SENATORS' STATEMENTS

TRANSPORT

REPLACEMENT OF SEARCH AND RESCUE HELICOPTER AT YARMOUTH, NOVA SCOTIA

Hon. Gerald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, I rise today to express my shock and outrage at the decision by the Liberal government to replace the all-weather rescue and surveillance helicopter in Yarmouth, Nova Scotia with a Coast Guard utility chopper. I was even more surprised at this announcement, given that it was only a year ago that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans was in my area promising that, without question, the helicopter would remain there. In fact, my understanding is that, at that time, he said that the chopper would remain there "until hell freezes over."

I cannot stress enough how important this helicopter is in ensuring the safety of our fishermen who are at risk while at work on the high seas. I know all too well the importance of having an adequate search and rescue helicopter on patrol. In fact, as the Member of Parliament for the area at the time, I was the one who made sure that an all-weather helicopter, the Sikorsky S-76, was finally provided to the fishermen in my area in 1988 by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. Since then, the chopper has been involved in numerous search and rescue operations at sea and has saved the lives of many fishermen.

It is absolutely unacceptable that the Liberal government should try to rationalize its decision by citing the financial savings of using a chopper from the Canadian Coast Guard. They fail to mention that the BO-105 cannot fly in bad weather, or on most nights, which is precisely the type of conditions which require the use of these choppers. As well, the BO-105 can only fly short distances.

For the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans even to suggest that the savings to be derived from switching helicopters justifies his decision is shocking. What price does this Liberal government put on the lives of fishermen who will be put at risk by this decision?

Although I understand that the merger of the Canadian Coast Guard with the Department of Fisheries and Oceans has played a role in this decision, I call upon the government to halt immediately its plans for replacing the Sikorsky S-76 and reconsider its options. Given the impending announcement of the new search, rescue and surveillance helicopters to replace the Labrador and Sea Kings, I suggest that the government simply extend its contract with Canadian Helicopters for the Sikorsky S-76 until such time as the new helicopters are ready to be put into service.

Only in that way can we ensure that our fishermen are being properly protected with the necessary equipment as they head out to sea, sometimes as far away as Georges Banks. Our fishermen and their families in Nova Scotia deserve no less.

PARKS CANADA

RESTORED FORTRESS AT LOUISBOURG, NOVA SCOTIA—FESTIVITIES 1995

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to take this opportunity to remind the chamber that this summer, both the Fortress and the Town of Louisbourg in Cape Breton will play host to one of the most exciting festivals in North America commemorating, in turn, Fortress Louisbourg's 275th birthday, the 250th anniversary of the first siege of the military installations, and the 100th anniversary of the Sydney-to-Louisbourg railway.

Those of you who have already visited the reconstructed site will know that Louisbourg predates Quebec as a milestone in our history. The fortress town arose from Louis XIV's rather extravagant vision of empire and, at its zenith, was considered to be the mightiest military bastion in the New World, or the Gibraltar of Canada, as some historians have put it.

In fact, the defence works cost so much that the impoverished Sun King, as Louis was known, once swore in frustration that he would awaken in Versailles one morning to see the spires of Louisbourg rising above the western horizon.

At one time, Louisbourg was as important as New York, more populous than any place in Canada, and the only walled city of its kind on the North American continent. Much more than a fortress, it was, in its short lifespan, a metropolitan sea port bulging with trade and intrigue.

In the siege of 1758, the fortified city was completely demolished, and there it remained for over 200 years, a forlorn pile of broken stone and charred wood located on a rocky, misty finger of land on the southeast corner of Cape Breton Island. It was not until the early 1960s that federal initiatives were taken to reconstruct the fortress as a means of putting unemployed miners in Cape Breton back to work. All that in the wake of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Coal, made in 1960.

I might add, honourable senators, that tourism is close to a billion dollar industry in Nova Scotia, and accounts for close to 35,000 jobs. On Cape Breton Island, this translates into about $200 million in revenues and 7,000 jobs. With the collapse of the fisheries, Parks Canada has become the single largest employer in the area, and Louisbourg is, of course, critical to the big picture.

Today, entering the site is much like entering a time machine. Extensive historical and archaeological research has allowed authentic reconstruction of the principal buildings of the French fortress once proudly designed to protect all of New France.

The capital costs to successive federal governments involved in the almost two decades of restoration have amounted to over $27 million. The replacement value of the present reconstruction is estimated at $71 million, of which $30 million is accounted for by the fortification walls alone.

As part of the festivities this summer, a Grand Encampment will showcase authentic 18th century military camp life, and over 1,400 re-enactors, representing individual regiments from Canada and the United States, will participate. A spectacular Atlantic flotilla of tall ships —

The Hon. the Speaker: I apologize for interrupting the honourable senator, but his time is up. Is leave granted that he may continue?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Graham: A spectacular Atlantic flotilla of tall ships will provide an extraordinary and spectacular backdrop in the port and at sea.

Festival organizers have planned a rich tapestry of Cape Breton local colour, outdoor theatre, and unsurpassed musical accompaniment.

I remind all honourable senators that we are pulling out all the stops for Louisbourg '95 this summer. I would invite you to come to our part of the world and have a real holiday for a change. In so doing, enjoy a special taste of the incomparable world-famous Cape Breton hospitality.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to say a word in support of what Senator Graham has just said?

I am, and have been for many years, a frequent visitor to Louisbourg. It is one of the greatest examples of restoration to be found anywhere in the world, and it is well worth a visit. I should also point out that there are, in the files of the historic parks department, plans for further expansion of that beautiful site, and there is no shortage of unemployed people in Cape Breton these days to undertake the work. Indeed, it has often occurred to me that it would be a far more useful expenditure of public moneys to expand that site than some of the other expenditures we are called upon to examine from time to time.

What we have in Louisbourg is a precious national asset. It is worth a visit by anyone, if only because it is well run by the historic sites and historic parks people and by the local people who are employed there during the summer.

Finally, I reassure all honourable senators that you can get there from Sydney and you do not have to wait for the reconstruction of the Fleur-de-lis Trail.

WEBER-MALAKHOV ARCTIC EXPEDITION

TRIBUTES

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, one of the most endearing characteristics of Canadians is that they do not stand up at the drop of any hat, massage the left breast and swear allegiance to the flag. We are not given to waving flags too much. We are modest. However, we sometimes forget to sing the praises of our genuine heroes.

Today I should like to draw your attention to one who, on June 15, while we were otherwise busy, completed an amazing feat. I am referring to Richard Weber, who, with a partner from Russia named Mikhail Malakhov, skied from the northern end of Ellesmere Island to the North Pole and back. They were back on June 15, carrying all their own equipment.

To give you a comparison of what it means to accomplish such a feat at 58 below, which was the temperature they faced in February when they started, Reinhold Messner, who has climbed all the major peaks of the Himalayas without oxygen, tried it and had to give up after 11 kilometres.

Richard Weber and his Russian partner skied 2,000 kilometres, and then, because it was late in the year and the ice was breaking up, had to rush in order to make it. The last 16 miles took 40 hours, and during the last eight days they slept a total of 18 hours. They stayed in communication with legions of school children via satellite, sending bursts of 64 characters per day so the school children could follow their progress. There was no helicopter to rescue them; no plane to drop them supplies. It is a feat that is superior in human endurance and courage to the first climb of Everest by Sir Edmund Hillary.

Russia is honouring Mikhail Malakhov; we are not honouring Richard Weber. I regret this. This speech is a small substitute for a national honour. He deserves that one lone senator should rise to say that this is a man of great courage, fortitude, strength, and determination. He has honoured our country, and we should all be proud of him.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

CHILD ABUSE AND MORTALITY

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, pursuant to rules 56(1), (2) and 57(2), I hereby give notice that I will call the attention of the Senate to the issues of child mortality, child abuse, neglect, deaths (CAN deaths), child abuse and child maltreatment in Canada, including the physical injury of children, parental violence and aggression, child neglect, the "failure to thrive" syndrome, psychological injury to children, parental manipulation of children, and misadventure suffered by children in Canada.

QUESTION PERIOD

CANADA POST CORPORATION

LEASE OF PREMISES IN SYDNEY, NOVA SCOTIA—INTERVENTION OF MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: Honourable senators, is the Leader of the Government in the Senate in a position to table the terms of reference of the Price Waterhouse review I asked about yesterday?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I regret that I have not received a response in time for this Question Period. I will continue to try throughout the day and see what I can do for tomorrow.

• (1350)

Senator Forrestall: We have now learned of further allegations involving Mr. Dingwall and a $1.5-million contract awarded to the Business Development Centre in Sydney. Allegedly, tender specifications were altered to suit a specific developer. Other local developers admitted that it would have been a waste of time to bid on this project since it was clear that a Liberal loyalist, Louis Friedman, was in line for the contract. All of this, of course, brings the question of the competitive process into disrepute.

Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate shed some new light on this round of allegations? Since there is no doubt whatsoever on this side of the chamber that Mr. Dingwall perhaps should do the honourable thing and resign, or at least step aside, could the leader tell us what she personally thinks?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, on this particular question, I am also seeking further information. At the request of the Minister of Public Works, Public Works and Government Services Canada is reviewing the tender process and the allegations that have been made about the lease. I will await to hear the results of that review.

Senator Forrestall: Honourable senators, I gather from the news reports that the minister has issued an instruction to his staff to take a look at these most recent allegations with respect to the business centre. If there happens to be terms of reference that the minister would like to see met, it would be appreciated if it were tabled as well.

My concern is the terms of reference, which I will await and read in some detail. The reference refers only to the first contract, and not the second. How are we to understand the importance of the second contract if in fact the terms of reference for Price Waterhouse do not include the subsequent contract?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I will certainly endeavour to clarify that point. It has been made clear to me that a review has been requested in each case. However, I will clarify that as well as exactly who is doing it. I will try to find out as much information as I can for Senator Forrestall.

EXTENSION OF CONTRACT ON LEASES— REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON MEMBERS OF CONSORTIUM

Hon. Gerald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, my question is addressed to the Government Leader in the Senate. It is further to my inquiry yesterday regarding the interference by the Minister of Public Works into the contract between Canada Post Corporation's properties and leases division and the consortium of companies.

My sources had indicated Mr. Dingwall had not only instructed Canada Post to extend the contract from three to seven years, but, in addition, demanded that a fourth member be added to the consortium. Can the leader tell us if she has had the opportunity to find out from her cabinet colleague the identity of this new member?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as requested I have contacted the minister's office regarding the questions asked yesterday. Neither his office nor officials at Canada Post are aware of any change in the existing contract for property management. The honourable senator will appreciate that we had our Question Period late last night, and, while I have put in a request for information, it may take a bit longer to receive the answers.

SCRUTINY ON VIEWS PRIOR TO HIS APPOINTMENT AS AMBASSADOR TO ISRAEL AND CYPRUS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, prior to the announcement of Mr. David Berger as Ambassador to Israel, was he asked if he supports the policy concerning UN resolution 338 which demands a complete withdrawal from occupied territories? This has been the policy of Canada through many of its past governments; the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau, Kim Campbell, John Turner, and Brian Mulroney.

Everyone has talked about resolutions 338 and 242. The press states that Canada supports 242. When an explanation is given, then we get in trouble. If you just mention the resolution number, you are never in trouble.

Was he asked clearly, "Do you support resolution 242, withdrawal from occupied territories, withdrawal from Golan Heights, withdrawal from South Lebanon, recognition of the Palestinian people?" Did he accept that the statute of Jerusalem will some day be the subject of discussion? Has he been asked these questions? Has he been answering, "Yes, I do accept Canadian official policies that have been well entrenched under successive Canadian governments"?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, obviously I cannot indicate today what conversations may have taken place with Ambassador Berger. I think he would know that certainly the new ambassador should be strongly in support of the Canadian position. It is well known that he has been a strong supporter of the peace process in the Middle East. I do not know the details of any conversations, nor do I know whether I will be able to discover them for my honourable friend, but I will certainly pass on his question to the proper individuals.

Senator Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I have to differ on that point. He has never been a supporter of the peace process. The peace process means recognition of the Palestinian people and their spokesperson. Has he been asked to stay away from the "Butcher of Lebanon," whom he welcomed warmly in Montreal, in the company of a member of the House of Commons who is now a senator, after the invasion of Lebanon? She however is not involved, so I will not mention her name. I did not mind such actions in the past, but now he represents me and the French Canadian people, who have always been sympathetic to the cause of the Palestinian people.

As Canada's ambassador to Israel, he will be under great scrutiny. I have already made calls to the Middle East to make sure that he is welcome there, and that he is shown the true situation. I am doing my duty as a Canadian. I want him to succeed in his new appointment, but he has a long way to go. I want to make sure, as he did, and that is why I am asking that you refer these questions to the appropriate people. That is very important.

Canada has the greatest of reputations in the Middle East. I have just returned from Lebanon and Kuwait. Canada is so highly perceived that the attitude of our ambassador could affect our reputation.

Honourable senators, I will make a motion on the issue of Middle East policy before the departure of this Parliament, but I ask you again, has Mr. Berger been asked these questions? Second, has he been asked to apologize, either privately or publicly — which, to me, would be more appropriate — to me and to the mayor of Bethlehem, one of the most reasonable persons to ever appear here before a committee of the Senate? Honourable senators will have read of the incident in the newspaper where, under the heat of discussion, he is supposed to have said to the mayor that he was "as full of shit" — and I mention the word — as I was. That was to the Christian mayor of Bethlehem, who is the most honourable person to appear before a Senate committee. I hope Mr. Berger was given that kind of instruction, in order to better serve Canada's interests.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Prud'homme has mentioned the regard with which Canada is held for its policies within the Middle East. The new ambassador to Israel will, of course, be carrying Canada's policies in the Middle East strongly with him when he begins his new assignment. There is no question about that, Senator Prud'homme. I will pass on your comments, but let there be no doubt that the new ambassador to Israel will carry the Canadian position to the Middle East with vigour.

AGRICULTURE

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—TIMING OF EXAMINATION BY EXPERTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Leonard J. Gustafson: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In view of the dramatic changes in agriculture, and also of the recommendations made by the trade committee which looked into trade between the U.S. and Canada, the Minister of Agriculture has promised that a committee of experts would look into the work of the Canadian Wheat Board. Does the minister have any indication of timing on this matter? Things are changing quickly in agriculture these days, and the government must move quickly to accommodate those changes.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I appreciate the comments of my honourable friend. I can tell him that the Minister of Agriculture has this item very high on his agenda. He is moving as swiftly as he can. I cannot give the honourable senator an exact time-frame, but it will be very soon.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION BILL (FEDERAL AGENCIES)

THIRD READING

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham moved the third reading of Bill C-65, to reorganize and dissolve certain federal agencies.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, with respect to Bill C-65, the Government Organization Bill (Federal Agencies), there is a provision in this bill to remove the position of assistant director of the Canada Council. Clauses of the bill refer to salaries and allowances paid to members of the council, including the president, vice-president and the nine other members. Their numbers have been reduced from what they were previously. I believe there were 19 members of the Canada Council. The bill also deals with the remuneration and allowances to be paid to the director of the council.

In March of this year, a reporter from The Ottawa Citizen published a story informing us that the director of the Canada Council was receiving a living allowance of $1,300 a month, which adds up to $46,800 for three years. This was being paid to the director in lieu of moving expenses to Ottawa from Montreal.

In my opinion, honourable senators, this is a generous allowance. However, what I find more fascinating in respect to this payment is that the head office of the Canada Council is obviously in Ottawa, or certainly in the National Capital Region. The bill does not state that, but for all practical purposes, that is the general understanding, that the Canada Council operates out of Ottawa. Therefore, for all practical purposes, the director is the chief executive officer of the Canada Council; not the president or the vice-president; none of the other nine members of the Canada Council. It is the director who is the chief executive officer, and he does not reside in Ottawa.

The chronicler of The Ottawa Citizen attempted to find out why the director of the Canada Council had not moved to Ottawa to assume his duties. He was informed by a person at the Canada Council that that was a personal matter. The same response was given with respect to other questions.

Honourable senators, I have been attempting to ascertain the reasons why the director of the Canada Council, as expected of him and as was expected of his predecessors, does not reside in Ottawa.

• (1410)

Since my intervention last evening on the presentation of the report from the committee by Senator Murray, I have received some information. However, it is so succinct it can only be considered an illusion of a response. I received an answer dated June 30, 1995. The question was, "Is the Director of the Canada Council in receipt of a living allowance and, if so, why?" The answer was, "The remuneration of Mr. Roch Carrier, the Director of the Canada Council, was fixed by the Governor in Council and a living allowance was also approved in lieu of relocation expenses."

I do not know if this is a new trend. The Commissioner of Official Languages appointed by the previous government also benefits, I believe, from a living allowance in Ottawa where he has chosen not to reside for, I presume, personal reasons.

Honourable senators will recall that two or three years ago, in mid-July, the Senate was called back to revoke a decision it had made respecting the payment of a $6,000 living allowance to senators? Senators were literally ordered back here. A number of my colleagues stood up and reversed their earlier decisions.

Here is an overly generous policy whereby — in view of the position they occupy and the duties they are expected to execute requiring them to reside in Ottawa — these persons are paid an allocation or special allowance not to reside in Ottawa. One must put things in scale and look at them in perspective.

Both the previous government and this government are responsible for this state of affairs. It is basically unfair. I know of colleagues from both sides of the house who could use to their advantage that $6,000 allocation the House of Commons members granted themselves by way of a decision in the back rooms of the House of Commons.

Senator Stewart: Has the Auditor General examined that decision?

Senator Corbin: I am not aware of that, Senator Stewart. Has he?

Senator Stewart: I do not know.

Senator Corbin: The senators attempted to do the same thing because a number of senators were faced with out-of-pocket expenses to meet their living costs in Ottawa. Some still are. Every week that we sit during the summer, senators have to dig into their pockets — not all of them, but a number of them.

On the other hand, we have the government which establishes a policy for well-paid, top civil servants — people who receive well over $100,000 in salary, luxury offices; some have cars and chauffeurs and expense-recoverable trips in Canada, North America and Europe, trips planned as they see fit. Over and above what they already get, these people receive a special allowance so that they do not have to reside in the national capital area.

I find the government's approach hypocritical. On the one hand, it tells senators, "No way, we will not allow you to recover your legitimate living expenses in Ottawa." The government does not say that to members of the House of Commons, and these well-paid, Governor-in-Council appointees also have the same privilege.

I have been fighting the decision of the Canada Council to close the Art Bank. It is incumbent upon us to start examining all aspects of the operation of the Canada Council. I am a supporter of the Canada Council. Some senators are not, and that is fine. However, I am prepared to defend my ideas and my views on what art and subsidies to artists and culture are all about. Other people will not agree with my views. Let us have a debate.

There should be a committee to review the cultural policy of the Canadian government. The time is right for that, in view of what is going on currently in the Canada Council.

We realize that what is happening is in the cost-cutting context of government budgets. Agencies and Crown corporations are requested to do the same. Indeed, parliamentarians are requested to do the same, and we have been doing that. Our income has been frozen for some time. I have been here over 26 years. It is not the first time that I have had my salary frozen. It is at least the third time. I am sure Senator Prud'homme could elaborate if he so wishes.

How can the government of the day or the previous government say one day that parliamentarians must set an example, must show the way, and then the next day say that it has made concessions to highly paid servants of the state? I do not buy it.

I may be anticipating comments Senator Simard wishes to make on another bill a little later. Those are the facts of the case.

I am inclined to move a motion to refer Bill C-65 back to the committee. I will not do it because there are other ways to tackle this problem.

It has been suggested that a committee be set up to examine the total context of the Government of Canada's cultural policies and those of its agencies. We seem to do it in bits and pieces. One committee looks at the CBC, another looks at something else. In the meantime, the agencies pretty well do what they want.

The Canada Council, in one stroke of the pen, has said the Art Bank will go. One of the richest collections of art spanning over 30 years will be disposed of one way or another.

You are preparing to put the axe to me, Your Honour, and that is fine, but do not take Senator Corbin for granted. I have not been given satisfactory answers in committee, and the follow-up has not been satisfactory. I will, if not in the next sitting of the Senate, certainly in the next session, take initiatives to put some order into that area.

I look forward with great anticipation to what Senator Simard will tell us on the matter of pensions for members of Parliament.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

TRIBUTES

Leave having been given to revert to Senators' Statements:

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT RETIRING ALLOWANCES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham moved the third reading of Bill C-85, to amend the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act and to provide for the continuation of a certain provision.

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, I have only a few comments and do not expect to exceed the 15 minutes usually allowed at this stage. If I do, it will be because I was pressed for time and did not have a chance to prepare a more structured speech than the one you are about to hear.

In fact, I will need more time than I intended because I will have to refer to three or four documents.

Honourable senators, since the fall of 1993, there were many months when the Senate did not sit because the Chrétien government failed to plan and to proceed with its legislative agenda in an orderly and efficient manner. That was, unfortunately, the government's decision.

Similarly, we are now seeing one of those not necessarily mortal but most certainly venial sins committed by the Liberal government.

Suddenly, we are faced with an avalanche of bills, and the Senate is being asked to approve this legislation without full and detailed consideration. Well, honourable senators, it is our duty. It is my duty to consider Bill C-85, for instance, the bill to amend the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act, and Bill C-91, which was rushed through yesterday — and I will get back to this, if you will allow me to digress somewhat later on — the bill to continue the Federal Development Bank and to give it new powers and new capital. The same applies to Bill C-104, an act to amend the Criminal Code and the Young Offenders Act, which concerns the use of forensic DNA analysis.

The Senate did not spend and will not spend any time on these bills unless, a few hours from now, enough senators vote against one or two or three of these bills.

In other words, the Senate does not have enough time to do justice to these bills, to important legislation that will have a major impact on the lives of Canadians in a variety of ways. We really have no time to proceed with a serious analysis of these measures.

If the government were really doing its job, it would have introduced this legislation much sooner. At the very least, in the case of these three bills, for instance, the government could — as repeatedly requested by senators on this side, by Canadians, editorial writers and leaders of public opinion, each in their own way and with their own resources — have postponed final approval of some of these bills and scheduled third reading in the fall.

To get back to Bill C-85, there are several reasons why I feel this bill should be reviewed by our senators. First of all, as you know, the bill deals with the employment benefits of members of Parliament. The bill was passed by the members of the House of Commons.

This government told us through its minister, the President of the Treasury Board, on June 29 when the Senate, represented by the committee so ably chaired by our colleague Senator Murray, spent only one hour on the bill, perhaps an extra two minutes, but not more than 62 minutes. I do not think that is what Canadians expect from the Senate. However, 62 minutes is still 50 minutes more than the House of Commons, whose committee examined the bill and spent a grand total of 12 minutes on clause-by-clause consideration of Bill C-85. Now that is outrageous.

Now I want to get back to Bill C-91, on which my colleague Senator Sylvain commented yesterday, and I imagine my colleague Senator Corbin may have a few things to say about the bill later on. Referring to Bill C-91, the government told us through its minister in committee that the bill had to be passed as soon as possible. It could not be sent back to the House of Commons. What the government should have said was that the Liberal government and Liberal members did not want to go back to the House to receive any amendments the Senate might propose. It would have been more truthful, more logical and more sensible to admit they did not want to come back.

Canadians will recall that this bank was more or less a creation of the government. It was given almost unlimited capital and the power to lend money to all the banks' customers. The bank was given considerable powers, unlimited capital, and borrowing authority.

I wanted to make these comments because this bill illustrates the strategy of the Liberal government. For several years, Canadians have witnessed attempts by provincial governments and the federal government to privatize. In some provinces, hospitals are being privatized. Highways are being privatized. A few weeks ago, New Brunswick started to privatize its prisons. Meanwhile, in 1995, while others are privatizing, this government creates new public banks.

• (1430)

I can tell you that I find no comfort in the statement made the other day by Mrs. Sinclair, Chair of the Canadian Bankers' Association, who told the committee that her association had no objection to letting another competitor enter the market.

The government is going in all directions, and this is true on social, economic, and other areas. The government privatizes, deprivatizes, creates, abolishes, et cetera.

Let me get back to Bill C-85. In the four minutes I was given in committee, I tried to find out if this legislation could be delayed until the fall. Minister Eggleton gave us this answer: No, during the election campaign, as well as in our Red Book, we said that we had to put an end to double dipping and change the minimum age for retirement. More importantly, the minister told us that all these measures were required because the government wanted to reduce the deficit.

Honourable senators, if the government had been serious, as the minister claimed, it could have tabled this bill in the spring, summer or fall of 1994, or even in 1995. In any case, it should have ensured that this legislation arrived here maybe one and a half or two months ago, so the Senate could give it the thorough review it deserves.

However, the government did not do that. Minister Eggleton justifies his haste in pressing the Senate to pass this incomplete piece of legislation by saying that this is something which he promised to Canadians. This is fine, but it is no excuse because, in February 1994, Elsie Wayne, the Progressive Conservative member for Saint John, tabled a private member's bill which would have had the effect of raising to 60, as opposed to 55, the minimum age for retirement. That legislation would have put an end to double dipping.

What was Mr. Eggleton doing then? Was he still unaware, in February 1994, of the disastrous state of Canada's public finances? If so, then the situation is even worse than I thought. We have last minute converts.

Let us not forget that the Progressive Conservative Party in February 1994, with Jean Charest and Elsie Wayne, tabled this private member's bill.

With respect to Bill C-85, during the time allocated to the review of this bill, the minister took 40 minutes to repeat those fine-sounding words and quote excerpts from the Red Book, et cetera. Of course, there are also parts of the Red Book which he would rather not talk about to Canadians, since the commitments made there were not fulfilled.

However, if the minister had been serious then, and if he were serious today, he could have done better than make Canadians save $3 million per year, as he claims will be the case with these amendments. I hope that, like me, a majority of senators will vote against the bill at this time, so as to give us three or four extra months to review it.

To look at what? At privatizing this members of Parliament retirement fund among other things. That can be done. Why not? The government has not considered that option. It is not because the senators' pensions will be unaffected by Bill C-85, if passed, as we were reminded by the minister and by some of our fellow senators here — because the accrual rate will remain at 3 per cent and our contribution rate at 7 per cent.

Of course, for the House of Commons, the accrual rate will be reduced from 5 to 4 per cent, and the contribution rate from 11 to 9 per cent. That is one of the reasons why, in a system where one can qualify for a pension after six years, the minimal pensionable age will be set at 55.

The minister boasts that this bill will save Canadian taxpayers $3 million.

The Hon. the Speaker: I must inform the honourable senator that his time is up, but with leave from the Senate, he may continue.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Simard: Thank you, honourable senators.

If the minister and the government had been responsible, they might have given us a chance to consult the public and the experts and study this bill over the summer and into the fall. What is the hurry? Why not take the time to really consider this legislation? We should first look into privatizing and possibly raising the minimum pensionable age not to 55 but rather to 60. They would probably have saved more than $3 million that way.

Why not look at equity at the same time? The members of both Houses of Parliament are paid the same: $64,000 per year. However, there is a discrepancy between the House of Commons and the Senate. I just gave you the contribution and accrual rates. Why not have parity in that respect as well? Why should MPs be entitled to full pension after 19 years and senators after 25? Why not agree on 20, 10 or 25 for everyone?

Minister Eggleton was in a hurry. He was in a hurry because, as he said, we are under pressure. If you are going to do something —

• (1440)

— why botch the operation? Why not take the necessary time and do a good job?

Although the National Citizens Coalition is not my favourite organization, their recommendation to look at the total MP compensation package — salary, benefits, and tax-free allowance, to which my colleague Senator Corbin alluded earlier — makes sense to me and to many other Canadians.

The previous government, and the government previous to that, the Trudeau government, said that senators only exist to finalize their work and live according to the Constitution. They believe that they can send us bills as late in June as they wish, and we will rubber stamp them according to their wishes.

The Trudeau, Mulroney and now Chrétien governments do not bother with senators unless it is time for us to pass their bills. They do not consider our problems or the inequities of the system, whether those problems involve tax free allowances, salaries or other matters.

Certainly, we need to control our deficit, but there are better ways to do that than those shown by this government in Bill C-85. With this bill, the government has botched the operation. The minister tried to justify the early passage of this bill because people were concerned about this issue, and it was controversial. The pensions of members of Parliament have been controversial for a long time, and they will continue to be as long as the government continues to shirk its responsibility to do things properly.

I invite colleagues on both sides of the house to vote against this bill, as I will. Rather, let us do the job properly and have a complete, detailed and serious study of this issue.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, Bill C-85 deals with pensions for members of the House of Commons and the Senate. It also lays down rules, chapter and verse, for former members of either house with respect to double dipping.

The government of the day is using double standards, as have previous governments, with regard to public policy. It says, with the approval of both Houses of Parliament, that former members who take other employment for which they are remunerated more than $5,000 will not have access to their pension benefits from the members of Parliament pension account.

We are set up on a pedestal, illustrating the morality and the righteousness of this policy. We are supposed to applaud ourselves for voluntarily committing our principles toward that noble aim.

However, governments never apply that policy to their employees. There is a basic unfairness with respect to the way the government deals with taxpayers' money. Of course, our pensions are, in part, paid from the general revenue of Canada; from tax money. However, that is the case as well with the pensions of the RCMP, members of the Canadian Armed Forces and other civil servants of all shapes and colours who can move from job to appointment to job under the umbrella of the federal government, without ever having to forgo a pension earned in a previous occupation in the government. That is what I call a basic unfairness.

We are set up as models of what fiscal responsibility is all about, but it does not go beyond the Senate and the House of Commons. No consideration is given to future impacts or effects, many of them negative, that this could have on former members of the Senate or the House of Commons. We are not all in the same fortunate position when we leave this place or, indeed, when we come to it. I am one of the rare senators who can say that I have no other source of income but what I earn here.

Senator Prud'homme: Me, too.

Senator Corbin: That is fine. Let us all get up and join in the chorus. I welcome you.

[Translation]

Senator Hébert: I am poorer than you are, Senator Corbin.

Senator Corbin: It may be so. Poverty knows no limit.

You distracted me for a moment, but what I mean is that members and senators are being used —

[English]

— former members of the House of Commons and former senators. I realize that with regard to senators, it rarely happens, but in terms of the House of Commons it does happen currently.

The thrust of my intervention today is that that sort of policy consideration is never applied to civil servants, and especially top civil servants, the highest paid in the country. They can retire and serve under contract with the government thereafter, and continue to benefit from income from the government. They can retire from the Armed Forces and work in another department of government while continuing to receive their pensions.

In fact, someone comes to mind right now who is well known to all honourable senators. After serving Canada overseas, he got another job in Canada and, subsequently, a third job in Canada. All three jobs were with the government. He is now collecting three pensions. Over and above that, since his retirement from his last job, he does contract work with the government while collecting all three pensions. Where is the basic, primitive, elementary justice in that kind of policy?

We, as senators or members of the House of Commons, either earn our pay and our pension or we do not. If we earn it, we are entitled to it, the same way that any civil servant in this country is entitled to it. I find it and I have always found it — and I will use a term which may be exaggerated — rather two-sided to send someone to the Federal Court, or other such position, after he or she has been a member of the House of Commons, from which they will collect very good pay and receive a pension on top of that. I am not opposed to putting some respectable order into that area, but when will the government apply the policy that it imposes on former members of Parliament to its own employees? That is the question.

We are talking about fiscal responsibility and budgetary restraint. The one area where the government could save significant amounts of money is the area of multiple pensions collected by extremely wealthy people in the service of the Government of Canada.

I think it behooves the government of the day to look into that matter and to present a proposal to Parliament that will apply to those people the same policies it wants to impose upon members of Parliament. Otherwise, it loses its credibility. It is as simple as that.

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: Honourable senators, I have remained somewhat silent and outside of this matter. Senator Corbin talks about uniqueness. I have something unique about my situation as well. I relate it only to draw attention to it in the hope that in the next round of amendments it is seen as a deficiency in the act and is corrected. While, to my knowledge, it affects only me, it could very well affect all or any of us now and in the future.

I paid into the parliamentary pension program from 1965 until 1988. I am not — and this is important to bear in mind — a member of the Senate pension plan. I cannot pay into it. You say, “Well, your pensions are paid up in full from your past service.” Yes, that is true, and there is no doubt about it. If I were to leave here tomorrow, I could draw a full pension fully indexed.

Hon. Marcel Prud’homme: Only if you are over the age of 60.

Senator Forrestall: You know how old I am. You know I am old enough to enjoy that benefit, Senator Prud’homme.

If the honourable senator, who is my dear friend, wants to make a speech, I suggest he go ahead and make one. I want to make a point because on two occasions in the past he has misinterpreted my position in this matter. Indeed, he is one of the reasons I felt it necessary to get on my feet today to try to set the record straight.

My problem is this — and I hope it will be corrected: Should I retire and draw my pension, that would be fine, and there would be no problem at all. Should I die — I am a widower now; my last wife passed away some four or five years ago — my pension is paid up. Should I remarry, however, my new spouse will not be entitled to that pension should I die. I cannot pay into the pension here. If I were able to pay into the pension here in the Senate and remarry, my spouse would be entitled to the pension and all the benefits. Because I would have married her after I had finished fully paying up my pension, she would not be entitled to reach back. Only those spouses who participated in the development of that plan are eligible to participate. There were two and one, God rest her soul, passed away. Presumably, the other one, under existing law, is entitled to 100 per cent of that pension, and in fact we separated and divorced some 20 years ago.

I cite this because it is not fair. Should I remarry, I cannot offer a spouse any pension protection. When I die, my estate will be credited with whatever is due me in one year. The government then takes back their share with interest and everything else. What is left over goes to my estate. It is taxed in the year of death — that is, being dead, I cannot reach forward or back so it is taxable in that year. I will lose half to the government and another half of the half to the government through income tax. In any event, then there is the little bit of cash left that goes into the estate. That, presumably, would go to my beneficiaries.

Do honourable senators see the little loophole that is left? I cannot offer a spouse the protection of a pension. I think it is a God awful thing. For those in the press who love to crow about this golden handshake we get, I invite them to take a look at my situation. I paid into the plan for 25 years or so. If I stay here to age 75, how much longer will I live after I get it? I will only draw a minuscule portion of the amount I paid into the plan. That is fine because I did not pay it in to draw it down when I got older; I paid it in to protect myself when I needed earning protection, as well as to aid my widow and my family.

I have tried to pinpoint a deficiency that I hope will be corrected. I hope my honourable friend understands that my position is slightly different from a lot of others, although there may be others with the same problem.

Senator Prud’homme: Honourable senators, first, I should like to say to my good friend Senator Forrestall that I have no disagreement with his position. That has been my position all along.

Early in the 1980s, I was the chairman of the House of Commons Members’ Services Committee. All those new members who came after me who wanted the glory of the press for their stance on double dipping never did anything about double dipping — they only talked about it. I did something about it. I made recommendations to the House of Commons in a report dealing with double dipping. I hear now that those recommendations form the foundation of the present bill, some 10 years after my recommendations were submitted.

I have never been credited by the press, or The Hill Times, or anyone else for having done that work, but it is now part of the bill before us today. It is a recommendation which was made a long time ago. I say that to set the record straight.

Yes, I have doubts about that situation. Now I see that I may eventually have some success here in the Senate. I have listened to Senators Corbin, Simard and Forrestall. Since I arrived here I have been asking for an open discussion on all the questions of double dipping — not the double dipping of the members of Parliament or the pension plan of the members of Parliament, while this immense bureaucracy hides behind us and says, “Look at those people.” The entire question of pension plans should be looked into. What a good area of study for a committee of senators!

I am very taken by this because one senator who did not know anyone in Ottawa and who lives far from here fell ill, and I was available to take him to the military hospital. Again, we have the demagogy. I hope that someday The Hill Times will write about that because everybody should know about it.

We eliminated all the VIPs who were hiding behind members of the House of Commons and the Senate. Members of both Houses who come from across Canada do not have a medical doctor in Ottawa. However, the privilege was abused. You would know the importance of a bureaucrat or his wife or children by whether or not he was allowed to go to the military hospital.

It reminds me of the War Measures Act. You were known to be important if your spouse could have a young military escort while shopping at Loblaws. People who had never shopped at Loblaws before started shopping there with their escorts to show they were more important than their neighbour in Rockcliffe. That was in 1970. You were important if you had military protection; you were not if you had none. Imagine the big talk on the cocktail circuit in Ottawa.

Members of the House of Commons and senators are being deprived of a service they should expect. If you defend that view, who will be on your side? One should be able to defend a good cause. If it is indefensible, of course one should stay quiet.

As I look around this chamber, I can name all of those senators who live in Manitoba, British Columbia and other regions of Canada outside Ottawa. When they become ill, they are immediately taken to the military hospital. That same treatment was extended to top-level civil servants. That medical program then became a VIP program and was extended to encompass more and more people. Honourable senators, the reason it is being eliminated is because it became too big and too expensive to provide.

We have never talked openly about this situation, but the time has come to do so. Senator Graham always listens to what I say. I should like him to know that I share the opinion of Senator De Bané. Senator De Bané, who is a better informed person than I, having been a minister of the Crown, understands the implications of this measure, and he asked very pertinent questions of Mr. Eggleton when he appeared before our committee. I urge honourable senators to read those interventions.

I should like to draw the attention of honourable senators to another matter. It has to do with pensions. At times I feel that those who are most interested in pensions are those who live in a common-law relationship. I will explain.

I am concerned about widows who will, more and more, serve in the House of Commons and Senate. My concern does extend, however, to bachelors, like myself, and divorced people. I am appalled at what goes on in the lives of those who enter into common-law relationships.

Let us take the example of a member of Parliament who has been married for 25 years. In the old days, a good wife would support her husband and rejoice the first night her husband was elected as a member of the House of Commons. They faced the prospect of a sharing a new life together. Who created that member of the House of Commons? It was the so-called “good wife” at home with the children who could combine family life and at the same time be involved in the political life of her husband.

Let us look at what can happen in a situation such as that. The husband, after becoming a member of Parliament, may spend 10 years in the House of Commons. During that career, he may leave his wife and enter into a common-law relationship. I want honourable senators to consider what will happen to his pension in those circumstances. What happens, in fact, is that the woman with whom he has entered into that common-law relationship will be entitled to one-half to three-quarters, or even more, of his pension.

There is now talk in the House of Commons of including those involved in same-sex relationships being entitled to all the pension benefits that accrue to those who have shared traditional relationships. That question will be raised all across the land.

I remember one night in the House of Commons being called to vote at around eleven o'clock in the evening on amendments to the pension plan for veterans. I was a young member then. I thought it was not fair. I am talking about politicians being aware of the human side of an issue. Who built his career around his family life? Who gets drunk on the proceeds from the pension plan? The veteran who risked his life for his country is entitled to an adequate pension.

I remember having discussions with Marcel Lambert at night over long dinners. I remember an exchange between him and Bégin. It was not the best exchange, so I dare not to repeat it here. She objected, and he called her “une cocotte.”

Honourable senators I ask you: Is it fair that a woman need only be involved in a common-law relationship with a veteran for one year in order to be entitled to be receive his pension? The lady who waited, cried and agonized during the war for 10, 20 or 30 years finds herself at the end of his career eliminated from a pension by the new spouse.

My father told me about the greatest word in the English language when I learned English at university. That word is “fair.” He said, “Remember that word. It is an important word. When you talk to people, look them straight in the eyes and say, ‘Is it fair to treat people that way?’”

I share the opinion of Senators Forrestall, Corbin, and Simard. Something should be done. Seeing that no one is interested and not many people are listening, we will pass the bill, but I will vote against it just on principle. However, I need someone else to stand up with me to ask for a count. I will vote against it. It is something that should be studied. Let me put it this way: I will think about voting against it.

Pass the law if you want, but let us have a commitment that the Senate will look into it, because the Senate has the ability to show gentleness and kindness and patience to deal with such matters. It is not given to demagogy like we have seen in the House of Commons. Peacefully we can study the question of the First Nations, and peacefully we can study the pension plan. That is what the Senate does best.

Can you imagine the House of Commons studying euthanasia as the Senate has done with Senator Carstairs and others? Can you imagine the House of Commons doing that study across Canada and the demagogy that would be involved? That is why it is important that the Senate should deal with these questions.

If honourable senators read the bill carefully, they will be surprised at what they may learn. There are many little surprises in it. I do not think they are fair.

I have no fear about that. I contributed to the plan in the House of Commons. When I came from the House of Commons to the Senate here, I was not a defeated candidate. I was already a candidate. I am the only one who did not believe I could be elected, but everyone said I would be the first or second to be elected. My salary went down, but I am not complaining.

That was my choice, but I lost $40,000 a year in income by going from the House of Commons to the Senate. Why should we not say that to the public? Forty thousand dollars less to do the same work that I did in the House of Commons.

With respect to my pension, as Senator Forrestall said, "Big deal." I will receive my pension at age 75, and it will start to be indexed at 75. That is no big deal when you are 60. I am not complaining; I am just reporting the difference.

Do honourable senators know — and I hope The Hill Times will report this fact — that we are paying for the pensions in the House of Commons? Check the facts. How many people survive the Senate after 75? Where does that money go? It goes to the general fund. There is not one fund for the Senate and one fund for the House of Commons.

No one answers these questions, honourable senators, and yet we will pass another bill. There was no study in the House of Commons — at least not a serious one. The members there were told to hurry up before the summer recess so that they would not be embarrassed by difficult questions during the summer. That was the problem. It was the same with other bills. When you start going to picnics in the summer, you may be questioned by people. I ask honourable senators to stand up and speak on this subject. That is what I am doing.

I ask Senator Fairbairn to consider some of my proposals. The time may have come to bring an end to this misapprehension among the Canadian population about the pensions of members of Parliament. Hundreds of thousands of people hide behind us, happy that the debate is about us and not about them.

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps honourable senators would allow me to put a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, or to the Deputy Leader of the Government.

I noticed that neither the Leader of the Government nor the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate rushed to their feet at the end of Senator Prud'homme's speech. However, a number of senators — namely, Senators Simard, Forrestall, myself, and Prud'homme — have raised a number of points and issues concerning policy considerations. There is a disposition today, at least by most of us, to let the bills proceed through third reading and on their way to Royal Assent.

Honourable senators, I believe serious and valid points have been raised. In view of our willingness to help the government pass this legislation, it would be reassuring if we could have a commitment — perhaps that is too powerful a word — or a guarantee that the matters raised by the aforementioned honourable senators will be taken up at the table of power, and at the council of ministers, as an expression of our serious reservations about loopholes in the law, and about too loose a policy as it applies to pensions and other matters. That is all we want.

Honourable senators, we are not here to play political games. Indeed, if we so wished, we could force a vote on the issue. That is not our intention, but I think we have performed our duties in the brief period of time allotted for us to do so.

Some of these matters were raised in prior sittings of Parliament. It seems that we are speaking to those paintings on the wall. Nothing ever happens.

Can we have a commitment today from the Leader of the Government in the Senate that these will not remain dead words?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in reply to Senator Corbin and other senators, I can certainly give a commitment that these will not remain dead words. As senators know, an active and probably public debate will be carried on with respect to some of these issues in the months ahead.

I say to Senators Corbin, Prud'homme, Forrestall and others that I will transmit some of these suggestions to colleagues who are considering the broader issues at this moment.

I can assure honourable senators that I have watched the legislative process as it has developed in a slightly different way in the last two years in the House of Commons, which is fine. However, in this same period of time, we have also witnessed that the backlog has not been eased, nor has the process been streamlined.

I am sure that Senator Murray, ahead of me, often made this suggestion: Can we not introduce some of this legislation in the Senate? Obviously, some matters cannot be introduced in this place, but others can. This is something I have been discussing, and I am quite prepared to do so even more vigorously.

In the first week of this Parliament, two initiatives have turned out to be landmark efforts. One was the Special Senate Committee on Euthanasia and Assisted Suicide headed by Senators Neiman and Lavoie-Roux, and the other was the special reference to the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples of the long overdue question of aboriginal veterans' pensions.

In any event our standing committees are adequately set up to deal with some of these issues and present the kinds of reports that provide a body of evidence and also an opportunity for Canadians to bring forward their ideas. It is a proposition that I am enthusiastic about, and I will carry it forward as best I can.

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I know there are things we can do. Senator Fairbairn pointed them out. I, for one, will take the words of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and I will be satisfied when I see something coming. We have the authority if we want to use it. All we need is the leadership. I cannot exercise such authority by myself. I cannot even find someone to second my motion. However, if other senators rise, I would second the motion that this matter be sent to the appropriate committee.

If need be, we will strike a special committee solely for the purpose of looking into the question of pensions and double dipping. This would demystify for the Canadian population what this issue is all about. It would show them what double dipping means, who receives it, who should be deprived of it. Why should we, in the interests of Canada, continue to allow double dipping for someone who would otherwise not offer their services to Canada?

I would be more than happy to know that the minister concurs in this line of thinking, and to have her commitment that we need not refer this matter back to cabinet. She may refer everything back to cabinet, but then she will refer it back to us again, saying that the message has been sent but that there is not much action.

We can act here. I was watching all senators while I was speaking. Senator Fairbairn, you may be surprised at the number of people who will see you privately to comment on this matter. I suspect that this same opinion is held by a few members of your own party, a few members of the official opposition, and others. I must call myself an "other."

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, to restate the point I made, the initiatives on euthanasia and on aboriginal veterans' pensions were commenced in the Senate, and they were welcomed by the government.

The Hon. the Speaker: It was moved by the Honourable Senator Graham, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stanbury, that this bill be read a third time now.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

An Hon. Senator: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT BILL, 1995

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the fourteenth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs (Bill C-69, motion of the Honourable Senator Graham, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hébert), presented in the Senate on Tuesday, July 11, 1995.

Hon. Gérald-A. Beaudoin moved the adoption of the report.

The Hon. the Speaker: The Honourable Senator Beaudoin, seconded by the Honourable Senator Tremblay, moved that this report be now adopted. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Carried.

Senator Beaudoin: Honourable senators, on Monday, July 10, 1995, the committee —

The Hon. the Speaker: You are making a speech on this bill.

Senator Beaudoin: Is it too late?

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if Senator Beaudoin had a speech to make, then the report would not have been adopted. The report was adopted in the usual way, but the procedure was interrupted. You have a speech to make on this issue.

[English]

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Beaudoin clearly indicated when he rose that he wanted to speak to this order, and perhaps the Honourable Speaker missed the fact that he was on his feet.

Senator Berntson: He changed his mind. It is too late.

Senator Oliver: He does not need to speak now.

Senator Beaudoin: I will respect the rules. What do the rules say?

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the normal procedure is that when I place the motion before the house, if no one gets up, I say, "Adoptée. Carried." But if someone gets up at that point, then the speech proceeds.

Senator Beaudoin: I always follow the rules.

The Hon. the Speaker: The speech can proceed. That is the normal practice.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I do not know the intention of my friends opposite. However, I sit fairly close to the Speaker's chair, and I do not think anybody could have misunderstood what was happening. The report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs was called. Senator Beaudoin, the chairman, stood and said, "I move the adoption of this report." The Speaker put the motion very clearly and asked if it was the pleasure of the house to adopt this motion; we said "Yes" and he said, "Adoptée. Carried."

Did my friends opposite miss all that?

Senator Graham: No, we did not. Honourable senators, we clearly did not miss it because Senator Carstairs would like to speak as the sponsor of Bill C-69. However, out of courtesy obviously, because there was an indication from the chairman of the committee that he wanted to speak on this order, she waited to hear what the chairman had to say. That clearly was his intention. I watched him very carefully and he was rising to make his speech and, out of courtesy, Senator Carstairs waited; otherwise, she would have been on her feet.

Clearly, we have been waiting for the chairman of the committee to follow his intentions, that is, to speak on his motion to adopt the report.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, again I have to say this: Others may have a different view, but in my opinion the moment has passed. Senator Beaudoin moved that the report be adopted. The Speaker put the motion clearly. "Is it the pleasure of the Senate to adopt the motion?" We said "Yes," and we were about to move on to the next item.

There was no noise in the chamber at the time. There is no reason to believe that senators could not hear the motion being put. The moment has passed.

Senator Hébert: We saw him.

An Hon. Senator: He said he would go by the rules.

Senator Murray: I am sorry, honourable senators. My friends saw what happened, and it did not happen in great haste. Senator Beaudoin moved the adoption of his report.

Senator Hébert: He started his speech.

Senator Murray: The Speaker put the motion. It was not done in great haste. I think the moment has passed. The report has been adopted.

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, there are various ways to skin a cat. Obviously, a bit of parliamentary trickery is being suggested here.

Senator Oliver: The Speaker put the question.

Senator Graham: I would like to ask, as an honourable gentleman who presides over the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee with great distinction, whether it was the intention of Senator Beaudoin to speak on his motion?

Senator Oliver: He does not have to answer the question. He is not on the stand.

Senator Hébert: He will not answer.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): First, he does not have to answer. This is not Question Period. Second, the Speaker himself ruled that the report had been adopted. It is not a decision of our side; nor is it a decision taken on the government side. When Senator Beaudoin rose, the Speaker reminded him that if he wanted to speak, he would need leave because the report had already been adopted.

Therefore, Your Honour, the report has been adopted. Can you clarify that for us?

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I did not rise to ask for leave. The normal procedure is that I put the question; if I do not see anyone standing, I say, "Adoptée, Carried." However, I am sure honourable senators will all agree — and we have always agreed — that if someone stands even after that, they are allowed to speak. I was certainly prepared to allow Senator Beaudoin to speak. Indeed, I asked him if he wished to speak on this motion, at which time I sat down and he rose. I am following our normal practice here, which is that we do not cut off an honourable senator arbitrarily simply because I have called a motion, if someone rises at that point.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Your Honour, did you not only call it but declare it adopted?

The Hon. the Speaker: I did. However, I have done that on previous occasions, as I think have previous Speakers. If someone rises at that point, he or she will be heard. My view is that if Senator Beaudoin wishes to speak, he is entitled to speak.

Senator Oliver: Not without leave.

Senator Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I rise on this point.

Hon. Sharon Carstairs: I should like to speak on this point as well.

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, I should like to rise on a very brief point of order.

I take exception to the statement that we are looking at political trickery. I think that is beneath anyone here. There is no trickery. We have a procedural argument. Everyone understands procedural arguments.

I take exception to the reference to political trickery. It is hard to imagine any motive for doing that.

Senator Carstairs: Honourable senators, it was my understanding this afternoon that Senator Beaudoin was to speak to this committee report. It was my intention to respond, after hearing his remarks.

I have introduced bills for second reading in the past. I must say, the procedure in this chamber is foreign to me — one introduces second reading, moves it, adopts it and then speaks to it. Why we do this, I do not comprehend.

In the chamber from which I gained my experience, you would move second reading but certainly never adopt it. Yet, consistently, that is what happens when I stand to speak at second reading. Everyone speaks on it. Therefore, I am assuming that that same procedure is in effect here. I have been waiting to hear from Senator Beaudoin and then I would speak.

[Translation]

Senator Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I am one of those people who often find themselves in a situation similar to the one we are seeing today. Since I am pretty far back, by the time you notice I am on my feet, you have practically said the word "carried." I realize that as the Speaker, it is your job to recognize those who wish to speak, and if no one wishes to speak, the motion is carried.

I have noticed that for a long time, both under the speakership of Senator LeBlanc and your own, which have both been excellent, I may say.

[English]

I want to be sure that I am understood. Senator Carstairs is absolutely right. Very often, Your Honour, you do your duty, but you do it too fast. Yesterday, I said that I wanted to speak on this bill and I expected to speak on it last night. Last night I indicated to Senator Graham that I wanted to speak on it. I am sure that Senator Carstairs was of the same feeling. It was quite a surprise to me to see such an important bill passed so suddenly.

I wish to repeat what Senator Corbin said about Senator Beaudoin last night, when I think Senator Beaudoin's dignity was hurt: His committee has done almost 50 per cent of the work of the Senate in the last year and a half.

I am sure he was ready to speak.

Senator Gigantès: He was on his feet.

Senator Prud'homme: Honourable senators will understand that from where I sit I cannot see everything. I am sure he was ready, so much so that he asked Your Honour, "What is your ruling?" Why would he ask about your ruling, Your Honour, if he had no intention of speaking?

He said that he would abide by what Your Honour said. That means he intended to speak on his own report. He would not have said that if he had no intention of speaking.

[Translation]

My father taught me the rudiments of logic. According to simple logic, it is obvious that he was about to speak. If he does not speak, there are other senators who wish to be recognized, including Senator Carstairs and myself, since I have been on this bill since it was first tabled.

[English]

In a spirit of amicability, I suggest we withdraw all the names. I did not like the word "trickery" either. Let us have good spirit in this chamber before the summer break.

Knowing Senator Graham, I am sure he did not mean to say "trickery." Senator Murray is a stubborn man, we all know. I think we should have the debate and proceed in an orderly fashion.

Some of us had intended to speak on this issue.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, we are reaching the end of a session, when the atmosphere always warms up. Let us think back to other occasions, even earlier than today, when I called a vote and Senator Prud'homme rose after I called it wanting to speak. I think the standard practice has been that even when the Speaker says, "Adoptée, Carried," if someone gets up prior to our moving to another item, then that person is recognized and allowed to speak.

Therefore, Senator Beaudoin is entitled to speak if he wishes to do so at this point.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Your Honour, I am not one to challenge a Speaker's ruling. I want to be careful of my wording. Your Honour did say, "Adoptée, Carried," after which you resumed your seat and Senator Beaudoin got up to speak and you allowed, having said "Adoptée, Carried," that he would need leave to revert to the item. We have left the item and are ready to proceed to another one.

You are now telling us that, on occasions, saying, "Adoptée, Carried" does not mean what we think it means. I do not want to go any farther than that. I hope that if we accept that description we are not setting a precedent to the effect that the same words will mean different things on different occasions.

By going along with your suggestion, Your Honour, I fear that we may ignore the real meaning of the words "Adoptée, Carried."

Senator Beaudoin: Honourable senators, it is true that I intended to speak on this matter. There is no doubt about that. However, if it is said that what is important is the words that are pronounced in terms of the record of the house and, if you said "carried," then it is carried. However, if you want to go back to this question of speeches for Senators Beaudoin and Carstairs, then, obviously, we have to have the leave of the house to do so. That is pure logic.

If it is the wish of the house, I will speak. I understand that Senator Carstairs will also speak. However, we have to have the permission of the house to do so.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I can assure you that that has not been the practice.

In future before I call for the vote I will ask, "Does any honourable senator wish to speak?" It will slow the procedure, but it may prevent problems of this nature in the future. I will no longer automatically say, "Carried, Adoptée." I will ask: "Does any other honourable senator wish to speak?," after which I will call for the vote.

If we had moved to another item the case would be different. In this case we have not yet moved to another item. The practice has certainly been to hear any senator who rises, even though I have repeated a second time, after the speeches, "Carried, Adoptée."

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Your Honour, in the spirit of cooperation and because we are not the ones who are bogged down by narrow definitions and narrow legal interpretations, as we have been subjected to, we will certainly abide by so-called tradition and allow the item to be called and discussed.

This is a controversial item. Obviously, we feel strongly about it. However, controversial or not, we do hope that Your Honour's suggestion that you will add the words "Does any honourable senator wish to speak" before actually declaring the item carried will avoid a repetition of this circumstance in the future.

Perhaps before we proceed Senator Graham would like to suggest to the editors of Hansard that they misunderstood two particular words and he really meant to say something else.

Senator Graham: I would be happy to withdraw.

[Translation]

Senator Beaudoin: Honourable senators, on Monday, July 10, 1995, the committee heard testimony from the Honourable Herb Gray, Solicitor General and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons, and from Mr. Jean-Pierre Kingsley, Canada's Chief Electoral Officer. The Honourable Herb Gray was accompanied by his Parliamentary Secretary, Peter Milliken, by Mary Dawson, Counsel, and by Professor Beverley Baines of Queen's University.

Mr. Gray said that the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Suspension Act — former Bill C-18 — ceased to have effect on June 22, 1995, in accordance with its sub-section 2(2). One purpose of Bill C-69 is to repeal that statute and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, R.S.C. 1985, ch. E-3. Bill C-69 aims at establishing a new procedure for the readjustment of electoral boundaries. It contains no date for coming into force.

Professor Baines stated that the courts do not become involved in the passage of legislation, as confirmed by the decision in Native Women's Association of Canada v. Canada (1994) 3 S.C.R. 627 and Reference re Canada Assistance Plan (B.C.) [1991] 2 S.C.R. 525. She corroborated the minister's statements and expressed the view that Bill C-69 is still on the Order Paper. The courts interpret statutes on the basis of their wording.

Jean-Pierre Kingsley, Chief Electoral Officer, underlined potential difficulties should there be an overlap between the current readjustment regime, as set out in the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, and Bill C-69, if the bill were to be passed later, in the fall.

[Senator Prud'homme]

Because of the wording of clause 35 of Bill C-69, he did not rule out the possibility of legal proceedings against decisions he may have to make in this regard.

In light of this testimony, the committee feels that some issues remain obscure, specifically: 1) the legislative process that led to the debate on Bill C-69; 2) the intention of the government expressed in the House of Commons and the Senate in May, June and July of this year; 3) the repeal of earlier statutes by Bill C-69; 4) the nature of the validity of action taken under the previous legislation and the scope of section 43 of the Interpretation Act; and 5) the possible effect of Bill C-69 on section 51 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

These are very important issues, which certainly deserve further clarification, and committee members said as much at our meeting on Tuesday.

For instance, there was a discussion on the various aspects of the Interpretation Act. Professor Baines, who accompanied Minister Gray, understandably asked for more time to think about her answers to certain questions, as did Ms Dawson, a senior official from the Department of Justice.

The committee is therefore well advised to continue its work.

Honourable senators, that is why the committee recommends that these issues be examined in depth and that the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs hold further hearings.

[English]

Senator Carstairs: Honourable senators, I rise to speak to this report because I think the committee did not do justice to the message from the House of Commons in this report. I think, quite frankly, that we are trying to further obfuscate the issue of Bill C-69.

I wish to spend a few moments on the history of what has happened. The question before the committee yesterday was really on whether Bill C-69 was a legal act and whether, therefore, we should be voting on it. The testimony given was clear and absolute: Bill C-69 is a legal entity in Parliament at the present time. Of that there was no question. No witnesses said that Bill C-69 was not a legal entity and was not part of this parliamentary procedure.

In order to understand the full debate, it is necessary to know the history. Approximately one year ago, this chamber passed Bill C-18, which suspended until June 22, 1995 the Electoral Boundaries Redistribution Act on the statute book as E-3. There was only one purpose to Bill C-18: It suspended the EBRA in order to allow the development of a new process of redistribution. That new bill is Bill C-69.

As to the legal status of Bill C-18, it is clear that it has none. When the Honourable Herb Gray appeared before us, he said it is spent. When Professor Baines of Queen's University was asked, she said it was not operational. She went on to say that it is, however, still on the statute books, and will remain there until it is repealed, which is one of the things that Bill C-69 provides for. No witness argued that Bill C-18 had any force and effect. Nor, as I said earlier, did any witness argue that Bill C-69 was dead. To the contrary, both the minister and the legal expert argued that it was very much alive.

Throughout our hearings, Senator Lynch-Staunton legitimately drew the attention of members to the intention of Bill C-18. He quoted a number of individuals, none of whom argued that the government would not be able to introduce a further piece of legislation, which is what Bill C-69 is. They simply argued, and rightly so, that if Bill C-69 was not passed by June 22, 1995, the earlier process, the EBRA known as E-3, would be in force and effect and would remain so until it was repealed. That is exactly what Bill C-69 does.

The Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Kingsley, appeared before us and argued very vehemently that that which we were about to present to him was the worst possible scenario because, with the EBRA presently in force and effect, and Bill C-69 presently being debated in the Senate, he would have two electoral processes in place at the same time.

That became particularly dangerous on or about November 20 when the maps from the present EBRA were distributed and made official and declared. Meanwhile, Bill C-69 was still being debated. What we have at the present moment is a committee report which, in my opinion, will allow the Chief Electoral Officer's nightmare to continue.

Honourable senators, we have heard much about an act that was passed in 1963, which established, for the first time, an independent process for the development of electoral boundaries in Canada. However, it has been an evolutionary process. There have been changes to that act, as there have been suspensions each time there has been a census in this country. The last changes, having been put into effect in 1987, resulted from a suspension when the Conservatives formed the government of this country. There were amendments to the EBRA as a result. However, at no time has there been a full review of the act. It is that review of the act that brings about Bill C-69.

Honourable senators, the questions raised in the Senate committee and in this report based on section 43 of the Interpretation Act and section 51 of the Constitution do not in fact deal with Bill C-69 because, if Bill C-69 were passed, it would not conflict with either section 43 of the Interpretation Act or section 51 of the Constitution. It is specious.

Section 51 of the Constitution requires that after a census, taken every 10 years, the process would be triggered to bring about and institute new electoral boundaries. For example, the census in 1971 established a process. That process was begun. However, it had not finished in time for the 1972 election, so the process continued. It had not finished for the 1974 election, so the process continued. It was not finished until the 1979 election. No one questioned that section 51 had been violated because it was clearly recognized that a process was in place and was proceeding.

In 1995, we actually have two processes going on. We have one under the EBRA and we have another under Bill C-69. No one, in my view, can reasonably say that section 51 of the Constitution has not been attended to. It has been clearly attended to.

Let us look at what would be the effect. The earliest possible date in which new boundaries could be proclaimed and have effect under the present law would be November 20, 1996. If Bill C-69 were passed, the earliest date would be June 10, 1997, some seven months later. Are those seven months, between November of 1996 and June of 1997, critical? What are the chances of the government holding an election in that period of time? If one looks at the history of parliaments in this country, not very likely. Every majority government in Canada has gone a minimum of four years and three months. This government will not reach four years and three months until November 1997, considerably after the boundaries put into place by Bill C-69 will have had force and effect.

Senator Nolin, in committee, raised an important question: What if there is a snap election as a result of the referendum? Interestingly enough, neither the present legislation nor Bill C-69 would be in effect. We would have to fight the election under the boundaries established as a result of the 1981 census. That is not, therefore, a legitimate question in the sense of "we must leave the thing alone because then it would put the boundaries immediately in place." It cannot put those boundaries immediately in place, the earliest date being November of 1996.

Having lost all of the legal arguments, the opposition members of the committee then of course made reference to the problems with Bill C-69. The two provisions which seem to provide the greatest amount of difficulty are the ones with respect to the 25 per cent rule, the variance plus and minus 25 per cent, and the new role of the Speaker.

Honourable senators, if we do not pass Bill C-69 and we use the present process for boundary redistribution, it has a plus or minus 25 per cent rule. In other words, nothing has been achieved. If that is what Conservative senators wish, a change in the 25 per cent rule, they will not get it by tossing out Bill C-69, because they are left with a process in which there is already a plus or minus 25 per cent rule.

What about the role of the Speaker? Well, honourable senators, the role of the Speaker at the present time is that he or she comes up with proposals for individuals who will be representatives on the boundary commissions. Theoretically, according to the law, he need consult with no one. Balderdash! He, of course, consults with the party of which he or she is a member.

There is no guarantee that the Speaker will consult with the other parties in Parliament. What this act does is to insist that he do that — a positive, progressive, democratic process. If he does not do that, then he can be challenged, and no Speaker wants to be challenged. It will not be the majority who will challenge him; it will be the minority. They may not win the vote, but they will embarrass the Speaker.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: That is right.

Senator Carstairs: The Speaker will not want that to happen; therefore, the consultation will take place. Far better that process than the present one in which members of the House of Commons can sit around after the fact, after the maps have been drawn and the boundaries established, and say, "Oh, but I do not like my boundary." If you do not think that has not worked, speak to Mr. Kingsley, and he will give you, chapter and verse, the number of times that members of Parliament have effected changes to the legislation and to the boundaries.

This process that Bill C-69 puts into place, I suggest to you, is far more protective of the needs of ordinary Canadians than the bill that is presently the law of this land.

What is really happening here, in my view, is that the majority in the Senate is using the committee process to prevent a bill being voted on in the Senate. They are preventing members on both sides from participating in this debate by putting it into committee where only 14 members, 8 on one side and 6 on the other, get the opportunity to participate in the debate. If the majority had any intention of allowing a new process, why did they support Bill C-18 in the first place a year ago? If they honestly did not want a new process — which is a legitimate point of view and one that Senator Murray has expressed — then why did they set up this false body, if you will, a year ago and suggest that Bill C-18 would allow that process to take place? Why did they go to the House of Commons, in essence, and say "Draw up a new bill and spend a year discussing it, developing it and communicating it"? What was the purpose of this whole year if they were not legitimate about voting on Bill C-69? At least that would have been clean, neat and honest. Wrong, but at least honest.

Instead, they let the bill come to us on May 2. They kept it in this chamber until June 8, some 37 days later. They sent it back to the House of Commons. When it came back to us, they sent it to committee. Fair enough. However, it has now been in committee and come out of committee, and they still do not want to vote on it. Honourable senators, I do not think that is the honourable thing to do.

This bill has been before committee twice. It need not go back a third time. It is the right of honourable senators to vote as their conscious dictates, and I suggest they do so. If they do not like this bill, then vote against it, but do not hide behind some committee. Get it out. Let us not pretend that this committee is some judicial body that can somehow or other come up with a judicial decision on section 51 of the Constitution Act, 1867. Let the Supreme Court decide that, if need be, sometime in the future. We are not equipped to do that as members of the Senate.

Stop fudging. Stand up and be counted.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

Hon. Sharon Carstairs: Therefore, honourable senators, I move, seconded by Senator Cools:

That the fourteenth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be not now adopted, but that it be amended by striking out the sixth and seventh paragraphs and replacing them with the following:

However, as the Honourable Herb Gray noted, any potential difficulties would be rendered moot by the early passage of Bill C-69.

Consequently, the Committee recommends that a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House that with respect to its message to the Senate dated June 20, 1995, regarding Bill C-69, the Senate does not insist upon its amendments to which the House of Commons has disagreed.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask Your Honour if a member of this chamber can amend a committee report, or whether we are not limited to returning the report to the committee for amendment. I ask for a ruling on that. Can a report of a committee be amended by a member of this chamber?

The Hon. the Speaker: My advice is that it has been done in the past. There are precedents for doing so, although I do not have the precedents at hand.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Then I will speak to the amendment. I will not speak to some of the comments made by Senator Carstairs because they are not only embellishments but gross exaggerations of our attitude on this bill.

Obviously, we are against Bill C-69. It is a step backward. We were quite in favour of suspending the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act when the proposal first came up, but we must remember why the government requested a suspension period to bring so-called improvements to it.

There was no widespread or even "narrowspread" demand anywhere in Canada for improvements to the act. The current act has worked well over the last 30 years. It needs fine tuning; there is no question about that.

What sparked what has become Bill C-69? It was a request by certain members of the Liberal Party, particularly from Ontario, who had just been elected in 1993. Having seen the revised maps, which had been published, they were terrified that if the maps were adopted, at the next election they would be running in ridings completely different from the ones in which they were elected, and their chances of being defeated would rise accordingly.

I am not making this up. This was admitted by members of the caucus themselves. Let me quote one of them. On May 5, 1994 on a CBC World at Six report on the Senate's approach to Bill C-18, the reporter, Jean Carter, said:

Many Liberals won seats for the first time in last October's election. They don't want to fight the next election on new turf. Other MPs like Sarkis Assadourian from Toronto worry about their ridings disappearing altogether.

Then Sarkis Assadourian, the member from Don Valley North, says:

I worked twenty years to get here. Within two months I lost my seat, which is not fair.

That is exactly what prompted the Government of Canada to come to Parliament and say, "We must revise the act. Not only must we revise the act, but it will take us two years to do so, which will guarantee that whenever the next election is held, it will have to be held on the boundaries which are already in place based on the 1981 census." If Bill C-69 had gone through, an election to be held in 1996 or 1997 would be based on population figures of 15 or 16 years before, something never before done in this country.

Not every election has been held on the freshest census figures. For instance, it was impossible for the 1972 election to be held on the 1971 figures. However, in every decade there has been an election based on the census figures computed at the beginning of that decade.

Bill C-18, in its original form, would not have allowed that. The dispute was not on the revision of the act. The dispute was on the suspension period. Not only that, the act was to abolish the commissions; to dissolve them. We sent the bill back and said, "No, that is wrong. We feel that is not respecting section 51, which indicates that once the census figures are known, we should get moving on the readjustment of the boundaries."

We suggested a date of February 3, 1995 as the outside limit. The government, with reason, pointed out that their calendar of parliamentary sittings was such that they would not be able to meet that, so we agreed on June 22, 1995. It was understood until June 22, 1995 — to be more exact, midnight June 21 — that once the suspension period came to an end, if there were no revisions given Royal Assent by the deadline, the old act came into force once again. Nothing was said, as is being said now, after June 21, of, "Well, yes, we passed the suspension period, but the deadline was not really as significant as we told you between March, 1994 and June 21, 1995. What it really means is that the bill is still on the Order Paper." We accept that legally it is still there. In fact it is off, but legally it is still there, so the government maintains that Bill C-69 can go into effect any time after it receives Royal Assent, a contention we dispute.

By the way, I mentioned Sarkis Assadourian, and I am sorry to see what will happen to him if the maps which have been tabled go into effect, because his riding of Don Valley North disappears. It will be absorbed by Willowdale and Don Valley East. He has a problem, but that is one of the inevitable results of any revision.

The United Kingdom has a similar system. Perhaps ours was largely based upon theirs. There are four electoral boundaries commissions, one each for England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland. Their guidelines are similar to ours. They have tolerances and they do not believe in the American system of "one citizen, one vote." They do it based on the concept we embrace here. Some ridings are overpopulated, and some are underpopulated compared to the quotient.

According to the most recent maps, some senior cabinet ministers will lose their seats, including Norman Lamont in London, a person who is not an insignificant figure in the Conservative Party. However, not one member in that country has gone to his caucus and asked that the act be revised in order to retain the old maps. They accept the inevitable, which is that after every revision, someone will be hurt and someone may be favoured.

It is not the future of 295 members which should concern us; it is the equality, as much as possible, of one citizen, one vote which should preoccupy us at all times. If that means affecting sitting members, that is what is known as "rough justice" and that is something which they must accept.

Certain members of the Liberal Party of the Ontario caucus would not accept that. For some reason, which I am sure it must regret, the government went along with their request, and that is why Bill C-18 was introduced.

This bill was not the result of perceived or recognized flaws in the current act. The current act has worked well. The commissioners have been well selected and have been highly respected. Over all, they have done a good job. Members of the House of Commons were able to intervene in the process before the maps were tabled and will have an opportunity to intervene in the process prior to the maps being confirmed.

The reason we have Bill C-18 is simply to answer the complaints of a limited number of members of one caucus.

Senator Gigantès: You voted for Bill C-18.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: We voted on Bill C-18 bearing in mind the deadline and with the assurance that once the suspension period came to an end, the commissions would continue their work and not have to be revived. We made the assumption that the act would be improved. We also made the assumption that some of the delays — such as the provision that a year must expire before the final proclamation order is confirmed — could be shortened.

When Mr. Kingsley came before the committee, he told us that, with the experience of the last 30 years, with new technology and knowledge, the time necessary for the whole process could be shortened. We agreed that would be beneficial.

We never thought, as Senator Carstairs has admitted, that we would see a bill where the Speaker of the House of Commons would be compromised. He is made part of the process in such a way that his hands are tied.

Under the present system and under the proposed system, there are three members for each electoral boundaries commission in every province and the Northwest Territories. The chairman is named by the Chief Justice from amongst the judges in his jurisdiction. The other two are named under the current act by the Speaker of the House of Commons.

Nowhere does it say in the act that he must consult. I am sure that Mr. Fraser consulted. I am sure that Madame Sauvé consulted. I am sure they must have first consulted their own political parties. But no matter who they consulted or did not consult, their choices were final and could not be appealed. The Speaker was given his own choice in the long run. Whether a minority or majority party agreed, there was nothing they could do about it.

In the proposed bill, the Speaker must consult because the appropriate clause says "After consultation, the Speaker will...." With whom will he consult? Of course, he will consult with all the parties. However, he will have to not only consult but get the approval of the government party. That is because if 20 sitting members of the House of Commons are unhappy with any one or many of his choices, they can move a motion in the House of Commons challenging them.

The government is suggesting that, whereas now the Speaker is independent of political pressure in making his final choice, he will henceforth become subject to it; otherwise, his choices will no doubt be challenged.

It is all very well to say that was included to allow the minority parties to at least express their dissatisfaction.

Senator Murray: That was the explanation given by Mr. Milliken: real politics. They wanted to get their hands in at the front end.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Exactly. The minority parties may well make representations and make a motion if 20 of them are so inclined, but we know that it is the majority which can decide, and the majority will certainly decide. In particular, if the minority parties are unhappy with the choices, the majority government party will vote the motion down.

Senator Thériault: What about your caucus?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: They will vote it down. Rather than having sitting members who have a vested interest in the process intervening directly during the end of the initial map-making process and intervening a second time before the end of the map-making process, they would intervene right at the beginning so that, in effect, the government would name two of the three commissioners in each jurisdiction, right off the bat.

I have yet to be convinced that this is an improvement in the law. This is regressive. The whole purpose of the current act was to get rid of gerrymandering. Allowing the government to name two of the three commissioners is an encouragement to gerrymandering. Surely, this is one practice we want to stop.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Where do we stand now? The new maps, which had been held in abeyance by Mr. Kingsley until June 22, have been tabled in the House of Commons. We are now approaching the end of the process. The calendar is as follows: MPs must respond to the map; and file their objections or comments, if any, by July 22.

When the House of Commons returns on September 18, a parliamentary committee will listen to these representations, after which they will be referred, by October 17, to the Chief Electoral Officer. Then, the Elections Canada re-examination of the parliamentary committee's report must be completed by November 16.

These dates can vary by one or two days but, certainly, around November 21, if this calendar is followed, particularly if the House of Commons meets on September 18, a draft representation order will be proclaimed. Whatever the effect of representations made by MPs, those maps, as determined by the commissions on November 20, 21 or 22, will be confirmed. They are final.

We are only a few months away from the end of a process which, to date, has cost taxpayers nearly $6 million dollars. That is not an insignificant figure considering the government's financial posture. Every penny counts. We are being asked to throw aside $6 million, scrap a good process and replace it with one which is regressive and politically charged. It would cost another $6 million and we would not have as much of a guarantee that the next election could be held on the boundaries determined by the 1991 census.

The current process would allow the boundaries based on the 1991 census to come into effect any time after November 1996, whereas the new process in Bill C-69, were it given Royal Assent tonight, would take 23 months to come into effect which would mean we would have to wait until June 1997. Think of that. Those are key months.

Yes, we do object to Bill C-69. Yes, we admit that the five points in Senator Beaudoin's report will occasion a delay in coming to a decision on Bill C-69. We welcome that because we know, as does the government, that time is on the side of a better process, the one which is in effect now.

Depending on what we decide today, by the time we come back in September, we may be less than two months away from the conclusion of the current process.

I cannot believe that a process which has not been seriously challenged, and where the individuals involved in its implementation have only been criticized because of the results of that implementation, which is perfectly natural, deserves to be scrapped at any time.

After every readjustment, there are complaints. That is completely natural. That is the only so-called flaw, if it can be called that. That is good. It means that the commissioners have done their jobs even though, as a result, some sitting members will be affected. Otherwise, if they want to satisfy members — which the proposed bill would allow, since they would control the commissions — then the readjustments would be just cosmetic.

I cannot believe that if we get to September without passing Bill C-69, the government would not come to its senses and say, "We cannot afford to scrap this. We have come this far, and we will not pass a new bill and waste $6 million, start the whole process again and delay the application of the 1991 census boundaries another seven or eight months."

What the government should have done is, first, accept our amendments, although we do not dispute their right not to accept them. At least they could say, "The current process is in place. It is nearly completed. It will be completed, hopefully, in November. Let Bill C-69 go into effect after that for the next revision." At least guarantee completion of the current process — which, again, I emphasize, is a good one.

We have not heard anywhere — either in the House of Commons or during the committee hearings over there, in our chamber or before our committee — any criticism of the process itself. We have never heard any criticism of any individual commissioners. We have only heard criticisms from members and candidates and political parties who feel that certain readjustments are detrimental to them. However, that is natural, that is normal, and that is healthy, because it means the commissions have done their job.

Honourable senators, the point of all this is that we reject the amendment of Senator Carstairs. We maintain that the report should be returned to the committee and that it take all the time needed to study the five points in it. When the committee comes back with its final report — whenever that might be — hopefully by that time, the government will have realized that E-3, the current act, is a good act and should run its course. If it wants to change the rules, do not change them in the middle of the game, change them for the next game.

