by persons who, for one reason or another, have escaped conviction for other offences of which they were in fact guilty. Where they have been reasonably and lawfully obtained, can it be said that their retention "unreasonably or arbitrarily interferes with individual rights and freedoms"?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the hour provided for the consideration of Private Member's Business has now expired. I am glad to see that Hon. Members showed so much compassion this afternoon, particularly on February 14. It being five o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 4, this House stands adjourned until Monday, February 24, 1986, at 11 o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 5.01 p.m.

PETITIONS

OPERATION OF MORGANTALER CLINIC IN TORONTO

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition on behalf of a large number of residents of the riding of Scarborough West who protest that the continued operation within the City of Toronto on the premises known as the Morgantaler clinic for the stated purpose of performing unlawful abortions is an affront to law-abiding citizens.

IMMIGRATION—FAMILY REUNIFICATION PROGRAM

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition on behalf of other residents of the constituency of Scarborough West recognizing that family reunion is an integral part of Canadian immigration policy. They call upon Members of Parliament to direct the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to amend the regulatory by-law in order to permit sons, daughters, brothers and sisters of petitioners and others, regardless of age or marital status, to immigrate under a family reunification program.

NATIONAL RAIL PASSENGER TRANSPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-97, an Act respecting rail passenger transportation.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions on the Order Paper be allowed to stand.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, as you know, a year ago I put Question No. 296 on the Order Paper. I have risen on a number of occasions asking when I might receive answers to that particular question.

I would like to put the question again to the Parliamentary Secretary in the spirit of parliamentary reform as we embark upon a new set of rules and Standing Orders. Specifically, I would like to know whether he intends to answer questions on the Order Paper more expeditiously and, in particular, when I might receive an answer to Question No. 296.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of parliamentary reform, I would advise the Hon. Member that there will be a changeover period while we work into the new rules. There is provision under the new rules that an answer may be asked for within 45 days.

If I am referring to the correct question, the Hon. Member will find that it has several parts to it and it is very difficult to obtain all of the answers to all of the parts. I think under the new rules the Hon. Member will have an opportunity to ask for a response from the Government. We have not got the changeover exactly tied down yet. I am sure that once we do, the Hon. Member will have recourse to that method.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary just when exactly the Government intends to respond to Question No. 319 standing in my name. This question refers to the Summit at Quebec City last March 17. Soon a year will have gone by. The question is a multi-part one relating to costs. As much as I recognize that it must be difficult to answer several questions of many parts, this one involves invoices of the event. One would think a year later that even the Government must have paid its bills.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I know that on several occasions the Hon. Member opposite has commented on the success of the Shamrock Summit. I know in asking these questions he does not in any way want to derogate from the new improved relations we have with the United States as a result of these initiatives and others taken by the Government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Shall all questions be allowed to stand.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PENSION BENEFITS STANDARDS ACT, 1985

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, February 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-90, an Act respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: Debate? Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, February 10, consideration of Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976, as reported (with amendments) from the legislative committee.

Mr. Terry Clifford (London-Middlesex) moved:

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 4

(a) by striking out lines 39 and 40 at page 2 in the English version and substituting the following therefor:

"Board and the disposition of the appeal, application or motion by the member shall be"

(b) by striking out line 44 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"respect of an appeal, application or motion made".

● (1110)

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I ask for consent to move a motion later today standing in the name of my colleague, the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). He is unable to be here today. I would like to have unanimous consent for that as I did when this Bill was previously considered.

Mr. Speaker: I have one motion of that kind and I am sure the House will grant that consent.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to make a few remarks on this amendment at report stage. Studying the Immigration Act was one of the priorities of the Government when it came to office. We increased the levels of immigration because of our concern that Canada be as open as possible. The Bill had a great deal of debate in the House at second reading and the committee gave long and careful consideration to it and to many amendments. We were assisted in this by Government and Opposition Members in an attempt to improve the Bill by making changes which would benefit Canada and which would give as fair a hearing as possible to people who wish to immigrate to Canada. I was not able to participate in the debate at second reading nor in the committee hearings. I am, therefore, pleased to have this opportunity to put a few words on the record with respect to this very important legislative initiative of the Government.

It is fair to say that we want to give every opportunity to people who immigrate to our country. We understand the problems in trying to come to a new land. Through this legislation and other initiatives we have endeavoured to bring the Immigration Act up to date. This is just one further method of doing that. I know that there have been several report stage amendments and I appreciate that there will be further debate on them.

I would like to take this opportunity to indicate exactly where the country is headed in terms of immigration. We have increased immigration levels in an effort to open our country to people from other lands. My Party believes that immigration is a source of strength for the country. By bringing in people from diverse cultures, we strengthen the culture of Canada.

Yesterday I attended a luncheon put on by the Greek community in Orillia in an effort to raise funds for the Greek Roman Catholic church. I ate some things I do not normally eat. They agreed with me, or I agreed with them. It was a time of happiness as we mixed together and enjoyed sharing the Greek culture.

I am pleased to have had this brief opportunity to put some remarks on the record which I have wanted to make for some time. I appreciate the latitude the Chair has given me in discussing this matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to the ruling by the Speaker, Motions Nos. 2 and 3 were to be grouped for debate. I will, therefore, put Motion No. 3. Does the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) have unanimous consent to move the motion for the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap)?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre) (for Mr. Heap) moved:

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 4 by adding immediately after line 42 at page 2 the following:

"(5) Subject to subsection (4) members appointed for two year terms may hear and determine an appeal or application made under all sections except 70 and 71."

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, you have clarified one point about which I was a bit concerned. I think that the amendment of the Member for London-Middlesex (Mr. Clifford), while useful, is minor. I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will indicate that the Government will accept that because it is a technical amendment which, from what I can see in the preceding part of that section, simply rounds it out. I do not think there is any question of principle. It is just a matter of drafting.

Motion No. 3, which stands in the name of my colleague, the New Democratic critic for immigration, the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), is a more fundamental issue of principle. I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary and the Government will be prepared to accept that amendment as well and will not give Members of the House instructions to vote it down.

The amendment recognizes that the membership in the Immigration Appeal Board has increased because of the Supreme Court ruling that there be an in-person hearing on questions of determination of refugee status. I think everyone acknowledges that there are real problems in having inexperienced members of the Immigration Appeal board making decisions which affect the very complex issue of whether or not a person is a convention refugee under the UN convention and protocol relating to refugees. The definition of "convention refugee" is as follows:

> Any person, who, by reason of a well-founded fear of persecution for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group or political opinion,
> (a) is outside the country of his nationality and is unable or, by reason of such fear, is unwilling to avail himself of the protection of that country, or
> (b) not having a country of nationality, is outside the country of his former habitual residence and is unable or, by reason of such fear, is unwilling to return to that country;

I have had experience with constituents and with friends who have been seeking refugee status. It is a process which I think everyone agrees has taken far too long. It is also an extraordinarily contentious process. I recall the cases of a number of people who came to this country from Latin America during the time of oppressive dictatorships there who sought refugee status. It seemed that the Canadian officials in those particular countries only mixed with the economic and political elite, such as their good friend, General Stroessner in Paraguay, or their good friend, the dictator of Brazil, or their good friend, General Pinochet. It seemed as though that was the approach taken by the External Affairs officials on the scene who were giving Canada advice on whether it was safe for people who sought refugee status to go back to their country. They offered advice as to whether or not it was reasonable for a person claiming refugee status to have fear of going back.

There is a movie showing in the city right now about one of the children who disappeared from Argentina. The parents had been killed and the child was given to a middle-class family. The wife was told not to ask any questions about where the baby came from. In fact, the baby had come from people who had been illegally and cruelly seized in the middle of the night, taken away, tortured and killed. God knows that happened. That happened to large numbers of people in Argentina.

Things are now changing in Latin America, but it is a fact of life that there are still certain countries in Latin America, including Chile, and some countries in Central America, where people quite properly fear for their lives because there is no reliable judicial process. There is a dictatorship or junta in charge. I regret to say the Americans often support corrupt dictatorships, as they did in Nicaragua and other countries. Nonetheless, however it occurs, when people come here they have a very legitimate concern about whether they can ever go back.

What is suggested in the Bill is that persons appointed for a short time to the Immigration Appeal Board would be able to make what are life or death determinations for refugees. It should be amended to ensure that applications under Section 70 and 71 are determined by experienced members of the Board, and not by people who are there for the short time in order to clean up the backlog.

We are quite in agreement with extra personnel being added, if not in the numbers proposed by the Government, to resolve the backlog in simpler and more straightforward areas such as sponsorship, but not when it comes to the question of refugee status. That is why I hope the Government is prepared to consider Amendment No. 3 very positively. I appeal to Members of the House from all Parties for their support. This is intended to be humanitarian, and I think it reflects the fact that the vast bulk of Canadians are prepared to reach out, as we did with the Ugandan Asians and th Vietnamese refugees, as well as others from Southeast Asia, to people who have become persecuted and have to seek refugee status.

I want to conclude by pointing out that I spent last week in Westminster learning how the Mother of Parliaments works. I was very impressed by the fact that on issues such as this, which are not fundamental to the survival of the Government, there was a good deal of independence demonstrated, not only by Government back-benchers but also by opposition back-benchers. Members are prepared to exercise independence on issues like this, and it frequently occurs that the Government cannot carry a particular clause or amendment. Our House has just begun today to work under new rules which are designed to encourage greater independence by Members. Therefore I urge Members to consider carefully this amendment which is designed to ensure that people who are subject to refugee determination get as good a hearing as possible from IAB members with enough experience to adequately make the determination. I hope the amendment passes.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill C-55 is to expand the Immigration Appeal Board and make it flexible so it can better manage its workload and, in particular, reduce a large and growing backlog of appeals. It is not designed to resolve the problems with Canada's refugee determination process. New legislation resulting from the report presented by Rabbi Plaut will speak to that issue, and that legislation can be expected in the near future. We are not here to change the mandate of the IAB, and for that reason I ask Members of the House to not approve the proposed amendment.

As to Motion No. 2, my hon. friend is correct that this results simply from a drafting error and does not introduce changes of a substantive nature. Rather, it corrects what must have been a technical oversight by ensuring that a decision by a single-member panel of the IAB is recognized as a decision of the Board. This I believe is consistent with the will of the legislative committee following its clause-by-clause deliberations, and I ask my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. Cassidy: May I have the consent of the House to ask the Hon. Member a brief question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to put a question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, if, as the Hon. Member says, this Bill does not concern itself with the question of the backlog of refugee claims, then why leave a loophole which permits members of the IAB to do precisely that? Why not accept the amendment and therefore ensure acceleration of the process along the lines proposed by Rabbi Plaut? Surely that is a more sensible approach, rather than leaving to the Government or the bureaucrats the option of perhaps delaying the legislation and using this instead.

Miss MacDonald: Why don't you follow developments?

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, we have a process in place and there is a backlog. For at least the last year we have been trying to give the Board enough resources to deal effectively with this backlog. We are not attempting to respond to the Plaut report in this legislation. Legislation dealing with the refugee determination process will come up later on. However, this legislation is absolutely essential to deal with the existing backlog.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I seek leave to ask a question of the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I listened with some interest and alarm to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) concerning immigration officers who serve overseas. He said quite pointedly that some of the decisions those officers were making were because they were friends of dictators of some of those countries. I take great exception to that. I have spent most of my time in this House in Opposition, so I am not defending the Department of Immigration because I sit on the Government side. I have worked with immigration officers for 10 years. I have always found them to be fair. They make decision on the basis of regulations, not on the basis of friendships, if there are any. I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary if he has seen any evidence to support the scurrilous allegations which the Hon. Member made?

Mr. Kempling: Stupid allegations.

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, I can only speak on the basis of my own experience, first as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, when I had an opportunity to travel extensively around the world and meet with these officials, and now as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In both cases I found them to be of the highest calibre. They are concerned Canadians. They translate this Government's policy. Most recently I had the opportunity of visiting and spending a number of days with a very senior officer in Hong Kong. These officers have a grasp of what we are trying to do. I did not want to think that the Hon. Member was casting aspersions and, therefore, hoped that was not what he meant. Canadians who work abroad do not reflect what has been suggested. In fact they reflect a degree of excellence in their transmission and translation of our policy.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Perhaps the Hon. Member should have directed the question to me rather than to the Parliamentary Secretary. He raised questions about comments I made which I believe to be well-founded, certainly back in the 1970s.

Miss MacDonald: You are always attacking public servants.

• (1130)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please. Does the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) wish unanimous consent to ask a question?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No, there is not unanimous consent.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak very briefly to Bill C-55 at report stage. As you know, the purpose of the Bill is to expand the Immigration Appeal Board. There is a tremendous backlog with respect to refugee claims in Canada at present. I understand the figure is in excess of 16,000 or 18,000.

An Hon. Member: Twenty thousand.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): I am told by the Minister that it is near 20,000. There is no question that that particular concern has to be addressed in a very forceful fashion. The purpose of this Bill is to expand the Board in order to hear more cases and get through the backlog. The Bill presumes what the reform of the refugee status determination process will be.

We have yet to come up with a solution to the problem, and as I understand it the committee is presently considering a possible solution to the problem. The Supreme Court stated on April 4 that instead of reading transcripts of interviews the Immigration Appeal Board must hear claimants before making a decision. The issue is how to deal with the backlog, and Bill C-55 purports to come up with a solution to dealing with it. It suggests that the Board be expanded and shall consist of not fewer than seven and not more than 50 members to be appointed by the Governor in Council.

As you know, we on this side of the House have always been concerned about Governor in Council appointments. The record of this particular Government with respect to patronage is unparalled, notwithstanding the many promises they made during the last election campaign.

You know that the moment the Conservative Party took over the reign of power they started immediately to appoint friends and relatives. I need not go through the list of patronage appointments that were made. This Government has a horrible record, notwithstanding the promises that were made during the last election campaign. I only say that in passing because that is not the main thrust of my submissions. I have a concern when a piece of legislation gives to the Governor in Council, that is the federal Cabinet, the authority to appoint individuals. I should point out that as with other pieces of legislation, the legislation that established the security intelligence service provided that the review board should be appointed by the Governor in Council—in other words, the Cabinet—in consultation with the Opposition. That was a Liberal piece of legislation passed in the last Parliament. The reason why those words were added "in consultation with the Opposition" was to ensure that those appointed to that particular body would be above suspicion, and that there would be no appearance at all of a conflict of interest and that these people are neutral.

I would hope in the future that legislation introduced by this Government will include the same words, "in consultation with the Opposition", so that we can be sure that an end is put to the patronage.

Having said that I want to speak to the motion before us moved by our friends to the left. I am speaking to Motion No. 3, which in part states:

> Subject to subsection (4) members appointed for two year terms may hear and determine an appeal or application made under all sections except 70 and 71.

The Member for Ottawa Centre indicated that the NDP are moving this particular amendment because when refugee status issues are determined one should have the more experienced Members determining that particular issue.

The concern I have with that is that this particular amendment would create different classes of individuals sitting on the Immigration Appeal Board. The committee in its wisdom amended the legislation to provide that there are, indeed, different classes of Members on the Immigration Appeal Board.

The committee moved that not more than 18 members may be appointed for terms exceeding two years, and a member appointed for a term not exceeding two years is only eligible for reappointment for one term not exceeding two years. So you have two different kinds of Immigration Appeal Board Members. You can have between seven and 50, but not more than 18 may be appointed for terms exceeding two years. Now, we do not know what the length of those terms would be. I suspect the reason this particular amendment was moved at committee was to ensure that once the backlog is worked through the system we will not be stuck with 50 people on the Immigration Appeal Board because we might not need them at that point in time. I suspect that is the reason this particular amendment was moved at committee, but I am not a member of that committee.

I would hope that the purpose of this amendment moved at committee was not to create two different classes of Immigration Appeal Board members, because we all expect that anyone appointed to the Immigration Appeal Board will be qualified, or will render him or herself an expert on the Act in order to adjudicate on matters under the Immigration Act.

I hope that the purpose behind that particular amendment was not to suggest that those who are appointed for more than two years—the full time Members—should know more than those appointed for less than two years. The net effect of this motion would be to do that, because we are going to have two different classes. You are suggesting that those who and are appointed for a term exceeding two years can address or determine all issues under the Immigration Act, so they are more qualified.Those that are there for less than two years are secondary Immigration Appeal Board Members and, therefore, cannot determine certain issues relating to the refugee status of a particular individual.

For those reasons I do not intend to support this particular amendment moved by the New Democratic Party. It is well meaning, as are most initiatives by the New Democratic Party. Their hearts are in the right place, it is just that they have not thought out the particulars or the ramifications of the particular action they are recommending. I commend the Member for having his heart in the right place, and for his concern about the freedom of those individuals who have come to Canada and have requested status. Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of parliamentary reform I would ask NDP members to refrain from heckling during my remarks.

An Hon. Member: Look who is talking.

Mr. Nunziata: We all see the light sooner or later, Mr. Cassidy. Some day you might even see the light.

An Hon. Member: Don't get carried away now.

In closing I might add a few general comments for the record on the issue of immigration. I represent a riding in Metropolitan Toronto that is very multicultural. One of the biggest issues facing my constituents is the whole immigration issue. I would say anywhere from 70 to 80 per cent of my constituents who come to my office are coming forward with concerns relating to immigration. In an effort to facilitate the immigration process and to reunite families we should open the doors to those who are seeking refuge in Canada, especially those being persecuted in foreign countries. We hope that good legislation is introduced. While we intend to support legislation that has that goal, we will try to perfect the legislation when it is introduced.

• (1140)

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, no matter how one defines the board members, their number or the period in which they will serve, it should be kept in mind that a serious problem has arisen in this country over the past year and a half with an incredible backlog of applicants. The Minister chuckles when I say that this problem started within the past year and a half, but the facts speak for themselves.

While it is true that part of the problem arose because of a judge's ruling, the Minister will have to agree that there is a backlog of 20,000 people. No matter how many people are on the board or how long their tenure, the intent of the legislation is to process an extra 100 a year.

Mr. Nunziata: Is that all?

Mr. Baker: One hundred a year. Furthermore, when one considers the numbers that are accumulating over a period of a year, this will not even take care of one-thirtieth of the new applicants. The Government is not addressing the problem when it simply rearranges the number of people on the board and their tenure of office. The Minister stated in western Canada some time ago that this Bill would, unfortunately, address a part of the problem that is affecting Canada today.

Mr. Nunziata: A small part.

Mr. Baker: The Hon. Member says a small part. It is a very miniscule part of the problem. The fact is that the problem is getting much worse.

The Minister knows that the real problem concerns applying the refugee status. I am familiar with these problems in my riding in relation to people who are claiming refugee status, and the backlog facing the Appeal Board. No matter how one looks at it, this Bill will not do anything to relieve the backlog of people who are awaiting some action on the part of the Government. They have not seen action and, as far as I am concerned, we will not see it as long as the present Government is in power.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Weiner) rising on a point of order? The House should remind the Hon. Member that he has already spoken to these motions. Is there unanimous consent to allow the Member to speak?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 2 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for London-Middlesex (Mr. Clifford). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Althouse: On division.

Motion No. 2 (Mr. Clifford) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 3 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. Heap) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) to move Motion No. 4 for the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap)?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre) (for Mr. Heap) moved:

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out line 11 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"opportunity to be heard and time to prepare the case".

He said: Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members know, until the recent Supreme Court decision, the consideration by the Immigration Appeal Board of refugee determination cases was only a matter considered on the basis of a written record. One reason there appeared to be bias is that the written record came from immigration or consular officers in the country of origin. These records were well prepared and put together in the appropriate bureaucratic manner.

Many of the refugee applicants, on the other hand, might have been ignorant of the law or had lawyers who did not understand the refugee determination process very well. Furthermore, they may have had a poor command of the English language and had no way of communicating their sense of fear and the experience they had undergone in their country. Let me give an example. I understand that the Immigration Appeal Board has accepted 13 refugees from Peru. However, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), was in Peru recently and spoke to an immigration officer there who said that there were no problems in his country and could not understand why refugee applications were being allowed here. While this may be hearsay, it does substantiate the kind of problems that exist.

The Minister must know from her days in opposition that people who suffered torture in Uruguay and Argentina were unable to persuade the Immigration Appeal Board of their case because they did not appear before that board.

The Minister has had the opportunity to be heard before the board while the applicant has not. This amendment would allow both sides an opportunity to appear. Furthermore, it also suggests that, bearing in mind the resources available to applicants, they should not be sent to a hearing immediately without time to prepare their case.

One could argue that this is a theoretical problem rather than a practical problem given the lengthy backlogs in refugee determination cases, if what the Hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner) said is correct. The delays are such that any applicant will have had time to prepare a case before appearing before the board. However, we believe that this protection should be contained in the legislation in the event there is a short circuit process by which applicants from certain countries are rushed before a board before they have had an opportunity to prepare their case.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) must be aware that there were approximately 15,000 outstanding refugee determination cases at the end of June, 1985. These involve refugees from countries where there is ample evidence for people to fear going back to their homelands. These countries include Guyana and Sri Lanka where there has been persecution of Tamils, including a massacre that took place in a remote village recently. Jamaica currently has no parliamentary opposition. We know the situation in Iran. El Salvador and the Dominican Republic are countries in Central America where death squads are known to exist and the concept of human rights as we understand it here is unknown to them. While cases from India may have to be considered individually, I know that my friends who are Sikhs believe they have ample reason for fear over the treatment of their fellow citizens, particularly when the Punjab was literally closed off to outside contacts for almost a year. I have already spoken of Chile. Refugee determination cases are being accepted in Peru. Do Hon. Members opposite really consider that there is no case for refugee status for someone who manages to flee Afghanistan, Poland, Bolivia or Uraguay? In almost all of these cases we are talking about these kinds of countries, and when it gets down to making the decisions on refugee determination the Immigration Appeal Board is almost forced to let those people in. In fact, I believe in the case of Poland and some of the East Bloc countries, it is now the policy of the Government that people seeking refugee status from those countries will not be sent back because it has been established that once a person applies for refugee status their status in their country of origin then becomes so tainted they cannot go back.

I raise these points because I really regret that the Government is not prepared to make necessary changes in the Bill now, pending the implementation of the Plaut report. I would like to say as well to the Hon. Minister—and she can perhaps join with me in lamenting the inconsistency of my colleagues to the right—that the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mr. Pépin) in committee was in fact in favour the amendment which has just been voted down by the Liberals in conjunction with the Conservatives. In other words, in committee the Liberals saw it our way and I guess they have now been persuaded by the eloquence of the Hon. Member for Dollard to change their position, or perhaps they were persuaded by the anathema which the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) displays to any proposals which come from the New Democratic Party, since he is one-time Member who some years ago abandoned ship.

To return to the question before you suggest that I do so, Mr. Speaker, I recognize that the purpose here is not so much a matter of broad principle as perhaps the previous amendment, Motion No. 3. The purpose here is just simply to ensure against the possibility—unlikely for now—that people seeking refugee status would not have adequate time to prepare their case. I would hope that the Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary will be prepared to accept this particular amendment.

I would also hope that given the very large numbers of refugee applicants who come from countries which are placid, peacefufl and so on, but from countries where all kinds of things are developing, that we not go on with this sham that people have to wait two or three years before they can get their determination heard. In the case where countries blow up, as the Philippines and Haiti have blown up, whether from the left or the right, we must recognize that from time to time it is impossible for people to go back home. When that is the case, let us deal with them on a broad basis rather than on a case-by-case basis.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, and my fellow Hon. Members, I move not to support the motion because the amendment as proposed is redundant and adds nothing to the text of the Bill. Any appeal to the Federal Court from an IAB decision would utilize the ground of lack of reasonable time to prepare if, indeed, none was given. It is one of the principles of fundamental justice that sufficient time be given to prepare one's case. For this reason, I find the amendment suggested by the Hon. Member redundant and I recommend that the House not support it.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, once again the heart of the New Democratic Party is in the right place but—

Mr. Cassidy: You can sit down now.

Mr. Nunziata: —if those Hon. Members gave the issue a bit of thought, they would conclude, as did the Parliamentary Secretaray, that the amendment is redundant. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), in support of Motion No. 4, talks about Haiti and Afghanistan and the issue of refugee status, but I would suggest he address himself to the motion before us. What is the motion? The motion purports to amend Clause 71 of the Bill, which reads as follows:

Where the Board receives an application referred to in subsection 70(2), it shall hold a hearing to determine the application, after having notified the applicant and the Minister of the time and place of the hearing, and shall afford the applicant and the Minister a reasonable opportunity to be heard.

The reason for this particular clause is the Supreme Court decision. What the New Democratic Party wants to do is to add the words "and time to prepare the case". Those Hon. members want the legislation to say that a hearing should be held and that sufficient time to prepare the case must be given to the particular appellant. As was pointed out, that is redundant. I would go so far as to say all of the words after the word "application" on line 7 are redundant.

The purpose of Clause 71 is to make it mandatory that a hearing be held in order to comply with the Supreme Court decision. We need not specify in legislation that notice must be given of the hearing or that the individuals involved, the appellant and the Minister, should have sufficient opportunity to prepare. As the Parliamentary secretary pointed out, the principles of natural justice would demand that one be given an opportunity to prepare.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the principles of natural justice require, first, that an individual be given notice—that is adequate notice of a particular hearing—and that an individual be given the right to be heard before a tribunal that is about to make a decision with respect to a particular issue. As well, reasons for the decision must be rendered by a particular board. To give someone sufficient opportunity to prepare almost goes without saying. If we give a person the right to a hearing and the right to be heard at a particular hearing, we must give the appellant sufficient opportunity to prepare for his case. The amendment is redundant.

I understand what the New Democratic Party is driving at. It is concerned that perhaps the board will require an individual to state his or her case on the spot, that a hearing will be called within a matter of hours and the person will not be given an opportunity to be heard. I happen to have a little more faith in the system. I believe the principles of natural justice would be adhered. to. If they were not, the appellant would have the opportunity to bring an action to ensure that he or she did have sufficient opportunity to prepare his or her case.

Mr. Cassidy: Would Hon. Members permit me to put a question to the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well.

Mr. Cassidy: I would ask the Hon. Member if he considers 15 days sufficient to prepare a case which deals with the nature and basis of the application for refugee status, and a statement of reasonable detail of the facts on which the application is based, and so on, that is, the nature of the case must be defined within 15 days? I understand that is the current prescribed period. So even if the applicant has a year thereafter to wait for the case and prepare for his or her argument, the written case which is submitted must be prepared within 15 days. Does the Hon. Member consider that to be adequate or does he not feel that some longer period might be more appropriate?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the amendment moved by the New Democratic Party simply says: "opportunity to be heard in time to prepare the case". It does not specify a particular period of time. I am sure the Hon. Member will agree that if we are going to prescribe time periods for preparation of cases, that should be done by regulation and not by amendment to the Act itself. If the Hon. Member feels that 15 days is not a sufficient period of time, then he should direct his efforts towards amending the regulations, making submissions to the Minister to expand that period of time in order to give an appellant sufficient opportunity to prepare the case.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 4 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion No. 4 (Mr. Heap) negatived.

• (1200)

Miss MacDonald moved that the Bill, as amended, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the third time, at the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions on this matter, although I would not want to suggest that they have been finalized, and the possibility of proceeding to third reading of Bill C-55 at this time in order to deal completely with the Bill. If that is acceptable to my colleagues in the Opposition, then I would ask that the Chair proceed to ask for unanimous consent to proceed to third reading.

Mr. Deans: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleagues, we are prepared to proceed as has been suggested.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the discussions have not yet been finalized. Perhaps we could come back to this matter today after some agreement has been reached.

Mr. Deans: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. This is an unusual thing to say. However, a good friend of Parliament, Tommy Douglas, died this morning. There will be some comments at two o'clock this afternoon, at which time I am sure all Hon. Members will want to be here to join in.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, we are all deeply saddened to learn of the passing of our former colleague, the former Leader of the New Democratic Party and the former leader of my province. As suggested by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), we will be paying tribute to this great Canadian at two o'clock, at which time appropriate words will be spoken with respect to his passing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There being no unanimous consent to proceed to third reading of Bill C-55, the House will proceed to the next Government Order.

CANADIAN ARSENALS LIMITED DIVESTITURE AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services) moved that Bill C-87, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the legislation authorizing the sale of Canadian Arsenals Limited has reached second reading stage. Hon. Members will know that the privatization committee, as authorized by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his Budget, has been reviewing a number of Crown corporations with a view to determining which of them no longer fulfil their public policy purpose. This task force, and all those associated with it, have concluded that Canadian Arsenals Limited, a company which has been in existence for a long period of time, no longer fulfills its public policy purpose. For this reason bids were secured from a large number of Canadian companies with a view to finalizing a sale, which is now under agreement with SNC Corporation of Montreal.

We consider that SNC is an appropriate purchaser of Canadian Arsenals Limited. It is a large, substantial and internationally renowned company with some 4,000 employees, 500 of whom will be the purchasers of the company under the agreement. The great majority of those 500—in excess of 95 per cent—are Canadian. Under the legislation introduced it is a prerequisite that at least 75 per cent of the company's shareholders be Canadian. SNC has fulfilled its obligation in this regard very well.

The purchase price is some $92.2 million, which the Government considers to be representative of the real worth of the company. It is an extremely fair price. Having regard to the $50 million book value of Canadian Arsenals Limited, we think the Government has performed its obligation well in securing a reasonable purchase price for this company. The final purchase price was only reached after a great deal of negotiation with some eight Canadian companies, a process which took place over a period of months. I am happy to report that all of the participants have indicated that they are satisfied that the procedures which we followed in the bidding process were fair and reasonable and that everyone had adequate opportunity to respond.

We wish to recognize that Canadian Arsenals Limited is the only supplier to the Government of Canada of large and medium-calibre ammunition. It is perhaps appropriate that SNC, which is at the present time one of the very few suppliers of small ammunition, is indeed the purchaser. It will now be in a position to manufacture a range of ammunition for all of the Government's requirements. It will be able to devote the necessary funds to research and development and to give to this particular undertaking the necessary expertise and management which is required to ensure that the company be competitive and able to enlarge its export activities. This was a facet of Canadian Arsenals Limited which was lacking. We see this as one of the great merits of the privatization of this particular company—indeed, of all companies which we are considering under our privatization scheme.

SNC was established in 1911. We know that it is a leading Canadian engineering, construction and manufacturing firm with activities throughout Canada. Its assets are in excess of $100 million, and its 1984 revenues exceeded $200 million. The inference we are able to draw from these statistics is that SNC has in place the financial capacity and the management expertise which will inevitably guarantee the performance of its undertaking to purchase Canadian Arsenals Limited. I must add that of the $92.2 million in cash being paid for the company $87.5 million is for the shares of Canadian Arsenals Limited and the remaining $4.7 million represents the assumption of an outstanding obligation of Canadian Arsenals Limited to the Government.

This Bill was first introduced in the House on December 4, 1985. Arrangements have been made with the present employees, who number approximately 800, for the portability and transfer of their pension plans. There will be no prejudice resulting to the employees in this regard. Only recently was Canadian Arsenals Limited able to secure a labour agreement for all of its employees. The purchaser has agreed to abide by the terms of that agreement until it is able to secure an independent and new agreement with the employees after the purchase. The point is that we are persuaded that the employees of Canadian Arsenals Limited are safe and that their positions are secure. The undertaking and indication of the company is that it will continue to employ the great majority if not all of the employees. As I have said, there are plans indicated for expansion and development for the two plants which the company now has in Quebec.

I think that the only outstanding difficulty is that management of both Canadian Arsenals Limited and SNC are, at the present time, very anxious to conclude the transaction, obviously for the benefit of the employees and for the company. I would ask Hon. Members to endorse the concept of this legislation and approve it in order to allow this to happen.

The legislation, of course, will provide that Canadian Arsenals Limited will no longer be an agency of the Crown and that this company will be absolutely independent. There are provisions in the agreement to ensure that the continuity of supply of ammunition is guaranteed to the Government on a first priority basis. There are safeguards there to ensure that the purchase price of ammunition to be purchased from time to time will be reasonable and there are certain tests and safeguards imposed in the agreement to allow the Government to satisfy itself that the purchase price for ammunition will be reasonable on a continuing basis and that the Government will be protected in that regard.

I would be prepared to suggest that this particular legislation has proceeded without hitch and without adverse comment. I can only conclude that Canadians are universally satisfied that this is a right and proper decision and is in the best interests of Canada and the employees. Without further word, I commend this legislation to Hon. Members of this honourable House.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to respond to the initiative by the Minister on behalf of our caucus. Perhaps the first thing I should say is that it is not totally right to assume as the Minister has, that the fact that this particular issue has not made national headlines like de Havilland means that everyone approves of it. It would be somewhat exaggerated to think that—

Mr. Nunziata: Presumptuous.

Mr. Boudria: I know that the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) would not want to inadvertently, of course, mislead this honourable House and that at the first opportunity he will want to correct that false impression he has created.

Of course this issue has not come to the attention of the Canadian public as much as the sale of de Havilland. The sales of both companies were announced at the same time. One of the deals was just awful, so obviously this awful deal captured a great deal of the attention of the public of Canada. Therefore, the sale of the other company which was smaller was not discussed as thoroughly as the main sale which occurred at that particular time—the sale of de Havilland. The sale of de Havilland was particularly controversial and overshadowed the attempt of the Government to sell Canadian Arsenals Limited.

The Minister indicated in his remarks that Canadian Arsenals Limited was one of those companies which, in his view, no longer fulfilled a public policy purpose. My hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins), will probably be making some remarks later in so far as the policy issue of armaments and security of supply to the Canadian military is concerned. That is his area of expertise as our Party's critic for national defence.

In so far as I am concerned, I intend to make my brief remarks on the matter of the selling of the Crown corporation, the price the Government received and the entire management aspect. I will leave the policy initiative issues to one of my colleagues who will speak later.

The first thing we should know is that, although the Minister has assured us that there has been an agreement with the employees and that the employees were seemingly satisfied with the way this whole sale will take place, this does not at all reflect the conversations I have had with the people from the Public Service Alliance of Canada. As a matter of fact, those people were particularly critical of the Government for not consulting them previously and for not having been given any information concerning the portability and transfer of their pension plan. They have very little information about how the SNC pension plan works. Apparently they have not been provided with enough information on that. As well, they have grave concerns over the crossover to this new company. Therefore, I want to be on record as stating that at the time this legislaiton appears before the legislative committee we would like to have before us representatives from the Public Service Alliance. We would like them to state their case and enlighten Hon. Members of the House so that we can be assured that jobs will be protected, that pension funds will be transferred and that the total package of benefits the employees enjoy at the present time will be fully transferred the way the Minister says they will be.

Perhaps I should deal with some of the history of Canadian Arsenals Limited. As we know, Canadian Arsenals Limited was established in 1945 and it manufactures small and medium ammunitions. It operates a plant in Ville Le Gardeur near Montreal. There are presently 750 employees there. There is another plant in St. Augustin near Quebec City employing some 50 employees. We are not talking about a very small company, we are talking about a company that is significant in terms of jobs and what it has to offer. Were it not for the fact that the sale of this company happened at the same time as the sale of de Havilland, I have the distinct feeling that we would have heard a lot more about the proposed disposal of Canadian Arsenals Limited.

In the mid-1960s, the Government of the day in its wisdom had determined that a small portion of the ammunitions produced at that time by Canadian Arsenals Limited did not fulfil a public mandate and it was transferred over to the private sector. However, it was still the view of the Government that the rest of the operations of the corporation indeed were significant in terms of fulfilling a public policy. That was reflected in Government investments in Canadian Arsenals over recent years.

I would like to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the Canadian Arsenals Limited summary of corporate plan. All Members of the House have been provided with this, and I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you have read your copy thoroughly, as I know you always do. However, in the unlikely event that some Hon. Members may not have read the whole thing, I would like to bring some items to their attention.

According to this Government document, in 1976 the Minister of Supply and Services confirmed the corporation's mandate. Ten years ago, the importance of this corporation was determined by the Minister of the day. A reorganization was ordered and revised Letters Patent were issued in order to widen the industrial base to include related military products, and that is what is indicated by the Government's report.

Substantial Government investments have gone into this company, Mr. Speaker. Let me outline a few to you: $3.6 million worth of modernization and $3.7 million for the recovery of operating deficits, a total of $7.3 million to be spent between 1977 and 1982. I know the Parliamentary Secretary will say that not all of those funds were used. He is quite correct. Not all those funds were required to modernize Canadian Arsenals Limited. Of course, the magnitude of the funds offered by the Government was to ensure viability and a good profitable operation. We know there was a definite commitment.

Let me read a little further for your information, Mr. Speaker. In 1982, the corporation took title to the moveable and immoveable assets located at Ville Le Gardeur, Quebec, the replacement cost of which was set at $25 million. That was in 1982, Mr. Speaker. In 1984, the company completed the installation of a new cartridge case manufacturing facility at St.-Augustin located near Quebec City at a cost of $13 million. Again, these are taxpayers' dollars. Some were profits generated by Canadian Arsenals Limited rather than an injection of taxpayers' funds per se. Because this is a Crown corporation, one can always argue that all dollars are taxpayers' dollars. Since 1978 the profits have increased tremendously and now total some $25 million. The shareholders equity as of March 31, 1984, was $44 million compared to a deficit of $1.2 million in 1977.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure you have grasped this by now, this indeed has turned out to be a very profitable Crown corporation.

I want to briefly draw a few more things to your attention, because I recognize that many other Members want to speak to this important issue of the proposed divestiture of Canadian Arsenals by the Government.

First, it is proposed that the company be sold to the SNC group, a well known engineering firm. None of the remarks I will be making today, nor those of most of my colleagues, will have anything to do with lack of confidence toward the new company. We know that SNC is a company with a world-wide reputation. It is not really a question of how well SNC can run the company. It has a reputation of being good at the things it does. That is not an issue here. What is an issue is not the credibility of SNC but the credibility of the Tories. I want you to know that, Mr. Speaker, and I put that in the forceful and non-partisan way that I always try to follow.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: The Government in its attempt to sell this company decided to look for bids; it decided that someone should make an appraisal and an evaluation of the worth of the company. The Government apparently employed the services of the consulting firm, a very reputable one, Arthur Andersen and Associates. This consulting firm, we are told, issued a report. I put all of this in a hypothetical sense because the Government refuses to share any of the information with us. The Government says that the report states the company is worth somewhere between $60 million and $80 million.

Mr. Valcourt: You wouldn't know.

Mr. Boudria: We do not know whether it is worth that. The Member across who was just heckling obviously knows far less.

The Conservative Government in its usual attempt at keeping everything secret refuses to table the report by Arthur Andersen and Associates in this House. You heard the eloquence of the Minister a little earlier when telling us about the great merits of this Bill, Mr. Speaker. If he is so convinced this is the right move, why does he not share the report with us? Do you know who paid for the report, Mr. Speaker? The taxpayers. Our constituents paid for this evaluation by Arthur Andersen. My constituents have asked that I see that report. The Government refuses to share it.

Mr. Nunziata: What is the Government hiding?

Mr. Boudria: A very good point has been made by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata). He usually makes good points. He asks, what does the Government have to hide? I ask Conservative Members will the Government not table a copy of the Arthur Andersen report stating the value of the company?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What did you pay for PetroFina?

Mr. Boudria: We have a sign of life from the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner). It is nice to hear that, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: I am sure the people of Rockcliffe and Manor Park are wondering whether their parkland will be disposed of and whether that Member will be reacting today at the appropriate time in the House on their behalf.

We are talking about divestiture of the holdings of the Crown and there is a good local issue. I am glad to see the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton has an interest in the divestiture of Crown holdings. We certainly hope that at the appropriate time later today he comes back to life once more, as he has been known to do once or twice, and speak forcefully and eloquently for the people of Ottawa-Carleton.

Mr. Nunziata: That is asking a lot.

Mr. Boudria: I shall not hold my breath.

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): Please do.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: I shall not hold my breath because the Member is not likely to do that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: I seem to have done the impossible. I have actually awakened Tories.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: I asked the Minister of Supply and Services about getting a copy of the Arthur Andersen report. I would like to read to you what the Minister wrote in reply. I will do this very briefly. On January 20, I received the following:

Dear Don:

Further to my Legislative Assistant's discussion with you last week, I must once again advise you that I cannot provide you with a copy of the Arthur Andersen Report. However, I can confirm that the Arthur Andersen Company carried out a valuation study of CAL prior to commencement of the bidding and negotiation process and estimated that the value range for CAL was $80 to $98 million.

That is very interesting seeing that the Minister had said before that the company was worth between $60 million and $80 million. Maybe, if some day we can see that report, we will all be able to judge just what it is Arthur Andersen said.

Let me continue with the letter:

The total price offered by SNC for CAL was $92,224,941 and was made up of the following: —$87,500,000 for the purchase of shares; $4,724,541 for the debt owed to the Government.

SNC have made a deposit of 5 per cent on $4,611,247 with the balance payable on closing the sale.

Of course I am sure you have noted by now that the Minister answered all kinds of questions that I did not ask, but refused to share the information that I did ask for. Let me continue:

In accordance with government policy, the downpayment will bear interest from the date of deposit to the closing date.

With respect to the question of employee pension benefits, I am pleased to inform you that the Agreement of Purchase and Sale requires SNC to enter into a reciprocal pension transfer agreement with the Government of Canada.

I would like to know where that agreement is. It has not been tabled with us. I have not been provided with a copy of this second agreement. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary has it with him and would be willing to share it with us. We still do not know about that agreement. That is two documents we do not have. It continues:

In addition, SNC has agreed to honour the existing collective agreement until such time as a new revised agreement is negotiated after closing. Agreement was reached on the present collective agreement between the employees and CAL in late 1985.

I am sure you have noticed by now, Mr. Speaker, that that does not coincide with what I have been told. It concludes: "Yours sincerely, Stewart McInnis".

That is the information that was provided to me by the Minister. The Minister has agreed to share the report with me so that I can look at it but not discuss it publicly. Obviously I do not want that. I was elected by the public, the people of my riding, as the Minister was by the people of his riding. If there is any information to be shared, I do not want it for myself. Yes, I voted for myself, but that is not the reason I am here. I am here because the people of my riding sent me here. They want that information.

Mr. Nunziata: They have a right to know.

Mr. Boudria: That is why I am asking for the information. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston points out very correctly and eloquently that the people indeed have a right to know. It is not only a matter of whether or not this would be a good thing. Of course it would be a good thing, but the appropriate and correct thing for the Government to do is to share with us the Arthur Andersen report. Perhaps the Minister or his Parliamentary Secretary can indicate later why he refuses to share that report with us. This is a point of contention with me, Mr. Speaker, as much as I try to be objective in this particular issue.

Let us review the process of the sale of Canadian Arsenals. I would like the Minister to tell us how the negotiations commenced with the bidders. I was informed that the process was very informal in that it was mostly word of mouth between officials of the Department and potentially interested customers who were contacted. I hope that there was a more formal process which took place and that the information I received is not correct. However, I would like the Minister to elaborate on that later because we want to be sure that all individuals and companies concerned had the opportunity to bid on this company.

We also want to know whether they were all given the same set of written criteria. That is important as well. We were informed that some time after the process started some of the people who were in the process of bidding were notified that price would be the sole criterion. One could argue the merits of using that for the criterion for disposing of the company, as we could argue the merits of disposing of the company at all. The point is really whether all bidders were provided with that information from the beginning and, if the rules were changed midway, whether all bidders were notified. The other question is whether everyone was invited to bid on the disposal of this company.

There are various issues on which I will be looking for answers from the Minister at the parliamentary committee. I also want to know whether there were lobbying firms involved in this process. I hope that the Minister pays close attention to this particular point, as he always does, because this is very important. If there were lobbying firms involved, have any of the employees of these lobbying firms recently been employees of either Canadian Arsenals or the Department of Supply and Services? I would really like to have that information. I know the Parliamentary Secretary is noting that now. I do not expect an immediate response because, obviously, this will require some research as it is rather complicated. Perhaps we could receive a response to that at the parliamentary committee.

This is important, not only for the discussion at hand, but since we are in the process of reviewing all lobbying activity by various firms on behalf of various groups. I am the Opposition critic in the area of lobbying, so I am very interested in that process.

I think I should speak briefly about the profitability of Canadian Arsenals Limited. On December 2, 1985, the Minister of Supply and Services and his colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) announced the policy of the proposed divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited. One of the first things I did at that time was to ask for a copy of the last annual report of Canadian Arsenals Limited in order to go through it with the assistance of other people to determine how viable this company was, whether it was in fact making money, and what the impact would be upon the group which proposed to purchase it. I will attempt to answer some of these questions right now, Mr. Speaker, because I am sure you really want to know about this.

First, the profits of Canadian Arsenals Limited have gone up considerably over recent years. I draw your attention to page 6 of the annual report, which I am sure you have had ample opportunity to read. Page 6 of the report talks about the profits and losses of that company in thousands of dollars. In 1978 the company made $8.129 million worth of sales. Unfortunately, it had a loss in that year of $1.157 million. As the years went on the picture changed tremendously. In 1979 the sales of Canadian Arsenals were $14.159 million and there was a profit of $181,000. In 1980 sales were $30 million and the profit was $2 million. In 1981 sales were $45 million and the profit was $3 million. In 1982 sales were $57 million and the profit was $5 million. You see, Mr. Speaker, it is starting to become quite profitable at this point. In 1983 there were $87 million worth of sales and nearly $7 million of profit. In 1984 there were $97 million of sales and $8.5 million of profit. In 1985 there were $103 million of sales and $11.298 million of profit.

That is not so bad. The Government certainly cannot use the excuse for selling this company that it used in the case of de Havilland, notwithstanding that that particular excuse on its part was not very valid. The Government said it wanted to sell de Havilland because it was not making money. We knew, of course, that it was just on the threshold of making profits so that was not exactly an accurate statement by the Tories across the way. However, Tories never win prizes for being accurate, as I am sure you know, Mr. Speaker. This particular company is quite profitable, as I think I have demonstrated over the last couple of minutes. I highly recommend to Hon. Members across the way the 39th Annual Report of the Canadian Arsenals Company.

I spoke to you about sales and profits, Mr. Speaker. However, that is not the sole measure of the profitability of a company. I am sure that what you want to know at this point is the rate of return on equity. That is the important part. The Minister said that the company's equity is some $52.9 million. He aslo said we are proposing to sell the company for some $92 million. I guess he was trying to tell us that that made it a good deal. Obviously you recognize that if people sold their businesses for book value they would not be very good business people. Businesses are usually worth a lot more than book value. The rate of return on equity of this company in 1981-82 was 15.5 per cent. I am sure you are probably thinking that this is not bad.

[Translation]

But let me continue: in 1982-83, 18.1 per cent; in 1983-84, 19.4 per cent; and in 1984-85, 21.4 per cent.

[English]

So you see that this is indeed quite a profitable operation.

It is not the wish of the Canadian electorate to give away a licence to print money in the form of a company with a rate of return on equity of 21.4 per cent. At that, the price we are selling it for is totally unsubstantiated by anyone except the Minister in a letter he wrote to me. I know the Minister is a very honest person but, as the Hon. Member for York South-Weston said, the people of Canada clearly have the right to know what is contained in the Arthur Andersen Report. Even if the information the Minister gave us is correct, and we do not know that, did the report also say that the company is worth the amount they said it was worth? That figure was between $80 million and $98 million. Did it say it was worth $80 million if there were no guaranteed sales to Government? Did it say it was worth $98 million if there were? We do not know, we have not seen the report. If it is worth $98 million, why are we selling it for $92 million? Who is going to pay the taxpayers of Canada the other $6 million? That is their money, they have the right to find out. So I ask the Minister again, why will he not share that report with this House?

I have gone on for a few minutes longer than I thought I would but I have a few more points I want to make. I want to read from an article by James Bagnall in The Financial Post of December 14, 1985. It says:

> Canada has never been one of the world's heavyweights in the making of ammunition.
> Yet Montreal's diversified engineering outfit, the SNC Group, has just received a tough-to-fulfill mandate to turn Canada into a major munitions exporter.

I am sure that you vividly recall what the Minister said about this deal. He said it would enable further export activities involving armaments. That is a big concern for me. Are we proposing to divest ourselves of Canadian Arsenals because we want to become a world-wide exporter of armaments? Is that what we are trying to achieve? If it is, I have some concern.

I read in the newspaper the other day that there seems to be division within Cabinet on whether to permit the Thyssen company of West Germany to make arms in this country for export to countries which are in troubled circumstances at the present time. Are we privatizing another firm for the purpose of sending it in that direction? If so, then I am really worried about the policy initiatives which are being espoused in this venture.

To quote further from The Financial Post article, and here they are talking about IVI, another company owned by the SNC Group:

> The fact that there is no competition between the two firms is not an accident. IVI was part of Canadian Arsenals until the mid-1960s, when it was sold by the government as part of a strategy to privatize as much of CAL's assets as possible. That's when the companies were assigned different segments of the munitions market.

I said earlier that those parts which did not fulfil a policy initiative in the munitions market at that point were divested, although this was mainly in the area of small armaments. However, when it comes to the heavier munitions the Government felt it was better to have that remain in the public sector, as it did until this point. I must say that I am very concerned if the direction which the Government wants to give the SNC or anyone else is that of getting further into arms exports to other countries. Canada is quite well-known as a peace-loving nation, a country which traditionally stays out of conflicts. We have not in the past been a vulture trying to capitalize on unfortunate events which occur in other countries. Therefore I hope that is not the direction we are trying to give anyone at this point.

A little earlier I was talking about the profitability of this Crown corporation. I now want to share with you some of the projected profits for the company as indicated in the annual report. I will share some of this with you very briefly because I would not want you to become impatient with me. However, this is very important as I am sure you recognize.

> The corporation has entered into an agreement with chartered banks' leasing corporation to lease production machinery, to a total cost of $11 million, upon terms that transfer substantially all benefits and risks of ownership to the corporation. It has concurrently entered into another agreement whereby it has been appointed as an agent of the lessor to purchase the said machinery against reimbursement of moneys disbursed. As at March 31, 1985, amounts so advanced to the corporation total $10,109,599 . . . including $760,112 for accrued interest . . . which, when added to future purchases shall be converted into capital leases specifying repayment terms.

So you see what we are hearing again is that in fact this company here has in the past had a very good record of not only producing but of improvement to that same company, or to the capital assets of the company, in order to ensure that it remained a good company and that it remained profitable for the taxpayers of Canada while it was a Crown corporation, with the majority of the sales being to the Government of Canada itself for us to use as a peaceful role that we have as a nation, but not to make it a major exporter of armaments to other countries. So again, very briefly, those are some of the concerns I have as a Member of this House and as a critic for our Party. In closing I will ask, through you, that the Minister provide to this House the documentation that is missing.

[Translation]

We need the assessment by the Arthur Anderson firm, to know how much the company's assets are worth and what the company is worth to Canadian taxpayers. We also need to see those so-called arrangements made with company employees, which because we never saw since the Government refused to give us all the requisite information. Finally, Mr. Speaker, the employees' unions have said that up to now they were not aware of any arrangements and were not duly informed of their rights and the transfers.

[English]

I notice you are telling me that my time has expired, Mr. Speaker. I did have a few other remarks to make, but unfortunately I will have to abide by your wishes.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but agree with the previous speaker in suggesting that although this particular divestiture of a Crown corporation by the Government has not created a great deal of public interest, that had to do mostly with the timing of the announcement rather than the concern, because there is a great deal of concern about this whole idea of the divestiture of Crown corporations.

The history of Crown corporations in Canada—I suppose in the world—is very interesting because in every case it is based on the need for development in countries. It is very interesting to note that the first probable Crown corporation, if we could call it that in Canada, was the Board of Works, which eventually became the Department of Public Works, and is now part of the Government. Other pre-Confederation corporations were the Harbours Board and the Nova Scotia Railway Company, companies that were established for particular reasons.

Since Confederation we have gone through a whole series of developments which were based on putting Crown corporations in key positions, as far as the economy was concerned. I suppose the first one after Confederation of major import was the CNR. The last one was probably Petro-Canada. We have gone through that series of Crown corporations being used as key developers in the economy of the country.

We could probably divide the development of the country into a series of areas or of times when particular directions of development were needed or wanted. Consequently the Government used Crown corporations as instruments of public policy; used them to develop the economy of the country by putting those Crown corporations in place. The biggest and the most common area of Crown corporation development was in transportation, the CNR, the Nova Scotia Railway Company and a series of other companies which were given support and contributed a considerable amount to the development of the country.

That purpose of developing the infrastructure of the country, and using Crown corporations to do so has been a long tradition as far as Canada is concerned. In fact in 1979 when a review was done of the assets of crown corporations it was found that 49 per cent of the provincial Government in Canada—almost half of the assets of the provincial Governments in Canada—were held in the form of Crown corporations. Even within the federal Government 33 per cent of the assets of the federal Government are held in Crown corporations.

If it is now the policy of the Government to try and get rid of the deficit by selling these assets, we all know that the first sign of bankruptcy, as far as business is concerned, is when they start putting their assets up for sale. There has to be some good reason for the divestiture of any Crown corporation. I would question, along with many people of Canada, whether the ideological reasons which are being expressed by this Government are good enough for the divestiture of Crown corporations.

If we were to divide the country into certain periods from the time of Confederation until now, relative to the development of Crown corporations, we would probably say that first period was the development of transportation. At that time we had the CNR, Trans-Canada Airlines and later Air Canada. Those were established for a particular purpose. If they had not been, the development of Canada would have been slowed down considerably. We can say that in that first period of time Crown corporations were used well for the development of Canada.

I am not convinced the reasons that are being given now for the divestiture of some of the Crown corporations are based on any policy which has been well thought out, having to do with the development of Canada and the continued prosperity of Canada. If the ideology of the Party is being used as the basis for divestiture it is not good enough. The effect on the economy of Canada must be the basic concern as far as these divestitures are concerned.

The war propagated a large number of Crown corporations. Some 30 Crown corporations were developed during the war, again for very good reasons. Most of those Crown corporations were disbanded after the war. They were used to expedite the war effort and, except for a few like the Eldorada Mining Corporation, Palimar, which became Polysar I think later, and even the one we were talking about today, Canadian Arsenals, which are offshoots of the Crown corporations that were put in place during the war, they did the job at that time and then were disbanded. What we have in Canadian Arsenals is somewhat of a hold-over from that particular time.

The next period of time from the war—Yes, Mr. Speaker, I could come back at three o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

THE LATE HONOURABLE T. C. DOUGLAS

TRIBUTES TO FORMER MEMBER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): "I am an ordinary guy who has done the best he can to promote the cause in which you and I believe". So said Tommy Douglas a short time ago.

This morning, at 10:45, Tommy Douglas died. He was a great man, one of those truly rare individuals who actually changed the course of history. He was a man whose life and work made Canada a better nation for us all.

Tommy Douglas was a Privy Councillor, a member of the Order of Canada and a Member of this House for 26 years; from 1935 to 1944 and from 1961 to 1979. In between he was Premier of Saskatchewan for 17 years.

As Premier of that province he and his Government broke new ground in almost every domain of social and economic activity. It was his Government that introduced the first Bill of Rights in Canada. It was his Government that brought electrification throughout rural Saskatchewan. This is something which he always proudly remembered and a fact that many people in Saskatchewan have recalled with a great deal of affection and appreciation. It was his Government that brought in the first piece of legislation that gave unrestrictive collective bargaining rights to people who work in the public sector in Canada. It was his Government that brought in the first truly modern labour legislation that treated working men and women as positive members of their community rather than simply people who had to be dealt with in some way.

Perhaps most important, in terms of its impact on our nation, it was his Government that brought in medicare to the Province of Saskatchewan, one part of our immense nation. It was an act that was soon picked up by other governments and became part of our national legislative heritage.

As a Member of the House of Commons, Tommy Douglas was a defender of civil liberties. Members who were with us at that time will recall that he voted against the War Measures Act which he saw, along with others at the time, as an unnecessary infringement on civil liberties. He fought relentlessly against the horrific build-up of nuclear weapons by the super powers on both sides of the global conflict.

He was a determined champion of Canadian autonomy in every field of human endeavour.

[Translation]

There will be other opportunities to comment on his impressive achievements as a legislator.

Today, I would like to stress his qualities as a politician, qualities which have had an enormous impact on so many of us.

[English]

I think first of his great capacity for combining passion and reason. Tommy demonstrated throughout his life that for our movement, these two must coexist. He knew it was not enough to make criticism of the society of the day. That can be easily done by anyone. "Our obligation", he said time and time again, "is to create alternatives which can command the support of the intellect". But in giving expression to this view, it is also totally appropriate to do so with passion. Tommy's whole life was an embodiment of the truth that reason and passion are far from contradictory, that in a political life seriously undertaken, they go hand in hand.

● (1405)

Over the years, Canadian men and women appreciated Tommy's superb sense of humour. More than any other politician of his generation, he brought to politics a sense of fun and the ability to laugh at himself. He was not sarcastic, because sarcasm always implies a desire to hurt. In fact, he had a very humorous outlook on life which attracted people instead of putting them off.

[English]

Most of all, when I think of Tommy, and my personal encounters with him, and I am sure this is true for many, many other Canadians, I think of his almost unlimited capacity for generating a sense of hope about the future. He never despaired no matter what the obstacle. That exuberant and hopeful spirit, based on the deep conviction that society should be organized for the benefit of all of the people and not for the privileged few, is what took him through all of the obstacles in his long and remarkable life. That is his legacy to us today.

Our deepest sympathies go to his wife, Irma, his daughters, Shirley and Joan, and to his grandchildren. Canadians all across our land join them in their loss of a truly great man.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, no one could have put it better than the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) who knew Tommy Douglas so well and who carries on the leadership of his Party. Many of us in the House of Commons had the honour of knowing Tommy Douglas well. I guess the younger Members of the House of Commons particularly considered him to be a historic Canadian figure going authentically to the grassroots of our country, particularly the prairies and western Canada.

As one of the signatories to the Regina Manifesto, he was the first head of a Social Democratic Government in North America and, as the Hon. Member for Oshawa has reminded us, he introduced medicare into this continent. He was a living legend to the people of Saskatchewan. At one stage in his parliamentary career, he represented British Columbia with great distinction as a leader of a national Party in that province. As I look at Stanley Knowles, I am reminded that both he and Tommy Douglas studied together at Brandon College for the ministry and his great Christian commitment to the public good and public order followed him throughout his political career.

I had the privilege of attending the founding convention of the New Democratic Party as an observer in 1961 when Mr. Douglas and Senator Argue fought it out. I remember the great speech he made then. I felt he incarnated that unique tradition in Canadian political life beginning with J. S. Woodsworth, Mr. Coldwell, Tommy Douglas, and after him the late David Lewis, and now our friend from Oshawa. It has been a great tradition. I never heard a better orator in the House of Commons or on the hustings. There is something in Saskatchewan in those church basement rallies which brings out the best in the human temperament and in the skills of speech and timing.

● (1410)

He was a superb speaker. He was formidable in parliamentary debate and out on the hustings but he was never mean-spirited.

[English]

He was never, ever mean-spirited. I never heard Tommy Douglas take a cheap shot at anyone. However, he had an absolutely contagious sense of humour. I was sitting close to the late Secretary of State, the Hon. Judy LaMarsh, when he looked over and advised her to be a little more silent than was her habit. He said to her: "The Hon. Minister only opens her mouth to change feet".

Jimmy Gardiner once walked into a debate against Tommy Douglas in Saskatchewan. He said to Tommy: "What do you know about farming? You've never been a farmer". Mr. Douglas said: "I never laid an egg either, but I know more about making an omelette than either a hen or the hon. gentleman". It was his sense of humour and dignity, the self-sacrifice with which he clothed his life, and his public purpose, that made him a remarkable Canadian—indeed, a great Canadian.

The New Democratic Party has lost one of its founding members, one of the main founders of its movement.

[English]

On behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada I wish to join with the Leader of the New Democratic Party in saying to Mrs. Douglas the children and family how much his life has been valued by Canadians from one end of our country to the other. I am reminded of the words of Longfellow:

Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Canada has lost the voice and the vision of one of our great humanitarians and one of our truly outstanding parliamentarians in the passing of the Hon. Thomas Clement "Tommy" Douglas, who died this morning in Ottawa. I knew of his reputation and his legend and, like many others here, was privileged to know the man himself. I knew of his personal qualities, his devotion to his church and to Canada and his love of his wife, his daughters and grandchildren.

Tommy Douglas was an outstanding Canadian beloved by all Members despite political differences. Perhaps the old Saskatchewan proverb said it best of all: "Tommy Douglas doesn't have to kiss babies, babies kiss him".

As the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was speaking, I could not help but remember something which I heard him say once at a political rally. It was an example of the kind of humour he exhibited so well. He told of meeting an elderly farmer in Saskatchewan and in searching for a compliment he said: "Well, I suppose there have been worse Premiers than me". In the absence of any response at all, and thinking the farmer was hard of hearing, he elevated the decibel level and said: "I suppose there have been worse Premiers than me". The farmer said: "I heard you the first time, I was just trying to remember".

I remember, as well, his comment about one of my predecessors in regard to a great debate that was going on concerning nuclear weapons: He said: "My right hon. friend is, of course, consistent. On Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays he's in favour of nuclear weapons. On Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays he's against; and on Sundays he's a Baptist like me".

Mr. Speaker, there was also an important dimension to Tommy Douglas which attracted Robert Cliche to his side. I remember well seeing both Douglas and Cliche in Quebec during those difficult years, difficult not only for his political party but also for mine, and that was in 1963, 1965 and 1968.

I saw the courage and dignity with which they tried to establish their political party on Quebec soil. Subsquently, Mr. Cliche spoke to me at length about his relationship with Mr. Douglas, his affection for Quebec, his respect for the French fact, his desire to set up a truly national political movement, and the courage he showed in the many positions he took in a spirit of understanding and solidarity.

[English]

I recall, Mr. Speaker, the privilege that I had in November, 1984 when I was able to call Tommy Douglas to tell him that I had the pleasure of recommending his appointment to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada. I was greatly touched by the generosity of his acceptance and of course his wit and his kindness. His appointment was in recognition of his devotion to parliamentary service both in Saskatchewan as premier and as a very distinguished leader and member of the New Democratic Party here in the House of Commons.

His passing is not only a loss to all Canadians but I think a gentle reminder that no honour was greater to Tommy Douglas than the respect of his peers and the affection of common people. On behalf of all Canadians, I express our bereavement for the passing of Tommy and I call upon this House to rise for a moment of silence.

Mr. Speaker: It is our tradition in these matters to sometimes allow others who are seeking to say a few words, because of their personal relationships, to speak. I propose to allow this.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some personal comments as a long time opponent of Tommy Douglas and I think one of his better friends over the years. My remarks will be of individual things that he did that are not known to the public.

I was very pleased when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spoke of his one great attribute that endeared him to the people of Saskatchewan and, I am sure, to all parts of Canada, his humour. However, underneath his humour was a deep feeling that I have to express at this time.

To me, Tommy Douglas was fundamentally a great Canadian. I personally remember the tragedy he felt when he was not allowed to go overseas with the South Saskatchewan Regiment because of his physical disability. He wanted to serve his country. He started out as a printer in Winnipeg but his one great devotion was to this country, Canada.

I was the elected leader of the Progressive Conservative Party in Saskatchewan from 1949 to 1957. I was never elected to that legislature, although I tried several times. He noticed me sitting in the gallery of the legislature in Regina. He came up to sit beside me and said: "What are you doing up here?" I replied: "I do not have a seat in the House but I like to hear what is going on." He said: "All right. I will go down and speak to the Leader of the Opposition," who was then Mr. Walter Tucker. Together they arranged to speak to the Speaker. I was invited to sit on the floor of the House of the legislature of Saskatchewan. To be as neutral as I could, one day I sat behind the Liberals and another day I sat behind the NDP. That is where I joined with Tommy Douglas, because in effect I was sitting in the caucus of both Parties—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hamilton: That is when I joined with Tommy Douglas in agreeing that a political caucus is a creature that no one can understand unless he understands the differences of being in a political caucus and a cactus.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hamilton: In that period, he also asked me, with the permission of all Members of the House, to accept the privilege of a legislator, with one exception. I could not utter a word. The technique that I used if I wanted to ask a question was to pass a note up to a Liberal or a New Democrat, whoever I was sitting beside, either in committee or in the House. The question would be asked and when the answer came back I would send a supplementary question, and so on. That is how I endured for eight or nine years in that legislature. I had every right in committee and I had every right to deal with civil servants as an MLA. When I came down to Ottawa in 1957 his provincial treasurer, the Hon. Clarence Fines, said in the House that even though I had never sat in the legislature I had done more than most of them in the House had ever done because I had learned the technique of working through the civil servants, then going to the Minister to get approval of what we had already agreed upon; the Cabinet would then support it and we would get whatever it was done.

I would like to mention that this is a personal testament. I give the credit for this concept of practical democratic government to Tommy Douglas. He did something there that gave respect to the thousands of Conservatives who had no seat in the legislature for 40 or 50 years, it seemed to me. But the fact is, we did have our voice. I speak for a generation of people in Saskatchewan who had no voice politically in the legislature, and I pay this tribute to Tommy Douglas because I do not think too many people know about it. He gave expression of his true Canadianism in that way.

We fought publicly, sure. Of all the jokes that he told, many of them were on me. I tried my level best to outdo him but he always ended up one step ahead of me, and we very often joked about that.

My final words to Tommy Douglas are: No person ever served his God, his country and his community more devotedly. No person ever tried to think in terms of the real philosophy of life, namely, that your first responsibility if you believed in a God was to be humble. He was always that way. The second was to do your utmost to give the people of all thoughts and place their due right. I subscribe to that philosophy, only I call it Conservatism.

• (1425)

In paying tribute to Tommy Douglas I could tell you a thousand jokes. But let me say that above all he believed in principles which all of us here can support, regardless of our Party or background.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, as the representative of part of Tommy Douglas' last riding, Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, I want to say how much Tommy Douglas was loved and respected by the people he served so faithfully for so many years. Tommy Douglas, while one of Canada's great legislators and parliamentarians, was above all a man of the people; he loved people, he believed in people, and he drew his strength from people. In return, people loved Tommy Douglas, they believed in Tommy Douglas, and they drew strength from Tommy Douglas.

The Late Tommy Douglas

Tommy has left us a legacy of laughter, a legacy of battles that have been fought and won, and a legacy of concern for battles that still have to be fought and still have to be won. On behalf of all of his former constituents, I want to express our support for Irma and his family. Above all, I want to say: "Thank you, Tommy".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in 1968 when 108 of us were newly elected and came into this House we learned rapidly to respect the spirit and mind of Tommy Douglas. This was not only because he was a spell-binding orator and had a great sensitivity to social issues, but also because he was gifted with a generous mind.

When he was celebrated in this Chamber 10 years ago he told us a number of political anecdotes. One is still fresh in my memory. He recalled the first time he ran for office with his main political opponent being a strong, burly, big type who turned to him on the platform and said: "As far as you are concerned, I could eat you up in one gulp". To that Tommy Douglas retorted: "If you do that, you will have more brains in your stomach than in your head".

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, if there is a paradise where parliamentarians go, although I am not so sure there is such a place for us, I am inclined to think that as of today it is going to be a more lively and more interesting place.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the first time I heard Tommy Douglas speak was in Yorkton, Saskatchewan, in June of 1944. The election campaign was on and the skating rink was full. A few years later I became a member of and a candidate for the CCF. I remember telling Tommy years after that I learned much of my democratic socialism at his knee. He said: "Yes, and a few other low joints".

This man led a social and economic revolution in the country from 1944 to 1961. I want to remind this House and the people of our country that this man led in so many things that set a criterion and example to follow not only for the Province of Saskatchewan, but for other provinces and the nation as a whole. I think of the air ambulance service and the Farm Security Act. Even though financial institutions took him to the Supreme Court, no longer could they take a farmer's land, home, barn and cattle. I think of the seed and feed grain debts which he took off the backs of grain producers and municipalities, and of hospitalization, medicare, and the Swift Current health region. Then there was automobile insurance, about which he once said that in a civilized society he thought that anyone who would make a profit from the misfortune of others was basically immoral. He brought in collective bargaining and political rights for public servants and Crown corporation employees in 1945-46, and in this he was ahead of his time by many, many years.

Speaking personally, when I was a green and frightened candidate for election the first time, attending my very first political meeting on a public platform in Leader, Saskatchewan, in May of 1956, Mr. Douglas was the guest speaker. The hall and street outside were full, and a public address system had to be put up outside. Earlier in the day his executive assistant had phoned me and said that Mr. Douglas would like to see me in his room in the hotel. I was even more nervous, fearing that I had done or said something wrong.

At that time I was on leave of absence without pay from the railroad, I had a wife and three children, and owed bills all over town. I was broke, to put it bluntly.

Tommy asked me how I was doing, and what not. Finally I told him. Then, Sir, without saying a word, he reached in his pocket, got his wallet out, and gave me $200 to see me through the rest of the campaign. I don't know of any other Leader who has thought of that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: However, it was something which caused me and many hundreds of others who were candidates for our Party in those years and since, to think of those who follow us in public life. It means all of us in this place, in all Parties, have a similar obligation to pass on to present and succeeding generations the kind of example and criteria which that man laid down for all of us to follow. I think none of us can do any less than to try and to do just that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, it is a clear sign of the stature of Tommy Douglas in Canadian politics that so many Members from all three Parties rise here today to pay him tribute and claim him as one of their own. I, too, as the sitting Member for Nanaimo-Alberni, rise to salute the former Member for what was then known as Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. Tommy will be missed by the people of Canada, but he will be particularly missed by the people of central Vancouver Island.

His accomplishments have already been listed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent), and so many others here today. Many stories were, quite rightfully, full of the humour that Tommy loved so much.

In my brief term representing his riding the incident which stands foremost in my mind, and which is perhaps indicative of the character of this tough and steely little Scotsman, was in 1984 when Tommy was struck by a bus while crossing the Ottawa River Parkway. The reaction in Nanaimo-Alberni was: "We know Tommy is okay, but what kind of condition is the bus in?" He was not a native son, but his death today has had a profound effect on the people of central Vancouver Island. On their behalf I wish to say goodbye to Tommy in this Chamber he loved so much. We are sure that if he has his way, Heaven will be a better place by Tuesday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief but I hope I speak with the same emotion demonstrated by my colleagues who have spoken before me. Today, as you may appreciate, we are entering into what is known as a time of reform of the House of Commons under the new provisional rules. I think nothing can better signify the kind of attitude I would like to see in this House than the way in which Tommy Douglas conducted himself while a Member not only of the Saskatchewan Legislature, in my home province, but indeed of this House of Commons.

Tommy was outstanding in debate and in the contributions he made sitting with the NDP on the far righthand side of the House. He used this House of Commons but not to his own personal benefit. He used it for principles and issues. He gave us an opportunity to observe the kind of participation which I think all of us seek to emulate.

As a person who grew up in Saskatchewan when Tommy Douglas was the Premier of that province, one cannot help but be deeply touched by the way in which Tommy Douglas faced adversity with great ebullience, spirit, and wit. I say to Mrs. Douglas and her daughters, as well as to the rest of the family, that all of us who were born and lived in Saskatchewan owe a great debt to him as Premier of our province, as a Member of the NDP in this House of Commons, and especially as a person whom we all respected.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I take it the House would like to proceed in the normal way and we will now proceed to Statements under Standing Order 21.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

THE PHILIPPINES—CALL FOR RESIGNATION OF PRESIDENT MARCOS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, there is conclusive evidence that the election in the Philippines was fraudulent and not a democratic expression of the will of the people. Any nation that embraces and cherishes the principles of democracy and freedom cannot condone the illegitimate leadership of Ferdinand Marcos. Canada cannot and should not remain silent in the face of this travesty, nor should we wait for the Americans to take a position. We must call immediately for the resignation of Ferdinand Marcos and recognize Corazon Aquino as the rightful and legitimate leader of the Philippines.

The appointment of our new ambassador to the Philippines should be held in abeyance to avoid even the slightest hint of Canada condoning the Marcos dictatorship. I call on the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to speak up for freedom and democracy in the Philippines, indeed in the world.

EXTERNAL AID

ASSISTANCE TO AFRICAN COUNTRIES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Bourassa was taking a very short view when he proposed giving Europe's food surpluses to poor and vulnerable countries. These countries should not be allowed to become an international dumping ground for the surplus products of rich countries.

The Africa Forum held in Ottawa from February 13 to 15 concluded that Canada can and should pursue a long-term policy. We must co-operate with the African countries to further their own development.

The measures required to achieve this objective include: renegotiating the debt, increasing the means of subsistence of farmers, developing agriculture and supporting reforestation projects.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ESTONIA—COMMEMORATION OF INDEPENDENCE IN 1918

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, on February 24, 1918, an independent Estonian democratic republic was proclaimed. The years that followed were harsh for this tiny nation which experienced the ravages of war and dislocation of its economy. Estonia's short-lived freedom came to an end in June, 1940, when the Soviet Union overran the three Baltic States and forcibly annexed them to the Soviet Union. The popular Soviet version is that the peoples of the Baltic States joined voluntarily. The historical fact is that this revision of history in Soviet textbooks is nothing more than a hoax.

To Canadians of Estonian origin, this day commemorates the brief period of democracy enjoyed by their homeland. This day also gives reason for all Canadians to recall just how precious the gift of democracy is, and how swiftly it can be lost. Today let us join with Canadians of Estonian origin to commemorate this day and to pay tribute to their national courage and resilience. Freedom and democracy are non-negotiable commodities and they must be restored wherever they are denied.

PUBLIC SERVICE

TRIBUTE TO WORK OF PUBLIC SERVANTS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Public Service of Canada is, without question, one of the finest in the world. My father, Ren Turner, worked in the Public Service for 34 years. During my own years at Parks Canada and CIDA I developed some lasting friendships, as well as a professional appreciation for the quality of the men and women who serve Canada with distinction.

My colleagues in this House recognize the vital role that public servants play in implementing legislation passed here, and in enforcing subsequent regulations and programs. We all rely on the services of program managers, scientists, secretaries, clerks, and many others, to do the best possible job they can in providing the goods and services demanded by all Canadians. When Governments change in Canada, policies and priorities usually change as well. During a period of transition that can last from one to two years there is inevitably some dislocation of personnel in Ottawa and in other parts of the country. We all feel the uncertainty of change—

STATISTICS CANADA

INCREASED PRICES OF PUBLICATIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of this House the unscrupulous manner whereby Revenue Canada has been forced by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), affectionately known as Stewart the Dreaded and Mike the Knife, to increase the price of its publications. One example of this is the Canadian Statistical Review which sold in March, 1985, for $38.50 and is now selling for $200. Employment and Earning Hours, formerly sold for $65, is now sold for $350. I could go on and give examples upon examples of these dramatic increases.

Many users of information supplied by Statistics Canada are non-profit organizations which cannot afford such drastic and Draconian increases. The Minister of Supply and Services will agree with me that these measures should be withdrawn immediately. I therefore urge this Minister and the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Speaker: I would advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

LA FRANCOPHONIE

PARTICIPATION AT VERSAILLES SUMMIT

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the brilliant success of the Sommet de la francophonie which I had the privilege of attending last week. This historic event united a community of 39 countries in a firm resolve to help each other.

In a spririt of harmony and co-operation, representatives of the countries attending adopted 28 resolutions that are vital for the Francophone world, including Francophone audiovisual exchanges by satellite, joint publishing of text books by Francophone authors, the use of French in the high tech sector, mechanisms for promoting trade exchanges among Francophone countries, and these are just a few examples.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud of the fact that Canada's status has been enhanced by this summit, and as a Member from Quebec, I am delighted with the arrangement to hold the next summit in Quebec City: one more indication of the national reconciliation made possible by the Mulroney Government.

STATISTICS CANADA

PUBLICATION OF EMPLOYMENT DATA

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I am appalled by a statement made by the Liberal employment critic questioning the manner in which Statistics Canada collects employment information, calling the unemployment rate "the big lie". Our Government inherited a severe unemployment problem, along with a method of calculating job creation and employment statistics.

The result of this Government's policies and of those of the previous administration are as follows: One, monthly rate of job creation for the Liberals was approximately 7,000 jobs per month, while our Government averages 36,000. Second, only 18 per cent of the jobs the Liberals created were full-time, while the PC record is 81 per cent of 580,000. Two thousand jobs alone in the last three months were created in my city of Saskatoon.

This statistical approach has been used by the federal Government for decades. No matter what factors are used to establish employment figures, the Government is accomplishing historic job creation. These trends are representative of the trends that are positive in seeing unemployment drop. Rather than—

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

COMMUNICATIONS

POWER CORPORATION'S BID TO TAKE OVER QUEBEC TELEVISION STATIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, it is now more than one year since the Conservative Government opposite revoked the Order in Council requiring that broadcast media and daily newspapers not be controlled by the same company. The folly of that decision has been demonstrated by the Power Corporation's bid to take over the Télé-Métropole media interests. Power already owns daily newspapers in Montreal, Trois-Rivières, Sherbrooke and Granby.

Power now wants to own television stations in Montreal, Trois-Rivières, Sherbrooke and three other cities. Power will dominate French language media in three cities and influence the media strongly in the whole province. The New Democratic Party believe this will give Power the opportunity to become the K.C. Irving of Quebec. We call on the Government to act before its policy failure leads to irreversible damage to public life in Quebec. Quebec does not need, as New Brunswick now has, a stultifying and repressive hand on the need for free inquiry by journalists, newspapers, and broadcasting outlets.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

COMPARISONS WITH 1981 STATISTICS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, in a Gallup poll published this morning 55 per cent of those polled said they had little or no confidence in the way the Government is handling the problem of unemployment. This should indicate to the Government that despite its boast of new jobs all is not what it seems, and there are serious employment problems in this country.

The unemployment rate of 9.8 per cent is still too high. Before the recession in 1981 it was 7.5 per cent. Too many of the jobs are part-time and temporary, non-unionized with low wages and no benefits. Twenty-seven per cent of women are in part-time work. Those unemployed for more than one year are four times what they were in 1981. The unemployment problems of youth, older workers and the illiterate are not being addressed. When is the Government going to stop the rhetoric and posturing, admit the problems, and attempt some solutions?

THE BUDGET

PREDICTED POLITICAL REACTION

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday of this week the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will bring down a Budget that will be tough but appropriate for the times. It is relatively easy to predict the reaction of the New Democratic Party. They will state without hesitation, as they always do, that we will lose 100,000 jobs. I hope our liberal colleagues will take a more realistic view. May I urge the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) to show all Canadians that he still has the capacity to rise above the fray and help lead Canada to better times ahead?

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

CLOSURE OF GULF REFINERY IN MONTREAL

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on Friday the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) released a report on the refinery in Montreal. It says, and I quote:

> In summary the closure of Gulf's Montreal refinery will have a negative impact on competition, particularly in light of the serious competition problems that have been demonstrated in the course of the petroleum inquiry,

There it is, Mr. Speaker. Why did the Government close the refinery? Why doesn't the Minister resign? He has no clout in the Cabinet.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—DESTRUCTION OF MAPLE TREES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, "if we do not act immediately, the industry will feel the effect in 10 years, and in 50 years our forests will be destroyed. It will take 200 years to replace them". These words may sound as if they were spoken by an environmentalist or a Haida Indian fighting for the giant trees of South Moresby. No, these are the words of Paul Lamontagne, Executive Director of the International Maple Sugar Institute. Maple syrup is a $75 million a year industry. Acid rain is destroying the foundation of the industry, the maple tree. A Quebec Government study found that only 16.6 per cent of the maple trees in a 20,000 square kilometre zone were healthy.

Once again we have a forceful demonstration of the cost of inaction on acid rain. Even if the United States adopts the proposed $5 billion research program, the maple trees will die. A 50 per cent cut of SO2 emissions by 1994—

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE—ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding to Oral Question Period, which will occur in two or three minutes, I think I should make a statement which was asked of me by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). Eleven years have elapsed since Mr. Speaker Jerome made the last such statement, and at that time the House was not televised. Television has had a marked impact on parliamentary behaviour, on the public's perception of parliamentarians, and on our practices.

The traditional guidelines regarding questions, written and oral, are to be found in Citations 356 to 371 of Beachesne's Fifth Edition. They are also summarized on pages 25-26 of the Précis of Procedure recently prepared by the Table Research Branch and distributed to all Members. While some of them remain valid, others have fallen into disuse as a result of the development of our practices. The House is the master of its own procedure and the Chair cannot enforce guidelines unless they conform to the will of the House.

For Question Period to function well—and for it to be seen to be meaningful—it must have some form. There must be some rules. As Members can imagine, several representations have been made to the Chair as to what those rules should be.

At one extreme is the view that the "old" rules should be brought back in their entirety, even those that have not been enforced for many years. At the other extreme is the view that the Chair should be concerned only with length and language, that in all other respects Members should be allowed to use the time as they see fit and that the public would judge appropriately.

A few even carried this argument to its logical conclusion, that Members should be allowed to use the time to make statements, if they wished, instead of questions, and to use whatever language they wanted, whether unparliamentary or not. If their voters didn't like it, they would act, went this argument.

In my view it would be practically impossible to go completely backwards to the rules which, for example, made it out of order to question a Minister about matters reported in the media, out of order to ask Ministers about statements made outside the House, out of order to ask certain kinds of questions regarding Government policy, nor would it make sense to do so, no matter what certain columnists might think.

On the other hand, while length and language are very real concerns they cannot be all that concerns the Chair. Question Period belongs to the whole House and, today, to a larger audience. While there may be political consequences, surely the House must be collectively concerned for the image and reputation and perceived relevancy of Parliament itself. If Question Period were to depart even more from its origins, to become only free-time partisan political theatre, surely that is not in our collective interests.

It seems to me, therefore, that the appropriate rules for Question Period should recognize the following principles:

One, the time is scarce and should, therefore, be used as profitably as possible by as many as possible.

Two, the public in large numbers do watch, and the House, recognizing that Question Period is often an intense time, should be on its best possible behaviour.

Three, while there may be other purposes and ambitions involved in Question Period, its primary purpose must be the seeking of information from the Government and calling the Government to account for its actions.

Four, Members should be given the greatest possible freedom in the putting of questions that is consistent with the other principles, or our practices should seek, in the words of Mr. Speaker Jerome: "To reduce to an absolute minimum the negative disqualifications that may limit or restrict a Member's right" to ask questions.

Mr. Speaker Jerome, in his statement 11 years ago, put his view with regard to the first principle of brevity so well that I would merely quote it:

> There can be no doubt that the greatest enemy of the Question Period is the Member who offends this most important principle. In putting the original question on any subject, a Member may require an explanatory remark, but there is no reason for such a preamble to exceed one carefully drawn sentence.
> It is my proposal to ask all Hon. Members to pay close attention to this admonition and to bring them to order if they fail to do so. It bears repeating that the long preamble or long question takes an unfair share of the time, and invariably, in provoking the same kind of response, only compounds the difficulty.

I agree with these comments and would add that such comments obviously also apply to answers by Ministers. I would also endorse Mr. Speaker Jerome's view that supplementary questions should need no preambles; they should flow from the Minister's response and be put in precise and direct terms without any prior statement or argument. It is the Chair's view that it equally follows from the first principle, that time is scarce, that Members should seek to avoid merely repeating questions that have already been asked. I do not mean that other questions on the same subject should not be asked—as apparently I have been interpreted—just that subsequent questions should be other than ones already asked.

For similar reasons it has always been a fundamental rule of questioning Ministers that the subject matter of the question must fall within the collective responsibility of the Government or the individual responsibility of one of its Ministers. This is the only basis upon which Ministers can be expected to answer questions.

Beyond these few restrictions, there are a few other traditional restraints that flow from the principles above. Questions should relate to matters of some urgency and not be purely hypothetical. They should not seek a legal opinion or inquire as to what legal advice a Minister has received. They should not normally anticipate Orders of the Day. However, I hasten to add that there is a normal exemption to that with regard to the budget process which I fully intend to honour. Members should be very careful with regard to questions or matters that are sub judice. Ministers should be questioned only in relation to their current portfolios and not in relation to any previously held responsibilities or Party responsibilities.

Finally, I would remind all Hon. Members of the citations in Beauchesne and in our rule book regarding language and decorum. It seems to the Chair and, judging by the mail I receive, it also seems to many of our constituents that our language and decorum do not match those quite sensible citations and that we are not projecting the image of honourable men and women that is expected of us. Heckling and political quips are part of our tradition; barracking and personal insults must not be.

I intend to be as tough as I can in cutting off Members or Ministers in this regard, but there is little the Chair can do with regard to barracking from the benches on both sides except to appeal to all Members to realize that such behaviour reflects very badly on Parliament itself, and to ask again that we remember where we are. However, it is possible that excessive noise may blur the vision of the Chair and make it difficult to see Members rising.

As always, I seek the co-operation of the House in all these matters.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

THE PHILIPPINES—ENCOURAGEMENT OF PEACEFUL TRANSITION OF POWER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of what you have just set forth to the House, I have a question for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Has he or his Government informed the President of the Philippines that it is the overwhelming opinion of Canadians, I believe, that the results since the election have not properly reflected the popular will of that country and that Canadians would rather encourage a peaceful transition of power under the democratic tradition?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in that same spirit let me take this opportunity to call upon President Marcos to recognize the obvious reality, that the interests of the Philippino people are best served by the establishment of a new Government having the confidence of the Philippino people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PHILIPPINE ELECTIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. We approved the Minister's statement, but considering that most independent observers condemned the procedure used in this election, why did the Government of Canada wait so long before deciding to take the position it did just now? Why the delay?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, events in the Philippines were in a state of flux, and they still are. I have just made a statement that, I believe, is supported by Members of all parties of the House of Commons and by most Canadians. We intend to continue very prudently in this respect in order to promote lasting and durable stability in the Philippines.

[English]

SAFETY OF CANADIAN CITIZENS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would think that the Minister would share, as I do, the concern of over 100,000 Philippino Canadians who have special emotions at this time. There are also thousands of Canadians living or present in the Philippines.

In view of the closing of the Manilla airport this morning and gunfire outside the presidential palace, will the Minister continue to keep us up to date on what measures have been taken?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this morning I telephoned the External Affairs critics of the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party extending an invitation to maintain full briefings. Naturally, we will continue that.

In light of the current circumstances in the Philippines, I think it would be appropriate for me to counsel Canadians to avoid travelling to the Philippines if at all possible.

SPACE WEAPONRY

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns a story in The Globe and Mail today about the possible use of Canadian territory for deployment of SDI and it concerns the Government's support for the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty. Will the Minister assure Canadians that our country has not and will not be considered for use in any future deployment of the Strategic Defence Initiative?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the fears raised by the story in The Globe and Mail this morning are unfounded.

ANTI-BALLISTIC MISSILE TREATY

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister agree that a Canadian-United States joint declaratory statement to respect the ABM Treaty as suggested by the NORAD committee report is too weak to allay the concerns of many Canadians and, therefore will Canada make it clear in the NORAD Agreement itself that it will not have anything to do with active ballistic missile defence?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the position of Canada with respect to the ABM regime is clear. The Government is in the process of considering the report tabled by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

THE PHILIPPINES—OUTCOME OF PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the Philippines. The Secretary of State for External Affairs stated that the Government wants to see a change of Government in the Philippines. Does that mean the Government is now publicly stating our support for Corazon Aquino to become the President of the Philippines tomorrow?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would think it appropriate for the people and institutions of the Philippines to decide who will be their Government.

CANADIAN POSITION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): In view of the fact that, as the Minister well knows, the election was a fraud and that the people have supported Corazon Aquino to be their new president, will this Government, as other Governments have done, say that it, too, supports her as the democratically elected President of the Philippines? If the Philippines do not do that, will we immediately withdraw recognition of the Marcos Government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated the view of this Government that it would be appropriate for President Marcos to recognize that the best interests of his country would be served by the putting into place of a new Government which commands the respect of the people of the Philippines. I would not presume to dictate to the people of the Philippines how that could be achieved.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The price of crude oil is now below $15 a barrel, yet

Canadian consumers have only seen a price decline of two cents per litre in the price of gasoline. The Prime Minister knows that is not fair. It is not fair to the consumers. When are we going to see a real drop in the price of gasoline at the pumps?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows full well, because he is the energy critic, the price we saw drop at the gas pumps reflects the price last December when prices started to fall rather gradually. The sharp decline in prices did not take effect until late January. Once that works its way through the system, we will see lower gas prices.

LEVEL OF TAXATION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of what the Parliamentary Secretary said, will the Minister of Finance guarantee to consumers that the savings at the pumps will not be lost through increased or new taxes in the upcoming Budget?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the position of the Government of Canada has been stated very clearly by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I suggest the Hon. Member wait. He has the patience, I am sure, to wait for maybe 50 or 51 hours, and he will have some answers then.

POSITION OF MOTORISTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary to the last question, given that the Minister of Finance this morning bought an expensive new pair of Dack's goat-skin shoes, is he in a position to tell Canadian motorists that after Wednesday they will still be able to buy fairly reasonably priced shoes for their families?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): At least they weren't Gucci's.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain to the Hon. Member that I did not buy those shoes. All the members of the Conservative Caucus bought those shoes for me and I appreciate very much their good wishes as expressed through that purchase. They are Dack shoes. They were made in Fredericton, New Brunswick. I will be delighted to have those shoes on my fee on Wednesday afternoon when I make my presentation.

CONTENT OF FORTHCOMING BUDGET

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, let me ask the Minister, then, if he would stand in his place in his ordinary shoes and, in view of the protests out there, assure us, that the Canadian motorist who, after all, had to pay because of the last Budget, will not be milked in this Budget for any more gasoline taxes at the pumps? Is the Minister prepared to make that commitment right now?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): The Hon. Member should know that he is asking me to make statements he knows I cannot make.

Mr. Broadbent: You can say what is not going to be in the Budget.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I appreciate very much the concern the Hon. Member is expressing. We on this side of the House share that same concern.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INQUIRY WHEN CANADIANS WILL BENEFIT FROM REDUCTION IN PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to thank the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs for finally publishing the O'Farrell Report. Better late than never. On page 19 of the report, the Director indicates his concern that a drop in the price of crude oil will not be reflected in the price at the pump, owing to a lack of competition among the three remaining refineries in Quebec, this according to the Director. I would therefore ask the Minister how he intends to provide a substitute for the laws of the market, to ensure that consumers will see a substantial drop in the price of gas in Quebec.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I may simply remind my hon. colleague that this report by the Director of Combines Investigations is an entirely independent report, reflecting the Director's views following a study that he made. It is part of a series of five different reports by experts that were submitted and published, and of course I thought it was appropriate to ask him to submit his report to the Canadian Restrictive Trade Practices Commission for consideration. As soon as the Commission, which is now examining the oil industry, submits its recommendations, we shall be looking at them very carefully.

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS TO ENSURE QUEBEC CONSUMERS BENEFIT FROM REDUCED CRUDE OIL PRICES

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that after a reply as vague as the one I just received, you will allow me a short supplementary.

Could the Minister inform the House what he intends to do to ensure that the Quebec consumer will benefit from the drop in the price of crude? The O'Farrelll Report suggests this might not happen, owing to a reduction in the number of competitors. What does the Minister intend to do, besides providing us with vague replies?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I will make it short, and I simply want to say that the decision regarding the acquisition by Ultramar was made with a view to creating jobs and attracting investment to the province of Quebec, and enhancing the competitive position of Ultramar, for the benefit of the consumer.

TOURISM

ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN—DEPICTION OF WOMEN

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Tourism. He will know that women across the country are outraged at his commissioning of sexist commercials—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. McDonald: —in which—to keep the language parliamentary—women's bodies are used as decorative objects. Will the Minister undertake to withdraw all of the scenes which are contrary to the guidelines on non-sexist advertising, not just those scenes which are insulting to nurses, which he has agreed to withdraw, but all of the scenes that offend the equality and dignity of women?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, after reviewing the commercials a number of times, I am completely satisfied that the commercials in question do not represent in any way at all any type of sexual stereotyping of women. In fact what we have tried to do, and what we have done, is get a good balance between men and women in the commercials themselves, as well as children.

As the Hon. Member knows, we have been in touch with the Nurses' Association because of the concern of their professional association. I talked with them on Friday about their problem. On Saturday I instructed my Department to remove the depiction of nurses from that particular segment. Other than that, I do not intend to make any other changes.

CONTENT OF COMMERCIALS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not see that these commercials are merely a slicked up version of an old message: "Hey, Mister, want my sister?"

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. McDonald: —and this use of women's bodies makes the Minister of Tourism Canada's number one pimp?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member will know why I am just going to go to the next question.

Mr. McDermid: Ask her to withdraw that remark.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

LOCATION OF NEW UNITED STATES EMBASSY

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Public Works. As the Minister may know, there is considerable opposition within the National Capital region to the National Capital Commission's preferred site for a new American Embassy on the Mile Circle. Would the Minister tell the House whether this decision is a fait accompli or are other sites still being actively considered?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I recognize the concern of the Hon. Member. No, there has been no formal recommendation for the site to which he referred. There has been a study commissioned by the National Capital Commission to look into the environmental and other impacts of such a location. A decision will not be made until spring. Between now and next spring, I am sure that any concerns the Hon. Member or any citizens of Ottawa may have, can be expressed directly to the Commission or to the planning process.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

VIA RAIL

CONDITIONS AT TORONTO MAINTENANCE CENTRE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I wrote to the Minister three months ago regarding unsafe conditions at VIA Rail's Toronto maintenance centre. Is the Minister not concerned that in less than four months there have been 153 accidents at the yard and that management's response has been to ignore the problem and discipline workers who complain about unsafe conditions?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, these matters are being investigated and looked into as a result of the meetings which I had with CP, CN, and VIA Rail. I am sure that any safety deficiencies to which the Hon. Member refers will be corrected.

Mr. Benjamin: Meet with the guys who do the job.

Oral Questions

OVERTIME WORKED BY EMPLOYEES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not know that workers involved in fixing train brakes at the Toronto yard worked an average 92 hours overtime in the past seven weeks? One worker actually worked four weeks overtime during a seven-week period. How can the Minister expect Canadians to agree to his guarantees of rail safety when VIA Rail is cutting back and forcing the remaining workers to work dangerous periods of overtime?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the examples to which the Hon. Members has referred are precisely the kinds of things that we are investigating and hope to address in the very near future. As a result of the initiatives we have taken, we will once again make the railways safe and turn the situation around, which is quite different from what occurred over the last four or five years under the previous administration.

YOUTH

CANCELLATION OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, 94 per cent of Canadians have expressed support for Katimavik. Young people all over the country are rallying to its support. Recently, two reports described—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is now on his third statement or preamble. I would ask him to come to his question, please.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the wide support for Katimavik expressed most recently in two reports dealing with the crisis among Canadian youth, will the Prime Minister now act to reverse the decision to cancel Katimavik?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we were very clear about this last week. We said that the decision on Katimavik was final and irreversible.

I am sorry to see that when the Hon. Member read the Senate report, he failed to notice the emphasis on job creation for youth. Young people need jobs. This year, my colleague at Employment and Immigration is investing $330 million in job creation for young people.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is starting to sound like a Minister's statement.

Supplementary Question.

[English]

REQUEST FOR REINSTITUTION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, will the Secretary of State take into account what happened when the Government said it would not reverse its decision on pensions, and make a proper decision now in response to the strong feelings which have been expressed all across the country? Will he not, in fact, change his mind and reinstitute Katimavik in response to the concerns expressed by youth all across the country?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, for the third time, I repeat that the decision on Katimavik is final and will not change.

TRANSPORT

SAFETY OF RAILWAY PASSENGER CARS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

After six accidents within a few weeks, how can the Minister table a Bill on VIA Rail today which contains no new measures to provide more adequate and more complete protection for railway passengers?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, one of the very first objectives of VIA Rail is to carry out a safe, efficient, effective and reliable rail transportation service. That is consistent with Section 3 of the National Transportation Act. I think the Hon. Member is fully aware of the steps and initiatives which I have taken in the recent past in order to address the recent rash of rail accidents which have occurred.

PURCHASE OF PASSENGER CARS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister ready to put his money where his mouth is? The Bill which he tabled today is a dead fish, unless there is a major financial commitment by the Government. Can the Minister tell us whether or not he has sought the approval of the Minister of Finance to allow him to purchase urgently needed new passenger cars?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first, the Bill is not a dead fish. At least we brought in a Bill. The Government of which the Hon. Member was a member chose to create VIA with the stroke of a pen without giving it a clear mandate.

Mr. Benjamin: As a one-dollar item.

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, as a one-dollar item.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: First, VIA will have a clear mandate, a new costing order, and a mission.

Ms. Copps: And no passengers!

Some Hon. Members: Shush!

Mr. Mazankowski: With respect to the issue of equipment, I am advised by VIA that it is close to reaching a letter of agreement with a consortium formed by Bombardier and UTDC and that within a month or so a contract should be signed. At that time we hope that we will be able to acquire the necessary—

Mr. Ouellet: You said that a year ago.

Mr. Mazankowski: It does take a little while. However, we are doing something. We are not procrastinating; we are putting our money where our mouth is.

NIAGARA RIVER—DIOXIN DISCOVERED IN UNITED STATES CHEMICAL DUMP

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. The Minister is aware that extremely high levels of dioxin have been found in another United States chemical dump on its side of the Niagara River. Will the Minister advise the House if dioxin is leaking into the Niagara River and into Lake Ontario and, if so, what is the Government going to do about it?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, there has been no confirmation that the dioxin has actually leaked into the groundwater, and through the groundwater into the Niagara River itself. However, the New York State Government and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency are supervising a major investigation into the question and into possible required remedial action. In the meantime my Department, with the Government of New York, the Government of the United States, and the Government of Ontario, is putting the finishing touches on a master plan for the clean-up of the Niagara River in general.

HEALTH

FEDERAL TRANSFER PAYMENTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As he knows, on the Friday before the House adjourned for one week the Minister of Finance introduced legislation which would restrict the increases in money going to the provinces in transfer payments. This is money used for post-secondary education and health. Does the Minister have any prediction of the estimated increase in the cost of health services over the next five years?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to be asked the question. The Minister of Finance in his previous Budget, and also in legislation which was tabled, clearly showed that the Government will increase its spending on both health and post-secondary education. It is projected to rise from the present approximately $65 billion to $90 billion. That is a good increase. I think that if people look at it objectively they will see it as such.

COST PROJECTION INQUIRY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, despite what you said earlier, my question to the Minister is this. Does the Minister have any figures in his Department which would tell us how much it expects the cost of health services to rise over each of the next five years? Does he have that information and will he give it to the House?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the legislation and the formula, as the Hon. Member knows, are before the House. If he takes a look at the formula in the legislation he will see that it is maintained at inflation plus. If he takes a look at it very seriously he will see that the Governments of the various provinces can maintain their health programs within those constrictions. In fact I hope that the Province of Manitoba will take its responsibilities seriously in regard to health and not cut back on beds as has been done, as well as start paying its share of post-secondary education.

ENVIRONMENT CANADA

REORGANIZATION OF REGIONAL OFFICES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. Why is the Minister reorganizing Environment Canada offices around the country, muzzling officials, applying political criteria to public information, and preventing the public from hearing the facts as they really are?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, none of the statements in the Hon. Member's preamble is true. As the Hon. Member knows, my Department has the highest proportion of scientists in the Government of Canada. These scientists are a credit to the Department and to the country.

The fact is, however, that an expert in acid rain is not an expert in dioxin, just as an expert in dioxin is not an expert in PCBs. When an official makes a categorical statement to the public through the media in an area outside of his or her expertise, especially in such a sensitive area as drinking water quality, then at best, the public is short-changed and, at worst, the public can become panicked. I am putting a stop to it.

STATEMENTS MADE BY OFFICIALS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister assure the House that officials will be able to speak according to their knowledge of the facts and not according to the political wishes of the Minister?

● (1520)

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it has nothing to do with politics. It has everything to do with ensuring that the public gets reliable information. When an official speaks with the authority of the Department of the Environment and of the Government of Canada, it is very important that that official speak within his or her area of expertise and competence, and not outside it. That objective is not a strike against information but a blow for reliable information.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CHANGES IN UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE REGULATIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs. Given the complete inadequacy of most armed service pensions, can present and former members of the Armed Services look to the Minister to stand up for them and get justice from the Unemployment Insurance Commission? Will the Minister go to bat for these people and make sure that they can collect unemployment insurance benefits since they are required to pay into that fund?

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member I am sure realizes, I do not answer questions put on behalf of ex-service personnel. I do answer questions put on behalf of war veterans.

I am very glad to assure the Hon. Member, as I am sure he knows, that in all matters to do with the veterans of this country, those who fought in our various wars receive the very closest attention from me and my Department, and get the very best attention that veterans in any country in the world receive.

KOREAN WAR VETERANS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the event that veterans from the Korean War are involved in this, will the Minister go to bat for them and ensure that they get fair treatment from the Unemployment Insurance Commission?

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows this, and if he does not, all he has to do is walk out of the House onto the streets of Ottawa or anywhere else, and ask any veteran he runs into, and he will tell him that this Minister and this Department are looking after their problems 24 hours of every day.

ENVIRONMENT CANADA

DEPARTMENTAL REORGANIZATION—OFFICIAL SPOKESPERSONS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. The Minister just said that he is making changes in his Department to ensure that the scientists from the Department speak within their area of competence. Who decides whether a scientist in the Minister's Department is or is not speaking in his area of competence?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, there have been a few cases in which junior officials within my Department have been quoted as senior officials of Environment Canada when nothing could be further from the truth. They have been interviewed, and on the basis of those interviews, have given information to the public through the media without authority from their immediate bureaucratic superiors. That is the first line of reference. If in a given case it is appropriate for the Minister himself to give such approval, then fine, but it will be in rare circumstances.

REPORT ON TOXIC CHEMICALS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think those concerned with the environment must be very worried about the Minister's answer. On January 30, almost a month ago, a team of 50 scientists from the Minister's Department issued a report on toxic chemicals—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming a preamble to a supplementary question.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Will the Minister say today that he has accepted the 24 recommendations in that report and is proceeding immediately to implement them?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as usual, the House Leader of the Official Opposition is out of date, in this case by two weeks. I made a public statement to the effect that all 24 recommendations had been accepted, and most of them are now already being acted upon.

HUMAN RIGHTS

ESTONIA—SEPARATION OF INFANT FROM PARENTS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. For the last year and a half, Leila and Valdo Randpere, two young Estonian defectors, have been trying in vain to secure the release of their two-and-a-half-year-old daughter Kaisa who is being held by Soviet authorities in Estonia. What action is the Government prepared to take in order to demand the release of this young political prisoner?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a most unusual situation in which the Hon. Member has interested himself. It is the situation of an infant, two and a half years of age, who has spent one-fifth of her life separated by Soviet authorities from her parents. We are looking at every possibility and opportunity by which Canada might achieve or contribute to the reunification of that family.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INVESTIGATION OF FLEET INDUSTRIES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Associate Minister of National Defence. Would the Minister confirm that his Ministry is investigating the firm of Fleet Industries, and would he also confirm that DND has indicated it would accept no further materials from Fleet at this time?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that, based on complaints we have received, we have undertaken some investigations and have caused those investigations to be carried out. I cannot as yet confirm the second part of the Hon. Member's question.

NATURE OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister indicate to the House what his in-residence inspection staff have been doing all this time while questions of inappropriate quality in parts for items like the F-18 have been in production?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, my information at this point in time is that questions of inappropriate procedures and so on have not dealt with the F-18 or in fact any aeronautic equipment or aerospace equipment, but rather with marine equipment. Nevertheless, the implied question as to what we are doing is part of the investigation and I am certainly most interested to ensure that our inspection services are adequate and that inferior products are not accepted by the Canadian Armed Forces.

RAILWAYS

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY—DIRECTIVE TO INCREASE FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister will be aware that the Canadian Transport Commission has issued an order to terratransport in Newfoundland to increase its freight rates rather dramatically. Will the Government of Canada be exercising its Order in Council authority to prohibit, as the Government did in 1985, these dramatic freight rate increases from being implemented in the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, decisions of this nature are subject to appeal, and intervenors and/or interested parties have 30 days within which to appeal to the CTC or the Governor in Council, and they can choose that route if they wish.

EFFECT OF RATE INCREASES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister agree with the comments contained in the CTC report to the effect that implementation of the Commission's recommendations with respect to freight rate increases will cause a loss of traffic for the railway system in Newfoundland and thereby further critically erode the viability of the railway in the Province of Newfoundland?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member would appreciate the fact that it would be inappropriate for me to comment or express an opinion on a decision that was brought down by the CTC. There is an avenue of appeal or a process that can be taken. Until due process takes place, I really cannot add anything further to my first answer.

INDUSTRY

IMPACT OF MONTREAL EAST REFINERY CLOSURE—REPORT BY DIRECTOR OF COMBINES INVESTIGATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Friday, the Director of Combines Investigations said in his report that closing the refinery in Montreal East would result in a lack of competition. My question is as follows, Mr. Speaker: Does the Minister agree with this statement? If so, what does he intend to do?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I will repeat what I said earlier. These are the opinions of the Director of Combines Investigations. He is responsible for making a study when a situation of this kind occurs and to report on it, and that is what he did. I have asked the Director to transmit his views to the Canadian Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, which is now examining the oil industry.

STATISTICS CANADA

INCREASED PRICES FOR PUBLICATIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services in his role as Minister responsible for Statistics Canada. Can the Minister tell the House why he has ordered or permitted Statistics Canada to increase its fees for publications to such an exorbitant extent that publications which non-profit groups formerly got for $38.50 per copy now cost over $200? Why has he allowed this unfair tax to be imposed?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that our Department has made available, through public libraries throughout Canada and in all offices of the Department of Supply and Services, copies of every publication to ensure that any member of the public requiring the same will have them available at absolutely no cost.

INCREASE IN PRICE OF CERTAIN PUBLICATIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister. Does the Minister feel it is right that an agency in Vancouver known as the Trade Union Research Bureau, which paid $592 for 32 publications in 1985, should now pay $2,829 for the same service? Does he think it is reasonable for agencies that try to help workers—

Mr. Speaker: Order. One question, please!

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the position of our Department is that supply and demand be the cardinal rule. If there are very few organizations that require the material, then obviously the cost factor will be a little higher. Cost recovery has to be a basis of this program, and we have announced that. There is widespread acceptance and, indeed, there is no prejudice, as I have already indicated.

ENERGY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Why are Canadians being asked to pay $1.90 for the same amount of gasoline that can be purchased in the U.S. for $1.30?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): There are many reasons for that, Mr. Speaker. It has been discussed in this House many, many times. The Hon. Member was in the House when I gave the answer the last time. There are social benefits in Canada, social benefits that have to be paid for. I know Americans would gladly pay a few more pennies for their gasoline if they had a medicare system like ours in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT TAXES NOT BE INCREASED

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): We are not talking about a few more pennies, Mr. Speaker.

Given that in the United States you can purchase the same amount of gas that costs you 60 cents more in Canada, can the Prime Minister assure us that there will be no additional increase in taxes on the price of gasoline to Canadians come budget day on Wednesday?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest the Hon. Member be here at 4.30 p.m. on Wednesday and he will get the answer to that question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

THE PHILIPPINES—REQUEST THAT DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS BE SEVERED

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is regrettable that the Government of Canada will not recognize Carazon Aquino as the leader in the Philippines.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: If Ferdinand Marcos does not step down as the President of the Philippines—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is hypothetical.

Mr. Nunziata: —will the Government of Canada break off diplomatic relations—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Member may want to ask a policy question about those relations but he is now asking a purely hypothetical question. May I ask him to rephrase his question?

Mr. Nunziata: In view of the position taken by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, will the Minister break off diplomatic relations with the Philippines until a new Government is installed in Manila?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we think it highly important that the Government of Canada and other Governments interested in stability in the Philippines act in a positive way, designed to achieve that purpose in the Philippines, not designed to serve any other goal that might be sought here in Canada.

Our judgment is that it is important for Canada to register the view that it is time for President Marcos to recognize the current reality in the Philippines. We believe also it is important for this House and for the country to recognize that events are changing in the Philippines. It may well be that there will be clear support in that country for a regime led by Mrs. Aquino. If that is the case, it will be supported by the Government of Canada.

It may well be that some other constellation of forces would provide the kind of stability—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I know the House is interested, but this is becoming a statement. A short supplementary, please.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Canada no longer recognizes Ferdinand Marcos as the President in the Philippines, why would Canada continue to have diplomatic relations with an illegitimate leader in the Philippines?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Among other things, Mr. Speaker, there are some 3,000 to 4,000 Canadians now in the Philippines whom we do not want to place in jeopardy. There are very many Canadians of Philippine origin whose relatives and interests we do not want to place in jeopardy.

I think it highly irresponsible to suggest that instead of contributing to an evolution toward stability in the Philippines we should take a random act that might add to instability in that country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

VIA RAIL

TWO-YEAR COST RECOVERY TARGET

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport in light of his announcement today about legislation and a rail passenger act.

In light of the situation of VIA Rail in terms of cost and the two-year period the Minister is prescribing as a target for cost recovery, can the Minister assure the House that the two-year period to reach the target of cost recovery will not commence until VIA Rail has its new transcontinental passenger equipment in place?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): That would be a little difficult to guarantee, Mr. Speaker. I doubt very much whether we could have new equipment much before the fall of 1988, but the provisions in the Bill will make it much easier to achieve those targets. A new costing order, and an incentive scheme are built into the legislation. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the details of this might be more appropriately explored during consideration of the Bill itself.

ACQUISITION OF RAILWAY STATION PROPERTIES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister assure the House that VIA Rail will be able to obtain properties, particularly railway stations, from either railroad at no cost or the legal cost of $1, in view of the fact that those properties have been written off, for which they received—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am in some difficulty as to whether that question should properly be put in committee when the Bill is before committee as opposed to being put here. Order, please. The Hon. Member for Scarborough West.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

THE PHILIPPINES—SAFETY OF CANADIAN CITIZENS

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it concerns the Philippines.

The Minister has cautioned Canadians not to travel to the Philippines. Can the Minister advise the House whether the Government will be able to take action to assist Canadians already there should evacuation be made necessary by possible violence?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are in constant touch with members of the Canadian community who are in the Philippines. I do not think it would be fruitful at this stage to indicate in any detail the contingency arrangements that are in place there, as indeed they are in place in many countries where changes might occur. I think the House would want to know that those contingency plans are in place.

We are in contact with Canadians there. I think that we can give a reasonable guarantee of the safety of Canadians in that region.

Oral Questions

CANADIAN POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a further question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising, I believe, out of the ambiguity of the Government's position on the Philippine matter. He has said that the Government's position is to impress upon President Marcos the reality in this current situation, but he has fallen short of recognizing the alternative for the Presidency as a result of those elections.

The Minister has suggested in ambiguous terms, Mr. Speaker, that there might be some other constellation of power—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): My question: surely it is the position of the Canadian Government that we want the will of the Philippine people to be recognized in a legitimate Government? Surely that is what the Minister is saying?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): That is what we seek, Mr. Speaker. We also believe that it would be appropriate for the people of the Philippines to make that decision—

Ms. Jewett: They already have.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —and not for the Government of Canada or some other Government to offer instruction to them before a situation that is now in evolution has taken the kind of form that would allow some reasonable guarantee of that kind of certainty in the Philippines.

I understand the interest of Members in the House in having a situation more clear cut than at the moment it appears to be. We believe that we have to deal with realities. We believe the reality now is that President Marcos no longer commands the support of the people of the Philippines.

Ms. Jewett: Because Aquino does.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We believe it important that this country and others—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Although this is important, I must recognize the Hon. Member for Skeena.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CHEMICAL WEAPONS INQUIRY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): My question, Mr. Speaker, is for the Minister of National Defence. Would he be prepared to table in this House those amounts that are now being spent in Canada for the production of both defensive antidotes to chemical weapons and the production of chemical weapons, particularly in relation to Suffield?

Mr. Speaker: That is properly an Order Paper question. I suspect that is what the Minister would want to say. Does the Hon. Member want to rephrase the question? Last question, please.

Mr. Fulton: Would the Minister of National Defence tell the House how much is being spent right now on the production of chemical weapons and defensive chemical weapons in Canada?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, apart from the question being of a nature which is properly put on the Order Paper, it would be inappropriate for me to allow that kind of fear to be aroused in the hearts of Canadians by that sort of statement. No chemical weapons are being produced in Canada and no Member of this House should try to leave the impression that they are.

Mr. Fulton: That's a lie.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Skeena will withdraw that comment.

Mr. Fulton: No.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Skeena will please stand in his place and withdraw that comment now.

Mr. Fulton: No, I won't.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Skeena will simply withdraw the statement, please, for the sake of the House. Under the new Standing Orders the Hon. Member gives me no choice. He has the right simply to stand and withdraw, or I must name him.

Some Hon. Members: Name him.

Mr. Speaker: The Member gives me no choice. I must name the Member and require that he leave the House for the rest of the day. I must do so. I must name the Hon. Member for Skeena and I must ask him to leave the House for the rest of the day, under the authority of the new rules.

[Editor's Note: And Mr. Fulton having withdrawn:]

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Get out.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. All such comment is also out of order. Let me make it clear that the rules about language and conduct apply to all.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ouellet: Well done.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Girard) on Friday, February 14, 1986, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

The petition presented by the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) by filing with the Clerk of the House also meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my point of order actually arises out of your statement to the House today. I am a little disappointed that your ruling did not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is not possible to raise a point of order on a statement by the Speaker.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I then have a different point of order, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF MR. CAMILLE MONTPETIT AS TABLE OFFICER

Mr. Speaker: I am very pleased to introduce to Members today a new Clerk at the Table, Camille Montpetit. Mr. Montpetit has been appointed, by means of a regular competitive process, to the position of principal clerk in charge of the Table Research Branch.

STANDING ORDERS

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek the unanimous consent of the House with respect to two draft orders that have been the subject of discussion between the Opposition House Leaders. I think he will find a disposition at this time for these orders to be received by unanimous consent and passed without debate. The first one is:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, provisional Standing Order 64 shall be deemed to apply from 5.01 o'clock p.m. Friday, February 14, 1986, to all written questions for which notice is thereafter received; Provided that:

(1) the Provisional Standing Orders in force prior to the above mentioned time shall be deemed to continue in force in relation to any question then remaining on the Order Paper;

(2) the questions referred to in paragraph (1) above shall be immediately transferred to the Monthly Supplement to the Order Paper—Questions.

The second one is with regard to a different subject, Mr. Speaker, so perhaps you will put that question.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader has just proposed an order to deal with questions on the Order Paper at the time the new Standing Orders are adopted. I want to say on behalf of the official Opposition that we are pleased to give our consent to this order. I appreciate the fact that the Government House Leader has, in effect, responded favourably to a suggestion I made at the time this came up a week ago.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the order. Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of the order?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

THE BUDGET

DESIGNATION OF ORDER OF THE DAY

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the second order which we have discussed which I think you will find a disposition to receive now by unanimous consent and to pass without debate is as follows:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, when the House reaches Orders of the Day on Wednesday, February 26, 1986, it shall proceed to the consideration of Ways and Means Proceeding No. 35; Provided that,

(1) if the House completes consideration of Routine Proceedings prior to 4.30 o'clock p.m. on that day the Speaker shall suspend the sitting until that time when the Orders of the Day shall be taken up;

(2) if the House has not completed its consideration of Routine Proceedings by 4.30 o'clock p.m. on Wednesday, February 26, 1986, the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings then before the House and shall call Orders of the Day; and

(3) when the Minister of Finance has completed presentation of the Budget the House shall immediately revert to Introduction of Bills in order to provide for introduction of an Act to provide borrowing authority and the House shall then resume consideration of Ways and Means Proceedings No. 35 until the debate thereon is adjourned whereupon the Speaker shall adjourn the House until the next sitting day.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity to review the proposed order. We will, of course, give our consent, although I must express my disappointment that the Government has so mismanaged financial affairs that it finds it necessary to continue to borrow.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the proposed motion. Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Point of Order—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)

POINT OF ORDER

DISTRIBUTION OF QUESTIONS AMONG MEMBERS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a point or order arising out of Question Period. As a private Member on the Government side I attempted to ask a supplementary question. In light of the reform of Parliament, I would like you to rule soon on this issue of a different distribution of questions in Question Period to all of us in this Chamber.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I did rule some time ago.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask if it is the ruling of the Chair that the 48 per cent of the private Members who support the Government are only going to be allowed three questions a day without supplementaries? This constitutes less than 8 per cent of the questions asked in the House. That, Sir, is grossly unfair. It is unfair to me and my constituents. I submit, with great respect, that it is unfair to the rest of us on the Government side of the House who support the Government but still have the on-going responsibility of representing our constituencies.

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, I have been waiting for four weeks for representations. For them to arrive, in some cases, this morning, was a little unfair. With great respect, I have already indicated my view on this matter. It is simplest to check the record for what I have said on the matter. I think that is the only fair thing to say to the Hon. Member. If the Hon. Member looks at today's Question Period, he will see that when we were able to get more Members in Question Period it was possible to share that distribution as well.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to intrude myself into this debate, but now that it has been raised, maybe I will intrude myself.

Mr. Speaker: It is not a debate.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Of course it is not a debate, it is a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Deans: Unintrude yourself now.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that the Hon. House Leader knows full well that he and I and the other House Leaders have an appropriate time to discuss this matter, and this is not it, with great respect.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member if he wishes to raise a different point or order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that next time we meet I will raise the topic discussed on the floor of the House.

Mr. Speaker: In which case I cancel the meeting. No, that is fine.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I want to be there.

CANADIAN ARSENALS LIMITED DIVESTITURE AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McInnes that Bill C-87, an Act to authorize the divestitute of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) had the floor. The Hon. Member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, before the lunch break I was attempting to put before the House the concern that we in this Party and many of the people of Canada have with the decision that is being made by the Government to divest itself of many of the Crown corporations which have been established over the years, but particularly of Canadian Arsenals Limited. This is a firm which manufactures armaments. As I stated earlier, many of these corporations were set up by the Government over the years because the private sector was unwilling or unable to provide the necessary service which it was in the public interest of Canada to have provided. Many of these provincial and federal Crown corporations have been used, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. McDermid) stated, to pay for the social services we all depend on. We have here a corporation which is doing just that. In the last year this company made a profit of $11 million. Taking a business approach, is it better to keep a company which produces a profit of $11 million to be used for those social services, or to sell that company for $90 million and eliminate the profit? That is a concern all of us should have.

Given an understanding of how we can best contribute to the peace of the world, do we want to increase the number of corporations in Canada that make armaments and leave that sector of the economy outside the control of the Government?

This is the moral problem involved in the selling of this particular corporation. We consider ourselves to be peacemakers. We have a very well-established policy concerning the sale of arms. They cannot be sold to nations considered to be a threat to Canada, to countries with whom the UN Security Council has banned arms trading, or to regimes considered repugnant because of human rights abuses by security forces. South Africa and Chile are two such countries. However, lately we have had many examples of Canada moving into the world's arms race. Some headlines recently have said things like: "Canada supplies arms to Chile and turns a blind eye to their deployment". Or, "U.S. chases merchants of death", and the article specifically names Canadians arms going to parts of the world which are unacceptable to the Canadian Government. Another headline said: "Church groups alarmed at the increase of military exports". I am not suggesting that the group which is attempting to buy Canadian arsenals is going to disperse these arms illegally all over the world. However, we do know that armaments have ended up in the hands of the wrong people before and they will do so in the future. More and more arms with the stamp "Made in Canada" are appearing in Nicaragua, Chile and other places where they have no business being. That will happen more and more if we start selling arms for profit.

At present the Canadian Arsenals corporation exists because it supplies 90 per cent of its production to the Department of National Defence. That is the way it should be. However, do we want to increase the amount of arms produced in Canada for profit? Do we want to be part of the development of a war potential by our country?

I have a number of other concerns about this Bill. The Financial Administration Act requires that the Minister lay before this House any directives he gives to a Crown corporation. This Crown corporation had to prepare itself for sale, instructions had to be given for its sale, and the terms and conditions made known to those who may want to bid on it. However, none of that material has appeared in this House. I suggest that the Government has not fulfilled the requirements of that Act in this particular case.

There is another factor involved here as well, which I mentioned before, and that is that this corporation does make money. The Government, however, cannot use it. We have had our fourth divestiture of a Crown corporation. The Northern Transportation Company did not make money, de Havilland did not make money, and they used, in each case, the idea that there was something that was costing the taxpayer money, "therefore we are good fellows and we are going to sell it even if it did supply a private service or give us the kind of pride we thought we should have as far as Canada was concerned". We were proud of de Havilland as a national corporation owned by the people of Canada, but they sold it to a foreign corporation. In this case that particular situation could not be used as an excuse because this corporation did not lose money.

So what are we doing here—and this is what I would like to know and why I think the Minister should come before the committee to explain the policy of the Government—why is the Government they selling certain parts of the Crown corporation, or all of the Crown corporations? What is the basic policy behind this divestiture of Crown corporations? Are there certain areas or Crown corporations that are not going to be sold that are sacred to the Government? But that is a word that does not carry too much credibility with this Government. Will it proceed to sell them all off? This particular corporation, because it does not fulfil the requirements that have been established in the previous sales of Crown corporations, is probably a good testing ground. This may be the time when we should ask the Government and the Minister to come before a committee of this House to explain what their policy is on the divestiture of Crown corporations.

Regardless of what the Minister said in his original statement, it is a concern of ours that this particular sale does not have the real support of the union that represents the employees of Canadian Arsenals.

On December 4, 1985, The Ottawa Citizen suggested that the union was unhappy with the Canadian Arsenals sale. There was no consultation at all. This Government, which prides itself so much on consultation—although quite often it is just one-way consultation—did not really consult the employees' union and keep it informed as to how it felt about the sale of its company.

Before we go on to some other items we should also take a look at the really serious concerns that some people have about the Department of Supply and Services handling this sale for the federal Government, a Department whose basic responsibility is procurement. It is not a company that is well versed in sales; it is a company that is well versed in buying. We have been unable to receive from this Government any of the procedural background, although the Minister stated very categorically that it was done very democratically, everybody had the opportunity to bid, and that it went through four or five bids. I think that is probably correct.

There has been no opportunity for anybody in this House—as far as I know, unless it is for one of the members of the Government who is close to the Minister—to judge whether the whole process was above board. In fact, there have been some accusations against a senior official of DSS—although he have indicated by swearing an affidavit that he was not dealing with any aspect of the CAL sale—that this could be questioned as being a conflict of interest. We need an opportunity, and therefore we will be taking a look at these items in the committee when this Bill goes before committee.

As I mentioned before, the employees are not sure of their pension right now, after four or five months of the sale being almost completed, they do not feel secure about their pension plan.

We also have another concern, Mr. Speaker, that possibly some politics were involved in this. SNC was a large contributor to the Tory election fund in 1984. The Toronto Sun stated in December of 1985 that the SNC paid $1,000 into the campaign fund of one of the Ministers of the Government. Officers of the company paid additional funds into the central Tory campaign funds. La Presse also stated that SNC contributed in excess of $10,000 in 1984 to the Tory campaign. So these things also need to be investigated before we say yes and put the stamp on the sale of Canadian Arsenals.

There is also the fact that SNC already owns almost the entire armaments industry outside of Canadian Arsenals. Valcartier Industries, which at one time was part of Canadian Arsenals, together with Canadian Arsenals will end up being almost entirely a monopoly of armament production in Canada. It will be producing for profit.

There are a number of other areas which have to be investigated. If this is a method of getting rid of the deficit or selling off some of the assets so we can turn in that money to get rid of the deficit, is this a good business procedure? I think we should investigate whether, after five years or ten years, using the corporate plan of Canadian Arsenals, the net result to the Canadian Government will be better if it keeps this company or if it sells it. The Conservative Government, which prides itself on its great business acumen, should recognize that this kind of investigation should be part of the discussion which takes place before the actual sale of a corporation.

The previous speaker did mention the need to take a good look at the value of this corporation. As I say, it is already profitable. It is our understanding that its sale value is practically the same as its book value. Do we have any real idea whether the assets of the company that are being turned over to the purchaser are not worth much more than the $90 million which he is going to have to pay? all we have is the speech made in the House and the press release sent out by the Minister. There are no figures which would give us any indication that the approach being taken is acceptable and the amount offered is actually near the amount that could be received for this corporation. The agreements which are going between the two corporations are public papers. The Minister has not yet given any indication that he will make those papers available to us. It is the responsibility of Members on the committee to demand to see those papers before we approve this kind of divestiture of a Crown corporation.

I suggest that the sale of Canadian Arsenals is the first test case because de Havilland was sold under different circumstances. de Havilland was part of a larger corporation that had a mandate to privatize.

Canadian Arsenals was established for sound reasons. The Government believed it should have control over the production of armaments that are used by Canada and that might end up in countries that should not have them. I do not believe that the Government's reasons for selling this Crown corporation are adequate. When this Bill goes before the committee we will seek the information that will allow us and the people of Canada to determine whether the Government is selling this company for practical or for ideological reasons. This review will allow the people of Canada to watch how the privatization process will take place in the future and judge whether the Government of Canada is doing what is best for Canadians.

Canadian Arsenals is one of Canada's most successful Crown corporations. I find it difficult to understand why the Government would choose to sell a corporation that is third in profitability in the last five years. We must question whether the Government is selling this corporation for ideological reasons—to show that the sale of Crown corporations is good for Canadians.

Some 90 per cent of the product produced by this company is purchased by the Government. Why is it divesting itself of its source of these products?

The corporation is required to file a corporate plan pursuant to the Financial Administration Act. According to its corporate plan, the corporation suggests that its sales are expected to double in the next few years, thereby doubling its profitability as well. When we are considering whether this is a good business deal, we must question whether $90 million is a good price for a company that may have a profit or $20 million next year.

We are also faced with the moral question of the production of munitions for profit. Many Canadians, including church groups, have stated their opposition to such a policy. This is another issue which must be taken into consideration when studying the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals by the Government of Canada.

Canadian Arsenals also suggests in its 1985-86 corporate plan that it would increase its production because it was motivated by the Canadianization of the products. However, according to an article arising from the sale of Canadian Arsenals, the Minister stated that the Government will purchase some of its munitions from NATO countries and that this corporation will be increasing its sales abroad to other NATO countries. We must question the Government's policy in this regard.

When the Government was in opposition it was active in passing Bill C-24 to amend the Financial Administration Act and make Crown corporations much more accountable to the Parliament of Canada. Now that it is in Government, it is ignoring that Act by selling this Crown corporation without giving Parliament the information to which it is entitled.

The Government sold de Havilland without requiring parliamentary approval. At least in this case the Government must bring before Parliament the sale of this and all other Crown corporations that were formed as a result of legislation. While I am not pleased with the manner in which this divestiture is proceeding through Parliament, at least the Government must bring its sale before the House, as it will with all Crown corporations formed by legislation, so that Canadians will have an opportunity to determine whether the divestiture will be good for the economy and the people of Canada.

CANADIAN ARSENALS LIMITED DIVESTITURE AUTHORIZATION ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McInnes that Bill C-87, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on the sale of Canadian Arsenals to SNC. I had a couple of concerns when I heard about this sale. First, there is no way we in Canada should be left without a company that guarantees the production of ammunition for our use in Canada such as for our Armed Forces and, indeed, the sports world, which is becoming a very demanding market. The Government seems to have adopted a three-tier system in selling Crown corporations. First, if it can, it will sell these Crown corporations outright at whatever price. Second, the Government will chop a company in half so that it will be crippled in order to make the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) look good. That is the target. It is not whether or not the Company is sold for a useful purpose. Let us face the facts. Third, the Government will just simply close a company down, period.

Mr. Boudria: Shame!

Mr. Hopkins: The Government could not care less what happens to the economy of the various regions or what happens to the individuals in those regions. Members of the Government have been making glorious remarks about increased employment statistics in various cities across Canada, but I have yet to hear the Government announce how many jobs were created in Chalk River. I asked that question the other day and no one answered me. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has no compunction about chopping Crown corporations. She will just whack them down. She does not care whom she hurts. She will just shut them down, get rid of the employees, but she will never call it a lay-off. "Lay-off" is a dirty word. The policy of the Government is to bribe them to leave, if it can, persuade them to leave, but never use that never use that nasty word "lay-off". What it is in fact is a simple decrease in jobs in a certain area.

Right now the Government is chopping away at the roots of Atomic Energy of Canada limited, another good Crown corporation. Canadian Arsenals Limited is a company which is quite a success story. Ninety per cent of its production right now is being used in Canada. One of its large customers, of course, is the Canadian Armed Forces. I am sure we all want to see an assured production of various types of munitions for all branches of our Canadian Armed Forces. That is a must guarantee with the sale of this plant.

I would also like to comment on foreign ownership. Because of the type of plant it is—there are only about two plants of any significance in Canada which produce ammunition—it is very important that ownership be retained by Canadians. I note in the guidelines that only 25 per cent of the value of Canadian Arsenals Limited is allowed to be sold to foreign owners. The preferable way would be to have it 100 per cent owned by Canadians. Another guideline seems to indicate that the company cannot be dissolved or liquidated without the approval of the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes)—so he is still keeping his hand in—as a condition of the sale. But there must be assurances that a domestic source of ammunition will be maintained for the secure supply to our Armed Forces. I do not see that security clause in the Bill.

We have just heard some comments that it is bad to sell ammunition for profit. I do not know of any well organized businessman in this world who would go into business if he knew ahead of time that he would not make a cent. So I do not agree with that statement. What is wrong with selling ammunition to our other 15 NATO partners? There is nothing wrong with that. They are our allies. We are all involved in a common cause.

Mr. McDermid: That's right. Speak to them.

Mr. Hopkins: If we are going to sell this plant, I think it behooves the Government to ensure that support for this type of philosophy will be a condition of the sale. Many countries have munition plants which are owned by Governments. I visited one in Portugal which would be similar to this, although it is not as sophisticated as the type of plant we have here in Canada. Nevertheless, it makes munitions. So if we want to support our NATO allies with Canadian Arsenals Limited when it is sold to SNC, we should do it with lots of energy, knowing that there is nothing morally wrong with supporting one's allies in the goal of freedom for mankind. If we do not have our freedom, our moral arguments cannot even be expressed because we will not have the right to do so.

I would like to know from the Minister of Supply and Services why he does not wish to table the Arthur Andersen Report which provides the details of this sale. In a letter to one of my colleagues, the Minister of Supply and Services informed him that the plant was worth anywhere between $80 million and $98 million. Surely, we have the right as Parliamentarians to see that report. If there is nothing wrong, as far as the Government is concerned, in selling the corporation, what has it got to hide? What is in the report? We know the company was sold for $92.2 million. The question then is, what is it worth? What about the $98 million figure? We also note as well—and this should be worth a lot of money to the Government when it sells a company to private industry—that there are about $200 million in back-log orders. Anyone would want to purchase a company with back orders like that. Why should they not be paying top dollar for it? The sales are projected to double in the next five years. The Hon. Member of Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) is starting to quote some figures. Just give us the Arthur Andersen Report. We will take a look at it and let the Hon. Member know what we think about it.

Mr. McDermid: You wouldn't understand it.

Mr. Hopkins: I thank the Hon. Member for his compliment. That is typical of his gentlemanly-like conduct. The Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown always comes out with some very pleasant language in this House. He is an example of what the Speaker was talking about earlier today.

• (1630)

With regard to the conditions of purchase, SNC must ensure the portability of the employees' pension fund. This is a key part of the deal, in view of the fact that the Government of Canada did not see fit to talk to the union to find out what its views were on the matter, or even to discuss it with the employees at large.

SNC must complete the modernization of the Ville Le Gardeur plant and the investment may range between $40 million and $80 million. Whether or not the investment will qualify for 50 per cent subsidy under the Defence Industry Productivity Program has not yet been determined. I think it is important that we know what is in the report of Arthur Andersen. He was the Government's financial adviser. The Government said it would be open with the Canadian people and that it would hide nothing. Yet, here it is selling off Canadian assets and it does not want to tell the people what it is all about.

As a carry-on from Canadian Arsenals Limited, it has always been Canada's policy to try to provide ammunition and equipment which is inter-operable with that of other NATO countries. I certainly want to see this policy carried on when the Government sells Canadian Arsenals Limited to SNC.

As I mentioned before, Canadian Arsenals Limited will remain 75 per cent Canadian-owned. However, with an industry such as this, which has a considerable amount of security—in fact, it must have a certain amount of security built around it—I would think it would be in the best interests of Canadians to ensure that the plant continues to be 100 per cent owned by Canadians, as it has been since its inception in 1945.

I wish to say in conclusion that we cannot possibly let this moment go by without pressing the point home to the Canadian people that the Government is bound and raring to sell off Canadian assets left and right, if it can sell them at all. When it wants to sell off Canadian Arsenals Limited, which is a very profitable company, it means that it will certainly sell of anything else it can. However, I think the point must be made here that this is the same as having the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) secretly freeze the expenditures of all Government Departments about two weeks ago. Why? To make the Minister of Finance look good on Wednesday night. That is why. The Government has even cancelled the Canadian Armed Forces hockey tournaments because it wants to save a buck. The games are all down the drain.

I want to impress on Members of the House and on all Canadians that it does not matter whether it is a matter of DND school children, a matter of hockey tournaments or a matter of a Crown corporation such as Canadian Arsenals Limited, this Government is ready for sale. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that Canada is open for business, what he really should have said is that the Tory Government is putting Canada up for sale.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Bradley).

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I am totally taken aback by my hon. friend's comparison of DND school children with the sale of Canadian Arsenals Limited. However, I leave him to his method of scare tactics. We are aware of how it is done in the Party opposite.

I think the Hon. Member would not want it to go on record as a result of the confusion which was brought out in his presentation, which I am sure was not done on purpose. He should be aware that when he points out that there must be security of ownership, he is concerned about Canadian Arsenals Limited not being able to provide munitions for the Canadian Armed Forces. I am sure he is also aware that the conditions of the sale require that SNC maintain the corporation's research and development production capability for present and future requirements for the Department of National Defence. Further, the conditions require SNC to give priority to the contracts awarded by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) over contracts from other sources, as was mentioned by the Minister this morning.

Also, the Hon. Member said that in the contract we were providing that SNC have 25 per cent foreign ownership. On the contrary, SNC is 95 per cent Canadian-owned. In fact, 500 of its 4,000 workers will own the company. In any case, it will not be a foreign-owned company.

Members of the Opposition opposed the sale of de Havilland. They put up a big scream. They said that it would be foreign-owned and sold to a foreign company. They said that if we sold de Havilland to a Canadian company then everything would be fine. Here we are selling Canadian Arsenals Limited to a Canadian company and they are still screaming. I am aghast at some of the comments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) rising on a question or comment?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have a short comment and then I would like to ask a question of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Renfew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins). First, I would like to congratulate him on his eloquent speech. I know that the Parliamentary Secretary would have wanted to do the same but he must have forgotten inadvertently.

I would like to ask my colleague a question since he is knowledgeable about military issues. In view of the fact that in 1984, Canadian Arsenals Limited made a profit of $8.5 million out of total sales of $97 million and that in 1985 it made a profit of $11.298 million out of total sales of $103.7 million, and in view of the fact that the rate of return on equity was in the order of 19 per cent last year and 21.4 per cent this year, is it the view of my hon. friend that we should not proceed with any part of this Bill until the Andersen document has been tabled in the House for the benefit of all Members of Parliament? Given these two things, and I have just illustrated for Hon. Members the ratio between net income and sales, and knowing that the Government wants to sell the company for less than the appraised value which it claims was made by Mr. Andersen and which it refused to show us, is it the Hon. Member's view that we should proceed with this Bill only after we have viewed the document?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, that is the message I was trying to deliver. What is the Government hiding? Why does it not tell us what it is up to? When we start asking for information on sales it tries to accuse us of being against everything. Perhaps we should dig up some of the speeches Members opposite delivered when they were sitting on this side of the House. They would probably recognize their own words.

I wish to straighten out one thing while I am on my feet. The Parliamentary Secretary commented about my comment on 25 per cent foreign ownership. If I have to, I will draw him a picture. I said that the requirements are that the company remain 75 per cent Canadian-owned. I did not say that it was only 75 per cent Canadian-owned, and I am sure the Hon. Member would not want to change my remarks.

With regard to what the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) just said, I do not see any problem with the Government tabling all the information with regard to this sale. If the Government is going to sell something and everything is on the up and up, what is wrong with that? There is nothing wrong with that. The record of dealings with the employees and everything should be put on the table. The Government should not create all these suspicions and then indicate that, just because the Opposition is talking about not getting information, it seems to be against everything. All we are asking for is what we deserve to have and is our right to have as Members of the House of Commons representing our share of the public of Canada.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, as you know, during the last election campaign, members of Conservative Party made a great many promises to the people of Canada. My colleague and friend, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), has documented those promises in a paper entitled The Tory Collection, 338 Commitments in the 1984 Election.

In that election campaign, members of the Conservative Party promised to give high priority to parliamentary review. That was just one of the promises of the 338 promises that were made. During that election campaign, in their thirst for power, they promised to open up the Government of Canada in order to ensure that Canadians had full and complete information with respect to the governing of this nation, subject to the rare exception when highly sensitive material should be kept confidential. Other than that, they said that Parliament and through Parliament the people of Canada should be privy to information concerning the running of this country.

What happened to that promise of an open and accessible Government, a Government that would level with the people of Canada and be honest with them? We know now, 17 long and lonely months later, that those promises were but pure and empty rhetoric.

With respect to the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited, there is the Arthur Andersen Report, a report that the Government is keeping secret. It has yet to give a reason for refusing to make public that particular report. We in the Opposition have no alternative but to question the Government as to why it wants to keep that particular report secret. One can only conclude that it has something to hide. If this deal is such a good deal for Canada and the people of Canada, why not put all the information on the table?

With the divestiture of this company, Canadian Arsenals Limited, we in Parliament at least have the opportunity to debate the matter. As you know, Mr. Speaker, when the Government decided to sell de Havilland, we were not even given the opportunity to debate the sale of that particular Crown corporation.

I only want to say in conclusion that I agree with my colleague who has just spoken about the views he has with respect to this particular piece of legislation. I would hope that before the debate on Bill C-87 is concluded the Government and the Minister will recognize that Canadians are entitled to, and indeed have a right to, full information. I cannot see the Government of Canada asking for the support of the Opposition when it is not forthcoming with full information on this particular matter.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-87 continues the ideologically motivated plunge into divestiture of Crown corporations without considering the matters from the point of view of what I think ought to be a more pragmatic approach. It is always an unfortunate thing to observe ideology overcoming good sense, but this Government seems totally committed to that point of view.

As the previous speaker indicated, at least the House is having an opportunity to debate this divestiture in contrast to the situation which occurred with de Havilland. I suppose that we should also recognize that at least in this case, there are assurances that the divested corporation will continue to be at least 75 per cent Canadian owned.

I think we should ask some serious questions, however, about the basic premise underlying the sale, but let us for a moment consider that we accept the premise. Let us for a moment accept that it is a moral and economic imperative to get rid of Crown corporations. Even if we were to accept that entirely questionable premise, there would still be some serious questions to be raised. Many of these questions have been examined in the media. Let us look at a couple of them.

First, there is the question why, in spite of the fact that dozens of companies expressed an interest in Canadian Arsenals Limited, only six succeeded in having their offers considered. We might also ask why the final bidders were forced to submit three revised bids between July and November 19, based, we hear, on the fact that the Department of Supply and Services kept changing its story. We also have to ask how we can pursue this sale under circumstances in which a senior official of DSS who is Directo General of Aerospace and Armaments left DSS on November 1 and went to work with CFN Consultants which, it turns out, was lobbying DSS on behalf of SNC which is purchasing Canadian Arsenals Limited. He may have signed an affidavit swearing that he would not be dealing with any aspect of the Canadian Arsenals Limited sale, but nevertheless, we are driven to considerable suspicion.

Perhaps, as was pointed out by the Financial Post, these peculiarities are explained by the fact that this is the first time DSS has had to travel the road of a privatizer. However, we also have to worry just a little bit about the fact that given this rather selective process of accepting bids, we note that SNC was a significant contributor to the campaign of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). We would also have to raise questions about the fact that SNC was a $10,000 contributor to the recent Tory election campaign. We must raise the question that ties in quite well with the expressions of concern on the part of those who failed to have their bids entertained as to whether this was a completely objective process.

We must also worry to some degree about the fact that SNC will now control both Canadian Arsenals Limited and Les Industries Cartier Limitée. It will have a virtual monopoly on arms manufacturing in Canada. We must also take note of the fact that recently crates of IVI ammunition were found in the camps of Sandinista Contras in Nicaragua in 1982. This raises serious questions about the extent to which we will be able to control exports. I think we should ask other questions as well.

• (1650)

Canadian Arsenals Limited has been a very successful and profitable Canadian corporation. As a most successful Crown corporation making a profit for Canadians, why should we be selling it? Ninety per cent of CAL's sales go to the Department of National Defence. If that is so, why should we be selling it? Sales are expected to double. It is the third most profitable company in Canada, and it will become even more profitable. Why then should we sell it?

Mr. Nunziata: That is a good question.

Mr. McCurdy: Unless we want to create a climate in Canada where arms are sold for as much profit as possible, why should we sell it? It seems to me that there are more serious questions to be asked.

Not too long ago there was an article, I believe, in The Toronto Star that pointed out the consequences of what Eisenhower called some years ago the military industrial complex. If one looks at the United States, one finds that we have a situation in which tremendous profits are made at the expense of the taxpayer, with repeated controversies over cost overruns of a monopoly industry supplying arms to the U.S. military, which has a complete license to charge taxpayers whatever it may choose, of corruption gone uncontrolled and unstoppable in a situation where private enterprise has complete rein in supplying arms and munitions. It is a situation that causes moral bankruptcy.

It is a situation which in Canada need not exist. Yet we are told that under privatization Canadian Arsenals Limited will expand and will probably expand its product and engage in the merchanting of arms all over the world. We hear references to the sale of arms to Third World nations. I do not know whether that is the sort of thing that the Canadian taxpayer wants to see.

I think the Canadian taxpayer does not want to see its Armed Forces well armed with high quality armaments. I do not think Canadians want to see a situation which will change the circumstances of reasonable profits being earned by reasonable costs. I do not think the taxpayers see any necessity for Canada earning income by becoming a competing merchant on the world scene selling arms to nations which ought to have higher priorities for feeding their people instead of pursuing the path of war. I do not see the justification for this.

I want to ask Members opposite what their defence is for the sale of a profitable company, what their defence is for placing the sale of armaments and munitions in the hands of private industry, what their response is to the concern of Canadians that we not follow the path of our southern neighbors where armaments become the focus of the entire economic status of a nation. I ask all Members to consider very carefully the implications of legislation which at the same time abandons the taxpayers' company and the potential for reasonable profit and reasonable sales of munitions versus a situation in which we will increase our status as merchandisers of death around the world.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I think I should point out to the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) that he continually referred to selling the munitions industry in Canada to the private sector. I am sure the Member is well aware, and I would not want him inadvertently to give the wrong impression. In reality, all other munitions manufacturers in Canada are privately owned. Of the five major manufacturers, only the one, Canadian Arsenals Limited, is a Crown corporation.

The Member referred to the fact that we would be exporting munitions with this venture. If SNC expands Canadian Arsenals' base and creates jobs east of Montreal in an area about which we are very concerned and which his Party and the other Party beside him have made many points about in the last little while, I will not oppose that expansion and creation of jobs in the east Montreal area; I will applaud them.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, It does not at all surprise me that a Tory would stand before us and say that willingly he will create jobs anywhere by selling arms. Our Party says that there are too many other needs to be met in this country, too many jobs that could be created by fulfilling real needs than having us try to create jobs in any way, shape or form through the sale of munitions to anyone.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) raises what I consider to be the most important issue facing Parliament today. He asks the question, why should we sell Canadian Arsenals Limited when it is a profitable corporation?

As you know, Mr. Speaker, last year this Crown corporation made $11.3 million, the year before it made $8.5 million, the year before that it made $6.9 million and the year before that, it made $5.3 million. In 1980 it made a $3 million profit, not a loss, a profit. The issue then becomes whether the Government of Canada should be involved in certain corporations or whether certain Crown corporations should continue to exist. We all know that the Conservative Party is philosophically opposed to the Government being involved in business.

An Hon. Member: You have got that right.

Mr. Nunziata: The Member uses a profanity to indicate he is in agreement with me. There is no need to use profanity.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think you should clean out your ears. There was no profanity.

Mr. Bradley: We said that you said something right for a change.

Métis Nation

Mr. Nunziata: I am simply trying to point out that it is the philosophy of the Conservative Party to divest the Government of Canada of certain Crown corporations. I would simply ask the Member for Windsor—Walkerville whether he believes that the people of Canada would want to divest themselves, would want to sell a Crown corporation that has shown a positive track record in terms of making money over the last five or six years.

Mr. McCurdy: That is a very interesting question, Mr. Speaker. The Government is taking all kinds of polls. The Government is polling constantly to get the views of Canadians. I challenge the Government to take a poll and ask Canadians whether they would willingly sell a company that is profitable, even at these modest levels.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member.

[Translation]

Order. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

HISTORIC EVENTS

SUGGESTED REAFFIRMATION OF MÉTIS RIGHTS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior) moved:

That:

Whereas 1985 is the centenary of the Northwest Resistance, the most important event in the history of the Métis Nation and a milestone in the history of Canada; and

Whereas the leader of the Métis people, Louis David Riel, was executed for his role in that resistance; and

Whereas Louis David Riel negotiated Manitoba's entry into Confederation and was thrice elected to the House of Commons; and

Whereas the Métis people have continued to strive, since the death of Louis David Riel, for the recognition of their rights; and

Whereas the Constitution Act, 1982 recognized and affirmed the rights of the Métis people;

Be it resolved that this House

1. acknowledge the significant contributions of the Métis people to the development of the West and the creation of Canada;

2. recognize Louis David Riel as the founder of Manitoba and a father of Confederation;

3. celebrate with the Métis their unique culture and heritage;

4. support self-government and a land base for the Métis.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this resolution was motivated by the fact that last year, 1985, marked the centenary of the so-called Northwest Resistance, or the Northwest Rebellion, considered to be the most important event in the history of the Métis people of Canada. The Métis, descendants of early white fur traders and Cree or Ojibway Indians, were a prominent group of people in the early days of the Northwest. In fact, Sir, as the first quarter of the 19th century ended, the Métis had established themselves as the most influential group in the Northwest. Historian George F. G. Stanley has stated: "The Métis regarded themselves as the advance guard of a new economic and political order".

They formed a new society on the plains of what is now western Canada. At the beginning much of the Métis community was centred around the Red River in what is now the Province of Manitoba. Prior to 1886 the Northwest was considered to be the domain of the Hudson's Bay Company. Their rather spurious authority over this region flowed from the original Hudson's Bay Company Charter of 1670 which had been granted to the Governor and the Company of Adventures of England by King Charles II for purposes of trading from that region northward into Hudson Bay.

In the year 1869 the company came to sell vast tracts of this land to the Canadian Government. As you might expect—that has a familiar ring, Mr. Speaker—the native people, the first citizens of the region, of which the Métis were the principal group, were not consulted about the nature of this sale or the amount of land involved in the sale between the Hudson's Bay Company and the new Government here in Ottawa recently established by means of Confederation.

You can easily imagine, I believe, the sense of anxiety which this move caused for the people of the Red River. The people there were deeply concerned about things that are very close to all of us today as they were then. They were concerned about such questions as their religion, their language, and the security of their land base.

Just in passing, Mr. Speaker, I will tell you that the Hudson's Bay Company got a settlement from Ottawa of £300,000 for the land to which they had a very thin legal claim, if any claim at all. Of course, the majority of the people in that community, being the Métis people, got nothing at all. I will just remind the House that such is the history of our country as it relates to our aboriginal people.

When the surveyors arrived at the Red River settlement they set out to carve up the land now considered to be government land, or so Ottawa believed that it had somehow come into possession of this land. They began to carve it up into standard 640-acre square sections. There were well-justified and very deep-seated feelings of resentment on the part of the Métis people which began to bubble to the surface as this process got under way. The people who lived there were being threatened. They were angry because they had already demarked the land according to their needs. They had demarked the land along the river in long river lots. That is the way they used it. It was convenient for them to have the land marked in that fashion, but along came these surveyors with a totally different and alien system.

Historians have pointed out that these Métis lands were now being prepared for settlement by the Government in Ottawa. They were being prepared for settlement according to the township survey system and according to the homestead regulations. These new systems and regulations were being imposed on the Métis people. There was no negotiation, consultation, or agreement. They were imposed. The real issue here was, of course, the issue of land claims, an issue which continues to the present day. Instead of dealing with land claims at that time we had the trial and error approach of the federal Government in its transcontinental development plan. The Métis people were desperate. In desperation they turned for leadership to a man who had been away from their community for a while, namely, Louis Riel. Louis David Riel came back to the Red River settlement in 1869. He had been away for a number of years attending a Jesuit college in the City of Montreal. Under Riel's very effective leadership the Métis forced the surveyors to leave with their task incomplete. Following this achievement they went on to occupy Fort Garry. They formed a provisional Government with Louis Riel as the president, then they sent a list of rights to Ottawa.

I must remind the house that there was a one-year hiatus between the HBC surrender, whether legitimate or otherwise, and the Royal Assent here in Ottawa which passed jurisdiction to the Canadian Government. The HBC authority, for whatever it was worth, had come to an end and the new Canadian authority over that settlement, again legitimate or otherwise, had not yet been established. Legally speaking, for that one year that territory was without a Government. It was, therefore, entirely legal and proper for the Métis people to establish a provisional Government. In fact, Sir John A. Macdonald himself said: "It is quite open by the law of nations for the inhabitants to form a government ex necessitate for the protection of life and property and such a government has certain sovereign rights".

Naturally, in this community at the Red River there was some opposition to this provisional Government. Some of the settlers who lived there did not agree with what was taking place. They were a minority, but they were reluctant to go along with the concept of a provisional Government. This was so, Sir, even though Louis Riel called a convention in 1869 for the purpose of uniting the whole body of mixed-blood settlers who formed over 80 per cent of the population of the Red River. He encouraged them to demand that Canada negotiate with them the terms of Canada's Confederation.

On December 8 Riel issued a "Declaration of People of Rupert's Land and Northwest" to the effect that since the Hudson's Bay Company had, without the consent of the settlers, sold the country to a foreign power—we could say, Sir, an unrecognized power—the people of the Red River were, in the absence of any legal authority, free to establish their own Government and hold it to be the only lawful as well as effective Government in the Red River.

On January 25, 1870, Riel called another convention and this time invited the French and Scottish settlers to attend. At this convention a list of rights was drawn up, the provisional Government I spoke of earlier was firmly established with Riel as the president, and this list of rights was sent to Ottawa. The House may be interested in what that list of rights contained. Here it is. An elected local legislature. Representation in the Canadian Parliament. Appropriation of public lands for roads and schools. The official languages to be French and English. Winnipeg to be connected with the nearest railway. A steamboat connecting Lake Superior and Red River within five years. The franchise to be granted to every man over 21. Confirmation of all existing privileges, customs and usages.

There was nothing very radical or revolutionary there, nothing that any of us in this House can object to, except, perhaps, the limited franchise to men over 21. However, that was still the unfortunate norm of the day and it is difficult to criticise except in retrospect. Nevertheless, as I said a moment ago, there was some opposition and resistance in the community. There followed arrests and one prisoner, Thomas Scott, was executed by firing squad. The new Canadian Encyclopedia, which has enjoyed such great success across the country, refers to this Red River rebellion as being a movement of national self-determination by the Métis of the Red River colony.

Well, if there was some resentment by a few people in the colony, there was also a controversy back here in eastern Canada. Despite the controversy over what Riel was doing, in 1870 the Manitoba Act was passed by the Parliament of Canada. It incorporated many of the rights which I quoted earlier from the Métis list of rights which had been drawn up by Louis Riel and his close advisers and approved by the convention he had called. Under the Manitoba Act of 1870 the Métis were to receive 1.4 million acres of land. Now, time does not allow me to describe the full and sad history which reveals how that land was either kept from these people or tricked away from them by one means or another, often with the banks being the major culprits. I should point out that after the passage of this Act, amnesty was granted to all who had participated in the uprising at the Red River community. Only Riel was exempted from that amnesty because it was alleged that he had played an important part in the death of Thomas Scott. So, for several years Riel remained a fugitive. However, during that period of time he was elected to the Parliament of Canada three times but was prevented on each occasion from taking his seat in this House. Finally, in 1875, Riel himself was given amnesty provided that he was prepared to leave the country, his home and his land, for a five-year banishment.

With his departure, Sir, the Métis people of the Red River began to disperse. They moved out of Manitoba, westward along the South Saskatchewan River, and there faced exactly the same problems they had faced back home. There were questions about their legal right to the land. There were those pesky surveyors once again with their preconceived ideas of how the land should be carved up and divided. So, in frustration, once more the people sent a delegation to see Riel who was now teaching school in Montana. He was asked to come back, and he did. In a meeting held in Prince Albert he urged all those in attendance, Métis, whites and Indians alike, to present their grievances to Ottawa. So you can see that already western alienation was beginning to take form. They were to present their grievances to Ottawa just as Members of Parliament from western Canada and other parts of the country present their regional grievances in one way or another to this House. Petitions were sent and, just as today, or at least before we adopted our new rules, there was no response to those petitions. So Riel discovered that the co-operation he had tried to build up among the different groups began to wane. However, there was one issue which, more than anything else, caused division, and that was the question of aboriginal rights. Does that not sound familiar? It is a question which still plagues us as we move closer to the 21st century. Riel once again resorted to a route that he was familiar with, that of the provisional Government which was proclaimed at Batoche on March 19, 1885. However, this time the situation was different. The Northwest Mounted Police were in place. It was easy to bring a militia and weapons into the area by means of the railway, and so the armed engagements of the Northwest Rebellion commenced.

The militia, under General Middleton, was sent in. There was some very, very fierce fighting and, in due course, the rebellion was quelled. Riel surrendered, was taken to Regina as a prisoner, tried by a six-man jury, and found guilty of treason. He was hanged in Regina on November 16, 1885. Sir, I believe that was a dark day for Canada. It was an event which now symbolizes injustice for the Métis people. They regard it as a cynical act, political in nature and carrying with it all of the ugly implications of racism. This despicable act is a constant reminder of the social, economic and political injustice done to our first citizens, the aboriginal people, the Métis people of the new West.

The need to somehow correct this historical injustice is, from time to time, discussed and considered by scholars, and even Members of this House. However, the idea of a pardon for Riel by the Canadian Government is now rejected by the Métis people and their leaders because a pardon, it is believed, would only serve to perpetuate the alleged guilt and make legitimate a political murder. Riel was the leader of a democratic revolution. It was the Métis who led Manitoba into Confederation and Louis Riel is the Métis father of Confederation. He rebelled against oppression, which I have described briefly but which was really much more serious than mere words can convey in a short time. He contributed to the cause of freedom and led the Métis struggle for freedom, a struggle which goes on even today.

In 1932, at a meeting in St. Albert in the Province of Alberta, the Métis Association of Alberta was formed and the minutes of that meeting are available to us. I would like to read just the opening paragraph from those minutes because they enunciate for us a basic Métis principle. It says:

> The history of our country shows that we have given service and sacrificed much in the upbuilding of the west. We have suffered as a result, but we do not forget that we are a responsible race and are prepared to play our part in the upbuilding of this country, Canada.

Today the Métis people have won recognition in our new Constitution. They are demanding their rightful place in the Confederation of Canada. Those among them who are dispossessed and who are among the poorest of the poor are seeking a land base. Others, who live in an urban environment, want some say and some influence over the various institutions that impact and impinge on their lives. A recent policy paper from the new Ontario Government says, "They may wish to receive guaranteed participation in existing legislatures, school boards and other special purpose bodies".

The one greatest priority, Sir, and I end on this note, is their need for economic development, special programs which they manage and which can lead them out of the dreadful poverty cycle in which they find themselves. When the resolution talks about self-government or self-determination it is those kind of goals that are referred to, goals that are reasonable and obtainable. I ask this House to consider carefully and to give its consent to this resolution. It is submitted on behalf of the Métis people of Canada, and if we were to respond to it positively, I believe we would be acting in the spirit of our new Canadian Constitution, which recognizes that the Métis people are one of the three major aboriginal groups in our nation.

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, today is a very, very special day for me and my father in that I became a proud grandfather and he a great-grandfather for the first time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. St. Germain: I am honoured to speak of my Métis heritage during this debate, only hoping that the words and the thoughts that I convey today will one day show my new granddaughter that she has a special heritage and a family history to be really proud of.

I would like to take this opportunity to express my views on the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner). At this time I would like to point out that without question I know that the intentions of the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior are above reproach. I think all Canadians can look to the Métis heritage with pride, recognizing in it a strength and vision which characterized the mixture of Indian blood lines with those of our early European settlers, and which continue even up to today. The motion presented to us this afternoon seems to consist of two very different issues; the recognition of Louis David Riel as a national figure, which is undoubtedly an important step in the right direction, and the issue of self-government and land claims by the Métis people of this country.

I would first like to mention that as a Métis brought up in Manitoba I am fully aware of the important contributions of the Métis people in the development of the western provinces. There can be no question of the importance of Louis Riel's support in giving direction and inspiration to the Métis people in their participation in the Canadian Confederation.

This motion seeks recognition, not only for the Métis of Canada but also for their recognized leader, Louis David Riel.

The question of whether Louis Riel should be recognized as a father of Confederation is interesting, and at the same time seems a bit irrelevant. I would like to clarify that. In explaining my vision of Riel's commitment to Canada, I would like to speak briefly on the question of whether Riel should be recognized as a Father of Confederation. This is an interesting one. Certainly he should be recognized as a prime mover of Manitoba into Confederation, but what is a Father of Confederation? It appears that there is no official list of Fathers of Confederation, only a traditional list. Tradition in Canada has been to refer to the delegate at the three pre-Confederation conferences as Fathers of Confederation. These conferences were in Charlottetown and in Quebec in 1864 and in London in 1867, and comprised some 34 delegates. No official protocol list exists that describes the Fathers of Confederation. Many will point out that Joey Smallwood has frequently affectionately been referred to as the only living Father of Confederation. This appellation pays homage to his contribution of bringing Newfoundland into Confederation. Even this designation is based on usage rather than on legality. In fact, he is not a Father of Confederation. Extending the logic of pre-Confederation conferences, if Mr. Smallwood is a Father of Confederation, so too are all of the other signatories at the Ottawa conference in 1949, which led to the entry of Newfoundland into the Union. I am referring to Louis St. Laurent, Gordon Bradley and many others who were all signatories at this time.

You can see that there is no easy formula to determine who is a Father of Confederation. It could create a dangerous precedent to be selective as to who we assign that designate to. In effect, each province has its own history of pre and post Confederation development. Each is equally important to the Canada that we know today.

In clarifying my vision of Riel's commitment to Canada, I think Riel should be honoured as a truly great Canadian and should stand alone on his own merits. Riel not only contributed to the formation of this great nation, he went even further, he laid down his life for that very cause. I honestly believe that this legislation cannot change the course of history, and that Riel's role cannot be limited to that of a Father of Confederation. He represents more than just a political figure, he is a maker of history.

Consultations have taken place with Métis leaders prior to the introduction of this motion before the House, but I am of the understanding that no consultations took part with the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior. I have spoken to the leaders of the Métis movement just as recently as this morning and they informed me that they have not been consulted. Possibly he has met with them. He stated in his delivery that he had and, as I say, I do not question the integrity or the intentions of the Hon. Member. In my discussions with them, they stated that no consultation had taken place prior to the presentation of this motion to the House. In the past the Liberal Party paid only lip service to the plight of the Métis. It actually used us for political expedience, and only now is it examining the possibility of giving that national hero the medal that he deserved 100 years ago. History cannot be corrected 100 years later. Certain Parties have always tried to portray themselves as the great saviours of the Métis cause, but what did they actually do for the Métis of the West? I will tell you what they did, they spoke of the poverty we lived in, prejudices we were subjected to, the lack of educational opportunities that they spoke of, but they did nothing about them. There were family upheavals and discrimination. I know what grave injustices were done, I lived them. I spoke to Angus Spence before he passed on so suddenly last year. He was a prime mover and shaker within the Métis organization in Manitoba. He told me of the discrimination that he lived with in his part of Manitoba, of the religious discrimination that existed even among the Métis that was brought upon them because of the discrimination within the Province of Manitoba. It seemed that the darker one's skin as a result of one's ancestral background, the more the discrimination. I have lived it.

Previous Governments had somehow hoped that the guilt that had been borne by all Canadians would simply disappear like a bad dream. But we remember, and we only wish that Riel will rest in peace and be honoured as a true patriot. We do not want this to carry on. We want Riel to take his rightful place as a Canadian. As Métis, we do not want a preferential spot; we want an equal spot like the place held by every other Canadian in this great Canadian mosaic.

Riel was three times elected to the House and represented the Provencher constituency during a very unstable political period. If we try to understand the forces on the political stage at that time, we realize that there is no doubt that the Métis people and Riel played a vital role in the founding of Manitoba. There is no doubt that Riel is a true national figure.

Let me speak briefly to the second element of this motion. As my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior knows, land claims are now under review by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie). There is no doubt that their land was taken from them. The Hon. Member spoke of long river lots that were inhabited by my grandfather, Jean Baptiste St. Germain, Louis Zastre, the Monette and the St. Denis families along the Assiniboine and Red Rivers. Some of them managed to maintain their lands but much of it was taken.

When we go back to the history of La Prairie du Cheval Blanc we recall the names of Cuthbert Grant, Pascal Breland and up to the time of Angus Spence. We think of those who worked so fervently to improve the plight of the Métis.

There is no doubt that injustices were done at that time. But again, I go back to the original motion. I believe we are dealing with two important issues but one is clouded by the other if we do not deal with them separately. Riel is a true national hero. I do not understand the relationship between the two aspects of the Hon. Member's motion. Hopefully, all of the items raised by the Hon. Member will be resolved to the satisfaction of those who were so adversely affected.

Let me reiterate my position as a Métis. I am proud of my ancestry. I thank the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior for his wish for recognition of the national Métis hero, Louis David Riel. Riel cannot be resurrected from the dead and we can only try to learn by history's lessons. We must always remember that our duty is to seek to do justice within our own time.

I have spoken to members of the Métis organizations across the country. I want to consult with all Parties in the House in seeking to establish a true method of recognizing Louis David Riel for the great Canadian he was. I will be taking it upon myself to consult with the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) in the hope that we can establish a unanimous consensus as Canadians and politicians in bringing forward a resolution that would be acceptable to all and would truly reflect what Riel was and what he contributed.

I would like to make my last words in the debate those of Louis Riel, who was never able to offer them in the House. He said:

[Translation]

"One's country is the most important thing on this earth, and it is hallowed by the traditions of one's ancestors".

[English]

Let us reflect on this man's heroic stance in our nation's history and not resurrect our past mistakes but go on to build a better, stronger and proud Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to debate the resolution that has been submitted by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner). This is not the first time I have had an opportunity in the six years I have served in the House to speak on the significance of Louis Riel and the contribution he has made to the Province of Manitoba, the development of western Canada and the development of Canada as a whole.

I have introduced resolutions under the old Standing Order 43, calling for the pardon of Louis Riel when that was being sought by the Métis people themselves. Their position with regard to a pardon has changed and they no longer believe that a pardon would be sufficient to recognize the role Louis David Riel has played.

I have lived all of my life in Manitoba. I was always amazed that we did not study Louis Riel very much in school. We learned about the railway and that he was a person from Saskatchewan causing trouble with the railway. We talked about how Manitoba was developed as a province but the actual study of the contribution made by Louis Riel and the Métis was passed over in one or two days.

As a former teacher of history I will certainly not blame the teachers or those who wrote the curriculum. It is a matter of their perception of history at that time. They had their vision of Canada as a nation of the English and the French. They had their vision of Canada in the west developing as a natural consequence of the expansion of the Anglo-Saxon and French population base from the east to the west in this country. That was a natural oversight and I do not think it can be said that it was a matter of racial prejudice or tension that existed between the English and the French in Manitoba.

We now have a chance to move forward. I have gone to many of the communities in my riding where the Métis live and I have noted that there is more study being done of the role of Louis Riel and of the significant contributions the Métis people have made to Manitoba. In many ways, the fall-out of the French language dispute which occurred in Manitoba just two years ago has helped to remind people of the original contribution of Louis Riel and the fact that he, through his emissaries, negotiated with the Government of John A. Macdonald and has guaranteed the rights of the English and the French in that province. That is something which many politicians refuse to recognize even at this time. But there was a constitutional clause which guaranteed the rights of English and French groups and certain religions and also recognized that there was a group of people, the Métis of Maniotoba, who had the right to their own land. That is something which is still sought by the Métis people. They have hired Thomas Berger, a former Justice of the British Columbia Supreme Court, to represent them on this issue through the courts. That is one route the Métis people of Manitoba have taken to try to resolve the land issue.

Other things are happening as well within my province and I would like to talk about them. One of the previous speakers who now represents the Province of British Columbia, was born and brought up in the Province of Manitoba. He mentioned that there are other problems the Métis people face. The Métis people are really a nation which was founded in Canada as a result of the history of our country. There was the intermixing of the native population with those who came to Canada because of the fur trade and the Hudson's Bay Company, and for homesteading. The Métis people, especially in the riding I represent, but in other parts of Manitoba and western Canada as well, have not had the type of economic development or Government assistance from which other Canadians have benefited. We have all heard the statistics given by Hon. Members, including myself, in the House. We have talked about the need for native people to get post-secondary education, to become doctors, lawyers, nurses, social workers and to develop their own businesses. We have also talked about the terrible statistics with respect to the health of the Métis and other aboriginal people. We know about the tuberculosis, alcoholism and other diseases from which many native people suffer. We have heard of their mortality, their shorter life-span. It is no wonder that that has become a real concern because as I travelled around western Canada I saw the type of housing of the Métis people. I know of the lack of water and sewage. Quite often their drinking water is completely unsafe. They have no protection as do the Treaty Indians. The federal Government has recognized responsibility to provide education and water and sewage for Treaty Indians. Mind you, that is a responsibility which federal Governments have reneged on for many years and it is still an issue in many of the regions in my riding. In fact, the federal Government has not provided adequate water and sewage and is making no real attempt to come up with a system to provide them. We can compare what is happening with the Treaty Indians, who at least have the protection of the treaties. The federal Government is supposed to provide some basic necessities for the Treaty Indians. In many cases, they are much better off than the Métis people who are basically without any protection, without any land or real home site in western Canada. Some of them have land in the southern parts of the provinces, but in the north the Métis people were shoved off the reserves and tended to live in communities that were adjacent to reserves but without any clear title to the very land that they, their fathers, and sometimes their grandfathers and grandmothers—not to be sexist—had lived on for years. They trapped that land and fished off its shores. They had existed there. They were brought up there and their families were raised there. They were brought up there and their families were raised there. But there was no legal recognition of that fact. They were excluded from homestead Acts, for example.

I am proud to say that within Manitoba much of that has changed. There has been a recognition that there needs to be an improvement in the way of life of native people whether they are Treaty Indians and officially under the sponsorship of the federal Government or whether they are Métis people who in many cases have to rely on provincial Governments for their support.

It is interesting that the Métis National Council, in its issue which came out this winter—and which includes a copy of the draft resolution submitted by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior—talks about how the Council sat down with Premier Pawley and how they agreed on the need to promote Métis economic development. They talked about the increased need to recognize Métis culture and heritage, about the need for Métis participation in the delivery of services and programs to meet their own particular needs and circumstances, and they agreed that the Métis people must participate in Government decision-making in matters which directly affect them. So there is a process which has been going on in northern Manitoba, where the bulk of the Métis live, although they live elsewhere as well, to ensure that we do what we can to aid in the development of the native people, to make sure they have education and levels of services in their communities commensurate with their size. That is happening but it is still only a partial effort. There are things the federal and provincial Governments must do in order to ensure that native people, whether they be Treaty Indians or Métis, have that which they need in order to develop.

As a New Democrat from Manitoba, I think we have made great strides in the last 20 years in my province. I am sure that other Hon. Members from Manitoba, regardless to which Party they belong, would agree that this has happened. But that is not to say that all has happened that should have happened or that all is perfect for the native people in the province.

In the last 10 or 15 years, housing programs sponsored by both the federal and provincial Governments have increased the quality of housing. When I first moved north in 1970 there were Métis people living in tar-paper shacks in Manitoba. I know from my travels to other parts of Canada that the same thing could be said of Ontario and other parts of this country as well. There were almost no native teachers in northern Manitoba. There were no native social workers. There was no one with native ancestry taking training to become an engineer. There were very few native people in any university program whatsoever. The idea of a native businessman was something that no one would have thought would ever exist unless it was to do with some freighting for the Hudson's Bay Company. That was their status some 20 short years ago in the Province of Manitoba. We now have a program, again sponsored by both federal and provincial money—actually a number of programs—which encourage natives to become teachers. Over 300 people have completed those programs and are now teaching within Manitoba. There is a program for the development of native social workers. There is a program for nursing. There are also other programs to encourage the economic development of native people both individually and through their communities.

The history of Louis Riel does not have to be debated in this House. I think all of us recognize his contribution. There may be some who would argue about the details of it. However, there can be no legitimate debate with respect to the fact that Louis Riel was the founder of Manitoba and that through the process he established the Provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta were able to develop in a way which may not have happened had the negotiations not taken place between the people of the Red River settlement and the Government of Manitoba in the years 1869-70. That was a negotiation which took place between the people who lived in Red River and the people who were running the Government in Canada. It set out the Manitoba Act, which is the basic constitution of the province. It obviously influenced the development of our province. By anyone's definition that would be good enough to ensure that Louis Riel be recognized as the founder of Manitoba and a legitimate Father of Confederation in his own right. I hope that would not be questioned by anyone in this House.

What we have to do is to find the best means to further the economic development of the people of Métis ancestry, just as we have to ensure that we develop the possibility for economic development for the other aboriginal people of Canada. We will make mistakes as we go along that road. However, it is incumbent upon us to recognize that, when Government talks about restraint, hopefully, in the Budget which is to be tabled two days' hence, we will not find that programs which would enhance native economic development are being cut.

Even though we will make mistakes with regard to the development of economic opportunities for native people and even though we offer training programs, such as the one with regard to limestone development in northern Manitoba—a massive development under the native affirmative action program—we must ensure that certain people in our society do not try to turn us from the road we must follow. Even though from time to time we may find that native leaders and native businessmen will make mistakes, perhaps with money which comes from the Province of Manitoba or the coffers of the federal Government, we should not allow certain elements of our society to turn us from the road we must follow. It will take a massive commitment not only to solve the health problems and to provide basic housing but to provide the proper education, training and economic development opportunities for these people. Anyone who says otherwise is not really thinking.

As I said earlier, there will be failures as we go along this road. However, we as representatives of the people of Canada should be willing to accept that. We should be willing to get up and say that there will be problems, but that should be no reason to cut off funding. Certainly, there were problems with some native leaders who perhaps misused money. In some cases it was done illegally and in others it was done in ways not very different from the way federal Cabinets sometimes deal with money. That is to say money was spent in ways which we would not judge to be the wisest expenditures of money.

However, when we hear such voices—and they are often from the right, but sometimes they come from other parts of the political spectrum as well—we should say that, yes, there will be failure and that, yes, there has been abuse, but let us look at what we should be doing together in the country to help those who need our help the most. That should be the criteria of the programs. We should be judging the programs on the basis of what we can do to help. We should ask how this can best be achieved. We should say no to those people who are benefiting or trying to benefit by attacking the native people and yes to those who seek to help them.

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, as a Quebecer, I feel it is important to take part in the debate today on the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), and I wish to congratulate him on his presentation today in the House. I also want to thank and congratulate the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St-Germain) who is a Metis and a Member of this House, and who serves the Government of the Canada, and I want to express to him my appreciate of the work he is doing in our Government.

Metis blood runs through his veins, and in the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody, we have a shining example of what the Metis people stand for.

Since we have very little time left, I would like to comment briefly on one aspect of this motion that bothers me a little, and I am referring to the recognition of Louis Riel as the founder of Manitoba. I think no one here in the House would challenge this title, but my objection is that it should be left up to the Province of Manitoba to recognize its founders. What would the Metis people or a province think of having the federal Government making this decision? Mr. Speaker, I see this as a form of interference that would be very ill-received by the provinces. I think it is up to the provinces to name their founders, and not up to the federal Government which has no business in this area.

That is the only reservation I have regarding the motion before the House today, and once again, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior on a motion that shows great sensitivity to the history and aspirations of the Metis people. And as a Quebecer, I would like to repeat that I also feel great affection for and a great affinity to these people who are seeking their own identity within the great Canadian mosaic.

[English]

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to speak to this motion and congratulate two Hon. Members. I wish to congratulate my friend, the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), who is one of the most respected Members of this Chamber and who is eminently qualified to bring forward a motion which draws to the attention of us all the continuing concerns which we have about the situation which the Métis people have faced for so many years. I also wish to congratulate the Hon. Member who spoke just before me for the brevity of his remarks in order that the Government and I, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State, can point out that we as a Government consider the nature of this motion an extremely important one.

I wish to move directly to the fourth point of the motion which deals with self-government and a land base for the Métis. I do not think there can be any doubt of this Government's support for increased self-reliance for the aboriginal peoples. For example, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) has placed before the House a Bill designed to establish self-government for the Sechelt Indian band of British Columbia. The Government is pleased to welcome any proposals from other aboriginal communities designed to further reliance on their own capacities. Likewise, and I think we only have time to emphasize this one point, the Government has supported the efforts of aboriginal peoples to have a right to self-government enshrined in the Constitution. As my colleagues from all sides of the House have pointed out, that has to be one of the key developments to happen in many years in terms of the recognition not only of the Métis but of all aboriginal peoples, in terms of enshrining their rights to self-development andd self-government in the Constitution.

To this end the 1985 First Ministers' Conference on aboriginal matters brought together the Governments of Canada and of the provinces and representatives of aboriginal organizations and the territories to discuss ways to achieve these goals. On behalf of the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) and the Government of Canada I can say that we are actively working to achieve the goals which were set out in the 1985 conference.

I would once again like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior for bringing this most important matter to the attention of the House and to the people of Canada.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—SUGAR-BEET INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POLICY. (B) ONTARIO AND QUEBEC CORN PRODUCERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, on February 4 I rose in the House to inquiry as to the Government's policy regarding sugar. I did this because the sugar industry is in trouble. Last year, for the first time in 60 years, no sugar-beets were planted in Alberta. Two weeks ago, the refinery in Winnipeg closed, putting 95 people out of a job and possibly spelling the beginning of the end for the sugar industry in Manitoba. In Ontario and Quebec, several hundred sugar-beet growers, along with the 25,000 farmers who grow corn for the high fructose corn syrup market, face an uncertain future.

[Translation]

The normal and artificial evolution of raw sugar prices on the world market over the last four years is just about to put out of business the Canadian sugar beet industry.

[English]

Ninety-five per cent of world trade in sugar consists of long-term buying and selling agreements. The remaining 5 per cent is sold on the free market, which is generally conceded to be a dumping ground for excess sugar. In most of the years since 1960, world production has exceeded consumption and as a result, the prices in this small free market have been greatly depressed, often to but a fraction of the real cost of production for any country. Canada buys about 90 per cent of its sugar on this free market at bargain prices. However, unlike other sugar-producing developed countries, Canada forces its own producers to meet and compete against these artificially low prices.

Our sugar industry is obviously being damaged by these imports, but the Government refuses to refer the matter to the Canadian Import Tribunal. Unlike the Government of the United States, it refuses to support producers by instituting a floor price for raw sugar. In short, regarding sugar policy, this Government is continuing the non-policy of the last Government.

It has been argued that for health reasons, we should not encourage an increase in consumption of sugar. However, that does not mean that we should let Canadian sugar-beet and corn growers go out of business. Do not forget that over 90 per cent of our sugar comes from overseas but we go on consuming sugar. The question really is: Where should it be grown?

It has already been argued that it is just good business practice to keep importing sugar at artificially low prices as long as we can. For some people that might be good, but is it good for Canada as a whole? I say hardly.

Never mind that cheap sugar is dumped on the market at below the cost of production. Never mind that this makes it even more difficult for developing nations to diversify their agricultural production into food crops for local consumption. Never mind that it further threatens our way of life by throwing farmers, machinery manufacturers and refinery workers out of work and onto the unemployment rolls. Never mind that the U.S., the European Community, Japan and other developed sugar-producing countries protect their producers.

The hard fact is that consumers in this country tend not to benefit from the low-price policy. If we were benefiting from that policy, why have we not noticed a decrease in the price of ice cream, candy, soft drinks, beer, bread, sweetened yogurt or frozen and canned foods? It sounds like the same old story that we have been hearing recently in the House about the petroleum indistry and the long wait for the lowering of the prices of gasoline.

The decline in the domestic sugar industry also means that consumers are subjected to wild fluctuations in the price of sugar. Most people in the industry remember the tripling in price that occurred in 1980 when foreign supplies ran low. Prices in Canada jumped three times. If that is what the Government means by good business practice, it sounds a lot like short-term pain for long-term pain. As the President of the UPA recently stated:

[Translation]

"We believe that it would not be in the national interest to let such a strategic industry disappear."

[English]

The Minister himself was getting to the crux of the matter last October when he stated that we in this country ought to think pretty long and hard about being totally dependent on somebody else for an essential food.

● (1805)

[Translation]

But the Minister has had enough time to think. He has been putting off the decision for too long. It will be March next week. Last week, or rather last year I asked why this delay.

Last April, he replied:

We wish the decision could have been made earlier but we are preparing a long-term policy and it takes time.

He went on to say:

I repeat, a decision must be announced this week because sugar-beet growers will have to plant their crop very soon. If they do not plant this year we will lose a major agricultural industry.

In January the Minister told us that a national sugar-beet policy would be unveiled by February 10—

[English]

In his words "at the very latest". Why was the announcement not made? Given the importance of the industry, why has there been such a delay? Is the Government siding with some factions of the industry which benefit greatly from cheap sugar at the producers' expense? Is the Government afraid to establish a national sugar policy because it has just killed the National Energy Program? Is the Government afraid of following the example of other countries in erecting barriers against artificially low-priced sugar? Is the Canadian sugar industry an indirect early casualty to free trade negotiations?

If the Minister fails again this week to make a clear statement on the issue, the Government will reinforce the impression that the sugar industry in Canada is expendable. Producers in other sectors, producers of eggs, hatching eggs, chickens, dairy products, hogs, fruits and vegetables will grimly take note. They and other Canadians will be filled with foreboding as they see their Government by its inactions submitting its citizens to a buffeting by factors beyond their control.

The Government had to decide whether it wants a sugar industry as part of Canada's agricultural economy. The Government has to decide soon, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) for raising this issue tonight. It gives me an opportunity to clarify a few things.

First, the Hon. Member is correct when he said that we are concerned about the Canadian sugar-beet industry. If that had not been the case, we would not have announced in the spring, 1985, a program by which we hoped most sugar-beet growers would plant their crop. That is what happened, with the exception of Alberta. Unfortunately the Alberta growers could not come to an agreement with the sugar refinery in Alberta. The same kind of support was available for producers in Manitoba and in Quebec. They planted and harvested a sugar-best crop. Some money made available from the federal Government has already been mailed to producers and some is in the process of going out. We are concerned about the industry.

Second, if we were not concerned about the industry, we would not have begun to look at the possibility of establishing a national sugar and sweetener policy. I think that is obvious.

The Hon. Member should be aware that we called a meeting July 24 in Ottawa. We asked all participants concerned about the sugar-beet industry in the spring, 1985 to attend. Representatives of the provinces of Albeta, Quebec and Ontario attended because of their concern over the high fructose corn syrup industry. Producers were there, refiners were there, the industrial users were there. Everybody was there except for the Province of Manitoba representatives. I found that unfortunate and I think the Hon. Member should know that.

If he wants to show as much concern as he does here tonight, he should be talking to his counterparts in the New Democratic Party in Manitoba and asking them why they have not been as concerned about the industry and why they did not choose to participate and help the federal Government in terms of establishing a national sugar policy.

The Member should know that Manitoba Sugar did not close down two weeks ago in Winnipeg. It simply sent out notices against the possibility of there not being a crop planted in Manitoba this coming spring. They are required by law to give 90 days notice in Manitoba. They do that against the possibility of there being no sugar-beets to process. We are concerned about the sugar-beet industry. We are the first Government ever to begin to look at a national sweetener policy. That is evidenced by the fact that we are well advanced in making a decision. Unfortunately, a decision has not been made as quickly as I or anyone would have liked. I am a farmer and the Hon. Member is a farmer. He knows that the sooner those kinds of decisions are made, the easier it is for farmers to plant. I know that. Ideally we should have had a decision sooner, but we are attempting to be fair to everyone involved, including the producers and the consumers.

The Member rightly pointed out that some of the benefits of the low world market prices have not flowed through to the consumer. That is true from the evidence that I have seen. At the same time, we are attempting to be fair to everyone involved. There are jobs at stake.

With regard to the amount of sugar that is consumed in the country, he should know that about 30 per cent of it ends up on the table and about 70 per cent is used industrially in further manufacturing. Those are things which we are taking into consideration. I would again suggest that if he really wants to make his case he should be talking to his NDP colleagues in Manitoba and asking them to be helpful rather than dragging their feet. The more co-operation we receive in this matter, the better it will be for everyone, above all the sugar-beet industry for which we are trying very hard to develop a policy which will allow that industry to survive and prosper as it has in the past 60 years in the country.

THE ECONOMY—INTEREST RATE LEVELS. (B) EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR. (C) GOVERNMENT POLICY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, on February 3 the Canadian dollar fell below the 70-cent mark for the first time in history. Three days later the Bank of Canada borrowed $2.4 billion to add to our foreign exchange reserves, which are used to defend the value of the dollar, and began intervening heavily in the market to prop up our currency. The Bank of Canada then jacked up interest rates by more than two-thirds of a percentage point in a further effort to attract investors. Prime interest rates rose within hours from 11.5 per cent to 12.25 per cent, their highest rate in 15 months.

The Government takes the position that this action to boost the dollar was necessary in order to halt a speculative attack on our currency which, according to the Government, was prompted by "negative sentiment" about our economy. Clearly there is doubt and uncertainty, but it is due less to inherent problems with the economy than to the Government's lack of resolve or agenda to deal with those problems. The Government's costly intervention in the market did nothing to address this fundamental problem which was what triggered speculation in the first place.

The decline of the value of the dollar over the last few months is due to a lack of confidence internationally in the ability of the Conservative Government to manage the economy. Even before the dollar fell below the 70-cent mark, the Government was devoting considerable effort to attempts to keep its value up. It was obvious because short-term interest rates have been steadily increasing over the last few months. The higher interest rate policy did not stop the dollar from sinking to an historic low. When we consider our domestic economy, the consequences of continually raising interest rates give much cause for concern.

Higher interest rates discourage spending and encourage saving. This is not a good prescription when our goal is to sustain and strengthen economic recovery. Higher interest rates mean it costs more to borrow. Therefore, businesses cannot afford to expand or to hire new staff, consumers have to reconsider or postpone large purchases, and people renegotiating mortgages will pay more. Higher interest rates mean less economic growth and a larger deficit, because higher interest rates mean more interest added to payments on the national debt.

The recession of 1981-82 was the worst since the Depression. We are recovering from it now, and our first objective should be to do all we can to build on that recovery. We should be concentrating on jobs, economic growth, and stability. Rising interest rates constitute a major obstacle to achieving those goals. Unless interest rates drop, economic growth will slacken and we will have no further improvement in the employment rate.

The Government sees deficit reduction as the key to lower interest rates on the assumption that a reduced deficit will revive international confidence. The other side of that coin is that Government restraint measures aimed at cutting the deficit take money out of the domestic economy, thereby making economic growth and job creation harder to come by.

The Government must act promptly to ease interest rates in order to avoid undercutting economic growth. It must make a serious effort to address the matter of declining international confidence in the ability of the Conservative Government to manage the economy. We cannot afford any more flashy but shortsighted manoeuvrings on international currency markets. We cannot afford any more bank bail-outs or tax concessions to large corporations, or open-ended tax exemptions. Nor can we afford to let high interest rates choke off economic recovery, or tax away the purchasing power of low and middle-income Canadians. This week the Government will bring down its second Budget as well as the Estimates for its expenditures over the next year. Let us hope that the Government moves to correct the inequities arising from its first Budget and to articulate, through new proposals, its view of the way to revitalize the economy and strengthen recovery.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I made a few notes for my reply to the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). First of all, I was astonished when she referred to the inequities in the Income Tax Act, since we know that the Income Tax Act was largely a product of the previous Government. We did not make the Income Tax Act what it is today. The former Liberal Government did.

Mr. Speaker, I may remind the Hon. Member that to date we have closed the loopholes in the legislation and that furthermore, it was this Government that introduced the minimum income tax. I think this should be recognized instead of just talking about what the Income Tax Act contains.

Now, to get back to interest rates, the short term rise in the bank rate was justified as a way to counter the negative speculation going on around the Canadian dollar. I believe that in the final instance, the market, and not a person, agency or government, should be allowed to set the value of the Canadian dollar. That is how we intend to proceed. However, the Conservative Government has committed itself to the extent that it will not allow private intervenors to play games with the value of our Canadian dollar. And was our basis for intervening.

Economic recovery in Canada—and I think this has been amply demonstrated—depends on creating jobs and on a reasonable inflation rate. Mr. Speaker, as far as job creation is concerned, we have created 560,000 jobs in Canada in eighteen months, resulting in an unemployment rate of less than ten per cent for the first time in five years.

Mr. Speaker, last week, and not eighteen months ago, I was doing some door-to-door canvassing in my wonderful riding of Trois-Rivières. The people are happy. They are glad to have jobs. They are satisfied because we brought the unemployment rate down, and we are going to bring it down even further. I think that is the main point.

Canada's Gross National Product has grown two per cent more than its U.S. counterpart over the last year. Our productivity has improved, which makes us more competitive on international markets. Mr. Speaker, that is what the Conservative Government has accomplished.

Mr. Speaker, most economists and analysts have said that the declining value of the Canadian dollar was due to speculators. Since everything else in the economy is doing fine, the unemployment rate is down, the inflation rate has decreased, the dollar should normally rise within a reasonable delay and interest rates should drop again in the near future. As evidence, the interest rate at noon was 11.84 per cent as compared with 12.1 last week. At noon today our dollar was worth 72.4 cents.

So, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has got the Canada's economy under control and is making sure that everything points towards renewed growth, lower unemployment and brightening prospects generally.

CRIMINAL CODE—ACQUISITION OF FIREARMS BY PERSONS CONVICTED ON GUN CHARGES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, at midnight on August 11 of last year, two police officers knocked on a door in Metropolitan Toronto. They had a search warrant. They suspected that the resident of the house whose door they were knocking on, Allan Boyarski, was hiding illegal drugs and that he was likely armed. As soon as the two police officers, who were in plain clothes, identified themselves, Boyarski drew a 32 calibre hand-gun and fired at the police. Obviously, the police fired back. An exchange of shots took place and, at the end, Boyarski was dead.

A short time ago this incident was investigated by a coroner's jury in Toronto. They discovered that five months before his death he had been convicted of illegal possession of another hand-gun. That hand-gun had been confiscated from him at that time, but the firearms acquisition certificate that he had used to acquire the gun was not confiscated. In fact, between the time of his conviction and the time that this incident occurred on August 11, 1985, just five short months, Boyarski apparently had acquired two further hand-guns and he used them in the shoot-out with the Metropolitan Toronto police.

As a result of that, the coroner's jury recommended that the Criminal Code be amended to ensure that anyone convicted of a firearms offence within the past five years have their firearms acquisition certificate automatically confiscated. As a result, they would not be in a position to acquire any other weapons with that same firearms acquisition certificate. Also, they would not have the right to get a new firearms acquisition certificate within the five-year period after the conviction.

Of course, a magistrate has to make an order denying that certificate. The jury recommended that there be an automatic cancellation of any outstanding certificate and that no new certificate be issued. That would be an automatic part of a conviction for a hand-gun offence of that sort.

On February 10 I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) if he would be prepared to amend the Criminal Code of Canada in accordance with the recommendations of the coroner's jury. At that time he indicated that the following Friday—that would be a week ago this past Friday—he would be meeting with his provincial counterparts in Vancouver and that they would be discussing the whole issue of tougher gun control regulations. I am sure that when he got together with his counterparts, the provincial Attorneys General and Ministers of Justice, they undoubtedly discussed the usual concerns that are raised whenever tougher firearm regulations are dissussed. There are a good many of those concerns, as Members know.

There are concerns raised by hunters who feel that it is their right, their privilege, and that it dates back historically, to bear arms and to use those arms. There are the concerns that are usually expressed by target shooters, and I have them in my own constituency, who feel they have the right, and they have had it for many years, to acquire and possess weapons and use them for target practice. Many of them belong to target clubs and use them within an organized club setting. There are the concerns, of course, of those people who have antique guns. In fact, this past Christmas season I visited a home which had a wall full of antique guns. It is a long-standing historical right to collect guns and to have them around. There are also the concerns of those who use guns in their profession or occupation. That is another long-standing right. All of these various concerns, whether it be hunters, target shooters, gun collectors or professionals who use these guns in their occupation, have certain rights that have been built up over time. They have some legitimate concerns and reasons for having possession and being allowed to have possession of firearms.

Having said all of that, I think it is quite clear that the public also has a right to be protected in their homes and on the streets from the fear that somebody may have a gun and use it to injure or kill them or their families. I believe that right overrides the rights of the hunters, target shooters, gun collectors and professionals. It is a right that we must look after and protect. This must be done through a form of tougher gun control. One way to accomplish this is to take the recommendation of that coroner's jury in Metropolitan Toronto and amend the Criminal Code accordingly. That would go a small way toward giving us some further protection.

The Parliamentary Secretary has had the benefit of consulting with the Minister and the Minister has had the benefit of consulting with his colleagues. I hope that tonight the Parliamentary Secretary will be able to tell us that there will be changes, that there will be tougher gun controls, what they will be and when they will be introduced.

Mr. Bernard Valcourt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I would like to be able to tell him tonight that the details of the amendments he is seeking to the Criminal Code will be in the next Bill. I can tell him that his concerns are shared by the Department.

I am assured by the Minister that when the next set of amendments are brought to the Criminal Code, these gun control provisions will be the subject matter of amendments. This decision of the Minister flows from his meeting with the Attorneys General of the provinces that was held last week.

When these amendments are brought forward, we can have a debate in the House that will enable all Members to discuss these rights to which the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) has referred. Surely, people have a right to be protected but there are also the rights of gun collectors and hunters. I believe that we can achieve a just balance and it is with this in mind that I think these amendments will be brought forward soon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.29 p.m.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 362 will be answered today.

[Text]

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH TAX CREDITS

Question No. 362—Mr. de Jong:

1. Since 1984, how many Scientific Research Tax Credits (SRTC) have been utilized to date by companies or individuals whose asset size are (a) under $1,000,000 (b) $1,000,000 to $9,999,999 (c) $10,000,000 to $19,999,999 (d) $20,000,000 to $29,999,999 (e) $30,000,000 and over, and in each case, how often were such credits resold or flipped by the above listed through companies or individuals?

2. Since the implementation of the SRTC, what (a) has been the total revenue loss by the Government (b) will be the total revenue loss expected by the Government?

3. What was the total revenue loss calculated at, prior to the Minister of Finance's announced moratorium on the SRTC?

4. What is the revenue loss expected to be since the Minister of Finance's announced moratorium or freeze on the SRTC?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): 1. The Department does not capture statistics that reflect the assets of companies or individuals who have utilized the SRTC program.

Since the passage of the SRTC legislation on January 19, 1984 until December 31, 1985, there have been 8,572 designations filed by 1,862 corporations representing $3.4 billion in Part VIII tax. However the total of $3.4 billion includes some $800 million in "rollovers" (purchases of credits by one research company from another research company resulting in double accounting) leaving actual Part VIII tax of $2.6 billion. Of the 1,862 corporations, about 60 per cent were involved in quick-flips.

2. An estimate of the revenue loss to the Government cannot be provided until after the tax returns of the corporations involved have been audited by the Department's auditors.

To December 31, 1985, as a result of monitoring and review of the designations filed, collections enforcement was actioned on $410 million Part VIII tax, on which payment or security of $118 million has been made. In addition, Part VIII tax of $111 million has been voluntarily paid or secured.

3 and 4. The Department of National Revenue did not calculate revenue loss prior to the Minister of Finance's announced moratorium of the SRTC on October 10, 1984. Data which was collected as part of the Department's monitoring process was communicated to the Department of Finance and that data related to the number and value of designations which were being recorded.

As mentioned earlier, revenue losses for this program cannot be calculated until after the corporate returns in question have been examined and all avenues of recovery fully implemented.

[Translation]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

WAYS AND MEANS

DUTY RELIEF, REDUCTION AND DEFERRAL PROGRAMS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Finance) moved that a Ways and Means motion respecting the Consolidation of Duty Relief, Reduction and Deferral Programs, laid upon the table on Thursday, May 23 1985, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-98, an Act to consolidate various enactments that provide for drawbacks, reductions, refunds and remission of duties, other than export drawbacks for which provision is made in sections 82 to 87 of the Customs Act, to amend the Customs Tariff and to repeal or revoke the enactments so consolidated, be now read the first time and be printed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in introducing this Bill for third reading I would like to make some observations that were not permitted during the report stage, and to clear up some of the confusion that has been generated in previous debate.

I would like to remind the House of the purpose of Bill C-55. The combined effect of these amendments is to allow the IAB to do more work, to be more efficient, and to retain effectiveness in the face of a mounting queue of appeals. The Bill will also equalize appeal rights between citizens and permanent residents of Canada.

Through the debate it was evident that some Members opposite feel that Bill C-55 is designed to eliminate the refugee claims backlog or pre-empt Parliament's options for a new determination system. Mr. Speaker, the Bill will do neither.

The IAB has a backlog in immigration appeals and in refugee determinations of greater proportion than can be managed by 32 new Members. This capacity, however, will allow the Board to reduce the immigration appeal backlog and prevent further growth until a new and simpler system is legislated and put into effect. Not to do this would deprive many people of an opportunity for a hearing within a reasonable time, and would be an invitation to even greater abuse of the claims process than is now taking place.

In regard to pre-empting the form of a new system, I can only reaffirm that the options remain open. The fact that these appointments are being made to the IAB signifies only that for the time being we must work within the existing system. The new appointments are short term so that in future we will have choices regarding the housing of a new system without being constrained by the existance of a large ongoing organization. The fact that we are adding more capacity to the IAB will not satisfy those Members opposite who think an amnesty is the only thing to do. However, it will satisfy the broader community who wish to see our compassion dispensed with due regard to merit. I hope all Members will therefore join with the Government in giving speedy passage to this Bill.

The Bill proposes several amendments to the Immigration Act. They are minor in nature and designed to increase the flexibility and capacity of the IAB to deal with a greater number of cases. Under the current Act the maximum number of Board members is 18. We realize that with one as chairman and the guideline of three members per hearing, we have the option of five teams to do the work. This Bill would increase the maximum number of members to 50. The Board reviews appeals of family class applications which have been refused abroad. It hears appeals against deportation orders by certain people who have come to Canada and have not been admitted or who, having been admitted, have run afoul of the Immigration Act. The Board also makes a redetermination of refugee claims which have been evaluated by the Refugee Status Advisory Committee but subsequently rejected by the Minister.

All of these categories of cases are important, but the Board has far more work than it can do. This Bill will permit the Board to appoint new members as needed, for two-year terms, with the possibility of one extension depending on the workload. In addition, the number of vice-chairman will be increased from five to 13, giving the Board even greater flexibility. The Bill would also require that not fewer than half the vice-chairman be members of a provincial bar for at least five years. To ensure that Board members are used effectively, the Bill would permit the chairman to delegate responsibility on technical matters to one-member panels and, on more serious matters, when the parties consent, to a single-member hearing.

The Supreme Court of Canada ruled in the Singh case that all refugees before the IAB were entitled to an oral hearing. The effect of this decision is to lengthen the already long line of people awaiting hearing before the Immigration Appeal Board. The increase in membership will permit more redeterminations and thereby respond to the Supreme Court's ruling.

In addition to the refugee claims' backlog there are also more than 1,000 family sponsorship appeals pending. Families which cannot be reunited because of a legal prohibition must wait more than a year to determine whether relief may be possible. Some of these cases involve the parents of Canadians for whom delay cannot be sustained. Bill C-55 goes farther than simply reducing the delay for these people. It extends the right of appeal to permanent residents as well as Canadian citizens. The right of appeal has always been available only to sponsors who are Canadian citizens. In our view that is not consistent with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Therefore, this Bill will grant the right of appeal to permanent residents as well as Canadian citizens. I represent a community which is 50 per cent ethnic in nature. The City of Saint Laurent, one of our important cities, has some 68,000 people, and 50 per cent of those are members of cultural minorities, all of them immigrants to Canada. We know the great challenge people face when they give up everything in their homeland to come to a new country, quite often with only the shirts on their backs, and then be faced with lengthy delays in the immigration process. So, it is really a proud moment for me to be able to participate in a process which will speed up this whole operation and once and for all help clean up the backlog.

As I tried to state very clearly, this Bill does not pre-empt what will be done in future legislation dealing with the refugee determination process. We are trying to correct an existing situation and allow new legislation to cover the refugee experience in days to come. I hope all Members of this House will give speedy passage to this Bill on third reading so that the IAB can continue its effective work in days to come.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, is a Bill which the Minister responsible has said, in this House and in Vancouver recently, would go far to correct some of the problems faced by the Immigration Appeal Board. There is nothing wrong with the Bill in that it certainly will do something. However, it will not do what the Government claims it will do. Perhaps I can give an example to show exactly what I mean and impress upon the Government the necessity of some urgent action in this regard.

I have heard Members in this Chamber, especially Conservatives, whenever I have said anything about immigration, say to me: "Well, how many immigration appeal cases have you had?" or: "What do you know about immigration?" I must admit that I do not deal with as many cases as some Members from central Canada or other provinces. However, I can tell you that in my home community of Gander, Newfoundland, over 100 people a year depart from aircraft arriving from the Soviet Union, East Germany, Cuba or other East bloc countries, to claim political asylum. When I look at this Bill I see that it will only take care of that number of people who get off those aircraft in Gander, Newfoundland, that is all.

The Government says it is going to address a problem. What is the problem? The problem is a clogging of the system of appeals before the IAB. This Bill increases the size of that Board. It does what a judge in a Canadian court said should be done with respect to oral hearings. However, all it does is to take care of an extra 100 or 200 appeals a year. In other words, it will take care of Gander, Newfoundland, but it is not addressing the problem.

No one knows the exact number for sure, but there are over 15,000 people claiming refugee status who have to be dealt with by the IAB. Under the family sponsorship appeal program there is an additional 1,500 or so waiting to be heard. Those numbers are increasing daily, yet the Government of Canada has the audacity to come into this Chamber and say that by dealing with this Act to amend the Immigration Act we will over the next two or three months increase the size of the IAB, and effect other changes. To do what? To correct the problem that we have in Canada today with appeals under the Immigration Act.

As I say, there is not much wrong with the Bill, but there is not very much right with it either when you look at the size of the problem that we have in Canada today. It does not address the major problem of the backlog. It does not do other things that have to be addressed by this Government. It does not do anything to address the unfairness of the immigration system that we have in the country.

You could have a case of somebody who wants to bring over a family member from some other country. That sponsor may have had that appeal before the Board for a couple of years, and perhaps there is a stalling tactic at the other end for those family members. I can cite for you a case where a gentleman wanted to bring over his father and his sister. For five years that case was stalled until finally the father died. The sister, by this time, had reached the age of 21. Then, of course, sponsorship went right out the window. For five years that was held up. Now, granted, it wasn't solely the responsibility of the Appeal Board because they had a problem on the other end.

Let us consider the case of somebody who gets on a plane in one country and is perhaps briefed on what to say, or the answers to give to the questionnaire that he is given when he arrives in Canada claiming refugee status. On the basis solely of that questionnaire his or her answers to the questions determine whether or not that person will be successful in being able to remain in Canada. Then I compare that to the other case where somebody waits for five years and does not make it in the end anyway. You can see a tremendous unfairness within the system. The Bill does not address that either.

What does the Bill address? It does not address the backlog, it does not address the unfairness in the system. It does not address the fact that Canada is now seen as the place people who know the system and are able to work it can be successful in getting into this country. There are many who should be allowed into this country but are not successful. I do not know what else to say about the Bill except that it does not do very much; it does nothing.

Mr. Boudria: A band-aid.

Mr. Baker: The Hon. Member said a band-aid. You could call it a band-aid, but there are different sizes of band-aids.

Mr. Boudria: A small.

Mr. Baker: There are very large ones, small ones, medium ones, so I suppose this is a strip off the small one. But I cannot see any other good that it does. Yet the Government of Canada has this incredible problem which was created over the past year and is not doing a thing about it. Some 25,000 people are held in limbo. I suppose this is because we are a signatory to the United Nations agreement, but to do nothing about the problem is absolutely ridiculous.

I do not know what the Government intends to do. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary said: "Well, this is not the ultimate solution because the Government of Canada is going to do something." It is going to take some action". What we want to know is when the Government of Canada is going to take some action. What is it going to do? How is it going to relieve the unfairness in the present system which has come to light over the past year, since this Government took office? I suppose that is all one can say about it, it doesn't do anything at all. Perhaps it helps 100 or 150 extra cases a year, enough to take care of Gander, Newfoundland, but it does not address the problem at all.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I rise, in the absence of the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), to join in this debate on Bill C-55. I have been listening with interest to the Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) addressing this matter and describing the Bill in various ways. I may characterize the Bill somewhat differently from his characterization, but certainly it is a fine question in terms of timing and the value of this Bill to decide exactly how to characterize it.

I note that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976, was given first reading in the House on June 19, 1985. It comes to us now for third reading late in February of 1986. In the interim a number of important things have happened. One of those has been the report of Rabbi Plaut on the question of refugee determination.

This is certainly a very serious problem that faces the Government of Canada, a matter of very great concern to many Canadians and a matter that is of interest to every Canadian in terms of our undertanding of Canada's place in the world in providing a place where refugees can find a refuge which preserves their lives and allows them to re-establish family and property. If they have to lose everything except their lives somewhere else, they should be able to make something of themselves in the large spaces, and I trust the friendly climes of this country.

The matter of refugee determination is an enormously important one which this Bill is surely designed, in the Government's mind, to address. That is precisely the difficulty that faces us, because Rabbi Plaut's report has not been the only one which dealt in a humane and compassionate way with the difficulties that face persons who regard themselves as refugees from one country or another.

This Bill comes before us now for third reading after the Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration has considered it and provided in its fifth report, tabled in the House last November on November 7, a range of recommendations designed to furnish the Government of Canada with means to deal in a compassionate way with the matter of refugee determination.

The Government has 120 sitting days in the House to respond to that report. So we continue to wait. The Government has almost until the end of April to provide its response to that report of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. I am concerned about what the Government's response will be. If the Government tells us in the next couple of months that the action taken as a result of Bill C-55 is adequate to deal with the enormous administrative and human problem of refugee determination, we will know that it has failed to fulfil its obligation to provide compassion in the administration of Government. That is why we are awaiting the response of the Government about a new structure of refugee determination. I fear that the changes to the Immigration Appeal Board we are considering may be the Government's view of an adequate response. If so, it has failed the people of Canada and will have lost a place in the honourable traditions of this country.

We recognize that the present Immigration Appeal Board is hard pressed and that an increase in its number is in order. In fact, the Hon. Member for Spadina has proposed an increase to 36 to allow the board to expand its activities and meet other immigration appeal needs that exist. However, we are concerned that increasing the personnel to 50 in order to take care of all cases may be a temptation not to establish the kind of refugee board that is called for.

It is of great human importance that a review board be established to provide a different approach to the problem and allow for procedures that are not adversarial, as they are with the Immigration Appeal Board. We must not have an appeal structure that continues the full adversarial traditions that govern our law courts with their ancient Anglo-Saxon roots of trial by ordeal. We are dealing with refugees who often come from societies where they have been attacked and suppressed by authorities in their countries after being involved in struggles for human rights and social justice against repressive regimes. The Government must establish a refugee board whose procedures make it possible for those claiming refugee status to present their case in a non-adversarial setting. It could be in the nature of an interview by a couple of people who listen carefully and exemplify the kind of compassionate approach to refugees for which Canada takes pride. The Government will have failed completely if it does not establish such a refugee board and only proceeds with an increased Immigration Appeal Board with its adversarial setting.

I suggest that the Bill is useful only if it provides additional resources for an immigration appeal process which has been overloaded with cases that should have been dealt with long ago, given the enormous backlog. Obviously, we have no objection to expanding the Immigration Appeal Board to 36 in order to ensure that those cases not involving refugee status are dealt with more expeditiously. However, the concern remains that this will be a small response to very large problems. Since we are still awaiting a response from the Government, we are not assured that it will establish a refugee board with different procedures that will ensure a relaxed atmosphere and humane consideration for the situation facing people who have come to Canada from many parts of the world.

There is another disturbing aspect to the establishment of a larger Immigration Appeal Board. In order for the new appointees to deal immmediately with the backlog they will have to immerse themselves in the subject and learn a great deal to provide proper adjudication of these matters. There are questions about the advisability of appeal board members becoming specialists. However, this is likely to happen with the striking of sub-boards or splitting up the board to hear cases. The expanded Immigration Appeal Board will not be able to fulfil its responsibility of dealing with refugee claimants in the fair and humane way that Canadians expect of those appointees.

There are numerous reasons why I hesitate to call this a good Bill. I might call it a good Bill if I was assured that the Government plans to take the action recommended in the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. Then one could regard this Bill as simply an improvement to the ability of the Immigration Appeal Board to hear cases. However, we will only know how to regard this Bill with the passage of time, when we know whether the Government plans to develop the institutions that are required to live up to our tradition of compassion and openness to refugees.

I make those reservations because of our experience with another bill coming from the Department of Employment and Immigration dealing with employment equity. One could not regard the provisions of that Bill as objectionable if they are part of a genuine Employment equity bill. The provisions of that Bill provide for reporting, suggest that standards be established and arouse hope that there will be progress made by employers. However, practically everyone in the country who is genuinely concerned about the achievement of employment equity in Government and business across the country is convinced that there should be a timetable and well formulated plans as well as an adequately established and financed enforcement mechanism to ensure that employment equity will in fact be achieved.

After weeks of consideration of that Bill in the committee and in the House, it does not appear that the Government plans to move any further than that quite truncated Employment Equity Bill. As my Party's critic for multiculturalism, having seen the Government fail in the development of employment equity in this area, I am concerned that this Bill to expend the Immigration Appeal Board to deal with the backlog of cases will continue to be the mechanism for those seeking refugee status to present their cases and that the adversarial procedure will continue to be the norm. The officers who seem by their practice to think it is more important to exclude people from Canada than it is to provide refuge in this country will continue their work. Those manifestations of a mean spirit which one sees in a Conservative Government at various times will continue to be exemplified in this area unless we are fortunate to have a Government which acts responsibly. I should not call that "fortunate", should I? We expect responsible Government and we expect a compassionate Government in this area. Later this year we hope to see the Government present a Bill to establish the refugee determination board, or whatever it may be called, which provides for those non-adversarial procedures which will ensure that those frightened people, those people who were tortured in their country and still bear the wounds of this oppression in their minds and spirits and in their very bodies, will have a fair, generous, open and compassionate opportunity to have their refugee status established. If that happens, then I will be prepared that day to look back for a moment and say that Bill C-55, which deals with other matters as well as with the backlog which does require additional resources, and with 50 members rather than 36 members, was probably a good Bill. In the meantime, I suspend judgement on this Bill. However, out of a concern that a penny-pinching Government is not going to do that, I will in fact be voting, even if only on division, against this Bill. I fear that the Government is not going to act.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member who just spoke if he agrees with his colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), who spoke on this subject yesterday? He said quite forthrightly that Immigration officers were making decisions in overseas posts by way of their friendship with dictators in those lands. Would the Hon. Member agree with his colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, with that spurious allegation?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the knowledge which would allow me to agree or disagree, so I probably cannot provide any satisfying response to the Hon. Member. Perhaps I could say that I hope to God that is not true. I hope to God that for the sake of this country, which values its land as a place where refugees can find escape from the oppressive regimes which tarnish the face of the globe, no Canadian officers anywhere in the world would be involved in anything of that sort. Perhaps that indicates where my heart lies. The information is not in my hands.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak very briefly on Bill C-55 this morning and perhaps take the opportunity at the same time to say a few words on the whole immigration issue. I am a new Member of the House of Commons and I am not located in a riding where a large number of immigrants live. Nevertheless, as we all do, I get a number of immigration cases and I cannot help but get the feeling of how unfair the present system is with its built in unexcusable delays. There are cases of constituents who come to see us and tell us that their spouses have been deported. Sometimes the people have been married for years, and the spouse has to leave the country and reapply to come back in order to join their loved ones.

One of my constituents has been waiting two years for her husband, who is now in India, to be able to apply to come back to Canada. Her husband had been here on a student visa. They got married and he lived here for some years with his wife. He then had to leave the country in order to reapply to come back. Of course if one was in the country illegally at that time, one would expect that that person would have to rectify whatever was inadequate on one's dossier, to start with. However, that being said, to cause a family to be separated for years in order to accommodate a shuffling of papers hardly seems fair to me.

An individual who had been sponsoring his sister to come into this country phoned me last year. The difficulty in this particular situation was that, although the individual had filled out the proper documentation, the young woman at the other end who was applying to leave had to obtain an exit visa from that particular regime. By the time she received the exit visa the application filled out by her brother had already elapsed. The Canadian applicant applied again to have his sister allowed to come here, but by the time his new application had been processed the exit visa for the sister had expired. Any system which creates that sort of difficulty for no logical reason cannot be considered as fair.