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I want to persuade you that it is important to Canada and to the Senate that this question be resolved now. Will we or will we not pass Bill C-69, the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, 1995, into law?

Senator Lynch-Staunton always makes an impressive, emotional speech. The only problem is that if he were to give effect to it, he should be sitting in the government seats in the House of Commons. These are all policy questions, which have already been determined in the House of Commons by the elected representatives of the people of Canada. It is normal for us to have important, and sometimes heated, debates about legislation that is before us. We must, however, always try to look at the subject dispassionately to see whether we can get agreement as to how best to serve the Canadian people.

To a certain point, we were dealing with this legislation on that kind of objective basis. When we dealt with Bill C-18, my colleagues opposite were concerned that the suspension of the redistribution process provided by Bill C-18 would result in the next election being held in constituencies the boundaries of which would not be based on the 1991 census figures. However, they did not propose that there be a new act.

The opposition made proposals for shortening time periods and asked that the proposed new legislation be completed as quickly as possible. They suggested that the new legislation be drafted, passed through the House of Commons and the Senate and become law by February, 1995.

Mr. Herb Gray, as Government Leader in the House of Commons, was quite amenable to changes to address those concerns. As a matter of fact, I do not recall — and I suspect that senior senators on the other side would agree — in my parliamentary experience of over a quarter century any government house leader of any previous government who has shown such a desire to cooperate with the Senate in accommodating their concerns.

Mr. Gray accepted the opposition's proposal to shorten periods of time in the process. However, he wisely suggested that it was unrealistic to expect that Parliament could produce the new legislation by February 1995 and suggested that it probably could be done by the end of the session in June. That is how the June 22 date got into Bill C-18.

Agreement was reached and Bill C-18 was passed into law. We all knew that a new Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act would be forthcoming. Pursuant to Mr. Gray's undertaking, the House of Commons committee was given instructions to proceed immediately to prepare a new draft bill. They did so under the leadership of Mr. Peter Milliken. At the government's request, the House of Commons committee laboriously drafted a complete bill, as was anticipated by the Senate. That was Bill C-69.

The government accepted the bill produced by the committee and introduced it into the legislative process. It went through the full legislative process in the House of Commons and was forwarded to the Senate for approval. Mr. Gray was as good as his word. He supervised the legislative process which provided the Senate with a bill which had been adopted by a large majority of the elected members of the House of Commons. There was no breach of faith on the part of the government.

The reason for delay was that the Senate committee decided, as it had every right to do, to propose amendments, which amendments, by and large, would have superimposed the judgment of the Senate on certain policy matters already considered by the elected members of the House of Commons. That step required a return of the amended bill to the House of Commons. That took time because the House of Commons had to consider again those policy questions.

They did so, and they confirmed their original judgment, sending the bill back to the Senate in good time for the Senate to record its normal reaction — that is, time to send a message to the House of Commons saying that, in view of the careful reconsideration by the House of Commons of the policy questions, the Senate did not insist upon its amendments.

Why do I say that that would be the normal reaction of the Senate? May I cite you some authorities? Senator Murray said in July 1986, when he was government leader in the Senate:

The modern role of the Senate...is one of persuasion rather than resorting to the majority in the Senate when the elected majority in the other place, after reflection, has taken a different position.

In committee when I used that quote Senator Murray said, "after reflection," but surely there is no doubt about there being reflection in this case. The amendments were sent, reconsidered and returned.

In June 1986, he said:

There is no justification in the world, except mischief and partisan politics, for delaying this bill any further.

In October 1987, he said:

The 19th century rights of the Senate to defeat legislation coming from the elected house have fallen into disuse and this is happily so in a democratic country.

In March 1990, Senator Beaudoin, the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, and an acknowledged constitutional scholar, said:

In our system of responsible government, the House of Commons must have the final say. Within that house, the government, when it has the confidence of the house, has the final say.

• (1630)

Finally, Senator Duff Roblin, former premier of Manitoba, former candidate for leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party, former leader of the government in the Senate, said in September, 1987:

How can a body which is not democratic in respect of responsibility, or representative of the parliamentary system, presume that it can have its way, no matter how misguided it may think other people are?

Of course it is open to the Senate to deal with that message in any way it deems fit, provided it does its work conscientiously and expeditiously, but it does not lie in our mouths to say that the government has not acted in cooperation and good faith with the Senate in producing the proposed legislation as it promised and as honourable senators expected.

However, when the amended bill came before the Senate for action, the opposition raised the question of the continued validity of Bill C-69. The message was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, to resolve the question of whether the expiry of the suspension date mentioned in Bill C-18 had the effect of killing Bill C-69. The committee had 12 days to study that question.

Finally, on the second last day available, the committee met, heard clear evidence that the bill is still alive, and it heard no evidence to the contrary. The purpose of the reference to the committee had been fulfilled.

However, then some members of the committee managed to find two or three other issues which gave them the excuse to recommend that the matter remain in committee. Had the committee met during the first 10 days available to it, it would have heard the evidence that it heard on the last day and would have had plenty of time to get additional advice, if it sincerely required it.

However, the report of the committee clearly states that Bill C-69 is still alive and on the Order Paper. The only issue mentioned in the report that is based on the evidence heard is the question of uncertainty caused if there is delay in the passage of Bill C-69. If there is no delay, there is no issue.

If the committee had been interested in the constitutional or other issues mentioned in the report, those could have been tackled at any time during the substantial period the committee had the bill. There is no valid legal issue contained in the request of the committee for an undetermined and probably endless — and this is confirmed now by what Senator Lynch-Staunton has said — delay, supposedly to discuss legal issues.

In this case, foot dragging is the equivalent of attempting to kill the bill without taking the responsibility for doing it openly. We are not acting in good faith if we do not fairly and expeditiously deal with the message from the House of Commons. We must deal honestly with the legislative initiative which was developed in accordance with the expectations of the government, passed by the elected members of the House of Commons, and anticipated by the Senate during the discussions and negotiations which were carried out when we were considering Bill C-18.

Honourable senators, I urge you to accept Senator Carstairs' amendment.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, there is ample precedent, as recently as the last Parliament, for the Senate to amend bills two and three times and send those messages back to the House of Commons. It is perhaps not surprising that Senator Carstairs, as a new senator, might find this rather peculiar, even scandalous, but I must say it is very surprising that Senator Stanbury, who has a long memory for these matters, would have expressed such shock and, indeed, that he would have the temerity to invoke my name in taking his position this afternoon. After all, we have been invited by Senator Carstairs, and implicitly by Senator Stanbury, to defeat the bill.

First, the question of defeating the bill is not before us. What is before us in the amendment of the Honourable Senator Carstairs is, essentially, Senator Graham's original motion: namely, that we do not insist on our amendments. If we defeat that amendment, what will be the effect? The effect will be that a message to that effect will go forward to the House of Commons. Under some circumstances, that would be not only a normal thing to do but would be a welcome opportunity for us on this side.

The problems we face now are indeed problems of timing. Senator Carstairs has alluded to the testimony of Mr. Kingsley, and Senator Lynch-Staunton, the Leader of the Opposition, has described, I think quite accurately, our situation.

If we insist on our amendments and send the motion forward to the House of Commons, even if the House of Commons and the government reconsider and accept our amendments, they would not be able to do so, under the present schedule, until September or October. The result would be that we would have a vastly improved process over Bill C-69, but 23 months would ensue before maps would be ready for a general election.

Clearly, because of what we have said about the bill, we do not want to vote in favour of Senator Carstairs' motion and not insist on our amendments. We do not want that bad law on the books, and the public interest in that respect is not served by our insisting on our amendments at this time.

I have no interest in defeating Bill C-69 and, as a matter of fact, I should like to see an amended Bill C-69. I should like the government to reconsider its position on some or all of the substantive amendments we proposed and to which the government gave the back of its hand.

I agree with the Leader of the Opposition that we should allow the present process to go forward. The committee should do its work and, some time later in this calendar year, I for one would be very happy to take up Bill C-69 again. I would want the government to take another look at our amendments, and I would want an improved Bill C-69 in place to take effect after the 1996 quinquennial census. That, I think, is the way in which we can best assure that the next election will be fought on the basis of the 1991 census. It is the way we can best ensure that a vastly improved process will be in place for the future, and we will thereby have served the cause of electoral democracy and of the Canadian public interest.

Honourable senators, I intend to vote against the amendment of Senator Carstairs and in favour of the motion of Senator Beaudoin.

Hon. Marcel Prud'Homme: Honourable senators, from day one, when I saw much hesitation on this side with regard to tackling Bill C-69 because of the uncertainty of public opinion and perhaps other reasons, I showed my total displeasure with playing with the way we redistribute seats, which has worked so well in the past.

Second, I am not at all of the opinion expressed by the very well-liked Senator Roblin or the very distinguished Senators Beaudoin, Murray and others when they say that the Senate should bow to the House of Commons. If you say that at all times the Senate should bow to the wishes of the House of Commons, there is no reason for the existence of the Senate. It makes no sense to me. Why is there a Senate? All the members of the House of Commons have to do, then, would be to say, "Let the Senate have fun for a while because they are reluctant at the end of the day to vote against us." I do not understand that thinking. However, I was in the other House, and maybe that helps me to better understand the process.

When I was in the House of Commons, it was a difficult time for Mr. Mulroney because the exchange between the Liberals and Conservatives was vigorous. I always said that as long as the Senate exists, it has a constitutional duty to exercise. I was always proud to defend the Senate, never believing that some day I would end up in the Senate. My wish was to be Minister of Foreign Affairs.

You may laugh. You can laugh loud and clear now, but I was deprived of that great opportunity.

The Senate has a duty. Some people were very upset when the Senate exercised its authority killing a bill concerning abortion. Mr. Mulroney was full of displeasure. That is what I call the Senate at its best. However, we must not ahead of time say that we shall bow to whatever comes from the House of Commons. I will not be part of that.

With respect to Bill C-69, I find some senators — I do not want to say “flip-flopping.” Some senators hesitated from day one by making amendments to the bill. I am talking to Senator Murray and others. When they made amendments to the bill, they knew they would delay the maps. If the opposition amendments had carried, the new process would have started and new maps would have been drawn up. Now, nothing will be ready before June 1997 and expenses will be doubled. The $6 million will be thrown overboard, and another $6 million will be found.

What would have happened had we kept the process that worked so well in the past? I keep repeating that I believe in that process. I went to the commissions. I lost. The best part of my seat was taken over by the Honourable André Ouellet. I worked hard, but I lost what I had worked for. Four times I changed. I did not complain; I did not cry. I went to the commission.

I am arranging for people to go to the committee of the House of Commons collectively to make one last presentation. I suggest they do the same in Winnipeg. It makes no sense in Winnipeg to split the seats on the Red River. What is happening in New Brunswick makes no sense.

I share the opinion of the commissioner who is the only minority commissioner in Canada in this report. I read them all.

Tell your members of Parliament that they have until July 22. Any 10 members of the House of Commons can table a motion with the clerk of Mr. Milliken's committee saying, “We, the undersigned, wish to make the following presentation.” There is no reason why some of them could not win, because in the past many of them have been successful. That is the process.

I find myself in very good company with the Gazette. I have been spoiled by the Montreal Gazette. That may explain why I was elected so many times.

Imagine William Johnson. Who does not know William Johnson? He was a great speaker at a dinner for Cité libre. In a July 7 article in the Montreal Gazette entitled “A bad bill: Senate should stand up to Commons on redistribution,” Mr. Johnson wrote:

The Senate is our only recourse against MPs intent on making life easier for themselves at our expense.

If ever the Senate has a justification for its existence, this is the time.

For 30 years, I kept saying to my colleagues, “Do not gerrymander this issue.” It was bad, but it was corrected over the years by Mr. Pearson and Mr. Trudeau. The process worked. As a Liberal, I was happy to follow the process. I do not mind the process in which members will have the last say between September 19 and October 19. That is the process; that is the law.

Of course, the government had to come up with a bill like Bill C-69. It makes sense. They had to justify why they dropped the other bill. They came up with three maps, and now the Speaker will be involved officially in doing what he always did. Believe me, the Speaker always consulted privately with political parties. I was consulted. Is that clear enough? So were others. We were consulted, and the system worked.

This country is full of exceptions. My esteemed colleague Senator Beaudoin was absolutely astounded to hear about the grandfather clause. People say 15 per cent should be the case, not 25 per cent, but it is impossible to apply the provision across Canada simply because this country is full of exceptions. Saskatchewan should have 10 seats, but it has 14. Quebec should have 71, and it has 75. That is the grandfather clause. Manitoba should have 11, but it has 14. Nova Scotia has two too many, but one is protected by the grandfather clause. What can I do if I do not agree with the amendments? I cannot say to the House of Commons that I will bow because if I bow to the House, that means I accept their Bill C-69.

I will not abstain. I will let the process continue in the hope that if we continue our study, then the actual process will take its natural course. We will have maps based on the 1991 census for the next election. Come the next election, we could have another bill like Bill C-69.

The Hon. the Speaker: It was moved in amendment by the Honourable Senator Carstairs, seconded by the Honourable Senator Cools:

That the Fourteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be not now adopted, but that it be amended by striking out the sixth and seventh paragraphs and replacing them with the following:

However, as the Honourable Herb Gray noted, any potential difficulties would be rendered moot by the early passage of Bill C-69.

Consequently, the Committee recommends that a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House that with respect to its message to the Senate dated 20th June, 1995, regarding Bill C-69, the Senate does not insist upon its amendments to which the House of Commons has disagreed.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators opposed to the motion please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if there is no agreement on time, we will follow the rules. The vote will be held at seven minutes to six o'clock.

Please call in the senators.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

Hon. P. Derek Lewis: Honourable senators, I should like to move, seconded by Senator Stanbury:

That the Fourteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be not now adopted, but that it be amended by adding immediately after the words "further hearings" the following:

And that it present its final report to the Senate on the message from the House of Commons, dated June 20, 1995, and the motion of the Honourable Senator Graham dated June 28, 1995, no later than August 8, 1995.

I make this motion because when you look at the fourteenth report of the committee, the last part of it simply recommends that the issues be examined in depth and that the committee hold further hearings. In other words, it is completely open-ended and the matter could go on indefinitely. The amendment is to make it clear that the committee should report by a fixed date.

As Senator Carstairs has said, the Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Kingsley, is in a quandary because he does not know under which process he should proceed. I was hoping that the matter would be cleared up one way or the other, that Bill C-69 would be passed or rejected. I suggest that we should set this date to clear the air and so that we know where we are going.

I would suggest that if the opposition is sincere in their allegations and not delaying, they should agree to this motion. Previously we have been told that the opposition is not in opposition to the bill. As a matter of fact, this is shown by the fact that they said they wanted to improve it, and they actually caused amendments to be made to the bill which showed their wish to see the legislation go through. It is not until today that we hear from the Leader of the Opposition that, in fact, they now say they are in opposition to the bill.

I feel that this motion should be passed in order to make it certain as to when the committee will report, and then the bill can be dealt with one way or the other with no further delay.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wish to make the opposition's position on Bill C-69 quite clear. We think that the amendments we proposed improve it considerably. Bill C-69 as it presently stands is regressive compared to the process presently in place. We are not prepared to accept Bill C-69 in its present form.

We will not accept this amendment because we do not feel that the present process, which is coming to an end, should be interrupted. We feel the government should accept that. There is $6 million already invested in the current process, which is working well. I will not repeat what I said earlier. That is the main thrust of our argument. There is nothing wrong with the current process. It should only be improved upon, and no one can disagree with that.

Bill C-69 should be set aside until after the draft representation order has been confirmed, and then the boundaries based on the 1991 census can be applicable to the election which will take place anytime after November 1996. Bill C-69, after the draft representation order is proclaimed in the fall, can then be brought back, fine-tuned, and we will be happy to support the government in seeing that an improvement over the present process is put into place.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have listened to the debate this afternoon with some concern and some regret; concern because Bill C-69 is a very important bill which ultimately has fundamental implications for those, unlike ourselves, who seek to be elected to the House of Commons, and also implications for the people of Canada; a sense of regret because something is happening with this piece of legislation, and perhaps other bills, which has troubling implications for the way we do business in the Senate.

I will not take up the time of the house again in outlining the path which has led us here over the past year in terms of the effort on the part of the government to legislate changes in electoral boundaries redistribution laws. Senator Carstairs has placed firmly on the record the merits of and the necessity for this bill.

In the past, under a similar process, there has been debate and critical appraisal in the Senate, and legislation has been adopted without amendment, including when the majority was held by the Liberal opposition during the tenure of the former Conservative government.

Once again, I wish to remind honourable colleagues of the assessment of our role as senators on this kind of issue — not on broad and general issues, but on this kind of issue — by a former leader of the government and opposition in this place, a former Minister of Justice, the Honourable Jacques Flynn, when he was sponsoring a government redistribution bill back in 1985, Bill C-74.

I know that some senators opposite, particularly Senators Lynch-Staunton and Murray, become impatient when we remind them of Senator Flynn's words. They say they do not apply today. However, honourable senators, they do indeed apply with great resonance to the situation in which we find ourselves this afternoon. When Senator Flynn was urging this house to adopt his government's bill as expeditiously as possible, he said, and again I quote:

...I would say this is an area that almost exclusively concerns the House of Commons, and I think that we as a non-elected chamber and as appointed legislators are hardly in a position to tell the members of the House of Commons how they should proceed to draw the boundaries of their electoral districts.

That was fairly harsh stuff from Senator Flynn. I would say, honourable senators, that this house, through its majority, has in fact been dealing very aggressively in the past year with the redistribution process, and not just in terms of offering advice.

The Senate has sent back to the House two bills with amendments: Bill C-18 last year and, most recently, Bill C-69. The amendments have been substantive, not just technical. The government has been both responsive and respectful of the Senate's legislative role.

It would appear now, however, that instead of wishing to engage with the House of Commons in a serious way in the legislative process, opposition senators are creating a dialogue between the two Houses with something completely different in mind.

On June 20, we received from the House of Commons a message on our amendments. On June 21, my colleague Senator Graham moved that the Senate not insist on those amendments. Rather than concur, as we all know, Senator Murray moved the adjournment of the debate knowing full well that this would mean that the provisions of Bill C-18, which had suspended the current electoral commissions, would take effect at midnight that day because the new legislation, namely Bill C-69, would not be in place. We all knew that.

To ensure, however, that such passage of Bill C-69 would be impossible, Senator Kinsella, the opposition whip, deferred the vote on Senator Murray's motion until the next day, June 22. On that day, the current redistribution commissions were reactivated as provided by law.

Opposition senators maintained the bill and continued to maintain, I suppose, that Bill C-69 was a dead letter, to use the words of colleagues opposite. We on this side have strongly maintained its legality. The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs took up the issue at the insistence of the opposition and this week heard a series of expert witnesses, as urged by Senator Lynch-Staunton.

It has been noted, and I will not make too big a point of it, that the committee did not meet at all last week, although that would have provided more time to ask the questions it was developing.

However, on Monday of this week, the committee heard from the Honourable Herb Gray, Solicitor General of Canada, Government Leader in the House of Commons, and his parliamentary secretary, Peter Milliken, who is the chair of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Procedure and House Affairs which committee produced Bill C-69. Mary Dawson was here, the Assistant Deputy Minister in the Department of Justice, as was Professor Beverley Baines from the Faculty of Law at Queen's University.

All of those witnesses testified that Bill C-69 was legally and properly before us and the only significance of the passage of the June 22 deadline was the lifting of the suspension on the current electoral boundaries commission process, which has occurred. That, honourable senators, was the critical question. It was dealt with in committee.

Honourable senators opposite then began to delve into other questions, hypothetical questions, as to what might be the legal and constitutional situation if Bill C-69 were not passed before November when the representation order would be issued under the current process.

The witnesses were prepared to deal with the validity of the bill now, and they were thrown a curve. Opposition senators raced right past the testimony and asked about five months from now — not today, not next week not three weeks from now, but what about five months from now?

Mr. Gray made the obvious point that, if the Senate passes the bill now in order to respond to the urgency of having a new process, which would ensure an election could take place under new boundaries in June of 1997, then what might happen next November is moot. It is not relevant.

To wait five months, honourable senators, to see what might happen is a very novel way for the Senate to deal with legislation of this nature. It is at this point that one reaches again for the wisdom of Senator Flynn. What exactly is the Senate doing with this bill? Are those who obviously want it to be a dead letter prepared at any point to permit a final vote in this house? Yes or no? Or are we seeing a new process developing, whereby prolonged delay in itself, in the confines of a committee of the Senate, governed obviously by a majority, prevents the rest of the senators in this house from making their own choice and registering it with a vote?

A committee is being used to effectively sidetrack bills that the opposition does not wish to see proceed, but also that they apparently do not wish to openly defeat in a recorded vote. So, in a sense, they are trying to achieve the same end by different means.

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs received Bill C-69 on May 2, 1995. This was 50 days, honourable senators, from the June 22 deadline, a date that was well known to everyone in this house.

The committee held five meetings and heard from five different witnesses before releasing the bill back to the Senate with amendments 37 days later which, I would suggest, is quite a leisurely pace. That did not give the House of Commons a great deal of time to deal with the amendments, but it managed to do so, sending back a message to us just prior to the June 22 deadline. I admit that is about as tight as you can get.

The opposition sent that bill to committee to examine whether it was a dead letter. When that line of concern failed to produce any fruit, the opposition suggested that it be returned to committee to examine what might happen if it is held up for another five months in the Senate.

Honourable senators, through our Deputy Leader, Senator Graham, we offered to have witnesses testify on this issue immediately, yesterday or today. They were ready to come, but we did not receive a favourable response. Having listened today very carefully to Senator Murray and Senator Lynch-Staunton, we now know why. They really have no intention of proceeding with Bill C-69 in its present form.

Senator Murray wants to give the government another opportunity to consider his amendments. However, honourable senators, as my colleague Senator Stanbury said this afternoon, that time, in our view, has passed.

We have tried today, through Senator Carstairs' motion, to achieve a definitive result on Bill C-69. All of us can count. The opposition majority has defeated that proposal. We are now faced with the prospect of further committee study.

We on this side strongly believe that this is not necessary but, should it go forward, it should not go on indefinitely. Therefore, through Senator Lewis, we are proposing a timetable for the committee which will allow it ample opportunity to conduct and complete its work.

We are confident that the evidence that committee will hear on the subjects that have been raised will support our view that this bill should be passed as quickly as possible, without any further amendments. Under our proposal, this bill could be given Royal Assent by early August.

Contrary to some views of members of the opposition, we firmly believe that the improvements contained in this bill more than justify its quick passage to pave the way for a new redistribution.

Honourable senators, having said that, I have no hesitation in suggesting to colleagues on both sides of the house that Senator Lewis's amendment is reasonable and I would hope it will receive support in this chamber.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I do not understand this yelling. We are paid to do a job and I intend to do mine. Frankly, I resent people who complain because some participate in debate more than others. I do not decide how people will work. I enjoy my daily work.

There are a few matters that cause me some concern in connection with this bill.

I would politely point out to the Leader of the Government in the Senate that I do not consider myself to be an opposition member. I am a member of the Senate. Someday I will vote — if I feel as strongly as I do on this bill — with the government, if it is called for. However, I totally agree with Senator Carstairs that we should have voted this bill down.

Any proposal to tamper with the usual process should have been stopped immediately. It was not; and I regret it. Only now does public opinion seem to be having an impact. I regret that this side does not seem to be willing to defeat the bill. That is their choice, but do not put me in any one group of people. I have opinions that may differ from theirs.

It is unfortunate that we did not stop it right away. The right of the House of Commons should be primordial, but they should have amended the process prior to the publication of the legislation. It is their right to present proposed legislation. There would have been nothing wrong in having produced a bill which stated that a new map should be issued every five years, and that the Speaker of the House of Commons would play a role in the whole process. However, those provisions were only put forward after displeasure was expressed upon seeing the first map. That is the message I have been trying to convey.

I disagree with an esteemed old friend of mine whom I met when he was the Speaker of the Student Parliament at Laval University. That is where I met Senator Meighen. They were all Tories, but I was defending the pillar of the Liberal Party. I met Brian Mulroney, Senator Meighen, Mr. White, and two others in the late 1950s. That is a long time ago. We debated against each other. I have not changed my opinion. I am independent, and I believe that I have the right to say that I do not agree with these senators who say that senators should bow to the House of Commons and should always announce their compliance with the House. There is no justification in that.

I am defending you, honourable senators. There is no justification for you and me to sit if at the end of the day we say, "Members of the House of Commons, do not worry. We will bow down to you and do whatever you say."

If Canadians decide to have a new kind of institution, that will be their decision. In the meantime, there are two Houses: one called the House of Commons; one called the Senate. We have a constitutional duty to perform, but we have to exercise discretion. However, I agree that we should not abuse our right just to be unpleasant.

On this issue, the leader quoted — and she is perfectly able to do so, but I have another quote — that members of the House of Commons are the ones who have inflicted this upon themselves. I say that one of the issues where members of the House of Commons should not be involved is in the question of redistribution. I say that particularly after having seen the first map.

I say to the Honourable Senator Beaudoin, who is a great constitutionalist; to Senator Roblin, a great, fine gentleman; to Senator Flynn, and to others who believe what they believe, that they should — and I say this politely and with great humility because they are great authorities — reassess their thinking of what the Senate is all about. There may be times in the future when the Senate will have to oppose the frivolity of some of the measures proposed by the House of Commons.

I would quote William Johnson, National Affairs, again, in an article in the Montreal Gazette on July 7, 1995. He stated:

A bad bill. Senate should stand up to Commons on redistribution.

It's true that senators are non-elected, which detracts from their democratic legitimacy.

That is up to Canadians to decide.

Mr. Johnson goes on to state:

But the elected MPs...

There again, a great journalist like him should say "the elected Members of the House of Commons," so as not to confuse the readers because I am a member of Parliament, too. He meant to say "Members of the House of Commons have served their own convenience by this bill in which they have a blatant self-interest." He went on to state:

The senators, with no personal interest at stake, can stand up and defend the public interest, the interest of all citizens, against the narrow self-interest of the MPs.

Again, that should have stated "Members of the House of Commons." He goes on to further state:

The Senate is our only recourse against MPs intent on making life easier for themselves at our expense.

If ever the Senate has a justification for its existence, this is the time.

Once again, the first paragraph should have read "Members of the House of Commons," not "MPs."

I will carry that precious article in my pocket for many years. I will keep that article next to me so that when the press start talking about the nuisance of the Senate — how we should abolish the Senate; how it should be elected; and how it should disappear — I will be able to reply that this is very strange. When we make you unhappy, you want us to disappear, but when you think we may be able to defend the public interest, then you come to us and say, "Please do something."

This article should be kept by all of you. I will send you a copy of it, even though I have no staff at the moment because we are reducing our expenses. Why do not we say that publicly? We do not have money to replace staff who are on vacation. Yet we are ready to spend $6 million on this proposed legislation. We do not have money to change the carpet now. I opposed changing the carpet. Look at it. It is a shame for visitors to see. But I am glad that I said, "Do not change it. Show them that we are screwed around here." Nevertheless, we are prepared to spend $6 million.

What I am saying seems to be entertaining to some of you. That is my way of trying to convince people, but I know that you cannot be convinced.

An Hon. Senator: Button him up!

Senator Prud'homme: You are not having fun at my expense. I know that the way I express myself entertains you. I have always spoken in this fashion, and for 30 years I was popular in the national Liberal caucus. Every time I ran for office in an open battle, I was defeated; in a secret ballot, I won every election in the caucuses of Quebec and the national caucus. That says a lot. I was speaking up for those who did not want to speak up.

Honourable senators, you have a golden opportunity before you today. I am not trying to sit on both sides of the fence. People seem to say, "It seems we have more support now, so we will delay the process."

I have not liked the process from day one, and I said so in committee. I am proud to be a senator and I do not care about the biggest authority in this country telling us that we should bow to the House of Commons. Canadians will decide when it is time to bow to the House of Commons or to the wishes of members of the House of Commons, but in the meantime Canadians accept that there is a Senate in this country. They accept that Senator Thériault can stand up in the Senate, as he courageously did two years ago when public opinion was in favour of him voting against the $6,000 raise, and vote as he sees fit. He made a remarkable speech at that time. That is what people expect from senators and that is what I am trying to give to them.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I do not want to interfere in the debate, but I assume it is the wish of the Senate that I not see the clock.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: The motion before us is that of Senator Lewis, seconded by Senator Stanbury:

That the Fourteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be not now adopted, but that it be amended by adding immediately after the words "further hearings" the following:

And that it present its final report to the Senate on the message from the House of Commons, dated June 20,

1995, and the motion of the Honourable Senator Graham, dated June 28, 1995, no later than August 8, 1995.

Is there any other senator who wishes to speak?

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators opposed to the motion please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is there an agreement on time?

Senator Kinsella: We have agreed on a five-minute bell.

The Hon. the Speaker: The vote will then be held at 21 minutes to seven o'clock.

Please call in the senators.

THE HONOURABLE JOAN NEIMAN

TRIBUTES ON RETIREMENT

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I take this opportunity today to say goodbye to our dear friend and colleague Senator Neiman. I do so with great reluctance and sadness. Though it is difficult to imagine, Senator Neiman retires from this place on September 9, and I bid her farewell today in case we are not assembled together before that time.

I do this obviously with mixed feelings. While I welcome an occasion to honour Joan, I also know that her presence in the Senate will be greatly missed by both sides, and particularly by myself.

Hard working, dedicated, sensitive, tough, with a great sense of humour, Senator Neiman has been a true credit to this institution. She has been a champion of the Senate and the importance of its place in our democratic system. She has led always by example within and outside this institution in the work she has done throughout this country and internationally, particularly in her leadership role over the years in the Inter-Parliamentary Union.

It is quite fitting, and in no small measure indicative of Senator Neiman's character, that her service in this chamber should culminate in the tabling of a thorough, reasoned, and well-received report on the daunting question of euthanasia, literally life and death. Senator Neiman has never shied away from tackling some of the more difficult issues which we as Parliamentarians are required to debate and legislate. Indeed, the very first speech she made in this chamber was on the subject of capital punishment. In rising, she said:

I listened to the many eloquent and informed speeches which have been made on a wide range of topics and became convinced that I should not speak until I had something worthwhile to say. That criterion might have sentenced me to a life of silence.

Might I say, honourable senators, that we are glad she tossed aside such inhibitions and forged her own directions in this place.

Senator Neiman's energy and determination were clearly evident throughout her life. Early on, after finishing high school in Winnipeg and studying English at Mount Allison University in Sackville, New Brunswick, she joined the Women's Royal Canadian Reserves. She served with them for four years, retiring at the rank of Lieutenant Commander. She then attended law school at Osgoode Hall in Toronto, married Clem, and had three children: Dallis, Patricia, and David.

Before her appointment to the Senate, Senator Neiman practised law and kept involved politically, including running in the Ontario general legislations of 1963 and 1967. She has served the Liberal Party and the values and traditions it represents with vigour and commitment.

When Senator Neiman was appointed to the Senate in 1972, I believe there was a total, including herself, of eight women in this chamber. Now there are 20. That is a long road to have blazed a trail on, Senator Neiman. Since those days in 1972, this woman has been a full-time senator in this chamber and its committees. Her assignments have included the Senate committees on National Finance, Aboriginal Peoples, Foreign Affairs, Social Affairs, Science and Technology, and a Special Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada.

However, her participation in the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee has been her central commitment for many years as a member from 1972 to 1995, as chair from 1980 to 1986 and 1986 to 1988. It was there that I, as a new senator, came to know her best and to record her exhaustive commitment to very difficult issues with admiration and tremendous respect.

Honourable senators, this committee has embraced not only technical, legal and constitutional legislation, it has been at the heart of sensitive social issues from child abuse to the rights of Indian women, aboriginal women, divorce laws, correctional justice and immigration. It led Senator Neiman to what has been a truly passionate concern as co-chair of the Special Senate Committee on Euthanasia and Assisted Suicide.

This week, honourable senators, she spoke with wisdom, candour and emotion in moving adoption of that report. It is a landmark document for this Parliament and for the country in providing a solid foundation for the further exploration and decisions that this subject will demand.

The name of Joan Neiman and all the colleagues in this chamber who served on that committee will be synonymous with an outstanding report.

In her maiden speech in November 1973, Senator Neiman said that she hoped she would be able to make some effective contribution to her province and to her country through this chamber, in which she was proud to serve. Honourable senators, in response, 22 years later, I would simply say: Joan, you have done much more than that for your province and for your country. The Senate is proud to have had you as a member. All of us offer our thanks and best wishes to you and your family for a happy, healthy and, we know, very active future.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government has so ably given us the outstanding background and experience of Senator Neiman and her many contributions both in Parliament and outside that there is nothing left for me to do — and I do it with great pleasure — but to join with her to express to Senator Neiman our great appreciation for having given so much of her life to the service of her country.

Much is made about a parliamentarian's maiden speech. Senator Fairbairn correctly focused on the speech made in 1973 by Senator Neiman because it was on the always delicate and controversial topic of capital punishment. She spoke eloquently and convincingly as an abolitionist. However, much must be made of her last speech made here on Tuesday last when she moved the adoption of the report of the Special Senate Committee on Euthanasia and Assisted Suicide. It confirms that we have had in our midst over the last many years — but not enough years — a person whose concerns and sensitivities have always remained unchanged and which have earned her much deserved admiration.

Her retirement again proves that those who imposed a mandatory retirement age on this place did not think it through thoroughly.

While we will miss her when she leaves us in September, I know that the best wishes of my colleagues are with her in the many active years which are ahead.

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, someone once said that you do not learn seamanship in calm weather. I do not have to tell honourable senators that Joan Neiman has steered the course through many rough waters in her time in this place, never hesitating to explore new channels with her well-known sense of adventure and her equally well-known courage and personal integrity.

It has been mentioned by our leader that Senator Neiman learned all about seamanship when she served with the Canadian navy. Equipped with a gifted legal mind, she has charted new courses in the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs by conducting widely applauded hearings into the controversial areas of euthanasia and assisted suicide.

Whenever Senator Neiman speaks, whether in this chamber, in caucus or elsewhere, she is listened to very carefully and attentively, because when she speaks she has something important and worthwhile to say. Those are lessons and examples we can all take to heart in this chamber.

Most importantly, I want to thank Senator Neiman, my seat mate in the early years here, for her friendship, in good times and in bad. Of all her qualities, it has been her good cheer, her warmth and unfailing loyalty that I will always remember and cherish.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérald-A. Beaudoin: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words about the remarkable contribution made by Senator Joan Neiman to the Senate. I have been in the Senate for seven years, and I have seen Senator Neiman at work in this house, on the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee and, for 16 months, on the Special Senate Committee on Euthanasia and Assisted Suicide.

A lawyer by profession, she has always had a keen interest in legal issues, criminal law, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, federal law generally and, of course, the Canadian Constitution.

Personally, I have always set great store by Senator Joan Neiman's opinion when dealing with bills to amend the Criminal Code of Canada, and heaven knows, we have quite a few of these bills before the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, where the senator's experience and expertise have always been more than welcome.

For 16 months — as the chair of the Special Senate Committee on Euthanasia and Assisted Suicide — she dedicated her time, energy and capabilities to solving problems and making recommendations. I have seldom been involved in such an interesting and indeed important committee.

[English]

Senator Neiman and I usually agree on many things — in fact, nearly all things. On the two points where we disagree — that is, on euthanasia and assisted suicide — I must say that her reasoning has always been very strong, respectful and impressive.

Honourable senators, in the field of law, it is impossible to agree all the time. I have always enjoyed a good exchange of views in the field of law. Law is social engineering. It is the civilized way to solve problems in a democracy.

Senator Neiman has proved beyond any reasonable doubt how useful the Senate is in our political and constitutional system. I hope that, on very important subjects, other special senatorial committees will continue to be regularly established. They may follow, and derive many advantages from, the example set by Senator Joan Neiman.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, I wish Senator Neiman a long and happy life. Her contribution to the Senate has been outstanding, and I am sorry to see her leave the Senate. She is truly the best.

[English]

• (1050)

Hon. Sharon Carstairs: Honourable senators, as was pointed out by our leader, when Senator Neiman came to this place, she was only one of eight women senators. Those of us women who have chosen political careers have had few role models to follow. No matter what our sphere of political activity was, Joan Neiman has been such a role model.

I also have a Manitoba connection and an Alberta connection with Joan Neiman. She lived in Manitoba as a child, where her father practised medicine and where she is still well known for some of her activities in Lac du Bonnet in her early childhood ventures.

When I first moved to Alberta and became active in the Alberta Liberal Party, lo and behold, one of her close personal friends, Hope Pickard, became a close friend of mine. I learned of their service in the armed forces together. I learned of Joan's political activity, and I began to watch with interest her activities as she campaigned and later became a member of this chamber.

Then I found myself sitting in this chamber with her on the Special Senate Committee on Euthanasia and Assisted Suicide, which she chaired. There I learned firsthand of the capacity of her intellect, of the warmth of her humanity and of her understanding of the human condition.

Honourable senators, by a strange quirk, if the fates allow, I, too, will have 23 years in this chamber, as Joan has had. If in that time I can contribute a very small portion of what Joan Neiman has contributed, then my service will be of value. How proud she must be of the magnificent contributions that she has made to this chamber and to this country.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators, the tributes to Joan Neiman's contributions to the recent study on euthanasia and assisted suicide should never be allowed to obscure the great body of work that passed through this chamber while she was at the helm of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

It was my good fortune to be sent to that committee by Senator Roblin 10 years ago. I very quickly was seized with the thought that no just God would saddle one committee with hoards of immigrants, droves of juvenile delinquents and assorted constitutional crises at precisely the same moment in a country's history. Judge Nathan Nurgitz and our colleague Senator Beaudoin will understand what I mean. She was, as we are all aware, equal to those challenges. The preeminence of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee owes much to her stewardship. I am one of her fans and I will remain so as she takes up her next career.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, it is often said on the occasion of a senator's retirement from this chamber that he or she was an "adornment" to the place. Joan Neiman has been something more than an adornment in the Senate. She has been an active, working, inspirational force in this chamber and she will be very badly missed.

Senator Neiman has made an enormous contribution to Canada through her activities in the Senate. Her work has given the lie to those mindless critics out there who say that senators simply sit around and collect their per diems and other indemnifications for serving in this place. She has been active and dedicated. She has made friends in all parts of the country. In my own area of British Columbia, Joan Neiman is respected and well known. The quality of her work is recognized.

Honourable senators, as I have stated on such occasions before, I wish we had the position of senator emeritus so that individuals such as Senator Neiman could continue to contribute despite this ridiculous formal departure date at age 75.

On behalf of the people of my province, I wish her well, and every happiness in the future. Joan, please keep in touch with the Senate.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, in listening to the well-deserved tributes being paid to Senator Neiman this morning, my thoughts go back to another former colleague whose name was mentioned a few moments ago by Senator Doyle, namely, former Senator Nathan Nurgitz.

During much of the time that the Conservative government was in office, Senator Nurgitz, as the senior Conservative on the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, and Senator Neiman, as its chair, enjoyed an excellent working relationship to which I can personally testify. Divided as they were by party loyalties, they were nevertheless united as one in their devotion to the law and in their concern that legal principles and the best legal and constitutional traditions be upheld in all our legislation.

During most of that time, the Conservative government was in a minority position in this chamber and in its committees. I do want, however, to record the fact that while Senator Neiman always did defend, as the Leader of the Government has said, the values and the traditions of the Liberal Party, her approach as chairman of that standing committee throughout was, without exception, thoroughly professional and eminently fair.

I want, therefore, in presuming to speak for former Senator Nurgitz, as I think I can, to express his appreciation and to add my own and that of the former government, even at this late stage, to my honourable friend for her excellent contribution to the legislative process during those years.

In a personal way, I wish her continued good health and good fortune in her retirement from this place.

[Translation]

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I would also like to take this opportunity, as a parliamentarian, to extend my best wishes to Senator Neiman. I had the privilege of working with her on the Special Senate Committee on Euthanasia and Assisted Suicide, and I was impressed by the determination and zeal with which she approached these issues and led the committee's proceedings.

Whenever problems arose in committee, and they did, Senator Neiman always managed to keep calm, no matter how stressful the situation. I think one of her outstanding traits is her ability to relax in moments of stress and take the time to clarify both sides of the issue.

Our experience as members of the Special Senate Committee on Euthanasia and Assisted Suicide has been unforgettable, and I think most of the credit for this should go to Senator Neiman. She always stayed calm. Setting aside whatever had happened during the day, she would sit down with us and talk about our personal concerns and other matters. She was able to maintain a businesslike atmosphere and, despite the seriousness of the topic, to do so with the occasional burst of humour.

I agree it is too bad that a person with her intellect should have to leave us at this time of her life. As I happen to sit right behind the senator, I have daily witnessed her interest in parliamentary issues and the dedication with which she reads all the documents she receives. She never skips a line, and I have been watching the senator for all these months and years.

I hope that if circumstances permit, she will feel free to share her opinions with us, even if she must leave us today.

[English]

• (1100)

Senator Neiman, you must go, however you will remain in our hearts.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I want to associate myself with all of the comments made about Senator Neiman's career over the last 23 years here in the Senate. Whatever has been said has been well said but, perhaps, understated, even in regard to the contribution that she has made to this chamber. This is why I want to associate myself with all those kind words.

Perhaps on a somewhat more personal basis I may be permitted to say that both Senator Murray and I owe her even more than he indicated. I have had the good fortune of having Senator Neiman sit behind me, both on this side of the house and on the other side of the house when we were in opposition. There were some days during Question Period when Senator Murray, who was then Leader of the Government, was particularly annoying, should I say, or something to that effect. Senator Neiman agreed a long while ago, mostly while we were on the other side of the house, that she would be my guardian, and cool me down when we had those Question Periods to which I just referred. I think you should know, Joan, that both Senator Murray and I are grateful for your contribution in this respect.

We will miss you for the reasons that have already been adequately described. I join with all of those who wish you well in whatever you intend to do with what I am sure will be many more productive years. We hope you will be involved in interesting matters, and that you will also remember that there comes a time when you should rest a little bit from all of your hard work and take advantage of a very well-deserved, quieter time, if I may call it that.

[Translation]

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, let us not forget that Senator Neiman has never denied anyone in this house her friendship, a friendship that is very much appreciated. When people ask what the Senate is and why should we have a Senate, all we have to do is describe the senator, and the answer is obvious. People are convinced and they love you.

Hon. Rose-Marie Losier-Cool: Honourable senators, as the most junior senator appointed to this house, I also wish to take this opportunity to pay tribute to Senator Neiman.

At my first committee meetings, I was struck by the integrity and intellect of Senator Neiman and especially by her desire to share a friendship. Now, I should like to wish her a happy retirement.

I was flattered when someone in this house told me that we shared a physical likeness. After the words of praise I heard today, I am doubly flattered. Senator Neiman, I hope that some day my contribution to this house will resemble yours.

[English]

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, because my leader and others dealt comprehensively with the life and times of Senator Joan Neiman, I wish to restrict my remarks to fond memories of over 35 years of friendship and working together, in politics and in the Senate.

Joan's involvement in community service led her into active politics. Her interest in the social policy of the Liberal Party, both provincially and federally, naturally culminated in her candidacy for election to the provincial legislature, and an important contribution to the effectiveness of the federal party.

She and her husband Clem have had a comprehensive partnership in marriage and in the raising of a wonderful family, in law as the law firm of Neiman and Bissett — which is Joan's maiden name — and in a deep commitment to community service, as well as in their pursuit of politics.

Through the sixties and seventies, a group of us worked to revitalize the Liberal Party in Toronto and Ontario. We were not always successful, but I doubt if anyone ever enjoyed politics more than we did.

In the Senate, Joan has been my mentor. Her great service as Chairman and Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has been noted and acknowledged by government, opposition and independent senators throughout the years. I learned a great deal by just trying to follow in her footsteps. Her most recent, massive effort as Chairman of the Special Senate Committee on Euthanasia and Assisted Suicide put the icing on the cake of her years of conscientious, intelligent and compassionate service in this chamber.

Senator Neiman's departure will be a sad loss, not only — and particularly — for the government side of this chamber, but for the chamber as a whole. May I add my own good wishes and those of my wife, Marg, to Joan and Clem and their family. To Joan, I wish good health and many years of life in which to enjoy a well-deserved retirement.

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Senator Neiman, I wish the very best for you. Everything has been mentioned except for one thing.

I have known you as a result of our association in the Inter-Parliamentary Union, which we have served for so many years. You were chairperson of the Human Rights Commission for many years. Your work all over the world on these issues may not have been known in Canada, or even in the Senate, however just last weekend a female parliamentarian from Geneva, who was aware that you had chaired the Special Senate Committee on Euthanasia and Assisted Suicide, kindly asked me to send her 10 copies of your report. This illustrates that your work is known not only in the Senate and across Canada, but also within certain international institutions. You are well remembered there. You will be well remembered by me. I wish you good luck.

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, Senator Joan Neiman seems so young, so vibrant, so energetic, so intellectually engaged, that I was surprised today to find that her retirement was quickly approaching. I just simply cannot believe it.

I have had the privilege of sitting with Senator Neiman on a number of committees and in caucuses. At all times, Joan's was a voice of moderation, a voice of reason, a voice of great tactical skill, a voice of intelligence and, above all, she was always courteous, even to those with whom I know she violently disagreed, including me.

Having said that, honourable senators, Joan is no angel. My roots in the Liberal Party go back to the early sixties when Joan and her husband Clem were considerable and aggressive political forces. While we shared many views about the Liberal Party and the importance of it, on many occasions we found ourselves on different sides and supporting different personalities. However, throughout that whole period, our personal relationship was good and sound, and always pleasant.

The Neimans were — and are — considerable political activists, deeply committed to the public affairs of Canada at each level of political activity. Theirs is one of those great stories which, as alluded to by Senator Stanbury, is rarely told about the political life of our country and the life of our party.

Joan goes on to a well-deserved retirement, but I do not think it will be a rest. I think it will be the start of yet another, equally new, exciting and energetic career. I want to thank both Senator Neiman and her husband, Clem, for the pleasure of their company.

Hon. Wilbert J. Keon: Honourable senators, I also should like to take this opportunity to wish Senator Neiman well. I had the privilege of spending more time with her over the past year than I would have liked. However, I was truly impressed with her tremendous legal knowledge, her tremendous experience, her tremendous dedication, her tremendous flexibility in bending to other people's strong convictions which were in contradiction with her own, and her ability to listen to witnesses with an objective mind, consequently championing a report which I have had the privilege of presenting in the medical community.

As I mentioned in my previous brief remarks, I had the privilege of presenting the contents of this report across the country in a telemedicine conference to medical schools as well as to many of our health care institutions. All comments I received about the report were very complimentary. I have received several letters requesting copies of it.

We had some very difficult times in the committee trying to keep our scribes on course, and trying to get a working consensus in order to come out with a reasonable result. The success of that report is Senator Neiman's success. It was her ability to hold things together as a chairperson that made it all work.

Senator Neiman, I, too, wish you very well. It was a great pleasure and honour to work with you on this committee. I hope you have a wonderful retirement, and I hope to see more of you.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I did not realize what a great seatmate I had until today. I took Senator Neiman for granted until now, and now I hate to see this great and dynamic person leave. Everything we heard about her today is true. Senators do not lie.

Joan, I will miss you. You have been a great companion, although we did not always agree.

With regard to the report of the committee on euthanasia, which she chaired so well, I was prepared to give her a hard time about it because I thought she would recommend that we start killing people, which I was dead against.

As Senator Prud'homme said, Senator Neiman was the chairman of the Human Rights Committee of the parliaments of the world. She has often raised the issue of the imprisonment of parliamentarians around the world. She fought to have them released. She worked at that for many years and did an excellent job of it.

In light of her work in that area, I told her that if she wanted to recommend that we start killing people, I would give her a hard time. Thank God that my doctor friend, Senator Keon, after working so hard to save lives, would not recommend that we start to kill people. I wish to congratulate Senator Neiman for her hard work on that committee.

More important than all of that are the times we had together in the parliamentary dining room. We generally dined there at the same time and had some very dynamic discussions at the round table. We did not always agree. Joan's view was often different from my own, and she has a good legal mind with which to argue her position. However, I am quite sure that I influenced some of her actions in the committee, and may have influenced her to bend somewhat, as Senator Keon has said that she did.

I will miss you, Joan. I hope that my next seatmate will be as young and as beautiful as you, and as easy to get along with. We will all miss you. May you have a very happy retirement.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I thank you for all the lovely bouquets. I will press them in my memory book and trot them out for my children to read every Mother's Day.

George Burns said that you can tell that a man is getting old when he bends down to lace his shoes and wonders what else he can do while he is down there. I gave up high button shoes a long time ago, so this date is coming as a bit of a shock to me, I must say.

When I think back over the years that I have been here, I realize how much this chamber has changed. Senator Olson and I were talking yesterday about how different the chamber is, and how differently we conduct our business today.

When I arrived here, I was perhaps only the seventh or eighth woman senator to have been appointed. This room seemed to be filled with white-haired people, overwhelmingly male. They were courtly; many of them were portly; a number of them were very good speakers, in fact orators.

They were so kind to me as a new member. They taught me. Senator Choquette, who sat in front of me, prided himself on his command of the English language. He used to listen to me very carefully, and correct me if I was not using proper grammar at any time. He would then give me a little lecture about how we really should not read our speeches. Unfortunately, that is still a bad habit of mine.

Mr. Fortier, a wonderful man, was the Clerk of the Senate at that time. He not only knew his rules, he knew parliamentary history. He loved to chat about what had gone on here. He reminded me so much of Senator Forsey who came along a little later. Senator Forsey became my great friend and mentor. From time to time, we did get into some rebellious actions. He stimulated exciting thought and controversy in this chamber. It was a pleasure to have served here with Senator Forsey.

When I was first appointed to this place, our committee meetings were run somewhat differently. As Senator Olson said, in those days we took a rather cavalier attitude to legislation, with a bill sometimes being dealt with in one day. Obviously, there was not as much controversy then as there is today. The opposition at that time was very small; and only a few committees had any permanent staff.

My committee beginnings were on the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs and on the Special Senate Committee on Science and Technology with Senator Lamontagne as the chairman. It was an eye-opening experience because my training and interests had been in the humanities field. It was a wonderful experience to be on that committee with Senator Lamontagne and to realize, in the end, what a special study in this Senate could accomplish. That study certainly changed, immeasurably, the national and government institutions, and indeed the progress of science in Canada.

To be a member of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee under Senator Goldenberg was a wonderful learning experience for me. I thoroughly enjoyed being a member of that committee all the years I was here.

Honourable senators, as parliamentarians, we have many opportunities in the Senate to accomplish things outside the legislative field. I decided early on that I would confine myself to one parliamentary committee, and that was the Inter-parliamentary Union. That involvement provided me the opportunity to learn about and understand people around the world. I was especially fortunate to become active in the human rights field.

One of my greatest feelings of accomplishment stems from my travels to Malaysia and Indonesia as a representative of the Human Rights Committee. Two of us went there to persuade the heads of those countries to release political prisoners, one of whom had been in prison for over 20 years. It was a delicate and difficult mission. It gave me a great deal of satisfaction when all those people were released over the next couple of months.

Honourable senators, it is progress on difficult issues such as that that I believe the Senate can accomplish. Senators have tremendous opportunities to realize significant goals, not only as part of their parliamentary functions, but also outside their duties in parliament for the good of Canadians and the peoples of the world.

Of course, there are frustrations. I have been frustrated more than once in my time here. I can recall within six weeks of being here that I mentioned to Senator Connolly that I thought I would make a speech one day on the reform of the Senate. He said to me, "Now, Joan, just sit back for a little while and listen to what is going on and you will begin to understand that this business is a little more complicated and harder to untangle than you think it is right now." That was good advice. We are still struggling with that issue.

Honourable senators, I hope there will be changes. I always hoped that I would be here when there were some significant changes made, not only to the Senate, but to the parliamentary system. I hope this government will find the will to go ahead with some of them.

Honourable senators, I am happy that my career in the Senate did end with the report of the Special Senate Committee on Euthanasia and Assisted Suicide being adopted. It was a marvellous experience to work with the people I served with and to hear what I did. I am most grateful to the members of that committee for their outstanding effort, because it took all of us, in a truly concerted effort, to produce the kind of report we finally hammered out.

Honourable senators, one mission remains unaccomplished. It relates to a request by my husband from whom I received 23 roses the other day in commemoration of my years here. Each one of the 1,000 trips he made to drive me to the airport was stressful because I could never organize myself in time to leave for the airport. I always promised I would be organized and ready the next time, but I was never able to do it. We covered the 20 miles with my husband muttering to himself, "You know I have a heart condition. You know this stress might cause an ulcer. You promised me last time we would not do this," but it happened on every occasion, right up to the very last trip.

The roses and the memories mean a lot to me. I regret, for his sake, that I did not manage this one last undertaking he requested of me. He wanted me to introduce a motion in the Senate to study ways of loosening the ties with the monarchy. He said it would be a great contribution to initiate that debate in the Senate. However, I kept putting it off. I promised that if we managed to complete our committee report in good time, I would see what I could do about it. Honourable senators, I can just imagine the controversy that subject-matter would have caused. Perhaps it is just as well that I am leaving when I am.

Honourable senators, I do not want to leave without thanking all the members of the Senate, the table officers, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, and all the staff. Every employee here whom I have had anything to do with has been kind and courteous all these years. It has been a pleasure to be here and work with you all, every one of you. I thank you again.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

THE SENATE

TRIBUTES TO PAGES AND TO STAFF

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would like to take a moment to thank the four pages who have served in the Senate with such dedication over the last two years and who are now leaving us to pursue their various educational and professional interests.

Carol Taylor is moving to Montreal to teach music and will be publishing an autobiography sometime in the fall. Catherine Berger will pursue her fourth year at Ottawa University to obtain a specialization in mathematics and computers. Natalie Slawinski intends to continue her studies at Carleton in political science and history. Yannick Hébert pursues his studies in the summer at Ottawa University to complete a Bachelor of Commerce with specialization in accounting, and he has been hired by a private Ottawa firm to start work in September.

No one, honourable senators, ever expressed the love of Parliament more beautifully than Sir Wilfrid Laurier when he said:

This cathedral is made of marble, oak and granite....It is the image of the nation I would like to see Canada become. I want the marble to remain marble, the granite to remain granite and the oak to remain oak.

I believe that Laurier meant that Parliament symbolized our unity and diversity, and I hope Carol, Catherine, Natalie and Yannick will always remember this place in that way. I hope further that you will remember that, no matter what road you seek in life, you will always be, in your own special way, the marble, and the granite and the oak from which the Canada of the future will be shaped.

I hope you have learned something of value in this place. We are all grateful for your many kindnesses and your unflinching courtesy. You have served this chamber in the best tradition of the hundreds of pages who preceded you, those who remain, and surely those who will follow for many years into the future. Congratulations, good luck, and God bless you all.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Graham: As we approach the summer break, may I also express our gratitude to each and every member of the Senate staff, both in the chamber and outside, for their outstanding work and continuing dedication to this place.

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, on behalf of colleagues on this side of the chamber, we join with the words of the Deputy Leader of the Government in expressing our gratitude to this group of pages who are leaving us and to all those who support the work of this chamber in various capacities as we enter the summer period.

We express a special vote of thanks to Carol Taylor, Catherine Berger, Natalie Slawinski, and Yannick Hébert, the pages who are leaving us at this time.

Honourable senators, the competition that is conducted by the Senate when seeking pages across Canada is a highly competitive program. In many ways, I think it is true to say that we get the cream of the crop. I hope the pages who are selected to come and serve in this chamber will share their experiences with many others through the various careers that they will pursue in a symbolic and a real way, for it is but a small number who get to serve here out of the many who seek to serve.

In closing, I say to Carol Taylor, who will be pursuing a career in music, that, while everything she heard in this chamber may not have sounded like music, she take guidance from the great patron of music, Saint Cecilia, rather than from what she may have heard in this chamber.

I say to Catherine Berger, who I understand is going on to specialize in mathematics, Senator Hébert and I, who try to keep numbers straight, might have to appeal to her mathematical skills, and we wish her well in that field.

Natalie Slawinsky is carrying on in the field of political science and history, and I am sure that we will hear from her in a variety of capacities. The political experience gained here might be of help to her.

Finally, to Yannick Hébert, who is completing his Bachelor of Commerce degree with a specialization in accounting, I trust that the work of the chamber and the work he may have seen flowing from the National Finance Committee will be of some profit to him in his career.

On behalf of the members of the opposition, we wish God speed to those pages.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FIREARMS BILL

PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. Leonard J. Gustafson: Honourable senators, I have a petition to Parliament assembled on Bill C-68, the Firearms Act.

We, the undersigned citizens of Canada, wish to protest the following provisions in Bill C-68:

1. The universal registration of long guns.
2. The requirement of a Firearms Possession Certificate to replace the Firearms Acquisition Certificate.
3. Registration and controls on the purchase of ammunition.
4. Provisions that will ban the purchase and use of .25 and .32 caliber handguns and handguns with a barrel length of less than 4.14 inches.
5. Regulation by Order in Council.

Therefore your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to refrain from passing Bill C-68 as it presently stands with the above-mentioned provisions.

QUESTION PERIOD

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have several delayed answers. I have a response to a question raised in the Senate on May 3, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Pierre Claude Nolin, regarding discussions with provinces on Manpower training; a response to a question raised in the Senate on May 23, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Forrestall, regarding the Federal-Provincial Strategic Highway Improvement Program; another response to a question raised in the Senate on May 24, 1994, by the Honourable Senator Forrestall regarding the Federal-Provincial Strategic Highway Improvement Program; and a response to a question raised by the Honourable Gerald J. Comeau on May 24, 1995, regarding the Federal-Provincial Strategic Highway Improvement Program.

I also have a response to a question raised in the Senate on May 25, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Comeau, regarding the Federal-Provincial Strategic Highway Improvement Program. I have a response to a question raised in the Senate on May 25, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Forrestall, regarding the Federal-Provincial Strategic Highway Improvement Program. I have a response to a question raised in the Senate on May 25, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Lowell Murray, regarding the Federal-Provincial Strategic Highway Improvement Program; a response to a question raised in the Senate on June 5, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Di Nino regarding the protest over granting a visa to a Taiwanese official; and a response to questions raised in the Senate on April 5, 1995, and June 6, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Lowell Murray regarding remarks by Senator Stollery on Mexico.

I also have a response to a question raised in the Senate on June 6, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Forrestall, regarding the Federal-Provincial Strategic Highway Improvement Program. I have a response to a question raised in the Senate on June 14, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Andreychuk, regarding the commitment of France to continuing nuclear testing. I have a response to a question raised in the Senate on June 20, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Ottenheimer, regarding the United Nations, and possible changes to the application of the veto; a response to a question raised in the Senate on June 22, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Spivak, regarding the Royal Winnipeg Ballet and loss of student grants due to budget cuts; a response to a question raised in the Senate on June 27, 1995, by the Honourable Senator St. Germain, regarding job creation.

HUMAN RESOURCES

DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES ON MANPOWER TRAINING— GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Pierre Claude Nolin on May 3, 1995)

An offer was made in June 1994 to all provinces, including Quebec, to give them much more responsibility and flexibility for federal labour market programs.

Under this agreement, provinces would be able to plan an extensive array of federal labour market programs such as institutional training, workplace training and job creation. In Quebec, last year, the amount allocated to these programs by the federal government was valued at about 60 per cent ($180M) of the federal labour market program budget.

Provinces would manage purchase of institutional training on behalf of unemployed Canadians. The proposed agreement would give that important responsibility to the provinces. This offer would also make possible provincial planning and implementation of "single windows" where people could go and have access to all provincial and federal labour market programs and services.

This would not only be a major improvement in the delivery of services; it would also reduce any overlap and duplication that may currently exist.

Finally, the offer would give provinces responsibility for the management of other programs that are very important for Quebecers such as Co-operative Education and the Canada Employment Centres for Students.

Unlike some of her counterparts in other provinces, such as in Saskatchewan, Quebec's Minister for Employment and Training has chosen to reject this latest federal offer.

The federal government, however, will continue to cooperate fruitfully with Quebec and other provinces in a number of areas such as strategic initiatives. This will continue in the context of the new programming.

The federal government is committed to making real progress with provinces in the area of labour market programming.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL STRATEGIC HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM—CANADA-NOVA SCOTIA AGREEMENT— DIVERSION OF FUNDS TO CAPE BRETON PROJECT— GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. J. Michael Forrestall on May 23, 1995)

There have been tolls on the Trans-Canada Highway in the past. The Canso Causeway, which links the Trans-Canada Highway on the mainland with the Trans-Canada Highway on Cape Breton Island, was once a toll facility. Additionally, while not as part of the Trans-Canada Highway system, other provinces presently operate toll highways and have done so in the past. British Columbia presently has a toll highway; Quebec, in the past, had several toll highways; and Ontario is presently constructing a toll highway in Toronto.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL STRATEGIC HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM—DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN MINISTERS ON DIVERSION OF FUNDS FROM NOVA SCOTIA HIGHWAY PROJECT— REQUEST FOR PARTICULARS

(Response to question raised by Hon. J. Michael Forrestall on May 24, 1995)

I will have the Strategic Highway Improvement Program Agreement, as well as other documentation that is available, tabled.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL STRATEGIC HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM—INTRODUCTION OF TOLL BOOTHS ON TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

(Response to a question raised by Hon. Gerald J. Comeau on May 24, 1995)

No. The Canso Causeway in Cape Breton is part of the Trans-Canada Highway and it had tolls on it from when it opened on May 21, 1955, until they were removed on December 13, 1991.

Yes, there is nothing in the Trans-Canada Highway Act or in the associated agreements that prohibits tolls.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL STRATEGIC HIGHWAY
IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM—NOVA SCOTIA—DIVERSION OF FUNDS FROM DESIGNATED PROJECT—KNOWLEDGE OF TRANSACTION BY PRIME MINISTER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Gerald J. Comeau on May 25, 1995)

The process established over many years, since at least the early seventies, and exercised many times with each province with which the federal government has highway agreements is that, at the request of a province, changes are accommodated within existing funding limits of highway agreements. These agreements are made between the respective Ministers of Transport.

IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM—NOVA SCOTIA—DIVERSION OF FUNDS FROM DESIGNATED PROJECT—ALTERNATE METHODS OF FUNDING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

May 25, 1995)*

In the preamble to the question posed by Senator Forrestall, a reference is made to an earlier oral response by the Leader of the Government in the Senate which recognized that remarks had been made about "other significant national highways." The preamble further referred to "significant Canadian highways, possibly even connectors to the Trans-Canada highways."

There are currently tolls being charged on that portion of the National Highway System known as the Coquehalla Highway, at 12 tollbooths located approximately one third of the way between Merrit and Hope, B.C.. Tolls also are collected by three bridge authorities which have been established under provincial statutes to operate bridges which connect parts of the National Highway System: these tolls are collected on two bridges in the Halifax/Dartmouth area, namely the A. Murray MacKay Bridge and the Angus L. Macdonald Bridge, linking Halifax/Dartmouth to Highway 101 to Yarmouth and Highway 102 to Truro, as well as on the Saint John Harbour Bridge in New Brunswick which links Highway 7 (Saint John to Fredericton) and Highway 1 (Sussex to St. Stephen.)

There are currently no tolls on any highway designated as a "Trans-Canada Highway." Tolls were charged between 1955 and 1991 on that portion of the Trans-Canada Highway known as the Canso Causeway in Nova Scotia. The toll booth was located on the mainland entrance to the Causeway and was collected as vehicles passed from the mainland to Cape Breton.

IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM—NOVA SCOTIA—DIVERSION OF FUNDS
TO PROJECTS NOT COVERED BY AGREEMENTS—
GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Lowell Murray on May 25, 1995)

Yes, a province is free to divert monies from such an agreement to other highway projects not covered in the agreement with the agreement of the federal Minister of Transport. The province decides which, where, when, and how highway projects are to be funded and how the amount of money agreed to with the federal government is to be apportioned amongst projects while recognizing that the funds from a particular agreement, or part thereof, may represent only a portion of the funds needed to complete said portion, part, or piece of a project.

CANADA-CHINA RELATIONS

PROTEST OVER GRANTING OF VISA TO TAIWANESE OFFICIAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

June 5, 1995)*

The Taiwanese Vice-Premier, Hsu Li-teh, came to Canada to receive an honorary degree on June 1, 1995. The Government of China filed a formal diplomatic protest over this visit which stated that the decision to grant the visa to a Taiwan official violates the principles underlying Canada-China bilateral relations.

Canada made clear that this visit in no way signifies a shift in Canada's "One-China Policy." Canada pointed out that the visit resulted from a private invitation from the University of Victoria to Mr. Hsu to receive an honorary degree. In addition, the degree was conferred on Mr. Hsu in his capacity as Chairman of the Council of Economic Development and Planning of Taiwan and not as Vice-Premier.

Mr. Hsu's visit to Canada was entirely private and limited to a short period of time — four days. Mr. Hsu had no official meetings and did not make any public appearances other than the convocation at the University of Victoria. Thus, this private visit does not in any way constitute a shift in Canada's "One-China Policy."

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

REMARKS OF SENATOR STOLLERY ON MEXICO—POSSIBILITY OF CANADA'S WITHDRAWAL FROM NAFTA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to questions raised by Hon. Lowell Murray on April 5, 1995 and June 6, 1995)

In response to the April 4th speech by Senator Peter Stollery concerning Mexico, the position of the government is that Mexico's current economic woes are in no way caused by the NAFTA, nor should they lead us to doubt the value of the Agreement. Quite the contrary: the NAFTA is clearly a major success and we intend to press ahead with its expansion, the next country to join being Chile.

In 1994 the Canadian economy expanded by 4.5%. The International Monetary Fund predicts that, in 1995, Canada will again lead economic growth among the G-7 countries. This growth is export led, and the NAFTA is playing a critical part in it.

The statistics are telling:

In 1994, the first year of NAFTA, Canada's merchandise exports to the USA increased by 23%, to Mexico by 27%.

In spite of the drastic devaluation of the peso, Canadian exports to Mexico in the first quarter of 1995 are keeping pace with our exports over the same period in 1994.

Trade in goods and services between the NAFTA partners now supports more than 1.5 million jobs in Canada and directly generates over 25% of our GDP.

In terms of exports relative to GDP, we now export more than Japan and Germany.

Mexico's entry into the NAFTA has allowed Canadian firms to expand sales in sectors that were previously highly restricted, such as autos, financial services, trucking, energy and fisheries. Our export mix has broadened dramatically and we expect recently-announced privatisation plans to create more opportunities for Canadian firms in telecommunications, ports, airports, power stations and petrochemicals.

The economic fundamentals of Mexico are sound. Analysts the world over believe that the recent crisis in Mexico was essentially one of confidence, and that full recovery is only a matter of time. When that recovery comes, NAFTA will allow Canadian exporters to reap the fullest possible benefits from it.

At the June 15-17 Halifax Summit, the Prime Minister and other G-7 leaders together publicly welcomed the positive economic turn of events in Mexico. The Prime Minister and the leaders of other G-7 countries and Russia also publicly stated their support for "Mexico's bold steps towards political reform and dialogue."

While the Mexican authorities did not make either an informal or a formal protest with the government regarding the April 4, 1995, speech by Senator Stollery, the Mexican Embassy did informally contact the government for a reaffirmation of its policy on Mexico which continues as described above.

TRANSPORT

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL STRATEGIC HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM—NOVA SCOTIA—FREEZING OF FUNDS TO AWAIT OUTCOME OF INQUIRY OF AUDITOR GENERAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. J. Michael Forrestall on June 6, 1995)

The Auditor General has indicated that, in the course of the review thus far, there is nothing to report. The Auditor General is carrying out his responsibilities and, if he finds anything to report, he will do so.

The Trans-Canada Highway is not a federal highway. Like other highways, it is under provincial jurisdiction. The Government of Canada respects provincial jurisdiction concerning highways and is responsive to provincial requests for amendments to federal/provincial highway agreements.

The two highway agreements dealing with federal/provincial funding for highway projects in Nova Scotia clearly contain clauses allowing for amendments to be made, as do agreements with all provinces.

There is no justification for directing any or all provinces to put their highway programs on hold, as virtually every province has been involved in amendments to its original highway agreements.

Decisions regarding tolls are, similarly, a matter of provincial jurisdiction on provincial highways. Tolls have existed previously on the Trans-Canada Highway in Nova Scotia, on a portion known as the Canso Causeway, from 1955 to 1991.

EXTERNAL RELATIONS

COMMITMENT OF FRANCE TO CONTINUING NUCLEAR TESTING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. A. Raynell Andreychuk on June 14, 1995)

Canada regrets the decision by France to resume nuclear testing.

Canada does, however, welcome President Chirac's commitment to a definitive end to French testing by May 1996, at the latest, and France's accession to the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty (CTBT) at that time "without reservations."

Canada hopes that this decision will not undermine the commitment of the other nuclear weapon states to maintaining their announced moratorium on nuclear testing and that the negotiations toward a CTBT will continue to move forward vigorously.

Canada was pleased to join the other seven participants in the Halifax Summit in supporting the Chairman's Statement:

"We are encouraged by the growing international recognition of the need to complete without delay universal, comprehensive and verifiable treaties to ban nuclear weapons tests and to cut off the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices."

This decision by France demonstrates the urgent requirement for an early conclusion to the CTBT negotiations.

UNITED NATIONS

POSSIBLE CHANGES TO APPLICATION OF VETO— GOVERNMENT POLICY

(Response to question raised by Hon. Gerald R. Ottenheimer on June 20, 1995)

The independent working group on the future of the United Nations, established by UN Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali in 1993, published its report June 19. The Canadian government has just received the report and will be studying it closely.

Canada strongly supports the need for careful reform of the UN as the global body charged with working for international peace and security, sustainable development, and human rights and the rule of law. The Minister of Foreign Affairs and the Prime Minister have both spoken in depth on reforming the United Nations in recent months.

The recent Halifax Summit devoted considerable attention to UN reform and put forward a number of concrete proposals which it is intended should be pursued over the coming months in the appropriate forums.

There are several high level groups already established in the UN itself; notably on reform of the security council, of UN finances, and of the system of assessment. Canada is a member of these bodies.

The question of the use of the veto is one of the most sensitive issues being considered by the high level working group in New York that is examining all aspects of security council reform. Canada welcomes the post-Cold War trend towards a diminished use of the veto by the permanent members of the security council. We very much hope that this trend will continue.

This latest report is timely, coming as it does in the fiftieth anniversary year of the United Nations. It is the government's intention to examine it closely and work with other countries to implement practicable and meaningful measures of reform. At the same time, it is important to recognize that over the years there has already been considerable reform of the UN and that this is a process which will have to continue. There will always be a need to update and reinvigorate an organization which is as important to the world as is the UN.

CANADA COUNCIL

ROYAL WINNIPEG BALLET—LOSS OF STUDENT GRANTS DUE TO BUDGET CUTS—POSSIBILITY OF ALTERNATE FUNDING— GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question by Hon. Mira Spivak on June 22, 1995)

This government recognizes the importance of ensuring the continuity of professional modern dance in Canadian society. For this reason, HRDC has established the Cultural Human Resources Council (CHRC) to develop industry-driven solutions to human resource development issues.

Discussions are currently underway on an Industrial Adjustment Agreement to clarify the roles of national training institutions and initiatives in the cultural sector and to identify sources of adequate funding. This process will be managed by the CHRC and participation will be solicited from the major national training institutions/initiatives in the cultural sector as well as from the Canada Council and the Department of Canadian Heritage.

HRDC will continue to work with its partners to explore possible funding sources for pre-professional training institutes such as the Royal Winnipeg Ballet.

HRDC is currently assisting the Royal Winnipeg Ballet through its Student Career Placement program. The Royal Winnipeg Ballet could also contact CHRC for information about the Training Initiatives Program administered by CHRC and the application process for nationally managed projects which are recommended by CHRC. This would also give the Ballet the opportunity to learn about, and become involved in, the work of CHRC towards a human resources development strategy for cultural workers.

While this government has long provided funding for post-secondary education to further the achievement of a wide range of national economic, social, and cultural objectives, it should be noted that post-secondary and academic education remains the jurisdiction of the provincial governments. However, HRDC will continue to work with the provinces and stakeholders to ensure that Canadians have access to a post-secondary education that will serve them well in the future.

NATIONAL FINANCE

JOB CREATION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

(Response to question raised by Hon. Gerry St. Germain on June 27, 1995)

The department of Human Resources Development Canada (HRDC) has several programs aimed at job creation. Section 25 — Job Creation of the Unemployment Insurance Program assists unemployed workers to get back into the workforce by maintaining and enhancing their skills while receiving UI benefits when other employment is not available. In 1994-95, approximately 26,000 jobs were created under Section 25 of the UI Program.

HRDC also offers the Self-Employment Assistance (SEA) component which helps unemployed people to start their own business by providing income and technical support through early stages of business creation. Since November 1993, SEA has helped more than 42,861 Canadians to start their own business.

Job Development provides training and/or work experience to participants by contributing to training related costs, wage subsidies, and other specified costs to employers who carry out projects. In 1994-95, approximately 10,250 jobs were created under the Job Development program.

Job Opportunities provides employers with a wage subsidy to hire selected clients. The objective of this component is to provide clients with job opportunities that will likely lead to long-term employment. In 1994-95, approximately 13,945 jobs were created under this program.

HRDC is now developing the Human Resources Investment Fund (HRIF). HRIF's objective is to help people find and keep jobs. Re-employment measures that work are at the forefront of HRIF strategies. These measures are not yet fully developed. However, based on preliminary discussions and consultations, it is expected that they will:

- develop the employability of individuals so they will be equipped to participate in the economy; and

- support small and medium business in creating jobs, by removing barriers and disincentives to work.

As set out in the red book, the commitment to youth is being met through several of HRDC's youth initiatives. Student Summer Job Action (SSJA), which will result in the creation of 44,500 summer jobs for students, is part of federal government's comprehensive action plan to assist youth. There has been a shift in funding from short term make-work programs to programs which focus on school to work transition with longer term benefits.

The Youth Internship Program (YIP) and Youth Service Canada (YSC) are long-term interventions that help to bridge the gap between school to work. Since 1994, under YIP, over 5,600 jobs have been created and, under YSC, over 1,850 jobs have been created.

The new Youth Entrepreneurship Program is designed to help young Canadians, under age 30, to become self-sufficient by starting their own businesses. Several pilot projects have been implemented with more to follow. The pilots are testing new approaches such as innovative ways of accessing credit, the establishment of workers' cooperatives and sector targeting. To date, Youth Entrepreneurship has created 541 jobs.

HRDC also offers the Strategic Initiatives Program. This program, through pilots which test new and alternative approaches in employment and training, learning, and income support services, tests ideas to help Canadians develop skills, get work, and participate more fully in society.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I apologize to the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate, but did he have an answer to a previous question of mine? I may have missed that.

Senator Graham: I do not believe I have an answer yet for Senator Corbin or for Senator Prud'homme. In the case of Senator Prud'homme, the answer to his question involves more than one department. Every effort is being made to obtain a timely response for my honourable friend. That goes for questions which may be outstanding for all honourable senators. If a response is not received before the house rises, then obviously, time is running out. The leader's office will provide the response to the honourable senator in question as soon as it becomes available, and it will be tabled properly as soon as we return.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

JOINT PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION TO BRAZIL

OFFICIAL VISIT—INQUIRY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. H.A. Olson rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, May 23, 1995:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the official visit to Brazil of the Joint Parliamentary Delegation of the Senate and the House of Commons from April 15 to 21, 1995.

He said: Honourable senators, it is not vital that I make these comments today, except that it appears today will be the last day that we will be here before the summer recess. Therefore, I should like to make a few comments on the inter-parliamentary group under your sponsorship and chairmanship, Your Honour, when we visited Brazil a few weeks ago.

I wish particularly to draw the attention of honourable senators to the very comprehensive report that has been filed in the Senate with respect to the trip we made to Brazil in response to an invitation extended by that country to the Senate and, more specifically, to His Honour. I will be brief about this matter, because that comprehensive report is available to honourable senators.

The interesting thing about this trip was that we were invited to Brazil to meet with a number of the parliamentarians and others involved in economic and political activity in Brazil, after they had been under a military dictatorship for four decades. In other words, for approximately 40 years they had not exercised those functions that take place in a democracy in terms of political structure or economic structure in that country.

My impression is that, for the short time that their government has been involved in trying to set up a democratic process, such as that enjoyed by some of the other countries in the world — and they mentioned Canada in particular, which was probably why we were invited — Brazil is doing very well. Their system is not perfect; no one ever gets that close to perfection, but they have been perfecting their system for slightly less than two years, and they are doing well. As Canadians, we should be prepared to help them, not only for their benefit but also for ours.