Bill C-55, in a very small way, as the Parliamentary Secretary indicated, hopes to address some of the issues involving backlogs but, obviously, it is not going to correct the situation I have just described. In our offices abroad there are such backlogs in processing applications that the resultant delays are causing a complete denial of justice.

Mr. McDermid: That's unfair.

Mr. Boudria: Does the Hon. Member opposite want the floor?

Mr. McDermid: It's very unfair.

Mr. Boudria: If the Hon. Member wants the floor, I am perfectly willing to let him ask questions later. Perhaps he can start writing one out now and he will have finished the first line in the next half hour. Meanwhile, I will continue to speak on behalf of my constituents, whether he likes it or not.

There are other immigration issues with which I have had to deal in my constituency which are equally unfair. As you know, Mr. Speaker, because you do travel extensively through the riding I have the honour to represent, my constituency is largely rural. Of course, many farmers do apply to have people come into this country to work on their farms. Some of them, of course, are only temporary workers and that would not involve the discussion at hand here. What is of concern to me the people who come into this country to work on a permanent basis on Canadian farms. There are many decisions made which are equally unfair, and I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to take note of some of these problems. Hopefully at some point in the future they will be corrected for the benefit of those people I represent.

There is the case of a farmer in his sixties who had a person from Holland come to work on his farm. This was part of the student exchange program. The young person who came from Holland was a graduate in various sectors of agriculture, principally dairy production and other related fields involving the raising and production of dairy products. He had a proficiency and knowledge of such issues as artificial insemination, the records of production of dairy cattle and so on. This particular person was highly qualified in this field.

Unfortunately, in this particular case the farmer became very ill and had to be hospitalized for some time. He applied for permission to have this individual stay in the country for a longer period of time because without him to run his farm it would cease to operate. He obtained a short extension. However, the farmer, not being in any better state of health after some period of time, was in a situation in which he wanted this individual who came from the same country from which he had come to remain on his farm on a permanent basis. He was told by people in the Department that that could not be done on a permanent basis because in their view there were ample Canadians qualified to perform this type of work. So the farmer placed an ad in the newspapers, as he was required to do, in order to find a Canadian who had the knowledge for which he was looking. No one applied. I should not say no one applied because apparently at one point in time one individual did apply. The applicant had been working in the bush or something like that and had absolutely no knowledge of farming. He had no knowledge of modern technology or farm machinery.

There are those in the Department who evaluate these types of situations who are still of the opinion, unfortunately, that people working on farms are not too qualified and that anybody could do the work. They felt my constituent had been unreasonable in not accepting the person who was not qualified. All this to say that at one point immigration officials wanted to deport this individual. By so doing they would have effectively shut down a very large dairy farm in my constituency since there was absolutely no one left to run it. It was even quite difficult to find someone just to assist the farmer in taking care of his farm operations. It was definitely not possible to find someone of the proper calibre and with the proper experience to actually manage the farm operation. I see an Hon. Member sitting across the way who has some knowledge of agriculture. I am sure he would agree that we want people in agriculture who are not only well meaning but who have some knowledge of what they are doing, such as the farmers we have in my constituency.

In this particular case I had to make representation all the way up to the Minister to obtain a temporary extension to have this individual stay for another short period of time. It was eventually granted. It would have been completely outrageous had it not been granted. However, one cannot help but wonder in cases such as this why it is necessary to have dozens of interventions, interviews, refusals, appeals and more appeals to the Minister in order to obtain what was only just and equitable to start with and which most reasonable people should have been able to recognize the very first day. It was very difficult to convince the authorities that, indeed, this was the proper decision.

The unusual thing about this situation is that the whole process involving my constituent was taking place at the same time as I was hearing cabinet Ministers in the House making long-winded speeches about how we should be increasing our immigration targets. They were telling us that they wanted to increase immigration targets, at the same time as they wanted to deport some people who were working in my constituency, people who we could not do without in terms of the needs felt by the farming community.

So I say to the Parliamentary Secretary that although a large number of the issues I have raised have nothing to do with the number of judges sitting on the Appeal Board, they nevertheless have to do with the whole malaise which exists within the immigration system in Canada. I hope that he will take note of these few points.

Some of the situations have been with us for many years and some have even gotten worse over the last year or two, as has been pointed out by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). However, whether these inequitable situations have existed for six months or six years, the fact remains that they need to be rectified and addressed as soon as possible by all Members of Parliament. They are not issues on which we want to be separated along Party lines. I think we will want the system to be fair.

I believe all Parties have indicated their willingness to agree with the new quotas which the Minister has recently indicated. We all want the process to work. There is no disagreement among Members on all sides of the House that it be approved. What is needed now is the willingness and desire to put the machinery in place in order to sort out the areas in which we have huge backlogs. Bill C-55 identifies one small area. However, there are others, such as the people in our offices abroad who require far greater attention in terms of taking care of the backlogs.

To summarize, I believe there is a willingness on the part of all Members, and it is my hope that there is a willingness on the part of the Government, the Minister, the Parliamentary Secretary and the officials in the Department, to take note of some the things about which we are talking today in the hope of correcting inequitites which exist in the system, both in terms of the representation in the appeal process and elsewhere where the system is deficient.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there questions or comments?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. I know he is new in the House and does not have too many immigration cases in his constituency. There are a couple of things I would like to point out to him, especially since immigration is probably one of the largest constituency problems I deal with in my riding of Brampton-Georgetown.

The Hon. Member alleged that the hold-ups in our embassies throughout the world, the bureaucratic delays, are causing some concerns. I point out to him that there are only three countries in the world which have open immigration policies today. They are Australia, the United States and Canada. Canada probably has one of the most liberal immigration programs in the world today—small "l" liberal.

The literally hundreds of thousands of applicants who wish to come into the country every year is mind-boggling. I have just returned from a business trip to Yugoslavia where I saw the line-up of people who wish to emigrate to Canada. No matter where I go in the world and no matter what embassy I visit there are line-ups of people who wish to come to Canada. Were the Hon. Member to reflect on what he said about the bureaucracy and those who work extremely hard in our embassies to try to accept applications and wade through hundreds of thousands of them, he would want to retract the accusation he made that in fact they are holding up immigration to the country. I think he will find in fact that they are not, that they are doing an excellent job under difficult circumstances in most instances and he would want to back off from that type of statement.

I will be very brief with my final point. Members of Parliament always end up dealing with the problem cases. We never hear about the cases that go through without any hitches and they are by far the majority. We hear about the problem cases and we can stand here day after day talking about them. I think kudos should go to the Department and to those who are involved in the immigration end of things for the great job they are doing for this country.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I listened very attentively to the Hon. Member across the way. Perhaps if he had listened a little more attentively to what I said he would have been able to understand it. Let me repeat it a little slower so that perhaps he will be able to understand.

I indicated very clearly to the Hon. Member that the delays that were being caused outside this country were the same as the delays we had internally with the appeals process, and that we have to deal with the number of people who can process the applicants. Very clearly, we cannot merely rubber stamp applications. We do not want undesirable people to enter this country. What we must do is increase the number of people who can deal with the process and make decisions. Leaving at the same level the number of people working in offices elsewhere in the world will not solve the problem of my constituent who waited for years and is still waiting today as we are talking to have her husband re-enter the country—

Mr. McDermid: He did something illegal.

Mr. Boudria: —even though they have been married for a long time. The individual in question did not enter this country illegally. He came to this country, stayed here as a student and later on got married and stayed here for some time.

Mr. McDermid: Why was he deported?

Mr. Boudria: Under the laws that exist now, the individual would be allowed to stay in the country because he had been married for a certain length of time. That law was changed only a few weeks after the individual had been deported. The law was changed by the present Minister. Before accusing my constituent, the Hon. Member should be a little more aware of the facts.

The Hon. Member said that we only hear about problem cases. I would hope so. It is our job as Member of Parliament to fix the problems of our constituents and to make this place a better place for them. It is not our job to take things that are right and make them wrong. It is our job to take things that are wrong and make them right. That is why I was elected as a Member of this House.

Finally, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for complimenting the previous Liberal administration on the immigration policy that was established in this country.

Mr. McDermid: The inexperience of the Hon. Member is showing through again. The present Immigration Act was the result of the work of three Parties over a number of years. The Bill was put together by all three Parties and agreed to unanimously by all three Parties in the 1970s and was brought into effect in 1978. For him to take credit for his Party is not being entirely honest with the electorate.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, again I suppose I did not say it slowly enough. I want to thank the Hon. Member for complimenting the previous Liberal administration which was in power in 1978 at the time the law was passed. I thank him very much for that compliment to the Liberals, and a great administration it was.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in listening to the introductory remarks by the Parliamentary Secretary during his speech at third reading stage of this Bill. He referred to his constituency as being a highly ethnic one. My constituency of Winnipeg North is and has always been, since people began to move to western Canada, the gateway for immigrants to Canada, particularly for those who are usually called ethnic immigrants.

My father came to this country 80 years ago from the Ukraine. Today a very substantial number of my constituents are of Ukrainian, Polish, Jewish and German origin. We have always been proud of that. In recent years, these people have been joined by other immigrants who have come from many other countries. I know that in listing them I will miss some groups, but they have come from Portugal, China, India, the Phillippines, the West Indies, Laos, Vietnam, Chile and Yugoslavia. They have come to this country to live in my constituency, as well as in many other urban constituencies, and they are making important, useful contributions to this country.

As I am sure is the case with the Parliamentary Secretary, constituents from many of these countries regularly come to my office because they need help. What is the help they need? They need help because they have relatives they want to have join them in Canada. Very frequently these requests are turned down. Why is this? The Government of Canada requires them to have a certain level of income so that when their relatives come to the country the applicant can guarantee that the relatives will not become a charge on the state, and the incomes of many of these people are too low. I will deal with that in a few moments. As well, they are turned down because of the kinds of jobs these prospective immigrants fulfil in Canada.

I have taken up many such cases, and I am sure in some cities like Toronto, Vancouver or Montreal in which there are many more immigrants than there are in Winnipeg, Hon. Members have taken up even more cases. I have taken such cases up with the present Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. McLean) and the present Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). Under the Liberal administration, I took up many such cases with Liberal Ministers. Time and time again I was turned down. I have frequently pleaded for the Government, Liberal or Conservative, to take a more humane attitude toward this situation. In theory, members of all Parties support family reunification. I thought things were going to be better with this Government.

The present Minister of State for Immigration made a statement on October 31, 1985, on this matter. This statement is reported at page 8218 of Hansard under the title "Immigration", "Future Levels of Immigration—Statement of Minister of State (Immigration)." Let me put on the record some of the things he said:

> Immigration levels are being increased to 105,000 to 115,000 in 1986 and 115,000 to 125,000 in 1987 . . . During this period, the level will be rebuilt in a moderate, controlled manner which will, in a balanced way, support the reunion of families, the admission of humanitarian immigrants and the selection of economic immigrants.

He went on to say:

> First, family class. The family class will remain the cornerstone of immigration policy, and we will continue to process applications on demand.

He went on:

> The Government is going to emphasize increasing the number of assisted relatives and other independent applicants who have, since May 1982, been unable to emigrate without a validated job.
> These individuals will be admitted on the basis of a revised selection system. Qualifications and skills will be stressed. Preference will be given, however, to assisted relatives through the allocation of bonus points.

That sounded very good, Mr. Speaker. On the same day, in commenting on that statement, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) indicated that he had certain reservations. Let me put on the record a couple of the reservations about which he spoke. In his speech he said:

● (1210)

> The category of families and the category of assisted relatives are being unnecessarily held back by the practices of the Employment and Immigration Commission. They are being held back in three ways. One is that excessively high incomes are demanded of Canadians who wish to bring over, to sponsor an assisted relative.

Then he went on to say:

> There is also the matter of the visa offices which are very poorly distributed in the countries from which many of our immigrants come, and it takes sometimes years to process an application because there is one office for India, two offices for all of Africa, two offices for all of Central America, and those have to go through Trinidad.

Then, in referring to the Minister, he went on to say:

He has implied that there might be an increase—he has not stated it—in the family class. In fact, there is no increase.

That was last October. I have to say to the Parliamentary Secretary, as I would say to the Minister if he were here, that I find I am still having the same difficulties. I had a case from India where the application was turned down. When I pressed the Department, I received a letter giving the detailed reasons for the application being turned down. I gave it to the persons who approached me. They accepted the objections. They went back and took care of every objection; they met all the objections which were listed in the letter. Months have gone by and the applicant has still not been permitted to come to Canada.

I should like to deal with the question of income requirements. The Government says that it believes in family reunification, but if one of my constituents—and this is not only happening in the City of Winnipeg—wants to bring in his or her sister who is married and has a couple of children, the applicant is turned down because he or she does not have an income of over $20,000 per year. Not many new immigrants are so well established that they have an income of over $20,000 per year.

I could show the Minister the correspondence in one particular case. The applicant in question said: "Well, my income is a couple of thousand dollars below what you say is required. My brother is also prepared to join in the application, and our joint income is substantially higher than what is required". However, they were told that the Department does not accept joint applications and joint incomes. What the Minister implied in his statement about family reunification is not working, because the income requirements are far too high for most new immigrants.

Let me deal with another requirement. The Minister said there was a list of occupations and that if the person for whom an application was being made had those qualifications, he or she would be given points. I have the list in front of me. I say to the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary that it would be ludicrous if it were not so sad.

Let me put on the record some of the occupations which supposedly help applicants—managers in natural sciences, engineering and mathematics; managers in social sciences; administrators in medicine and health; chemists, physicists and meteorologists; civil engineers, electrical engineers and industrial engineers; economists, sociologists, social scientists and psychologists. That is just a small portion of the whole list. I ask the Parliamentary Secretary, when we talk about the kinds of people who approach me or his office, how many of them are from those groups? Very few, very few. I have looked through the list and I have only found two or three categories under which the kinds of people who come to me would have relatives who could qualify. If I look at the service occupations, I see specialied chefs and cooks, watch and clock repairmen, perhaps printing press occupations, and that is about it.

The Minister tried to create the impression—and I assume he believed what he was saying—that because of the new approach of the Government there would be a substantial increase in the number of application for family reunification which would be approved. I say to the Minister that it will just not happen. I appeal to him and to the Government to adopt a much more humane approach to the whole question of family reunification in the immigration policy.

I will not deal with the problems of refugees. My colleague from Thunder Bay dealt with them very well. As he pointed out, the Bill is one small step, to implement one small recommendation of the many excellent recommendations made by the parliamentary committee which held a large number of meetings, and by Rabbi Plaut in his report. I hope the Government will deal with those recommendations in a humane and generous way. In my view, this Bill will do very little.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member did not want to mislead the House when he read off the list of occupations. I am familiar with the communications which he has. I point out to him, and I think he would agree, that that list opened up the Immigration Act and the approach of immigration because it allowed more independent applications to come forward. It was not through family reunification. He tied it to family reunification, which is still in existence and is working very well. It really concerns independent applications, and I wonder if the Hon. Member wants to comment on that.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to comment on that. In so far as family reunification is concerned, if the Hon. Member is correct that the list from which I quoted has nothing to do with family reunification, we are back to the situation where the person for whom the application is being made has to have a job offer in Canada which cannot be filled by a Canadian. That was the policy until very recently. Given the fact that a million and a quarter are unemployed, that virtually excludes everyone.

The Hon. Member is correct that it is for independent applicants. My fear is that the Government wants mainly to encourage—and I do not say exclusively—people to come to this country who have the money or the means to establish themselves as independent business people. While I am not opposed to those kinds of people coming, if it is the only thing we want to do, it is wrong and certainly mitigates against family reunification in which I am a great believer.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I just want to clarify something. The Member is misleading, albeit inadvertently I am sure, the House. The point system that was allocated in the list to which he referred only enhances the opportunity for individuals to emigrate to Canada. It does not require a certified job offer. It only enhances the position of the immigrant by giving him five or ten points to add to his independent application. This tended to open up the door in some of those occupations. It is not tied to the amount of money individuals have to allow them to come here as the Member indicated. Surely he wants to set the record straight rather than leave the impression which he has left.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe that the Member listened to the remarks I made. I made two points. The first was that until very recently in order for an application to be approved the applicant had to have an offer of employment for a job which the employer and the Department of Employment and Immigration could not find a Canadian to fill. I made the point that there are very few jobs like that given the large number of unemployed. If that was changed recently, I have not heard about it and would like to know about it.

The second thing I said was that most of the people who come to my office who have applied for permission for relatives to come to join them in Canada indicate that those relatives do not have the specialized skills for 90 per cent or more of the occupations listed in this document. That is all I said. If the Member thinks I am wrong, I would be very happy to have him show me how I am wrong.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I was listening to the Hon. Member's comments with respect to the certified job offer requirement and the new regulations which have been issued by the Department of Employment and Immigration with respect to the employment situation. I thought the Hon. Member would be aware, as I believe all other Members of the House are, that in 1982 the Government imposed the requirement of a certified job offer on independent applications for immigration to the country. That requirement meant that virtually no one could come to Canada because it was impossible to find a job which the Canada Employment Centres would certify there was no one in the country to fill.

However, as of January 1 of this year changes were made. Those changes included the list of occupations which the Hon. Member has in front of him, for which there is no longer the requirement of a certified job offer. A person who fits into those categories can now apply without having a certified job offer in the country and can come to the country under the point system as indicated by the Hon. Member.

Whether or not the people who come into his office fit into the job categories which do not require a certified job offer is another question. Since the beginning of January literally dozens of families have come to my office who wanted to bring relatives here but could not under the strict requirements of the family reunification provisions and who now see some light at the end of the tunnel. They see that there are these job categories for which there is not the requirement of a certified job offer into which their relatives and friends can fit. I am certainly finding that this is very beneficial and helpful to the people in my constituency. I am sure that if the Hon. Member takes a closer look at those categories and discusses them with the people coming into his office, he will find them most helpful to them, too.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, as I tried to make clear in my speech, it is obvious that most of the occupations on the list really help only a very small percentage of the potential applicants. Many organizations interested in third world countries have indicated that when we make these kinds of arrangements we encourage the movement of the skilled and best educated people from those countries to Canada. Those countries need those people much more than we do in Canada. However, that is a problem which we can discuss on another occasion.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate on Bill C-55. A number of speakers before me touched on a number of broad and important areas relating to immigration. There is no disagreement that the entire process of immigration is integral to what this country is about, given that to a significant extent this country is the result of individuals and families coming to the shores of Canada and building a home here. They have given to the country and, reciprocally, the country has given them a chance. Therefore, immigration is not a one-way street. The country does not only give, but receives. Immigrants who have come to the country have perhaps come with very little from an economic point of view, but with wealth and riches in social and cultural attributes.

Part of the success of our past immigration policies, and part of the respect that which Canada enjoys from nations abroad, has been based on a policy that has drawn its strength and spirit from a thrust of compassion. I hope the Government will see fit to continue a policy of immigration which is compassionate and sensitive and which speaks, not only to the domestic and narrow views and challenges which the country faces, but also to the often very difficult forces at play throughout the world. Canada must continue in future years to play the part which it has played in the past.

A number of speakers have indicated that there is a comme ci comme ça feeling with regard to Bill C-55. There are certain parts of the Bill which are good. For instance, the amendment to allow permanent residents to make appeals to the Immigration Appeal Board is a positive move. The central thrust of this legislation permits the increase of commissioners on the Immigration Appeal Board from 18 to 50. That is the main amendment to the Immigration Act which the Government is making through the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). Quite frankly, one has to say that this Bill addresses the symptom rather than the illness. It takes the easy way when immigrants and refugees are looking for concrete action.

Another part of the backlog has to do with the family reunification process. We know that generally the process is working quite well and that the vast majority of applications under the program are approved quite rapidly. The problem lies with those families who are not permitted to sponsor brothers, nephews, aunts or uncles. This is a problem to which we ought to pay closer attention. We underestimate the importance that family sponsorship can have in making a potential immigrant a successful Canadian citizen. We are underestimating the resources available to an individual who has family in this country. We should be giving greater weight to applications under that program because, if we do, we would eliminate the bottle-neck that this legislation seeks to address. As I said, rather than addressing the cause, it prefers to address the symptoms.

The refugees affected by this bottle-neck in the system have been patient for a long time and now they are coming to Ottawa to make their case. I have met these people in my riding, as well as in cities like Montreal and Vancouver. They have been waiting for some real action. Of course, it can be argued that if we have 50 commissioners instead of 18, we will hear more applications and solve more problems. However, if we approach the problem that way, how long will it take to deal with the current backlog, not to mention the growing number of new applications each day? It will take a long, long time. Yet people are asking for something to speed up the process, as well as make it more compassionate and more fair and understanding. We do not want an adversarial situation involving the applicant and the Immigration Appeal Board.

I have had instances in my own riding where people have to come before the IAB with solicitors to prove their case to the ultimate degree. There is a family in my riding which has been in this country for three years. Before the establishment of the new civilian Government in Argentina they had to escape the military regime because they were both professors at universities in Buenos Aires. One of the first groups to be persecuted by the Argentine military regime was the Academe. They left their country with their children and tried to establish a new life in this country. Now, after more than three years in Canada, after establishing themselves here, after acquiring English as a second language at night school, after holding down menial jobs because their degrees were not recognized here, which is another significant problem we have overlooked, and after their children have been Canadianized and now speak English rather than Spanish, they are being asked to return to Argentina because it is deemed to be safe under a civilian government.

That might be true to a certain degree. For the moment things are a little more tranquil and secure under a civilian government. However, how can we know what will happen tomorrow?

This family is afraid to go back to their home country because they fear persecution in the future. They fear for the future of their children in that country. They would rather stay in Canada. They are contributing members of this society. They both work, pay their taxes and contribute to the social and economic wealth of this country. Therefore, should we not stop and think about whether we ought to send them back, having made them go through the IAB process to state their case time after time after time?

What do we mean when we talk about compassion in Canada? What do we mean when we say we should address the cause of a problem rather than the symptoms? We mean that we should not take the narrow-minded approach which says let us increase the number of immigration officers and, if that does not work, introduce another Bill and increase the number again. No, there comes a time when you must look at the problem and say enough is enough. We cannot allow ourselves to introduce bank-aid solutions because they will not work. It might be a good public relations gimmick, but deep in our hearts we know it is not the proper way to address the depth of a serious and growing problem.

The Minister also talked about fighting to eradicate phoney refugee applicants. He is right to a certain degree because there are individuals who take advantage of the system to the detriment of those who have a legitimate case. Therefore, the Minister is in part correct to ask his officials to try and weed out those applicants who make life difficult for the majority of people with legitimate cases. However, the Minister failed to go after the growing industry involving phoney immigration consultants and lawyers. I am getting sick and tired of talking to constituents and sponsors of immigrants, as well as to refugee applicants, who have paid hundreds if not thousands of dollars to these low-lifes who do nothing to aid their case. Individual lawyers and consultants simply use that as a scam to make a dollar. Individuals are using these people to pay for the shingle they have outside their office. It is growing and becoming more serious.

I had a case in Toronto last week of a Portuguese individual who was just there visiting for three months. No one knew that he was coming for a visit, in terms of the bureaucracy. He got a call from a so-called immigration consultant asking him if he required his services to stay in the country. When the visitor suggested that he was only here on a visit the so-called consultant said, "Yeah, that's for sure. I have heard that before". Therefore, that also speaks to a wheel in the system that is connecting these phoney consultants to potential cases for them.

If we are prepared to rid the system of phoney refugees in this country then we also have to apply equal force to those people in this society who live off the proceeds of immigrants who do not know any better and place their trust in these individuals. The immigrant may not speak the language very well and, therefore, they are very much impressed by the pinstriped blue suit and tie individual who comes and says, "A thousand dollars and I will get your cousin into this country". These are not isolated cases because I have heard about them from other colleagues in the House as well. Therefore I urge the Minister and this Government to have the compassion and the courage to stamp out what I would suggest is a very serious white-collar crime.

When we also talk about being compassionate and being progressive, which our immigration policies have been, we must also recognize those individuals who come to this country with degrees and professions. Quite often what happens when they come into this country is that the degrees are not recognized. After years of training in their own reputable universities and educational institutions in their home countries they come to this country and take jobs as janitors, construction aides and the like. I am not suggesting that those occupations are demeaning, by any means I am suggesting that when an individual who has taught in his home country and cannot get a teaching profession here and is forced to clean and scrub floors when, in fact, that individual could be contributing in a different sense, then that too is incorrect and needs addressing.

There was a disagreement in terms of individuals that were allowed into this country perhaps because they had more money. I believe the Member from Winnipeg was alluding to that. I think perhaps what he was alluding to was the whole question of entrepreneurial immigrants. Last year the Standing Committee on Employment, Labour and Immigration, which obviously has a majority of Conservative Members, was dangerously toying with concepts of entrepreneurial immigration.

Let me point out very quickly at the beginning of this debate that I support a stream of entrepreneurial immigration. In fact, it was the Liberal Party which was in Government that sponsored and introduced such a stream, but we never intended to make it a cornerstone, or to elevate the whole entrepreneurial stream to the detriment of others. The Immigration Committee was toying very dangerously with boosting up the entrepreneurial element to a degree that was overriding the others. It is a mistake, because while we require entrepreneurs, foreign investment, individuals who are willing to invest and start to build companies and enterprises in this country, we also have to realize the history of this country. We must take into consideration the plight of other individuals who, while they are not wealthy and do not bring extraordinary amounts of money into this country, bring something else that this country depended on years ago. I would submit to you that this country will require that reinforcement in the years to come.

Many poor immigrants have joined Canada's entrepreneurs, and some have joined Canada's wealthy circle. Many immigrants have brought trades to this country and have taken jobs that you and I perhaps do not want to do. They work from seven in the morning until seven at night, often six days a week. I am not suggesting that those jobs are demeaning. All I am suggesting is that there are those individuals across the globe who are prepared to come to this country to enjoy the opportunities here and undertake those types of positions, and we have to be sensitive their situations.

When we talk about occupations I think there tends to be conflicting information. I have contractors in Toronto in my constituency who say that, "We cannot find enough certified and qualified bricklayers", for instance, or "carpenters, plumbers, electricians, tool and dye makers". Yet when I have individuals who are sponsoring relatives from abroad who happen to be carpenters or plumbers what they are told is that we have an abundance of those individuals in Canada, many of whom are unemployed. So there tends to be a conflicting nature which really needs to be updated. We really need to be with the times. Do we need to fill those types of positions or do we not? I am running into a lot of conflicting evidence that says the contrary.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. McDermid) said, "We only get the problematic cases". We sometimes get the more problematic cases, but I would also submit to him that we also get the average run-of-the-mill cases, individuals who come to the Member of Parliament first rather than going down to Bloor Street and visiting their immigration officer. So we get a lot of standard, average, every day applications. We need to pay attention to those problems and difficulties; not only the problematic ones, but those that are reflective of the pool of applications that the bureaucratics are facing. I am not suggesting, and neither is this Party, that the bureaucrats go out of their way to take their sweet time in processing applications.

There are places in this world such as Hong Kong and New Delhi where it takes three years to process an application. I would submit to him that that is not good enough, and that rather than placing blame we should be trying to address the cause and not the symptom.

I realize you are motioning that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I would once again like to appeal to this House to be somewhat more compassionate, somewhat more courageous, and use a little conviction when we are speaking of immigration, rather than trying to touch the superficial element in dealing with the symptoms rather than the cure. Let's address, attack and whip the cause of the difficulties. Let's make Canada a country that is a lot more just.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, when this Bill was introduced in the House last June the Minister said that his principal purpose was to deal with the refugee backlog, which at that time was around 15 or 16,000 persons. It was rather strange that the Minister should put forward this Bill to deal with the refugee backlog, because the Minister had received in April of 1985, just a few months previous, the Plaut Report which dealt with the refugee determination process on a broad basis and made many recommendations to deal with that entire problem. We now know that in Canada over the last few years there has been a great increase in refugees from many troubled spots in the world. I guess that is a symptom of the political disruptions which are taking place on many continents. There are refugees from Central America, Africa, Sri Lanka, Bangladesh, Indo-China and Central and Eastern Europe. There has been a great increase in the number of refugees coming to Canada claiming refugee status. Therefore, there has been an increasing backlog which led to the Minister, under the previous Government, appointing both the Ratushny and Plaut commissions to study this matter.

The Plaut Commission reported several recommendations to the present Minister in April, 1985. However, in June we saw Bill C-55 which attempts to deal with the problem simply by increasing the number of people on the Immigration Appeal Board to 50 members. That has been criticized as a solution because it is simply a band-aid solution to deal with symptoms and does not really deal with the causes of the problem.

Furthermore, it is a complete disregard of the recommendations made by the Plaut commission.

What did the Government do? In its usual way it introduced the Bill in June, 1985, but also made a reference to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration to study the Plaut report and the whole process of refugee determination. Eventually the same committee was referred Bill C-55. Therefore, the committee had before it at the same time, Bill C-55 dealing with this increase in membership on the Immigration Appeal Board as well as the reference to study the Plaut commission recommendations and the refugee determination process.

The Bill has been returned to the House with one minor amendment from committee. We also have two reports presented by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration dealing with the process of refugee determination and the refugee claimant backlog. I believe that they are good reports and have the unanimous support in principle of all the Parties in the House.

The committee, made up of Conservative, Liberal and New Democratic members, put forward several recommendations to deal with the entire problem of refugee determination in this country and the backlog which now amounts to some 19,000 applicants. One must remember that the process was complicated still further following the Supreme Court decision in the Singh case on April 4, 1985. The decision was that by virtue of our new Charter of Rights, all applicants for refugee status had a right to an oral hearing before the Immigration Appeal Board. That meant the process was made more complex and more time consuming.

The Standing Committee dealt with that and made recommendations. Although their report was tabled in the late fall, we still do not have a Bill from the Government to implement the recommendations put forward by that committee.

We set out certain principles in that report to which we all agreed. We said that four basic principles are fundamental to the approach of the Standing Committee and the recommendations it has made. Consequently we recommend first, that it is the committee's strongly held conviction that Canadians do not want people sent back to countries where they have been persecuted or where they still may be persecuted because it conflicts with our basic principles of justice and fair play. People should be treated in a humane fashion and should not be sent back to countries where they will be executed for political reasons.

Second, we said that every person in Canada who wishes to claim that he or she is a Convention refugee should have an unqualified right of access to a formal process that will adjudicate the claim.

Third, all Convention refugee claimants should have their case decided at a non-adversarial oral hearing. In this respect we were following the decision in the Singh case before the Supreme Court.

Fourth, we said that the decision maker in the formal process, whatever that process should be, shall have the power in addition to declaring an individual to be a Convention refugee, to recommend to the Minister that specific individuals who are not within the strict definition of Convention refugee nevertheless be considered for landing on compassionate and humanitarian grounds.

The committee studied this in some depth and heard from many witnesses, both with respect to Bill C-55 and the Plaut report and refugee determination. The committee's recommendations are substantial, well founded and the result of much consultation. On the other hand, this Bill is not the result of much consultation and is simply a confused half measure to deal with a serious problem. It contains a few clauses that are good policy and an improvement to the Immigration Act, but they are a minor part of the Bill.

The over-all solution in this Bill is not what is needed, nor what the witnesses recommended. It is not what Plaut recommended.

We agree that by appointing more people to the Immigration Appeal Board the process will be expedited. However, if that is all that is done, it is an unfair and outdated process that is being expedited without getting to the bottom of the problems confronting refugees who have been waiting a long time—several years for some—to have their case heard by the Immigration Appeal Board. The Bill does not deal with the problems studied by Plaut and the committee.

While we are unhappy with the Bill, there are certain merits to it. However, we want the Government to introduce a Bill which will implement the recommendations put forward in the fifth and sixth reports of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration that were presented by its chairman, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). I believe they are excellent reports and, if implemented by legislation, will meet the needs of refugees in this country. I wish the Parliamentary Secretary or the Minister would intervene in this debate to tell us when that legislation implementing those two reports will be introduced. Such legislation, combined with the provisions of this Bill, would make sense, but this Bill alone is a half-way measure and cannot be supported with very great enthusiasm by Members of the House.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT RESCIND DECISION ON GULF-ULTRAMAR TRANSACTION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the newspaper La Presse reported that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) has released what is referred to as the O'Farrell Report.

Mr. Speaker, to anyone who reads this document it is clear that the Conservative Government, especially the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), was wrong to approve the transaction between Gulf and Ultramar because Quebec consumers will be penalized as a result of shutting down the refinery in Montreal East.

Mr. Speaker, the Government preferred to protect a foreign, British multinational instead of protecting the interests of Quebec consumers, and I can only hope that the Government will reverse its decision in order to save the 450 jobs that are at stake and protect Quebec consumers against the impact the Government's decision will otherwise have on the price of gas.

MUNICIPALITIES

UPGRADING OF INFRASTRUCTURES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it has been well over a year since the Federation of Canadian Municipalities proposed that the federal and provincial Government join in a co-operative program to fund the much needed upgrading of municipal infrastructures, but to this date the federal and provincial Ministers have not met to discuss such a program.

Sooner or later we shall have to renew the water lines, sewer lines, bridges, and roads in Canada. We can pay for it now, or our children can pay ten times more for it later. The Government had an opportunity to deal with this most important problem in the last Budget, but it failed. In fact it made the situation even worse by imposing new taxes midway through the fiscal year on materials needed for such projects.

With tomorrow's Budget, the Government has another opportunity. It can provide up to 285,000 person-years of employment, worth-while employment, by funding such a program. It is my hope that the Government will finally realize that concrete proposals in this regard will go a long way to accomplishing the very things it claims it wants to accomplish.

EMPLOYMENT

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY—ESTABLISHMENT OF LOCAL ADVISORY BOARDS

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, one of the finest features of the Canadian Jobs Strategy, along with providing thousands of Canadians with marketable job skills, is the establishment of local advisory councils. These councils, composed of volunteers, have given Canadians from all walks of life an opportunity to participate directly in employment development initiatives in their own communities.

The City of Scarborough is served by two excellent advisory councils, both of which are looking at the city's long-term employment needs and how the federal Government can play an effective part in helping new job-creation projects. The boards are also assessing the kind of skill training from which unemployed people in their community would benefit most.

The local advisory councils are working. They are bringing government officials and local community representatives together to find productive, local uses for federal job creation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FISHERIES

GULF HERRING QUOTAS

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, today I rise to urge the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) to incorporate into the 1986 Gulf Herring Management Plan the same principles which formed the basis of the 1985 Management Plan. The 1985 Plan provided a quota for the George's Bay area fishermen. A geographic sub-allocation of the fall quota provided equitable access to the inshore quota for fishermen from various locations.

I wish to emphasize the importance of the herring catch to my constituent fishermen. This fishery is a critically important part of the source of their annual income. I urge the Minister to consider the foregoing aspects of this important matter.

ENVIRONMENT CANADA

DESIGNATION OF SPOKESPERSONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, officials in Environment Canada are going to pay for their Minister's past mistakes. Speaking about the selection of official spokespersons in Environment Canada, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) said yesterday: "It is appropriate for the Minister himself to give such approval". In a subtle way the Minister will impose censorship on his scientists. He is saying, in essence, that as a politician and a Minister, he inevitably has the right, and intends to exercise it, to decide what scientific information should be given to the public. So much for the open Government promised by his Party.

● (1405)

From now on, according to the Minister, there will be cases when he will decide whether to give information and who should give information on matters respecting public health. His policy destroys the open relationship built up over the years between the public, the media, and Environment Canada scientists. What a sad state of affairs.

INCOME TAX

TASK FORCE PROPOSALS TO IMPROVE SYSTEM

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in advance of the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on Wednesday, many Canadians have been telling the New Democratic Party's Tax Probe 86 Task Force of the reforms they want in the Budget.

Because our income tax system has become so complex and riddled with loopholes, the Task Force has found a good number of proposals for improvement, including the following: better reporting to the public of the tax remissions to companies such as Dome and Syncrude, and the loss to taxpayers of millions of dollars because of favourable tax rulings to companies such as Olympia & York, Petrofina, and Genstar; "value for the dollar" tests for tax concessions to demonstrate whether the tax money forgone from corporations has produced the jobs and economic development claimed; and greater progressivity in the personal income tax system, which could raise another $1.7 billion in revenue annually if the pre-1982 tax rates were restored.

These are only three of many proposals made by the NDP Task Force. The Minister of Finance would be well advised to implement them if he wants to make the Canadian tax system more efficient, more fair, and more acceptable—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

TOURISM

SUPPORT FOR ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind the House that the Canadian tourism industry is in the very best of hands. The new $20-million advertising campaign announced by the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. Murta) is sweet music for tourism business people across Canada. Automobiles bearing United States licence plates have been in decline in the past decade, and our economy has clearly felt the shock wave.

S.O. 21

Tourism in Canada is second only to lumbering in the total revenue it generates. We can build on this $18.6 billion industry. Tourism provides direct employment for 600,000 Canadians, and indirect employment for another 500,000.

Our best customers live immediately south of the border, and Canada must be sold to them. We live in a sophisticated, wealthy and modern country, with distinct cultures and lifestyles. Our doors are open for all to enjoy.

THE ECONOMY

SITUATION OF SMALL AND MEDIUM-SIZED BUSINESSES

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, a poll published recently by the Canadian Federation of Independent Businesses revealed that the rate at which small and medium-sized businesses in Canada are closing has dropped to its lowest level in sixteen years.

According to the Federation's President, Mr. John Bulloch, in 1985, 5.9 per cent of small and medium-sized businesses in Quebec closed their doors, compared with 6.9 per cent in 1984, the last year the Liberal Government was in power.

This reversal is due to increased economic stability, increased consumer demand and the fact that the Progressive Conservative Government shares the concern of small and medium-sized businesses across Canada.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, while business closings are down, openings of new businesses are up. Last year, openings of new small and medium-sized businesses exceeded closings by 5 per cent. This new development will certainly help create jobs for all Canadians . . .

NATIONAL PARKS

WOOD BUFFALO NATIONAL PARK—DISEASES AFFECTING BUFFALO

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the health of buffalo in Wood Buffalo National Park has been of major concern to wildlife and Parks officials for several years. Tuberculosis and brucellosis are endemic within the herds. These animals are used as food by people in the area. Hence, there is a danger to the health of persons. The diseases could spread to domestic livestock outside the park.

It is time that this serious problem be addressed. No longer should it be neglected. If necessary, the diseased herds should be slaughtered and replaced by disease-free stock.

RESTRICTIONS RESPECTING PREMIUMS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the other day I received a letter from one of my constituents which accurately reflects the sentiments of Canadians. This is part of a letter I received from a woman in Ville d'Anjou: "I worked for forty-three years without drawing any benefits. Now, supported by the federal Government, employers are making it quite clear when we reach a certain age, that it is time to retire. Without warning, we received a letter in the mail saying that as of January 5, 1986, they had to count our pension benefits as well. This means that if we have about $250 a week in pension payments, we lose our entitlement to unemployment insurance benefits. This is unfair, because at the age of 57 and over, we cannot find a job for decent pay, and with a pension that is not indexed to the cost of living which is steadily increasing, we are going to have trouble making ends meet until we get old age security benefits.

Why is the Government always picking on the average worker who has worked hard to make a living, while that same Government encourages the richest people in this country . . .".

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

THE PHILIPPINES—OUSTER OF PRESIDENT MARCOS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, today is a great day for the people of the Philippines. It is a great day because they have deposed Ferdinand Marcos and have done so without widespread bloodshed or violent revolution. It is a great day because popular will and a yearning for democratic expression have won in the Philippines.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Jewett: Today is a day for recognizing one woman above all others. Today we rejoice in the triumph of Cory Aquino. In the face of great odds, threats, and intimidation, she has triumphed. It is a victory for decency, compassion, democracy, and the possibility of reform.

In our rejoicing today let us also remember that the deposing of a tyrant does not always lead to quick and easy democracy. I hope that Canada will be an active, useful, and supportive ally of President Aquino and the Filipino people in their quest for political, economic, and social reform.

REAL ESTATE

INCREASE IN RESIDENTIAL SALES

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, in a recent announcement made by the Canadian Real Estate Association it was reported that home sales across Canada increased by 21.7 per cent over January, 1985. This positive and continued upward trend in home sales activity resulted in 12,348 residential properties trading hands in Canada last month, an increase of more than 2,200 transactions over January of last year.

The President of the Canadian Real Estate Association, Mr. David Hawkins, stated that increased home sales reflect the level of consumer confidence in Canada, a consequence, I would strongly suggest, of the assertive and decisive economic policies of the Conservative Government. In Mr. Hawkins own words: "When families choose home ownership, they reflect their faith in the economic strength of the nation".

LACK OF PASSENGER CARS ON TORONTO-OTTAWA ROUTE

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, Via Rail tells us to use it or lose it. Our problem is to find it. Via Rail has so reduced the number of cars on the Toronto-Ottawa run that would-be passenger often have to book seats a week ahead. One Ottawa ticket agent says he turns away $1,500 worth of business every weekend.

Many Sunday evenings every seat is taken; some people are standing and others are turned away. Is this because so much Via Rail equipment purchased under the previous Government is now in the repair shop? If Via Rail wants to be profitable, let it put more cars on the tracks. Discouraging prospective passengers is no way to run a railway.

COMPARISON OF UNEMPLOYMENT RATES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Government brags that unemployment has been reduced to 9.8 per cent, which means 1.3 million Canadians without work. That is not acceptable. If the recession is over as the Government claims it is, then we should have at most the 7.5 pre-recession unemployment rate of 1981. The average unemployment rate from 1965 to 1980 was 5.6 per cent.

On February 8, 1986, an article in the St. John's Evening Telegram stated in part:

> The jobless figures released Friday gave rise to some pride by federal Tories—
> But figures can be misleading . . . the number of unemployed, . . . actually rose by 109,000 last month—
> To say the situation in Newfoundland is bleak would be putting it mildly—

While the Tories express pride in their job creation, they cannot ignore the fact that there are still more than one and one quarter million people without work in this country.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

INCOME TAX ACT

CALL FOR CLOSURE OF TAX LOOPHOLE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) prepares to bring down the Budget tomorrow, I again want to appeal to him to put an end to the abuse of limited partnership provisions in the Income Tax Act, provisions which have become the biggest, costliest, and most wasteful tax loophole since the scientific research tax credit.

• (1415)

As the chairperson of the Tax Probe 86 Committee, I recently became aware of the following example. A company in Manitoba called Organic Research Limited advertised to potential investors that for $50,000 they could reap the following benefits: a $10,000 reduction in taxes from the investment tax credit, a $20,000 tax saving through the flow-through share provisions, and the company would buy back the shares for $29,000 almost immediately. This adds up to nearly $60,000 in benefits for an investment of $50,000, courtesy of the taxpayers of Canada.

This is even more ludicrous when one considers that Organic Research Limited is doing research into turning trees into sugar, at a time when the sugar-beet industry in southern Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba is on its knees. It is time that this nonsense was stopped.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF NATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF KOREA STEERING COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

THE PHILIPPINES—RECOGNITION OF NEW GOVERNMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday he said that the Canadian Government would not recognize Mrs. Aquino as the new President of the Philippines, even though he said quite clearly in the House—

Some Hon. Members: He didn't say that.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is exactly what he said.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —even though he said that it was time, in the opinion of the Canadian Government, for President Marcos to go. Why is it that he has given the impression to Canadians that what he was waiting for was not the expression of the will of the Philippino people but the reaction of the United States on whether or not to recognize that new Government?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there have been changes in the Philippines which were in evolution yesterday and continued in their evolution. There is now a new Government in the Philippines which is in effective control of the country. I celebrate that development. Canada has welcomed the election of that Government which is in control of the Philippines. I would hope that Members of the House would forgo the temptation to seek to score irrelevant political points and would, instead, make clear that the whole House works now to achieve stability and good relations between Canada and the new Government of the Philippines.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT WAITED FOR UNITED STATES REACTION BEFORE RECOGNIZING NEW GOVERNMENT OF PRESIDENT AQUINO

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Instead of analyzing the will of the people of the Philippines, why did the Canadian Government wait for the U.S. to react before asking for the resignation of President Marcos and recognizing the new Government under President Aquino? Why?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, the Leader of the Opposition is misinformed, perhaps owing to his concern about his own problems.

[English]

TIMING OF RECOGNITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I will put it as carefully and as quickly as I can. Why does the Government have to wait for the United States before doing the right thing? Why did the Government not offer recognition to the President of the Philippines when it became clear that the people of the Philippines had given her that recognition?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what we were waiting for was the decision of the people of the Philippines.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is the decision which has now been made clear, and the Government of Canada has acted as a consequence.

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE

CRUISE MISSILE TEST PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Associate Minister of National Defence who has answered this kind of question before.

Canadians were horrified to hear that another cruise missile has crashed on Canadian soil. Does the Government intend to stop the cruise testing program, since these tests have clearly shown that the safety guarantees provided by the American authorities are worthless with failures like these?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, aside from the fact that I did not make that statement, the technical answer is that in fact there has not been a Cruise missile crash on Canadian soil in this instance. It crashed in the Beaufort Sea.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Big deal.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Copps: They're selling that off to the Americans too.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Andre: I am advised that, when released from the aircraft, the engine on the Cruise missile did not ignite, did not start, and the missile crashed into the sea, which I guess is one of the reasons why tests are being authorized.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Really funny.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Broadbent: It's a red joke, Harvie.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, what we need is a test of a Minister who gives that kind of answer. The Beaufort Sea is Canadian territory, not American territory, as it was last summer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR HALT TO TESTING

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Is it the intention of the Government to confirm that Canadians are absolutely against the use of Canadian territory for repeated dangerous testing failures like this? Will the Government affirm to the Americans that we do not want this type of testing to escalate into the introduction of star wars testing on Canadian soil, after which we may suffer the same consequences?

Ms. Jewett: You started it all.

Mr. Riis: Ask him who started it, Harvie.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, of course it is Canadian territory, but it is not Canadian soil.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The bottom is Canadian soil.

Mr. Andre: As a matter of fact it is on the ice at this time of year.

Mr. Chrétien: You should go on ice, Andre.

Mr. Andre: The Government has every intention—

Mr. Nystrom: Harvie for leader.

Mr. Andre: —of continuing the agreement negotiated by the Government of which the Hon. Member was a part.

INVESTIGATION OF TEST FAILURES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the same Minister. I point out that the soil in question was Canadian when the Liberals authorized these tests in the first place, as it is today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: If the Cruise missile had followed its proper route in the territory where the tests are taking place, it would have come within 15 miles of communities in an area in which 30,000 people live. If there should be an accident in the guiding system, for example, people could actually be injured.

Are Canadians participating in an investigation of the failure of the two tests? Will all this information be made available to the people of Canada?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, Canadians will certainly be participating in the investigation. I am not sure that we can find a way to make all of the information available to the people of Canada without thereby making it available to adversaries of Canada.

Mr. Benjamin: It's our country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REQUEST THAT TESTS BE CONDUCTED OVER UNITED STATES TERRITORY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, information on the failure of a test system, which has been described by the Government as not being a weapon itself, ought to be made available to the people of Canada who can be affected by the failure of the system. Surely the Government should provide that information.

There have been two tests in a row which have failed. Considering that the same—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming a very long preamble. Is there a question, please?

Mr. Broadbent: I will come right to the question. Since we have had these failures and since there is a possibility for future danger, will the Minister act now and request the Government of the United States to test its missiles on its territory?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in response to the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice, we have every intention of honouring the agreement into which the previous Government entered. I do not think the Leader of the New Democratic Party is being totally responsible in raising these undue and unjust fears about the safety of Canadians. The corridor in question was designed to avoid population concentrations. It is carefully monitored every step of the way. There are all kinds of safety mechanisms in place. I think it would be unthinkable for Canada to suggest that what amounts to a test—

• (1425)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming a speech.

A short supplementary question.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, considering no one has been hurt yet, but also considering we have seen what reliance on technology alone in the shuttle program led to in the U.S.—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: —is the Minister telling us there are no circumstances under which the Government of Canada would cancel this program? Is that what he is saying?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): I find this incredible. Now this is tied to the space shuttle. The Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice tried to tie it into SDI. There is no relationship whatsoever. An agreement has been worked out which provides all kinds of safety mechanisms which in turn provide for the safety of Canadian territory and personnel. I have every confidence that the Canadian Armed Forces will ensure that nothing untoward or dangerous happens to Canada or Canadians.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REGULATION CHANGES—INFORMATION PROVIDED BY DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment I am pleased to put this question to the Acting Prime Minister. It relates to the cut-backs in unemployment insurance for those who take early retirement.

Is the Minister aware that officials in the Department of Employment across the country have contributed to the hardships in this matter by giving out false and misleading information to employers and employees prior to January 1? Considering this complicity by officials of the Department in the problems which now exist, does he believe that now is the time to withdraw this cruel and unfair policy?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): That question, Sir, has been asked several times over the last few weeks. If the hon. gentleman has any information with respect to false or misleading information supplied by members of the Public Service he should make it available, and whatever action is necessary will be taken.

REQUEST THAT POLICY BE WITHDRAWN

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, does that mean if we provide the Government with this information it will withdraw the policy? I would like that commitment from the Minister, because I am ready to give him the information if he makes a commitment to withdraw the policy once I do so.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, again the question has been answered several times, as was his main question. If the hon. gentleman has any charges to make with respect to false and misleading information being supplied by members of the Public Service of Canada, he should make that information clear and available so that appropriate action might be taken.

AIR SAFETY

FUNDING OF CANADIAN AVIATION SAFETY BOARD

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. As he is no doubt aware, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board has been unable to handle major accidents and literally hundreds of accident reports properly because of the Government's restraint program. Will the Minister assure Canadians that, regardless of what cuts are forthcoming tomorrow, the safety of Canadians will not be compromised further, and that the budget necessary for safety-related boards such as the CASB will be increased to meet their mandates?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have given that assurance in the House and publicly on many occasions.

COMPLETION OF ACCIDENT REPORTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister ensure that the budget necessary to complete promptly all aviation accident reports is forthcoming? I would point out that the Husky aircraft which crashed in Prince Rupert one year ago is already in a museum and there has been no accident report.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): The Hon. Member could check with the chairman of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board and I think he will find there has been close co-operation regarding the allocation of the necessary funds to do the job properly.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DIFFICULTIES FACING EARLY RETIREES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. According to a report by the Office de la construction du Québec, 5,432 pensioners will not be entitled to unemployment insurance, despite the fact they have paid their premiums. What is the Deputy Prime Minister going to do for these 5,432 Quebecers who will not be able to support their families on their pre-retirement benefits alone?

● (1430)

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that question has been answered as recently as five minutes ago. The matter is before the Forget Commission and they will be reporting in due course.

SCOPE OF REGULATION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I did not get an answer to my question.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister intend to announce today that the regulation does not apply to people who took pre-retirement before January 5, 1986? They were not aware of the regulation at that time.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The decision was announced over a year ago as a collective decision of Cabinet, Sir, and the answer remains the same.

ENERGY

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OPPOSE GASOLINE TAX INCREASE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

This morning, we met with the national committee for bringing down the cost of gas, which is asking the Government for a fair price on gasoline.

Since the Hon. Member for Duvernay suggested to the Minister of Finance that he refrain from increasing the tax on gas in his Budget, could the Minister inform the House whether she has already taken up the cause of consumers by putting the same request to the Minister of Finance?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have already come to the defence of consumers by putting in place an energy policy which allows the consumers to benefit from the decline in oil prices.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER DIRECT PETRO-CANADA TO REDUCE PRICES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question directed to the same Minister. Considering that the consumers are paying 10 cents a litre too much at the pumps right now, and the price is too slow in coming down, is the Minister prepared to direct Petro-Canada to take the lead in reducing gas prices to the consumers, as demanded by the Hon. Member from Duvernay?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

IMPLEMENTATION OF OCEAN RANGER COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I would like to direct my question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Mr. Speaker, this month marks the fourth anniversary of the tragic loss of the Ocean Ranger with 82 lives. I want to ask the Minister if the Government is now in a position to respond to the search and rescue recommendations made by the Ocean Ranger Royal Commission?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, consideration of that matter before the Cabinet is imminent, and being a Privy Councillor the Hon. Member knows I cannot discuss the agenda or the specific time, but it is imminent.

ENERGY

REQUEST THAT MINISTER DEMAND CERTAIN UNDERTAKINGS FROM PETRO-CANADA

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

This morning, we met with the national committee for bringing down the price of gas, and these people wanted to know whether the Minister was prepared to ask Petro-Canada to publish in advance a list of the prices paid for its crude oil, with the dates on which it will have to pass on the price reduction to consumers.

Is the Minister prepared to ask Petro-Canada to do this?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think that Petro-Canada would certainly be in conflict with combines legislation if it announced in advance what price decreases it contemplated. I have already told the House that consumers are enjoying the start of a decline in gasoline prices, and they can look forward to further declines in the coming months.

[Translation]

INQUIRY IF MINISTER AGREES WITH MEMBER FOR DUVERNAY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the same Minister.

Does the Minister agree with the Hon. Member for Duvernay who said that Petro-Canada's new policy is similar to that of the other multinationals and ignores the interests of consumers?

Does the Minister agree with her colleague's statement? Yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can only point out that last week Petro-Canada followed the lead set by Imperial Oil in cutting gasoline prices. I certainly feel that that is to the benefit of consumers.

FINANCE

FUNDING OF RESEARCH TO MANUFACTURE SUGAR FROM TREES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. She will be aware that Organic Research Limited of Manitoba is a company that is using a limited partnership aspect of the tax system as a scam for wealthy investors. Does the Minister think that it is fair that the ordinary Canadian taxpayer is subsidizing investors in a company that is doing research into turning trees into sugar?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member well knows, this Government has done more to close tax loopholes than any Government in the history of Canada. We have taken any number of steps in this House and committed ourselves to the taxpayers time after time. I think the Hon. Member knows that.

EFFECT ON SUGAR-BEET INDUSTRY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, is she prepared to close the sugar hole in this respect? Does she think it is fair when the sugar-beet industry in Canada is on its knees that the tax system should be used to encourage investment into turning trees into sugar? Is this a fair thing to be using the tax system to accomplish?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, not only have we done a lot to close loopholes, we have done a lot for farmers, and we have shown great concern for the farmers and the agricultural industry throughout Canada. I think that the question is misplaced.

INQUIRY WHETHER QUEBEC REFINING CAPACITY IS INSUFFICIENT FOLLOWING CLOSURE OF GULF REFINERY

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Yesterday, before the Canadian Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, two federal ministers were making contradictory statements on the refining capacity for crude oil in Quebec. I want to ask the Minister whether the Government could stop shilly-shallying and give us its official version, whether there is a shortage of capacity for refining oil products in Quebec as a result of the closing of the Gulf refinery.

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I have already told the House, my Department's report shows that the refinery capacity in Quebec is in balance. As I understand it there are a number of reports, including the report of my Department, which have been referred to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission for further study.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister has just given us what seems to be her version, may I ask why she gives the impression of being the sole possessor of the facts in all North America, when the O'Farrell Report, the Oil Buyers Guide, Statistics Canada and the Quebec Minister of Energy all agree there is a lack of refining capacity in Quebec? Yet she says she is right. Why?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Possibly the discrepancy arises because these other sources of information did not have the benefit of the superb report done by my Department.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSAL MADE BY CITIZENS FOR PUBLIC JUSTICE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. A coalition of major religious organizations proposes a major attack on poverty that would provide community jobs, training, child care and guaranteed incomes, to be paid for by tax reforms. Does the Minister support this proposal of the Citizens for Public Justice and will he include this in tomorrow's Budget?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the proposal that the Hon. Member has made mention of is one that is seriously put forward by a number of church groups. It is responsible to look at the proposal very seriously. I have yet to receive a written copy of their proposal, but I would hope that I would be able to sit down with them at an early date to look at the proposal and hear their comments on it.

CHILD CARE FUNDING

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Does the Minister agree with these churches that there should be extra funds in this Budget to expand comprehensive child care as part of a major attack on poverty?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think it is prudent to have them present the proposal to the Government. Once that has been done and examined, then I think a comment can be made.

ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN—INQUIRY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL SUPPRESS SEXIST SCENES AND PROVIDE ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Tourism), who launched a $20 million advertising campaign last week which, considering inflation, the falling dollar and production costs, is entirely inadequate, and furthermore, the campaign was judged to be sexist.

My question is as follows: When is the Minister going to drop the sexist scenes from this campaign and release additional funds in order to enhance Canada's image abroad?

[English]

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, first of all, the $20 million ad campaign is the largest amount of money that this country has ever spent in a very target specific and product specific way in the United States market. Number two, the ad campaign is in no way sexist.

INQUIRY IF DECREASE IN GASOLINE PRICE WILL BENEFIT INDUSTRY

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): I have a supplementary for the same Minister, Mr. Speaker. Of course the best advertising would be a reduction in the price of gas. Could the Minister give the House the assurance that falling gas prices would benefit the tourist industry and not the Minister of Finance through an increase in the tax on gas?

[English]

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, our best tourism thrust into the United States market, which is our largest market, is to make sure that the Americans are aware that Canada is a good destination. That is exactly what we are doing.

HEALTH

FEDERAL TRANSFER PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In the last week the National Union of Provincial Government Employees, the Canadian Medical Association, and today the Canadian Hospital Association condemned the Government's intentions to cut transfer payments. Will the Minister release any figures he has that indicate what the expenditures for health will be in the next five years?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member raised that point because I met with the Canadian Hospital Association today. I pointed out that the increases in the legislation before us are above inflation. Regrettably, the provincial Government in Manitoba did not even meet that.

HEALTH COSTS PROJECTION INQUIRY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister must answer one question. He is the Minister of Health for the whole country. Will he finally stop playing cheap politics and answer the question?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murphy: Where are his figures indicating what will happen to the health system of the country? Stop playing politics and answer that question.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I pleased that the Member has changed his modus operandi. I imagine that he will be staying in Ottawa until March 18.

If he looks at the projections for health care he will see that the Government is projecting increases in the block funding for health care and post secondary education. That was discussed very fully with the Prime Minister and the Finance Minister at the First Ministers' Conference in Halifax.

I say to the Hon. Member that if Manitoba had met its obligations for post secondary education and health care, and had even matched the federal Government, it would not have the problems it faces today.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

FUTURE OF PRAIRIE WILDLIFE INTERPRETATION CENTRE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Curent-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. It concerns the Prairie Wildlife Interpretation Centre near Webb, Saskatchewan. Has he been able to make suitable arrangements for the continued operation of the Centre for the 1986 summer season and thereafter?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will know, the Prairie Wildlife Interpretation Centre is an important tourism and environmental facility. Because of the persistence of the Hon. Member, I am pleased to confirm in the House today that the funding is in place.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McMillan: I will be signing an agreement with Mr. Russell Wall in a few days. The Centre will be open and it will be able to operate not only on time but, indeed, early.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AGRICULTURE

SITUATION OF SUGAR-BEET PRODUCERS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It concerns the plight of the sugar-beet producers. In view of the fact that the sugar-beet producers are planning a demonstration for March 3, will the Government announce any policies it has for assisting this industry and stop the nonsense of causing that expenditure to organize a demonstration in order for those producers to get what is already rightfully theirs?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the last time that I answered that question I indicated to the Hon. Member that the Government was extremely concerned about the future of the sugar-beet industry, thus the reason for our taking action a year ago.

I also indicated that we are taking our time to ensure that when we reach our final decision we will indeed have an appropriate and proper policy to announce.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER DISCLOSE INTENDED ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is as follows: I would like to ask the Minister whether in a statement that is expected shorthly and has been expected for some time, he intends to announce both a long term policy and the stabilization mechanism he has refused to give these producers up to now?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, when the Government makes its final decision it will be announced at the appropriate time.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

FAILURE OF CRUISE MISSILE TESTS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Associate Minister of Defence and is supplementary to others. Considering that both tests of the Cruise that have taken place this year have failed and that there is population in the area, will the Minister at least assure us that no more tests will take place in Canada until there has been a full investigation of the causes of these crashes and we in the House see that report?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that goes without saying. There will be no further tests until we determine the cause of this crash. That is part of the agreement and it is common sense. We are following a common sense procedure.

I will certainly make every effort to inform the Hon. Member and the House, to the degree that is possible, without violating any security arrangements that might be of benefit to our adversaries.

RAILWAYS

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY—ORDER TO INCREASE FREIGHT RATES—TERMS OF UNION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. He will be aware that in reaching its decision to order TerraTransport in Newfoundland to increase its freight rates, the Canadian Transport Commission considered and dismissed the Terms of Union between Newfoundland and Canada as the basis for continuing low freight rates in the Province of Newfoundland. Has the Minister examined whether Section 276 of the Railway Act, as indicated by the CTC, in fact supersedes the Constitution of Canada and the Terms of Union contained within that Constitution?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, nothing supersedes the Constitution of Canada so I do not believe that would be the question at issue here. I will have the judgment of the Canadian Transport Commission checked to see what they said in connection with the interpretation of the Terms of Union. Of course, nothing in the Constitution is more sacred than that.

REQUEST THAT IMPOSITION OF INCREASES BE POSTPONED

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Given that answer by the Minister of Justice, will the Minister of Transport assure the House that he will cause no action to take place on these rate increases that have been ordered by the CTC—and are due to take place in 10 or 12 days—until his colleague, the Minister of Justice, has determined whether the Terms of Union between Canada and Newfoundland supersede any regulation of his Department or any decision by the CTC?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is a 30-day appeal period. It is my understanding that the implementation of the rates would not take place for 60 days.

ENERGY

ALBERTA OIL INDUSTRY

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. She met with her counterpart from Alberta yesterday to discuss, among other things, the impact of falling oil prices on that province. Will she advise the House what measures, if any, were discussed to ensure the continuing strength of that vital Alberta industry?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I met with the Alberta Energy Minister as part of ongoing consultations with Ministers under the Western Accord. We discussed many subjects, including the outlook for oil pricing in the next while. It was our view that the situation is very volatile and we should not have any knee-jerk reactions to the situation at this time. However, we did agree to keep in very close contact and to share information in this field.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO CANADIAN NEGOTIATOR

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last week Ambassador Reisman accused the Premier of Ontario of using a misleading study about free trade job disruption. Does the Government recognize that this form of insult undermines good federal-provincial relations, and will it tell Mr. Reisman to try to reach agreement with the provinces rather than criticize them publicly?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member were genuinely interested in how this process works he would know that there has been a remarkable degree of agreement reached in the meetings among officials, pursuant to the agreement among 11 Governments at the Halifax First Ministers' Conference.

Mr. Langdon: Unfortunately, that does not answer the question.

MEDIA REPORT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Does the Minister also endorse Mr. Reisman's comment in the same article that: "Everything is on the table" and "We must talk about whatever the Americans want to talk about in these negotiations"?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): A colonial mentality.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Government is well known. The Americans can raise what they want to raise at discussions which might occur. The position of the Government of Canada as to what is negotiable is well known.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROVISION GOVERNING REPORTING OF POLICE SEARCHES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Do he and the Government accept the recent use by Bell Canada of the new Section 443.2 of the Criminal Code to muzzle the media from reporting a police search where the actual suspects—who are clients of Bell Canada—want, in that particular case, to make their problem public and to expose what they consider to be an improper police investigation? Does that not take the Section too far?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we support Section 443.2 of the Criminal Code which was inserted into the Criminal Code with the unanimous support of all Parties in the House. In fact the Hon. Member's Party proposed that with certain amendments in 1984. We do not intend to change our minds simply because there has been criticism of it by some sections of the press. The Section is there to protect people who may be innocent when a search is made on their premises. If they wish to consent to the information being made public, it can be. If charges are laid against them, it then becomes public. I am satisfied there is proper protection of the privacy of people who may very well be innocent and I see no reason to change the Section.

I am somewhat surprised that the hon. gentleman is opposed to it, as well as the honourable critic for the NDP—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: —who in committee suggested—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming a speech.

REFERENCE TO BELL CANADA

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister about his reasoning. If the suspects themselves want to go public, why should Bell Canada have the right to prevent them from doing so? What is the fairness of that? And what is achieved by taking the Section that far?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I believe in this particular instance Bell Canada is one of those whose premises were searched. Therefore, under the Section, those people whose premises are searched have to give their consent unless charges are laid. There is an adequate protection. The press, or whoever, can obtain all of the information they like. They are simply forbidden to publicize certain aspects of it.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that in the committee—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Order.

Mr. Crosbie: —the Hon. Member—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: Well, the truth hurts. The hon. gentlemen are weaseling now—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: —and they took an opposite position in committee.

Mr. Rodriguez: You can't make a speech. Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AGRICULTURE

PRODUCTION OF GENERIC FARM CHEMICALS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the wise Minister of Agriculture.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: It would be wise just to put a question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: Just wait till you hear the answer.

As the Minister knows, the Senate Agricultural Committee recently recommended legislative changes which will save farmers millions of dollars, as did Generic Pharmaceutical recently for consumers. Will the Minister agree to a change in the Patent Act which would reduce the exclusive right a farm chemical company has from 17 years to four years?

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. Rodriguez: Wise question.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the interest of the Hon. Member in the subject but I believe, if he will think for a moment, he will have to recognize that if there are any changes with respect to that specific subject, it will not be forthcoming from the Minister of Agriculture—

Mr. Nystrom: I know that.

Mr. Wise: —but will be coming forth on behalf of the Government—

Mr. Benjamin: What are you doing about it?

Mr. Wise: —from the appropriate Minister, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Ms. Jewett: Can't you give him advice?

REQUEST THAT MINISTER SEEK AMENDMENT TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Will the Minister of Agriculture recommend to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs an amendment to the Patent Act which will reduce the exclusive right of farm chemical companies from a 17-year patent to four years so we can save the farmers millions of dollars?

Mr. Rodriguez: Give us a wise answer.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should recognize, because it is a fact, that the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs do consult frequently and often.

Mr. Rodriguez: Waffle.

Mr. Wise: He will also recognize this is not the appropriate forum in which the two Ministers should consult.

Mr. Rodriguez: Waffle.

Ms. Jewett: Why not?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

WOMEN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice.

We are anxious to have the Government's response to the equality report which deals with a number of very important matters such as sexual orientation and equality for women in the military.

I would like to ask the Minister: How can we be expected to trust the good faith of the Minister of Justice and another Minister—I am thinking of the Minister of State (Tourism) who just announced an advertising campaign this week which treats women as sex objects—how can we trust in the good faith of the Minister of Justice?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, that is the most convoluted and confused question I have ever heard. In the first place the Canadian Armed Services have a very positive approach to the employment and utilization of women in the Armed Services. In fact the Canadian Defence Forces have the third highest number—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Second.

Mr. Crosbie: —of women employees in its ranks of any forces in the world. Only the United States and one other country are ahead of us. Are we second?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Second.

Mr. Crosbie: Oh, we are the second. That's far better.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: And we admire the contribution of women to the Canadian Armed Services and we will continue to do all we can to see that they—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: —advance and their numbers are increased.

EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN BY CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I can anticipate that the Minister's response next week is not going to be positive. Will he tell us whether he thinks the Canadian Armed Forces are fair when out of their approximately 84,000 jobs, some 70,000—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order.

Ms. Copps: —jobs are denied to women?

Mr. Speaker: I find it very difficult to see how that question can be to the Minister of Justice. If the Hon. Member would like an answer by the Minister of Defence? However, the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre.

Mr. Keeper: What is this?

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PRIVATE ENTERPRISE DOOR-TO-DOOR DELIVERY

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. I understand that many Canadians who do not receive mail delivery to their homes are hiring enterprising young people to pick up their mail from community boxes to deliver it door-to-door on a daily basis. Could the Parliamentary Secretary tell the House if this kind of service signals a first step toward a greater contracting out of postal services?

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be appropriate at this time on behalf of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to recognize the appointment of the President of Canada Post here in this House of Commons, Mr. Don Lander.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. A few days ago the Japanese Minister of Industry announced that his country was extending for the sixth year its quotas on exports of Japanese cars to the United States at the same levels as the present year. Could the Minister inform the House whether he has made a request for similar treatment by Japan with respect to exports of cars to this country? If not, does he intend to do so?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to receive that representation from the Official Opposition. With respect to the question to which the Hon. Member referred, I am sure he is inclined to congratulate the Government for so effectively handling the quota question last year so that we received over $1 billion of fresh non-Canadian investment in the auto industry in Canada.

INQUIRY CONCERNING QUOTAS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister if he does not realize that, if the United States has quotas and Canada does not, there will be a diversion of Japanese cars from the United States to the Canadian market, threatening Canadian jobs and production? Why will the Minister not say right now that he is going to seek quotas for the coming year from Japan on exports of its cars to this country?

• (1500)

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is always playing catch-up. The fact is the quota to which he refers is not an American quota but a voluntary restraint on the part of the Japanese. In the case of the United States, last year it was 21 per cent. In the case of Canada, it was 18 per cent. Once again we are one step ahead of the Member for Windsor West.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: You're the Minister!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

I am in receipt of a notice of a question of privilege to be raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PRIVILEGE

DISALLOWANCE OF QUESTION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Shush!

Ms. Copps: I am not sure whether or not this is a question of privilege. However, I should like to seek your guidance in the matter. In light of the attempt by all sides to develop some new guidelines and new civility, I would like to ask the Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is entitled to make her point.

Ms. Copps: I would like to ask the Speaker if we could have some direction from the Chair with respect to the directing of questions during Oral Question Period. I felt that with respect to my particular question, given that the Minister of Justice

(Mr. Crosbie) is responsible for co-ordinating the response from some 14 ministries with respect to the Equality for All Report, it was completely in order. I was somewhat surprised that it was ruled out of order.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I misunderstood the Hon. Member's preamble. I will check the "blues". I understood she was asking a question of the Minister of Justice about whether something in his view was fair within the Department of National Defence.

Some Hon. Members: That's right.

Mr. Speaker: I would be happy to look at the "blues" in order to see what the Hon. Member did say. I will get back to her in this regard. If it is a matter of a communications confusion and I am at fault, then I will be glad to apologize to the Hon. Member.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: When the House took recess at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) had the floor.

Resuming debate.

The Hon. Member not being here, is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)—

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is rising on a point of order? We have started the question.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, because of the noise I could not hear whether we are still debating the immigration Bill or not. If we are, then I would like to speak to it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway has a point. I suppose it is best made by the fact that I could barely hear the Hon. Member claiming a point of order because of the noise. Therefore, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway on debate.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of matters I would like to raise with respect to Bill C-55. I would like to outline two particular cases, if I might, in order to illustrate my point. What we are talking about in this legislation is speeding up the decision-making process in order that would-be immigrants, or people trying to become Canadian citizens, are not left hung out to dry, as it were.

I wish to illustrate my point by outlining a case involving a man who came to see me. I will not give his name. However, I will say that he is a sawmill worker in British Columbia. He came to Canada from India in 1970. He has worked in a sawmill since 1971 as a sawyer. He is a good worker and makes about $14.86 per hour. He has been steadily employed since he came to Canada. It is a tough job in the mills and he performs it well.

He became a Canadian citizen in 1974. He married in 1982. As is the Indian custom, he married a woman in India. On June 15, 1983, he applied to have his wife come to join him in Canada. There was a delay with respect to his application. He contacted the Department of Immigration and there was a further delay. His application was ultimately refused. He filed an appeal on September 25, 1985. There will now be another delay. He was told that the delay will be at least 18 months before his appeal can be heard.

In cases such as this I have often found that the appeals are won. The appeal tribunal will often rule that, for instance in this case, it is a valid marriage and the appeal will be allowed. What will happen then is that he will have to apply again and there will be another delay of about one year.

Here we have a case of a man who was married in 1983. His appeal may be heard in 1987 and by 1988 he should be able to have his wife come to Canada. That is five years during which he has had to live apart from his wife. I say that is cruel. I do not think that is a good system of justice at all.

As well, there is an additional problem in this case. As is often the case, this man will not be able to have his wife come to visit in this five-year time span because when she goes to apply for a visitor's visa immigration officials will say that they had better not let her come to Canada because what she may do is stay here. She would then have to be deported and that would be a messy procedure. Immigration officials do not trust people in these situations to visit Canada because, after all, they have already applied to get into the country and are not really regular visitors. The man in my case is caught in a Catch-22 situation. He has to wait for the appeal process and cannot bring his wife to Canada as a visitor. What kind of way is that to treat a Canadian citizen? In this case, I think I will mention the name of the person involved. The man's name is Mr. Major Dwaliwal. I am sure he would want me to do this, in the sense that his case is typical of many cases which come before the Department of Immigration.

While I have a chance I would like to make the point that this is a problem of delay for this man. I think it is a matter of a cruel delay. There is a secondary problem resulting from it in that he cannot even have his wife come to visit him in Canada. I do not think that is a correct procedure.

While I am on my feet with respect to the immigration matter, I wish to draw to the Minister's attention another series of cases which were brought to my attention through my constituency office in Vancouver. A few Saturdays ago I was visited by a group of doctors. These were medical doctors from different countries. All of them are citizens of Canada or landed immigrants. Several of the doctors had been asked to come to Canada with the possibility of practising medicine in Canada being held out to them. It was pointed out to them that they could contribute something to the country and that they could gain as well. There were 12 doctors in this group. All of them had degrees and credentials recognized by the World Health Organization and by the Medical Council of Canada based here in Ottawa.

In order to intern in Canada two requirements must be met. First, one has to pass an exam in Canada and be evaluated by the Medical Council of Canada. Second, after the exam, one must find an intern position, after which time one becomes a doctor. The problem we have is that this is a group of foreign doctors who have become Canadian citizens. They have emigrated to Canada and cannot obtain intern positions here.

I promised this group that I would bring this situation to the attention of the Minister. It is an important problem and a very serious one for these people. I know because I met with them personally. They are good people, well-educated and willing to contribute here in Canada. As a matter of fact, they told me that there was not an over-supply of doctors in certain areas of Canada and that they would be prepared to go to these outlying areas if only they could intern in Canada. They told me that certain areas of Canada are not being served by local graduates and that they were willing to serve in these areas for three years, for example, after interning in Canada. However, the obstacle before them is that they cannot get internship positions.

When I spoke to these people I found that there was a pattern of discrimination here. Graduates of Canadian medical schools are getting internships. However, these people are not, and I have to make the point again that they are Canadian citizens. They are different in the sense that they were educated abroad, but their credentials are recognized after passing an appropriate test in Canada. They are qualified and they are Canadian citizens but they cannot get internships.

Remember, Mr. Speaker, that these are Canadian citizens who were educated in foreign medical schools, so I will call them foreign medical graduates. Apparently, 500 foreign medical graduates applied for internships and about 23 received them. That is a pretty low ratio. They told me that medical examinations are conducted in 23 different countries and those who take the examinations are given false hopes about what will happen when they get to Canada. They give up their jobs and come to Canada to become doctors in Canada.

Why are these examinations given if they mean nothing? Why is there a gap between what the Government of Canada says and what the medical profession in Canada does? It seems that the medical profession is more powerful than the Government.

It appears that there is a pattern of discrimination on the part of the Canadian medical profession which prefers to take local graduates as interns rather than foreign graduates. I would go so far as to say that this pattern of discrimination is in fact illegal.

On talking to these foreign medical graduates I found that they were in desperate situations. I talked to one man who could not even get a technician's job. When he applied for such a job, he was told that he could not have it because he is a doctor. He said that he was not a doctor because he could not get an internship, but they said they could not hire him because he was a doctor. He is in a never-never land. He is a doctor but he is not a doctor.

One man to whom I spoke applied as a nursing orderly. Can you believe it, Mr. Speaker? He is a foreign medical graduate who came to Canada, passed a Canadian exam, could not get accepted as an intern, applied as a nursing orderly and could not even get that job.

Two provinces in Canada seem to have avoided this situation, Manitoba and Quebec. These provinces have made an effort to offer equality of positions to foreign medical graduates.

I take the opportunity of this debate to draw this particular problem to the attention of the House of Commons, the Canadian people, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), who I see in the House, and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). I would like to conclude by reading into the record a letter sent to me by Dr. Kanwarjit Singh on behalf of the Committee of Graduates of Foreign Medical Schools. As well, I was pleased to meet with Dr. G. Seteadrma from the riding of Vancouver-Kingsway. The letter to which I refer is dated January 28, 1986, and reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Waddell:

Thank you very much for giving us the opportunity to express our problems and concerns.

We represent the Committee of Graduates of Foreign Medical Schools working under the auspices of the Immigrant Services Society of B.C.

Our membership is constituted by Canadian citizens and permanent residents who received their medical degrees in non Canadian institutions. Our credentials are recognized by both the World Health Organization and the Medical Council of Canada.

In order to practise medicine in Canada a foreign medical graduate needs to fulfill two additional requirements, which are:

1. Pass an examination called "the Medical Council of Canada Evaluating Examination".

2. Train for a period of time in a teaching hospital, such training being known as Internship and/or Residency.

After passing the Medical Council of Canada Evaluating Examination, we are theoretically eligible for postgraduate training on the same basis as any Canadian medical graduate. From this point on there should be no distinction between medical graduates from Canadian and non-Canadian medical schools. However, in practice it doesn't work this way.

We face serious difficulties, peculiar to our group, in obtaining internships and residencies. This implies that our rights are largely ignored by those empowered to allocate internships and residencies. Under the prevailing circumstances, after many frustrating years of waiting, most of us have still not been given a training opportunity.

It is statistically recognized that there is a shortage of general practitioners in remote and rural areas, and of specialists all over Canada. The federal and provincial governments have been unsuccessful in attracting local medical graduates to serve in these underprivileged areas in spite of continuous promotional efforts and monetary incentives.

We graduates of foreign medical schools are willing to serve in these underserviced areas after mandatory postgraduate clinical training in a Canadian hospital, which is necessary before we get a licence to practise medicine.

Since there is a need for these services, we appeal to the federal and provincial authorities to create postgraduate training positions which will be available for those who are willing to serve in underprivileged areas.

We want to bring these serious difficulties that we are facing to the attention of the concerned authorities, the media and public at large because very few individuals know the hardships and frustrations we are suffering. We are grateful to the Canadian people and their government for allowing us to be in this country. We have spent many years of studies to become physicians and would like to be able to contribute our expertise as participating members of this country.

We thank you for your attention and are counting on your support in finding an equitable and just solution to our problems.

Thank you.

The letter is signed by Kanwarjit Singh for the Committee of Graduates of Foreign Medical Schools. I am pleased to put their case to the Parliament of Canada. As well, I am pleased to put before Parliament the situation of my constituent, Mr. Major Dwaliwal. I draw the attention of the Government to these humanitarian considerations that exist in the area of immigration policy, considerations that need to be addressed and addressed quickly.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if the Hon. Member could tell us of some of his own personal experiences in the City of Vancouver with respect to the delays that are currently being experienced by those who are waiting to appear before the Immigration Appeal Board, and tell us whether or not he feels that the increase in the numbers of representatives, paltry though it be, will have any impact on that.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, there are delays and it is one of the biggest problems with immigration. We have to balance two things. We have to speed up the rate at which the cases are heard, but in doing this we also have to make sure that there is a just system. In this case, that system is probably an adversarial system where justice can be rendered. We do want to speed up the hearing of the appeals but we do not want to lose the justice and due process. This is a balancing act the Government has to consider.

I personally am in favour of creating more positions as long as they will be staffed by good people and not simply be excuses for patronage like the Liberals used in previous incarnations.

Ms. Copps: That's what I get for handing him a lob.

Mr. Waddell: No, there are some very good people on the Immigration Appeal Boards as well. I think we have to speed up the process a bit but we have to balance it with the need for having a just hearing. Yes, the answer is that there are many cases out there, and that is one of the big problems in immigration.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Hon. Member could address a concern of mine dealing with the perception of discrimination in respect of people coming to the country either through refugee immigration status or through family reunification. A valid impression has been left in the minds of many people that if one happens to come from a country where the skin colour of the majority is other than white, road-blocks are put in one's place in the acceptance of a marriage certificate or a birth certificate. We have even reached the point where people have to bring in blood tests to prove that they are parent and child, et cetera. There seems to be built into the system more road-blocks for people coming from non-white countries, and I wonder whether the Hon. member would comment on that.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, of course the Hon. Member is right. I suspect there is something behind that regarding the foreign doctors I used as an example. Certainly that is the case in the first example I used. As I mentioned, the bureaucracy will, in a sense, outlaw those weddings. The person then appeals, and gets a reasonably fair hearing where there is a little more discretion. The appeal is allowed, but of course there is a delay for another 18 months. I think there is very much in what the Hon. Member said.

I was a lawyer. I practised some immigration law but not a lot of it. I practised a lot of criminal law and other forms of law in court.

Mr. Lewis: Were you good at anything, Ian?

Mr. McDermid: Did you do anything?

Mr. Waddell: I will not respond to those comments; I will just see them in court. I am trying to say to the Hon. Member that in the justice process, if we had delays and discrimination such as these that violated due process, we put money into it to speed up the cases and have it done properly. Somehow for immigration, which is very important, we do not make resources available and we permit bad process.

An Hon. Member: What about the cost?

Mr. Waddell: There is the cost, but we should be prepared to make that money available. On a broader matter, we have not quite recognized that Canada is the multicultural country we have created through immigration over the last 20 years or 30 years. We have not quite come around to the fact that this is the reality. We are still acting in terms of lowering priorities in immigration matters, in terms of discriminition, bureaucracy and other things. We are still applying a standard as if we were the old type of country of the past. I do not think that answers the Hon. Member's question directly. I do not know whether she has had a chance to speak in the debate, but I would welcome that because she represents an inner-city riding as well. These problems surface every day in our constituency offices.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Member tell us whether he feels the Charter of Rights will have any effect on the difficult situation faced by foreign medical graduates seeking employment in Canada?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I made an allusion to that in my speech. If I were a young lawyer out there again taking cases, I would take that particular case. I think the pattern of conduct in which medical associations are engaging in most provinces except Quebec and Manitoba could be illegal. There is systematic discrimination against foreign medical graduates in not letting them get internships. I would hope that would be ruled unconstitutional if the case was heard. I wish they would take the case to court. Better still, to avoid the case, I wish medical associations would change their procedures. Also I wish the Minister of Immigration and the Minister of National Health and Welfare would get themselves involved in trying to stop this terrible pattern of discrimination against foreign medical graduates.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Hon. Member two questions. Is he aware that the problem he raised in connection with foreign medical graduates is not the only illustration, that there is the same discrimination in other professions? Does this not raise a question about which we have to think, that we may have given professional organizations too much power to control their own fields? Also, when the Department of Immigration receives applications from doctors, engineers and other professionals—

Mr. Bradley: And lawyers.

Mr. Orlikow: And lawyers, yes—is the prospective immigrant warned that he or she will probably have great difficulty and that it will probably take years to practise his or her profession in most parts of Canada?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, in respect of the first question, I would personally prefer it if bar associations and medical associations were self-regulated. In the long run that is a better system. This is why we have the Charter of Rights, the common law principles and so on; they still have to regulate themselves within the law. They are open to challenge if they do not. I think this is a good case, the one of foreign medical students, on which someone should challenge them.

To answer the Hon. Member's second question, people are not warned. That is what the doctors were telling me. They said they came to Canada with great expectations, and now they are stuck. They cannot even get jobs. That is a terrible tragedy and a terrible waste of resources. It is about time we did something about that.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I realize that Bill C-55 deals with a very specific element of our immigration policy, the appointment of the number of people who will be in positions to oversee the tremendous backlog of applications for refugee status. However, it seems that the opportunity given us by third reading of the Bill is to examine some of the questions which were not put before the House in Bill form, and to examine some of the questions which have been ignored to date on a systemic basis.

There has certainly been a crying need over the last number of years for a total review of immigration policy, not only with the view of encouraging more people to come to this great country, but of determining that support systems are available for those people whom we welcome into our country either as refugees of a political nature or under the family reunification program.

I should like to deal, first and foremost, with the issue of family reunification. Most of us in our capacity as Members of Parliament—and it is certainly the case in the riding of Hamilton East—represent people of many different cultures and from many different countries. I face a demand as a Member of Parliament from families who have tried every means of facilitating reunification with their loved ones in other countries. There are times in my office on a Saturday morning when I will have a family in tears. In fact, about a week ago I was most pleased to hear the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) say that he was working very hard to facilitate the reunification of the Estonian family, a situation which was raised by a Member from the City of Toronto. That two-year old child, about whom the Minister spoke, is not alone in being isolated from her family.

There was a couple in my office last week who were forced to leave their eight-year old daughter in Romania. They applied for a visa and had to wait a very long time for it. When the visa was accorded, the Government would not allow the child to leave with the parents and she stayed in the care of the grandparents. The parents have been in Canada since September of 1984, and have applied for political refugee status. They have been waiting for their case to be heard. Their case is clear, they are legitimate political refugees. In the meantime, their daughter languishes in Romania. She has been punished by the Romanian Government to the extent that she is not allowed to go to school. This eight-year old child has been separated from her parents for almost 19 months and has been punished to the point of being denied an education.

While it is admirable of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to raise issues of individual concern, he must recognize that this is not an isolated case. The situation faced by the Estonian family is faced by hundreds and thousands of families across Canada. People are going to bed every night with their hearts breaking. There was a woman crying in my office just last week because she longed for her daughter. She did not know whether she would see her daughter again or when the Canadian Government was going to deal with her application.

They have not been denied by the Canadian Government, but are on the list of the 20,000 people who are waiting for a fair hearing, which is the right of immigrants to Canada.

We have heard the other side of the story, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that politicians must face in Canadian society is a certain level of bigotry, of fear, and of racism directed toward the people who would, allegedly, steal our jobs. I have heard it in my own riding. People call me up and ask why I am fighting on behalf of immigrants who came to this country and stole our jobs. However, we know full well that immigration creates jobs. People who are working, in many cases for a minimum wage, and are pooling their resources, are forced to spend almost every last penny of their earnings to keep themselves afloat. These people are contributing to the economy in a far more direct way than those of us who can afford to sock away our dollars or benefit from a capital gains exemption. Every dollar paid in a salary to immigrants is spent because those immigrants want to establish themselves. They want to buy a home.

I had a very personal experience in the days of the exodus of refugees from Vietnam. I was involved with a group that sponsored a family from Vietnam. At that time I took over publicity for Operation Lifeline. I received hate letters and calls from people asking why I was getting involved with these people. The members of the family that I helped to sponsor are now working, although not at great jobs. One of them eventually got a job at a major steel mill and then was laid off, like many other people. However, most of them are working at jobs in clothing factories where they are earning only a little more than minimum wage. A couple of them are working in restaurants.

It is wonderful to see what they have done and to see the joy on their son's face because he is taking piano lessons. He is a great musician. Mr. Speaker, I realize that that family has taken nothing from the country; in fact, it has given. That family has shown what a family can do when it puts its hearts and minds together and is prepared to live in crowded circumstances and to pool its resources.

Public policy of immigration should be used to facilitate that kind of reunification and to facilitate the immigration of people to this country who stand a good chance of making it and of making an economic contribution. I was disappointed last year when the Committee on Immigration took the position that we should be considering increases in the area of entrepreneurship. It is not that I am against entrepreneurs. More power to you if you can make a buck through the sweat of your brow and your own imagination. However, I also think that the so-called entrepreneur program, which basically defines someone who has money, should not necessarily be the criterion upon which we encourage people to come to this country. My great uncle may have died and bequeathed me $.5 million, but does that mean I would necessarily make a contribution to our economy? If one looks at Canadian success stories, in many cases those people came to this country as immigrants with $10, $20, or $100 in their pockets. My ancestors were driven out of their country during the potato famine because they did not have enough to eat, and they came to Canada.

I would like to refer to what we have been doing with Bill C-55 and other legislation which considers the question of family reunification as it relates to those with disabilities. I think a lot of people are praying that the changes which were recommended in the equality report, as it deals with immigration, will be implemented.

[Translation]

Specifically, Mr. Speaker, there is one question that was never addressed by the Committee or by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. MacDonald), and that is the question of the immigration of young children or relatives who are less developed mentally. I am not sure about the French term, but in English the term used to be: —mentally retarded child or developmentally retarded child, not a developmentally advanced child. I can give the Minister chapter and verse of cases which have been brought to my attention of people who have been denied reunification with their children because the children have been defined by a medical expert, or whatever, as not having an IQ high enough to come to this country. In some cases they are working on farms and able to support themselves in their home country, but they are denied the right to come to Canada. I am pleased that the equality report which followed the Charter is recommending to the Government that we change the discriminatory clauses in our Immigration Act which prevent people from coming to Canada if they have been classified as being in that so-called sub-group of developmentally handicapped, because that is not fair.

In the same way we should be considering the establishment of a process which will permit people from countries other than the white Anglo-Saxon countries to get a fair shake with regard to immigration. I have many friends from India as well as Pakistan who have been extremely disconcerted by the attitude which they sometimes face when, with the assistance of relatives here in Canada, they make application in their home country. In many cases they have to travel hundreds, if not thousands, of miles to arrive at the consulate only to be told that their birth certificate or their marriage certificate is invalid. Perhaps their way of doing things is not exactly the way in which we operate here in Canada. We must build in, not only flexibility, but also sensitivity.

I was pleased when, some months ago, by way of intervention from the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) and myself we were successful in convincing the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to issue a special visa to a family that came from Iran. I hope this message reaches thoses people who are working on the front lines. Like the people who work in your constituency office, Mr. Speaker, they may have all the best intentions in the world. They are on the front lines for Canada and, even if the answer is not a positive one, at the very least they should be decent, polite, and accommodating.

This particular family had a daughter-in-law and a son living in Canada with a four-year-old child. They had five other children living in Iran and had no intention of immigrating to Canada. They wanted to come to see their son, whom they had not seen for seven years, and his new wife and their new granchild. Because of the difficult political situation in Iran, when the visa was issued they had to leave the country immediately. The visa was not issued for Canada because there is not a Canadian embassy there. They were advised to go to Switzerland and make an application at the Canadian consulate in Switzerland and they did so. When they arrived in Switzerland the immediate reaction of the official involved was that these people were from Iran. "There is no way we touch Iranians because they are coming to this country to live, they are not here on valid visitor's permits", he said. All the long-distance phone calls from my office or that of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain were not going to convince this particular official that this family was coming to Canada to see a son they had not seen in seven years and a grandchild who was then, I think, four years old.

We intervened with the Minister and she took the bull by the horns and said she would issue the permit, which she did. For that we were very grateful. Unfortunately, many people do not realize that they have that recourse, that you can get all of the Parties together even when the House is not sitting, or that the Minister's disposition is going to be as positive in other cases as it was in this.

Obviously the Minister cannot deal with every single immigration issue which crosses the desk of every official. The point is that we have an obligation to develop systems which take into consideration the needs, not only of those people who are working in the hinterlands, as it were, in our consulates and immigration offices, but we also have to build systems which will offset the kind of endemic and systemic discrimination we have seen in the backlog of refugee applications. Most of those people are not necessarily coming from what we would call the traditional white anglo-saxon countries. They come from countries where political unrest is something we only see on television and hope will never happen here. We have to develop a system which will not only take that into consideration, but one which will keep paramount the notion that family reunification should be the number one objective of our immigration policy. You can lose your money, you can lose your home and a lot of other things, but if you have your family you have something to build on. There is a built-in bonus to a policy which says that when the number of immigrants is to be increased—and I believe it should be, and substantially so. Because it creates jobs and increases economic activity, let us not do it just for those people who have $250,000 or $500,000 to invest. Frankly, most people are not in that range.

There is a lot of work to be done in this area. I have files here, and there are dozens and dozens more where they came from, concerning people who have had a problem with the system. I am afraid that a two-page Bill dealing with the single issue of more appointments to the IAB will not solve these problems. What we need is a long-term look at where we are going, how we can open our doors, how we can encourage more immigration to help build Canada. This country was built by the work of immigrants and their families and that is the kind of policy we should be implementing as we enter the 21st century.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member spent considerable time on the lengthy process involved in getting applications started and completed. I wonder if she has had experience with the long and sometimes tedious process that refugees have to go through only to find themselves suspended, as it were, by the Department, sometimes for several years. Can she comment on that particular problem?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, in some cases these individuals are faced with a double whammy. They may have fled their country because of political or economic persecution, or a general lack of individual freedom. They come to Canada, make application as bona fide political refugees, yet in many cases are denied the opportunity to seek gainful employment, for example, while their application is under review. Obviously if the application takes years—and we have seen a number of refugees who have waited two or three years—they have to be either a self-supporting millionaire or have an awful lot of friends in order to survive. If they are able to work, in many cases they establish themselves as part of the community. I had a gentleman in my office a couple of weeks ago who has been working as a baker. He has been in this country for a number of years. He has a second job as a fur-cutter. This is a very specific profession. Yet, because of some of the regulations and/or delays, he is facing great financial hardship.

Obviously these questions can be addressed only through an over-all look at the problem. It cannot be done simply by attempting to deal with one particular problem involving the Immigration Appeal Board. Tripling the number of members will not solve the problem when you have a backlog of thousands. It would be unfair to suggest to the public that this Bill is the answer. Obviously it will speed up the process to the tune of a few dozen a week, but when you have thousands of people waiting, they are going to be waiting for a very long time.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to my colleague when she spoke about her experience as a Member of Parliament and as a member of the Ontario Legislature concerning immigration problems. I am sure there is some similarity between the problems she faces in Hamilton and the ones I face in Toronto. I have found that while the family reunification plan is working well, the system is breaking down in the flood of applications, continuously refused, of people who are trying to sponsor extended family members for immigration, that is to say, uncles, aunts, nephews and nieces. I cannot understand why we are not approaching this problem in a more systematic and serious way. I just wondered if that was her experience in Hamilton, and if so would she enlighten the Government on the advantages of placing a little more emphasis on allowing greater flexibility concerning these applications? These people would come to Canada not as independents or entrepreneurs, but as people who have the support of a family living in this country.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I happen to have been lucky enough in my constituency office to have had an excellent assistant on these matters in the person of Don Drury. Unfortunately, because we cannot afford to pay our people as well as do other Government sectors, he has had to go on to greener pastures, and I am really sorry to see him go. That being said, let me point out that we seem to stick to a kind of Canadian cultural practice in this area. Too many of my Italian-Canadian friends, for example, if you are compare, you can be a brother-in-law, sister-in-law, aunt, or uncle, and you are all family. They do not make the distinction we do regarding the son, daughter or father type of relationship. They reach out. If you are from the same village, you are compare.

We have to look at expanding the definition so that those relatives who are now being refused are given greater consideration because they already have a support system here. In my own community, the Agro family from Racalmuto came to Canada in the late 1940s because the doors were open to them. Now there are more people from that village living in Hamilton than there are in Racalmuto. I think most of them have the last name of Agro. They would argue that they are all related, and I am sure that that is so in heart if not in bloodline, but I think the Hon. Member made a very good point.

Mr. Hovdebo: There was one other point that I wanted to ask the Member to comment on, and that was a statement she made, which is often contradicted by general acceptance across the country, that is, that the increase of immigrants increases the economic activity of Canada, rather than the myth which is propagated most generally that immigrants take Canadians' jobs and, therefore, put Canadians out of work. I would like her to comment or to enlarge on that a little bit.

Ms. Copps: I am sure there are people here in this room today who have come from another country with very little but have been prepared to invest in this country. I have friends today who are working in sewing factories making $4.50 an hour. They might come home with a pay cheque of $160, $170, $180 a week. That money goes to buy clothing, because they have come to the country as political refugees, for example, with nothing but the clothes on their backs. That money goes to buy food. It goes to buy, in many cases, shelter and a roof over their heads. I think you see many, many immigrants who believe in the dream of home ownership and they pool their resources at an early stage to buy a home. That money may go to buy a washing machine. When you are at a lower income level, which would primarily represent the income level of most immigrants coming to this country, as soon as you get a pay cheque you take it out and spend it in the community.

If you are in the $50,000 plus income bracket many of your dollars are spent moving around T bills or investing in something which does not create direct jobs either for your community or for the country. You are playing on the stock market or you are moving your money around in that way, but that money has less of a direct feeding effect into the economy, less of an injection, less of a boost than the money of the family that comes here and makes collectively between a husband and a wife working maybe only $20,000 or $25,000. If that money is put together to get a house, to get food, to buy a car, to buy necessities in Canadian life, then that money is going right back into the economy. That is why I think that immigrants in fact create employment rather than take it away from Canadians.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I will just make a very brief intervention. I want to reiterate a number of the points that have been made this afternoon, for instance, the point made by the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) just a moment ago when she indicated that we impose upon immigrants who come to Canada a family structure which they sometimes do not recognize. They wonder why we do not recognize that somebody coming from their country wants to bring over his or her family.

For instance, I can give you a very personal experience which I had. I lived for a number of years in Nigeria at the time that the census was taken. When the census taker came around to my house we had a Canadian girl staying with us. The census taker was in quite a quandary because, although we were in the Moslem part of the country, she was not another wife, nor was she a daughter or a sister. When he asked me if she was my sister, I said no. Finally, the census taker asked me, "Does she come from your country?". When I explained to him, "Yes, she came from a part of my country", he said, "Oh, that's fine", and he put her down as a sister, and that was very acceptable to him and to everybody. In fact, it was the only category into which she could fit.

I also want to reiterate the concern that many people have about immigration and the concern which not only the immigrants but the people in Canada feel in dealing with immigrants who have come to Canada. I am referring to the ability of the Department of suspend people somewhere between the time of their decision to apply, the final possibility that they might land or even be in Canada, and, even beyond that, when they might become citizens of Canada. I remender a couple of years ago, as members of the Public Accounts Committee, we were looking into the real delays that veterans were experiencing in getting their pensions. We were told by veterans who appeared before our committee that sometimes it took five years from the time they applied for a veteran's allowance or a veteran's pension until they went through all the processes and finally got a veteran's pension. This is within our bureaucracy. I think that in the case of immigrants we have managed to stretch far beyond that because we now have situations where immigrants wait for years and years.

I have a neighbour in my home constituency who has been a refugee for a number of years and for some reason, even after he was designated as a refugee, he was unable to get himself designated as a landed immigrant. He has already been here five years.

When we deal with Bill C-55, which is the Act to amend the Immigration Act, we think that we are changing the process for the better, but it becomes obvious, once you start going through this structure and you delve into the problems we have regarding the people immigrating to the country, that what we are doing is applying a few band-aids which are not really going to make very much difference into the total and final effectiveness of the Act. What the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has announced to the world is that until now we have been accepting 85,000 immigrants, and a little more with the reunification of families and so on, we are telling the world now that we are going to start accepting 120,000 per year. We are increasing the number by approximately 25 per cent. However, in doing so we have not put in place the kind of processing ability which would make it possible for us to have a smooth operating machine so when these people apply they can be processed. Just imagine sitting in a community in South America, Vietnam or Hong Kong and knowing that you have put in an application, and then waiting for five years to get a reply from the local immigration officer, or even in fact never getting a reply from the local immigration officer, being ignored entirely, not necessarily by what they consider to be the local bureaucrat, but being ignored by Canada. It seems they are being ignored by Canada because we do not have the necessary facilities to allow for quick processing of these applicants.

Our treatment of applicants is not good. Rather than accepting their application they should be told that nothing can be done for them. There are cases where we advertise for immigrants yet we hinder them from immigrating to this country so that they eventually give up and decide not to come. I am surprised that we have as many immigrants as we do when one considers the persistence that is necessary to become a landed immigrant.

Those whose applications are eventually processed are thankful for their acceptance by Canadians. However, if they find they are unable to establish themselves within our structure they face numerous delays, which we would not accept as Canadians. Landed immigrants face so many road-blocks in their pursuit of landed immigrant status that many believe we do not want them to become citizens.

Furthermore, those who have obtained landed immigrants status and wish to bring their families for a visit should ensure that the latter do not apply for immigration before visiting. The bureaucrats in the Department will suggest that they cannot allow a family member to come to Canada for a visit because they have applied for landed immigrant status. No matter what assurances are made that the family member will return home, the bureaucrat assumes that that person cannot be trusted to return. The Department of Employment and Immigration will not allow them to enter Canada on a visitor's permit if they have applied for landed immigrant status.

When considering a Bill such as this we must take the opportunity to consider the problems that are not solved by this Bill and ensure that we have a smooth mechanism for quickly processing these other 30,000 immigrants to Canada so they do not feel rejected in this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): On division.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN ARSENALS LIMITED DIVESTITURE AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, February 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. McInnes that Bill C-87, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Canadian Arsenals Limited

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): When the House last debated the Bill, the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) had the floor. Since he is not here, we will resume debate.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to join in debate on Bill C-87, an Act to allow the federal Government to dispose of Canadian Arsenals Limited. However, it is not because I agree with the Government's objective—just the opposite. It gives us the opportunity to explore how the Government's ideology can lead it to make such financial mistakes. It also gives us the opportunity to point out the weaknesses in the proposal before us, particularly in the way it has been carried through. Finally, we are given the opportunity to state our regret at the Government's desire to dispose of Canadian Arsenals Limited.

This corporation, which manufactures large calibre munitions, including tank ammunition, has been in existence as a Crown corporation for just over 40 years. The proposal is to sell this corporation to a Montreal engineering firm named SNC. That corporation, through its ownership of Canadian Arsenals Limited as well as IVI Incorporated, which has been operating for some time, will be allowed to become a monopolist in Canada of the manufacture of munitions for the Department of National Defence.

I believe this decision by the Government is regrettable. Canadian Arsenals Limited does 90 per cent of its business with the federal Government. We trust that it operates as efficiently as all other Crown corporations. We assume that sales are made to the Government at the lowest possible price. If excessive profits are being made, they would come back to the Government soon enough and would be available to offset costs. We have a situation, then, in which there cannot be any profiteering in the production of ammunition, yet we can be sure that the Canadian Department of National Defence will have the ammunition it needs and there will not be any of several kinds of risks being run.

The fact is that Canadian Arsenals has been quite successful as a commercial enterprise. It is on the list of Canada's 500 largest companies. It was third in a list of companies which have had the best profit record over the past five years. Admittedly, one might say it was a very difficult five years with the interest rate depression of the early 1980s as part of that time period. I suppose the assured business of armaments carried on by Canadian Arsenals would help to explain why it ranked number three among the profit makers of the country. The Government expects the profits of the corporation of Canadian Arsenals Limited to grow and sales are expected to double over the next five years. There is a backlog of orders at the moment of some $200 million. What we have, then, is a Crown corporation which makes money. It is a Crown corporation which is profitable. But we have long since realized that when Conservatives look at Crown corporations, they assume that the profitable ones should be turned over to the private sector wherever that can be done so that the profits can be privatized. The unfortunate money losers, or those Crown corporations which cannot realize a profit for reasons of public policy, we subsidize deliberately. The Conservatives always see these money losers as inevitably in the public's hands. There is this contrast between the privatization of profit and the socializing of poverty, of money losing. The capitalist Government, in the guise of this supposed Progressive Conservative Government, is very nicely practised in that. There can be no doubt that the Government is working on that kind of ideological principle even though there is a case for munitions manufacture, given the necessity of certain defence forces in our country, to be operating as a Crown corporation with limited profits going to the Government and where the Government is in fact in control.

This matter of control is not a feature to be glossed over lightly. Canada prides itself on controlling the sale of munitions as far as a number of trouble spots in the world are concerned. And, even more broadly, Canada prides itself on not selling munitions and weapons of war to countries which have human rights records of which we do not approve. We have, more or less, long lists of countries to which we would not sell weaponry, munitions and so on, even though my friend, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), pointed out last year that the Department of External Affairs appeared to be allowing the sale of certain material of this sort to Chile, one of the countries which has a thoroughly deplorable human rights record. Of course, these sales are made by enterprises whose only concern is to make a profit with no regard for how their products are used. Such sales exemplify very nicely the concern I feel in taking a useful enterprise—as long as we have defence forces in existence—and putting it into private hands beyond Government control so that they could do what they would with their product.

It distresses me that the press release of the Department of Supply and Services suggests at page 2 that:

> SNC, in addition to offering the highest price, would substantially contribute towards making CAL an agent of growth and increased efficiency for the Canadian ammunition industry.

To have significant growth it is surely going to have to require sales outside of Canada. I think that is made quite clear on page 3 of the release where it states that:

> As a Crown Corporation, CAL has been impeded in exploring opportunities to diversify. The Government is confident that once the company is privatized, CAL will pursue additional markets and product diversification.

It further states that:

> —the Canadian ammunition industry should become internationally competitive.

It concludes with a reference to NATO sales. The reality is that NATO countries mostly have their own producers and are not very much in the market. There is far more danger that once CAL is owned by the SNC group in Montreal, it will be involved in producing and selling ammunition which might end up Lord knows where on the face of the earth. I believe that to mention this is justified because that other subsidiary to which I have already referred, IVI Incorporated, which was spun off in the mid-1960s, a producer of small calibre munitions, is controlled by SNC, and in 1983 ammunition which had been produced by this company was in fact found in Nicaragua in the camps of the Contras who were carrying on their diabolical work of trying to overthrow the popular Government of the Sandinistas. The Contras have had a great deal of unofficial help from the United States and some help which gets perilously close to official. Surely, no Canadian Government, particularly given the stance taken by the Department of External Affairs in Central America, could approve of ammunition produced by IVI Incorporated ending up in the hands of the Contras. The merchants of death who operate these days in a number of other countries are desperately trying to obtain weapons and munitions, and there is considerable danger that Canadian Arsenals Limited will be found to be selling products to countries where Canadians generally would not want the products to be found. The loss of control over this industry is a very significant danger which follows as a consequence of the Government's decision to privatize profitable opportunity in munitions manufacture by getting rid of Canadian Arsenals Limited.

Surely, there are other unfortunate consequences in this proposal. The release to which I have referred with respect to exports states on page 3:

> Significant efficiencies are expected to be achieved through joint efforts by CAL and IVI in such areas as administration, research and development, and marketing.

It is not difficult, surely, to appreciate that if IVI is involved in selling to the Department of National Defence, and has the organization to handle that, it can probably turf out some salesmen, some representatives and some people in administration after taking over CAL. When there are companies whose production is munitions there are certainly opportunities for efficiency but, surely, that means one thing only, and that is, a reduction in staff. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnis) must expect that the result of disposing of CAL will be some loss of jobs, although we always find that these things are presented to us as being done for the sake of efficiency. But that should not cause us to close our eyes to the fact that here we will have a small addition to the unemployment rolls of the country—unemployment rolls which continue to grow despite the fact that the Government takes pride in the number of jobs that have been created. The Government of Canada should not be doing anything to add to the list of those who are unemployed. In fact, it should be doing the opposite. We should actively be trying to reduce the numbers. That is just one more of the flaws in the process which is before us.

It is also appropriate to comment on the way in which this situation was carried through in explaining our opposition to the proposal. In the Budget of last May 23 it became clear that the Government intended to dispose of Canadian Arsenals Limited. In the months following the Budget a process was undertaken which, according to a reporter of The Financial Post last December, left a good deal of bitterness in the Canadian business community, bitterness over the way in which it was carried through and ultimately with respect to the fact that only a small number of companies were in on the final competition. The reporter observed that the Department of Supply and Services does not have a great deal of experience in selling things and in divesting itself, or the Government, of assets such as this Crown corporation. That explanation strikes me as somewhat ingenuous because if the Department does anything, surely it does a good deal in terms of distributing on the part of the Government, certainly with respect to information and so on. However, I would concede that selling a Crown corporation is not the normal type of business for such a Department and so it would not be good at doing it.

One still wonders at the fact that the Department forced the potential buyers through three rounds of bidding, a process which surely cost a variety of companies a fair amount of money. The fact that the last six bidders were asked to compete in terms of price only reflected, on the one hand, the fact that these half a dozen companies were acceptable to the Government. I suppose it reflected, on the other hand, that here was something which was very desirable in terms of a money-making venture. In fact, it is as assured in terms of money-making as is baking bread or packing meat. After all, stuffing ammunition cases for the army is a pretty good business. So the Government was able to force as substantial a price as it could. Certain conditions were extorted as well from the successful buyer in terms of reassuring investment and ensuring that the company remains an efficient producer.

One of the most unfortunate irregularities about the whole situation is the fact that an employee, a Director General of aeronautics and ammunition purchases in the Department, suddenly left the Department in this period of time and moved to a consulting firm in Ottawa. This consulting firm was assisting SNC put its bid forward. Even though statements has been made about his not being involved with the process, surely that raises a question about the propriety of the whole process. If this particular employee did well in the process, then that is surely reason to be concerned about employees generally.

I have already suggested that efficiencies expected here can only be achieved at the cost of jobs. The fact that the Government carried the process through without any consultation with the workers and without any deliberation with the Public Service Alliance, which represents a large number of the workforce at Canadian Arsenals, is one more lamentable feature of the situation. We can only fear what will happen in the transition to private control as SNC takes over Canadian Arsenals Limited and conceivably forces a new organization to take over. Lord knows what else might happen in that particular area. This is just one more aspect of this unfortunate decision by Government which I decry this afternoon.

I suppose the only happy feature in the whole matter has to do with the fact that the Government is determined to ensure that once the Crown corporation is a private enterprise it will be Canadian controlled. That might give us some hope for the continuance of an economically successful enterprise. It also might give us some hope that the company will respect

Canadian law and Canadian guidelines with respect to exports. This in spite of the fact that I have already alluded to IVI ammunition being found in Nicaragua, which means that even the assurance that it will be a Canadian-owned enterprise is no great assurance at all. It is satisfying to those of us who want opportunity for Canadian enterprise, if it cannot be done by Crown corporations. However, it is not a great deal of satisfaction.

I have been speaking in opposition to the measure this afternoon. I am not optimistic, of course, that our opposition will defeat the measure. When the measure comes before committee for careful consideration I expect that it will have the information available to it for a proper consideration of the matter before it is sent back to the House for third reading. The Andersen Report is particularly essential here. My last word on the subject is that this information has to be available to the committee in order for it to conduct a careful consideration of this proposal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley).

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I do not want the Hon. Member to be misled. He made a point which I am sure he did not really mean to make. He said that he did not think the Department had experience in this type of venture, that is, with respect to sales, contracts, et cetera. I am sure he would agree that a Department which handles in excess of 300,000 contracts per year definitely has experience in sales, purchasing and contract negotiation. I am also sure he would agree that a Department which purchases or sells through Crown Assets Disposal Corporation close to $10 billion worth of products a year definitely has experience in those fields. I am sure he did not wish to mislead the House in that respect.

I am also sure that when he spoke about an employee who left the Department to go to a consulting firm which was associated with one of the bidders he was well aware that this person was close to retirement. As a good civil servant close to retirement he had feelers out to firms such as this one. When he recognized that there was a conflict of interest, he withdrew himself from all negotiations with the Department pertaining to the contract. He made a point of leaving the Department prior to any bids being received by any of the firms. He signed an agreement stating that he would not be involved in any way whatsoever with the contract. I am sure the Hon. Member would not want to cast a cloud on an ex-member of the Department who served his country so well.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member was listening carefully to my remarks, so his first point is really superfluous. I conceded in my observations what he said, although since he has given me the occasion I will read the following sentence from The Financial Post of December 14, 1985. It reads:

> The Government's handling of the sale... remains the source of much bitterness within the business community. Not least this was because the aims and objectives of the Department of Supply & Services—the agency responsible for the sale—were not always clear.
> At least part of this is because DSS—which is the procurement arm for most government purchases, ranging from paperclips to jet fighters—is rather new at the game of selling government property to the private sector.

It is Mr. Bagnall whom I am quoting, and I too am inclined to think that DSS sells an awful lot of stuff and should know how to do it. Of course, selling a Crown corporation is not quite the same thing as disposing of government reports at exorbitant prices. In this case, we are all too likely to see Crown corporations sold off at a good deal less than that, and that might well reflect on the skill of the gentleman in charge of the Department of Supply and Services. I have no desire to reflect upon the officialdom in the Department in general. What I say does reflect, however, upon the Minister and his colleagues in Cabinet, of course, in appropriate style, given the way in which our Government functions.

As far as the second question is concerned, I would not want to reflect on the official who moved over. I will say in general, and I do not think he could object to this, that there is a real danger, and more than just the appearance of danger, when people leave a Department at a time as delicate as this and move into a consultancy business. If that consultancy business does not expect to get good value from this person, surely it will not take him in. It is not a matter of what he does not know about the bids that come in and how the Government reacts to them. What he does know is the way in which Government generally sees these things. I would think that it would be almost impossible for him to say anything about the Department without providing value to the consultancy firm.

The situation is not all that different, I think, from the situation of blind trusts that cabinet Ministers establish when they enter their offices and set aside their business involvements. Unless the trustee is given the power to deal freely and without informing the Minister of the holdings, I would think it would be difficult for a man who has been a sound and sensible investor—and I presume any Minister would be that if he had holdings that justified a blind trust—to forget his holdings. In those circumstances, it becomes almost impossible for a Minister who may possibly make a decision that relates to these holdings to not make a decision that will be to the benefit of his blind trust. Therefore, I think the only sensible way to go is to demand a period of at least a year in which there is a detachment from Government. I would not think that an official nearing retirement would forget all that much in a year, but presumably everything that was current would more or less have passed in that year's time and he could then move on without this same danger.

Without meaning to reflect on one particular official, because one should really reflect on others as well, if the general question is raised, I do not really want to take back my expression of concern about the appearance and what would be behind the appearance or underlie the concern about the appearance.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a very short comment pertaining to that response. I am pleased to see a member of the New Democratic Party defending the business community and being so concerned about the Department upsetting the business community as was quoted from The Financial Post. Perhaps I could ask the Hon. Member if he has read the Auditor General's Report on the Department and if he is aware that the Auditor General has praised the activities and functioning of the Department in that area.

I would not want to belabour an issue such as the one of the civil servant in question, but that civil servant is an honourable one. He made an agreement that he would not be involved in activities with the Government for the required period. We acknowledge his honour. I do hope that he does not forget too much in the year because I am sure he will be of tremendous advantage to that firm in the future and I feel that more people who know how Government operates should become involved in consulting firms in Canada.

I congratulate this civil servant for moving over when he did and for being honourable enough to declare himself in conflict and divorce himself from the activities of the Department. I would not want to see a civil servant who retires being unable to be employed for a year. I think we can take civil servants at their word when they step aside and give their word that they will not be involved in Government operations.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the second reading debate on Bill C-87, an Act to authorize the sale of the Canadian Arsenals Limited. I listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) who addressed the issue very well from a number of different perspectives, including the consequences and perhaps repercussions of CAL being sold to a private firm, in this case the engineering group from Montreal, on the international scene.

I would like to touch on a number of other factors that concern the agreement to sell the Crown corporation to the engineering group from Montreal. By way of background, I think Canadians ought to know that this particular Crown corporation was established nearly 40 years ago and manufactures medium and large calibre ammunition. It operates two plants, one in Montreal which employs some 750 employees and another one near Quebec City employing somewhat fewer than 50 employees. Ninety per cent of its production is sold to the Department of National Defence and 10 per cent is exported to the international stage.

A number of different factors puzzle not only me but members of my Party and indeed constituents across the land. One of the things that seems incorrect about this deal is the secrecy surrounding it. The Government has made the decision to sell this particular Crown corporation to the engineering group from Montreal for a total price of some $92.2 million. Yet the Government's financial adviser in this deal has been Arthur Andersen Limited of Montreal. In questions in the House of Commons and in correspondence with the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes), the Minister and the Government have refused very clearly to produce a copy of the financial report. They have refused to educate Canadians about the actual worth of this particular company in order that Canadians may be able to deduce that this particular selling price of some $92.2 million represents a good deal.

Canadians and we in Parliament are asking why there is this secrecy. Why is history repeating itself once again? By that, I am referring to the history of this Parliament. The Government has cloaked itself in a cocoon of secrecy before. When we were talking only a few short weeks ago of the de Havilland deal, it was difficult to pry any information out of the Government, information that was legitimately the prerogative of Canadians since they were the shareholders of de Havilland corporation. It was the same secrecy which was evident when we debated in the House for quite a stretch of time the bail-out of the two defunct banks only a few short months ago. we were being asked to sign a $1 billion cheque which was to go to invisible, unnamed, uninsured depositors with over $60,000 in their accounts. We in the House of Commons and Canadians in general were unable to obtain from the Government the information which was rightfully ours. We wanted to know who the depositors were so that we could determine where that large chunk of taxpayers' dollars would eventually land.

Was it a question which was somewhat too demanding? Was it a question which was inappropriate of Parliament and of Canadians? Of course it was not. It was information which should have been dealt with in a forthright and honest manner. Yet, one would think that after two lessons in public outcry the Government would somehow change its way of dealing with what is public property and public investment.

In respect of Canadian Arsenals Limited, we again have stonewalling and secrecy. Again we are told by the Government that we should just take its word for it that what it is doing is good for Canada. That worries me a great deal because I do not trust only the Government having the information, without sharing it with the Parliament of Canada and with Canadians. In fact, if it were such a great deal, knowing the public relations appetite of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), they would be marching their troops across the country and advertising the greatness of the deal. They are not doing that. In fact, in a letter dated January 20 from the Minister of Supply and Services to the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), the following was indicated: "I must once again advise you that I cannot provide you with a copy of the Arthur Andersen report. However, I can confirm that the Arthur Andersen company carried out a valuation study prior to commencement of the bidding and negotiating process and estimated the value range".

That is simply not good enough. We are talking about estimations. People want to know what the particular analysis produced. Why is the Government not prepared to table those results so that we may take the $92 million figure and compare it with the actual worth of the company? By itself, $92 million is worthless. A Canadian living in Downsview, Ontario could say that it is great that they got $92 million for it. However, an individual in Moose Jaw might say that it was terrible because they could have obtained $100 million. Who is to know the wide range of opinions that exist in the country? Why are Canadians being kept in the dark once again, if this is in fact such a great deal? That is one aspect with which we in this Party have problems. Following second reading and in committee, we will certainly pressure the Government and the Minister to make the information public and to provide Canadians with the backdrop upon which we can decide whether $92 million is a good deal or a bad deal.

The second question concerns the whole philosophy behind the sale of this particular Crown corporation. It does not make sense if one allows logic to follow its course. In the de Havilland corporation giveaway, because that is what it was, member after member of the government Party rose in his place and said that one of the major reasons for selling the corporation was that is was losing millions of dollars. They refused to look at all the other components. However, if we look at the central argument which they presented consistently and regularly, we have to wonder what were the criteria in respect of CAL. If we look at some of the figures, we see that CAL is very good from a financial perspective. Let us consider that from 1980 to 1985 it has consistently shown profits. In 1984-85 it showed profits of some $11.3 million. It has assets of over $126.4 million. It also has an accumulated total of $36 million in profits over the last few years. Therefore, one does not have to be a mathematician or an economist to understand that the Crown corporation was doing very well financially. Not only that, but sales in the next five years were projected to double. It also had $200 million in backlog orders.

Again Canadians and Parliamentarians are asking themselves: if on the one hand the de Havilland corporation was sold largely because it was losing money, why does the Government turn around a number of weeks or months later and sell a Crown corporation which is making money? What gives? What is the reasoning? What is the rationale? Where is the logic in Government policy? Where is the direction which the Government is attempting to provide? Where is consistent leadership? Where is consistent policy in respect of Crown corporations? Obviously the Government does not have one. One day it sells a Crown corporation because it is losing money. That is the reason given by Government Members. They boast, clap and cheer. Now they have a Crown corporation which is well operated financially and they do the same thing; they wish to sell it. That is inconsistent.

Another factor which is inconsistent is the philosophy which tries to understand why they wish to privatize one arm of Government which is supplying at a profit another arm of Government. Why toy with that interlinkage? Why toy with a network which is working within Government and supplying arms for the Canadian military? Why privatize one arm of Government which is serving another? It simply does not make sense. Individual Canadians are asking themselves, from a philosophical point of view at least, how the Government can rationalize decision-making in respect of two Crown corporations as we have seen in de Havilland and in Canadian Arsenals Limited.

Another factor is the consultation and tendering process in the sale of this corporation. If one reads the commentaries, there has been very little consultation. For instance, the Public Service Alliance of Canada, the union which many CAL employees fall under, indicated the following as its basic reason: "The Government never bothered to talk to the union about the deal". It also said: "We question the rationale of the Government selling a Crown corporation that does business only with the Government". Another quote was: "We feel that the Government will be in an uncomfortable position buying from a foreign company if CAL is not competitive". There has been little consultation in respect of the selling of this Crown corporation. Moreover, some bidders expressed a concern that the Department conducted the selling of this Crown corporation in an amateur fashion, that the Department of Supply and Services basically relied on word of mouth and contacted companies informally, in the end inviting six companies to place bids rather than making the process open and rather than making the process accountable and accessible to one and all. This is reminiscent of the sale of de Havilland when, right from the start, one company was strongly favoured over another company, which happened to be Canadian. Those are some of the questions which have not been answered at this stage of second reading. Those questions must be pursued vigorously, if not in the House of Commons during second reading, then at committee stage where the evidence of a number of expert witnesses will perhaps clarify the picture for us.

When one looks at the secrecy and the inconsistency of the Government within a span of two to three months with regard to Crown corporations, one must wonder where the Government is going, where it wants to take Canadians, and what message it wants to leave with them. It is no wonder that Canadians are questioning the leadership of this administration. The Prime Minister was successful in attaining his office, but when he got to 24 Sussex he said: "Where do we go from here? What now?"

During the last federal election campaign the Prime Minister campaigned on a commitment of opening up Government, making it more accessible, and providing more information to Canadians to enable them to see how the Government is functioning on their behalf. Where are those commitments now? Where is the information? Where was the information on the de Havilland sale? Where was the information with respect to the bank bail-outs and the uninsured depositors?

Where is the information from Arthur Andersen who was instructed to conduct a study to determine the real value of this particular Crown corporation? Why does the Government refuse to this day to release that report? Why is it afraid to tell Canadians what Arthur Andersen said the corporation was actually worth? If Arthur Andersen had suggested that the value was less than $92 million, the Government would be lauded for making a great deal, and I would stand in my place and say so. However, if Arthur Andersen had suggested that the value of that Crown corporation was greater than $92 million, we would know that the Conservative Government is trying to hide its embarrassment.

However, that is not an excuse for not providing Canadians with information. If the company was worth more than $92 million the Government should not have rushed into the deal. If the Government still wanted to sell the company, it should have waited for the right deal. In the meantime, CAL would still be making a profit. The Government would not be able to say that it is selling Crown corporations because they are bleeding the coffers and Canadians cannot pay any more. The Government cannot use that argument in this case and yet it still cloaks itself in a cocoon of secrecy. That is not good enough and Canadians will not accept or tolerate it.

We are going to be vigorous in ensuring that the 25 million Canadians who are shareholders of that corporation are provided with the information. In any business the shareholders determine the policy and have the information at their fingertips. In this case the shareholders, the Canadian citizens, have been denied that right. We will fight until that right is restored to them.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I want to comment on something which the previous speaker put before the House very effectively. It deals with this process of divestiture of Crown corporations. This is one of four Crown corporations which the Government has decided to sell. The first was Northern Transportation. Perhaps we were a little too trusting in that case because we did not ask who established the value of Northern Transportation.

In the case of de Havilland we became suspicious about whether the value that was attributed to it was adequate since the value of the land was pretty close to the value of the bid, and there were many extra goodies given to Boeing. In the case of Canadian Arsenals Limited the Government is again keeping the information from Parliament and the people of Canada.

The fourth sale was that of Kidd Creek Mines, a fully-owned subsidiary of the CDC. The amount of money involved in that instance was $615 million and that has not been questioned in the least. Since that corporation was a part of the CDC the sale does not have to be brought before the House for ratification. However, I think we should be concerned about that sale as well because $615 million is a considerably larger amount. How do we know that that was the correct value of that corporation? Would the Member comment on how our mistrust in these sales has built up?

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. In his last sentence he hit the nail squarely on the head. How can Canadians trust the Government to sell what is theirs if that information is not provided? In the press release issued by the Minister of Supply and Services it says: "Minister McInnes expressed satisfaction that the competitive process had achieved the best results, both for the Government, and the taxpayers". Says who, Mr. Speaker? How can taxpayers be satisfied that the best deal was arrived at when they are being denied access to the information which would determine if the deal was financially positive for Canadians? In this case Arthur Andersen's Report is confidential. The Minister has it in his office and refuses to show it to Parliament or to Canadian taxpayers. That kind of arrogant attitude and thinking will not build confidence and trust in the Government.

Canadian citizens own an equal share in Crown corporations. When Crown corporations are sold, each and every Canadian has the right to know about it, and this information is being denied.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

WATER EXPORT AND DIVERSION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved that Bill C-257, an Act respecting the conservation, export and diversion of water resources, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, you may ask why this Bill is being introduced so I will briefly explain. With the consent of the Government, which I hope will allow it to go through, this Bill will ensure that Parliament has the final word should Cabinet decide one day, perish the thought, in favour of a diversion or export of our water. The possibility of this happening did not exist until recently. The unfortunate interview given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to Fortune magazine some time ago, along with the $30,000 grant which the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) gave to the Grand Canal company, has given credibility and momentum to something which, under normal circumstances, was considered a crackpot idea, and quite rightly so. I would not want it thought that this measure is generated simply because of the Grand Canal proposal. It is because of the possibility that water diversion and export may really emerge on the political agenda of Canada in the decades to come. This Bill attempts to bring the issue forward for examination by this and future Parliaments in order that a specific decision related to water exports is not made by Cabinet alone.

You may ask why this matter needs to be addressed by way of a Bill, and why it does not amend an existing Act. The reason is simply that no such legislation exists because, until now, we have never seen the need of introducing such legislation. As I mentioned a moment ago, the possibility never emerged as something which should be addressed seriously. However, in recent months it has become more than a possibility, and that causes some of us enormous concern. Therefore, we feel the necessity for putting forward a parliamentary proposal, Bill C-257, for the consideration of this House.

By way of contrast with the interview that the Prime Minister had with Fortune magazine, I would like to quote Prime Minister St. Laurent who had this to say about water export policy in 1947:

> Can we, in fairness to Canadian generations of the future, allow such natural wealth to be diverted from our own territory and put to uses from which it would be extremely difficult afterwards to withdraw it?

Those words are as much the reality today as they were more than 40 years ago, and perhaps even more so.

In essence this Bill makes the point that political, social, economic and environmental values are affected when it comes to permitting the diversion and export of water. From a political point of view, if we were to embark on a major diversion of our water, it would mean that we would integrate this continent's water resources. This would inevitably, in my opinion, lead to political integration. I would like to quote General McNaughton when he warned in 1966:

> —if we make a bargain to divert water to the United States we cannot ever discontinue or we will face force to compel compliance.

Once you divert, Mr. Speaker, you create a dependency. Once you divert, you cannot turn the tap off. Once you divert, the political hand of the stronger partner is the one which really has the power to turn the tap off, if it can be turned at all.

I would also like to put forward some thoughts of a social nature as it affects possible diversions, particularly that which has been speculated upon recently concerning the Hudson Bay area. Here the social consequences would be felt by our native people. It would affect their lifestyle. It would affect their ability to live in the environment to which they are accustomed. The flow of rivers would be reversed or otherwise diverted. Pumping stations in considerable numbers would have to be installed. The cultural dislocation that would follow would be very hard to describe, and the native people have expressed on a variety of occasions their strong opposition to any diversion of this kind. Another social impact which is important to mention would be the effect diversion would have on agriculture in the decades to come. A large segment of Canadian society whose activity depends on water would be affected if we were to make the changes which some proponents, presently subsidized by this Tory Government, are putting forward in their studies and sketchy proposals.

Another concern has to do with the economy. As we are endowed with such a wealth of water in Canada, we would be wise to ask ourselves whether we should use that water to attract investment rather than to have it used by other countries. I respectfully submit that it would be in our interest to use the water to add economic value here at home rather than to export it and allow other countries to add value to a very important and basic commodity. In addition, some of us still need to be convinced that Canada's hydro exports are really such a big bargain considering that hydro rates do not, and I repeat, do not take into account the capital and construction investments. If we were to export water we would face a situation whereby fresh water would be going abroad and we would have to use in Canada, perhaps, recycled water because of the arrangements to which we were committed, and, perhaps because of increased necessities and demand at home, which we would not be able to meet in the long term, because of the commitments made in the export and diversion of water.

On the environmental side there are several considerations that one must keep in mind. We have Canadian needs that will be determined by population growth, by the greenhouse effect and by the shift of agriculture perhaps to more northern latitudes when the predicted greenhouse effect will occur. In the second half of the next century the meteorologists are predicting an increase in temperature of some 2 to 3 degrees centigrade. That means that the present geography of our agriculture will likely move further north and we may see some areas of Canada become unuseable in terms of agricultural activity. As a result of increased average annual temperature there might be an increase in the consumption of water, and not just for agricultural purposes but also for normal human consumption.

Another environmental consideration is that when the water is diverted and exported, that water becomes part of another ecosystem. It becomes used in another ecosystem and becomes part of that water system to which it has been exported or diverted. That may have some consequences on the climate and the operations in that particular area. It is quite possible that diverted and exported water that goes into another ecosystem will have, in the long term, consequences on both regions; the one that has lost the water and the one that has obtained the water.

Then there is the physical removal of water, which in the case of Hudson's Bay, as it is suggested in the proposal I mentioned earlier, would lead to increased salinity of the bay because the fresh water rivers would no longer discharge into Hudson's Bay, but that water would be pumped up in the opposite direction. Therefore, the benefit of fresh water going into Hudson's Bay would be reduced considerably, thus increasing the salt content of that immense and magnificent water body. There would be changes in the availability of nutrients, of course. There would be an impoverished wetland system downstream. There could also be some considerable changes in the ice formation in that region with concomitant effects on wildlife, not to mention the impact on the immediate environment that would take place by way of the construction of reservoirs, dams, canals, power stations and the like.

In addition to that, another real concern is that when you propose to reverse the flow of rivers, as is the case in Hudson's Bay, what you would do is to stir up the sediments in the bottom of each of these rivers, and in the areas that are heavily industrialized, or which have collected sediments coming from industrial areas, you would be stirring up toxic chemicals which have, over time, settled in the sediments of these river beds. Thus you would cause considerable disturbances and probably affect the quality of water for some years at least. The long-term effects of divergence can only be measured decades later. It is, as we all know from experiences made in some countries, irreversible in nature.

That brings me then to the purpose of this Bill which, in essence, is determined by the restrictions imposed on us back-benchers as to what one can put into a Bill. In this particular instance the scope available to me as a back-bencher was restricted by rules, by which we all abide, and therefore you will find in this Bill an attempt to make it as difficult as possible to approve water diversions or exports. That is where my bias emerges inevitably and quite willingly. The Bill not only makes it as difficult as possible to approve water diversion and exports, but also the proponent has to carry the burden of proof, and he has to prove beyond a shadow of a doubt that this proposal would be in the absolute long-term interest of Canadians.

The approach through this Bill is quite different from the one we are now witnessing outside this chamber when a company called the Grand Canal can come forward and obtain money from the Government and where the financial burden of proving that a proposal is good or bad is not really at stake. The proponent is giving funds to demonstrate that this proposal is sound. I find this concept so offensive that I cannot express it in words.

There may be some objections by people who will ask, "Why deny business the opportunity to make money with water?" Of course the answer to that is fairly straightforward, and that is, because water is a public good, and because no one has a claim to ownership of water except the public. In the end this is one of the common properties, such as air and soil, that we have over centuries and millenia learned to appreciate as an important component in sustaining life on this globe. To reinforce these concepts on water exports and on water diversions I will quote Clause 6(3). It reads:

(a) the ability of available water supplies to meet long-term Canadian requirements;

(b) the impact of water export on fisheries, navigation, federal waters and international waters;—

And that applies also to diversions. It continues to read:

(c) the impact of water export or diversions on the interests of native groups and others and the adequacy of compensation to them for any adverse effects;

(d) the ecological and economic advantages and disadvantages to Canada of water exports; and

(e) the political and strategic impact of water export.

Having put forward those criteria I hope that I can call on the Minister to consider this Bill only as a step forward in the Government's political determination to create a national water board and, in the meantime, to adopt the principle expounded in the Pearse Report that water should be managed and kept within its watershed.

• (1720)

I conclude by quoting from that report on page 8, where the Commissioners say:

The watershed is the natural and most appropriate unit for water management. A federal water policy that will ensure Canadians sufficient safe water to sustain their physical, economic and social well-being for all time is desirable.

This is the main intent I am putting forward through Bill C-257.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-257 introduced by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). I am pleased that the Hon. Member spent much time discussing why he presented this Bill because, quite frankly, I did not know whether I was dealing with a conversion or a watershed when I read his Bill.

His position in the past with respect to water and water exports would not stand up to scrutiny. On the other hand, this Bill establishing principles for water export and drawing distinctions between water exports is somewhat of a new approach by the Hon. Member for Davenport. It raises several questions.

I am pleased that the Hon. Member attaches so much importance to Parliament that he would entrust this important subject and the future of our water resources to Parliament. He was a member of a Government that had a contrary opinion about the importance of individual Members of Parliament, a Government whose Prime Minister did not think too much of individual Members. At least this is a step in the right direction.

I was further confused by this Bill after having read the Hon. Member's statement in Hansard on June 1, 1984, when he said: "I reject that notion because water is water" and: "We do not subscribe to the idea of exporting our water, and it is as simple as that". He said that when he held a different position and was responding to questions about water exports.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not mind the Hon. Member's approach, provided that he does not put words into my mouth and distort the meaning of what I said. My position has not changed and is consistent with the one of last June.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) obviously knows that that is a question of debate.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I simply confirm that it is on page 4276 of Hansard. I believe I expressed both the tone and the exact words accurately.

In any event, this is an issue of vital importance and a topic that should be seriously considered by Canadians. I am grateful to the Hon. Member for Davenport for giving us this opportunity to discuss it.

Furthermore, if we are going to claim accuracy, I think it would be fair for the Hon. Member for Davenport to attribute authorship and support for some of the water diversion schemes to members of the Liberal Party who have espoused them, as is the case. The Hon. Member should consider that when talking about accuracy and the Conservative proposals.

Water, like the rest of our natural environment, is vitally integrated into the economic structure of our country and the health of our citizens. It is an excellent example of the inter-dependency of our environment and our economy.

Our sometimes almost casual view of water is reflected in the consideration of exports. In fact, water is exported every day, as is agricultural produce, processed food, bottled water, beer, which the Hon. Member for Davenport and I occasionally share, paper and a multitude of other exports from raw resource to finished produce, to say nothing of fish and electricity.

For the record, there is no doubt that Canada is one of the have nations of the world with respect to the abundance of its fresh water resources. However, it may not be clear to many Canadians or to the Hon. Member, considering some of his comments, what our favoured position is with respect to fresh water.

Our ground water situation is not as well understood as in many other countries, largely because we have relied so much on surface resources. Canada probably has more lake area than any other country in the world. Large and small, these surface waters dot the landscape from one end of the country to the other.

Valuable as they are in regulating the flow of rivers to the sea, and in providing a rich habitat for natural life and human enjoyment, Canadian lakes are for the most part a one-time gift of glacial recession. They are not renewable, except at a cost to the rivers that feed and drain them. The best measure of a country's water supply, therefore, is its renewable river flow originating from surface sources and including ground water contributions.

On an average annual basis, Canada's rivers carry close to 9 per cent of the world's renewable water supply, which is roughly 100,000 cubic metres per second. Set against a Canadian population which is less than 1 per cent of the world's population, this is a generous endowment. If we set this against a territorial area encompassing about 7 per cent of the world's land mass, this is not so disproportionate. In any event, this figure of 9 per cent is far less than the 20 per cent to 40 per cent often attributed to Canada.

The Hon. Member for Davenport touched on the federal inquiry. The federal inquiry on water policy which the Member for Davenport was instrumental in establishing, reported to the Government in September, 1985. It did an excellent job in bringing the linkages between water uses, water quality and quantity issues, and between engineering, economic, social, environmental and constitutional aspects to the attention of the lay public and even to water resource experts across Canada.

One of the very valid points the inquiry has made is that policies relating to water overlap and interact. "Take up one and you have to take up the others".

The report made many specific observations, and one to which the Hon. Member's Bill draws attention is the difference in water exports. The Hon. Member's Bill indicates that he is considering both southward diversions and other forms of export as being subject to licensing by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) with provisions for revocation of the ministerial permits by Parliament. The proposed Bill differentiates between tankers or forms of container shipment to some overseas countries or perhaps to some U.S. port and large scale diversion via dedicated facilities such as canals, pipelines or river routes to the United States.

This distinction is clearly justifiable. Tanker exports differ from inter-basin diversions in substantial ways. For example, the volumes would likely be small, exports would be sporadic and importers are not likely to become dependent upon Canadian water as in the case of large scale inter-basin diversions. The Pearce Report identified these matters very clearly for all of us.

Accordingly, it may be argued that the federal Government could be more flexible in terms of tanker exports provided that federal interests such as fisheries and navigation are not affected and that the Crown receives a fair return for water exported in this fashion.

However, the question arises: What new legislation to control and regulate such exports do we need, or could existing legislation such as the Export and Import Act be amended to regulate water along with other commodities on its list?

However, in consideration of other water exports, what municipal and provincial if not international considerations must be taken? We must also ask ourselves if the acceptance of containerized water exports would encourage proponents of large scale diversions to press their case to Governments increasingly. It would seem that the Hon. Member for Davenport anticipates this to be the case and has already set out some basic criteria for export by diversion, canal and pipelines within the statutory framework outlined in his Bill.

Let me now in the time remaining lay out for the House the important rationale for the management of Canadian waters by the Conservative Government of Canada. First and foremost is the need for a Canadian national water policy, and this is a goal and commitment of the Government of Canada today. In releasing publicly the final report of the inquiry on federal water policy last September 30, the Minister of the Environment declared that this was only the first step in policy reform. He stated:

> Water issues are not yet at the crisis stage, and we will be able to manage them co-operatively if we start today to work toward a national consensus, or a national water policy.

The Government's response to the federal inquiry has been rapid and constructive. The Government accepts this document as an important background in establishing the necessary elements of a national water policy. Within one week we requested the provincial Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers to respond at a meeting of CCREM, and that will be included in the agenda of the next CCREM meeting. In November, the Minister met and discussed the report with representatives of 300 or so environmental non-government organizations. Both provincial and public interests have been invited to join in the response to the inquiry's recommendation so that the resulting consensus areas can form the nucleus of a nationally applicable policy on water.

Second, at the federal Government level, leadership and responsibility must be defined and taken. One problem which has been identified with respect to this whole issue is that we have not had that clear responsibility taken and acted upon in the past. That now has been done. In December of 1985, at a meeting of the Priorities and Planning Committee of Cabinet, the Minister of the Environment was empowered to act for the Government in formulating a national water policy. The Minister now has the authority to act for Canadians in all matters relating to water. The Minister is giving first priority to a national water policy. There will be no decision for or against large-scale water exports or other water issues until these issues can be weighed in context of the over-all water policy.

Third, the Progressive Conservative federal Government has clearly stated—and this has been confirmed several times by several Ministers in the House of Commons—that water exports are not—I repeat, are not—an item of negotiation during the current bilateral trade negotiations with the United States. As Hon. Members know, the news media have linked the question of water export to the discussions on freer trade with the United States. I am sure that the House has read the statement by Canada's chief negotiator, Mr. Simon Reisman, that while he holds strong personal views on water exports, those views are not relevant to his role of chief trade negotiator. That was a statement made by Mr. Reisman which was published in The Ottawa Citizen on January 24, 1986. This reaffirms statements by Ministers of the Government that water exports are not now on the negotiating table.

Consideration of large-scale exports of water would involve provinces, states and the Canadian and United States Governments. We would have to consider the rights and obligations of all Parties, compensation for lands, disruption of existing services and actual and potential environmental damages. I believe some of the problems which might be encountered were well defined by the Hon. Member opposite, and these issues will clearly have to be considered if anyone were even to start out on this long process.

I must also mention a point I believe the Hon. Member for Davenport has missed. Anyone who would seriously entertain a project of this type right now would have to have his head buried in the economic sand because if anyone looks at the actual costs of any type of major diversion, particularly the Grand Canal diversion, he would find that the cost is so prohibitive as to make the project totally uneconomical. At this point I do not have the reference here but I believe those figures are readily available to anyone and can certainly be provided.

Finally, the Grand Canal proposal mentioned by the Hon. Member has been around for many years. This or any other proposal of this type can only be considered, in our opinion, in the context of what would be a national formulated water policy. In other words, whether or not anything like this in the future could occur is irrelevant at this time and will not even be entertained by the Government of Canada until we have developed what we feel is the national water policy with all the aforementioned considerations.

Various agencies inside or outside of Government may wish to investigate any number of things, one on which the Hon. Member has focused, but none of these activities will prejudice our intention to establish a national water policy with full consideration of all implications of water issues on behalf of all Canadians.

I have not touched at all on other water related issues. I think many of the same points I have made in terms of water exports could be made in terms of other water issues, some of them pretty overwhelming right now, such as the spill in the St. Clair River, toxic substances in the Niagara River, and dumps which have to be dealt with. All of these other issues are issues of water quality and would be better dealt with in the context of a national water policy. However, they are overwhelmingly important now and must be dealt with as quickly and as well as possible with the tools at hand.

I will not spend a long time in trying to reaffirm the efforts and initiatives we have taken so far as water quality itself is concerned. I hope in the near future that we will be able to deal with the aspect of water quality, but clearly all of the water issues as they overlap and interrelate can be best dealt with in the context of a national water policy and under the responsibility of a single Minister. These are things which are coming together in a very rapid and, I believe, very constructive fashion. They will help to overcome some of the difficulties we have in dealing with different Departments and different pieces of legislation which are clearly inadequate in the face of our modern-day problems.

What I have done as clearly as possible is to define the leadership and responsibility we have taken. Hon. Members can refer to the record to examine the three major points I made. However, I think in the end, they must relegate any question of exports, diversions and other high profile issues to a very secondary position in terms of real priorities. In the context of a national water policy, issues like that can be considered.

One of the specific issues raised by the critic for the Liberal Party is the carbon dioxide level. I would suggest that some of his technical considerations are not quite accurate and I would invite him to check on those. He is quite right in terms of agricultural activity heading north, but the two things I believe he could check on are the water content which will be in those northern lands and what will really happen in the river basins and in the water levels. I am not positive but I will ask him to check those things because from what I could hear and understand him saying, I do not believe he was clearly stating what I think will happen with the carbon dioxide increase.

The second point I would make is in terms of priorities and real issues as he and I sit in this House of Commons today. I believe the Hon. Member and the whole country are missing something. The proof is there now that we are starting to deal with the critical carbon dioxide issue. Whether that will be proven in the next year or two will perhaps be identified by things like droughts in the Prairies. However, I think the statistical evidence is building to a point where I believe that is the kind of issue on which we should be focusing.

In conclusion I would like to thank the Hon. Member again for giving us the opportunity to discuss this important issue on water and water exports as defined by the Hon. Member. However, I do not know whether he has really has been forthright in discussing where a lot of the activity and support for these diversion programs comes from. I am not sure whether the Hon. Member has checked with the Leader of the Liberal Party in the Province of Quebec. I am not sure whether he has checked with either one of his Leaders federally. I am also not sure whether he really has his act together.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to have an opportunity to participate in this debate today on behalf of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), who unfortunately cannot be here to speak to Bill C-257.

I have some grave reservations about Bill C-257. I do not have grave reservations about the position of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), since I know he is sincere when he says that his intention is to find ways to prevent major water diversions and exports. My concern with Bill C-257 is that it is at once a road map to sell Canada dry, while at the same time it sets up a steeplechase—not a simple act to expedite exports of water. My preference would have been to have either the Hon. Member or other Members of the House bring forward a national water Act which would keep water, as the Hon. Member has said, within its own watershed and within its own ecological regime. I will spend the majority of my time this afternoon dealing with that from a scientific perspective from the information I wish to put on the record.

I would first like to place a few matters before Hon. Members. First, Canada has 1 per cent of the world's population while having 9 per cent of the world's freshwater supply. Some 60 per cent of our freshwater flows northward, while about 90 per cent of Canadians live along or just south of the 49th parallel. The United States has ten times our population and 8 per cent of the world's freshwater supply. However, almost all of it, according to American scientists, is mismanaged or polluted. That is really the problem in the United States today. Water is becoming a far more critical commodity than energy. There is no longer any such thing as free water.

Exporting water to the United States will dramatically reduce the likelihood of any action by that country to cut back on SO2, NO2 or other airborne pollutants, particularly from coal-fired thermal plants and other producers in the United States. Similarly, it will likely reduce the likelihood of the United States cleaning up its toxic dumps, such as the S area dump, Hyde Park, Love Canal and others which are polluting both Canadian and American water supplies. If the Americans can get a cheap, secure supply of freshwater from Canada, then there is no reason for them to stop polluting our air, which is not for sale without a price-tag on it. We know that we are losing hundreds of millions of dollars a year in terms of reduced forest growth. We know we have already lost thousands of lakes in Ontario and Quebec and tens of thousands are threatened with acidification from airborne pollutants. We see no serious sign of use in the United States of the super fund to clean up its toxic dumps which contain such things as dioxin which are getting into the freshwater supplies of both our countries. This may be seen by some politicians and some people in the United States and Canada as a way to resolve some of those nasty corporate issues which just do not seem to go away and which are very costly to solve. I think we have to look at proposals to divert water on a scale such as the Grand Canal or NAWAPA, with which I will be dealing later.

The Americans are driven by a number of factors. First, they are driven by poor water management; second, by an intention to set up an economy orgy for engineers and consultants; third, it is a quick fix for inept, ignorant politicians who often care less about ecological consequences, social impact and the loss of wildlife and its habitat. I will be coming to some of the specifics with respect to that in a moment.

Certainly, for my Party, I was pleased to see a resolution passed last year which I think hits the nail on the head and really echoes the intentions of the Hon. Member for Davenport as well. A resolution which was almost unanimously passed at our convention stated in part the following:

> Whereas there is an increasing pressure being placed by the United States of America to acquire open access and usage of northern fresh water bodies in Canada.
> Therefore be it resolved that the New Democratic Party firmly support a policy of no sale, no giving away of and no negotiations leading to open access of Canada's fresh water.

That was brought forward by the Humboldt-Lake Centre NDP Association.

I would now like to quote from a recent publication, part of which is entitled "The water machine". I think we need a point of reference in this debate with respect to what we are really talking about when we talk about water. I quote:

> The constancy of earth's water supply is one of nature's great wonders. Our water molecules do not fly apart into hydrogen and oxygen, they don't flee our atmosphere into space, they don't slither down deep-earth crevices. Virtually all the water on earth—about 326 million cubic miles of it—has been present as liquid, ice, or vapor since it spewed out of countless volcanoes 3 billion years ago and more. And all of it, whether trapped a dark mile deep in Antarctic ice of drifting high and fast as a particle of cloud, is part of the vast, complex machine called the hydrologic cycle.
> This machine, by far the world's largest, is powered by the sun. Solar energy provides enough heat to evaporate about 140,000 cubic miles of water a year; the same amount returns to the earth's surface as precipitation.

I would now like to deal with the words of one of the foremost ground water expert analysts in the United States. I would like to quote from an article which appeared in The Globe and Mail on June 21, 1984. It is headlined: "Canada told not to give in to water demands". It states:

Canadian tourist industry representatives from coast to coast held a national conference last fall and advocated major changes to taxes on alcohol and lower gas prices.

So what did we see this week, Mr. Speaker? The Government completely ignored them. The sales tax went up from 11 to 12 per cent—an additional 1 per cent levy on gas—and taxes on alcohol increased as well. And then, Mr. Speaker, the advertising campaign to attract American tourists is woefully underfunded, a fact made even more obvious this morning by the devaluation of the dollar which will further decrease the funds earmarked for this program once the campaign is under way in the United States.

THE BUDGET

OIL PRICE AND INTEREST RATE PROJECTIONS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Budget which came down on Wednesday is based on a series of fairy-tale assumptions which do not make any sense in the real world but which will cost the Canadian taxpayer dearly.

The first fairy-tale assumption is that in the Budget the price of oil is based on $22.50 barrel when, in fact, the price of oil for April is being quoted at $13.75. This is for west Texas crude. That is half the price of a few months ago. The Government's financial planners knew that the price of oil was going down. They did not factor it into the Budget, and we will all pay.

The second assumption which is up there in fairy land is the assumption that interest rates will stay at 9.5 per cent. Right now they are upward of 11 per cent and 12 per cent. The Government is committed to defending the dollar to the death, whatever that means in terms of interest rates. The consequence is that we may see a $3 billion or $4 billion increase in the deficit over what is actually projected.

The only real thing that is in the Budget is—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

EQUALITY RIGHTS

ANTICIPATED GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the response of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) to the Equality for All Report is expected at the beginning of next week. I look forward to the Minister's response with a great deal of interest.

In particular I shall be watching his response to see what he has to say with respect to women in combat roles, that is, combat ready and not necessarily in the field. I look forward to what he has to say with respect to sexual orientation, and what the Government is planning to do with respect to people's rights to work and housing. The mandatory age of retirement and how it will impact on our society is something I look forward to hearing about.

There is a whole series of information and actions on the part of Government which should not be left to the courts. I look forward with great interest to hear what the Minister of Justice will say. I hope he will meet the expectations of our committee.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT ON VANCOUVER ISLAND

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in September of 1984 when the Conservative Government was elected there were 207,000 people working on Vancouver Island. In January of 1986 there were 187,000—a loss of some 20,000 jobs. The Budget which was brought down on Wednesday offers absolutely nothing to the people of Vancouver Island but higher taxes and reduced services. It offers nothing for jobs. It is a failure. I call upon the Government to do something about jobs on Vancouver Island.

THE BUDGET

PERSONAL AND CORPORATE TAXES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, they are all away today selling the Budget. It is a tough sell. I would say to the Prime Minister that, as a travelling salesman, he knows that if the product is lousy it just will not sell no matter how hard he tries.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have a question for the Minister of Finance and I am grateful to him for being here. On the basis of his own Budget Papers and The Fiscal Plan, during the life of this Government he anticipates an increase in personal taxes, direct and indirect, of $21 billion. During that same period of time he anticipates an increase in corporate taxes of $1 billion. Is that how he anticipates sharing? Is that the sort of concept of fairness he has toward the taxpayers of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am always very interested in knowing the recommendations of the Liberal Party on budget matters. I listened carefully to what the opposition critic said yesterday. He said he would freeze spending and would not raise taxes. That means that the Liberal Party would have us freeze Old Age Security, freeze the transfer payments to the provinces for health and post-secondary education, freeze welfare assistance, freeze the unemployment insurance benefits, and freeze money for the environment. I would like the Hon. Member to tell us what he does mean. What is the Liberal's hidden agenda?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

DIVISION OF FISCAL BURDEN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister is doing the freezing.

Why did he provide relief for this country's large corporations, and why did he put this unfair burden on the average Canadian family, instead of providing for more equitable sharing of the tax burden in this Budget?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition said that I was freezing spending. In this year we are going to increase spending on Old Age Security by $1,128 million. For health and post-secondary education there will be a $461-million increase. On welfare there will be a $175-million increase, but for all other programs there will be an increase of only $72 million. That is where we have frozen. We have frozen the waste and inefficiency in Government.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, talk about trying to sell the Budget! While the Minister is trying to explain to the average middle-class Canadian why he or she has to bear the ultimate burden of the Budget, is he going to take a detour to Wall Street to find out why he has no takers down there even though he tried to sell the Budget to them?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is so good with his advice perhaps he could tell us why, so his friends on Wall Street will know, in the first two or three weeks of his leadership campaign he started talking about reducing the deficit, then his handlers slapped him around and told him never to mention that again, and he has not had the courage to rise in the House since then to talk about the deficit.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

CREDIBILITY OF MINISTER IN INTERNATIONAL FINANCIAL MARKETS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, those are not the kind of answers that will re-establish the Minister's credibility.

My question for the Minister of Finance is as follows: Since the Budget was brought down, the Canadian dollar lost nearly two cents against the American dollar, and interest rates went up from 11.54 to 11.90 per cent in the short term. What does the Minister of Finance intend to do to restore his credibility with the international financial markets?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I might just say that my credibility is in very, very good standing. I have a note here from the Business Council on National Issues indicating that the Budget will inspire confidence and convince investors in Canada and abroad that our economy is on a sensible course. The leading business people in the country say that I understand the way to get the Canadian economic performance moving properly and that I have their support.

USE OF INTEREST RATE POLICY TO PROTECT DOLLAR'S EXCHANGE VALUE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, what the Minister of Finance says does not reflect the facts. Considering the falling Canadian dollar and rising interest rates, but especially the position of the Canadian dollar, does the Minister of Finance intend to use the bank rate to prop up the Canadian dollar?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has it all wrong. Today Statistics Canada released the statistics for the fourth quarter of 1985 which indicate that in that quarter the economy of the country was growing at a 5.3 per cent annualized rate of growth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Output for the whole year was up 4.5 per cent, which is the best growth rate of any of the industrialized countries in the world.

INTERNATIONAL FINANCIAL COMMUNITY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. Talking about confidence and building confidence in the country, we know that the dollar has fallen well below the 70-cent mark. At eleven o'clock today it was at 70.1 cents. What kind of confidence does this indicate that the international financial community has in the Minister, in his Budget, and in his Government?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I recall to the Hon. Member's attention what I said about the BCNI which represents all the largest employers in the country. Maybe I should ask the Hon. Member to read The Globe and Mail wherein the following is indicated: "Next year, for the first time in 12 years, the Government of Canada will start regularly earning more than it spends on public programs. That is what the international community is looking for. This lops more than a billion dollars off direct program spending over two years. It is the first time in recent memory"

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

DOLLAR SUPPORT INQUIRY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance can stand and read all the newspaper reports he wants, but we know that the Canadian dollar is falling today. The only reason it is not falling further is because of massive intervention in the money markets. How much is it costing the people of Canada to shore up the value of the Canadian dollar to indicate artificially that the country and the international financial community have confidence? What is it costing the people of Canada to intervene in the money markets?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada are very interested in performance—580,000 jobs have been created. Over 1,000 jobs per day have been created since September 4, 1984. Even in Manitoba where there is an election going on today, in which the Hon. Member behind him is very interested, we are creating jobs.

Mr. Riis: The value of the dollar speaks for itself.

MINISTERIAL CARDIAC EXAMINATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister not agree that, if he looked into his own heart and soul, he would say to himself: "Mike, you blew it"?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would have to say that in the Budget Mike Wilson showed that he had a heart.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have accelerated the payment of the child tax credit. We have introduced a low-income refundable sales tax credit. We have introduced a program whereby we will spend $100 million a year to help those people on social welfare to get into the labour force. Mike Wilson has a heart.

PROJECTED PRICE OF CRUDE OIL

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I would think that Mike Wilson has heartburn. I can understand him being upset today with the dollar falling out of bed. It is clear that no one believes the assumptions which the Minister made in developing his Budget. Why does he not talk to his Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and find out that Alberta crude last week was being posted at $15.54? Why does he not find that out from the Minister of Energy and, when he does, would he then sit down and try to revise the false number of $22.50 which he put in the Budget for revenue purposes?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is not a false number. That was the assumption put into the Budget at the time the Budget Papers were sent to the printers.

I have made two comments to the media since then, first, that there is a revenue loss in a particular sense as the price of oil goes down in the oil and gas industry, but there are benefits to the whole country, as consumers get the benefit of the lower gasoline prices—

Mr. Garneau: Where?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —and as industry gets the benefit of lower prices, and as the rest of the world gets the benefit of those low prices, our exporters benefit. The result is an increase in revenues. There is a balance there that is slightly in favour of Canada.

REQUEST FOR NEW DEFICIT AND REVENUE PROJECTIONS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I would like to give the Minister credit. That is an honest admission that the number is false in that it is not valid as of budget date. The number is at least $7 out of line which represents probably an excess of $800 million in lost revenue to the Government.

Would the Minister, Mr. Speaker, recover some credibility for this Budget by immediately, or early next week, tabling some new data which will show us exactly what the projected deficit and revenue will be?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is very well aware of the tremendous volatility in oil prices today. A new assumption is not going to have any real impact on the numbers here. The most important thing is that the Member gets it into his head that there is a balance here. There are a lot of benefits for consumers and for industrial users of fuel that will come from lower oil prices.

Oral Questions

FINANCE

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—GOVERNMENT SUPPORT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. How much did the Canadian Government spend in the last 48 hours in its attempt to shore up the falling Canadian dollar?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that question comes up from time to time in this House. The Hon. Member knows full well what the answer is. He will have to wait until the second business day following the end of the month.

LEVEL OF SUPPORT AUTHORIZED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, how much has the Minister of Finance authorized can be spent in order to hold the dollar at a level he considers appropriate, and what is that level?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is also an answer I cannot give. He knows that.

Mr. Deans: Why?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member asks why?

Mr. Deans: What is appropriate?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member is the one who says do not give anything away to the speculators. I could tell him everything about our exchange rate policy and give the speculators in the world a golden opportunity to make a bundle of money at the expense of taxpayers. He might want to do that. I am not going to do that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: You are doing it now.

REPORTED DUMPING OF DOLLARS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Is he aware that senior officials for Lehman Brothers and Salomon Brothers this morning indicated that the financial markets are dumping Canadian dollars because the markets do not believe your oil price forecast—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Frith: The markets do not believe that the Finance Minister's interest rate forecasts are correct and do not believe that the Government's expenditure reduction projections are on side.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): I am going to pay more attention to the business leaders in Canada, not the speculators on Wall Street, Mr. Speaker.

The business leaders in Canada say the Budget will inspire confidence and convince investors in Canada and abroad that our economy is on a sensible course.

We are pleased that the Budget's restraint measures have not penalized those Canadians at the lower end of the income scale. There is a good balance here in the way this Budget has been put together. I would think the Hon. Member, knowing his background, should be pretty pleased with what we have put together.

THE BUDGET

REACTION TO PROVISIONS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, why should ordinary Canadians who are being asked to bear a punishing and unfair share of the burden of deficit reduction believe the Minister's promise of a better tomorrow when clearly the Minister's friends in international financial circles have voted thumbs down on his Budget?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I could read the same quote again. Those are the business leaders in the country.

Mr. Riis: Sixty-nine cents.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I believe one of them is from Inco and another from Falconbridge, two major employers in his part of the country. They are both saying that this Budget is on the right track, that we are solving the problems built up over the last 15 years, and that we are solving the problems left on our doorstep by an irresponsible approach to Government taken by the previous Liberal administration. We are on the right track and we are not going to get bumped off that track by any rhetoric from the Hon. Member.

THE BUDGET

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF OIL PRICES AND INTEREST RATES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister inform the House whether he really believes the price of oil this year will be $22 a barrel, and that interest rates will remain at 9.5 per cent, or is he now willing to admit that these assumptions are so many dangerous mistakes in his Budget?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member prepared that question before he came into the House and listened to the question of the Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount. I am not going to repeat the answer. It is the same answer as I gave to the previous question.

GAS PRICE AND INTEREST RATE PROJECTIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister admit that, if realistic estimates were put in the budget calculations for both gas prices and interest rates, the deficit would be at least $3.5 billion higher than that projected in his documents? Will he not be honest with the Canadian people?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is in part the same answer I gave to the Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount. The answer to the specific number is no, he is wrong.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the financial world. In his Budget, the Minister proposed to advance payment of the child tax credit for families whose income is less than $15,000. Everybody knows that those who receive the tax credit have an income of less than $23,500. Could the Minister, who is such a compassionate man, explain why he eliminated 538,000 families who would otherwise be eligible for advance payment of the tax credit? Why did he do this?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure I understand the Member's question. However, I would ask him to read a booklet called Social Justice: A Record of Achievement. This is a record of achievement by the Government in which we talk about what we have done in increasing the child tax credit, in advancing the payment of the child tax credit, and in introducing a new, innovative, refundable sales tax credit for low-income Canadians. It indicates what we have done to help welfare recipients get a job in the labour market. It is all set out in this document and it makes very good reading.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT REFUSES CHILD TAX CREDIT TO CERTAIN FAMILIES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, you will admit the Minister did not answer my question, and I repeat: Why did the Minister decide to deny 538,000 Canadian families who receive the tax credit the benefit of this particular measure? Why did he turn them down?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the record of social progress of the Government is clear. It is set out in this document which is available in supermarkets right across the country. I encourage Canadians to read it.

FINANCE

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance, and it is not about his books in supermarkets. Why is it necessary to have a massive infusion to prop up the value of the dollar? Why is the Minister spending hundreds of millions of dollars to do this if there is really international confidence in our dollar?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member understands that there are a lot of ingredients that go into making up the value of the dollar.

Mr. Riis: Confidence.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Some of these things are related to trade patterns, some are related to capital flows, and some are related to adjustments in the timing of payments by people in commercial enterprises. All of these things must be taken into account. I caution him, as I did the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides yesterday, not to jump to early conclusions.

GOVERNMENT SUPPORT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister not agree that he and his officials have decided to jump to conclusions and spend hundreds of millions of dollars to prop up the dollar? Did he not jump to the same conclusion as did international investors, that the dollar is going down?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is trying to help his friends, the speculators in the financial markets—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —by trying to draw out information from me that will help speculators make money. I indicated to his colleague that I am not prepared to do that, even though he may be.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF WILDLIFE AND TOXICOLOGY RESEARCH

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment, I will address my question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister. The Budget was encouraging news to NSERC, the Medical Research Council, and the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council. What plans does the Ministry of the Environment have to reinstate and enhance its own research requirements, particularly after the severe cuts to the Canadian Wildlife Service in 1984?

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the additional commitment in the Budget of up to $1 billion for grants for research to the councils provides an excellent additional opportunity for the Department of the Environment to enhance its efforts on behalf of wildlife and toxicology research. Last February the initiative was taken to commit $1.4 million in additional research funds. This is in keeping with the approach taken in the Budget and it will enhance all of our efforts on behalf of wildlife research.

The Minister of the Environment would also like me to indicate his appreciation of the efforts of the Member for Ottawa-Carleton on behalf of wildlife research.

CAPITAL GAINS TAX EXEMPTION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Minister has chosen to cut the deficit by taxing the life and spirit out of middle and low-income Canadians. Does he agree that it is now time to set some limits on the $500,000 no-strings-attached capital gains exemption which he is giving the affluent?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the simple answer to that is that the $500,000 capital gains exemption is working. Five hundred and eighty thousand jobs have been created since September 4, 1984. That is why that provision stays.

REACTION OF INTERNATIONAL MARKETS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, middle and low-income Canadians got all the tough treatment in this Budget. Large corporations and the small minority of wealthy Canadians were left unscathed. Does the Minister really think this kind of unfairness will show international markets that he is encouraging productive investment in Canada and has a vision for the economic growth of the country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that question calls for a 15 or 20-minute reply. I would be happy to make that reply, but I will just repeat the one sentence in the report of the Business Council on National Issues which relates to that question. It reads: "We are pleased that the Budget's retraint measures have not penalized those Canadians at the lower end of the income scale".

There is a good balance in this Budget. We have paid very careful attention to matters of social justice which I have enumerated a number of times in Question Period today and yesterday. There is a good balance between Canadians in upper-income, middle-income, and lower-income brackets.

LEVEL OF PERSONAL AND CORPORATE TAXES

Mr. John. R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I want to refer him to The Fiscal Plan and ask whether he can explain to the House why personal taxes in 1987-88 will increase by $5.5 billion while corporate taxes will decrease by $75 million?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question yesterday on three occasions, I think. I would like to correct the comment by New Democratic Party Members to the effect that personal income taxes will increase by $1,300. The income tax increase for someone earning $30,000, from both the May and February Budget, is $523. That does not include sales tax. However, if the Hon. Member is correct, there is $800 worth of gas and excise tax. That means he is a very heavy drinker, a very heavy smoker, and a coast-to-coast truck driver.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1140)

IMPACT ON PERSONAL TAXES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): How does the Minister explain the unfairness on page 42 of The Fiscal Plan where individual Canadians who will pay increased personal income tax and sales and excise tax will be paying four times more in taxes than the corporations in 1986-87, and ten times more in 1990-91? Is that his version of fairness?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when one cuts through all of the rhetoric of the New Democratic Party and gets to the heart of what is important to Canadians, the fact is that real disposable income per capita will increase in 1986 by approximately 1 per cent. This means that on a real dollar basis it will be $650 per person, or $2,600 per family, in real disposable income increases. That is a pretty good record.

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Having witnessed his massive tax grab and the resulting falling dollar, my advice to the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister is that they should quit writing Budgets and start writing fairy tales under the pseudonym of "The Brothers Grim".

How can the Minister expect Canadians to believe there is a pot of gold at the end of the rainbow when this morning the rainbow, that is, the dollar, collapsed about the Minister's ears? Is he not really offering Canadians an empty pot?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe I was asked that question before and I believe I have answered it fully.

However, I would point out, in response to the preamble to the Hon. Member's question, that when this fellow over here, the Leader of the Opposition, was the Minister of Finance, revenues as a percentage of GNP were $19 per $100 of national income. After the tax increases in this Budget and the last Budget come into full effect in 1987-88, they will only by $17 per $100 of national income. That is a pretty good record compared to the previous one.

INDIVIDUAL AND CORPORATE TAX LEVELS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Budget is not only not working, it is unfair. Where is the pot of gold for Canadians when, according to the Budget Papers, which the Minister prepared himself, by 1990-91 individual Canadians will pay 87 per cent more in taxes, and corporate tax revenue will fall by a whopping 22 per cent? Where is the fair share concept in that kind of arithmetic?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): The pot of gold for Canadians is to see this problem brought under control. We have shown 580,000 Canadians jobs which they did not have in September, 1984. That is a pot of gold and we will continue on that track, supported by this budget document.

IMPACT OF TAXES ON INDIVIDUALS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In response to my question yesterday he referred me to page 42 of the Budget Papers for his answer. I have done that, and I want to ask him again if it is fair that income tax, sales tax, and other hidden taxes on individual Canadians will increase four times more this year than corporate taxes, and ten times more by the year 1990?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I responded to the Hon. Member's seat-mate just a few minutes ago.

Mr. Rodriguez: You did not answer it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member likes to play with numbers. Yesterday, in a preamble by him or one of his colleagues, we heard the figure of $1,304. This total misuse of statistics is misleading to the House.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is right there in the book.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It is not in the book. The Leader of the Opposition says that it is right in the book. It is not in the book.

The book indicates that someone earning $40,000 is paying $704 more in taxes, not the $1,304 stated by the New Democratic Party.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister agree that the cumulative effect of all of these financial statements, including last May's Budget, will impose higher taxes on individual Canadians while the corporations get away scot-free?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not say that that is accurate at all. If the Hon. Member looks at the corporate tax reform measures in this Budget—

Mr. Riis: What about the last Budget?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): And the last Budget. I thank the Hon. Member for that guidance.

If the Hon. Member wants to know what Canadians can look forward to, he will see that they can look forward to more jobs, greater economic growth, lower interest rates, and more investment which will create more jobs. That is what this budget policy will achieve.

CHANGE AFFECTING REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. One of the least reported but most beneficial parts of the Budget affected senior citizens. I refer to the RRSP change-over at age 71. The big companies were clearly opposed. What was the rationale for this decision?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this decision is related to the desire of senior citizens who have Registered Retirement Savings Plans to have more flexibility and control over their investments so that they can have the ability to take funds out to use as they wish for example, to take trips with their spouses. The purpose is to give freedom to our senior citizens so they can enjoy their retirement and live in peace and harmony.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

LEVEL OF RESEARCH FUNDING

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I invite him to tell Canadians what researchers in the science community already know, that research spending is going down rather than up. The Government has given the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council 8 per cent of the funds that the Council had requested. Will the Minister tell us what the effect of this pitiful, shameful, and short-sighted response will be? How many jobs will be lost and how many careers will be destroyed? How many of our brightest minds is he exporting to the United States?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the people in the research community are very pleased. The Government has provided them with the possibility of receiving $1 billion in increased research funds over the next five years. Furthermore, we have done this in a way that will more closely integrate the activities of the public sector with those of the private sector so that there will much more productive results and the research laboratories will be brought much closer to the market-place for the benefit of all researchers in the country.

Mr. Berger: The Minister is cutting research, no matter what he says, and cutting research is like pulling the kids out of school because times are tough.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, what must we do to make the Government realize that our future well-being, our jobs, depend on what we invest today in our most valuable resource, our people?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that over-blown rhetoric does not fool anyone. One billion dollars is a lot of money, and the research community—

Mr. Berger: Is is not a billion dollars.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There is $1 billion, and the research community is very pleased with what we have done at a time of restraint, when we are cutting discretionary spending in many other parts of government. We have found new money for the research community so that we can accomplish what we all know is important.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SPENDING CUTS—EFFECT ON JOBS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the risk that 10,000 more public service jobs will be lost as a consequence of the half billion dollars in new spending cuts and the ceiling on departmental spending which were announced this week, will the Prime Minister guarantee that not a single further public service job will be lost as a consequence of these new cut-backs?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what the President of the Treasury Board has said is that we will be introducing the details of the policy of the $500 million across-the-board spending cut in due course. It is not possible to be precise at this time as to what the impact will be on person years, but the policy of the Government has been, and will continue to be, to try in every way possible to find new spots as attrition frees up other person-years in other parts of Government.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL GUARANTEE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance who indicates that person-years may in fact be affected on top of the 15,000 job-cuts already announced. Will the Minister of Finance guarantee that no further cuts on top of the 15,000 person-year cuts already announced will take place? Will that guarantee be made—yes or no?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I indicated very clearly that the details of this plan will be made public in a very short while. The Hon. Member will get his answer then.

THE BUDGET

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance, who may have noticed that a number of provincial governments have shown their dissatisfaction with the Budget.

For instance, the Premier of Quebec, Mr. Bourassa, said he was worried about substantial tax increases having a negative impact on the country's economic growth.

I would like to ask the Minister how he intended to help the regions in this country that need development by bringing down a Budget whose incredible tax measures will slow down demand and reduce economic growth in this country. Is that his plan for developing regions that need help?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I caution the Hon. Member in drawing these conclusions because I believe it was 16 months ago that the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition drew these same conclusions. He said the effect of the economic statement of November 8, 1984, was going to cost this country 50,000 or 100,000 jobs—it may even have been 200,000 jobs on one of his more energetic days. There have been 580,000 jobs created since September, 1984, as we have gotten our programs under-way.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO PREMIER OF ALBERTA

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, let me quote some of the Minister's friends. Premier Getty is saying: "There is nothing in this Budget for Alberta's fragile economy except increased taxes which will affect consumer spending". Why has the Minister produced a Budget which does so little for a province whose farmers and unemployed are in such great difficulties today? Is this a sense of fairness for Albertans?

Mr. Valcourt: Is it fair to bankrupt the country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this Budget was prepared and is presented for all Canadians. There is something in this Budget for all Canadians.

Mr. Rodriguez: High taxes.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): For the Province of Alberta there is the program to help farmers who have heavy debt loads, and for the people in Alberta there is the wide range of social justice policies which are so important to Canadians in need. There are policies in the Budget to help those Canadians who are now on welfare in parts of Alberta because of the National Energy Program which put them in such great difficulty. It is helping them get back into the job market.

MINES AND MINING

NEGOTIATION OF NEW INTERNATIONAL TIN AGREEMENT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. After the collapse of the tin market last fall, what progress has been made toward a new international tin agreement, and what are the likely implications for Canada?

Hon. Bob Layton (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, this has been the subject of some concern to the mining sector. I am able to report that just last weekend the negotiations between the members of the Tin Council, the banks, and the brokers have resulted in a proposal which is being considered by all of the participants. This proposal will be a preferable solution to the crash scenario which would certainly upset our mineral markets.

EXTERNAL AID

FIVE-YEAR ASSISTANCE TARGET

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On Wednesday the Minister of Finance said: "Our economic performance during the past 18 months has been much better than anyone expected". If this is so, why has the Government cut Official Development Assistance targets by $1.5 billion over the next five years when Canada had made this commitment to the needy people of our world? Why?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have been able to achieve success in the Canadian economy, which is evident in the rate of growth of the economy and the creation of jobs, because we have addressed the deficit. It is the view of this Government that no Department can be exempt from this attack upon the deficit which is essential to the ability of Canada to be strong in the world.

This Government pursues two priorities. We pursue the priority of active presence internationally, and the priority of getting the deficit under control. International aid will increase next year and we will be getting the deficit down.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, the Minister says our economy is strong. It is going to be hard for the women and children of developing countries to understand that.

OFFICIAL DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Since Export Development Corporation funds for concessional funding to Canadian exporters to developing countries can now be counted as Official Development Assistance, can the Minister say what percentage of our Official Development Assistance will be made up of such concessional funding, and whether or not this is over and above the 5 per cent of our GNP which the Government now plans to spend on ODA?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one of the reforms we are bringing in is precisely that it is over and above .5 per cent. Let me make it very clear to the House that in the last five years this country spent $8.7 billion on Official Development Assistance. In the next five years this country will spend $13.6 billion on Official Development Assistance. That is a significant and dramatic increase.

Mr. Hees: Good stuff, Joe!

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Is the Minister aware of the extent to which a region like northern Ontario depends upon federal Government regional development programs for its economic health? Does the Minister think it is fair that the people of northern Ontario, who really cannot afford it, are being asked to pay much higher taxes as a result of this Budget but will receive very much less in terms of regional development dollars?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, one of the things we have tried very, very carefully to do is to be sensitive to how we cut government spending. In that regard, those programs which affect the regions of the country have been spared to the largest extent possible from spending cuts. The major element of the spending cuts has been here in Ottawa with improved management, so that we can squeeze out the waste and inefficiency, as well as in the better-off parts of the country which can well afford to have some of those Government programs cut back.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, the cuts for regional development are about 25 per cent. Does the Minister think that cutting regional development dollars is an effective way of reducing the deficit? Does it not really mean in the long run that there will be fewer revenue dollars coming into the Government of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are back to my first answer. What we have done in cutting the size of subsidies to business through the Industrial Regional Development Program has been to focus primarily on the Tier 1 and Tier 2 areas of the country, not the Tier 3 and Tier 4 areas which are primarily in northern Ontario. What I would point out to the Hon. Member is that, as we get the deficit problem under control, interest rates will come down and all parts of northern Ontario will benefit from that in a very major way.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT FUNDING OF CULTURAL SECTOR

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Can the Minister explain how cutting $122 million from the cultural sector last year, then adding $75 million supposedly new dollars this year, is to be considered a positive cultural initiative? Most Canadians who can add and subtract will find this to be a cut of $47 million. Can the Minister explain this contradiction?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is very easy to do. What we have cut are programs which are no longer effective. What we have cut are waste and inefficiency in the operations in the area of communications and culture. What we have cut is the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, which can afford to be reduced in size. We have replaced that with more effective programs and more focused programs on developing the cultural sovereignty of the country.

• (1200)

SIZE OF GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I find that extremely interesting, since the CBC is central to the development of the cultural industries in the country. As the Government is busy negotiating culture with free trade it will be cutting back the CBC—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Question, please, and just a question.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, as the Minister has announced a 2 per cent freeze across the board, can he tell us how he can announce a 6 per cent over-all increase to the cultural industries?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think there are people in the country who would disagree with the Hon. Member. We believe that culture in Canada is more than just the CBC.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House a petition on behalf of 348 residents of my riding of Oxford. My constitutents are protesting the continued operation of the Morgentaler clinic in the City of Toronto in violation of Section 251 of the Criminal Code of Canada.

HARBOUR AND DOCKING—MILLER BROOK, N.B.

Mr. Roger Clinch (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present to the House a petition signed by 230 Canadians from the constituency of Gloucester who are asking the Government of Canada, through its Department of Fisheries and Oceans, to consider the construction of a proper harbour and docking area at the Miller Brook area in the County of Gloucester, New Brunswick.

PROPOSED DEVELOPMENT OF NCC PARKLAND

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Ron Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 446 will be answered today.

[Text]

BICYCLE SAFETY

Question No. 446—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Was the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs advised that auxiliary (safety lever) brakes for bicycles on many Canadian bicycles were unsafe because of defective screws which loosen with repeated brake application and, if so (a) on what date (b) what action did the Department take?

2. To the knowledge of the Department (a) approximately how many bicycles have been sold in Canada with these defective brakes (b) what means are being used to advise the public of the hazardous nature of these brakes?

Borrowing Authority Act

3. Is the Government planning to introduce compulsory safety standards for bicycles sold in Canada and, if so (a) on what date (b) which bicycle components will be covered by such standards?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): 1. (a) The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs received a complaint in January, 1982 to the effect that some brake extension levers did not function properly.

(b) The matter was investigated and it was the Department's understanding at the time that most bicycle manufacturers took corrective action as soon as they became aware of the problem.

2. (a) Information at hand indicates that the unsafe design of brake extension levers was used in inexpensive brake systems imported from the Orient only for a time during the 1970s. It is not known how many bicycles were sold during that period with these brake extension levers.

(b) The brake extension lever is a convenience feature which does not replace the main braking system. The extension lever is designed to gradually reduce the speed of the bicycle, not to stop it quickly. Even if the brake extension lever fails, the cyclist can still activate the main hand-brake lever to slow down or stop the bicycle. Since it was a convenience item that was in question rather than the basic safety of the braking system, a public statement was not issued.

3. With respect to safety standards, it must be recognized that the Canadian Standards Association has issued such standards and also has a bicycle certification program in operation. In view of these actions, Government intervention in the market place appears unnecessary at this time.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1986-87

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the legislative committee.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to outline the Government's borrowing requirements for the upcoming fiscal year. I want to begin by paraphrasing the remarks made by my most honourable colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), when he presented the previous borrowing Bill before this Chamber last May. At that time he said that he could garner little enthusiasm in bringing forward such a measure, a measure dealing with a legacy of the previous administration and which imposed an extraordinary severe burden on the people of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform Hon. Members that I share my colleague's lack of enthusiasm for this measure which we tabled last May. However, I am confident that the credible, honest and praiseworthy document the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tabled Wednesday afternoon represents a firm extension of his commitment and this Government's commitment to remedy the sad state of affairs that we inherited.

[English]

The evidence is before us today. This Bill is testimony to the sound progress that this Government has made. I am sure all Hon. Members are aware that our borrowing needs, thanks to my colleague the Minister of Finance, have been reduced from $28.8 billion last year to $22.6 billion this year. That is a full $6.2 billion less. Furthermore, as my colleague the Minister of Finance told us yesterday, our borrowing needs will continue to be reduced every year thereafter.

On September 4, 1984, Canadians voted overwhelmingly for a new approach to the way this country is governed. Three months later the Minister of Finance presented to the House his economic statement, a historic document, which outlined an agenda of economic renewal and set out the principles and new policy directions designed to clear the way for sustained growth and to create permanent jobs at low, stable rates of inflation.

Hon. Members will recall that the three major challenges he identified at that time were: restoring fiscal integrity, encouraging private initiative, and redefining the role of Government so that it provides an effective framework for economic growth and job creation. On May 23 last year the Minister built on this comprehensive economic strategy and presented us with a Budget designed to redress high unemployment and spiralling national debt. This past Wednesday we were given the proposals of his current Budget, proposals which are consistent with and complementary to those of his previous addresses to this House.

Today, in bringing before the Chamber a Bill to authorize the Government's planned borrowing requirements for the forthcoming year, I want to underscore the fact that the consistent and comprehensive application of the strategy which was first enunciated a year ago last November and developed in the May 1985 Budget, a strategy built on prudent management and good, old fashioned common sense, has produced results. This success can clearly be seen in the renewed optimism in Canada and in the jobs that have been created and the consumer confidence which is at its highest level in many years. The Government is putting the nation back together by promoting growth, creating jobs, improving Government effectiveness and controlling our national debt. This is the first Government in many years that has had the discipline and sense of stewardship to do this.

This is a clear demonstration of the leadership and initiative displayed by Progressive Conservatives, by the people on this side of the House and by the Government. We have acted with decisiveness, with consistency, with determination, with discipline and with a sense of responsibility. We as a nation cannot continue to mortgage our future. Therefore, we are taking the actions that we have to take. We are restraining the Government's needs to make sure that, like all other Canadians, we are spending smarter. Canadians are tired of having their futures mortgaged as well as their homes.

The Minister of Finance said very clearly last May that at some point we must begin to pay the bills for current services and not pass them on to our children. We as a Government are determined to put our fiscal house in order. When independent comparisons and studies are made with other countries, it becomes very clear that we are succeeding in this resolve. Between 1982 and 1984, Canada recorded the largest deficit among the major OECD countries with the exception of Italy. With the measures that have been brought forward by this Government, the deficit will decline from 6.3 per cent of GNP in 1984 to 4.7 per cent in 1986. This represents the largest decline, along with Japan, among the seven OECD countries. That is a record of which we are going to be very proud.

[Translation]

We are on the way to new economic prosperity. However, I would not want Hon. Members to think this Government will rest on its laurels. The economic problems still facing our country are not easy to resolve. To attain our Government's objective of full economic recovery will require a sustained effort on the part of all Members of this House, and I earnestly ask you to support us in this very important task.

[English]

Let me turn now to the specifics of the Bill before the House. The Bill seeks $22.6 billion worth of borrowing authority for 1986-87, an amount exactly equal to the forecast financial requirements for the year, and no additional amount of borrowing authority is being sought at this time. I should explain that a new borrowing authority Bill would normally include an amount equivalent to the financial requirements and a specified amount for contingencies such as possible foreign exchange requirements. This year, the Government has recourse to $2 billion of unused non-lapsing authority which was provided by the Borrowing Authority Act, 1984-85, (No. 2). Thus, no contingency amount is being required.

To remain consistent from one year to the next, Clause 3 of the Bill stipulates that all unused borrowing authority granted by this Bill or by the Borrowing Authority Act, 1984-85, (No. 2) to the extent that the unused authority exceeds $2 billion will be cancelled. Thus, any unused borrowing authority remaining from the $2 billion non-lapsing amount granted earlier will be cancelled at the end of the fiscal year and may not be carried forward again. The provision to cancel all unused authority granted for the 1986-87 fiscal year to the extent that it exceeds $2 billion is similar to previous years and if available will preserve a $2 billion non-lapsing amount to be carried forward into the 1987-88 fiscal year.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, in May 1985, the Minister of Finance tabled a paper proposing improvements to the Canadian budgetary process. One of the suggestions in that paper was to seek parliamentary approval of borrowing authority for the upcoming fiscal year at the same time the Budget was presented. The logic behind the proposal is really self-evident. It is that the Budget presentation in February would set out the financial information for the new fiscal year for parliamentary study, and this is the course of action that I am following now. I would hope that the debate on the Budget and the fiscal stance presented by the Government will be helpful in the examination of the borrowing authority Bill.

As a matter of interest to Hon. Members, I would like to outline how the Government has made use of the borrowing authority provided by Parliament for the 1985-86 fiscal year. The total amount of authority provided was $32.2 billion. It consisted of $12 billion provided by the borrowing Authority Act 1985-86; $18.2 billion provided by the Borrowing Authority Act, 1985-86, (No. 2); and a $2 billion non-lapsing reserve carried forward from the Borrowing Authority Act, 1984-85, (No. 2). During the 1985-86 fiscal year to date, domestic borrowing operations have used about $23 billion of borrowing authority, $7.3 billion through the issue of treasury bills, $11.4 billion through the sale of marketable bonds and $4.3 billion through the net sale of Canada Savings Bonds.

There was in addition foreign borrowing that added $8.2 billion to the use of borrowing authority. The foreign borrowing represented a $900 million U.S. public issue in the U.S. market in July, a $500 million bond issue in the Eurodollar market in November 1985, a $80 billion public bond issue in the Euro-yen market in February 1986 and a U.S. $1 billion bond issue in the Eurodollar market in February 1986. In addition, net standby drawings during the 1985-86 fiscal year to date have used $4 billion of borrowing authority. There was also a redemption of a U.S. $250 million public issue in October which reduced the total use of borrowing authority. The borrowing authority calculations reflect as well the repayment of portions of Canadair financial corporation debt that was assumed by the Government in the 1985-86 fiscal year.

Let me close my remarks by urging the House to effect swift passage of the legislation that is before us today. Hon. Members I am sure will recall that last May, the borrowing Bill was debated within two weeks of the Budget. This year we are debating it within two days.

[Translation]

We are discussing this measure in the light of Wednesday's Budget, and I shall be happy to hear any comments that Hon. Members may wish to make on this very important matter, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

I am reminded of a quotation from Hippocrates: "Healing is a matter of time, but it is also a matter of opportunity". I ask all Hon. Members to seize the opportunity offered to us this week by the Minister of Finance, the opportunity to build a better future for Canada. I also ask Hon. Members to pass this Bill rapidly enough to allow us to stay the course we charted in November, 1984 which has been so successful in our economic environment to date, so that we can once again restore the nation to its potential.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the borrowing authority Bill introduced by the Government after its first Budget last May requested over $18 billion. This was after the presentation of a Budget which was and is widely perceived as an outright attempt by the Government to tax its way out of the deficit at the expense of middle and low-income Canadians.

Today we are considering another request for borrowing authority. Again the Government has presented a Budget which is very little more than across-the-board regressive tax increases, except that they will hit doubly hard, since the new increases are piled on to those already in effect from the last Budget, and again middle-income Canadians are hit. And yet, with this double whammy effect, with the further squeeze which the Government is putting on average taxpayers, the Bill before us requests no less than $22.6 billion for 1986-87.

What kind of questions does this raise about the way the Government has chosen to proceed in its two Budgets and the way it has governed in the time it has been in power? We in the Official Opposition opposed many of the measures in last year's Budget because of their unfairness. The broadening of the sales tax base, sales tax increases and deindexation are measures which impact upon everyone, but hit hardest at families and individuals with low and moderate incomes. We have pointed out repeatedly as the budget Bills came before the House that the sales and excise taxes have a multiplier effect which enhances their unfairness. Year after year they will take bigger and bigger bites from the incomes of taxpayers. Their effect is only beginning to be felt. The billions of dollars the Government takes in this year through the tax hikes in last year's Budget alone will multiply several times by the end of the decade.

With concerted effort from the Opposition and strong protest from Canadians in general, we were able to force the Government to change some of its most damaging proposals. The Government backed off from its plan to strip inflation protection from old age pensions, and the Government restored the sales tax exemption for certain medical supplies.

The unfairness of the Conservative Government's first Budget was highlighted by the treatment afforded to large corporations and to the small minority of wealthy Canadians. While middle and low-income Canadians got all the rough treatment in the Budget, those groups were left relatively unscathed: in fact, one might say that they got off better than unscathed.

In contrast to the loss of protection against inflation, the deindexation of the personal tax system and the tax grabs perpetrated upon low and middle-income earners, the fortunate 4 per cent of the population who can afford it, were given the gift of a $500,000 lifetime capital gains exemption. There were no strings attached, no restrictions, no requirement that investments qualifying for the exemption contribute in any way to building our economy. It is simply an unsolicited, untargeted bonus which further complicates the tax system.

It is important to remember these things about the Government's Budget of last year because we are living with these measures right now. I certainly agree with the Minister of Finance and other Government supporters who say that we must consider the two Budgets as a package. We in the Official Opposition were and are against measures adopted by the Government in its first Budget last year. We did not believe then and we do not believe now that the way to cut the deficit is by taxing the life and spirit out of middle and low-income Canadians. We urged the Government to take the opportunity in its second Budget to repair some of the damage done in its first Budget. We urged the Government to modify the capital gains exemption, to add some conditions. We urged the Government to address the fact that its measures were creating a gap between the "haves" and "have-nots" in society. We urged the Government to introduce measures which would show us that it had a vision and an agenda for economic growth.

The Official Opposition was not the only voice encouraging the Government to such action. Many other groups and individuals also encouraged it to bring about a fair and an imaginative Budget—groups from social policy organizations, to business groups, to individual citizens. However, on February 26 it became clear that the Government had not listened. On February 26 Canadians got more of the same—more tax increases, more hidden tax changes.

The speeches which I gave during last year's debate on the Budget and last year's debate on the borrowing authority Bill are quite relevant today and could almost be applied verbatim to this year's debates. We have now had two Budgets which have taken exactly the same stance, to wring as much as possible in tax revenues from middle and low-income Canadians in an effort to cut the deficit and to prove to outside investors that the Conservative Government has the ability and resolve to manage our economy. It may be early to judge the international reaction, but the dollar has dropped on each of the two days since the Budget was presented. It will probably be another couple of weeks before we know what international investors think of a Government which in two successive Budgets latches on and clings to the method of raising revenue by taxing and then taxing some more. Will that be a signal that the Government has a vision of where it wants the country to go?

Reaction to the $500,000 capital gains exemption with no strings attached was lukewarm at best, negative in large part, but there has been no move to modify it. I think the Minister would have acquired great credit if he had been willing to admit that that was a mistake and to add in some conditions so that people who benefit from such a measure would contribute to the Canadian economy in some way. However, he chose not to do so.

On top of the 1 per cent federal sales tax increase in the last Budget, this Budget now gives us another 1 per cent increase on all items including gasoline. We should remember that because fuel costs are a part of all manufacturing, packaging, transportation, storage and retailing, any increase in fuel costs means higher prices for the consumer.

This measure is only one of the many measures in this Budget which are inflationary. Canadians will have to dig deeper into their pockets to pay a further $1.9 billion in federal taxes while corporate taxes increase by only $380 million.

As a result of the Conservative Government's two budgets, middle and low-income Canadians will have less money because of higher taxes, and they must use their reduced incomes to buy goods that are made more expensive because of higher taxes.

The small compensations offered in the February 26 budget do not come close to compensating for what Canadians are losing through these repeated tax grabs. The so-called federal sales tax rebate will be a help to some poor Canadians, but it will be a pittance compared to what they will lose over the years because of the cumulative effects of deindexation and tax increases.

As for the proposal to give some low income families their child tax credit a few months early, it is beyond me how that can be presented by the Government as generosity. The Government is patting itself on the back for offering to give people the money it owes them.

These are the two measures Government Members are pointing to as proof of the Conservative Government's compassion and sense of fairness. I would simply point out that they are small and very inexpensive measures which will be paid for several times over by what the Government expects to rake in with the 3 per cent surtax.

It remains to be seen if this concerted attack on the middle class will have the effect the Government wanted. It will raise revenue, but the Government also hopes it will convince international investors of its determination to manage the economy. This brings me to a concern I raised earlier. Where is the Government's agenda for economic growth? Where is the imagination, the sense of purpose, to inspire Canadians to make them feel it is worthwhile to tighten their belts now for a better vision and a better future? Successful countries are those with forward-looking industrial strategies. Where is Canada's? We should be working hard to strengthen our technological base in industry and in our universities, but the Government is cutting contributions to post-secondary education.

Mrs. Mailly: That is not true.

Miss Nicholson: We should be trying to raise our standard of living by raising our productivity to stay competitive. Instead, we have universities in a serious cash crunch and cut-backs in industrial and regional development programs. Instead of raising standards of living, the Government is lowering standards of living by taxing away the purchasing power of low and middle-income Canadians.

We have a Government that clamors for restraint but squanders money in bank bail-outs, large tax concessions to big corporations and a capital gains exemption that will funnel Canadian savings into non-productive investments. The Government, without any industrial strategy of its own, has spent billions in taxpayers dollars on measures that will do little to revitalize the economy and strengthen economic recovery.

The greatest resource of any country is people. In this last Budget we saw no mention of youth, no concern for the very high youth unemployment, no concern for the bright, able young people who are finding it increasingly difficult to finance post-secondary education.

Not only is the Government reducing its direct contributions to the provinces for post-secondary education—

Mrs. Mailly: That is not true.

Miss Nicholson: —but as universities then put up their fees, it becomes harder for the bright but lower income students to finance post-secondary education. I have had many letters from students and from parents who have pointed out the increasing difficulty of financing post-secondary education. Summer jobs are harder and harder to find, yet the Government cut back on its money for job creation.

Mr. Dick: When?

Miss Nicholson: At a time when we should be doing all we can to assist our bright creative young people to receive higher education, whether or not they come from monied families, the Government appears totally insensitive.

There are many other Members who wish to speak on this Bill and, therefore, I will save some of my other comments for a future debate on the Budget. I would just point out that the Budget tabled the day before yesterday is based on two assumptions which may or may not come to pass.

There is an assumption of an oil price of $22.50 a barrel which does not seem likely to be met, and as a result many of the other projections on which this is based may not come to pass. There is an assumption of interest rates which may in fact prove to be optimistic. If indeed the Government's assumptions are not met, we will undoubtedly see the Minister back with a Bill for supplementary borrowing authority.

For the sake of the country, naturally one hopes that the measures announced in this dreary and unimaginative Budget will be effective, but it is very difficult to feel much confidence in what we have seen to date.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we are not quite ready for the question yet.

Mr. Rodriguez: Absolutely not.

Mrs. McDougall: Why not?

Mr. Riis: Because we have a few comments we wish to make.

It was very interesting when the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) stood in her place and introduced Bill C-99, requesting authority from the House of Commons to borrow $22.6 billion. That was fine. Something which all Members of the House have been calling for is the introduction of the borrowing authority immediately after the tabling of the Budget and the estimates. That, I say, is a very good process to have been introduced by the Government. It was a fine move, something which the Government in opposition had called for for years and which Liberal Governments have failed to do for years and years and years. I say congratulations, but that is it, quite frankly.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: To be fair, Mr. Speaker, it is very important that people have the whole package before them to consider. The Minister of State for Finance gave us some very peculiar rhetoric and wording. It reminded me of when I used to read bedtime stories to my two sons. They enjoyed the fairy tales and so on. It helped them sleep better. Perhaps it gave them a creative mind-set when they went off to sleep. The Minister of State gave us, as Members of Parliament and the people of Canada watching and listening today, a little bedtime story: "Look how we as a Government have instilled confidence in the people of Canada and in the international investment corporate community", she said. I thought to myself, need I listen to anything beyond this?

• (1240)

I would have sworn that earlier today the value of the Canadian dollar had fallen to 69 cents U.S. It has fallen more than 2 cents since the Budget was introduced only two days ago. That is a reasonable thermometer to use to identify how well the Government and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) are doing. I think they have a reverse fever. That thermometer wanted to go lower than 69 cents U.S. Just a few weeks ago the Government's friend, Governor Bouey, said in the finance committee that he would go to any extreme to maintain the value of the dollar, and he did, because he had to.

Mrs. Mailly: That was in response to the speculators.

Mr. Riis: That was not, as the Hon. Member indicated, in response to the money speculators. Many of us asked him to what extent he was prepared to go in the months ahead to ensure that the Canadian dollar stays around 70 cents U.S. He said that he was prepared to go to virtually any length.

I think they started on Wednesday in anticipation of the Budget, and since then have been purchasing hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars of our own currency to try to convince the people in the international money markets that there is a massive buyer buying all of our money to give an artificial, inappropriate, and fairy tale vision of the value of our currency. We all know this happens. The international money market people know this. It fools no one when a single buyer borrows hundreds of millions of dollars in foreign exchange and then buys our dollar to give the impression that people are interested in our currency. It fools no one in this House, in the country, or in the international money markets. Therefore, the value of the dollar is down.

I was hoping that the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) would explain to us why the dollar has collapsed in the last two days since the Budget came in.

Mrs. Mailly: It hasn't collapsed.

Mr. Riis: Well, it has fallen two cents in two days. The only reason it did not fall further was because of the massive intervention in the marketplace. I say that is a falling dollar.

Mrs. Mailly: It has not collapsed.

Mr. Riis: The Minister of Finance said that as soon as the Budget was brought in we would watch the currency strengthen.

Mr. Gurbin: What do you want us to cut?

Mr. Riis: I want you to do some tax reform, which was not even touched in this bloody Budget. As a matter of fact, this Budget made the tax system more complex than ever and less fair than ever. This Budget is more unjust.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I know it is Friday, and I know the compassion that we all have for each other. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has the floor. There will not be questions and comments on his debate, but there will be on the speech of the next speaker.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, we would certainly be prepared to entertain questions at the end of my speech, with the unanimous consent of the House. Perhaps Members would hold their questions if they wish to pose some.

In a more quiet vein, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Finance has indicated that consumers, investors, and the people of Canada have confidence. The only real indicator so far has been the value of the currency, which is falling. Some people have asked what these people know about what was in the Budget. These are not stupid people, Mr. Speaker. These people are not uninformed with regard to financial matters. They know the highlights of the Budget. They know that it is levying taxes on everyone across the country.

As a matter of fact, the increased financial burden on the average Canadian family as a result of this Budget, the previous Budget, and the November economic statement, is an average of dollars $1,305 per family. I know that Hon. Members may question those figures. I challenge anyone who does not think that the last two Budgets and the economic statement result in additional charges to Canadian families of $1,305 to provide me with their figures. I think that is fair. If people do not believe my figures, I challenge them to show me theirs and we will make some comparisons. If I am wrong, I will certainly be prepared to admit it.

The Minister of Finance said that the increased personal income taxes per family were about $500. He said that the impact of the three increases in sales taxes is about $500. Well, that is $1,000. Add to that the increase in gasoline and other excise taxes, the increase in taxes on alcohol and tobacco products, and the user fees which have been increased for national parks, for taking out citizenship papers, and for tying up your boats at docks, and it amounts to $1,305 per family. We are assuming that a family is a couple with two children and an income of about $35,000. We think those are the facts, and if other folks do not think those are the facts I challenge them to tell us what they think they are.

This is worse than it sounds, Mr. Speaker, because this is cumulative. These are also primarily regressive taxes. When sales taxes are increased three times it amounts to an awful lot of money. There is no differentiation between rich and poor. Everyone pays the same sales tax on a set of tires for their car.

Mrs. Mailly: If you are poor, you don't have a car.

Mr. Riis: I guess the Hon. Member is correct that if you are poor you do not have a car and do not have to buy tires. Am I supposed to take heart from that? Is the good news that poor people do not have to buy winter tires for their cars because they do not have cars? I am not happy with that either.

Mrs. Mailly: Find some examples that make sense.

Mr. Riis: The point I am trying to make is that this is a very regressive tax. It means that hundreds and hundreds of dollars are being removed from the families of Canada and from the communities in which they live. Depending upon the size of the community, that could mean that hundreds of thousands of dollars are not circulating within the businesses of the community. That means that the businesses are doing less business and are likely having to lay off employees. That has a ripple effect in terms of increased UIC charges and the fact that these people do not then purchase goods and services. It has a very negative impact in the communities of Canada.

In The Fiscal Plan which the Minister of Finance included in his Budget it says that between this year and next year personal taxes will increase by $5.5 billion. The next line talks about corporate taxes. One would assume that to be fair corporate taxes would also increase. However, the reality is that they are decreased by $75 million.

Mrs. Mailly: Because they will create jobs.

Mr. Riis: I say to the Hon. Member who just yelled across to me that jobs are created in the country when people go out and purchase goods and services rather than through a trickle-down through the corporate sector. The financial statement of her own Government says that the least effective way to create jobs is by giving tax breaks to corporations. It is a way, but it is not the best way. However, that is the route the Government has chosen.

Corporate taxes have been reduced, and personal taxes have been increased by $5.5 billion, not to mention the increase in sales tax. Sales taxes have been increased by billions of dollars which will come primarily from middle and low-income Canadians. This is a very serious situation.

The Minister of State for Finance suggested that confidence is growing in the country. As I said, the most recent indicator, the value of our currency, is falling. Why is it falling? Actually, I saw a repeat on Canada AM this morning of financial analysts and economists in this country who were questioning whether the interests rates in Canada would average out at 9.5 per cent for the entire 1986 year. Does anyone really believe that our interest rates, with a present rate of approximately 12 per cent to 13 per cent, will average out at 9.5 per cent this year? They would have to drop to 9 per cent or below for the remainder of the year. I challenge Hon. Members opposite to stand in their place and bet me that interest rates in this country will be below 9 per cent for the rest of 1986. I do not think they have that conviction.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe the Hon. Member has been giving wrong information to the House. The fact is that the fiscal year about which he is talking has not started. It is possible that interest rates could be 9.5 per cent by the time the fiscal year even starts. He is also talking about the rate at which the Government is borrowing, not the rate at which ordinary people borrow.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. member knows that it is not a point of order. That is a point of debate. The Hon. Member for Kamlops-Shuswap.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I was simply reading from the Budget that the interest rates are predicted to be an average of 9.5 per cent for the rest of the year.

Let me raise another point to see if my hon. friend corrects me. It is also stated that the price of oil in Canada will average out at $22.50 U.S. a barrel for the year 1986-87. Today, the charge for west Texas crude oil delivered in April of this year is $13.75. If west Texas crude is $13.75 and the Government expects the price of oil to average out at $22.50, who is it trying to kid?

Mr. Dick: That is the spot market.

Mr. Riis: I know it is the spot market.

Mr. Dick: Why didn't you talk about it?

Mr. Riis: The Governmenbt does not have to convince me, it must convince the people on the international money markets and in the corporate community. They have not been convinced, as reflected by the value of our dollar today. They will not be fooled by this Budget because they know that the price of oil in Canada for the rest of the year will not average $22.50. They know it is a joke when the Government says that interest rates will average 9.5 per cent for the year.

The Government has projected its deficit on the basis of these assumptions If interest rates remain at a continual level of 9.5 per cent and the price of oil remains at an average of $22.50 per barrel, the Government will break the $30 billion deficit barrier. If anyone believes that, they will believe that I am about to lift off and fly around the House of Commons.

Mrs. Mailly: You're full of enough hot air to do it.

Mr. Dick: He is taking off.

Mr. Riis: I feel the ground still under my feet, Mr. Speaker.

Let us look at the Government's document entitled, Towards a Sustained Expansion: Canada's Economic Prospects, 1986-1991. This document which we read on Budget night contains some interesting comments for the year 1987. It states that this year the GNP is predicted to grow at 3.7 per cent while next year it will grow at 3 per cent. In other words, the GNP will go down next year, by the Government's own admission. This material is almost as good bedtime reading as that given to us by the Minister of State for Finance earlier.

This year, consumer expenditures will grow at 3.3 per cent but will it go up or down next year? By the Government's own admission, consumer spending will go down to 2.5 per cent. Does anyone opposite really believe that a drop in consumer spending will help the economy in Penticton, Kelowna or Prince George?

Let us consider residential investment. This year it will increase 11.7 per cent, but next year the Government states that the increase will be zero. It does not expect any increase in residential investment in 1987.

In addition, business non-residential investment will go down in 1987, as will investment in machinery and equipment.

Investment in non-residential construction equipment will go down.

According to this document all that will go up is personal income tax.

I believe the Minister of Finance has integrity and therefore I assume that what he says in this book is accurate. According to this document he indicates that we will be moving into a recession next year. He also states in his other book that corporate taxes will decline while personal taxes will increase. He is warning us that we will face tough times next year and this Budget will make it more difficult than ever. We see that investment, consumer expenditure, the GNP, personal savings and corporate profits go down but personal income tax rises. That is a peculiar way to turn the economy around. Of course, the economy will not be turned around, by the Government's own admission.

I draw page 26 of Canada's Economy Prospects to the attention of Hon. Members in case they have not read it. The prospects look gloomy, indeed, by the Government's own admission.

Let us deal with tax reform. I suggest that if Hon. Members were realistic they would agree that the country is long overdue for tax reform. We must make the system less complex and more fair and build some accountability into our tax system so that we can ensure that we are getting good value for our dollar. It only makes good common sense and shows reasonable business practice that if we are spending hundreds of millions of dollars on a tax expenditure that we make sure we are getting the best value for the money. We are simply saying that the system should be cost effective.

However, tax simplification was not addressed in the Budget, nor any tax reform at all. Why did the Minister of Finance not take the opportunity to initiate a major overhaul of the tax system when Canadians are crying out for tax reform? He could have at least told us that he plans to initiate tax reform in the future, but we were disappointed that there was no mention of any serious tax reform. Such tax reform would have permitted the Government to obtain the necessary revenues it so desperately needs. Instead, the Government is placing more taxes on the backs of Canadians. As one of my colleagues stated, this was not a Budget about jobs, jobs, jobs but one of taxes, taxes, taxes. If the Government wants revenue it should obtain it through serious, sensible and positive tax reforms.

Normally I do not even take a slice from the page of Ronald Reagan's books, but I notice that he reduced taxes for low and middle income earners in the United States a couple of years ago. The strength of their dollar is quite high.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): At this point it is very close to one o'clock. The Hon. Member has an extra 20 minutes for his speech.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 12:59 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House recessed at one o'clock the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) had the floor.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to expand on a few comments I made just before we broke for lunch. First I have a confession to make to the House. It was not intentional, but I misled the House with some figures I used and I want to clarify that for the record. I was commenting on the price of West Texas crude. Over the break I found that I had said West Texas crude dropped to U.S. $13.75. That was an error. It actually dropped to U.S. $13.25, and at one point it hit U.S. $12 and something.

Again, I apologize for making that error, but the point was simply to question the Minister of Finance's statement. All of his deficit projections make assumptions. One assumption was that the price of oil in Canada would average out over the year at about U.S. $22.50. I noticed from the newspapers that in discussions among some oil exporting countries in Tokyo a U.S. $10 price was possible. I am not suggesting that will happen because no one knows. However, the point is that the Minister of Finance is assuming U.S. $22.50 when West Texas crude is U.S. $13.25. If that is the basis on which the Minister has made his revenue projections and predictions, he could be off significantly.

For every one dollar drop in the price of oil the federal Government loses something in the $200 million range. My friends from Alberta are only too well aware of that. To put it rather simply, if the price of crude oil this year averaged out approximately where it is today, we are talking about the possibility of a $2 billion shortfall in Government revenue. That of course would knock the Government's estimate on deficit reduction right off the track.

All that is to say nothing about the projection of interest rates. The assumption is that interest rates would average out to 9.5 per cent over the year. Given the way interest rates are today and the fact that the dollar is falling, we know how Governor Bouey will respond. In the past, whether it was under a Liberal or Conservative Government, he would jack up interest rates to protect the value of the dollar. Just two weeks ago he said he would go to any lengths necessary to ensure that the Canadian dollar holds. If we are to take him at his word, that means increased interest rates if the dollar continues to behave as it has, reflecting the fact that people have lost confidence in the Government of Canada.

What we are debating today is the wisdom of giving the Government the authority to borrow $22.6 billion, so I think it is fair to ask some questions. How is this money being spent? What is or is it not doing? I tried to make the case earlier today that it was providing incentives and giveaways to the corporate sector at the expense of the average Canadian. However, I have already done that so I will not repeat myself.

The United States has plenty of untapped water and Canada should ignore pressure to divert its water south of the border, a U.S. ground water expert says.

"Don't ever let the U.S. rip off one gallon of your water, whether you're using it today or plan to use it tomorrow. Hold on to it for dear life," Dr. J. H. Lehr, executive director of the National Water Well Association told an appreciative audience at a conference on industrial waste in Toronto yesterday.

Dr. Lehr, a geology professor at Ohio State University, was introduced as the foremost U.S. expert on ground water.

He said "there is no true shortage of water" in the United States. Instead, "we have a tremendous dearth of (water) management expertise.

Dr. Lehr said farmers use irrigation methods which use only about 35 per cent of the water on crops, wasting the other two-thirds.

Vested interests ensure that the United States consumes more surface water, from lakes, streams and rivers, than ground water from beneath the earth's surface, although there is 20 times more ground water in storage than there is surface water, he said.

Engineers get paid more money to build dams and reservoirs than they do to tap sub-surface water. Governments would rather build a dam because they can stick a commemorative plaque on it, Dr. Lehr said.

Yet 95 per cent of the available water in the United States is ground water, while only 5 per cent is surface water, he said.

I would now like to go on to an article from The Toronto Star of May 20, 1985. It is headlined: "Experts doubt U.S. needs our water". I quote from the article which states:

Harvard professor Peter Rogers notes that many cheaper ways exist for the United States to increase its water supply.

The U.S. has about 24 million hectares (60 million acres) of land under irrigation but "could get away with 30 million acres based on exports for the year 2000," saving 50 per cent of the water. And Rogers maintains that wastage is "enormous".

The problems are only serious locally, Rogers insists, "but not from a regional or national view. Farmers are moving away from irrigated agriculture to dryland crops. The U.S. government is basically getting out of water. No new projects have been built for the past 10 years.

"I don't predict a national water crisis," he says.

I would now like to quote from another article which appeared in The Toronto Star entitled: "Water: Canada's hidden riches". It states in part:

Strong pressure

Says Gerald Seinwill, acting director of the U.S. Water Resources Council, which recently completed a study of U.S. water supplies: "Water is the most serious long-range problem now confronting the nation—potentially more serious than the energy crisis. By the turn of the century, almost every section of the country faces water shortages unless the nation recognizes that we cannot continue to waste and mistreat a precious resource."

So far Ottawa's position on water exports has been quietly constant over the years; Canadian water is not for sale (even for export in tankers to Saudi Arabia or icebergs to India)—

The article goes on to state:

In fact the difference in the amount of renewable water available to Canada and the U.S. is not great because U.S. rivers discharge about 2,150-billion gallons a day, or about 8 per cent of the world's supply (compared with Canada's 9 per cent).

So the United States has an enormous amount of water but it is polluted and mismanaged.

Let us deal with the politics of what is happening in our country now because that is really what we have to focus on and why there are stronger measures than this Bill that must be taken to protect this country and the globe. I quote from the January 16, 1986, edition of The Sun of Vancouver as follows:

Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, in an interview with Fortune Magazine in March last year, was paraphrased as saying that Canada would consider water exports to the U.S. if such an idea were mutually beneficial and economically feasible. "Why not?" Mulroney was quoted as saying.

Only a month later, an avid supporter of the Grand Canal project told an Ontario Economic Council seminar on trade that linking free trade to the water export proposal would be a brilliant way of getting the U.S. enthusiastic about free trade. That supporter was Simon Reisman, appointed by Mulroney last November as Canada's free trade negotiator.

The National Research Council, according to Kierans, is considering spending $750,000 to participate in a pre-feasibility study on the project. Kierans is expecting a decision in a week or so. In addition, Kierans says Atomic Energy Canada Ltd. is studying the idea of using a nuclear reactor to provide power for the pumps needed to get the water from James Bay to the Great Lakes.

Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa, in a book published last spring, endorsed the proposal, and has since won an election.