Prior to the country turning into a democracy — that is, when it was a military dictatorship — they did not buy anything. I cannot say that categorically, however, because they did not buy on the international market or trade with countries any more than they absolutely had to buy. For our benefit, I wish to tell you that, in the last year, we sold them $250-million worth of wheat and grain. That is especially important in the present international market. That is to our benefit, and certainly to theirs.

I want to close my comments by saying that we were taken on some extremely interesting trips into the centre of the Amazon jungle and into the rain forest. I was amazed at what we found there. For example, we were taken to a city of 1.5 million people in the rain forest. I had never realized that such a city existed in the middle of the Amazonian rain forest.

You will remember, Your Honour, that we were also taken to the opera house, which has existed longer than Canada has been a country. That building dates back to the last century. The Brazilians are very proud of it, and so they should be.

This was a particularly enlightening trip for me. There were many exciting and enjoyable things associated with the trip, however, it was extremely useful in cold-blooded economic terms as well. I am sure that our hosts were grateful that we made the trip there. They will be looking to Canada for help in becoming a member of some form of better trade arrangement, whether it is a free trade arrangement or just some better trading arrangement than they now enjoy.

Our Speaker can take a great deal of credit for leading several discussions with their politicians, their chambers of commerce and other economic bodies as they attempt to move from the form of government of the past 40 years to a new and successful process.

Your Honour, I wish to express my appreciation to you and to everyone else who was a part of that extremely successful trip.

On motion of Senator Berntson, for Senator MacDonald, debate adjourned.

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTER-PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

THIRTY-SIXTH ANNUAL MEETING HELD IN HUNTSVILLE, ONTARIO—INQUIRY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. H.A. Olson rose pursuant to notice of June 20, 1995:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Thirty-Sixth Annual Meeting of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, held in Huntsville, Ontario, from May 18 to 22, 1995.

He said: Honourable senators, this year's meeting of the Canada-U.S. Inter-Parliamentary Group, which met in Huntsville, Ontario, in May, was attended by an almost-brand-new group of members because of the Republicans' win in the American election. The Democrats were thrown out.

In the U.S. government, whenever one party gains control of either the Senate or of the House of Representatives, that party elects all the committee chairmen. It was extremely important that our group made the acquaintance of the Republicans who have taken on these tasks. No matter how long they hold those positions, we as parliamentarians in this inter-parliamentary group must get acquainted with them in order to help resolve problems such as trading disputes. This issue extends to other countries as well.

A comprehensive report has been filed with the Senate. I invite honourable senators to read it. The meeting worked out well. We actually completed the work of the committee on economic matters before the time set aside had expired. I cannot remember that happening at any other occasion. We have always run out of time before completing discussions on the economic irritants between Canada and the United States.

On the Saturday, we held a late-night meeting on problems relating to sugar. Those problems are not completely resolved, but I have no doubt that meeting will contribute to a better solution soon. There are arguments on both sides of the border about the damage being done to the sugar industry, and even greater economic damage will be done if a solution is not reached.

We discussed other issues such as fisheries, the steel industry and the ongoing irritants in the grain trade between Canada and the United States.

In conclusion, the meeting in Huntsville was very useful. We were already familiar somewhat with the leading Democrats and, as co-chairman of the Canada-U.S. section, along with MP Joe Comuzzi, it was easy for me to pick up the phone and exchange views and find solutions. I could give examples of some mutually satisfactory agreements which we have reached on some international irritants.

Senator Grafstein also participated in those meetings and made a useful contribution in becoming acquainted with members of the United States delegation. I am sure that in the future, we can look forward to further exchanges and mutually acceptable agreements.

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, Senator Olson was kind enough to mention my participation in the meeting in Huntsville. I would like to comment on one aspect not mentioned by Senator Olson.

I took a more active role in this project at the behest of Senator Olson. I found it both interesting and stimulating. I was amazed and remain so at the misconceptions that American legislators have about Canada and about our public policies. I know many Canadians have many misconceptions about the United States, but most members of this chamber have spent exhaustive time in the United States and have a good grasp of their public policies and processes and their private policies as well.

However, the reverse is not the case. Notwithstanding the fact that, as many of our prime ministers have said over the years, we have the longest undefended border, we share much in common and our trade flows are the greatest in the world.

I should like to bring this to the Senate's attention: In the time-frame of the public business which was done in Huntsville, time was afforded for some of us to spend some private time with our American colleagues. I invited a leading Republican from the House and a leading Republican from the Senate to come and spend several hours with me in Toronto. Neither had been to Toronto before. What they had heard about Toronto related to the Blue Jays. I thought this was a great opportunity to spend a few hours with them.

I began by taking them to lunch at the CN Tower, where they could get a good, physical view of the city. Then, in a car, I took them through the city for a couple of hours. I drove them through the specific areas of the city that were replete with social housing. I took them to the worst areas of the city where many of us would feel uncomfortable, in the sense that it is not up to the standard of public housing that we would prefer.

I kept saying, "We are now going through one of the worst areas of the city." They kept saying, "Is this the worst area of the city?" I would say, "Yes, it is." However, what they were seeing does not compare to the worst bombed-out zones in New York, Detroit, Houston, Los Angeles, Chicago or Miami — all of which I have driven through pretty quickly by car.

Then we talked about medicare. They told me how they had looked at the medicine care system in Canada and come to the conclusion that it was not appropriate for America because it did not work. It did not work because research was not good, service was not good and because the public were not attended to well enough — the whole catalogue of ills about our medicare system.

Guess what? After they had taken a look at the hospitals, how things were located and the efficiencies of some of the services, many of them came away saying, "I did not know that. That is amazing. I am sorry I did not understand that." One senator had taken a specific interest in medicare, and found that her particular views had been somewhat altered.

I tell this as a personal anecdote because, as Senator Olson has said, we in this chamber can do a great deal, particularly in institutions such as the Canada-U.S. committee, to remove the deep and horrific misconceptions that Americans have about our public policies. In that way, perhaps, we can also reduce the misconceptions that some ultra-extremists in this country have about our public policies as well.

On motion of Senator Berntson, debate adjourned.

CIVIL JUSTICE REVIEW

INQUIRY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Anne C. Cools rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, June 22, 1995:

That she will call the attention of the Senate to the first report entitled Civil Justice Review on the joint review of the civil justice system in Ontario by the Ontario Court of Justice and the Ministry of the Attorney General of Ontario, co-chaired by the Honourable Mr. Justice Robert Blair and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General, Ms. Sandra Land, and in particular, Chapter 16 of the report, entitled "Focus on Family Law"; and to some recent trends in the practice of civil litigation and family law, and some recent developments in matrimonial and custodial disputes; and to the use of malice, untruth, false statements under oath, and perjury, in judicial proceedings in the practice of family law.

She said: Honourable senators, today I intend to draw the attention of the Senate to certain practices and trends in the routine proceedings of the practice of family law in Ontario. These practices have seemingly found favour among many legal practitioners, and seem to be so prevalent in civil litigation and in judicial proceedings that there is a crisis in the civil justice system of Ontario.

The civil courts are constituted for the purpose of dispute resolution and dispute settlement, of adjudicating conflict and providing judgment based on principles of law, fairness and truth. The conflicts of matrimonial and child custody disputes are especially difficult. In these conflicts, the purely legal issues are accompanied by undischarged and negative human emotions such as vengeance, regret, anger, self-deception and wounded vanities.

Honourable senators, the former Attorney General of Ontario, the Honourable Marion Boyd, and the well-respected Chief Justice of Ontario, the Honourable Roy McMurtry, in cooperation with the bar of Ontario, resolved to examine the current state of civil justice in Ontario. A small task force, co-chaired by the Honourable Mr. Justice Robert Blair and Sandra Lang, Assistant Deputy Attorney General, conducted a broad review of the civil justice system in Ontario which included public hearings. Their first report, entitled "Civil Justice Review," was released March 7, 1995.

Mr. Justice Blair reports that:

Unacceptable delays and mounting costs, with their attendant implications for inaccessibility and mistrust of the system, have become endemic.

Further, Mr. Justice Blair states that the civil justice system is "in a crisis situation." He tells us that family law was the area of civil justice which dominated the task force's public consultation phase. Accordingly, it devotes an entire chapter, chapter 16, entitled "Focus on Family Law," to this concern.

The prime function of the courts is to make judgments. To do this, a judge makes a determination of the facts. Truth is critical to this process. Truth is so pivotal that, for centuries, the courts have employed the technique of swearing oaths in judicial proceedings. Courts have received evidence both in sworn written affidavits and in sworn oral testimony in open court. The making of statements under oath is the phenomenon of compelling truth by binding the conscience of the person sworn to tell the truth. The oath binds the conscience of the deponent by a solemn appeal to the deponent's deity or faith.

Honourable senators, I am loyal to those beliefs which insist on a solemn commitment to the act of swearing an oath, particularly in legal and judicial proceedings. I believe this loyalty is shared by most Canadians. The oath taken by witnesses in court reads:

I swear that the evidence to be given by me shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help me God.

The swearing of an oath is so reverent and so respectful of truth in judicial proceedings that the Parliament of Canada prescribes a criminal sanction against falsehood in sworn testimony. The Criminal Code of Canada, Part IV, determines that such malfeasance is an offence against justice. Part IV is entitled, "Offences against the administration of law and justice", and its Sections 131 to 139 speak to the issues of falsehood, untruth and prevarication under oath in judicial proceedings.

Section 131(1) states:

...every one commits perjury who, with intent to mislead, makes before a person who is authorized by law to permit it to be made before him a false statement under oath or solemn affirmation by affidavit, solemn declaration or deposition or orally, knowing that the statement is false.

The Criminal Code makes no exception for lawyers or anyone counselling perjury.

The report's "Focus on Family Law" chapter reveals much about the current state of the practice of family law in Ontario. Mr. Justice Blair Stated:

Lawyers were criticized for their drafting of lengthy, damaging, and sometimes unsupportable affidavit material.

The Review was told frequently about...the often poisonous nature of lengthy affidavit materials.

We were told...that perjury in these affidavits is rampant.

...it is clearly a perception...that such perjury goes unpunished.

He further stated:

Concern and frustration were expressed about the number of allegations made in affidavits that were not capable of being substantiated in any way.

Some contents of affidavits...were reported by members of the public to be damaging forever.

...lawyers...taking on family cases when they are not sufficiently experienced or qualified to do so.

Mr. Justice Blair's Review findings about family law practice are disturbing and troubling. They tell us, sometimes boldly and sometimes in understatement, that false statements under oath, perjury and malice are part of the routine proceedings of the practice of family law in the Province of Ontario. These findings tell us that the course of justice is being corrupted and perverted. These findings have been confirmed to me by several barristers in practice in Ontario who inform that false statements under oath in judicial proceedings are an "epidemic."

Honourable senators, the case of Reverend B. is an example of the use of falsehood in judicial proceedings in a child custody dispute. It is a traumatization of two little girls and a father who has suffered an enormous personal and financial cost. I should explain that I am using initials to protect the children who are still minors.

The case is as follows: Reverend B., an Anglican minister, and Mrs. B. were married for 10 years with two girls, aged two and four. Mrs. B. left her husband, Reverend B., taking the two children, all the household furniture, all their joint savings and departed with her lover, a convicted criminal. Separation and child custody proceedings followed. Months later, when it appeared that Reverend B. might be awarded custody of the children, Mrs. B., after taking legal advice, suddenly announced that Reverend B. had sexually abused the two girls. She swore several affidavits to this effect. The Children's Aid Society worker initiated child protection activities. This custody-cum-child-protection case was tried in 1987 in Family Court. Reverend B. won. In the trial judgment, Judge Dunn awarded custody of the girls to Reverend B.

Honourable senators, a tragic aspect of this case was the children's experience at the hands of the mother and her lover, a convicted child sex offender. The damage to these children is enormous. The destructive aspect of this case is the fabrication of this diabolical scheme by persons who seem to have legal knowledge, and the enlistment of the justice system to this end. I shall quote Judge P.W. Dunn's judgment in 1987 in this child dispute trial. About Mrs. B.'s testimony at the trial, he said that she —

...did not tell the facts in an objective manner to the professionals, she advocated, almost vigorously, her position that —

— and here they refer to Reverend B. —

— was a child molester. In November, 1985, —

— Mrs. B. told an individual — that she had witnesses who saw...

molesting and being brutal with the girls and with herself and that when the case would be finished —

— would be behind bars...

About this testimony, Judge Dunn continued:

I do not find that —

— Mrs. B.'s —

— testimony measured up adequately to my hallmarks of credibility.

Judge Dunn further added that:

Her recitations of the past history did not have the 'ring of truth'...

In the 1987 proceeding regarding costs, Judge Dunn spoke of the Children's Aid Society and the worker, saying:

In my opinion the society acted unfairly and indefensibly ...

He went on to say that Mrs. V, the Children's Aid worker, favoured Mrs. B. and her counsel.

Further, about the Children's Aid worker's sworn affidavit, he said:

If Mrs. V. had sought the ... information, ... she would ... not have had the basis to write as biased an affidavit as she did. The tenor of the affidavit ... was calculated to condition the reader and to lead him by choice of wording and structure to infer that — — was a mentally sick and violent man and was sexually abusing his daughters. Mrs. V.'s investigation, such as it was, fell below a fair standard. Unfortunately Mrs. V.'s findings set in stone the society's public position during the whole of this matter.

— he mentions Reverend B. —

Later, Rev B., on behalf of his daughters, sued the Children's Aid Society and the caseworker for damages. The issues in this lawsuit were: their bias in favour of Mrs. B. and her lawyers, the suffering and anguish caused to the children and to Reverend B., and the negligence and cruelty of the Children's Aid Society.

The trial judge, Mr. Justice J. Somers, in ruling for Reverend B. and against the Children's Aid Society, stated in his judgment in 1994:

... and indeed one can certainly understand the frustration the father must have felt in this case attempting to deal with allegations against him which were untrue and which he regarded as utterly repugnant, and with a bureaucracy that treated him with ill-concealed contempt. While as I have said I do believe that much of the damage sustained by the Plaintiff—

— who is Reverend B. —

— was as a result of the machinations of his former wife, I feel that the Defendants—

— the Children's Aid Society of Durham Region and the case worker—

— played a strong and at times heavy handed role in the matter.

Referring to the testimony of Barbara Chisholm, an experienced professional in the field of child abuse, Mr. Justice Somers said:

Ms Chisholm indicated that the experience has been for some time that sexual assault allegations made by a mother against a father in custody disputes are very prevalent nowadays and indeed have become what she called 'the weapon of choice'.

And further:

Such is the increasing frequency of such allegations that she described this tactic as 'the weapon of the times'.

Mr. Justice Somers, in speaking of the Children's Aid worker, said:

Ms V...in my view displays a mean spiritedness... In my view she demonstrated a contempt for the father which was apparent to him. This can be contrasted with her treatment of the mother...

Honourable senators, in Canada today every single family is touched by matrimonial and custody disputes. They affect the grandparents, aunts, uncles, the siblings, the children and the full range of familial and social relationships. The anguish and suffering from these disputes is unspeakable. The expense is enormous. Legal fees are extravagant. Reverend B., for example, spent $300,000. His sister and her husband mortgaged their home to finance his legal nightmare. This tale of human woe and misery lasted nine years, from 1985 to 1994, and the psychological wreckage is immeasurable.

Honourable senators, no Canadian who is traduced, who faces falsehood and malice, who believes his cause is just, can afford to turn to the courts for relief in a civil dispute without risking financial ruin. We must therefore conclude that justice is unattainable, both financially and procedurally, because of the systemic abuses and the excesses of lawyers. This is a terrible state of affairs.

Honourable senators, barristers take a solemn oath to maintain the basic principles of justice. The oath reads, in part:

You shall not pervert the law to favour or prejudice any one, but in all things shall conduct yourself truly and with integrity.

This oath represents the assertion that barristers, being at the same time officers of the court, are endowed with responsibilities and obligations to uphold truth. However, we were told that falsehood and prevarication in judicial proceedings is common.

Honourable senators, despite the mention of the excesses of lawyers, the Civil Justice Review report's recommendations are silent on remedies for correction in the legal profession. The report advances no recommendations that speak to this problem; a fundamental problem of professional morality. I eagerly anticipate the review's final report, and I am expectant of its recommendations and remedies. These recommendations should be directed at the profession at all levels, including the Law Society of Upper Canada and the bar association. I note that the newly-elected treasurer of the Law Society of Upper Canada, Susan Elliott, on June 23, 1995, stated her approach for, in her words, "dealing with the legal profession's numerous problems".

Honourable senators, the journey of these false sworn statements through the courts holds continuing interest. I am told that judges are intolerant of perjury in criminal justice proceedings, but not necessarily so in civil justice, particularly family law proceedings. Perjury occurs on the stand at trial, and also in the swearing of false affidavits. The Civil Justice Review report indicates that most family law proceedings never reach trial; never reach adjudication by a trial judge under Themis's sword. Since the deponents of false affidavits never take the stand, the ground for manipulation and civil molestation is fertile.

Honourable senators, legal practitioners rely on absolute judicial privilege to shield these affidavit materials. They are misguided and mistaken. Absolute judicial privilege does not shield against perjury and related offences as, similarly, absolute parliamentary privilege does not shield members of Parliament against perjury in parliamentary proceedings.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senator, I am sorry, however your time limit has been reached.

Senator Cools: I have only a few more pages, honourable senators. May I finish?

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed that the honourable senator be allowed to finish?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Cools: The singular statutory exception to all privilege is perjury. All privilege, including solicitor-client, is lost with perjury or counselling perjury. Her Majesty has spoken through the Criminal Code as to how her privileges are subject to truth. The Criminal Code of Canada ousts absolute privilege absolutely in the commission of perjury. From the highest to the lowest in the land, all are subject to the law. Privilege protects truth, and abhors perjury and lawlessness.

Honourable senators, the issue is truth. The issue is the obligation owed by barristers, as officers of the court, to truth and to justice itself. Certainly barristers know that perjury and prevarication are questions of crime. The Oxford dictionary defines truth as the:

Disposition to speak or act truly or without deceit; ...true statement or account; that which is in accordance with the fact...

Honourable senators, without truth the judicial process cannot function. The swearing of false statements, knowing them to be false with an intent to mislead justice, to obtain a result and advantage in a court judgment is a crime. The issue of crime is a federal matter and a matter for examination by this Parliament.

Our Constitution places Parliament as a controlling power over the courts of law. It invests Parliament with a guardianship of the bench, and the administration of justice. Our Constitution has conferred upon us the superintendence over the proceedings of the courts. Further, the Criminal Code of Canada, the Divorce Act and the Canada Evidence Act are statutes of this Parliament.

Honourable senators, the case of Reverend B. jolts every sensibility. It offends every principle. This case of countless dishonesties, perjury, disceptions, illegalities, legal irregularities, professional carelessness and bureaucratic negligence is a diabolical creation by a wife. The Children's Aid Society and its resources, using the Child Welfare Act, supported this wife in the pursuit of a father. It actively supported a mother who exposed her children to untold abuse and suffering.

Honourable senators, these facts are driven home by both judges. Both judgments inform us that the Children's Aid Society, having realized, in the society's words, that "they had backed the wrong horse," and having declared that these girls were not in need of protection, still persisted in their accusations and in litigation, for purposes unrelated to the protection of the best interests of the children, but related to their own institutional, corporate self-interests. Mr. Justice Somers described the Society's position in this regard as "utterly unconscionable."

The perceptiveness, mental prowess and integrity of these two judges, who finally provided some measure of justice for these two little girls and their father, was impressive. Honourable senators, there are some splendid judges in this country. This current situation is an enormous strain for them, as it is for the independence of judges and for the convention of the independence of the judiciary.

I urge that honourable senators examine this disorder, this malignancy, this pathology that has grown in our midst in the legal system. I urge honourable senators to look closely at the case of Reverend B., which is typical of many, Mr. Justice Blair's Review Report, family law proceedings, trends in family law, malice and perjury as delivered in the system, and the current crises in the civil justice system.

Thank you, honourable senators, for your attention and for your patience. I would just close by saying that the report to which I speak is obviously a report of enormous size and content. I urge honourable senators to examine it.

On motion of Senator Berntson, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before moving the adjournment motion, mindful that we will have Royal Assent shortly, I would like to express the hope that those committees which have legislation and important issues before them will sit when possible and appropriate during the summer break to hear the witnesses who have asked to be heard or whose testimony is necessary on concerns that have been raised by honourable senators, either in this chamber or in committees.

I am sure that honourable senators recognize that during any adjournment of the Senate, if the Speaker is satisfied, under rule 17(1), that the public interest requires that the Senate meet at an earlier time than that provided in the motion for such adjournment, the Speaker may call such a meeting.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 58(1)(h), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, September 26, 1995 at two o'clock in the afternoon.

[Senator Cools]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Peter deC. Cory, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Deputy Speaker, the Honourable the Speaker of the Senate said:

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under his Sign Manual and Signet constituting the Honourable Peter deC. Cory, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, his Deputy, to do in His Excellency's name all acts on his part necessary to be done during His Excellency's pleasure.

The Commission was read by a Clerk at the Table.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Criminal Code (sentencing) and other Acts in consequence thereof (Bill C-41, Chapter No. 22, 1995)

An Act to amend the Canadian Dairy Commission Act (Bill C-86, Chapter No. 23, 1995)

An Act to provide for the continuance of the Canadian National Railway Company under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares of the Company to the public (Bill C-89, Chapter No. 24, 1995)

An Act to implement the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on their Destruction (Bill C-87, Chapter No. 25, 1995)

An Act to amend the Royal Canadian Mint Act (Bill C-82, Chapter No. 26, 1995)

An Act to amend the Criminal Code and the Young Offenders Act (forensic DNA analysis) (Bill C-104, Chapter No. 27, 1994)

An Act to continue the Federal Business Development Bank under the name Business Development Bank of Canada (Bill C-91, Chapter No. 28, 1995)

An Act to reorganize and dissolve certain federal agencies (Bill C-65, Chapter No. 29, 1995)

An Act to amend the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act and to provide for the continuation of a certain provision (Bill C-85, Chapter No. 30, 1995)

An Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act (Bill C-92, Chapter No. 31, 1995)

An Act to amend the Criminal Code (self-induced intoxication) (Bill C-72, Chapter No. 32, 1995)

An Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Children's Special Allowances Act and the Unemployment Insurance Act (Bill C-54, Chapter No. 33, 1995)

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of his Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, September 26, 1995, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, October 3, 1995

The Senate met at 2:00 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NEW SENATORS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Clerk has received certificates from the Registrar General of Canada showing that the following persons, respectively, have been summoned to the Senate:

William H. Rompkey

Doris M. Anderson

Lorna Milne

Marie-P. Poulin

INTRODUCTION

The Hon. the Speaker having informed the Senate that there were senators without, waiting to be introduced:

The following honourable senators were introduced; presented Her Majesty's writ of summons; took the oath prescribed by law, which was administered by the Clerk; and were seated:

Hon. William H. Rompkey of Labrador, Newfoundland, introduced between Hon. Joyce Fairbairn, P.C., and Hon. B. Alasdair Graham.

Hon. Doris M. Anderson, of St. Peter's, Kings County, P.E.I., introduced between Hon. Joyce Fairbairn, P.C., and Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell.

Hon. Lorna Milne of Brampton, Ontario, introduced between Hon. Joyce Fairbairn, P.C., and Hon. Keith Davey.

Hon. Marie-P. Poulin of Sudbury, Ontario, introduced between Hon. Joyce Fairbairn, P.C., and Hon. Leo Kolber.

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the honourable senators named above had made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required by the Constitution Act, 1867, in the presence of the Clerk of the Senate, the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

• (1415)

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am proud today to introduce the four newest members of our chamber. It is with great pleasure that I welcome a familiar friend and much respected parliamentary veteran, Senator Bill Rompkey.

Colleagues may not know, but until his senatorial appointment, Bill Rompkey was the longest serving member of the House of Commons from Atlantic Canada. He has represented the people of Labrador since his first election there in 1972. Since that time, he has served as Minister of National Revenue, Minister of State for Small Business and Tourism, and as Minister of State for Mines. The interests of the constituents of his province have always been central to his political career. I know that he is particularly proud of his accomplishments in improving transportation facilities for the people of Labrador.

Recently, we recall his excellent work as the Chair of the House of Commons Standing Committee on National Defence and Veterans Affairs. Members of this house cooperated with him during the deliberations of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's Defence Policy, which he chaired.

Prior to Senator Rompkey's entrance into public life, he completed both Bachelor and Masters degrees in English, and post-graduate diplomas in education. He served as a school principal and the first Superintendent of Education in Labrador East.

I am particularly grateful, Senator Rompkey, for the support you have given to the issue of literacy in your province of Newfoundland. We have very high expectations of you, and this house has much to gain from your experience and your goodwill. We know that your devotion to the people of Labrador and Newfoundland will continue to be reflected in your new responsibilities.

From Prince Edward Island, we are joined by Senator Doris Anderson, a noted nutritionist who brings with her a lifetime contribution to education and mental health in her province. Senator Anderson graduated with a Bachelor of Science degree from Acadia University and a Master of Science degree from Cornell University. She has had an extensive career as a home economics professor at Prince of Wales College from 1948 to 1969, and at the University of Prince Edward Island from 1969 to 1980.

Widely published in the field of nutrition, Senator Anderson has trained generations of workers and teachers and, in particular, has focused on helping children with celiac disease. She was also appointed to the Order of Canada in 1982. Clearly, honourable senators, we can learn much from her experience. I know that she will represent her fellow islanders with great skill and pride, and with the compassion which has guided her throughout her career.

Senator Lorna Milne from Brampton, Ontario, has public service in her blood. Her father was Mayor of the great city of Toronto, Mayor Dennison, and her husband, Ross Milne, was a member of Parliament for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe from 1974 to 1979.

Senator Milne's background is rich with community involvement. She has served as a trustee and chair of the Peel County Board of Education, on the Senate of the University of Guelph, as Chairman of the Brampton and District Association for the Mentally Retarded and as a board member for Rapport House, a hostel for young people with drug addictions.

A graduate of the University of Guelph, Senator Milne received a Bachelor of Science in Agriculture. She was also a lecturer with the university's physics department.

Honourable senators, "volunteerism" has been central to Senator Milne's life. She brings with her an extraordinary vitality and commitment which will be of great benefit to the work of this Senate.

Senator Marie-Paule Poulin offers this institution a lifetime of experience in an area for which we are not always noted, namely, communications.

[Translation]

She is well known for her exceptional contribution to the arts and broadcasting in Canada, particularly for her contribution to the expansion of French-language radio and television to the entire country.

She has held a number of senior positions at CBC, among them founding director of French services for Northern Ontario, president and secretary-general of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and chairman of its board of directors.

[English]

Most recently, many of us have known her as the Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of the Canadian Artists and Producers Professional Relations Tribunal since 1993. Previously, she served as deputy secretary to the cabinet for communications and consultation, a position where she worked closely with the former Leader of the Government in the Senate, our friend, Senator Murray, who I know valued her advice highly.

Senator Poulin is a native of Sudbury and holds a Bachelor of Arts degree from Laurentian University and a Master of Social Sciences from the University of Montreal. She has a strong commitment to letter base in Northern Ontario and offers to the Senate not only important experience in a critical sector of our culture and economy but also boundless energy to contribute in new directions in the work of this institution.

These new colleagues, honourable senators, bring this house closely into balance — not quite, but close. We all know that the Senate is a place of vigorous debate, independent spirit and political enthusiasm. It is also a place for reflection, compassion and innovative initiatives. Over the years of its history, it has witnessed, on occasion, aggressive confrontations, but more often it functions on the basis of cooperation, courtesy and goodwill.

Each of the senators who join us today will make a strong and positive contribution to this place as it carries out its responsibility to the people in every part of this country of Canada. Again, we offer our congratulations to each of you and your families, and our good wishes on this very special day as you take your seats in this chamber.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it is with pleasure that I join with the Leader of the Government to welcome our new colleagues, each one of whom brings, as Senator Fairbairn has so well outlined, his or her own special talents and abilities, confirming again that the Senate of Canada has available to it a collection of experience and knowledge, which, I always like to maintain, is greater than that found in any elected body in Canada, whatever the level.

The four new senators emphasize again the value of an appointed body in even this most democratic of all countries.

[Translation]

My congratulations to our new colleagues and my best wishes for success as they assume their new duties. Putting our various political allegiances aside, we share the same goal: to contribute to ensuring that any legislation we are called upon to examine serves the public interest as far as possible, and not the interests of some special group.

[English]

I trust that the new senators will ignore the interpretations circulated in some quarters — and not all non-governmental at that — that their appointment is in part intended to give the government side enough votes to bring an end to the so-called "Tory-dominated Senate."

Some Hon. Senators: Shame, shame!

Senator Lynch-Staunton: They and the Senate are not deserving of such a narrow and partisan interpretation of the nature of their appointments.

May I remind honourable colleagues, and particularly our four new colleagues, that, during the Confederation debates in 1865, one speaker saw the Upper House as:

...a tribunal for purifying the legislation of the Commons, for weighing in the balance of experience the probable consequences of their legislation.

In the Speaker's chambers, where our new colleagues will be received later today, are a number of mural inscriptions, one of which is attributed to Cicero. Properly translated, it reads:

It is the duty of the nobles to oppose the fickleness of the multitudes.

Let me hasten to say that these are not my sentiments as such. The two quotations are given to emphasize that ours is a responsibility to improve and suggest improvements where found useful, not to obstruct endlessly, and certainly not to rubber-stamp slavishly.

[Translation]

No matter what, our new colleagues are assured of our support and cooperation as they carry out their new duties.

Hon. Marcel Prud'Homme: I understand from the press that there is a new majority taking shape in the Senate, as they say that there are now 51 Conservatives, 50 Liberals and three Independent Liberals. I would like to speak only for myself as a true Independent, however, leaving the others to say whatever they wish to say.

I would like to speak at length on the appointment of the four senators. I know that some people are very impatient because it is claimed that I speak too often and on just about every topic. I am delighted to hear Senator Gigantès applaud, for he has in the past taken considerable advantage of the same right I allow myself today. I take no offence, however, because we are friends.

I could speak at some length of a gentleman who sat with me in the House of Commons. I was there when he arrived, I left him behind, and now here he is again. You will have guessed that I am speaking of Senator Rompkey.

As for Senator Milne, I know her indirectly through her husband and colleague, Mr. Ross. I know that it is clear from the list of all of her accomplishments that this is a person who has made a contribution to Canadian life.

[English]

I wish to know more. I must admit that I know less than Senator Anderson. I want to ensure that my sentiments today are equal in welcoming her to our midst.

[Translation]

I have reserved my closing remarks for Senator Poulin, whom I know a bit better. I would like to state that I know far more good things about her than have been mentioned. I wish her a most cordial welcome.

To those among the Liberals who are listening, let me say this: This is a woman of highly independent spirit, a brilliant and intelligent person, like the others who have come with her. Knowing her better than the others here in the Senate do, with the exception of perhaps two or three honourable senators, I would not be surprised, however, if some day the independent spirit she has always shown in the past makes her aware that in the Senate there is truly a place for people of independent spirit. At any rate, I wish her the most cordial, the warmest, the friendliest of welcomes.

THE LATE HONOURABLE JEAN NOËL DESMARAIS

TRIBUTES

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): It was with great sadness that we heard in late July that our colleague the Honourable Jean Noël Desmarais had passed away. Although he was with us only two years, his contributions to the proceedings in this chamber were of the same high calibre as those he made throughout a life dedicated to his fellow citizens in Northern Ontario.

[Senator Lynch-Staunton]

[English]

Senator Desmarais made a lasting contribution to the improvement of health services in Northern Ontario. His efforts were an invaluable factor in the founding of Laurentian Hospital and the establishment of a regional cancer treatment centre in Sudbury. He was initially a member, then Chairman of the Board of Laurentian University, of which his father was a founder and first board chairman. He also served on many professional and government advisory committees. To all these activities, he gave his total devotion and the benefit of his experience and wisdom, while still finding time to pursue an active career as Chief of Radiology and Medical Director at both St. Joseph Hospital and Laurentian Hospital. Only failing eyesight forced him to retire, as he felt that he could no longer give to the field of radiology the excellence which he insisted it deserved and which he brought to it.

[Translation]

Dr. Desmarais brought this unique experience with him when he became a senator, which again confirms how fortunate the Upper House is to benefit from the extensive knowledge of its members. His speeches here in the Senate were not many in number — and sometimes very low-key — but they were always received with the kind of attention that reflected the immense respect he enjoyed among his colleagues here in the Senate, in committee or in caucus.

[English]

Senator Desmarais knew that his cancer was inoperable last April, ironically on his seventy-first birthday. Despite the shocking news, he carried on until his last breath with extraordinary courage, even good humour. Many honourable senators are familiar with the remarks he made to the Sudbury and District Unit of the Canadian Cancer Society on May 10. He said in part:

It helps me spiritually, as a Roman Catholic, to think that Jesus came into the world to save me. He is a very smart cookie and a very capable one, and I cannot believe that he would not succeed. Therefore, I accept and believe that I am leaving this world and entering the next in good shape and I thank God for all the good blessings that I have had.

Indeed, in life as in death, he was a good person.

[Translation]

To his wife, Colette, and to the entire family, I wish to offer my most sincere condolences and also my thanks for allowing us to have in our midst a great man whose memory will endure.

[English]

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we on this side wish to join with Senator Lynch-Staunton's remarks in honouring the memory of our colleague, Senator John Noël Desmarais of Sudbury, who passed away this summer, three months after being diagnosed with lung cancer.

He was appointed to this place in 1993 and known by all of us as a fine gentleman, hard-working in his community, well respected in his field of radiology medicine. Given his background, as Senator Lynch-Staunton has said, one cannot help but note with sadness the diagnosis of his illness and also its timing, on his seventy-first birthday this year.

At that time, Senator Desmarais had an X-ray which revealed inoperable cancer in his left lung. Only one month later, as Senator Lynch-Staunton said, he kept an engagement to speak to the Sudbury Cancer Society's fund-raising campaign in his capacity as the honorary chairman. This took place in Sudbury on Volunteer Recognition Awards Night. Senator Desmarais could easily have stayed away, but his own circumstances made him even more determined to set an example of strength and courage to others. He did so with a sense of deep humility and faith, and a touch of humour. I can only hope that the spirit to whom he referred as "a very smart cookie" is taking good care of him today.

Senator Desmarais contributed more than 40 years of service as a physician in Sudbury and in other smaller Northern Ontario communities where there were no other radiologists. He also served as Chief of Staff at Laurentian Hospital. He was Chairman of Laurentian University's Board of Governors and a member of the Ontario government committee that studied constitutional change in 1980-81.

Although he was with us in the Senate for only two years, he was committed to participating. He worked hard as a member on the committees on Internal Economy, Legal and Constitutional Affairs, and Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders. Because of his lifetime dedication to helping individuals through medicine, Senator Desmarais took a very keen interest in the study of the Special Senate Committee on Euthanasia and Assisted Suicide. Although he had not been assigned to that committee at the outset, he participated very actively in its hearings. Sadly, he was unable to see the committee's deliberations through to the end because of his own health. I know that the co-chair of that committee, former Senator Joan Neiman, who admired him tremendously, had hoped that he could have contributed his knowledge and sensitivity to the final report of that committee.

Honourable senators, this institution has been deprived of a fine mind, a good heart and a loyal friend. It is a loss that we share with his family and with his friends. I want to express my personal gratitude for the warmth, the courtesy and the friendliness which he showed to me as a colleague in this house.

To his wife, Colette, and his children Jocelyne, Michèle, Jean, Joanne, Guy, Suzanne and Marie, we express our deepest sympathy. We know that your personal memories and the public achievements of this sensitive and caring man will strengthen all of you through the rest of your lives.

Hon. David Tkachuk: Honourable senators, I used to call Senator Desmarais "doctor." He would say, "Why do you continue to do that?" I said, "Because you are older than me, sir." I could not call him by his first name.

I did not know him before he was appointed to the Senate, but we became acquaintances and then friends, because we came here at about the same time and it was all very new to us. We are both from a small city. He talked about Sudbury and I talked about Saskatoon; a Ukrainian and a Frenchman.

We talked about the things we would like to do in the short time that God gave us here; about what we would like to accomplish. We could have used him in the present debate on health care. I was lucky enough to talk to him privately, and discuss issues that concerned our country. We will miss his knowledge and we will miss his understanding.

Politics needs more men like Dr. Desmarais. He was kind; he was dignified; he was a civilized man. To his wife, Colette, and all his children, my deepest sympathy, for I, too, will miss him.

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Winston Churchill once said, "Courage is rightly esteemed the finest of human qualities because it is the quality which guarantees all others."

Courage is the engine of conviction. Courage is the engine of endurance. Courage is the stuff of life itself. Honour, nobility and compassion spring from courage. Very few of us have the capacity to capture its true essence. Senator Desmarais did, and we are fortunate enough to have his words as testimony to all the human qualities which courage guarantees.

It was mentioned earlier that, as chairman of the fundraising campaign for the Canadian Cancer Society in his beloved Sudbury, he addressed the Volunteer Recognition Awards Night just a few months before his death. Many honourable senators have been privileged to read that speech.

You will recall that he announced at that time that he had inoperable cancer. He did so quietly, with dignity and simplicity. "How you handle it makes all the difference," he said. He would do so with endurance and a remarkable, pragmatic sense of preparedness.

When he said that Jesus was a smart cookie, and that he felt good about joining him in the next world, I guess it touched all of us, because reference has been made already to that statement by Senator Lynch-Staunton and by Senator Fairbairn. Most importantly, however, he said it with conviction, he said it with faith, and perhaps most important of all, he said it with hope.

In conclusion, he thanked the volunteers for their dedicated efforts on behalf of all those suffering from cancer. The very selflessness of those words was a tribute to the physician who had so recently become a senator.

When I learned of his death, I thought, among other things, of the biblical Timothy's beautiful words. They are as follows:

I have fought the good fight,

I have finished my course,

I have kept the faith.

That, in different times, was the message Senator Desmarais brought to his friends and colleagues both here and in Sudbury.

Like some of you here today, I attended his funeral this past summer. I believe that those of us who had the privilege of being there saw everything as he would have wanted it to be. We saw incredible strength and a celebration of life. We saw a community saddened, but proud and united. We saw a family imbued with love. Most important, perhaps, we understood that Senator Desmarais was right when he said that Jesus was a "smart cookie."

I have already had the opportunity to express personally my feelings to Colette and the beautiful members of her family. I do so again publicly, mindful of their loss but confident that this brave yet gentle spirit will be with them always.

Hon. Mabel M. DeWare: Honourable senators, it is with sadness that I rise in the Senate today to pay tribute to a dear friend: Dr. Desmarais, Senator Desmarais, Jean. I wish to extend my best wishes to Colette and the family who are here with us today.

After 14 months of working with Jean on the Special Senate Committee on Euthanasia and Assisted Suicide, I came to respect Dr. Desmarais' dedication to the task. I also came to respect a friendship that developed as we walked back to the Victoria Building night after night, after our long hours of meetings. He showed compassion for our committee, and revealed to me his personal feelings on the direction our deliberations should take, reflecting, at the same time, his own personal experiences in his life as a doctor.

The last week, late on Thursday, as we went back he told me how tired he was. He said, "You know, when I go home this weekend, I am going to have to go see my doctor because I am sure I have the flu. I shouldn't be this tired."

After he was confined to the house, I called him one day to see if I could talk a little business. Colette said, "He'd love to speak to you." During our little talk, he told me how pleased he was that his maker had given him the time to thank all the people who had helped him on his way up through the years.

I should like to conclude with, and echo, what his six-year-old grandson said in a note of encouragement to his grandfather. He said, "Thank you for all the time we spent together." We all thank you, Jean, for having spent some time with us, even though it was far too short.

Thank you, Jean.

Hon. Sharon Carstairs: Honourable senators, when Chaucer wrote about the "gentle, perfect knight," I think he must have been referring to a character, to a man, like Jean Noël Desmarais, because that is what he was. He was a gentle, perfect knight.

I first met him during the hearings in Winnipeg of the Special Senate Committee on Euthanasia and Assisted Suicide when he was replacing Senator DeWare. We began to chat about his family. He recommended that I take an apartment in Ottawa, as he had recently done after living for a year in a hotel, and then with his daughter. I accepted his good advice and did just that.

His contribution to the committee studying euthanasia and assisted suicide, as mentioned by Senator DeWare, was very positive. As a physician, he was able to provide us with the knowledge of medicine which the rest of us, with the exception of Dr. Keon, simply did not have.

He did not have very much to say because he tended to be a listener. When he did say something, it was after a great deal of thought and consideration.

He sat on this side of the chamber for the first few months that I was sitting here, and then he moved across the way. It was not because he changed parties, but because the seating arrangement changed in that fashion. I missed our daily greetings and the chatter that one tends to have with a colleague who sits nearby, so every now and then I would sneak around to the other side to say hello to him.

I will miss him here in the Senate. I think we could all strive to be a little better, to be "gentle, perfect knights" like Senator Desmarais.

[Translation]

Hon. Marie-P. Poulin: Honourable senators, it is with considerable emotion that I rise today, the first day of my mandate in the Senate, to mark the passing of Senator Jean Noël Desmarais. Senator Desmarais passed away on July 26 following a brief illness.

He was born in Sudbury in 1924 and studied medicine at the University of Ottawa, specializing in radiology in the United States and England. He practiced medicine until 1991. He was a pioneer committed to the health sector in Northern Ontario, specifically.

Those who had the good fortune to know him are well aware of his ever-increasing achievements over the years. His outstanding quality was his profound concern for others' well-being. He frequently reminded us in both words and deeds that well-being was dependent on good health. In real terms, this belief was expressed through a strong and daily commitment to promoting the availability of health care and the quality of hospital services in the Sudbury area.

I had the pleasure of working with him between 1978 and 1983 on the board of directors of the Laurentian Hospital in Sudbury.

Dr. Desmarais was known for the relevance of his remarks. He said little, but he spoke well and always at the appropriate moment. This fine quality earned him a reputation for wisdom and made him highly respected.

In addition to his exemplary contribution as a doctor and a director, he was known for his longstanding involvement in many community organizations.

• (1500)

For one, Dr. Desmarais was actively involved in furthering the objectives of Laurentian University as Chairman of its Board of Governors between 1973 and 1978. In 1990, the university recognized his many achievements with an honorary Doctorate of Science.

If it is true that you really get to know someone when you work with them, then I can say, too, that I knew him well. Indeed, we sat on several boards together; we shared ideas and beliefs; we made things happen in our community.

On a more personal note, he was a neighbour and a friend to my family, the Charettes of Sudbury, for many years. Above all, he was an exemplary family man, a caring father of seven, a loving husband and a beloved brother.

However, for me, one detail stands out among many. Less than two weeks before Senator Desmarais passed away, I received a very kind note from him, perhaps one of his last. In that note, he congratulated me for also obtaining an honorary doctorate from Laurentian University. These are written words that I will always cherish in a very special way.

As I and countless others remember him for the gentleman and, yes, the gentle man, that he was, I am sure all honourable senators would want me to extend our renewed sympathy to the Desmarais family members, some of whom are present here today. I feel privileged to have known him, and truly honoured that I can pay this tribute to his memory as the representative of Northern Ontario in the Senate of Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, last summer I attended the funeral of our colleague and friend, Senator Desmarais. I did so as a friend and out of respect for the Senate.

I realized I had much in common with the Desmarais family. I went to university with Robert Desmarais, who became a judge of the Ontario Supreme Court. I sat in the House of Commons with Louis Desmarais, his brother, who was a member of Parliament for Dollard in Montreal, next door to my riding.

I had the honour of being appointed a member of the Privy Council by Her Majesty Elizabeth II on the occasion of the 125th anniversary of Canada, this country we must save, preserve and modernize.

Suddenly, I am in the Senate with Jean Noël. It is too bad we are so often afraid of expressing our emotions in public and speaking with compassion about these matters that bring us together from time to time.

I want to thank Colette Michaud-Desmarais who did me the great honour of writing me a letter, to say what Senator Desmarais may have wanted to say when he was no longer able to do so.

His children, Jocelyne, Michèle, Jean, Joanne, Guy, Suzanne and Marie, had an extraordinary father. His goodness was felt by everyone around him. His patience, candour, goodness and humanity made a lasting impression on those who knew him.

I know that in heaven, where a man as good as he was — and I realize this sounds odd but I have no hesitation. I am not ashamed. He was a good man; he was a practising Catholic; he was a believer. I had the privilege of conversing with him because I was always more enthusiastic than he was, and he often said to me: "Marcel, you seem a bit agitated." I see my good friend Senator Bacon nodding agreement. Then he would say: "Come along, we will go for a walk. You will get me going, and I will get you to calm down."

What a good man! I know that up there where he belongs, he is delighted to see that Senator Marie-Paule Poulin is now in the Senate.

THE LATE HONOURABLE DAVID JAMES WALKER, P.C.

TRIBUTES

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, it is with sadness, but much pride in his service to public life, that I record the death on Friday, September 22, of our former colleague the Honourable David James Walker.

David Walker had already distinguished himself in the practice of law when he entered Parliament in 1957 as the member of the House of Commons for Rosedale. He was immediately appointed Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Justice, and two years later joined Prime Minister Diefenbaker's cabinet as Minister of Public Works with added responsibility for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and for the National Capital Commission.

His three years in those portfolios were marked by a significant expansion of the federal government's activity as a builder, developer, lender and landowner. The Trans-Canada Highway, which had been lagging because of a variety of financial and interprovincial obstacles, was pushed through to completion. Thirty thousand acres of land were acquired for the Ottawa greenbelt. An agreement was reached with Ontario and Quebec to build the Macdonald-Cartier Bridge. Federal assistance under the National Housing Act was extended to municipalities for sewage disposal plants. The National Library and Public Archives on Wellington Street were begun, and the reconstruction of the West Block on Parliament Hill was undertaken.

As a minister, David Walker was no chairman of the board. He involved himself directly in the decisions and in their implementations. In Canada's present straitened financial circumstances, it is unlikely that, in the near future, today's parliamentarians will see a surge of public investment on similar projects to match that of the late 1950s and early 1960s.

David Walker lost his seat in the House of Commons in the 1962 general election and, within a few months, was appointed to the Senate by Prime Minister Diefenbaker. Here he began an active career that ended only with his retirement more than 26 years later on September 30, 1989.

He will be remembered by colleagues here as an exceptionally able debater and also as a gifted and serious participant in the legislative process. He brought a wealth of experience to discussions of public policy, notably on legal questions but also on business and economic issues.

David Walker began his political service at the age of 14 as a Page in the Ontario Legislature. As a 19-year old at the University of Toronto, he debated Mackenzie King, knew most of our provincial and federal leaders over the years and attended all the Conservative Party conventions from 1927 to the 1990s. He was President of the Albany Club of Toronto in 1949.

The Conservative Party especially, but also Parliament, has reason to acknowledge with gratitude his 32 years of service here and his even longer service to his profession, to his party and to Canada.

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I should like to join Senator Murray in paying tribute to the former Senator David James Walker who passed away on September 22 at the age of 90 years.

I have known Senator Walker since about 1949, and always had a deep respect for him. Fervently partisan and fiercely patriotic, Senator Walker had a long record of public service in this country. Born in Toronto, he attended University College at the University of Toronto, and graduated from Osgoode Hall Law School in 1931.

Law was certainly the seed of his interest in political life, and for many years he worked as a Crown prosecutor and as a civil lawyer before being elected as the member of Parliament for Rosedale in 1957.

I recall that on one of my earliest court appearances, I felt called upon to apologize to the court because of some oversight. Dave Walker was in the locker room when I went to ungown after we had both left the court. He looked at me sternly and said, "My boy, never admit you're wrong. I never do." I am not sure I was ever able to accept that advice, but David certainly believed it to be an important principle.

His tenure in the House of Commons was highlighted by his assistance in drafting then Prime Minister Diefenbaker's Bill of Rights and by his work as Minister of Public Works from 1959 until 1962, which Senator Murray has delineated. He was a passionate loyalist of John Diefenbaker.

Appointed to the Senate in 1963 in the dying days of Mr. Diefenbaker's regime, David Walker was actively involved in the proceedings of this place until his retirement in 1989. He worked on several committees, in particular, Banking, Trade and Commerce, Legal and Constitutional Affairs, National Finance, and Standing Rules and Orders. His interventions in the Senate were frequent and on a diverse selection of issues.

There was certainly no mistaking the spirit and drive with which he tackled his job — sometimes a little bit too much so for those of us who went up against him in many spirited, political battles over the years. I never knew anyone so adept at making a sarcastic remark that could destroy another's logic. Indeed, at his retirement he said, "As a lawyer, I was always glad to have the last word. That is an experience that I have always enjoyed, and have always sought after."

In his private life, however, he had a great love and commitment to his family. In his book, Fun Along the Way, he writes:

When I first sat down to write this account of my life...I had one ambition still unrealized: to celebrate with Bunty —

— that is his wife, Elizabeth —

— our fiftieth wedding anniversary.

Not only did he go on to celebrate that anniversary, but on September 2 of this year, he and Elizabeth had been married for 62 years. To Elizabeth, to his children, David, Margaret and Diane, and to his many other family members and friends, we extend our condolences.

THE LATE RIGHT HONOURABLE JEAN-LUC PEPIN, P.C.

TRIBUTES

Hon. Jean-Robert Gauthier: Honourable senators, on September 5, this country suffered a great loss, that of the Honourable Jean-Luc Pepin. In recalling this great Canadian, I think of a friend whose ever-present smile and good humour spoke of his joie de vivre. He was a passionate intellectual and a philosopher, a man of great culture who communicated his ideas with eloquence. A man of singular modesty, he knew how to listen to others, whose ideas he respected.

I am saddened at the loss of this sincere friend who, like myself, believed in a united Canada where the two language communities could live side by side anywhere in the country. I consider it an honour and a privilege to have shared conversations with him regularly on subjects of mutual interest.

An honest politician, an inveterate worker, a man of conviction, Jean-Luc Pepin left his mark wherever he went. He never failed to meet the challenges sent his way.

He was a professor at the University of Ottawa for many years. He was a member of Parliament from 1963 to 1968 and from 1979 to 1984. He served as Minister of Mines and Resources, Minister of Transport and Minister for External Relations. He held almost all the portfolios. He would have been a good prime minister.

He did not shy away from co-chairing the Pepin-Robarts Commission on Canadian unity or the Anti-Inflation Board. He always gave his best. This is why hundreds of people gathered at the Notre-Dame basilica on September 12 to accompany this great man on his final voyage and to pay him tribute for his immense contribution to Canadian life.

Most honourable Jean-Luc Pepin, very dear friend, thank you for your contribution to our country's development and thank you for the political inheritance you have left us. You will remain in our hearts as you were a part of our lives.

To his wife, Mary, his daughter, Aude, his son, Nicolas, and to their family, I offer my most sincere condolences. May you be as proud to have shared his life as I was to know him.

Hon. Gérald-A. Beaudoin: Honourable senators, I rise today to pay tribute to a great friend and statesman, Jean-Luc Pepin. He lived at a crucial time in our constitutional history and was one of its major players.

Jean-Luc was a colleague of mine at the University of Ottawa. As a political scientist first and foremost, a much sought-after professor, an academic in heart and soul with a lively mind, a very popular commentator on radio and television, and a member of Parliament, minister and a high-ranking government official, Jean-Luc Pepin dedicated his life to politics.

And what a life! He understood his time.

I first met him when he started out as a minister in the House of Commons. I was assistant parliamentary counsel at the time. Our offices were next door to each other. A junior public servant, Paul Tellier, who was to play a major role in the Public Service, was Jean-Luc Pepin's assistant at the time.

People will remember the contribution that Jean-Luc Pepin made to Canadian politics as a very competent, well-rounded and imaginative minister. I have seldom met a man who was such a hard worker, so absorbed by his work and so well-informed.

I had the good fortune to work with him on the Pepin-Robarts Task Force with John Robarts, Solange Chaput-Rolland, Ronald Watts and a number of other people. He also came up with the idea of a committee of wise men consisting of Léon Dion, John Meisel and Edward McWhinney. We will never forget this experience.

John Robarts made an extremely useful contribution.

We had many researchers of very high calibre. We were one big family. We travelled the length and breadth of Canada. This field-work made a lasting impression on us.

The commission was an important moment in our lives. It had a role to play at a very difficult time. How could we ever forget the spirit that guided the report entitled: "Future Together" and the lexicon of the words of the debate "Coming to Terms," which was so useful and is still being consulted, in law schools and political science departments.

Because of his personality and his genius, Jean-Luc Pepin always had many friends and admirers in politics, in the course of his academic career and in the media. He will remain in our memory as a born professor, dedicated commentator and statesman.

To his wife, Mary, his children Nicolas and Aude, his brothers and sisters and the entire Pepin family, I wish to offer my most sincere condolences. Goodbye, Jean-Luc, our intrepid colleague.

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, with your leave, I would like to say a few words about Jean-Luc who was my professor, but I reserve the right to do so later this week.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, before I proceed with Senators' Statements, I wish to add my words of welcome to the four new senators we received today. I also welcome all of you back to what I trust will be a fruitful and pleasant session this fall. I take particular note of one of our colleagues who has returned after being absent for a long time. Honourable Senator Wood has been ill, but is back in the Senate today.

I should also like to take a moment to welcome back the pages who are returning and to introduce to you the new Pages. Christine Lenouvel was appointed Chief Page on June 30, 1995. She is in her third year at the University of Ottawa. She comes to us from Toronto and will be with us again throughout this session.

Also from the previous session, we have O'Neal Banerjee. He is starting his second year with us. He is in his fourth year at the University of Ottawa and is from Brossard, Quebec.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, Kelsey MacTavish is in her second year as a Senate Page. She is in third year at Carleton University, and comes from Lachute, Quebec.

[English]

Now we come to the new Pages. Andrew Barnsley studied at Mount Allison University in New Brunswick. He is now in his third year at Carleton University. He comes from Fredericton, New Brunswick.

Erin Clow cannot come down to the floor because she is responsible for the microphone console up above. She is from Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, and she is in her second year at the University of Ottawa.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, Gregory Doiron is in his first year at the University of Ottawa. He comes from Gondola Point, New Brunswick.

[English]

We have one Page who unfortunately is absent today. Leigh Lampert is from Moncton, New Brunswick. He is in his first year at the University of Ottawa.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, Natacha Leclerc is in third year at the University of Ottawa. She is from Chicoutimi, Quebec.

[English]

Honourable senators will note this year that the competition for new Pages was in Eastern Canada.

Honourable senators, I have one final note of business, if I may: We are having some difficulties today with the recording equipment. They are trying to solve the problem now, but we may not have Debates of the Senate at the usual time tomorrow. I simply advise you of the situation in case you are looking for your Hansard and cannot find it.

I also wish to remind you that at five o'clock this afternoon, there will be a reception in my quarters for the new senators, and obviously all senators are invited.

SENATOR'S STATEMENT

HEALTH

TOBACCO PRODUCTS CONTROL ACT—DECISION OF SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, the Supreme Court's recent decision to strike down the Tobacco Products Control Act placed the value of private advertising to sell deadly products above that of public regulation to preserve people's health. Whether judicial solicitude for corporate arguments about commercial speech are well placed, whether full constitutional status is properly conferred upon corporations — and the place of freedom of commercial speech in the hierarchy of political values is a subject deserving of debate — I wish at this time to place on the record several of the excellent observations found in the minority judgment of the court which received too little attention in the press and elsewhere in recent weeks.

At issue in the court's decision were two essential questions: Did Parliament have the constitutional authority to enact the legislation, and, if it did, did the government demonstrate that the law did not unjustifiably violate the freedom of expression right set out by the Charter?

On the first point, a majority of the Supreme Court judges did not rule against Parliament. We have retained the constitutional authority to legislate tobacco advertising and other measures, a ruling which enables the government to quickly enact new legislation.

The reasons for the government to do this, while previously well documented, were reinforced by the Health Canada study published last month in the Canadian Journal of Public Health, detailing new smoking-related mortality statistics. As of 1991, there were 41,408 deaths, with women's deaths accounting for 89 per cent of the increase. Smoking is still the single largest cause of preventable death in Canada.

The key to the tobacco companies' pleadings before the court was that tobacco is a legal product and thus has the right to be advertised.

Mr. Justice La Forest in writing the minority decision put it succinctly:

It must be kept in mind that the infringed right at issue in these cases is the right of tobacco corporations to advertise the only legal product sold in Canada which, when used precisely as directed, harms and often kills those who use it.

If tobacco were a product under the Hazardous Products Act, as all the anti-tobacco groups have been advocating for some time, advertising could be prohibited. The Food and Drug Act, for example, prevents the advertising of nicotine patches, a method by which some people stop smoking.

Justice La Forest also wrote:

Nearly 7 million Canadians use tobacco products, which are highly addictive. Undoubtedly, a prohibition of this nature —

— speaking of a total ban —

— would lead to an increase in illegal activity, smuggling and, quite possibly, civil disobedience. Well aware of those difficulties, Parliament chose a less drastic, and more incremental, response to the tobacco health problem. In prohibiting the advertising and promotion of tobacco products, as opposed to their manufacture and sale, Parliament has sought to achieve a compromise among the competing interests of smokers, non-smokers and manufacturers, with an eye to protecting vulnerable groups in society. Given that advertising, by its very nature, is intended to influence consumers and create demand, this was a reasonable policy decision.

The question before the court, however, was not simply whether it was reasonable but whether it was demonstrably justified and minimally impaired freedom of expression. The majority of the court found that the Tobacco Products Control Act violates the companies' Charter right to freedom of expression, largely because the government failed to demonstrate that a total ban was necessary to counter the limited objective of curbing consumption through advertising, labelling or promotion.

Madam Justice McLachlin wrote that the "motivation to profit is irrelevant," comparing the activity of tobacco companies to book sellers, newspaper owners and toy sellers.

Again, Justice La Forest wrote —

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Spivak, I hesitate to interrupt you, but your three minutes are up, unless there is agreement.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Spivak: Thank you.

The Charter was essentially enacted to protect individuals, not corporations. It may, at times, it is true, be necessary to protect the rights of corporations so as to protect the rights of the individual. But I do not think this is such a case.

Because:

... the harm engendered by tobacco, and the profit motive underlying its promotion, place this form of expression as far from the 'core' of freedom of expression values as prostitution, hate mongering, or pornography and thus entitled it to a very low degree of protection under Section 1 of the Charter. It must be kept in mind that tobacco advertising serves no political, scientific or artistic ends; nor does it promote participation in the political process. Rather, its sole purpose is to inform consumers about, and promote the use of, a product that is harmful, and often fatal, to the consumers who use it. The main, if not sole, motivation for this advertising is, of course, profit.

The government must now provide the remedy. It could use the Charter's "notwithstanding" clause to override the decision. It should use the Hazardous Products Act or the Food and Drug Act to impose more stringent controls on the tobacco industry. In addition to any of those measures, it must better enforce the federal law which forbids sales to minors. It must affirm respect for the law among retailers and give the right signal to young people.

The government must act to restore the faith of Canadians in the Charter as an instrument for their protection. The government of Canada has been hesitant, weak-kneed and, I may say, downright negligent in its approach to this issue. In this judgment, the court both laid to rest judicial deferment to Parliament and invited the government to act, and it should act.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DISBANDMENT OF CANADIAN AIRBORNE
REGIMENT—DIFFERENCE OF OPINION BETWEEN MINISTER AND CHIEF OF DEFENCE STAFF—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: Honourable senators, I should like to take this opportunity to welcome the new senators, despite the fact that some of them may have left the chamber.

To Senator Rompkey, who comes from the other place, I was never really at ease in this place until your arrival here today. I used to feel that there might be a tinge of patronage in my appointment. However, your appointment here dispels that thought completely. I welcome you, and I look forward to working with you. It is nice to see you here.

Honourable senators, my question is to the Leader of the Government in the Senate and it relates to the shameful decision to disband the Canadian Airborne Regiment against the wishes of the Chief of Defence Staff because of the misbehaviour of a few.

Is there truly a difference of opinion as between the Minister of National Defence and the Chief of Defence Staff regarding matters of disbandment, promotions and the general management of the military?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as Honourable Senator St. Germain would know, the decision to disband the regiment was made some time ago. That decision took into account all the circumstances about which we have heard a great deal, and resulted in the public inquiry which began its hearings this week. That decision has been accepted by both parties.

Senator St. Germain: Honourable senators, in spite of her lack of military experience — and not many of us here have had that privilege — the Leader of the Government in the Senate must realize that the undermining of the morale of our armed forces will be horrendous if the minister and the Chief of Defence Staff square off on opposite sides of an issue such as the disbanding of the regiment, the promotion aspect, and any other aspects of managing our forces.

If the Leader of the Government in the Senate is not prepared to pass on my first question, then I ask her to pass on my request to replace that minister, or at least make changes in order to save the morale of one of the greatest fighting forces that this world has ever seen — our Canadian Armed Forces.

Honourable senators, it is unacceptable that members of the armed forces, past and present, should be forced to deal with these differences of opinion which will completely undermine the morale of this great military organization. You need not take my word for it. On a recent television program, I heard a report that the Americans have stated that the work done by the Canadian troops in Somalia was, overall, above reproach and to be commended.

Will the Leader of the Government request the Prime Minister to do something about the situation, to either replace or fire the minister or to make some other effort to help our armed forces?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, frankly, I will not have that conversation with the Prime Minister. The Minister of National Defence has carried out his responsibilities, and the Chief of Defence Staff has carried out his responsibilities. Nevertheless, I agree with Senator St. Germain that the morale of the armed forces is of great concern to this government and to armed forces members.

Although I have not had the privilege of serving in the armed forces, I do have the privilege of serving as Honorary Lieutenant-Colonel of the 18th Air Defence Regiment, and I take those responsibilities very seriously. Every effort is being made, and will continue to be made, to deal with the difficulties that have arisen surrounding recent incidents.

There is a great desire on the part of all Canadians to support our forces, which are, as Senator St. Germain has said, the finest fighting forces anywhere in the world. Our forces have done this country enormously proud in the work that they have undertaken under very difficult circumstances in the former Yugoslavia.

I appreciate the concerns of my honourable colleague. I certainly will communicate those concerns. In concert with all members of this chamber, I will do everything in my power to improve and consolidate the morale of our fine fighting forces and all elements of the armed forces of Canada.

DEFENCE

SAFETY OF SEA KING HELICOPTERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Terry Stratton: Honourable senators, I too welcome the new senators to this place. I like Sir John A. Macdonald's definition of the Senate:

It is a saucer into which you pour legislation to cool.

Honourable senators, I am disturbed to learn that another Sea King helicopter was in trouble recently. Two weeks ago, one of our aging Sea Kings was forced to make an emergency landing as a result of a warning light coming on, indicating transmission problems. The incident happened in Quebec.

In response to a question in the House of Commons, the Minister of National Defence said that the incident was very unfortunate. He also said that the Sea Kings are totally safe to fly. How can the minister state that the Sea Kings are perfectly safe to fly in light of these repeated reports of failures?

Senator Berntson: They keeping falling out of the sky, but are perfectly safe to fly.

• (1545)

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): As the honourable senator will know, the white paper on defence, in which our new colleague Senator Rompkey was very much involved, clearly confirmed the government's intention to purchase replacements for the Sea King helicopters. The government is considering all options. At this point in time, no contract has been approved.

My honourable friend will know that persons expert in the field have indicated that with the kind of maintenance we expect, the Sea Kings will be safe to operate, I believe, until the end of this century. From time to time, there have been tragic incidents. However, the information accepted by the government is that we are pressing on. The choice has not yet been made, and the Sea Kings will be maintained at the highest level until it is.

Senator Stratton: Honourable senators, when is this likely to occur? How many more crashes and failures must we have before the government will take action?

Senator Fairbairn: As I indicated, honourable senators, the government is considering a number of options. As to the precise timing, I am afraid I cannot indicate that to my honourable friend today.

HUMAN RIGHTS

RATIFICATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS CONVENTION OF ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Madam Minister, I was pleased to read in the Montreal Gazette this morning a story to the effect that your colleague the Minister of Immigration used his authority to grant landed status to the Langner family. Stanislaw and Ewa Langner were born in Poland; their children were born in Canada. The minister, I think, made the correct decision. I would ask that you convey to him my pleasure upon learning of this decision.

What is interesting about the story is that the Langners' case rose to prominence after the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights — which is the commission of human rights of the OAS — became interested in it.

Canada has neither signed nor ratified the Inter-American Convention on Human Rights. My recollection from the Red Book is that the government was prepared to honour this human rights convention; in other words, Canada would sign and ratify the Human Rights Convention of the OAS. Could the minister inform this chamber as to the progress in ratifying that human rights instrument on behalf of Canada?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, first, I will seek to inform myself. I would then be pleased to communicate with my honourable friend in the chamber.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have several delayed answers to oral questions, some of which were sent to honourable senators by mail over the summer months. They were sent to those senators who were directly concerned.

However, in accordance with the rules, I wish to table the following delayed answers: A response to a question raised in the Senate December 15, 1994, by the Honourable Senator Carney regarding the Automatic Navigational Weather System; a response to a question raised in the Senate March 21, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Forrestall regarding the replacement of Sea King and Labrador helicopters; a response to a question raised in the Senate May 9, 1995, by the Honourable Senator St. Germain regarding relations with the European Union and the impact on local industries; a response to a question raised in the Senate May 24, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Johnson regarding federal management of radioactive waste material; a response to a question raised in the Senate May 25, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Doyle regarding the report of the Auditor General on foreign service travel directives; a response to a question raised in the Senate May 25, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Doyle regarding new directives on foreign service travel directives; a response to a question raised in the Senate June 7, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Forrestall regarding compensation for cancelled EH-101 contracts; a response to a question raised in the Senate June 7, 1995, by the Honourable Senator LeBreton regarding the creation of jobs for women through infrastructure programs; a response to a question raised in the Senate June 8, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Bolduc regarding a dispute with departments over unreported liabilities; a response to a question raised in the Senate June 13, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Kinsella regarding the return to democracy in Nigeria; a response to a question raised in the Senate June 14, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Corbin regarding the closing of the Canada Council Art Bank; a response to a question raised in the Senate June 15, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Comeau regarding the dispute with the European Union on newsprint; a response to a question raised in the Senate June 15, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Atkins regarding a request for a status report on environmental and financial concerns associated with the sales abroad of CANDU reactors; a response to a question raised in the Senate June 20, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Robertson regarding a new federal-provincial silviculture agreement; a response to a question by the Honourable Senator Doyle of June 20, 1995, regarding the reorganization of the blood supply system; a response to a question raised in the Senate June 20, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Spivak regarding closer control on tobacco products; a response to a question raised in the Senate June 20, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Kinsella regarding the Canadian Race Relations Foundation Act; a response to a question raised in the Senate June 21, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Nolin regarding the unilingual English production of the Catalog of National Sports Events; a response to a question raised in the Senate on June 21, 1995, by the Honourable Senator

Spivak regarding the use of bovine growth hormone somatotropin and the delay in investigation of human health risks; a response to a question raised in the Senate on June 21, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Johnson regarding the demise of the Winnipeg Freshwater Science Teams; a response to a question raised in the Senate June 27, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Spivak regarding the link between IGF-I and breast cancer; a response to questions raised in the Senate on June 27, 1995, by the Honourable Senators Nolin and Simard regarding the granting of a public relations contract for the G-7 Summit; a response to a question raised in the Senate June 27, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Prud'homme regarding the granting of a public relations contract for the G-7 Summit; a response to questions raised in the Senate on June 28, 1995, by the Honourable Senators Tkachuk and Robertson regarding the RCMP marketing contract with Disney Corporation; and a response to questions raised in the Senate June 11 and 12, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Forrestall regarding the lease of premises in Sydney, Nova Scotia.

TRANSPORT

AUTOMATED NAVIGATIONAL AND WEATHER SYSTEMS—REQUEST FOR DOCUMENTATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Pat Carney on December 15, 1994.)

Transport Canada, Aviation Group, is pleased to provide all documents it possesses on the Automatic Weather Observation System (AWOS). It should be noted, however, that this represents only a portion of the automated weather aids used in providing Aviation weather information. For the most part, the purchase and testing of automatic weather stations including the Automatic Weather Observation System (AWOS) has been under the purview of Environment Canada.

Further, the attached documents refer only to automated weather systems, as it is believed to be the thrust of the question. Automated navigation aides for aviation purposes consist of numerous individual pieces, from radar and all its component parts, instrument landing systems, lighting systems, etc.

The Coast Guard has been operating automatic aids to navigation for many years. It does not, however have AWOS equipment at any of its sites. The Aids to Marine navigation including related equipment are purchased from reputable suppliers. Statistics show that main lights and fog horns at unattended, remotely monitored lightstations are operational more than 99 per cent of the time. These statistics are based on outages of aids to navigation as recorded by remote monitoring equipment. In order to reassure users that automated aids to navigation equipment are reliable, it is intended to remotely monitor the operation of the equipment for a minimum of two years at newly destaffed lightstations.

The Coast Guard conducts considerable in-house equipment testing at its Navigational Aids Test Establishment in Cardinal and at the base in Prescott, Ontario.

The Coast Guard maintains a 133-page Catalogue of Marine Aids Equipment. The description of the equipment includes a photograph or drawing, the manufacturer, the physical and operating characteristics and other relevant information. Equipment is selected for use to meet particular designs and service requirements.

In addition to the documentation regarding automated navigational and weather systems provided by Transport Canada, Environment Canada includes the following:

- a concise summary of significant studies that have been undertaken to test the performance of AWOS and its sensors, over the years, and
- a summary of the purchasing history of the AWOS (previously referred to as READAC) project covering Phases I, II, and III.

In the time since this question was raised in the Senate, considerable information relating to this subject has been provided to Senator Carney as Chair of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources. Additional information, responding to questions raised at the June 6, 1995 information session of that standing committee, was forwarded to the committee's clerk in June.

SEARCH AND RESCUE—REPLACEMENT OF SEA KING AND LABRADOR HELICOPTER FLEETS—EFFECT OF REPLACEMENTS ON VIABILITY OF CANADIAN FORCES BASE SHEARWATER—PERFORMANCE STANDARDS FOR REPLACEMENTS

(Response to question raised by Hon. J. Michael Forrestall on March 21, 1995.)

The project offices for the Canadian Search and Rescue Helicopter (CSH) and the Maritime Helicopter Project (MHP) were established this summer. They will be charged with managing all aspects of replacing these two helicopter fleets. To date, work on both CSH and MHP has been accomplished using staffs who normally deal with the day-to-day operational and equipment requirements of the Sea King and Labrador helicopters.

The 1994 federal budget directed that Canadian Forces Base Shearwater would be reduced in size with the movement of 434 Squadron to Canadian Forces Base Greenwood. Furthermore, Shearwater is to be consolidated as a detachment of Canadian Forces Base Halifax. There have been no other statements made concerning further reductions to Canadian Forces Base Shearwater by the Government.

The cancellation of the New Shipborne Aircraft (NSA) and New SAR Helicopter (NSH) projects resulted in a re-evaluation of the operational requirement for both the Marine Helicopter Project and the Canadian Search and Rescue Helicopter Project. In the case of the Marine Helicopter Project, changes have occurred to reflect the new defence policy as outlined in the 1994 white paper. For the Canadian Search and Rescue Helicopter Project, while capability requirements have been reduced from the EH-101 specification, they will still provide for an ample overall level of SAR service in Canada.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

RELATIONS WITH EUROPEAN UNION—IMPACT ON LOCAL INDUSTRIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Gerry St. Germain on May 9, 1995)

On the general issue of trade irritants, the government is currently pursuing the resolution of several disputes with the European Commission, and with EU member states where appropriate. Canada will not hesitate to use the dispute settlement options open to us within the World Trade Organization if required.

With respect to pulp and paper exports, the government is indeed concerned about the activities of certain environmental groups across Europe who are criticizing forest practices in Canada. Several of these groups have recently changed their tactics, and are now targeting customers of Canadian producers, threatening to publicly boycott newsprint which contains the product of Canadian old growth forests.

The approach taken by the Canadian government to respond to these activities has been to focus efforts on acquainting all parties with the facts relating to Canada's success in developing solutions to the challenge of achieving sustainable forest management.

Canada is an environmentally responsible nation, and continues to lead the world in its efforts to develop internationally agreed rules and standards which will ensure a global balance between economic and environmental interests. The positive results achieved at the recent meeting of the UN Commission on Sustainable Development are a good illustration of these activities, where the important decision to initiate an inter-governmental panel on forests was in large measure the result of preparatory work completed by Canada in the FAO and other multilateral fora.

It is Canada's view that the existence of a recognized international approach to sustainable forestry, developed by international consensus through the normal processes of a credible international organization, would end the uncertainties prevailing in this industry regarding the acceptability of various forestry practices. It is the current absence of such standards or guidelines which has made it too easy for some to raise support on the basis of overstatement and misinformation, and to attempt to interfere with the free flow of international trade in forest products.

The task of responding to the various criticisms of European environmental groups lies with the Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade, which, in concert with the Canadian forestry service, the provinces, and industry, has addressed this particular issue by ensuring that embassy personnel throughout Europe monitor and report on local incidents and legislative proposals in this category, respond quickly and factually to any criticism, build partnerships with various interest groups, and strengthen dialogue with key institutions, academics, scientists and parliamentarians. Both incoming and outgoing missions have been organised to ensure that knowledgeable parties have the opportunity to view firsthand the realities of conditions in Canadian forests, and to discuss local forestry practice with stakeholders across Canada. In this way, the misinformation promulgated by some groups has been exposed, and this extensive effort by Canadians to communicate positive developments and achievements in Canadian forest practices and land-use policies has been welcomed by customers in Europe.

Canada is also concerned about the impact of the European Union's regulation on fur imports. The regulation, which was enacted in 1991, would ban fur imports as of January 1, 1996, if producers do not ban the use of jaw-type leghold traps for 13 species or enact humane trapping standards for those species.

The fur trade is one of Canada's oldest international industries. It contributes approximately $600 million to the Canadian GDP. Over 90% of Canadian wild fur is exported. Europe has always been the principal market. Over 100,000 Canadians are employed in the industry. About half the 80,000 trappers are aboriginal Canadians for whom trapping is not only an important source of income, but an essential part of their heritage.

Canada was willing to cooperate with the European Union in the implementation of the regulation because we share the principles of sustainable use, animal welfare and the preservation and expansion of the fur industry. However, in late 1993, the European Commission issued a reinterpretation of the regulation that no fur-producing country could meet. Canada, and the other major producers, the USA and Russia, are working to persuade the EU to moderate the impact of the regulation.

The European Commission is supposed to decide by September 1, 1995, which countries will be able to continue to export to the European Union. Canada's position is that the best course of action remains in finding a cooperative way to resolve our differences, in a way that fulfils our shared animal welfare goal and preserves the international fur trade. The Prime Minister raised the fur issue with Mr. Jacques Santer, the President of the European Commission and other European union participants at the G-7 Summit in Halifax. Following the summit, the German Chancellor, Helmut Kohl, as the guest of the Prime Minister, visited the Northwest Territories. Chancellor Kohl heard first hand the potentially devastating impact that the fur regulation will have on northern and aboriginal communities. Members of the European parliament and the German bundestag have also recently visited Canada to learn about the impact of the fur regulation.

As a result of the discussions at the Whistler quadrilateral meeting and the G-7 Summit, the European Commission agreed to form a working group to resolve this issue. However, in spite of a number of initiatives on Canada's part, Canada, the USA and the EU have not yet agreed to even the basis for the formation of a working group to negotiate an agreement on humane trapping. While it is in everyone's interest to resolve this dispute through negotiations, if there are no positive developments soon, Canada will initiate the dispute settlement process under the rules of the World Trade Organization.

Canada's strategy on the fur issue is developed in consultation with the provinces, territories, industry and the leading aboriginal groups. The Canadian government is dedicated to the preservation of a legitimate trade.

THE ENVIRONMENT

FEDERAL MANAGEMENT OF RADIOACTIVE WASTE MATERIAL— REPORT OF AUDITOR GENERAL OF CANADA— GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Janis Johnson on May 24, 1995)

Canada's approach has been to develop the concept for disposal of the nuclear fuel waste (high-level radioactive waste) deep within the rock of the Canadian Shield and to carry out an in-depth environmental assessment and public review to determine that it is safe and acceptable prior to implementation of disposal.

Assuming a favourable response by the Canadian Environmental Assessment Agency Panel to move forward with implementation of disposal of nuclear fuel waste, disposal is not anticipated to begin before 2025-2030 because the identification of a suitable site, site characterization work, other related activities, as well as obtaining the required environmental and regulatory approvals, will take about 30 years. It is anticipated that future funding requirements for the disposal of the nuclear fuel waste will be provided for by the nuclear utilities.

In the interim, nuclear fuel waste continues to be stored safely and economically in water filled pools or dry storage canisters at the Canadian nuclear reactor sites. The safe storage and containment of the small volume of nuclear fuel waste at these sites can continue for 50 years or more.

In March of this year, the Minister of Natural Resources obtained approval from her cabinet colleagues to negotiate, with major waste stakeholders, a policy framework including organizational and financial options, for the disposal of all radioactive wastes in Canada including nuclear fuel waste.

A Discussion Paper was prepared by Natural Resources Canada and released to the major stakeholders to get their views on a policy framework for radioactive waste disposal. The Minister of Natural Resources is planning to return to Cabinet later this year with the results of these discussions and negotiations, and with proposed options for the policy framework. This initiative will respond to the Auditor General's Report.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

REPORT OF AUDITOR GENERAL ON FOREIGN SERVICE TRAVEL DIRECTIVES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Richard J. Doyle on May 25, 1995)

The issue of the travel irregularities was the submission of travel claims by employees that falsely requested reimbursement for expenses not actually incurred by the employee. Following a comprehensive investigation, praised by the Auditor General for its thoroughness, those employees making such false statements were disciplined. An active audit program, implemented since then, has ensured that such false statements are no longer made and will not be made in the future.

Media reporting on this issue was very imprecise. In a letter dated May 18, 1995, the Assistant Deputy Minister of the Corporate Services Branch of the Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade responded to the many inaccuracies reported in the media.

NEW DIRECTIVES ON FOREIGN SERVICE TRAVEL DIRECTIVES—REQUEST FOR PARTICULARS

(Response to question raised by Hon. Richard J. Doyle on May 25, 1995)

The Foreign Service Directives are negotiated with the Public Service Bargaining Units once every three years. Foreign service directives 45 and 50 were changed during the last negotiations which were completed in June 1993. Negotiations for the next review will commence during the fall of 1995, and are expected to be completed by 1996.

Foreign Service Travel Directives 45 and 50 read as follows.

FSD 45 – Foreign Service Leave/Option

In addition to leave entitlements under your collective agreement or compensation plan, Foreign Service Leave gives you an extra 10 days of leave each year as a premium for service abroad. (This leave is accumulated at the rate of 10/12 days per year.) This leave may be utilized with SBM approval in three different ways:

1. taken as leave after accrual or carried over from year to year;
2. accrued credits may be cashed in, in part or in full (although you should be aware that this dollar value is taxable), on the basis of your salary in effect on the preceding March 31, or;
3. any time you are assigned abroad or in conjunction with relocation travel to or from a Post, 10 days of accrued leave may be traded in exchange for a transportation entitlement to reflect 85% of one full adult return economy air ticket (Y) based on the return fare from your mission to the Headquarters city. When there is no "Y" fare, 100% of the "Y2" fare shall be used. The accountable advance shall be accounted for in full on completion of all travel for which the advance was issued, or one year from the date of issuance of such advance, whichever is earlier.

FSD 50 – Foreign Service Vacation Travel Assistance

Entitlements

FSD 50 applies to you and your accompanying dependants at the mission. Where educational facilities at the mission are not compatible and you have dependants attending school away from the mission but not in Canada, those dependants are also eligible for benefits. Employees are given an option to claim:

- 1) a transportation entitlement which is fully accountable based on full (Y) economy class fare Post/Ottawa/Post; or
- 2) a non-accountable foreign service vacation travel allowance of:
 - 90% of full (Y) economy class fare for those posts for which a stopover would be authorized for relocation travel,
 - 80% of full (Y) economy class fare for those posts for which a stopover would not be authorized, or
 - where (Y) fare is not existent, the allowance is based on 100% of the Y2 fare.

Please note that employees must travel and although the benefit is non-accountable, may be required to provide evidence that travel has occurred!

1. Employees may return to headquarters, or any alternative destination, at the completion or termination of each posting. In a cross-posting situation, should you be asked to defer your return provided normally under FSD 15 for operational reasons, you may use this entitlement during the next posting;

2. Frequency of entitlements are calculated as follows:

- at A-level (non-hardship) missions, once per tour of duty of three years or more,
- at Level I or II hardship missions, once per two-year tour of duty, twice per three-year tour of duty plus one trip for each additional year beyond three years,
- at Level III, IV and V mission, the same number of trips per tour of duty as the number of years in the tour of duty;

3. Employees returning to Level III, IV and V missions may claim for unaccompanied excess baggage, or an air shipment, whichever is the lesser cost of up to 20 kilograms for the employee and each accompanying dependant from Ottawa to the mission.

Conditions

The following conditions apply to FSD 50:

1. Travel may be undertaken at any time during a posting but lapses on the termination of each posting;
2. A minimum of 10 compensation days of leave must be taken;
3. If option 1) is used, and where travel is undertaken by car, you may claim actual and reasonable automobile operating expenses or the “employee-requested” kilometre rate in effect at your point of departure;
4. If you used Foreign Service Vacation Travel Assistance and terminate your posting early for personal reasons, you may be required to reimburse the Crown for all or part of the expenses previously incurred on your behalf.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

COMPENSATION FOR CANCELLED EH-101
CONTRACTS—REQUEST FOR PARTICULARS

(Response to question raised by Hon. J. Michael Forrestall on June 7, 1995)

Under the terms of the contract, Unisys was required to design, to integrate and to install a full suite of mission equipment that would enable the anti-submarine variant of the EH-101 helicopter to detect, to locate and to destroy enemy submarines. Included equipment were a sonar system, a radar system, plus a variety of other sensor systems — all of which, ultimately, were to be integrated into a single functional mission system.

The contract with Unisys was to span a period in excess of 10 years. Cancellation occurred at the end of the first year. At that time, the company was in the early stages of system design, had completed the set up of appropriate project management systems, and had completed negotiations with a number of suppliers of the mission equipment which would later form part of the overall EH-101 mission system.

Because of the design nature of the program, no actual equipment had been produced at the time of the cancellation. The vast majority of the costs associated with the work were, therefore, used to pay for the labour hours and associated overhead costs spent on producing the various program plans, detailed design specifications, design reviews and project management that are normally associated with a long-term contract that requires considerable initial design work. At the time of the termination, the contractor had over 350 personnel working directly on the contract and this does not include either the labour of the company's indirect staff nor the labour of its subcontractors. As well, the company had occupied an additional building with all of the overhead costs associated with that building, procured engineering development equipment and software, and entered into contract with 11 major subcontractors.

The only deliveries that had been made up to the point of termination were documents and design reviews and, therefore, it is not possible to provide a list of the completed work items. The development equipment and software previously mentioned, totalling approximately $3.5 million, has been transferred to the Department of National Defence's ownership.

The contract with Unisys was terminated on November 5, 1993, as promised in the Government's Red Book. Unisys was paid $98 million for work completed under the previous administration and prior to contract termination.

THE ECONOMY

CREATION OF JOBS FOR WOMEN THROUGH INFRASTRUCTURE
PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR PARTICULARS

(Response to question raised by Hon. Marjory LeBreton on June 7, 1995)

The main objectives of the Infrastructure program are to renew Canada's infrastructure and create employment. Approximately 100,000 direct jobs will be created during the design and construction phases of Infrastructure Works projects. Over and above these 100,000 jobs, a total of 10,800 direct long-term jobs will be generated by the program, according to information provided by municipalities. In addition, Infrastructure Works is a very important generator of indirect long-term jobs related to other economic activities made possible as a result of improved road ways, water and sewer systems and other forms of infrastructure.

The office of Infrastructure does not keep statistics on the number of women employed on Infrastructure projects since hiring is done at the local level. The project proponent, usually a municipality, is responsible for project management including the tendering of contracts. The federal-provincial/territorial framework agreements indicate that all contracts will be awarded and administered in accordance with the administrative, management and contract procedures within the province/territory, including those of employment equity. The upcoming evaluation of the program may enable us to determine the number of women employed on Infrastructure projects.

AUDITOR GENERAL

DISPUTE WITH DEPARTMENTS OVER UNREPORTED LIABILITIES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

(Response to question raised by Hon. Roch Bolduc on June 8, 1995)

Generally accepted accounting principles in Canada, as established by the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, require the recognition of liabilities associated with future site restoration costs when the likelihood of their being incurred is established as the result of environmental law, contract, or because an organization has established a policy to restore a site and when such costs can be reasonably determined. The position of the Government is that, on the whole, these costs cannot yet be reasonably determined.

This is a complex issue in that the costs associated with remediating environmental damage will very much depend on the future use to be made of the site. A different standard may apply to a future wilderness site than will apply to a future day care site. This uncertainty, coupled with a variety of standards and methods of remediation, makes reasonable quantification extremely difficult.

The government is working towards full disclosure of environmental liabilities in the Accounts of Canada. The government has provided note disclosure since 1991 and the intent is to enhance that disclosure this fiscal year. Government officials are working with officials of the Office of the Auditor General on this matter and do not anticipate an audit reservation on the financial statements. As was recognized in the government's response to the recommendations of the Auditor General in his May report, the requirement to disclose this liability is accepted and will be met when a reasonable estimate can be determined.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

RETURN TO DEMOCRACY IN NIGERIA—EFFORTS OF DEPARTMENT

(Response to question raised by Hon. Noël A. Kinsella on June 13, 1995)

The announcement expressing concern at delayed democracy in Nigeria, as issued by the Canadian mission in Lagos, was in fact issued in Ottawa and repeated in Lagos.

Measures adopted by Canada since the annulment of the 1993 presidential election apparently won by Chief Moshood Abiola include the following:

- received Abiola in Ottawa and spoken out for his safety;
- demanded diplomatic access to political detainees;
- cancelled visit to Canada by Institute of Strategic Studies;
- suspended Nigeria's eligibility for military and police training assistance;
- cancelled proposed visit of Inspector General of Police;
- declined request to negotiate investment protection agreement;
- refused visas to senior Nigerian military and ministers;
- blocked requests to send military-capable exports to Nigeria;
- called repeatedly for Abiola's release as an indispensable part of any solution;
- lowered bilateral relations to Acting High Commissioner level;
- sponsored several prominent Nigerian democratic activists to visit Canadian cities;
- declined to host meeting of Canada/Nigeria Joint Commission;
- cited Nigerian abuses in several UN human-rights speeches and co-sponsored UN resolution on human rights in Nigeria;
- refused to accredit new Nigerian military attachés.

The adequacy of the existing measures is being reviewed.

It is worth recalling that Nigeria is a regional power with the largest population and oil production in Africa, and troops stationed in several West African nations. It receives no government-to-government aid from Canada, and enjoys a substantial bilateral trade surplus with Canada based on exports of over $600 million of oil in each of the last two years. It is because Nigeria is relatively impervious to foreign influence that its military regime has already endured for 12 years, indeed all but four of the last 29 years, as noted in the first press release.

Only through high-level contact and dialogue can we encourage greater openness in other countries and advance Canadian interests at the same time. With China, our policy of engagement is built on four pillars: economic partnership, sustainable development, peace and security, and support for human rights, good governance and the rule of law. Regarding the fourth pillar in our relationship with China — support for human rights, good governance and the rule of law — the people of Canada naturally expect that our foreign policy will reflect the democratic principles upon which Canadian society is based. Our government believes that a great deal can be achieved through dialogue. While we may not always agree with our partners at the negotiating table, our strong commitment to long-term global peace and stability will keep Canada at the table.

On a bilateral basis, we have expressed our concerns on human rights to the Chinese leadership during high-level visits and meetings. The Prime Minister first did so with President Jiang Zemin during his visit to China in November 1993 and, more recently, during Vice Premier Zou Jiahua's visit to Ottawa in April 1994. Canada will continue to use both bilateral and multilateral meetings, such as the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, to express our concerns about abuses in China.

CANADIAN HERITAGE

ABOLITION OF ART BANK—ROLE OF MINISTER

(Response to question raised by Hon. Eymard G. Corbin on June 14, 1995)

The Art Bank was created in 1972 at the initiative of the visual arts section of the Canada Council, with special funds obtained through a Treasury Board submission put forward by the Secretary of State.

The supporting documents that led to the Bank's creation and to the allocation of the funds required for its first five years of operation indicated that the program would not be terminated without consulting with the Government through the Secretary of State. After the initial five years, the program was continued by the Council, which is responsible for its resource allocation, policy and administration. Since 1978, there has been no specific requirement for the Canada Council to consult with the Government. Therefore, the quoted phrase "The program will not be terminated without consultation with the government through the Secretary of State" has not been in force since then.

The decision to close the Art Bank was made by the Canada Council Board, after a strategic review of its operation and programs. The Council developed its strategic plan independently from the Department. The Council's strategic plan states that priority will be given to programs which support creation, production and dissemination of the arts, with a particular emphasis on dissemination to greater numbers of Canadians across Canada. Viewed within these objectives, the Art Bank, although a unique and valuable program of support to the visual arts, was considered not to fit within the plan: its cost of operations were said to be too high, and its program of dissemination largely limited to government office spaces.

The Canada Council has appointed a Committee of Experts to make recommendations concerning the future of the Art Bank's collection of artwork. The Committee has begun its deliberations and will report to the Board before year end. The federal Government is paying close attention to the process now underway and remains sensitive to the concerns expressed by the members of the contemporary art scene in Canada.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

DISPUTE WITH EUROPEAN UNION ON NEWSPRINT— GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Gerald J. Comeau on June 15, 1995)

Canada and several other countries are engaged in negotiations with the European Union for tariff compensation. This is owed as a result of increased import duties on Canadian and other countries' exports to Sweden, Finland, and Austria since those three countries joined the European Union on January 1, 1995. The European Union ministerial decision to implement a reduction for newsprint is considered as partial compensation only. The European Union has indicated their willingness to improve upon these tariff reductions in the final negotiations.

These negotiations are in no way related to the turbot issue and the government does not expect that Canada's action on turbot will prevent the goal of finalizing an acceptable long-term compensation package from being achieved.

Minister MacLaren has decided not to increase duty rates at this moment provided that the European Union is prepared to accelerate negotiations to conclude a final compensation package as soon as possible.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

SALES ABROAD OF CANDU REACTORS—REQUEST FOR STATUS REPORT ON ENVIRONMENTAL AND FINANCIAL CONCERNS

June 15, 1995)

ROMANIA

Canada and Romania signed a Nuclear Co-operation Agreement (NCA) in 1977, allowing for the establishment of commercial relations in the development and application of atomic energy for peaceful purposes. It is important to note that the NCA was primarily triggered by Romania's interest in Canadian nuclear technology. Romania was attracted by the safety features of the CANDU reactor and the possibilities for nuclear autonomy that could derive from the relative accessibility of the technology, as well as the domestic availability of heavy water and natural uranium as the fuel for the reactor.

In the early 1980s, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited (AECL) played an advisory role to the Romanians. In 1990, it was invited to complete the first unit of the planned five-unit Cernavoda nuclear power plant in Romania. Cernavoda Unit 1 is now completed; full in-service is expected in early 1996.

Environmental Concerns:

The CANDU reactor in Romania was built in accordance with strict Western safety standards. That the reactor will be completed in accordance with these standards is ensured by AECL and an Italian consortium, which have the contractual responsibility for completing it.

The Romanian government shares our concern for safety and has taken the necessary measures to ensure that the strictest safety standards are observed. Internal reviews by both Romania and AECL, plus the International Atomic Energy Agency, have confirmed that Cernavoda Unit 1 will be completed to the high standards of quality and safety that Canada demands.

In addition, over the past several years, Canada has been training Romanian reactor operators and regulators to ensure that Unit 1 will be operated to a high standard of safety. Over 100 Romanian operators have been through a training course run by New Brunswick Power at its Point Lepreau Station, using the Canadian utility's full scale control room simulator. The Point Lepreau CANDU unit is the same basic design as the CANDU 6 being built in Romania.

AECL will be responsible for operating the reactor for the first year and a half to ensure that Western operating standards are well established.

Financial Concerns:

In 1979, the Canadian government approved a loan of over US$680 million through the Export Development Corporation (EDC) for the construction of a CANDU reactor in Romania. Romania used only a part of the loan, which it later repaid in full with interest. Another loan of over C$300 million was approved in 1991. Both loans were provided at market, non-concessional interest rates.

In the early part of the program, the Romanian authorities clearly experienced a number of problems and delays which have increased the cost of the project. However, it is difficult for Canada to know how Romanian's cost estimates changed during this period.

Since AECL and its Italian partner took charge of the project in 1991, the work has progressed well, even though unexpected delays and additional costs have been required to upgrade some of the equipment. However, there does not appear to have been a very significant cost increase over this period.

AECL and its Italian joint-venture partner are interested in securing financing to complete Unit 2 at Cernavoda. If AECL decides to approach the Canadian government for additional funding to complete Unit 2, the question will be examined carefully.

INDIA

Canada supplied India with the CIRUS nuclear research reactor and two CANDU power reactors at the Rajasthan Atomic Power Plant in the 1960s (RAPP 1 and 2). Thus, India was one of Canada's first partners in advancing the peaceful uses of nuclear energy. Canada terminated bilateral nuclear cooperation with India in 1976.

The Canadian government's decision to suspend bilateral nuclear cooperation with India was triggered by India's refusal to accept Canada's new nuclear non-proliferation policy conditions. These requirements, which included signature of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) and accepting International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) safeguards on all present and future nuclear activity, were set out in response to India's 1974 nuclear explosion. At the time, it was felt that material subject to Canadian controls was used in the explosion, in violation of the agreement between Canada and India.

Canada does not have nuclear trade or cooperation with India.

The situation between Canada and India is different from that with Romania, because India is not a signatory of the NPT and does not accept IAEA safeguards on its nuclear activities.

In 1990, on the basis of IAEA recommendations, Canada offered limited safety assistance to help India meet the serious, urgent safety problems with the RAPPS 1 and 2 reactors that it supplied in the 1960s and which are under IAEA safeguards. The offer to assist was made with safety concerns in mind; it was not intended to make the reactors operate more effectively. Canada's limited assistance would be carried out under IAEA auspices. So far, India has not accepted the offer of assistance.

The safety of the RAPPS reactors is clearly the responsibility of the Indian authorities.

It is important to note, however, that the RAPPS 1 and 2 reactors are not currently in operation. The Indian authorities have shut them down for safety reasons due to deteriorating pressure tubes. Canadian experts were notified of the problem in a February 1994 meeting of an IAEA technical committee. In July 1994, an IAEA consultants meeting involving Canadian and Indian experts prepared a report to assist the Indian authorities on solving the problem.

In view of the energy India will need now and in the near future to sustain economic development, the government may be reconsidering the offer of assistance made by Canada in 1990.

POTENTIAL SALES

Possible sale of Canadian nuclear technology to Indonesia, Egypt or China raise no difficulties for Canada in terms of bilateral nuclear cooperation. All three have signed bilateral Nuclear Cooperation Agreements with Canada pledging to use nuclear energy for peaceful purposes only: Indonesia signed on July 12, 1982, Egypt on May 17, 1982, and China on November 7, 1994.

A Nuclear Cooperation Agreement with a partner country is an instrument that both opens the way for bilateral nuclear exchanges and provides assurances that interchange between Canada and the partner country takes place in accordance with our nuclear non-proliferation policy. Canada believes that bilateral nuclear cooperation makes nuclear trade more transparent, and it also ensures that nuclear items supplied by Canada are being used for peaceful purposes only.

The Canadian government considers that these three countries are responsible nuclear partners who will use the nuclear items supplied by Canada for peaceful purposes only.

Both Indonesia and Egypt are signatories of the Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) and have accepted IAEA safeguards on all of their nuclear activities. As a NPT nuclear weapon state, China differs slightly from the two other countries, as it has a Voluntary Offer Safeguards Agreement with the IAEA.

Canada has received assurances from China that the nuclear items subject to the Canada-China Nuclear Cooperation Agreement will be used only within the framework of civilian activities, subject to the safeguards agreement between China and the IAEA.

NATURAL RESOURCES

NEW FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL SILVICULTURE AGREEMENT— GOVERNMENT POSITION

In the February 27, 1995 budget documents, the federal government reconfirmed the position originally announced by the previous federal government, that the Forest Resource Development Agreements with the provinces will be discontinued.

The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency (ACOA) is in the process of negotiating new agreements with the provinces. Under the new agreements, should there be individual projects involving value-added and trade-related initiatives in the forestry sector, ACOA would be willing to consider assistance within its limited financial capacity.

The federal government recognizes the Province of New Brunswick program (ie. Silviculture Improvement Program) and the contributions made by the private woodlot sector in New Brunswick. The Agreement between the Province of New Brunswick and the New Brunswick Federation of Woodlot Owners is important in encouraging the management of private forest lands in New Brunswick and in increasing the economic, social and environmental potential of these lands for the benefit of other stakeholders.

The termination of all forest resource development agreements (FRDAs) under which private woodlots were financially supported, was announced by the previous government in its 1993 budget. In view of the current fiscal situation, the government confirmed in its February 1995 budget that the FRDAs will not be renewed.

Historically, the New Brunswick FRDA has been funded through the ACOA. Given the severe financial constraints that all departments, including ACOA, are facing, it has not been possible to identify new sources of funding to support a transition forestry program in New Brunswick and elsewhere in Canada.

Moreover, federal-provincial/territorial cooperation is under continued discussion with provincial and territorial colleagues through the Canadian Council of Forest Ministers. Natural Resources Canada remains committed to working with the provinces and territories, within the limits of our financial ability in areas of federal responsibility, such as international trade, science and technology, on job creation and sustainable management of our forests.

HEALTH

REORGANIZATION OF BLOOD SUPPLY SYSTEM— GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Richard J. Doyle on June 20, 1995)

Last February the Government released the Interim Report of the Krever Commission — the Commission of Inquiry on the Blood System in Canada. It is very important to reiterate the main conclusion of that Interim Report. Justice Krever said that Canada's blood supply is not less safe than that of other developed nations. This is a very important message for Canadians to hear, and it bears repeating.

Justice Krever also urged all the participants in the national blood supply system not to be complacent. The Government feels this message should be heeded by all partners in the blood supply system. For its part, the Government has acted, and will continue to take action to strengthen the safety of the blood supply. The Government indicated as much when it released its Response to Justice Krever's Interim Report, which was tabled in the House of Commons by the Minister of Health on June 7/95.

Justice Krever himself said that his Interim Report was not a full examination of the blood system. He focussed on the current safety of Canada's blood supply, and he said that he was leaving an assessment of the national blood supply program and system for his final report. He also said that, at this time, it would be premature to expect full implementation of all the recommendations he makes in his Interim Report. General questions about the national blood supply system and ideas about its organization would best be served by referring to Justice Krever's advice in his final report, which is due to be submitted to the Government by December 31 of this year.

The blood system in Canada is multi-faceted. It includes the provinces and territories, hospitals and medical practitioners, the Canadian Blood Agency, the federal government, and others. Justice Krever recognized that the system today is dynamic and undergoing changes at a rapid rate.

The Government of Canada will continue to monitor these changes, which are occurring at all levels of the system. Where it is appropriate and within its jurisdiction, the Government will regulate and inspect all manufacturers of blood, blood products and components to ensure they are safe, efficacious and of the highest possible quality.

The Government has considerable scientific, technical and administrative expertise which it has brought to bear on those recommendations which are within the scope and mandate of the Government's jurisdictional authority. Where practical and warranted, the Government is prepared to apply its expertise to assist others in implementing Justice Krever's recommendations relating to their jurisdictional authorities.

Very recently there have been claims made in the media that there may be "chronic blood shortages" in some of the country's hospitals and that public confidence in the safety of the blood supply needs to be regained. One of the best ways to rebuild public confidence is for all the partners in the national system to demonstrate their commitment to finding new ways to make the blood supply even safer. The Government has taken action and will continue to act to strengthen the safety of the blood supply. Others are acting in their own ways to rebuild public confidence. Indeed, Canadians should be reassured by Justice Krever's conclusion affirming the quality of the Canadian blood supply.

Justice Krever also emphasized that nothing he recommended in his Interim Report will diminish the urgent need for Canadians to donate blood. He recognized the enormous contributions made by Canada's blood donors by saying that all members of Canadian society owe blood donors a debt that can never be repaid.

One cannot but agree with Justice Krever, who said that by their past generosity, the blood donors of Canada have shown that they can be relied on to continue their selfless actions as long as blood is necessary for therapeutic purposes.

Turning to the question of the National Forum on Health and whether the subject of the national blood supply system is receiving specific attention from the Forum, it should be noted that the mandate of the Forum is to inform and involve Canadians and advise government on the ways to improve the health of the population. The Forum has been designed to promote a dialogue with Canadians about their health care system to determine whether changes can be made that lead to better health while respecting the principles on which our system was built. The Forum has begun to examine key issues under four main themes, and there may be some opportunity to discuss the national blood supply system under this thematic approach, but that is very much up to the Forum itself to determine.

CLOSER CONTROL ON TOBACCO PRODUCTS— GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Mira Spivak on June 20, 1995)

The purpose of the Hazardous Products Act is to ensure the safety of personal, household, or recreational products by either prohibiting them or by regulating their sale, advertisement, and importation. Products are regulated under the Hazardous Products Act in order to make them safe. Currently, it is not possible to make tobacco safe.

The Department of Justice has carried out an in-depth review of the possibility of using the Hazardous Products Act to regulate tobacco and has confirmed that it is not an appropriate legislative vehicle for this purpose.

Current drug enactments are not designed to control tobacco. Basically, under the Food and Drugs Act, a drug is defined as anything intended for use for medical purposes. Tobacco does not meet this criteria since it has no medical use.

There already exists a comprehensive legislative framework and strategy to deal with tobacco under the Tobacco Products Control Act and the Tobacco Sales to Young Persons Act (TSYPA). With respect to modifying the Tobacco Products Control Act, since its constitutionality has been challenged before the Supreme Court, it would be inappropriate to modify it until the Court's decision is rendered.

The government will have an opportunity to review tobacco policy options once the decision from the Supreme Court has been made.

HUMAN RIGHTS

ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADIAN RACE RELATIONS FOUNDATION— GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to a question raised by the Hon. Noël A. Kinsella on June 20, 1995)

The official proclamation date of the Canadian Race Relations Foundation Act has not yet been determined. Several implementation activities are required before proceeding with proclamation. These include appointing an Executive Director, selecting the Board of Directors, strengthening the accountability regime of the Canadian Race Relations Foundation Act and developing some operating guidelines for the Board.

While selection for the Board of Directors and the Executive Director have begun, the process has yet to be completed.

CANADIAN HERITAGE

CATALOGUE OF NATIONAL SPORTS EVENTS—FAILURE TO PUBLISH IN FRENCH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Pierre Claude Nolin on June 21, 1995)

The contribution agreement issued by Sport Canada, which is the contract outlining the obligations of recipient organizations, includes the requirement to provide equitable service to the public in both official languages.

Officials of the Sport Canada branch of the Department of Canadian Heritage have contacted representatives from the Canadian Sport and Fitness Administration Centre (CSFAC) to remind them of their contractual obligations, as recipients of federal financial support, with respect to the publishing of materials in both official languages.

CSFAC officials have translated the Canadian Sport Guide — summer edition into French, and it was released to the media and the public on July 24, 1995.

Although the cuts in support to the CSFAC over the 1994-95 and 1995-96 fiscal years have been major, the CSFAC made an error in judgement in stating that the guide could not be published in French because of the cuts.

Sport Canada officials have met with CSFAC management, reminded them of their contractual responsibilities as a federally supported institution, and resolved the situation — the guide will be produced in French.

HEALTH

USE OF BOVINE GROWTH HORMONE SOMATOTROPIN—DELAY IN INVESTIGATION OF HUMAN HEALTH RISKS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Mira Spivak on June 21, 1995)

Health Canada is the regulator of this product and makes scientifically-based decisions that result in the issuing or not issuing of a Notice of Compliance. Until the review is completed, rBST cannot be sold or distributed in Canada. The review by Health Canada is independent of any moratorium.

The moratorium was a voluntary undertaking on the part of the manufacturers of BST. Health Canada must remain as an independent regulatory body. As such, Health Canada is not in a position to call for a voluntary moratorium.

The scientific and procedural information provided to the Standing Committee on Agriculture and Agri-Food was correct. Under the Access to Information Act, this could not include confidential, proprietorial data contained in the manufacturers' submissions.

FISHERIES AND OCEANS

CUTS IN DEPARTMENTAL BUDGET—DEMISE OF WINNIPEG FRESHWATER SCIENCE TEAMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to questions raised by Hon. Janis Johnson on June 21, 1995)

The Freshwater Institute (FWI), one of the world's leading research centres for freshwater fisheries research, is the regional headquarters of the Central and Arctic Region for the federal Department of Fisheries and Oceans. This region extends throughout the provinces of Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, the Northwest Territories, and the North Yukon Slope. The FWI provides facilities for fisheries and environmental research, as well as for non-research activities of the Region such as fisheries inspection, fisheries management, economic analysis, and administration. It is the major federal government centre for freshwater fisheries and Arctic fisheries research.

Scientists at the FWI play a critical role in a number of regional and national issues relative to freshwater, freshwater fisheries, and Arctic marine fish and marine mammals, issues such as the impact of Arctic oil and gas development on fish habitats, toxic contaminants, aquaculture development, inland fisheries enhancement, and acid rain.

The work of the Freshwater Institute at the Experimental Lakes Area in northwestern Ontario focuses on the experimental manipulation of small lakes to long-term pollution stresses. The program has contributed to world-class scientific advancements; notably for the effects of acid rain and phosphorus-based laundry detergents. The government is hopeful that this program will continue to generate the scientific knowledge needed to support management of Canada's water resources.

The work of the Great Lakes Laboratory for Fisheries and Aquatic Sciences, which is located at the Canada Centre for Inland Waters in Burlington, Ontario, is an important component of Canada's commitment to the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. Water Quality in the Great Lakes continues to be a high priority of this government.

It is intended, as part of the rationalization of freshwater and marine responsibilities in the Department of Fisheries and Oceans (DFO) and the Department of the Environment (DOE), to transfer the affected freshwater programs from DFO to DOE. These programs, as is the case for all departmental programs, are facing budgetary reductions as a result of program review. The budget reduction to the affected DFO freshwater science programs for the 1995/96 fiscal year is approximately 22%. Pending discussions with Environment Canada, no decisions have been made for reductions in future years,

On November 18, 1994, a Memorandum of Intent was signed at the Deputy Minister level, on the rationalization and transfer of responsibilities between the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the Department of the Environment. The objective is to reduce overlap and duplication between federal departments and other levels of government. Under this initiative, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans would become primarily an oceans department. The Department of the Environment would become the lead federal department for freshwater responsibilities. A further aspect would involve the delegation of freshwater fish habitat protection and freshwater fisheries management to provinces.

Discussions between the two departments are continuing on the transfer of freshwater and marine programs. These talks are taking longer than originally anticipated due to the complex, multi-faceted nature of some of the affected programs, and the difficult challenge of meeting the reduction targets. In the case of the program at the Experimental Lakes Area, for example, an examination is underway of potential partnership alternatives which could provide a sound long-term financial base for the program.

HEALTH

BOVINE GROWTH HORMONE—LINK BETWEEN IGF-1 AND BREAST CANCER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Mira Spivak on June 27, 1995)

Products containing rBST are currently under evaluation in the Bureau of Veterinary Drugs of the Department of Health. Review of safety issues on IGF-I, including its physiological function and possible link to breast cancer is still ongoing, and no decisions have been made regarding the issuance of a notice of compliance for these veterinary drug products.

Until the evaluation by Health Canada is completed and a decision made, rBST cannot be sold for use in Canada.

COMMUNICATIONS

GRANTING OF PUBLIC RELATIONS CONTRACT FOR G-7 SUMMIT—CONTRAVENTION OF TREASURY BOARD REGULATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION—REQUEST FOR ESTIMATED FINAL COST

(Response to questions raised by the Hon. Pierre Claude Nolin and the Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard on June 27, 1995)

There are strict conditions under which the Government may offer sole source contracts. These include cases where the contracts are smaller than $30,000, in cases of urgency or in cases where corporations sponsor free goods or services. A number of these cases applied to various contracts arranged to support the Halifax Summit.

The preparations for the Halifax Summit were done in a very tight time frame, necessitating some quick decisions. In the case of the public relations firm, the decision to award a sole-sourced contract to Groupe Columbia Inc. was made on the basis of an urgent need for specialized communications assistance for the Summit. The decision was taken after reviewing a number of informal proposals from public relations firms, although a formal tendering process was not undertaken. Groupe Columbia submitted the earliest and most complete bid to handle all the communications functions of the Summit. Further, the firm's capabilities were well known to the Summit organizers.

The firm provided specific assistance in organizing public events and media relations for the Summit. The assistance provided by Groupe Columbia Inc. helped foster the positive image of Canada portrayed in the media. It was also instrumental in ensuring good relations with the people of Halifax.

The final cost of company's services is $431,000.00. The total cost of the Halifax Summit was $28 million, cheaper than both the Toronto Summit in 1988 and Naples Summit in 1994.

GRANTING OF PUBLIC RELATIONS CONTRACT FOR G-7 SUMMIT—REQUEST FOR PARTICULARS ON ADVICE GIVEN TO RCMP

(Response to question raised by Hon. Marcel Prud'homme on June 27, 1995)

On March 9, 1995, the RCMP contracted a public relations firm from Halifax, Arlington Consultants, to conduct a media relations training course for 18 RCMP, local police, military and Ports Canada officers responsible for media relations during the Halifax G-7 Summit. This contract was financed through the Halifax Summit Office. Since the contract was for less than $30,000, Treasury Board guidelines allowed for it to be signed without a formal tendering process.

The purpose of the course was to train the officers in media liaison functions and general public relations, particularly how to respond to media questions, how to present useful information and how to ensure that the people of Halifax were informed on security arrangements affecting access to downtown areas and Summit public events. The course took place on 1-8 May, 1995 in Halifax.

The final cost of the contract was $13,200.

SOLICITOR GENERAL

RCMP MARKETING CONTRACT WITH DISNEY CORPORATION—
REQUEST FOR PARTICULARS

(Response to questions raised by Hon. David Tkachuk and Hon. Brenda M. Robertson on June 28, 1995)

The Mounted Police Foundation (MPF) was established to assist the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) in administering the commercial use of the intellectual properties which are the principal public identifiers of the RCMP. The Foundation was incorporated in June of 1994. Its Board of Directors is comprised of prominent members of the community who are volunteering their time, energy and experience in support of the RCMP and its community policing initiatives. As the Master Licensee for the RCMP, the MPF will receive, maintain and manage funds generated from the Licensing Programs. These funds will be directed to support and to enhance RCMP community policing, public relations and crime prevention programs throughout Canada.

The RCMP Product Licensing Program was formally launched on January 27, 1995, in a press conference attended by the Solicitor General, the Commissioner of the RCMP and the President of the Mounted Police Foundation (MPF). The event generated national press coverage. In this regard, over 450 letters were sent out to known users of RCMP intellectual property, by the RCMP and the MPF, advising them of the licensing program and of the application requirements. In addition, pursuant to Section 9(1)(n)(iii) of the Trade Mark Act, the RCMP filed formal notices with the Registrar of Trade Marks. As a result, notice of the licensing program was published in various Trade Mark journals.

Following these communications initiatives, the MPF received unsolicited offers of service and/or proposals from a variety of companies, of both Canadian and American origin, specializing in licensing or in specific aspects of the licensing industry. Interest from solely American companies was not considered. The MPF reviewed applications from Canadian companies at length, focusing on company history and reputation in the licensing industry, established marketing and advertising capabilities, creative capabilities, revenue control systems, access to the Canadian manufacturing base, and access to international marketing and distribution networks. The MPF determined that the proposal from the Walt Disney Company (Canada) Ltd. was superior in many ways.

Under the terms of the contract, the Walt Disney Company (Canada) Ltd., will act in the capacity of agent for the Mounted Police Foundation, to develop and to administer the RCMP Product Licensing Program. Walt Disney (Canada) Ltd. will not be directly involved in the manufacturing of goods but rather will license Canadian companies to supply licensed goods for the program. The RCMP retains all ownership of its intellectual property and will have final approval over all use of its image by licensees to the program.

Royalties from the sale of licensed goods will be shared between the MPF and Walt Disney Canada (Ltd.) on a sliding, five-year scale. In the first year of the agreement, the MPF will retain 51 per cent, while Walt Disney Canada (Ltd.) will receive 49 per cent, sliding to 55 per cent (MPF) and 45 per cent (Walt Disney Canada Ltd.) by year five.

The costs of administering the program (i.e., creative, administrative, and management personnel; contract negotiation; marketing; advertising; revenue control; etc.) will be the sole responsibility of Walt Disney Canada (Ltd.) and will be paid for out of its share of the royalties.

The MPF's percentage of the royalties will be allocated to support existing RCMP community policing programs, such as crime prevention initiatives, victims services, and drug awareness programs.

The contract in question is between the MPF and the Walt Disney Company (Canada) Ltd., based in Etobicoke, Ontario. Contract negotiations were conducted by the MPF at Disney's offices in Etobicoke and with the RCMP in its offices in Ottawa. Expenses incurred by the MPF in these negotiations were paid for by the MPF. These negotiations did not involve the travel of RCMP or MPF personnel outside Canada.

The MPF has contracted with the Walt Disney Company (Canada) Ltd. which acts independently of the parent company in the United States and which is fully equipped to handle all aspects of the program. Walt Disney (Canada) Ltd. is well established in the Canadian licensing industry and has been since 1966. The company has extensive ties with Canadian manufacturing and distribution networks. All operational and administrative aspects of the MPF and the Walt Disney (Canada) Ltd. agreement will be handled solely by the Walt Disney Company (Canada) Ltd. Under the provisions of the agreement, the Walt Disney Company (Canada) Ltd. will give priority to Canadian manufacturers as licensees to the program. As the Walt Disney Company (Canada) Ltd. expands the licensing program to include foreign markets in the United States, United Kingdom and Japan, it will be liaising with Disney offices in those countries to use existing distribution channels for the marketing of RCMP licensed products.

Attention: Mr. Russell Goodman

Dear Sirs:

Re: Examination of Lease

In accordance with the request of the Minister responsible for Canada Post Corporation ("the Minister") as set out in the attached letter of July 10, 1995, Price Waterhouse is appointed to carry out an independent review and evaluation of the details relating to the lease entered into by Canada Post Corporation ("CPC") for its retail outlet located at 124 Pitt Street, Sydney, Nova Scotia.

The objective of your examination is to assess the basis for, and financial merits of, the aforementioned lease and the transactions directly related to it ("the CPC lease"). Your examination shall also include interviews of those individuals to be selected by Price Waterhouse as you deem necessary.

In carrying out your examination you will have unrestricted access to CPC employees and to documents in their possession. Additionally, CPC will assist Price Waterhouse in arranging interviews of individuals other than CPC employees who have, or are alleged to have, direct knowledge of the CPC lease. Your work should specifically include visits to CPC locations in Sydney, Halifax and Ottawa.

At the substantial completion of your examination, you should submit a preliminary report, in draft form, to CPC. Upon receipt of the preliminary draft report, CPC will provide Price Waterhouse with comments in written form. Specifically, CPC agrees that it will advise Price Waterhouse as to the accuracy of material events and facts as presented by Price Waterhouse in its draft report and known by CPC. A final report should then be prepared and submitted to CPC.

CPC agrees to hold Price Waterhouse free and harmless from any demands, claims or actions and to indemnify Price Waterhouse from any awards or judgments for damages including interest and costs arising out of or in any way related to the execution of the mandate described in this letter.

Price Waterhouse shall treat all information that it receives in a strictly confidential manner and shall not comment on or release any information or its report to anyone without the express written authorization of CPC. Notwithstanding the foregoing and subject to prior consulting with CPC, Price Waterhouse shall have the right to comment on any material public misrepresentation of the contents of its report that compromises its integrity.

Price Waterhouse shall invoice CPC for the examination, including any work and costs related to the defence of its report, based upon the time devoted to the assignment at rates customary for such assignments. Price Waterhouse will also be reimbursed its customary travel and other out-of-pocket expenses, including, in consultation with CPC, the costs of any special advisors engaged to assist Price Waterhouse in connection with the examination or defence thereof. CPC confirms that it will pay any such invoices or other charges upon their receipt.

Either CPC or Price Waterhouse shall have the right to terminate this examination upon 24 hours written notice at which time Price Waterhouse shall, if requested, return copies of all documents related to the CPC lease and the examination in its possession. In the event of the early termination of the examination, Price Waterhouse shall be entitled to be fully paid for its time and other charges up to the expiry of the notice period, as well as, in consultation with CPC, for time and costs reasonably incurred subsequently in defence of its examination and, if applicable, draft or other reports.

CPC agrees that any changes to the scope of the mandate described herein shall be communicated by CPC to Price Waterhouse in writing and shall be covered by the terms of this letter of engagement.

ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF BIRTHDAY

Hon. David Tkachuk: Honourable senators, I rise today because I am slightly intrigued and always amazed at the life of John George Diefenbaker. He was born on September 18, 100 years ago.

I can still see him — as I am sure many of you can — as if it were yesterday. I heard him speak at the 1974 Progressive Conservative Convention. I remember it well. It was held in the Adam Ballroom of the Bessborough Hotel in Saskatoon.

Hours earlier, I had been formally introduced to him for the first time. He stated to me that I write a very good letter. I had written to him some three or four months earlier outlining to him why I thought it was important for him to come to Saskatchewan and speak at our convention. I thought we could really win in that province. Of course, in 1974, this was not something that one could easily believe.

Mr. Diefenbaker looked very old and tired, and he could not hear well. At the banquet table that night, he looked down, not at us but down at his lap and at the floor. I thought we would be in for a bad night, because I thought he was human. I do not remember who introduced him, but I remember him rising slowly with his back arched forward. He was not stooped over, just straight. He placed his papers on the lectern, not like many of today's politicians with their neatly typed papers, and then he started.

His eyes transformed him. All of a sudden, he became very young to us. As a matter of fact, he looked as young as we did, and as strong. He was bold, irreverent and funny. When he sat down, he looked old again.

With Mr. Diefenbaker, the line in the sand was always drawn. I have concluded that he is remembered for what he said, and, yes, how he said it. He loved to take on the Liberals, Otto Lang and Pierre Trudeau. However, after Bennett and King and St. Laurent, onto the spotlight came Diefenbaker. He was different, exciting and charismatic. He was a populist. He was eloquent in contrast to all those around him and immediately before him.

People filled arenas by the thousands, and politics became personal. Many of us became involved in politics because of him — for him or against him — no doubt because of him.

Diefenbaker liked to say that he opened up the Progressive Conservative Party and made everyone feel welcome. However, he really opened up all parties. While there have been populists in politics before, he was the first national populist to become Prime Minister.

To put his vision in perspective, there are those views that are well known: the expansion of the north, the profiling of western agriculture, and the bill of rights. However, years ago, I retrieved from the library his manifesto from the 1938 provincial election, when he was Leader of the Conservative Party in Saskatchewan. I will quote a couple of lines from it, honourable senators, because they are interesting.

In that 1938 manifesto — most of which he penned himself — Diefenbaker stated:

The Conservative Party pledges itself to increase grants to expectant mothers.

The Conservative Party approves of the need for health insurance, state medicine and hospitalization, and undertakes to fully investigate the various forms thereof...

The Conservative Party pledges itself to:

- (1) The extension of public health services to combat cancer, mental and other degenerative diseases;
- (2) The establishment of child guidance clinics;
- (3) The provision of facilities to permit periodical medical examination of all individuals over the age of 35 years.

The Conservative Party pledges itself to the adoption of a system of contributory unemployment insurance.

The social policy, combined with his strong support of individual liberty and free enterprise, laid a new foundation for our party. If only Diefenbaker could hear Dalton Camp today! The irony is that he is speaking through Dalton Camp today; Dalton just does not know it!

Mr. Diefenbaker also said that it seems the more things stay the same, the longer you are in politics. I will quote from that 1938 manifesto — and if I am running out of time, perhaps honourable senators will excuse me. That manifesto stated:

- (A) By making substantial reductions in the salaries of cabinet ministers;
- (B) By reducing the number of the members of the cabinet;
- (C) By reducing the number of the members of the legislature;

(D) By making substantial reductions in the salaries of the higher paid civil servants;

(E) By coordinating to a greater degree the various departments of the government;

(F) By coordinating to a greater degree the services rendered in Saskatchewan by both the federal and provincial governments, thus preventing overlapping and duplication and making possible the giving of the same services with the elimination of many travelling inspectors;

(G) By eliminating unnecessary boards and commissions, thereby placing public administration in the hands of bodies responsible to the people.

Incidentally, honourable senators, he lost that election.

John Diefenbaker appealed to Canadians, and to him there were no hyphenated Canadians. Being of German ancestry, he did not ask Germans to support him because he was a German. He would consider it unbecoming to play upon that. He reached out to Jews, Ukrainians and aboriginal peoples, not to give them a special place but simply an equal place in Canada.

It was he who stood alone against apartheid. There were no black votes to be won in Canada. He stood against the policies of the government of South Africa because, after all, those policies were un-Canadian; there were just not right. That was his paradox: the welcoming of Canadians into the political process, his joy around people and before audiences, his strength and, at the same time, to the seemingly less than collegial way of operating, a loner who saw demons around him but was never afraid to face them alone. This same supposed weakness in administration was the thing that gave him strength when it came to human rights and natural justice.

Diefenbaker loved Canada unabashedly, unswervingly and undeniably — and this holds more meaning today in Canada in light of what is happening in our neighbouring province of Quebec. To him, there were no parts that he loved more than, or to the exclusion of, any other. He had what we might call today unconditional love for his country, and he accepted the whole of his country, despite all its faults.

He is laid to rest, with Olive at his side, on the banks of the South Saskatchewan River at the University of Saskatchewan, and alone as always. There is not another headstone for miles. He was a man of this earth; he gave much more than he took from it. That should be said of all of us.

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, the Right Honourable John George Diefenbaker was an interesting person, to put it mildly. I had a great admiration for some of his characteristics. I probably got better personally acquainted with him than most members of Parliament, and perhaps even better than most members of his own party, because he and I were in opposition in the House of Commons for many years — that is, from 1963 until approximately 1967. That is the year he lost the election to Pearson.

I was swept out of office in the landslide of 1958, together with every other member of my party, almost all the members of what was then the CCF party, and most of the Liberals, too. The Conservatives under Diefenbaker won the highest majority in Canadian history up to that time, being 208 members.

However, there is a lesson to be learnt here. Since that time, Prime Minister Mulroney received a higher majority, but when he was swept out of office, it was with a majority that was even higher. At that time, the Conservatives who had been in office were all swept out but one, plus a member from Saint John who had previously not been in Parliament.

Mr. Diefenbaker will be recorded as being one of the great personalities in Canadian history. There is no question in my mind about that. To say that he had a good political philosophy is wrong, in my view — or at least I did not agree with it. It is a philosophy that has caused me a great deal of trouble throughout much of my political career. In retrospect, I am not sure that, politically, Mr. Diefenbaker's administrative policy was good for Canada. Yet, I hold a very warm feeling towards him because I know that he was striving to establish a government that would be responsive to some of the things that Senator Tkachuk has just been talking about. I do not know what you would call them — either pink Conservatives, left-wing Conservatives, or whatever. He certainly was not a right-winger. Senator Tkachuk made that point, and I agree with it.

Then when the Liberals were in office, I was a member of the Social Credit Party at the time, and we were in opposition. John Diefenbaker and I sat very close to each other because, for a while, the Social Credit Party had more members than the CCF or the NDP, so we were the next party in line. At that time, I had a great deal to do with Mr. Diefenbaker. I talked to him a lot. Among other things, I admired the kind of personal relationship that he could develop with other members of Parliament.

He said many times, "I am a House of Commons man" — everyone in the Conservative Party will have heard that — and he certainly was that. He loved the place. He loved the cut and thrust of what went on there. He was probably the best debater or "House of Commons man" who has ever been a member of that chamber. He was certainly an excellent Leader of the Opposition.

The opposition's job is to probe the government's policies, its legislative program, and everything else on which the government should be accountable to the people. He was one of the best, and maybe the very best leader who could bring that out. I admired that, because there was a time when that was sort of my job, too — even in this house. I did not do it well, but I tried. He did it very well when he tried.

My three minutes are probably up, but I wanted to get that on the record. I knew him very well. I admired him.

I have one further memory of him. In the 1965 election, the local Progressive Conservative Party in the Medicine Hat constituency made several, almost desperate, pleading requests to Mr. Diefenbaker to come to Medicine Hat to campaign. I know that he told them, "No, I will not campaign against Olson. I think he probably should be re-elected." And of course I was. That was the only time when everyone else who ran for office lost their deposit, except me. Most of the time I was the one who was always hanging on by the skin of my teeth, if you know what I mean. Mr. Diefenbaker told me before I left Parliament that he would not campaign against me, and he did not. I never had any trouble with the Liberals; it was the Conservatives who were breathing down my neck all the time!

Senator Di Nino: And still are!

Senator Olson: Yes, they still are. Diefenbaker was a man with whom every one of you would have enjoyed having a personal relationship. I know that I did.

[Later]

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I should like to say a few words about John Diefenbaker, because he made a big difference in my life. He brought about the most fundamental change for my people of this century: He gave us the federal vote in 1960. What could be more fundamental than getting the vote?

I have some very personal memories with respect to that. I was 27 years old before I was allowed to vote in this great and wonderful land of ours. In 1958, during the big "follow John" time, I was attending university in British Columbia. My landlady, who was a fighter for rights, put me on the voters' list. I said, "Oh my gosh, you can't do that." I was very worried about it because I knew that my vote would be illegal. She said, "To hell with it, vote anyway. It should be the right of every person in this land to vote." She talked me into voting and I did so. I did not vote Conservative. I was always a Liberal, even though John later gave us the vote.

I had nightmares for a while as a result of voting in that election.

Senator Doody: No, you had nightmares because you voted Liberal!

Senator Marchand: In my nightmares, a policeman would come to my door and say, "Hey, Indian, you voted in this election. You knew damned well you were not supposed to vote. You broke the law."

However, it was a great turning point in my life. At the start of my political career, I worked with the American Indian Brotherhood. One of our goals was to get the federal vote.

I do not know how people in this great land of ours could do such stupid things. We have historically done stupid things, especially to my people.

As I said, that was a turning point. However, everything is not rosy in our lives at this time. On a daily basis, we read in newspapers about things that are going wrong all across the country. Things did improve, however. Getting the federal vote was a turning point for us. We are at least able to be a part of the process. Our votes now count, like those of everyone else.

After my election to the House of Commons in 1968, Senator Corbin moved the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, a motion which I seconded. I think that was, perhaps, the one and only time that everyone was in attendance in the chamber. John Diefenbaker was there. I paid tribute to him at that time. I thanked him for allowing my people to vote in federal elections. He was most appreciative of my comments to him and wrote me a note to that effect. To this day, I have that note; it is one of my little treasures.

He also took me under his wing in a way. He was very friendly. He saw me doing a television interview one time. I tended to speak a little too quickly at the time; perhaps I still do. I spoke quickly in that television interview. The next day, he walked across the House of Commons floor and said to me, "Young man, I have a little bit of advice for you. You speak too quickly. You have to slow down just a little bit. What you had to say was not bad, for a Liberal, but you have to slow down a bit."

Honourable senators, I thank you for allowing me to take these few minutes to make these remarks. I thought it appropriate to make these few comments. I, for one, appreciate what he did in giving my people the federal vote. It was a real turning point for us.

FRANCOPHONES OUTSIDE QUEBEC

THE REFERENDUM—A REMINDER OF THE URGENT NEED FOR A PARTNERSHIP WITH THE PROVINCE

Hon. Jean-Robert Gauthier: Honourable senators, francophones outside Quebec remember the nice promises made by the PQ government and the Bloc Québécois before the referendum was called, when they talked about the urgent need for a new partnership with the francophone and Acadian communities.

They must think we are very naive or desperate in trying to convince us that, in the aftermath of a Yes vote, the Parti Québécois would look after the interests of their fellow francophones from the rest of Canada.

The referendum has not been held yet, but we have already been relegated to the international francophone community. A few mystics even refuse to see us as a segment of Canadian society. According to Quebec's declaration of sovereignty released in the Grand Théâtre de Québec on September 6, 1995, we, the French Canadians from the rest of Canada, are part of this international community in the eyes of these PQ members.

As for the bill on Quebec's future, it does not mention us at all. There is no reference to the fact that we even exist.

We, who have been forgotten by the Parti Québécois, the Bloc Québécois and the Action Démocratique du Québec, wish to point out that the francophone and Acadian communities do exist and that our allegiance is to Canada.

We ask our brothers and sisters in Quebec to vote No in the referendum because Canada, despite its flaws, deserves to be saved.

STATUS OF WOMEN

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF TABLING OF REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Hon. Sharon Carstairs: Honourable senators, I should like to take this opportunity to draw your attention to the fact that last Thursday, September 28, was the 25th anniversary of the tabling of the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women.

The report made 167 recommendations, based upon the following principles: That women should be free to choose whether or not to take employment outside the home; that the care of children is a responsibility to be shared by the mother, the father and society; that society has a responsibility toward women because of pregnancy and child birth, and that special treatment related to maternity shall always be necessary; and that in certain areas, women will, for an interim period, require special treatment to overcome the adverse effects of discriminatory practices.

Women have achieved a great deal in Canada in the last 25 years. In 1978, the Canadian Labour Code was amended so that pregnancy was no longer considered to be a basis for dismissal. In 1982, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 28, ensured that the Charter applied equally to all men and women in this country. In 1983, the Canadian Human Rights Act was amended to prohibit sexual harassment and ban discrimination on the basis of pregnancy or marital status. In 1986, the Employment Equity Act was introduced. In 1993, Canada had its first woman Prime Minister. This was preceded by the achievements of women as Leaders of the Opposition, as premiers and as leaders of national and provincial political parties. In 1995, the federal government adopted the concept of gender-based analysis of legislation and policies.

However, honourable senators, there are still obstacles which must be surmounted. A 1993 Statistics Canada survey found that 51 per cent of all women had experienced at least one incident of physical and sexual violence in their adult lives. In 1992, we learned that 92 per cent of victims in cases of spousal assault were female and that 93 per cent of the accused were male.

In 1991, Statistics Canada reported that three out of five lone-parent families were headed by women and that they had incomes below the low-income cutoff.

The need for quality and affordable child care spaces far outstrips their availability across this country. Women continue to spend more hours doing unpaid work than men. Even when employed, women still invest one to two more hours per day than men doing unpaid work.

The 1992 Statistics Canada figures indicated that women with full-time jobs made 71.8 per cent of the average earnings of their male counterparts.

Honourable senators, let us continue to work toward equality for all people in Canada.

NEW BRUNSWICK

LIBERAL VICTORY IN PROVINCIAL ELECTION

Hon. John G. Bryden: Honourable senators, I should like to draw your attention to the fact that while most of you were enjoying a well-earned summer break, Senator Simard and I were engaged in a somewhat partisan contest in the Province of New Brunswick. During that time, in his own inimitable fashion, Senator Simard referred to Frank McKenna and I as two puppies who had made a mess and should have our noses rubbed in it.

I was reminded of that reckless prediction on September 11. The people of New Brunswick presented us with a beautiful bouquet of 48 red roses. The premier and I rubbed our noses in them and the fragrance will stay with us for the next four years.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a number of petitions regarding Bill C-68. The first petition is signed by 24 citizens of Ontario; the second is signed by 25 citizens of Ontario; the third is signed by 52 citizens of Saskatchewan. All of these Canadian citizens express their opposition to Bill C-68 and ask that it not be proceeded with.

Lest honourable senators think I am starting a GST petition round, I have another petition signed by 50 residents of British Columbia who are in favour of tough new gun control legislation.

Hon. Brenda Robertson: Honourable senators, I have a petition signed by approximately 40 citizens of British Columbia. These petitioners implore all members of Parliament to support the passage of tough new gun control legislation.

TRANSPORT

PENSIONS OF ROUTE CANADA EMPLOYEES—DELAY IN RESOLUTION OF DISPUTE—STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: Honourable senators, in the near future I hope it will no longer be necessary for me to raise the question of Route Canada and its employees. The Minister of Transport appeared before the Transport Committee last June while we were examining Bill C-89, and some documentation was provided to us at that time. It was our impression that all pension benefit entitlements and severances had been paid in full to former employees of Route Canada.

As honourable senators may be aware, one day last summer a number of the constituency offices of Liberal MPs were occupied by former Route Canada employees. They were demanding compensation and a parliamentary inquiry into this issue.

George Rideout, the member of Parliament for Moncton, appeared to be in agreement when he stated, "There is no question that they got shafted," meaning the Route Canada employees.

Does the Leader of the Government have any information whatsoever with respect to these negotiations? As far as the government is concerned, are the negotiations complete or is the government no longer interested in dealing with these people?

In other words, will the Leader of the Government indicate whether or not, as a result of the events of last June, the matter has been dealt with completely, or do these actions by former employees signal a contrary view to that of the Government of Canada on this matter?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am certainly aware of Senator Forrestall's interest in this issue. I will inform myself further today and provide him with an answer.

HUMAN RIGHTS

RATIFICATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS CONVENTION OF ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES— GOVERNMENT POSITION—DELAYED ANSWER

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, yesterday, Senator Kinsella asked a question of me concerning the Human Rights Convention of the Organization of American States. I wish to indicate to him that, in consultation with the provinces and territories, Canada is continuing its legislative review, with the prospect of acceding to the convention at the earliest possible time. It is precisely because Canada takes seriously its international human rights obligations that we are giving careful consideration to the OAS convention.

Senator Kinsella will know that we continue to play a strong role within the Organization of American States on this matter. I want him to know that the issue is very much alive. The hope is that a conclusion will be reached at an early date.

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella (Acting Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wish to thank the Leader of the Government for that information.

Is the Leader of the Government able to tell us which provinces, to date, have agreed that Canada should ratify this convention? It would be interesting for honourable senators to know what the areas of reservations are with reference to Canadian ratification of this instrument.

From my reading, there appear to be a number of provisions in the OAS convention with which some Canadian jurisdictions have difficulty. I do not know if the federal government falls into that category. One provision relates to the right to life, and there are a number of other issues.

This process has been ongoing for three or four years. I understand that a federal-provincial committee of officials meets from time to time on the issue. Perhaps it is time that parliamentarians were given some insight as to what are the obstacles.

Senator Fairbairn: I shall be glad to pursue that point. I simply wished to get an initial answer to my honourable friend quickly. I would also remind my honourable friend that if his question was a written question, and were on the Order Paper, I could get him an even faster answer.

THE SENATE

STATUS OF SENATOR KINSELLA

Hon. Jean-Robert Gauthier: Honourable senators, I apologize to my colleague, but I am not familiar with the Senate rules. I am more familiar with the House of Commons rules. Has Senator Kinsella had a promotion? He was speaking from Senator Berntson's seat. Are we permitted to speak from any seat in this house? Is it agreeable to all senators that that should happen? If so, I should like to know.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I can answer that. It is certainly not out of order to ask at this time. The leadership on the Liberal side was advised that Senator Berntson is leaving soon on an official mission with the Speaker. Senator Kinsella will be replacing him temporarily, and Senator DeWare will be acting as whip on our side. It is not unusual to have these changes take place, and next time we will certainly publicize it more.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a response to a question raised in the Senate on June 13, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Forrestall regarding the First Canadian Mechanized Brigade.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PEACEKEEPING IN BOSNIA—REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE ON INCREASE IN SIZE OF FORCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. J. Michael Forrestall on June 13, 1995)

The 1 Canadian Mechanized Brigade Group (1 CMBG) is not currently on standby for any specific NATO deployment. Essentially, each of the three mechanized brigade groups within Land Force Command has the same mission, that is: to maintain a general purpose combat capability to provide operationally effective forces, to, amongst others, assigned NATO and international commitments and UN missions.

The specific tasks associated within this overall mission are rotated amongst the brigade groups at regular intervals (generally on a yearly basis). In November of this year, 1 Canadian Mechanized Brigade Group will take over the UN task for 5 Groupe-Brigade mécanisé du Canada based in Valcartier, Québec, and has earmarked one of its infantry units (2nd Battalion, Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry) for deployment with UNPROFOR in Bosnia, as part of a normal rotation of Canadian troops. Additionally, 2 Canadian Mechanized Brigade Group based in Petawawa, Ontario, has been assigned the task, and has just completed Exercise VENOM STRIKE in Gagetown, New Brunswick. This exercise prepared the brigade-group for a possible NATO task in Bosnia, in support of potential UN withdrawal from the region.

As to the specifics regarding the Naval and Air support required by the army in a NATO-related deployment, it is impossible at this point in time, without exact details about the nature of the task and governmental guidelines, to determine the size or configuration of their participation. However, it would be safe to assume that Hercules' flights could be required to move personnel and equipment, and that a Canadian support ship could be of use as a floating logistic base in some scenarios.

ANSWER TO ORDER PAPER QUESTION TABLED

BUDGETARY SAVINGS FOR REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCIES

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 85 on the Order Paper—by Senator Tkachuk.

THE SENATE

VALUE OF INDEPENDENT SENATORS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward M. Lawson: Honourable senators, following the events of yesterday, when we welcomed four new senators to the chamber, the numbers now stand at 50 Liberals to 51 Conservatives. In view of that situation, will the Leader of the Government in the Senate determine from her colleague the Minister of Finance the current estimated value of independent senators?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): I will give that a pass, Senator Lawson.

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): It is inestimable.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

FARM SAFETY

REPORT OF AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY COMMITTEE— DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the ninth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, (Special study on farm safety), tabled in the Senate on Friday, June 30, 1995.

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, the committee which I have the privilege of chairing tabled two reports during the summer months, and the report referred to is one of those reports.

I should like to thank those honourable senators who participated in the proceedings of the committee leading up to that report, as well as our clerk and research staff from the Library of Parliament.

Honourable senators, farming is considered to be one of the most dangerous occupations in Canada, with a higher death rate than that found in the mining or construction industries. Deaths and injuries in the farming sector involve a proportionately high percentage of the young and the elderly. Moreover, agriculture is the only industry where, on average, there are two fatalities every week and disabling injuries daily. Children routinely work and play at the work site, and the home is located at the work site.

Hazards on the farm arise from a number of sources: Chemical use on the farm, machinery operation and repair, noise, the design of farm facilities, and economic and human stress are all hazards with which farmers must live on a daily basis. Unfortunately, data and information are lacking on many of these hazards, and on the exact extent to which they lead to farm fatalities, injuries, and illness. While there appears to be some research into a number of these areas, it does not appear to be coordinated, or its results widely disseminated.

Recognizing the role that the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry could play in contributing to increased awareness of the issues surrounding farm safety and farm health, on September 22, 1992, Senator Barootes, the then chairman, sought the Senate's permission for the committee to examine farm safety and farm-related issues. One impetus for this interest was a series of conferences cosponsored by the Centre for Agricultural Medicine at the University of Saskatchewan. Attendees included farmers, academics, government representatives and others with an interest in farm health and safety, including senators.

As a result of these conferences and the interest expressed in their subject matter, the Canadian Coalition for Agricultural Safety and Rural Health was formed in June of 1993. The goal of the coalition is to serve as a national communication and information network and to facilitate collaborative research. The coalition, which was incorporated in July, 1995 and has its head office in Saskatoon, will participate in the Canadian Farm Machinery Conference to be held in late October in Prince Edward Island.

As the committee began its work, it became clear that many issues needed examination: economic and mental stress, machinery, chemicals, noise, the design of farm facilities and the use of personal protective equipment, among others. The committee decided to begin its work with an examination of stress and its economic, mental, emotional, and physical dimensions.

On June 21, 1993, Senator Berntson, the then chairman of the committee, tabled an interim report entitled: "Farm Stress: Its Economic Dimensions, Its Human Consequences." The report, which did not make any recommendations, summarized the testimony from experts who shared their expertise on the financial situation in the agricultural industry, and on the mental, emotional, and physical stresses experienced by farm families today.

The committee learned that while farm stress can come from several sources, most witnesses saw unstable and adverse economic conditions as the most significant in relation to farmers' health and safety. The committee heard that adverse economic conditions not only cause stress, often leading to occupationally linked ill health, but that conditions also make farmers more susceptible to illness or injury from other hazards.

Adverse economic conditions, both alone and in combination with other sources of stress, such as fluctuating weather, long work hours, lack of information, and isolation are linked to the symptoms of physical and mental ill health. Moreover, adverse economic conditions affect many choices relevant to health and safety of farmers. For example, economic conditions may effect whether machinery having the latest safety devices will be purchased, and how safely that equipment will be used by a farm operator who is inattentive because of fatigue. They affect the decision of whether personal protective equipment will be purchased for the mixing and application of chemicals, and how carefully the applicator, worried about inadequately attended children, concentrates on proper procedures for mixing and use. They affect the timing of the decision to repair or upgrade the ventilation system in an animal barn with air quality problems.

Certain avenues of change were highlighted by witnesses. Related to economic stress, the Farm Debt Review Board and the Canadian Rural Transition Program initiatives were highlighted. Education, counselling, research, federal support, and child care were identified as future actions which might be taken to limit the effects of mental and emotional stress.

After completing its examination of stress, the committee turned its attention to the issue of farm machinery, tabling its report entitled "Farm Machinery: Lost Lives, Lost Limbs" in June, 1995. Most fatal farm injuries are thought to arise from machinery use, despite such design changes as roll-over protection, a reduced number of points where blockages may occur, and improvements in guard design. In fact, it is estimated that farm machinery is involved in more than 50 per cent of the machine-related deaths that occur among all occupations. Quite apart from the human costs associated with fatalities and injuries resulting from farm machinery use, productivity and competitiveness are reduced.

Farm machinery is intended to decrease physical labour, increase productivity, and save time. However, power-driven machines are, by their nature, potentially dangerous. Each year, an estimated 150 to 200 people are killed in Canada as a result of farm-related accidents; more than half of farm fatalities are predicted to be the result of machinery, either because of how the machinery was designed or how it was operated. Among the most dangerous farm machinery are tractors, round balers, grain augers and power-drive shafts.

The committee learned that the exact extent to which the operation of farm machinery contributes to fatalities and injuries cannot be accurately determined, although data sources may include records from the provincial Workers' Compensation Board, coroners' records, hospital discharge data or a direct survey of farmers. However, these data sources are not without their problems, since Workers' Compensation Board data is incomplete and hospital discharge data may code the injury as having occurred at the individual's place of residence, rather than on the farm. One witness told the committee that, in his opinion, for each fatality there are at least 11 hospital admissions and 300 non-fatal injuries, and the vast majority of these injuries occurring on farms are not reported to any agency.

Honourable senators, whatever the actual numbers, the costs — human, hospital, lost time, structure modification and rehabilitation — of farm machinery-related fatalities and injuries are estimated to be extremely high. Looking merely at hospital costs, the committee was informed by one witness that an Ontario study of farm injuries estimated that the annual direct costs associated with hospital admissions are about $3 million in that province; this prediction assumed 250 to 300 farm injuries per year in Ontario, and costs of about $10,000 per injury. Clearly, a case can be made for prevention.

In seeking to determine the causes of machinery-related fatalities and injuries, the committee learned that some are related to the operator of the machinery, while others are associated with the very nature of the machinery. In particular, fatalities and injuries may occur because the farmer is too busy to attend seminars; removes safety shields or guards for adjustment or repair and does not take the time to reattach them; works when fatigued or inattentive; works too quickly and cuts corners; is careless; makes errors in judgment; or does not take the time to learn the correct operating procedure for new equipment with new controls. Furthermore, much of the machinery is, by its very nature, dangerous. Danger may be even greater with older machinery or machinery that is bought second-hand, since it may lack safety devices and decals.

Honourable senators, the problem has been identified: unacceptable loss of life and costs associated with farm machinery-related fatalities and injuries, whether due to the operator or the machinery itself. The question becomes: How can the incidence of fatalities and injuries be reduced? The answer lies in changes to both the manner in which farmers use the machines and in the machines themselves.

It was from that perspective that the committee heard suggestions by witnesses and formulated recommendations designed to meet the goal of reduced fatalities and injuries associated with the use of farm machinery. The committee received a great deal of testimony about the critical need to educate farmers and farm families, in various and appropriate formats, about the hazards of using farm machinery and the proper methods for doing so, with particular emphasis on the delivery of education to children, the older population and farm women. In recognizing the importance of education as a means of lowering the incidence of farm machinery-related fatalities and injuries, the committee recommended that all stakeholders develop an effective education strategy, properly targeted and with a variety of formalities.

The design of machinery must also be examined. However, to ensure the safest possible design, one witness suggested to the committee that design changes are more effective than educational or legislative measures in reducing the fatalities and injuries associated with the use of equipment. This witness recommended that, to ensure their effectiveness, these design changes be engineered and tested in a pilot program. Only then should they be implemented across the board. However, another witness told the committee that manufacturers may be reluctant to add costs to machinery for a device not required by law, since that might place them in an uncompetitive position. A number of witnesses pointed out that new farm machinery is becoming safer, that some equipment has shields and guards that are hinged, are easy to replace, or fold up and out of the way to adjust the machine; they also noted that standards are being developed in a number of areas and that research is being done to further enhance safety. Nevertheless, it is still the case that the farm operator must operate the machinery as intended; he or she must replace any guards or shields moved or removed for repairs, and must read and abide by the proper operating instructions, as outlined by the manufacturer.

[Translation]

The committee made recommendations on the design of farm machinery, on composite standards and on regulations.

The committee recommended that farm machinery manufacturers continue to do research on how to improve the safety of farm machinery and to participate in the development and implementation of farm-related safety standards.

Standards already exist, but manufacturers are not always aware of them and do not know which ones apply specifically to them. That is why the committee supports one witness' recommendation that a centralized national directory of standards be created.

[English]

Furthermore, the committee learned that some provinces have statutory farm-related equipment standards. In particular, the committee heard about the Ontario Farm Implements Act, which regulates the sale of farm implements and authorizes the Ontario

Farm Implements Board to establish and enforce farm safety requirements and standards for farm implements sold in Ontario.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Hays, I regret to inform you that your time has expired.

Honourable senators, is leave granted to allow Senator Hays to continue?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Hays: One witness recommended that all provinces establish regulations or guidelines on the safety requirements of new and used farm machinery. In supporting this witness' position and recognizing that legislation has a role to play in ensuring the safety of farm machinery, the committee recommended that provincial governments be encouraged to adopt legislation related to new and used farm equipment and that, to the extent possible, legislation be harmonized across provinces.

A number of witnesses mentioned to the committee the particular hazards associated with the operation of used machinery. In fact, the committee was told that many farmers are using equipment that is perhaps 15 or more years old, some of which lacks warning decals and up-to-date safety devices. Moreover, farmers may purchase used equipment because it is less costly. Although safety devices have been developed for installation on older machinery, it is costly to retrofit used and older machinery. Nevertheless, the committee recommended that farmers using such equipment be encouraged to retrofit their machinery with the safety devices that have been developed for this purpose.

[Translation]

The committee also heard evidence on safety checks carried out by farmers and their families. These checks could apply to all farm hazards, including machinery without safety devices or warning decals, as well as to the comprehensibility of users' manuals. The committee recognizes that such checks could help prevent accidents and injuries. Therefore, the committee recommended that farm families conduct safety checks of farm hazards including machinery on a regular basis.

[English]

As noted, prevention of such fatalities and injuries must be the goal. However, if appropriate preventive programs are to be developed and areas for research identified, accurate data are needed about machinery-related fatalities and injuries, what machinery was being used when the accident occurred, under what conditions, and the type and severity of the injury. From this perspective, many witnesses stressed the need for accurate data, and the committee recommended that federal and provincial governments develop a national injury surveillance system that would ensure the ongoing collection of data needed to identify injury patterns and risk factors. The committee believes that data collection and a national database are critical if progress is to be made in reducing farm machinery-related fatalities and injuries.

The committee is confident that many of these initiatives, working together and in harmony, are needed if there is to be a reduction in the number and severity of these accidents, particularly with respect to fatalities. All stakeholders must contribute to an integrated farm health and safety strategy if success is to be achieved.

In conclusion, it is estimated that farmers are five times more likely to be killed or suffer disabling injuries than workers in other major industries. The Canada Safety Council has estimated that there are approximately 100 accidental deaths, and more than 5,000 time-loss injuries sustained each year by Canadian farm workers. The rate of accidental death on the farm is estimated to be 20 per cent higher than the national average, making the number of fatalities higher for farming than in any other industry.

Risks to farm health and safety derive from many sources: economic stress which often leads to emotional and physical stress, chemicals, machinery noise, the design of farm facilities, and exposure to such other hazards as dust, gases, et cetera. Dust-related respiratory problems have been found amongst workers in grain elevators, in animal and poultry confinement operations, and in many other farm facilities. The use of chemical pesticides and fertilizers has led to risks of cancer, neurological disorder and skin problems. Noise in various aspects of farming has led to noise-induced hearing loss. Fences, gates and chutes for animal handling that are not properly designed or adequate in their construction are the cause of many fatalities and injuries.

To date, the committee has examined two hazards: stress and farm machinery. Certainly the other hazards are equally important, and the committee remains interested in their examination. The decision as to whether any further study will occur remains a decision to be taken by the committee, following an examination of its interests and priorities by committee members to take place in the near future. In the interim, while recognizing that farm health and safety is a year-round preoccupation, I draw attention to the centre in Saskatchewan which has as its purpose improving the work environment for farmers, and to the Farm Safety Week which will be held March 7 to 13, 1996.

I thank all honourable senators who participated in the hearings leading up to this report, as well as our clerk and committee staff.

On motion of Senator Kinsella, on behalf of Senator Spivak, debate adjourned.

AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON FACT-FINDING MISSIONS TO WASHINGTON AND WINNIPEG

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the eleventh report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry entitled: "Agricultural Trade: Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry's Fact-finding Missions to Washington and Winnipeg."

On motion of Senator Hays, report placed on Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

PRIVILEGES, STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

FOURTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders (Printing of Minutes and Order Paper), presented in the Senate on Wednesday, June 28, 1995. — (Honourable Senator Robertson).

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of the report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2:00 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, October 5, 1995

The Senate met at 2:00 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

VISITORS IN THE GALLERY

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to draw to your attention the presence in the gallery of His Excellency Faisal Abdel Qader Al Hussein, Head of Orient House and Head of the Steering Committee of the Palestinian Delegation to the Middle East Peace Negotiations.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

THE SENATE

FELICITATIONS TO MR. CHARLES ROBERT ON HIS APPOINTMENT AS READING CLERK

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, before we proceed with the daily routine of business, I should like to draw to your attention the presence at the Table of a new Reading Clerk, Mr. Charles Robert.

Mr. Robert is presently on secondment from the Committees Branch to the Clerk's office as the Clerk's Executive Assistant. Mr. Robert's assignment to the Table is the first in a series of assignments of committee officers and senior Senate officials. On your behalf, I wish to welcome Mr. Robert.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

THE HONOURABLE GILDAS L. MOLGAT THE HONOURABLE EDWARD M. LAWSON

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF APPOINTMENT TO THE SENATE

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable colleagues, I rise today for a very pleasant reason, that is, to draw attention to a special anniversary for two of our friends here in the Senate.

Some 25 years ago, perhaps not on this very day but close enough to it, two of our colleagues, Senator Gil Molgat and Senator Ed Lawson, were appointed to this place. We are privileged to have had the benefit of their counsel, their participation and their friendship for so many years. We look forward to many more.

For 42 years, Senator Molgat has dedicated himself to public life, which began with his 1953 election to the Manitoba legislature in the riding of Ste. Rose, the youngest MLA in the history of that province's legislature, and extends to his appointment to the Senate in 1970 and to his further appointment as Speaker of the Senate almost a year ago next month.

He has served Canadians with honour, dignity and warmth. I will not even begin to note the time and energy Senator Molgat has contributed to the Senate, both in this chamber and in its committees, because they are too numerous to mention. However, he has done it all. In the process, he has gained the respect of both sides of this house for his fairness and his collegiality, for never losing touch with us and always making time to speak and to listen to senators, to staff and Pages alike.

Senator Molgat is an enthusiastic advocate of the Senate, of the Liberal Party, of his beloved regiment the Royal Winnipeg Rifles, of which he is Honourary Colonel, of his province and of his country. At the core of his service has been a tireless effort to foster understanding between Canadians of all regions, languages and cultures — the essence of the challenge in which our country is engaged at this time.