I go on to an article that was carried in Maclean's magazine of February 17 of this year which says the following:

Despite the potential difficulties, Bourassa hopes to line up enough contracts in New England and states as far south as Maryland by early 1987 to justify James Bay II. To help him do that, Schlesinger's high-powered committee—it will include Paul Desmarais, chairman of the Montreal-based Power Corp.—will advise Bourassa on trends in U.S. energy policy and demand.

Now we are starting to see the political connections click together. I have pointed out that Paul Desmarais will be working with the Americans in moving the James Bay II project forward. Let me quote from Hansard of December 12, 1983, the words of Mr. Louis Desmarais, the then Liberal Member for Dollard:

This key is water, the white gold of the 21st century.

He went on to say:

Mr. Speaker, the crux of the problem is that this vital resource is not located where it would benefit us most. As far as Canada is concerned, an accident of geography has bestowed on a small fraction of the human race an immense resource, while billions of people are suffering the consequences of poverty and famine... Today, we must accept the fact that water has become a world resource, and this implies that its distribution must be assured in terms of continental rather than national requirements, if we are to survive until the next century.

He refers to the Grand Canal or Grand Recycling and Northern Development Project which of course he was pumping here in the House of Commons. He ended his remarks by saying something which demonstrates once again the scientific and ecological illiteracy of many of the people who are dealing with this enormous question. His remarks ended as follows:

All of this precious run-off is now washed uselessly away into the sea.

Now we see the political and corporate connections.

Let me turn again to our ambassador for free trade. The January 21, 1986, edition of The Sun of Vancouver says the following:

The export of fresh water from Canada to the U.S. will be a major factor in Canada-U.S. relations, according to Canada's free trade negotiator.

"In my judgment water will be the most critical area of Canada-U.S. relations over the next hundred years," Simon Reisman said in a statement released Monday by communications director Bruce McDonald.

Now we see the historic connections of Mr. Reisman, the Power Corporation and various interests in the United States who do not want to clean up smoke stacks or chemical, toxic and nuclear dumps. I think the words of Dr. David Suzuki really hit the nail on the head regarding how these interests all work together. I am quoting from an article which was published in March 1982 which reads as follows:

"Over half of all scientists in the world today are working for the military, and the majority of the remainder works for private industry," he said.

Suzuki pointed out that it was not surprising that most of the benefits of new developments in technology and in science are thus still accruing overwhelmingly to the military and to private industry.

I think Canadians, Americans and people around the world generally recognize that, but when we are talking about NAWAPA, to which I will now turn, and the Grand Canal schemes, I think we can see who intends to line their pockets and for what reasons.

An article run on March 9, 1985, in the Toronto Star was entitled "Preparing to sell Canada dry?"

Is Canada's water for sale? The previous Government said No. Last year, then-environment Minister Charles Caccia said "We reject the notion that water is available for export. This will be a very important commodity in the decades ahead."—

We can't afford to allow water exports, no matter what the price. A firm, simple No is the only thing that can put these grandiose schemes to rest. The Prime Minister should be saying this, not sending a message to foreigners that Canada is for sale.

I certainly agree with that editorial. I turn now to an article contained in The Financial Post of September 5, 1981, entitled "Water crisis trickling into our consciousness". It reads as follows:

This energy-related water demand occurs where there is already short supply (the West), or, in the case of nuclear power, where water quality is already threatened (Ontario). In the U.S., this conflict is compounded by a growing reliance on coal, which not only produces acid rain, but also releases large quantities of carbon dioxide.

It's expected that increasing levels of atmospheric carbon dioxide will raise lower atmosphere temperatures (the "greenhouse" effect) by at least two-five degrees celsius by the year 2050, thus reducing precipitation.

Since this will aggravate the present drought in much of western North America, the pressure for massive water transfers—and exports from Canada—is likely to increase.

We can see that there are many players in this game. As I have said before, there are the smoke stack industries and those who do not want to clean up these problems like toxic waste and then we deal with who is really going to be making the money and who are the losers. As I will point out in a moment, all the people of the world might well be the losers from either NAWAPA or this lunatic Grand Canal scheme.

The Citizen ran an article on April 28, 1981, entitled "Water supply crisis looms" which reads as follows:

Total Canadian water use is expected to double in the next two decades, from 26.3 billion gallons a day to 62.2 billion gallons daily. Manufacturing and energy needs make the largest demands. Last year, 48 per cent of Canadian water use went to power stations for cooling purposes, while manufacturers drew 32 per cent.

Let us add those two figures together, Mr. Speaker. That amounts to 80 per cent of Canada's water use.

The article continues:

Growth in these areas, particularly as Canada strives for energy self-sufficiency, and agricultural expansion in already water short Western Canada are expected to place the greatest pressures for increased water consumption.

As hewers of wood, we know that we are in a crisis with coal, wood and all of our raw resources. What about us as drawers of water? Those politicians who say that we are hewers of wood and drawers of water had better understand that these kinds of massive diversions and exports would create a global crisis to which I now turn.

An article entitled "Why U.S. engineers want to turn on Canada's tap" appeared in The Sun of Vancouver in April 1981.

It says the following:

During 1980, Americans used 235.5 billion gallons of fresh water every day. Nearly half of this amount, or 105.2 billion gallons, was not replaced by snow or rainfall. To make up the difference, great underground reservoirs known as aquifers are gradually being tapped for their ancient water supplies. The public is alarmed by reports of "the browning of America."

This is the atmosphere which has given a fresh lease on life to enormous water transfer projects such as that dreamed up in California in 1964 by the huge engineering firm, the Ralph M. Parsons Co. Called the North American Water and Power Alliance, this gigantic project with a price tag of more than $200 billion would bring water from the Yukon down to Mexico.

Let me turn now to our global problems in terms of atmospheric pollution and the implications of such a large diversion project. I am not talking about the impact on migratory birds or the sea life in any of these areas or of the native people and others who would be displaced. I am talking about things on a much larger scale. In an article written by Dr. Kenneth Hare, recognized in this country as being one of our foremost atmospheric scientists, the following appears:

Careful statistical analysis shows not only the 100,000-year interval seemingly favoured by glacial epochs, but also the influence of small changes in the orbit of the sun that recur at intervals of 41,000 and 19,000 to 23,000 years.

These recent discoveries are not yet properly understood, but they are formidable evidence that the "ice age" to which we are alleged to be returning was in fact a succession of glacial epochs spread over two million years or more. Each of these epochs, incidentally, was far longer than the history of civilization!—

Calculations suggest that carbon dioxide will double its atmospheric concentration by mid-21st Century or later. This assumes that the world goes on increasing its use of oil, gas and coal, but that high prices keep the buildup down to about 2 per cent per annum.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—LOCATION OF UNITED STATES NUCLEAR WASTE DUMPS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, the occasion for my participation this evening in the adjournment debate is the result of a question which I put to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) on January 28, in which I expressed concern about the proposed location in the United States of several nuclear waste storage dumps. I understand this evening that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Cook) will be responding. I am sure that is of some relief to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Gurbin).

Apparently the United States is examining the possibility of 20 sites in the U.S., several of which are along the American-Canadian border. Thirteen of the sites are in four states bordering Canada. They are located in Minnesota, Wisconsin, New Hampshire and Maine. The rest of the proposed sites are in the southeast section of the states. Of the 13 sites along the Canadian border about which we are expressing concern, eight are of direct concern to Canadian authorities. One site of specific concern is located in Maine.

I appreciate that the Minister of the Environment, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) have made strong representations to the Government of the United States and to officials of the environment agency to ensure that every protection is given to the environment in Canada. However, I think it is important to register now our objection to the potential location of any of those sites along the Canadian border. Specifically I want to refer to the potential prospects of the site in Maine. That site is in the River Ste. Croix watershed area which creates the border, in part, between the State of Maine and the Province of New Brunswick. The actual site itself would be located, if it became a reality, within 40 miles of the border. Of course the concern is that watersheds and other ecologically critical and sensitive areas could be adversely affected.

It is well known that Maine's geological history indicates that there are no safe places in the State of Maine for the safe storage of nuclear waste. Although we recognize that most other areas which are under consideration in the United States have the same difficulties, the Maine site is a good example for us to utilize when we are examining the potential impact and damages that could accrue to Canada, particularly to the Province of New Brunswick, as a result.

I hope that I have reinforced what the Minister of the Environment has already responded to me for the assurance of the citizens of those areas which could be affected. The Canadian Government will indeed continue to monitor very closely these proposals to store nuclear radioactive wastes in storage dumps along the Canadian border. We will continue to impress upon our U.S. counterparts that the establishment of these nuclear waste dumps in our area, where potentially dangerous environmental impact could be felt, is unacceptable to Canadians. It is unacceptable to endanger our environment to that extent and we will use evry influence available to us to ensure that when those sites are selected, if that method of disposal is indeed decided upon, they will not be in proximity of the Canadian border to the satisfaction of the Canadian Government and to the relief of the concerns of those who are extremely perplexed about the consequences to the environmentally sensitive areas on our side of the U.S.-Canadian border.

Mr. Chuck Cook (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett) has raised a question which could be of concern to all Canadians. I am delighted to have the opportunity to rise this evening to give him complete, solid, and total relief from his concern.

The U.S. nuclear waste repository program, which is searching for a site for its second repository, has caused concern. Canada has insisted from the start that any site selected for a U.S. nuclear waste repository must pose no threat to the Canadian environment or to the health of this or future generations of Canadians.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has discussed this issue several times with United States Secretary of State George Shultz. Last spring they established Canada-U.S. consultative meetings to ensure that there would be a well-defined process by which Canadian concerns could be addressed and resolved with the United States. Federal officials have benefited in this consultative process from the views and concerns of provincial experts as well.

In addition to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) have discussed the issue with their U.S. counterparts. These discussions have resulted in the firm U.S. commitment to consult with Canada throughout the entire U.S. program. Most significantly, the U.S. has promised that it will drop from consideration any potential area that could require field work in Canada.

In a letter to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the U.S. State Department pledged that the 15-year U.S. Department of Energy screening process is intended to ensure that no site will be selected which will have harmful effects on either side of the border.

During the last year, the United States looked at 235 areas for a potential site for the second repository. Approximately 40 of these were within 25 miles of the Canada-U.S. border from New Brunswick to Manitoba. The U.S. Department of Energy draft report issued on January 16, 1986, narrowed the number of areas under consideration to 20, none of which is within 25 miles of Canada. One site along the Maine-Quebec border was specifically dropped from the report as it would have required field work in Canada.

A number of the 20 areas identified in the recent U.S. report may present concerns to Canada as they are all or partially in watersheds that flow into Canada, or are very close to such watersheds. The Provinces of New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, and Manitoba have been provided with copies of the report and the federal Government has already met with them once since the report was issued, and will meet with them again before the next Canada-U.S. consultative meeting, which will likely take place sometime in April.

Following the release by the U.S. of the report in its final form in July, the 20 areas identified will be subject to field investigations leading to a narrowing to three areas in 1991. These three areas will then be subject to intensive research leading to a final selection of one site in 1998. Throughout this elaborate process the Canadian Government will follow developments closely and will ensure, by every possible means, that the one site eventually selected will pose no risk whatsoever to the Canadian environment or to the health of this or future generations of Canadians.

I sincerely hope that answer will relieve the mind of the Member for Fundy-Royal.

FORESTRY—VANCOUVER ISLAND FOREST LANDS. (B) REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDING

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, over a year ago I asked the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) about long-term federal funding for forestry on Vancouver Island. This has been a long-term concern of both myself and my Party, but the immediate stimulus for my question was the proposal by the Vancouver Island Mayors called "Strategy for Survival". I am very pleased that the Minister is present in the House this evening to give a direct response to my concerns. I know he endorses the concept contained in this proposal. The problem does not lie so much with the Minister as it does with the present Government's priorities.

The Minister's response to my question was basically: Wait and see. We have waited for over a year now and we have not seen the kind of funding which is needed if Vancouver Island is going to recover from the present recession. I just want to draw the attention of the Minister to the fact that there are fewer people working on Vancouver Island today than there were when his Government was elected in September, 1984. According to Statistics Canada, in January, 1986, we had 187,000 people working on Vancouver Island. In September of 1984 the figure was 207,000 people. That adds up to a loss of 20,000 jobs while this Government has been in office. We are concerned that, while the Government seems to be creating jobs in other parts of Canada, it is not creating jobs on Vancouver Island.

Last June the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry heard testimony from the Vancouver Island Mayors who had originally put forward this proposal "Strategy for Survival". The proposal documents the economic benefits which would be gained from investment in intensive forestry on Vancouver Island. I am sure the Minister would agree that this is among the best forest land in Canada, indeed anywhere in the world. The federal-provincial forestry agreement emphasizes reforestation in areas of British Columbia which have not yet been satisfactorily restocked. As the Minister knows, reforestation is not the major problem on Vancouver Island. The problem is how to make the best and most intensive use of this prime forest land.

The Mayors' proposal points out that for an investment of some $22.3 million a year in an ongoing program, some 1,100 direct and 500 indirect jobs would be created. Over the 45-year life of this kind of program, the Mayors suggest that the harvestable volume of wood would increase by 33 per cent. The total value would increase by 55 per cent, which amounts to some $655 million. The revenue return to the Government would increase by 33 per cent or some $79 million. The value of this kind of program is not the subject of debate this evening. There might be some quibbles one way or another about some of the fine points, but I am sure the Minister himself agrees with the basic value of this kind of investment. In fact, he has endorsed the principle involved. What is at issue is the question of federal funding.

On June 28 the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry endorsed the proposal and the sixth report made to this Parliament unanimously called for the federal Government to give favourable consideration to funding.

• (1815)

On September 16 the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) moved that the House concur in the committee report. Unfortunately this motion was talked out by Conservative back-benchers who did not want the issue to come to a vote. They knew it would have passed and that would have given a clear signal to the Government that it should give this kind of program very high priority. Government back-benchers said that we were rushing things. The Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg) said that he had been talking to the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) and that they had been very encouraging. He said, as recorded at page 6650 of Hansard for September 16, 1985, and I quote:

> If you can put your ear to the railway and listen for what is coming, I anticipate that it will be a favourable response and I will be quite happy when that happens—

We have been waiting for that favourable response for a long time and it still has not happened. We have had instead a patchwork approach to forestry in the form of funding through Section 38. We appreciate that kind of funding, but it has meant that sometimes we have had inappropriate priorities. It is like buying groceries at the corner convenience store instead of doing a proper shopping trip with a list and buying things in order. You pay too great a price for start-up and shut-down when you are dealing in this kind of patchwork manner with forestry projects.

We do not need to fixate on the particular program of the mayors. We can look at other mechanisms, but what we do need is some commitment of funding to forestry on Vancouver Island. We know that there are problems with protectionist pressure from the United States in lumber.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The time allocated to the Hon. Member has expired.

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I very much want to thank the Hon. Member for raising this particular topic. I welcome the opportunity to address the House as it has not been addressed in the last little while. The Hon. Member raised two points, or he did a few months ago. One is job-creation under the Vancouver Island mayors' proposal. Number two is the allocation of funds under the ERDA forestry agreement. I want to tell the Hon. Member that I personally know Mayor Graham Bruce, who is the single largest proponent and supporter of this particular project. That project is supported by members from all parties in British Columbia. In fact, just as late as the other day I spoke to the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) on this matter, because he too is concerned about it.

The project is exciting, it is original and his worship of course presented this in a very dynamic, forceful and persuasive manner. I tend to support that. However, I want to point out that the Vancouver Island mayors want a proposal which is perhaps better addressed by the job-creation ministry, CEIC. We have a problem here in that this one project of a few municipalities in one small part of Canada is worth some $23 million a year. That makes it a very, very large project. However, we have been able, through various mechanisms, to try to fund money toward this particular project. In fact we spent $35 million to date on 375 forestry job-creation projects in British Columbia. Those projects generated more than 4,500 forestry jobs, of which about one-third were on Vancouver Island. Under the forestry agreement, which is four times larger than ever signed before with the provincial Government of British Columbia, most of that work is on non-sufficiently restocked lands. Vancouver Island has only 3 per cent of the identified NSR land in British Columbia. Therefore the Hon. Member raises a very good point. There is another part of the program, and that is that 27 per cent of the agreement is available for intensive forest management. I can assure the Hon. Member that of the funds under the agreement and under the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), a large amount of money has been and will be spent on Vancouver Island to help redress the unemployment situation. I have seen the particular project in North Cowichan and I must say that is a very innovative and exciting project. However, there are two or three constraints. First, there is the sheer size of that one small area but nonetheless important area of Canada. Second, we will try to make sure that 27 per cent of the $300 million agreement to be spent over the five years of our intensive forest management will be spent on Vancouver Island so that those mayors will get their fair share.

In the meantime, I want to thank the Hon. Member for drawing his concerns and the concerns of the Vancouver Island mayors to my attention. We will continue to attempt to give extra emphasis to Vancouver Island. Certainly I respect and understand the unemployment situation on the island and appreciate the support the Mayor of North Cowichan and other mayors on the island have given to forestry in general. We will continue to give extra attention to this area through UIC funding, ERDA funding and EBAP funding to the projects which the mayor has brought to our attention.

CANADA POST CORPORATION—THREAT OF PRE-CHRISTMAS STRIKE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago I asked the Minister responsible for Canada Post about the possibility of the Government giving serious consideration to outlawing strikes at Canada Post. I suggest that a poll would show that a very high proportion of Canadians are very dissatisfied with the over-all delivery service of Canada Post and would want to declare that service essential to prevent employees from striking.

The new President was appointed recently. We welcome the news that Mr. Donald Lander is now the top Chief Executive Officer. I wish him well because he has an awesome task to undertake on behalf of all Canadians.

Let me dwell on some examples from my riding of Don Valley East concerning the level of service we are experiencing. Today I received a letter from a Mr. Mariano DiGangi who enclosed an envelope posted in downtown Toronto on January 31, 1986 which he just received yesterday, February 19. He asks: "Should it take 20 days for a letter to travel less than 15 miles?" He states that the letter contained a cheque but who will repay him for the lost interest on the sum it represented? He states: "When will we insist on performance standards appropriate to the rising costs of postal service in this country?"

Yesterday, I was on the phone to Mrs. Jane Hunter at apartment 203, 4003 Bayview Avenue. There are three large apartment buildings at this location, housing many senior citizens who receive pension cheques. Until about two months ago they regularly received their mail at two o'clock in the afternoon. For the last several weeks they have had no idea when the mail would arrive—arriving as late as 9:30 in the evening. I recently spoke to the postal authority about this case. They are supposed to remeasure the burden of that route and advise us shortly.

There are many horror stories. A good friend of mine received a letter from Korea in four days. It was a special delivery letter, costing $55 Canadian, but it only took four days to come from Korea to downtown Toronto. However, it took six days for that letter to go from downtown Toronto to Willowdale. That is totally unacceptable.

Another example is the constituent who sent in a copy of an envelope which was mailed from his bank. It took six days to get from the Toronto Dominion Bank on Bayview Avenue to one block away. I applaud the former Minister responsible for Canada Post. He launched the Marchment Committee. I believe that group did an excellent job in travelling across Canada to find out about the various issues. It came up with 43 separate recommendations. I sincerely hope that the new president and his management will study those recommendations very thoroughly and give each and every one serious consideration.

I would like to touch on a few of the major items in the report. Of course, we all know of the massive deficit that Crown corporation—which was just set up three years ago—is enduring. Very recently we had to pour another $243 million of taxpayers' money into that company. In the Marchment report there is a major recommendation in which targets are really set. All Canadians require a postal service which they can depend on for reliable first-class and second-class mail. It should be consistent and dependable. The report then went on to set up a three-tiered target system which states that mail should take no longer than two days to be delivered within a given city from the time it is mailed, it should take no longer than three days within a province and no longer than four days anywhere in Canada.

Obviously, in a great many examples, we are missing those targets by a country mile, but I hope the new president and his management team will get down to brass tacks in terms of increased productivity and dependability of service.

We can hit upon certain ironies in that organization with respect to its set-up right now. Most mail gets sorted at night, yet the men and women with the most experience work during the day, so the most inexperienced people are trying to handle the high volume of mail in the evenings. Delivery carriers are currently paid, I understand, about $12.98 an hour. They receive time and a half for the first two hours of overtime and double time for any hours over that. I worked out an example. If one of them worked until nine o'clock on a given day, he would receive for the first two hours of overtime $38.94, an additional $103.84, for those other four hours and if we add in his regular seven or eight hour day—and I am using seven hours—of $90.86 the total gross pay for that one day alone, excluding benefits, would be $233.74, this has been going on for many weeks and I suspect it is related to low productivity and just too many days off. The average employee of Canada Post has 18 days off a year. That is double the average of the private sector. It is almost an extra month off. Most months have about 21 working days.

This is such a serious subject and such an awesome task, as I mentioned, for Mr. Lander to tackle, that I would like to quote from an article in today's Toronto Sun by Laura Sabia:

> A case can be made that the post office is an essential service. Outlaw strikes and replace them with hard-nosed negotiations. We can no longer carry the baggage of intimidation by threats of strike. We can no longer permit problems to increase and fester. A stern but fair policy is needed, enunciated loud and clear by government and executed by the new president. If we must face confrontation with the unions, let's face it now and erase the slate clean.

There are some 60,000 employees in that organization. Obviously, thousands of them are well meaning, hard-working people. Clearly we have some very severe problems with the union side and with management, I underscore, and I, for one—and I know I speak on behalf of thousands of Canadians—wish Mr. Lander well. I wish him Godspeed and good luck in getting that organization turned around so that it will not only give good service but it will make a profit as do the post offices in the United States and in Australia.

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, in the limited time available to me I will deal with the subject matter of the Hon. Member's question which was first raised on November 7, 1985. At that time intense negotiations were going on with the Union of Postal Communications Employees which represents some 4,000 employees at Canada Post.

The Minister expressed optimism at that time that both parties would arrive at a negotiated settlement. I am happy to report that that turned out to be the case as far as the Union of Postal Communications Employees is concerned.

At this very moment members of the union are in the process of ratifying a tentative agreement reached two weeks ago with the assistance of a conciliation commissioner appointed by the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight). When this tentative agreement is signed in a few weeks, Canada Post will have completed an entire round of negotiations with all nine of its unions, which represents some 29 bargaining units, without any strikes having occurred.

What this illustrates is that we have a corporation and its unions which have reached the maturity to settle their differences at a negotiating table and not on picket lines. This successful round of negotiations also indicates that the laws governing labour relations in Canada really work and that the structures in place to ensure fair labour settlements and justice in the workplace are effective in achieving these objectives.

When Canada Post became a Crown corporation almost five years ago, one of the key issues was to shift the jurisdiction governing labour relations from the Public Service Staff Relations Act to the Canada Labour Code. There have not been any strikes at Canada Post for the past four years. This situation is the consequence of the flexibility that the Canada Labour Code provides for both parties to reach a negotiated settlement. The series of collective agreements reached with all of Canada Post's unions in this first round of negotiations under the Canada Labour Code is positive proof that the system is working.

With respect to strikes being made illegal at Canada Post, I feel confident that the matter should be left under the jurisdiction of the Canada Labour Code. We should continue to negotiate satisfactorily at the bargaining table contracts between the 29 unions represented at Canada Post.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.33 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

USE OF TERM "WELCHING"

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to take advantage of this brief intervention to correct an ethnic slur which I inadvertently put on the record of this House on January 13. On that day, as reported at page 9719 of Hansard, I accused the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) of welching on his commitments to the country. A citizen, perhaps a member of a Welsh-Canadian community, has written to me demanding a retraction.

There is some doubt about whether the word "welch" derives its origin from the inhabitants of Wales. The pejorative use of "welch", for example, is never capitalized, and The Greater Oxford Dictionary does not associate the nationality and the pejorative. However, Webster's Third Edition suggests an association—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member his time has expired.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

THE ADMINISTRATION

CRITICISM OF DIRECTION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, each day more and more Canadians are becoming more and more disappointed with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I have an example that I want to share with the House. Bill Neville, whom you know as a long-time Conservative Party activist, recently told Maclean's magazine: "This Government is a little unclear even on the basic direction . . . the issue is, where is this Government going?" Angus MacIssac of Pictou, Nova Scotia, said: "I've voted tory all my life . . . I'll never make that mistake again." We also have the president of a large corporation who told columnist Hy Solomon of The Financial Post that the Prime Minister "is an insubstantial man . . . he borders on being less than upright and forthright." Then we have the Mayor of Pictou, Nova Scotia, an area which the Prime Minister represented at one time, who said: "Everybody's disappointed".

The list gets longer and longer every day, and with the Budget today I suspect that will continue as more Canadians regret that one-night stand back on September 4, 1984.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Jepson).

• (1405)

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CRIMES COMMITTED BY PAROLEES AND PERSONS RELEASED ON BAIL

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Recently in my riding of London East, a London police constable was shot in cold blood. The accused man in this incident was out on $25,000 bail on charges of possession of LSD and cocaine for the purposes of trafficking, and for possessing a restricted handgun. The accused has a criminal record going back to 1971.

It is travesties like this that we are seeing on an almost weekly basis in our newspapers and on television. They clearly indicate the need for tougher bail and parole laws for violent offenders.

On a related note, statistics show that over 15 per cent of parole and mandatory releases are revoked because of a further offence, frequently of a violent nature. It seems to me that we are living in a day and age when the rights of criminals are protected far better than the lives and safety of their victims. Mr. Speaker, this must be changed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PAGES BEAT MEMBERS IN ICE HOCKEY

Mr. Moe Mantha (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I have but a small report to make. When we played our hockey game last night against the pages, we were given a sound trashing: 11 to 10 for the pages!

[English]

Mr. Speaker, last night at the annual hockey match between the Pages and the Members of Parliament it was discovered who truly runs the House of Commons, even though as sub-servants the House of Commons Pages delivered a hard fought defeat to the brave parliamentarians. I must say this was a case of the Tories and the Liberals getting together. I don't know about the socialists, but it seems they do not believe in sport. Despite the on-ice rivalry affection and co-operation do and always will exist between the Members and the Pages. The extreme effort put forward by the Pages to defeat us is only characteristic of the same effort they put forward to serve this House. Mr. Speaker, I will also say that the referees were good.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The result was predictable.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, my only regret was that I was wearing Jelinek skates.

CALL FOR REVOCATION OF REGULATION CHANGES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, today is a day that all Canadians are going to be watching Mr. Wilson, and watching the federal Government to see what kind of relief it brings for Canadians in the form of the Budget. I want to serve notice to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) and to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that steel workers, former steel workers, Armed Forces personnel, former Armed Forces personnel, former secretaries, and all laid-off Canadians want the Government to change the punitive regulations that it has developed with the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

Michael Wilson brought in this cruel measure in November, 1984. Today is the chance that he has to take it back. We beg you, Mr. Prime Minister and Mr. Minister of Finance, revoke these unfair measures for the sake of all Canadians.

BALTIC EVENING

POSTPONEMENT DUE TO PRESENTATION OF BUDGET

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, tonight was to be the fourteenth Baltic Night on Parliament Hill. Michael Wilson, although Minister of Finance, continued to chair the committee that plans this annual event. He presided over the luncheon meeting on December 11 which considered arrangements for this year's dinner and entertainment. Persons resident outside, as well as in Ottawa, made plans to attend Baltic Night, only to learn last week that the event had been postponed because of budget night.

Members of our ethnocultural communities often feel neglected by Government. National policies seem to take precedence over their own concerns, and those who appear sympathetic to them in social settings pursue the "dictates of government" with little regard for ethnocultural concerns. The postponement of Baltic Night is one more unfortunate instance of this lack of sensitivity.

Mr. Speaker: Before we proceed may I remind Hon. Members that any reference to another Member by name is out of order.

REDUCTION IN DEFICIT

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, over the last decade or so there has been a phenomenal growth in the level of deficits. The growth started under a former Minister of Finance, the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner). If, according to Liberal and NDP doctrine, deficits create jobs, why is it that we inherited almost 1.5 million unemployed when we took office? The truth is that deficits rob us of financial, social, and human resources. Moneys used to pay interest on outstanding debt are not available to create jobs or to finance social programs.

I would like to bring to the attention of the House figures released recently by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). In November, 1985, the budgetary shortfall dropped by $64 million compared to November, 1985. More important is that for the first eight months of the current fiscal year the deficit is down by $229 million compared to the same period in the last fiscal year. This represents a reversal of the trend established by the successive Liberal Governments which pushed ever increasing deficits onto the backs of Canadians and nearly destroyed our economy.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise the Member his time has expired.

TRADE

IMPORTANCE OF BILATERIAL NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES TO INCREASE COMMERCIAL EXCHANGES

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I have difficulty understanding the attitude of Opposition members who for the past several months have been opposing the free trade negotiations which aim at creating new jobs and protecting existing ones in Canada.

Although our lumber is now entering the United States duty free, American producers tried on two occasions these past few years to convince the Congress of the need to impose countervailing duties. Hence, the importance of our bilateral negotiations with the United States on trade development.

Last year, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian production of softwood increased by 7.8 per cent to a record level and that of hardwood, by 14 per cent. It is easy to understand the importance of this market when we realize that we export 65 per cent of our sawn lumber to the United States.

SOCIAL SECURITY

EVENTUAL IMPACT OF BUDGET

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government will know another dark hour at 4:30 this afternoon.

Everyone will recall that, less than one year ago, our senior citizens were savagely attacked by this Government and this Prime Minister. They will also recall that the sick were savagely attacked by a 10 per cent tax. In addition, mothers still remember the deindexing of family allowances and they are here to protest on the Hill before the Senate to urge the Government to reverse its decision on Bill C-70.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure all the Hon. Members that, this afternoon, representatives of family organizations, senior citizens and the Anti-Poverty Council will be on Parliament Hill to make sure that they will not be had by this Government as they were last year and to make comments—

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

THE PHILIPPINES—EXPRESSION OF PEOPLE POWER

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, 18 years ago, in the summer of 1968, the people of Czechoslovakia, particularly in Prague, were celebrating what was for them a real breath of freedom and democracy in that city.

In the name of the people, the state moved in its tanks and crushed that enthusiasm and crushed their freedom. Thousands were killed in that expression.

Two days ago, half way around the world, in the city of Manila, thousands of people were in the streets celebrating what for them was a new expression of freedom in their land. Again, the tanks moved in. But what a difference. It was not the state but people power at its best. It was people power in the wholesome and refreshing expression of freedom.

We must take note of the contrast, and give credit where credit is due, and pay tribute to the pacifist way in which the new President has expressed her view of democracy.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

S.O. 21

CROWN CORPORATIONS

BATA FOUNDATION—REJECTION OF MUSEUM SITE URGED

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, Bata Shoes Limited has been condemned for its labour practices in South Africa and for its failure to adhere to the Government's voluntary code of conduct. Now the Bata Foundation is seeking to enhance the tarnished image of the shoe company by seeking free land from Harbourfront, a federal Crown corporation, on which to erect a shoe museum.

The proposal must be rejected as the only course of action consistent with the request of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) that Canadians take their own action to express their revulsion against apartheid. For the Government, its Departments, agencies, and Crown corporations to fail to follow the same course would be manifest hypocrisy. Nor is it appropriate that a federal employee should be seconded to Bata as an advocate for a name which, in South Africa, stands for injustice.

THE ECONOMY

FISCAL RESPONSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, today the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will bring down his second Budget. Perhaps for the first time in many years Canadians will realize that the difficult task of rebuilding our economy will take the collective efforts of everyone.

Canadians realize that there are no quick fixes. They realize that the Budget will provide an environment for building security for the future.

The Government is providing profound leadership in the affairs of our nation. Clearly, the Government has a responsibility to demonstrate serious commitment to deficit reduction, but the success of the goal is dependent upon the courage and will of Canadians to realize that everyone must play a role and take a fair share of responsibility.

The future can indeed be a bright one if all Canadians work together. Fiscal responsibility has begun under the Government, and it will continue until we have balanced our books and achieved success.

YOUTH

UNEMPLOYMENT IN NEW BRUNSWICK—GOVERNMENT'S DECISIONS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago, I referred to the fact that unemployment in New Brunswick had increased to 15.3 per cent. There is now no indication that things will improve.

Let us take for example a component of the Challenge 86 Program, namely Summer Employment Work Experience.

In 1985, New Brunswick received $4.8 million. In 1986, this province will receive only $4.2 million, or $600,00 less, which means a loss of 300 jobs next summer. I must now wait for the applause to die down—

The decisions of the Government to abolish and cut back programs do not reflect reality. It is to be expected that these bad decisions will make the under-employment problem among young people in New Brunswick even worse.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

ACCESS TO CONTENTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and it concerns what could be, indeed, a very serious potential budget leak. Can the Deputy Prime Minister give his assurance to the House here and now that no unauthorized persons, other than the two representatives of his caucus who are presently sitting in the lock-up, have been able to see the Budget for the purposes of preparing the communications document and the question and answer document that will be handed out later this afternoon to members of the Conservative Party sitting in this House?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Yes, Mr. Speaker

Some Hon. Members: Yes what?

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary question?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

PREPARATION OF BUDGET

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether this means that yes, everybody saw it or that nobody did.

Perhaps the Minister did not understand the question. Let me repeat: Is the Minister trying to tell the House today that this year's documents are similar to last year's, when they were about an inch thick, and that these documents were prepared by two researchers, without the help of a typist, in four hours spent in a parliamentary lock-up, and that nobody else saw these documents?

Is that what the Minister is telling us today?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has a little problem with his English. He asked if I could assure him of something and I said "yes".

Mr. Boudria: It's better than your French. You may want to withdraw that later.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Back to the gutter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Nunziata: We don't criticize your French Members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PUBLIC RELATIONS CAMPAIGN

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In view of reports concerning what appears to be a rather massive campaign by the Government to sell its Budget to the Canadian people, would the Deputy Prime Minister tell us how many outside consultants have been hired by the Government to help it in its job of trying to get the Canadian people to agree with the Budget?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Minister of Finance.

Miss MacDonald: All Canadians.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there are in this House of Commons 211 Hon. Members who support the Government—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Sometimes.

Mr. Nielsen: —and each and everyone of those Hon. Members, once the Budget has been delivered, will be very active in ensuring that the Canadian public is fully informed and consequently supportive of all of its measures.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I, too, thought that the Tory Members would get active in trying to sell the Budget, but the Deputy Prime Minister went completely away from my question, Mr. Speaker.

CONSULTANTS INQUIRY

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I am asking the Deputy Prime Minister whether outside consultants were hired by the Government and paid with taxpayers' money to prepare some communication scheme, perhaps to be used by Tory backbenchers? Were there outside consultants hired by the Government?

Mr. Gauthier: Answer the question.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is asking me whether outside consultants were hired by the Government for the purpose of budget preparation.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Ouellet: Publicity. Answer the question.

Mr. Nielsen: The answer is, no. The last time I can recall that having occurred, or a similar circumstance having occurred, was when Mr. Walter Gordon was Minister of Finance.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I cannot, I am afraid.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The third question is usually reserved for the first speaker or the Leader, with respect. I am sorry.

Mr. Ouellet: Is this a new rule?

TEXTILE INDUSTRY

CLOTHING AND TEXTILE COMMISSION REPORT—RECOMMENDATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

On January 27 of this year, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs met with the survival committee for the textile and clothing industry in the Eastern Townships, and informed the committee that the Government was going to make a decision at the end of February, further to the report by the commission on clothing and textiles.

Considering the Government's promise, could the Minister inform the House when and in what way the Government intends to act on these recommendaitons and prevent the loss of between 50,000 and 60,000 jobs?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, a few months ago, I met with people from the textile industry in Sherbrooke. I met with them here in Ottawa, I met with them at Saint-Jean in my riding, and the Government is very much aware and very concerned about the problems in this industry.

As you may have noticed, Mr. Speaker, in the last fifteen months we have already created 550,000 jobs in Canada, many of these in Quebec. We are going to keep on working very hard to create jobs in all areas and all sectors.

MAINTENANCE OF JOBS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Is the Minister aware of the position of the President of the Canadian Textile Industry who has accused the previous and present Governments of flagrant incompetence because they failed to use their authority under the GATT to save the jobs that were lost?

And when is the Minister going to announce quotas to save Canadian jobs?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, negotiations between the textile industry and the Government of Canada are still going on.

As the Hon. Member mentioned, we have had several meetings and we expect to have more. As soon as the policy has coalesced, we intend to make it public.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTERVENE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has referred to the textile industry as one of Canada's key industries.

When is the Government going to act to save the jobs being threatened in Quebec?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, when we consider the number of jobs we have created in Canada and Quebec in the last fifteen months, I think we ought to be proud we are Canadians and have one of the best economies in the world.

Mr. Speaker, it cannot be said often enough that 580,000 new jobs in fifteen months is quite an achievement.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is starting to sound like a Minister's statement. The Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice.

SPACE WEAPONRY

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The President of the United States has sold the star wars package to the Government by saying that it will make nuclear weapons impotent and obsolete. However, we have learned this week that the nuclear power and weapons research budget for star wars has been doubled to $603 million. Does the Government still support star wars, which was supposed to make nuclear weapons obsolete, but which we now learn is moving us into a third generation of nuclear weapons?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Government with respect to SDI has been stated time and time again in the House by the Prime Minister, by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and by myself. The position has not changed one iota.

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, would the Deputy Prime Minister tell us whether the Government still considers it advisable to go ahead with the star wars program now that we have just learned with stupefaction that right now the star wars program in the United States is bringing us ever closer to a third generation of nuclear weapons and global holocaust?

● (1425)

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The supplementary question does not alter the answer to the first question. The position of the Government has been clearly stated repeatedly, and that position stands today.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

ANXIETY OF WORKERS IN GM PLANT AT SAINTE-THÉRÈSE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. During my February 14 meeting with the Sainte-Thérèse GM workers they told me they were concerned about the possible loss of 4,000 jobs. Contrary to its position announced in January, is the Government now prepared to deal seriously with this issue in an attempt to find a solution with GM?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, the GM workers are holding consultations with the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. As Hon. Members would know, a number of investments might be forthcoming and we hope that all GM workers will keep their jobs and, better still, that new investments will create additional jobs, as is now the case throughout Canada.

POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF GM PLANT AT SAINTE-THÉRÈSE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since GM management have admitted that consideration is being given to closing down their Sainte-Thérèse plant, will the Government simply let them go ahead or will it take steps to protect those Quebec jobs through a fair redistribution of the automobile industry in Canada?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): As you may have noticed, Mr. Speaker, the last 15 months have been highlighted by huge investments in the automobile industry. Several companies have shown interest in Canada because they believe that our country is a good place to invest. I am convinced that GM management as well will bank on Canada's brightening prospects and the know-how of our topnotch labour force.

AVIATION INDUSTRY

MINISTER'S ANNOUNCEMENT OF MONTREAL JOB-CREATION PROGRAM

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. A week ago, the Minister announced a major plan to save and create jobs in Montreal, namely 1,400 jobs at SPAR Aerospace. How does the Minister explain that since his announcement, SPAR has been laying off people, 65 since November, and 20 more in the near future? When he launched that program with SPAR, was SPAR really committeed to creating 1,400 jobs and stopping those layoffs—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is becoming a little long.

[Translation]

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): As you may have noticed, announcement of 1,400 jobs made in Montreal by SPAR will always make Members opposite feel somewhat jealous. They ruined Montreal during the last 10 years, Mr. Speaker, and the minute we come up with any announcement that is decent, that has some drive, they try to ruin it.

The SPAR Corporation put forward a program that is spread over a few years and I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that what has been announced in terms of job creation, will be delivered.

[English]

JOB CREATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Government has not answered the question. Is SPAR going to lay off hundreds of workers one month and then re-employ them several months later and call that job creation? Is that what the Government means by job creation?

[Translation]

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, I will not go as far as raising the issue of the way they handled the Bell Helicopter matter when they made their announcements. That is not the way we work. SPAR has announced jobs, and we will make sure that these are actually provided.

CALCULATION OF PENSIONS AS INCOME

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration and relates to the change which came about on January 5, 1986, whereby pension income is now considered earned income for unemployment insurance purposes. When this was asked before in the House, the Minister said that she was waiting for the Forget Commission—

Mr. Speaker: This is now a second statement. Question please.

Mr. Rodriguez: Will the Minister ask the Forget Commission to give an interim report on this particular issue as it is affecting many unemployed Canadians right across the country?

• (1430)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to receive the recommendations of the Forget Commission when they are put before me.

POSSIBLE FORGET COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. If and when the Forget Commission reports in the fall and recommends that this change should not have been put into place, will the Minister assure all unemployed Canadians who are disentitled as a result of the change that they will in fact be able to collect their unemployment insurance from January 5, 1986, to the present?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, indeed the Government will study with care all the recommendations that the Forget Commission makes to us.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: That is no good.

O'FARRELL REPORT ON GULF-ULTRAMAR TRANSACTION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. When the Minister announced that unfortunate decision in Montreal to allow the transaction between Gulf and Ultramar to go through, he did not have the O'Farrell Report available. In view of the fact that the document has now been made public by the Minister, is he ready to admit that at that point he took Quebecers for a king-size ride, because it is clearly stated in the report there is a refinery under-capacity in Quebec, and the shutting down of Gulf will be affecting consumers?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I note in the various questions which have been put to us by the allied Parties over there in opposition that there has not been one mention to date of the 60,000 jobs which have been created in Montreal in the last 12 months.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: In direct answer to the Hon. Member's question, the answer is an abrupt no, because that is not what the report said.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT DID NOT MAKE O'FARRELL REPORT PUBLIC BEFORE MAKING DECISION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's defensive attitude definitely shows he feels guilty. Will the Minister tell us why his Government refused to make public that report blaming his Government, before making a decision? Why has it not bee made public?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, I will never feel guilty in this House or before the Canadian public for the creation of 60,000 jobs in Montreal over 12 months.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

NEWSPAPER REPORT OF STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO OFFICIALS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Undoubtedly the Minister is aware that reporters for The Globe and Mail have, several times recently, used allegations which they credited to officers of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service to make sensational charges against foreign consular officials. Has the Minister authorized this release of information—or is it disinformation—to the press, without regard to its effect on good relations within as well as outside Canada?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, first of all let me thank the Hon. Member for a very serious question. As the Hon. Member will know from reading the article in question, The Globe and Mail attributes the information to unnamed sources and not to CSIS. I can indicate that in the interview which was given by CSIS to The Globe and Mail no specific reference was made to specific embassies or consular activities in Canada of specific consulates in Toronto, for example.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the story in The Globe and Mail refers specifically to Gerry Cummings of CSIS and is quite specific in dealing with consular officials. Will the Minister put a stop to this kind of unauthorized leak of information in order to restore good relations among ethnocultural groups in the country?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it is quite true that an officer within CSIS gave an interview to The Globe and Mail.

Mr. Deans: Why?

Mr. Beatty: What the Hon. Member will see from reading the article is that reference was made to a series of consulates within Toronto; a series of countries were mentioned. It was not the intention of CSIS to refer to specific countries, which it did not do. The information in The Globe and Mail refers to specific consular activities of specific countries. They are its choices, not those of CSIS.

INCOME TAX

INVESTMENT DEALERS—EXCLUSION OF DATA FROM T-5 FORMS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue and concerns taxable interest income. Millions of dollars of income tax are lost because investment dealers do not include interest income from Treasury bills in the T-5 forms. Could the Minister tell the House what he is doing to correct the situation?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, there have been consultations with the Canadian Investment Dealers' Association in an attempt to improve the situation. There is no specific legal requirement at the present time for this T-5 slip to which he referred. I am confident the situation will be improved in upcoming months.

INTEREST INCOME—INCLUSION IN TAX FORMS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister give this House the assurance that for the 1986 fiscal year such interest income will be included in the T-5 statements as prepared by stockbrokers?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for my hon. friend opposite, and I will take this as a very serious representation.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PRAIRIE TREATY NATIONS ALLIANCE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. At a meeting last September 24 with the Prime Minister and the two Ministers whom he appointed to represent him in the bilateral process, the Prairie Treaty Nations Alliance tabled a document entitled "Canada-Indian Nations Relationships" and three memoranda of agreement. Why has the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Minister of Justice not met with the Prairie Alliance since that time? Could he also tell us what is the status of the documents which were tabled last September 24?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the meeting which we had with the Prime Minister was a very good one. A number of matters were raised, and they are still under consideration.

REQUEST FOR MEETING WITH MINISTERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister tell the House when the Prairie Alliance can expect another meeting with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Minister of Justice so that they can proceed as agreed with the Prime Minister last September?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the process for the development of the constitutional forum which is occurring in 1987 is one that involves a number of people and a number of meetings. We will begin the process involved over the year, and at the appropriate time we will meet with the Prairie Treaty Nations Alliance.

EMPLOYMENT

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY—CREATION OF JOBS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I am concerned, as we all are in the House, with youth unemployment. Could the Minister inform the House what impact the new Canadian Jobs Strategy is having on long-term jobs for youth?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, one of the better statistics we have seen in the last year is that some 75,000 young people who were unemployed a year and a half ago have now found jobs, that is, some 5,000 jobs per month for young people are being created. The Canadian Jobs Strategy is seeking to improve that figure even further. This year some $330 million will be directed to youth programs. One of them, Job Entry, will be directed particularly to those young people who have not finished high school and who need to improve both their education and their job experience.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

RAILWAYS

ALLEGED PURCHASE OF ROLLING STOCK IN ENGLAND—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Will the Minister confirm that VIA Rail is taking steps to buy rolling stock in Britain? How can he justify such a decision, when workers are being laid off by the railway equipment divisions of Bombardier, National Steel Car, CSW Works, CSF Foundry and, more recently, Marine Industries?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should check his sources of information because he is wrong.

[Translation]

IMPORTANCE OF SAFEGUARDING JOBS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I am quite pleased with the Minister's answer, and I hope he will very soon announce the purpose of rolling stock made in Canada. In that respect, I hope he will accept the invitation sent by Mr. François Lamoureux, President of the Marine Industries Union, to go to Tracy, on March 8, 1986, to explain why the deficit reduction is more important to his Government than creating jobs in the railway industry.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, unlike the former Government which refused to acquire new transcontinental passenger equipment, this Government is actively engaged in the procurement and acquisition of transcontinental passenger equipment. Negotiations and discussions are going on between VIA and a consortium of UTDC and Bombardier. As I indicated to the House a couple of days ago, I think that we are fairly close to a letter of agreement which will be followed by a contract and, hopefully, the ordering of the equipment. I am still optimistic and confident that that can be achieved.

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE

POSSIBLE FLIGHT TESTING OF UNITED STATES BOMBERS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Could the Minister inform the House whether or not the United States Government has requested permission from the Canadian Government for low level flight tests of its B-52 bombers in the Northwest Territories sometime in 1986?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): No, I cannot, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. gentleman wishes details, I can provide those to him.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, in supplying those details, which I would appreciate very much, would the Minister undertake to assure the House that in future the militarization of the Northwest Territories and of Labrador, Goose Bay specifically, would be referred to the new committee on defence, with respect to social and ecological impact studies which are extremely crucial to those two parts of Canada?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have no need to give the hon. gentleman that reassurance. Under the reform rules that the House has adopted unanimously, there is no end to where the committees might take their inquiries.

I do, however, reject the notion that we are setting about the militarization of our North, as the Hon. Member puts it.

To go one step further with respect to the previous answer, if the hon. gentleman would like a briefing, I would be only too happy to supply it.

Oral Questions

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

FAILURE OF CRUISE MISSILE TEST

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Has the Minister yet retrieved his errant Cruise missile and, if so, has he found out what was the matter with it?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: Put the Minister on the next one.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Sir, it is not my errant Cruise missile—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: —although I know how it must have felt, having been the pilot of a single engine airplane on many occasions when the fan stopped.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Again, I can tell the Hon. Member that the recovery operation under the command of a member of the Canadian Forces is actively engaged now in recovering the debris.

THE BUDGET

PREPARATION OF BRIEFING MATERIAL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Because he did not answer the question asked by the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques, I would like to give him a chance to answer it again.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Can the Deputy Prime Minister give us today an assurance that no public funds will be used for outside consultants to help Progressive Conservative Party members, caucus members, or the Government propogate today's Budget?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that the Government will ensure that Canadian taxpayers' dollars are spent more wisely and with a good deal more propriety than they have been in the past.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): In other words, Mr. Speaker, the taxpayers of Canada are going to pay for this elaborate communications strategy—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Just a question, please.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Throw her out.

Ms. Copps: Does the Deputy Prime Minister think it is fair that the taxpayers of Canada pay for the kind of elaborate communications strategy which was leaked in the press today, which is clearly designed not to help the Government but to assist individual members of the Conservative Party propagate their philosophy?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may not be aware, although I would be surprised if she were not, that taxpayers support in a very substantial way the respective research departments of each of the Parties in this House of Commons.

Ms. Copps: That is not the question.

Mr. Nielsen: The distinction is that when we were in Opposition we were always ahead of the Liberal's research personnel, and now that we are on this side, those excellent personnel are still ahead of those in opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORT

WINDUP OF INSURANCE COMPANY—EFFECT ON TRUCKING INDUSTRY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. What steps is he going to take to ensure that trucking companies in Canada can continue to operate, now that the Minister of State for Finance has ordered the truckers insurance company wound up while, at the same time, failing to ensure that adequate coverage at rates they could afford could be obtained?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows, I am sure, that a proposal was put on the table to the truckers to assist them in acquiring the company that had encountered financial difficulty. Because of the fact that they had difficulty in acquiring reinsurance, the deal fell through. We are prepared to work with the truckers and assist them in every way we can.

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF PUBLICLY OPERATED INSURANCE PLAN

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Finance on the same subject.

Would the Minister now take the step of either setting up a national publicly operated insurance plan or, at the very least if she does not want to take that logical step, agree to establish national standards to ensure this kind of situation will not recur?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think we were, as I am sure the Hon. Member was, very disappointed when this arrangement did not work. There were the other reasons besides the reinsurance.

We are in conversations with the reinsurance industry and with the property and casualty industry to try to smooth not just that particular problem but a whole range of problems dealing with liability insurance, and I thank the Hon. Member for his question.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

POSSIBLE SALE OF TELEGLOBE CANADA

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I am sure he is aware that Teleglobe is one of Canada's most profitable Crown corporations, a great high-tech success story paid for by all Canadians.

Will the Minister confirm that no foreign ownership will be permitted of our only international communications network, Canada's unique voice to the other continents of our world?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): In reply to the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree that Teleglobe is a good company and a profitable company, but I feel she must bear in mind that when we asked for bidders with respect to Teleglobe, 11 indicated an interest, three of which are non-Canadian companies.

I can assure the Hon. Member and Members of the House that it is certainly not our intention to allow control of Teleglobe to go to non-Canadian hands, but whether a consortium would find it suitable to include one or more of those non-Canadian interested parties is yet to be seen.

Mrs. Finestone: I will come back to that, Mr. Speaker.

CONSEQUENCES OF SALE

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): My supplementary question is for the Minister of Communications, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister guarantee that, if the Government carries out its very foolish plan to privatize profitable Teleglobe, that Canadians will not have to pay higher rates for their business and personal long distance phone calls as a result of this ridiculous move?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROVISION OF WATER AND SEWAGE FACILITIES ON NORTHERN MANITOBA RESERVES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Last month in Manitoba he was asked by a number of northern chiefs whether he would take a major initiative to provide water and sewage treatment facilities on a number of reserves in northern Manitoba. Is the Minister at this time able to answer that request?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the discussion I had with the people in the northern communities was a good one. The specific request with respect to sewer and water is an important matter to them. Very shortly I will be in a position to respond, I think, positively, to them.

TIMING OF DECISION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister like to define the term shortly?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): It is a word I have some familiarity with, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: I want to assure the Hon. Member that the time taken was not any intentional delay but to make sure that we have adequate information in order to make our appropriate decision.

AUTOMOBILE EMISSION STANDARDS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. He is aware of reports that he intends to delay implementation of new automobile emission standards aimed at reducing acid rain. Are these stories true and, if so, why?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that is not true. The new auto emission standards will apply to all 1988 model year cars and all years thereafter.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EFFECT OF REGULATION CHANGES ON ANNUITY HOLDERS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment. Last week some of my colleagues and I met with representatives of the Armed Forces Pensioner's Association regarding UIC regulation changes. They told us that if the Minister had been present at a meeting of theirs in Kingston last week she would have been drawn and quartered on the spot by some of the people who work for her. Will the Minister explain why she continues to feel that these cuts are fair to the annuity holders of Canada when those people are the ones who paid for the annuities? The annuities are their property, not that of the Government of Canada.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, since 1971 the Unemployment Insurance Fund has operated on certain basic principles. One principle is that premiums are paid by all persons in the workforce. Another is that those who are entitled to draw unemployment insurance are those without jobs and without income. The changes we have made have not violated those basic principles.

EFFECT ON INCOMES

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister explain to this House and her constituents how she can justify the fact that her measures have caused some people to fall below the poverty line? Some of them are even in danger of losing their homes. Is that her idea of sensitivity to those people who change jobs in mid-life?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned previously, we are administering the program according to its basic principles.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

MULTINATIONAL DRUG MANUFACTURING COMPANIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Eastman Commission, which looked into the price of prescription drugs, reported that the people of Canada would save tens of millions of dollars under the present laws. It also reported that the multinationals were being treated fairly with their four-year exclusive right to sell drugs they had developed. Why is the Minister saying he is prepared to give them exclusive rights for longer than four years?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, we are indeed looking at the recommendations of the Eastman Report and we are also consulting with the various groups and provinces. I have already clearly indicated that, when a policy is introduced, it will be along the same lines as the other Government policies which have already been announced to promote job creation and new investments in Canada.

[English]

EXCLUSIVE PATENT RIGHTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, surely the Minister knows that there is no evidence that there were many jobs before or that there is likely to be even more jobs in the future if he agrees—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. No preamble, just a question, please.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, why is the Minister reported as saying that he will agree to more than a four-year period?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I simply said that, in my examination, I am concerned mostly with ensuring that our policy will promote job creation and new investments in Canada, and this can require a longer period of protection.

EXTERNAL AID

THE PHILIPPINES—REQUEST THAT CANADA PROVIDE INCREASED ASSISTANCE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He will know that the Government of Corazon Aquino has inherited a $26 billion foreign debt, a shaky currency, increasing inflation, and widespread poverty, to name just a few problems. Will the Minister undertake a major review of Canadian aid to the Philippines and consider increasing the meagre amounts now provided, to assist the fledgling Filipino democracy?

Mr. Nystrom: Marcos was a Liberal.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): As concerns the aid we provide to the Philippines, there is in fact a bilateral project of about $1.5 million which will end in the near future, and we work in close co-operation with non-government organizations and use the funds administered by the Embassy. These are only small projects. For the moment, that is all the assistance we provide to the Philippines.

[English]

LEVEL OF FOREIGN AID

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister assure the House that this afternoon's Budget will not result in a decrease in foreign aid, especially to the Philippines?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member spends more time in the House he will know that question is out of order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murphy: Put Joe in the chair.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As we all spend more time in the House I will make those decisions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUDGET FORECASTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for External Relations. In view of reports that Canada's development assistance budget is going to be slashed by some 10 per cent, how can the Minister and her Government allow such cuts to take place at the very time when developing countries have an increasing need for that funding? An overwhelming number of Canadians have said they support development assistance at least at present levels.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I am a very new Member of Parliament, but I know quite well that such a question is not in order on Budget Day.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. These comments about what is in and out of order are out of order.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, this concern is not out of order. If other nations follow Canada's lead and cut their budgets as well, what will happen to people in countries such as Africa, especially to women and children? Are we going to condemn them to a repeat—

Mr. Speaker: Order, this is too long.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of giving answers about hypothetical situations, but I shall be happy to reply to all these questions as early as tomorrow.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

ALLEGED CONTRACT AWARDED TO CERTAIN ORGANIZATION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and deals with the study on the role of service industry in the Canadian economy. Hon. Members are aware that four out of five women are involved in the service industry. Now, I should like to know why the Minister has awarded a $2 million contract to the Fraser Institute, an organization which is openly against the employment equality program, against minimum wages, and whose views are definitely against the promotion of women.

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the contract the Hon. Member refers to is, of course, with respect to an economic study. It is purely in that domain and has nothing whatsoever to do with the topic she refers to in her question.

[Translation]

SITUATION OF WOMEN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to tell the Minister that if he took the time to read the literature published by the Fraser Institute, he would realize that his information is not accurate. I should like to know why he has awarded a contract to the Fraser Institute whose bias against women is well known; is it because the Conservative Party wants to keep women in ghettoized jobs?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would have presumed that the Hon. Member would have known better. Her question is just not well-founded. The answer to her specific question is very definitely no.

MUSEUMS

PREPARATION OF EXHIBITS FOR NEW MUSEUM OF MAN

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): My question is directed to the Minister of Communications who knows that the Museums Corporation is extremely worried that the new Museum of Man, as it is currently called, will not be able to open with exhibits when the new building opens because of a lack of money. Will the Minister undertake to assure the House that the $50 million required for exhibits in the building as well as a building itself, will be provided in time?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that these matters are being considered by the Department and that it is fully the responsibility of the Department and Minister, and not the General Secretary of the Museums Corporation, to make the necessary announcements in due course.

[English]

AVAILABILITY OF FUNDING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question deals with the same museum construction more generally. Will the Minister assure us that the necessary funds to complete the buildings will be there and that there will be no call for private funding and fund raising drives that will compete with museums across the country which have to go to the public for their funding?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the first part of the question was settled a few months ago. The decisions were then made public and thus the second part of the question is not applicable.

PRIVILEGE

EXPLANATIONS CONCERNING MINISTER'S ANSWER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): This afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege following certain comments made in the House by the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) concerning the ability of Francophone Members in the second language.

After giving you the required notice this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I have received a letter from the Minister of State (Finance) and I accept it as an apology.

[English]

RELEVANCY OF ANSWERS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, Monday of this week you gave the House an extensive ruling with respect to conduct in the question period. In that ruling you gave us an indication of what you expected with respect to the length of preambles, repetition of questions and preambles to supplementaries. You said if we abused those rules you would cut us off. This afternoon I put a question to the Government about Spar Aerospace Industries in Montreal, a very specific question, and I got an answer with respect to Bell Helicopters, which was completely irrelevant to the question I asked.

There was another question from this side about lay-offs in a very specific industry in Montreal and we got a political speech with a lot of rhetoric which was irrelevant. In view of the rulings that you have made will you cut off Ministers who give very irrelevant answers to the questions asked, just as you will cut off this side when we are irrelevant?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I know that is a serious request. I think if the Hon. Member checks the tape he will find that I did rise progressively during answers today when I thought they were too long. If the Hon. Member believes that the remedy with regard to the answers that the Hon. Member believes are irrelevant—and to some degree the Chair cannot be charged with that—or feels that the late show, the only remedy I know of, is inadequate, he always has the right and recourse to the Committee on Privileges and Elections to have the matter discussed further.

ACCEPTABILITY OF QUESTION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period today I put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). He responded by saying that my question was out order. Perhaps I can ask for some direction from the Chair. The Chair did not rise to rule my question out of order. Could you rule whether or not the question was in order?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a question of privilege. I take it the Hon. Member is rising on what he presumes is a point of order. What is admitted or not admitted by the Chair is entirely within the Chair's discretion. That is the only answer I can give the Hon. Member on that matter. Members who believe that a question or an answer is out of order have the right to rise at three o'clock and raise a point of order, as the Hon. Member has just done.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): On a point of order. In the matter in question, I was in procedural error.

Mr. Deans: That doesn't mean you were wrong.

PETITIONS

MORGENTALER CLINIC—RESTRICTIONS ON POLICE—CONTINUED OPERATION

Mr. Speaker: These I presume have all been certified?

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Yes. Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition which has been duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions. It is a petition signed by some 75 residents of my riding who are members of the Holy Cross Parish, calling upon Parliament to express to the Government and the Province of Ontario our displeasure with the restrictions placed on the Metropolitan Toronto Police Department in regard to laying charges under Section 251 of the Criminal Code against the operators of the premises known as the Morgentaler Clinic.

Mr. Peter Peterson (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present a petition on behalf of some residents of my constituency, Hamilton West, who protest the continued operation within the City of Toronto of premises known as the Morgentaler Clinic for the stated purposes of performing unlawful abortions.

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to this House a petition on behalf of 586 residents of my riding of Sarnia-Lambton. My constituents are protesting the continued operation of the Morgentaler Clinic in the City of Toronto for the stated purpose of performing unlawful abortions, which is an affront to law abiding citizens.

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to present to the House a group of similar petitions signed by approximately 552 people from my riding in Ontario. They ask that Section 251 of the Criminal Code be obeyed so that the continued operation of the Morgentaler Clinic in the City of Toronto may cease.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to an Order made Monday, February 24, 1986, this sitting is suspended until 4.30 o'clock p.m., at which time may I remind Hon. Members the House will consider a Ways and Means Motion by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Deans: A point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I am in procedural difficulty in allowing a point of order, but I will hear it.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I regret that I did not catch your eye before. I just want to be clear that the bells will in fact ring in advance of 4.30 in order that Members are advised that the House is reconvening.

Mr. Speaker: I am surprised that Members are not aware of that, but yes, the bells will ring.

At 3.08 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance) moved:

That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

He said: I want to speak frankly to this House, and to the people of Canada.

My message today is a serious one, and in many ways not pleasant. But it must be said. And it must be understood.

We have made tremendous progress together in the past 18 months. Growth has been strong. Jobs are being created in record numbers. The deficit is coming down.

But the mounting burden of public debt continues to threaten our future. It is growing faster than our ability to pay. It must be controlled.

When Canadians elected this Government, our mandate was clear. It was to create jobs. But to create those jobs we had to solve the problems left by a decade of financial mismanagement.

[Translation]

In November of 1984, I placed before this House a plan to fulfil this mandate. In the major document entitled "An Agenda for Economic Renewal", we set out a comprehensive strategy based on three fundamental principles.

[English]

First, the best way to create jobs is through private initiative.

[Translation]

Second, good Government does not mean more Government, it means more efficient government.

[English]

And third, Canada's prosperity depends on restoring the health of the nation's finances.

A Record of Action

We set to work immediately. The actions we have since taken fulfil an essential part of the Agenda that we brought forward 16 months ago.

Through our first eight months in office:

[Translation]

- We worked actively to build a constructive relationship with our provincial colleagues.

[English]

- We launched the Canadian Jobs Strategy.
- We reduced expenditures and improved programs.

- We signed the Western and Atlantic Energy Accords.
- We established Investment Canada.
- We initiated regulatory reforms in the areas of transportation, telecommunications, financial institutions and competition policy.
- We restored close and co-operative relations with our allies and trading partners.

In May of last year, we took further action.

- We reduced the operating costs of all Government departments.
- We cut industrial grants.
- We closed costly heavy water plants.
- We reduced transportation expenditures.

[Translation]

- We provided major incentives for investment in small business.

[English]

- We improved the pension system.
- We introduced a new child benefit system to increase assistance to those most in need while reducing overall costs.
- We established a program to sell surplus assets and privatize Crown corporations.
- We appointed an independent commission to examine the unemployment insurance system.
- And we launched a process to reform the corporate income tax.

Last May I said we would reduce the deficit to $33.8 billion this year. We will meet that target. I said we would control Government spending. I projected expenditures this year at $105 billion. Our spending will be more than $1 billion lower. We said we would cut spending and control the deficit. We did what we said we would do.

[Translation]

Today I will announce further measures to implement the economic renewal plan set out in November 1984, measures that will restore fiscal stability by the end of the decade. This is being achieved by the most significant and far-reaching program of expenditure control ever undertaken by the Government of Canada.

[English]

These measures, when combined with those in November 1984 and May 1985, will ensure that the federal deficit is substantially reduced this year, next year and every year into the next decade.

This budget will reduce the deficit to $29.8 billion in the coming fiscal year and, by the end of the decade, it will be cut to $22 billion.

Financial requirements – the amount we must borrow each year to pay the bills – will be cut from $28.3 billion in 1985-86 to $17.9 billion in 1987-88, a reduction of 37 per cent in just two years. By the end of the decade, financial requirements will be down to $11 billion.*

* This budget implements certain accounting changes recommended by the Auditor General. Details and a full reconciliation are presented in Annex 1, the Fiscal Plan. In this section of the Budget Speech, in order to facilitate comparison with figures in the May budget, the numbers are presented on the basis of the former accounting system. In the remainder of the speech, all financial numbers are presented on the new accounting basis.

Our national debt will no longer be growing faster than the economy.

Increases in taxation contribute to this result. But fully 70 per cent of the debt reduction will be achieved by spending cuts.

The plan we set out in November 1984 is working, and working well. We are sticking to that plan.

A Stronger Economy

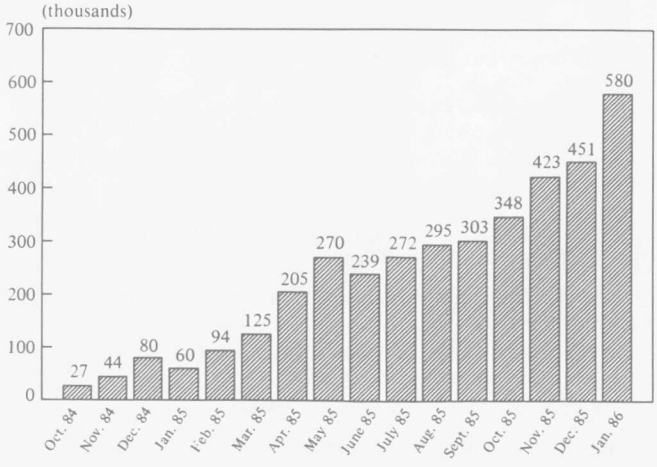
We set out to challenge Canadians to bring about economic growth and job creation through their own initiative and effort. Canadians have responded to this challenge.



● (1640)

Our economic performance during the past 18 months has been much better than anyone expected. In 1985, growth in Canada was far stronger than in any of the major European countries, twice as great as in the United States and equal to that of Japan.

Economic growth has also become more broadly-based. The forces that drove the economy in 1985 were generated right here in Canada – higher business investment, more housing starts and strong consumer spending.

Job creation has been vigorous. The unemployment rate has fallen from 11.7 per cent in September 1984 to 9.8 per cent today – the first time it has been below 10 per cent since April 1982.

Total Employment Gains Since September 1984

The skeptics doubted we could create tens of thousands of jobs. They said cutting the deficit and creating jobs could not be done at the same time.

Canadians have made those skeptics eat their words.

Canadians haven't created tens of thousands of jobs, they've created hundreds of thousands – 580,000 new jobs since September, 1984.

[Translation]

Canadians should understand how remarkable this achievement is. During the past 18 months our rate of job creation has been more than 50 per cent higher than in the United States. Even more remarkable, Canadians have created more jobs, in absolute terms, than all the Western European countries combined – countries which together have 16 times our population.

While growth has been strong, inflation has been stable. Canadian cost performance compares favourably with that of our major competitors. Because of strong productivity growth and moderate wage increases, the competitiveness of Canadian industry has improved.

Labour-management relations have improved greatly. The proportion of working time lost through industrial disputes is at its lowest level in 20 years.

[English]

Solving the Problems of the Past

These are all positive signs – evidence that we are on the right track. But one major obstacle remains in our path.

When the government came to office, we encountered a debt problem of massive proportions. For 15 years, successive governments financed more and more spending by borrowing more and more money. The bills were passed to future generations. The buck was passed to us.

Well, the buck stops here. It must stop here.

Let me put this in the simplest terms possible.

For years the government borrowed billions of dollars simply to pay the interest on past loans. Interest on these loans increased from $1.7 billion 15 years ago to $22 billion in 1984-85. As a country, we have been mortgaging our future, year by year, and paying the interest by taking out a new loan. Every Canadian knows that this is a recipe for disaster. This is the reality with which this government has had to deal – a reality that threatened rising debt, falling confidence, a falling dollar, rising interest rates, slower growth and even higher deficits. That is the vicious circle we had to break.

The Expenditure Record

That is why since November of 1984, we have acted to overhaul and streamline the operations of government. And none too soon.

Over the last decade, program expenditures had more than doubled. Discretionary spending – spending on non-statutory programs – had grown even faster. In the three years prior to this government taking office, discretionary spending grew by 43 per cent. Operating costs of Government departments increased by 30 per cent. Personnel costs grew by 20 per cent.

[Translation]

This Government moved decisively to bring this spending under control.

[English]

We set in place a new, disciplined approach to Government management.

- We are acting to eliminate 15,000 positions from the federal public service by the end of the decade; 5,000 will be eliminated in 1986-87.
- We reduced capital expenditures and closed diplomatic posts in foreign countries.
- We are eliminating programs, such as the Canadian Home Insulation Program, the Petroleum Incentives Program, the Petroleum Compensation Program, Katimavik and the Shipbuilding Industry Assistance Program.
- We reduced subsidies to VIA Rail, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, CN Marine and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.
- We sold de Havilland, the Northern Transportation Company, and most of the Government's interest in the Canada Development Corporation.
- We wound up several Crown corporations, including Canagrex.

These are not intentions. These are concrete actions we have taken. The results are clear. In this fiscal year, our actions have resulted in gross savings of $5.8 billion – about $560 for every Canadian household.

The Government has benefited greatly from the work of the Ministerial Task Force on Program Review. Private sector volunteers worked closely with public servants in 19 study teams to examine virtually all Government programs. Their task was to improve the way Government operates and delivers services. The recommendations in their reports have prompted many specific actions which have reduced duplication, streamlined operations and led to meaningful savings. I am announcing today that all the study team reports will be released on March 11.

This expenditure reduction has involved thousands of people doing their jobs quietly and efficiently outside the glare of these television lights. And the result is that discretionary program spending this year will be held to $37.7 billion, $530 million lower than the previous year.

Total program spending, including all statutory programs such as Old Age Security, family allowances and unemployment insurance, will be held to $86.6 billion – lower than last year's spending.

This is the first absolute decline in total program spending in over 20 years.

These actions were enough to accomplish our first objective – to halt the upward spiral in our deficit. But unprecedented as they were, they were not enough to provide assurance that our annual deficits would continue to fall. The risks to continued growth are still there and they are too high to be ignored.

New Expenditure Restraint

To reduce these risks, and to achieve our goal of fiscal stability, I am today announcing measures to restrain Government expenditures even further.

First, it is important that restraint start at the top. The Prime Minister has already taken a cumulative salary cut of $20,290 over two years. Each Minister has taken a cumulative cut of $9,440 over the same period. The Government will ask members of this House and the Senate to accept a reduction of $1,000 in their salaries this year. This $1,000 cut will also apply to the Prime Minister and his Cabinet.

• (1650)

I am announcing that in 1986 there will be no regular annual increase in the salaries of deputy ministers, assistant deputy ministers and equivalent political staff. For other executive levels, such increases will be held to a maximum of 2 per cent. To encourage excellence and prudent management, the Government will award pay increases to senior executives only on the basis of merit, with greater emphasis on productivity improvement.

Second, our privatization efforts are continuing.

As we identify corporations which do not meet public policy objectives, we will either close them or sell them to the private sector where they can become more competitive, lessen the burden on taxpayers and provide better service.

As announced, Canadian Arsenals Ltd. will be sold before the end of this fiscal year. We are negotiating with the territorial Governments concerning the disposition of the Northern Canada Power Commission. The remaining companies of the Canada Development Investment Corporation are still for sale. We expect to sell Teleglobe Canada in the next few months. Expressions of interest are still being received on Canadair and Eldorado Nuclear.

Third, Ottawa must become leaner and more efficient.

I am announcing a $500 million special reduction in non-statutory spending for the 1986-87 fiscal year. This is equivalent to 2 per cent of the cost of all non-statutory Government programs, with the exception of foreign aid and defence. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) will shortly announce the plan to implement this reduction. This will reduce departmental budgets on an ongoing basis.

We are implementing two other significant management measures. Operating costs in all departments will be substantially cut in 1986-87 as part of the special $500 million reduction. Thereafter they will not be permitted to rise by more than 2 per cent per year.

In addition, Government departments will be forced to absorb increases in workload by increasing productivity or reallocating funds to higher priorities. Reserves that previously existed to fund such increases are being substantially cut. The experience gained this past year gives me confidence that these tighter operating constraints can be managed.

These spending reductions will result in savings of $850 million in 1986-87, rising to $2.8 billion in 1990-91. These savings amount to $80 per taxpayer next year.

All these actions force new discipline on the system – long overdue discipline.

[Translation]

But they also expose the truth about our financial problem. The billions we can save through better management are not enough to resolve Canada's financial problems.

[English]

We must also restrain spending in a number of specific areas.

The Government is determined to come to grips with the financial and operating problems of Canada Post. Over the past year the Corporation has made progress in reducing overhead costs, cutting the numbers of managers and staff and increasing productivity. It is clear, however, that the Corporation will not be in a break-even position by the end of this fiscal year, as called for in the five-year plan established by the last government.

The Marchment Committee has recommended another five years to reach the break-even point. This is not acceptable.

Following discussions with the President of Canada Post, the Government has requested a new operating plan to improve productivity at Canada Post so that the Corporation will reduce its operating deficit to zero by the end of fiscal 1987-88. The Government is confident that by taking further steps to improve productivity and efficiency, Canada Post and its workers can meet the objective of self-sufficiency while improving reliability of service to the people of Canada.

[Translation]

The Government has also re-examined its funding commitment for foreign aid.

[English]

This year, Canadian aid will exceed $2 billion – 0.5 per cent of our gross national product, well above the average of other major donor countries.

In my last budget, I spoke of the Government's intention to see our foreign aid spending reach 0.6 per cent of GNP by 1990. This would have required spending increases for five consecutive years considerably above the rate of growth of our economy. Had we continued on this trend, foreign aid would have grown by over 12 per cent a year on average. Growth rates of that magnitude cannot be sustained when domestic programs are being tightly constrained. Accordingly, growth in Canada's aid program will be reduced by $1.5 billion over the next five years. The savings will be $83 million in 1986-87 and $205 million in 1987-88. For the balance of this decade foreign aid will remain at 0.5 per cent of GNP. It will increase by 8.7 per cent per year, on average, bringing the total to $3.1 billion in 1990-91. Our objective will be to reach a foreign aid/GNP ratio of 0.6 per cent by the middle of the next decade.

But direct foreign aid is not enough. Trade is also important. Less developed countries need access to our market. That is why we have taken further steps to open the Canadian market to exports from developing countries. The decision to relax the import quotas on footwear is a measure of considerable benefit to less developed countries. The Caribbean initiative through which we extend trade and other measures of assistance to the Commonwealth Caribbean is a second example of these actions.

[Translation]

Our nation's defence is another area where tough financial decisions are required.

[English]

The Government is fully committed to a strong defence capability. This commitment has been confirmed by decisions to reinforce our military presence in Europe and to strengthen the North Warning System. It must be recognized, however, that our biggest imperative now is to reduce the deficit so that we have the economic growth and fiscal flexibility in future years to fund important programs such as defence.

To contribute to restoring fiscal balance, the rate of growth in defence expenditure will be held to 2.75 per cent, after inflation, in 1986-87. In 1987-88, and subsequent years, defence spending will grow by 2 per cent per year, after inflation. This will achieve savings of $285 million over the next two years.

Notwithstanding this restraint, expenditures on defence will continue to increase substantially each year over the balance of this decade. Annual average growth will exceed 6 per cent, bringing our defence budget from $9.3 billion this year to $9.9 billion next year and $10.5 billion the year after.

[Translation]

Canada will continue to meet its defence responsibilities in North America and Europe and this Government will make every effort to increase our level of financial commitment as our economic and fiscal circumstances permit.

[English]

As a result of the spending cuts this Government has made to date, expenditures on Government programs will grow by less than inflation over the next five years. By the end of the decade, Government spending on programs will fall to the same share of the economy as in the 1960s.

• (1700)

Over the next two years there will be virtually no growth in spending on non-statutory programs. We will spend less on these programs in 1987-88 than in 1984-85. I am unable to find any period in Canadian history when the federal government has reduced discretionary spending on this scale.

So far I have talked of cutting spending on non-statutory programs. Let me now address the issue of statutory spending.

The Government of Canada will spend $53 billion this year on social programs. At the same time, related tax expenditures such as the child care expense deduction, the child tax credit and the age exemption total $3.5 billion.

The vast bulk of these expenditures goes to finance four major programs:

- Approximately $12 billion is for unemployment insurance benefits and employment initiatives;
- $13 billion goes to income security for the elderly;
- $2.5 billion is for family allowances; and

[Translation]

- $12.6 billion in cash is transferred to the provinces for health, education and welfare. The total contribution, which also includes tax transfers, is about $20 billion.

[English]

In November 1984, the Government announced its intention to reform social programs based on the twin tests of social and fiscal responsibility.

Since that time, we have taken a number of actions:

- We reformed family benefits in a way that maintains the principle of universal access, targets more resources to those most in need and frees up savings for other priorities.
- We restrained the rate of growth of transfer payments to the provinces for health care and post-secondary education.
- We provided supplementary equalization payments for all six equalization-receiving provinces in 1985-86 and for Manitoba in 1986-87.

[Translation]

- We appointed a commission to examine the unemployment insurance system and will be receiving its report this Fall.

[English]

- We extended support to widows and widowers, aged 60-64, who are in need.

We are especially proud of the steps we have taken to improve pensions for Canadians, through the most significant reform of pension arrangements undertaken in years. The pension debate dragged on for a decade. This Government has delivered results.

We have introduced legislation to ensure for the first time that workers can take their pensions with them when they change jobs, that they can retire early if they wish and that surviving spouses will be provided for. We are making it possible for many regular part-time workers to join pension plans.

We have concluded a vitally important agreement with the provinces on the Canada Pension Plan. As a result, the financing of the CPP will be put on a sound financial basis and its benefits expanded to meet changing needs.

We are also moving to achieve parity in tax assistance for retirement saving between employees and the self-employed, many of whom are owners of small businesses. I will be releasing draft legislation on registered retirement savings plan limits and related issues within weeks.

In this budget, I am proposing new measures to give retired Canadians who have RRSPs more flexibility in the investment management and withdrawal of their retirement savings.

Over the coming months the government will continue to improve the structure of key social programs. We will consider the recommendations of the Forget commission on unemployment insurance. We are examining the recommendations of the Macdonald commission. In my next budget, I intend to propose further measures to reform our system of social expenditures and related tax provisions. Such measures must respect several basic principles. They must maintain universal access. They must direct more resources to those most in need. They must improve the opportunities for individuals to become self-reliant. And they must reduce the after-tax value of benefits going to higher-income Canadians who do not need assistance.

Some have called for major cuts in social assistance. This Government is not prepared to dismantle social programs. The best ways to reduce the cost of social measures are to make sure that spending and tax assistance are targeted effectively and to reduce the need for such support – by keeping the economy growing and creating jobs so that greater opportunities are provided to those Canadians now in need.

Improving the Tax System

A continuing priority of this Government is to improve the tax system. Improvements are necessary to spread the tax burden more equitably, to ensure that incentives are effective and to protect Government revenues.

Since November 1984, the Government has taken steps to protect the integrity of the personal and corporate tax systems.

- We ended the abuse of the scientific research tax credit.
- We eliminated tax shelters based on investments in yachts, recreational vehicles and similar properties.
- We halted income-splitting through interest-free loans between family members.
- We stopped the so-called "carve-out" transactions in the oil and gas sector.

[Translation]

- We prevented the use of trusts to distribute investment income tax-free.

[English]

- We terminated the use of partnerships in corporate takeovers to increase tax deductions.
- We tightened foreign property investment rules to prevent abuse.

We are also implementing a minimum tax of 25 per cent to ensure that high-income Canadians pay their fair share of tax.

Last May, I issued a discussion paper entitled "The Corporate Tax System: A Direction for Change". The thrust of that proposal was to reduce selective tax preferences and move to broader-based incentives through lower tax rates.

Today, I am implementing the first phase of this restructuring. The following measures will enhance economic performance, provide incentives based on results and contribute to deficit reduction.

- The 3-per-cent inventory allowance will be eliminated effective today.
- The general investment tax credit will be phased out starting next year.
- The 20-per-cent investment tax credit will remain to encourage investment in Atlantic Canada and the Gaspé Peninsula. This credit will be extended to include investments in adjacent offshore areas.
- The Cape Breton investment tax credit will remain at 60 per cent and will be improved. Smaller investments will qualify and the rate of refundability will be increased, as recommended by the Cape Breton Advisory Committee.
- The special investment tax credit for manufacturing investments in designated areas will be extended past its termination date at the end of this year at a reduced rate of 40 per cent.
- Corporate tax rates will be reduced over a three-year period beginning July 1, 1987. By 1989, the basic federal corporate rate will have been reduced from 36 per cent to 33 per cent of taxable income.
- Manufacturing companies will continue to have a lower tax rate, falling from 30 per cent to 26 per cent by 1989.
- The federal tax rate for small business will fall from 15 per cent to 13 per cent.

• (1710)

The effect of all these measures will be to generate an additional $765 million of net revenue during the period of transition to 1988-89. As a result of these changes, there will be an increase in the number of profitable corporations that pay tax.

These actions are the first phase of corporate tax reform. I will release a new discussion paper later this year. It will propose further reductions in tax preferences and further tax rate reductions, consistent with the principles set out in the May 1985 budget paper.

As well, I am proposing a number of other changes to corporate and personal income taxes to tighten the system and to prevent erosion of the tax base.

- New at-risk rules for limited partnerships will be introduced. These rules will restrict limited partners' claims to tax credits and business losses to the amount of their investment that is actually at risk. The new rules will cut back tax-motivated arrangements that can lead to high-income individuals and profitable corporations significantly reducing their taxes.

- New provisions governing salary deferral arrangements will be introduced to ensure that tax cannot be unduly deferred by delaying the receipt of compensation.
- The ability to defer taxes by claiming deductions for unpaid remuneration will also be limited.
- The married exemption claimed for a spouse will be based on the spouse's income for the whole year, rather than from the date of marriage.
- Measures will be introduced to ensure reporting of treasury bill income. I will be announcing, within the next few weeks, proposals to simplify the interest accrual rules.

I am also proposing important changes in the tax treatment of dividends. The dividend tax credit will be reduced from one-half to one-third of the cash dividends received by individuals from tax-paying Canadian companies. As a parallel measure, the 12 1/2-per-cent dividend distributions tax for small business will be repealed. This will permit a major simplification of the tax system for small business. It will also preserve the integration of the corporate and personal taxes on income earned by small business corporations. These changes will be effective January 1, 1987.

The lower dividend tax credit will continue to provide a significant incentive for investment by Canadians in Canadian dividend-paying companies, but it will now ensure that more high-income individuals will pay regular tax on dividend income. Accordingly, I am also proposing that, effective this year, the taxation of dividends from taxable Canadian corporations under the minimum tax be based on the actual amount of cash dividends received.

[Translation]

Turning the Deficit Corner

To this point I have described the Government's expenditure control record and our plans to reduce government spending further. I have outlined our plans to bring forward proposals for comprehensive changes to social transfers and related tax provisions. I have proposed the first phase of corporate tax reform and eliminated or reduced a number of tax preferences.

[English]

These actions imply great change. Federal spending on programs as a share of the economy will be cut back to the level at the beginning of the 1960s – prior to the "fly now, pay later" regime of more recent years. But these measures in themselves are not enough to overcome our fiscal problem. Spending cuts alone cannot bring about fiscal stability by the end of the decade.

Budgetary Expenditures as a Percentage of GNP, 1961-62 to 1990-91

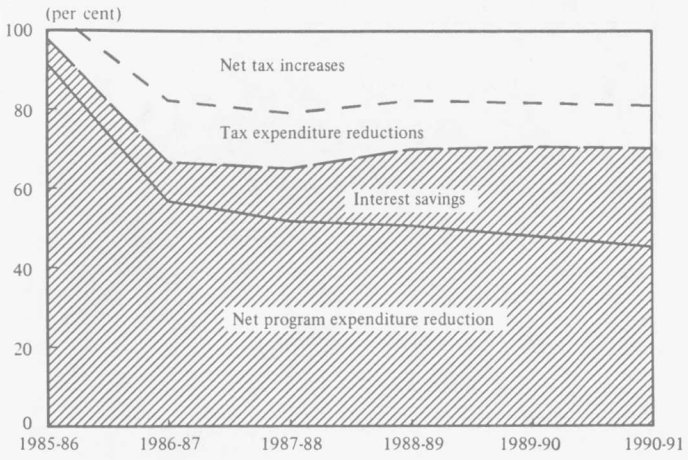
To accomplish that goal, we must start paying the full cost of present Government programs and a share of the interest burden built up over past years.



I am therefore announcing the following tax increases:

- A 3-per-cent surtax will be imposed on federal personal income taxes commencing July 1, 1986. The existing personal surtax will expire as scheduled.
- The current surtax on large corporations expires at the end of 1986. It will be replaced by a 3-per-cent surtax on all corporations effective January 1, 1987.
- The rates of federal sales tax will be increased by 1 percentage point effective April 1 this year. I will be announcing in a few minutes details of an innovative measure which will make the effect of the federal sales tax more progressive by providing important benefits for low-income Canadians.
- Finally, excise taxes and duties on alcohol and tobacco will be raised by 4 per cent and 6 per cent respectively, effective midnight tonight.

The net effect of all the tax measures I am announcing today will be to raise $1.5 billion in 1986-87 and $2.4 billion the following year.

These tax increases will make greater demands on Canadians. But they also put the size of our debt problem into clearer focus. In recent years our annual deficit has exceeded $30 billion. Every year the deficit remains near $30 billion another $3 billion of interest charges is added to the next year's spending. These tax increases help us hold the line. But they are only part of a comprehensive debt control program, 70 per cent of which will be achieved through expenditure reductions.

Sources of Deficit Reduction

Let me now address the question of federal sales tax reform. Like the debate on pensions, discussions on a better sales tax system have been going on for a long time. The problems with the current system are well known. It results in serious inequities among competing business firms. It puts Canadian manufacturers at a competitive disadvantage relative to importers. It results in hidden taxes on exports. Canada is now the only industrialized country in the world that still imposes a sales tax at the manufacturers' level.

[Translation]

It is time to act on this issue, to bring our sales tax system into line with today's realities.

[English]

My officials have for some months been examining the value-added tax. They are also looking at alternative systems, including a business transfer tax, which involve less administrative complexity and paper burden.

I expect to complete a review of the options in the very near future and put forward a paper with a concrete proposal for public discussion at an early date. Our intention is to move to a new system that will encourage growth, improve equity, and yield revenues sufficient to replace the federal sales tax, to end the surtaxes I have announced today and to provide adequate offsets for low-income Canadians.

I have already reported on the fiscal impact of the measures in this budget. The budget also implements revisions to the Government's accounting practices in response to recommendations made by the Auditor General. Details are provided in the Fiscal Plan tabled with the budget. I recommend this document to Honourable Members and all others who wish to have full details on the Government's fiscal situation.

On the revised accounting basis, the deficit next year will be $29.5 billion, a reduction of 14 per cent from this year. Financial requirements next year will fall to $22.6 billion, a decline of 22 per cent from this year's level. By the end of the decade, with moderate economic growth averaging 2 3/4 per cent per year, financial requirements will fall to $11 billion.

Reinforcing Priorities

This government has acted to restore fiscal responsibility in Canada. In many cases, we are going to spend less. In every case, we are spending smarter and making better use of scarce resources. In some cases, we must spend more, to help those in need today and to help build the foundation for a better future. In a careful and effective manner, we intend to reinforce our basic priorities.

● (1720)

Helping Those in Need Today

The plight of low-income Canadians is of major concern to this Government.

[Translation]

Last May we increased the child tax credit to provide greater assistance to low-income families.

[English]

Until now, our poorest families have had to wait until they receive their income tax refund to receive the credit. This has led to many of them seeking the services of tax discounters. To provide more timely assistance to low-income families and to reduce the need for tax discounting, the Government is proposing to advance payment of the child tax credit. A prepayment of $300 per child will be paid in November 1986 to families whose income in 1985 was $15,000 or less. Almost one million families will benefit from this measure.

I am also announcing a fundamental innovation to the income tax system to benefit low-income Canadians, many of whom are elderly. Commencing this year, the Government will provide a refundable sales tax credit of $50 per adult and $25 per child, for families and individuals with incomes below $15,000. About four million families and individuals will benefit from this measure. This progressive measure represents a major expansion of our refundable tax credit system and a significant improvement in our tax system.

For many months the government has been working with provincial governments to target training and employment programs to those Canadians who depend on welfare. We believe that the best assistance we can provide to such Canadians is a meaningful job. Provincial Governments share this view. As a result of our consultations the Government is committing up to $100 million a year for the next three years to a special program to help social assistance recipients find employment. These funds will be matched by the provinces.

I also propose to increase the disability deduction by $250, effective this year. This will provide increased support to 185,000 disabled Canadians.

There is another group in society which is now suffering particularly hard times and which needs our help.

Our farmers are caught in a vicious squeeze of low prices and rising costs. Many are facing an intolerable debt burden. This is not just an economic problem – it is a social problem that must be addressed. Accordingly, to preserve a viable farm sector, the Government is adopting a new Farm Financial Assistance Policy.

The Government will increase resources to the Farm Credit Corporation over the next two years. The Corporation will establish a new financial instrument to be known as a commodity-based mortgage. For those farmers with substantial debt problems, but with reasonable long-term prospects, this mortgage will be available at a basic interest rate of 6 per cent. The principal of these loans will be linked to farm commodity prices. The loans will offer eligible farmers long-term, stable financing at a cost related to their revenues.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) will introduce legislation to establish Farm Debt Review Panels to provide advice and assistance in restructuring farmers' debt.

We will also take measures to ease the transition of farmers who must seek alternative employment. A new program will offer such farmers job counselling, retraining and interim financial assistance.

These measures represent an additional financial commitment to Canadian farmers of $65 million this year and $130 million next year.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) will also be announcing measures to assist tobacco farmers to diversify into other crops.

The Government will extend the existing 3-cent-a-litre fuel tax rebate for primary producers for one year to January 1, 1988. Farmers and other primary producers are now required to keep detailed records of "on-highway" and "off-highway" fuel use in order to calculate their rebates. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) will shortly announce new guidelines to simplify the calculation so as to reduce paper burden.

[Translation]

These initiatives are designed to help those in need today. But even though resources are scarce, we believe it is equally essential to make other investments now which will lay the foundation for future growth and jobs.

Investing in the Future

Trade

A major area is trade.

This Government has invited the Government of the United States to enter into negotiations toward a more secure and enhanced bilateral trade relationship. Similarly, preparations are under way for Canada's active participation in the next round of multilateral trade negotiations to commence this Fall. I am strongly encouraged by the positive response of Canadian business and industry to the trade challenge this Government has initiated. This response shows that Canadians do not shrink from fair competition. Canadians realize that trade gains lead to job gains. Today more than three million jobs are linked to our export performance.

I cannot overstate the importance to Canada of ensuring that foreign markets remain open to Canadian exports and that Canadian companies take maximum advantage of markets abroad. Exports of goods and services account for close to 30 per cent of Canada's gross national product. We must also ensure that the Canadian market remains open and that Canadian companies are prepared to meet import competition.

To do that, it is important to ensure a fiscal environment that allows lower and more stable interest rates and a tax system that promotes competitiveness and efficiency.

[Translation]

Our deficit reduction plan and proposed tax changes will support our trade initiatives.

[English]

The reform of the corporate income tax proposed in this budget will reinforce our trade initiatives by encouraging businesses to pursue profitable opportunities on the basis of economic factors as opposed to tax considerations. Sales tax reform will remove the biases in the current tax that hinder the efforts of domestic producers to compete at home and abroad.

This budget demonstrates that our fiscal problem is now in hand. Tax reforms will be implemented over time. Similarly, trade negotiations take time and their results will be implemented only over a number of years. By beginning to act now on these three fronts we can ensure that Canadian firms will be able to take full advantage of market opportunities in years to come.

Trade in services is becoming increasingly important. Representatives from the Canadian financial community have raised with me the prospect of attracting more international banking business to Canada by designating certain Canadian cities as international banking centres.

Some time ago, the Department of Finance commissioned a study of such centres. That study, which I propose to make public shortly, drew attention to certain drawbacks to the concept of international banking centres. It also drew attention to possible changes which could enhance the international competitiveness of our banks.

[Translation]

The Government is prepared to facilitate the establishment of international banking centres in Montreal and Vancouver. This would be consistent with our desire to broaden our trade and business interests in Europe and the Pacific Rim. I will be undertaking discussions with the banking community and provincial governments in order to pursue this objective.

[English]

Research and Development

A second priority is investment in knowledge.

The crucial importance of knowledge to Canada's future requires a new partnership between the private and public sectors. The federal Government plays a major role in supporting university-based research and the development of highly qualified personnel in Canada. One channel for this support is through the operations of the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, the Medical Research Council and the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council. The Government proposes to provide a secure funding base for these councils by adding $300 million over the balance of the decade.

We are also prepared to increase this base funding up to 6 per cent by matching, dollar-for-dollar, private sector contributions to the councils. This could provide an additional $700 million over the next five years. But the partnership created between the private sector and university researchers is just as important as the dollars. Contacts between the business and academic communities would be improved.

[Translation]

And Canada would benefit from the more vigorous and co-ordinated application of scientific knowledge to our industrial needs.

[English]

Training and Adjustment

Continued economic growth also requires investment in training so that workers can adjust to new conditions and take advantage of new opportunities.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is implementing the new Canadian Jobs Strategy in co-operation with the provinces and industry. This innovative and successful approach combines training and job creation to help workers adapt to a fast-changing labour market. Programs are targeted at building the skills necessary to help young people obtain a first job and to assist women re-entering the labour market. This budget allocates $800 million to the Canadian Jobs Strategy in 1987-88.

The position of older workers deserves special consideration. I am announcing federal funding of up to $125 million over a four-year period to finance a new Program for Older Worker Adjustment. This program will assist older workers who lose their jobs and who have no immediate prospects for re-employment. The Minister of Labour is developing this initiative in co-operation with the provinces and the private sector.

Small Business

Small business is the most important source of jobs in Canada today. This government has done much to support small business.

In my first budget I brought forward a number of measures to encourage investment in small business by individuals and by pension funds.

[Translation]

I provided tax incentives for investments in labour-sponsored venture capital funds. I extended the small business bond program and increased the value of the refundable tax credit for small firms carrying out research and development. I introduced a lifetime capital gains exemption to encourage enterprise and risk-taking by rewarding successful investment in Canada's future. We will continue that support.

[English]

Several measures in this budget reinforce our support for small business. Specifically:

- The tax rate on small business income will be reduced from 15 per cent to 13 per cent, beginning July 1, 1987. The tax rate on small business manufacturing income will be reduced from 10 per cent to 8 per cent.
- The 12 1/2-per-cent dividend distributions tax will be repealed.
- Tax rules providing deductions for allowable business investment losses will be broadened.

In the May budget I announced measures to allow pension funds to invest in small business ventures. Draft rules were made public for comment last November. The final rules to implement these changes will be available shortly and will respond to many constructive comments that have been made during the consultations.

The government also proposes to more than double the amount of guaranteed loans available under the Small Business Loans Act. This will raise the ceiling to $2.5 billion and allow small businesses even greater access to the financing they need to grow and create jobs.

Atlantic Enterprise Program

As I reported earlier, economic conditions have improved substantially in Canada. Nevertheless, certain regions of the country are continuing to experience longer-term structural economic difficulties. This is particularly true of the Atlantic region. To enhance the rate of private sector job creation in the Atlantic and Gaspé regions, I am announcing a major new initiative, the Atlantic Enterprise Program.

Under this program, private sector lenders will be encouraged to make loans for business start-up or expansion. Up to $1 billion of these loans will be guaranteed to a substantial extent by the Government of Canada. The Atlantic Enterprise Program will also provide access to lower cost financing through interest rate buy-downs. This program is another example of how the Government, working together with the private sector, can spend smarter. Together we will generate significant financial assistance so that Atlantic Canada can share in our national prosperity. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) will be announcing the details of this program shortly.

Northern Development and Indian Affairs

The Government will bring forward measures which promote northern development and encourage the economic self-reliance of our native peoples.

- A new, permanent system of tax benefits for housing and travel will apply to residents of the north and isolated posts, effective January 1, 1987. This will achieve equity between employees and the self-employed.

- In recognition of the vast distances involved in northern travel, the budget proposes a $50 ceiling on the air transportation tax on domestic flights, offset by a one percentage point increase in rates.

• (1740)

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) will introduce amendments to the Indian Act which will allow bands to levy municipal-type taxes on Indian lands.

In addition, the Indian Remission Order which relieves tax on certain employment income will be extended for the 1986 taxation year.

I am also announcing that for 1986-87, the Government will allocate up to $40 million to extend the Indian Community Human Resource Strategies program into a second year.

Building a Sense of Community

These initiatives – in trade, technology, training and economic development – are designed to promote growth. But nations are not held together by dollars and cents. Nations are held together by intangibles – by shared values and experiences.

One of these values is public service through private initiative.

No Canadians share more than those in the voluntary sector. Volunteers have not only built a sense of community in Canada; they have built bridges to people in less fortunate lands.

The Government wants to encourage this sense of participation. We are continuing to examine a number of measures to encourage charitable donations and will work with the voluntary sector to find an appropriate and effective solution.

The Government also desires to help foster the arts. I am pleased to announce the allocation of an additional $75 million per year beginning in 1986-87 to fund a number of specific cultural initiatives. These will benefit people whose creativity finds expression in the motion picture and book publishing industries, in the performing arts and in the music and recording industries. The Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) will be announcing the specifics of these initiatives.

Budget Process

I would like to say a few words about the budget process. The May budget made proposals to improve the process. This budget is being presented in February in line with my proposal for a regular budget date. A parliamentary committee has examined the budget process and made useful suggestions. I will be responding to their report in detail in due course. This Government has also enhanced the role of parliamentary committees in examining tax and budget matters and has increased consultation. All concerned share the view that legislation arising from budgets should be available as soon as possible and be passed into law within a reasonable period of time. I will be bringing forward legislation arising from this budget expeditiously. The first item of legislation will be the Bill seeking $22.6 billion of borrowing authority for 1986-87. This amount corresponds to the financial requirements forecast for next year.

In this budget I have referred to a number of areas that form an important part of the Government's agenda for future budgets. Proposals will be developed to improve social expenditures and related tax provisions, to pursue the further restructuring of the corporate income tax and to reform the sales tax. I look forward, as these proposals are presented, to receiving comment on them from parliamentary committees and other interested Canadians.

I am tabling Notices of Ways and Means Motions covering tax and tariff measures.

Mr. Speaker, discussions among House Leaders have taken place and, further to the order adopted by the House on February 24, I understand that immediately following my remarks the House shall revert to Introduction of Bills in order to introduce the Bill outlining the Government's borrowing requirements for 1986-1987.

Economic Outlook

Let me turn now to the economic outlook for Canada.

[Translation]

The actions we have taken and the actions we are taking in this budget provide a basis for sustained growth over the balance of the decade.

[English]

I am projecting real growth of 3.7 per cent for 1986, one of the highest rates of growth among the industrialized countries. In 1987, the economy is expected to grow by a further 3 per cent – the fifth consecutive year of sustained growth. Inflation will remain steady around 4 per cent.

[Translation]

And the Canadian economy will continue to create jobs at a substantial rate. Because of strong labour force growth, progress in reducing the unemployment rate will be steady but less dramatic.

[English]

By the end of this year I anticipate an unemployment rate of about 9.6 per cent, falling to 9.0 per cent by the end of 1987.

Conclusion

This Government has demonstrated its resolve to restore fiscal responsibility to Canada.

We are doing this in a way that is consistent with the commitment we made to Canadians in November of 1984. Our objective, then and now, is to solve the problems of the past in order to create jobs today and into the future.

We are reducing the crushing burden of interest payments that has accompanied a decade of uncontrolled growth in our debt. Just as Canadians seek to pay down their personal debt to use the savings for better things, we are doing the same in government, creating room to respond to the nation's needs.

Cutting the deficit is not an end in itself. It is the means to an end. It is the means to achieve lower interest rates, higher growth and more jobs.

[Translation]

The actions we have taken reflect the priorities we set out in November 1984 and acted on in May 1985:

- to release the creative spirit of individuals from the heavy hand of Government;

[English]

- to enhance our capacity to compete by promoting trade, investment and technology;
- to play a constructive role in the global community;
- to assist individuals to adjust to a changing world;
- to help Canadians who need assistance.

This is what we promised. This is what we are delivering. We will continue to act with consistency and determination. Canadians can look to the future with confidence.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I must say I am deeply disappointed in the Budget brought down by our colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1750)

[English]

Mr. Johnston: You may recall that there is some consistency here. I was profoundly disappointed last May. The consistency is that I, and I am sure most Canadians, are profoundly disappointed today.

In spite of all the rhetoric, when one looks at these budgetary documents, which we have had a few hours to study, we see a $4 billion increase in Government expenditures for each of the next three years. Let us not play games. Let us tell the people of Canada what in fact is taking place.

Indeed, we expected some sensible cuts. There are some cuts which are not sensible and I will expand on that in a moment.

Perhaps there are some reasonable tax increases, but why not some solid tax reform instead of more tinkering at the edges? We have seen the great tinkerer at work once again. Why not—

[Translation]

—Mr. Speaker, why didn't the Minister take this opportunity to repair the terrible damage done by last year's Budget, including the capital gains tax exemption?

[English]

In fact, the reality, as we all know, is that the Budget has been driven by one consideration—to get the deficit below $30 billion. The figure of $29.5 billion was the magic number.

How did the Minister get there? Again, by massive increases. Last year we had one of the largest increases in taxation in Canadian history. Now, the Minister has compounded his felony by again heaping taxes on innocent Canadian taxpayers, including sales taxes, commodity taxes, regressive taxes which affect those who can least afford to pay taxes.

Indeed, I would call this a cowardly Budget. It takes no imagination to reduce the deficit by levying taxes on Canadians.

When I was sitting in the lock-up, an image sprung into my mind that I would like to share with the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: I thought of the Wizard of Oz and the Cowardly Lion; the roar that: "This will be a tough Budget". Now we know on whom it is tough. The Cowardly Lion did not have the courage to take on the kind of tax reform and issues which this country must address. Sitting next to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) I saw the Tin Man, heartless, wielding his hatchet on $1.5 billion from foreign aid as a result of his exercise. I need not tell you who the Wizard himself is, with lights and bells and smoke and booming voice.

Elsewhere, in terms of job strategy, what do we see? In 1987-88 there will be an addition of $800 million.

Miss MacDonald: Hear, hear! You bet.

Mr. Johnston: Do we hear from the Wicked Witch of the West, Mr. Speaker?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Things may be described in certain ways, but people cannot.

Mr. Johnston: I understand, Mr. Speaker, but it was an image.

The fact is that there is $900 million in that program for the next two years. Therefore, what is presented as an $800 million increase is in fact a $100 million decrease.

Miss MacDonald: No, it is not.

Mr. Johnston: I understand that one must be parliamentary so I will not refer to the Scarecrow and his particular problem.

The taxpayers are the innocent victims. They are the ones who have been heavily mugged on the Yellow Brick Road. They have been told by the Minister of Finance, without even blushing, that 70 per cent of the decrease in the deficit will come from cuts and 30 per cent from tax increases. I suggest the Minister of Finance will have to twist himself into an unprecedented human pretzel to explain that to us in the House of Commons.

When I look at this document in terms of cuts, I see that in 1986-87, of $883 million in cuts, $500 million comes from the special reductions in non-statutory spending. These are subjective numbers that will be left in the hands of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret).

Reserves are necessary but we see reserve reductions by $200 million. We are left with $183 million of hard cuts, of which $83 million comes from Canada's foreign aid programs. I would think that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) would blush at that, a cut of $1.5 billion over the next three years. Of course, the people in those countries who so desperately need that money do not vote here in Canadian elections, but they have surrogate voters through the conscience of Canadians.

I did some rough calculations. I will not go on at length because I know that I will continue the debate tomorrow, but when one looks at what happened last May—

[Translation]

And if people are shocked at what is being done here today . . . it is truly incredible. For instance, we see that sales taxes and similar levies will raise nearly $6 billion by 1990-1991. This is incredible, Mr. Speaker!

[English]

What did it tell us? It told Canadians not to worry, but to try to get by. The Government will give each Canadian a $50 tax credit against sales tax and $25 for each of their children. This means that in 1990-91, rather than paying $5.9 billion in additional commodity taxes it will be some $5.6 billion.

People are to get an accelerated payment on their child tax credit. Imagine that great benefit. I am not sure if the Minister received a standing ovation for that but it means that the amount will be moved back from April to November of the preceding year. That is a generous contribution to those Canadians who are suffering under this avalanche of taxes.

[Translation]

As far as my comments are concerned, I do think, Mr. Speaker, that I have given you some idea why we are disappointed . . . why we are deeply disappointed. I hope to be able to pursue this debate tomorrow. I intend to give these documents a thorough going-over this evening, and perhaps I will be able to say something good about them, but at the moment, I must say there isn't much. All I see is an avalanche of taxes. I am disappointed, and I move:

That the debate be now adjourned.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

The House adjourned at 5.59 p.m.