Senator Lawson shares this anniversary. From British Columbia, he came to the Senate in 1970 as a voice for organized labour in Parliament. He has been an active participant in the Canadian labour movement for decades, serving on the executive of the local, the provincial and the international levels of the Teamsters' Union. Although he certainly has not been in the public eye in a political sense, as has the Speaker, Senator Lawson's dedication to his constituency, the labour movement and the workers in this country is without question.

We have all had the benefit of his wisdom over the years in dealing with labour law, particularly, and regrettably, back-to-work legislation. We hope he will continue to give this chamber the benefit of his wisdom and experience for many years to come.

Yesterday, in the chamber, he asked me what I thought the current estimated value of an independent senator to be. I should like to assure both Senator Lawson and his colleagues that they represent a great value to us, as they always have in this house, both to the institution itself and to the provinces which they represent.

On behalf of senators on this side, I extend to both of our colleagues our very best wishes on this important occasion in their lives in public service.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am delighted to join in marking the twenty-fifth anniversary of the appointment to the Senate of Senator Molgat and Senator Lawson.

I first came to know Senator Molgat when he was Deputy Leader of the Opposition and I was Deputy Leader of the Government. I learned much from him. I learned a lot about trust and confidences, and about how one should behave in an adversarial system when it came to respecting the system under which we were both working.

• (1410)

One thing I certainly learned was that if you did not ask him the question, he would not give you the answer. I recall that when I was sitting where Senator Graham is now sitting, Senator Molgat got up suddenly on a Thursday afternoon, at the most unexpected of times, and moved an amendment to a bill, which rather skewered our timetable. The next time we met, I said to Senator Molgat, "You never told me you were going to move an amendment." He replied, "You never asked me." Those who are in such positions should keep that in mind.

I also remember Senator Molgat — not exactly storming the chair in which he now sits, but certainly challenging it. I am glad that he did not get too close to it, such that today he would not be sitting there.

Senator Molgat felt very strongly that we should have an elected Speaker. It is unfortunate that before he was chosen, we did not have a chance to elect a Speaker here. Had we done so, I am sure he would be sitting in the chair as our elected representative, rather than having been appointed by the government.

I do not have as many personal comments to make with regard to Senator Lawson. I have great admiration for independence and I sometimes feel that I should join him, particularly after his question to Senator Fairbairn yesterday as to whether she could determine the value of independent senators.

Senator Lawson, in the numerical position in which we find ourselves, I should like to discuss that with you at the earliest possible opportunity!

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: Honourable senators, I too would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Senators Molgat and Lawson.

Senator Molgat and I both have our roots in Manitoba, where I was born, and raised for some time. I should like to congratulate him on the many years of service that he has performed for the Province of Manitoba and for the country as a whole.

Senator Ed Lawson is now a neighbour of mine. He is a golf partner, which is very important; he is a friend; he is a British Columbian and he is a philanthropist. That is only the beginning of the description of Senator Lawson.

Many of you may not know that he was born in a great place called Gerald, Saskatchewan. Those of us who carry the name Gerald have always known that great things would come of anyone born in Gerald, Saskatchewan.

Senator Lawson then moved to Pouce Coupe in northern British Columbia. He did not have an easy childhood. He lost his parents at a very young age and moved to Fort Langley, British Columbia, in which area we both now live. He was raised by a family in that area, together with his brothers and sisters. From that family came our man, Senator Ed Lawson.

As the Leader of the Government in the Senate has so adeptly pointed out, he started off his working life as a truck driver. He often describes himself as a truck driver with a tie. Believe me, although he was most likely one of the best truck drivers, his abilities and contributions go much further than his own description.

He was the President of the British Columbia Teamsters' Union. He was the director of the Canadian Conference of Teamsters, and has been a vice-president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters. He has now retired from that position and has taken up his rightful place in the Senate.

Those onerous duties often kept him from the Senate. On many occasions he was unfairly criticized for that, although he was serving the men and women of Canada and all of North America in his role as head of the teamsters for this country. In that position he has worked with premiers, prime ministers and presidents to improve the plight of the working men and women of this country. For that, we all salute him here today, as do they.

Honourable senators, I value Ed as a golf partner, as a neighbour, as a friend and as a great British Columbian. However, I believe that his greatest trademark is his philanthropic work with charities. Both Ed and his wife, Bev, work tirelessly on charities across North America, making better lives for the working men and women of this world, for the children of this world, and for the underprivileged.

I congratulate Senator Lawson and Senator Molgat, and I appreciate the opportunity to speak about such great men.

[Later]

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, needless to say, I agree with what was said by the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I hope that my friend Senator Lawson, an independent like myself, will remain so for a long time, and I hope others will join us. I wish him a long life during which he will continue a fruitful participation in the proceedings of the Senate.

To you, Honourable Speaker, an old friend, I offer my sincere congratulations. I would also ask you to transmit my best wishes to your wife who has helped us to enhance the atmosphere of civility in our beloved Senate. I am indeed delighted to hear you will celebrate your twenty-fifth anniversary on October 10.

WORLD TEACHERS' DAY

Hon. Rose-Marie Losier-Cool: Honourable senators, today I would like to draw your attention to World Teachers' Day. This special day was launched in October 1994 by the United Nations Education, Science and Culture Organization (UNESCO) and the International Bureau of Education (IBE).

The purpose of this world day is to recognize the enthusiasm and commitment of teachers as well as the important role they play in the advancement of education and society in general.

October 5 was proclaimed a special day at the 44th session of the International Conference on Education in Geneva in October 1994 by UNESCO Director General Federico Mayor.

Mr. Mayor said at the time that “teachers are often underestimated” and “that improving education should include improving the status of teachers.”

[English]

This international day is to sensitize the public to the important role which all teachers play in the social, economic and cultural development of our country and of the world.

[Translation]

In October 1994, the Executive Director of Intergovernmental Relations for Education, Mr. Robert Harris, expressed his satisfaction with the launching of World Teachers' Day to honour, and I quote:

...those who dedicate their lives to the principle that learning leads to freedom, that education is the life blood of democracy.

Honourable senators, being a teacher by profession, I would like to take this opportunity to wish teachers a happy international day and to thank them especially for their dedication to the cause of education.

FAISAL ABDEL QADER AL HUSSEINI

ROLE IN MIDDLE EAST PEACE NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Today we have the honour to welcome Mr. Faisal Abdel Qader Al Hussein, who was born in 1940 in Baghdad — and I hope senators will listen to my comments to the very end, because part of this may be controversial. His father was a very prominent national leader in the Palestinian struggle against the establishment of Israel in Palestine, and was killed in 1948 in Al Qastal.

Mr. Hussein received his military and science education in Cairo, Beirut, Baghdad and Aleppo, Syria. He became active in the Fatah, the largest PLO faction since its founding in 1965. In the years that followed, he became active against the occupation and was harassed by the Israelis who imposed travel bans, jailed him and put him under house or administrative detention.

In 1979, he founded the Arab Studies Society, a research and data-collecting centre in East Jerusalem. That was closed from 1987 through 1991, allegedly for anti-Israel propaganda, but was reopened after international pressure.

Before the start of the Madrid Peace Conference in October, 1991, Mr. Hussein led a Palestinian delegation which met with then U.S. Secretary of State James Baker to lay the ground for the start of the peace talks between the PLO and Israel. He was named head of the Palestinian team to the Middle East Peace Conference, and, despite Israeli objection to his role because he is a resident of Jerusalem, Mr. Hussein became the central figure in the peace talks that opened the door for direct dialogue between the PLO and Israel — a long-time wish of mine — along with Dr. Hanan Ashrawi, Dr. Saeb Erakat and Dr. Haidar Abdel Shafi.

Mr. Hussein turned the Orient House, an old guest house in East Jerusalem, into the controversial New Orient House, which became the headquarters of the Palestinian delegation to the peace talks. The Orient House has become the centre of Palestinian political, social, and civic activities, a development that outraged the Israeli right and led, in recent months, to campaigns to hamper the work and activities of the New Orient House. Nevertheless, the Orient House continues to be the focal point of Palestinian national activities in Jerusalem, and, in spite of Israeli pressure, foreign dignitaries continue to visit it and meet with Palestinian representatives there.

Mr. Hussein is currently a minister-without-portfolio in the Palestinian National Authority, in charge of Jerusalem affairs. He is also the highest-ranking Fatah official in the Jerusalem and West Bank areas, and a very close aide of Palestine President Yasser Arafat.

Mr. Hussein is accompanied today by the new Palestine representative in Canada, Dr. Baker Abdel Munem, Mr. Maen Areikat, assistant to Mr. Hussein for North American affairs, and Dr. Jawad Boulos, all of whom are being well cared for by a great Canadian businessman, Mr. Shawky Joe Fahel.

Before they go over to the House of Commons, where they will receive the same kind of reception, again, I join in welcoming them very warmly to Parliament.

PRIVILEGE

ORAL NOTICE

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, I rise to give oral notice, pursuant to rule 43(7) of the Rules of the Senate of Canada, and to state that I shall raise a question of privilege later this afternoon.

Earlier today, pursuant to rule 43(3), I gave written notice to the Clerk of the Senate. I shall ask His Honour the Speaker of the Senate to rule on the facts, which I shall briefly outline, as to whether a prima facie case of breach of privilege exists. If so found, I am prepared to move the necessary motion.

SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON PEARSON AIRPORT AGREEMENTS

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: Honourable senators, I rise on a matter which should be of great concern to all Canadians who believe in accountability in our democratic society; that is, the conflicting statements provided by the Prime Minister. I refer to the testimony given under oath at the Senate committee on the Pearson Airport Agreements, and, as well, to questions raised in both Houses in December 1994, March and April of 1995, and, again, on Friday, September 22, 1995.

The Prime Minister has responded in a number of ways to questions concerning a meeting which was attended by himself, Jack Matthews, and his former partner in Lang Michener, Mr. Paul LaBarge.

Mr. Jack Matthews, former president of Paxport, testified under oath before the inquiry on September 21 that he met with Mr. Chrétien in late 1989, early 1990. His recollection was that, at that time, Mr. Chrétien was about to enter the leadership race. He testified that, at that meeting, airport privatization and other matters were discussed. The date — close to Mr. Chrétien's entry into the Liberal leadership race — was confirmed in a transcript of a telephone conversation between Mr. LaBarge and Mr. Matthews, which transcript was released to the media after Mr. Matthews testified at the inquiry.

When this issue was first raised, you will recall that Mr. Matthews wrote to the members of both Houses on March 30, 1995, wherein he expressed his willingness to testify at any inquiry, in order to deal with issues of credibility which were affecting him and others.

You will also recall that, earlier this year, the Prime Minister's Office agreed that the meeting took place in early 1990. After some confusion between Mr. LaBarge and the Prime Minister, and after consultations between the two, another date was seized upon — in April 1989.

In testimony before the Senate committee, following Mr. Matthews' testimony, Mr. LaBarge made an effort to corroborate his version of the facts surrounding the April 1989 meeting with that of the Prime Minister's albeit revised version. Mr. LaBarge went on to further state, under oath, that he met with no clients in January 1990. This has now been proven to be untruthful and not supported by the facts.

On August 2 — long before the issue of the Chrétien-Matthews meeting surfaced at the committee — Senator Bryden — who seemed to have an interest in the diaries of the previous president of Paxport, Mr. Ray Hession — requested that Mr. Hession's diaries be tabled with the committee. I point out again that that was on August 2.

Mr. Hession's diaries proved to be helpful and useful in the search for the truth. We now have proof positive that Mr. LaBarge did meet with Jack Matthews on January 17, 1990, even though he testified under oath that he had met no clients, and that Mr. Jack Matthews was in Ottawa, just as he testified. I quote his exact words:

The meeting took place just prior to him —

Mr. Chrétien —

— announcing that he was going to run for the Liberal leadership. My best guess, because I do not have books from that time...is that it happened in December —

1989 —

— January of 1990. That's my best recollection of it.

The date of the meeting, as stated in Mr. Hession's diary, was January 17, 1990, within a week of Mr. Chrétien's leadership announcement of January 23, 1990. Mr. Matthews, honourable senators, has been proven to be right.

The Prime Minister owes to all Canadians and members of both Houses an explanation and clarification of this unfortunate situation.

LA CITÉ COLLÉGIALE

OFFICIAL INAUGURATION

Hon. Jean-Robert Gauthier: Honourable senators, today we will be celebrating an historic moment in the life of francophone Ontario. Ten years ago, we could do no more than dream of a community college of our own, and now today the Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Honourable Jean Chrétien, will be officially opening Ontario's first francophone college.

La Cité collégiale was created in 1990 and moved to its new campus after doubling its students to 10,000, 3,500 of whom are full-time.

There is no doubt whatsoever that la Cité collégiale responds to a community need, and that it will be called upon to play a lead role for the federal government in coordinating French-language trade training and retraining outside Quebec.

This accomplishment has been made possible by a $100-million agreement between the federal government and the Province of Ontario. Although it took a great deal of effort to bring it into the world, this college is now tangible proof that francophones, whether in Quebec or in the rest of Canada, have a place within the Canadian federation.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 58(1)(h), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, October 17, 1995 at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX ACT

DEDUCTIBILITY OF FEES FOR STUDENT ASSOCIATIONS—PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, I have the privilege of presenting a petition from students in the Ottawa area requesting the deductibility of fees paid to student associations.

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, I have the privilege of presenting a petition from British Columbia residents urging that legislation requiring the registration of firearms and more severe penalties for their misuse be passed.

• (1430)

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: Honourable senators, I have a number of petitions regarding Bill C-68. The first is signed by residents of the Northwest Territories and reads as follows:

Wherefore your petitioner humbly prays that your honourable house may be pleased to reconsider the content of Bill C-68.

They are strongly opposed to the gun control legislation bill. The petition is signed by residents of the Northwest Territories from the town of Rae-Edzo and surrounding area, which is just outside of Yellowknife.

The second petition is signed by hundreds of residents of Ontario, in particular from Ajax and its surrounding area. They wish to draw our attention to what they see as flaws in Bill C-68. They advocate the withdrawal of all support for Bill C-68.

The final petition is from the voters and taxpayers in Dawson Creek and northern British Columbia. They state that gun control will not succeed in preventing criminals from acquiring guns by illegal means, and that Bill C-68 does not address the fundamental principle of problem solving. The bill focuses on the random many rather than the significant few.

Honourable senators, I lay these petitions before the Senate on behalf of these petitioners from across Canada.

HEALTH

CENTRES OF EXCELLENCE FOR WOMEN'S HEALTH—OUTCOME OF SITE SELECTION PROCESS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Janis Johnson: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate regarding the Centres of Excellence for Women's Health.

On March 8, the Minister of Health announced that the site selection process for Centres of Excellence for Women's Health would begin in April, with a call for letters of intent to bid. Minister Marleau also indicated in the same release that it was the intent of the government to have the submissions reviewed and an announcement made of successful applicants in the fall of this year. To date, I believe no announcement has been made.

Could the Leader of the Government find out from the Minister of Health whether an announcement will be made this fall, and whether or not the national workshop, which was held in Ottawa in April, has had input into the selection process and the terms of reference for the centres?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would be pleased to do that.

TRANSPORT

PEARSON AIRPORT AGREEMENTS—EVIDENCE OF MR. MATTHEWS BEFORE SENATE COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and refers to my statement regarding the meeting with Mr. Matthews and the Prime Minister. Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate now ascertain and confirm that the Prime Minister did, in fact, meet with Mr. Matthews in January of 1990, as substantiated by Mr. Hession's diary and other evidence given at the Pearson inquiry?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in answer to a question in the other place, the Prime Minister has stated that that meeting was held on April 14 of 1989.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

CORRECTIONS AND CONDITIONAL RELEASE ACT CRIMINAL CODE CRIMINAL RECORDS ACT PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES ACT TRANSFER OF OFFENDERS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Landon Pearson moved the second reading of Bill C-45, to amend the Corrections and Conditional Release Act, the Criminal Code, the Criminal Records Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and the Transfer of Offenders Act.

She said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to rise today to introduce second reading of Bill C-45, to amend the Corrections and Conditional Release Act and related statutes. Bill C-45 is a key building block of the government's action plan to work for safe homes and safe streets for all Canadians. The Liberal government pledged to protect the basic right of all citizens to live in peaceful and safe communities, and this legislation is another example of how we are following through on this commitment.

During the past year, honourable senators, the Liberal government has moved forward on crime prevention, on amendments to the Young Offenders Act and to the Immigration Act, on sentencing reform, on a new Witness Protection Program, on DNA evidence, and now on managing high-risk offenders. Bill C-45 follows through on a Red Book commitment to improve public protection from repeat sex offenders.

Honourable senators, you have heard members of the other place suggest on several occasions that our criminal justice system is ill-equipped to deal effectively with high-risk offenders, particularly sex offenders. The public has become increasingly fearful and intolerant of crimes committed by these offenders, especially when they involve children. This concern is justifiable; that is why this bill is so important.

Bill C-45 will address these concerns and help restore public confidence in the corrections process by closing gaps and responding directly to identified shortcomings in the Corrections and Conditional Release Act. The bill makes improvement in six substantive areas.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, first, the provisions on detention contained in the Corrections and Conditional Release Act have been tightened up with respect to their application to sexual offenders preying on children.

In the new proposals, the National Parole Board will be more able to continue to detain any offender considered likely to commit a sexual offence involving a child before sentence expiry. This will be done by doing away with the obligation to prove "serious harm" has been done to the child to justify detaining the offender.

[English]

In other words, no longer would there be a requirement to establish that "serious harm" was caused by the commission of an offender's current sexual offence, or that "serious harm" would be caused by a future sexual offence involving a child. This change is necessary because the effects of sexual abuse on children are not always readily apparent. This problem is exacerbated because children are often misled by their molesters to believe that inappropriate sexual actions are acceptable and need not be reported. The research evidence also shows that the actual harm caused to children by sexual abuse may not become evident until many years later. These problems make it difficult, if not impossible, to detect serious harm in children.

In ratifying the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, Canada has undertaken "to protect the child from all forms of sexual exploitation and sexual abuse" as detailed in article 34, and Bill C-45 will close this gap. The National Parole Board will be given the legal authority it needs to detain any offender considered likely to commit a sexual offence involving a child before sentence expiry.

I wish to emphasize, honourable colleagues, that this is a responsible piece of legislation based on the most recent research evidence. It was supported by many of the witnesses who appeared before the parliamentary Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs during its consideration of Bill C-45. In particular, clinical experts representing the Canadian Psychological Association told the committee that the proposal makes good clinical sense. This is because, and I quote:

...individuals who experience a sexual arousal disorder towards children, clinically referred to as paedophiles, represent a much higher risk of re-offending and may not appear treatable with therapeutic intervention.

By focusing on those offenders who pose the most threat to the safety and well-being of our children, the bill goes a long way toward addressing a real concern of Canadians.

I should like to make it clear, however, that this change for child sexual offenders in no way signals that other sexual offences are not regarded as serious. All sexual offences, irrespective of the age or gender of the victim, are of equal concern to the government.

Honourable senators, the measures outlined in this bill are needed, not because sexual offences against children are considered to be worse than those against adult victims, but because the current legislation has proved less effective in these cases.

Combined with this change will be improvements in the availability of treatment for sex offenders in the institution and in the community. The Correctional Service of Canada and the National Parole Board will continue to encourage offender participation in these treatment programs as a requirement for release consideration.

While we know, for example, that there are some offenders who cannot ever lead law-abiding lives in the community, we also know that simply locking up more offenders for longer periods of time will not achieve the safety of our communities that we all care about.

I believe that Bill C-45 provides a balanced approach to criminal justice reform. It makes important reforms that demonstrate forward movement.

[Translation]

The second key area of improvement in the bill concerns the credibility and accountability of the National Parole Board. This issue is a source of both government and public concern. It is therefore vital that board members be subject to the most stringent standards of professional behaviour and that they assume responsibility for decisions which impact directly upon the safety and well-being of whole communities, as well as upon victims and their families.

[English]

The bill that is before you will strengthen the accountability of the National Parole Board by establishing a disciplinary scheme for board members. This scheme will allow the Solicitor General, on the recommendation of the chairperson, to appoint a federal court judge to inquire into the conduct of a board member if it has fallen below accepted standards. The judge will be able to recommend remedial action, including dismissal, should cause to do so be found. The objective of this mechanism is not to punish board members for cases that have gone wrong despite everyone's best efforts. Rather, it is designed to establish the facts where it is alleged that a member is clearly not performing up to acceptable standards, or that misconduct is suspected, and to recommend corrective action where necessary.

The third main area of reform in the bill deals with the way sentences are calculated for offenders serving multiple terms. Under the current law, it is sometimes possible for an offender, on conditional release to receive a new sentence of imprisonment yet remain eligible for immediate parole. Under the new proposals, an offender on conditional release receiving a new sentence will automatically have his or her release revoked and be returned to custody. Where a court imposes a new consecutive sentence of imprisonment, at least one-third of the new sentence will have to be served before the offender becomes eligible to be considered for conditional release. These changes represent a tightening of the system, which has been recommended by the law enforcement and corrections communities.

The fourth area of improvement in the bill relates to strengthening the schedules in the act by which an offender can be referred to detention. Detention entails holding an offender in custody without entitlement to statutory release if the offender is likely to commit a serious drug offence or an offence causing death or serious harm before warrant expiry.

Schedules I and II will now be expanded to include additional personal violence and serious drug offenses, namely conspiracy to commit serious drug offenses, serious drinking and driving, criminal negligence offenses resulting in bodily harm or death, criminal harassment, and break, enter and commit when the underlying offence is on Schedule I.

The last addition means that an offender who breaks and enters into a dwelling to commit a serious offence such as sexual assault will no longer be eligible for accelerated parole review, and will be included in automatic detention review.

Also, a number of repealed sexual offences will be added to Schedule I to deal with offenders in the correctional system who are serving sentencing for these old offences. These changes will ensure that public safety is not compromised because of loopholes in the detention legislation.

The fifth area of improvement relates to residency conditions for certain high-risk offenders who fall short of meeting the detention criteria. This has been called for by members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, the former Standing Committee on Justice and the Solicitor General, the Stephenson Inquest Jury in Ontario, and the Canadian Police Association. In response to these recommendations, the government brought forward motions to amend the bill during the committee's clause-by-clause review which was subsequently endorsed by the House of Commons.

These amendments will enable the National Parole Board to impose a condition for statutory release requiring an offender to reside in a community-based residential facility if the offender does not meet the detention criteria but requires additional support in the community. This condition will enable the board to improve the control and management of those offenders, and will ensure better risk management, provide a more stable structure for supervisory release, and facilitate community reintegration.

[Translation]

Finally, the bill contains further amendments to the Corrections and Conditional Release Act and related acts.

One of the key elements of these changes expands the powers of Correctional Service Canada to deduct a percentage of inmates' earnings as partial payment for their room and board. The authority to make such deductions would be expanded to apply to earnings from work done outside the penitentiary or work done by an inmate transferred to a half-way house.

[English]

Other amendments include clarification of the legislative intent of various provisions, identification of areas where agreement on greater integration of federal and provincial-territorial management of offenders has been reached, and a number of technical housekeeping changes such as the correction of discrepancies between the English and French text and wording changes to ensure consistency of terminology throughout the act.

This bill and supporting initiatives respond to the many concerns of Canadians about our corrections and parole systems. The result will be a stronger system which provides better protection for the public through more stringent measures for serious and repeat offenders.

Only by taking a balanced approach to criminal justice reform can we truly lay the foundations for a safe and secure country where all Canadians and their children can live free from fear of violence and molestation.

Because of the strong public interest in seeing these reforms implemented, I would urge honourable senators to give this bill the thorough consideration it deserves and then, without undue delay, give it their approval.

Canadians have been waiting for the reforms contained in this bill for some time, and I believe those reforms should be put in place at the earliest opportunity.

On motion of Senator Kinsella, for Senator Balfour, debate adjourned.

THE ENVIRONMENT AND CONSERVATION

INQUIRY

Hon. Janis Johnson rose pursuant to notice of June 21, 1995:

That she will call the attention of the Senate to the environment as it relates to environmental conservation.

She said: Honourable senators, I rise today to offer you the second instalment of my ongoing personal inquiry into the state of the environment. I call this a personal inquiry because in no way do I consider myself to be an expert. However, I undertake this inquiry not only as a senator but as a Canadian citizen who believes that the issue of environmental degradation is the most crucial issue facing society today.

When I look around this chamber, I see men and women who enjoy extraordinary privilege and power in Canadian society, men and women who have provided thoughtful perspectives on issues as diverse as euthanasia and child poverty. I hope that you will now consider devoting a portion of your energy, your wisdom and your considerable social influence towards the cause of environmental conservation.

Let me say that my interest in this issue arises out of a personal concern. I grew up in a lovely part of rural Manitoba, on the shores of one of the largest lakes in Canada. My neighbours were farmers and fishermen and country people who relied on nature's bounty to provide a living for their families and for themselves. In my own lifetime, I have seen the evidence of deterioration in Manitoba's lakes, rivers and wildlife. If you were to look around the area of the country from which you come, I am sure you would see similar environmental destruction.

Meanwhile, we need only follow the news to observe an inexorable decline in natural resources around the world. It is not my intention to belabour anyone with lectures or to waste anyone's time with doom and gloom prophecies. I hope instead to undertake a fair-minded analysis of some of these environmental problems in an effort to determine if there are rational solutions.

The more I study the so-called environmental crisis, the more I am struck by the fact that we are not dealing with a terribly complex, multi-faceted problem. All of the environmental crises around the world, including our own, are based on the same stubborn refusal to live within our means. This is the simple problem and we need to find within ourselves the simple courage to face that fact.

The natural world seems to operate much like a bank: There is a certain amount of capital within the system, and we must learn to live off the interest and leave the principal intact. Historically, we have behaved as if our resources, and indeed our cash, were in infinite supply. The time has come, as we approach a new millennium, to recognize that, just as there are limits to spending, there are also limits to our natural resources. We simply must bring our "environmental spending" within sustainable limits. If we do not, the world we leave to our children and grandchildren will be one which is environmentally bankrupt.

The idea that our consumption of resources should be kept within manageable or "sustainable" limits is called the principle of sustainable development. Sustainable development has become a popular "buzzphrase" within the global community. The United Nations has devoted considerable energy towards achieving long-term sustainability in world development.

Environmental groups tend to view sustainable development with some cynicism. They argue that governments like to pay lip service to the idea of sustainable development, but when the goals of sustainable development are in conflict with short-term political goals, the environment loses out.

There is some truth to this argument. When I watch the manner in which commercial development proceeds in my own part of the country, I see very little importance given to environmental concerns. If, for example, you were a developer who was planning to build a tourist resort on Lake Winnipeg, you would spend far more time consulting with bankers, government bureaucrats, lawyers and accountants than you would with biologists. However, only a scientist who has studied the lake, its wildlife and its flora, can honestly assess whether your tourist resort will permanently damage the local environment.

I am not suggesting that we should be blockading economic development; however, the time will come in Canadian society. I assure you, when environmental concerns will be given as much attention as financial considerations. We have a long way to go before we achieve true sustainability in Canadian society. The journey will not always be an easy one.

Businesses do not ordinarily assign much importance to environmental concerns; we should not expect them to do so. These changes will only come through decades of hard-fought legislation. As senators, we must rest assured of the necessity of supporting such legislation.

If environmental concerns are continually regarded as optional niceties, always placed second in line after profits and votes, the term "sustainable development" will continue to have no meaning whatsoever.

In essence, I believe that it is appropriate for the Senate to act as a voice of conscience on the issue of sustainable development. We can and should provide a sensible non-partisan approach to environmental matters.

You might ask, when do nature's interests override economics? Again, the answer is not all that complicated. All natural populations of fish, trees and wildlife create a surplus every year. This surplus can be used by consumers such as human beings without any long-term damage to the resource itself.

In Manitoba, white-tailed deer is an abundant and prolific species, numbering usually about 100,000 animals. Predators, including human hunters, harvest about 25 per cent of these deer every year without reducing the overall population. This can be seen as the natural "interest" produced by our deer herd. The reproductive ability of the deer population matches or exceeds the annual attrition of hunting, road accidents and other factors. Today, according to our provincial biologists, our deer population is actually increasing. The Manitoba Ministry of Natural Resources congratulates itself, in this case at least, for managing white-tailed deer according to the true spirit of sustainable use.

How are we doing in other areas? Not so well in the realm of agriculture. Toxic chemicals are continuing to build up in our soil and water. Today, 70 per cent of all toxic chemicals used in Canada are applied by farmers. The agriculture industry applies millions of kilograms of pesticides every year to the foods that we eat, but only about one-tenth of 1 per cent of those chemicals actually reaches the target insects. The rest leaches into the environment and kills off beneficial insects, fish and important bird species like the burrowing owl and the peregrine falcon.

Pesticides have also been identified as a potential carcinogen. One does not need to be a medical researcher to hypothesize that something which kills insects and fish is probably not the best substance to sprinkle on your dinner. On the other hand, hard-pressed farmers argue the need for pesticides to control the insects which endanger their crops. In cases like this, legislators are tempted to strike what is usually referred to as a compromise. With toxic chemicals steadily building up in our lakes and soils, I doubt that coming generations will admire us for our mild-mannered approach.

If we agree that the use of massive amounts of pesticides is not sustainable in the long term, then obviously we must bring down these amounts to a manageable level. Regulation plays an important role in environmental management, but so does research. According to the World Wildlife Fund, Sweden and other European countries have devised cost-effective strategies for reducing agriculture pesticide use by 75 per cent. As senators, we can make a valuable contribution by staying abreast of these issues and, when it is appropriate, proposing common sense, long-term solutions.

Our agricultural industry has also been striving to achieve better methods of soil conservation. It has been a little over 10 years since Senator Sparrow and his committee released a farsighted study called "Soils at Risk." Senator Sparrow recently told me that one of the most difficult aspects of that study was actually convincing people that soil was an important issue. Across North America, farmers have been losing millions of tons of topsoil annually through wind and water erosion, but in 1984, no one seemed to believe that that was important. Most people simply do not believe that there is anything very interesting about soil — that it has no inherent value. "It's as cheap as dirt." Or is it?

[Senator Johnson]

Perhaps the problem is our own woeful ignorance. We take life for granted. We walk on the soil every day, but we never stop to consider its role in our geography, our history, even our existence as a wealthy western nation. In my own rudimentary studies of humble elements like water and soil, I have experienced great joy in discovering how important are these simple components of life.

• (1500)

For example, let me describe briefly the importance of soil in the history and the development of Manitoba. Manitoba soil is about 12,000 years old. It was created in the days after the glaciers receded when southern Manitoba was only a bleak wasteland of rock, rubble and rotting ice. In the heat of the spring, sunlight and rain encouraged the growth of tiny microbes. As these microbes died by the billions, a thin mould-like fur grew around the edges of the meltwater. Drifting seeds soon found root in this vestigial soil. As these plants and grasses themselves died, the soil began to build up.

With each season a new generation of plant, fish and animals contributed their decaying bodies to the ever-growing biomass of the soil. Soon the wetlands became rippling expanses of prairie, populated by a tall spectacular grass species called "big bluestem." Emerald green, flashing ocean-blue in the wind, big bluestem grew thick and tall enough to conceal the buffalo that migrated through its tangled pathways.

As generations of grass lived and died, and 100 centuries passed, those deep layers of decayed big bluestem became one of the most fertile soils on earth — "Red River gumbo."

Soil has all the components of life within it. A cupful of prairie soil contains the 19 elements required to make a flower, a galloping buffalo or a Canadian senator. When the minister says "dust to dust" he is not speaking in metaphor. We are dust. Soil is life itself. It does not belong to governments or to agri-business — it belongs to the earth. It is our responsibility to conserve it.

Today, honourable senators, Manitoba farmers are harvesting a bounty that has been 12,000 years in the making. By breaking the soil with a plough, farmers expose it to wind and water erosion. After only a century of farming, a substantial portion of our precious topsoils have dried up and blown away.

However, in the 10 years since the release of the Senate's report on soil conservation, there have been some encouraging gains. This is where this institution can continue to play a role. I certainly hope we will. Farmers are now beginning to adopt "zero till" farming, which means planting crops without actually breaking the sod and exposing the soil to erosion. Wetland conservation is also making strides. Decades ago, too, wetlands were seen as wastelands. Marshes were drained and swamps burned so that farmers could use every acre of available land.

Today, through the efforts of agencies such as Ducks Unlimited and the World Wildlife Fund, farmers are encouraged to leave wetlands as they are. This is critical because wetlands stabilize the topsoil and act as filters for water that has been contaminated with pesticides and fertilizers. Like canaries in a coalmine, waterfowl are good indicators of the health of the prairie wetlands. Only 10 years ago, prairie waterfowl numbers were plummeting at an alarming rate. In the last couple of years, however, waterfowl populations have begun to stabilize. This is a good indicator that conservation measures have begun to reverse a very serious decline in land quality in Western Canada.

Principles of sustainable development can be applied to all areas of economic activity. If natural topsoil creation is 1.25 millimetres per year, then average soil loss should not exceed that amount. Again, this is not a complicated matter. The difficulty lies in finding the courage to live within our means. By taking more than our share of natural resources, we are in effect stealing from future generations.

As our federal government rushes to devolve its responsibilities to the private sector, it must be remembered that governments have the leading role to play in the management and regulation of our natural resources. The current fiscal crisis has been caused by 30 years of overspending.

Overconsumption of our natural resources would be an extension of the same folly. In the current shake-up between the government and the private sector, it must always be remembered that it is primarily the responsibility of government to manage the environment.

How well are governments currently handling that responsibility? The federal government is reducing the size of Environment Canada by approximately 30 per cent. The provinces are sending out the same signals, that the profit motive is once again beginning to overpower concern for the environment.

In Manitoba, the provincial government has pegged the sustainable harvested trees around Swan River at 45,000 cubic metres per year. This is the government's own figure arrived at through consultations with provincial foresters. Recently, however, the province signed a deal with a large multinational firm called Louisiana Pacific. This firm will manufacture a wood product called oriented strand board, which will soon replace plywood as the number one sheathing material for house construction. The Louisiana Pacific plant in Swan River, Manitoba, will be the largest manufacturer of oriented strand board in the world. This is surely a good news story for Manitoba. Or is it?

To close the deal, the province has granted Louisiana Pacific a licence to cut twice the allowable harvest of aspen, or 90,000 cubic metres per year. Federal wildlife biologists have said that wildlife populations around Riding Mountain and Duck Mountain Parks will be severely disrupted by the logging. Clear-cutting on the steep slopes of the parks will inevitably cause flooding in the lowland communities as well. Logging will also encroach on parkland. The World Wildlife Fund is so concerned that it has downgraded my province from an A to a B rating in 1993 and to a C this year.

Forestry experts say that Louisiana Pacific's harvest will grossly exceed the ability of the forest to regenerate itself. Even from a strict dollars and cents point of view, the deal is remarkably unattractive.

Ontario charges $6 a cubic metre in provincial stumpage fees. In Alberta, Louisiana Pacific's rivals pay $6 to $10 in stumpage fees. Manitoba is giving away twice the allowable yield for $1.17 per cubic metre. Based on market prices for oriented strand board, industry experts estimate that Louisiana Pacific will turn these numbers into net profits of $100 million per year. In return, Louisiana Pacific will pay the province a grand total of $1 million per year. The Louisiana Pacific project is a case study, a classic example of old-style development undertaken for short-term profits.

Heavily forested provinces like Manitoba have unlimited potential for tourism, sustainable logging and other non-destructive industries. However, those in provincial government must be aware that the public is becoming increasingly distressed by the contradiction between non-sustainable forest activities on the one hand and promises to pursue sustainable development on the other. In this day and age, provinces must be made aware of their responsibilities in regulating the harvest of natural resources. Any development of our forests must be carried out in a modern and sustainable manner.

What can we do as senators? This is my second speech on this subject. I will be giving another one because the subject is so important to me, but also because I believe that we in this chamber have the responsibility to inform the Canadian public on these important matters.

The Senate has a long and honourable career in lobbying for wise and sensible legislation that affects the future of Canada. I implore honourable senators to apply their own considerable influence to ensure that the government pursues sustainable development with the same enthusiasm as they use when referring to it in their press releases. The federal government must lead the way.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

MOTION PURSUANT TO RULE 43

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, I rise today to raise a question of privilege pursuant to rule 43(1)(a) of the Rules of the Senate of Canada. I raise this question of privilege and ask the Speaker of the Senate to rule whether there is a case of prima facie breach of privilege. I am prepared to move the necessary motion.

• (1510)

Honourable senators, it has come to my attention that a witness who appeared before the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on September 20, 1995, has cast reflections on the Senate and on senators. That witness was Ms Arlene Chapman, provincial coordinator of the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters.

In an October 4, 1995 article by staff writer Michelle Nicholson published in The Edmonton Sun, Ms Chapman described the Senate committee hearings on Bill C-68, respecting firearms and other weapons, as a "sham." Ms Chapman further maligns the members of the committee with the rude and ugly words, "Well, I'm sorry, but I'm sick of taking that from those dolts."

Such comments, honourable senators, are indicative of the views of certain radical feminists who have no respect for the truth, or for voices other than their own. While the committee members extended time and due consideration to Ms Chapman to present her comments and her views, she does not reciprocate that courtesy to the senators. By her statements, she does herself, in particular, and women, in general, a great disservice. Ms Chapman is reported in the article as saying that the transcripts from our committee hearings indicate that women's groups are being dismissed.

Honourable senators, it is not unusual for certain radical feminists to express hostility to any institution, process or person that is not a prisoner of their own narrow and self-righteous agenda. They display mean-spiritedness and manipulateness as they attempt to control politicians by using the devices of public embarrassment and public malignment.

Having made a presentation before our committee that was far from excellent and not distinguished, it is the height of arrogance and contempt for Ms Chapman to describe the Senate's hearings on Bill C-68 as "a sham." Quite personally, my sense of charity would inhibit me from describing her testimony, lacking though it was, as a sham. Her carelessness reflects her hostility and does enormous disservice to the concerns of women who suffer domestic abuse. Numerous women in this country suffer terribly.

Ms Chapman, and others like herself, claims to speak on behalf of all women. Fortunately, honourable senators, they merely and barely represent a bitter and unhappy minority, unable and unwilling to participate in a democratic process.

My intention, honourable senators, is to draw your attention to the mischief of this radical feminist. Her comments in The Edmonton Sun article demonstrate her contempt for the Senate and for parliamentary process and make manifest the true reasons she appeared before the Senate committee.

If Ms Chapman had felt such disregard for the Senate, it was surely a waste of her time, as well as that of the senators, to have testified before the Senate committee. It was also a waste of taxpayers' money. In this era of fiscal restraint, it is unfortunate that such resources should have been devoted and utilised on her appearance before the Senate committee. These resources could obviously have been better used. The wanton disregard demonstrated by her comments in the article reveal much. They reflect candidly on her and her lack of respect for Parliament and for this chamber.

Honourable senators, I sincerely believe that the behaviour of those of us who sat on the Senate committee during her testimony was exemplary. Our behaviour — mine and that of the other senators present — can stand full scrutiny. It was truly exemplary behaviour. I work with these men and women.

Her suggestion that the Senate mistreated her during her appearance before the committee is a flagrant dishonesty, obviously founded in an active imagination. The suggestion that the Senate has mistreated her constitutes an act of verbal aggression and provocation. In addition, such behaviour is an insult to the people of Canada, especially to the women of Canada.

Honourable senators, her comments, however, should not deter the Senate from continuing its work on Bill C-68. The Senate committee should continue its hearings on Bill C-68 and should continue to listen to Canadians on this issue.

Ms Chapman's bold assertions that the Senate and senators have abused, mistreated, neglected, dismissed, disregarded and ignored women, or have refused to hear women's groups, are blatantly false. These false assertions are libelous and slanderous, cast reflections on the Senate of Canada, and are a breach of the privileges of the Parliament of Canada.

About such reflections on the Houses of Parliament as a whole, Beauchesne, at page 18, tells us that:

Traditionally, articles in the press reflecting badly on the character of the House have been treated as contempts.

Beauchesne also tells us, on the same page, that the houses of Parliament have judged such articles:

...to be a "scandalous, false and malicious libel upon the honour, integrity and character of this House, and of certain Members thereof, and a high contempt of the privileges and constitutional authority of this House"...

The intent and spirit of Ms Arlene Chapman's statements are replicated in some press releases, all dated October 4, 1995, received by my office this morning. These press releases are from certain organizations, including the Montreal Assault Prevention Centre, the Manitoba Action Committee on the Status of Women, the Canadian Federation of University Women, the YWCA of Canada, and the Jewish Women International of Canada. According to that same Edmonton Sun article, these press releases emanate from a 10:00 a.m. meeting which was held at the office of Ms Chapman's Alberta Council of Women's Shelters on October 4, 1995.

Honourable senators, it seems that persons like Ms Chapman believe that they are supported by Minister Allan Rock's statements, as reported in The Toronto Star of August 30, 1995. The Toronto Star of that day reported, about Minister Rock, that "he made it clear he expects his gun control package to become law without amendments." That article quotes Minister Rock as stating that "they" — senators — "will perform their important but limited function."

Honourable senators, if persons like Ms Chapman believe that they can rely on these statements of Justice Minister Rock in their committing of a contempt of Parliament, they are mistaken and should be so informed by this chamber.

Honourable senators, I ask His Honour the Speaker to rule on a prima facie case of breach of privilege. If the Speaker so finds a prima facie breach, I am prepared to move the necessary motion referring this matter to the appropriate committee.

Honourable senators, I thank you for your attention and I hope you will commend me for having raised this matter at the earliest convenience. I was very attentive to being right on time this time around.

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, I salute my colleague, Senator Cools, for her vigilance in wanting to fulfil the requirement of rule 43, that the preservation of the privileges of the Senate is the duty of every senator. However, in all candour and frankness, I do not think that the matter that has been raised meets the test of a prima facie case of breach of privilege at all.

I read the article which appeared in The Edmonton Sun on Wednesday, October 4, to which she referred. Whilst the language was poetic, I do not believe that a word such as "sham" is even unparliamentary. If you examine the records of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology of a few years ago when it was examining the amendments to the Immigration Act, one honourable colleague opposite repeatedly called the hearings of that committee a sham. The term finds expression in our record. When you look at that word at face value, I do not think that there is any breach of privilege by one using that word.

It is terribly important that the test for a prima facie case of privilege must be relatively onerous. It must be substantive. Otherwise, we demean the value of privilege and the importance of protecting the integrity of this chamber.

I find this matter somewhat frivolous, and do not think that Your Honour should find the case meeting the test of breach of privilege in the prima facie fashion.

Senator Cools: Honourable senators, perhaps I should attempt to clarify that my sense of offence was not only at being called a "dolt." I have been called that, and many worse things before. Perhaps I did not make myself clear enough and should try harder. Perhaps if I had had more time to prepare, I might have been able to do better.

The essential point I was trying to make is that there are press releases and press statements now going out across this country which misrepresent the Senate by saying that senators are inattentive to women's groups, that senators are ignoring women's groups, or that somehow senators are improperly treating women's groups. That, to my mind, is the central issue which I am asking His Honour to examine.

I understand, of course, that on the other side many senators are much more prone to disagree with me than other persons. I understand that, and I accept that. I would ask His Honour to give the matter judicious consideration, particularly in view of the fact that senators have been damaged and injured in this regard. What is being said about the Senate is simply not true. Senators have been very attentive and have given proper consideration to everything that is being said to them in committee, and are considerate of all groups, including women's groups.

As a matter of fact, most of us are gentlemen and gentle ladies. We are not in the habit of treating people as the remarks within these articles, press releases, and statements purport. We really are quite a gentle and decent group of people.

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators, I think any member of the committee who reads or listens to Senator Cools would feel some pleasure at hearing her angry words. It does not hurt us to get angry every now and then; even jump up and down and spit, if that will help.

However, I do not think that there really is a case here that we can take to some higher authority and expect them to pronounce us madder than we are, or as mad as we are thought to be.

Having said that, I think we should go to the next meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs and give them more of the same.

The Hon. the Speaker: If no other honourable senators wish to speak, I will take the matter under advisement and report back at a later date.

Motion adjourned to await ruling of the Speaker.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, October 17, 1995, at 2:00 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, October 17, 1995

The Senate met at 2:00 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

VISITORS IN THE GALLERY

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I wish to call to your attention the presence in the gallery of His Excellency Jozef Skolc, President of the National Assembly of the Republic of Slovenia and His Excellency the Ambassador of Slovenia to Canada. I know that all honourable senators welcome our distinguished guests.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

FELICITATIONS TO NOVA SCOTIANS ON RECENT ELECTION SUCCESSES

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: Honourable senators, I rise briefly to make two observations: The first is with respect to a fellow Nova Scotian, albeit a native of Ottawa, Alexa McDonough, and to extend to her our warmest congratulations, together with those of thousands of other Canadians.

I knew Ms McDonough even before she entered politics in Nova Scotia. She is one of those people of whom I have often said that I wished she were a conservative democrat rather than a social democrat. Whatever her choice, she has followed it with honesty and vigour, and with the determination that the left in politics in our country should not be without a voice. She has shown determination that the views of social democracy should be kept alive, not only so that Canadians might have a choice, but also because she believed and continues to believe very strongly in those principles.

I wish her well. Given the opportunity, I would say to Mary Clancy that she should be trembling in her shoes. I would also say to Ron MacDonald that I found his comments with respect to Ms McDonough simply not acceptable, and that they caused me some embarrassment when I read them.

Conservatism is alive and well, although the Canadian Press has forgotten what the words "Progressive Conservative" mean. All they have been able to print in their articles in recent years have been the words "Tory" or "Toryism," or some other euphemism. Alfie MacLeod won a by-election in Cape Breton, a bastion of Liberalism. He took the seat away from them and added it to those of Terry Donahoe, the leader. More important, now he will take his seat when the new leader of the Nova Scotia Progressive Conservative Party starts that very short and quick march to the premier's office in our great province.

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to associate myself with the remarks of Senator Forrestall in congratulating a Nova Scotian on achieving the leadership of a national party. Alexa McDonough and her family have served the province politically and with industry for many years. All members of the family have not always been on the same side of the fence politically, but she has demonstrated an enormous strength, a willingness for service, and the kind of dedication which, I am sure, will serve her party, her province and all Canadians well.

I do not know where she intends to run, but I want to assure Senator Forrestall that Mary Clancy, the distinguished member of Parliament for Halifax, is in no way quaking in her boots and is looking forward to many years of service as the Liberal member of Parliament for Halifax.

Senator Forrestall: Want to bet?

Senator Graham: I should also comment on the other comments that Senator Forrestall made with respect to the election in Cape Breton West. One must look at the overall numbers in Nova Scotia and, as all Liberals do, look with confidence to the future and to the next election in that province.

WOMEN AND LITERACY

Hon. Erminie J. Cohen: Honourable senators, having recently participated in the United Nations Fourth World Conference on Women in Beijing, and having learned so much more about literacy throughout the world, and secure in the belief that women and girls' access to literacy is a major obstacle to equality and quality of life, I wish to share with you a recent moving experience.

At the beginning of October, I was privileged to attend the Saint John Learning Exchange's first Luncheon for Literacy and the introduction of their second production called The Day I Disappeared. What a message! The cast of 27 students of varying ages presented a stirring account of the feelings and frustrations of the uneducated as they strive for self-esteem and recognition. At one point in the play, the female lead said, "They all think I am a loser." She was attending a funeral with many relatives who looked down their noses at her. She went on to say, "They're all university graduates and business people and I am nothing to them; I can see it in their eyes."

It was an emotional presentation and drove home to each of us in the audience the feelings that these people live with every day such as lack of social acceptance, loss of self-esteem, being on the outside looking in, feeling ashamed.

The Day I Disappeared, performed on a makeshift stage, presented a journey through an educational system that often fosters frustration and the isolation of people who fail in public schools or slip through the cracks. It convinced many of us that people who have not been successful in a formal educational atmosphere thrive in programs such as this. They require a non-traditional learning environment.

Drama is empowering for everyone involved. It provides opportunities for people to grow and recognize their own strengths, courage and talents. It is an effective tool in building the confidence of its pupils while at the same time providing the public with insights into literacy and educational issues.

The Saint John Learning Exchange is a not-for-profit literacy education training centre dedicated to the empowerment of individuals, be they adults, children or youth. Those of us present marvelled at the level of talent and skills we witnessed, and you could see the pride and self-esteem of the actors as they listened to the applause and the praise of the audience.

At the end of the performance, one of the performers shared this comment with a newspaper reporter: "Somehow," she said, "because of hardships in your life, you feel like you are a failure, but what I have learned through this program is that there is always hope. There are places to go if people want to learn, and you don't have to feel stupid about it. I am very proud to be here."

So my message to you, honourable senators, is to keep that hope alive, visit the learning exchanges in your province. Be ever vigilant. In these days of shrinking funds it is important that we support literacy so we can give these students a second chance to feel good about themselves.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PEARSON AIRPORT AGREEMENTS

SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Finlay MacDonald, Chairman of the Special Committee of the Senate on the Pearson Airport Agreements, presented the following report:

Tuesday, October 17, 1995

The Special Committee of the Senate on the Pearson Airport Agreements has the honour to present its

SECOND REPORT

On May 4, 1995, pursuant to a motion adopted by the Senate, your Committee was appointed to "examine and report upon all matters concerning the policies and negotiations leading up to, and including, the agreements respecting the redevelopment and operation of Terminals 1 and 2 at Lester B. Pearson International Airport and the circumstances relating to the cancellation thereof."

In order to carry out this mandate, it is crucial that your Committee be granted access to the Treasury Board Submissions of August 1993 concerning the Pearson Airport Agreements. Your Committee is satisfied that the release of these documents is in the public interest and constitutes a reasonable exception to the customary practice of respecting Cabinet confidentiality.

Therefore your Committee recommends that a humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General praying that he will cause to be laid before the Senate a copy of the Submissions to Treasury Board in August 1993 relating to the Pearson Airport Agreements.

Respectfully submitted,

FINLAY MACDONALD,
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators, because this is a select committee, I am obliged to give two days' notice. I suggest that it be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to and bill placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration Thursday next, October 19, 1995.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 58(1)(h), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Wednesday, October 18, 1995, at one-thirty o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

FIREARMS BILL

NOTICE OF MOTION TO INSTRUCT COMMITTEE TO TABLE FINAL REPORT

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, pursuant to rule 58(1)(f), I give notice that on Wednesday, October 18, 1995, I will move:

That it be an instruction of this House to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs that no later than Tuesday, November 7, 1995, it present its final report to the Senate on Bill C-68, an Act Respecting firearms and other weapons, referred to it on June 22, 1995.

EXPLOSIVES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-71, to amend the Explosives Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Graham, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next, October 19, 1995.

• (1420)

FIRST READING

Hon. Anne C. Cools presented Bill S-11, concerning one Karla Homolka.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Cools, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next, October 19, 1995.

CANADA-FRANCE INTER-PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

MEETING HELD IN PARIS—REPORT OF CANADIAN DELEGATION TABLED

Hon. Gérald-A. Beaudoin: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the report of the Canadian delegation of the Canada-France Inter-Parliamentary Association to the meeting of the standing committee of the association, which was held in Paris on May 23 and 24, 1995.

[English]

CANADA-JAPAN INTER-PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

SIXTH ANNUAL MEETING HELD IN TOKYO AND OSAKA, JAPAN—REPORT OF CANADIAN DELEGATION TABLED

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the report of the Canadian delegation to the sixth annual meeting of the Canada-Japan Inter-Parliamentary Group, which was held in Tokyo and Osaka on September 9-16, 1995.

If I may comment, honourable senators, Japan is Canada's largest trading partner after the United States. Volume of trade has more than doubled since 1985 and is increasingly diversified in composition. In 1994, Canada's exports to Japan rose by 13 per cent to $9.5 billion, resulting in an increase of over $1 billion for the second year in a row.

Ignoring the impacts of liberalized Japanese markets and increased Canadian competitiveness, projected exports from Canada to Japan will climb to $14 billion in 2002, which is 80 per cent greater than 1993 levels.

Honourable senators, while in Japan, members of this delegation were able to express Canadian concerns and promote Canadian excellence with our Japanese counterparts. This will help ensure a growing Canadian presence in the Japanese market and will allow us to work with our own business communities in encouraging increased commercial activity with Japan.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

CANADA'S INTERNATIONAL COMPETITIVE POSITION IN TELECOMMUNICATIONS—NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO EXTEND DATE FOR FINAL REPORT ON SPECIAL STUDY

Hon. Donald H. Oliver: Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, Wednesday, October 18, 1995, I will move:

That notwithstanding its order of reference of April 5, 1995, the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications be authorized to continue its special study on Canada's international competitive position in telecommunications; and

That the Committee present its report no later than March 29, 1996.

UNITED NATIONS

FOURTH WORLD CONFERENCE ON WOMEN, BEIJING, CHINA—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Landon Pearson: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, October 24, I will open an inquiry into the Fourth World Conference on Women held in Beijing, September 4-15, which Senator Erminie Cohen and I had the privilege to attend as parliamentary observers on behalf of the Senate.

PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. Rose-Marie Losier-Cool: Honourable senators, I have the honour of presenting a petition signed by the residents of Anjou and Rivière-des-Prairies. The petitioners earnestly support Bill C-68 on firearm control and registration. I am submitting this petition to the Senate on behalf of these citizens, who are concerned with improving their safety and their future.

QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL FINANCE

REPORT OF AUDITOR GENERAL ON NATIONAL DEBT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Duncan J. Jessiman: Honourable senators, my question is for the honourable government leader and concerns the national debt and the recent report of the Auditor General.

Earlier this month, the Auditor General submitted a well-articulated report on the need for national long-term debt strategy. When questioned about this report in the other place, the Minister of Finance simply reiterated his message of setting two-year deficit targets. I think he is missing the point, which is with respect to the sustainability of our current debt levels, not our current deficit levels.

The Auditor General said further:

To date, discussions about fiscal policy have focused on deficit reduction and balanced budgets. They have not given enough consideration to the larger question of how much debt we can sustain over the long haul, and how that fits within our view of taxation and the role of government.

The Auditor General went on to say:

We believe that the government should engage Parliament in developing this vision.

My question for the government leader is simple: Does she agree with the words, "We believe that the government should engage Parliament in developing this vision"?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the Minister of Finance, perhaps more than any of his predecessors, has engaged Parliament and the people in the discussion of these issues. He has done so through references to parliamentary committees which have conducted public hearings in this country. He has done so with his annual financial report that came out last year. He has provided more information than ever before on tax expenditures. He has given updates to his program. His whole budget process has been opened up, unlike the practice at any other time in my experience on Parliament Hill, which goes back a very long way. It was a very secretive process at one time.

The Minister of Finance and the government could not agree more with the Auditor General, first, with regard to the level of debt in Canada and, second, insofar as following his suggestions to have more information produced. I believe that my colleague the Minister of Finance will continue to follow that program.

Senator Jessiman: I am not quite sure that the Leader of the Government in the Senate has answered my question, but I take it that the answer is "yes" since she seems to agree that Parliament should be engaged in this vision.

The Auditor General also said:

In our view, only when government is committed to a vision about how much debt it is prepared to carry, and crafts budgets with that in mind, will it be possible for Canadians to assess how annual budgets fit into a longer-term vision for sustainable debt.

He went on to say that that involves not only Ottawa, but governments at all levels. He then continued:

The reality is that there are three levels of government taxing us and borrowing on our behalf. If we are ever to look beyond each jurisdiction in isolation and ask the question how much debt can Canadians carry, we need to know how much debt is owed by all levels of government in Canada. Information currently available doesn't answer that question very well.

Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate agree that the debt is a national problem that demands national attention?

Senator Olson: It is a Conservative disaster.

Senator Fairbairn: I can certainly agree with my honourable colleague's final statement that the national debt is a national problem that requires national attention. However, I do not believe there is anyone in this country who has devoted himself more assiduously to that problem than the current Minister of Finance. My honourable friend uses the word "vision." The Minister of Finance set forward a plan which was indicated during the last election campaign, and he will adhere to that plan in relation to our deficit reduction program. He has made it very clear that our ultimate goal is a balanced budget. He has also made it very clear that it is only through adhering systematically to a plan that can be achieved that we will then cut to the heart of this overwhelming debt which burdens our country.

Senator Jessiman: The government was offered the chance to respond publicly to the Auditor General's report, but did not. They did, however, send a letter to the Auditor General, thanking him for the advice, but requesting that the letter not be published. Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate look into this matter and advise this chamber of the reason for the government's refusal to publish its reply to the Auditor General on this matter? If the government is willing to make its reply public, will she undertake to table it?

Senator Fairbairn: I will pursue my honourable friend's question with my colleague the Minister of Finance.

HEALTH

BOVINE GROWTH HORMONE—EVALUATION OF HEALTH RISK—REPRESENTATIONS FROM UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Canada is still in a holding pattern on the question of allowing the sale of rBST, the controversial bovine growth hormone. There are fears among public health advocates in the United States that high-level pressure has been applied on this government to influence the outcome in favour of the multinational companies that produce rBST.

My question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate is straightforward: Can she confirm or deny whether our officials have refused any formal or informal representations on the matter from the office of the U.S. trade representative Mickey Kantor? If there has been such representations, what has been the response?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): To my honourable friend, I will follow up her inquiry. I know that she is aware that Health Canada is continuing its evaluation of rBST for safety and effectiveness. Until this evaluation is completed and a decision made, there is absolutely no question that rBST cannot be sold for use in Canada.

I will follow up on my honourable friend's specific question, but I wished to reiterate the position that we have taken in the past so that she will know that that position still holds.

Senator Spivak: I thank the Honourable Leader of the Government. I am aware through answers to my previous questions that Health Canada is still evaluating this matter. Perhaps the government leader can tell us whether she has any indication as to when we can expect some result on that particular evaluation?

Senator Fairbairn: I cannot give my honourable friend a definite date, but I will try to communicate with her perhaps later this week, if possible.

TRANSPORT

MERGER OF CANADIAN COAST GUARD WITH DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND OCEANS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: My question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It arises out of speculation in the press — as yet unconfirmed — that the merger of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans with the Canadian Coast Guard will probably result in the elimination of some 150 shipboard jobs and 24 vessels from the service, and the closure of the Coast Guard base at Dartmouth.

Can the leader confirm for us whether or not these reports are accurate? If they are accurate, inasmuch as they are alleged to be based on internal studies and documents, could those internal studies and documents be made available?

With the elimination of some 24 vessels and the closure of the Coast Guard base, at issue, of course, is the safety of in-shore, near-shore, and certainly gulf marine activity.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): My first response will be to clarify the validity of the reports that my honourable friend has raised and, contingent on that, the question of documentation.

Senator Forrestall: It is our understanding from press reports in Atlantic Canada that these alleged studies went to a certain point, but that the Minister of Transport, Mr. Young, and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, Mr. Tobin, then went beyond the recommendations of their officials to some extent.

Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate determine whether or not there is any truth in that rumour? It is a very alarming rumour to have floating around and, if there is no truth to it, it should be put to rest.

Senator Fairbairn: I will do my best, Senator Forrestall.

CANADA-CHINA RELATIONS

VISIT TO CANADA OF CHINESE PREMIER—RAISING OF HUMAN RIGHTS ISSUES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: My question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Will she relate to Canadians what the Prime Minister of Canada had to say to the Prime Minister of China with respect to human rights abuses in that country?

We all know that a great number of Canadians have manifested their concern with the delinking of human rights from Canadian foreign policy and Canadian trade policy. Would the minister be able to advise this house and Canadians as to what exactly the Prime Minister said to the Chinese Prime Minister about human rights violations in China?

Senator Olson: That is a fabrication of information.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: The Prime Minister said that we had no influence; that we are too small, and too inconsequential.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): To my honourable friend, the Prime Minister has indicated that, as always in his talks with Li Peng, he raised the issue of human rights. He did so again on the occasion of the most recent meeting, as he did on the visit to China and on other occasions in the past. I was not present at the discussions, so I could not tell my honourable friend exactly what was said.

However, the Prime Minister has made it clear repeatedly, and in particular in recent exchanges in the House, that Canada does express itself vigorously and forcefully on the issue of human rights.

Canada does not shirk its bilateral responsibilities, nor does it hold back from expressing its views at the United Nations. Canada also believes that with countries where human rights are of concern, improved contact in terms of economics, trade and social development will have a profound influence upon the progress of human rights and will serve to bring those countries even closer to the rest of the world. China falls within that category.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Like in Cuba or Singapore?

TRADE IN GOODS MANUFACTURED IN LABOUR CAMPS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: Will the Government of Canada refuse, as a matter of policy, to trade in goods manufactured in the People's Republic of China by those who are incarcerated in work camps?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would need to seek advice on that particular question. However, I also wish to underline the importance of the visit of the Premier of China to Canada. Many benefits to Canadians will arise from that visit. Considerable benefits will also accrue to the people of China. That mutual benefit underpins the government's interest in pursuing not just trade but the betterment of society in China and other such countries. The Prime Minister will continue to visit these countries during his administration and to carry to them the same message.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: It sounds like we are sending missionaries.

Senator Fairbairn: Certainly, I would consider the Prime Minister of Canada and the premiers of nine of our provinces as extremely potent missionaries in this world.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Yes, and the almighty dollar is our God.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a response to a question raised in the Senate on May 25, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Andreychuk, regarding the commitment to intervention with transgressor countries; a response to a question raised in the Senate, May 25, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Kinsella, regarding the possibility of imposing embargoes on transgressor countries; a response to a question raised in the Senate, June 6, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton, regarding the inclusion of Chile in NAFTA; a response to a question raised in the Senate, June 6, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Nolin, regarding the extension of NAFTA to include Chile; a response to a question raised in the Senate, June 9, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Kinsella, regarding the relationship to aid and trade; a response to a question raised in the Senate, June 28, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Nolin, regarding negotiations towards inclusion of Chile in NAFTA; a response to a question raised in the Senate, July 11, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Comeau, regarding the Canada Post Corporation; and a response to a question raised in the Senate, July 12, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Prud'homme, regarding the scrutiny of Mr. David Berger's views prior to his appointment as Ambassador to Israel and Cyprus.

HUMAN RIGHTS

COMMITMENT TO INTERVENTION WITH TRANSGRESSOR COUNTRIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. A. Raynell Andreychuk on May 25, 1995)

The Government will continue to exercise leadership in promoting respect for human rights and will use a variety of means to do so including both bilateral and multilateral diplomacy and assistance to governments building democratic institutions.

As a general rule, dialogue and engagement, rather than isolation, represent the most effective avenues for influencing governments to respect international human rights obligations.

These obligations originate in the UN Charter which requires all United Nations members to promote universal respect for human rights and in the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as well as several UN human rights treaties.

Canada continues to exercise leadership on a broad range of human rights and democratic development issues in the UN and other multilateral fora. For example, this government played a key role in the creation of the post of United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and continues to work actively in support of his work and efforts to strengthen the UN human rights system. Canada successfully led efforts to create a UN Special Rapporteur on Violence Against Women and continues to take a lead in international efforts to integrate women's rights into the mainstream of human rights mechanisms in the UN (including at the World Conference of Women), OAS, Commonwealth and Francophonie.

One of the six priorities for Canada's official development assistance is human rights, democracy, and good governance. Through CIDA the government will support activities aimed at strengthening legislative and judicial systems and increasing the capacity of people to participate fully and effectively in decision making in their countries, as well as peace and reconciliation initiatives, human rights education and electoral assistance.

Canada played a lead role in efforts to ensure the reinstatement of democracy in Haiti, and both through participation in UN operations and through the training of Haitian police, is contributing to the nation-building exercise underway in that country.

The Government engages in ongoing consultations with human rights nongovernmental organizations on a broad range of international human rights issues. These discussions are important in determining our policy priorities in the field of international human rights.

POSSIBILITY OF IMPOSING EMBARGOES ON TRANSGRESSOR COUNTRIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Noël A. Kinsella on May 25, 1995)

The government is not contemplating imposing an embargo on any country in the world at present. In most cases, the government believes that Canada can maximize its influence by maintaining dialogue and engagement with a particular government rather than by isolating it. Embargoes are most effective when imposed multilaterally, i.e., by the whole international community.

NORTH AMERICAN FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

INCLUSION OF CHILE—INFLUENCE ON EXISTING AGREEMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. John Lynch-Staunton on June 6, 1995)

The first detailed, all-chapter negotiating session on Chilean accession to NAFTA took place in Mexico City July 25 – August 1. Under the direction of chief negotiators from Canada, the United States, Mexico and Chile, various working groups discussed a full range of technical issues required for Chile's accession.

An August 2 meeting of the U.S. Trade Subcommittee on the House Ways and Means Committee, which was scheduled to consider fast track legislation, was cancelled. It is not yet known when the Republican Congressional Leadership will present the draft legislation for deliberation by appropriate committees.

Canada entered these negotiations on the clear understanding with its NAFTA partners that the addition of a fourth member might require limited and very technical adjustments to the NAFTA text to accommodate a new member. The negotiations should not entail a reopening or rebalancing of the rights and obligations between the NAFTA's current members.

EXTENSION OF AGREEMENT TO INCLUDE CHILE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Pierre Claude Nolin on June 6, 1995)

Presently the Chilean investment system is transparent and open. Chile welcomes foreign investment. Canadian businesses investing there have no fundamental problems with current practices. Chile's accession to the NAFTA, including its high-quality provisions on non-discriminatory treatment for foreign investment, will provide a kind of longer-term insurance policy protecting Canadian investors if, at some point in the future, Chile were to consider the introduction of practices that might discriminate against Canadian investors. Chile's membership in the NAFTA means that it will no longer be necessary to seek to negotiate a bilateral foreign investment protection agreement with Chile.

HUMAN RIGHTS

RELATIONSHIP TO AID AND TRADE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

(Response to question raised by Hon. Noël A. Kinsella on June 9, 1995)

The Government's policy on human rights remains as outlined in its response to the foreign policy review: human rights are fundamental to Canadian values, crucial to the promotion of international peace and security, and integral to Canada's foreign policy.

The issue is not whether, but how the Government can best promote human rights internationally. While the Government does not contend that trade automatically enhances human rights, only in the rarest cases are the pursuit of trade and the promotion of human rights incompatible. The Government believes that, in most cases, trade reduces isolation and generates the economic growth required to sustain social change and development.

As stated in the response to the question put by Senator Kinsella on March 23rd, regular and systematic reporting on human rights and democratic development is an integral part of the work of Canadian diplomatic missions in support of these and other objectives set in the foreign policy review.

With respect to the incarceration of a number of Chinese human rights activists, this issue was raised by senior Departmental officials in Ottawa with the Chinese Ambassador.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATIONS TOWARDS INCLUSION OF CHILE IN NAFTA—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT

(Response to question raised by Hon. Pierre Claude Nolin on June 28, 1995)

Initial talks on Chile's accession to NAFTA have begun. However, the Chilean government has stated that it will not engage deeply in negotiations on core sensitivities until the disposition of fast track legislation in the U.S. Congress is much clearer. (Fast track allows trade agreements, once negotiated, to move through Congress without formal amendment.)

On September 21, 1995, the House Ways and Means Committee approved a bill on fast track trade legislation. If the bill moves through Congress successfully, it will encourage Chile to engage more deeply in negotiations. However, the disposition of the bill remains uncertain, as it was approved along party lines. Successful passage through the full Congress will require bipartisan support as has been the tradition in the past in the U.S. on trade legislation. It is uncertain whether or not the Administration and Congressional leadership can resolve their differences. Discussions are ongoing.

Detailed work to bring Chile into NAFTA began formally in Toronto, in June, in a meeting of the trade ministers from NAFTA countries and Chile. The first detailed, all-chapter negotiation session on Chilean accession took place in Mexico City July 25 – August 1st. Two more negotiating sessions took place in September. Chief Negotiators will report their progress to Ministers who will assess progress and determine the next steps in the negotiations.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Gerald J. Comeau on July 11, 1995)

There was no extension of the consortium's contract. Rather, there was a new contract, the details of which are outlined in the press release below.

The members of the consortium are included in this press release.

The management and daily operations of Canada Post are carried out at arm's length from the government.

PROFAC SIGNS CONTRACT WITH CANADA POST FOR PROPERTY MANAGEMENT SERVICES

Ottawa – December 7, 1994 – PROFAC Management Limited, a facilities management company owned by Bracknell Corporation, SNC-Lavalin Inc. and Enterprise Investments Inc. has signed on November 16, 1994, a five and a half year contract with Canada Post Corporation to provide property management services for the Corporation's facilities in Central and Eastern Canada. The contract is valued at approximately $350 million.

PROFAC's services will include the implementation of a wide range of planning improvements designed to achieve cost savings and improve services in over 530 locations representing more than 11 million square feet of space in Ontario, Québec and Atlantic Canada.

PROFAC's seven regional offices will also provide technical and contract support to local postmasters to ensure the efficient maintenance of about 1,400 smaller buildings.

With this contract, PROFAC, which was founded in 1992, becomes one of Canada's leading facilities management firms. Its shareholders are all recognized as leaders in their fields.

Bracknell Corporation is a construction and specialty services company which through operating subsidiaries is a major facilities management specialist with over 1,500 employees offering construction, technical, operations and maintenance services across the country. Bracknell is listed on the Toronto Stock Exchange and is a member of the TSE 300 Composite Index.

The SNC-Lavalin Group is a Canadian company with operations in engineering-construction and manufacturing, with more than 5,000 employees, offices in 26 countries, currently working internationally in some 90 countries. It is listed on the Montreal and Toronto Stock Exchanges.

Enterprise Investments Inc., through its subsidiary Enterprise property Group Limited, is Canada's largest independent third-party real estate management services company providing specialized management services to over 20 million square feet of space.

(Response to question raised by Hon. Marcel Prud'homme on July 12, 1995)

Mr. Berger completed a period of intense consultations for his new assignment. The government has every confidence that he will faithfully and vigorously advocate Canadian Policy. It should be noted that his consultations included extensive meetings with leaders of both the Canadian Jewish and Arab communities, meetings that proved uniformly productive. Finally, Mr. Berger looks forward to working with the mayor of Bethlehem and other Palestinian leaders as he takes up his assignment.

Mr. Berger has had a distinguished career in Parliament and certainly is not new to Middle East issues. He has a keen sense for Canadian values of openness and fair-play, values the government knows will bring to bear to great effect in his new assignment. With respect to his remarks during Mayor Freij's visit, Mr. Berger formally apologized in the House, on the day following the incident in question – (June 15, 1983).

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

STATUS OF WOMEN

ANNIVERSARY OF PRIVY COUNCIL DECISION—
CONGRATULATIONS TO WINNERS OF 1995 PERSONS AWARDS

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is difficult for all of us to imagine that it was only 66 years ago, on this eighteenth day of October, that women in Canada were deemed to qualify legally and constitutionally as "persons." The decision rendered by the Privy Council in London, England, capped a lengthy and courageous battle by five firebrands from Alberta.

We can thank the efforts of those "famous five" whose names and stories are on permanent display in the lobby of this chamber. They are: Emily Murphy, a magistrate and social activist; Henrietta Muir Edwards, a journalist and artist; Nellie McClung, a novelist and an Alberta MLA; Louise McKinney, a temperance worker and member of the Alberta Legislative Assembly; and Irene Parlby, who was also an Alberta MLA — political and social activists all.

While women had won the right to vote and to run federally in 1918, the battle for civic equality had really only just begun. The spark to ignite this fight occurred when the authority of Magistrate Emily Murphy to preside at the women's court in Edmonton was questioned. It was challenged by a defence lawyer citing English common law which stated:

Women are persons in matters of pains and penalties, but are not persons in matters of rights and privileges.

Thankfully, this attempt to exclude women from the bench was later overruled. However, the difficulty with the definition of "persons" persisted when it came to the question of the Senate.

In 1927, Emily Murphy joined with the rest of the "famous five" to ask the Supreme Court of Canada for a reinterpretation of section 24 of the British North America Act which states:

The Governor General shall...summon qualified persons to the Senate.

When the Supreme Court of Canada ruled against their case the following year, Mary Ellen Smith, a member of the British Columbia Legislature, commented:

The iron dropped into the souls of women in Canada, when we heard that it took a man to decree that his mother was not a "person."

Not to be denied, these five tenacious Albertans turned to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, then Canada's highest court of appeal. After four days of deliberation, the Privy Council decided in their favour declaring that:

The word "persons" in section 24 includes members of both the male and female sex.

Ironically, and sadly, while none of the Alberta crusaders were ever appointed to the Senate, a year later this chamber welcomed its first female member, Cairine Wilson of Ottawa. Today, women number 22 in this chamber.

It was not until 1979 that an Alberta woman entered the Senate when then Prime Minister Joe Clark appointed our former colleague, Martha Bielish. That same year, with the encouragement of Mr. Clark, an Albertan, the Governor General established commemorative awards for women who, much like the "famous five," have made outstanding contributions toward promoting equality and opportunity for women in Canada.

Honourable senators, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate this year's winners: Marthe Asselin Vaillancourt of Jonquière, Quebec; Dr. May Cohen of Burlington, Ontario; Ruth Flowers of Makkovik, Labrador; Sheila Kingham of Victoria, British Columbia; Carolyn G. Thomas of Dartmouth, Nova Scotia; and Alice E. Tyler of Edmonton, Alberta.

These women have made great progress in furthering the cause through their work in many facets of our society — protection against family violence, human rights, medicine, social activism, arts and culture. We extend our appreciation and our good wishes to this year's recipients of the Persons Awards as we salute the memory of the five Alberta women who made possible the celebration today.

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, as you will have noticed, at the entrance to this elegant red chamber are two bronze busts of women, one on the left and one on the right. One of those busts is of Cairine Wilson, the first English-speaking woman to be appointed to the Senate, and the other is of Marianna Jodoin, the first francophone woman to be appointed senator. You will note that there are no busts of men senators; there are only gargoyles. It is evident why this should be so.

The Senate is a powerful symbol in the struggle for women's equality in Canada, for you will recall, as the leader has pointed out, that before October 18, 1929, women, by English law, were persons in the matter of pains and penalties, but not in the matter of rights and privileges and, thus, were not entitled to be appointed senators. It was through the efforts of Judge Emily Murphy, the feminist, activist and author, and the "famous five," that the Privy Council overruled the Supreme Court of Canada on that date and deemed that the word "person" meant women as well as men, and that women were, indeed, entitled to sit in the Senate. This landmark ruling was part of an amazing revolution that has spanned my lifetime; a revolution without armies, without secret caches of arms, but more far-reaching and profound in its impact than any of the other revolutions of the twentieth century.

The women's movement has sparked the most fundamental social changes of our time, and it points toward more. The first wave occurred in the late nineteenth and early twentieth century, when women got the vote. A tremendous wave of feminism, the second wave, rolled through the 1970s when at last, after a long silence, women took to the streets. In North America and parts of Europe, in the two decades of radical action that began in the 1970s, western women gained legal and reproductive rights, pursued higher education, entered the trades and the professions, and overturned the old beliefs about their social role.

In Canada, this revolution was sparked by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in 1970, which documented the unequal status of Canadian women in criminal law, child care, reproduction, employment, education, housing, marriage and divorce, pensions, maternity leave, pay, politics, and poverty. That commission made 167 recommendations aimed at dismantling the legal and economic barriers to women's equality. It was, and is, an amazing and audacious attempt to transcend the limits of the human condition, brought about by mainly women's groups and organizations.

Women are not typical revolutionaries, and so the revolution has been non-violent. It has gained its powers and momentum from numbers — more than half the population of the world. Its victories have been legal and attitudinal. Of course, the heart of the matter is that the cause is so just.

As the Leader of the Government mentioned, we now see 22 women in this chamber as a result of the Persons Case which opened the door to the first woman senator, Cairine Wilson. It is interesting to recall as well that the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, during the debate on the Charlottetown Accord, called for gender equality in this Senate. We still have some way to go towards full equality in Canada.

I end with a quote from Emily Murphy, who said:

I believe that never was a country better adapted to produce a great race of women than this Canada of ours, nor a race of women better adapted to make a great country.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I appreciate very much the eloquent statement made today by the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and the remarks of Senator Spivak. Mention was made to Mary Ellen Smith in my leader's presentation.

Mary Ellen Smith was a great Canadian who lived in British Columbia. She was a woman who had very few monetary resources, but spearheaded much of the social reform in the Province of British Columbia. She was the first woman cabinet minister in the Commonwealth, and also within the Empire, as it was known at that time.

Mary Ellen Smith made a great contribution toward the establishment of Old Age Pensions and mothers' pensions in the Province of British Columbia. It was Mary Ellen Smith who said that there is no such thing as an illegitimate child; there are, perhaps, illegitimate parents. When she died, she left only a few dollars in the bank, but she left behind her a legacy for all Canadians of a compassion for the dispossessed — the friendless, the homeless, and the people unable to help themselves.

I appreciate the reference to Mary Ellen Smith, who is regarded in our province as one of the great heroines of our history but, more important, a great Canadian.

Hon. Bill Rompkey: Honourable senators, I wish to underline as well the remarks of the Leader of the Government in the Senate on the events of yesterday, and the awards in commemoration of the Persons Case. It was an honour for me, as one of my first acts as a senator, to participate in that ceremony.

In particular, I wish to pay tribute to one of the recipients, and that is Ruth Flowers from Makkovik, Labrador. I acknowledge the singular contribution that Ms Flowers has made, which earned for her the 1995 Governor General's Award in commemoration of the Persons Case.

Ruth Flowers has been the voice of women in her community. She has sought to protect women who have been victimized by violence, to involve women in community and economic development, and to preserve and promote the traditional culture of Inuit women.

A committed advocate of women's rights, Ruth was the catalyst behind the creation of Inuit women of the Torngats, and its first president. Under her leadership, the organization established the first safe house for abused women on Labrador's north shore.

For her dedication and her selfless efforts on behalf of the women of the north shore of Labrador, the Government of Canada yesterday honoured Ruth Flowers with the 1995 Governor General's award in commemoration of the Persons Case. I ask all my colleagues to join me in conveying to her our congratulations.

SEARCH AND RESCUE—REPLACEMENT OF SEA KING AND LABRADOR HELICOPTER FLEETS—STATUS OF EH-101
CONTRACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: Honourable senators, I am in receipt of a reply to a question I asked last June having regard to the EH-101 contract and the settlement of the costs involved therein. Inasmuch as that was June and the House is now well into its fall session, it begs the question as to whether she can or cannot provide us with a status report at this time on any progress that may have been made in relationship to the purchase of new helicopters to replace the aged Sea Kings and Labrador helicopters.

• (1350)

As the Leader of the Government in the Senate is no doubt aware, in the last couple of weeks or so we have had two more serious incidents involving Sea King helicopters. A Sea King went down in Quebec in mid-September, and on September 29, another Sea King, with a crew of six on board from CFB Shearwater, was forced down between West Dover and Peggy's Cove in Nova Scotia. Fortunately there were no injuries in either of these two mishaps, but every time another one of these choppers goes down, one cannot help but compare the situation to "Russian Roulette."

Despite the fact that the Minister of Defence said the Sea Kings are fit to fly to the year 2000, do these recent incidents not give this government some cause to reflect or exhibit concern? When will we see some decisive action on the part of this government?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as I have indicated before in this chamber, the government intends to purchase replacements for the Sea King helicopters used on board ships and also the Labradors used for search and rescue.

[The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore]

Honourable senators, I am unable to satisfy my friend on the question of timing. The government is still considering all the options, and no contract for replacement of helicopters has been approved at this date.

Senator Forrestall: Honourable senators, God help us.

One of the reasons it is so difficult to understand this enormous delay is that $166 million in pre-engineering work and studies has already been completed. Does the government leader not agree that the $166 million in compensation paid to UNISYS for computer design work on the EH-101 will certainly have to be included as associated costs in any new purchase, since some of this work has been transferred to the Department of National Defence? Does she not agree that the lengthy period of time to achieve this type of computer-driven engineering workup has been overtaken by the work already in hand? The Department of National Defence has had this information for three or four years.

Honourable senators, this situation causes grave concern for families who watch their husbands and relatives climb on board those old Sea King helicopters and fly out over water. I wish my honourable friend would convey to her colleagues in government that it is time to put this damned mess behind them and to move on in a positive direction, one that reflects the concern of legislators for the well-being of those we ask to put their lives on the line for us. Would she instill in them some sense of concern and urgency, not just the politeness of commerce?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I know the concern of Senator Forrestall, and I think every senator in this chamber shares it. I think the Minister of National Defence shares the concern that our Canadian Forces, wherever they may serve, be well protected and served by whatever equipment they use, so they can do their jobs.

I understand my honourable friend's frustration at the time that has elapsed on this issue. I can only assure him that this issue is very much in the mind of the Minister of National Defence. I will be more than pleased to convey my honourable friend's strong, personal concerns to my colleague.

HEALTH

CONTROLLED DRUGS AND SUBSTANCES BILL—REQUIRED
AMENDMENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Erminie J. Cohen: Honourable senators, physicians, herbalists, natural food advocates and other groups in Canada are very concerned about the government's proposed legislation, Bill C-7. This bill is in effect a reintroduction of Bill C-85, which was introduced by the previous government and died on the Order Paper in the last Parliament.

Many of the amendments recommended by the legislative committee on Bill C-85 were incorporated in Bill C-7, but there are still concerns which have not been addressed. There is a need for criminal law to be precise and clear because of the serious consequences associated with breaking the law, but this bill is neither. For example, there is fear that clause 3 in the bill could lead to many herbs, vitamins and food supplements being put on a list of controlled substances and, as a result, available only by prescription. Not only could this bill deny Canadians the right to make their own health care choices, but non-traditional health care workers could face criminal sanctions. Physicians are also worried that the lack of clarity in clause 3 may leave them open to charges of drug trafficking.

Honourable senators, in the interest of making sure that Canadians are not saddled with an overreaching bill that affects the ability of traditional and non-traditional health care workers to provide quality care, would the Leader of the Government ask the Minister of Health whether she is prepared to make amendments to clarify the worrisome provision in Bill C-7?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am prepared to convey my colleague's comments and also to bring back from the minister any comfort or reassurance that I can.

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT

PROPOSED SOURCE OF FUNDING FOR CREATION OF CHILD CARE SPACES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Honourable senators, my question is to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Recently, Minister Axworthy was quoted in the press regarding a proposal for the creation of more child care spaces. We know that in the near future health and higher education portions of the Canada Assistance Plan will be rolled into block funding. We also know that many of the spaces in provincial daycare centres are supported by Canada Assistance Plan dollars. When Minister Axworthy makes his announcement about a federal contribution, will those dollars be in addition to the block funding, or will the provinces have to take that daycare money out of the block funding that we anticipate will come in the next 12 months?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like the opportunity to refer my honourable friend's question to the minister for a more precise answer than I can give today. This is an important issue.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—PROPOSED INCREASE IN INITIAL PRICE OF GRAIN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Leonard J. Gustafson: Honourable senators will know that in the last 10 years, international grain prices have risen to an all-time high. Yet, farmers are only receiving around $3 for their wheat. Has the Minister of Agriculture given any indication as to when the government will increase the initial price of grain to grain farmers? The cost of everything is rising. I hear that the Canadian Wheat Board has quoted a price of $6 a bushel for grain. Surely it is time for action to be taken to increase the amount of money farmers receive for selling their grain.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am advised by my colleague Senator Olson, an expert in these matters, that some increases were announced last week. I will convey your questions to the Minister of Agriculture and attempt to get more information on what has been accomplished thus far, as well as the minister's plans for future pricing.

Senator Gustafson: Honourable senators, it is my understanding that the Minister of Agriculture simply made some statements about something that might be forthcoming. Playing politics with such suggestions does nothing to put any money in the farmers' pockets. We need to see the increase at the elevator. Those of us who are active in agriculture know that such an increase has not arrived.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, with the comments of both my colleagues in this house ringing in my ears, I will take these words as notice, and I will bring word from the minister to my colleagues.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

CORRECTIONS AND CONDITIONAL RELEASE ACT CRIMINAL CODE CRIMINAL RECORDS ACT PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES ACT TRANSFER OF OFFENDERS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Pearson, seconded by the Honourable Senator Poulin, for the second reading of Bill C-45, An Act to amend the Corrections and Conditional Release Act, the Criminal Code, the Criminal Records Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and the Transfer of Offenders Act.

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, I rise today to speak to Bill C-45, to amend the Corrections and Conditional Release Act and related statutes. As Senator Pearson has outlined for us, the main provisions of this bill include: allowing convicted sex offenders whose victims were children to be kept in prison for their full sentences, a provision that at least one-third of the second sentence in consecutive sentences must be served before eligibility for parole, and instituting more comprehensive measures for removing members of the National Parole Board who are guilty of incompetence or unacceptable behaviour.

I do not intend to speak at any length on this bill today. We will have ample time to examine it in committee. However, it is incumbent upon me to correct the impression left by Senator Pearson's speech that this bill is somehow the child of the Liberal election book. The Corrections and Conditional Release Act was first adopted by the Progressive Conservative government in 1992. It replaced the Penitentiary Act and Parole Act. This new legislation made protection of the public the main consideration in decisions involving the release of criminal offenders into society.

In 1993, a further bill was introduced by the Conservatives which would have permitted the National Parole Board to keep high-risk sex offenders in prison indefinitely. That bill, however, was never adopted. Bill C-45 is based in part on that 1993 proposal. It is also a comprehensive overhaul of the 1992 Corrections and Conditional Release Act.

Bill C-45, in other words, is part of a broader series of ongoing improvements to the federal corrections system begun by the previous Progressive Conservative government and not, as Senator Pearson has told us — I am sure not by design — a purely Liberal measure.

Senator Pearson's comments in introducing this bill brought two other points to my mind. The first relates to her claim that it will help restore confidence in the corrections process. I am as aware as anyone of the various sex-related cases which have received high profile treatment in the media in the past couple of years. However, I must admit that I fail to see any link between these cases and the apparent breakdown in our corrections system. Possibly during our discussions in committee, Senator Pearson will be able to enlighten us further.

The second point relates to the bill's apparent singling out of children as a special category in regard to sexual offences. This issue has already been raised in the other place. It has been claimed that the government is, in effect, saying that sexual attacks on adults are of a secondary or less important nature. I was heartened to read Senator Pearson's remarks that this is not the government's position, and that all sexual attacks are to be condemned.

Honourable senators, Bill C-45 is a long bill. It contains many technical amendments. It does not address basic precepts underlying the detention of offenders. Rather, it deals with the mechanics of their release. The aim, as I understand it, is to improve the efficiency of the parole system and the National Parole Board.

On first reading, I find many of the proposed changes timely and well considered. I agree, for instance, with the notion of punishing recidivism, which I believe encourages a lack of respect for our country's system of justice. The same is true for those who violate the conditions of their parole.

On the other hand, as I sat and read through the bill the other day, a number of questions came to my mind which should be addressed in committee. Why has the government failed to make programs mandatory for the rehabilitation of people guilty of sex-related crimes? Where are the provisions to properly supervise offenders who have served their full time in prison, but who still constitute a risk to society following their release? Why are people who receive additional sentences for offences committed while on parole not obliged to serve the full extent of both sentences?

Honourable senators, any piece of legislation could be criticized ad infinitum. This is not my intention. However, you will perhaps agree with me that issues such as sex crimes involving children, programs designed to help reform those guilty of such crimes and propositions to keep these people away from society for long periods need to be discussed fully. When I say fully, I mean by both sides of this chamber. These are issues which affect us all. It is not a question of delaying the bill for the sake of politics or partisanship. It is a question of balance.

We are today surrounded by a rising tide of rhetoric about the supposed Americanization of our society, the rise in violent crime, the weakness of our criminal justice system, and the need to get tougher with offenders. Instances of poor judgment on the part of prison or parole officials are often blown out of proportion in order to prove a political point. Particular cases such as the penitentiary — wherever it is — that has a nine-hole golf course for its inmates, are portrayed as the general rule.

I am not saying that there is not a grain of truth in much of what is said. The justice and parole systems are not perfect. However, it is extremely important that we take a moment to separate the chaff from the grain. We must distinguish rhetoric and prejudice from facts and realities. As legislators, we attempt to find a moderate position somewhere between the demands of those who would go too far and the equivocation of others who would do too little. It is not an easy task, as you are all well aware.

This is especially true when we deal with contentious subjects such as the sexual abuse of children. We must weigh the arguments for retribution against those for compassion and rehabilitation. Our deliberations must take place within the context of the greatest good for the greatest number. As individuals and as senators, we have responsibilities to society, responsibilities which include keeping our streets and schools safe for our children. We should be ready to support any measure that, within reason and without excessive intrusiveness, furthers this goal.

Honourable senators, Bill C-45 appears to be such a step. In conclusion, I support the principle of this bill. It addresses an issue which has become a subject of growing concern in our communities in the past few years. It closes some important loopholes which have allowed certain types of offenders to escape the full rigour of the law. Finally, it continues along the path laid out by the previous Conservative government by maintaining the protection of the public as a primary consideration in parole legislation.

Once in committee, we will be able to look more closely at the different provisions of this bill, to question officials and to see if this bill is as substantive as the government would have us believe.

• (1410)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, if the Honourable Senator Pearson speaks now, her speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Landon Pearson: Honourable senators, I move second reading of this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Pearson, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

FIREARMS BILL

MOTION TO INSTRUCT COMMITTEE TO TABLE FINAL REPORT, AS AMENDED, ADOPTED

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government) moved:

That it be an instruction of this House to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs that no later than Tuesday, November 7, 1995, it present its final report to the Senate on Bill C-68, An Act respecting firearms and other weapons, referred to it on June 22, 1995.

She said: Honourable senators, I move this motion today in response to citizens across this country who want Parliament to make up its mind on the crucial issue of gun control. I do not think anyone in this house could deny — or would wish to deny — the depth of concern among Canadians for safety and security for themselves and for their families, and that concern takes in every part of our society, every social and economic level, every region of our country.

We all know the depths and the complexity of the roots of this issue and the enormous challenges for all our institutions to unravel those causes and the attitudes that they spawn. While longer-term efforts to reach these causes accelerate, attention has focused on strengthening means for protection through more effective management of firearms, and tough penalties for those who use them as tools to carry out their threats and their acts of violence and, indeed, murder.

Gun control is now a centre point of public attention. The purpose of my motion is to allow this chamber to come to a decision in a timely fashion on Bill C-68, legislation which would enact new gun control measures in a manner that is balanced and fair to those who legitimately own and use firearms.

The motion is not intended to prevent our standing committee from carrying out its responsibilities. Rather, its sole purpose is to strike a fair balance between the work of the committee with its 12 members, the work of the Senate with its 104 members, and the opportunity for those with strong views to be heard on this issue.

This legislation now before us was many years in the making. It is actually a piece of unfinished business flowing out of Bill C-17, the most recent gun control legislation which was given Royal Assent in this house in December of 1991. At that time, former Senator Nathan Nurgitz from Manitoba, then chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs and the sponsor of the bill on behalf of the then government, wrote to the Minister of Justice of the day, the Honourable Kim Campbell, urging her to do even more. In that letter of December 12, 1991, Mr. Nurgitz, speaking for himself and his colleagues on the committee, said:

We feel that improvements in the three areas mentioned — firearms registration, safe storage and training — would not place an unfair burden on firearms owners or users. In fact, these are areas in which further regulation would only bring gun control into line with how we handle other dangerous implements...

Honourable senators, I was a member of that committee at the time, and was responsible for the bill on behalf of my colleagues when we were in opposition. I can attest to the fact that both sides worked very closely together to pass the legislation and to come up with recommendations for further change, as noted by Mr. Nurgitz, and that letter was our method of compromise to advance passage of the bill without amendment at that time. The committee was giving notice, unanimously, of its expectation for further government action.

Following passage of that bill, there has been a growing interest in the possibility of registering firearms in this country, perhaps because advances in computer technologies have made it a more practicable and feasible objective, and that interest in further measures to control guns found its way into the last election campaign. It was part of the platform of our party, and was further brought forward at our convention in May of 1994, in a resolution which included elements of the current bill, including a national system of registration. The Prime Minister at that time publicly declared this issue to be a high priority of his government's agenda for the public safety of all Canadians, and it remains so today.

I mention these points, honourable senators, simply to review where this legislation began to develop, particularly as it is relevant to the Senate, and how it has progressed in recent years and months. After that convention, the Minister of Justice, having travelled to all provinces and territories and talked with groups of Canadians, tabled the government action plan on firearms control.

Following another round of public discussions and consultation, the Minister of Justice then introduced into the House of Commons, on February 14 of this year, Bill C-68, an act respecting firearms and other weapons. This bill was referred to a legislative committee on April 5 of this year, and over the following two months that committee heard 94 hours of testimony from 62 witnesses. In response to many of the concerns that were raised during those hearings, amendments were brought forward by the government, both in committee and at report stage, and more than 60 amendments were made to the bill. These amendments were substantive, and not just cosmetic changes: changes to do with aboriginal and treaty concerns, constitutional concerns, concerns dealing with museums, expanded grandfathering provisions, restrictions on the powers of inspection, and much more.

The bill was given third and final reading in the House of Commons on June 13, 1995, by a vote of 193 to 62. It then came here to the Senate, and was referred to our Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on June 22. During his speech on second reading, our colleague from Alberta Senator Ron Ghitter said:

There is much work to be done by the committee. Many individuals, groups and organizations will want to be heard and are entitled to be heard.

We on this side agreed and, indeed, his comments led many of us to anticipate an aggressive and active approach by the committee to this bill.

The committee first met on June 27 to hear from the Minister of Justice, and then the next day from the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, the Canadian Police Association, and Department of Justice officials. These witnesses all spoke out very strongly in support of Bill C-68, but clearly there were other voices on the other side of the issue asking to express their views as well. When we adjourned on July 13, the Deputy Leader on this side, Senator Graham, said:

I would like to express the hope that those committees which have legislation and important issues before them will sit when possible and appropriate during the summer break...

However, after the committee adjourned on June 28, it did not meet again until September 18, almost three months later. During that period of time a great number of witnesses perhaps could have been heard, and certainly senators conducted their own meetings and hearings over those months.

We on this side wanted the hearings to be held. There is nothing whatsoever preventing a Senate committee from carrying out its responsibilities during an adjournment period, as we saw with the special committee inquiring into the Pearson Airport Agreements, chaired by Senator MacDonald. There have been numerous other examples over the last several years which show that it is not unprecedented for our committees to carry out their work while the Senate is in recess.

Honourable colleagues, this Senate is not overworked. Our committees are quite capable of doing their job, even though the house may be adjourned. Indeed, when our Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee reconvened on September 18, it held nine days of very intensive hearings. It heard from 73 witnesses, which is more than were heard by the House of Commons committee. However, at the end of those nine days, the committee decided that it needed to hear from more witnesses. The next meeting was held on October 5, when it was to hear testimony on the constitutional ramifications of the bill. More meetings have been scheduled for October 19 and 26 to hear further testimony on constitutional issues.

One of the things which concerned us, honourable senators, was that this schedule did not reflect some of the comments made earlier in the summer by our colleague Senator Beaudoin, who was reported in The Edmonton Journal as having said that the committee expected to report back to the Senate by mid-October. We are now in the middle of October and to date there has been no sign that the committee has begun to prepare its report. In fact, indications are that the committee might not report to this house until the end of November.

This week, my friend the Leader of the Opposition put out a press release indicating that some senators have decided to meet with Canadians in their regions during the week following Remembrance Day. That release also indicated that the bill should be disposed of by the full Senate no later than the end of November.

Honourable senators, what has concerned those of us on this side is that there is no certainty about conclusions being reached on this bill. Everyone in this house knows that the legislation is based on a startup date of January in order to begin the registration process. There is no certainty that the House of Commons will be given time to consider an amended bill — and all indications are, from those who have served on the committee, that amendments are possible and even probable — and return it to this house for a final vote before Christmas.

Clearly, that schedule could lead to the death of this legislation. I do not believe that that is the fate that most Canadians and perhaps even most senators would wish for this gun control bill.

Honourable senators, our committee system has been described as our strength. It does excellent work in a very serious and conscientious manner. The Senate is also a legislative body. It must be allowed to do its work, namely, to enact laws for the betterment of Canadians.

In adopting Bill C-68, the members of the other place have requested that Parliament pass a law strengthening the gun control system. It is now our turn. Do we agree with the proposal? Do we disagree? Whatever our views, we have an obligation to make them known. This motion would give us the opportunity to fulfil that obligation, while fully respecting the role of the committee, which will still have ample opportunity to complete the work it began on June 22. It will allow the members of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee to complete their work and permit individual senators to hear additional views on gun control within their provinces and their regions. The committee will then report to the house so that the rest of us will have the opportunity to express our views and cast our votes — to pass it, amend it or, indeed, defeat it, if it is the will of this house.

In all, the Senate will have had more than four months to do the job of simply getting the bill through the committee stage. I think that is a generous period of time to carry out our responsibilities.

As I have said, the sole purpose of this motion is to strike a balance between the work of the committee and the responsibilities of the Senate. I am, of course, open to other suggestions from my colleagues about how that balance could reasonably be achieved, either in this manner or in other ways. Conversations have taken place between senators on both sides of the house in an attempt to find a process to enable Parliament to finish its work on a very important piece of legislation. That is the kind of message Canadians should be able to count on from their representatives in the Senate of Canada. I would welcome hearing the thoughts and suggestions from my colleagues opposite about any alternative ways in which this reassurance could be provided to Canadians.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it is indeed ironic, to say the least, that this motion should be proposed by a member of the government, who, while a member of the opposition in the majority here, for years participated in the deliberate obstruction and delay of major pieces of legislation of the Conservative government.

Who can fault the strategy of the Liberals when they were numerically superior in opposition? How they revelled in delaying legislation for the sake of delay and obstruction! Compare that with the attitude of the opposition of the last two years, and how constructively and positively it has behaved when faced with some 70 pieces of government legislation which have come to this chamber since the election in October 1993.

Of those 70-plus pieces of legislation which we have had to deal with, only two have been held back deliberately for reasons which were shared by many outside this chamber. I will not go into the arguments behind why we held back Bill C-22 or Bill C-69. They are well known, and at another time we can discuss them in greater detail.

However, I want to take the opportunity of this motion to tell this chamber, as forcefully as I can, that we are not holding back Bill C-68. We are not delaying it unduly. We are coping with it in the same way that we are called upon to cope with every piece of legislation from the government. If it takes longer for one piece than another, then we will take the time needed. I repeat, we are not holding up Bill C-68 for the sake of holding it up, nor do we have any intention of doing so. On the other hand, as I have said, we cannot exempt it from the scrutiny that every bill requires, and from taking the necessary time to do so.

• (1430)

As Senator Fairbairn has pointed out, the bill came to us in June. It went to the committee at the end of June. Senator Fairbairn forgot to mention that the committee also sat in July on the Pearson bill. It also sat on Bill C-68 in September, during a recess. It took August off. I would have urged its members to take off a little longer, for, if any committee of this chamber in the last two years has had to cope with more legislation of significant importance than any other, it is the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee. The chairman and its members deserve a lot of credit for what they have done, and for how well they have done it.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Therefore, I repeat, I do not consider that any undue delay can be attached to our approach to this bill.

We found that many witnesses who wanted to appear before the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, both for and against, could not come for one reason or another. Many in our caucus had hoped that the committee could travel. For whatever reason, the committee decided not to do so. However, many senators on both sides feel an obligation to go out and meet those concerned citizens to hear their support, their condemnation or their suggestions regarding this bill. Surely, if there is any responsibility of which we in this chamber must be respectful, it is that of representing our regions. If senators are willing to devote some of their time to carrying out their responsibilities in their regions with regard to legislation, then they should be encouraged to do so.

Senators who are keen on consulting in their regions feel that the week of November 13 is the most appropriate because, ordinarily, the Remembrance Day week is a week off for Parliament. As such, senators would not be absent from their duties in the Senate.

We also pledged to the government that no matter the result of the committee's deliberations and the discussions in the regions, the bill would be disposed of and ready to be sent to the House of Commons by the end of November. If someone can claim that this is undue delay, there certainly is undue exaggeration in that claim.

The question has been asked: Is the Tory caucus against gun control? The answer is an emphatic "No." As Senator Fairbairn has pointed out, it was because of a Conservative government's gun control legislation, introduced in the form of Bill C-80 and Bill C-17, its successor, that Bill C-68 is before us today.

We know the emotions surrounding the issue, and we know that, no matter which side we are on, things have to progress slowly on it. It was thanks to the Conservative government at the time that basic, forward-looking, intelligent gun control legislation was introduced and passed.

I should like to quote from two members of the House of Commons who spoke when Bill C-17 was introduced. The Minister of Justice, Ms Campbell, said at the time:

Madam Speaker, the purpose of Bill C-80 —

— that was the predecessor of Bill C-17 —

— was to provide better protection for all Canadians against firearms violence, while avoiding undue or unnecessary interference in the activities of Canadians who use guns legally, responsibly and safely.

The legislation now before this House contains a number of modifications to Bill C-80, but the fundamental purpose remains the same.

On behalf of the Liberal opposition, the member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys, Russell MacLellan, said on June 6, 1991:

The objective of this legislation is to control access to firearms and ammunition in Canada and not to place excessive or undue restrictions on responsible gun owners. I think that has been achieved.

That was the achievement of Bill C-17 at the time. The question before us today is: Has the same basic purpose been achieved; that is, not to place excessive or undue restriction on responsible gun owners? That is the question which is troubling us. That is the question which is being debated in our caucus and across the country. It is not the question of gun control per se. If there is an argument about the gun control feature, it could well be that it is not strict enough. Some of us in our caucus and elsewhere feel that in accepting certain features of the bill, an undue burden is being placed on innocent citizens. There are many innocent bystanders out there who are challenging this bill. They are museums, collectors, shooting clubs and so many more for whom a gun is everything but a murder weapon. They resent being identified with a criminal class, and they have reason to protest.

There are other reasons for concern in this bill which go beyond gun control and registration. The ministerial discretion being given in this bill is not unlike that seen in any other legislation, but I would say it is extremely excessive. For instance, the minister, by himself, can decide to declare a weapon prohibited without any consultation.

There is also the question of minimum sentencing. According to the bill, if you are found for a second time not to have your weapon registered, the minimum sentence is one year. It is not up to one year; it is a minimum sentence. That alone should be cause for concern.

There are no requirements that any regulations flowing from this bill be reviewed by Parliament. Ordinarily, they are published in the Canada Gazette, and Parliament can ask to see them. Parliament has a certain time in which to review them. Whether their review is of any effect is another question, but at least they can be reviewed. In this case, there is no provision for regulations to be reviewed.

There is also the question of the respect for native people's rights under the Constitution.

To repeat, there are some basic concerns in this bill which go beyond the immediate intent of the bill itself.

Honourable senators, let me be clear. Our concern, and the concern of many other Canadians with this bill, is not gun control as such, but the imposition of regulations and restrictions on law-abiding citizens, the concentration of powers in the executive and a further withering away of the power of the legislature.

We suggested that we could have everything wrapped up in this chamber by the end of November. The government suddenly says, "Oh, that is not good enough for us. We want the committee to report by November 7." There is not much difference between reporting the bill to this chamber by November 7 and having it dealt with in the House of Commons by November 30. The time it would take to get from the report stage to the voting stage would bring us pretty close to November 30 anyway, unless the government intends to restrict debate by imposing closure.

Be that as it may, I urge honourable senators to respect the decision of their colleagues on this side, in particular — and I have no doubt colleagues on the other side as well — who want to go to their respective regions to consult with citizens who have a particular interest in this bill. As I said, they decided that the week of November 13 was most practical because, usually, that week is a week when we would not be sitting. I understand that meeting arrangements are being made already for that week. I understand that some of them can be changed. However, I cannot guarantee that.

The point is that many of our colleagues would like those days to hear from concerned citizens and groups who, for whatever reason, did not or could not appear before the House of Commons or the Senate committees. I think we must respect that, and I urge that it be respected because colleagues on both sides feel strongly that they must continue their consultations before coming to a final decision.

In a continuation of the respect that we have for the role that the opposition should play in this chamber — contrary to the sorry example set by our friends opposite when they were in opposition — and in answer to the leader's invitation for suggestions, I should like to make an amendment to her motion. I am convinced that it will respect the timetable of our colleagues and, at the same time, it will respect the government's desire, which I fully understand, to have this bill dealt with by a date which will enable it to be disposed of by the House of Commons before the Christmas recess.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Therefore, I move, seconded by Senator Kinsella:

That the motion be amended by replacing all the words after "House" with the following:

That Bill C-68, An Act respecting Firearms and other Weapons, referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on Thursday, June 22, 1995, be reported back to the Senate no later than Monday, November 20, 1995; and

That at 5:30 p.m. on Wednesday, November 22, 1995, any proceedings before the Senate shall be interrupted and all questions necessary to dispose of all remaining stages of the said Bill shall be put forthwith without further debate or amendment, and that any votes on any of those questions not be further deferred.

Simply put, the motion in amendment requires that the committee report no later than November 20, and that the bill itself be voted on at 5:30 p.m. on Wednesday, November 22.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there have been discussions on both sides of the house over a considerable period of time. The points made by Senator Fairbairn in her notice of motion, and in speaking to that notice of motion, are understood on both sides of the house and, indeed, by the Canadian public.

I wish to make reference to several of the matters that have been put forward by the Leader of the Opposition, particularly with respect to the decision of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs not to travel. I know that lengthy and detailed consideration was given to that particular proposal, but I would remind all honourable senators that the majority on the committee come from the opposition. Indeed, it was a decision that was concurred with by a majority in the opposition with respect to whether the committee would travel as a whole.

Whether the committee was doing its work in a timely fashion is a matter of conjecture and opinion. I commend the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, which is the busiest committee in the Senate. Having said that, there are times, and have been times, when we on this side believe that the committee could have been sitting.

It is commendable that senators wish to go into their own areas and have individual meetings with concerned citizens so that concerns can be expressed by Canadians no matter where they live. Having said that, honourable senators, I believe that there is a will on this side to support the amendment as proposed by the Leader of the Opposition.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: The amendment is carried.

Is the house ready for the question on the motion as amended? Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion as amended?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, as amended.

AGRICULTURAL TRADE

REPORT OF AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY COMMITTEE ON FACT-FINDING MISSIONS TO WASHINGTON AND WINNIPEG

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the eleventh report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry (special study on agricultural trade), tabled on July 26, 1995.—(Honourable Senator Hays).

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, I should like to speak to this order today. I have a prepared text which, if I am not mistaken, will take me a little beyond the normal time allowed for these interventions. However, Your Honour will, of course, advise me, and we will see whether I will be able to make all of the remarks that I wish to make today.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: If the honourable senator wishes, rather than interrupt him later, I could ask now for permission for him to continue somewhat beyond the allotted time.

Is that agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Hays: Thank you. If I impose too much, I will expect strong heckling at that point.

At the beginning of this Parliament, the House Standing Committee on Agriculture and Agri-food and the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry undertook a set of hearings together. We had hoped to complete a rather ambitious program of hearings which would have given the two committees together an opportunity to make a fairly comprehensive report on all aspects of Canadian agriculture.

We consulted widely in the course of hearings here in Ottawa. As well, the committee had proposed to travel to almost every province and to try an innovative technique of obtaining opinion called the "kitchen table" approach. Unfortunately, through no fault of anyone on this side of Parliament, we were unable to do that. The committee of the other place was unable to obtain the necessary budget to travel. Accordingly, having heard approximately 100 witnesses, the ambitious work that we had planned was curtailed.

We did, however, table the report in December in anticipation of the budget. The committee's December 1994 report, done in conjunction with the Standing Committee on Agriculture and Agri-food of the other place, and entitled "New Realities and Tough Choices: From Agriculture to Agri-food," acknowledged the challenges posed by the globalization of trade. It was, in part, from this perspective that the committee travelled in March to Washington, D.C., to discuss the new realities and tough choices that will also be faced by the United States, our principal trading partner and, in many instances, our most important competitor.

The committee also visited Winnipeg in May to speak with farm organizations and the Canadian Wheat Board about the new realities and tough choices they are facing. At these latter meetings, much of the discussion focused on the Canadian Wheat Board.

Honourable senators, I will break my comments into two parts, the first dealing with our relations generally with the United States.

Canada-United States trade, in goods of all kinds, represents approximately $1 billion per day. With annual agricultural exports totalling slightly more than $8 billion and imports of roughly $7 billion, Canada enjoys a growing trade surplus with the United States. However, agricultural trade between Canada and the U.S. is often the object of disputes. As pointed out by some witnesses appearing before the committee, trading nations will always have occasional border problems, even under free trade agreements. Where the interests of competing sectors coincide with those of competing countries — the grain sectors in the United States and Canada, for example — the harmful effects can take the form of protectionism, defensive industrial policies or further bilateralism to keep potential competitors out of the market.

Honourable senators, during its study the committee concluded that one of the reasons for the prompt reaction of the U.S. Congress to Canada-U.S. trade disputes is the fact that 32 per cent of U.S. senators and 38 per cent of members of the House of Representatives come from states situated along Canada's border. This political weight results in strong and rapid reactions.

The Congress is currently examining the 1995 U.S. Farm Bill, which is the cornerstone of all U.S. agricultural programs and policies, including price supports, trade, research, domestic food aid, farm credit, rural development and environmental activities. The Farm Bill is revised and renewed every five years and, thereby, requires U.S. politicians to conduct a careful examination and evaluation of agricultural policies, an exercise that is not parallel to Canada.

Honourable senators, U.S. trading partners must be well aware of the implications of the policies established by the Farm Bill, since U.S. programs and policies, such as the Export Enhancement Program or EEP, often have major and detrimental impacts on domestic markets and policies. While the impact of the Export Enhancement Program on Canada's grain markets is well known, other U.S. programs which are currently under review and which have major repercussions on Canada are less well known.

[Translation]

For example, the soils conservation program is one of the American farm policies that could well upset some of Canada's agricultural sectors. Currently, approximately 36 million acres, about 10 per cent of American arable land area, are under protection. This measure has resulted in a 20 per cent reduction in erosion. Although considered a success, this environmental protection measure costs a total of $2 billion annually in public funds.

[English]

In the case of the 36 million acres under protection, some analysts predict that additional production totalling 34 million tonnes of wheat could be achieved. By reducing the protected areas to 25 million acres, U.S. exports could increase by 1.3 million tonnes. This is something that is under discussion and may happen. These additional 1.3 million tonnes of grain corresponds to Canada's average annual wheat exports to the United States between 1991 and 1994. In border states such as Montana and North Dakota, it is estimated that some 9 million acres of farm land set aside and traditionally given over to wheat cultivation could be returned to production. If this scenario becomes reality, it will result in tougher U.S. competition in world markets, indeed even in the North American market. For that reason, the committee recommended that Canada react immediately to any substantial decrease in areas under the U.S. Conservation Reserve Program through aggressive grain marketing strategies in order to secure and increase its market share.

[Translation]

As a result of agreements reached under the Uruguay Round, the United States will have to change its Export Enhancement Program, but it will not stop promoting its exports. One approach consists in making credit programs available in order to help countries that would otherwise be unable to buy American farm products.

The American administration is currently looking at an innovative approach to making these credit programs more efficient.

[English]

The administration would like to see a reduction of the domestic content level necessary to qualify for an export credit program, but, at the same time, it would offer credit guarantees only on the American content portion of a processed agricultural product. The combined effect of these two measures would be to increase the range of agricultural products that could be exported through an export credit program, while promoting exports of higher value-added agricultural products. As the Canadian Exporters' Association informed the committee in Ottawa, "international competition can sometimes boil down to that — who is prepared to extend the most generous credit terms?"

The committee sees an opportunity for Canada to do more with the $1-billion credit program announced as part of the elimination of the WGTA by incorporating into its own export credit program relevant elements of the U.S. export credit program.

[Translation]

Even if it keeps within the limits set by the Uruguay Round, the United States certainly has no intention of totally eliminating its farm price and income support programs. The Americans are well aware that these programs are far from being properly decoupled.

[English]

In that context, it is worth noting that in its Farm Bill proposal, the U.S. administration even referred to Canada's Net Income Stabilization Account (NISA) and recommended that a pilot stabilization program be tried along those lines. That is the reason why the committee recommended that Canada make it known to a greater degree internationally that its farm income support programs are decoupled and thus trade-neutral.

Honourable senators, I should like now to turn to the second aspect of the study we tabled this summer — the Canadian Wheat Board.

A number of organizations, including the Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association, the United Grain Growers and the Western Barley Growers Association, have advocated changes to the Canadian Wheat Board. It was therefore not surprising that the Wheat Growers Association continued to recommend this course of action when it met with the committee in Winnipeg. The association has a long history of supporting increased flexibility to enable Prairie farmers to market their own wheat and barley. It believes the board must be reformed in order to operate effectively and thereby better serve the needs of Prairie farmers.

Honourable senators, changes in the global marketplace have shown a trend away from state buying and selling agencies and toward liberalization. World trade is becoming increasingly diverse with a multitude of buyers and requirements. These are reasons for the position that the Canadian Wheat Growers Association espouses with great vigour. They question whether our current system of marketing is the best means of meeting the demands of such a diverse, dynamic and highly competitive marketplace. Furthermore, the association believes that the emergence of identity-preserved production and various contract arrangements require direct contact between the grower and end user, a matter which is quite controversial, particularly in the context of the Wheat Board's principle, which is the pooling of grain accounts. The Wheat Growers Association says that the Wheat Board has been an impediment to value-added processing and is not always the best means of gaining access to a given market. The board's pricing practices are, as we know, a source of trade friction with the United States, and similar problems could arise with other countries. Moreover, with the elimination of the Western Grain Transportation Act, the association believes that Canadian farmers must have greater access to the U.S. market and distribution channels, another controversial matter over which there is much argument. Finally, the association has argued that the current marketing system fails to respect the various points of view held by farmers on the issue of compulsory participation in price pooling.

In hearings in Ottawa in November 1994, the association expressed their preference for a market-oriented marketing system and a reformed Canadian Wheat Board.

Then there are those who support the Canadian Wheat Board, such as Prairie Pools Incorporated and our Senate committee, which has tabled its report. The committee has taken this position because it believes that there are advantages in consolidating returns from board grain sales into one fund and distributing the proceeds equitably among farmers. We believe the system as presently constituted respects the goals of those who pressured the federal government to establish a Canadian Wheat Board in the first instance.

The committee believes that now, as then, the Canadian Wheat Board, by maximizing returns on the pool, is a valuable risk-management tool for producers. The Canadian Wheat Board also provides other benefits. It undertakes long-term marketing research and development activities that benefit the entire industry and provides after-sales service to its customers. It also operates a sophisticated crop and weather surveillance system. These functions may not be easily, efficiently or effectively performed by individual farmers selling their own grain, or by anyone other than the very largest of private grain companies.

In the committee's opinion, there is an important distinction to be made between the selling of grain and the marketing of grain. Many producers tend to confuse the two. The Wheat Board markets grain. Most producers have a choice in selling grain, but marketing by the Wheat Board is unique in Canada with respect to the grains on which they have a monopoly selling privilege. In terms of the United States, many large companies, while they are buyers of grain, do not conduct the marketing of that product.

Certainly, Canada and the Canadian Wheat Board must respond to the challenges and opportunities brought about by specialized markets, changing market locations and changing trading partners, among other things. The committee believes that, with appropriate changes and adaptations, the Canadian Wheat Board can continue to serve Prairie farmers. Renewing this major agricultural institution will not be an easy task. It should be done gradually, with great care and in response to the wishes of western grain farmers, rather than U.S. political pressure.

The committee supports the concept of a renewed Canadian Wheat Board but does not support the concept of simply moving to dual marketing as suggested by the Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association, upon whose position I elaborated earlier. In the committee's opinion, the board must be renewed and revitalized, rather than threatened with elimination. If the Canadian Wheat Board were to cease to exist, it is possible, if not likely, that existing international grain markets would be served by large grain-marketing organizations outside of Canada, beside which the Canadian Wheat Board is a very small entity indeed.

The sales of one of the largest grain companies, Cargill, are about $50 billion. Cargill is a private company and, interestingly, not very transparent. The Canadian Wheat Board's international sales would amount to something like $4 billion. Without the Canadian Wheat Board, Canadian farmers' sales would likely be integrated into such giant companies. Prairie grain producers would lose much sovereign control over their vested interest in maximizing their returns. Ultimately, the result could be lowered market share and market returns for producers as traditional customers are lost. In the committee's view, the board must continue to exist for these and other reasons.

A number of surveys conducted among Prairie producers have indicated widespread and increasing support for the Canadian Wheat Board. Widespread support also exists for a plebiscite among Western Canadian grain farmers before any significant changes are made to the authority or role of the board.

The committee believes that the Canadian Wheat Board offers a valuable service and has greater marketing power than do independent producers. Certainly, there are areas where the board could improve its operations. A recent survey has revealed that a majority of farmers would like more information from the board on markets and on the board's operations. The farmers should play a larger role in directing the board and in setting its goals and strategies. The committee made recommendations in both these areas.

The Canadian Wheat Board told the committee of its recent initiatives to provide better service and to be more responsive, accountable and visible, primarily to farmers but also to the public and to the grain industry. The committee believes that accountability to farmers, the board's stakeholders, must be an ongoing priority for the Canadian Wheat Board. However, much more needs to be done to provide producers, particularly young farmers, with information on the board, its role, its structure and its advantages as a market. For this reason, the committee recommended enhanced efforts by the board to provide comprehensive and complete information to Prairie farmers about markets, the board's performance, and other related matters.

Moreover, the committee believes that the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee, a group which comprises 11 members elected by farmers, should play an enhanced role. The advisory committee currently advises the board on issues and policy matters related to its operations. It also provides communication between the board and western grain farmers.

Our committee feels that the advisory committee should have more input into setting the Canadian Wheat Board's goals and priorities by providing the board with ongoing advice about the types of information needed by farmers. It should play a role in establishing the type of incremental change to the board that will be needed over time to meet producers' needs and to ensure sensitivity to market changes. From this perspective, our committee recommends an amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act to strengthen the role of the advisory committee. It also recommends that the federal government establish a means by which the board is accountable to this strengthened advisory committee.

Honourable senators, the Canadian Wheat Board is a fairly rigid structure, a fact that can cause problems when attempts are made to address organizational problems. We recommend that the advisory board, with assistance, with enhancement and with necessary changes, should play the role of an ongoing "panel of experts," now appointed by the Minister of Agriculture, which can be consulted for problem-solving. Rather than operating in an ad hoc manner, changes should be made on an ongoing basis through continuing consultation with the advisory committee.

Finally, the committee believes that the Prairie producers, as shareholders — clients, if you will — of the board, should determine the role and structure of the Canadian Wheat Board through a comprehensive survey of Prairie farmers. The Senate committee recommends that the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee conduct such a survey, with the federal government providing any needed assistance, financial or otherwise. Following an analysis of the survey results, the advisory committee should identify any issues on which plebiscites should be held among Prairie farmers.

Continual adaptation is necessary if the Canadian Wheat Board is to survive and continue to serve Prairie farmers well. The board should constantly explore new ways of operating and new opportunities such as value-added processing. Certainly, to the greatest extent possible, Canadians should add value to our agricultural products for domestic use and export, rather than import, processed goods.

Now is a time of new realities. As grain markets change, customers become more exacting; new trade agreements require tough choices to be made. Together with its shareholders — stakeholders, farmers, clients, Prairie producers — the Canadian Wheat Board must make the tough choices for the future to safeguard Canada's position as a major supplier of consistently high quality grain.

Hon. Leonard J. Gustafson: Honourable senators, I would commend Senator Hays for his very full report of the committee's work. The committee members enjoyed an excellent working relationship under his fine chairmanship.

Over the past year, agriculture has seen the reality of the tough choices, some of them made by the Minister of Transport, that will change agriculture forever in Western Canada. We do not know now the long-term effects of these changes.

• (1510)

I have one regret. The joint committee never travelled. Senator Hays and committee members from the Senate felt it was important to get out into the regions and hear about the problems first hand. For whatever reason, the House of Commons did not support that view. We in the Senate should learn from that mistake. It never hurts to hear the people. That is why we are here.

On the bright side, agriculture today is facing some increased prices. Sir Leonard Tilley once said that if we destroy the farms, grass will grow in every street of every city of the nation. We in North America have always had a strong agricultural background, which has been beneficial for all of Canada. Because I am a fourth generation farmer, you would expect me to say that, but I cannot stress enough the importance to every single Canadian of retaining our strong agricultural base. Farmers now represent only 2.5 per cent of our population. Markets are changing worldwide. We are into a global economy.

North America is becoming a common market. Senator Hays mentioned our meeting in Washington. It was constructive for congressmen and senators to come together and agree that political bickering and undercutting to protect our national biases must stop. We all understand that you cannot have farmers going broke and still maintain our strong agricultural background. It just cannot happen.

We must realize the importance of cooperating in the best interests of agriculture. I am encouraged by what I hear from Washington about our struggles over grain, particularly durum wheat. The Americans are agreeing to deal with the realities and to forget the politicking. They have changed their tune a little since last year because now they need our durum wheat. Sometimes, the weather deals with farmers and politicians.

We held a good round of discussions in Winnipeg regarding the Canadian Wheat Board. Our report leaves no doubt that we stand in support of the Wheat Board. Perhaps I am the odd man out on the committee because I do believe the board needs to take a new look at new opportunities, at the changing world and the changing farm economy. In my opinion, dual marketing would not hurt; it may broaden their vision and their opportunities in such crops as canola, which, in terms of production, is now second to wheat in Western Canada. Canadians should capitalize on this, rather than waiting around while the Americans steal the market from us.

I spoke recently to a seed-grower from Southern Alberta who has planted 15,000 acres of hybrid canola, which can produce up to 60 bushels per acre. This canola is already being planted in Montana. We have had a captive market in Canada, and now we need to be on the cutting edge and take every advantage we can for our Canadian farmers and wheat boards. This may mean a change in our approach to agriculture, but I am confident in our abilities.

Thank you for your cooperation. I am sure you will agree that the Senate, by this committee report, has made a meaningful contribution to the future of agriculture in this country.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to speak on this matter, it is considered debated.

Debate concluded.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, today being Wednesday, our usual committee day, there are committees scheduled to sit this afternoon. Senator Oliver has a motion as Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications. If there is agreement, we will stand all other inquiries, motions, and reports to allow Senator Oliver to speak to his motion, after which we will entertain a motion for adjournment.

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, we on this side agree with that suggestion.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

CANADA'S INTERNATIONAL COMPETITIVE POSITION IN TELECOMMUNICATIONS—MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO EXTEND DATE OF FINAL REPORT ON SPECIAL STUDY ADOPTED

Hon. Donald H. Oliver, pursuant to notice of October 17, 1995, moved:

That notwithstanding its order of reference of April 5, 1995, the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications be authorized to continue its special study on Canada's international competitive position in telecommunications; and

That the Committee present its report no later than March 29, 1996.

He said: Honourable senators, I promised Senator Graham I would not be more than two minutes, but I do want to put on the record the justification for this requested extension.

The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications is requesting the extension of its report date until March 29, 1996, for two principal reasons. At the end of April, shortly after our committee received the order of reference from the Senate for the special study, the government issued its proposed orders on direct-to-home satellite broadcasting. Pursuant to the Broadcasting Act, the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications had the opportunity to examine the proposed orders but had to do so within 40 sitting days of Parliament, after which time the government could implement the proposed orders as it saw fit. Our committee spent most of May and early June hearing witnesses on the proposed orders, in an effort to present the report before the 40-day deadline. Unfortunately, this prevented the committee from devoting itself to the special study in telecommunications, as originally planned. Most of the hearings planned for the spring will now be taking place this fall.

In addition, we have planned fact-finding missions to Washington, D.C., and London, England. Plans are well under way for travel to Washington in mid-November. However, we have been informed by the British Parliament that, due to the reopening of Parliament in November, their committees are not likely to be reconstituted before the end of January next year.

An important part of our visit to London will consist of meetings with our British counterparts. For example, the British House of Commons Committee on Trade and Commerce has completed a study on optical fibre networks. The House of Lords Committee on Science and Technology is about to begin a study on the information superhighway, and the British Parliament has an office of Science and Technology. Therefore, in order to carry out our hearings in Ottawa and our visit to London with a view to preparing as complete a report as possible, the committee is requesting an extension of the report date to March 29, 1996.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, October 19, 1995

The Senate met at 2:00 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

HALIFAX MKVII BOMBER

RECOVERY AND RENOVATION OF AIRCRAFT SUNK
IN LAKE MJOSA, NORWAY, DURING WORLD WAR II

Hon. John Sylvain: Honourable senators, last May, at the fiftieth anniversary of VE Day, I was able to tell you of a project that I was supporting to raise a Halifax bomber from a Norwegian fiord where it had lain for 50 years after it had been shot down during World War II.

I am delighted to be able to tell you that due to the support and encouragement of the government, of a number of Canadian companies, and of many of you here in the chamber, as well the members of the Halifax Bomber Association, the aircraft has been raised. It was brought up 700 feet from its cold, watery resting place and found to be in remarkably good condition. Through the efforts of the Norwegian government and many support groups in Norway and in Canada, it now rests on a beach to be disassembled, loaded into cargo aircraft, and flown back to Canada.

At the Trenton Aircraft Museum, teams of enthusiastic volunteers will reconstruct the aircraft from spare parts located from around the world. Even with much volunteer work, this will still be a costly process and worthy of your continued financial support.

Honourable senators, at the end of the process, we will have in Canada the only World War II Halifax bomber in the world, as a tribute to our Canadian airmen who flew them with valour and honour.

INCREASE IN POPULATION—PROMOTION OF FRENCH LANGUAGE IN CONCERT WITH FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Hon. Jean-Robert Gauthier: Honourable senators, on Tuesday, a Bloc member told the other place that francophones outside Quebec were history. Another Bloc member stated that only a sovereign Quebec will constitute the anchor point for all francophones.

Honourable senators, according to Statistics Canada, in spite of a slight drop in percentage, the number of francophones outside Quebec has increased. In fact, there are about one million Canadians outside Quebec whose mother tongue is French and nearly 2.5 million French-speaking Canadians. More than two million students are currently enrolled in French as second language programs in grade schools and high schools outside Quebec, as compared to a mere 1.4 million in 1977. Last year, enrolment in French immersion courses exceeded 300,000. There are 696 francophone primary and secondary public schools outside Quebec.

French Canada outside Quebec can also pride itself on making significant contributions to French Canadian cultural life. It has produced the likes of Édith Butler, Roch Voisine, Gabrielle Roy, Daniel Lavoie, Hart Rouge and Antonine Maillet.

Admittedly the assimilation rate is on the rise. Mr. Bouchard, the Bloc leader, even offered an explanation. He has his, and I have mine. Instead of separating, we should be joining forces to ensure the survival of the francophone community as a whole in Canada. Promoting the French language across Canada is the best way of ensuring its survival.

Through the federal government, francophones are represented nationally and internationally. They play a role and exert an influence that is the best guarantee that the French language, as well as the Quebec and French Canadian culture, will be preserved.

THE SENATE

CIVIC CONTRIBUTIONS OF MEMBERS PAST AND PRESENT

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators, Richard Stolley was an editor of People magazine which, as we all know, is published south of here. Mr. Stolley was known for his candour about the things he did for a living. Here is an example:

What we think we know is that young sells better than old, pretty sells better than ugly, sports figures don't do very well, TV sells better than music, music does better than movies, and anything does better than politics.

I thought of that quotation last month while I was shaking off the tremors induced by Ottawa's local paper in one of its occasional flirtations with the Senate.

The Senate? I should say, as the paper did, "party hacks and bagmen of the Conservative caucus" who had just "been revealed as a powerful, unelected body of partisan failures, flatterers and pleaders for special interests." And what had the Senate done? "Once again proved itself to be a useless nuisance."

The Leader of the Opposition in the Senate has the gift of seeing the humour in such free-verse pleading. Because of my background, I need more potent antidotes, and I would be happy to share one of them today for the amelioration of others who may be in need. All I do is summon up pictures of colleagues — or, if you will, other “sensitive nuisances” who have passed or are passing this way without apology for their grand accomplishments on the public’s behalf.

Honourable senators, the first name to come to mind was Staff Barootes who, until two years ago, was chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. His name rang a bell because several hundred people were gathering in Regina last month to toast his health and wish him well in his next career. They came to talk of his accomplishments as an advocate of veterans’ causes. They came from medical associations to cheer him as a specialist and officer of professional organizations. Good grief! Even Liberals came to praise his citizenship.

I had scarcely completed my review of Barootes’ triumphs in and out of politics when another senator from the world of medicine appeared on my TV screen.

You, too, may have seen the pictures this week of his participation in the Canadian artificial heart program’s latest adventure in developing a high-technology, implantable ventricular assist device.

That is a serious description of a contraption that is held magnetically on a patient’s chest while connected to a liquid crystal display box, no bigger than a pacer, which can be hooked through a phone line to a computer. Thus data is sent to a specialist anywhere in the world. Aha! That doctor can then monitor and adjust the heartbeat without seeing the patient.

Doctors in this Ottawa project — such as one key figure, Senator Wilbert Keon — will tell you that a $15 phone call may be used to replace a $2,000 hospital stay, because of the progress being made in perfecting and manufacturing the functionally proven artificial heart prototype into a commercialized unit for human implantation.

This week, Canada’s Minister of Industry pledged $5.5 million toward the cost of the project directed by CAE Electronics of St. Laurent and the Heart Institute. Not bad for a project led by a “nuisance.”

With antidotes like these...

JOHNNY MILES

CAPE BRETON MARATHONER—
TRIBUTES ON NINETIETH BIRTHDAY

Hon. John Buchanan: Honourable senators, I rise today to pay tribute to a great Cape Bretonner, Nova Scotian and Canadian, Johnny Miles, who will be celebrating his ninetieth birthday on October 30, 1995.

Johnny Miles was born in 1905. At the age of 11 he went to work in a coal mine to help support his family while his father went off to war. At the age of 17, he ran his first road race, a three-mile run through the streets of Sydney. The prize that day was a fishing rod. Johnny Miles did not win the fishing rod, but his prowess as a runner was already evident.

It has been said that people in the small towns of Florence and Sydney Mines would often look out through their windows to see Johnny running through the cold twilight. The son of a coal mine manager, Johnny Miles trained under his father’s watchful eye, running behind his father’s team of horses as they travelled 10 to 15 miles back from the mine to their home.

Johnny won his first race in 1924, but his first major event was a 10-mile maritime championship race in Halifax on Thanksgiving Day of 1925. With his father’s promise that if he won that day he would take Johnny to Boston the next spring to compete in the 26-mile Boston Marathon, there was no question of the outcome — he won.

Johnny Miles entered the Boston Marathon on April 19, 1926 as a virtual unknown from Nova Scotia. All attention was focused on the expected showdown between Finnish marathoner Albin Stenroos and the three-time winner of the Boston Marathon, Clarence DeMar. Johnny Miles did not let the high calibre of his competitors deter him. Donning his white tennis sneakers from the British Canadian Cooperative Store in Sydney Mines, he set off on the 26-mile trek. In a stunning upset, he passed both runners and crossed the finish line, winning the Boston Marathon and breaking the world record.

Johnny Miles ran the Boston Marathon again the next year but had a poor finish. Determined to prove his ability, he returned in 1929 and won the Boston Marathon again, breaking another record with a time of two hours, thirty-three minutes and eight seconds.

Although Johnny Miles then moved to Ontario and later to the United States, his great achievements have never been forgotten, particularly in Nova Scotia. There is in fact a 26-mile marathon run on Mother’s Day every year in New Glasgow, Nova Scotia. That race is aptly named the Johnny Miles Marathon. Johnny Miles has returned a number of times to his native Nova Scotia to attend this annual race named in his honour.

The New Glasgow Marathon, or the Johnny Miles Marathon, was commenced by a devoted fan and personal friend who was named after Johnny Miles, Dr. John Miles Williston of New Glasgow, but who was born in Sydney, Cape Breton. Some would run in the Johnny Miles Marathon with records of their own to break, and some would run simply for the joy of competition. I am sure that all of the runners who participate are mindful of the achievements of that great sports legend as they pursue their own quest for excellence.

After a successful career with International Harvester, Johnny Miles retired to Hamilton, Ontario, where he still lives today. Although he never raced competitively after 1935, Johnny Miles is still considered one of our country’s greatest sports heroes.

I met Johnny Miles in Sydney many years ago, and in 1981 I was invited by the Mayor of Boston to attend the marathon when Johnny Miles was a special guest of the Marathon Commission.

I ask that all members of the Senate join with me in congratulating Johnny Miles as he celebrates his ninetieth birthday on October 30 — a great sports hero, a great role model, and a great Canadian.

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I want first to associate myself with the tribute my friend has just paid to an outstanding Nova Scotian and Canadian. As one of my colleagues just said, "Go, Johnny, go!"

I am not sure how spry the original Johnny Miles is today, but some years ago, in the misty past, I had the great privilege of meeting and having my picture taken with Johnny Miles at the Antigonish Highland Games. At the time, I happened to be secretary-treasurer and manager of the games. The Highland Games at that time was regarded as the pre-eminent track and field meet, as well as "the" Scottish games event perhaps in all of Canada, if you combined the two.

Senator Buchanan mentioned that the marathon was 26 miles. I am not sure, but perhaps it would be more accurate to say 26 miles 369 yards, or, as Senator Robichaud said, to be more precise the total is 45,760 yards.

I am also aware of the marathon that is run annually in New Glasgow, Nova Scotia. It is highly successful due to the devotion of one Dr. John Miles Williston, a highly esteemed physician living in Pictou County. As Senator Buchanan says, John Miles Williston is a native of Sydney, Nova Scotia, where he himself was a great track and field star, as well as one of the great hockey players in the Sydney academy. Perhaps Senator Finlay MacDonald would remember that.

I am sure all senators would want to associate themselves again with the proper tribute that has been paid by Senator Buchanan on the eve of the anniversary of the ninetieth birthday of a great Cape Bretonner, Nova Scotian and Canadian, Johnny Miles.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 58(1)(h), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, October 31, 1995, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

[Senator Buchanan]

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I present a petition, signed by 31 residents of Ontario, asking the Senate to withdraw any support for Bill C-68.

KARLA HOMOLKA PLEA BARGAIN AGREEMENT

PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present a petition. I should like to read it into the record.

We, the undersigned residents of Canada, draw the attention of the Senate to the following:

WHEREAS one of the hallmarks of a fair society is an equitable justice system;

WHEREAS the Canadian population has been disturbed and troubled by the gruesome and shocking evidence presented in the Paul Bernardo murder trial;

WHEREAS on October 5, 1995, over 300,000 persons petitioned the Legislative Assembly of Ontario stating that:

We demand a PUBLIC INQUIRY into the conduct of all Crown and law enforcement officials/employees, at all levels involved in the investigation of Karla Homolka and in particular the circumstances of the negotiation of the plea bargain arrangement. We also demand that all day passes and other privileges be revoked and her FULL 12-YEAR SENTENCE be served in its entirety;

WHEREAS other petitions carrying the same message are being presented daily to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario;

WHEREAS on two separate occasions in the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, Annamarie Castrilli, Member of Provincial Parliament for Downsview and Liberal Associate-Critic for Attorney General, has called upon the Attorney-General of Ontario to make a commitment to review the Karla Homolka plea-bargain agreement in light of the evidence presented at the Paul Bernardo trial;

We, the undersigned, residents of Canada including Annamarie Castrilli...pray that the Senate of Canada be informed that over 300,000 persons have expressed their dissatisfaction with the Homolka plea-bargain agreement and have requested a public inquiry into this agreement, and we the undersigned pray that the Senate of Canada take these concerns into consideration during the Senate's deliberations on Bill S-11.

PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. Jean-Louis Roux: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 84 residents of Anjou and Rivière-des-Prairies in Quebec. These people urge the government to ensure that Bill C-68 on gun control takes effect as soon as possible.

On the other hand, I should inform you that I have received over 2,000 letters written by people from every province of Canada to express their support for Bill C-68. For reasons you can appreciate, I did not bring these letters with me.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TAX CONVENTION ACT, 1984

BILL TO AMEND—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill S-9, to amend the Canada-United States Tax Convention Act, 1984, and acquainting the Senate that they had passed the bill without amendment.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

EXPLOSIVES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Colin Kenny moved the second reading of Bill C-71, to amend the Explosives Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I rise today in support of Bill C-71, to amend the Explosives Act.

I regret that Senator Kelly is unavoidably away today because this act is of great interest to him. We all recall the work he did in chairing the special committee of the Senate on terrorism. He chaired that committee twice, and they produced what I thought were extremely useful reports. I wish that he were here now to hear my remarks. I look forward to hearing what he has to say when he returns to the chamber.

• (1420)

Bill C-71 proposes the marking of plastic explosives by adding a chemical which would be detected by equipment at Canada's international airports, and thus ward off the threat of terrorism. This bill will protect the health and safety of passengers aboard aircraft using Canadian air space. In addition, the passage of this act will show that Canada is living up to its commitment as a signatory to the international convention on the marking of plastic explosives for the purpose of detection. In fact, the passage of Bill C-71 will allow Canada to be among the first nations to ratify this convention, which was signed in Montreal by 40 countries in March of 1991.

The 1991 convention represents an international agreement to combine efforts among nations to reduce the risk of aircraft bombings. Canadian participation in this effort is essential to the continuing battle against terrorism.

Plastic explosives have emerged as a weapon of choice for terrorist groups because this type of explosive is powerful, stable, easy to conceal and, most important, it is very difficult to detect. If plastic explosives are marked or tagged with a substance that can be detected by equipment at Canadian airports, terrorists would likely be discouraged from attempting any attacks on Canada using plastic explosives.

At the present time, there is no way to detect plastic explosives in airports, while conventional explosive materials can be detected by the equipment we already have in existence. This act proposes the marking of plastic explosives by adding a chemical which would be detected by equipment or dogs at Canada's international airports, and thus ward off the threat of terrorism.

Honourable senators, the extra costs of producing detectable plastic explosives are expected to be negligible. That is primarily due to the relatively low volume of plastic explosives that are manufactured in Canada, coupled with the insignificant costs of incorporating the marking agent.

In addition, given the low volume of plastic explosives that are used compared to that of conventional industrial explosives, the challenge of enforcing the provisions of the proposed amendment and, by extension, the international convention, will not pose a significant problem or cost on the relevant regulatory bodies.

Given the fact that Canada is a world leader in vapour detection technology, Canadian equipment manufacturers will be able to take advantage of international market opportunities for their vapour detection technology, as other countries ratify the convention.

In conclusion, honourable senators, we are determined to contribute to the health and safety of passengers on aircraft in this country. In addition, we are committed to working with our international partners to stop the threat of terrorism in our skies and around the globe. The passage of Bill C-71 will send a clear signal to terrorists everywhere that Canada will not be an easy target for their deadly campaigns of violence.

I urge all honourable senators to give speedy passage to this amendment to the Explosives Act.

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, Bill C-71, which amends the Explosives Act, was introduced in the other place by the Minister of Natural Resources on February 24, 1995. It is an important piece of legislation, and we are pleased to have it before this chamber at this time. We will be giving it serious study and, as Senator Kenny has pointed out, our colleague Senator Kelly will be responding in detail to this bill at the next sitting of the Senate.

On motion of Senator Kinsella, for Senator Kelly, debate adjourned.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Rose-Marie Losier-Cool moved the second reading of Bill C-64, an act respecting employment equity.

She said: Honourable senators, it is a great privilege for me to speak to Bill C-64, respecting employment equity, because it is a most important piece of legislation. This bill will help the federal government and its partners in the public and private sectors to eliminate, in the workplace, discrimination based on gender, race, colour or disability. Once proclaimed, this bill will replace the current Employment Equity Act. It will require every employer from the public sector, as well as large federally regulated organizations, to correct unfair situations which have existed for decades. To put this legislation in its proper context, it must be realized that Canada, like any other country, has a history of discrimination.

[English]

When the new Immigration Act was enacted in 1952, it continued restrictions on immigration based on nationality, citizenship, ethnicity, occupation, class, and place of origin. Legislated discriminatory practices continued until 1960, when we adopted the Canadian Bill of Rights. In fact, these prohibitive clauses were not removed until our present Immigration Act was enacted in 1977.

Honourable senators, although the provinces brought in fair employment legislation beginning in the early 1950s, federal initiatives designed to enhance employment equity did not begin until 1978. That was the year the government launched a voluntary affirmative action program aimed at private industry. Federal contractors and Crown corporations were included under the program the following year.

In 1982, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms constitutionally affirmed the right to equality in employment. In 1983, the affirmative action program sought to bring about the equitable representation and distribution of women, aboriginal people, and persons with disabilities in the public service. That same year, the Special Measures Program encouraged recruitment from designated groups. Then in 1985, visible minorities were included as part of the designated groups.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, some among you will recall that in 1983 the government mandated a royal commission to examine equal access to employment. That commission tabled its report in November 1984 and two years later, in response to its recommendations, the Employment Equity Act was passed. In 1986 the federal contractors program for employment equity was launched and Treasury Board adopted an employment equity program for the public service. The Treasury Board policy on services to the disabled — the most progressive of its kind in Canada — came into effect in 1989. Yet the present employment equity legislation is causing problems. A special parliamentary committee pinpointed two major ones in May 1992, during its in-depth examination of the content and functioning of the act. The first is that it applies only to the private sector. As I have just said, the Public Service is governed by Treasury Board policy. The second is that the act contains no coercive measures.

These problems are solved by Bill C-64, which the Minister of Human Resources Development tabled in the House last December. After first reading, it was referred to the Standing Committee on Human Rights and the Status of Disabled Persons, which examined the present act and Bill C-64 simultaneously. As a result of the hard work and suggestions of the entire membership, the committee was successful in making significant amendments to the bill in the remarkable report it submitted this past June. After lively debate, the amended bill was given third reading in the House of Commons just recently.

[English]

Honourable senators, Canadians can be proud of the efforts our government has made to correct injustices. I am pleased to inform you that the current Employment Equity Act has begun to correct the disadvantaged status of persons in the four designated groups. However, we still have some way to go. Under the act, the representation of women in the workplace has increased from 40.94 per cent in 1987 to 45.64 per cent in 1993. Their representation has also increased in some key occupational groups, and women's average earnings have improved relative to the average earnings of men.

Members of visible minorities have made substantial gains with employers covered under the existing act. Their representation has increased from 5 per cent in 1987 to 8.09 per cent in 1992. They have increased their share of all hirings and promotions almost every year.

Although still quite low, the representation of aboriginal people in the workforce governed by the act doubled from 0.66 per cent in 1987 to 1.04 per cent in 1993. Their share of hirings also increased, as did their share of promotions. Over the same seven years, the representation of persons with disabilities in the workforce under the act increased from 1.59 per cent to 2.56 per cent, and their occupational and salary profiles were similar to those of able-bodied workers.

Honourable senators, although we should welcome these improvements, the fact remains that members of the four designated groups are still greatly underrepresented in most professions and industries across the country. When we compare the percentages I just mentioned, aboriginal peoples and persons with disabilities are greatly underrepresented. Women and visible minorities tend to be concentrated in low-paying jobs, with two-thirds of women engaged in clerical work. The average salary for women is only 74.53 per cent that of men.

Most aboriginal women do clerical work, and aboriginal men and women earn considerably less than other workers. There are so many lay-offs among aboriginal peoples that employment equity has not given them a chance to make substantial progress. On the whole, employers hire very few persons with disabilities.

Although it is encouraging to see that the present legislation benefits Canadians who for years have been exposed to systemic discrimination, we must not become complacent. It is now up to the government to promote employment equity, which is in fact the purpose of Bill C-64.

Honourable senators, the bill before us today will strengthen employment equity by making employers more aware of their responsibilities under this legislation. It will help the government improve the way it assists members of designated groups who are struggling to find their rightful place within the Canadian labour force. The present legislation applies to approximately 350 employers in the private sector and Crown corporations. As soon as it comes into force, the new legislation will also apply to departments, federal agencies and public sector employers with more than 100 employees. Following consultations and an order in council, the Canadian Forces and the RCMP will also be covered by this legislation.

Honourable senators, Bill C-64 clarifies current requirements and identifies the fundamental obligations of employers. Both public and private sector employers will have to fulfil the same fundamental obligations when they develop and implement their employment equity plans.

Honourable senators will doubtless agree that it is pointless to set requirements if there is no way to ensure that employers do their utmost to meet them. The new legislation enables the Canadian Human Rights Commission to oversee the efforts of employers and to ensure that they all make every reasonable effort to have a representative employee population in accordance with the provisions of law.

On the other hand, certain honourable senators fear, perhaps, that the bill demands too much of employers. They will be happy to learn that the requirement to implement employment equity does not force employers to take measures that might be unjustifiably prejudicial to them, to create new jobs, to hire or promote unqualified individuals or, in the public sector, to contravene the merit principle. To clarify the government's intentions, the bill expressly prohibits the establishment of quotas.

The government believes that the success of the new legislation depends on consultation between employers and employees. To this end, Bill C-64 requires employers to obtain the opinion of employee representatives in the preparation, implementation and revision of their employment equity plan. This consultation and cooperation must not, however, be construed as co-management.

Furthermore, the bill requires employers to consult employees when company seniority rights could threaten employment opportunities for members of the designated groups.

[English]

As I mentioned earlier, the intent of the government is to improve employment opportunities for Canadians who have clearly felt the sting of discrimination. I think honourable senators will agree that to do so requires adequate measures to secure compliance with the act's requirements.

The bill creates a new mandate for the Canadian Human Rights Commission to conduct on-site compliance reviews to ensure that employers are making all reasonable efforts to fulfil their obligations under the new act. I want to emphasize, however, that this is not an inquisition. Employers who make all reasonable efforts to implement employment equity will not be penalized because of adverse economics or low response rates to self-identification surveys.

Honourable senators, when it comes to enforcing the act's provisions the commission will have the authority to appoint employment equity review tribunals from the current Human Rights Tribunal panel. An employer may also request the establishment of a tribunal to review a direction from the commission.

I believe honourable senators will agree that it is in the best interests of all concerned that fair and even-handed decisions are made regarding tribunal rulings. For that reason, the president of the Human Rights Tribunal panel will conscientiously give due consideration to an individual's knowledge and experience in employment equity matters when appointing members to an employment equity review tribunal.

As well as the provisions I have outlined, Bill C-64 clarifies the commission's powers of enforcement under both the proposed Employment Equity Act and the Canadian Human Rights Act. It confirms that Human Resources Development Canada is responsible for administering the federal contractors' program for employment equity and it ensures that the employment equity requirements of the federal contractors' program are equivalent to those under the new act.

To further the new act's positive influence in helping Canadians move toward true equality in the workplace, Human Resources Development Canada will conduct research, provide labour market data, and administer programs that recognize outstanding achievements in employment equity.

Mandatory review of the legislation will take place every five years instead of every three as is now required.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, I mentioned that, like many other countries, Canada has a history of discrimination. I did not, however, want to suggest that this important bill is aimed at righting yesterday's wrongs. Rather, I feel that the whole bill focuses on the future. It is only through progressive and proactive bills like this one that we will succeed in eliminating inequities.

Judging from the wide support Bill C-64 received from regulated businesses, designated groups and unions, equality in the workplace is an objective shared by many Canadians.

Honourable senators, the adoption of Bill C-64 is another big step toward full equality for all these Canadians. I therefore urge honourable senators to support this outstanding bill.

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, I wish to thank our colleague for her presentation and her very clear explanations on this very important issue. Senator Losier-Cool was a leader in New Brunswick in the fight against discrimination against women. This bill is aimed at eliminating institutional discrimination.

[English]

Honourable senators, in 1986 the Conservative government introduced the Employment Equity Act, which set the pattern for an attempt to deal with institutional discrimination through the vehicle of employment equity. It is good to see that work continuing because it is an ongoing process.

It is far more appropriate that Parliament, rather than the courts, give instruction to agencies. For example, the Human Rights Commission has a mandate to deal with discrimination committed on the grounds of sexual orientation. Unfortunately, the government has yet to live up to its promise to introduce legislation to add sexual orientation to the list of prescribed grounds of discrimination. It is a pity that the courts had to rule in the Haig case and prescribe that ground as a form of discrimination before the Human Rights Commission could act on such cases. It should have been Parliament. We have a commitment from the government that we will see amendments to the federal Human Rights Act in that regard, but we have yet to see them.

Honourable senators, a number of colleagues on this side of the chamber wish to participate in the study of this bill. I am sure they will do so in committee. My colleague Senator Johnson, who could not be here today, wishes to participate in the debate at second reading and will do so at the next sitting of the Senate.

On motion of Senator Kinsella, for Senator Johnson, debate adjourned.

Hon. Peter Bosa moved the second reading of Bill C-90, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-90 implements changes to the air transportation tax, the excise tax rates on gasoline, the marking requirements for tobacco products for sale in Prince Edward Island, and the seizure and notification provisions in respect of offences under the Excise Act. All of these measures were announced in the budget of February 1995.

Bill C-90 also contains changes to the excise tax rates for tobacco products for sale in Quebec, Ontario, and Prince Edward Island. These changes were announced on February 17, 1995 for Quebec and Ontario, and on March 31, 1995 for Prince Edward Island.

Honourable senators, I will begin by addressing the key budget measures contained in Bill C-90. As part of the government's efforts to meet its deficit reduction targets, the air transportation tax is being amended to recover a greater proportion of the cost of providing air transportation facilities and services. Thus, the maximum tax on domestic and transborder air travel and the tax on international air travel purchased in Canada will increase from $50 to $55, while the maximum tax on international air travel purchased outside Canada, and on transborder air travel subject to the United States' 10 per cent air transportation tax, will increase from $25 to $27.50. These changes to the air transportation tax will generate an additional $27 million in the 1995-96 fiscal year, and $33 million in the 1996-97 fiscal year. The new rates of tax will apply to tickets purchased on or after May 1, 1995.

Also, as a part of the government's efforts to meet its deficit reduction targets, the excise tax rates on leaded and unleaded gasoline are being increased by 1.5 cents per litre. The excise tax on unleaded gasoline and aviation gasoline will increase from 8.5 cents per litre to 10 cents per litre, while the excise tax on leaded gasoline and aviation gasoline will increase from 9.5 cents per litre to 11 cents per litre. The new rates of tax are effective February 28, 1995, and will raise an additional $500 million per fiscal year.

Honourable senators, this bill also proposes a number of legislative amendments to the Excise Tax Act to phase out the sale of black stock tobacco products and authorize the sale of Nova Scotia marked tobacco products in Prince Edward Island. This change is being undertaken at the request of and pursuant to an agreement between the governments of Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia and will be effective upon Royal Assent to this legislation. This change to the marking requirements for tobacco products will allow for greater efficiency in serving the Prince Edward Island market.

The Excise Act currently mandates enforcement officers to seize any vehicle used in the transportation of contraband alcohol and tobacco products, even where relatively minor amounts of contraband are discovered. To remedy the difficulties sometimes occasioned by this requirement, the Excise Act is being amended to provide enforcement officers with discretion in their use of the power to seize vehicles.

At the same time, the Excise Act is also being amended to require that enforcement officers undertake reasonable efforts to provide notification of seizure to persons with an ownership or other interest in a seized vehicle. Both of these changes will serve to improve the delivery and efficiency of enforcement activities.

Honourable senators, that is the sum of the budget-related measures contained in Bill C-90. I should like now to discuss the tobacco tax increases that were announced outside the budget process but are contained in the legislation.

Following the success of the National Action Plan to Combat Smuggling, excise tax rates are being increased on tobacco products sold in Quebec, Ontario and Prince Edward Island. In Quebec and Ontario, excise taxes are being increased by 60 cents per carton of 200 cigarettes, while in Prince Edward Island excise taxes are being increased by $1 per carton of cigarettes and 32 cents per 200 tobacco sticks.

Federal excise tax increases are being undertaken in conjunction with provincial tobacco tax increases in these three provinces. The joint federal-provincial tax increases follow the scheme of the matching federal-provincial tax reduction undertaken last year as part of the anti-smuggling initiative. These excise tax increases will raise $65 million per year for the federal government. They are effective February 18, 1995, in respect of cigarettes sold in Quebec and Ontario, while the increases in respect of cigarettes and tobacco sticks sold in Prince Edward Island are effective April 1, 1995.

In conclusion, honourable senators, Bill C-90 is an important bill. It enacts a number of provisions that will make a significant contribution to the government's commitment to increased cost recovery and deficit reduction. It is important to remember that the increases in the air transportation tax and the gasoline excise tax were delivered in a budget that emphasized spending reductions over tax increases by a margin of almost seven to one.

The amendments to the tobacco marking scheme will allow for greater efficiency in serving the Prince Edward Island market, while the amendments to the seizure and notification provisions of the Excise Act will improve the delivery of enforcement activities.

Finally, the changes to the excise tax rates for tobacco products for sale in Quebec, Ontario and Prince Edward Island recognize the success to date of the National Action Plan to Combat Smuggling and represent important first steps toward the long-term restoration of uniform federal excise tax rates across Canada.

I would therefore urge my fellow senators to give speedy passage to this bill.