VACANCY

SAINT-MAURICE—HON. JEAN CHRÉTIEN, BY RESIGNATION

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received a communication notifying me that a vacancy has occurred in the representation, namely, Jean Chrétien, Esq., Member for the electoral district of Saint-Maurice, by resignation. Accordingly I have addressed my warrant to the Chief Electoral Officer for the issue of a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

[English]

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate you allowing me the opportunity to say a few words. This morning at five after ten Mr. Chrétien arrived in my office with a letter of resignation as the Member of Parliament for Saint-Maurice and told me that he was going to see you immediately thereafter. I said to the Hon. Member that it was a shock, that the country needed him, that certainly the Liberal Party needed him, and that I did as well in personal terms. I asked him if there was any way we could reopen the question and try to resolve matters to his satisfaction. He said that after 23 years as a Member of Parliament he felt he had made his contribution to this House and to the country, and that now he wanted to place his family first and seek other opportunities.

It became clear that despite my attempt to persuade him differently his course of action had been set, Your Honour. I understand he did see you and presented his resignation to the House.

[Translation]

I must say that Jean Chrétien is a great Canadian, who served his country for twenty-three years as a Member of this House, and who served his constituents in the district of Saint-Maurice, with distinction, tremendous flair and limitless dedication. In the course of his career he has held some very important positions. It would take too long to summarize Jean Chrétien's entire career, but two events stand out, and especially his efforts during the Quebec Referendum. Under the leadership of Mr. Trudeau, Jean Chrétien marshalled the forces of the federal wing of the party to work together with Mr. Ryan and others, and to represent and lead the federalist forces in Quebec, and he did so very successfully. This country and the province of Quebec will never forget Jean Chrétien's efforts in this respect.

During the negotiations for patriating our Constitution and enshrining the Charter of Rights and Freedom in that Constitution, Jean Chrétien, as Minister of Justice, played a key role. So there was the Referendum, our Constitution, the first Francophone to be appointed by the then Prime Minister to the position of Minister of Finance, and a superb Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development who was very proud of the fact he had inaugurated more national parks than any other minister: all this adds up to an unparallelled career and a unique Member of this House. We will miss Jean Chrétien in the House of Commons, and I am sure that my opinion is shared by all.

I wish Mr. Chrétien and his family, as I have already said privately, the very best. He deserves the gratitude of all his fellow Canadians, and I hope that Jean Chrétien, his wife Aline, and the whole family—he became a grandfather for the third time yesterday—I wish him the best of luck. His name, presence and personality will never be forgotten in this House.

• (1110)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate my hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) on the warmth and sincerity with which he spoke of a great Quebecer and a great Canadian. Jean Chrétien has resigned. He was a brave and dedicated Member who served Canadians and his constituents with energy and dignity. This extremely likeable man has made an unforgettable impression on all Canadians.

As a Quebecer, I remember more specifically his steadfast and courageous leadership during the Referendum campaign, since I worked for him at the time. He showed great leadership and generosity towards all his collaborators, and he showed understanding for the position of his opponents.

[English]

He was—I should not speak of Jean in the past tense—he is gone, but only from this House. As a Member of Parliament and a colleague, he was witty and compassionate. He was partisan and caring. He loves Quebec and believes very deeply in Canada and has a unique and thoughtful way of expressing that.

I still have some of the scars to prove his effectiveness. There were moments in Central Nova when I doubted whether I would ever see this House. Jean Chrétien would arrive in New Glasgow, Pictou or Stellarton and create, as he did, a very favourable impression, which dismayed me at the time but which I salute today. So we in the House say goodbye to Jean Chrétien and his wife and family with our affectionate good wishes.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to join with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) in expressing my regret and, I must say, surprise, at Jean Chrétien's decision to leave the House of Commons to embark on whatever career he has decided upon. I do not believe there is anyone in the country who would deny that in the 23 years he has been here he has served with dynamism, honesty and courage. He stood up for everything he believed in all of the time.

One never had to doubt where one stood with Jean Chrétien. He made it quite clear when he agreed with you that he agreed with you vigorously, and when he opposed you that he opposed you vigorously. He has left a lasting impression on all Hon. Members of the House of Commons who were here during his 23 years.

He seems to me to be a man who will always place the people of Canada first in his efforts, both on behalf of Canadian federalism and on behalf of Canadian independence. He left a mark not only with those of us who were here to watch him, alongside others, fight the battle, but he also left us a legacy and I believe the majority of Canadians would agree that they owe him a debt of gratitude.

He was always available to new Members of Parliament. When I first came to the House of Commons Jean Chrétien was on the Government side. He was the first one who came to welcome me to the House of Commons. It was Jean Chrétien who invited me, as a newly elected Member of Parliament, using himself as an example, to attempt to learn some of the other official language in order that I could play a more meaningful role. I am personally grateful to him for that kind of understanding. He has a sense of humour which allows for an easing of tensions when tensions grow up. He was always able to find a funny way of putting something which ensured there would not be a lasting breach develop between Hon. Members when they had disagreements.

I hope that Jean Chrétien's departure from politics is a temporary departure. I hope he will at some point return to politics in one way or another and will continue to serve the public of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I have received notice that there are two Hon. Members who want to make comments. I will allow them both to do so briefly and then we will go on to Routine Proceedings.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the Quebec Caucus and an old friend of Jean Chrétien, I would like to pay tribute to his tireless dedication to the work he did in this House.

As a person, a Member, and a Liberal, Jean Chrétien has always seen Canadian unity as one of his greatest concerns, but he was also a Francophone Quebecer, a French Canadian who wanted to project and demonstrate his pride in that fact, and often, when talking to his Quebec colleagues and the people of Quebec generally, he gave himself as an example of a unilingual Francophone who managed to make his mark at the national level and at the same time served the interests of his constituency and his province, and served them well.

On behalf of my colleagues, and especially the Liberal Members from Quebec, I want to thank him for what he did, and I also wish to thank him on behalf of all Canadians. I wish him the best of luck in his new career in the private sector, and I want to remind him that... well, Jean Chrétien and I started together in politics in the fifties at the Laval University Liberal Club. So we have many memories of battles against Maurice Duplessis and subsequent election campaigns.

I realize that his decision was not an easy one, since at one time I myself had to make that decision. I know it is not easy, and I want to thank him for everything he has done for Quebec and for Canada and wish him the best of luck in his new career.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to say that I am losing a personal friend, and I want that to be clear. He has generously and passionately served his country, his province, his constituency and, certainly, his Party.

It is unfortunate that political life be such that Jean came to the conclusion that he would tender his resignation to you this morning.

I got to know Jean at university, one of the Liberal students during the years from 1953 to 1960, and we have always been very close friends.

His departure will create a vacuum in the Commons, the Liberal Party is losing a dedicated worker in the House and, I repeat, I will miss him very much in Parliament.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1986-87

A message from Her Excellency the Governor General transmitting Estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1987, was presented by the Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

• (1120)

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hope that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) will assure us that he will not leave for his press conference until the opposition spokespeople have had time to make—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Statements by Ministers.

[Translation]

EXPLANATORY STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT OF THE TREASURY BOARD

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, today I am pleased to table the Main Estimates for the fiscal year 1986-87 which amount to $107 billion, an increase of 4.4 per cent over the 1985-86 Main Estimates.

With the additional $500 million expenditure cut-back announced yesterday by my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), which is not included in these estimates, the growth rate decreases to 3.9 per cent, the lowest rate recorded for the estimates in 24 years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

Mr. de Cotret: Of the total Main Estimates roughly two-thirds, or $69.5 billion, represents expenditures made in accordance with existing legislation, while the remaining $37.5 billion represents expenditures which Parliament is being asked to vote or authorize. It is this $37.5 billion over which the Government has the most direct control in the short and medium term and which most clearly indicates that the Government is determined to cut costs.

I am pleased to announce that for the second year in a row the rate of growth in these expenditures is virtually zero.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret: Taking into account the $500 million reduction, this growth rate is two-tenths of 1 per cent, the same as last year. Obviously, in real terms, once adjusted for inflation, this represents a reduction of roughly 4 per cent in these expenditures. This is the first time since the immediate post-Korean War period that such a low rate of growth in the Government's operating expenditures has been achieved two years in a row.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret: This very modest growth rate stands in sharp contrast to what this country has seen in the past. Indeed, over the period 1970 to 1984 the average annual growth rate in the voted portion of the Main Estimates well exceeded 10 per cent. In fiscal year 1975-76 it even reached a high of 36.8 per cent. It was no coincidence that such a situation prompted the then Auditor General to declare in his report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1976, that:

—Parliament—and indeed the Government—has lost or is close to losing, effective control of the public purse.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have already referred to the low growth rate of the annual estimates, and I should emphasize that it has been achieved in spite of significant increases in expenditures for national defence and external aid to meet our international commitments. If we take the $500 million reduction into account, expenditures in all other operational sectors decline by 4.2 per cent on average, and this is in addition to last year's 2 per cent decrease.

This Government is intent on slashing expenditures, but in a reasonable manner. Last year when the Main Estimates were tabled we were forecasting total expenditures of $105 billion for 1985-86, including supplementary estimates. Although it had to cope with a number of major and unforeseen outlays, the Government now expects real expenditures of less than $104 billion for 1985-86. In fact, never since 1979-80 have total expenditures fallen below forecast levels, as they will this year.

[English]

This achievement was made possible as a result of a series of major undertakings over the past 18 months on a number of fronts, all designed to fulfil the Government's goal of managing the public sector more efficiently and more effectively, of doing more with less. All of this without reducing the high quality of our services to the public. More specifically, these low growth Main Estimates result from the tough measures we have undertaken to reduce government spending. During this time the Government has: first, streamlined or eliminated a number of costly or outdated programs, such as the Canada Oil Substitution Program, reduced business subsidies provided through DRIE and phased out Canagrex. Second, we have reduced business subsidies to many Crown corporations and privatized others. Third, we have eliminated the provision for inflation in Government operating budgets. Fourth, we have developed new cash management policies to reduce borrowing. Fifth, we have improved the management and control of Crown real estate. Finally, we have eliminated a five-year program to reduce the size and cost of the Public Service.

On this last point, the Estimates I tabled today show a reduction of some 5,500 person-years, or 2.1 per cent from the previous year for the year to come. This alone will save $150 million in 1986-87. By 1990 the reduction will total, as has been mentioned previously, 15,000 person-years. The accumulated savings to taxpayers will be $1.5 billion. The recurring annual savings will be approximately $500 million.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret: As I have mentioned on previous occasions, every effort is being made to minimize the effect on employees and lay-offs, if any, will be kept to a minimum.

[Translation]

Over-all, the measures taken so far will make it possible to reduce projected expenditures or to earn non-tax revenues of about $6 billion in 1985-86 and $8 billion in 1986-87, as compared with the projected expenditures when the Government took office. I might add that such measures were taken after due consideration and that everything has been done to properly define the restraint sectors.

As I just said, yesterday the Minister of Finance announced a $500 million cut-back in expenditures for 1986-87. Treasury Board officials are now advising the various departments about these lower expenditures. However these restraint measures will be flexible enough so as not to harm the health and safety sectors, public services and programs for underprivileged Canadians. This is why reductions will differ from one department to another, overaping 2 per cent of voted expenditures.

The implementation of those measures has not been easy, Mr. Speaker. The success achieved until now points to the determination of all of my colleagues and to the support of higher echelons in the Public Service. Other challenges will have to be met as the management of expenditures remains a major component of this Government's strategy for controlling the deficit.

• (1130)

[English]

We realize that we have put and are putting a heavy burden on our managers and they responded well. Yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced that this year there will be no regular annual increase in the salaries of Deputy Ministers, Assistant Deputy Ministers and equivalent political staff. For the lower levels of the management category, salary ranges will be increased by up to 2 per cent only. We felt that this measure was essential to demonstrate the seriousness of our fiscal position. I am pleased to be able to say, however, that we shall continue to reward performance in our management category.

I shall soon announce a new feature in our management compensation package, a productivity bonus, which will reward those managers and Departments that meet and exceed their expenditure reduction targets while achieving their other program and policy goals.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret: There will now be an inducement to rational economies with an appropriate reward system. It is our intention to reward excellence in management in a manner never before attempted in the federal Public Service.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. de Cotret: To conclude, Mr. Speaker, good management and reasoned reductions in expenditures over the last 18 months have given unprecedented results. This Budget shows the huge amount of success achieved by the Government in implementing its strategy. Our continuing efforts to restrain expenditures and improve management efficiency and effectiveness confirm this Government's sound leadership.

[English]

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, this will not take very long, I can assure you. I know you are going to limit me to the time the Minister took, undoubtedly. I can see why his remarks were so short. Tory times are hard times.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: What is amazing about the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is that they are somehow trying to blame and punish the Canadian people for a problem that they themselves created.

When we examine the official record, we discover that in the past 17 months, the Government has managed to contribute 23 per cent to the total public debt of this nation. That is the exact figure. The Minister of Finance on the one hand derides the previous administration and then on the other says that our payment on the debt has risen from $18 billion when the Government took over to $26 billion today. Obviously this is a Government of absolute contradictions.

A moment ago, the President of the Treasury Board said that we are now going to have a productivity bonus to pay to managers who save money for the federal Government. Although the President of the Treasury Board did not say it, I suppose this is meant for expenditures that are not fixed. However, by the same token, if they are not for those expenditures, then they will affect contractual employees and part-time help, and as well they will effect a saving to the federal treasury by having paid by the Government a bonus called a productivity bonus to save money for the Government. That in itself is absolutely and totally outrageous.

Looking at the facts again, I see that the Prime Minister's Office is still up in the high $6 million bracket for operations. I can see that spending in the Privy Council Office is up over $1 million. The Government allows that kind of extravagance but then turns around and tells Canadians that when they go to National Parks they have to go on self-guided tours because the Government can no longer afford tour guides. The Government then turns around and says it now has to pay out $900 million to provide a guarantee that was not there before for people with money in the bank. The Government then turns around and discontinues, through these Estimates, guarantees to primary producers. That is what I call a Government of total contradiction.

This Government has made more political appointments than any other administration, yet it is asking the Canadian public to approve a plan of bonus payments to civil servants who chop money for the federal treasury. In short, this is a disastrous Budget and a disastrous set of Estimates. When this sinks in, Canadians are not going to be pleased with the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Budget package and now the Estimates which have been laid before the House today seem to be designed to send a signal to financiers and bankers on Wall Street, Bay Street and in financial markets around the world. Whatever the impact may be on business circles, I suggest that they also send a signal to ordinary Canadians and average Canadian families that the Government intends to fight the deficit on the backs of the average Canadian taxpayers.

The Government is fighting the deficit in this way, and it is doing it to the extent that next year corporate tax receipts for the Government of Canada will be down by $75 million while at the same time the Government expects to collect $7 billion more in sales taxes and income taxes from individuals. That is true. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) is shaking his head, but the fact is that for high income earners the tax rate will actually come down. For corporations, the tax rate will come down. It is the little guy who is going to be paying the cost of bringing down the deficit.

In terms of spending, it is also clear that the policy of the Government is to squeeze and squeeze regardless of the impact on ordinary Canadians. I remind the Government that there are a million and a quarter Canadians out there who are still unemployed, yet it is cutting back in the area of Canada Employment commission services and will be cutting the Canadian Jobs Strategy next year from $900 million to $800 million. Also I remind the Government that there are many Canadians who live in many places in this very large and widespread country, yet $70 million is to be taken out of the subsidies for weekly newspapers, other newspapers and magazine mailings across the country. Of course this will have a very direct impact upon the ability of Canadians to communicate with each other. It is something which we have had in the country for a hundred years, and for very good reasons—because of the nature of and the distances in our country. To take it away in the interest of reducing the deficit may please Wall Street, but it will be very difficult for average Canadians.

The Government projects a decrease of $200 million in the postal deficit, not in the five years projected by the Marchment Commission but in the course of one year beginning one month and one day from today. That will mean substantial cuts in services, substantial lay-offs and substantial increases in postal costs. Once again I suggest that they are neither appropriate nor affordable in terms of the services Canadians expect from the Post Office in a country as geographically vast as Canada.

Because the Government is more interested in acting tough than realistically coming to grips with the problems, we have the Government demonstrating that it can throw gore on the floor to the bankers and the financiers, regardless of whether there are other ways by which the necessary targets could be achieved.

In Cape Breton, where last year's measures have been totally useless, the Government has decided to cut back capital spending and is to defer the reconstruction of the Prince Mine coal washing plant, another major job-creating investment in Cape Breton which has been cut by the Government. Perhaps the President of the Treasury Board is not aware that we have 20 per cent unemployed in Newfoundland, 15 per cent in New Brunswick, 13 per cent in British Columbia and 12 per cent in Quebec. However, spending on regional development is being cut once again. The economic and regional development package under the Conservatives is being cut by some $7 billion, if I understand it correctly, under the Government. It is a sign of the commitment of a Government which campaigned on the platform of jobs, jobs, jobs just 18 months or 20 months ago.

Mr. de Cotret: That is what we delivered.

Mr. Dick: Yes, 580,000 more jobs.

Mr. Cassidy: There are a million and a quarter people unemployed out there. The Budget says that the unemployment rate will stay the same. It says that there are many people who will not get jobs. If the Government considered jobs a priority, it would bring the unemployment rate down to 7 per cent, to 6 per cent or to 5 per cent, not 10 per cent. It would bring down the unemployment rate in Newfoundland, New Brunswick and British Columbia, not just in central Canada.

The Government has a policy which says that the private sector is good and the public sector is bad. Somehow Conservatives just do not like Government at all. It is a bit like 1984—public sector bad, private sector good. Therefore we are seeing privatization and public sector services being cut back. We are seeing Government being treated as a scapegoat and therefore public servants in particular being treated as if they were responsible for what is happening, rather than being the victims of Government policy.

Women in particular will be the victims of the Government's policies. This morning we asked the Deputy Secretary of the Treasury Board whether there was any policy to ensure that women would not be unduly the victims of the Public Service cut-backs. "No, we have not thought of that", he said. There have been no directives coming from the political level of Government to ensure that the proportions laid off do not contain a disproportionate number of women. The evidence from Fisheries and other Departments is that a higher proportion of women are being cut back. I call upon the President of the Treasury Board to reverse that particular policy and announce it today.

Vital services are already being cut because of the $150 million cuts in the Public Service which have already been announced. The Government is cutting the Health and Welfare library. A valuable and irreplaceable national resource will be closed. Translation services, which are essential to Government in a bilingual country, are being cut back. Customs officers who, among other things, protect the country from the influx of drugs and pornography from abroad are being cut back. Canada Employment offices which help unemployed Canadians are being cut back in terms of the services which they can provide. Now the Government is taking a further step; we are told that in addition $500 million in non-statutory areas or almost four times as much will be cut.

If the Government wanted the co-operation of public employees in making these cuts, it had ample room—and it has been demonstrated that it had ample room—to provide the job security protection which they sought and gain that co-operation. The 700 people which the President of the Treasury Board says will be cut back represent three-tenths of one per cent of the Public Service. If the pay agreement with the unions had been cut back by three-tenths of one per cent—and I am sure they would have accepted that—the money could have been found to save those 700 people from being thrust into a difficult job market. This does not only affect Ottawa, it affects the whole country. If the Government can find $500 million in the cuts announced in the Budget yesterday, it could have found the necessary sums to have kept those 700 jobs, allowing any changes in the Public Service to have taken place by attribution, not by the cuts which are now taking place.

The Government wanted to demonstrate to bankers that it could fire, that it could be tough, that it could be rough, just like back in the 1890s on the 1920s. That is what it wanted to do.

[Translation]

This is what this Government attempted to do. They wanted to show the financial community that they were a tough Government, that they were capable of laying off secretaries, clerks, messengers, women and other groups that are now being laid off because of this Government's policy. This is simply in order to make a show of their toughness, not because it is needed in terms of budget or fiscal policy.

[English]

I ask how the Public Service can work effectively with these policies from the President of the Treasury Board. People will not be prepared to co-operate if they fear that in co-operating they will in fact be jeopardizing their own jobs. The Government has not abandoned the archaic, out of date policy of exercising reverse order of merit and making arbitrary decisions in terms of who goes and who stays. Public employees who have been in office for 20 years and have worked hard are being dumped, while people working in the same office with them, having been there for five years, are being kept. That is clearly unfair, unkind, unwise and ill-advised.

Mr. de Cotret: And untrue.

Mr. Cassidy: I want to make a couple of specific proposals. In the first place we were told by the deputy secretary today that the $500 million in cuts would not include further cuts in the Public Service. I suggest that that $500 million could lead to as many as 10,000 more cuts in the Public Service. There must be a better process of monitoring than has been announced up to now. I suggest very specifically to the President of the Treasury Board that the $500 million worth of cuts should be referred to the standing committees of the House of Commons which now have the responsibility of departmental oversight under the new rules that came into force at the beginning of this week when we returned from the break. I make that suggestion quite constructively and positively to the President of the Treasury Board.

In addition, now we know that 6,151 jobs will be cut; 1,000 in Defence, 623 in Transport, 549 in Public Works, 455 in Supply and Services, 393 in National Health and Welfare, 376 in Agriculture, 374 in Indian Affairs, 296 in Energy, Mines and Resources, and so it goes. At last we have the list. We need a means of monitoring to ensure that those cuts are not being applied unfairly as is shown by the evidence right now. If those cuts have to be made, I want the President of the Treasury Board to ensure on behalf of the Government that they will in fact be monitored and surveyed by the standing committees for each Department, rather than allow arbitrary and unfair cuts to be made by Public Service managers who will be rewarded with productivity bonuses the more efficiently and the tougher they appear in making those cuts.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MESSAGE TO SENATE—REFORM OF STANDING ORDERS OF HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as well, after consultations with my colleagues opposite, I would like to seek the unanimous consent of the House to propose the following order and have the same considered and disposed of without debate. This has to do with a message to the other place with respect to changes in our Standing Orders. If I may be permitted to read it at this time, it will be self-explanatory:

That a message be sent to the Senate to inform Their Honours that this House has adopted certain amendments to the Standing Orders of the House of Commons which shall continue in force until this House adjourns on the last sitting day of this year, as follows:

1. That within ten sitting days of the return to Canada of an officially recognized interparliamentary delegation composed, in any part, of Members of the House, the head of the delegation, or a Member acting on behalf of him or her, shall present a written report to the House on the activities of the delegation.

2. That certain of the said amendments touch upon the powers, mandates, membership and other matters related to the Standing Joint Committees, so far as the House of Commons is concerned and, in particular;

(a) the Standing Joint Committees on the Library of Parliament and Printing have been deleted from the list of Standing Joint Committees and that a Standing Joint Committee on Parliament has been added to the same, and that it is suggested that the said joint committee be composed of twelve members and that its mandate include, among other matters, the review of and report on the effectiveness, management and operations together with the operational and expenditure plans of all operations under the joint administration of the two Houses and other related matters as the committee deems fit;

(b) the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments has been empowered to include in a report to the House a proposed motion which, if the report be concurred in, would become an Order of the Ministry to rescind a single specified regulation or other Statutory Instrument which the Ministry has the authority to rescind, and that such reports shall be deemed adopted on the fifteenth sitting day after a motion for concurrence in the report is placed on the Order Paper for consideration unless such a motion is previously disposed of;

(c) the mandate of the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages shall include, among other matters, the review of and report on the annual report of the Commissioner of Official Languages which is deemed, so far as the House of Commons is concerned, permanently referred to the said Committee immediately the said document is laid upon the Table;

(d) the Striking Committee of the House of Commons shall make a report, within the first ten sitting days in the year, establishing annual membership lists of the Standing Joint Committees which expire on the last sitting day in the year; and

(e) substitution of members on joint committees shall be made by the Chief Whip of recognized parties for one meeting only and twenty-four hours prior to it, that such substitutions shall be made from a list of up to five Members of the House designated by the member of the Committee, that within five sitting days of the organization of the Committee, such lists shall be filed with the Clerk of the Committee and they shall be appended to the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons on the tenth sitting day following the last organization meeting, and that any Member failing to submit such a list shall be struck from the list of members of that committee and that the Striking Committee shall replace the said Member.

That this House requests the Senate to unite with this House in order to give full effect to the above-mentioned amendments to make such amendments in the Rules of the Senate as it shall deem fit and appropriate in the circumstances, and to select, if the Senate deems it advisable, some of its Members to act on the said proposed joint committees.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the proposal of the President of the Privy Council. Is there unanimous consent for its introduction?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Wednesday, February 26, 1986, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise again this morning after having had the opportunity of offering a few preliminary comments and impressions with respect to the Budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in this House yesterday.

I might say that the Minister who is with us at present has had the courtesy to inform me that he will be leaving the Chamber. It is because of another appointment and not because of anything that I am about to say, although I suspect in his heart of hearts he would probably be in agreement with most of my statements and the conclusions at which I have arrived.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: To begin, I said last night that I would take some time between yesterday evening and this morning to examine the Budget to see what I could find in it that might be of value. Unfortunately, some of the lesser areas which will be of benefit to particular taxpayers really do not fit into my speech today, but I will comment on them in due course.

I must say over-all I can summarize my impressions of the Budget with five adjectives. First, as I said last night, I believe the Budget is cowardly. I know you corrected me yesterday, Mr. Speaker, when you said I could not refer to people as cowardly, but I am not referring to the Minister of Finance as a coward, I am referring to the Budget itself. Second, I think it is appropriate to say that the Budget is grossly unfair. Third, the Budget is deceitful in the way it was presented and crafted. The Budget could be described as short-sighted. It could also be described as unimaginative, and finally, it could be described as economically unsound.

[Translation]

This morning, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes to discuss each one of these issues: the economy, the question of equity, etc. As you know—

• (1200)

[English]

It is cowardly because instead of bringing forward the Nielsen Task Force report and examining those areas where cuts could be made—

[Translation]

Instead of cutting Government programs, the Minister has chosen to launch an attack on Canadian taxpayers. He has decided not to slash his programs, perhaps with the Prime Minister's encouragement, but first and foremost to launch an attack against taxpayers for the reason that they cannot defend themselves.

[English]

I recall, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) does because I have reminded him of it a number of times, the interview that he gave to Question

Period, I think on March 1, 1985, in the pre-Budget period. In response to a question by Mr. Terry Wills of The Gazette as to whether he would increase taxes, the Minister said that taxes are not the way to go, that there is enough room on the expenditure side. He said that on March 1. Then, as we know, in May of last year he brought in the heaviest tax bill that this country has ever witnessed in peace time.

What happened to the Minister of Finance who appeared on Question Period? With all due respect to the Minister, for whom I have high regard, I suggest that he lost his battle in Cabinet, that he lost to his colleagues and especially the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and that he was unable to bring forward the Budget which he wanted. He did not want to impose the greatest tax burden that Canadians have ever suffered.

Yesterday the Minister had the unmitigated gall to stand in the House with the Budget in front of him, which again exacerbated the tax bill, and tell the people of Canada, "the buck stops here". What a laugh. I would like to see him say that with a straight face to the average Canadian taxpayer. They know where the buck stops. The buck stops in their pocketbooks, that is where the buck stops. They wanted it to stop with the Minister and with the Government, but no, Sir, the buck stops with them. They know exactly where the buck stops.

How big a buck has stopped in their pocketbooks? For the year 1986-87 alone the Minister has added $560 million in personal surtax, a sales tax bill of $815 million, a tobacco tax of $150 million, and corporate taxes. The total bill comes to $1.905 billion. That is the buck that stopped yesterday in the pocketbooks of the taxpayers of Canada. Adding to that the taxes imposed in May of last year, which come to a grand total of $4.380 billion, the total for 1986-87 is $6.285 billion. That means that each taxpayer will have to pay approximately $628 of additional federal income tax. Next year the story will repeat itself. Next year there will be an additional $3 billion added to the $4 billion from last May, which is a total in excess of $7 billion in 1987-88.

We do not have all the data for the intervening years until 1990-91 because the Government has once again failed to live up to the obligations imposed upon us by the Lambert Commission, which we honoured, to give detailed five-year projections. Therefore, we have a hiatus in the numbers which were offered. In any event, in 1990-91 there will be total of $13.25 billion more in taxes suffered by the people of Canada. That is where the buck stops. It did not stop with the Government. That is what Canadian taxpayers have been asked to bear.

The Minister has slapped himself on the back about all his spending restraint saying that historically no Government has ever done such a thing. I would wager, Mr. Speaker, that there have never ever been tax increases of this magnitude in peace time in the history of the country.

Let us suppose for a moment that the Government was simply going to hold its spending to the 1985-86 level. Is that asking a lot? That would mean that in 1986-87, instead of increasing spending to $116.740 billion, spending could have remained at $112.250 billion. That would have simply been holding the line. Canadian taxpayers want to know why the Government is not holding the line. The difference is $4.490 billion. Had the Government held the line, that amount would have been available to apply against the deficit. A simple calculation shows that without any additional taxes the deficit would have been further reduced to $26.880 billion. That would have happened without any tax increases at all. If the Minister had held the line and not increased spending, he could have risen to slap himself on the back in the House and proudly say, "the buck stops here". But the buck did not stop here, it was passed on to Canadian taxpayers.

It is cowardly that the Minister and the Prime Minister are not willing to face individual Canadian constituents, but are quite prepared to face the Third World. They are quite prepared to lop $1.5 billion from our foreign aid over the next five years. In his presentation and in the budget documents the Minister points out that Canada is still better than France, the United States, and Britain in terms of the percentage of Gross National Product devoted to foreign aid. However, he neglected to mention that those countries rank between tenth and twelfth on the list of donors and that Canada ranks ninth. In fact,there are eight industrialized countries which make substantially higher contributions to foreign aid than does Canada.

Therefore, he has no reason to slap himself on the back. In fact, he has reason to be deeply shamed, as has the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) who has responsibility to ensure that that Budget is maintained and that Canada meets the targets which have been set. The target of .6 per cent has now been postponed until 1995. That also contradicts an earlier statement made by the Secretary of State that he would like to have the target increased to .7 per cent.

I do not think that the Minister understands what is happening to ordinary Canadians. You may have seen The Journal last night. On that program some middle-income families in Ajax, Ontario, were interviewed. I thought it was a very good use of television, especially since the Minister of Finance was obliged to sit and watch the direct impact of his Budget on the lives of ordinary Canadians.

One of the gentlemen interviewed in that program talked about his house that he had renovated and worked for. He said, "You know, I own only 25 per cent of my house, the bank owns the other three-quarters". He said, "I have no place to find these funds. I feel that I'm going behind". They all felt that they were going behind. The Minister of Finance when he was subsequently interviewed said, yes, he had empathy and sympathy for these people. He referred to the man with the house ownership problem, and with the big mortgage that absorbed, if you like, three-quarters of the equity value of his house, and he said, "Canada is in the same boat". He seized upon that example to draw a parallel between the circumstances of the country and the circumstances of the individual who is burdened with a mortgage on his home and only has a 25 per cent equity interest. It is not the same thing.

Who does that gentleman we watched on television last night turn to to protect his investment, to pay off his debt? Who does he turn to? We know who the Government of Canada turns to. The Government of Canada is turning to that gentleman, to the taxpayers of Canada. The buck stops with him. He has nowhere to go. He can go to his employer and seek a raise, but if he is not successful I suggest he will go further and further into debt. The Government of Canada simply issues a writ asking us to contribute billions of dollars to its coffers. I suggest the buck is passed. It doesn't stop here, it stops there with those families in Ajax and with families like that right across this country.

Why did the Minister decide to take the easy way out? Why did he decide simply to clobber middle-income and lower-income Canadians? That is the unfair part of this Budget. Having decided to tax why did he tax in such an unfair manner? You may recall the Minister declared not too many months ago that this country suffered from an acute shortage of rich people. With this Minister and this Government there certainly will not be any increase in the number of rich people. In fact, we seem to be on our way to wiping out the middle class. He still is a supply-sider. You may recall last year I talked about the horse and sparrow economics of John Kenneth Galbraith. The theory that if you feed the horse enough that something will be left over for the sparrows. The Minister is not only practising supply side economics by maintaining the capital gains exemption, by reducing the surtax for upper-income Canadians he in fact is going to wipe out the sparrows. It is not even horse and sparrow economics, it is worse. He is still feeding the horse; the capital gains exemption is still there, and in addition to that he is hitting middle and lower-income Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, let me read you a few headlines which really say it all in terms of the fairness of this Budget:

> Ordinary earners hit hardest again.

From The Globe and Mail:

> When you are middle class, it is a struggle to stay there.

Next headline from The Globe and Mail:

> Individual taxpayers cannon fodder in three-pronged assault on deficit.

[Translation]

There was also this headline in La Presse:

> The 3 per cent surtax will hurt the individuals.

[English]

Another one, Mr. Speaker, again from The Globe:

> Middle-income earners will carry bulk of new load.

Then it says:

> Surtax less costly than at present for those at high end of the scale.

There you are, feeding the horse and attacking the sparrows. The next one:

> Happy investors keep exemption on capital gains.

Finally . . .

[Translation]

And I quote: "Wilson missed the mark", wrote Alain Dubuc in La Presse. So that is how the Budget is described. There is the clear message given by headlines in today's newspapers.

In conclusion, I would like to quote from Mr. Dubuc's comments: "After all those expectations, the Minister of Finance did a near tour de force by tabling a dumb and unimaginative Budget. The only positive note is that he just about brought the deficit under the $30 billion mark".

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, our Minister missed his shot.

[English]

I also said that the Budget was deceitful. Let me take you to page 20 of the budget speech.

[Translation]

—the Minister suggested yesterday, under the heading "Research and Development":

> A second priority is investment in knowledge.
> The crucial importance of knowledge to Canada's future requires a new partnership between the private and public sectors. The federal Government plays a major role in supporting university-based research and the development of highly qualified personnel in Canada. One channel for this support is through the operations of the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, the Medical Research Council and the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council. The Government proposes to provide a secure funding base for these councils by adding $300 million over the balance of the decade.

[English]

In fact, one would have thought that this followed upon the grand declarations of our now Prime Minister in his book, Where I Stand, when he attacked the Liberal Government of the day for what he considered a lack of interest in research and development. I quote from page 41 of the book:

> If the percentage of GNP allocated to research and development were increased by 1 per cent we could create in Canada one million new jobs and $20 billion in additional sales of manufactured products.

Now, that was in the book Where I Stand. The next edition will be called "where I stood".

[Translation]

Because, clearly, our Prime Minister's feet (Mr. Mulroney) are made of clay.

[English]

That being said, one would have thought, as some journalist did, that the Government was really giving a boost to research and development in this country, $300 million. I turn here to The Gazette which says:

> Research Councils received $300-million boost.

Let me refer you to the five-year plan of only one of those councils referred to in the Minister's speech. Take this particular council, because when I was Minister of Science and Technology I had responsibility for the council, which is the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council known under the acronym of NSERC. A five-year plan was presented to the Government, and during the period from 1984-85 to 1989-90 the plan requires $1.4 billion in increased funding in 1984-85 constant dollars.

The Government has offered NSERC the Medical Research Council and the Social Science and Humanities Council $300 million to be divided among them. This is supposed to be a great coup. This is supposed to be a boost in research and development.

In this report we find a number of statements which are important. I read from page 202 of the five-year plan of the council as follows:

The initiatives proposed by the second Five-Year Plan are based on the established, well-proven and highly-accepted programs of NSERC and represent an urgent investment opportunity for the federal Government. Given the key role they play in providing for the future of R&D in Canada, their rejection would be tantamount to a rejection of not only the national targets, but also of the economic activity that can only come from a more sophisticated and technologically oriented society. Surely that option of retreat is not a valid one even in today's environment of fiscal restraint.

My goodness, we have not only seen retreat, we have seen a virtual abandonment of this plan. The treatment this Council is receiving, I suggest, is shocking in the extreme. We know that even to provide for inflationary increases and stay even, NSERC alone would require $380 million over that period. But the Government offers $300 million to the three councils and pretends that this is a great step forward in stimulating research and development in Canada.

[Translation]

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, ever since this Government has come to power, identifying its priorities has been very difficult. When we look at the bailout of the two banks that went bankrupt—$2 billion—and compare that with the circumstances of those councils, in the area of research and development, truly, I understand absolutely nothing about the goals and directions the Government would like to pursue.

[English]

This Government, I suggest, is rooted in the economy of 20 years ago and does not understand that the kind of growth which is necessary to get the deficit under control comes from a heavier and greater commitment to research and development, technology and productivity.

This brings me to another one of my adjectives. I said the Budget was "shortsighted". It is indeed shortsighted for the reasons I have just listed in terms of research and development. If there is one place we do not want to cut, it is in that area. We have to improve the intellectual capital. That is where the future of Canada lies. This Budget is a direct assault on that objective.

Something else about which one could make a speech for days is the question of foreign aid—talk about shortsightedness. We who have studied the potential problems in this biosphere know that the greatest problem will not be East-West. That has to be controlled, and must be controlled, but lying there as a sleeping time bomb is the North-South. That is a problem which this country has a proud record in addressing. We know that unless the standards of living of the third world are raised, the population explosion itself will create demands upon this planet which we will not be able to support by the year 2050. I know that is long-term thinking and that this Government does not consider long-term thinking especially significant. This Government really does not think beyond the next election. That is readily apparent from certain aspects of this Budget. However, I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that we shall pay dearly not only as Canadians but as Members of the international community on this planet earth if we start to reject the responsibilities towards the Third World and the North-South dialogue which we have so readily accepted in the past. This Government, for short-term gain, has set about to cut into the Budget to the tune of $1.5 billion over the next five years.

In addition, I said that this is an unimaginative Budget. Monsieur Dubuc in La Presse makes that point. It does not really require genius, does it, to impose millions of dollars in taxes? I would have thought that any of us here, even without any economic knowledge whatsoever, would say: "If additional funds are required, why don't we increase sales taxes or personal income taxes?" That seems to be the obvious thing to do. That does not require any genius. It does not even require a Minister of Finance. But that is what we have and that is why the Budget is completely unimaginative. Stacked upon the taxes which were imposed last May, not only is it unimaginative, it is economically counter-productive.

The cuts talked about by the Government, for the most part, are not real. They are ghost cuts, as some commentators have described them, but the taxes are very real. We will pay the taxes but the cuts are theoretical numbers. For example, Mr. Speaker, if you went to the Government and said you were going to spend $6,000 on a round-the-world trip and then a day later you said you had decided to go to Florida and it will only cost you $1,500 and you have saved $4,500, the Government would say: "Yes, you have cut your Budget by $4,500". That is the kind of cuts we are talking about in most instances.

As I demonstrated at the outset, the Government has proved itself incapable of holding the line, let alone cutting into expenses. Our expenses are increasing at the rate of billions of dollars per year. They are moving from $112 billion to $116 billion, as I mentioned. But the taxes are real, and in imposing these taxes discretionary spending and necessary spending is being cut to the detriment of the pocket books of Canadians. Canadian men, women and children, if I can go back to my earlier analogy of Galbraith, are the "sparrows" who are suffering.

The Budget has to be inflationary. I said that in May of 1985. I know that some people have said that it has not been inflationary because inflation is still at 4.4 per cent. However, we know that the impact of a Budget is somewhere between eight months, 12 months and sometimes 15 months down the road. You may not be aware of this, Mr. Speaker, but inflation in this country over the last three months is running at 5.6 per cent. If we were to project that forward, we would have an annual rate of 5.6 per cent.

Our neighbours to the south do use a forward projection for certain purposes. We do not. We always reduce the rate of inflation, or increase it, by past experience. The only true test is to look at what is happening now and what is happening now is that we have a 5.6 rate of inflation. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that with the burden of taxes we are putting on consumers, the price of gasoline and the price of food is going to increase that rate of inflation, expecially when it is combined with the weak dollar delivered to us by this Government.

I mentioned the people from Ajax whom we saw on television. What will they and the workers of this country from coast-to-coast do when faced with these tax increases? Will they not try to pass the buck as well? Should they not be entitled to pass the buck? How will they pass the buck? The only means at their disposal is to ask for higher wages. Their only recourse is to increase wage demands. I would say that the workers have been very responsible since the six and five program was introduced by the Liberal Government back in 1982. But I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that when we impose taxes of this kind on goods which they require to maintain their standards of living, they will feel they are justified in asking for higher wages. That is how the inflationary spiral starts. That is how the CPI increases, which in turn is why interest rates can increase and are likely to increase.

If savers continue to demand a real rate of interest at the levels we have seen over the past year, how on earth are interest rates going to come down? How will they come down faced as we are with the incredible tax increases and inflationary impact in this Budget? If interest rates creep up or even stay at their present level, which is much too high in the circumstances—they went up to defend the dollar but may stay up now because of the Budget—the economy is likely to grow more slowly. There will be fewer jobs and, of course, there will be higher taxes. These matters are known to the Minister of Finance and to the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) who I am pleased to see here with us today. They know they are vulnerable and they know, of course, that their $29.5 billion deficit number is equally vulnerable.

The whole Budget proceeds on a number of assumptions. I am not going to attack the assumptions. I just want to raise certain questions with respect to them which I would like the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance to reflect upon. First, there is the assumption that it is inflationary, a point which I have already made. That is a serious matter. I continue to regard another round of inflation as public enemy No. 1. Nothing could throw our economy into a decline as quickly as indications that we will have more inflation—and this Budget is inflationary.

There are also other assumptions. For example, there is the assumption that oil prices over the next two years will be in the neighbourhood of $22.50 per barrel. We know that the spot price at present is much lower than that. It seems that the Minister of Finance and his colleagues must be praying that the price will rise to the neighbourhood of $22.50 per barrel. There is a rule of thumb in this respect with which Hon. Members may be familiar. That is to say, each one dollar reduction in the price of oil represents a loss of revenue to the federal Government of approximately $110 million. In fact, the Economic Council of Canada has indicated that if the price of oil is $19 a barrel—and it is much lower than that on the spot market now—there will be a loss of $500 million to the Treasury. That is one assumption, a terribly fragile one, with very little evidence which any of us can see to support it. The $29.5 billion deficit and everything which flows from it is predicated upon such an assumption.

Another assumption is that interest rates this year will be at 9.5 per cent and will fall off next year to something in the order of 8.7 per cent. That means that we will have to see a reduction in interest rates—let us hope that we will see such a reduction. I have raised a number of concerns with respect to pressures which the Government has placed on the system which may, indeed, make such a reduction impossible. The Minister of Finance, and I presume the Minister of State for Finance are praying for a fall in interest rates. Let us hope that their prayers will be answered. I must say that I am skeptical in that regard.

I cannot help but add one last cynical comment. In some respects this Budget strikes me as a pre-election Budget. The Government seems to be saying: "Let's really sock it to them in 1986. Let's make those taxpayers really pay and then let's have some softening around 1988 just before the next general election". The Government will probably broaden the sales tax or it will come forward with a VAT or a business transfer tax in the next Budget. There are indications of that in the Budget documents. The Government probably plans to remove the personal surtax.

My colleagues and I would like to give the Government some advice in this regard. The Canadian electorate is too smart for this type of gamesmanship. It is not prepared to pay to have its standard of living suffer just to meet the electoral timetable of the Government. We will remind Canadians constantly—that is if they need any reminding at all—of what the Government did to them in 1985 in terms of unfairness and in terms of the tax burden itself, and what the Government is planning for them in the years ahead. We will be here to remind them.

We have no confidence in the Government's fiscal management of the country. The Budget has been a profound disappointment.

[Translation]

As I said yesterday in the House, I was disappointed last year. In fact, I am even more disappointed today, because I think there is a lack of imagination in this Budget. It is very poorly planned, very poorly designed, and it is now putting an intolerable burden on the taxpayers of this country.

[English]

Therefore, I move, seconded by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner):

That the motion of the Minister of Finance be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "That" and by substituting the following:

"this House condemns the Government for presenting a Budget that imposes outrageous and unfair tax increases for ordinary Canadians that deliberately widen the gap between them the rich and poor and between the "have" and "have-not" regions of this country."

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will take the motion under advisement and call upon the next speaker from the New Democratic Party. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have an opportunity to respond to this incredible Budget. I suspect the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is sitting, cringing in his seat, knowing that some reality will finally unfold in terms of what the Budget means to the average, ordinary Canadian family which has been bludgeoned by his Budget. It has been sugar-coated all right. There are all types of measures in the Budget which first give the appearance that it is a fair Budget. I have actually heard some individuals from the media—people whom I normally respect for their views—say that it is a fair budget. If anyone has read the Budget, then I cannot believe that they would say it is fair. They have probably merely scanned the booklet which sets out the Budget in brief and which highlights some of the sugar-coating.

When one looks carefully at the Budget one will see that the people of Canada have really been misled over the last number of years. On behalf of the New Democratic Party I hope to shed some light on what the Budget really does to the people of Canada.

In order to put the matter into context let us recognize that as we speak today about the Budget there are 4.5 million people in the country who are living below the poverty line. I refer to the poverty line as described and defined by the Government. As we speak there are 1.4 million jobless Canadians. There are hundreds of thousands of young people who are out of work and who are not in colleges or universities. They are jobless and are giving up in terms of ever having a full-time and meaningful job, because in the regions of the country in which they live there is simply no economic growth and expansion taking place. In those regions of the country where new jobs come up people with experience and training are wanted to fill them. Of course, to a large extent, that excludes the young people of our country.

The people of Canada have been taxed to the hilt. The New Democratic Party has just completed a tour of the country, an exercise which we called Tax Probe 86. In this probe we were asking people about the tax system and what they felt about it. The feelings expressed have been absolutely unanimous. It does not matter to whom one speaks or where one speaks to them. Everyone in the country says that the tax system is unduly complex, unfair and that it does not give the country good value for money. That feeling is unanimous.

Is there one thing in the Budget which indicates that the Government is serious about tax reform? No, there is nothing. As a matter of fact, if one were to look closely at the budget documents one would see that the tax system will be more complex than ever. It will be less fair than it has ever been. There is no mention of tax reform at a time when the Government says it needs more revenue. That is unconscionable. The fact that the Government failed to move on such an important issue at this point in time when the people of Canada would be behind the Government in terms of overhauling the tax system is a missed opportunity.

Let us take a look at the Budget. We have been here before. This is not the first time Canada has experienced difficulties. I would like to read two or three of what I think are appropriate quotes from the Budget. I encourage the Ministers present to reflect on the words of the Budget which are as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the general optimism prevailing throughout Canada has, during recent months, been so widely reflected and strongly emphasized in provincial legislative assemblies, annual reviews and financial statements that, in presenting this annual budget, little need be said beyond submitting official figures which, when analyzed and compared with the records of previous years, will show a steady and continuous reduction of . . . debt—

Without being unduly optimistic, the Government feels it is warranted in anticipating that, notwithstanding the reductions to be submitted in this budget, the revenues will meet all expenditure obligations and also provide for the redemption of the loan maturing in August next . . . For the purposes of eventually effecting a balanced budget, provision was made in the budget . . . for certain additional taxation. The major increase was made in the sales tax where the rates were increased fifty per cent over the then existing tax. There was also an increase in the stamp tax . . . Certain other taxes, generally classed as manufacturers taxes, were imposed, the articles affected being automobiles, confectionery, cigars, ale and beer and other beverages; . . . The national debt, however, cannot be ignored. The annual interest charges . . . are a direct and pressing charge on the revenues of this country.

It is a sound and helpful policy to plan to reduce this non-productive outlay and to do that the national debt itself must annually be reduced. The government is, therefore, again budgeting for debt reduction . . . the concern of all Canadians was . . . that the nation's purchasing power be substantially increased, that no man willing to work be out of employment, that Canadian goods become firmly established on the international trading markets and that Canadians, wherever they might be, would feel that the problems of each section were the mutual concern of all . . . Canadians today are prospering . . . Our basic and manufacturing industries are producing large quantities of goods for home consumption and also for the vast external trade outlets which have been developed—

As the years go by an increasing quantity of our domestic production must necessarily be marketed abroad. It is our desire to trade freely with any and all who are willing to trade with us . . . This fiscal record . . . has . . . strengthened confidence in our domestic credit markets, thus smoothing the way for the provinces and private enterprises. A healthy business expansion, the Government feels, is of the greatest importance to Canada.

In drafting the fiscal program for the coming fiscal year, the Government has sought to err on the side of caution.

What is interesting is that that was not this Budget, that was the Budget of March 1, 1929. That was the Budget that was introduced prior to the collapse of 1929. Later, of course, the R. B. Bennett Budget was introduced and the Government at the time said it had a great solution, it was going to raise taxes on everyone across the country to collect more revenue and it was going to give some corporations some tax breaks and increase the sales tax. We know what happened in the 1930s as a result of that. Bennett buggies resulted. We have been here before. We have seen Conservative Budgets introduced during difficult times, and what happens? Do things get better? Do times get better?

Mr. Rodriguez: Tory times are tough times.

Mr. Riis: As my colleague has said, Tory times are tough times. We are about to experiment once again—

Mr. Broadbent: The dollar dropped three-quarters of a cent.

Mr. Riis: My leader has told me that the dollar dropped three-quarters of a cent today. Is that not interesting? That reminds us that the Government is gambling with the lives of Canadian families. The Minister has launched a Las Vegas style approach to economic development. He said that we are going to gamble and raise sales taxes one more time even though it has already been done twice. He knows it is a regressive tax. It is a tax that hits the poorer families harder than the richer families. As a matter of fact, the richer families probably do not even notice the sales tax. The Government is going to level a regressive sales tax and jack up the personal tax rate again by 3 per cent.

By taking a lot of money out of the pockets of families across the country, the Government believes that somehow all sorts of money will start rolling into the country. Businesses will then begin expanding operations to take advantage of this new-found optimism and purchasing power, but there is no more purchasing power. When the Government takes disposable income away from people they are not going to buy a new refrigerator, a new car or go for dinner. They are going to err on the side of caution. They are going to be very reluctant to purchase goods and services. Without consumers purchasing goods and services, businesses will not expand and will not hire more people. The economy will not grow. Yet that is the gamble the Minister of Finance is taking on the backs of Canadian families; if we cut those programs that service Canadian families, somehow or other the international corporate and investment community will have confidence in the Government's ability to manage the economy and will feel that the economy will grow.

The first indicator we have seen is that the dollar is falling the day after the Budget was brought down. That sends a very clear signal to us about what the international community thinks about this Budget.

I think this can be best summed up when we look at the fiscal plan itself. The fiscal plan lays out what the Government is going to collect in new taxes. Here is the story, the story that Canadians across the country will be recognizing in the days ahead as the real Budget information comes out.

The additional taxes that Canadians are going to be paying either through more personal tax or more sales tax amounts to an increase of $7 billion between 1986 and 1987. What about the corporate sector? Someone said the Budget was fair. We would then assume that corporate-sector taxes would be going up. However, they are going to go down. The taxes collected from corporations in the next year will go down and the personal taxes paid by Canadians will go up by $7 billion.

Mr. Broadbent: Tory justice.

Mr. Riis: It is a very, very sad day. However, this is misleading. When looking at particular aspects of the Budget, we see that $800 million will be allocated for the Canadian Jobs Strategy next year. That sounds interesting until we realize that this year it had $900 million in its budget. The Government is going to cut the funds for the Canadian Jobs Strategy. What does that mean for the regions of Canada? Job-creation funds might not be needed in many constituencies in the City of Toronto, but in the regions of Canada job-creation funds are an absolute necessity and the Government is cutting back on them.

Then there is a provision in the Budget for helping older workers, workers who are 55 and over and have lost their jobs. The Government is going to put $125 million into this program over the next four years. Again, that sounds like it would be a useful program. That amounts to about $30 million a year. However, we realize that presently the program receives $75 million a year. Again the Government is cutting programs to assist older workers who have lost their jobs.

There is a lot of sugar coating over this Budget, but when we start looking through it, we notice that there are some very disappointing aspects to it, particularly for the regions. The regional industrial expansion section of the Budget indicates that $2 billion will be cut over the next four years. How does that help the regions develop their economies? A $4-billion cut will cause serious damage.

Transportation will be cut by $3.6 billion. The employment part of the Budget will be cut by $1.8 billion. Agriculture is going to be cut by $502 million but there is a program introduced to help people get out of farming. The Government is cutting existing programs, but for those people who are having trouble it is helping them get out of the business. It is giving them an exit visa out of the farming community. That is what is in the Budget. The Government says that it has a program to help farmers who are in trouble. Approximately 50,000 farms across the country are experiencing serious financial difficulty, but they will only be helped if they are doing business with the Farm Credit Corporation, which amounts to about one in four troubled farmers. If a farmer is having trouble with the Royal Bank of Canada there is no help. If farmers have loans with chartered banks there is no assistance or possible support in the Budget. For those few farmers who are having difficulty in terms of repaying their debts or loans with the FCC, they will perhaps receive some support. It is a sugar-coating. I saw the little clips on television about assistance to farmers in trouble. They forgot to say that only one out of four farmers in trouble will possibly receive assistance.

There is a 3 per cent decrease in corporate taxes over the next three years, but this coming year there will be a 3 per cent increase in personal taxes. Earlier today my Leader held a press conference and pointed out an interesting shift over the last few years. Not many years ago when we looked at the revenues collected from corporations and from individuals, there was a 50-50 balance—50 per cent of the revenues coming in through taxation was from corporations and 50 per cent was from individual Canadian taxpayers. Over the years this has shifted in a very interesting direction. Now 81 per cent comes from the personal tax side and 19 per cent comes from the corporate side.

Mr. Broadbent: As a result of the Budget.

Mr. Riis: Especially as a result of the Budget. It has simply added to the same process; more and more on the backs of middle-income earners and less and less on the backs of the corporate sector.

As we all know average Canadians will be faced with a 3 per cent increase in their taxes as well as an increase in sales tax. What about upper-income earners? They receive a reduced tax as a result of the Budget. Their tax rate goes down. The situation is that upper-income earners and the corporate sector will have reduced tax rates as a result of the Budget and ordinary Canadian taxpayers will experience increases in their tax rates and in the sales tax.

People are asking about the real impact of this, how it can be measured and what it really means. It does not take much analysis to break it down in terms of what this Government has meant to Canadian families. If we look at the November 8, 1985 statement and tally up the costs as a result of it on the average Canadian family—and I am using for this example an average Canadian family of four with an income of $35,000 per year—we find that it resulted in $452 in increased costs.

If we look at the May 23, 1985 Budget, we find that the increased costs to that same family as a result of the modification to indexation, the cut in family allowance payments, the increased taxes on cigarettes, alcohol and gasoline and the sales tax increase, amounted to $512.50. Then we have the Budget of February 26, yesterday. When we add up the costs as a result of it the very conservative total, if I may use that term, comes to $340. If we add up the totals as a result of that economic statement and those Budgets, we find that the increase from the federal Government alone amounts to $1,304.50 for an average Canadian family of four. It is the largest tax grab in modern history, in recent times.

We have never seen anything like this before, when a Government has gone in and ripped out more than $1,000 from Canadian families in just 14 months. This means that for every family in Canada—whether it be in Port Alberni, Red Deer, Thunder Bay, Chicoutimi, Moncton or St. Catharines, it does not matter where—in excess of $1,000 or $1,300 will not be circulating in those communities time and time again during the year to support the local economies. It has been dragged out of those communities and down to Ottawa to be used for some highly questionable purposes.

What are those purposes? Let us look at how the tax system is used. We asked for a major overhaul of the tax system because we were convinced that the hidden spending which takes place through the shelters, loopholes and various tax expenditure programs comes to billions and billions of dollars each year, and they are never evaluated. We asked the Government to look at these tax expenditure programs and to evaluate them to see whether or not we are getting good value for the money. If we have a program which is designed to encourage the construction of low-income rental housing, is it doing that? Of course when we look at the program it never does that. Is the use of the tax system to encourage mining exploration the most effective way of accomplishing that? We have to ask these questions. Was there one mention of tax reform, tax overhaul or evaluating the value of those tax dollars in the Budget? Not a word, not a word.

Let us look at the incredible amount of money involved in the tax system. One of the favourite areas people mention is the amount of taxes known as deferred corporate taxes. It now approaches nearly $30 billion annually. Numbers of corporations do not pay; they simply defer their taxes year after year. Mr. Speaker, when you and I do not pay any income tax or make a mistake on our income tax return and owe money to the Government, we pay interest on it whether it is two weeks or two months.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Under the rules the Hon. Member has 20 minutes plus 10 minutes for questions and comments. If he would like to wind down, we could go into the 10-minute question and comment period. Otherwise I would require unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to carry on.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. McKenzie: He is making no contribution, so there should be no difference.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow the Hon. Member to finish his comments and then we will go into the 10-minute period of questions and comments.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I will wrap up my comments. I appreciate the usual progressive voice from Winnipeg over there.

Mr. McKenzie: Thank you.

Mr. Riis: Just before the Budget was brought down, the New Democratic Party wanted to offer the Minister of Finance a whole set of suggestions about things he might do to help ordinary Canadians. We suggested that there should be an overhaul of the tax system and that a number of tax programs should be eliminated immediately. At the top of the list was the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption, which means that a person who makes money from playing the stock market in Hong Kong or selling real estate in Arizona does not have to pay any income tax. At the same time the rates are being increased for ordinary Canadians. We suggested a number of tax measures which could have been eliminated and could have saved the Government about $3.5 billion. We suggested a number of recommendations to improve the tax system, for example, that the taxes on farm fuels and the like should be eliminated. We also looked at the result of our youth task force, the NDP task force on jobs and the report entitled "Canada Unlimited", which contained a number of recommendations on how the Government could take positive steps that could result in economic growth and expansion. We feel that the best way to collect revenue is not by taxing people more and more, but by taking steps to develop a strong and healthy economy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: If we have a strong and healthy economy, then we have people who are not necessarily receiving UIC and welfare payments. They are paying more taxes in terms of personal taxes and sales tax. As well, successful businesses are paying corporate taxes and the Government is collecting excise taxes. A healthy economy results in revenues coming in to the Government for useful social programs, and if necessary part of it could be used to reduce the deficit. We would like to see the Government accumulate more revenue, and we have suggested a host of ways of doing it.

• (1300)

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) last September suggested at the UN that Canada would approach 0.7 of 1 per cent GNP by 1990, but this has now been abandoned as a result of the $1.5 billion cut in development assistance. The Government says that maybe we will get to 0.6 per cent by 1995. We say that is not good enough. It is completely inappropriate in terms of the role that Canada plays in the international community, completely inappropriate.

My colleagues will have much more to say about our concerns with the Budget in the specific areas they represent as spokespersons for our Party.

I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry):

That the amendment be amended by changing the period at the end of the last sentence to a comma and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"and this House further condemns the Government for its brutal, uncaring and unfair tax increases on average income families while at the same time lowering taxes for upper income families and the corporate sector, and for its refusal to undertake an overhaul of the income tax system to bring about tax fairness and to give Canadians a tax system that they can understand."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before having questions or comments, I would like to say that the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) and seconded by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) is in order. We will now proceed to questions or comments.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate my colleague on his very fine challenge to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Government in putting forward the impact this Budget will have on Canadians.

Has the Hon. Member any views on the Budget's impact on women? I did not see anything that mentioned equality for women. Women are already far behind in the workforce. We have cuts in employment training programs which will have a disproportionate effect on women. There is absolutely nothing in the Budget that refers to child care. There is a desperate need for action in this area within the next year. There are cut-backs in health and welfare programs which will have a dramatic disproportionate effect on women as well as cuts in transfer payments. The Minister, supposedly responsible for women in a crummy kind of advocate because he did not have a thing included in the Budget applying to women in a positive way. The Minister was at the Nairobi conference. He is sitting there. He has allowed development programs which are desperately needed by women and children around the world to be cut back. This Budget is hurting women in Canada and women around the world. I know my hon. friend has comments to make on that.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, my colleague has raised a very important issue. In all of the Budget documents presented there is virtually not a single mention of programs and initiatives that will assist women. There is virtually nothing in the Budget documents that will assist families. There are whole lists that will cause more hardship on families, more hardship on women and children in Canada. That is why I said at the outset that it is a very uncaring and callous Budget. It indicates a Government that does not care about the people of Canada. Perhaps it does not understand Canadians and the economic and social suffering that is going on.

In response to my hon. colleague, in all of the Budget documents there is virtually nothing that addresses the plight faced by women in Canada.

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have some comments and some questions for the Hon. Member. I want to address myself particularly to the New Democratic Party's critic for finance on the subject of agriculture. I could not help but wish that the Party's critic for agriculture was speaking rather than the critic for finance, because I suspect the critic for agriculture is better informed.

It seems to me that the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) needs to bear in mind certain things when he looks at the Budget. First, can the Member recall and if so could he indicate which Budget in the previous history of this Parliament addressed the problems of agriculture in more detail, more specifically and with more urgency than this one?

Is the New Democratic Party opposed, as I understand it, to the rural transition program? The Hon. Member had nothing but criticism toward that program. I will be surprised if that is true because the Member was supporting the Canadian Job Strategy Program which discriminates against farmers and does not permit farmers to participate in it. Now for the first time there is a program that will be of assistance to those farmers who wish to benefit from it. The Member is denying the right of those farmers to participate. The Member's statements are discriminatory against farmers. I am sure the critic for his Party will apologize.

Mr. Benjamin: Humbug!

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the commodity based mortgage program, about which the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap was so critical, could he tell me what percentage of the farmers who are in difficulty today are FCC customers? Would the Member not agree that this program is of immense value to them as far as their capacity to pay is concerned. Where else would the Member find a program of a similar nature and effectiveness in this country?

Finally, why in the Province of Manitoba, which is the only province today governed by the New Democratic Party—which may not be governing for much longer—is it that the MACC program designed to reduce interest rates for its customers is limited to its own customers? Why did the Province of Manitoba not come to the assistance of Canadian farmers who are customers of the banks?

Mr. Gustafson: Like Saskatchewan did.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I think I can summarize it best by saying that the Government of Manitoba is more interested in finding ways and means of getting people into farming as opposed to this Government's efforts to get people out of the farming business. The document is an admission of failure. It is an admission that the Government has nothing else but to offer ways and means of getting out of farming. That is what the transition program is all about. The Member knows that.

There are many things that our agricultural critic has offered time and time again to support and develop the agricultural sector.

I would be embarrassed if I were that Hon. Member standing up and justifying what is in this Budget for the agricultural community of Canada when you have 50,000 farms in serious financial difficulty. Is that addressed in this Budget? No, it is not, Mr. Speaker. Are farmers supported in this Budget? No, they are not. Their taxes will go up. Sales tax goes up and now there are excise taxes and so on. I give the Member credit for having the courage to stand up and attempt to say that there is something in this Budget for farmers.

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will give the Hon. Member a short supplementary and then recognize the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Member a question. Let me repeat it. What percentage of those farmers deemed to be in financial difficulty today are FCC customers and eligible for this program? It is a very specific question and it can be answered in very simple, non-rhetorical terms.

An Hon. Member: He doesn't know.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, 50,000 farms are in difficulty and are identified as having serious debt problems, about one quarter are participating with loans from the Farm Credit Corporation so let me toss the question back to the Hon. Member.

• (1310)

There is nothing in the Budget which will help farmers who have loans with any of the chartered banks. They must be exclusively with Farm Credit. In a sense, it discriminates against all farmers who do business with anyone other than the Farm Credit Corporation. It is highly discriminatory, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Murphy: I will keep my question short and say more on the Budget later. Is there not a real danger in the Government's plan that what will happen to farmers will be the equivalent of what happened to people who registered under the AHOP program of the previous Liberal Government? At the end of that program people under it found out that their mortgages had gone up so much that they ended up walking away from their homes. Is this not a built-in AHOP, too? Will we not have farmers walking away from their homes and farms five years from now?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, we know how successful the AHOP program was in terms of housing and what happened to the people who had to walk away from their homes. We are seeing basically the same thing now with agriculture. Having no other programs for dealing with the situation, let us make it easy for people to get out of the business.

On page 26 of Canada's Economic Prospects it is indicated, by the Government's own figures and admission, that next year the GNP increase will be down, consumer expenditures will be down, residential investment will be down, business non-residential investment will be down, business machinery and equipment investment will be down, and business non-residential construction investment will be down. By the Government's own statistics, some of the critical indicators of our economy will be down next year as a result of the Budget. I give credit to the Minister of Finance for being honest and admitting that the GNP, investment, and consumer spending will be less as a result of the Budget. For that honesty, I thank him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have looked at the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and I declare it to be in order. Therefore, the debate will be on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order, with some aggravation. I had very carefully worked out an agreement with the two other House Leaders that my colleague, the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), would be given the opportunity to speak for up to 40 minutes. I do not quite understand why the Conservative Party decided to ignore that agreement, but I want to assure you, Sir, that there will be no further agreements in this House on anything unless I can count on the support of all of the Members of the agreements that we make.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Chair was not aware of any agreement that was made. I tried to extend the question and comment period in order to give the Hon. Member as much time as possible. The Chair is not privy to negotiations that are going on.

Mr. Deans: I am not blaming the Chair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think the Hon. Member had a little more than 40 minutes, but I appreciate what the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) has just said. I feel that we have done as much as possible at this time. I would like to recognize the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté).

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I consider it an honour to speak in the House today on the important legislation tabled yesterday, and I am referring to the Budget of my hon. colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Speaker, you will remember that during the last election campaign, our party was in favour of returning to sound management principles in public administration, a change that was absolutely essential because of the incredible growth of the federal deficit up to that time. When a country the size of ours gets to the point where it has a national debt of $200 billion, it is hardly exaggerating to talk about a disaster situation. Now I am sorry for the Members opposite, but they are mainly responsible for this state of affairs.

Mr. Speaker, to support my claim need I mention that for the current financial year, servicing the public debt alone will cost the incredible sum of nearly $26 billion? This is more than a thousand times the population of Canada. In a veritable frenzy of spending, the previous administration ended up spending the equivalent of 26 per cent of our Gross National Product. When a Government manages to spend more than one-quarter of what the country produces, I think that alone should be enough to muzzle our hon. friends opposite or at least make them blush with shame.

The result of more than twenty years of Liberal government boils down to this: During that period, the cumulative debt rose from $17 to $223 billion. This means it became fourteen times as big, and in 1985, it added up to $22,000 per Canadian family. Today, every Canadian family of four has to spend more than $4,200 per year on interest payments alone on the national debt. This means that every week, that same family has to spend more than $80 on this item. It means that every day, nearly $12 per family goes to repaying the interest on the profiligate spending of our hon. friends opposite. The situation became untenable, and Canadians gave us a mandate to put the country back on the road to common sense. Consequently, we opted for the implementation of three specific principles. First, restoring fiscal responsibility; second, increasing the effectiveness of public management, and third, providing maximum encouragement for private initiative.

As my hon. colleague the Minister of Finance pointed out yesterday, we have applied these principles very strictly, and we are already getting concrete results. The national debt is regressing, and will certainly continue to do so. The objective of our administration is still to eliminate wasteful expenditures and streamline Government operations. When someone is up to his neck in debt, common sense dictates belt tightening and, if at all possible, selling certain assets to accelerate repayments. That, Mr. Speaker, is exactly what we are doing.

One of our first moves in the fall of 1984 was to set up the Ministerial Task Force on Program Review responsible for recommending specific measures to reduce administrative overlapping, rationalize operations and, we believe, make significant savings. As the Minister of Finance pointed out, the detailed findings of the task force will be made public on March 11. In the current fiscal year this initiative has already made it possible to save more than $530 million. With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, we have decided to privatize certain Crown corporations. The Government has already sold most of its assets in the Canada Development Corporation, as it did in the case of the Northern Transportation Company and de Havilland. A number of other Crown corporations will also be sold to private interests in the coming months.

With a view to recouping a larger share of costs to service users, the Government of Canada has revised its rate schedules for various goods and services such as fares on federal ferry boats and inspection fees. For instance, Mr. Speaker, at the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, we have substantially increased the charges for our metrological inspections.

One of the most important aspects of this program of cost recovery for services provided certainly involves the Canada Post Corporation. As underlined by my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Canada Post Corporation has made substantial efforts in the last few years to reduce its costs and increase its productivity. We have only to recall, for instance, Mr. Speaker, that in 1985-86, its operating losses amounted to approximately $347 million while they will be approximately $243 million this year.

However, Mr. Speaker, these efforts are not enough to meet our objective of increasing the efficiency of the Government machine, and especially the Canada Post Corporation. I have therefore asked the Chairman of the Corporation to submit to me as soon as possible a new operational plan providing for elimination of the operational deficit of the Canada Post Corporation by the end of the 1987-88 fiscal year, as requested by the Minister of Finance.

Obviously, the objective of a better postal service for Canadians remains an absolute priority, even in this context of financial self-sufficiency. Indeed, I shall have other opportunities is to come back to this issue in the coming weeks.

Beyond past and future savings, however, the budget brought down yesterday by the Minister of Finance proposes to keep at the same level as last year expenditures for statutory programs, which will represent in real terms a 4 per cent reduction.

Not only will the cost of these programs be limited to the level of last year, but, within its comprehensive cost reduction and public management improvement strategy, the Government will also apply a 2 per cent general reduction of all departmental budgets. This reduction will represent savings of over $500 million and will affect expenditures such as those related to capital costs, operations and maintenance, travel, advertising, and so on. Whole programs have been eliminated in this effort to provide stricter management of Government activities.

Here are just a few, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Home Insulation Program, the Petroleum Incentives Program, the Petroleum Compensation Program, the Katimavik Program, the VIA Rail subsidies and, finally, the heavy water plants in Cape Breton.

Needless to say that it would be impossible to improve the productivity of the Government administration without controlling the Public Service. As we have already announced, the authorized number of person-years will be reduced by 2 percent next year, and another percent in each of the next four years, so that by 1990 the Public Service will have decreased by 15,000 person-years.

Together, Mr. Speaker, these various measures will mean a reduction of $6 billion in Government spending as compared to what was originally forecasted. For the whole period from 1986 to 1990-91, these measures will represent savings of nearly $80 billion.

• (1320)

[English]

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) also announced a number of new measures aimed at assisting low-income Canadians. First, he talked about the Child Tax Credit. Members will recall that the May, 1985 Budget provided for an increase in the Child Tax Credit to $384 per child in the taxation year. We are not, however, stopping here. The Child Tax Credit will be further increased to $454 per child in 1986 to $489 in 1987, and to $524 in the 1988 taxation year.

As part of the efforts of this Government to ensure that the federal benefits program reach those directly in need, and to do away with the negative social impact of the tax rebate discount, and as I have announced it during the debate on amendment of the Tax Rebating Discounting Act, a system of advance or prepayment of the Child Tax Credit will be introduced for 1986 and subsequent years. As announced by the Minister of Finance this prepayment will amount to $300 per child, or about two-thirds of the maximum payment for recipients who had family incomes of $15,000 or less in 1985. Claimants will receive this payment automatically in November, 1986, rather than be forced to wait until the filing of their tax return in early 1987. Since this prepayment will be based on 1985 tax returns there will be no additional administrative burden imposed upon claimants. This will benefit about one million Canadian families.

Too often low-income Canadians, and expecially Child Tax Credit recipients, have been encouraged to use discounting services because they did not have their rightful benefit in hand at the moment they needed it. This system of prepayments will ensure that this money goes directly to those who need it most, rather than going to tax discounters.

Second, the Government is introducing a new refundable sales tax credit of $50 per adult and $25 per child for families whose income is below $15,000. More than four million Canadian families will receive this credit. This is clearly a fundamental innovation to the income tax system that will resolve in significant benefits to low-income Canadians, many of whom are elderly.

Third, the disability deduction available to 185,000 disabled Canadians will be increased by $250 in 1986. The total deduction will now be worth $2,860 for 1986.

Fourth, a special training program for Canadians or social assistance will be established. The federal Government will commit up to $100 million per year for the next three years. Matching funds will be provided also by provincial Governments. This new program will help train Canadians on welfare, enabling them to find meaningful employment. The Government's commitment to social justice is clear and ongoing. Yesterday's Budget continues this effort.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 1.28 p.m., I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m.

At 1.28 p.m. the House took recess.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, last night we saw clear evidence of the lack of commitment of the Government of Canada with regard to regional economic development. I say that with great sadness. When the facts are placed before all Members of Parliament, they will see that the Government has no commitment and has abandoned the poor regions of the country in a startling way.

The Budget Papers show very clearly that the percentage of change in the economic and regional development envelope is absolutely staggering. In 1985-86 the reduction in expenditures in that envelope will be 15.4 per cent. In 1986-87 it will be 11.1 per cent, and in 1987-88 it will be 17.7 per cent. That makes for a 38 per cent reduction in expenditures in the regional economic development envelope which will affect—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

EXTERNAL AID

REDUCTION IN COMMITMENT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said that our economic performance during the past 18 months has been much better than anyone predicted. If this is so, why have Conservative commitments to development assistance been slashed? In the 1984 election the Conservatives promised to allocate 0.7 per cent of our GNP to world development by 1990. This commitment was then reduced in October to 0.6 per cent. Yesterday the Government cut it back to 0.5 per cent.

These cuts not only mean broken campaign promises—we are used to that—but they also mean a broken moral commitment of the Canadian people to the needy people of our world. In the name of humanity, the Government must restore its original commitment to 0.7 per cent of GNP for official development assistance by 1990.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

CAPE BRETON—FORTHCOMING ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, yesterday our Government demonstrated to Canadians an unprecedented commitment to economic renewal. A key part of that commitment is deficit reduction, not for the sake of reducing the deficit but because the deficit remains the single largest barrier to full employment.

As we take control of the deficit, we see the creation of hundreds of thousands of jobs. A job remains the best social protection for ordinary Canadians. As well, a lower deficit will make more money available to expand benefits and services to needy Canadians.

For the first time in more than a decade we see the deficit declining. Tomorrow the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and I will be announcing jobs for ordinary Canadians who live in my riding. These jobs will result from the first new private sector investment of this kind in more than 20 years in my region. I invite all Hon. Members of the Opposition to join with me in congratulating the Minister. Many families I represent will be given job opportunities and, therefore, their rightful place in Canada. Surely that is what it is all about—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

BANKS AND BANKING

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF INTERNATIONAL BANKING CENTRE IN VANCOUVER

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, today in Capilano the crocuses are blooming and the people are jubilant, as are Canadians across the land, because they finally have a Government with enough guts to reduce the deficit, and looking ahead at the next five years we see the dramatic impact these measures will have. We will be a nation which will be $100 billion less in debt than it would have been. This is financial restraint with a human face.

There are so many good things to say, but I will add only one. We in British Columbia are particularly pleased with the commitment of the Government to facilitate the establishment of an international banking centre in Vancouver. This will provide the opportunity for Vancouver to fulfil its destiny not only as the jewell of the Pacific but as the new business, financial, trade, and service centre for the Pacific Rim. Yes, as in Capilano, Canadians right across the country are jubilant with yesterday's news.

ENVIRONMENT CANADA

DEPARTMENTAL SPOKESPERSONS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this week the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) defended his move to censor his officials on the basis that it is very important that officials speak within their area of expertise and competence.

Last November two officials of Environment Canada gave their professional assessment of environmental issues. In one case one of the most respected hydrogeologists in Canada suggested that, should the underground salt caverns leak into the St. Clair River, it would be an environmental nightmare. When a hydrogeologist speaks of underground water resources, he is entirely within his or her area of expertise and competence. The official was reprimanded by the Minister, who later referred to the situation as "awesome".

In a second case one of Canada's leading experts on toxic chemicals, an employee of Environment Canada, spoke of the degree of toxic chemical contamination to which we as a society are subjected. The Minister disowned this official as well. The Royal Society released shortly thereafter a report which called the Great Lakes the most contaminated body of water in North America—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

FINANCE

CRITICISM OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, yesterday's Budget struck at the prosperity of ordinary Canadians. Obsessed with deficit reduction to slow the growth of the national debt, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) chose to reduce expenditures and increase taxes for Canadians, especially middle-income Canadians. He had a choice. He chose not tax reform which would raise much needed revenues while improving tax fairness, but increases of income, sales, and excise taxes which already burden individuals.

Among Canadians most disappointed by these decisions are the Citizens for Public Justice who recently put forward an imaginative package of spending and tax proposals which would create over 250,000 new jobs and reduce unemployment by some 2 per cent.

Yesterday the Minister of Finance chose to ignore all of this sound and progressive advice. The tax system has been made even more unfair than it was already, and unemployment may not fall at all.

I expect many members of Citizens for Public Justice voted for Conservatives in 1984. I doubt they'll do that again.

THE ECONOMY

BUDGET MEASURES TO REDUCE DEFICIT

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the 1986 Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) continues on a course set out in the November, 1984, economic statement and reinforced in the May, 1985, Budget. The deficit will be reduced from $33.8 billion this fiscal year to $29.8 billion next year. This will restore confidence in the economy and allow interest rates to come down. A 1 per cent reduction in interest rates saves $500 per year on a $50,000 mortgage—far more than the approximately 50 cents per day that Canadians are being asked to pay.

Overall, the Minister of Finance has made a concentrated attack on the deficit with a balanced attempt to spread the burden. Those who receive the benefits of Government transfers and programs will be asked to receive a little less. Those who pay will be asked to pay a little more.

The Minister has demonstrated that he can achieve what he sets out to do. The results speak for themselves. More than 580,000 jobs have been created. The critics were proven wrong last time and they will be proven wrong again.

AGRICULTURE

GOVERNMENT INITIATIVES TO ASSIST FARMERS

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, as the owner of a family farm, I, plus other farmers in my riding of Sarnia-Lambton, want to express our enthusiasm and appreciation to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Conservative Government.

The understanding and concern of this administration have been clearly demonstrated by its ongoing commitment to the agricultural sector. The initiatives brought forward by the Government, not just in the present Budget but ever since our election in September of 1984, have accomplished more on behalf of farmers than those failed attempts of the Liberal-Socialist alliance in all their years in power.

We have kept our promises. When we made commitments we followed through on them. This is a Government of action, not just idle talk. This is a Government of substance, not just image.

CONSEQUENCES FOR ORDINARY CITIZENS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Tory Government launched an attack against ordinary Canadians. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought down his Budget and Bang! on the Canadian taxpayers with a 3 per cent surcharge on income tax and a 1 per cent increase on the sales tax.

Some Hon. Members: Bang!

Mr. Malépart: Bang! on smokers, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Bang!

Mr. Malépart: Bang! on those who drink wine, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Bang!

Mr. Malépart: Unfortunately, Michael's corporate friends were spared. Once again, the ordinary Canadian—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member may want to continue his statement and he might be allowed to finish it.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, this Government which pretended that it was protecting the ordinary Canadian has now decided that the head of a family with a wife and two children and earning $18,000 is rich and is not entitled to a sales tax credit. Mr. Speaker, this is shocking and they will have to back down on that issue.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

TRIBUTE TO HON. JEAN CHRÉTIEN, FORMER MEMBER FOR SAINT-MAURICE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words about a former Member of Parliament. I refer to Jean Chrétien, the former Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice. I was unable to make such remarks this morning, so I would like to join with the leaders of other Parties in saying a few words now.

[Translation]

Today, Jean Chrétien may be leaving the political scene, but certainly not the Canadian scene. I am sure he will continue to influence the Canadian society in his inimitable fashion.

In all the portfolios he has held, whether that of Justice, Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Finance, National Revenue, or Energy, Mines and Resources, Jean Chrétien demonstrated the same serious commitment. Obviously, I was not always in agreement with him. But nobody could doubt his impassioned dedication. He was both true Quebecer and a true Canadian.

I wish him the best of luck in the future.

OPPOSITION'S CRITICISMS

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec East): Mr. Speaker, judging by the sterile comments voiced by the Opposition until now, one will realize that they have nothing to say. This would explain the level of their criticism which is inconsistent, unfounded, and worthless. They are truly disarmed, Mr. Speaker.

S.O. 21

Under the Liberals, we were saddled with huge tax increases while the inflation rate was kept above the 12 per cent level, and that led to disastrous losses for the Canadian taxpayers.

The assumption is that the additional measures which Canadians will have to live with in order to make up for past wastefulness provide greater fairness and justice to citizens generally than under the previous Government. That, Mr. Speaker, is sound management, and we will carry on with the mandate entrusted by the people and with our role as trustees for the welfare and to the benefit of all groups in our society.

REASONS FOR CUTS

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, February 26, 1986, will be seen as a historical and happy day for all Canadians because they had a chance yesterday to see that this Government's financial commitments have been upheld not a single one of our forecasts was overrun.

The actual deficit for 1985-86 will be $33.8 billion—our forecast was for a $33.8 billion deficit.

Our expenditures will not even reach the estimated level of $105 billion. For the first time in decades, there has been a reduction in absolute terms in program expenditures.

As against what the Opposition is suggesting, reducing our expenditures and the deficit will benefit the average Canadian, because he would have had to foot the bill had we not made such cuts.

[English]

THE ECONOMY

SUPPORT FOR BUDGET MEASURES

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday Parliament and the nation were presented with a gift. With the policies outlined by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) we shall be able to pass on to our children and grandchildren the gift of a nation restored to financial health.

There is no greater gift than that of a future, and a future is just what the Government has offered Canadians. Gone are the days of "fly now and pay later". The Government has brought financial sanity back to our nation and thrown aside the irresponsible policies of spend, spend, spend.

Yes, the Government has presented the nation, in an open and forthright manner, with a game plan for economic renewal. It has plotted the course and it has led the way. History will commend the Minister of Finance for this Budget. Future generations will thank the Government for this precious gift that has been given to them.

Oral Questions

EMPLOYMENT

CRITICISM OF BUDGET MEASURES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, we have seen with this Budget that the Conservative Party has no heart for the old or for the young. Not only has the Government cut almost $30 million from the Labour Adjustment Program but it has refused, despite repeated pleas from all sides of the House, to bring back some kind of fairness to the unemployment insurance scheme.

The Government has cut off older workers. It has cut off younger workers. One in six young people in Canada today is without a job, and yet there was not one single word in the Budget about a whole lost generation. What we saw were cuts in the employment programs for young people, cuts of $100 million in the last Budget and $100 million in this Budget. There were cuts for the older workers, but at the same time the Government has enough money in its pocket to give tax rebates to the corporations. That is the true face of the Conservative Party. The old, the young, and the middle-class do not have a place in the "Big Blue Machine".

THE BUDGET

TAX INCREASES—CAPITAL GAINS TAX EXEMPTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon in the House the Minister of Finance, on orders from Wall Street, raised the misery index of ordinary Canadians by imposing the second massive tax increase in nine months. Why did he continue to do this in such an unfair way? Why, if he was to impose such a burden upon the average Canadian family, did he not revoke the $500,000 exemption over a lifetime for those wealthy enough to achieve a capital gain?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, possibly the Hon. Member has not noticed that 580,000 jobs have been created over the past 15 months.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): One of the reasons for that capital gains exemption is to encourage small business and other investors to invest in Canadian companies so that they will create jobs. That is clearly evident by the number of mutual fund sales which have been made to small investors who want to take advantage of that, to help create jobs and to help the country to grow. That is what the small business community is saying to me as well. That is why we did not make any change in the $500,000 exemption.

[Translation]

DIVISION OF FISCAL BURDEN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Minister imposed again on the Canadian people a burden which was not equitably distributed. Why did he insist on imposing an unfair burden on middle-income families in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me be quite upfront here. We have a major problem in the mounting debt of the country, a debt which has been growing at 20 per cent and 25 per cent per annum for the last 10 years. We felt that it was important that that problem be faced head on and that all Canadians had to be part of that battle—70 per cent of it would be fought through spending reductions and 30 per cent through tax increases. Part of those tax increases are closing off tax expenditures which are no longer effective. However, in the balance of 30 per cent, that is a broad tax increase, all Canadians who are taxpayers will have to be a part of the battle against this major problem.

SALES TAX INCREASE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that 70-30 ratio of which the Minister speaks has no application to yesterday's Budget. The reverse was true. Most of the effort to control the deficit was done by way of a tax increase. It was the third successive increase in the sales tax since September, 1984, each one at a billion dollars a crack. Why did the Minister choose this most regressive style of taxation to try to cover his problem?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will make two points on that. The first sales tax increase was announced by the previous Liberal Minister of Finance who did not have the guts to put it in on time. He delayed it long past when he thought an election would come.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The other point is that there is a refundable sales tax credit which is of benefit to low-income Canadians. This is a new and very progressive innovation, an innovation upon which we want to build in the future. I would hope that the Leader of the Opposition would be supporting us in that direction.

FINANCE

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in presenting his Budget yesterday the Minister of Finance said: "The buck stops here". Obviously Wall Street was not listening, because the buck went downward. It has lost a cent and a quarter since yesterday. How can the Minister of Finance believe that the Canadian population will have confidence in him when his own friends do not believe in his Budget?

● (1420)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if I may, let me quote from The Globe and Mail this morning:

Finance Minister Michael Wilson continues to move in the right direction with more energy that he did last spring. His commitment to spending cuts is more credible, his pursuit of higher revenues more politically sound. Yesterday's federal Budget is better—

It is a good budget.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: That is a Tory columnist.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian dollar which was trading at 71.94 cents is now trading at 70.67 cents—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Just a question, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Could the Minister of Finance tell us what he intends to do in order to correct this deplorable situation resulting from his Budget of yesterday?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make one comment on what the Hon. Member has referred to.

Mr. Deans: Why don't you answer?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I would encourage him not to draw judgments based on three or four hours' action in the market-place. It takes a while for the markets to analyse a document of this order of magnitude. For that reason it is more important to see how this happens over the next little while.

An Hon. Member: That is what you said about the banks last year.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let me quote something further:

The Canadian dollar is likely to stabilize and perhaps even rise against its U.S. counterpart.

That is what Peter Rester, vice-president of the Searson Brothers Investment Bank of New York, has said.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

IMPACT OF BUDGET ON TAXPAYERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. The Minister and other members of the Government claim in part they were elected to take Government off the backs of Canadians.

Last night, with another increase in the tax burden, we now have a total of some $1,300 in tax increases for the average family, the largest increase in modern history.

What does the Minister say to the man who was on television last night who claimed that, instead of getting off the backs of Canadians, the Government is crawling all over everybody?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first, I would outline the magnitude of the problem. I would tell him that a 20 per cent to 25 per cent rate of growth in the debt of Canada must be stopped and that all Canadians must be a part of that.

I would then say that if we are able to get this deficit down, interest rates will come down, making it easier for him to renew his mortgage, something about which the Hon. Member himself has shown some concern recently. It will also relieve the burden of debt on his children and his grandchildren, and relieve his children and grandchildren of paying far, far larger taxes if this problem is not brought to order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EFFECT ON HIGH-INCOME GROUPS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister also knows that the average Canadian is interested in some fairness.

Will the Minister admit to the House that, as a result of his Budget last night, a taxpayer in the $40,000 a year bracket with two dependants, a year from now will actually have a tax increase, while a $100,000 a year person with two dependants will get a tax cut of some $800! Is this the Conservative view of justice?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me point out that in The Fiscal Plan it says in 1987-88 the net personal income tax change will be $460 and the corporate income tax change will be an increase of $805 in 1987-1988. There is good balance here between the changes in tax rates.

Mr. Orlikow: Why didn't you answer the question?

FAIRNESS CONCEPT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that within two years corporation taxes will actually be going down and the share paid by individuals will go up by $7 billion. That, for us, is not justice.

I ask the Minister to deal with the second question that I asked. Will he admit that while the $100,000 a year guy will have an $800 tax reduction in two years, the average person will have a tax increase? Is that his concept of fairness? Answer that question.

● (1425)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is well known for his agility in twisting figures.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: It's out of your tables.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member will tell me what base he is using, I will be able to show him that he is wrong in the statement that he has made.

Mr. Broadbent: I'll show you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT REVISED FORECASTS BE TABLED

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the Minister must be at least inwardly devastated by the widespread negative reaction to his Budget. The assumptions the Minister made with respect to interest rates of 9.5 per cent and oil pricing of $22.50 this year simply are not believable. In order to recover some credibility, would the Minister table revised realistic assumptions at least with respect to those two items, as soon as possible?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to revise those statements. I have made comments publicly since the Budget which support the projections we have made. I could go into those in some detail but, Mr. Speaker, you have asked us to respond briefly to questions. If the Hon. Member would like to come to see me after, I can set out very clearly the basis on which those assumptions are made and why they are very realistic assumptions.

INTEREST RATE FORECAST

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I have done a few simple calculations myself on interest. Would the Minister stand in his place and tell us that he honestly and sincerely believes that a 9.5 per cent interest rate is a realistic assumption upon which to base public expenditures in the coming year?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can. Right now interest rates on four-year bonds are at about nine and five-eights per cent. That, together with the 11.5 per cent rate on Treasury Bills, indicates that this is a short-term aberration. We will get interest rates down below those rates in a short period of time.

I will also remind the Hon. Member that the fiscal year has not yet started. It does not start until April 1, and we have 12 months after that during which there will be an average interest rate of 9.5 per cent. Interest rates in the United States are also expected to go down during the same period. All of those reasons support that 9.5 per cent projection.

REVENUE FROM DIRECT TAXES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. Would he confirm that in his own fiscal plan he points out that direct taxes on persons between this year and next year will increase $5.5 billion while direct taxes on corporations will actually decrease by $75 million? Will he simply confirm that?

Mr. Broadbent: It's your table.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): I just read out some tables, Mr. Speaker. In 1986-87 personal income taxes will go up $160 million and corporate income tax will go up $380 million. In 1987-88 it will be $460 million against $805 million. That is quite a change.

FISCAL PLAN STATISTICS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, on page 99 of The Fiscal Plan it is indicated that between 1986-87 and 1987-88—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a preamble. Is there just a question?

Mr. Riis: Will the Minister confirm that personal taxes will go up $5.5 billion and direct taxes on corporations will decrease by $75 million?

Mr. Rossi: You wrote it.

Mr. Rodriguez: Is it a misprint, Mike?

Mr. Broadbent: Is that the French edition or the English?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what I indicated to the Hon. Member—

Mr. Deans: Will you confirm or not?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): He has read out the figures there, but the tax changes—

Mr. Rodriguez: Thank you.

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Michael.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, those reflect—

Mr. Deans: Well done, Michael.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, he is looking at a table which indicates—

Mr. Deans: What the hell do you think he is going to look at?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member will let me continue, I will give him an answer. The Hon. Member is looking at a table which indicates what total revenues will be over this five-year period. However, the changes, as a result of this Budget and the May Budget, are on page 42 which shows that net personal changes will be $160 million against a $380 million increase for corporations.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In 1987—

Mr. Speaker: I must interrupt; this is too long.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON MIDDLE-INCOME TAXPAYERS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): My question is also for the Minister of Finance. Although the Minister says he expects to save more through expenditure cuts than through tax increases, that is not what the estimates show. Two-thirds of Government savings this year will be from tax hikes loaded onto taxpayers in this Budget and the last. Why is the Government telling middle-income Canadians to pay their fair share when clearly they are paying the lion's share?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have made it absolutely clear. When we have to face the problem of the magnitude that we faced on September 4, 1984, it cannot be done in one Budget. We have had three different documents, the November statement, the May Budget, and this Budget.

Mr. Deans: You should read the one you presented first.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The changes have to be judged as a package and that package clearly is set out in The Fiscal Plan showing that 70 per cent—

Mr. Riis: Make the poor pay.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —of the changes is in expenditure reductions, 30 per cent is in tax changes, and part of that 30 per cent is in removing some of the tax expenditures which we viewed as no longer fair and which benefit high-income earners.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): If the Minister really wants to release the creative spirit of individuals from the heavy hand of Government, as he says, why does he not take his hand out of their pockets and let individual Canadians boost the economy by spending more of their money as they see fit?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I listen carefully to the self-righteous questions of the Hon. Member saying to me I should not have my hand in their pockets when it was the previous Government ran up this huge deficit that we had to deal with. Let's look at what we are doing and spending. If the Hon. Member would let me finish—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Copps: Don't be so self-righteous.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Total spending in 1984-85 increased by 13 per cent. Total spending under this administration for the next three years will increase at 3.2 per cent.

Ms. Copps: What about last year?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Non-statutory spending has been stopped dead in its tracks.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It will decline at a rate of 2.7 per cent on average over the next—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Budget Speech was yesterday.

[Translation]

EFFECT OF TAXES ON INDIVIDUALS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Since he is asking us to consider the impact of all the fiscal measures implemented since 1984, is he now prepared to recognize that the impact of these measures will be that, in 1987, the tax burden of individuals will rise to $5.25 billion, while the tax burden of corporations will be reduced? Is it fair that the taxes for individuals should increase to $5.25 billion, while those for corporations are reduced?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that is an identical question that was previously put by the Member from Kamloops-Shuswap. I will repeat my answer. On page 42 of The Fiscal Plan net corporate tax changes are up $380 million as a result of actions taken in the Budget, against $160 million in personal tax changes. Next year it is $460 per person as against $805 for corporations. That shows a clear balance here. The answer still stands on the difference between the table that the Hon. Member referred to and the one from which I just quoted.

PERSONAL AND CORPORATE TAXES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): The Minister's answer is he doesn't like the figures on page 9 in light of his Fiscal Plan so he has chosen to take another instead. If all Canadians are to contribute in bringing down the deficit, corporations should contribute, rather than having their taxes cut while taxes on individuals go up by $5 billion.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): That is exactly the same question, Mr. Speaker. But I will try again for the Hon. Member. The chart on page 90 or 92 of the book shows what the total revenues will be of taxes for individuals and corporations. The chart on page 42 shows the changes that are being made as a result of this Budget, and that is the fundamental difference between those two pages.

Mr. Broadbent: What's the net effect, Michael, the net effect?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I could just ask all Hon. Members to let questions and answers please be heard. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

FORECAST OF UNEMPLOYMENT RATE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. In his Budget why is he ready to accept a 9 per cent unemployment rate at the end of 1987, a full three years after the recession, when in 1981, the year before the recession, the rate was 7.5 per cent? From 1965 to 1980 it was 5.6 per cent. In these circumstances how can he justify accepting 9 per cent in 1987? Why hasn't he made it a priority to bring the rates down to at least 7.5 per cent by that year like Liberals had it before the recession?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, a soft ball like that is too easy; I have got to hit it out of the ball park. The unemployment rate in 1983, I believe it was, or it may have been '82, was 12.7 per cent.

Mr. Allmand: That was a recession.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member says that was a result of the recession. That was a recession that was engineered by the Budget of 1981.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please.

An Hon. Member: It was not a home run; it was a strike out.

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT RATE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Government has now redefined full employment as 9 per cent, and is willing to live with that in 1987, a full three years after the recession. If the Government has such a commitment to do something about employment, why hasn't the Government said one word in the Budget about the 15.9 per cent youth unemployed, 700,000 people whom Senators of all Parties have called a lost generation? There is not one word in the Budget and you are not doing a damn thing about it.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are doing a damn thing about it. We created 580,000 jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Nowhere in that Budget does it say that I accept 9 per cent, or 9.7 per cent, or 9.6 per cent as a rate with which I am happy. That figure is an economic projection; it is a projection that we are bound and determined to do better. To demonstrate how well we are doing, you read the other part in the Budget which says that this country has created more jobs in Canada than all of the western European countries which have 16 times the population of Canada. We have created more jobs than all those countries.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

SALES TAX INCREASE

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. When the Minister was in opposition he repeatedly criticized the Liberals whenever they increased the sales tax. As Minister of Finance he has increased the sales tax not once, not twice, but three times. Will the Minister explain why he is continuing the policy of increasing this fair—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Jong: —unfair and harmful tax?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): There is that old NDP ambivalence.

An Hon. Member: You got it right the first time.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): I believe, Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member referred to the word "fair", what he was referring to was the refundable sales tax credit—which is of benefit to low-income Canadians—to offset the impact of the sales tax, and I thank the Hon. Member very much for his support.

Mr. de Jong: The Minister's notion of fairness and unfairness certainly has us all baffled.

EFFECT ON TAXPAYERS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Is the Minister of Finance not afraid that the unfairness of his Budget will trigger a tax revolt among the Canadian taxpayers?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. The simple answer is that I do not believe that is so.

Mr. de Jong: You don't think they have had enough?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I think Canadians understand the magnitude of the problem we are facing as a country. They have also seen very clearly what we are doing with our own Government spending here in Ottawa. As I said before, discretionary spending, the non-statutory spending has been stopped dead in its tracks. It will decline during this year, next year, and the year after, relative to the last year before we took office. That demonstrates to Canadians that we are getting our House in order here in Ottawa. We are asking them to do a little bit by accepting that sales tax—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —in order to help get the problem under control.

EFFECT ON LOW-INCOME FAMILIES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, last year the Government's Budget hit at our grandparents. This year it is hitting at our families. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance this question. Do you really believe—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order.

Mr. Frith: —that this is a fair Budget?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Frith: Does the Minister really believe that this is a fair Budget when you are asking—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order.

Mr. Frith: —four million Canadian families who live below the poverty line to share in deficit reduction to the tune of an increase in their taxes of $225 and an additional $300 in sales tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member has been talking to the same people I have spoken to this morning. I am also sure that he would like me to relate those comments which say that what we are doing on the refundable sales tax credit is good social policy; what we are doing on advancing the payment of the Child Tax Credit is good social policy; what we are doing in directing $100 million to those people on welfare to help them get back into the job force is good social policy; and what we are doing on a program for older worker adjustment, to help those Canadians who have lost their jobs get back into the workforce, is good social policy. All of these things together demonstrate clearly that this Government is very sensitive to the needs of those people, those lower-income Canadians and those Canadians who are out of a job.

SOCIAL POLICY INQUIRY

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister really believe it is good social policy to ask families earning $20,000 a year to pay an additional $225 more this year in income tax plus an additional $300 more in sales tax? Is that good social policy?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the figures the Hon. Member uses are wrong. They are wrong, wrong, wrong. What I would point out to the Hon. Member is that the items which are referred in my first answer to him are good social policy and there is not one person in the Liberal Party—if they look into their own heart and soul—who will not say to himself or herself: "You are on the right track, Mike".

EFFECT ON SASKATCHEWAN FAMILIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Kneel down.

Mr. Nystrom: For ordinary Canadians, yesterday's Budget meant taxes, taxes, and taxes. Is the Minister of Finance aware that the average Saskatchewan family have had their taxes increased by $1,340 since the election of the Conservative Party in September of 1984? Is he aware of that?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to families in Saskatchewan. I think that those families in Saskatchewan are very pleased with the initiatives we have put forward—

Mr. Broadbent: You said that about the pensioners last year.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —for Saskatchewan farmers. I believe those families in Saskatchewan are also very pleased with what we have done in support of those farmers in Saskatchewan who were suffering from the drought last summer. I suggest the Hon. Member speak to those families in Saskatchewan and just find out where they are coming from.

Mr. Broadbent: He will; don't worry, Mike.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I believe they will be pretty supportive.

Mr. Nystrom: Those families in Saskatchewan know that Tory times are tough times.

An Hon. Member: Right on.

TREATMENT OF THE WEALTHY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Does the Minister of Finance think it is fair that the average Saskatchewan family should pay $1,304 dollars more in Conservative taxes since September, 1984 just because the wealthy people are not paying their fair share? Is that fair?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member neglects—not deliberately, I am sure—to remind people that we have reduced the dividend tax credit from which investors benefit, that we have eliminated the scientific research tax credit and income splitting, and have eliminated the use of tax shelters to finance yachts and things like that.

Mr. Nystrom: We don't have yachts, Mike.

Mr. Rodriguez: What about capital gains?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have eliminated the carve-outs which were of benefit to the oil and gas industry. All of these measures demonstrate that this Government has brought in more tax reform and cleaned up the Tax Act left to us by the previous Government, in a much more—

Mr. Rodriguez: Horse feathers.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —forthright way than—

Mr. Speaker: Order. These answers are long.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS DEFICIT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed as well to the Minister of Finance. The deficit about which the Minister spoke yesterday on Public Accounts was $29.5 million, after doing some strange changes with respect to the Public Accounts. The National Accounts deficit is only $23.2 billion. Why did the Minister not use the National Account deficit figures when speaking yesterday, particularly in view of the fact that it is the National Accounts we compare when we are comparing one country's deficit to another country's deficit?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has a very valid question.

An Hon. Member: Have you got a valid answer?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have used the Public Accounts figures because those are the ones which have been used over the years and those are the ones with which people are most familiar. But the National Accounts figure and the cash requirement figure are the two calculations which are most comparable, as an example, to the United States definition of a deficit. The cash requirement—that is the money we have to borrow every year—will be down to $11 billion by 1990-91 on very conservative economic projections. We could even have a balanced Budget, with a little better performance in the economy.

FAMILY INCOME STANDARDS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, he announced a refundable tax credit in connection with sales tax. Could the Minister tell us on the basis of what tenet of social justice he decided that, from now on, a family with a $16,000 income is a rich family, while a family with an income of $15,000 or less is a poor family?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member, I believe, would acknowledge, this is a major progressive innovation in tax policy and I am sure he is quite supportive of the direction in which we are going. He would probably say that he would like to see us go further and we may well go further. But this is an experiment. We are trying to get this tax credit into practice so that we can see whether in future years we can expand on this as a means of providing some offset to the burden of sales tax on low-income earners.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF TAX CREDIT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. Does he realize that in his May 23rd Budget, he reduced the maximum income for admissibility to the tax credit from $26,000 to $23,000, and that he is now reducing it further from $23,000 to $15,000? Why did he not use the same figures as for the child tax credit? Why create three classes of poor people within the Canadian society?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is using apples and oranges for comparisons here. I am sure he knows that.

An Hon. Member: He wouldn't know that.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Be honest, now.

● (1450)

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Possibly the Hon. Member does not know that.

What I would say to him is that this is an initiative upon which we want to build.

Mr. Malépart: Des pauvres, ce sont des pauvres; des riches ce sont des riches!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member would keep his mouth more tightly closed, he might be able to hear an answer.

What we are saying is that this is a start. This is an initiative upon which we want to build in future years. Once we get some experience with it I think we will be able to expand it, as I indicated in my previous answer.

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON ONTARIO FAMILIES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Does he not realize that in Ontario the average family has had an additional tax increase of some $1,304,50 imposed on it since his Government was elected?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry. I missed the question.

Mr. Young: Does the Minister not realize that the average family in Ontario has had an increase in additional taxes of some $1,304.50 since his Government was elected?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to hide behind the fact that we have had tax increases. I have been right upfront with that. I have said that we have had tax increases. The reason for that is because we have to beat this deficit problem.

I should also point out that during this same period an individual will save $576 annually on his one-year mortgage, and on a three-year mortgage it will be about $1,164. These are savings. There is a balance here. As we get the deficit down, we will be able to spread the benefits of it through lower interest rates into every nook and cranny of the country. Every Canadian will benefit.

CORPORATE TAX LEVELS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question also is for the Minister of Finance. What I want to know from the Minister is why taxes on average Canadians are increasing while taxes on corporations are decreasing?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They are not!

Mr. Deans: They are.

Mr. Young: Is that fair?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think this is the fourth time—look to page 42.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Page 44 comes before page 99. We got you there.

Mr. Broadbent: That's very good, Ray.

Mr. Rodriguez: You should have written the Budget.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

INCREASED FUNDING

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question through you is for the Minister of State for Science and Technology. For some time I have been concerned about the level of funding for the three granting councils, in particular NSERC. In yesterday's Budget some $300 million was set aside for the granting councils. Can the Minister tell the House if the level of funding will be adequate for NSERC to provide that flow of trained scientists and engineers for us to build a technological society?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention, together with my colleagues, the Secretary of State and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to announce tomorrow the details of the significant increases for the funding councils, which will amount to $1 billion over five years. Indeed, it is expected that we will meet the expectations of the science community to build on Canada's future for the 21st century.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

EFFECT OF BUDGET

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I remind the Minister that equality of opportunity is of paramount concern to a great many Canadians. Will the Minister explain the fairness of the substantial reductions which have been made in the economic and regional development envelope when the poorer regions of the country in Atlantic Canada and in British Columbia are crying out for additional assistance from the national Government here in Ottawa?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, one of the things upon which I have commented on a number of occasions is that if we can get interest rates down, the effect of lower interest rates will affect every part of the country. John Bulloch and Michael McCracken have both indicated their expectation that there will be significant reductions in interest rates—2 percentage points, 5 percentage points.

The Hon. Member is also very much aware of the important initiative in the Budget to help the Atlantic region in terms of creating jobs. The $1 billion Atlantic Enterprise Program, which the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion is announcing today in the Atlantic provinces, will be of great benefit to people throughout the Atlantic community, as well as the Gaspé region.

PROVISIONS AFFECTING ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Minister has mentioned the $1 billion fund because this Government has reduced its commitment to regional and economic development in that envelope by $6 billion—

Mr. Speaker: Just a question, please.

Mr. Dingwall: Where is the fairness to the poorer regions of the country? The Minister is slashing Atlantic Canadians and the people of western Canada by a substantial amount. Where is the fairness?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member is dead wrong.

Mr. Dingwall: It's right here in your book, The Fiscal Plan, at page 31, a 38 per cent reduction.

Mr. Deans: I think someone should have given lessons on the book.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Minister may want to complete his answer.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to give an answer if the Hon. Member would care to listen.