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, I would like to make a few comments in some detail on Bill C-90 this afternoon, before it finds its way to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Before dealing with the substance of the bill, I should like to remind government supporters of a promise that the government made prior to the last election. I am sure that honourable colleagues opposite recall the paper entitled "Reviving Parliamentary Democracy—The Liberal Plan for the House of Commons and Electoral Reform." In that document we were told:

The credibility-stretching tradition of not passing actual tax measures until many months after a budget, often even after the measures have come into effect, must, within the context of a suitable system of consultation, be ended.

This is what the government which honourable senators opposite support put forward as a principle. Nothing has been done to honour that promise. Perhaps the minister or his officials will be able to tell the committee whether anything will ever be done to honour that promise.

Honourable senators, let me cite a few examples of how tax measures — contrary to what was promised — are not being introduced in a timely fashion. First, most of the income tax measures introduced in the February 1994 budget did not become law until March 1995, well after the start of the tax filing season. Some of those measures did not become law until June 1995, two months after the filing deadline. Second, as of earlier this week, the government had not yet tabled legislation to deal with the income tax measures of the February 1995 budget.

Honourable senators, I do not know how they are managing their affairs, either in government or in the House. We certainly know that what has happened so often will happen again. Certain pieces of legislation will arrive here at the eleventh hour. They are all so terribly important, but we will be forced to lay aside our obligation to give them careful scrutiny. Something is radically wrong when the nation's business is managed in such a poor time-line fashion. The bill before us today is a prima facie case of poor time management. We are being asked to pass a bill that will implement measures which have been in place for almost the entire past year.

This bill, which retroactively approves a significant tax hike, had not proceeded beyond first reading in the other place when Parliament rose for the summer. Often, we receive criticism from our colleagues in the other place, and all I can say is that by any analysis, even that of a student of Business Administration 100, this is a poor way of doing business.

Perhaps it is not practical to speed up the introduction of tax bills. If that is the case, then it was stretching credibility to make such a promise in the first place.

Honourable senators, taxes, as we all know and as every Canadian knows, are at the limit. Yet in February of this year, the government increased taxes by more than $1 billion and by more than $1.3 billion for 1996-97. About $600 million of last February's tax hike will be made law through this piece of legislation. It includes $500 million a year from higher fuel taxes; $33 million from higher taxes on air tickets; and $65 million from higher tobacco taxes. Income tax measures from the budget will be the subject of a separate bill.

Perhaps, in committee, the government will give some indication as to when we might see that legislation, and I hope it is such that it may be examined in a timely fashion.

Retroactive to last February, Bill C-90 increases the excise tax on gasoline to 10 cents per litre from 8.5 cents. Remember how the government promised tax fairness? It was very proud of that promise. Clearly, many Canadians believed that that promise would be kept. There is nothing fair about higher fuel taxes if you live in my part of Canada or in most rural parts of Canada. Unlike the GST, there is no rebate on these taxes, which will make Canadian businesses less competitive.

Also, retroactive to last February, this bill raises the excise tax on aviation fuel to 11 cents per litre from 9.5 cents per litre. Bill C-90 increases the maximum air transportation tax retroactive to last May.

Many of us are encouraging efforts to curb tobacco use, but the government focused, as honourable senators will recall, on the problem of tobacco smuggling. Cigarette taxes were reduced in February 1994. What happened a year later in February 1995?

Lo and behold, the government said that the cuts were working and therefore they could be rolled back, which resulted in combined federal-provincial taxes rising by 60 cents a carton. This bill retroactively approves that increase.

The bill also makes some technical changes concerning tobacco markings and makes the rules for vehicle seizures less onerous.

In conclusion, I remind the government, and those who support it, about another major promise that has yet to be honoured. As honourable senators know, the goods and services tax is governed by the Excise Tax Act, which is being amended by Bill C-90.

Remember the Red Book, honourable senators? Let me give you a quote from that piece of "pulp fiction."

Senator Lynch-Staunton: It belongs in the blue box.

Senator Kinsella: I quote:

A Liberal government will replace the GST with a system that generates equivalent revenues, is fairer to consumers and to small business, and promotes federal-provincial fiscal cooperation and harmonization.

Honourable senators, the Honourable Sheila Copps, who we last saw still holding the position of Deputy Prime Minister, went so far as to tell the CBC on October 18, 1993:

If the GST is not abolished, I'll resign.

Senator Fairbairn: She will have a long and fruitful career.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: We know what kind of environment she is in.

Senator Kinsella: Honourable senators, the Prime Minister also said that he would honour all his promises within two years. Colleagues, two years have passed but the GST is still here, and it is still applying to books.

There are rumours that the government might propose a single national sales tax in the next budget. However, a lack of interest on the part of the provinces makes the acceptance of such a proposal an uncertain prospect. As such, a new tax may be hidden in the price and will likely tax several items that are not now taxed. It is unclear how this would be any fairer to consumers.

I could say much more about this bill. However, I do not want to shoot off all the ammunition in my rifle as the bill goes off to the Banking Committee for detailed examination.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask Senator Kinsella a question. Obviously, he has studied this bill carefully and compared it to something, although I know not what. Since the honourable senator is so critical of the taxes being applied here, and of the time lapse between this legislation and the date on which they were announced, does he have some better system for bringing in tax changes?

Senator Simard: Let the government decide that.

Senator Olson: A little truth always comes from somewhere. "Let the government decide," says Senator Simard. It is too bad that the honourable senator interrupted, but he is correct: The government must do these things. However, I wondered how they could do that, because we bring a number of bills into both Houses. Some of them languish in the House of Commons for weeks and months; others languish in the Senate. I could name a few that my honourable friend is probably responsible for their having languished here in the Senate, awaiting passage. Does he have a better idea as to how to impose taxes so that there is some notice and some certainty concerning what the tax collectors will do on the dates that were announced in the budget? Or is he now prepared to say — and mean it — that Parliament — and the opposition, in particular — will pass these things in time to meet the dates that were mentioned in the two speeches?

Senator Kinsella: Honourable senators, I thank my honourable friend for his question. It raises a number of important issues.

Senator Olson: You bet it does!

Senator Kinsella: The first issue is the issue of integrity, and integrity in terms of what you offer to the Canadian electorate. You say to them, "We will change the system so that we do not have this." I assumed that those who were the authors of that promise had it all worked out.

I share the suspicion implied in the question asked by the honourable senator, namely: How would you really do this?

Senator Olson: That is the point.

Senator Kinsella: Yes, that is the point.

Senator Doody: You must have known before you wrote the book and made the promise!

Senator Kinsella: My colleague beside me makes that point.

Senator Olson: We get lots of help, obviously. The government proposes and, especially where the opposition has a majority, the opposition disposes. That is an old truth that has been around here for years. It did not happen with this Parliament.

Is the opposition prepared to give an undertaking that, from now on, they will pass these bills in time to meet the dates announced in the budget?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: We must get them first.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Bosa, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

BILL CONCERNING KARLA HOMOLKA

POINT OF ORDER

On the Order:

Second reading of Bill S-11, An Act concerning one Karla Homolka.—(Hon. Senator Cools)

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: A point of order takes precedence.

Senator Kinsella: Honourable senators, I will explain my point of order as succinctly as I possibly can. However, in no way is this point of order intended to detract from the important point that underlies and is implied very clearly in the Honourable Senator Cools' bill which is before us. My point of order involves an important issue of procedure in Parliament.

First and foremost, as we know, there are two kinds of bills that can be entertained in Parliament — private bills and public bills. This issue emerged in the other place a few years ago in relation to a bill respecting the execution of Clifford Robert Olson. At that time, the Speaker in the other place looked at the same issue, namely: Is this piece of legislation one that can properly be dealt with within the traditions, customs and rules of this chamber?

In the House of Commons Debates of May 14, 1984, at page 3683, the Speaker points out that:

According to our practice, there are only two kinds of Bills. Public and Private.

He then referred to citation 700 of Beauchesne's 5th edition.

In the 6th edition of Beauchesne at page 192, the same point is repeated, namely, that:

A public bill relates to matters of public policy while a private bill relates to matters of a particular interest or benefit to a person or persons.

As was the case with the Olson bill, that comment applies equally here. The bill does not fall within the definition of a private bill since it cannot be said to promote the particular interest or benefit of the individual named, namely, Karla Homolka. Therefore, it can only be a public bill, although whether the incarceration for life as set out in this bill — as with the execution of the individual in the Olson bill — can be described as a matter of public policy is another question. In the case of the Olson bill, that was doubted by the Speaker in the other place.

The conclusion of the Speaker in the other place was that that kind of bill falls into a special category for which our practices do not provide. Its nature is that of a bill of attainder, a proceeding at one time employed by the British Parliament to convict and condemn an individual of a high crime by way of an act of Parliament.

The bill of attainder is described at page 69 of the 20th edition of Erskine May as "the highest form of parliamentary judicature." In other words, that is obviously suggesting that such a bill would be a public bill. In this instance, that would be a Senate public bill. The procedure is an obsolete one in the United Kingdom, and has not been employed since the eighteenth century.

I submit to Your Honour that this procedure has never existed in Canadian practice. Therefore, the matter contained in this bill is out of order and not properly before this chamber.

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Your Honour, there is nothing before us. I did not move anything.

Senator Kinsella: But it is on the Order Paper.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Do any other honourable senators wish to speak on the point of order?

Senator Cools: Your Honour, can you clarify for me if, in fact, the issue is before us? My understanding is that when the order is called, I would then move the motion for second reading. However, there was nothing before us when Senator Kinsella spoke.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: My understanding is that the matter was called, and it is before the Senate. Notice has been given.

Senator Cools: However, the motion for second reading has not yet been moved.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: The bill is on the Order Paper and the order was called. Senator Kinsella then rose on a point of order, and I am now asking if any other senator wishes to speak on that point of order.

Hon. Sharon Carstairs: Honourable senators, the only addition to the discussion on this point of order that I would like to make is to point out that we have gone through a similar procedure earlier this session with respect to Bill S-10. Senator Gauthier rose on a point of order. If I am not mistaken, the Speaker ruled that he could not rise on his point of order because the matter was not before the chamber, as it had not been moved by Senator Tkachuk. Before Senator Gauthier could raise his point of order, the subject-matter of the bill, not the bill itself, was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples.

Therefore, it seems to me that we have dealt with a situation similar to this one earlier this session. Perhaps, for the sake of clarity, we could allow Senator Cools to move second reading of her bill and then have Senator Kinsella raise his point of order, which I think is an extremely legitimate one. Then we could have a ruling from the His Honour.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: If no other honourable senator wishes to speak, I will take the submissions under advisement and the Chair will give a ruling at a later date.

Senator Cools: I am prepared to speak, Your Honour, but perhaps I might be told what I am speaking to.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: You cannot speak.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I am afraid that there will have to be a ruling on the point of order before the Chair can recognize the honourable senator.

Senator Cools: Very well, Your Honour. I shall speak to the point of order, but it was my clear understanding that there is nothing before us.

Honourable senators, I have given this matter careful consideration. My actions have been guided by much consideration and study of the public's shocked response to the trial of Paul Bernardo. In Toronto and throughout Canada, the horrible events surrounding the sexual assaults and three brutal killings by Homolka and Bernardo dominated the news daily.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: What does that have to do with the point of order?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: There is a certain onus on the Chair in matters of points of orders. Until the point of order with regard to whether it is in order for the honourable senator to speak on this matter is ruled upon, we cannot hear debate on the bill, only on the point of order itself.

Senator Cools: Perhaps Your Honour could tell me exactly what the point of order is that Senator Kinsella has raised.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: How can you discuss it when you do not know what it is?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I assume it is quite clear. The honourable senator raised a point of order and argued that, in his opinion, the bill with respect to which notice was given a couple of days ago was not in order.

I listened to what the honourable senator had to say, and I invited other honourable senators who so wished to make a submission on the point of order. At that time, Senator Cools indicated that she wished to make a submission on the point of order. Her submission must be on the point of order; it cannot be on the substance of the bill with respect to which she gave notice two days ago.

Senator Cools: Is the concern of the Honourable Senator Kinsella that the notice given two days ago is out of order?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: The honourable senator cannot enter into dialogue with the Chair.

Senator Cools: I should like to put a few comments on the record, Your Honour.

Senator Kinsella cited an example of a bill of attainder raised by a member on the other side, some years ago. I believe he cited as well some remarks from the then Speaker of the House of Commons, who I believe was Lloyd Francis, with regard to a bill of attainder.

In the first instance, honourable senators, I am not proposing a bill of attainder; nor am I proposing that Ms Homolka be executed.

I do not have a copy of Senator Kinsella's statement before me, but I shall quote one of the parliamentary authorities on the question of bills of attainder.

In the 1989 publication of Erskine May, it is clearly stated that the powers of bills of attainder have never been formally abolished. Clearly this house has the power to consider a bill of attainder. However, Bill S-11 is not a bill of attainder.

The initiative which I have asked the Senate to implement is described as "a bill of pains and penalties," which is quite different, though related in origin, from a bill of attainder. I submit that this house, this chamber, this Parliament of Canada, has the power to enact a bill of pains and penalties.

Honourable senators, I shall attempt to describe what a bill of pains and penalties is. Such a bill is an attempt by the Parliament of Canada to redress injustices and to impose penalties suited to — and suitable to — the notoriety of particular crimes. A bill of pains and penalties asks the Senate to engage Parliament's inquisitorial and judicial powers to correct a terrible public mischief which has offended the people of Canada. This ancient and undoubted remedy of Parliament, known as "an act of pains and penalties" is rarely used and is reserved for exceptional and extraordinary circumstances of injustice.

A bill of pains and penalties attempts to ask the high court of Parliament to exercise its full powers as the grand inquest of the nation and to engage its direct and indirect judicial powers. A bill of pains and penalty is intended to remedy the insufficiencies of the Crown in the executive. It is the people's remedy as against the deficiencies and wants in the executive's actions. It is an act to suit the Houses and not the executive. When the Crown in council has failed, the Crown in Parliament must act to remedy.

Honourable senators, for centuries our Constitution has directed that the Senate has the power of judicature; that the Commons has power of judicature; and that both Houses together also have power of judicature.

An act of pains and penalties is an ancient instrument of Parliament. It is a product of Parliament. It is a procedure that is legislative in form and judicial in substance: a legislative instrument with a judicial result. As a bill, it differs in no respect from any other bill. It proceeds through the chamber like any other bill.

An act of pains and penalties is an action by Parliament for the correction of an unjust result, a correction of a miscarriage of justice by legislating the fitting pain and penalty for a heinous offence. It is an assertion of the rights of the citizens as embodied and assembled in the Parliament of Canada, and as against the insufficient actions of the Crown in the executive.

The rights of the people of Canada cannot be denied by one or two senators rising and saying that something is in or out of order. The rights of the people of Canada to such action by its Parliament, as I have proposed, are grounded in the Bill of Rights of 1688 and the British North America Act of 1867, section 18, as amended in 1875.

The Bill of Rights of 1688 settled the powers of Parliament for all time in article vi, stating:

... That all and singular the Rights and Liberties asserted and claimed ... are the true, ancient, and indubitable Rights and Liberties of the People of this Kingdom,...

These powers of Parliament are antecedent to our Canadian Confederation and were received into Canada by the British North America Act 1867, as amended in 1875. Section 18 reads:

The privileges, immunities, and powers to be held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Senate and by the House of Commons ... shall be such as are ... defined by Act of the Parliament of Canada, but so that any Act of the Parliament of Canada ... shall not confer any privileges, immunities, or powers exceeding those ... held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom ...

Our Constitution, our parliamentary authorities, including Sir Erskine May, John Hatsell, and our own Altheus Todd, instruct us that the paramount authority of Parliament over the courts must never be forgotten.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Really?

Senator Cools: Yes. Dr. Todd said that the Parliament must ever be observant of the courts of justice and take due care that none of them, from the lowest to the highest, shall pursue new courses unknown to the laws and Constitution.

Honourable senators, I am speaking about the Constitution and the law of Canada. The high court of Parliament is the supreme power of Canada, and the supreme power of Canada is armed with the punitive, inquisitorial and judicial instruments necessary to its function of governance.

Honourable senators, such judicial and legislative proceedings in Parliament as Bill S-11 proposes are regulated by the rules, customs and ancient practices of Parliament; that is the law of Parliament, the Lex et consuetudo Parliamenti.

The law and customs of Parliament form part of the common law of the land, but it is peculiar to Parliament and Parliament's governance of itself, and it is sovereign to Parliament.

About these powers, John Hatsell tells us that, as every court of justice has laws and customs for its direction, some by the common law, some by the civil law, so, too, the high court of Parliament has its own laws and customs. John Hatsell, in his famous five-volume work, cites Sir Edward Coke, stating:

It is by the Lex et consuetudo Parliamenti, that all weighty matters concerning the Peers of the Realm, or Commons in Parliament assembled, ought to be discussed, adjudged, and determined.

Honourable senators, Parliament's consideration of this weighty matter, the contents of Bill S-11, including the Homolka agreement and the 12-year sentence received by Ms Homolka, is regulated by the law of Parliament. I believe that the insufficiencies and excesses of the Crown and counsel in the exercise of its powers and discretion in matters relating to the Criminal Code of Canada have resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Order, please. I must point out again that to speak on the substantive matter of Bill S-11 would be premature until there is a ruling on the point of order.

Senator Cools: Very well. I shall heed Your Honour's statement. In my mind, I am speaking to the concept of a bill on penalty, but I shall heed Your Honour's advice on the more ordinary forms of proceeding.

A bill of pains and penalties compels the Parliament of Canada to take cognizance of the matter and to pass laws redressing the mischief offered to the state, to the people of Canada, to the Crown, and to the Sovereign, thereby to hold up to the country an example which might deter the commission of similar offences and similar actions in the future.

I should like to cite some statements from a book Lord Denning wrote entitled The Road to Justice. In these statements, Lord Alfred Denning, one of the most eminent jurists, recalls that when William Temple, the Archbishop of Canterbury, spoke to some lawyers, he said:

I cannot say that I know much about the law, having been far more interested in justice.

About the Archbishop's message, Lord Denning wrote:

That was a piece of delicate irony, gently rebuking the lawyers for losing sight of justice. The rebuke was well merited. His hearers were lawyers ... who believe in ... the law as something separate and apart from justice. To them the courts ... are not the ... Courts of Justice but the Law Courts.

Lord Denning hits hard, indicating:

When they do an injustice —

— meaning the courts or the lawyers and sometimes the justices —

... as I fear they occasionally do, they tend to excuse themselves by saying: "It cannot be helped. The law will have it so."

• (1540)

Lord Denning states:

I have often heard judges say: 'we are only concerned with what the law is, not with what it ought to be'; or 'If this leads to an unjust result, it is a matter for Parliament, not for us.' They wash their hands of it, as if it was not their concern.

Honourable senators, an unjust result in the courts of justice is a matter for Parliament's action. To deny that is to deny the ancient and undoubted rights of the people of this country.

I repeat, Bill S-11, a bill of pains and penalties, is an initiative to ask the Senate to ask the Crown in Parliament to redress this injustice and to impose the penalty suitable to the notorious and obvious crimes.

Honourable senators, I would like to put a few more statements on the record, and I hope this one goes directly to what Senator Kinsella was saying.

On the question of the powers of Parliament and on the question as to whether or not this chamber, as part of the Parliament of Canada, has the powers, abilities and jurisdiction to follow through on the initiatives proposed in Bill S-11, and on the question of the undisputed powers and authority of Parliament, I should like to put the former Chief Justice of Canada, the Right Honourable Bora Laskin, on the record on the issue of section 18 of the British North America Act, 1867, as amended in 1875.

Mr. Justice Laskin stated:

Turning now to the authority or power of the two federal houses....There is no limit anywhere in law, either in Canada or in the United Kingdom,...having regard to section 18 of the British North America Act as enacted by 1875,...which ties the privileges, immunities and powers of the federal houses to those of the British House of Commons.

Honourable senators, I would like to place a few more statements on the record. The next one is by Alpheus Todd who said that by a bill of pains and penalties, anyone may have pains and penalties inflicted beyond or contrary to the existing law. He went on to state:

A bill of pains and penalties is a very special procedure rarely used because it is reserved for special and especially notorious circumstances.

Parliamentary authority John Hatsell states:

If the crime is of a nature and magnitude deserving a punishment, in the particular case far beyond what has by the law been deemed sufficient in similar...misdemeanours; or —

— this is my point, honourable senators —

— if the rules of admitting evidence or other forms to which the judges in a court of law are bound to adhere would preclude the execution of justice upon offenders...it has been held...that such circumstances would...justify...the legislature itself to take cognizance of the case...

Honourable senators, a bill of pains and penalties is a parliamentary device which parliamentarians, as true representatives of the people, should call into motion and call into existence when all of the other common forms have failed. When the Crown in council has failed and when the judiciary has failed, then the Sovereign speaks through Parliament to redress injustice and to correct the malaises created by such a miscarriage of justice.

Honourable senators, the preamble to Bill S-11 reads as follows:

[Senator Cools]

AND WHEREAS the conviction of the said Karla Homolka was founded on an agreement...

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I must point out again that I would be derelict in my duty if I allowed reference to the substantive matter referred to in Bill S-11.

Senator Cools: Okay, I will drop it.

Honourable senators, this matter appears on the Order Paper. Is it out of order?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I will not engage in any dialogue or debate with the honourable senator, but I will finish what I started to say.

I started to say that I would be derelict in my duty if I were to permit reference to the substantive matter. The Honourable Senator Cools was recognized in order to make a submission to the point of order raised by the Honourable Senator Kinsella. Rather than interrupt the honourable senator again, I point out for her guidance rule 18(3), which states:

When the Speaker has been asked to decide any question of privilege or point of order he or she shall determine when sufficient argument has been adduced to decide the matter, whereupon the Speaker shall so indicate to the Senate...

I draw that rule to the attention of the honourable senator so that in putting together the various matters she wishes to submit, she will be conscious of it. I am sure she would not wish to breach the spirit or letter of that rule.

Senator Cools: Honourable senators, perhaps I should close there.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, unfortunately, two points of order have been confounded. Senator Carstairs mentioned a point of order and cited the precedent of Bill S-10. That bill was before this house on May 9 of this year.

When second reading of Bill S-10 was called, Senator Gauthier rose and said he had a point of order on the item. The Speaker intervened saying that he would listen to the honourable senator's point of order and that the bill was not before us yet because second reading had not been moved. He agreed, however, to listen to a point of order.

As it later emerged, the point of order was not valid because it was not raised at the correct time. The Speaker will want to take into account that example because we do not want two different rules as to when a point of order may be raised when the order for the second reading of a bill has been read.

The other point of order, raised by the Honourable Senator Kinsella, I believe will be taken under advisement by the Speaker.

We must ask, does this fall into any of the categories of bills with which this house deals? Clearly, this is not a private bill. Karla Homolka is not, through petition followed by bill, seeking some special treatment or remedy to be imposed by Parliament.

Is it then a public bill? That is the question to be answered. I believe it is a sound principle of legislation that, in criminal matters, Parliament should not enact retroactive law. The procedural question, however, is whether there is any bar in our rules to the enactment of retroactive criminal legislation, legislation which, because it is retroactive, will apply only in particular cases, the cases which are then a matter of fact.

This second question is a much more important one for the Speaker. I do not know what the answer is, but the Speaker, as advised, will be able to help us. Is there any prohibition, as a matter of order, against this house dealing with a bill which is, in effect, retroactive in a criminal matter?

CONSIDERATION OF SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE— DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the second report of the Special Committee of the Senate on the Pearson Airport Agreements, (Address to His Excellency the Governor General requesting documents), presented in the Senate on Tuesday, October 17, 1995.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of this report.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator MacDonald, seconded by the Honourable Senator Buchanan, that this report be adopted now.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. John B. Stewart: Is it Senator MacDonald's intention to explain the report and what is sought by it?

Senator MacDonald: I would be delighted to do that, honourable senators.

The subject-matter of this report is an address to the Governor General requesting that Treasury Board submissions made in the month of August 1993 regarding the Pearson Airport Agreements be released to the special Senate committee investigating the efficacy of these very contracts.

When I look around this house, I recognize senators who were previously members of the House of Commons, and they know that there is nothing new in the practice that states that addresses can be made requesting the production of papers obtained from the Governor in Council.

This procedure for the production of papers in the House is Standing Order 97(1). This procedure has been used frequently in the past in the House of Commons, but no cases can be found with regard to the Senate.

There are many examples where members of the other place have asked that an address be presented to his Excellency praying that a certain paper be laid before the House. I will mention only three. A distinguished senator, then a distinguished Member of the House of Commons, Jean-Robert Gauthier, on September 27, 1990, presented a humble address to his Excellency praying that he would cause to be laid before the House copies of all correspondence between his Excellency and

Her Majesty concerning the operation of section 26 of the Constitution Act. Peter Milliken, on October 1, 1990, presented a humble address to his Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before the House copies of records detailing the total cost of the deployment of Canadian Forces personnel to Oka, Quebec. Svend Robinson, on May 5, 1992, presented a humble address to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before the House of Commons copies of all documentation, notes, memoranda, legal opinions and other relevant information concerning the decision of the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the matter of a request for expulsion by the Brazilian government of Canadian prisoners Christine Lamont and David Spencer.

All of these humble prayers were certainly not frivolous, but most did not get anywhere. They were simply told that these documents were exempt from production. They were cabinet confidences.

Apparently, they were not using the best prayer mats.

The House of Commons general legal counsel, Diane Davidson, states in her paper that the Commons have never formally acknowledged "Crown privilege." She states at page 7 of her testimony to the Joint Committee on the Scrutiny of Regulations on November 6:

It should be noted that this immunity has never been formally acknowledged by the House of Commons as inhibiting its investigatory powers. The public interests which need to be considered and weighed in judicial proceedings are not the same as the public interests to be considered and weighed when evidence is sought for parliamentary purposes. In practice, parliamentary committees have more readily given consideration to claims of Crown privilege when invoked by a minister in relation to national security matters and international affairs rather than in commercial affairs. However, in final analysis, the committee remains the final arbiter of such claims.

As Ms Davidson notes, the "impasse" between the executive and the legislative branches has sometimes been resolved by arranging compromises. For example, in 1991, the justice committee in the House agreed to receive information in camera when faced with a valid claim of Crown immunity.

When this house of Parliament gives a mandate to a committee to conduct an inquiry or an examination, the committee, referred to as a parliamentary committee, becomes an integral part of the house of Parliament. As such, these committees are given the power by Parliament to examine and inquire into matters referred to them on behalf of the house of Parliament — in this case, the Senate — where it would, for obvious reasons, be impractical for the parent body itself to carry out this mandate.

Provided a committee's inquiry is related to a subject-matter within Parliament's competence, and is also within the committee's own orders of reference, parliamentary committees have virtually unlimited powers to compel the attendance of witnesses and to order the production of documents. I think we can agree that the extensive powers a parliamentary committee enjoys are not commonly understood, are seldom exercised and, therefore, are not properly respected.

I will attempt to describe the document problems that have bedeviled the committee over the last few months on a regular basis. Suffice it to say that all senators on the committee have been frustrated by the late arrival of documents, the fact that parts of documents have been whited-out pursuant to either the Canada Evidence Act or the Access to Information Act, or to solicitor-client privilege.

These "whiteouts" have created an atmosphere wherein sometimes we are being denied things that we consider are pertinent to the committee's mandate. We have been frustrated by the circuitous route which the documents take before they arrive in the hands of the clerk, as well as the fact that a private law firm and forensic accountants have been hired by the government, at public expense, and given access to all documents because they have taken an oath of confidentiality.

However, when the members of the committee suggested a compromise and proposed that counsel for the committee be granted access to confidential information on the same basis — that is, by taking the same oath — our proposal was rejected.

Those, honourable senators, are the day-to-day problems of documentation, the subject-matter of this report. Indeed, its purpose is to address one particular issue that has arisen in the last few weeks.

When this committee was constituted, it was given the power to send for persons, papers and records whenever required. Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, 6th Edition, citation 848(1) states:

Committees may send for any papers that are relevant to their Orders of Reference. Within this restriction, it appears that the power of the committee to send for papers is unlimited.

Citation 848(2) states:

The procedure for obtaining papers is for the committee to adopt a motion ordering the required person or organization to produce them. If this Order is not complied with, the committee may report the matter to the House, stating their difficulties in obtaining the requested documents. It is then for the House to decide what action is to be taken.

Honourable senators, your committee has already requested these documents. Early in our mandate, we wrote to the Department of Justice requesting all the documents given to Mr. Robert Nixon for his perusal. The reply came back that we could have them all, save and except the Treasury Board documents which were given inadvertently to Mr. Nixon.

Before our committee, Mrs. Margaret Bloodworth of the Privy Council Office said that these documents have the status of confidential cabinet documents and were released to Mr. Robert Nixon in error. When Mr. Nixon and his staff appeared before us for the first time, we learned that not only had they reviewed these documents, they had relied heavily on various parts of them for sections of their report. Here are the words of Mr. Stephen Goudge, Mr. Robert Nixon's legal advisor, in answer to a question put to him by me:

Mr. Goudge: Let me respond this way, senator. Did I derive support for some of the things in the Treasury Board's submissions? Absolutely yes, absolutely yes. I mean I did; there is no question about it. When I put forward my memorandum to Mr. Nixon, parts of it relied heavily on what was in the Treasury Board submission.

Senator Bosa: Was he sworn in?

Senator MacDonald: He was under oath.

It became apparent to us that, in order to complete our work properly, we needed to review all of the documents. What was our work?

Our work was an examination of public policy with regard to the privatization of Canadian airports and, in particular, Pearson International Airport. We did not know where we were going; we did not know what the result would be. We wanted to have access to all of the information that existed, in order that we could base our report on the facts and on the testimony of the 66 witnesses who appeared before us. That leads me to where we are today.

The procedure for an address to the Governor General requesting these documents finds its authority in rule 132 of the Rules of the Senate which states:

When the royal prerogative is concerned in any account or paper, an address shall be presented to the Governor General praying that the same may be laid before the Senate.

We have determined that the release of these documents is within the prerogative of the Governor General. It is stated in Article 9 of the Manual of the Government of Canada under the heading of "Cabinet Records":

Disclosure of cabinet records is regulated by the Privy Councillor's oath and by the concept that cabinet decisions are advice to the sovereign which may only be revealed with his consent.

I assume the "his" is referring to George VI.

Permission is sought through the Prime Minister who may recommend to the Governor General that it be granted, limited or refused. Permission is regarded as applying only to the occasion for which it is sought.

In other words, the confidentiality of the advice contained in the cabinet documents belongs to the Governor General. It is for the Governor General to release the documents from that confidence.

I conclude with these comments: Ours has been a very hard-working committee which has taken its task seriously. Our final report will not be unanimous. Committee members will draw different conclusions from the evidence we have heard. To suggest that the report will be free of partisanship would be to indulge in fiction.

[Senator MacDonald]

However, I am grateful for the courtesy shown to me by all members of the committee, and for the absence of acrimony. I am particularly grateful to Senator Kirby, the Deputy Chairman of the committee, who said that these were not easy matters to sort out or to resolve. However, he suggested that, as senators, we are in a unique position to do so. He went on to say that courts and royal commissions are sometimes ill-suited to deal with matters which evolve in a swirl of political controversy. He pointed out, however, that if we follow the traditions and rules of Senate procedure and our rights, we can all make a useful contribution.

However today, honourable senators, you are not being asked to participate in matters that are before our committee. You are not being asked to take sides. You are not being asked to predict or even to speculate on the advice the Prime Minister may give to the Governor General. You will, I am confident, have many opinions, and in this debate on the adoption of the report you will have an opportunity to express them.

I do not mind you telling me that this report is quixotic, that it may be doomed to failure, that it is not worth doing, and that since we may not get the documents, we should not even ask for them. At the end of the day, all that is being asked of this chamber of parliamentarians, this house of Parliament, is that you adopt our report; a report that employs a traditional and appropriate procedure for asserting the rights and the powers of this house of Parliament, which has given a mandate to a committee which, in turn, automatically becomes an integral part of Parliament.

On motion of Senator Graham, for Senator Kirby, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, October 31, 1995, at 2:00 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, October 31, 1995

The Senate met at 2 p.m., Senator Maurice Riel, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

NATIONAL UNITY

RESULT OF QUEBEC REFERENDUM

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, yesterday we all witnessed a watershed in the history of our country. The referendum held in the Province of Quebec was about the very existence of Canada. It was truly about choosing to continue or to end the political and economic union which has been built over the generations to create what we believe to be the best country in this world.

As I stand here today, I share in the relief and the gratitude of Canadians in every province and territory that this great country remains whole. I share also in the conviction that the outcome expressed a desire for change. The results compel us to reach out to the people of Quebec, as they must reach out to each other. Those passions and emotions of recent weeks will not subside overnight, or even within a few days. There must be time for healing and time for reconciliation.

Before looking ahead to the future, I should like to thank all of those who have worked so hard and given so much of their time and energies to the pursuit of this common vision of a united Canada. I want to thank senators on both sides of this chamber who set aside their differences and joined together as a team in this common cause, under the guidance of Daniel Johnson, the Leader of the Opposition in Quebec, Prime Minister Jean Chrétien, the minister responsible for the No campaign, the Honourable Lucienne Robillard, and the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, Jean Charest. What a team it was! Canadians from every part of this country took enormous pride in not just the eloquence of these voices but the commitment that each of those players had in the pursuit of this particular endeavour.

I also want to recognize the support and the contribution to the cause of unity in this country made by the Cree Nation and by the Inuit in Northern Quebec.

[Translation]

The referendum had to do with the future of all Canadians, not just those who live in Quebec. The whole country realized that.

[English]

Honourable senators, last Friday, October 27, Canadians demonstrated this when they came to Montreal by the thousands, from every part of the nation, to join with more than 100,000 Quebecers in the largest political rally in our history; a truly amazing and extraordinary event. The new relationships which formed during the short period of time that we stood elbow to elbow in that multitude have almost gone further than words can say to cement a visceral understanding of the meaning of Canada, particularly for people who perhaps had never before been in the Province of Quebec or, as one of my colleagues said today, who live in Montreal and had never met a person from Saskatchewan. It was a truly memorable occasion.

Over the course of the weekend, we witnessed similar public expressions of unity, perhaps spurred by the event in Montreal, in cities and towns in all of the provinces and territories that we represent; people joining together to affirm their belief in a united Canada, a Canada which would be truly unrecognizable without Quebec as an integral part of its heart and soul. Indeed, perhaps the depth of feeling unleashed in these communities across the country was a revelation even to ourselves about the depth of our love and our commitment to Canada.

Last night, Prime Minister Chrétien said:

There is only one winner: the people.

Mr. Chrétien spoke those words in the context of the democratic process. When we look around the world at the turmoil and hardship that similar differences of vision can evoke, all of us, no matter on which side of this question we stood, can take pride that here in Canada we use peaceful means of debate and decision-making.

The referendum was about democracy; it was about the democratic process where differences are resolved through debate, through argument, through discussion, and finally, through the ballot box.

By no means can last night's result be seen as a strong affirmation of "steady as she goes," the status quo. That much is clear. Undoubtedly, many of those who voted on the Yes side did not do so out of a desire to dismantle the country, but because they wanted change. By the same token, it cannot be said that all of those who voted No did so because they reject change to their way of life or the country in which they live; far from it.

Honourable senators, change is desired, not only in Quebec but also in Alberta and in every other province and territory in this country. It is desired across the land, and it is a commitment of the federal government. However, today we know that we can work for that change within a whole Canada. We can work for change out of a set of common values and deep traditions.

Honourable senators, that gives me great hope for and confidence in the future of our Canada, and in a process that embraces and involves all of its citizens, gives equal value to the rights and worth of all Canadians, and a vote to each citizen. We in this country have a great opportunity to draw lessons from the events of yesterday, in order to build even greater strength, unity and understanding.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I trust that we will have occasion in the coming days and weeks to discuss in detail the implications of the referendum, not only for Quebec but for the entire country.

If the margin of victory in favour of the Nos had been greater, the commitment made by the Prime Minister in the last few days of the campaign — of which Senator Fairbairn has reminded us — would still remain: change, and only with the approval of Quebecers. For change and dissatisfaction are what the referendum was all about. Not all those who voted Yes are separatists, and not all those who voted No are supporters of the status quo. One senses from both sides a massive desire for change in how the Canadian federation is set up, in particular with regard to the distribution of jurisdictions.

[Translation]

The word “change” constantly appeared in the comments made this morning and last night, not only by people from the Yes and the No sides, but also by spokespersons representing various provinces. That is already a step forward. However, the basic issue remains the same, namely: what specific changes are we talking about? We can only hope to find out in the near future, otherwise Quebecers will certainly be invited to make another decision, which could be the final one, as was almost the case yesterday.

[English]

No constitutional or administrative changes are possible, however, unless the federal government changes the way in which it carries out its relationships with its federation partners. For nearly two years it has been generally dismissive of provincial concerns, and not only those emanating from Quebec. Rigidity and lack of flexibility have no place in a federation if it is to function properly. Openness and understanding are needed. If the government takes only that message from the many messages emanating yesterday from Quebec, the future is already brighter for all of Canada.

UNITED NATIONS

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF FOUNDING

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, over the last few weeks a chorus of debate has accompanied two monumental events in the history of Canada and of the world: the Quebec Referendum and, of course, the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the United Nations.

Logical cases have been made, some in favour of burying the “Parliament of Man,” as the United Nations has been called, and others in favour of conceiving new visions to sustain the world organization over the next 50 years.

Many have said that the United Nations is in crisis. We have heard that there are two faces to any crisis, as the Chinese so well understood in conceiving the two characters that make up their word for “crisis.” One of these characters symbolizes danger; the other symbolizes opportunity.

Over the last few weeks, we Canadians have been undergoing one of the most painful periods in our history. We know all about the two faces of crisis. Both the United Nations, the world federation, and Canada, our own great multicultural federation, have become easy targets to their enemies. This is largely because of the fact that in both cases we have tried to do what many have thought was impossible.

While I am, and always have been, an unabashed supporter of the United Nations, I am well aware of the dramatic overhaul needed to revive what has become, in the opinion of some, a flat broke organization. It is an organization which must take on almost all of the monumental problems of the global community; problems largely assigned to it by countries which cannot and will not themselves resolve their own problems.

Fifty years ago last week, the founders — most of whom were realists who had lived through the horrors of war and depression — set out with a conviction that theirs was the responsibility to build the postwar order in which peace would be secured, in which poverty would be alleviated and in which human rights would be promoted worldwide. In other words, these were realists who were at the same time visionaries. These were pragmatists with a dream.

Lester B. Pearson was one of the pathfinders in this working world community, and our legendary peacekeepers have helped preserve the peace in dozens of hot spots around the world. Agencies of the United Nations helped eradicate small pox. They made dramatic advances in the war against malnutrition and child poverty. They helped regulate aviation and shipping. They did ground-breaking research into environmental and agricultural problems which many believed to be irresolvable. This was indeed a working world community. It oversaw decolonization and established global approaches to poverty, refugees, and sustainable development.

We will all remember, particularly tonight, that UNICEF’s literacy programs gave hope to millions of children all over the world. Canadians proved to be energetic and compassionate citizens of this working world community, and this was no coincidence.

Our Canadian federation mirrored that of the international community. It is, in fact, a microcosm of the planet. Our values, the values of a generous, compassionate democracy, are basically the values which inspired the founders of the United Nations. Our dream, the dream of a community based on tolerance and justice, is the dream which has inspired the generations of those who have given their all to the betterment of the human condition.

In some ways, Canada has been built on a vision which many may have considered impossible. Because of this, our federation, as well as that of the United Nations, has become an easy target for its enemies. I believe, and certainly hope, that we have all learned from this experience. We all now understand that the greatest threat to our nation and to the global community is the threat of indifference, intransigence and paralysis.

As I said earlier, we must remember that crisis wears two faces: one of danger and one of opportunity. Today, we must forge opportunity from danger. We must constructively engage in the day-to-day acts of will and commitment which are the lifeblood of national unity. We must remember that we are not alone in our commitment to fair and tolerant federations, both nationally and internationally.

Honourable senators, I believe that history and the future are both on our side.

NATIONAL UNITY

RESULT OF QUEBEC REFERENDUM

Hon. Gérald-A. Beaudoin: Honourable senators, these are historic times for Canada. Yesterday, the stakes were very high.

A chapter of our history just concluded. We must reflect on it and let things settle somewhat. I think that the federal government will have to take the initiative.

Yesterday's outcome, which was in favour of the federalists, will trigger some changes. The Prime Minister extended a hand to the premier of Quebec. A conciliatory approach must be used. This is essential and unavoidable. Some creative spirit will also be required. In the end, we will have to find a modus vivendi. We will have to think and find new approaches. Such approaches exist. The status quo does not exist. We were able to innovate at every turning point in our history. The time has come to do so once again. Federalism is a flexible formula, and it is up to us to adapt it to current needs.

Administrative arrangements must be concluded in various sectors, including manpower. We must leave the door open to institutional changes, but these changes must be well identified. In our debates, we must avoid falling into old habits. We may have to change our vocabulary somewhat and use a different approach regarding amendments. Above all, let us not miss this opportunity, which may well no longer exist in the future.

In the meantime, we must treat the existing Constitution with great respect. We do not refer to it enough in the current debate. Our social reforms will have to take into account the respective fields of jurisdiction of the two levels of government. We live in a great and beautiful country. Our ancestors had a grand vision. It is now up to us to improve our political system and give it a new impetus and a better balance.

[English]

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: Honourable senators, I want to congratulate and thank those who provided the leadership for the No side in the Quebec referendum. Specifically, I thank those on the front line: namely, the Leader of the Opposition in Quebec, Daniel Johnson; the minister in charge of the No campaign, the Honourable Lucienne Robillard; and, of course, the leader of my party, the Honourable Jean Charest, for their tremendous efforts on behalf of Canadian unity.

Honourable senators, never in the history of our great nation, as we slowly, cautiously and quietly back away from the precipice of disaster, have we ever needed greater leadership at the federal level. I mentioned "leadership." I do not want it to be confused with political opportunism because the stakes are much too high. Many of us saw the values in and the need for the Meech Lake Accord, saw it as a partial resolution to the problems that we face today as a nation. It was not perfect, but it addressed many of the problems.

We must never again allow those who would oppose the likes of these positive initiatives to succeed. They and their conspirators very nearly destroyed our nation. We must never let our likes and dislikes when it comes to personalities cloud our vision as we work toward a better and stronger Canada.

It is time to reach out to the regions — and here I speak to the government of the day — Quebec, the Western provinces, the North, our aboriginal peoples, and all of those who feel alienated and disaffected. It is time that Ottawa stopped trying to tell people arbitrarily what is best for them and that only a prime minister or ministers know what kind of country Canadians really want. Most of all, it is time to consider the concerns of the people who voted Yes yesterday in the Province of Quebec and all the people across this great nation who want change.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Claude Nolin: Honourable Senators, I had no text prepared, but I could not miss such a great opportunity to speak of my active involvement in working for the No coalition, which in the last week we were calling the Canada side.

Canada won, at about 10:30 p.m. yesterday. It was a victory for Canada. I would like you to understand that it may be Canada's last victory.

It is important for us all to understand the message sent by this decision, this outcome. We must understand the depth of the message and we must respond to it. Quebecers on the No side and Quebecers on the Yes side both want change. All of the leaders of the No side came to use the word "change." Last night, the only word on everyone's lips was "change," a change of attitude. That is what is needed first. It is not like a shopping list, a granting of this or that power and the right to use it. It is a change in attitude.

Let us understand what Quebecers want, and not only Quebecers, what a number of Canadians want. We managed to put political partisanship aside within the No coalition. Unfortunately — and I stress how unfortunate it was, weighing my words carefully — that political partisanship came flooding back last night. I trust that we will do everything possible to leave our short-sighted partisan objectives aside and to keep our eyes focused on the objective: the preservation of Canada. Mark my words, we came within a hair's breadth of losing it.

This may be the last victory for Canada. I would like you to think about that. This was a major event, not just turning one of the many pages in Canada's history, but perhaps the most important page in our history. We have tried many ways of solving the problems of Canadian federalism. Now we must act in its final but perhaps most fruitful phase.

Hon. John Sylvain: Honourable senators, the events of recent weeks, culminating in last night's very narrow victory for the No side, will become a most decisive moment for us in Canada.

[English]

The referendum campaign galvanized feelings of patriotism across this country. Never before have Canadians sought to reach out to the people of Quebec as they did in the last few days. I believe we can build on these feelings, and move toward redefining our country.

There is much unfinished work to do; work begun by former Prime Minister Mulroney through the Meech Lake and Charlottetown Accords, building toward a new federalism still remaining to be completed.

As the leader of the federal Progressive Conservative Party has said throughout the referendum campaign —

[Translation]

There is a wind of change in Canada in 1995. This was confirmed in four provincial elections. These governments have a clear mandate for change. It is a wind of change we cannot escape.

[English]

At this point in our history we should look at the options available to effect change in our federal system. Inasmuch as politicians of every stripe and every country have lost their credibility with the people, the federal government should consider establishing a non-political group charged with redefining the broad parameters of a new national accord. Three neutral persons could be charged with naming those who would serve, but would not themselves serve.

Representatives from universities, the professions, business, unions, et cetera, forming a relatively small group, should report in a reasonable length of time. This report could be distributed across the country for popular discussion and comment. It could thereafter form the basis of political discussions leading to the 1997 review of the Constitution, while constraining the participants to a non-political, non-partisan framework.

I have no way of knowing whether such a plan would work, but I deem it preferable to the Meech Lake or the Charlottetown process, if only because partisanship and political pressures would be a reaction to a proposal instead of having been the author of it.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I wish to add my congratulations to federalist leaders and workers for their successful campaign leading to a No victory, for a definite No to the separation of Quebec, preserving, thereby, the integrity of Canada. In particular, I offer my congratulations to the people of Quebec for observing their democratic duty in a record turnout at the polls.

In particular this afternoon, I offer a hearty endorsement of the negotiations proposed by the Prime Minister of Canada to the people of Quebec and all Canadians, and especially of his call for national reconciliation and true healing.

The need for negotiations to start in earnest is heralded in the narrow success of the campaign for unity. As the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons said again this morning in a news conference, this is a time to show good faith in the undertaking made by the federalist spokespersons in recognition of viable aspirations of a distinctive francophone society in Quebec. I believe that this is a legitimate part of the uniquely Canadian heritage contained in section 27 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms in the context of multiculturalism. There remains a basis for hope and for amicable negotiation on patrimoine, the historic aspirations of Quebecers.

Many people of Quebec would welcome agreement over separation. Another half of Quebec wants negotiations in a context free of any threat of separation, but the statement by the Premier of Quebec, blaming minority ethnic groups in Quebec for the narrow loss of a separatist initiative, does not truly reflect a solid basis of hope. Instead, it bespeaks the urgency for the Premier of Quebec to make a public apology to all Canadians for the discriminatory and racist tone of his post-referendum speech.

A statesman in his right senses could not wish to undermine important and indispensable trust in his goodwill. The closeness of the result in the referendum of yesterday has demonstrated the political alertness of all of the people of Quebec, and their concern to preserve and to enhance their distinctive culture.

May we, honourable senators, commence today, here in this chamber, in this capital and in our communities, a process of conciliation and reconciliation without delay, but also with peace, justice and tolerance.

NOVA SCOTIA

CONGRATULATIONS TO DR. JOHN HAMM ON ELECTION
AS LEADER OF PROVINCIAL PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Hon. Gerald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, much attention has been given over the last number of days to the national unity question, and much will be said in the coming weeks about it. I plan to make some statements on that subject as well.

However, today I should like to call the attention of honourable senators to some other changes that took place over the weekend in Nova Scotia. I wish to extend sincere congratulations to Dr. John Hamm, who was elected the new leader of the Progressive Conservative Party of Nova Scotia.

With a solid first-ballot victory, Dr. Hamm has given the governing Liberals reason for concern. Presenting the 1,000-plus Tories who attended the convention with a solid five-point plan, Dr. Hamm will provide Nova Scotians with a real alternative to the disgraceful record of the Liberal Party under Premier John Savage. The only similarity which could ever be found between the two leaders is that they are both family physicians. However, their prescriptions for healing the economic health of our province are very different.

Nova Scotians have watched John Savage and the Liberal government destroy our health care and educational systems. In Dr. Hamm, we now have a leader who will apply the proper medicine to our ailments. Rather than Bandaid solutions, Nova Scotians have the choice of electing a leader who will listen, recognize the strengths of our province and work to develop those areas into sound economic solutions for Nova Scotians as we head into the twenty-first century.

Rather than dismiss various groups within our province, John Hamm will ensure that everyone's voice is heard. With a commitment to rebuild the party and develop clear policies through province-wide consultations, Nova Scotians will now have the representation they deserve, rather than the autocratic, from-the-top-down style of governing with which they have been "Savaged" within the last two and a half years.

I should like to extend my congratulations to the other two contenders, Jim White and Michael MacDonald, who ran excellent campaigns. They and Dr. Hamm have demonstrated that the call of political office indeed is answered by dedicated individuals who are truly committed to public service.

John Hamm is following in the footsteps of many great Tory leaders who have served Nova Scotia proudly over the years: Bob Stanfield, Don Cameron, Terry Donahoe, who was recently the interim leader, and our colleague here in the Senate, Senator John Buchanan.

I am sure that many of my colleagues will join with me in extending sincere congratulations to the new leader of the PC Party of Nova Scotia and our next premier, Dr. John Hamm.

NATIONAL UNITY

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE ON REGIONAL ASPIRATIONS

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, Canada has been given a temporary reprieve; rescued at the last minute — almost like a call from the governor to the prison to stay an execution.

May I suggest that, in addition to the commendable sentiments that have been expressed here today, we should do something very practical in the Senate. We should do that for which we were established — that is, to reinforce regional interests in this country and to interpret correctly the regional problems and aspirations of the people of Canada.

When I was the Leader of the Government in the Senate, I proposed that we establish a standing committee on regional aspirations, whose members would spend most of their time out in the field talking to the people of Canada who, at the present time, seem to have a deep mistrust of all politicians, regardless of party. If there is to be an agreement crafted in this land, it may not be by the premiers of the provinces of Canada. For some reason, they are not completely trusted. It has been demonstrated, time and again, that, increasingly, the people want direct input into the process of renewing Confederation and enacting reforms.

[Senator Comeau]

Let us create such a committee. Let us go into all the regions of Canada and learn what the people expect from Confederation, and what they are willing to do to support modifications in Confederation to make this a more effective country. That is what we should be doing.

• (1440)

Speeches are fine in this house. However, none of them will ever be reported in the media, the members of which are obsessed with other considerations. We should immediately take up our basic responsibility, go into the regions and report on the problems we find. We do not have to wait for a directive from the government, the House of Commons or anyone else. It is our job to get it done. I am sure that the process can be established on a non-partisan basis. There is not a senator in this chamber who is more concerned about enhancing a narrow political position than our national welfare.

We have seen a number of our senators in operation in these committees in the past, and they can be very effective.

What happened to this idea when it was first broached in this chamber a few years ago? At the time, one or two cabinet ministers said, "We do not want a Senate committee coming into our backyard embarrassing us in front of our people." If that committee had been established back then, we would be in a much better position as a nation right now.

Let us get on with the job of putting the Senate to work. Let us demonstrate our worth to the Canadian people and get moving.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I want to thank everyone who took part in this very important referendum. I agree with Senator Lynch-Staunton when he says that we should have a more detailed discussion on the subject. I also agree with what was said by my friend Senator Perrault, and my neighbour and good friend Senator St. Germain.

Earlier, I heard two senators who really inspired me to rise in my seat. I know this annoys a lot of people because I remember once I was told —

[English]

"Oh, not him again,"

[Translation]

— when I talked about Canada. I have done so often since I came to the Senate. I did so for 30 years in the House of Commons. I talked about Canada in the Liberal Party of Canada, to which I dedicated my whole life and all my energy, with all the misunderstandings that that involved, unfortunately. I hear speeches about the United Nations. I have always been inspired by the desire to make Canada a real example for the rest of the world, and to be able to say to the whole world: Come and see how we do things in our country. That is why I was afraid of this referendum. What kind of message would it be to a world that has far more problems with division than we do? However, we have to keep working.

People talked about partnership between Quebec and the rest of Canada during this campaign. I say: Let us start — and I see my friends Senators Watt and Adams, but especially Senator Watt — in Quebec by setting up an outstanding and genuine partnership with our aboriginal people.

After that, let us establish a genuine partnership among all Quebecers, irrespective of their ethnic origins, religion or political affiliation, and let them have the freedom to vote as they choose.

I spent my entire political life in a riding with a constituency that was so diverse that I remember senators who, although they hardly talk to me today, always used to come to my meetings because they said my riding was a microcosm of what Montreal would be 25 years hence, meetings where I tried to get together all these groups from all over the world. However, we must not fall into the trap of hypocrisy and misrepresentation. We will make speeches in the United Nations. We have what we need in Canada. Let us find the solutions.

I have a message for you. I am no longer a member of the Liberal caucus. There are people here who are going to make a lot of nice speeches. Tell them to start by practising what they preach. There are still people in the House of Commons who, out of disdain or incomprehension, objected strenuously to the Meech Lake Accord. Three of them are in cabinet. Two are in the House of Commons, and yesterday one of them admitted — he was the one who made things the most difficult for me when I was chairman of the national caucus, but I do not mind that — but he admitted last night:

[English]

“After all, I think I made a mistake.”

That is fine. It is excellent.

[Translation]

We are on the way to finding solutions. However, honourable senators, we must not imagine that people will prostrate themselves. I am not and never have been of that race of people, and I know the word “race” gets people excited. I do not share the sort of mentality of people who prostrate themselves in front of others. This country is mine, just as it is yours. This country will be made with my help as with yours.

[English]

This country will be made with my friend Senator Watt in Quebec.

[Translation]

He represents the first real inhabitants of Quebec. We have to work toward such reconciliation.

[English]

I want to say this in English, although I did not want to speak English today. However, I want to thank very warmly the tens of thousands of people who came to Montreal. They joined with people in Montreal.

I ask you, honourable senators, what would have happened if someone had stomped on a Quebec flag in the middle of the referendum campaign anywhere in Canada? It would have been the subject of the entire debate in Quebec. They would have said, “Canada is rejecting us. We in Quebec have to make up our own minds.”

It was a great day, and it showed us that people care. At times I feel they care more than their politicians. That is a message for Mr. Clyde Wells. We will wait for him. He believes that rights are rights. I am anxious to see the debate we will have when he comes with his referendum results. I spent a week in Newfoundland during the referendum campaign. If rights are rights are rights, then those rights will be respected in due time.

Should we return to the spirit of Meech Lake? No. Shall we return to the spirit of Charlottetown? No. Let us return to the spirit of the Victoria Charter. It was a mistake that it was not accepted. I am not here today to say that it was done under such and such prime minister. It was a great event. I am sorry to say — — but I know there are senators who regret our not coming forward. Let us make use of what was done then, let us make use of all the goodwill we saw at the time of the Meech Lake Accord. I am not particularly fond of the Meech Lake Accord, as everyone knows.

[English]

I have always said that I do not need a crutch to show that I am a proud Canadian. I am different, not superior.

[Translation]

I am your equal. My people are your equal.

[English]

Do you understand what it means, or do we need another referendum to repeat what it means? It is that kind of country the world is watching, a country where people who are different can succeed under the same flag, under the distinguished chairmanship today of — — my good friend, Senator Riel. I say we have a lot to offer, those of us in the Senate, in the job of rebuilding Canada, however, we have to want to do the job.

We come from all over Canada. We have all sorts of experience. Some people have money; others know people with money; others know multicultural groups; others know the organization and others are brilliant intellectuals or teachers. No one can tell me the Senate does not have a role to play.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: I am sorry to have to interrupt the honourable senator, but I am told that his time is up. We could, perhaps, allow him to conclude.

Senator Prud'homme: I was not told that time was limited. However, I do not think I have tried my colleagues' patience excessively. Since my time is up, I will stop talking. I will, however, come back to this subject and talk to you about the province I have so often visited, the province of Saskatchewan.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Graham, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday, November 2, 1995.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSE TO SENATE COMMITTEE REPORTS

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Pat Carney: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, November 2, 1995, I will call the attention of the Senate to the issue of ministerial response to Senate committee reports. In particular, I note that on July 5, 1995, as Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources, I submitted a copy of the committee's report entitled "Pull up! Pull up!: An interim Report on the Safety Implications of Automated Weather Observation Systems (A.W.O.S.)" to the Ministers of Fisheries and Oceans, of Environment and of Transport, and asked for a response to our recommendations. To date — four months later — none of these ministers have issued a response.

PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: Honourable senators, I have a petition to present to the Senate. The first paragraph reads:

The petition of the undersigned citizens of Canada humbly showeth that Bill C-68, a bill concerning firearms and other weapons, is unwarranted and intrusive legislation which needlessly targets law abiding firearms owners and which attacks the very foundation of the democratic principles of this country.

The signatories are from the areas of Surrey, Langley, White Rock, Aldergrove and other towns throughout British Columbia.

Honourable senators, this is the voice of the regions speaking to you.

QUESTION PERIODDELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have responses to questions raised in the Senate on June 5, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Di Nino, regarding the validity of a statement on freedom of religion in Tibet; on June 5, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Doyle, regarding human rights and commercial relations; on June 13, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Nolin, regarding the possibility of increasing the size of the peacekeeping force in Bosnia; on July 11, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Kinsella, regarding the arrest of activists in China; and on October 4, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Kinsella, regarding the ratification of the Human Rights Convention of the Organization of American States.

CANADA-CHINA RELATIONSVALIDITY OF STATEMENT ON FREEDOM OF RELIGION IN TIBET—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Consiglio Di Nino on June 5, 1995)

The statement that Tibetans are free to practise their religion referred to the majority of Tibetans. Those Tibetans who express nationalist views or are known as sympathetic to those views, are those who often suffer human rights violations. It is the combination of nationalism with the practice of religion which features in the majority of cases of human rights abuse.

The Canadian Government has expressed its deep concern about the human rights situation in China, including Tibet, and has asked China to conform to its own regulations and to international human rights standards.

At the Commission on Human Rights in Geneva (January-March 1995), Canada co-sponsored a draft resolution on human rights in China which made specific reference to Tibet. The resolution expressed concern over continuing reports of violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms by local, provincial and national authorities, and severe restrictions on the rights of citizens to freedom of assembly, association, expression and religion, as well as to due legal process and a fair trial. The resolution also called upon China to take further measures to ensure the observance of all human rights, including the rights of women, and to improve the impartial administration of justice. The resolution also referred to "inadequate protection of the distinct cultural, ethnic, linguistic and religious identity of Tibetans and others."

Canada believes that the human rights situation in Tibet will not improve until the general human rights situation in the People's Republic of China does so. Canada's policy regarding Tibet is a two-tiered policy pressing both for greater respect of human rights in China, in general, and in Tibet, in particular.

HUMAN RIGHTS AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Human rights, good governance and the rule of law constitute one of four pillars upon which Canada-China relations are built. Respect for human rights and the rule of law globally and in China remains an essential Canadian objective. Our China human rights policy has two objectives:

1. The defense of fundamental human rights as defined by the United Nations Universal Declaration on Human Rights and;
2. The reform of legal structures, democratic development and the promotion of the rule of law.

Canada has developed a pragmatic human rights strategy to raise and discuss human rights concerns with the Chinese authorities both bilaterally and multilaterally.

Multilateral

Multilateral fora such as the United Nations (UN) represent appropriate channels to pursue specific concerns. The United Nations Commission for Human Rights (UNCHR) is the forum of the international community where we believe all countries are on an equal footing and subject to an objective assessment by each other. Canada itself has been singled out for mention in the Commission on occasion and we accept this as the right of the international community. We have made it clear to our Chinese interlocutors that Canada does not approach multilateral discussions in the spirit of confrontation. Quite the opposite. We seek respect for accepted standards rather than attempting to impose standards.

At the latest session of the UNCHR (January - March 1995), Canada co-sponsored a draft resolution on human rights in China. The resolution expressed concern over continuing reports by local, provincial and national authorities of violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and severe restrictions on the rights of citizens to freedom of assembly, association, expression and religion, as well as to due legal process and a fair trial. It called upon China to take further measures to ensure the observance of all human rights, including the rights of women, and to improve the impartial administration of justice. The resolution also invited China to continue to cooperate with all special rapporteurs and working groups.

Canada also declared that China falls short of international standards in the incarceration of political detainees, and with respect to equity and transparency in the judicial system, freedom of expression, and freedom of religion. Canada called on the Chinese government to permit access to prisons by international organizations. These are important steps toward the establishment of the rule of law and respect for China's human rights obligations.

This year China failed in its attempts to have a no-action vote being taken on the draft resolution. For the first time, the resolution was put to a vote but was narrowly defeated (20 for, 21 against, 12 abstentions).

Bilateral

The Canadian government has gone to considerable lengths to develop a constructive dialogue on human rights. Prime Minister Chrétien has emphasized that Canada should have a constructive, frank and forward-looking dialogue with China on human rights, and raised our human rights concerns with senior Chinese leaders during his visit to China in November 1994.

The Government of Canada believes that the establishment of the rule of law, based on international principles of human rights, is the best means to accomplish this goal. To this end, Canada, in cooperation with Chinese authorities, has developed and implemented several projects intended to strengthen China's judicial structure. The Prime Minister signed several agreements on these projects during his visit to China. We believe this approach will contribute to the development of democracy and the rule of law in China.

The Canadian Government will continue to make its views on human rights known to the Chinese leadership. At the same time, we will undertake specific and progressive initiatives to engage Chinese decision makers at all levels. These programs will facilitate positive changes in China in terms of human rights, good governance and the rule of law.

We believe that trade and human rights are not mutually exclusive choices. Trade benefits Canada through job creation — a government priority — but it also supports economic, social and, inevitably, political reform in the PRC. We believe a China open to the world can only be good for its people, both economically and politically, and will further the cause of respect for human rights.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PEACEKEEPING IN BOSNIA—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASING SIZE OF FORCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Pierre Claude Nolin on June 13, 1995)

Upon reviewing the information which was provided to Mr. Charest during the June 9th briefing session, neither the official from the Department of National Defence nor the minister's legislative assistant recalls having made such a statement. Therefore, it would appear that Mr. Charest or his staff may have inadvertently misinterpreted the information which was provided to them.

ARREST OF ACTIVIST IN CHINA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Noël Kinsella on July 11, 1995)

The Chinese courts announced on August 24th that Mr. Wu had been sentenced to 15 years imprisonment and expulsion from China. The Chinese authorities' decision to expel Mr. Wu immediately rather than have him serve his sentence has effectively resolved the situation. Canada did not make specific representations on behalf of Mr. Wu.

RATIFICATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS CONVENTION OF ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION—DELAYED ANSWER

(Response to question raised by Hon. Noël A. Kinsella on October 4, 1995)

Federal, provincial and territorial consultations continue to take place on a regular basis with a view to adhering to the American Convention on Human Rights.

Officials are working hard to develop a consensus on this issue.

At this stage, however, since negotiations are still under way, any positions taken are preliminary in nature and do not represent the official provincial/territorial position. As such, they must be kept confidential.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

EXPLOSIVES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Kenny, seconded by the Honourable Senator Perrault, for the second reading of Bill C-71, to amend the Explosives Act.

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, I should like to thank and congratulate Senator Kenny for his remarks on Bill C-71 and for his support of the bill. Senator Kenny referred to the two special committees of the Senate on terrorism but, in his usual modest way, he neglected to mention the very important role he played on both committees.

Honourable senators, I am sure all of us can recall particularly poignant moments in our careers as senators. For me, one such moment was meeting with the alliance of victims' families of Air India Flight 182. Senators will recall that in the early hours of June 22, 1985, that particular Air India flight out of Toronto went down off the coast of Ireland, taking with it 329 passengers, 80 per cent of whom were Canadians. Based on the best evidence available, it appears that a bomb went off in the baggage hold blowing off a wing and crippling the aircraft. The aircraft fell into the sea. The passengers and crew had no chance whatsoever.

As part of the same plot, two baggage handlers were killed at Narita Airport in Japan while transferring baggage from a Canadian Pacific flight out of Vancouver to an Air India flight. Both bombs were plastic explosives moulded into electronic equipment with timers.

I met the head of the association of victims' families, Dr. Yogesh Paliwal, and several of his colleagues in my capacity as chairman of the Special Senate Committee on Terrorism and Public Safety. The people with whom I met had lost family members in that tragedy. They lost wives, sons, daughters and parents.

I remember in coming from the meeting the sense of sorrow I had for these people who, through no fault of their own, had lost loved ones. I also felt a deep sense of outrage at the cruel and cowardly people who would do such a despicable thing as bombing a defenceless civilian aircraft.

The people I met also sought some meaning in an act that appears, even today, to defy rational, logical meaning. Honourable senators, today, in a small but important way, we give some meaning to the Air India disaster and others like it. The bill before us implements the International Convention on the Marking of Plastic Explosives for the Purpose of Detection.

As Senator Kenny pointed out, it was signed in Montreal in March 1991. The convention was prepared under the auspices of ICAO and signed by 40 nations. It now awaits ratification and implementation.

The current Canadian Explosives Act governs the composition, quality, character and sale of conventional explosives, as well as their import, export, possession and storage. The bill before us today would extend that coverage to plastic explosives. In particular, it will require the marking of plastic explosives. Once a marking agent is inserted, the explosives can be detected by existing vapour detection technology at airports and international crossings. Unmarked explosives and inventory must be destroyed within three years.

There are certain necessary but minor exemptions for military applications.

In addition, the bill imposes controls over the import, export, possession and transfer of plastic explosives in order to reduce the likelihood of their falling into the wrong hands.

As we saw with Air India, plastic explosives of various types have become the weapons of choice for terrorist groups around the world. These explosives are easy to hide. They are malleable; they can be sculpted to take virtually any form and fit into any space. They are not volatile. They are extremely powerful in terms of their ratio of weight to explosive impact. They are becoming more and more readily available. They can be detonated by timing or remote devices that allow the terrorist to be far away from the scene at the time of the explosion. Their impact is such as to guarantee media coverage, "the oxygen of terrorism" in Margaret Thatcher's memorable phrase, and to excite public attention and apprehension.

More important, their presence is virtually undetectable. A thin line of "Semtex," hardly visible to the naked eye but strategically hidden in luggage or electronic equipment, can have a devastating impact.

In addition to Air India 182, plastic explosives have been used in the Pan-Am Flight 103 that crashed at Lockerbie, Scotland and in UTA Flight 722 that crashed in Niger, Africa. Both crashes killed a total of 442 people.

Plastic explosives have also been used extensively on both sides in the Northern Ireland conflict.

Although plastic explosives were not used in the World Trade Center bombing, the Oklahoma City bombing or the string of biker bombings that recently occurred in Quebec and Ontario, there is no reason to think that these groups will not gravitate to plastic explosives as they become more sophisticated and as their targets harden.

The convention — and, in Canada, this bill — seek to remove this option. These amendments to the Explosives Act will allow police, airport security, customs officials and other authorities to detect the presence of plastic explosives. I am told these amendments can be implemented at virtually no incremental cost. The additive required to mark plastic explosives can be added inexpensively. Current detection equipment at Canadian airports can already identify the marking. No new equipment nor the retrofit of existing equipment is required.

Unfortunately, however, this act is just a step toward the resolution of the problem. Only six countries that produce plastic explosives, including Canada, with the proclamation of this bill, have ratified the convention. Several major producing countries, including the United States, have yet to do so. Even the most naive amongst us cannot expect the outlaw-producing states, those who actively support terrorism, to ratify or respect the convention.

The convention will not come into force until 40 states, including at least five producing states, ratify it. Some people despair that this will ever happen. There are those who would say then that there is no point, that Bill C-71 is just window-dressing, that unmarked plastic explosives will still be available to those terrorists and criminals who want them. However, we must start somewhere. Bill C-71, like other initiatives that have come before us, is simply another building block in the wall that Canada and the international community are building to control terrorism. There are holes in that wall, several huge, gaping holes, but they are progressively being closed by individual initiatives, such as the convention and Bill C-71.

We can be proud of the leadership Canada is showing. Again, Canada is among the first group of countries to put mechanisms in place to enforce the convention within our own borders and to try to reduce the threat of terrorism domestically and internationally.

For that reason, I urge the government to proclaim this bill as soon as possible after Royal Assent. As with most legislation, Bill C-71, through clause 4 to be exact, gives the Governor in Council the power to proclaim the bill and thus bring it into legal force and effect.

It is my understanding that the government of the moment does not intend to proclaim Bill C-71 until there are a sufficient number of states ready to ratify the convention and bring it into effect. Honourable senators, I believe that would be a mistake. This is good legislation, an important initiative. It makes sense on its own, separate and apart from the convention. We are a country which produces plastic explosives, although the amount is small in the international scheme of things.

This bill, when proclaimed, will put our own house in order. At least in this country, we will not be able to continue manufacturing plastic explosives which are undetectable. It seems reasonable that Canada should do what it can.

Why should we wait? Why not do it now?

Honourable senators, Bill C-71 is straightforward, non-contentious legislation. It is needed to implement an important international convention that has been designed explicitly to frustrate terrorists.

I urge this chamber to pass this legislation quickly. We owe the victims of Air India Flight 182 no less.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Kenny, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY BILL

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Losier-Cool, seconded by the Honourable Senator Marchand, for the second reading of Bill C-64, respecting employment equity.

Hon. Janis Johnson: Honourable senators, I rise today to speak at second reading debate on Bill C-64, respecting employment equity.

This bill was first tabled in the House last December, almost a year ago. Now after many months of committee hearings followed by debate, this legislation is before this chamber for our consideration.

I fully agree with the general purpose of Bill C-64, which is to achieve equality in the workplace and to correct conditions of disadvantage experienced by certain groups. However, I do have a few concerns with this legislation, which I will bring to the attention of senators after commenting on employment equity and the substance of the bill.

Once again, I want to state that I endorse the general principle behind this bill, the principle of employment equity. I believe it is essential to ensure equitable job access to the designated groups affected by the legislation. I feel strongly that we need to make sure that everyone who works in this country is treated fairly and paid fairly. All Canadians deserve a level playing field and one where there is full equality of opportunity for employment and promotion in the workplace.

Under the previous government, the Progressive Conservative administration worked hard in support of employment equity for all Canadians. I remind honourable senators that it was the PC government which introduced the Employment Equity Act in 1986. On October 3, 1985, the then minister of Employment and Immigration, the Honourable Flora MacDonald, said in the House of Commons with regard to the Employment Equity Act:

This Bill is about opportunity, because employment equity is about opportunity, opportunity for Canadians everywhere to earn a decent living and participate fully in our society, opportunity for people to be judged by what they can do. It is a crucial step forward, the first major step in ensuring equal access to new opportunities for all Canadians.

The Employment Equity Act passed in 1986 was truly a positive first step forward. The former minister also stated in her speech on the Employment Equity Act:

We —

— referring to the Progressive Conservative government —

— want to show all Canadian employers who are not federally regulated that the underlying principle of employment equity is a concept for the future.

She also made another key statement in her speech:

We —

— referring to the federal government —

— intend to prove to employers and to all Canadians that employment equity is worthwhile.

Honourable senators, the Employment Equity Act passed in 1986, the act which exists in Canada today, has indeed brought to the attention of employers in our country that employment equity is worthwhile and that it is clearly a concept for today and the future. In fact, there is now a greater realization on the part of public and private sector employers that employment equity makes good sense. More and more businesses are adopting employment equity plans and practices.

The former Progressive Conservative government also made employment equity a part of human resources planning. All of these initiatives were important steps forward, but they were by no means the final steps to be taken.

The bill before us today, Bill C-64, aims to strengthen the existing employment equity law. The legislation is a further step toward ensuring equitable employment opportunities for four designated groups: women, aboriginal people, persons with disabilities, and members of visible minorities. The bill will continue to ensure that these groups have a fair chance in the work force, and that we have a work force in Canada which better represents our diverse society.

Honourable senators, I have raised statistics which strongly support the fact that the four designated groups are sadly underrepresented in most occupational categories and industrial sectors across Canada, even though there have been some gains with the passage of the PC government Employment Equity Act in the 1980s. You only have to read the latest Annual Report on the Employment Equity Act to understand where the designated groups fall.

Today, aboriginal people make up 3 per cent of the labour force in Canada, but only 1 per cent of the work force covered under this act. Persons with disabilities represent 6.5 per cent of the labour force, but only 2.5 per cent of the work force covered under this act. Women and members of visible minorities are underrepresented in all sectors covered under the act, except in banking, where there has been improvement over the years. These are only a few examples which show the significant underrepresentation of the designated groups in the workforce. In addition, members of designated groups tend to be concentrated in lower paying jobs, and the full-time average salary of women is only 74 per cent that of men. There still remains a great deal of work to achieve employment equity, but we are, however, on the right track.

I want to mention briefly some statistics which clearly show that we are on the right track in advancing the goal of employment equity. These are statistics which show progress has been made since the passage of the Employment Equity Act in 1986. The representation of women in the workforce covered under the act increased from 40 per cent in 1987 to 45 per cent in 1993. This increase over the seven-year period reflects the significant growth of this group's participation in the Canadian labour force. However, women continue to be overrepresented in clerical, sales and service jobs, and underrepresented in upper level management, blue collar and technical jobs — not to mention the boardrooms of the nation where women comprise a mere 9 per cent of the directors appointed to company boards in our country.

Progress for aboriginal people was substantially slower during the same seven-year period, 1987 to 1993. Their representation in the work force covered under the act increased by less than half a percentage point from .6 per cent in 1987 to 1.04 per cent in 1993.

The representation of persons with disabilities increased one percentage point between 1987 and 1993, and for visible minorities the increase was over 3 per cent. There have been some gains in the past as a result of our present Employment Equity Act. However, speaking as one who has been involved in disabled persons organizations, I know the special challenge that this area presents all concerned, and there is room for improvement, that is for certain.

The new employment equity legislation, Bill C-64, will cover all employers already under the present act. This category includes approximately 350 private sector employers and Crown corporations with 100 or more employees representing around 600,000 employees. They operate in federally regulated industries such as banking, transportation and communications. For the first time, Bill C-64 will place federal public service workers under the act. All separate employers in the public sector with 100 or more employees will fall under the act. This includes all federal departments and agencies. Subject to order of the Governor in Council, the legislation will also cover the Canadian Armed Forces and members of the former Royal Canadian Armed Forces.

In the past, public servants were not previously subject to the Employment Equity Act. They have, however, been subject to their own employment equity policies since 1986, and to the 1992 Public Service Reform Act. These initiatives have led to some achievements in the public sector.

Bill C-64 does not, however, cover Parliament as an employer. The House of Commons, the Senate and the Library of Parliament are not covered under the bill.

Honourable senators, in May of 1992, a special committee reviewing the Employment Equity Act, chaired by the Honourable Alan Redway, recommended the following in their final report:

The scope of the application of the Employment Equity Act be broadened to include the federal public service; the RCMP; the Canadian Armed Forces; all federal agencies, boards and commissions; and Parliament, specifically the House of Commons, the Senate, and the Library of Parliament.

I should like clarification from the government as to why it is that Parliament is not covered under this bill. It is my feeling that Parliament, as an employer, should lead by example. Therefore, consideration should be given to finding a way to include Parliament as an employer under the bill, perhaps by order of the Governor in Council, as was suggested by the President of the Treasury Board.

Honourable senators, Bill C-64 clarifies employer obligations to implement employment equity. The legislation sets out core employment equity obligations, and it establishes the same core obligations on public and private employers for developing and implementing employment equity plans and programs. The legislation provides for monitoring and ensuring compliance of these provisions and verification for reasonable progress in achieving a representative workforce.

Another element of this legislation is that it gives the Canadian Human Rights Commission enforcement powers. This includes things such as audits, seizure of files, checking of records and setting up offices on a firm's premises. In addition, the Canadian Human Rights Commission will be allowed to issue compliance orders. If a compliance order is ignored, the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal, sitting as the Employment Equity Review Tribunal, could then issue a court order to an employer. Not responding to that order could result in a contempt of court prosecution. Bill C-64 imposes a fee, instead of the current criminal proceeding, for non-reporting.

Finally, the legislation will require employers to set "numerical" goals for the designated groups. It is this provision in the bill that has sparked some concerns.

These are some of the general elements that make up Bill C-64, some of which my colleague Senator Losier-Cool mentioned in her speech on the bill.

Honourable senators, I am concerned about the implication that this legislation will have on the private sector covered under this legislation. Will this bill create an administrative burden for businesses? Some people think so. Some say that the legislation will add further complications and costs to the conduct of business in Canada, money which could be better spent to achieve employment equity through other means such as education and training programs.