We have cut spending in the economic and regional development envelope; but we have done it in a very selective way.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have cut spending in those areas of the country which can afford to take cuts. We have cut spending in the off oil program, CHIP, and the insulation program. We have cut spending in those programs which have not proven themselves to be effective. However, we have been very careful not to cut spending in those parts of the country which can least afford it, which is why we have not cut spending—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Dingwall: Supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—BUDGET MEASURES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Finance concerns British Columbia. Does the Minister realize that unemployment remains very high in British Columbia and that his Budget has not provided any special assistance in this regard to British Columbians? Does he also not realize that families who face unemployment and who may lose their jobs tomorrow simply cannot afford an extra $1,300 in taxes which his Government is imposing on them?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, 51,000 jobs have been created in British Columbia since 1984. That is a pretty good record.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In addition to that, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion signed a very generous Economic Regional Development Agreement with the Province of British Columbia. We recently entered into an agreement with the mining company Cominco to support employment in that part of the Province of British Columbia. Those are three clear initiatives which indicate our support for the Province of British Columbia.

TAXES PAID BY AVERAGE FAMILY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, is it fair that an average Canadian family, many of which are headed by women these days—women who are working on low wages—has to pay over $1,300 in extra taxes while wealthy Canadians are not paying their fair share?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again I think we have some imaginative use of numbers here. What is very important to remember, and the Hon. Member should recall my last answer to the Hon. Member from Nova Scotia, is that if we cut spending more it will require fewer taxes. However, if we cut spending more it will probably affect those parts of British Columbia about which she is concerned. This is why we have a balance here. This is why we have put 70 per cent in savings while keeping 30 per cent for tax increases in order that all Canadians can participate.

HUMAN RIGHTS

GERMAN DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC—DISCUSSION OF ABUSES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Press reports indicate that the Government is negotiating with the German Democratic Republic which wants to open an embassy here in Ottawa. In view of the abysmal human rights record of that country and the fact that it is not living up to the Helsinki Accord, and that just a year ago citizens of—

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think it is time for a question.

Mr. Friesen: I would like to ask the Minister if he would use this opportunity to negotiate with that country so that it may improve its human rights record and provide for better delivery on the Helsinki Accord.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are discussing actively with the authorities of East Germany a number of particular cases of abuses of human rights, some of which the Hon. Member himself has been involved in very helpfully. We intend to continue to do that. We also intend to continue to discuss with them a possible reciprocal arrangement regarding embassies.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader what business he proposes for the coming week.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have already advised the Opposition House Leaders of a slight change in the projected order of business that I had announced last week. Tomorrow, rather than carry on with the budget debate, we will proceed to second reading of the borrowing authority Bill that was introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) last night. We will return on Monday to the Budget debate and carry that on to its conclusion.

I should also point out that there have been discussions with the House Leaders and I think it is agreeable that there is an extraordinary circumstance which we are all happy to accommodate. On Monday, there will be, by unanimous consent and by order of the House, a disposition to adjourn the House after Question Period and suspend the sitting of the House until 4.30 p.m. to allow Hon. Members to attend the memorial service for our late colleague, the Hon. T. C. Douglas. This time will be lost to the debate but it will be counted as a full day in the debate on the Budget.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would like to extend the thanks of our Party to the Government for extending that opportunity and courtesy.

Mr. Speaker: The House should know that we now have, in effect, a motion put by unanimous consent that the House suspend the sitting at the end of Question Period on Monday until 4.30 p.m., and I think there is unanimous consent for its introduction and adoption.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: So ordered.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the Motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Mr. Johnston (p. 11006); and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Riis (p. 11009).

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, any examination of the Budget presented last night must be considered jointly with the Budget presented in May, 1985. When the two Budgets are considered together, it is pretty clear that the Government has made a massive attack on the taxpayers and consumers of Canada.

There have been massive tax increases but no tax reform. There has been an ouright attack on wage earners and salaried employees. There has been no repeal of the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption. As I have said, there has been outright gouging through taxation of Canadian taxpayers and consumers.

Let us look briefly at what Canadians have in store for them. As a result of last night's Budget, taxes have been increased by $1.9 billion. If we project those increases through to 1990-91, they amount to $3.42 billion. What is interesting is the inequity between the amounts raised by those tax increases on individuals and the amounts raised by taxation on corporations and businesses. Of the $1.9 billion that the Budget will raise through taxation, $1.5 billion will be levied on individuals and only $380 million on corporations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. If there are people who would like to have conversations, would they please go behind the curtains?

Mr. Allmand: If we look at the figures in the Budget, we will see that the impact of the massive taxation falls on individuals and does not fall on corporations and businesses. As a matter of fact, over the next three years, corporate taxes will decline and taxes on individuals will increase.

I simply referred just a moment ago to the increases in taxes as a result of last night's Budget, but if those are put together with the increases in taxes imposed by the Budget of last May, the total increase in taxes for 1986-87, the next fiscal year, will be $6.2 billion, by 1990-91, it will be $13 billion, $13 billion taken out of the pockets of Canadians through taxation as a result of the two Budgets presented since the Conservatives came to power.

These are massive increases in taxation for individuals. Some say that they are the greatest increases in 15 years. The tax reductions are for the benefit of corporations and very little is done for individuals.

As well, I must remind the House that the measures introduced in the Budget of May 1985 are still in effect. There is still a Bill going through Parliament designed to reduce the indexation on family allowances. That Bill is presently in the Senate. It was pushed through this House by means of closure. There is still legislation that provides for the deindexation of personal taxation and cut-backs on unemployment insurance for Canadians taking early retirement. The Government is not only massively raising taxes but also cutting back on Government programs and in many cases on Government programs which are useful to needy Canadians.

For example, as was referred to during Question Period by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), there has been a cut of $9.1 billion from the economic and regional development envelope, a cut amounting to 38 per cent over three years, a cut which will affect very severely the regions with very high unemployment which are facing difficult economic times. There are not only increases in taxation but very important and callous expenditure cuts. It is amazing that the Conservative Party bragged about those cuts as if it were a great achievement to take away benefits needed by Canadians to meet their daily needs of life.

The Canadian Jobs Strategy Program is being cut back by $100 million in 1987-88. There are employment programs in the Budget for older workers and welfare recipients, but those programs are vague for the time being and are being delayed. The Budget indicates that they will have to be worked out in due course with the provinces and the private sector. We do not really know the details of those programs, and in any case they do not come into effect right away. On the other hand, the taxes announced last night are certain and immediate. They come into effect as soon as possible.

With respect to the cuts, the blue book of Estimates which we just received today will reveal more. We will know what other spending programs will be cut back. However, the cutting of these programs, many of which had a humanitarian purpose, is nothing of which to be proud. Many of these programs provided essential services to needy Canadians and now those Canadians will have to do without those services and they will get to know about that as they begin to live with the situation of those programs no longer existing.

It is also clear that the cutting of the regional development programs and so on will lead to a situation where the gulf between the rich and the poor will become greater, where the rich will become richer and the poor will become poorer. A recent article in The Toronto Star indicated that welfare cases in Metropolitan Toronto were up by 48 per cent. It indicated that the number of people on general welfare in Metropolitan Toronto went up 48 per cent in the last four years, at a time when the Government was claiming that there had been a decline in unemployment. In fact, the number of working poor is increasing at a time when those people in the upper or richer brackets are becoming even richer and are escaping many of the tax measures that are being imposed upon those who earn income from salaries and wages. One could argue that not only are these measures to cut back on Government programs and to impose heavy taxes on salaried and wage-earning Canadians cruel in themselves, but they are against the provisions of the new Constitution. Section 36 of the Constitution, one of the outstanding sections, is a very concise declaration of Liberal policy and philosophy. It indicates that without altering the legislative authority of Parliament or the provincial legislatures, or the rights of any of them in respect of the exercise of their legislative authority, Parliament and the legislatures, together with the Government of Canada, are committed to promoting equal opportunities for the well-being of Canada, furthering economic development to reduce disparity and opportunity, and providing essential public services of reasonable quality to all Canadians. We have a commitment in the Constitution by the Governments of Canada to narrow the gulf between the rich and the poor, not only on an individual basis, but on a regional basis—central Canada vis-à-vis the Atlantic area, the south of our country vis-à-vis the north of our country. There is a commitment in the Constitution to do that. The Government is cutting programs without paying any real attention to whether or not the programs are necessary. That is how it is being done. Priority has not been given to the programs themselves but simply to cutting back.

This imposition of taxes is contrary, if not to the letter of Article 36 of the Constitution, at least to the spirit of it. The gulf is getting larger all the time, yet the Government persists with a program which it believes will bring good to the country. The Government's models in all this are Margaret Thatcher in Great Britain and Ronald Reagan in the United States. It is interesting to read an editorial which appeared in the New York International Herald Tribune and was written in London, England. It dealt with the growing criticism against the Thatcher Government for doing the very thing which our Government is doing in the Budget. It read in part:

> Mrs. Thatcher's rivals from the liberal wing of the Conservative Party now say to her that enough is enough, and that the unemployed should be put to work to build needed housing and public works. They say that industry should be backed by government, just as it is in France, West Germany, and Japan; that "not everything can be left to market forces"—
> The critics are calling for a restoration of that measure of social spending and of government intervention in the economy that is both traditional Conservative Party policy and exists in one form or another in all Western European countries.

It is true that it has been a tradition of Conservative Parties, of Liberal Parties and of Social Democratic Parties to try to bring back some balance between the rich and the poor. Since the Second World War, Governments in western democracies have played the role of redistributing wealth in their countries. It has only been in the last few years, under the Governments of Reagan in the United States and of Thatcher in England, that there has been an abandonment of that principle of Government. As was pointed out in the editorial, it was even a policy of Conservative Parties at one time. The tide is turning in Britain. They have seen the result of that type of policy—a widened gulf between the rich and the poor, and a two-tiered society in which there is turmoil and in which there are soccer and race riots in the great northern cities of Britain because not enough attention is being paid to the humanitarian side, to social problems or to political problems. The total concentration has been on the bottom line, on what is profitable and on what is and is not a deficit. That is not enough in the long run. As a matter of fact it is even poor economic policy because these conditions undermine economic well-being.

At the present time there are 4.5 million people living below the poverty line in Canada. There were several measures in the Budget of last May and the one of last night which are contrary to long-standing traditions in western democracies of dealing with broad-based social and economic problems. The Government, with these two Budgets, is abandoning its traditional role of equalizer between the rich and the poor to ensure that the wealth of the country is distributed more fairly.

Let me concentrate for a few minutes on the problem of unemployment. It was very interesting during Question Period today when I asked questions of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). It was mentioned in the Budget that they expected to have a 9 per cent unemployment rate at the end of 1987, which is a full three years after the turn around in the recession. The recession not only hit Canada; it hit the whole western world. A full three years later the Minister is still willing to accept a 9 per cent unemployment rate. In a supplementary answer he said that he did not accept it, but there was no other target in the Budget. The only target mentioned in that document was the 9 per cent. I pointed out to him that in 1981, the year before the recession, the average rate of unemployment in Canada was 7.5 per cent. In the period from 1965 to 1980, it was 5.6 per cent. It jumped in one year, from 1981 to 1982, to 11.9 per cent.

Mr. Andre: Who was in Government?

Mr. Allmand: The Liberals were in government. The Conservatives were in Government in Britain under the same circumstances, and it jumped to 13 per cent and is still 13 per cent. The Government ignores the fact that the recession is over and it is still willing to live with a rate of unemployment which is much higher than it was in pre-recession times. It is putting its head in the sand and is ignoring the feelings of the people of the country. When we read the editorials and the polls on this subject, it is evident that the Canadian public is not impressed with the repeated claims about the 580,000 jobs. Perhaps it is because there are so many new Members in the House that many of them do not know anything about what happened before September, 1984. The Conservatives boast that these 580,000 jobs in 17 months, from September, 1984 to January, 1986, is some kind of a record. That is false. In the 17 month-period from August, 1978 to January, 1980, 597,000 new jobs were created, and 631,000 new jobs were created in the 17-month period from September, 1972 to January, 1974 in a smaller labour market.

Mr. McKnight: What recession are you talking about?

Mr. Allmand: That was a period of expansion, and it should be a period of expansion right now. Here we have a Government in a post-recession period yet willing to live with a 9 per cent unemployment rate and doing nothing about it. As a matter of fact there are only two measures in the Budget that will do anything very specific about unemployment. One has to deal with older workers and that for the moment is very vague. The program will not come into efect until God knows when, for many months, if not years, because there is no target. The Government says it has to be developed with the provinces and with the private sector. There is also a program to help find employment for people on welfare, but that also is vague. It has to be negotiated and is sometime in the future.

Ministers get up one after the other and boast about their great performance. But what is the reaction of the Canadian public? Another Gallup poll published today showed that over 55 per cent of Canadians have little faith in the Government's jobless tactics. In a poll published on January 13, 1986, 50 per cent say that unemployment is still the major concern.

The editorial I read into the record the other day came from the St. John's evening Telegram for February 8, 1986. Its headline read, "Nothing to Cheer about when there are still 1.25 Million Canadians Unemployed Three Years after the Recession and we have a Government that is still Happy with its Record in Employment". I have an editorial that expresses the situation very well. It is from The New York Times on the situation in the United States where the unemployment rate is down to 6.6 per cent. It reads, in part:

> Still, Too Few Have Jobs.
> Each month the White House trumpets another increase in the number of Americans with jobs.—Even 6.6 per cent is high unemployment, especially so in a strong economy.—For unemployment to endure at such high levels is bad news.

The same thing applies in Canada, Mr. Speaker. This Budget is a massive gouging of Canadian taxpayers and consumers through taxation and cuts in Government programs. It is a Budget which, I believe, will not stimulate prosperity but will retard the recovery because it is taking too much out of the economy at a time when we want to expand. It is a Budget which has given no priority whatever to unemployment. There is nothing for youth unemployment, nothing for those who are on long-term unemployment, and nothing for women. It is a Budget that is a very regressive economic document that has very little to say about it in micro or macro economic terms. I believe that once Canadians have had an opportunity to read it and to feel its impact, the standing of the Government will fall even faster than it did after the last Budget.

By repeating misleading figures over and over, as the old saying goes, you can fool some of the people some of the time but a lot of them are going to find out sooner or later what the real situation is. Then you will face the reality of the anger and frustration of those Canadians who are not getting a fair deal and cannot find the jobs they deserve.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any questions or comments? Debate. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon.

The Budget—Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon)

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have under the Standing Orders of the House 20 minutes to address the subject this afternoon. I regret that because there is a great deal to be said on this Budget. The people of Canada and my constituents in Thunder Bay-Nipigon certainly expect us to speak to the Budget and to express their indignation and outrage at what the Government plans to do to them.

There are only 70 of us in the Opposition, and since this morning only 69. I would think Canadians from coast to coast would wish that there were many more of us in the Opposition to speak honestly to the situation facing us and make quite clear how much the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has misjudged his targets in deciding how to deal with economic situations and what kinds of taxes and spending plans to arrive at.

Last night at eleven o'clock I had a call from a constituent. I was busy looking through some of the pre-Budget speculation in the press. He wanted to underscore his reaction against the Budget, against the taxing proposals it included, and to encourage me to be very clear about his reaction and the reaction of many people in Thunder Bay-Nipigon at what the Government presumes to do.

I assured him that I would have the opportunity this afternoon and, given the Budget which the Government has laid on us, I appreciate the opportunity to say something about its shortcomings.

I think it is worth taking a moment to consider our situation. The Minister of Finance has done that from his own limited perspectives. Of course, the Government has done a good deal to emphasize the good things that happened in 1985. I think we can say that the Government and the Canadian people were lucky in 1985. Interest rates fell. The existence of a new Government gave many people hope. As a result of those factors, a good deal of them coming from outside the country, things improved.

I remember being shocked about a year ago to have a Conservative back-bencher tell me that the Government's budget plans were tied into hopes that Canada would be able to ride toward recovery on the coat-tails of the Americans. If we could only tie into the American recovery, we would be in luck. In 1985, we got a certain measure of that luck but there is no assurance in 1986 that we will get the same thing. There is every possibility that interest rates will not decline. Certainly real interest rates, the difference between the inflation rate and the going interest rates, are very, very high. There is concern about what will happen to the dollar.

Actions of the Government, particularly focusing on deficits have done a good deal to bring uncertainty into the money markets. The stupid statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) last September, for example, that Canada was bankrupt was one of those irresponsible statements that would sooner or later come home to roost. Unfortunately, when it does, it does so for all Canadians.

The uncertainty in the energy markets is surely designed to make 1986 as perilous a year on an international basis as well as in Canada as we have had for a long time. All of that brings into question the proposition of the Minister of Finance that we will have a 3.7 per cent growth rate in Canada. If we are that lucky, we will see a decline in unemployment of 0.2 per cent which, given a growing labour force, could mean no decline at all in the number of people who are unemployed.

That is the situation that we face in 1986. What could the Government have done about these circumstances? What would have ensured that this would be a Budget for prosperity rather than a prescription for continued depression in the outlying regions of the country and depression in southern Ontario where the recovery of 1985 was the most obvious? What is there to ensure that my constituents in Thunder Bay-Nipigon, who have been very responsive to the arguments that the country desperately needs tax reform, will do better, that they will live better and that more business will be done in the shops and the stores in Thunder Bay if there is an improvement in the fairness and a decline in the unfairness of the present tax system? What hope do we have out of the Budget given to us yesterday afternoon?

I do not think there is any hope at all in those terms. One of the uncertain factors for 1986 is the increasing weight of taxation on individual Canadians and on families. The increasing weight of taxation includes particularly very sharp increases in sales taxes which are borne by all Canadians. The Government has been half-way compassionate enough to recognize that sales taxes bear heavily on everyone, no matter what their income level, and so there is a refund of some of the sales tax in this credit proposal, which is one of the two bright spots in the Budget. The other is some small changes in tax expenditures. In that we see recognition of how serious the effect of the Budget will be on people all across the country.

The weight of taxation is a fundamental problem which faces the Canadian economy. I want to say something about that while emphasizing that the Government's need for revenue, which is obvious to everyone, is the challenge which the Minister of Finance chose to address, but in a most misguided way. If we needed revenue, why, in God's name and in the name of Canadian prosperity, did the Minister of Finance not consider that great range of tax breaks, which he knows is out there, which he has tried to estimate but many of which he has been unable to estimate?

Why did he not come to grips with more than the inventory credit and the investment tax credit provisions which, between them, are expected to bring in $380 million while the 3 per cent surtax on personal income tax alone is expected to bring in $560 million? That is a measure of how half-hearted, tentative, and almost nonexistent the response of the Minister of Finance is to the enormous revenue challenges that face him and to the incredible unfairness of the Canadian tax system.

There is a need for revenue. Why was there not a consideration of the other tax expenditures? There was no shortage of discussion of them. Speculation in the press focused on these. I could point out various instances to which others pointed.

Some of them, of course, would bear on individuals. Far more of them would bear on the activities of corporations. As John Bulloch, President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, recognizes so well, the areas that encourage large companies to spend money on capital equipment should be dealt with, because they are designed to reduce employment. When economic activity is slow there is no investment of this sort taking place anyway. Therefore, to provide breaks to companies is a short-sighted thing to do.

The Minister of Finance blew the opportunities in these areas. I would like to put two of them together in a way which may perhaps be somewhat novel. Lottery earnings are not taxable in this country. It is estimated that if lottery prizes were taxed it might produce $500 million to $600 million for the Government. It is possible that it would bring in even more money than the 3 per cent surtax on personal incomes does now. There was no such proposal.

However, insurance awards remain taxable. When making decisions on liability insurance claims judges will have to make adjustments for tax losses in order to ensure that someone who has won a suit resulting from an injury receives a decent income. Judges will have to drive the amounts up into the billion dollar range. Surely one could have considered making insurance awards of this sort, which are rare enough in this country, nontaxable, while at the same time taxing lottery prizes where blind luck is involved. In the process every Canadian would have benefited. It may have been possible to avoid a 3 per cent surtax on personal incomes, and it would surely have been possible to introduce some stability into the insurance market which has been incredibly difficult over the last weeks. There is an example of some novel thinking which should have been brought to bear in drafting this Budget. There was nothing of the sort, of course.

This Budget is a continuation of the principles of budget-making which go back to the early 1970s. This is in fact a Lib-Con Budget. It is the kind of Budget that Liberal Finance Ministers have brought forward quite a number of times, including the restraint. It is perhaps more severe on the taxation side. My Conservative colleagues would surely throw the petroleum and gas revenue tax at me as an instance of a similar kind of Liberal Budget, just to underscore the point that there is not much to choose from between Liberals and Conservatives when they are Ministers of Finance.

What is the consequence of the taxation systems that we have had over the past 13 or 14 years? One of the consequences which the Minister of Finance is obsessed by is a national debt that is nearing $225 billion. If the Auditor General is right that the tax expenditures are running at anywhere from $30 billion to $50 billion a year now, the larger part of that being to the advantage of corporate enterprise, then the Canadian people bear a national debt burden of over $200 billion, which matches the amount of money that has been put into the pockets of large corporations, managers, shareholders, and so on, over the last dozen years.

What is the consequence of that? In the current budget year the Government is hoping for budgetary revenue of over $70 billion. Of that, $37 billion will come from personal income tax. If the interest on the national debt next year is $27 billion, then three-quarters of what all Canadians pay in taxes will go toward interest on the national debt. If successive Liberal and Conservative Governments have financed corporate enterprise with our money to the tune of $225 billion, and that represents an interest loan next year of $27 billion, then three-quarters of the money that all of us will be paying to the Government of Canada is going to go to those who hold the Government's financial instruments. We are going to be loaded down with more and more tax and are going to be paying more and more of our hard-earned money to the Government of Canada for transfer to those who have had the money over the last dozen years to buy the Government's financial instruments.

That is what Lib-Con Budgets have done. The Canadian people have been conned in the most incredible way. Big enterprises in the country have been enriched in the most astounding way. All of us, as individuals, pay the shot to the financial institutions that hold such large portions of these instruments. If they are not financial institutions, they are surely prosperous Canadians who have the money to invest in these. They get some of it back if they pay taxes and also hold these. That is the result of a dozen years or more of budgeting.

Did we see any recognition of that on the part of the Minister of Finance? Did we see any recognition that this country is in desperate need of real tax reform in which the tax expenditures are dealt with? All of those that do not generate employment in this country are done away with so that the mind, and spirit-sapping impact of unemployment would be ended for the Canadian people. Did we see any of that? No, we did not. We saw our Minister of Finance remain obsessed with a national debt, whose total he does not consider in terms of how it was built up and who is quite prepared to continue to burden individual Canadians with this kind of taxation. On these facts ordinary Canadians are not going to support the Conservative Party. If I had my way they would not allow Liberals to con them into thinking that the Liberal Party will do any better, because its record over the years is responsible for much of this.

The Minister of Finance has done his part to add to the complexity of a tax system that everyone knows is almost incomprehensible. I had a Government back-bencher telling me just yesterday after the Budget Speech that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), is absolutely on the right track, maybe not so much on fairness as on simplifying the tax system. The Minister of Finance does not plan to do that.

Colleagues from the Conservative Party, do you really expect the people of Canada to support you when you pull off that kind of stunt? There is a tax revolt building in this country. I discovered in the election campaign of 1984 that that is a tax revolt that we New Democrats can lead. I am going to do my part to see to it that the people of Canada know exactly how you, as well as the Liberals, are transferring their hard-earned money into the wealth of those who control the large enterprises, the seven families and groups that dominate so much of our economy. I want them to know that that is what Liberals and Conservatives do to them. Once they appreciate those things, there is going to be a political revolution in this country that will surprise you and be enormously gratifying to me and to my constituents in Thunder Bay-Nipigon who desperately want to lead good and prosperous lives to find the employment that the Government promised them. The Conservatives are not going to do that. In fact, the Minister of Finance has suggested that he wants to get the balance of program expenditures back to the early 1960s. He is too much of an economist and has been absent from here so that he does not remember what the early 1960s were. A lot of Canadians have not forgotten the Diefenbaker depression. If he wants to take us back to that time, the only good thought I can utter is that he might try to take us back to the more balanced tax situation of those days, a good deal closer to fairness between the corporate and the individual. For the 1.3 million Canadians who continue to look for work and are told by the Minister of Finance that if the growth rate is really terrific this year at 3.7 per cent we may see a 0.2 per cent decline in unemployment, this could mean, as happened in January when it dropped to under 10 per cent, that there were actually more people looking for work in January than there had been before because the labour force continues to grow.

The Canadian people expected a lot better. The Minister of Finance, when he was in the Opposition, spoke at various places against the Finance Minister of the time, Allan MacEachen. I have a copy of his speech to the Canadian Club here. He quoted a businessman at the time saying to him, "What could the Government do for the value of the dollar?" He hesitated for a moment and then said, "Mr. MacEachen could rise from his seat in the House and say, 'I quit'." I think that that is a fair thing to say to a Minister of Finance who has been an incredibly naive man and politically insensitive. If Michael Wilson would like to rise in his place in the House and say, "I quit" then the country would stand a better chance of becoming the prosperous place that my constituents and people from coast to coast want it to be.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I have just a comment and three points I would like my hon. friend to respond to. He was attacking the sale tax increase and, in fairness, he did acknowledge that there was the sale tax credit, which will help lower income Canadians, and I thank him for that acknowledgement. He went on to make quite an attack on the corporate tax system. I would like his comment on this, because a corporation is nothing more than a legal fiction. Any taxes imposed on that corporation are simply passed through on the price of their goods to the consumers. To increase the corporate tax has always seemed to me personally to be a regressive tax very much like the sales tax. If a corporation is building widgets it is going to pass that through, because if it does not pass it through it is going to go out of business.

There is quite a strong argument that corporate taxes should be seen in the same light as sales taxes as compared to the progressive income tax that is levied on people so that the people with more wealth pay more than those with less wealth. I would like his comment on that.

With respect to lotteries, it has long been thought that if you make an investment for a business you deduct the cost of interest on the money against the earnings. If we are going to tax the earnings of lotteries then surely the Government would have to permit a deduction of the tickets purchased, which leads you to the position that if you sell 14 million tickets at $1 and $14 million are deducted from income tax, in order for somebody to win $5 million—because the rest of that money, the difference between the pay-out and the number of tickets sold, goes usually into charitable goods—will we not be in a net loss position? I would appreciate his comment on that.

The last point is with respect to tax expenditures. I wonder if he would be kind enough to acknowledge that it was the present Minister of Finance who, in 1984, for the first time since the former Conservative Minister of Finance in 1979, filed a statement listing all the tax expenditures? So that it has really been only a year since we have had a general public debate to find out how large those expenditures are in terms of our personal deductions, our spousal deductions, our child deductions, and, true, all of the benefits that go through to corporations. Surely as part of that national debate he would recognize that one year is not an unduly long time. The Minister has already attacked about nine of those tax expenditures, and I am sure we can expect more in the future. Will he acknowledge that that was a wise policy move to publish that document?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): I thank my colleague for those questions. As far as the taxation of corporations is concerned, I know there has been a prevailing tendency for some time to argue the proposition that he suggests, that corporations should not be taxed; we should just tax the ultimate recipients of the gains, if you will. The fact of the matter is that you can talk about legal fictions or whatever, what counts in the courts is the existence of the corporation as a legal person. It does not take any perception at all, in examining corporations at work, to realize that they are, in fact, most active and constructive, dynamic, acquisitive, legal personalities. The Hon. Member refers to the fact that corporations use a good deal of this profit. Perhaps I should refer to the fact that in using these retained earnings for investment purposes corporations are doing some odd things, at least in economic theory. One would think that if there were anything like free competition prevailing then these profits would be competed away. What we see instead is corporations that have substantial retained earnings and are able to use them to invest. This fact leads me to think that having these legal persons in the country not by any means distributing anything like all of the earnings that they take in justifies our saying that if they are going to use them for investment purposes they should share some of those earnings with the people of Canada. This is in order to reduce the weight of taxation on individuals so that those individuals would have larger incomes which they could take off to supermarkets and shopping centres to buy products these companies produce which would keep them in business. These people who make this particular argument for the corporation seem to forget completely that they are in the business of making money. The way to make money is to have business grow, and the only way to have business grow is to have people with more money to spend. That means sharing in the burden of taxation, so that that particular argument follows.

Perhaps in an analogous way I can suggest that I would not be in favour of giving people a credit for the purchase of lottery tickets. But when one makes this windfall gain, I think the people of Canada have a right to share in it in the same way the people of Canada expect to share in capital gains of all sorts, and they are mostly outraged at the $500,000 capital gains tax holiday which the Minister of Finance offered in the Budget of last spring.

● (1550)

As far as the tax expenditures to which the Hon. Member referred are concerned, if he will check I think he will find that it was in August, 1985 that the Minister published the statement on various tax expenditures. So it is even less in that sense than the time he suggested. The fact that the Minister did not use the opportunity in the February Budget to do anything more significant than a couple of measures which will bring in some $380 million when tax expenditures run from $30 billion to $50 billion, suggests to me that the Minister of Finance has blown an opportunity. He talked tough, but instead of being tough with the people with whom he should have been tough, that is, the corporations, he socked it to individual Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on what was said by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus). Mr. Speaker, I think it is a sad reflection on the Hon. Member that he is trying to frighten Canadians and predicting all kinds of gloom and doom for 1986. Unlike the Hon. Member, I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought down a very realistic and very responsible Budget yesterday evening. And why do we have a realistic Budget. Mr. Speaker? Because we also have to deal with what happened previously.

The cumulative deficit had reached $200 billion when we came to power on September 4, 1984, and if we had continued the previous Government's policies, twenty years from now the deficit would have been one trillion dollars, and for the taxpayer, $1 trillion with a 10 per cent interest rate would mean that twenty years from now, the cost of servicing the debt would be almost as high as the sum total of the Budget. Yesterday evening, being realistic meant realizing that we are in a difficult financial situation, and, Mr. Speaker, this is the first Minister of Finance in twenty years who has attained his objective. He told Canadians we had to bring down the deficit. And he talked about cutting $4 billion off the deficit. Well, we went from 38.2 to 33.8 billion this year, which I think this is a vast improvement, and we are now talking about cutting another four billion off the deficit to bring it down to 29.2 billion. That is less than $30 billion, and I think that shows the Government's message is a serious one.

I also said this was a responsible Budget. Mr. Speaker, what is the most important source of jobs in this country? Small business. There are 700,000 small businesses in this country. The Government has great confidence in this sector, and that is why the tax rate on small business income will be reduced from 15 per cent to 13 per cent, to help small businesses generate new investment in the economy and create additional jobs. I believe that our performance in our first year is good enough to warrant the trust of Canadians. We created 580,000 jobs in fifteen months, more than in all sixteen European countries combined. I think that is a good performance. We must persevere and continue along the same path, and that was the message the Minister of Finance gave us yesterday.

I also think we considered another important aspect which is to help those Canadians who are most in need, and I am referring to two measures more specifically, including the $300 prepayment of the tax credit to families whose income is less than $15,000. Furthermore, in connection with the one per cent increase the sales tax, the Government will provide a refundable sales tax credit of $50 per adult and $25 per child, and I think that is important. We have considered the plight of the neediest and poorest in our society, and I think that is what responsible Government means. Mr. Speaker, I wish my hon. friend would remember this in his comments.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would the Hon. Member care to reply?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I will be very brief, as I should be. The Hon. Member makes the same kind of speech he and his colleagues will be making all over the country, I do not doubt. The situation is a very serious one and the Minister of Finance has focused wrongly in trying to come to grips with it. Rhetoric may work. But if this year turns out to be as difficult as anticipated, then the Canadian people will surely become all the more unhappy. It is a matter of how one sees these things, not a matter of piling up rhetoric to suggest how well things are going to turn out.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I am deeply honoured to speak in this debate. Budget debates have been part of the parliamentary tradition since 1773 and none has had more importance in the parliamentary year than the budget debate. This is especially so in terms of this budget debate in Canada in the year 1986. There has been no debate in the history of this Parliament, and in the history of this country, more significant for our national future than the debate on our Budget and the policies it represents. These policies are vital to Canada's future. Because of these policies the future can be worthy of our past.

A few weeks ago in the riding of Scarborough West, in one of our public schools, I spoke to a class. One of the children asked me what I would choose if I could choose anything I wanted the Government to do. I answered that I would teach Canadians to be proud of Canada. We have so much of which to be proud as a people. No twenty-five million people in the world have done what we have done as a people. We have a population equal to that of the State of California, yet we have taken the second largest country in the world, with one of the most challenging environments, and have made it into one of the major industrial countries in the world. We have such a distinguished history of which to be proud, yet so very few years ago that one would only need one hand to count them, Canadians were wondering if they had a future. They wondered if the future of their country would be in any way like the past of which they were so proud. The answer to their concerns, and the reason why Canadians are no longer worried about their future, is the success of the economic policies which have been put into place by the Government since its election in the fall of 1984.

This Budget is not to be considered on its own. It should be seen as part of an economic plan which began with the Economic Statement of November 1984. It was continued in the Budget in the spring of 1985 and has now taken a significant step further in the Budget of February, 1986.

I would like to review ways in which those economic policies have guaranteed to the people of Canada that we can anticipate a future which will be worthy of the past of which we are so proud. First, our policies have been aimed at reducing the deficit. This has been a major challenge. Indeed, it is a challenge which has concerned the world, which in turn has given its judgement on the Canadian dollar, and that was in large part because of the concern with the deficit, and with good reason. In the year 1975, the deficit represented $87 per capita. In the last year of the Liberal Government, it represented $1,469 per man, woman and child. That is the Liberal record. The Liberals themselves knew what was wrong. They talked reduction. They talked as if they believed they should reduce the deficit. The Minister of Finance in 1980, the Hon. Allan MacEachen, said in his budget address: "We must slow down the growth of public debt charges". Three years later, the Minister of Finance, the Hon. Marc Lalonde, made a stab at it when he said: "We must manage the deficit now to ensure it will come down as quickly as possible". Year after year the Liberal talked reduction, but we have done it. The Liberals had debt charges which in 1975 represented $3,025,000,000. That was the total charges for servicing the public debt in 1975. By the end of the Liberals' term in office, those charges had risen to $22,500,000,000. No wonder people are worried about this country having a future on which they can rely. It is no wonder people are concerned that their country, which was so affluent, prosperous and strong is going down the pipe. They can now be assured that the future is something in which they can have confidence, for, at last, reducing the deficit is not something about which a Government talks but something about which a Government does.

• (1600)

Second, our policies as a Government have been aimed at restraining Government expenditures. That is also something in which our Liberal predecessors believed. The present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), when he was Minister of Finance in 1975, said that no measure is more important than the control of public expenditures. It was with good reason that he said that, for public expenditures had escalated beyond belief. At the most intensive time of World War II, public expenditures by the Government of Canada totalled $5.5 billion. A generation later, in 1967-68, they had doubled to about $11 billion. And what are they now? I wish it were possible to say that we are reducing expenditures to such an extent that we are getting back to those days when they represented a much smaller part of the Gross National Product. However, we must take heart when we consider that the Estimates submitted by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) this very day show that we have almost zero growth in the expenditures of the country for the second year in a row, while other costs in our society are growing steadily. There is still growth with respect to the cost of living to the tune of 4 per cent. But the cost of Government is not keeping pace with that. Why would the country not have renewed confidence in the future when it sees that at last through its Government its people are gaining some control on Government spending?

Third, our policies stand for reshaping Government and reducing deficits. We are restraining expenditures and reshaping Government. As the Minister of Finance said in his impressive address last night, we need not more Government, we need more effective Government. I draw to the attention of Members of the House and to the attention of the public three specific ways in which we can do this. For example, the Government is introducing a merit criterion for increasing the salaries of executives. That is a new thought. When did this country's civil service ever have itself challenged by the prospect of showing merit as the standard for gaining a salary increase? When did we last replace seniority, longevity and survival with something called merit? That is a reshaping of Government.

We were also told that within two years Canada Post will be challenged to pay its way. That is a staggering thought. However, it is not a staggering thought south of the border where the United States Post Office not only pays its way without subsidy but actually shows a profit.

We were also told in the budget address that other Crown corporations will be sold and that further steps will be taken to get the Government out of the private sector. One of the most significant ways in which we are reshaping Government is by getting Government off the backs of the people. I draw the attention of the House to one way in which that has been done and on which we should focus attention. I refer to the reform of the Registered Retirement Savings Plan regulations. Plan-holders will now gain a freedom of which they should never have been deprived. At last, RRSP holders will be treated as adults who have the right to decide how they will spend their own money. No longer will a person cease to be treated as an adult when he reaches the age of 71 and is required by legislation to collapse his RRSP. He can now have a registered retirement investment fund, to which he had been entitled for many years, but will not have the freedom to withdraw from that fund whatever amount he chooses. His retirement years can be shaped by his own choices. There will be a minimum withdrawal required by legislation, but no maximum imposed. Retirees will now be free again, free to live their own lives by making their own choices and by spending their own money. That is an example of what I mean when I say that our policies are reshaping Government itself.

Fourth, we are renewing the economy. Once again, because of our economic policies, Canada is big league. We have had an economic growth rate equal to that of Japan—twice the growth rate of the United States, greater than the growth rate of all the major countries of western Europe. That's big league, especially because the stress has been on generating that growth through the private sector. The expansion has come about for one simple reason, that is, investors again believe in the country. They believe that we have a Government in which they can have confidence. We see this in the way in which month after month the leading economic indicators are up, all of them pointing to the way in which the economy is being renewed. We have heard so much said about the need to help this part of the population and that part of the population. The most important way we can help people is by renewing the economy and giving the people an economy in whose prosperity they can share. We are doing that.

This brings me to the next way in which our policies are benefiting Canadians, namely, restoring employment. Hon. Members are familiar with the macro figure of 580,000 jobs which have been created since our Government took office. We are familiar with the way in which the unemployment rate has fallen to 9.8 per cent, the lowest rate in five years. However, I want to focus the attention of Hon. Members on the way in which the Budget is targeting certain groups of our population and offering them particular assistance in restoring employment. In this regard I refer specifically to young people, women who want to re-enter the labour market and older men who find themselves out of work after years of working for a company or an organization which has suddenly closed down or been taken over. I am thinking of the job strategy programs. I am thinking of the program for older worker adjustment. Each of these programs offers hope and assurance to people who wondered if their futures were not behind them. We are not treating people as statistics. We are treating them as people with feelings and aspirations, people who have a right to dignity and a right to believe that they have years ahead in which they can provide for themselves, live independently and have the dignity of daily work. We believe in that. We are offering it and succeeding in it, as the statistics indicate.

As well, our economic policies have aimed at reforming the tax system. The Budget continues the reform measures which were heralded in the 1984 Economic Statement, continued in the Budget of 1985, and which have now been taken a step further in the Budget of 1986. I refer to the reduction of tax avoidance policies, so many of them added by the previous Government. There is the introduction of the minimum tax, a new tax introduced into the fiscal system of the country. There is the removal of several corporate and personal tax breaks which did not contribute to the fairness of the taxation system. I would say that I looked upon these particular reforms as only a first step toward what I believe this country profoundly needs, and needs critically. It needs a more fundamental re-examination and restructuring of the income tax system. The problem with trying particular reforms of the income tax system, worthy and necessary as the effort is in this interim period, is that the structure of the income tax system itself is wrong. No particular changes to it will get at the basic need, which is to start over again with a healthy tax structure which will provide adequate revenues for Government services, equitable distribution of the tax burden and a tax method which will not work against the incentives to expand our production as a people.

I speak here not on behalf of the Government or of my Party but I express only the opinion of a private Member of the House. I hope that the time is not distant when we could have appointed a task force which could address itself particularly and wholly to a fundamental examination and reform of the Income Tax Act, reform that will aim at removing the dominance and monopoly of personal income tax as the main source of financial supply for the Government. I believe that will not only be a measure of social justice but equally it will contribute to the expansion of our productivity as a country.

In those ways, I draw to the attention of the House and the public that this Budget is to be judged in terms of economic policies which, since the fall of 1984, have achieved this objectives which the Government set for itself during the election. We were elected to reduce the deficit, and we are doing it. We were elected to restrain expenditures, and we are doing it. We were elected to reshape Government, and we are doing it. We were elected to renew the economy, and we are doing it. We were elected to restore employment, and we are doing it. We were elected to reform the tax system, and we are doing it. These are the reasons for which we can look forward to the future with the confidence we were denied in the years 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984 until the election.

The historian Arnold Toynbee once analysed the history of mankind by pointing out that great civilizations have resulted from a combination of challenge on the one hand and response on the other. The people of Canada were faced with a challenge in 1984. They responded by electing a Government able to make a response equal to the fiscal challenge, which has been described in words no more accurate and eloquent than those of the Premier of Ontario, the Hon. David Peterson, who has said that the federal Government inherited a mess. That was the challenge and the Canadian people and the Government addressed themselves to it.

Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide. In 1984, the people in Canada had that moment and they decided. The success of these economic policies has shown the wisdom of that decision for we are now able to face the challenge and combine it with what is now the assurance of opportunity.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate my colleague on his excellent address. I would like to give an example of how Government policies could work. In 1972, when the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) was the Minister of Finance, there were 544,000 people out of work. When he left office, 732,000 Canadians were unemployed. We can see that his record as a Minister of Finance was an absolute disgrace. Since the election, under our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), 580,000 new jobs have been created including 129,000 in January. We have turned this record around.

I would like to discuss a disgraceful statement that was made by the President of the Federation of Labour in Alberta. He has been telling the people of Alberta to stay on welfare or UIC and not to take any jobs. In Canada today, there are more than ever job openings and opportunities right across the country, except for a few pockets. There are "help wanted" signs all over the place. Newspapers carry special supplements for "help wanted" ads.

This gentleman to which I refer, Mr. Werlin, has said that no one should take a $4-an-hour job in Alberta. However, the business people have said that many of those jobs are full-time and would pay a junior trainee with no advanced education about $6 per hour or $950 per month. I do not think it is so bad for someone to start with. In fact that people are starting out by making $4, $6 or $8 an hour does not mean they are going to stay at that wage the rest of their lives. If they are ambitious, they will advance.

I would ask my hon. friend what he thinks should be done about the statements of this labour leader. I have passed this information on to the Forget Commission. I want the commission to examine this information to find out why there are so many job openings and yet we still have a high unemployment rate.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I think there are two aspects to the question which my hon. friend raises. The first is the possibility some suggest—and in reporting this I do not concur necessarily with the opinion expressed—that the entitlements through unemployment insurances and other Government programs are too great to encourage people to take jobs that are paying a minimum rate. The other possibility is that there are many, many people in society who need to be able to move, not necessarily from one place to another, though that may be part of the answer, but move from one skill to another, from one occupation to another.

If I may quote the economist John Kenneth Galbraith, he has said that historically, mobility has been the solution to poverty. We are seeing this today, not simply in geographic terms or moving from a high unemployment area to a low unemployment area, but in more sociological and economic terms, with the need to move from skills and occupations that are no longer in demand to those that are in a new demand. That has been the thrust of this Government to a very large degree, particularly in the recently introduced Canadian Jobs Strategy Program and the other programs for older workers to which I had referred.

I have profound confidence that through retraining, educational opportunities and other means, we are going to give people a chance to move from a set of circumstances in which there may be no viable future to another set in which there is promise. They are facing a challenge and this Government is giving them an opportunity.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard two speeches made by Members of different parties, one by the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse), the other by the socialist Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp). Both Members listened to the same Budget speech, but their observations this afternoon were altogether different.

The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon said a moment ago that yesterday after the Budget speech Canadians lost every hope for the future. He said that a Budget such as the one introduced yesterday will reduce employment in this country, but when the Budget was introduced last year his leader stated that 55,000 jobs would be lost. Well, the results are in and, one year later, we have 580,000 new jobs and this economic performance of last year has been matched only by Japan. Now, if this is not good news, if this is not encouraging results, I wonder what socialists expect in terms of encouraging results.

They claim they speak on behalf of ordinary Canadians. He said earlier that ordinary Canadians would not vote for a Conservative Party. Mr. Speaker, only ordinary Canadians voted for Conservative candidates in the last election because there are only 30 extraodinary Canadians in this country—the 30 socialists Members on the other side of the House. Mr. Speaker, those Members are here only to save their jobs. They are not here to promote the well-being of Canadians. They keep talking about ordinary Canadians, and that is getting to be a hackneyed expression!

If the Budget's $27 billion in interests are not paid by ordinary Canadians, I wonder who does.

Mr. Speaker, those $27 billion are paid to the banks, to rich people. Those are $27 billion which ordinary Canadians—as the socialists call them—cannot have for social programs, for job creation projects, for anything, period. Mr. Speaker, those $27 billion flow from their pockets right into those of wealthier people.

Mr. Speaker, no-one can possibly be more blind than somebody who does not want to see, and the socialists will always be blind because they simply do not want to see or hear anything.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians generally are satisfied with the Budget because they are pleased with the direction taken by the Government and the Minister of Finance. And that is hope—

Mr. Rossi: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, you allowed two groups from the Government side to speak, but when the Member of the Opposition rose to take part in this debate . . . This is not a question or a comment, but a speech he is making.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I have not recognized the Hon. Member yet.

Mr. McKnight: You knew that his question would not be any good.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Could we have some order for a moment, please, so that I know what is happening here. I should like to bring to the attention of the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) that at this point he cannot comment upon the speech of a Member other than that of the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse).

Mr. Rossi: The 10 minutes are over.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): He had two minutes in which to speak, and I was hoping—

Mr. Rossi: The 10 minutes are over.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Chair does not wish to get into a debate with the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean has made his statement, but I bring it to his attention that when he puts a question or makes a comment he should do so on the speech of the Hon. Member who spoke immediately before him, not that of another Member.

The period provided for questions and comments has now terminated. Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) on debate—

Mr. Rossi: I have a point of order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Mr. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount); and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Riis.

Mr. Rossi: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should like to bring your attention to the fact that following the speech made by the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) during the ten minute period reserved for questions and comments, you allowed remarks which, with deference were debatable. Hon. Members from the Opposition had no time to grill the Hon. Member for Scarborough West about his speech.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate the Hon. Member's comments. I did not see anyone in the Opposition rising to question him, therefore I did not recognize anyone on that side. I see the Hon. Member for Sudbury rising on debate, but I will recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) on a point of order.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, and I am not happy to do so. The fact is that after the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) sat down, both the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) and I rose. It seems to me that the purpose of the period for questions and comments is really for opposition Members to raise questions with the Hon. Member who just spoke, and so we should have been recognized.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member has been here a long time. He realizes that I would never neglect the Opposition. I would never neglect the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North or the Hon. Member for Sudbury. It was my understanding that they were rising to speak on debate, and I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Sudbury.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I want to speak on the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). I go on record as opposing his interpretation of the purpose of the period for questions and comments. As I understand it, each of us is equally a Member of Parliament. That has been stressed in the reform measures which have been adopted. We should not impinge upon the rights and freedoms of any Member of the House, regardless of his or her Party, to participate in debate. I would be very happy to face the Opposition at any time; in fact, I would prefer it.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, that is not a point of order. It is debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The problem has been resolved. I appreciate what the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) is saying. As I said previously, the Chair was looking at the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North and at the Hon. Member for Sudbury and thought that they were seeking the floor on debate. I know they will be speaking very shortly, as will the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry). I think we have resolved the problem. The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean appreciates what has happened, so it will not happen again. Therefore we will resume debate, and the Hon. Member for Sudbury has the floor.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I just want to begin my discussion this afternoon by referring to one point which was made by the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse). He feels that budget time provides the people of Canada with the opportunity to judge the performance of their Government. I remind him that not only is judgment being made on a daily basis about the conduct of the Government, but the judgment of the people of Canada is given once every four years or five years at the end of the Government's mandate.

I personally find it galling that the Hon. Member indicated that he was in favour of tax reform. He said that it would remove the yoke of Government from the backs of individual Canadians and allow private enterprise to fly free again. He stood in his place and defended the Budget. I hope he stays for some cross-examination, but in the meantime I point out to him the document which was tabled yesterday entitled The Fiscal Plan. Page 100 of the document indicates that in 1984, 9 per cent of the Gross National Product was taken up in direct taxes from individuals and that 2.8 per cent was taken up from corporations. I hope the Hon. Member will answer me in about 18 minutes with regard to how he could defend the Government's Budget which increases the percentage of the Gross National Product taken directly from persons under taxation from 9 per cent in 1984 to 10.5 per cent in 1987. In the same period of time, the corporate sector of the economy will be paying even less in taxes. Perhaps he could answer my concern about that. I would be delighted to debate the issue of fairness with him.

The point I want to make today is that the Government will be judged not only on the basis of this Budget but on the basis of the previous one. There is a tendency on the part of Hon. Members opposite to demand that we focus only on the immediate Budget before us. However, I submit that the two Budgets—the Budget of May 23, 1985 and the one of February 26, 1986—are interlinked. A great deal of thought has been put into that interlinkage. The Hon. Member from Prince Edward Island clearly indicated that. I suspect that the two Budgets are the beginning of a plan in which there will be another phase of sales tax increases over the next three years to four years and in which there will be the introduction of a value-added tax to the income tax system. I suspect that some of the social programs introduced in the Budget will be the forerunners of programs which will supposedly protect the poor in society from some of the regressive nature of the tax proposals in the Budget. The fairness issue will be one of the ways in which the Canadian public judges the Government. It is also going to be judged in the way it has handled the regions. On both of those counts the Government will fail.

• (1630)

First, let me talk about the issue of fairness. On May 23, the Opposition indicated to you, Mr. Speaker, our concern about the fiscal intent of the May 23 Budget. We indicated that for the first time in Canadian history, by direct Government taxation, fiscal policy, there will be a widening of the gap between the rich and the poor in our society. Nothing has made us change our minds. What is astounding is that after the debate on the fiscal implications on middle and low-income Canadians that began on May 24, 1985 and ended with the budgetary votes in December, one would have thought the Government had learned its lesson as a result of the debate that took place then.

In addition to the effects of the Budget of May 23, 1985, the gap between rich and poor will widen and be compounded and aggravated by the Budget put forward yesterday. On pages 99 and 100 of The Fiscal Plan the Government will increase taxes this year. The percentage increase on persons from 1984-85 to 1985-86 will be an astounding 17 per cent.

That 17 per cent increase in one year is being done in the same year that corporation taxes will be increased by a measly 2 per cent. Yet the Hon. Member for Scarborough West has the gall to tell me he is in favour of a restructuring of the income tax system. He should be in favour of a restructuring of the income tax system, and it should be a restructuring that would allow the Canadian middle class to have less of the burden of taxation than exists today. From the time the Government took office, there has been a consistent fiscal and social policy to widen the gap between the haves and the have-nots.

Let me put this into perspective so the Member for Scarborough West can understand the point I am making. In 1986, a family earning $100,000 a year paid $35,236 in tax. Under the budget proposals tabled yesterday and combined with the Budget of 1985, that family earning $100,000 will pay $34,450 in tax by the year 1988. That family's tax load will decrease by $1,000 over the next three years. However, a family earning $20,000 a year will find its tax bill increased from $1,388 to $1,409 in the same period of time. I question the perverse social logic that would lead a Government to bring in budget legislation that will widen the gap between the haves and the have-nots, between the rich and the poor in our society.

Let us look at the fairness of the taxation changes introduced yesterday. There will be a further increase of 1 percent in the federal sales tax. You have heard it said, Mr. Speaker—it has not been argued in Question Period in questions put to the Finance Minister—that every 1 per cent increase in the federal sales tax results in a further $1 billion being taken out of the economy.

Since September 17, 1984, when the Conservative Government took office, there have been three successive 1 per cent increases in federal sales tax. Three billion dollars has been taken out of the hands of consumers as a result of the federal sales tax changes.

I mentioned earlier that the Government would prefer us to view this Budget in isolation. There is good reason for that, but first I will give the Government credit in the area of social programs. The Government introduced a refundable sales tax credit in this Budget that will give $50 per adult and $25 per child for those with incomes below $15,000.

Mr. Orlikow: Less than $1 a day.

Mr. Frith: Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, that the Conservative Government's definition of a median family income is $15,000 a year? In other words, a family with four children earning $18,100 in 1986 will not get one penny of relief from the federal sales tax. That is the 1 per cent federal sales tax that has been introduced in this Budget. The Government would like us to forget about the sale tax increases in the May 23, 1985 Budget and in the November Economic Statement of 1984.

Let us look at the effect of the Budget in 1985 and 1986 on a family of four with one wage earner earning $20,000 a year. As a result of those two Budgets, that family's income tax will go up by $225 and the wage earner will pay an additional $300 in sales tax. The Government's social policy is wrong. It has widened the gap between the poor and the rich. It is wrong to expect 4 million Canadian families, who live below the poverty line with $20,000 a year in family income, to share in the burden of deficit reduction, especially at a time in which we are introducing budgetary measures that will lessen the corporate sector's share.

That, Mr. Speaker, is what the Canadian people will judge three or four years from now when we have the next federal election. I am sure Canadians will speak loudly.

In 1950, federal personal income tax amounted to 23.4 per cent of federal tax revenue and, incredibly, corporate income tax at that time was 28.7 per cent. Over the intervening 25 to 30 years, the share of federal tax revenue derived from corporate income tax has decreased to an estimated 17.2 per cent. As I have indicated, by purpose and by budgetary design the amount of dollars expected from the corporate sector over the next three or four years will be further reduced to its lowest point in history as a percentage of the Gross National Product. That is the kind of social fiscal policy the Conservative Government believes in.

Let us look at some reactions to the Budget of last evening. I am told that the business community was mixed in its judgment on this Budget, but there were several business organizations that were laudatory about the Government's Budget. No wonder, Mr. Speaker. If I were in the private sector in business and found the Government bringing in a Budget that would decrease my tax rates, I would be rather complimentary about the Budget as well.

Who speaks for middle class Canadians and who speaks for the poor, who are being ravaged as a direct result of the fiscal policy of the Government? It is not the individual back-benchers of the Conservative Party. I have yet to see Ministers on the front bench defend the social policy being instituted by the Minister of Finance.

What other kind of reaction should we judge this Budget by? In the last 24 hours the business community, the money markets, have reacted in a very negative way. As of one hour ago, the Canadian dollar has fallen to 70.65 cents U.S. Yesterday, 24 hours ago, when the Minister of Finance just began his speech on the Budget, the dollar stood at 71.68 cents U.S. The dollar has fallen a full percentage point in the space of 24 hours. That is a shocking indictment and should be of some cause for worry for the Government front benches. The money markets are reacting very rapidly.

On the issue of the way in which the Government is handling its commitments to the regions, not only have we witnessed the Conservative Government, which over two successive Budgets has ravaged the middle and low-income Canadians, but we have witnessed its abandonment of its commitments to the regions of the country. Let me be specific: Atlantic Canada, in terms of the unemployment rate and in terms of the number of dollars being allocated under the Department of Regional and Industrial Expansion; northern Ontario, northern Quebec, Sudbury and parts of western Canada. These regions have not been part of the economic recovery, and the Government has abandoned them. That is the way in which Canadians will judge the Government. Governments are judged on their commitments. In this case I do not take anything away from the Conservative Party. I take nothing away from the fact that we have had an economic recovery in the last 18 months. That recovery has been worldwide, but I will not get into that kind of philosophical argument. I will give the Government credit where it is due. The unemployment rate is down. It is still unacceptably high, but it is down.

However, I appeal to the Government not to abandon the regions of the country which expect the central Government to give them a share of the economic pie of the country. That is what is wrong. The Government has asked that the economic recovery take place only by use of the private sector. It has indicated that there is no role for the Government to play in the economic recovery in terms of public sector involvement. That is wrong.

The International Nickel Company or Falconbridge cannot be expected to be the full engine of growth for economic recovery. MacMillan Bloedel cannot be the sole engine of recovery for the forestry sector in British Columbia. The private sector cannot do all the economic recovery work in Atlantic Canada. The national Government must play a moderating role to ensure that Atlantic Canadians and people from Sudbury have a piece of the economic pie. You cannot simply hive them off and tell them to find a job somewhere in Toronto. Is a 43-year old miner who finds himself unemployed with a young family and a high school education going to be retrained in high tech to find employment in the metropolis of Toronto? The answer is no, and you are wrong if you expect the private sector to play that role.

Every time direct economic programs which abandon commitment to the regions are brought in it facilitates the urbanization of population and abandons the principles that the country was built on 118 years ago. Those are facts which should be borne in mind when discussing the Government's Budget of last evening.

There is another area in which the Government is wrong. It takes great pride in saying that the budget deficit is now below $30 billion. Well, whoopee, Mr. Speaker. Since the Government took office on September 17, 1984, the federal deficit has increased by 23 per cent. Can that be blamed completely on the previous Liberal Government? The answer is no. The Government inherited a budget deficit of $32 billion and it increased it. Now the Government expects Canadians to applaud its efforts to get the deficit below $30 billion.

How was the reduction achieved? Was it achieved through expenditure cuts? The Government is trying to convince the Canadian public that it has done a masterful job on reducing expenditures. Since the Conservatives took office on September 17, 1984, expenditurs have gone up by $7.2 billion. The Government has achieved a projected budgetary deficit in 1986 of below $30 billion by foisting the largest tax increase on middle-income Canadians in Canadian history. That is the bottom line.

The Government is asking middle-income Canadians, who last year paid $38 billion in personal income taxes, to increase that by $16 billion in one year. These are the figures used by the Finance Minister. At the same time as the Government is asking middle-income Canadians to suffer such a massive tax increase, it is letting corporations get away with paying less and less tax. To me, that is the problem with the Government's Budget. The Government is going to fail in the key area where Canadians will judge the fairness of this Budget because it has placed the whole burden of deficit reduction on the backs of middle and low-income Canadians. It is letting the private sector, free enterprise, and the corporate sector get away scot-free.

Every social policy reform group in the country indicated to the Minister of Finance in December what they felt was wrong with the last Budget and what they felt the next Budget should do to help the poor and middle-income Canadians. They asked for tax relief for low-income Canadians. In this Budget there are tax increases for everyone who has a family income above $18,000 a year. So much for listening to the Canadian public. They indicated that they wanted a tax system which would give personal income tax less of a role and give the corporate sector its fair share of the tax burden. We got the complete opposite in the fiscal policy of the Government. There will be more taxes on middle and low-income Canadians and less taxes on the corporate sector. That is the net effect of the Government's policy.

The social policy reform groups asked the Government to review its decision with regard to the $500,000 lifetime capital gains tax exemption. There is no suggestion in the Budget of even reviewing that. This is the same Government that said it could not find enough money to shield fully low and middle-income Canadians from the devastation of a federal sales tax which everyone in the House agrees is regressive. The level at which low-income Canadians are going to be protected is set at $15,000 a year. The Government cannot find any money from them, but it can afford to give $500,000 worth of capital gains tax free. That is going to be the indictment of the Government that has failed to live up to its commitment of fairness to the Canadian public who will judge it in three years.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, it was interesting to hear the Member of Sudbury (Mr. Frith) remind us that in 1950 corporate and personal income taxes brought approximately equal amounts to the Canadian Treasury. I remind the Hon. Member that for 30 of the 36 years since 1950, Liberal Governments were in office and gave tremendous tax concessions to the corporations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Citizens for Public Justice, an independent Christian public advocacy organization which has received the support of virtually every major church organization for some of the proposals it has made in the last few days, has proposed that the Government change the tax system in the following way:

> $2.1 billion would be raised by reducing tax exemptions for corporations, thus yielding 20 per cent more in corporate income taxes;
> $1.1 billion would be raised through a special surtax of 7 per cent on the after-tax profits of Canada's 500 leading companies;
> $2.9 billion would be raised by eliminating tax exemptions which mainly benefit wealthy Canadians, such as the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption and the expanded tax exemptions for Registered Retirement Plan contributions;

Could the Member for Sudbury support those kinds of proposals? If he can, where was he when the Liberals were in Government?

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned earlier that a Government is judged on its fairness, on how it treats the less advantaged, the poor, and the elderly in society. The Member conveniently used the figures from 1950 to 1984. I take responsibility because I was a member of the Government of the day and, for a very short period of time, a member of the Cabinet. The answer to that is simple. During the intervening 30 years, Canada had the fastest growing population in the western industrialized countries. We had a tremendous job of ensuring that the young people, the less advantaged, and those coming into the workforce, had an equal opportunity to share in the economic pie. As a result of the tremendous pressure on the system the Government was forced to give away certain concessions to corporations in order for them to have accellerated capital depreciations so that equipment and machinery could be brought on and job placements for the young could be made. Not once in those 30 years was there a deliberate social or tax policy to widen the gap between the rich and the poor. The Liberal Party always stood for the poor and the oppressed and every one of the social and fiscal policies introduced during those 30 years went towards making sure the gap narrowed between the rich and the poor in our society. That is what is diametrically wrong with this Budget brought down by the Conservatives. It is the first time in living memory that a Government, by deliberate taxation policy, is going to widen the gap between rich and poor. I will stand by the Liberal record any day of the week.

Mr. Hamelin: Mr. Speaker, I am not not a great tax specialist or an expert in taxation and I am relying on simple common sense, but in Charlevoix, common sense tells us that you are rich when you do not have any debt, and I believe that the best way to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor in Canada would be to pay our debts. I did say our debts because their debts have effectively become ours, and we have received a mandate to pay their debts, which are now our debts, to bring about a better distribution of our collective wealth among all Canadians. On the other hand, my learned colleague the tax expert said that a 1 per cent increase of the sales tax would take away $1 billion from the Canadian economy. I would like to ask him this: How much has it cost us to have a debt of $200 billion, which is what he left us, and a deficit of $30 billion, which is what we have this year after bringing down to $33.8 billion what, under his Government, was a deficit of $38 billion? How much does this take away from the Canadian economy? Is this not much more painful than the tax increases which we have had to impose? Naturally, the Opposition must criticize, and I think that the Hon. Member does it quite well, but criticizing is not simply saying anything you like. I believe that we have to pay our debts. The Hon. Member also spoke about outlying regions. I represent such a region myself. Do you think that the Government likes having to take $30 billion from the pockets of Canadians? Do you think that we are inhuman? Very often, the Opposition considers that the world is divided into the wealthy, who are insensitive and cruel, and the poor, who work with their hands to pay for the bare necessities of life. Do you think that we are too insensitive to understand the development needs of our regions? I ask this question with the common sense of the people of Charleboix. In the near future, will being wealthy not mean being able to pay our debts, or rather your debts?

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is this: Why did you, the Government, decide to reduce the deficit on the backs of middle income Canadians and poor families? Why did you choose to do this? You had a choice in the Budget and you decided to reduce the deficit on the backs of poor and middle income families, but not on the backs of small businesses or big corporations. You attack only the poor. You will therefore have a problem in explaining your choice to your constituents next week-end.

An Hon. Member: Well put!

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly a privilege for me to enter into the first full day of debate and to be able to express the views from the point of view of a British Columbia Member on the Government side. I would like to use my time today to talk a little bit about the B.C. perspective and some of the tremendous opportunities which this Budget provides for us in British Columbia. I would like to start first by looking at it within the context of what we have heard from the Canadian public and how we have listened and how we have responded.

I find this Budget indicates a Government that, first of all, is firm but is also fair. It shows also a Government that is consistent, but a Government that cares. Those are themes which are indicative of the kind of Progressive Conservative Government that we have in this House. As I went through my riding over the past six months and talked to groups of all kinds from low-cost housing, the business community and the native Indian community, one issue that came up consistently was, "What are you going to do about this deficit that you have inherited?" Most people recognize that it was not this Government's fault, that it was the accumulation of years and years of wanton spending, of not considering the real needs of Canadians and their desire to have a Government that was concise and had a streamlined operation.

Because of the situation we were in they were not quite sure what we could do about it. They were not sure if we were prepared to do anything. People would say, "Are you really going to tackle the deficit? Can you do it without hurting people?" They were saying, "You have got to do it". People were speaking from two points of view. First, people from the business community were saying that the impact of the present load of debt that this country is carrying is having an adverse impact in terms of the international investment community. You will not be able to attract those dollars unless you show that you are a Government that is determined to turn the ship around.

I was hearing it from ordinary Canadians who were saying, "What is this debt going to mean to my children or my grandchildren? If it carries on the way it is at astronomical rates, my kids are not going to have any future. They are not going to be able to pay for old age pensions and I am probably not going to have any kind of retirement."

I am so pleased today to be able to tell my constituents and all Canadians that they have a Government that has guts, that is determined to make those changes and is turning the ship around. It is not easy, but with our performance to date and the Budget we put forward, substantial progress has been made.

Let me just draw your attention to some of the facts. We know that this year we had projected a budget deficit of $33.8 billion. A lot of people said, "Ah, you're not going to be able to meet that target. A number of things have happened, it is going to be higher than that". The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has said, and it was not easy, that with a lot of hard work, and it was not easy, we are going to be able to achieve that objective. We are going to be able to say, "Canadians, you can believe our word. What we say is what we do". That is a very important and strong signal to Canadians.

We have also said in this Budgete for the first time that in the coming year we will reduce that deficit to $29.8 billion on the old accounting system, $29.5 billion on the new accounting system and $23.5 billion on national accounts. It depends which way you want to look at it. No matter how you look at it, that is good news, that is a substantial decrease.

Then you have to look at the forecast, because this Budget should not be viewed in isolation, it is taken together with the November, 1984 Economic Statement, the Budget of last year, today's Budget, and the projections we have put forward, and what we see are really happy news. We see a decrease in that debt down to $22 billion by 1990-91. In terms of Gross National Product, the deficit will fall from what it was last year, 7.7 per cent in 1984-85, down to 3.7 per cent in 1990-91. That means this nation will be $100 billion less in debt than it would have been had the Government not taken the measures it did in the past 18 months. I think it is a remarkable and extraordinary process which no previous Government could ever have achieved.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said that as well as looking at the debt, we should look at what our financial requirements are, because that is a very important indicator which is looked at very closely by the international community. The news here is even better. Because of the expenditure controls we have put in place and because of the increased revenues from new taxation measures, our financial requirements will fall from $30 billion in 1984-85 to a projected $11 billion in 1990-91. In terms of Gross National Product, that means a fall of from 7.1 per cent this past year to 1.7 per cent in 1990-91. In five years, following on our course of action, we will only have to borrow $11 billion or 1.7 per cent of the GNP. Just think of how that is going to free up opportunities.

I say, therefore, that this Budget is the first step in terms of trying to attain fiscal stability that we have seen in our country for over 20 years. Of course, it also puts to bed all those nay sayers, those doomers and gloomers, who said yesterday: "Oh, geez. The Budget is not going to create any jobs. We are going to lose all those jobs". Some Hon. Members said that last year, but we know now that it is not true. In the past 18 months there have been 580,000 more jobs created, while we have reduced the Budget and curtailed Government expenditures. I am pleased that 51,000 of those jobs are in my own Province of British Columbia.

How have we been able to achieve some of these tremendous objectives? As the Minister of Finance said yesterday, we have started by getting our own House in order. It started right here in Ottawa. We are all prepared to give up $1,000 this year and that is only fair. But we have done so much more. I find that many people have the perception that there is tremendous fat and waste in Government. I think particularly of British Columbia. That province is so far away, but suddenly there are all those billions and billions of dollars just done away with. People might think that there would not be any impact anywhere, but after one has been around here for a while, one realizes that that is not quite the case. Every program has a group which is affected positively by it. If we are going to do away with programs, we have to be quite sure we know what we are doing away with, and we have to do it carefully and humanely or we may institute more pain and grief. So our approach has been one of sound fiscal management.

The Minister of Finance has announced a decrease of 15,000 jobs in the Public Service by the end of the decade. He is eliminating programs which no longer serve a useful public policy purpose. I think of the PIP grants, the CHIP grants and other programs. We have reduced certain subsidies to VIA where they are no longer required. We are selling off Crown corporations which no longer play a vital role in our public policy. Of course, this year, we are announcing another 2 per cent reduction on all Government expenditures, which will mean $500 million out of the discretionary area and an additional $300 million in the reserves. These efforts will bring Government spending down from 26 per cent of the Gross National Product in 1984-85 to 21 per cent by 1990-91.

As we all know, Government spending grew at an annual rate of about 13.4 per cent over the past decade. That is far higher than inflation. Inflation was running at an average of around 8.8 per cent. Government spending was just galloping and consuming more and more of our dollars. This year that has been stopped. We have the motors in reverse. Government spending has been brought down to 3.2 per cent in the coming year. In fact, in the discretionary area, as we have heard already this morning from the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), it has been basically stopped entirely at a minimal .2 per cent.

What the President of the Treasury Board announced this morning was one of the most exciting prospects. He said we are going to award productivity. There will be new programs to reward people who have new ideas, who work hard and who are productive. In British Columbia, my industries have had a tough time over the last little while, the forest industry and the mining industry. But they did not give up. They became more productive and now have one of the highest rates of productivity. I think we can do that, too. There is a tremendous challenge out there and I know the President of the Treasury Board is going to work hard in that respect.

This Budget also does some other things. It shows that we are targeting our spending more effectively. We are identifying our priorities and we are building on our strengths. We have identified, I believe, some very important areas about which I, in particular, am concerned. The field of research and development, from the perspective of British Columbia, is terribly important. We have all heard, of course, from the funding councils, NSERC, the Medical Science Council and the Social Sciences Humanities Council, which are putting in place five-year programs. There will be $300 million more for those councils.

There has also been a new and extremely innovative idea which will bring together the business sector, these councils and the universities. We will match dollar for dollar up to $700 million over the next five years with a potential increase of $1 billion for those funding councils, and most of it goes directly into the universities. I am not sure that many people realize the tremendous boost that this is going to give to our research and development activities in our universities. In the Budget last year we introduced our new scientific research program where there are certain deductions. I can see that if we put that together with our new program, it will provide tremendous opportunities for companies in my riding which are involved in R and D to work together with the universities. We will have meaningful, exciting research and development opportunities.

I was really pleased to see the focus on the Atlantic Provinces, because they need it. It is a tremendous program. I am pleased as well at the new steps in agriculture. That is not a major factor in my riding, but in the Province of British Columbia it is. The new commodity bonds will certainly be important there. I was pleased as well to see the social programs, targeted programs to help those most in need.

Mr. Cassidy: What social programs?

Ms. Mitchell: There's no child care. How do you like the day care? What about the day care?

Mrs. Collins: So many people in the House have brought up the question about programs for older workers. I believe my colleague from Scarborough has brought the subject up a number of times.

Mr. Cassidy: What about the older workers?

Ms. Mitchell: What about child care?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. There will be a question and comment period, if you would let the Hon. Member speak. Thank you.

Mr. Cassidy: We are anticipating, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Mitchell: What about child care? Be honest. Is there anything there for child care?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) has the floor.

Mrs. Collins: We are providing $125 million for an adjustment program for older workers for an adjustment program. We are also providing another program, which I believe my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), will find it difficult to argue with, given her interest in women's issues.

Ms. Mitchell: Child care?

Mrs. Collins: Not that program. It is the program to increase the opportunities for those on social assistance to find employment. We are targeting special funds for that group. That is $100 million over three years. Just think of the individuals who are going to be helped by that and the tremendous opportunities which will arise for them.

Ms. Mitchell: They need child care in order to get into jobs.

Mrs. Collins: The refundable sales tax credit for lower income families and, of course, the pre-payment of some of the child tax credits are also very positive features. There is the increase in the deduction for disabled people. There are 185,000 disabled people in this country who will certainly benefit from that. They know the commitment of this Government to the disabled community.

We know, and the figures show, that small business creates the largest number of jobs. We also know that women are creating most of the small businesses, or at least a large number.

Ms. Mitchell: That's right.

Mrs. Collins: So we have special measures to help them because we want to encourage them to get established and start those businesses. The reduction in the tax rate, which will come into effect next year, from 15 per cent to 13 per cent; the reduction of the tax rate with respect to manufacturing income from 10 per cent to 8 per cent; and the cancellation of the 12.5 per cent dividend distribution tax, are all measures which are really going to encourage people to start businesses and to expand them. Of course, the improvement of the small business loan, almost doubling at up to $2.5 billion, will make accessible millions of dollars to the small business community. As Hon. Members know, last night John Bulloch said that for small business we are very bullish.

• (1710)

I would now like to tell Hon. Members about some of the reactions to the Budget expressed by people in the West. As reported in The Province of Vancouver, British Columbians are very pleased. The newspaper stated that Ottawa has finally become serious about getting expenditures and revenues in line. The article to which I refer states that the Budget is a credible attempt at financial restraint, but financial restraint with a human face. I think that is an important message. We want to get our house in order. It shows that we want to undertake financial restraint and do things more efficiently but that we will not slash programs that will really hurt people.

I would now like to refer to some of the issues which are of particular excitement to people in the West. I mentioned earlier in the House today one issue about which I am very pleased, that is, the fact that Vancouver has been designated as an international banking centre. We have been looking for a measure of this type for some time. I am glad that my colleagues from Montreal will have the same opportunity in this respect. However, we in Vancouver look to the Pacific, where there are tremendous possibilities in trade. We will be able to develop our whole financial relationship in the Pacific which will give a real leg-up to people in Vancouver in terms of creating excitement and opportunities.

The area of science and technology is a tremendously positive area for British Columbia. In my province we are trying to develop our skills and bring adaptive technology to the province.

There are all sorts of other measures in the Budget about which we are extremely pleased. When one goes through the document quickly one is apt to overlook some of the items which are there. I almost missed the item about the $33 million film program. British Columbia is becoming the home of a burgeoning film industry. This $33 million fund will help Canadian film with cultural content. I particularly liked the caveat which states that film-makers will have to show where the films are actually made and will actually have to identify the place name. That is great because we want Capilano identified in such films. We are certainly open and ready for the film business. It will be profitable for British Columbia.

I would now like to refer to a couple of other areas about which I have received representations. One is with respect to flow-through shares, and the concern that investors in flow-through shares have a continuing liability. I am pleased to see that the Minister of Finance has made a change with respect to that provision so that investors will no longer have a continuing liability. At the sametime, he closed a loophole, which is only fair. The investors will now only receive a credit up to the amount of money that they have actually invested.

I would now like to talk about the sales tax exemption for tourist literature. That is something for which the tourist industry in British Columbia has been asking for some time. I refer to tourist literature which is prepared and available through chambers of commerce and communities which will now be exempt from sales tax. This a positive step. It is a little thing, but these little things all add up.

I have had a great many letters with respect to Registered Retirement Savings Plans. I am sure that my colleagues have also received many letters from people who are retiring and who want more flexibility with respect to how they deal with their retirement years. The Government has said that it will provide new options for those people in using their RRSPs.

Finally, I would like to deal with the treatment of Canadian dividends and reducing them to one-third. I do not think that will have a dampening effect on the country. However, in responding to some real concerns which I have heard with respect to the minimum tax, Canadian dividends will only be taxed on their actual amount as opposed to the grossed-up amount. In this way there will not be a disincentive to invest in Canadian corporations. That is an important move, and I applaud the Minister of Finance for taking it.

There is so much to talk about. What the whole matter comes down to is that the Budget shows that we are in control. It shows that we are planning and that we are going to stick with our plan. It is a plan that will bring about results. It is working. It shows we are consistent and comprehensive. We have a plan which started back in November and we are following it through with projections. We can show people where it will lead them. I realize that there is some pain involved for everyone, but that is part of what it is all about. In the end we will see a much healthier and dynamic economy.

We have balance because we are reinforcing priorities and strengths. Yet, as I said before, this is restraint with a human face. We are successful, and the record speaks for itself. I hardly need to say more. We have reduced the deficit. We did what we said we would do. We have created jobs. We have a record of success which will carry on for decades to come.

As has been said before, the cumulative effect of all these measures will result in $100 million less indebtedness over the next five years. We have shown leadership. We have listened and acted decisively. That is what the people have asked us to do. We know what has to be done. As the Minister of Finance mentioned yesterday, we have more to do in the future in terms of corporate and personal tax reform.

There are a great many challenges that lie ahead of us. We have provided a framework which will enable Canadians to be confident in the Government. It will be a Government to which they can look with confidence. Our children and our grandchildren will inherit a country which is fiscally and humanly well managed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell).

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins), my colleague from British Columbia. I recognize her enthusiasm and her excellent speaking qualities. I do not think she will mind if, in friendship, I remind her that it is not too surprising that she is so enthusiastic since she comes from a riding which I believe is the wealthiest in Canada. I know there are many wealthy people in her riding who will be pleased with the Budget. Because I know the Hon. Member is sincerely interested in Canadian women and because she shares my concern that they have more equal opportunities, I would like to appeal to her. Even though the Hon. Member comes from a wealthy riding I know she has a sympathy for those who are not as fortunate.

What I would like to ask the Hon. Member has to do with child care. Since she is a parent she will know how important it is for women to get into the workforce. We know that over 50 per cent of workers in the workforce are from two-parent families in which the mother is working. There has also been a great increase in the number of women who are single parents and who are either working and need child care or who would like to work but cannot. The Hon. Member referred to a program which is targeted to women on welfare. It would be a wonderful thing if they could receive training which is related to them in terms of pre-employment training and the like in order to get into the workforce. However, they cannot do that unless there is a relevant, flexible and affordable child care program available to them.

The Hon. Member also knows that we have a child care task force. The need is there. We all know that it is desperate. The statistics show that there has been a change in Canadian families. Is the Hon. Member not disappointed that there was not something in the way of child care in the Budget? This is something that would pay for itself, since these women could get off a life of welfare and into the workforce. What would the Hon. Member like to see in this area?

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), for her question. I know her deep commitment to these issues. I did not expect that the Budget would deal with the issue of child care. I say this because of the all-Party committee which has been set up to look into the issue, a committee on which the Hon. Member sits. I know that the committee will be travelling across the country and examining issues. It will be considering how the matter can be dealt with most effectively. It will be working with the provinces since they bear the greatest responsibility for the delivery of services in this area. I know that the committee will come up with proposals and ideas with respect to the most effective way the federal Government can be involved in helping to support families in a variety of ways. I am looking forward to the report of that committee. As the Minister said on Canada A.M. this morning, this is something with which he hopes to deal in the next Budget.

I appreciate this opportunity to respond generally since the Hon. Member raised the issue of the impact of the Budget on women earlier today. Of course, women account for 50 per cent of the population. They are affected by all the different aspects of the Budget. However, there are some important aspects in the Budget for women. I have already mentioned the refund of the child tax credit, which will help many women in their financial circumstances. Of course, there is the refundable sales tax credit for the lower income families, many of which are headed by women. It will be of particular help to them. As the Hon. Member already mentioned, there is a program designed to help those on social assistance find employment. Again, many of those on social assistance may be single mothers who want to get back into the workforce.

• (1720)

In my own riding, I visited very recently a job re-entry program that was set up under the Canadian Jobs Strategy Program and I met with the women. About half of the women were on social assistance and the other half were interested in going into small businesses and wanted to develop the kinds of skills they had not developed before. I was overhwelmed by the tremendous enthusiasm in that program. The women are learning from each other. It has provided them with a real chance. This Budget will enable more programs like that and will increase emphasis on small business—

Ms. Mitchell: They won't, they're cutting back $100 million.

Mrs. Collins: No, because there is that special $100 million program for those on social assistance as well. With the emphasis on small business, many of these women who are looking for opportunities, who are trying to get loans and are not quite sure of the financial situation, will be encouraged to go into small businesses and create jobs.

In fact, when I attended the class to which I just referred, I said that the half of the class that wanted to start small businesses should hire the other half who wanted to get jobs in the clerical or office area. Then the whole class would have full employment. Perhaps that will work out well.

I see this Budget as being very positive for women and as a growing recognition of the real commitment this Government has to concerns of women across the country.

Mr. Hicks: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to congratulate my colleague on her outstanding address. I know she is very enthused about the Budget that was presented yesterday.

I would like to comment on two or three things. First, I must allude to the reference made to the proposal for international banking centres in Vancouver and Montreal. Naturally, being from Metropolitan Toronto, I was extremely surprised because I assumed that an international banking centre would come to Toronto and perhaps even to the City of Scarborough which happens to be the seventh largest city in Canada. However, in the wisdom of the Budget, these proposals were recommended for Vancouver and Montreal, and I heartily applaud that. I am sure they will work out extremely well.

We have heard from previous speakers about reaction across Canada. I would like to cite some comments that were made to my colleague from Scarborough. Today he received one phone call regarding the Budget. That phone call was from a lady and a gentleman who had voted Liberal all their lives. They had voted Liberal in the last election and they said to my friend: "Congratulations, you have done what no other Government has had the intestinal fortitude to do, you are taking firm, decisive steps to reduce the deficit. You have our vote from now on". That is the type of reaction that is coming from across Canada.

In addition, I am sure my colleague might like to comment further on some of the measures that were taken to which she did not refer. For instance, the expenditure on all Government programs being held at 1984-85 levels means a decrease of 4 per cent. The non-statutory programs are to decline by $500 million in the next year, but no reference was made to that. I have to ask my hon. colleague why this is so.

In closing I point out that the impact of expenditure reductions and continued tight management that this Budget has put forward to Canadians will reduce Canada's debt by $78 billion by the end of the next decade. I wonder if my hon. colleague would care to comment on some of those points.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I am so pleased that my colleague brought those points up. As he knows, there is so much in the Budget that one cannot possibly talk about all of the positive things in it in 20 minutes. Hopefully, he will have the opportunity to do so. I am particularly pleased that he raised the points he did.

Regarding the international banking centre in Vancouver, it was groups from Vancouver that originally proposed the idea, as I understand it. We see Vancouver as being the jewel of the Pacific looking toward Asia which has a tremendous trade potential. We have the desire to get involved in China, Japan and Indonesia and the enormous opportunities that exist there. One of the things that could be terribly important would be to have in Vancouver an international financial centre, a centre linked not only to banking. Banking is one component of it but this centre should attract insurance services, shipping services and a whole range of support services that could be based in Vancouver because of its glorious environment. This would have a cumulative effect and would bring the other small industries that we are trying to develop to British Columbia, industries dealing particularly with what we call the adaptive technology area. There are already some examples of joint ventures with our Asian partners in the health field.

We see this international banking centre as the linchpin, the first step in turning Vancouver into what I would call the financial, trade, and institutional centre of the Pacific. With the experience we will get as we are successful in dealing with the East and as Montreal is successful in dealing with Europe, perhaps Toronto, which is now considered the financial centre of Canada, might have an opportunity to expand its bases as well.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted with the enthusiasm of the Hon. Member and with the fact that she appears to feel that the problems of her riding have been resolved by the Budget. However, I would like to remind her that the unemployment rate in British Columbia is still at about 13 per cent and that in the areas outside of Vancouver it is a good deal higher than that. Since I am a native British Columbian, born in Victoria, I certainly have a concern which many British Columbians must share when I hear the Hon. Member say that everything is okay, while in fact it is not okay for large parts of British Columbia.

Is the Hon. Member satisfied with the fact that between 1984-85 when the Government came to power and 1987-88, the funding for the economic and regional development envelope will decrease from $14.7 billion to $9 billion? Is she satisfied that the means by which the Government can actually act to get economic activity and jobs going in British Columbia is being thrown away by the Government? The Government no longer feels a commitment to those ridings which do not have the privilege of having the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) to represent them or the wealth of the residents of the riding of Capilano.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, people have his impression of my riding as being the wealthiest riding in Canada. Yes, the municipality of West Vancouver has the highest income tax returns, but my riding is much more than that. My riding encompasses parts of North Vancouver in which there are many people on social welfare, there are community school programs and a wide variety of social services with which I have worked very closely. In my riding, there is one of the largest Indian reserves in the Lower Mainland area. The unemployment rate in my riding runs at about 10 per cent, so it is higher than the national average but not as high as it is in other parts of British Columbia.

Perhaps my colleague was not aware that we signed a $575-million ERDA agreement this year. That agreement is intact and does not change with this Budget. It is the largest ERDA agreement that has ever been signed for British Columbia. There will be over $300 million for forestry alone—silviculture and reforestation, and then mining, small business, tourism and agriculture. The spinoff effects from that tremendous commitment of the Government to British Columbia will be tremendous.

I am not saying that the problems have been solved. We have some real problems in British Columbia in terms of dealing with our economy. We know that in the areas of forestry and mining, the bulwarks of the economy, probably not a great many more people will be hired over the years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that her time has now expired and the time for questions and comments has now expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on yesterday's Budget, first in French and then in English. It seems to me that the Conservatives are making the same mistakes as in the Budget of May 1985. They impose severe tax increases to ordinary Canadian families while reducing the tax burden of corporations, and now of the wealthy. They are simply maintaining a pattern which existed under the Liberal administration. For our part, we often think that there is very little difference between the Conservative Party now in power and the Liberal Party which used to form the Government.

In May 1985, Mr. Speaker, the Government attacked mostly pensioners, children, families and the Public Service. This time, the Government has decided to hit mostly ordinary taxpayers and, once again, the Public Service, which is of concern to my constituents.

If I may remind the House, since everyone is now aware of them, the major tax measures in the Budget—there is a 3 per cent surtax hitting all taxpayers, not only those with income above $40,000 a year. There is a 1 per cent sales tax increase, and this is the third sales tax increase since the Tories came to power.

Before the 1984 election, the Conservatives loudly criticized the tax increases imposed by the Liberal Government. But the minute they came to power, they readily introduced the one per cent increase that had been proposed by Mr. Lalonde when he was Minister of Finance. And then, in May, there was a second one per cent increase, and now we have this third one per cent increase. This means that within a period of 18 months, the Conservatives have increased by one-third the federal sales tax. Mr. Speaker, all those increases are directly affecting the average family. And the average family has not yet had an opportunity to answer back, to respond to the Budget.

I was just listening to the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) who suggested that her constituents were satisfied. She quoted from the Vancouver Province. Today we heard quotes from the president of the stockbrokers, from people in the Stock Exchange, in the banks, and from other businessmen. All the financial communities were very quick to react. They are in a position to react very fast, because of their control, advertising agencies, etc.

I remember very well, Mr. Speaker, the last Budget brought down by this Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Initially, everything seemed to go very well. But within a few days, pensioners, people over 60 years of age started to react. Their reaction continued until the Minister of Finance was forced by his Prime Minister and the whole of the Government to withdraw those key budgetary measures. So much for bad judgment . . . for he had hit the average people and pensioners in our country. Now he is hitting the average family.

Mr. Speaker, I can quote figures. In the very first Budget, the November 1984 financial statement, tax increases and other charges imposed by the Conservatives on average families totalled $500 a year on average. Then, in May 1984, came another $500 a year increase. And this time, there is an additional increase of $350 a year. All this adds up to $1,350 per average Canadian family. This means that under a Conservative Government, the deficit is fought on the backs of the average Canadian families.

However, Mr. Speaker, if by any chance we look at the Fiscal Plan tabled yesterday by the Minister of Finance, we find that taxes levied on taxpayers are constantly increasing, while big corporations experience practically no tax increases.

In 1984-85, the last year to which the previous Government's tax policy applied, personal income tax went up to $38 billion. Under the former Liberal Minister of Finance, corporations paid $12 billion in corporate income tax.

Personal income tax is increasing from $38 to $44.7 billion in 1985-86 and up to $49.3 billion in 1986-87, and it will go up again, to $54.8 billion in 1987-88. This means that personal income tax will be increased 44 per cent as a result of the tax measures introduced by the Conservatives during their first eighteen months in power.

Mr. Speaker, compare this with the very slight increase in corporate taxes. These taxes will go up by $1.3 billion during the same period, which means 10 per cent, notwithstanding very strong profit increases during the same period as a result of the economic recovery following the recession we had at the beginning of the eighties.

Mr. Speaker, we see that between 1986-87 and 1987-88, there will be a reduction in corporate income tax and of course in the federal Government's revenues from these companies, while tax increases totalling $5.5 billion are being levied on the individual taxpayer. Mr. Speaker, this is not fair at all!

Last year, we on this side of the House criticized the Budget of the Minister of Finance, especially because the Budget was liable to cause the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs. We do not know exactly what the impact was of that Budget, since most of the tax measures announced in May last year have yet to more an impact since they were not introduced until the beginning of this year.

So what we have are 1985 measures that have just started to have an effect on the economy. At the same time the Budget is introducing new measures, we have had the beginning of a slowdown in economic expansion in the United States since last year, and now there is growing concern, since we have had four years of expansion in Canada, that the economy will start to slow down. The business cycle is going to hurt the Government's expectations that the unemployment rate is going to drop.

We have a Budget in which the Government's priority is not to create jobs but above all to satisfy the business community on Wall Street, in London, Paris and Bay Street and St. James.

Mr. Speaker, in the last few weeks we had a Gallup poll done for the New Democratic Party to find out what Canadians thought about tax reform. Ninety per cent of those surveyed answered that they really wanted tax reform because they wanted to see a fair tax system. And they believed that the existing system was not equitable. Unfortunately, there is no indication in yesterday's Budget of any changes that will make the system more equitable.

Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to recall some of the recommendations made to the Minister of Finance by our finance critic, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), as well as by myself and other Members on our Tax Probe 1986. Mr. Speaker, we recommended the adoption of an annual Budget of tax expenditures which would show annual costs, tax rebates and the nature of tax rulings. This has been ignored.

We recommended the establishment of profitability tests with respect to specific tax measures. We said: The public has the right to know if our major tax expenditures are effective, just as it has the right to know the impact of our direct expenditures. This has been ignored.

Mr. Speaker, we recommended the elimination of some of the existing tax measures, for instance the lifetime $500,000 capital gains tax exemption which costs at least $600 million a year. We advocated doing away with the tax exemption on interest costs related to mergers and take-overs since it will cost in excess of $200 million this year. Those two proposals have been ignored.

We proposed that the recent increases in RRSPs which cost $40 million be eliminated or reduced. This proposal has been ignored. We proposed the elimination of abuses with respect to corporate transfer provisions which will cost more than $1.1 billion. A few timid steps have been taken, but nothing more. We proposed doing away with the current dividend tax credit which now costs about $1.016 billion a year. Mr. Speaker, it has been reduced by one-third, but two-thirds of this benefit still remain. We suggested that the provisions governing the minimum income tax be strengthened. Manuals are currently being published teaching people how to avoid paying the minimum income tax. A better legislation would bring in at least an additional $100 million.

Mr. Speaker, we suggested that the personal income tax system should be made more progressive. The simple re-establishment of the maximum income tax rates in force before 1982 would result in more fairness and in $1.7 billion in additional tax revenues.

Mr. Speaker, we suggested also to simplify our tax system to make easier to understand.

And we suggested to abolish the tax on gas for farming purposes.

Unfortunately, almost all our suggestions have been ignored by the Minister of Finance, although these suggestions which I have just described would have resulted in between $3.2 billion and $4 billion in savings each year.

This would have contributed to a reduction of the deficit which is a priority of the Minister of Finance and his Government, while giving the Government more spending flexibility, doing away with some required savings and giving it the capability to invest to create jobs in all the regions which need them so much. I am referring especially to Quebec, Mr. Speaker. We still have in Quebec a truly regional problem. Even outside the Gaspé area, we come across unemployment levels which exceed 16, 17 or 18 per cent. In the Témiscamingue area, or in the Lac-Saint-Jean area, as well as in some communities of the Eastern Townships, there are extremely high unemployment levels; yet, there is absolutely nothing in the Budget to meet the needs of the people living in these areas.

On the other hand, as the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) has just remarked, the Government has just cut its spending in regional and economic development by $14 million, nearly $15 million in 1984-85 and up to $9 million in 1987-88. Apparently, the Government is not overconcerned about the unemployment situation, as we can see from the cuts in the Canadian job strategy where the credits allocated went down from $900 million per year to $800 million per year.

• (1740)

[English]

I want to speak a bit about the impact more particularly in terms of people in my riding and Ottawa because of the Budget which the Government has brought down. As I said in French, the Budget is unjust and it puts the burden of deficit cutting on the backs of ordinary Canadian families in my riding and across the country. It does nothing particularly to bring down the rate of unemployment from levels which continue to be unacceptable in Ottawa and across the country. It cuts back sharply in terms of regional development funds and it does nothing to restore the fairness in the tax system, which nine out of ten Canadians have told us in the Gallup Poll they are looking for.

I find it totally unacceptable that the Government is tolerating a situation in 1987-88 where personal tax contributions by ordinary Canadians will go up by $5.5 billion over the preceding year and yet in that year corporate tax receipts will actually come down. The Government says it is simplifying and reforming the corporate tax system. The Government forgot that one portion of that tax reform, which is essential and should not be overlooked, is that a fairer revenue from the corporate tax sector should be collected. We should be taking steps now to recover some of those tax revenues from corporations, which revenues have been handed away on a platter, first by the Liberals and now by the Conservatives, over the course of the last eight or ten years.

People in my riding are telling me that they want to see measures to create jobs in this riding, not to destroy them. People in my riding and in the National Capital Region as a whole are extremely uneasy over the most recent announcements that have taken place in the Budget for a further $500 million in cuts in departmental spending, at least a third of which will be felt in Ottawa because that is where the bulk of the Public Service is concentrated. People in my area are concerned over the fact that train services between Ottawa and Toronto and Ottawa and Montreal are now threatened with being cut back or eliminated within a year or two.

They are concerned about training funds decreasing when many people, particularly women, who are coming back into the labour force are still looking for that kind of assistance from Government. In today's economic times with high unemployment, they do not find employers reaching out to provide that kind of training on the job which they might have been able to get a few years ago when unemployment was at more acceptable levels. People in my riding are saying that even if our unemployment rate has come down a bit, what about relatives in New Brunswick where the rate is 14 per cent? What about friends in Newfoundland where the rate is 20 per cent and what about friends in the Province of Quebec where the unemployment rate is 13 per cent? What about my relatives in inland British Columbia from where I originally came where unemployment is running at 16 per cent or 17 per cent? Do we not as a country have some responsibility to those parts of Canada as well ? I think we do, Mr. Speaker. I cannot see how we can have a budgetary policy which is essentially directed at Etobicoke, Capilano, Westmount, Rosedale and a few other prosperous areas—

Mr. Hicks: Scarborough.

Mr. Cassidy: Scarborough, fine—and at a few areas of the country where the financial leader has been telling the Government to cut the deficit and damn the consequences in terms of ordinary Canadians, but that is what we are getting.

In terms of my own riding, the impact of further cuts on top of the 15,000 job cuts already announced in the Public Service is extremely disquieting. I fear the cuts are now so severe that Public Service managers will have no choice but to make further job cuts on top of the 15,000 they have been ordered to make. That means more people not just being shuffled around from one job to another, but being thrown out on the street. In my community of Ottawa, it will not be an easy place for people seeking to find employment over the next few years. Public Service freezes are likely to be the order of the day, not just for a few months but almost continuously. Contract employment is down. Companies that contract with the federal Government will find that the $500 million in cuts will hit them because departments will cut back on spending on those kinds of dicretionary contracts.

The Government is working in cuckoo land if it believes it can make $500 million in cuts and not touch services to the public or not touch the Public Service. I fear that 10,000 more jobs may go. I challenge the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) to deny that and to assure this house that not a single further Public Service job will be cut as a consequence of those $500 million worth of cuts being imposed next year. I do not think he can do it.

My numbers would indicate that over the next four years there will be a 5 per cent staff cut. We know about that. Pay rates in the Public Service will go up by 13 per cent of 14 per cent. That has already been agreed to according to the pattern of bargaining over the course of the next few days. That leaves a 9 per cent gap. That gap will not be met by cutting out a few pencils and plane tickets and that kind of thing. You cannot at the same time save Public Service jobs and ensure there is no cut in services to Canadian while still make that degree of cut. You cannot have it that way, Mr. Speaker. I will be watching very carefully, but I am very concerned over what is happening in that area.

The numbers the Government has brought forward indicate quite clearly that the Government could have guaranteed jobs security at the same time it reduced the Public Service by attrition. Seven hundred jobs which the Government says will be lost this year amount to three-tenths of a per cent of the Public Service. If the Government can reach in and find $500 million worth of cuts by means of what it is doing with the cuts announced yesterday, it could find the extra $20 million or $30 million needed to pay for the salaries of three-tenths of a per cent of the Public Service.

If the Government had been prepared and able to negotiate job security with the Public Service and guarantee that no one would be unwillingly deprived of a job, then it would have been able to seek co-operation from the Public Service in terms of getting more effective and efficient management of it. No one who works in Government is opposed to that. People understand the need to make any organizataion work effectively and efficiently. I, as a representative of many people working in the Public Service, support the goal of getting an efficient and effective Public Service of which people who work professionally can be proud.

When you are threatened with cuts, not knowing whether your job is the next on the line, and when the reverse order of merit system is applied so arbitrarily that you cannot be sure that your job will not be chosen regardless of how you have done in the past, the incentive to co-operate disappears entirely. If you co-operate, you might help someone else's merit rating to go up while yours falls, relatively speaking, and you get dumped. If you train someone new on the job, they may keep the job when cuts have to be made—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to address the Government on its unfair, unjust, and inequitable Budget.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I know that my friend and colleague is very knowledgeable about the Public Service, about jobs, and particularly about some of the proposed cuts. I am, of course, concerned about all cuts, but I am particularly concerned about the disproportionate impact that there will be on women workers within the Public Service through Government policies and also through budget cuts. I was at a women's conference sponsored by the Public Service Alliance of B.C. and the Yukon last week. People there were very concerned, anxious, and intimidated. Of course, women in clerical and service jobs within the Public Service were the most worried. They were also concerned about contracting out. Women with children will not have the protections they need. Privatization is forcing women into voluntary jobs which do not have adequate wages or protections. They are also concerned about deregulation, which is pushing women into part-time jobs. What comment does my colleague have on this from his review of the Budget and Government policies generally? I would specifically like to ask him about cuts that I noticed in the Budget Papers in the Department of National Health and Welfare. Over the next four years $4.82 billion will be cut from that Department. I believe this will have a very serious impact on women.

Mr. Cassidy: Earlier today when the Estimates were made available and we had a chance to question officials on them, we asked that very question. We asked whether there is any concern within the Government to ensure that, if lay-offs eventually do occur, although I hope they can all be avoided, women will not suffer. Women tend to occupy jobs as clerks and secretaries, and other jobs which may be seen as being easier to cut by Government mandarins than jobs with more professional or technical qualifications. I had expected the Government to have thought that through, but it has not.

In the recent cuts in the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, an above-average number of women were chopped. I think the Government should make a commitment during the budget debate that if cuts have to take place, no higher proportion of women will be cut than the proportion they form of the Public Service of Canada. That is the very least we could get, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I think it should be the other way around because women have been discriminated against in getting decent jobs within the Government. Perhaps some affirmative action in terms of the de-hiring process might take place as well.

I share my hon. friend's concern about the cuts in the Department of Health and Welfare. We do not know exactly what they mean. However, we know that over time the Government is making greater and greater cuts in the area of health and welfare. Many women who have kids, low incomes, or require training, stand to be badly affected.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, the more I listen to socialist Members, the more I understand why Canadians do not take them more seriously. First, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) began by saying that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has imposed a surtax of 3 per cent to all income when we know quite well that the surtax does not apply to all income, but only to taxable income, that is to the amount on which individuals or businesses will have to pay taxes. If that is not misleading the public, Mr. Speaker, it certainly shows a deep ignorance of the facts.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the words "tax" and "profit" are always bad for the socialists. I am aware of no one in Canada who wants to pay more taxes than is needed. However, if our friends opposite, the socialists, had not been the crutch of the Liberal Party for 20 years, the Canadian people would not be saddled today with an accumulated debt of over $200 billion. Ordinary Canadians, people in the Ottawa Centre constituency, would not see 80 cents on each tax dollar go to pay the interests on this debt. It is obvious, and I have just had another proof of it, that you are only interested in trying to save your jobs. You sound like a broken record when you speak about the interests of ordinary Canadians. You have been saying the same thing for years. Canadians have been listening to you for years. Moreover, ordinary Canadians have not believed you for years.

Fiscal reform. A while ago he referred to the fiscal reform which is nowhere in this Budget and which was nowhere in the previous one, the "fair imposition" Budget as he called it. I do not know, perhaps this is the Government which introduced a minimum income tax for all individuals. Generally, when we speak of "minimum" for everyone, this implies both the rich and the not so rich. Fiscal reform, with a $500,000 capital gain deduction? They always talk about what it costs, never about what it yields. The RRSPs and what they cost, and so forth.

Mr. Speaker, small and medium businesses . . . when he referred to the RRSPs, when he referred to capital gains . . . you know, you referred earlier to the problems in the Province of Quebec, you referred earlier to unemployment problems in areas such as Lac-Saint-Jean, yes, Lac-Saint-Jean.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time for comments is just about expired. If he would put a question so that the Hon. Member could have the little remaining time for rebuttal, I would appreciate it.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Go ahead, we are listening!

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is charging me with being ignorant. Perhaps he is not aware that socialism has only become that acceptable in Quebec since the 1984 election. We rose, the NDP rose from 9 per cent to 23 per cent in surveys in Quebec, including his own area of Lac-Saint-Jean.

I would like to indicate that in his own area, people will not accept that corporations pay less while people, the taxpayers, the individuals pay more. And not just a little more, but $1,350 per family, since this Government was elected 18 months ago. This is what people are paying in the Saguenay area because of that new Government. Now, have the people in that are a gained anything? The answer is no. I travel very often to that area, and the answer indeed is no, because the actions taken by this Government are not targetted to the needs of his area but to Montreal, Vancouver, Toronto, Central Canada, rather than to underprivileged areas such as his own.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION—PROPOSED RENTAL INCREASES. (B) REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO ONTARIO RENT REVIEW BOARD

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, last April I asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight), who is responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, about the exorbitant rent increases being levied in a CMHC controlled complex in my riding, Main Square. The rent increases put in place in Main Square are over 10 per cent, well above the 4 per cent guidelines set by the Province of Ontario. The Minister replied that the rent increases were set at this high level as a way of recovering from the six and five program imposed by the previous Government. The hypocrisy in that attitude should be noted. The Conservative Party, when it was in Opposition, supported the Liberal Government's legislation to limit salaries and prices to 6 per cent in the first year and 5 per cent in the second. We see now another example of the uneven application of that law when the Government wants to go back and extract the difference from tenants in its housing projects.

The Minister commented in his answer to me that the rents for Main Square were below market rates. So they should be. The reason that market rates are as high as they are is because of the unbridled speculation in the private real estate market. One of the rules of the federal Government's social housing programs is to act as a moderating influence in the market. Unfortunately, this Government is so ideologically blinded that only initiatives which line private pockets are seen as worth-while. The recent flip of the Habitat '67 apartments in Montreal, where a speculator bought the complex from CMHC and then sold it to the tenants, pocketing $1.35 million in the process, is a perfect example of this Government's philosophy. The tenants tried to buy the property directly from CMHC, but the Crown corporation would not negotiate.

With regard to the Main Square increases, the Minister has replied to me that although CMHC projects are not subject to provincial rent guidelines, similar guidelines are applied whenever possible. This increase is huge and nowhere close to Ontario's guidelines. With the provincial Rent Review Board, there is some measure of public accountability. Who is to say in Main Square what are necessary increases to cover costs and what accounting system is to be used to determine costs?

As I said earlier, one of the advantages of social housing is that it should not be subject to the same kinds of cost pressures as housing in the private market. Tenants see the rents being increased regularly, but do not see much in return. Main Square has a long history of problems, not just with this Government, but with the Liberals who preceded it. There are many senior citizens in the buildings and others whose salaries were limited under the six and five legislation. Those people had their salaries held back at that time, and are now being hit a second time.

I have also had complaints about cleanliness and poor quality of the carpets in those buildings. For a long period when the complex was undergoing modifications, the construction noise and dirt were unbearable. Work in the basement brought dust up from the garbage chutes and it was then tracked down the corridor and ground into the carpet. Garbage, piles of dirt and containers, were left as a result of the construction work. Landscaping maintenance has been very crude. Tenants have complained to me about security. The complaints about the building have been numerous and endless. When this is matched by a rent increase of over 10 per cent, the tenants feel angry and insulted. The Minister's explanation is simply not acceptable. It is true that recently there has been some work in the complex, including replacing carpeting and improving inadequate hall lighting. Until the cost of these improvements have been justified, those increases should be rolled back.

In the spirit of the new co-operation that the federal Government keeps talking about between the federal and provincial Governments, the Minister should be prepared to live within the spirit and the law of those provinces where CMHC operates. The Minister should state clearly that rent increases will be within the provincial guidelines. He should order CMHC to roll back those 10 per cent rental increases and force CMHC officials to justify any increase before Ontario's Rent Review Commission. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond further to the matters raised by the Hon. Member on April 16, 1985 concerning proposed rental increases in CMHC-administered department projects, including Main Square in Toronto. As the Hon. Member knows in March, 1985, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation notified the tenants of the Main Square project of a 10.4 per cent rent increase. I should point out that all rent increases were $40 per month or less. The increase was instituted after a careful review of the project's financial situation and rent structure. The increase was designed to meet increasing operating costs and required capital improvements, to reduce operating deficits and to bring rents in line with those of other properties.

• (1805)

With respect to the increase, I would like to point out that CMHC has in place the federal graduated rent-to-income scale in the project. If a tenant feels that the rent increase creates financial difficulty, he or she has only to contact CMHC in order to receive assistance, if warranted. Under the scale, rents do not exceed 25 per cent of the family income for those tenants in a hardship situation. Presently, approximately one quarter of the tenants are receiving rent-geared-to-income assistance. At the same time, the project will benefit from the higher rents received from those who can afford to pay them.

Because of the former Government's price restraint policy, CMHC has not been able to increase rents in line with costs or market conditions and rents are substantially below market rates in comparable projects. This has meant increased losses to CMHC and the federal Government, and in hidden subsidies being poorly targetted to tenants in need.

According to provincial statute, CMHC projects, like those of Ontario municipalities and the Ontario Housing Corporation, are not subject to the provincial rent review guidelines. Nevertheless, when considering rent increases, wherever possible, CMHC applies internal guidelines similar to those of the Rent Review Board as though it were a private landlord subject to the Board's review. In this respect, CMHC ensures that the increases could be substantiated before the Board.

TRANSPORT—POSSIBLE CLOSING OF MARINE INDUSTRIES RAIL DIVISION—GOVERNMENT POSITION. (B) REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF VIA RAIL REQUIREMENTS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, this evening I would like to speak further to a question I put to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) on February 12 of this year, when I reminded him that Marine Industries in Sorel was about to close down its railway car division, which would lead to the loss of about 1,000 jobs, both directly and indirectly, in this area.

At the time, the Minister of Transport answered: "I am sure the Hon. Member has heard the statements made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) indicating that the number of jobs that have been created, and indeed in Quebec, is very considerable."

Mr. Speaker, this Government is obviously trying to take the credit for all the jobs created in Canada. Whatever the Government's performance in job creation, one thing is certain. Employees who traditionally have been involved in the manufacturing of locomotives and railway cars in Canada or who built parts for railway equipment, all these employees are suffering as a result of the Canadian Government's lack of direction and responsibility.

• (1810)

In fact, our principal railway companies—I am thinking especially of Canadian National and VIA Rail, two Crown corporations which should be receiving instructions from the Conservative Government to buy their rolling stock in Canada—these companies are now either not buying or buying abroad. I am thinking of one particular case where parts were purchased in Brazil instead of Canada. The situation has already become so alarming that Bombardier has already announced it stopped manufacturing locomotive and railway cars. The CSF Foundry located in Montreal East and Laforge CSW, also in Montreal East, have laid off hundreds of workers because they have no Government contracts, and now we have Marine Industries that is going to close down its railway division owing to a lack of Government contracts. This is an unacceptable situation. That is why I am raising the matter, and I would urge the Government to take action and to buy the rolling stock it needs in Canada.

The Minister has been making great speeches and telling us he wants to protect the rail passenger service. He will soon table a Bill giving VIA Rail more responsibility and specific authority. Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that after 18 months the Government has yet to buy something, and neither the CNR nor VIA Rail has received any new equipment. Week after week the Minister keeps repeating that their order is in. Even though the Parliamentary Secretary who will reply will probably tell me that they have placed an order and that Bombardier and an Ontario company are likely to sign a contract before too long, the fact is that the Government, at this point in time, has not yet bought any new railway equipment to meet the needs of the companies, either the CNR or VIA Rail.

In my judgment, the Minister is shirking his responsibilities by failing to establish a buy-at-home policy. I know that later on, in a few weeks, on March 8, the Marine Industries union workers, led by Mr. François Lamoureux, will hold a seminar to discuss the future of the company. I would like the Minister to be there to explain to Tracy and Montreal East workers who are severely affected by the inaction of the Conservative Government why this Government is more anxious to reduce the Canadian deficit than to create well-paying jobs in the railway industry. It would then be possible to keep hundreds of highly skilled workers who are qualified to build here the railway equipment we need and who want to go on doing that since it has been their job for decades.

I therefore ask the Government to act immediately, to stop beating around the bush and putting everything off, and to place orders right away with Marine Industries, Bombardier, Laforge and the Montreal East foundry so that these railway equipment workers may continue to earn an honest living.

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that the Government is trying to take credit for all the new jobs which have been created in the country. Since the Hon. Member is an experienced politician, he well knows that if there were any losses, the Government would be blamed for them as well. To be honest, the Government will take credit for all those new jobs that were created after the dismal years of the Liberal Government of which he was a Minister.

● (1815)

The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) is attempting to make the fallacious argument that this Government is somehow responsible for the equipment problems facing Via Rail. It is important to put this situation into its proper perspective.

When Via Rail was created in 1979, the corporation assumed the aging and inefficient passenger equipment owned by CN and CP. Today, Via's equipment fleet is made up of 977 units. More than 80 per cent of Via's rolling stock was built between 1948 and 1955 and is technically obsolete. During the years the Liberals were in Government, this equipment was not replaced with the new equipment that is now required. Equipment maintenance costs increase as equipment ages. For instance, maintenance costs on a 27-year-old locomotive are more than double those of a comparative locomotive half that age.

As the Hon. Member for Papineau is well aware, between 1980 and 1984, the former Liberal administration had Via embark on a shortsighted and costly policy of equipment overhaul. It did not buy new equipment but overhauled the old. The $400 million spent by Via during that period to maintain and rebuild the corporation's conventional fleet of cars and locomotives would have funded the acquisition of a new long-haul fleet.

We in the present Government have inherited this unacceptable situation as of September 1984. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) is acting quickly and with determination to turn it around. We in the Government are committed to restoring confidence in Canada's rail passenger network.

I should point out that legislation was introduced on February 24. This legislation is a key element in improving the situation with Via's equipment. As the Minister has already indicated to the Hon. Member, 30 locomotives are on order while there was a lack of orders under the previous Liberal Government. As well, negotiations between Via, UTDC and Bombardier for new passenger cars are nearing completion. I want to assure the Hon. Member for Papineau that the Minister has made positive decisions for Via Rail, decisions his predecessors, the former Liberal Government, were incapable of undertaking.

PUBLIC SERVICE—SALARY INCREASES—GOVERNMENT POSITION. (B) REQUEST THAT PRIVATIZATION COST BENEFIT STUDIES BE TABLED

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on January 28 of this year, in a question to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), I asked him how he could justify salary increases of 3, 5 and 8 per cent for senior executives of Crown corporations, when we all know that we now have 15,000 public servants who are worried and who were told in the last Budget that they would lose their jobs, and when we all know that the Government has admitted it intends to cut public service jobs, supposedly in order to cut Government spending.

I also asked the Minister to give the House some cost-benefit information on the impact of the policies announced by the Government, especially those on privatization. In his answer, the Minister implied that such studies existed. he said, and we can read this at page 10246 of Hansard, and I quote:

I think we have been most forthcoming in all the information for which the Hon. Member has asked. I will be more than happy to make available to him any studies which we have bearing on the rate of remuneration and bearing on the cost benefits type of information for which he is asking that we have at our disposal.

Now in my question, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister, since I assume that a good manager makes some kind of financial study of the benefits of these policies, especially the privatization of certain Government services: Did he have any studies on the social cost to public servants who lose their jobs because of the policies of the Government?

Mr. Speaker, he answered, and the answer may be found at page 10246 in Hansard:

I will be more than happy to make available to him any studies which we have bearing on the rate of remuneration and bearing on the cost-benefits type of information which he is asking that we have at our disposal.

● (1820)

So much for that! On February 5, I wrote to the Minister, because I had not received the information I asked for. I wrote to the Minister, and I asked him to send me the studies as he promised in the House on January 28. Further to my letter, I received a telephone call from one of the Minister's assistants who informed my staff that the only study carried out for the Government was a study on the remuneration of senior executives in the Public Service.

Mr. Speaker, the House will recall that I was not talking about senior executives. I was not talking about studies on the remuneration of these executives. I was talking about jobs held by public servants who had either lost or were about to lose their jobs. And I asked the Minister whether he had made a cost-benefit study. Have you made studies which might show, for instance, the cost benefits of privatization, as advocated by the Government?

So, Mr. Speaker, again on February 11 I wrote to the Minister asking him to confirm, in writing this time, the existence or non-existence of privatization cost benefit studies. In case of a negative reply, I asked the Minister in the letter, and I quote from the third paragraph: "As you will see . . .", and I am quoting my own words, " . . . on page 10246 of the Official Report of the Debates my question had to do with the tabling of privatization cost benefit studies."

If there are no such studies, should I conclude that the Minister misled the House? It is a very simple question since the Minister told me: "Everything is available, we are an open Government. The Hon. Member need only ask and he will receive." I asked but did not receive anything, Mr. Speaker.

The Government policy on personnel management is well known. We know that in its Budget last year, in May 1985, the Government had announced its intention of reducing the Public Service by some 15,000 person-years. With that in mind, the Government has announced a 2 per cent reduction in fiscal year 1986-87 and 1 per cent in each of the next four years. We also know that yesterday, in the February 26 Budget, were told that there will be a $500 million cut-back in various programs. We simply do not quite know where and how, but there will be cut-backs of about $500 million in federal agencies and corporations.

Mr. Speaker, it seems that this Government wanted people, at least in the National Capital Region, to believe that jobs have been created, but I can tell you that the Government has not created jobs in this region, especially in Ottawa-Vanier and in the sectors of the capital with which I am familiar. On the contrary, the Government has done away with jobs, it is still doing so and it is putting public servants in a very difficult position.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the budget debate will give me an opportunity to come back to this issue, but, this evening I would like to ask one question to the Parliamentary Secretary: Have studies been made on the privatization of Government services? Have cost-benefit studies been carried out by the Treasury Board which would show the country as a whole that your policies do make sense? Or else, did the Minister not know what he was saying when he told me that we had all received information on this issue! The question is quite simple. Have studies been made or not?

• (1825)

[English]

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is a pity that the Hon. Member has not learned how to ask a question properly in the House. In going over the material recently, I noticed in the Member's questions there are six different queries, and it makes it virtually impossible for a person to respond to them intelligently in the short time allotted. I know a letter was being drafted in response to his most recent inquiry, but he has decided to jump the gun and tried to make political capital out of something which is not.

I read all the questions and they are basically unrelated. Concerning the negotiations on the salaries of public servants since the resumption of Public Service collective bargaining in 1984, the Government and the unions have concluded more than 20 collective agreements providing, on average, annual pay settlements of 3.5 per cent.

On February 23, the Government and the Public Service Alliance of Canada reached an agreement, subject to union ratification which will provide pay increases for another 90,000 public servants in the CR, PM and GL groups. It is anticipated that the contracts of many other groups will be renegotiated during the next few months.

With respect to privatization, the Government has established a ministerial task force to co-ordinate the possible sale of Crown corporations or other equity holdings. A privatization secretariat has been set up in support of the task force. The ministerial task force has developed a systematic process for the review of each individual privatization initiative to ensure that all issues be fully identified in advance and that divestiture proceed in a business-like manner.

In the initial stage, the Minister who is responsible for a particular corporation will present his or her recommendations to the task force on the whole range of issues concerning possible privatization, including the continued public policy role of the corporation, alternate means of delivering the same policy, potential impact on employees, service to the public and preliminary financial considerations. The task force will then decide whether or not to proceed with a further study of the corporation.

The purpose of the next study phase would be the proposal, again by the responsible minister, of resolutions to the outstanding policy issues, including impact on employees and more detailed financial and cost benefit analyses. I would stress that this work will be done by the line department in consultation with the privatization secretariat to enable the responsible minister to formulate recommendations for the task force. Much of this work will contain commercially sensitive information and cannot be released to the public. It is only after this second study has been completed that the task force will decide whether or not to proceed with the sale of the corporation.

In so far as person year reductions are concerned, I would like to emphasize that Treasury Board has had a detailed policy on work force adjustment whose purpose is to redeploy the maximum number of employees declared surplus and laid off. This policy was revised in 1985 and these revisions were developed through consultation with the Public Service unions and were recommended by the Treasury Board for approval by the national joint council, a consultative body comprised of representatives of the Government and of all Public Service unions.

The work force adjustment policy provides for six months written notice from the date of lay-off, appointment to other positions in the Public Service on a priority basis; retraining for other positions within the Public Service; salary protection and entitlement to severance pay. It is expected that 85 per cent of employees affected will be reassigned to another part of the Public Service as a result of the application of this policy. As well, many of the remaining could be placed if they were willing to relocate at Government expense or if they were willing to accept lower paying jobs.

THE BUDGET

SOCIAL IMPACT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): When this Government and particularly this Prime Minister and this Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) come up with policies to help the rich, the word is: Good show, they are all right! But when the same Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister and the Conservative Government try to do something for the poor they come up with unfair policies, and the word is zilch! Here is why. Last year this Government decided that $23,500 would be the maximum income under which families would qualify for the child tax credit. This year, in an attempt to dissuade poor families from signing their child tax credit over to discounters, the Government has chosen to prepay part of the child tax credit, but only to families whose income does not exceed $15,000. Mr. Speaker, this Government and this Minister of Finance have just decided that there are two categories of poor families.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FINANCE

TAXATION OF NORTHERN BENEFITS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): In Wednesday night's Budget the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) provided a new income tax regime for many northern residents. I had hoped that this tax reduction for northern benefits would help people in remote areas. However, after checking with Revenue Canada officials, I found that what will happen is that many northerners will pay more in taxes.

For example, in the community of Churchill, CMHC is attempting to set the level of a unit up to $1,600 per month, despite the fact that residents in that community and the provincial Government object.

In checking with workers in that community I found that a janitor who works for the federal Government with the Harbours Board could be paid $16,500 a year. A clerk working for the federal Government could earn as little as $15,500 a year. What that means is that under the new regime, people who are going to earn $16,000 or $15,000 in real salaries will be paying—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SUPPORT FOR PRIVATIZATION PROPOSALS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Opposition criticizes the Government's initiative of returning federally-owned or controlled corporate entities to the private sector. It turns a blind eye to all of the studies which confirm that public sector enterprises tend toward inefficiency for there is no absolute necessity for them to compete. If things go sour, they just turn to the Government for more money. Those Opposition Members should talk to their Socialist soul mates in France and Spain. Those Governments have realized that state ownership is inefficient and expensive. France has sold more than 100 state-owned subsidiaries and is in the process of selling more. Spain has returned car, truck, and industrial companies to the private sector, with great success.

I believe that Canadians can run their businesses and companies without having to compete with their own Government.

THE ECONOMY

REDUCTION OF DEFICIT AND CREATION OF JOBS

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, two days ago the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) introduced a Budget which confirmed to Canadians that we have stayed on the best course for Canada. This Budget places the deficit firmly on a declining trend, from $33.8 billion this year to $29.8 billion next year, and it will decline still further to $22 billion in 1990-91. With this year's reduction the Minister of Finance was right on target. I challenge any Hon. Member of the House to tell us the last time a Minister of Finance was so accurate with a forecast in deficit reduction.

Jobs, not tens of thousands but hundreds of thousands, some 580,000 jobs, have been created over the past 18 months. The facts speak for themselves. By solving the problems of the past, we are creating a future filled with prosperity and promise for all Canadians.

S.O. 21

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON WAGE EARNERS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, once again this Government has described a Budget as tough but fair. That is what it said about the last Budget. It sure as hell is tough but it is certainly far away from fair.

If we consider that because of the last Budget, which was introduced in May, a wage earner earning $15,000 paid an accumulative tax increase of some 36 per cent, we can compare that with the person who earned $200,000 and who faced an accumulative tax increase in the same period of only 2 per cent.

Last May Canadians were asking themselves what kind of fairness that Budget and that tax offered the average working Canadian. This week that problem has simply been compounded with the pressure of a new tax burden on middle-class Canadians.

In a year end poll last Christmas by Decima and Mcleans's magazine, a very specific analysis showed that this country is perceived to be between the haves and the have-nots—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE BUDGET

PROJECTED LEVELS OF CORPORATE AND PERSONAL INCOMES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Budget is marked by unfairness and incompetence. Let me just deal with the economic projections given on page 26 of the Minister's own document. The Budget will give us huge increases in corporate profits in 1986 and 1987 while both personal incomes and consumer expenditures decline in growth. Talk about unfairness of results.

What is tragic is that this is a slow growth Budget which shows our economic growth rate declining in 1986 and 1987 while the U.S. growth rate is increasing. What an incompetent development strategy. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) should realize that we cannot take billions of dollars from the pockets of average families and expect dramatic growth. This Budget is a bust. In my economic grading, it deserves an F for failure—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

EMPLOYMENT

SUPPORT FOR BUDGET MEASURES

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) demonstrated clearly that this Government is spending better and smarter. Canadians will recall that after both the November economic statement and our May Budget, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), the merchants of gloom and doom predicted hundreds of thousands of lost jobs and a depressed economy.

The same doom and gloom campaign has already begun as we are hearing today, but the people of Canada will not be fooled by their cheap political rhetoric. Look at our record. There have been 580,000 jobs created in just 18 months, a deficit reduction of $4 billion, and economic growth equalled only by Japan.

I am proud to stand in my place today to offer a hearty congratulation to the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) for bringing sanity, common sense, and good management back to our nation's affairs.

INCOME TAX

SUPPORT FOR NEW SYSTEM AFFECTING NORTHERN BENEFITS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in fulfillment of yet another election promise made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Budget contained a long-awaited announcement with respect to the taxation of northern benefits. All northerners will be pleased with the replacement of year-to-year remission orders by permanent changes to the Income Tax Act which take cognizance of the much higher costs of living in northern and remote areas.

In contrast to former remission orders, which tended to favour a select segment of the population, the new system, devised as a result of widespread consultations, will be as fair and equitable as possible and extend benefits to pensioners, federal employees, the self-employed, and employees of small business, people who had previously been neglected.

On behalf of all Canadians who live in the far reaches of the country might I congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for an extremely well received Budget—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

THE BUDGET

TOURISM INDUSTRY

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Once again this week, Mr. Speaker, we have seen that the Government has completely forgotten all about the tourist industry.

Instead, I will comment a little bit on what the Budget did for farmers.

As a western Canadian who grew up working on cattle ranches and farms for a good portion of his life, and recognizing the value of agriculture to our country, I know, as do we all, that the farming community is hard-pressed. In your Province of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, farmers find themselves in a real crisis situation. The last best estimate that I have seen is that about 50,000 farmers across the country today are in a financial crisis situation. They are simply unable to pay off their debts. What has the Government done? Fundamentally, very little. If you are a farmer who happens to be doing business with the Farm Credit Corporation, and the President of the National Farmers Union said this morning that accounts for about 25 per cent of the troubled farmers, there is a possibility of renegotiating your debts. However, if you are part of the other 75 per cent who happen to be dealing with provincial financial institutions or the chartered banks and others, forget it. The Government of Canada has literally turned its back on you. Well, that is not true. The Government said it will help you get out of farming. It will find ways and means of making it easier for people to leave their farms. I am not certain that is the kind of support the farmers of Canada thought they would get from Mr. Mulroney during the election campaign in 1984.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Point of order, the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly). I know what she is going to say. The Hon. Member will please refer to the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for my inconsiderate use of the words "Mr. Mulroney". I was referring to the Prime Minister of Canada, obviously, in his previous role as Leader of the Opposition. When he was campaigning he said: "We are concerned about farmers, we are going to do something to them." I think they thought, rather than "to them", he would help farmers and not help them get out of farming. I do not think that was the kind of help people thought the Prime Minister was promising. However, when you look at all these documents, that is what you find. That is what is in the Budget for farmers.

I listened with interest to the Premier of the Province of Alberta this morning on the radio. He was very angry, upset and disturbed. He was saying there is nothing in this Budget for the Province of Alberta. He was very dismayed at that. I know the news media were trying to find Mr. Filmon of Manitoba to get an idea of what he was thinking. Unfortunately they could not find him in order to find out how the Leader of the Conservative Party in Manitoba reacted to the Budget. However, when the Premier of Alberta stands up and says there is nothing in it for Albertans, just you wait. Next I think it will be the Premier of Saskatchewan, not to mention the Premier of British Columbia.

Again, what is there in this Budget for farmers and ranchers? Very little. What is in it for the jobless of Canada?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Are you kidding? Jobs, jobs, jobs.

Mr. Riis: No, taxes, taxes, taxes. You have that mixed up.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Five hundred and eighty thousand new jobs.

Mr. Riis: We have an initiative, the validity of which some of us question. Nevertheless, let us recognize the initiative by the Government called the Canadian Jobs Strategy. That is the Government's initiative to create jobs, to help business and community and non-profit groups to hire people. But what did this Budget do? It cut it.

• (1410)

Mr. Hudon: No.

Mr. Riis: Yes. The amount of funding in the Canadian Jobs Strategy this year was $900 million. Next year it is going to be $800 million. Using my simple arithmetic that means it has been cut, not totally, but cut in revenue. This is done at a time when there are 1.25 million unemployed people in Canada. The Government's own statistics tell us that this is not going to change much in the next couple of years. We are told that at the moment we have 9.8 per cent unemployment and with any luck it will get down to 9.6 per cent this year. That is hardly what one would think of as an optimistic forecast.

Why did the Government not set targets for the years ahead? Why did it not say, for example, that within two years it wants to move the unemployment rate down to 3 per cent, and in the next two years by another 3 per cent? Why did it not set some goal to shoot for so it could put in place strategies to accomplish that goal? I gather from reading the Budget documents that the Government is saying it knows we have a little more than one million people out of work, about 10 per cent of the labour force, but that is the way it is, that is the price we pay. I do not think that was the kind of initiative the people of Canada were expecting to find in this Budget. What was in the Budget for the unemployed other than cuts?

Something that troubles me greatly as a Parliamentarian from western Canada is that I notice one of the areas which will experience major cuts in the years ahead will be the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Which areas of the country does the Department of Regional Economic Expansion help? Does it do much for downtown Toronto or the city of Ottawa? It was by and large put into place to assist the Atlantic provinces and western and northern Canada, provinces like British Columbia. But the Government is making massive cuts in this Department. That sends to me a very clear message. The Government is saying to the regions of the country: "Forget it. We are abandoning you. We know times are tough but we are going to make them tougher. We are going to cut our support systems back and reduce job creation funds". That is what Government is saying.

I would like to speak about young people. I believe that if there is a disgrace in Canada today it is that so many of our young people are out of work and so many of them cannot afford to go to post-secondary institutions. Too many of our young people are collecting unemployment insurance and welfare because there is nothing for them to do. We should declare this a national catastrophe. We should recognize the serious level of youth unemployment as a national crisis. There should have been an extraordinary set of programs put in place to alleviate this situation. But what does one find in the Budget for young people when one pours overe all of these pages? Zilch. There is virtually nothing here which addresses the plight of young people.

I could be asked why I seem to be just concerned about young people. But I am not, I am also concerned about the older workers, those people who have reached the age of 55 years or 58 years who have lost their jobs, particularly in those regions where they are going to have difficulty finding employment. What was in the Budget for them? The Government cut programs which helped older workers. The Government removed actually more than 50 per cent of its support for those older workers.

What was in the Budget to assist single mothers and their children? Nothing. You can bet, Mr. Speaker, that the National Council on the Status of Women and all sorts of other groups which represent the interests of women will analyse this Budget word for word to see what the Government has done to enhance the status of women in the workplace in terms of providing equal pay for work of equal value. They will come up with a blank. I have looked through these Budget documents page by page and there is virtually nothing in there which will be of assistance to women and children.

Who did benefit from the Budget? Surely, when there are hundreds of pages in the Budget someone must have benefited. I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, who it is. It is very clear. The corporate sector and the upper income earners benefited. The corporate sector will be paying less cumulative taxes next year, and I ask Hon. Members to turn to page 99 if they are in doubt. We find that corporate taxes will go down next year while personal taxes will go up to the tune of $5.5 billion, plus sales tax, and plus gasoline taxes on top of that. Selected segments of the corporate sector were the winners.

What about the wealthy in Canada? What about those people whose incomes are $150,000 to $200,000 a year? They will receive a tax break. Their rates do not go up, they go down. Just to clarify this point, in the last Budget the Government placed a surtax on upper income earners by adding 5 per cent to their tax rate. It comes off at the end of this year and it will be replaced with a 3 per cent increase from that base. We can say then that the wealthiest people in Canada will have their marginal tax rates reduced as a result of this Budget and the ordinary Canadian citizen will have his or her taxes increased by 3 per cent. It is perfectly clear who are the beneficiaries and who are the losers.

I would like to ask a question today, Mr. Speaker. I know my hon. friends in the Conservative Party will be speaking shortly to the Budget. I would like to ask them to tell us, in a sense of fairness, why it was that the Government left unchanged the fact that someone making money on a foreign stock exchange, selling land in a foreign country or selling paintings and jewellery in a foreign country, pays no tax at all on those captial gains? People selling their yachts down in Barbados, selling their paintings in Honolulu, and those doing business on the Hong Kong stock exchange do not pay any income tax at all. Their income is tax free.

An Hon. Member: How many?

Mr. Riis: I do not know how many but the point is that if there is a single person doing that it is unfair, not how many. The principle is unfair. When people make money on the Hong Kong stock exchange and do not pay any income tax at all on that income, I say that is unfair, unjust and absolutely wrong. The Government is absolutely wrong when it says it is fair in its dealings with the people of Canada. I do hope that Hon. Members opposite will stand up and explain why the Government allows people whose income is from capital gains based in a foreign country to pay no income tax either in that country or in this country? I hope those Hon. Members can explain that to the people of Canada?

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure my friend would want to correct something he said. He seemed to be referring to income tax and I am sure he will agree that those people would pay income tax, but if there were any capital gains they would be free of capital gains tax up to $500,000, after which they would pay capital gains tax.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Well, that is debate. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Riis: I am pleased that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), clarified that. Yes, if you obtain capital gains from the transactions which gave you income on the Hong Kong stock exchange, that is what would be tax exempt. On the income gained from the income from capital gains on the Hong Kong stock exchange or from selling yachts in Barbados, or paintings in Honolulu, or dealing in jewellery in the Sudan, you would pay tax, but not on the capital gains.

• (1420)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired. If there are no other questions or comments, I will recognize the next speaker.

Mr. Riis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Just to clarify the situation, during my presentation a number of my colleagues raised points of order. Does the time which those points of order took to be made come off my time allotment?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I gave the Hon. Member at least an additional three or four minutes before we recessed for lunch. I gave him another couple of minutes just now. Thus I have taken note of the situation.

The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) on debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority. As you know, this year Canadians or rather our public administration will spend $27 billion on servicing the national debt. The cumulative debt is around $230 billion and would be increasing in geometric progression if we had not acted responsibly as a Government and taken radical steps to bring the situation under control. We should realize that during the financial year ending March 31, our national debt increased $34 billion.

This means that during the year starting April 1, 1986, according to the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on Wednesday, we will have to provide for additional monies to pay the interest alone on the additional $34 billion. Every year, this amount would increase even more if we had not been able to propose a number of difficult but sensible measures to Canadians in this Budget. In fact, the national debt would have doubled before the end of our mandate. However, this will not happen, Mr. Speaker, because the team heading this Government is not a bunch of amateurs or a bunch of socialists. Our team knows that Canadians will understand the difficult situation our country is in, and that they are all prepared to make sacrifices so that we can look forward to better days in the not too distant future.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of this House and of all Canadians to the fact that our Minister of Finance had predicted a deficit of 33.8 billion for 1985-86, and that for the first time in twenty years, these predictions were accurate. This is the first time a Minister of Finance, making his own budgetary projections with his own team, has been proved right. This performance is reassuring for all Canadians and for our economy, because now people realize we have a team that is able to make its predictions come true, and because we are firmly resolved to make the decisions that are necessary to attain our objectives and deliver the goods to Canadians, that is, to give them a renewed and expanding economy.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would be useful to give a quick overview of the Budgets of previous Ministers of Finance, to see to what extent they were able to achieve their budgetary goals.

Twenty years ago, in 1966-67 under Mr. Sharp, the Government predicted a Budget surplus of $615 million, and we had a deficit of $188 million, so that Mr. Sharp was out $803 million in his Budget of March 29, 1966.

On June 1 Mr. Mitchell Sharp announced a $288 million deficit for 1967-68, but the real deficit turned out to be $712 million, a difference of $584 million.

On October 22 1968 Mr. Edgar J. Benson forecast a $435 million deficit in his 1968-69 Budget, and it was one of the rare instances when the prediction proved to be just about right.

June 3, 1969, date of the 1969-70 Benson Budget, he called for a $375 million surplus but again fell short by $30 million.

On March 12, 1970 Mr. Benson announced a $250 million surplus on his 1970-71 Budget. Result: a $779 million deficit, a difference of $1.029 billion. The billion-dollar merry-go-round began under the socialist Liberals.

On June 18, 1971 Mr. Benson tabled his 1971-72 Budget, and it was the day he chose to introduce his infamous capital gains tax legislation, the one we amended recently. The Budget deficit was to be $650 million, but in fact it amounted to $1.543 billion—again the billion-dollar merry-go-round under the Liberals.

In 1972 the Hon. John Turner, on May 8, tabled the 1972-73 Budget. Now Leader of the Official Opposition, he then forecast a $450 million deficit, but it turned out to be double, nearly triple that amount: $1.676 billion, a gap of $1.2 billion in the forecast of the present Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, it is that Minister of Finance who is now the leader of the few remaining Liberal Members—there are some leaving every day—who is now the Leader of our Official Opposition.

On February 19, 1973, Mr. Turner announced a second Budget for 1973-74. The estimated deficit was to be $975 million. The actual deficit was $2.2 billion, or a difference of 250 per cent. As Leader of the Official Opposition, he is now criticizing us for trifles. At the time, he could not even hit his own targets.

On May 6, 1974, Minister Turner announced his third Budget for 1974-75. The estimated deficit was to be $450 million. The actual deficit was $2.016 billion, a difference or mistake of 400 per cent.

On June 23, 1975, Mr. Turner announced still another Budget for 1975-76 which, fortunately, was to be his last. The estimated deficit was to be $3.175 billion. The actual deficit was $5.749 billion, a difference of $2 billion.

Mr. Turner, as Minister of Finance, disappeared and was replaced by Donald S. Macdonald who, on May 25, 1976, tabled his first Budget for 1976-77. The estimated deficit was to be $5 billion. The actual deficit was $6.3 billion: this skyrocketting increase in the deficit was the result of mismanagement and collective recklessness on the part of Canada's administrators.

The following March 31st, Mr. Macdonald announced the Budget for 1977-78. The estimated deficit was to be $7.160 billion. The actual deficit was $10.445 billion, a difference of $3 billion.

We realize from year to year the carelessness and lack of foresight of the previous Governments. On April 10, 1978, another Minister—and not the least, according to the Liberals—Mr. Jean Chrétien, presented his Budget for 1978-79: estimated deficit: $9.250 billion; real deficit: $12.636 billion.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, neither of these two Liberal bigwigs should have taken part in their recent party leadership race. The Liberal party membership should have checked the records of their two aspiring leaders who had been unable to reach their own targets. The same team could not complete the 1978-79 Budget. However, the actual deficit was consistent with the estimated one.

On October 28, 1980, Mr. Allan MacEachen announced the Budget for 1980-81; estimated deficit: $11.920 billions; actual deficit: $13,529 billion, a difference of $2.5 billion. On November 12, 1981, Mr. MacEachen brought down the 1981-82 budget with a projected deficit of $13.34 billion. The actual deficit was $14.752 billion. What do all these mistakes show about the competence or the honesty of the team which made up the Government of Canada at the time? On June 28, 1982, Mr. MacEachen announced the budget for 1982-83, with a projected deficit of $19.5 billion. I would like you, Mr. Speaker, as well the Members opposite and all Canadian men and women to listen carefully. Mr. MacEachen had projected in his budget a deficit of $19.5 billion, but 12 months later, he and his team ended up with a $27.689 billion deficit.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Hudon: It is all their fault!

Mr. Fontaine: It is shameful, Mr. Speaker! That was the team which led the destinies of Canada, and it made a mistake of $10 billion. Those are the some people who now question our proposals to restore acceptable economic conditions in Canada. Mr. Speaker, these people will certainly be able to continue to sit in isolation on the side of the Opposition for many years.

Mr. Robichaud: Not for long!

Mr. Fontaine: On April 19, 1983, in the 1983-84 budget announced by Minister Lalonde, the projected deficit for a single year was $31.3 billion; in fact, it amounted to $32.423 billion. On February 15, 1984, Mr. Lalonde announced the 1984-85 budget, fortunately the last budget of the Liberal Government, which was made up of spendthrifts, image salesmen, socialists, unlimited borrowers, out-of-breath legislators and idealists, which budget projected a deficit of $29.6 billion; in fact, the deficit, which was supposed to buy the next elections, amounted to $38.246 billion, Mr. Speaker. The Canadians had enough evidence of this mismanagement. They asked us to reduce the deficit, they asked us to bring back a healthy economy, they sent us here, 211 strong, to put some order in the nation's house.

In the last two years, we have gradually got rid of the previous administration. The Canadian people should understand that, when we give a figure for our deficit in the budget, we are going to deliver and keep to the amount forecast. Our efforts to limit our deficit and promote economic renewal are reflected by a new distribution of the taxation burden. We thought it very important and significant to provide at least partial exemption of the capital gains tax to encourage Canadian businessmen to get started and to expand.

In Wednesday's Budget we repealed a 12.5 per cent tax on dividends earned from small businesses. That tax had been put introduced by Minister MacEachen. It was in the process of strangling our business developers, because it prevented them from accumulating profits, the only incentive in our human society.

Our inroads to reduce the deficit, Mr. Speaker, are conclusive. This year, the deficit will be reduced to below $30 billion. To get that result, 70 per cent will come from savings in Government spendings and the balance from an increase in Government revenues. Canadian men and women will not lose. Deficit reduction in the first place fosters confidence in the economic community; in the second place it results in a decrease in total money demands, two items that will result in a gradual decrease in interest rates. Each and everyone of us will benefit sooner or later from that interest rate reduction. If we look for instance at average family mortgages in the vicinity of $50,000, a mere 3 per cent interest reduction amounts to a $1,500 saving per family, which means that all Canadians will gain financially, economically and socially from the fiscal measures put forward Wednesday by the Hon. Minister of Finance.

And, indeed, I am not alone in commending this Budget. I noted this morning the following in a Globe and Mail editorial:

> Let us acknowledge what the Government has achieved in repairing Ottawa's finances less than two years after its election.

This is a most positive editorial in one of the more credible of Canadian dailies. It reflects satisfaction, confidence, recovery. In the editorial page of today's Le Devoir, Albert Juneau comments on the Wilson Budget, from which he draws the best of positive conclusions, after brushing a somber picture of the Liberal legacy inherited on September 4, 1984.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I conclude on a final quote, this time from Courant published by the Economic Council of Canada. This is a most credible scientific review, prepared by economists whom the previous administration should have been consulting. They should have consulted not just the review but its members, because they had appointed them, they were paying their salaries. But was it viable to listen to the members of the Economic Council of Canada? Was it consistent with the Laprade Fund wasting public money for purposes of Liberal patronage. In this VI-3 journal for 1986, Mr. Speaker, it is said how important it is to amend our tax system especially with respect to various legal means used to avoid taxation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fontaine: Once again, Mr. Speaker, it would be in the interest of my Liberal colleagues to listen to me instead of making those unintelligible noises that should not be heard in the Parliament of Canada.

The Economic Council of Canada—people hired and paid by the Liberals—mentions that there is considerable confusion at the taxation level. These people are not politicians but experts whom you hired and who have stated that Canadians are too often tempted to invest in fiscally but uneconomically profitable investments. The taxation system of the Liberal Party, and I quote:

—promotes investment in activities providing the highest yields after tax rather than in more productive activities providing the highest yields before tax.

Finance Minister Wilson, with his Budget brought down on Wednesday, has had his first try at improving our taxation system. Mr. Speaker, our economy is in good hands. Only the Opposition is unhappy but for other reasons. During the weekend in Quebec, I hope that they will continue to reflect, while missing some of their former colleagues, on their past mistakes and that they will do so for many decades to come. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and God bless them!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments.

• (1440)

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of questions for the Hon. Member. How would he explain that since the Budget was introduced the Canadian dollar has been falling on the money exchange? The reason it has not fallen even further than it has is likely because the Government of Canada—

Mr. Dick: Likely!

Mr. Riis: I will say, then, the reason it has not fallen further is because the Government of Canada through the central bank has been out in the money markets purchasing literally hundreds of millions of dollars of our own currency, to give the impression that people have faith in it.

Does the Hon. Member believe that a person working in a sawmill or an office and receiving $10,000 per year should pay income tax at the rate of 20 per cent, whereas if that same person obtains $10,000 from selling land in Arizona or speculating on the Hong Kong stock exchange he pays no tax as a result of the capital gains tax exemption? Does he think that is fair?

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first question from the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), I should like to point out that Canadians have favourably reacted to our Budget. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business which is somewhat representative of small businesses, the locomotive of small businesses, as well as the major Canadian dailies, the Counseil du patronat du Québec and other organizations have made some quite constructive comments. The business community speaks very highly of our Budget.

And when you tell us about the effects of some of those taxes in specific cases, I am pleased to reply that you have forgotten to mention that our Budget—and you are giving me the opportunity to do so and I will try to explain it to be understood—which is promoting economic renewal, and giving confidence to the business community, will decrease demand for Government loans and make more funds available to the private sector. More funds being available, interest rates will be reduced. And when money costs less, you and I, and Canadians generally, when we borrow, especially for home mortgages, we are looking at average loans of $50,000, and our mortgage loans will cost us perhaps 3 per cent, perhaps 4 per cent, less a month, and this means $1,500 to $2,000 less, as against the $300 to $400 in taxes that the Budget proposals will perhaps be costing us.

This means each and every Canadian benefits from our Budget proposals. This is what you forgot to figure out. You are always trying to figure out the smaller items you yourselves find objectionable, because of your socialist philosophy. But you can never give the people the actual measure.

This, Mr. Speaker, is my answer.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) for a supplementary.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have a very short supplementary question for the Hon. Member. Perhaps he did not understand my question. Why is the dollar falling so drastically? Why is it requiring central bank intervention? Why should people who make capital gains income from speculating on the Hong Kong stock exchange not pay tax on it?

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I understood the question perfectly, but I do not suggest the Hon. Member understood my answer well. The Budget message is clear. It is a message of renewed confidence in the Canadian people. It is a message sent to the 750,000 small and medium-sized businesses in Canada. We are telling them: "Hire people, now you can keep a larger part of your profits, you can expand". We are putting back the spirit of entrepreneurship that had been chased away by the Liberals in some cases where you were in bed with them, you people of the socialist parties. Therefore our message is clear. It is a message of renewed confidence, with specific items. We will give business people, those who sign paychecks on Thursday night, an opportunity to hire more people. This is how we are going to solve the unemployment problem in Canada.

They will have confidence, they will be interested in developing businesses, they will be allowed to have dividends from their own businesses without being taxed, as it had been proposed and implemented in the MacEachen Budget. This they will be able to do, they will be able to accumulate equity and gain up to $500,000 without the negative effects of taxation.

Mr. Hudon: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to congratulate my hon. colleague about the refreshing figures he has quoted in the House today. I have a question to ask him. He said earlier that a certain Minister of Finance named MacEachen made a mistake of $10 billion, or 33⅓ per cent, in his budget. I would like to ask this: Is that the same man who is now in the Senate and who, last year, refused to give us our borrowing authority pretexting that our request was not serious? Is it the same man who is now so cautious and who objects to the indexing of family allowances at 89 cents a week? This is a man who made a mistake of 33⅓ per cent. I would not even let him have my family allowance cheque, Mr. Speaker. Is it indeed the same man?

Mr. Fontaine: According to my information and in view of the socialist philosophy and partisanship of his recent interventions in the Senate, I think that it might indeed be the same man, especially as I seem to recall that his appointment was rather compatible with the series of appointments made by former Prime Minister Trudeau when he left the Canadian Government.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I draw to the attention of Hon. Members that they should have respect for the other place. We do not discuss our colleagues who have gone to heaven, to the other place or whatever. We must have respect for the other place in this Chamber.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of very straightforward questions for the Hon. Member. First, could he tell the House to what he attributes the drop in the Canadian dollar on the international markets 48 hours after what he claims to be a very solid Budget was brought in? Second, does he think it is fair that those who earn their money by speculating on condominiums, racehorses and other luxuries should be allowed to get away with paying no tax at all on up to $500,000 of capital gains?

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: I thank my colleague for these two questions. I believe that it would be a good idea for the socialist Members to get used to express their thought in theoretical terms and general principles instead of always making judgments on special cases. Otherwise, in 25, 50 or 75 years, they will find themselves still sitting on the side of the Opposition if they cannot show some intellectual discipline and judge issues on the basis of general concepts rather than special cases.

Second, when you ask questions, do not think about the next one you are going to ask. Think about listening and analysing our reply.

I think that this answer is self-explanatory. The rest of the House understands quite well.

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I am sure all the people watching the House and listening to the Hon. Member's answers will recognize that he did not answer my questions at all. Indeed, socialists are always accused of dealing with theories, not with specifics. I asked him very specific questions and he refused to answer them. The friends of the Tories operate on the money markets—the wealthy and the big money-bag capitalists. They are the ones who are responsible for the buck dropping. They are the Tories' friends. Why are they doing that to the Government, Mr. Speaker?

• (1450)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. A very short answer to that question and then debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: As I recall, the Hon. Member was here, at least in body, during the question period. The highest authorities at the Department of Finance have already answered this question. The Hon. Member should have listened to the reply. He would now be able to draw his own conclusions and use it to help his constituents.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. Robichaud).

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to rise in the House today and comment on the requested borrowing authority of $22.6 billion.

However, I first have a few comments I would like to make with respect to my hon. colleague, the previous speaker, and I am referring to the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine). While I was listening to him, Mr. Speaker, and this is no reflection on his performance as a Member of this House, I felt that he was like a round peg in a square hole. Perhaps I may explain that the Hon. Member is a darn good skater, and I really think he missed his vocation when he became a Member. He is a very good skater.

Mr. Fontaine: You're not bad yourself!

Mr. Robichaud: Thanks!

As I was saying, 22.6 billion is a lot of money, and it is money we cannot afford to lose as a result of bad management. I say bad management, and I am referring to the Budget Speech we heard on Wednesday. A reduction of $4 billion was announced in the Budget. Very impressive, you say. It may be impressive to those who won't have to pay for it or people who have yet to realize that this reduction is going to cost the average Canadian. And it is Mr. and Mrs. Average Canadian who are going to bear the brunt of paying for this deficit. But there are also a number of important economic sectors that are going to pay as well. I am referring, Mr. Speaker, to the tourist industry which for some strange reason has been affected by this Budget. It is indeed strange and in the case of the Minister of State (Tourism) (Mr. Murta) inexcusable, that this Government keeps hitting, an industry that is regressing from Budget to Budget.

I shall, if I may, go back to November 1984, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) gave us his first economic message where we find several measures that were detrimental to the tourist industry. I am thinking for instance of the decision to stop financing of projects for the tourist industry under the Industrial Regional Development Program. This measure resulted in a loss of $26 million in 1984-85. That was only the beginning.

Then the Government slashed the national parks budget and raised entrance fees by 300 per cent, enough indeed to discourage visitors anxious to see our beautiful national parks.

Next came the CN Marine ferry services with a 15 per cent budget restraint which, sure enough, led to a fare increase.

Another transport company, VIA Rail, ended up with a $93 million budget cut-back. As you would expect, Mr. Speaker, remote areas where such services operate in the red had to cope with still fewer services.

Other similar devastating measures were announced in that same economic statement. The airport tax went up 1 per cent, from 8 to 9 per cent, and there was a 1 per cent sales tax increase on products such as alcohol and gasoline.

Mr. Speaker, all those measures were implemented barely two months after the new Government was sworn in, a Government which was supposed to give very special consideration to the tourist sector, or so we were told. Well, we are still waiting.

As you may have guessed, the second attack against the tourist industry came with the first Budget, on May 23, 1985. We would have thought—and industry representatives were hoping—that the Government would lay off the tourist sector. Not only was the industry unable to catch its breath but for the second time it was run out of breath. We might even say that it is being choked, Mr. Speaker.

Three new measures are announced and there simply will not be any changes. The Conservative Government chooses to undermine the tourist sector by slapping a 2 per cent federal excise tax increase on alcohol, beer and wine.

A second measure was aimed once more at spirits and gas through the announcement of a one per cent increase in the sales tax, effective January 1, 1986.

A third measure, not the least, was the excise tax increase of two cents a litre of gas, effective September 3, 1985.

Of course, there was more. In the meantime, on June 21, 1985 the Government decided to remove the ceiling of $30 on the airport federal tax. Therefore, a higher airport tax became payable on all airplane tickets worth more than $333. For instance, on an airplane ticket costing $900, the airport tax is not $30, but $81. So since then, instead of paying his ticket $930, the air traveller pays $981 or $50 more.

• (1500)

And still in the spirit of assistance to the tourism industry, a few days after the removal of the airport tax ceiling was announced and following the uproar caused by the proposed deindexing of old-age security pensions, the Mulroney Government withdrew that proposal and re-established full indexation of pensions, but at the same time, to compensate for those payments, they announced another one-cent hike in the excise tax on gas.

There is therefore no breather for the tourist industry, none whatsoever, Mr. Speaker, and this continues as though the series of tax increases had not been enough, which is a clear proof that tourism is the very least concern of this Conservative Government. Unfortunately, this second Wilson Budget is providing again for tax increases. That is terrible, really terrible!

First of all, there is the immediate 4 per cent federal excise tax on alcoholic beverages and 6 per cent on tobacco. Second, the sales taxe is increasing by 1 per cent from 11 to 12 per cent. As for alcohol, the increase means that the tax on alcohol has now reached the 15 per cent level, Mr. Speaker.

So far, I have said nothing of direct taxes. But let us turn now to the other taxes, including the 3 per cent increase in individual income tax which will directly affect the tourist industry.

This money which Canadians could spend travelling will now be used to pay for the Government's deficit. The Government, therefore, is still working against the tourist industry and, everything considered, the last Wilson Budget is truly an attack on the tourist industry.

Since the Fall of 1984, there have been dramatic tax increases which the industry representatives strongly opposed. As a matter of fact, over the past year and a half of this Conservative administration, the tax on gas has increased by 9 per cent, which means an increase of 4.5 cents a litre or, if you prefer, over 20 cents a gallon.

In the regions, these federal tax increases have a serious impact on consumers, more so than elsewhere, because in outlying areas, like the Maritimes, transportation by car or bus is a necessity. Distances are long and the CAA estimates that 50 per cent of Canadians need a car to go to work. The 3 per cent surtax on personal income tax will have a direct impact on families in our area, especially the low and medium income families.

Wednesday, in his Budget, Minister Wilson talked about reducing the deficit by $4 billion but, Mr. Speaker, people quickly realized that they will be paying directly for that reduction, it will be done at the expense of ordinary Canadians and of low and medium income families. It is very unfair and really inexplicable to announced good sounding measures when they are, actually, going to cost an arm and a leg to Canadian consumers.

Not only will the Budget and the Estimates be costly for our people but they do not foresee anything encouraging as far as employment is concerned. Even though the Minister of Finance boasted a reduction in the unemployment rate, that reduction has not been felt in New Brunswick.

I wish they could tell me they created jobs in New Brunswick, and I also wish they could tell me where they created those jobs. But it just is not so. Listen to this: The unemployment rate in New Brunswick increased from 15 to 15.3 per cent last January. As far as employment goes, the Government does not have much to brag about. Especially since the Estimates include a reduction of $100 million in the Job Creation Program, compared with last year. One hundred million dollars less. Mr. Speaker, in my riding, the amounts available were already been cut this year. Last year the Canada Works Programs had $3 million and this has now been cut to $1.5 million, and we now have to share the money among three electoral districts. This is terrible!

As far as young people are concerned, components of the Challenge '86 Program were also cut this year. In New Brunswick, under the component "Summer Employment/ Experience Development", we received or we are about to receive $900,000 less. Almost a million dollars! And the Government says it doesn't matter. And in the same breath, it says it is going to create jobs for young people. They say it takes about $2,000 to create one job. Well, $900,000 means 450 summer jobs less next summer for us. And these cuts come after the Katimavik Program was cut and the Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne) had told us the money was going to be redeployed in other programs. If that is the way you redeploy this money, if you treat everybody like you treat them in New Brunswick, the young people of this country are not about to resolve their problems.

I am very disappointed that even the Budget failed to mention the very tenuous situation in which young people find themselves today. It contains no proposals for assisting them. There is no reference to them anywhere at all. It is a regrettable oversight that will cost us very dearly in the years to come. The young people, like everybody else in New Brunswick, expected a lot better from this Conservative Government. They hoped that the Government would reconsider its position making early retirees with pensions ineligible for unemployment insurance benefits. Again, the rule change in the case of early retirees has been viewed as a cheap shot. This was and still is indeed a cheap shot. Nowhere in the new Budget is there a mention of this rule change.

I can go on and talk about what the Government has done for Atlantic fishermen. Again, it has done absolutely nothing for them, except increase their cost burden for the next few years. It is even proposing users' fees. For instance, in its estimates, the funds made available to repair wharfs and dig chanels arount them are clearly inadequate. What is even worse is the Government's recommendation that the cost for the services should be paid by fishermen. They can hardly make ends meet and the Government would like them to incur additional costs. It is a shame!

The fishery industry in New Brunswick is very important, just as it is in any other Atlantic province.—I thank you for signaling that I only have two minutes left, Mr. Speaker.—If you allow me to continue, I should like to mention also that the boats subsidy program has been completely eliminated. The Minister used as an excuse that this program had become obsolete. Mr. Speaker, I should like the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) to come and explain to the fishermen in my riding that this program had entirely lost its usefulness.

As for regional economic development, the Estimates indicate a reduction of 11 per cent this year. A further drop of some 17 per cent is slated for 1987-88. Combined with the 15 per cent reduction we saw in 1985-86, these cumulative cutbacks mean that this department's budget will be cut by 44 per cent. In fact, the departmental estimates will be cut by $160 million in 1986-87 as compared with last year. And they have the audacity to tell us they want to help the regions, that they are concerned about the regions—

Given that loss for the economic development of our regions, the Government has decided to provide funds for a program called "Atlantic Enterprise".

As you know, Mr. Speaker, we have many legends in the Atlantic. There are tales of ghost ships. Each area has its own legend. But here a brand new legend has just been created: a ghost ship for the whole Atlantic region.

Of course, I could not, in the few minutes allocated to me, speak about all the cutbacks provided in these Estimates, about all the ways in which the people of the Atlantic will be affected. But it is clear from all this, Mr. Speaker, that the tax burden is not distributed in an equitable fashion.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. However, there is time for questions and comments.

[Translation]

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. Robichaud) suggests that our Government's Budget will affect the tourist industry, an industry that he as well as our Government thinks highly of, and since a good many, if not all, Canadians contribute to the Canadian tourist industry, would he not agree that the creation of 600,000 new jobs in Canada has an important and direct impact on the tourist industry?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I find it surprising that although we always hear about that creation of jobs—you mentioned 600,000 jobs—whenever I travel to New Brunswick, people ask me: "Well, what's happening with those jobs? We have not seen them yet".

Now, what impact could that have on the tourist industry? It could have a large impact if only those jobs were to materialize. What you decided to do, however—

Mr. Grisé: 600,000.

Mr. Robichaud: —and you started in November and went on in May, and you have come up this week with yet another tax increase so that the price of gasoline go up all the time.

Mr. Grisé: It went down.

Mr. Robichaud: Last fall, people from the tourist industry were invited to come and meet the Minister of State (Tourism) (Mr. Murta) here in Ottawa. The Minister said that it was part of his consultation process, and that he was expecting suggestions from the industry. Now . . . how could that industry be helped?

The first recommendation of that meeting dealt with taxes. And indeed the industry was calling for and is of course more than ever calling for a restructuring of the taxes incurred by that industry. But at no time did anyone listen to them.

They just increased taxes on gasoline and spirits, two items contributing to the perception that Canada is an expensive country to travel to, especially for our southern neighbours. But the industry never got any help, and it is still going to have to survive in spite of the Government.

Mr. Clinch: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate today. The Hon. Member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. Robichaud) told us about the mismanagement of this Government. The largest item of expenditure is the interest on the public debt which has been fast increasing. The Hon. Member knows about it, and very well too. Interest on the public debt has increased from $3.2 billion in 1974-75 to $22.5 billion in 1984-85. From 1980-81 to 1984-85, interest on the public debt has increased threefold—

An Hon. Member: How awful!

An Hon. Member: How terrible!

Mr. Clinch: —from $6 to $18 billion.

An Hon. Member: How shocking!

Mr. Clinch: How can this Member talk about mismanagement when we look at the figures of the former Government, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I can talk about mismanagement, because nowhere in the estimates can I find any programs for helping the people in the Atlantic Provinces. When we refer to regional development, that tool used to create jobs and assist industries, we only note that funds earmarked for those programs have been reduced and no other mechanism has been provided.

In the case of fisheries, my colleague from Gloucester (Mr. Clinch) knows quite well that our fisheries need Government assistance, that they are not self-sufficient because they have to cope with rather difficult conditions . . . Now what do we see? We merely see a reduction of all programs meant to give assistance in that sector and he will agree with me that it is one of the most important sectors in our area.

[English]

Mr. Jardine: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to my colleague because we are both from the same province and his riding abutts mine. One of the things we share in New Brunswick is the beautiful Kouchibouguac Park. So I was rather, I will not say disturbed so many as deeply surprised that during his presentation he mentioned at least five times the tax on alcohol. It was as though the big attraction in the picture Province of New Brunswick was cheap booze rather than the natural beauty we share through that particular Kouchibnouguac Park. He also said there was nothing in the Budget to help tourism. Therefore, I would ask him to comment on the Atlantic Enterprise Program which has set aside $1 billion to provide funding to the private sector in our province and others in Atlantic Canada. He did not say one word about that.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my colleague from the neighbouring constituency of Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Jardine). In the first part of his question, he spoke about the price of alcoholic beverages. Naturally, as I have pointed out, the price of alcohol is one of the factors contributing to the perception of Canada as a costly place to visit. When the Americans come here and want to buy something to drink, they find our liquor extremely expensive.

As for the second part of his question about Atlantic Enterprise, perhaps he was not listening at the time, but I did refer to the program which was announced and which I described as a ghost-ship. I think that the Hon. Member understand quite well what I mean. In view of the limit set to qualify under this program, you would need a loan in excess of $250,000. Loans are only guaranteed up to 85 per cent. We would have needed a much more extensive program because our region is clearly disadvantaged compared with other regions in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I have a short comment in order to correct the record. The cost of servicing the debt in the past 17 months has gone from $19 billion up to $26 billion under the Government. The total national debt, which is the accumulation of debt since Confederation, has jumped from $180 billion 17 months ago when the Government took over to $225 billion. Twenty-three per cent of the total national debt was accumulated by the Government in the last 17 months.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to say that questions and comments have now terminated. Debate.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I was not going to comment on this Bill but Bill C-99 seems to have occurred at a very appropriate time. As the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said, it is appropriate that the borrowing Bill is introduced at the same time that the Budget is brought in. This enables us to get the whole picture.

After the Budget came down last Wednesday, I took the Budget home to bed. It was like reading a bedtime Tory. The Budget reads like a fairy story, with its only real substance being the taxes. I wondered what was the ambiance or the environment within which this Budget came down.

The Government consulted for months before the Budget was brought down. It is appropriate that the chairman of the board, a man who knows all about closing corporations, and his right-hand chief accountant are the two chief nabobs in the Government. One was president of a company that is noted for laying off workers, the Iron Ore Company of Canada in Schefferville and the other is a tax accountant. Who did they consult? They heard from Mr. Frazee, who I believe is President of the Royal Bank of Canada. They heard from John Bulloch of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, from Roger Hamel of the National Chamber of Commerce, Thomas D'Aquino of BCNI and from Mr. Mulholland of the Bank of Montreal. They are the ones whom the Government was consulting and they were all friends of the Tories. They all said in one chorus: "You have got to cut the deficit. You have got to bring the deficit down".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: Their advice was to target the deficit and bring it down. David Lewis of the New Democratic Party wrote a book entitled, The Louder Voices. Theirs were the louder voices and the ones to which the Government was listening.

Did the Government target unemployment? The issue of unemployment appears in the last sentence before the conclusion of the Budget. What does the Government say about unemployment?

Mrs. Mailly: Six hundred thousand jobs.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Government targets it to go from 9.6 per cent to 9 per cent over two years. There will still be well over one million people unemployed in this country when one considers the increase in the workforce. I do not know if those Tories opposite saw The Journal last night.

An Hon. Member: And here.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, and to my left. I cannot imagine a Tory to my left, but there they are. If they saw The Journal last night they would have seen a soul wrenching and shocking documentary. I wonder if the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) or the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) were able to push away their sirloin steaks and champagne to watch that program last night.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: They are the only ones who can afford those things these days. If they had watched they would have seen people who in other years would have had no problem finding and holding a job in this country. If they understood the moral sin of unemployment they would have turned their guns on unemployment. Yet they are openly telling Canadians that unemployment will remain at 9 per cent until the end of 1987. Talk about a heritage for our children; 9 per cent unemployment means that there will be well over a million people unemployed.

One can imagine the draw on social programs as a result of that unemployment, the lost productivity and more important, the lost human lives.

Last night on The Journal, one woman who was well qualified but unemployed said that she would rather go to prostitution than go on welfare. We are not talking about a Third World country or the Philippines or Mexico. We are talking about Canada where the Conservative Government brings in a Budget that reaches into the pockets of working men and women and removes billions of dollars and cuts back services without holding any hope or targeting the sin and scurge on the Canadian economic scene.

Mrs. Mailly: We went beyond the target you suggested last time.

Mr. Rodriguez: I hear voices over there, but you will get your chance to make a speech.

I suggest to Hon. Members opposite that words are not enough, that action must be taken. We have heard about all the blue-blooded Tories who have given them advice. Having taken this advice, the Government takes a meat hook and makes it appear that it is cutting the deficit. The Government believes in a rainbow with a pot of $29.8 billion at the end.

Where are the Government's friends who advised it to cut the deficit below $30 billion? Where are they today? Why are the money markets not responding? It has been 48 hours. The most cynical comment I heard today is what the Minister of Finance said at the breakfast meeting. He said: "We have a strategy to remove the surtax before the next federal election". That is the height of cynicism.

I want to get into some detail now. I said that this Government has reached into the pockets of ordinary working people and removed a large amount of money from them. This is the third 1 per cent increase in federal sales tax and the Government has only been in office for 18 months. We had the Economic Statement in November, the Budget of May 1985 and now we have a third Budget which increases the federal sales tax. I am not talking about the extension of the sales tax. I hope the Government does not bring down another Budget in a hurry because the average Canadian family cannot afford it.

Perhaps the Government has come to a parting of the ways with its friends because every time the Government takes money from the pockets of ordinary Canadians, it reduces the surplus of large corporations. I would like to refer to page 42 of The Fiscal Plan. The Minister of Finance said we should refer to page 42, and when we do so, we find that in fact the Government in 1986-87, with a combination of a surtax and federal sales tax, will be taking $1.1 billion from ordinary taxpayers, but they are only taking $380 million from the corporations. They are taking four times as much from ordinary Canadians. We can now begin to understand the close relationship between Mr. Frazee and Mr. Mulholland and the whole gang of them. They are all birds of a feather. The Conservatives look after their friends. They are not interested in bringing down unemployment.

Mr. Stewart: How about Stephen Lewis?

Mr. Rodriguez: The Government has projected those figures to 1990-91. We see that the gap grows. In fact, the amount of money taken from individuals, and that is the cumulative effect as well, is $2.9 billion. From the corporations it goes down to $295 million. Ten times as much is being taken from working men and women as is being taken from the corporations and, God knows, the corporations are so heavily taxed already. It is a scandal. This Government is a Government of the rich and we saw that in the last Budget. It gave a $500,000 capital gains tax exemption to the rich.

Mrs. Mailly: We gave it to the farmers.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Hon. Member says they gave it to the farmers. Surely, farmers are not in the same category as those who are purchasing race horses in Kentucky, paintings in Europe and speculating on land.

Mrs. Mailly: Come off it, then.

Mr. Rodriguez: Surely, the Government could have closed those loopholes and collected millions of dollars. Last August the Department of Finance tabled a document which showed all of the tax expenditures and tax opportunities which the Government did not collect, and that means billions upon billions of dollars.

Let us go now to the National Accounts, page 99. The Government is bare-faced about what it put into the document. For 1987-88 revenues from individuals will amount to $5.5 billion more than in 1986-87. But for the corporations it goes down. It is $75 million less on a National Accounts basis. On a percentage basis, in 1987-88, they will take 11.2 per cent more from individuals while they will take .6 per cent from corporations. What kind of system is this?

Mrs. Mailly: Where do you want all those people to work?

Mr. Rodriguez: In a democratic system if the Government is going to maintain the loyalty of citizens, the laws which govern them must be fair and they have to accept the fairness of those particular laws.

Mrs. McDougall: Don't shout.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Minister of State for Finance says not to shout. I know the banks which got bailed out did not have to shout. They needed only to whisper.

Mrs. Mailly: It wasn't the banks that were bailed out, it was the depositors, and you know it.

Mr. Rodriguez: Those Hon. Members opposite do not like the message.

Mrs. Mailly: We don't like lies.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Hon. Member is absolutely correct, Mr. Speaker. We don't like it.

Mrs. Mailly: We don't like lies.

Mr. Rodriguez: I see you have some grey on the top there, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure you remember that Tory times are tough times.

Mr. Gauthier: Right on.

Mr. Rodriguez: I had a call from one of my constituents who told me he has already gotten out the Bennett buggy. We have a Government which has brought in a Budget which is the height of unfairness. It does not treat the two major groups who pay taxes equally and fairly. It seems to me that when the Government ran for office in 1984, it talked "jobs, jobs, jobs".

Mrs. Mailly: And we created them, and you know it. That is what's bothering you.

Mr. Rodriguez: But all the Government has done is "taxed, taxed, taxed". Judith Maxwell, of the Economic Council of Canada, who appeared before the Committee on Finance, stated clearly in the Minutes that for every 1 per cent that unemployment drops, the deficit comes down $2 billion.

Mr. Gauthier: That is the bank bail-outs.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Hon. Member says that that is one bank bail-out—or two banks, but what is $1 billion for a bank these days? This Government did not attack the unemployment problem. It should have targeted unemployment and set up a goal that by 1990 unemployment will be down to 4 per cent. If it had done that and then had worked on the economy, it could have in fact lowered the deficit. No one here blames the Conservatives for causing the deficit. In 1981, the Liberals projected a deficit of some $10.5 billion, but there was a deliberately engineered recession which blew the deficit right up to $24 billion. That was deliberate and we have all the quotes of the former Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, who said: "If you think 6 per cent unemployment is high, just watch me". He said: "It's still possible to scare the hell out of people in this country with higher unemployment rates".

Mr. Dick: He did not say that.

Mr. Rodriguez: We know it was deliberately engineered to fight inflation and whatever else, but having aggravated the deficit, the Government of the day also aggravated unemployment. I would expect that Conservative Members coming in with a new view would surely recognize that the real problem in society, the human problem, is unemployment and that they would have attacked unemployment levels. However, not only did they attack ordinary taxpayers, they proceeded to cut back expenditures in areas which are very important to certain regions of the country. They cut back expenditures in the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, which affects areas such as northern Ontario, Atlantic Canada, northern British Columbia and parts of Quebec. Those areas of the country depend on the programs of that particular Department to diversify their economic bases. I know that because my region is involved in that type of process. The cut-backs in health and welfare programs and in transfer payments to the provinces will exacerbate the problems with medicare in our provinces. That means the provinces will have to go to their taxpayers for help, and they are the same taxpayers to which the federal Government goes when it needs help. It seems to me that this double-whammy with which ordinary Canadians are being hit in terms of tax increases and cut-backs in services is not the way to go about the process.

● (1540)

We have tried to give the Government advice, but it has not listened to us. Members of the Government did not attend the Dialogue 86 conference of the CLC at which they could have had some input. They did not ask for input from the working class people, not did they ask for input from members of the NDP. They have not listened to us when we have told them that unemployment has to be brought down and that that should be the focus of the Budget.

We have also told the Government that the tax system has to be overhauled. That is why we set up our Tax Probe 86 and sent an open letter to the Minister of Finance. In that letter we outlined some immediate steps which he could have taken which would have brought him a harvest of money with which to attack his deficit. However, the Government did not listen to us. It did not listen to the working class people. It listened to its friends in the boardrooms of the nation. This is a corporate Government and so it brings down a corporate Budget.

Yesterday, we saw the chickens departing the roost from the world money markets and from the stock exchanges. The monied friends of Government are deserting it. Perhaps we do not know what will happen next; but we do know that they still have to borrow money, which can only exacerbate the deficit.

In the one-half minute I have remaining I would like to say that the Budget as I read it that evening, this fairy-tale which I read, is based on some rather flimsy premises. One is that we will have average interest rates of 9.5 per cent in 1986. Another is that the price of oil will be $22 a barrel. The chances of that happening at this point in time are very slim.

Mrs. Mailly: Remember the last time when you were wrong?

Mr. Rodriguez: I said that the chances are very slim. The type of smoke and mirrors which we see in this Budget could very well disappear with the morning dew.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly).

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) is always good for entertainment. We can always laugh and enjoy ourselves when he speaks. However, if people were to pay attention to the half truths, exaggerations and hyperbole which he uses in his speeches then there would be tragic results.

The Hon. Member makes a comparison between how much money is brought into the Treasury as a result of taxes paid by individuals versus taxes paid by corporations. He comes to the conclusion that, because the figure is higher for individuals as opposed to corporations, that is a result of some sort of heartlessness on the part of the Government. He knows very well that if there were no companies there would be no jobs. If there are no jobs then people would not have any money with which to buy food. They would not have any money for housing or for anything else. Why does he keep throwing around this simplistic socialist garbage which says that companies are bad and people are good when it does not work at all that way and he knows it? He is too intelligent a person to keep throwing out this stuff time after time after time.

He also knows full well that when we announced our last Budget his Party was talking in terms of targeting unemployment. In terms of job creation we went well beyond any targets suggested by members of the New Democratic Party. We have created 580,000 jobs since September, 1984. The target with which members of his Party came up was something in the order of 150,000. Why did members of his Party charge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) with a target of 150,000 jobs when we have created 580,000 jobs? We did it by giving a break to small business. That is where jobs are created. In fact, 80 per cent of all jobs are created by small business, not by the guys who have horses in Miami and yachts. Jobs are created by hard working people, families, men and women who run small businesses.

As a parting shot, I would like to ask the Hon. Member what his comment is with respect to the fact that under the National Energy Program, which was brought in by the Liberals and which was supported by his Party, any savings as a result of falling oil prices were not passed on to the consumer, while a result of the new energy agreement brought in by our Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) is that the consumer can take advantage of falling oil prices. Can the Hon. Member tell the House how he can put us in with that bunch which sits to his right? They are the ones who put us in the mess which we are now trying to clear up.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, first, I wish to address the Hon. Member's comment about entertainment. For entertainment I normally read about her relationship with her riding association. That is good entertainment.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I believe the House has a Standing Order to the effect that the debate must be relevant. I now have a good riding association, but this gentleman cannot answer my questions and that is why he resorts to this approach, which is quite vulgar.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have been here for 18 years and it is sometimes difficult to find anything relevant in some debates.

I am worried that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) may need some protection before four o'clock. I must help him along a bit so I would like to recognize him again. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can hand it out but she cannot take it. If she can't take the heat then she should get out of the kitchen. She's good at handing it out but she can't take it.

Mrs. Mailly: Very cheap shot, John.

Mr. Rodriguez: We in this Party are not talking about taxing corporations out of existence. In 1982 the Royal Bank made hundreds of millions of dollars and did not pay a cent in income tax. Tellers at the Royal Bank paid more tax than did the bank. At the Bank of Montreal it was the same thing. Bill James, the President of Falconbridge, said to me: "I want to tell you something, John. Falconbridge has not paid a penny of corporate income tax since I became president three years ago. And I don't intend to pay any either". He said to me yesterday: "What good is a surtax to me? A surtax is no good if you don't pay any tax at all".

John Bulloch said that the effective tax rate for large corporations in the country is 16 per cent while it is 19 per cent for small businesses. I wonder what the effective tax rate is for the average working man and woman. We are not talking about squeezing corporations. All we are asking them to do is to pay their fair share of taxes in order to support this fantastic country in which they make all their wealth. That is all we ask of this Government. We asked the same of the Liberals. But because Members opposite belong to the same fat cat clubs, they refuse to do it.

To answer the other question of the Hon. Member, we have not supported any Liberal Budget which was brought in over the last four years. We did not support the National Energy Program. I have just been informed by my colleagues that we did not.

The Hon. Member asks me how I can lump her in with the Liberals over here. I can do so because members of her Party are cut from the same cloth. The two Parties are the Bobbsey Twins of Bay Street, that is what they are.

• (1550)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. At this point, I think questions and comments are now terminated.

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Jourdenais: Put some cool in it.

Mr. Lesick: I will have to put some cool into this debate and put some sense into the words that have been spoken previously. It is a pleasure for me to speak on Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority of only $22,600 million since we have done so well this past year.

I cannot help but comment on the speech of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). The Conservatives formed a very good Government that lasted only nine months and it was brought down by the combined efforts of the Liberals and the NDP who went to bed with the Liberals. At that time, the net debt was $84 billion, and after the NDP and Liberals finished with us and the people of Canada, the debt had risen to $191,448 million. That is what our friends in the NDP helped to cause.

It is a pleasure for me to speak, particularly when you are in the chair, Mr. Speaker. We both come from the same fine city and I feel the warmth that emanates from you to every Member in the House including me.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lesick: The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has responded to the commitments we made to the Canadian people in 1984. Quite frankly, I am deeply saddened by what I have been hearing from the Liberals as well as the NDP. Let us deal with the Liberals. It is important that we should know what happened before. We should know our history and learn from it so that we are wiser today. Our friends in the Opposition never seem to have learned enough.

I am saddened to see the great weakness of the Liberal Party and particularly the recent loss of one Member. If Liberal Members had an ounce of conscience or indeed courage, they would be rising in their places to cheer the Conservatives for taking strong action on the deficit, something which the Liberals have ignored and denied for a decade. It is interesting to see Liberals disregard the growing debt. Frankly, I am not surprised by this. Why should Liberals talk about a debt which they were primarily responsible for creating?

When Mr. Trudeau became Prime Minister in 1968, the debt was $18 billion. When he left us 15 years later, the debt was $190 billion, a fantastic sum of money. That is responsibility? That is governing? That is meant to help the Canadian people? That is meant to provide jobs? Our country went down the tubes, and we are here to rescue the Canadian people.

To understand the present, I suggest again that we must know and understand the past. The Government recognized at the very beginning of its mandate that the financial mess had to be cleaned up. While the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) campaigned across Canada and I was campaigning in Edmonton East, there was a recognition that the Government had to clean up its act, and we did.

What do Canadians want? First and foremost, Canadians wanted a Government to implement policies which contribute to the creation of a sound environment for a stable and secure future. Why not? Every country want that and we have offered that. That meant putting our financial house in order. In the 17 and a half months we have been in power, that is exactly what we have done. It also meant creating jobs. We recall the Prime Minister, on the hustings, saying that we are going to give Canadian people jobs, jobs, jobs, up to 580,000 jobs. We did it. It also meant lower interest rates, and they dipped. Interest rates rose a little but they will be dropping again. It also meant lower inflation rates and lower and stable prices. We have been instrumental in doing that. We have restored the confidence of not only the Canadian business and labour representatives but as well of the people of all of Canada in how effectively and caringly we can govern.

There has been renewed federalism. We have not pointed our middle finger up in the air and said: "West, goodbye; East, we do not hear you". The Prime Minister said that the most important thing is reconciliation and he went across the country, talked to all the Premiers and asked them to come to Regina, a beautiful, warm city in the summertime. There is peace and harmony in our country, the better to govern, to understand and to get along.

Above all, the Government has reversed the catastrophic fiscal policies of the past. Let us remember past history. What have Liberal Members been talking about for the last year and a half since we have been in power and what did they do previously? Let me remind the House.

When the Economic Statement of November 1984 was presented, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) said that this would mean a loss of up to 200,000 jobs. How wrong he was. During the same time, we created 480,000 jobs. That is a difference of 680,000 jobs, and he was a Minister. If he was wrong about that, was he wrong when he was a Minister? We have to question that. How effective was he?

The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) said that the May Budget would fuel and spur inflation, but inflation went down. He too was a Minister and he made those comments. He said that our Budgets are of no value. He was wrong again. If he was wrong about that, how right was he when he was a Minister? When he and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry were Ministers, our country went down the drain with them. This obviously shows the bad and inefficient management there must have been.

There is now a stable inflation rate of 4.4 per cent. What did the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) have to say? He said that there would be a loss of between 50,000 and 100,000 jobs. He is the financial critic for the NDP.

Mr. Riis: What about Alberta? Look at Alberta. You know Alberta.

Mr. Lesick: He said that that would happen but the opposite happened. We could ask how credible are the NDP.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Andre: That's not fair.

Mr. Riis: No, it was quite an appropriate and fair comment. I do not think that the Hon. Member was intentionally trying to mislead the House. In fact, being an honourable colleague, I am sure he was not. However, he talked about jobs loss, and there was significant job loss in Alberta, British Columbia and other provinces in the intervening months. There was significant job loss in his province as well as my own—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate what the Hon. Member is saying but that is debate. The Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Lesick) has the floor.

Mr. Lesick: Mr. Speaker, I stand behind what I have just said.

The former NDP leader in Ontario, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), said that in Quebec there would be a loss of 40,000 jobs. How right was he, a former Leader and now prominent back-bencher for the NDP? He was out by 220,000 jobs. How credible is the Opposition?

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said that there would be significant loss of jobs in Quebec, the Atlantic provinces and certain regions of western Canada. What happened was the opposite of that. He is a former Minister and a former Prime Minister and he was wrong.

I believe that when the people of Canada listen to opposition Members, they have to realize that there is a credibility gap between what they say and believe and what actually happens.

• (1600)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE HULL IN NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

The House resumed from Tuesday, January 29, 1985, consideration of the motion of Mr. Isabelle that Bill C-207, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 (national capital of Canada), be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Gauthier (p. 1801).

Mr. Ron Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to enter the debate on Bill C-207, aimed at changing the boundaries of the national capital of our country to conform with the limits of the National Capital Region. Such a step would clearly extend the boundaries beyond the geographic limits of the City of Ottawa to embrace the City of Hull and other cities, town and municipalities in the area immediately surrounding Parliament Hill. While this is a substantial area, it is not unreasonable in a country the size of Canada, and it would include parts of two provinces which in turn reflect the bilingual and bicultural nature of the country.

It is not entirely clear in the Bill just how the area surrounding the Cities of Ottawa and Hull would be defined. However, the present limits of the National Capital Region are specified in the schedule to the National Capital Act, 1958. It is assumed that this area of 1,800 squares miles, or some 4,600 square kilometres more or less, is intended as the basis until such time as Parliament may decide otherwise.

The question of the boundaries of the capital city of Canada has never been in doubt to the extent that Ottawa has been legislated as the national capital since the British North America Act became the constitutional foundation of the country in 1867. However, there has been an ongoing discussion of possible change since 1969, when the Constitutional Conference of Canadian First Ministers, in its conclusions concerning the reform of institutions linked with federalism, agreed to the following:

> The cities of Ottawa and Hull and their surrounding areas shall be the Canadian capital area.

It continued:

> Steps must be taken so that the two official languages and the cultural values common to all Canadians are recognized by all Governments concerned in these two cities and in the capital region in general, so that all Canadians may have a feeling of pride and participation in, and attachment to, their capital.

There have been a number of statements over the years dealing with the emphasis on the national significance of the National Capital Region as a symbol of identity for all Canadians. The more clearly the nature and character of the seat of the Government of Canada is established, the clearer it will be to establish its national significance for Canadians and for those looking at Canada from elsewhere in the world. Many attempts have been made to find inspiring words to describe the national significance of the capital. Jacques Greber, for example, had the following comment in his 1950 report:

> A capital is also a legislative and administrative meeting place for legislators from every constituency in the country. It is important that a capital offer a satisfactory working environment within which the business of Government may be conducted; to the extent that it does not, the results will be a loss of efficiency and morale.

In 1972, the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada made the following statement in its final report:

> A country's capital is an essential instrument of national pride. In a federal, bilingual and multicultural country, it must also be an essential instrument of national unity. It must reflect equitably all aspects of the country's character, and each citizen should have a true sense of ownership in the capital of his country regardless of the distance which separates him from the seat of Government.

Statements such as these on the nature and character of Canada's capital, and other similar commentaries, reflect generally on and elaborate further upon the essential functions or building blocks of the capital. The status of our capital is of vital importance to all of us as Canadians, and it is most appropriate to consider for a few minutes its role as a symbol of identity and unity and as a source of pride and inspiration for all Canadians.

A capital is the reflection, the symbol of the whole nation. The capital of Canada, as in all federal states, has special importance—it is the city which, to every Canadian and to all foreigners, must be representative of all 10 confederated provinces without, however, prejudicing the attributes and prerogatives of their respective capitals.

In 1965, in his landmark judgment on the Munro case which confirmed that the federal Government had the power to plan for the national capital region and to expropriate land for its purposes, Mr. Justice Gibson of the Exchequer Court quoted Greber and concluded as follows:

> In the result, therefore, I am of the opinion that the words "national significance" are meaningful and are apt in describing the goal sought to be attained for the nature and character of the seat of the Government of Canada.

In 1966, in upholding the decision of the Exchequer Court, Mr. Justice Cartwright of the Supreme Court of Canada made the following statement:

> I find it difficult to suggest a subject matter of legislation which more clearly goes beyond local or provincial interests and is the concern of Canada as a whole than the development, conservation and improvement of the national capital region in accordance with a coherent plan in order that the nature and character of the seat of the Government of Canada may be in accordance with its national significance. Adopting the words of the learned trial judge, it is my view that the Act deals with a single matter of national concern.

The Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism in its report on the federal capital recommended that the federal Government should assume a direct role in promoting equal partnership between French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians in the capital. The commission also made the following general statement about the significance of capital cities:

A capital is a symbol of the country as a whole. It should express, in the best way possible, the values of the country as a whole, its way of life, its cultural richness and diversity, its social outlook, its aspirations for the future. This symbolism has both an internal and an external dimension. Citizens from across the country who visit their capital should find in it a fuller understanding of their country's traditions and a pride in personal identification with it. Similarly, visitors from other countries should be able just as readily to find tangible expression of the values of a country with which they may be unfamiliar.

The question of a change in boundaries for the national capital raised in the Bill emphasizes that the capital of any country is more than a location for the seat of Government and its primary institutions. It probes the depths of a nation's conscience and provides a national focus for institutional and cultural values and aspirations for the future. It calls into question the best means of enhancing those national institutions and associated symbolic and ceremonial functions, activities and events which are unique to a national seat of Government in its widest sense.

The specific proposal to expand the limits of Canada's capital as recognized in a constitutional sense is a sound one. It expands the narrow geographic boundaries which were quite adequate in 1967 but may not necessarily represent the situation which exists today. It is most appropriate to recognize territory in both Ontario and Quebec within the boundaries of the national capital which in turn recognize the lands of the two founding cultures. To go beyond the city limits of Ottawa and Hull raises questions concerning just how much of the surrounding area should also be included. For this reason, the limits of the National Capital Region, as expressed by Parliament since 1958 through the National Capital Act, are most appropriate if we are to move in this direction.

In making reference to the National Capital Act, I should like to refer to the legislative mandate of the National Capital Commission which operates under the authority of the Act and is required "to prepare plans for and assist in the development, conservation and improvement of the National Capital Region in order that the nature and character of the seat of the Government of Canada may be in accordance with its national significance". The work of the National Capital Commission is recognized and well known to all of us who live in the local area.

It works hard to contribute to and enhance the capital as a national focus for Canada and to provide a truly national dimension to its planning and development. It works to create an inspiring urban and regional setting to instil a sense of pride and attachment, particularly for visiting Canadians. Also, it works to maintain and improve the economic health and urban and rural vitality of the community.

I would like to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to commend the National Capital Commission for its work on behalf of the people of Canada and, in particular, my friend, the vivacious, idea-oriented and hard working chairlady, Jean Pigott. The National Capital Commission is to be commended for its efforts in enhancing the quality of life and services to visitors within both the urban and rural areas of the National Capital Region. It is only the planning authority that carries out urban and regional planning and development from a federal perspective rather than considering primarily provincial and municipal interests. It is worth reminding the House that the commission is our agent in the planning, development and improvement of what we may call our national capital.

In the final analysis, the question facing the House is whether or not there is a need for a change at this time. I am sure many are in favour of a change to expand the boundaries, while many are opposed. It is an important question for all of us here and for all Canadians, and I am sure it will be resolved.

Mr. Pierre H. Cadieux (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to rise on a Friday afternoon at this hour before a nearly full House and in particular, Sir, when you are in the Chair, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Lesick) said a few minutes ago.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in my contribution to the debate on the Bill before the House today, I intend to concentrate on two things: first of all, I would like to put the objective pursued by Bill C-207 into a realistic perspective and I would also like to shed some light on the tremendous and almost insurmountable problems that would result from the premature creation of a National Capital district. The reasoning underlying the Bill certainly contains a number of elements that are not entirely without merit, and these elements may in turn help us produce some valid concepts for developing and expanding a national capital that would be a genuine and proud symbol of this country beyond the year 2000.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, the fact remains that Bill C-207 faces a number of geopolitical and especially historical givens we cannot possibly ignore in the circumstances. I think it would be useful to go back in time so as to understand the constitutional ramifications of this matter.

At the time of Confederation, Mr. Speaker, in 1867, the tensions between Upper and Lower Canada had hardly subsided when Queen Victoria had to designate a city as the capital of her new Dominion. At the time, she had a choice between Montreal, Quebec City of course, Kingston in Ontario—I am very sorry for my colleague from Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Hudon) but Valleyfield was not in the running—and the third option was a town that looked much like a construction site at the time, located amid considerable scenic splendours and with a very bright future, and which was called Bytown at the time. Anxious to avoid any rivalry between Kingston and Montreal and between the two language groups, Her Majesty decided to opt for the scenic splendours of the small town with the bright future, and that is how Bytown became Ottawa, the capital of Canada. However wise, the great Queen, Mr. Speaker, did not have a clear, sharp and exact idea of the implications of such a choice. The new capital was on the Ontario side of the Ottawa River, at a stone's throw.

An Hon. Member: Lapierre.

Mr. Cadieux: Not Mr. Lapierre, no. At a stone's throw, Mr. Speaker, facing that other entity, Quebec. For close to a century, Ottawa grew, mainly English-speaking and unilingual. The nation's capital took form and was embellished constantly over the years, but on the other side of the river, Hull and its neighbouring communities derived little benefit from their immediate proximity to the country's core. To all intents and purposes, that part of the Province of Quebec was but a poor relative to its big sister across the river.

If I emphasize those historical data, Mr. Speaker, it is because they are the background of the relationship between the two founding peoples, up to the fifties. I hasten to add, however, and thank God for that, that a marvelous change has occurred since. Canadians of both languages initiated 25 years ago a huge effort of mutual understanding and equal sharing of the national heritage.

This is how, by mutual consent, we came to agree that the Canadian Capital should reflect this country's duality, and that in a nation whose two senior components were Quebec and Ontario, it was normal that Quebec be included in the concept of a National Capital. This is why, as early as 1969, a conference of Canadian Premiers held in Toronto agreed to the concept of a National Capital Region that included all of the Ottawa-Hull area. For that reason also, large-sized federal buildings have sprung up in Hull for some 15 years now and a number of developments made on the Quebec side by the federal Government.

All this is very well, and the present Government has the firm intention of maintaining and even enhancing the capital's development. We intend to respect fully the mandate given the NCC by the National Capital Act, passed in 1958, being, and I quote, Mr. Speaker: to prepare plans for and assist in the development, conservation and improvement of the National Capital Region in order that the nature and character of the seat of the Government of Canada may be in accordance with its national significance.

But that mandate, Mr. Speaker, which we have seen fulfilled over the years and by the various administrations, is subject to the unescapable constitutional reality. We know what constitutional problems are. Three different Governments are involved: the Government of Canada, of course, the Government of Ontario, and, obviously, the Government of Quebec. And not only must constitutional authority and jurisdiction be preserved, but in the fulfilling of its mandate, the National Capital Commission has no absolute authority over the area as such. It must compromise with the rights, prerogatives, privileges and legitimate aspirations of the two regional Governments and 27 municipalities which also exercise their jurisdictions within the area of the National Capital.

It is in this multiple and varied context that we must approach Bill C-207. How could the House dictate its will to so many other authorities without jeopardizing the constitutional make-up, creating new tensions or provoking new confrontations at every level? No, Canadians have witnessed too many differences and confrontations between Ottawa and the provinces over the past two decades without our risking new frictions which could imperil the reconciliation efforts made over the past 16 months! Let us not give up what we have for some fanciful alernative. First, let us consolidate our strength and help our economy recover. After that, Mr. Speaker, we could address the issue of territorial authority over our National Capital. Let us have our priorities straight!

The amendment we are considering today is an old tune close to the heart of the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) who serves it to us regularly each year, regular as Old Faithful, together with his project of a federal district more or less copied on the American federal district of Columbia. A similar formula has existed for quite a long time elsewhere, Mr. Speaker. After the United States, there has been the federal Canberra district in Australia. But has the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) ever wondered whether the creation of such federal districts in these two countries had raised linguistic and cultural problems? Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is not here to answer this question. But has he ever pondered the problems which the creation a federal district would create here in the areas of education, social affairs, justice and urban Government, with 27 municipalities, two regional Governments, and three major Governments, including Ottawa, Ontario, and Quebec?

Mr. Speaker, it is an undeniable fact that, if only on the basis of our linguistic and cultural duality and of the jurisdictions guaranteed to the provinces by the Constitution, Bill C-207 reflects an utopia and even an aberration in this day and age. It would be unthinkable to start such a costly and riskly adventure and one which is even contrary to the characteristics of each of the entities involved in this issue.

Who would give up what and for whose benefit, Mr. Speaker? We are all well aware that, human nature being what it is, each party involved would want to hang on to his vested interests and to protect his own advantage, because, as the saying goes, charity begins at home. Is it logical to expect an authority at whatever level to jeopardize its own identity when, in relation with the free trade talks with the United States, concerns are being expressed on all sides about the loss of identity or the loss of such or such a market?

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe in dreaming or in improvising, especially when major national decisions are involved, and in this case, I think that we are discussing a project which does not seem to have produced any consensus.

Mr. Speaker, this consensus does not exist among the many parties involved nor among the Canadian population as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, the entire issue of what is and what is not part of the National Capital raises the problem of national symbols. This is therefore a very sensitive issue.

While it is a fact that, in the last 25 years, Canada has acquired symbols to establish its own identity, it should also be noted that these changes did not come by easily. A gesture can acquire a symbolic value only to the extent that those to whom it is addressed view it as legitimate. A symbol is essentially the result of a consensus, Mr. Speaker.

In this context, who could state today that the proposal to amend Section 16 of the Constitutional Act of 1867 finds such a consensus among the population? On the contrary, an overview of possible reactions at the local, provincial and national levels seems to indicate that there are good reasons to justify strong resistance.

On the local level, we are aware of the neighbourly relationships between Hull and Gatineau trying to decide which is the metropolitan centre of Western Quebec.

Mrs. Mailly: Gatineau.

Mr. Cadieux: I did not expect anything else from my colleague, Mr. Speaker, and I would probably agree to some extent. However, Mr. Speaker, this is not what we are discussing today and I do not wish to get involved in regional hassles that might develop between those two cities.

But that is just one example of the problem that would probably crop up.

Mr. Speaker, can you imagine in that context what the debate on the question of the National Capital might look like here in the House, with my colleague possibly putting forward her specific interests, and I could not blame her for doing so!

At the provincial level, who knows how the province of Quebec would react, Mr. Speaker? In the late sixties, when the federal Government kept buying lots here and there, the Quebec Government set up the Dorion Commission to review the whole issue of territorial integrity. There is no indication that the Quebec Government has changed its mind, Mr. Speaker. For all we know, the Communauté régionale de l'Outaouais, which was created following the recommandations of that Commission, is still in existence. Would Ontario itself be willing to give up the whole area of Ottawa, Vanier and Kanata and neighbouring rural areas for the sake of creating a federal district? I have very strong doubts about that. I am sure in fact that Quebec and Ontario would never be willing to give up a fragment of their municipalities. And supposing they did, what would be the tax status of the people living in that new federal district?

Would the federal Government have to compensate provincial governments for the loss of existing infrastructure? Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, trying to assess the present cost of that infrastructure? and the per capita debt that this new federal district would incur from the provinces and municipalities involved? At the national level, Mr. Speaker, did we consult with all the people and provincial governments of Canada? Do we know how they view such an amendment? I do not believe that we can assess, or even assume that it would be accepted; quite the contrary!

Mr. Speaker, I wish to stress that building a national capital is one thing, but forcing in a premature way a complex patriotic chore and a difficult constitutional challenge upon the people of Canada is another. Canada has just begun recovering from the constitutional upheaval brought about by the previous Government. For goodness sake, let us give it a break.

Victor Hugo wrote that you cannot decree peace more than you can decree sunrise. In a small way, Mr. Speaker, this is a bit of wisdom which could be applied to this debate. History has its own way of doing things, it proceeds with great slowness and man should not force issues, even though he sometimes does by resorting to brutal and useless wars. Everything should be left to happen in its own sweet time.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we will have to study carefully and seriously the tremendous political and economical difficulties that such a project could bring to bear on Canadians. Thus, I feel that it would be reasonable that such a bill——be looked at a lot more because, as I just said in the other official language, I do not think this is the time, nor are we in circumstances right now which permit us to enter into such a debate. We have economic concerns which must be dealt with right away. As a matter of fact, the budget debate is presently taking place. After what we heard today and yesterday we know that Canada must be put back on track economically.

I do not think we ought to spend too much time trying to recreate a constitutional debate which has already taken too much time in the House and perhaps contributed to the huge deficit which we inherited because the Government at that time did not ensure that the economy was going well and that jobs were being created. Right now our role is to work on the economy and to create the jobs which Canadians need so badly. Although the Constitution is an interesting topic, we must now put this motion aside because the time is not right for it, notwithstanding the repeated efforts of the Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) to bring this subject forward. It might be a very good idea in theory, but when you put theory into practice you have to live with the consequences. Do we know what kind of consequences we will have economically given the various parties directly interested in this project? As I said before, there are 27 municipalities, two regional Governments and three major Governments involved.

• (1630)

[Translation]

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, I think, as I already said, that this problem should really be studied and, consequently, I propose that the Bill be withdrawn and the subject matter referred to the Justice and Solicitor General Committee.

[English]

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate. As you may know, I am the only Member on the Government side whose riding is located entirely within the boundaries of the City of Ottawa, so I feel obliged to rise in defence of this great city once more. As you may recall, I spoke in debate when this issue was raised the first time, I believe just over a year ago. I do not wish to repeat what I said then but I do want to take a few minutes to outline some of my concerns once more. I trust that you, Mr. Speaker, as a resident of the City of Ottawa since first being elected in 1968, and as a person wise and fortunate enough to marry a girl from a distinguished Ottawa family, will have some interest in what I have to say.

I would first congratulate both my colleagues on their speeches and say that I agree entirely with their remarks. As the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Cadieux) stated, Ottawa was chosen by Queen Victoria because it offered many advantages, which it continues to offer today. Its people and its culture were a hybrid of our two founding peoples. It was located on the border of Upper and Lower Canada. It had and still has great natural beauty.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I appreciate the very kind words from the Hon. Member, but I must tell him that he did speak on the amendment and therefore it is very difficult for me to recognize him again.

Mr. Daubney: I stand to be corrected, but I believe I spoke on the main motion and not the amendment. I will take your direction in that regard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that I have Hansard here of Tuesday, January 29, and he spoke on the amendment to Bill C-207. I was looking forward to a great speech and I want to thank the Hon. Member for his very kind words, but I must recognize the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Jardine).

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to carry on from where my hon. friend left off. This Bill addresses the desirability of changing the boundaries of the national capital of Canada to include the City of Hull and any additional area which the Canadian Parliament might designate in future. More specifically, this proposed amendment would authorize Parliament to make the boundary of the nation's capital identical with that of the boundary of the National Capital Region as currently defined in the National Capital Act. I would like to take this opportunity to highlight for my colleagues several thoughts on this matter. I would like to consider an historical perspective to this question which will provide my friends here with a better appreciation of the issue. I trust this will enable us to move forward into the future with a greater understanding of the ramifications of this proposed legislation.

We are all aware of the extraordinary beauty of our capital, both as a city and in its regional environmental context. Herbert Holt, who chaired the 1915 Federal Plan Commission studying the future prospects for the capital, noted the following in his report:

> In some respects Ottawa was happily chosen for its role. It lies on the banks of a great and beautiful river, the Ottawa, and has direct communication by water with the mighty St. Lawrence, which discharges the waters of the Great Lakes. Two subsidiary rivers flow into the Ottawa near the site of the capital; the Gatineau, which comes through a picturesque valley from the North, and the Rideau which reaches the Ottawa from the South. Two striking waterfalls, the Chaudiere and the Rideau lie within the borders of Ottawa.
> A canal of the dimensions of a river passes through the heart of the city, and is available not merely for commerce but for recreation. Parliament Hill is a high bluff rising 150 feet from the Ottawa River. Looking northward across this river, the observer has in view the Laurentian Mountains stretching away into the distance and still covered, in part, by the primeval forest. London, Paris, and Washington are all great capitals, each of them situated on the banks of a river, but none of them has the natural beauty of Ottawa. Nature, indeed, offers a direct invitation to make this northern capital one of the most beautiful in the world.

Holt goes on to demonstrate a clear concern for the future growth of the capital and the regional context:

> —looking to the future growth and development of the city of Ottawa and the city of Hull, and their environs, and particularly providing, for the location, laying out and beautification of parks and connecting boulevards, the location and architectural character of public buildings and adequate and convenient arrangements for traffic and transportation within the area in question.

The person who left the most enduring legacy in the creation of our capital is, of course, Jacques Greber. This noted French architect was called on by Prime Minister Mackenzie King to develop the plan which, by and large, has laid the foundation for our capital and the development of the National Capital Region to date. Greber was very conscious of the mission of a capital city and, as he noted, the capital is a very special place, of special importance. it reflects and must respond to a unique mission which is at once constitutional, national and international. He said:

> A capital is the reflection, the symbol of the whole nation.

With this observation he encapsulated the ideas of heritage and the expression of the capital as a manifestation and symbolic representation of the original frontiers of the country; the initial link between the two major cultures which settled our country, and the thought that the capital is the unique representative of the confederated provinces and forms the heart of the nation.

Today, times have changed. The people and Government of Canada have evolved. However, these messages from the past still ring true. When one thinks of a national capital, the image goes far beyond that of any other well-designed functioning urban settlement. The words "seat of Government", and "national repository of arts", and "centre of national culture" begin to express these ideas. The capital of any nation is a very special city which symbolizes in one entity the expression of that nation and its people as a whole. Ideally, this is accomplished through its special functions as well as its physical form and make-up which serve as a reflection of the social and cultural diversity and characteristics of the inhabitants of the nation. The capital city is a place to experience many facets of the nation at firsthand, to learn of its history and its future potential. The capital is the place to become truly one with the nation, its Government, people, culture, heritage and, perhaps most important, its future.

In this context my colleagues may recall that in the very recent past we took significant steps to recognize the bilingual and multicultural nature not only of the capital itself but of the region as well. We have witnessed throughout the capital area, for example, the strengthening of the nature and beauty of the capital through physical development of parks, parkways and governmental accommodation. We are witnessing the evolution of a series of cultural activities, ranging from the Canada Day celebrations to heritage festivals and, of course, our special winter festival, focused in the heart of the capital, Winterlude.

All of these efforts which derive from the ideas of the past are bringing together today the foundation on which the capital can securely build its evolution into the years to come.

What of this future? What provides the impetus to move our capital forward into the years to come? I would propose to you that this impetus is found in the definition of an image for the national capital which represents the multitude of beliefs, values, ideologies and aspirations of all the peoples of Canada. At the same time it is consistent with and supportive of the national capital functions, both as a capital and as a thriving urban community. As well as being a reflection of the heritage of the Canadian nation, it must also be an image looking to the short and long term future as an inspiration to all the world to take note of the capital of Canada.

In this context, we must recognize our assets of multiculturalism, our bilingual nature and the constantly evolving nature of the organization and functioning of the nation's capital, and build on these assets over the years to come.

Earlier I mentioned the natural beauty of the capital and noted the impact it has had on the thoughts of those people of the time who helped shape our present environment. This natural asset was recognized as having very much a regional as well as local aspect. The rivers, Gatineau and the Ottawa, formed a natural crossroads for trade and commerce, linking into the St. Lawrence system. From the high bluffs overlooking this crossroads, one could survey the whole of the Gatineau Hills for great distances both east and west along the Ottawa River. In its time, the crossroads developed into a centre for the lumbering industry due to the rich forestry resources in the region, the availability of rivers for transport and the growing population developing around the communications node. The river, while physically separating the original Upper and Lower Canada, acted at the same time as a linking element, being the common means of travel and centre of the working environment.

This nucleus of original settlers, traders and lumbermen has now grown to fill some 13 municipalities and 2 provincial regions in the area. While the numbers of people have greatly increased and, with time, the complexity of all aspects of the area has increased, the heritage remains. It is a heritage which will always speak out for the recognition of a multicultural bilingual people in an area of the country of very great natural beauty and drama.

If the cultural and environmental elements which make up our capital region today have not changed that greatly over the years, the complexities of society and government have. We live in an era where the strength and expression of the national capital and Government have grown considerably. To house the functions of Government and to provide for the maintenance and efficient working of this region, a complex system of multi-governmental infrastructures has evolved to supply services to the residents of, and visitors to, the nation's capital. With this growth in the complexity of Government and regional infrastructure, the problems of conveying the common identity and heritage of the capital to the public beyond its limits becomes very cumbersome. The problem becomes one of expressing within the context of past and present the ideas, symbols and aspirations of the very diverse elements which make up the various provinces in the federation—that multitude of elements which binds the provinces together into one unified nation.

As alluded to earlier, we are living in a time of communication and the use of multicultural activities to create a sense of belonging together within the framework of the nation. This direction, or pulling together, is currently manifested in some of our more sophisticated advertising campaigns bringing to the people of Canada a new focus on the heritage and cultural aspects of the capital.

In and around the capital area we are seeing a strong direction being taken to highlight the bilingual and multicultural nature, not just of the immediate region, but of the nation as a whole. Examples of this phenomenon are numerous but several of particular interest come to mind. Clearly, Canada Day is a day for celebrating our common roots and cultural assets. We have seen this celebration expand from Parliament Hill and throughout the National Capital Region to the nation as a whole, all being linked together through an advanced telecommunications network.

In a like manner, we have witnessed the Winterlude Festival grow from an insignificant local effort to one of national and international importance. This project has probably contributed more to the perceived cultural and recreational consolidation of the region and nation than anything, excepting our Canada Day celebrations. It is these types of publicly oriented programs which contribute tremendously to the national and international image of our nation and capital. At the same time they also act on a more local level to bring together the varied regional populations in a consolidated recognition of the role and importance which they play in the ongoing evolution of this capital called Ottawa.

We are left today, with a greater sensitivity to reaching out to the nation and the world to identify the capital of Canada as a special and unique place. We stand at a point in time where this great nation has opened before it a future of much potential, nationally, internationally and locally within the capital region.

The Canadarm is an expression of great national effort. My colleagues are no doubt aware of the growing national and international recognition of this area as a source of high technology research and advancement. If one thinks back to my introductory note that this era began as a communication node at the confluence of the major regional rivers, one might easily foresee that this growing region which cradles the capital will become a new communication centre: one focused on the electronic age of information handling, research and development.

This perspective becomes particularly interesting when one considers that the capital, as the seat of Government, houses our cultural institutions and is generally acknowledged as the centre of diplomatic and related international functions. As the heart of the nation, it is generally felt to be the repository of the nation's history, the place where one goes on pilgrimages to absorb the nation's past and see its evolution into the present. It is also, perhaps most important in Canada's case, the vantage point from which one might hope to catch a glimpse of the elusive construct called the future, a demonstration of testing ground of future ideas and development.

It is only fitting, in the context of these thoughts concerning the evolving nature of the capital, that we turn to the question of the physical boundary of the capital. I have noted that we are now living in a period of complex intergovernmental jurisdictions. These structures are attempting to provide a physical context and service infrastructure for our national capital to highlight its importance as a focus for the Canadian people from coast to coast. As the capital continues to grow and expand in complexity, one must surely bring into question the appropriateness of the originally defined boundary unique to this City of Ottawa. Culturally speaking, one has but to consider the evolution of public activities throughout the region originating in both the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario to understand that the cultural interface is becoming even more interconnected.

● (1650)

In closing these remarks, I will say that these facts provide a very clear indication that this question is not only timely but also important to consider for the future of Canada's capital, our City of Ottawa.

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, before commenting on this Bill—I already spoke on the main motion, but not on this amendment—I would like to point out that during the whole debate, we have seen in the House neither the mover of the motion, the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle), nor the seconder of the motion, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

Mr. Gauthier: Order!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) that television has long since been invented, that viewers can hear her comments and see Members in the House, but she should know—and she often does this—that comments on the presence or absence of Members are out of order.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I did not quite hear the Hon. Member but she knows, as an Hon. Member who has been here for the past year or so, that she should not reflect on the presence or absence of Hon. Members in this Chamber. I am sure she realizes that.

Mr. Gauthier: Of course, she does.

Mrs. Mailly: I was getting bored, Mr. Speaker. I am glad to see that my colleague from Ottawa-Vanier came into the House instead of hanging around in the lobby and watching television.

Now then, this Bill is very important. Unfortunately it still contains the shortcomings which were pointed out by my colleagues today and on earlier occasions when it came up for debate.

It does not seem to take into consideration the evolution of the National Capital territory. For instance, it has been suggested that what is considered to be the heart of the capital should be expanded to cover Hull and that perhaps others sectors might be added in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I represent a riding whose main municipality is called Gatineau. It now has 20,000 more residents than the City of Hull, yet apparently it might be included only in what I would call a rather distant future.

Mr. Speaker, it goes to show that the Bill was drafted to focus attention on the riding of the Member for Hull-Aylmer. It is not likely to change our capital into a centre properly reflecting the bonds which unite all Canadians, as might be expected in a Bill on the matter under consideration today.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, all the funds allocated to the national capital area and all the efforts of the federal government are being contributed by all Canadian taxpayers. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we have a responsibility to adequately reflect the feeling of pride and belonging, the vision and wishes of all our countrymen.

Thus, if we were to promote this vision which seems to me to be quite narrow, and simply include the City of Hull in the National Capital which is Ottawa, without its outskirts where the actual population really feels that it is already part of the national capital—

If we fail to enlarge our vision, then we would not fulfill the expectations of the Canadian people. I therefore believe that as the National Capital Commission which is responsible for enhancing the buildings, the parks and the life of our national capital, under the Department of Public Works, is currently very seriously addressing the issue, we are in fact considering projects which could truly reflect a true vision of our national capital, we should go beyond this Bill.

Not only that but this plan of Mrs. Jean Pigott, the present chairman of the National Capital Commission, and of the Department of Public Works, whose Minister is Mr. Roch La Salle tells us for instance about administrative sectors of the Government which would be scattered throughout the Capital area, a much larger area which reflects at last what has happened to the National Capital in the last ten years. For instance, in my constituency, there are 17,000 civil servants who work either in Hull or in Ottawa, the main city; in the constituency of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney), there are also many civil servants who work in the heart of the capital, some of them may even have the chance to work a little closer to home, in federal Government facilities. We see that this need for administrative sectors to be scattered throughout the National Capital area is really, in its wide vision, an objective to be pursued now. When we consider the legislation introduced by Dr Isabelle, the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer, we see that it may not have been brought up to date for . . . I think it is the sixth year he has brought back this Bill; if he had a look at that enlarged vision of a National Capital which should reflect the aspirations of all the population of that area, I might say of the region defined as the area of the National Capital Commission, which extends to Buckingham—

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, on a point of Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier has the floor.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) is repeating the speech she made on last December 7. She rose on the main motion and now she is speaking on the amendment, that is the motion I moved to refer the whole matter to a committee for consideration. The Hon. Member for Gatineau should know that a speech is made only once in the House, not twice. The one she is making now is a repetition of the one she made on December 7.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my comprehension of the Hon. Member's speech, I find there is a difference. I went through it with the Table Officers, I read the Hon. Member's speech, and I find it to have been relevant, as were her remarks today. They were not quite the same. I think I will allow the Hon. Member to carry on.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My colleague objects and says I am repeating the same speech, but it is not the same speech at all, because we have things to say now we did not have the last time we discussed the matter, in December 1985, I think. Mrs. Pigott now has devised an overall plan for the National Capital territory. So I fail to see why we should refer such a narrow issue that is not relevant to the present situation, which represents a narrow point of view and does not convey a sense of fairness to a committee. When we have—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

It being five o'clock, the House stands adjourned until next Monday, at 11 o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 5 p.m.