Under the new legislation, businesses will have to spend money to develop employment equity strategies, and federal government departments will have to do the same. What will all this cost, and is this the best use of business and government resources to achieve employment equity? It would be wise for us to examine the numbers in order to clarify just what effect this bill will have on the private sector.

Finally, should the authority for monitoring and enforcement of the Employment Equity Act lie with the Human Rights Commission? Some people say that it should not, stating that this authority should rest with officials in the Department of Human Resources Development, and that they will be better able to handle this responsibility. They are not bogged down with a heavy case-load already, as the Human Rights Commission often is, or so I have been told.

Another concern of mine is how this legislation will affect the "merit system," especially in the public sector. As we are all aware, the government is going through a period of significant downsizing. The fear is that downsizing in the federal government, coupled with new employment equity legislation, will lead to managers bypassing the merit system when making decisions to lay off employees. There is a real need to ensure that this does not happen.

Honourable senators, these are some of the concerns which have been brought to my attention regarding Bill C-64. Having mentioned them, let me be clear: There is no doubt in my mind that employment equity is necessary, and that I support the general purpose of this bill. I am certain that all senators share in the goal of employment equity for all Canadians, and I look forward to a closer examination of this legislation at committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Losier-Cool, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Second Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on the Pearson Airport Agreements, (Address to His Excellency the Governor General requesting documents), presented in the Senate on Tuesday, October 17, 1995.—(Honourable Senator Kirby).

Hon. Michael Kirby: Honourable senators, I rise today to continue the debate started in this chamber two weeks ago by my colleague Senator MacDonald. At that time, Senator MacDonald moved the adoption of a report by the Special Committee of the Senate on the Pearson Airport Agreements.

That report asked His Excellency the Governor General to release to the committee the Treasury Board submissions made in August of 1993 by the then Minister of Transport, the Honourable Jean Corbeil. The requested Treasury Board submissions relate directly to the committee's mandate.

Simply put, the committee needs these documents. This committee was struck specifically to look into circumstances surrounding the cancellation of the Pearson airport deal. In fulfilling that purpose, early in its mandate the committee undertook to ask for all documents that were given to Robert Nixon for use in his preparation of what is known as the Nixon report. The committee felt, justifiably, that it should have access to the same information as Mr. Nixon had when he wrote his report.

That was the simple request made by the committee, and one which, seemingly, should have been easy to comply with. "Easy," however, has not become a word that one would associate with this committee. The reply came back from the Department of Justice that the committee could have all the documents given to Mr. Nixon except the Treasury Board documents. We could not have them because they had the status of confidential cabinet documents.

Ms Margaret Bloodworth of the Privy Council Office confirmed this view before the committee when she testified before the committee. Further, Ms Bloodworth stressed that the documents had been given to Mr. Nixon inadvertently. In other words, he got them by mistake. He was not supposed to have been given any documents that were cabinet documents of the previous government. Therefore, in essence, the committee was told that because Mr. Nixon should not have seen the documents, we could not see them either.

Yet a key focus of the committee's work and its term of reference is to look at the reasons why Mr. Nixon came to the conclusions he did. How can we possibly do this if we do not have access to the same information that Mr. Nixon examined? Moreover, the importance of these documents is highlighted by the fact that we know from the sworn testimony of Mr. Stephen Goudge, Mr. Nixon's legal counsel, that Mr. Nixon relied on the contents of these Treasury Board documents for some of his conclusions.

Mr. Goudge, in his appearance before our committee on September 28, said:

Let me respond this way, senator...Did I derive support for some of the things in the...Treasury Board submission? Absolutely "Yes"; absolutely "Yes." I mean I did; there's just no question about it. When I put forward my memoranda to Mr. Nixon, parts of it relied heavily on what was in the Treasury Board submission.

Therefore, it seems to me, honourable senators, that the issue should be very simple. The committee's mandate is to look into circumstances surrounding the cancellation of the Pearson Airport Agreements. The Nixon report was a factor in the government's decision to cancel the contracts. The documents were a factor in Mr. Nixon's recommendations to the government and, therefore, the committee should be able to look at the documents. Yet the committee continues to be denied access to these documents on the grounds that we should not be given documents that are cabinet confidences. More important, the argument is made that giving us access to these cabinet confidences would set a bad precedent.

I reject this "setting a bad precedent" argument for the following reasons: First, the committee has not asked to look at any other cabinet confidences. Indeed, we have unanimously and in a completely non-partisan fashion supported the principle of the confidentiality of cabinet confidences. The committee only wants those documents because Mr. Nixon saw them, and because they influenced his decision. Had Mr. Nixon never seen the documents in question, the committee would not now be asking for them. In fact, had Mr. Nixon testified that even after seeing the documents, he was not influenced by them, I doubt that the committee would be asking for them today. However, Mr. Nixon did see them and he was influenced by them, and that means that to fulfil its mandate, the committee needs them. Therefore, I continue to support the right of the committee to have these documents.

I also reject the argument that giving these documents to the committee is setting a dangerous or harmful precedent precisely because setting a precedent means that, if the same situation arises again, cabinet documents would have to again be provided to a parliamentary committee. Let us examine what would have to happen for an identical situation to arise again. First, documents containing cabinet confidences would have to be given inadvertently to someone who was not supposed to have them. Second, that person would have to say that he was significantly influenced by the documents. Third, a parliamentary committee would have to be put in place to conduct an inquiry into the subject-matter of the documents.

I submit, honourable senators, that the probability of those three things ever happening again simultaneously, of these precise circumstances being repeated in the future, is extremely low. Indeed, I submit the probability is virtually zero.

Therefore, I reject the argument that giving the committee these documents creates a harmful precedent, and, I say again, I support the motion that the committee should get these documents.

On the question of how to get these documents to the committee, however, I find myself in disagreement with Senator MacDonald and the majority on the committee. The process which the committee is employing to get the documents is wrong, in my view and that of my colleagues on the committee from this side of the chamber. These documents do not belong to the current government. These documents are Treasury Board documents, cabinet confidences of the administration of the Right Honourable Kim Campbell. Therefore, in my view, and the view of my colleagues on the committee, the committee should be asking Ms Campbell whether she is prepared to release them to the committee.

If Ms Campbell agrees — and I say parenthetically that I would expect her to because I have been told repeatedly and firmly by my colleagues on the other side of this chamber who serve on the committee with me that Ms Campbell has nothing to hide in this issue — I would strongly hope that the Governor General would be advised by his counsellors that there is no problem with releasing the documents to the committee.

Surely, honourable senators, the first step in the process is to ask Ms Campbell for the documents, not the current government through the Governor in Council. After all, these documents are papers pertaining to her government, not the current government.

Therefore, honourable senators, the only objection which Liberal members of the committee have on this issue is the process for obtaining these documents, not obtaining the documents themselves. For that reason when the issue was put to the committee, Liberal members of the committee abstained. In our view, if this report is adopted by this chamber, the only way in which this issue can be resolved at this time is for the Governor General to respond to the committee's request along the following lines: The documents sought are of a kind that are by practice not produced unless the previous Prime Minister has given consent. That is inevitably the kind of reply we can expect from the Governor General because that is the kind of reply Governors General have historically given when similar requests have been made by house committees in the past.

Of course, such an answer leaves the committee in the position where its next step must be to ask Ms Campbell whether she is willing to authorize the release of the documents. The members of the committee from our side of the chamber would like to deal with this problem appropriately by following the logical process. We believe that the committee should begin by asking Ms Campbell whether she is prepared to release the documents.

Accordingly, I shall move an amendment to the committee report that seeks to have the committee adopt the process of first approaching Ms Campbell.

In closing, honourable senators, I reiterate my belief that the committee has the right, and indeed the need, to see these documents. If Ms Campbell is agreeable to this request, and the government subsequently says that it is not agreeable to releasing the documents in question to the committee, I would then be more than happy to support Senator MacDonald in returning to this chamber with a report recommending that the request be put directly to the Governor General.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

Hon. Michael Kirby: Honourable senators, I move:

That the Report be not now adopted, but that it be amended by deleting the last paragraph thereof and replacing it with the following:

Therefore your Committee recommends that an inquiry be made of the Right Honourable Kim Campbell as to whether she is prepared to authorize the release of Submissions to the Treasury Board, dated August 1993, that relate to the redevelopment of Pearson Airport.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, may I ask Senator Kirby for some clarification?

Senator Kirby: Absolutely.

Senator MacDonald: I do not understand. Since when has a select committee the power to send for papers when the royal prerogative is involved?

Rule 133 of the Senate reads:

When the royal prerogative is concerned in any account or paper, an address shall be presented to the Governor General praying that the same may be laid before the Senate.

That is the appropriate action which the committee recommends in its report. A select committee — our committee — has no power of enforcement unless such power is given to it by this house of Parliament. We cannot do this. We are in violation of rule 133 of the Rules of the Senate of Canada. Does the honourable senator have any comments to make on that?

Senator Kirby: As honourable senators know, I am by no means an expert on the rules which govern this place. I do know that I cleared my amendment with the Table Officer. Thus, I understand that the amendment is in order.

However, my basic response to the honourable senator's question is the one that I made in committee. The reality is that the release of a document belonging to a previous government has to be approved by the Prime Minister of that previous government prior to it being released to the committee. All the members on our side have ever said is, "Let us ask Miss Campbell if she is prepared to release the document."

What I have said before in this regard is that if Miss Campbell agrees that the document should be released, I would very strongly support the honourable senator in his formal request to the Governor General for the release of the document. The reality is that the Governor General will not make a decision on this issue until Miss Campbell has pronounced her views on it. I feel quite strongly that what we ought to do is ask Miss Campbell for her opinion. The documents are her documents. That is the position we took in committee.

As I explained in my speech and in committee, the only reason the Liberal members abstained on the motion of the honourable senator was that we were afraid that, if we voted against it, we would be accused of trying to hide the documents. I think I made it abundantly clear today that I am totally on side with Senator MacDonald and the Conservative members on the committee in wanting these documents. I think that the process we are going through is the wrong process.

Senator MacDonald: Senator Kirby, your suggestion has the value of simplicity.

Senator Kirby: I realize that simplicity is a novel approach. However, we might try it for a change, just because it is a novel approach.

Senator MacDonald: We are working under the assumption that the Governor in Council, the Governor General, the Prime Minister and members of the Privy Council Office are all over 21 and that, presumably, they all have a high school education.

Senator Kirby: Are you suggesting that Miss Campbell does not?

Senator MacDonald: They now have the power to respond to our address. If that address suggests that they are willing to allow the documents to be disclosed on the advice of the previous administration, then we will take it from there. However, we will then have another situation on our hands: that will be whether or not the previous Prime Minister will invoke the tradition of not disclosing documents of a previous administration.

Senator Kirby: Senator MacDonald, I understand your point of view. For the benefit of other senators, I should like to be crystal clear as to what the issue is: The issue is that there are two clearances required in order to have the documents released. One is needed from the Prime Minister of the government whose documents they are, namely, Miss Campbell. As Senator MacDonald pointed out, the second is needed from the current cabinet through the Governor General, because an Order in Council would be required to release the documents.

Boiled down, our difference of opinion is purely: What is the logical sequence in which to approach this problem? We see no sense in asking the Governor General to release documents when he does not even know if the person who is responsible for those documents is prepared to release them.

Our view is that the logical and sensible way to approach the problem is, first, to ask Miss Campbell whether or not she is prepared to release them. If she says that she is, then we should proceed to ask the Governor General.

There is no disagreement between us about the need for the two steps. Our disagreement is with the fact that we seem to be going at the steps in the reverse order. The only conceivable reply that could come from the Governor General at the present moment is the one which I paraphrased in my notes. It is one which effectively says that the normal procedure is to first ask Miss Campbell. I think that is what we ought to do first.

We do not disagree on the need for the two steps. We simply categorically disagree on approaching the matter in what seems to be an extremely backward fashion.

Senator MacDonald: Senator Kirby, I know other senators will want to speak to this item. I want to thank you for the support you have given to the general principle that we are trying to establish; one with which we have had some difficulty. I enjoyed your remarks up to the point of the amendment.

On motion of Senator Kinsella, for Senator Murray, debate adjourned.

JOINT PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

OFFICIAL VISIT TO BRAZIL—INQUIRY—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of Hon. H. A. Olson calling the attention of the Senate to the official visit to Brazil of the Joint Parliamentary Delegation of the Senate and the House of Commons from April 15 to 21, 1995.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to speak on this item, I would ask that the order be discharged.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Debate concluded.

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY UNION

SPECIAL SESSION OF INTER-PARLIAMENTARY COUNCIL ON FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF CREATION OF UNITED NATIONS—INQUIRY

Hon. Peter Bosa rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, October 3, 1995:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Special Session of the Inter-Parliamentary Council, on the occasion of the 50th anniversary of the creation of the United Nations, held in New York City from August 30th to September 1st, 1995.

He said: Honourable senators, it is my privilege to speak to a report of the Special Session of the Inter-Parliamentary Council held in New York from August 30 to September 1.

Some 253 parliamentarians from 74 countries participated in this special event, which was held to mark the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the creation of the United Nations. My distinguished colleague Senator Andreychuk and I attended this conference, together with two members of the House of Commons, Mrs. Colleen Baumier and Mr. Maurice Dumas.

At the outset, I would like to express our thanks and appreciation to the officials from the Department of Foreign Affairs and from International Trade Canada, the Canadian International Development Agency and the Department of National Defence, who briefed our delegation prior to our departure. I would also pay tribute to the permanent head of the Canadian mission to the United Nations, Mr. Robert Fowler, and his colleagues for their briefing and assistance during the conference.

"The parliamentary vision for international cooperation into the 21st century" was the general theme for our meeting, which was held in the impressive General Assembly Hall. Our deliberations were divided into two subthemes: First, there was an agenda for democracy, peace and sustainable development; second, there was reinforcing and democratizing the structures for international cooperation.

Much of the work of the Canadian IPU Group focused on the second topic and, in particular, on the form of the Security Council. Our group was one of 22 which had submitted a memorandum entitled, "Reviewing and Strengthening the United Nations Security Council."

As you are aware, honourable senators, the Security Council has five permanent members, each with a veto, and 10 non-permanent members, five of whom are elected each year for a two-year term.

In our document, we pointed out that reform was pressing for two reasons: First, the permanent membership of the Security Council is less reflective of the reality of global power; and, second, many question its credibility as an impartial intervenor in situations that threaten common security because of the disproportionate influence within it of northern and especially North Atlantic states.

Honourable senators, our memorandum also referred to the work of our joint parliamentary committee on the foreign policy review, especially its comments on supporting an increase in the number of members of the council and greater transparency in its deliberations.

As the first speaker of the Canadian delegation, I made a strong plea for reform of the Security Council. I should like to mention some of the salient points in my remarks. Our first priority must be to improve the effectiveness and credibility of the council. Enhancing the council's transparency and procedures for consulting with troop-contributing nations would help achieve this goal. Recent UN efforts to change the process of consultation within non-council members and troop-contributing nations should be formalized and institutionalized.

In looking at increasing the size of the council, I mentioned two main requirements for membership: one, level of commitment and support of UN activities; and, two, geographic balance.

I believe that the council should include those countries prepared and able to contribute to emergency situations. It seems only fair and reasonable that countries who support and participate in peacekeeping operations ought to be involved in the decisions affecting their troops. Contributions to international security and other charter ideals should be a crucial factor in membership.

Honourable senators, numerous proposals have been put forward during the past year about how the membership of the council might be increased. I believe that the combination of elements from different proposals may offer the best solution. One interesting approach — and here I spoke in my personal capacity — is the idea of adding up to 10 rotating, non-permanent seats to be shared for two-year periods. Permit me to explain this proposal. We could achieve better geographic balance by allocating one seat to Africa, one to Latin America and one to Asia with the membership rotating among the countries within these regions. The remaining seven seats will be shared by countries which would best qualify under Article 23. The criteria for demonstrated commitment to the goals of the United Nations might include: contributions to peacekeeping operations; participation in voluntary funds for humanitarian activities; economic development and protection of human rights; and timely and full payments of UN assessments. I believe that this approach should help the council by harnessing the energies and capacities of a wider group of states, by allowing a broader range of representation, and by including those countries most supportive of its activities.

Although the response to our intervention was reasonably positive, the Final Declaration, which must be adopted by consensus, took a cautious approach to the issue of reform of the Security Council. It acknowledged that "the Security Council needs reform to make it more representative and democratic while at the same time sustaining its authority and effectiveness." It also stated that "its membership should be increased."

However, the drafting committee could not agree on a formula for how such reform might be achieved, a division which I believe reflects the continuing differences of opinion among many members of the United Nations. The concluding document also mentioned the need for greater transparency, noting that "Mechanisms should be found to render the work of the Council more transparent."

Honourable senators, the Inter-Parliamentary Union is the international organization which brings together the representatives of the parliaments of sovereign states. I think it is particularly fitting that this organization, which has been described as "the parliamentarians' UN," should celebrate this fiftieth anniversary by examining how to reinvigorate the United Nations system as well as ways to increase parliamentary involvement at both the national and international level. Let us pledge our support for strengthening links between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

PRIVILEGE

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, it had been my intention to raise a question of privilege. It had been my expectation that the Speaker, Senator Molgat, would be in the Chair. If senators are in agreement, I shall wait until Senator Molgat is back in the Chair to raise my question of privilege.

The Senate adjourned until Wednesday, November 1, 1995, at 1:30 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, November 1, 1995

The Senate met at 1:30 p.m., Senator Eymard G. Corbin, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

NOVA SCOTIA

CONGRATULATIONS TO DR. JOHN HAMM ON ELECTION
AS LEADER OF PROVINCIAL PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: Honourable senators, I did not rise yesterday because the momentum and the rejoicing of the day belonged to those who had worked so very hard on the campaign in Quebec. They deserved their day in the sun. They deserve our thanks and appreciation. I, too, would join with the remarks made yesterday in praise of those who worked so hard, and I say that without demeaning in any way the legitimate aspirations of the Quebec people.

Had I risen yesterday, it would have been to extend congratulations to the new leader of the Progressive Conservative Party in Nova Scotia, Dr. John Hamm. We have had a number of good party leaders over the years. Names such as Stanfield, Buchanan, Cameron, Donahoe, and Angus L. Macdonald come to mind. I am presently reading The Man from Halifax: Sir John Thompson and enjoying it immensely. Nova Scotia does indeed produce great leaders.

Our party is the only political party in Nova Scotia that was successful, on the very first try, in opening up the phone lines to ensure that all members had their say on who should lead our party. This vote does not have to be rescheduled. In contrast to recent performances by the present Premier of Nova Scotia, John Savage, we released and announced proudly the results of the vote.

No comparisons need be made, honourable senators, between Dr. Hamm and Dr. Savage. Indeed, none could be made. Dr. Hamm's outstanding capacity to understand and to deal with people needs no elaboration. Dr. Hamm believes in consulting with the people and then — and only then — prescribing the cure. With Dr. Savage, it happens the other way around.

As Dr. Hamm presented a five-point plan to the thousands of Tories who gathered in Halifax and at other gathering points throughout the province, he very aptly demonstrated his preparedness and his eagerness to get down to work alongside Nova Scotians to the betterment of our somewhat beleaguered part of Canada by the sea. I know that Dr. Hamm will do well.

I extend as well my congratulations to Mr. Jim White and Mr. Michael MacDonald, who ran very able campaigns. It was from Michael MacDonald that I learned that kilts, in some form, have been around forever. However, they did not come into fashion until many centuries after the Irish had been proudly wearing them.

My colleague Senator Comeau has stated that those willing to answer the call of public duty are to be congratulated, revered and honoured. It is a difficult task. I invite my colleagues to join me in expressing to this new leader in our political structure in Canada our best wishes and good health in the years that lie ahead.

NATIONAL UNITY

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I should have made this statement yesterday. I should probably speak in French, but I want all of my colleagues to understand.

For the past 10 days, I have lived through a new experience. I was in Quebec for a few of those days, and on Monday night I watched the results of the referendum in Montreal. For the first hour and a half of the broadcast on the results, I had to either sit down or have someone help me stand up.

Honourable senators, I wish to join with those who have commented on the Quebec referendum. I especially want to join in congratulating Jean Charest for his tremendous passion and his demonstration of love for Canada and Quebec. His contribution will never be forgotten.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Thériault: Specifically, to my English-speaking colleagues, Canadians in every province and every corner of the country have shown their affection, tolerance and generosity in the last week of the campaign, especially last Friday in Montreal. As Senator Perrault stated yesterday, we were saved from an execution, merely saved.

Today, I appeal to all honourable senators and to the people of Canada to react in the next few weeks as they would have reacted had the results been minus one vote for Canada. It is that close. I do not know what the Prime Minister will say or do. I hope that whatever it is, it will have the cooperation of all political parties — this goes beyond political partisanship — and be sufficient to show Quebecers that we really want them to be part of Canada. I speak as a francophone. I want to be part of Quebec, not physically, perhaps, but in my heart, and I am sure French-speaking Canadians living outside of Quebec feel the same.

Quebec is important. Canada without Quebec is not my Canada. The Atlantic provinces without Quebec — I hate to think about that prospect. Therefore, in the next few days and weeks, please show your generosity. Support the political leaders. If something is to happen, it must be done collectively by the political leaders of this country, wherever they may be.

There are people in Canada, as there are people in Quebec, who are prepared to say “let them go.” Please resist that temptation. Be generous in your hearts, souls and minds. Let all of us hope together that we, as Canadians, can prove and show to Quebec that Canada depends on them to a large degree, and that they are part of us and we are part of them.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

CITY OF WINNIPEG

TRIBUTE TO SUSAN THOMPSON ON RE-ELECTION AS MAYOR

Hon. Terry Stratton: Honourable senators, I wish to change the topic slightly.

I rise today to pay tribute to Susan Thompson on her election to a second term as Mayor of the City of Winnipeg. Ms Thompson was first elected in 1992 on a mandate for change and a freeze on taxes. The status quo fought tooth and nail against change — any change. They had had their way for a long time. However, slowly, this neophyte mayor, without any prior political experience, has effected change.

On October 25, 1995, Ms Thompson was elected again on a mandate of change and again on a mandate to hold tax increases to an absolute minimum if a freeze was not acceptable. The citizens of Winnipeg realized that change was required if the city was to move forward into the next century in a cost competitive position. However, more importantly, she imparted a positive vision of the future. Winnipeg will host the Winter Cities Conference in 1996. Winnipeg will host the Pan-American Games in 1999. Winnipeg strives for the type of economic growth that brings jobs. In other words, she imparted a positive, upbeat vision of the future.

For this, I thank her. I can only hope that the leaders of this country can impart a similar vision for Canadians, who have just stated, quite clearly, that this is their vision; positive, upbeat, loving and caring for their country, their Canada.

HARBOURFRONT LITERARY FESTIVAL OF AUTHORS

Hon. Janis Johnson: Honourable senators, I wish to draw your attention to the annual Harbourfront Literary Festival of Authors. It was held this year from October 11 to 21. I rise today to comment on this festival due to my deep interest in Canada's cultural affairs and as a member of the Senate Transport and Communications Committee. In its sixteenth year, the festival enjoys an elevated status in the literary world. Authors and their agents and editors are honoured to attend.

As a non-literary guest of this year's festival, I want to commend the festival committee, staff and the volunteers for bringing 65 of the world's finest poets, novelists, biographers, playwrights and children's authors to Toronto for meetings and interviews. The roster was impressive; from our own Mordechai Richler, Pierre Burton and Margaret Atwood, to Australia's Thomas Keneally, America's Richard Ford, Chile's Ariel Dorfman, England's Margaret Drabble, James MacKay; Dennis Brutus from South Africa, Orhan Pamuk from Turkey, Joanna Trollope, and Yevgeny Yevtushenko from Russia, to name but a few.

The attendance was excellent, the writers accessible. I personally witnessed my friend, Thomas Keneally, accept the memoirs of an elderly Jewish man who wanted his story told by talk books.

People attended in large numbers, bought books and renewed their excitement about literature and the written word, whether it was Canadian literature or literature from other parts of the world.

• (1350)

Mr. Greg Gatenby, the artistic director and powerhouse behind the festival, should be commended for his tremendous vision, his tireless efforts and his commitment to making the Harbourfront Literary Festival a world-class affair. I should add here that the Harbourfront continues to sponsor weekly readings throughout the year that are open to the general public. I urge honourable senators to attend this event next year or during the year and see why Canada is becoming world renowned in the arts and, in this case, in the world of words, of books which tell the stories that give nations their written heritage, history and soul. We certainly need more of this at this time in our country's history.

FIREARMS BILL

Hon. Ron Ghitter: Honourable senators, it is with pleasure that I extend an invitation to all of you to join the senators who will be travelling to the west and the Yukon in order to receive input relative to Bill C-68.

We have received numerous requests from Western Canada, the Yukon and the territories from people who have not been able to come before either the House committee or our committee to express their views. Groups of senators have decided that we will be travelling to several areas, and I wish to extend an invitation to all honourable senators to join us. A group of us will be in the Province of Saskatchewan on Monday, November 6 and 7, in Regina and Saskatoon; in different locations in the Province of Manitoba on November 6, 7, 8 and 9; in Vancouver, British Columbia on November 9 as well, and in Kamloops on November 10; in Whitehorse, Yukon, on November 12; in Edmonton on November 14; and on Wednesday, November 15, we will be in Calgary.

I might add that the witness lists are full and overflowing with various groups and individuals who wish to come and express their points of view. You are also most welcome to come and join us and take the opportunity to hear Canadians who have not had the opportunity to come to Ottawa to express their points of view.

NATIONAL UNITY

REFLECTIONS ON REFERENDUMS AND PROMISES

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators, Murray McLaughlin is the ranking troubadour of the far west — the far west of the province of Ontario, that is. In The Farmer's Song, Murray McLaughlin comes right out and says: "Things just ain't what they used to be." It should not take a carload of pundits from the CBC, the Citizen, The Globe and Mail and La Presse to define and refine the line of such a superbly lyrical aphorism. Only two days after the referendum, which denied the Parti Québécois' bid for sovereignty, things, surely, just ain't what they used to be.

Before we move on, however, it might be wise to make a little list of the way things used to be, before we forget some of the mistakes and stupidities that got us where we are 15 years after the historic first vote on a process of separation. We might come up with rules like these for future campaigns. First, don't fill the air with promises you have no intention of keeping. Mr. Trudeau did that in his impassioned fight with René Lévesque, and followed it by slamming the door on every formula for his home province beyond those of his own invention.

Rule two: Don't court defeat of sensible and well-intentioned attempts to bridge deep divisions with reasonable accords by inviting dedicated critics to launch their destructive campaigns in these very chambers. The former prime minister came here "to speak for the record" as he described it. The record shows this:

I am terrified of Meech Lake. I think it is a Rubicon. Once you have crossed it, you cannot go back. You march on to Rome.

Rule three: Make careful notes of the differences in what people say from time to time, from issue to issue, and from opportunity to opportunity. Note how sovereigntists, for instance, right up to last Monday, cited the defeat of the Meech Lake Accord as a tragic put-down and denial of their province. Then recall how sovereigntists — they were called separatists 15 years ago — opposed the Meech Lake accord when the House of Commons, the Senate and all but two of Canada's legislatures advocated affirmation of its careful purpose.

Rule four: Beware of those who would thwart the nation's best intentions just to serve their own ambitions. Not all of these self-servers have been members of governments, although it is fashionable to blame them. Consider the posturing in the media, in academe and in the union hall. Be careful lest we are left in our legislatures with pollsters, expeditors and smug mandarins in place of those who should govern.

Rule five: Those of us who believe that true federalism, sensibly balanced by progressive regionalists, will best serve Canada must not permit the doomsayers to discourage us. There is a busy market for colourful pessimism today. We should remember that, early on in this campaign, Mr. Parizeau spoke of 50 plus one as all the backing his followers needed to take over. Our jar is more than half full. Jean Charest spoke Tuesday of a partnership of optimism that could serve us tomorrow — and that could be served itself by the willingness of the people of Canada to become involved when they see that they are wanted — yea, needed — to hold the country together.

Armed with rules based on recollection, and filled with hope also based on recollection, we are in good shape to start the journey.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT BILL, 1995

NOTICE OF MOTION TO INSTRUCT COMMITTEE TO TABLE FINAL REPORT

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, pursuant to rule 58(1)(f), I give notice that on Thursday, November 2, 1995, I will move:

That it be an instruction of this House to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs that no later than Wednesday, November 22, 1995, it present its final report to the Senate on the Message from the House of Commons, dated June 20, 1995, and on the motion of the Honourable Senator Graham dated June 28, 1995, regarding Bill C-69, An Act to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions and the readjustment of electoral boundaries.

RESULT OF QUEBEC REFERENDUM—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

INCREASE IN LOCAL TELEPHONE RATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, yesterday the CRTC announced — and I already see some signs of relief that my question does not concern the referendum, for the time being — that there would be an increase in monthly rates for local calls. As you know, the decision had been made.

Cabinet had decided to ask the CRTC, as it is entitled to do by law, that the decision be reconsidered. We know who is going to pay for this decision: the little guy, the less well-off, people for whom the telephone is often their only means of entertainment. These are the arguments I used when I was sitting in the other place. The CRTC's decision is contrary to what the government really wants to do.

Does the minister intend to ask the government to reject this latest decision by the CRTC?

[English]

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the question will undoubtedly be discussed by the government. The results of that discussion will be known when a decision is made.

QUEBEC SITUATION FOLLOWING REFERENDUM— GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jean-Claude Rivest: Honourable senators, my question concerns the post-referendum period. Yesterday, the Prime Minister of Canada called a cabinet meeting to discuss the consequences of or the Canadian government's reaction to the referendum in Quebec. I imagine we can expect another referendum to be held in Quebec, almost certainly as soon as next year.

Is the minister in a position to inform the Senate of certain elements of the policy that the Canadian government is about to adopt, or has already adopted, to deal with Quebec and the other regions in Canada, and the fact that the referendum vote was extremely close and has brought the country to the brink?

Does the Canadian government finally intend to adopt a policy on the Quebec situation — a policy along the same lines or not, but in any case a policy — as the Prime Minister at the time, Mr. Brian Mulroney, did, and who acted very responsibly in this respect?

Since the present government was elected, we have not heard a thing. The country has been brought to the brink. Could the minister inform the Senate that the government has finally realized there is a problem?

[English]

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a number of questions were contained in my honourable friend's comments.

Clearly, the Government of Canada — and Canadians generally — have been galvanized in recent weeks by the situation in Quebec. Indeed, they have responded with their hearts, their minds and their passions in conveying messages to Quebec which would indicate the depth of our feeling that our Canada is incomplete, is unrecognizable, without the Province of Quebec. That is fundamental.

My friend raises the question of another referendum. That is, of course, a judgment which will be made in another place; not on Parliament Hill, and certainly not by the Canadian government. I believe it would be the hope of us all that such a situation would not occur, but that is not for our judgment; that is not our decision to make.

The Prime Minister and those who spoke so eloquently during the referendum — Mr. Charest, Mr. Johnson, Madam Robillard and others — made it clear that tomorrow's agenda for Canada will be one of change; change that will respond to concerns in Quebec and change that will respond to concerns across Canada, because many of the concerns are shared.

The Prime Minister spoke on three occasions of special commitments to the Province of Quebec. He did so most recently on the night of the referendum. He will find a way to fulfil those commitments in the period immediately ahead.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

CORNWALLIS PARK DEVELOPMENT AGENCY— ALLEGATIONS OF MISMANAGEMENT—STOPPAGE OF FUNDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gerald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate and concerns allegations of financial and administrative mismanagement at the Cornwallis Park Development Agency in Nova Scotia. Senator Forrestall and I will be pursuing this matter over the coming sessions. Senator Forrestall has had to leave the chamber for another engagement, but I have a couple of questions I should like to ask.

Can the minister confirm that there will be no further disbursement of funds from ACOA to that agency until the allegations and the issues have been resolved?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is my understanding, from questions I have asked of the ministry, that the concerns are being looked into and the funding has been halted or is in abeyance until those issues are resolved. When they are resolved, funding will be restored.

CORNWALLIS PARK DEVELOPMENT AGENCY—CIRCUMSTANCES SURROUNDING APPOINTMENT OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gerald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, perhaps the minister is aware that the all-party Cornwallis Committee, voluntary and unpaid, which was in place for a number of years prior to the change of government, was disbanded by her colleague David Dingwall and replaced by a board of directors. Can the Leader of the Government tell us who appointed the members of this newly created board? Perhaps she could also tell us whether there is any truth to the allegation that the local member of Parliament, Harry Verran, chose those people himself.

• (1410)

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am aware that the Cornwallis Park Development Agency is a not-for-profit organization which is guided by a board of directors. However, I am not aware of the process for the appointment of members to that board, either at present or in the past.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

DELAY IN DELIVERY OF MAIL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward M. Lawson: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

On approximately October 25, 1995, I received six or eight pieces of mail dated April 16, 18 and 19, 1993, from British Columbia, other places in Canada and the United States. They were sent on the dates mentioned, yet surfaced in my mailbox only last week.

Would the Leader of the Government determine from the minister responsible for Canada Post the reason that such an event could take place? Am I likely to be charged storage for the two and a half years that these letters languished in the Canada Post system?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it must have been a very slow horse. Obviously, I have no personal or direct knowledge of this matter.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PEARSON AIRPORT AGREEMENTS

SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Second Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on the Pearson Airport Agreements. (Address to His Excellency the Governor General requesting documents), presented in the Senate on Tuesday, October 17, 1995.

And on the motion in amendment of the Honourable Senator Kirby, seconded by the Honourable Senator Corbin,

That the Report be not now adopted but that it be amended by deleting the last paragraph thereof and replacing it with the following:

Therefore your Committee recommends that an inquiry be made of the Right Honourable Kim Campbell as to whether she is prepared to authorize the release of Submissions to the Treasury Board, dated August 1993, that relate to the redevelopment of Pearson Airport.—(Honourable Senator Murray, P.C.)

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I ask that this order stand, with the added comment that if any other honourable senator wishes to intervene, they should feel free to do so today or on any other day during which this order stands in my name. I will be ready to speak to the matter in due course.

ONTARIO COURT GENERAL DIVISION

MOTION TO STRIKE SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE AND REPORT UPON THE CONDUCT AND BEHAVIOUR OF CERTAIN OFFICERS AND JUSTICES—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the motion of the Honourable Senator Cools, seconded by the Honourable Senator Carstairs:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be constituted to examine and report upon the conduct and behaviour of certain justices and barristers of the Ontario Court of Justice (General Division), raised by the Honourable Senator Cools in her speeches on Parliamentary Privilege in the Senate in terms of:

(i) failing to take judicial notice of the Law of Parliamentary Privilege, the Constitution of Canada, and the laws of Canada pertaining to the Senate;

(ii) failing to uphold and enforce the said laws, and the immunities and privileges of the Senate;

(iii) interfering with and frustrating the enjoyment and exercise of the said laws, immunities, and privileges;

(iv) inducing failure to observe and comply with the said laws, immunities, and privileges;

(v) impeaching proceedings in Parliament;

(vi) threatening sanctions on the vindication of the said laws, immunities, and privileges;

(vii) their conduct and behaviour generally relating to the Law of Parliamentary Privilege, the Constitution of Canada, the independence of the judiciary, constitutional comity, the dignity of the Senate, and the due administration of justice;

That the Committee be further empowered to consider and report upon related matters which may concern the privileges of the Senate;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee;

That the committee be composed of seven members, four of whom shall constitute a quorum; and

That the Committee of Selection be instructed to decide and report upon the membership of the Special Committee.—(Honourable Senator Cools)

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, I rise to speak to this motion, which has been on the Order Paper now for more than a year.

Honourable senators, parliamentary privilege is a matter of high constitutional importance, and one that rests at the heart of our system of government. The moral and political responsibility to uphold and defend parliamentary privilege is a moral imperative which is recited in the Rules of the Senate.

Honourable senators, my purpose today is to raise matters of high constitutional principle which I believe are cause for action by the Senate. At stake are the fundamental principles of a parliamentarian's ability to attend to the business of a free Parliament without let, hindrance, interference or threat, as is guaranteed by the Lex et consuetudo Parliamenti. At stake also is the twin fundamental principle that the courts of justice have a duty to enforce the law of privilege, and a duty to obey the laws of Canada and to proceed as the law and Constitution direct.

The practice of lawlessness by judges, barristers or courts of justice is a matter for parliamentary intervention, particularly when such individuals express by their behaviour, actions and words, profound and utter contempt for Parliament.

I propose that a special senate committee be constituted to afford the persons involved full and sufficient opportunity to meet my accusations in a full and fair inquiry of the Senate; to satisfy the notions of natural justice and judicial independence; and to examine the evidence supporting my accusations and assertions of contempt of Parliament, breach of parliamentary privilege and conduct prejudicial to the constitutional order.

My accusations are directed against Mr. Justice Theodore Matlow of the Ontario Court, General Division, and barristers Anne Molloy, Bruce Drake, Eva Frank and Robin Basu. The complaints against Anne Molloy touch two other judges, Judge Lee Ferrier and Justice Douglas Lissaman.

Honourable senators, the constitutional struggles of the seventeenth century culminated in the statutory recognition of Parliament's privileges, rights and immunities in the Bill of Rights, 1688. That great statute settled the existence and status of parliamentary privilege for all time, stating:

...Proceedings in Parliament, ought not to be impeached or questioned in any Court or Place out of Parliament.

and:

...all and singular the Rights and Liberties asserted and claimed...are the true, ancient, and indubitable Rights and Liberties of the People...and so shall be esteemed, allowed, adjudged, deemed, and taken to be...and...shall...remain, and be the Law...for ever;

The Bill of Rights, 1688, is the law of Canada by reception through the BNA Act, 1867, section 18. The courts are bound, at their own initiative and unprompted by Parliament, to protect, uphold and enforce the law of privilege in all judicial proceedings, independent of any parliamentary action to exercise its own inquisitorial, punitive or judicial powers.

The most eminent modern jurist, Lord Alfred Denning, in 1958, asserted this view that the Bill of Rights, 1688, is an instruction to the courts, saying:

I regard those words as a clear direction to the courts of law.

and:

...the Bill of Rights is directed to the courts of law. It directs them not to question proceedings in Parliament.

In other words, the courts of law must proceed in accordance with the direction of the law.

The British North America Act, section 18, and the Parliament of Canada Act, sections 4 and 5, direct the courts to take judicial notice of Parliament's privileges as part of the general and public law of Canada, and to esteem and adjudge accordingly. Section 5 of the Parliament of Canada Act states:

The privileges, immunities and powers held, enjoyed and exercised in accordance with section 4 are part of the general and public law of Canada and it is not necessary to plead them but they shall, in all courts in Canada, and by and before all judges, be taken notice of judicially.

Honourable senators, some judges and lawyers persist in provoking and testing the powers and the strength of nerves of Parliament. I should like to cite two recent precedents of Parliament's assertion of its own privileges. The first is from our own House of Commons and the then Speaker, the Honourable John Fraser, and concerns the use of judicial and legal pressure against members of Parliament in the exercise of their parliamentary privileges. On May 19, 1989, the Honourable John Fraser urged that Parliament not tolerate such activity. Concerning what he described as:

...undue pressure...brought to bear upon the Member for the purpose of questioning his right to claim parliamentary immunity...

he said that such actions are:

...in total disregard of...established and...verifiable parliamentary law...

The Speaker of the House of Commons, Mr. Fraser, was clear and unequivocal. From the Chair, he said:

Let me state for the record that the right of a Member of Parliament to refuse to attend court as a witness during a parliamentary session...is an undoubted and inalienable right...

and:

...I take a serious view of the action of a member of the legal profession in questioning the right of a Member of Parliament to claim immunity from appearing as a witness and alleging that a court, and not Parliament, had the power to make a determination in such a case.

Honourable senators, the second precedent is Australian, and relates to events surrounding two 1984 Senate committee inquiries into the activities of a justice of the High Court of Australia. During judicial proceedings relating to these inquiries and cognate matters, two other justices, Justice Cantor and Justice Hunt, repudiated and denied the Bill of Rights, 1688, and denied the Senate's privileges. The Australian Senate, led by the Senate President Senator Douglas McClelland, took conclusive action and introduced a bill entitled the Parliamentary Privileges Bill to defeat the judgments, rulings, reasoning, and actions of those judges. On tabling the legislation on October 7, 1986, the president said:

It is an unprecedented step for a Presiding Officer of a House of the Parliament to introduce a Bill...

He said, however, that his Parliamentary Privileges Bill declaring the powers and privileges of Parliament was necessary "to avoid the consequences" of the court judgments.

• (1420)

The Australian Senate was unequivocal in its statutory initiative. The bill and its accompanying resolutions addressed some of the very issues of breach of parliamentary privilege that I have raised. This bill upheld the privilege of a member's right not to attend any court or tribunal on any day that the member's house or committee is sitting. It declared the matters to be treated as contempts of Parliament, including the service of legal process in the precincts of Parliament, disobedience of orders of the Senate, obstruction of orders of the Senate, molestation of senators, improper influence of senators, and interference with the Senate, stating:

A person shall not ... interfere with the free exercise ... or ... the free performance by a Senator of the Senator's duties as a Senator.

and:

A person shall not, by ... intimidation, force or threat of any kind ... induce a Senator to be absent from the Senate...

Honourable senators, I believe the law of parliamentary privilege has been breached recently in Canada. The breaches have manifested themselves by, first, the instituting of court proceedings for the purpose of adjudication on parliamentary privilege and the actual adjudication of same; second, the threat of an exercise of judicial sanction and censure in the exercise of a senator's privilege; third, the compulsion by the Ontario Court (General Division), by court orders, of a senator's attendance in court on Senate sitting days, including during actual Senate sittings; and fourth, the compulsion by the Ontario Court (General Division), by court orders, of service of court documents and legal processes requiring personal service in the precincts of Parliament without leave of the Speaker of the Senate of Canada.

Honourable senators, I assert that a justice of the Ontario Court (General Division), Mr. Justice Matlow, employed his judicial office and powers to offend Parliament. He used his judicial station, judicial office, and judicial authority to commit acts which are in contempt of Parliament. He ruled to proceed on a Senate sitting day, Tuesday, June 14, 1994, with a court hearing requiring this senator's attendance and requiring an adjudication on parliamentary privilege. In proceeding, I assert that Mr. Justice Matlow conducted improper, vitiated and unconstitutional proceedings. He conducted corrupt proceedings. He committed a legal and constitutional breach of his office and a breach of his judicial oath.

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. If I heard correctly, Senator Cools has made some very serious allegations regarding members of the judiciary. I should think that this language is unparliamentary. I have heard the word "corruption" and other words attributed to a judge in a particular case in which she has an interest.

Senator Murray: Where is the government? They should be defending the judiciary.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: We ask respect for ourselves as parliamentarians, and we should show respect for another essential branch of government, the judiciary.

Your Honour, I would ask you to ask Senator Cools to retract those comments.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: I must confess that I was not listening as attentively as I ought to have been, as I was checking some documents. I do apologize. However, I was under the impression earlier that Senator Cools was quoting from precedents.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Senator Cools was quoting Lord Denning and others, but she has gone through that. Now she is speaking for herself.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Perhaps we ought to let the debate proceed, and I will pay close attention to the honourable senator's comments.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Thank you, sir.

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, that is what I said. In proceeding, I assert that Mr. Justice Matlow conducted improper, vitiated and unconstitutional proceedings. He conducted a corrupt proceeding. He committed a legal and constitutional breach of his office and a breach of his judicial oath.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Your Honour, I hope you heard this time. A judge is alleged to have conducted an improper and corrupt proceeding.

Senator Cools: Yes.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Surely there is a limit to the freedom of speech in any assembly, including this one, when the judiciary is being so seriously attacked, with such malice and without any support or proof whatsoever. If there is a problem with judges, there are other avenues for correction, and this is the last one that should be used.

Senator Kinsella: The Minister of Justice.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Order, please. May I bring to honourable senators' attention — Senator Cools, would you resume your seat, please.

I should like to draw honourable senators' attention to Beauchesne's Sixth Edition, page 150, quotation 493, dealing with protected persons:

All references to judges and courts of justice of the nature of personal attack and censure have always been considered unparliamentary, and the Speaker has always treated them as breaches of order. Members have been interrupted in Committee of the Whole by the Chairman when they have cast an imputation upon a judicial proceeding.

Honourable senators, I am informed by the Table Officers that His Honour, the Speaker of the Senate, has already cautioned honourable members in their references to judges and courts of justice in those terms. I do not know if we have located that caution voiced by His Honour, but I take it for a fact that he has cautioned honourable senators.

Therefore, I would invite Honourable Senator Cools to be very careful in her choice of words in describing judiciary proceedings. If Parliament has rights and privileges, so do the courts. I believe that both Houses of Parliament have always been extremely careful in their pronouncements on persons or proceedings of the courts. I think it would be wise to be guided by that long-standing practice.

Senator Kinsella: Good decision!

Senator Cools: Honourable senators, His Honour, the Speaker of the Senate, in a rather extensive ruling last July, settled the questions to which you are referring and settled the very question that Senator Lynch-Staunton has raised. Perhaps the Chair could give us some direction and refer directly back to His Honour's statements at the time. It is my clear understanding that, at that time, His Honour reviewed the very document that you have just raised and the very issues that Senator Lynch-Staunton raised, and made clear to the entire chamber that one must speak about a judge within a particular context of a particular kind and quality of motion. It is my understanding that I have fulfilled all the legal and constitutional requirements, but perhaps His Honour the Acting Speaker could share with us the ruling made at that time.

• (1430)

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: We do have the citation from the Speaker's ruling of July 11, 1995. I am quoting from Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate at page 1163.

I am at a disadvantage here, not having dealt with this issue myself, but I will quote to you the Speaker's words:

For my part, it would seem that while reflections on a judge's character are not permitted as a general rule of debate since the people occupying these positions are described, according to Beauchesne in citation 493, —

— which is the citation I just quoted —

— as "protected persons" and to do so is unparliamentary, precedent shows that it is permissible to make such reflections if it is done by way of a substantive motion.

Senator Cools: Precisely.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker:

Senator Cools has given appropriate notice and made such a motion. Although the motion does not specifically call for the removal of a judge of a superior court, the rules do not indicate this is necessary at this point. Parliament has the constitutional right to request the dismissal of a judge, and I would hesitate to interfere with this right in any way.

In any case, I believe that all honourable senators should conduct themselves in a way that is beyond reproach, considering that the people who are being accused or — I do not want to use the phrase "put on trial" — attacked, or placed under suspicion, are not here to defend themselves. It seems to me that it is a sound parliamentary rule to be extremely cautious in our choice of terms.

Things can be said differently, but surely people have a right to their own defence. That is impossible to do when one is not present to hear what is being said about oneself, which is a basic parliamentary courtesy. I would invite Senator Cools, who is an experienced parliamentarian, to be, in case of doubt, extremely careful in her choice of words.

Senator Cools: I thank the Acting Speaker very sincerely. Since we are speaking about the exercise of care and caution by parliamentarians not to cast reflections upon one other, perhaps I could ask Senator Lynch-Staunton to explain to this chamber what he meant by my speaking about a case in which I have an interest? This has been raised before.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: The debate upon this point of order cannot go on forever. I would invite Senator Cools to use up the rest of her time on her motion.

Senator Cools: I have no idea how much time I have had. I would like to make a statement, to wit: It is tiresome and hurtful for certain senators to keep referring to cases in which I have a personal interest, when there are no cases before the courts, and have not been for a substantial amount of time.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Your Honour, my understanding is that Senator Cools has asked me a question.

Senator Cools: You did not respond, and he said it was not necessary. He said that I should continue.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Order, please!

Senator Lynch-Staunton, are you rising on a further point of order?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I am willing to answer Senator Cools' question about the case to which I was referring. I want to reassure her that my understanding of her complaint is based on the case in which she was recently involved in Toronto. As I recall from what she told us, she had a problem in that she was summoned to appear before the court at the same time that she had duties before the Senate. That is the case to which I was referring. If I am wrong, I take it back.

Senator Cools: Please do.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I have to admit that I have much difficulty following Senator Cools' argumentation on her problems with the judiciary.

Senator Cools: I am pleased and happy that you are taking back your comment, senator.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Senator Cools, I will allow you to respond to the point of clarification. Earlier you inquired of the Chair as to how much time you have left. You have spoken for 10 minutes. Discounting the time for points of order, there are five minutes remaining in your time.

Senator Cools: Very well. I would ask leave of honourable senators to adjourn this matter.

It is very disturbing when people constantly impugn one's integrity. The only issues that I have ever raised in this chamber regarding this matter are the issues that concern this Senate and this chamber. I have never raised any other issue other than the issues of breach of privilege and contempt of Parliament. I am obviously a little agitated, so I would request leave to adjourn the debate and continue it tomorrow.

On motion of Senator Cools, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, November 2, 1995

The Senate met at 2:00 p.m., Senator Eymard G. Corbin, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

NATIONAL UNITY

AFTERMATH OF QUEBEC REFERENDUM—
EXPLANATION OF COMMENTS IN PRESS

Hon. Lise Bacon: Honourable senators, I have always lived by the same rule in my political life and since my arrival in Ottawa: Speak to journalists as little as possible.

Yesterday, when leaving the Liberal Party caucus — through the main door where danger always lurks — I met a journalist.

I do not wish to insult the reporter, Huguette Young of The Canadian Press, but I should like, nevertheless, to explain to honourable senators the questions that were asked of me and the responses that were given because, of course, in a short article there are only a few of the answers and none of the questions.

To Ms Young's question, "Do you think it will be symbolic?" — here she was speaking of the actions to be taken on Quebec and the distinct society — I told her we had not yet reached that stage, that there would be important decisions to be made shortly, and that discussions were under way with a view to meeting Quebecers' expectations.

To another question, "Will the decision be less than Meech?", I responded that I did not think it would be less, because at Meech Quebecers were listened to.

I added, however, that at Charlottetown, people were at least on the same wavelength, and that the Prime Minister of Canada will make the decision that meets Quebecers' expectations. It seems to me that I repeated that answer three times.

I just wanted to give honourable senators a little more information than what was reported in the newspaper, and I will continue to follow the golden rule of talking to reporters as little as possible.

TRANSPORT

CANCELLATION OF WINTER FERRY SERVICE BETWEEN
YARMOUTH, NOVA SCOTIA AND BAR HARBOUR, MAINE

Hon. Gerald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, I rise today to express my concern regarding the questionable future of Marine Atlantic's winter service between Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, and Bar Harbour, Maine.

Marine Atlantic announced on September 7 that it was cancelling winter sailings of this vital transportation link between southwestern Nova Scotia and New England. The decision was made without the benefit of any impact studies or analysis as to the effect cancelling the service would have on the economy of western Nova Scotia.

Apparently recognizing the consequences of making such a hasty announcement, the date of cancellation was extended from October 10 to December 31 to provide time for the provincial government to do an impact study, which I understand has been done. Although I applaud the decision of the Province of Nova Scotia to undertake such a study, which I had asked for last June, I am equally appalled by the statements of the Premier of Nova Scotia, John Savage, who commented that, "It's now up to the community to demonstrate...the case for retaining the ferry during the winter months." What kind of leadership is this? Why is the premier not out there supporting the people of southwestern Nova Scotia?

I remember when the federal government first floated this idea of providing six-month service between Yarmouth and Bar Harbour. I was the member of Parliament for that region at that time. I also remember the response of the then Premier of Nova Scotia, who is now one of our colleagues in this chamber, Senator Buchanan. He stood up to the Prime Minister at that time and stated that the reduction of service was wrong.

Now we have a premier who refuses to stand up for Nova Scotians. He simply says "use it or lose it." Perhaps he is taking this approach to keep his federal leader happy. Perhaps this is the new national policy, similar to the introduction of tolls on our national highway system, a policy which has been implemented without the benefit of debate in Parliament. Who knows? Perhaps Premier John Savage has gone so far as to tell the Prime Minister not to stick his neck out for this one, because in his mind the service is gone, come hell or high water.

I can tell the premier that this is low water, because the people of southwestern Nova Scotia deserve better representation than that. There are people who will stand up and fight for this ferry service, which is essential to the economic stability of all Nova Scotians. Nova Scotians need a leader who will stand up and fight for their province, whether it is for gun control, ferry service or helicopters, not one who is concerned about keeping his political friends in Ottawa happy.

Fortunately, Nova Scotia will have such a leader after the next election, when the PC party under its new leader, John Hamm, will provide true representation on behalf of the people.

AFTERMATH OF QUEBEC REFERENDUM—
COMMENTS OF JOHN NUNZIATA, M.P.

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, my remarks are for the entire Liberal caucus. I hope Senator Fairbairn listens to my words carefully.

I knew John Nunziata well when I was a member of the caucus of Liberal MPs and senators. I even chaired the caucus and had some difficult moments under the leadership of John Turner, a very respectable man. I repeat, John Turner is a highly respectable man.

I think that today, John Nunziata overdid it a bit, but then, we know John Nunziata. I sincerely hope I am heard by the government leader in the Senate, who sits in cabinet and in the caucus, and by all Liberals. I would hope, as well, that at least one or two of them would rise to dissociate themselves totally from these remarks, which are absolutely unacceptable as we go through a major crisis in Canada, where every word counts.

I am not, I repeat, particularly sensitive to insult. I am not nervous, but I do know the effect of each word and of the comments made by Mr. Nunziata yesterday. Regardless of whether we agree or disagree with the former premier of Quebec, Mr. Parizeau, or with Mr. Bouchard, Mr. Nunziata's comments are completely unacceptable.

If ordinary citizen John Nunziata makes such remarks, I have to say that I and all French Canadians in Quebec could not care less. However, when eminent Liberal and former Liberal leadership candidate John Nunziata makes such remarks, I consider that they reflect on the entire caucus of Liberal senators and MPs. I would like someone to call him to order.

In Mr. Pearson's time, such remarks would have been deemed unacceptable. When a member such as Mr. Cohen made somewhat similar remarks, he was not only called to order, he was shown the caucus door. I do not think I am exaggerating here.

I am not asking as much. I do sincerely hope that, as we go through a major identity crisis, people will at least have the necessary understanding. These remarks certainly do nothing to improve harmonious relations among the various people making up Canada. I still believe that Canada is the best country in the world.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

EXPLOSIVES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Colin Kenny, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources, presented the following report:

Thursday, November 2, 1995

The Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources has the honour to present its

EIGHTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-71, An Act to amend the Explosives Act, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, October 31, 1995, examined the said Bill and has agreed to report the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

COLIN KENNY
Deputy Chairman

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Kenny, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT—MOTION STANDS

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 58(1)h, I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Monday, November 6, 1995, at eight o'clock in the evening.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[English]

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella (Acting Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, perhaps the Deputy Leader of the Government would provide an explanation of the pressing business before the chamber that requires the attendance of senators next Monday evening.

Senator Prud'homme: Senator Carney will be upset!

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, that is a legitimate question, because normally we sit Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, although it is provided that our normal sitting days are Monday to Friday. Of course, when we sit Tuesday to Thursday, we must seek leave.

However, there are several outstanding matters which will be taken under consideration, presumably next week and the rest of this week. There is the further consideration of Bill C-69 and of the motion of the Honourable Senator MacDonald with respect to certain papers relating to the Pearson airport inquiry. As the honourable senator knows, there is the possibility of pursuing the establishment of a joint committee with respect to matters relating to the Department of National Defence and the reserves, and a report that was to be submitted to Parliament on October 31.

We also have some bills for second reading, and they will either be dealt with today or will carry over to next Tuesday. Certainly, Bill C-7 falls into that category and possibly one of the other bills, if other senators want to speak to them. Two bills will be receiving first reading today and, perhaps, second reading next week; namely, Bill C-61 and Bill C-103.

As well, honourable senators, we will be heading into the long holiday weekend. Barring unforeseen circumstances, we will take the normal parliamentary break the following week. We would like to ensure that all honourable senators, if we dispatch our legislation, our duties and responsibilities expeditiously, will be able to depart Ottawa in time to avoid the heavy weekend traffic.

Senator Kinsella: Honourable senators, in order to prepare for next week, can the Deputy Leader of the Government provide a little bit more specificity? Is it the deputy leader's understanding that honourable senators will be able to make their travel plans for the Remembrance Day ceremonies in their various regions on the basis that they will be able to leave Ottawa on Thursday? In other words, we will sit Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday and, if all goes well, can we expect to leave this place on Thursday?

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, as you know, the Deputy Leader of the Government is always anxious to accommodate all honourable senators, particularly those who reside in the remote areas of the country. I would be most anxious to see that they are so accommodated. Without making any definitive promises, I would hope that we would be able to deal with all pressing matters now before the Senate in due course and with dispatch.

Senator Kinsella: Can I take it, then, that at least a self-fulfilling prophecy dynamic is operating — in other words, by coming in on Monday, the expectation is that we will be able to leave on Wednesday?

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, as the Acting Deputy Leader of the Opposition knows, there have been discussions on both sides. I have already explained what the proposals may be. If we do complete our business on Wednesday, we would be able to make plans to depart on Thursday. If not, we will complete our business on Thursday and will be able to depart on Friday. If that does not happen, then we will complete our business on Friday and, hopefully, get home for Remembrance Day ceremonies, wherever they may be in the country, on Saturday.

Senator Doody: What about Christmas?

Senator Graham: I am not making any promises this far in advance about Christmas.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I was in Senator Graham's position long enough to know that it is very difficult, if not impossible, to give firm, long-term schedules. On the other hand, it is only fair to the members of this chamber that they know what can be expected for the next seven days. There is nothing on the agenda that is so pressing that the deputy leader could not at least say that we can plan to travel to our ridings on Wednesday night, in order to be there to meet responsibilities on the Remembrance Day weekend.

However, to leave us hanging like this, saying that if we do not do something on Wednesday we will be here on Thursday or Friday, is very unfair to members on both sides. We are only talking about next week. There is nothing on the agenda so pressing that we cannot commit ourselves to coming here on Monday night, in order to allow ourselves to be in our ridings on Friday and Saturday for Remembrance Day ceremonies.

Senator Graham: It was conveyed unofficially, prior to the sitting, to the Acting Deputy Leader of the Opposition that it would be my hope —

Senator Lynch-Staunton: We do not want hope; we want a commitment.

Senator Graham: — that if we conduct the business of the Senate as we should, then all honourable senators can make plans to be home for Remembrance Day.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, it does not matter to me whether we sit on a Monday night, Sunday morning, a Sunday night, Saturday, at Easter, on Christmas day or whenever. I will be here. It seems to me that as sensible adults we should be able to reach an understanding. I do not necessarily agree with Senator Lynch-Staunton, but I fail to understand why we have these incredible last-minute changes regarding when we are supposed to sit or not supposed to sit.

I have made all kinds of commitments. I mention this because of the referendum we just had. I have started a series of meetings in Montreal. I think that in the future we may need a more reliable schedule.

Some of us take it for granted that we sit from Tuesday to Thursday. I think we should try not to make commitments on those days. By the way, next Wednesday marks the 30th anniversary of Warren Allemand's election. I hope the Liberals will attend the celebration. I am announcing that on Wednesday, November 8, he will celebrate 30 years in politics. I will be there for the celebration. I intend to make a speech. This is not an invitation to come and listen to me speak. I can get to the Senate and then go back to Montreal.

I am thinking of other senators. I really fail to understand why we are being asked to sit Monday night. I understand that the bill on electoral boundaries readjustment is being held up in the House of Commons. When I talked to Senator Nolin and the people who are working on this, I realized that the bill was being held up in the House of Commons. I no longer understand our agenda. I wish there were some consensus on the agenda. Why do we sit and why do we not sit?

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, there is a problem with the audio system. It is suggested that we adjourn for five or ten minutes until the problem is cleared up.

[English]

Apparently there is no interpretation. Perhaps we should put the sitting on hold until the problem is corrected —

Honourable senators, I have a new announcement to make. It seems that the system is now functioning. Therefore the sitting continues.

Honourable senators, we are now dealing with the motion of Senator Graham. If there are no further interventions, I will put the motion to the house.

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow: Honourable senators, perhaps I missed something in the interpretation on the question that was asked by the previous speaker. Is the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate prepared to state that unless there are unforeseen circumstances, the Senate will adjourn next Wednesday for the weekend?

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, I was about to respond to all honourable senators that it is possible we could adjourn by Wednesday. I am sure that all honourable senators would appreciate that if those of us who have the responsibility of making decisions for the Senate or recommendations to the Senate are to err, we would err on the side of Monday, rather than Thursday or Friday. It is hoped that we will be able to complete our work on Wednesday. In fact, it is conceivable that we may do so.

Senator Kinsella: Honourable senators, for the greatest clarity for everyone, perhaps the Deputy Leader of the Government could review the work that must be done next week.

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, perhaps I should delay the adjournment motion and we will see how the debate unfolds. If honourable senators are agreed, I will move the adjournment later today.

Motion stands.

AGRICULTURE AND AGRI-FOOD ADMINISTRATIVE MONETARY PENALTIES BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-61, to establish a system of administrative monetary penalties for the enforcement of the Canada Agricultural Products Act, the Feeds Act, the Fertilizers Act, the Health of Animals Act, the Meat Inspection Act, the Pest Control Products Act, the Plant Protection Act and the Seeds Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Graham, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday, November 7, 1995.

EXCISE TAX ACT INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-103, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Income Tax Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Graham, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday, November 7, 1995.

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

DECISION ON PRIVILEGES OF THE COURT—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, pursuant to rules 56(1) and (2) and 57(2), I give notice that I will call the attention of the Senate to a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, privileges of the court, and the learned judgment rendered by the distinguished Justice, the Honourable Mr. Justice Peter deC. Cory.

PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. Jean-Louis Roux: Honourable senators, I draw your attention to the fact that, on October 19, Montreal's city council unanimously approved a resolution asking the Senate to quickly pass Bill C-68, the gun control legislation.

[English]

PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to present a petition on behalf of 49 citizens of Perth, Ontario, who ask that the Senate withdraw all support for Bill C-68.

QUESTION PERIOD

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

CORNWALLIS PARK DEVELOPMENT AGENCY—ALLEGATIONS OF MISMANAGEMENT—RESPONSE OF MINISTER

Hon. Gerald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, yesterday, I asked a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate regarding the Cornwallis Park Development Agency, the mandate of which is to attract businesses to the area in the wake of the closing of the base at Cornwallis. Given the fact that we are talking about very large sums of taxpayers' dollars — somewhere in the vicinity of $20 million — could the Leader of the Government tell us what steps her colleague Minister David Dingwall has taken to address the serious allegations regarding the operations of the agency, including reports that assets have been leaving the base, such as church pews which have ended up in the church attended by the local member of Parliament.

I do not take exception to churches obtaining church pews. However, having them wind up in the church attended by a member of Parliament raises some questions. This has taken place in spite of the fact that all assets were to have been frozen until the deed was transferred from the Department of National Defence to the Cornwallis agency.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I cannot respond to the specifics of my honourable friend's questions concerning the pews. I should be more than happy to receive from my honourable friend any of the news reports to which he has referred.

As I said yesterday, this is a locally established not-for-profit agency. Concerns have been raised similar to those my honourable friend is raising today, with respect to internal administration matters within that agency. I am advised that ACOA has subsequently undertaken an audit of the operations of the agency. When the problems are resolved, the funding will be restored. At the moment, the funding stands in abeyance, as my honourable friend knows.

Senator Comeau: Honourable senators, I would be happy to send to the Leader of the Government the information and the sources of the information which I have obtained.

CORNWALLIS PARK DEVELOPMENT AGENCY—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY AUDITOR GENERAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gerald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, given that $20 million is a rather large sum of money, could the leader advise us as to whether the Auditor General has been asked to investigate the questions and the allegations pertaining to the internal administration of the agency and the board of directors?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): I cannot answer that question today, honourable senators. I will attempt to do so later.

I have just conveyed the information that ACOA itself is undertaking an audit, and I imagine it will be allowed to continue and come to its own conclusions.

ANSWERS TO ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS TABLED

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 97 on the Order Paper — by Senator LeBreton.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 101 on the Order Paper — by Senator Comeau.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before we proceed to Orders of the Day, with respect to government business and the bills before us, as a courtesy to all honourable senators and at the request of the opposition, there will be a slight variation with respect to the order in which government business will be called today. I emphasize that this is at the request of the opposition.

• (1440)

Therefore, honourable senators, we will proceed with Item No. 1, Bill C-105, then Item No. 4, Bill C-102, and then revert to the normal order as on the Order Paper. Therefore item No. 2 becomes No. 3, and No. 3 becomes No. 4, and then the Order Paper will follow as it is printed.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS IMPLEMENTATION BILL, 1995

SECOND READING

Hon. Peter Bosa moved the second reading of Bill C-105, to implement a convention between Canada and the Republic of Latvia, a convention between Canada and the Republic of Estonia, a convention between Canada and the Republic of Trinidad and Tobago, and a protocol between Canada and the Republic of Hungary, for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income.

He said: Honourable senators, I appreciate the opportunity to speak today to Bill C-105, the Income Tax Conventions Implementation Bill, 1995. This is a piece of work-a-day legislation that I hope will receive speedy passage by this chamber. It is not a contentious bill.

Bill C-105 implements reciprocal income tax conventions between Canada and Latvia, and Canada and Estonia, and amends the 1966 convention between Canada and Trinidad and Tobago. It also contains a protocol amending the current income tax treaty between Canada and Hungary. At present, Canada has 55 double taxation treaties with other countries. Passage of Bill C-105 will increase that number to 57.

Tax conventions are designed with two main objectives: to avoid double taxation on income tax and to prevent income tax evasion. Not all tax treaties, however, require parliamentary approval. If the end result of a tax matter is already provided for under the Income Tax Act, then no legislative authority is required. An example would be an agreement confirming the tax-exempt status of airline and shipping profits under the Income Tax Act. Since double taxation treaties do, in fact, change the effect of domestic legislation, particularly the Income Tax Act, they always require parliamentary approval, as do amending protocols.

Canada began negotiating tax treaties when the 1971 income tax reform legislation required Canada to expand its network of double taxation conventions with other countries. While there is a lengthy process involved in negotiating a tax treaty, no legislative authority is needed to negotiate and sign a tax treaty relationship with a particular country. However, three primary factors are taken into consideration when Canada decides to negotiate a tax treaty with another country: First, how much Canadian investment is planned for a country is considered; second, Canada's interest in wanting to encourage economic reforms in that country is weighed; and third, the interest in that country in expanding its trade and economic relations with Canada is also looked at.

The decision to pursue a tax treaty can also result from an announcement in a budget. The 1992 and 1993 budgets, for example, each contained relevant measures. The 1992 budget contained an announcement that Canada was willing to reduce its withholding tax on direct dividends to meet international norms. Then it was announced in the 1993 budget that Canada was willing to eliminate its withholding tax on specific royalties to ensure the competitiveness of our technological industry.

Bill C-105 addresses the dual issue of fair taxation and good international relations. These tax treaties and the protocol are similar to conventions already concluded by Canada and approved previously here in this chamber. Each treaty has been negotiated individually, and has taken into account each country's relevant policies. In addition, the treaties in Bill C-105 are all patterned after the Model Double Taxation Convention prepared by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development.

Bill C-105 also provides an equitable solution to the double taxation problems that exist between Canada and these countries. Double taxation occurs where international transactions result in the same income being taxable in the hands of the same person by more than one country.

Further, the protocol with Hungary brings that treaty in line with current Canadian tax policy regarding withholding task rates, a matter I will discuss in a moment.

For the treaties with Estonia, Latvia, and Trinidad and Tobago, here is a brief summary of what Bill C-105 provides: There will be a 5 per cent withholding tax rate on dividends paid to a parent company and on branch profits, and a 10 per cent withholding tax rate on interest and royalties. For Trinidad and Tobago, management fees are also included. A withholding tax rate of 15 per cent will apply on other dividends.

There are also a number of exemptions in regard to interest. For Estonia and Latvia, interest to the governments, the central banks, the Export Development Corporation and from sales made on credit will be zero-rated. For Trinidad and Tobago, interest paid for government indebtedness, on loans or credit from the Export Development Corporation, and to pension funds will also be zero-rated.

Any future changes that Estonia and Latvia may extend to other OECD countries concerning the withholding tax on copyright and patent royalties will also be extended to Canadians. Trinidad and Tobago will maintain the exemption on copyright royalties.

Pension payments will be taxed at a maximum rate of 15 per cent in the source country, as will annuity payments in Trinidad and Tobago. War pensions in Trinidad and Tobago will be exempt.

In addition, social security pensions will be taxed in the originating country, and the withholding tax rate on annuity payments will drop to 10 per cent.

Two matters apply specifically to Trinidad and Tobago: There will no longer be a two-year exemption for visiting teachers, and seasonal workers earning under $8,500 will not have to pay Canadian tax.

The protocol negotiated with Hungary is somewhat different in that it amends an existing tax treaty between Canada and Hungary. This treaty reduced the withholding tax rate to 10 per cent on dividends paid to a parent company, and 15 per cent in all other cases. Canada's willingness, as announced in the 1992 budget, to reduce its withholding tax on direct dividends to 5 per cent led to the protocol included in this bill. Bill C-105 subsequently reduces that rate, and the rate of branch tax to 5 per cent by 1997. There are no changes in the rate of withholding tax on other dividends.

In an increasingly interdependent, open, global economy, reciprocal tax treaties make sense. They are important tools for countries. The benefits tax treaties provide in helping to stabilize tax systems foster international trade and investment, which are very important in today's environment.

There will be no revenue loss to Canada from the concessions contained in these conventions. Along with gaining from increased trade and investment, we will also gain from the reduced withholding tax rates and other concessions granted by the treaty partners.

• (1450)

As I said earlier, there is nothing contentious in this bill, and I urge honourable senators to give it speedy passage.

Hon. John Sylvain: Honourable senators, I do not see a need to speak in great detail on the bill at this point. I believe my colleague opposite has given an extensive description of its main provision. It would be my suggestion that the appropriate place to examine this legislation in detail is in committee.

I do, however, have one question regarding this bill. It has to do with the legislative process it followed in arriving in the Senate. Canada has negotiated about 60 tax treaties with various countries in the past. Many, if not all of these, have been given effect by bills such as the one before us today. As senators will recall, the most recent one in this chamber was Bill S-9, the Canada-United States Tax Convention bill. This bill was introduced first in this chamber and then passed on to the other place — somewhat the reverse of what usually occurs.

Honourable senators, when I learned that Bill C-105 had been introduced first in the House of Commons, I was curious as to why this change of process from Bill S-9, and I had some research done into the question of the traditional route for bills of this nature. The question was: Is it the House of Commons first or the Senate first? I was surprised to learn that one must go back a great many years to find a bill of this nature being initiated in the House of Commons.

Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, or to the Deputy Leader. Why the change in procedure with respect to Bill C-105? Why did the government decide not to initiate this legislation in this chamber, as has been done with many previous bills of this kind?

Honourable senators, please understand that this is not just idle curiosity on my part. It has been a long-standing complaint of senators on both sides of this house that the manner in which legislation flows is at times less than optimal. It has been stated often that this house could be better utilized, and the legislative calendar better managed, if more bills were initiated in this place. It would balance the flow. The decision to break with past practices in relation to this taxation convention bill causes me to think that the government of the day thinks otherwise.

Apart from this question, honourable senators, I repeat that I believe this legislation can best be examined before committee where departmental officials can be called upon to speak to the details of the bill.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I am not sure if Senator Bosa is responding to a direct question or if he is rising to close debate on second reading. If he is indeed rising to close debate, I should advise honourable senators that that would have the effect of closing the debate on second reading of this bill.

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella (Acting Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to address the questions raised by my honourable colleague Senator Sylvain. If Senator Bosa, the sponsor of the bill, has that information, perhaps he could relay it to the Deputy Leader of the Government. However, if Senator Bosa speaks again, as the Acting Speaker has told us correctly, the debate will be over.

There is an issue of principle here, although I suppose it does not relate to the principle of the bill. However, the principle is that, in the past, these kinds of bills have always been initiated in the Senate. This bill today represents a change in that practice, and when there is a change, we would like to know the policy behind that change. Perhaps those who are supporting this bill would share with us why there has been a change of policy.

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, I agree with Senator Sylvain that this is a different practice. In all my years in the Senate, we have always dealt first in this chamber with such legislation. Why this practice has now changed and why the bill was initiated in the House of Commons is a mystery to me at this moment. This legislation was given to me recently, and I am as anxious as Senator Sylvain to learn in committee why this change in practice has occurred.

With that in mind, honourable senators, I move that Bill C-105 be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Senator Bosa, the Chair recognized you to respond to a question, but now you are making a motion to refer the bill to committee.

Senator Sylvain: Honourable senators, before we close the debate on this matter, Senator Bosa has said that he could not respond right now. Perhaps he would be good enough to respond as soon as possible, and give us the reasons why this change has been made.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Bosa, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

CUSTOMS ACT CUSTOMS TARIFF

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Céline Hervieux-Payette moved second reading of Bill C-102, to amend the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff and to make related and consequential amendments to other acts.

She said: Honourable senators, I welcome this opportunity to open the debate on second reading of Bill C-102, to amend the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff.

Honourable senators will recall that this bill proposes major tariff changes that will greatly benefit Canadian businesses and consumers in the long run. These changes include the enhancement to Canada's duty deferral programs and tariff reductions on a wide range of manufacturing inputs, which will improve the competitive position of Canadian industry by lowering input costs.

Bill C-102 provides for the updating of travellers' exemptions. This measure, combined with other measures contained in the bill, will facilitate the processing of travellers and help our customs officers to focus on real priorities like cracking down on smugglers and processing our growing commercial imports.

The legislation also contains several technical changes that will help improve the customs tariff's application. One of the most significant changes in this regard deals with the value for duty of imported goods.

Honourable senators, at second reading, my honourable colleague described in some detail the main tariff changes contained in this bill. I will therefore simply restate the provisions in question.

• (1500)

[English]

I will commence with the reduction of tariffs on a wide range of manufacturing inputs.

This amendment will enhance the competitiveness of Canadian producers, both internationally and within Canada, by removing a competitive disadvantage that currently burdens Canadian manufacturers vis-à-vis their U.S. competitors. It will do this by reducing to U.S. levels tariffs on some 1,500 imported manufacturing inputs.

Right now, the discrepancy between Canadian and U.S. tariff rates negatively affects Canadian manufacturers, mainly in export markets. Exporters are reimbursed for their input duty through what is known as "duty drawback". However, existing duty drawback entitlements will end in January 1996 under a NAFTA commitment. Because we want Canadian exporters to enjoy the full benefit of our free trade agreements, we are bringing our tariffs on inputs into line with those of the United States.

Another key provision of this bill is the enhancement of Canada's duty deferral programs which defer duties on import goods pending their formal entry into Canada, in situations where those inputs are ultimately destined for export from Canada. Canada currently has three duty deferral programs: duty drawback, inward processing, and bonded warehousing. For some time, Canadian business has been urging the government to make these programs more competitive and comparable to those of our major trading partners. The bill before us responds to that need. By enhancing, streamlining and consolidating our duty deferral programs, it will lower costs for Canada's exporters, and make our programs more easily accessible by small and medium-sized business.

I want to emphasize that these changes enjoy broad industry and regional support.

Related to the duty deferral amendments is a change to the Access to Information Act. This change protects the confidentiality of taxpayer information provided by the importing community under the Custom Act, Customs Tariff, and the Special Import Measures Act.

A further amendment set out in this legislation is essentially an updating measure. I am referring to the increase of duty exemptions for Canadians travelling abroad. Travellers' exemptions are adjusted periodically. However, our exemptions have not been increased since 1983. As a result, they are currently out of line with exemptions provided by our major trading partners. This bill will raise the levels of exemptions as follows: to $50 from $20, after a 24-hour absence; to $200 from $100 after 48 hours; and, to $500 from $300 after seven days, with the once-a-year limit being dropped.

These changes will benefit travellers and streamline customs operations. They are also consistent with the Canada-U.S. Accord on Our Shared Border, to permit travellers and goods to move easily across the Canada-U.S. border. The new travellers' exemptions are already operating without disruption or revenue loss.

The bill also contains measures to streamline Canada Customs' clearance procedures under what are known as "basket tariff items." This system replaces thousands of existing categories of goods with as few as 12 categories. As a result, collection of duties from travellers at the boarder could be speeded up by more than 50 per cent.

In addition to the amendments I have discussed, this bill contains a number of other changes of a largely technical or housekeeping nature. Most will serve to clarify the intent of existing customs and tariff provisions. Perhaps the most important of these deals with the value for duty of imported goods. It is essential that Canada's valuation rules not be vulnerable to manipulation or abuse. The valuation amendment will clarify our existing policy, that goods must be valued on the basis of the price actually paid by the Canadian importer. Without such clarification, there is a risk that goods could be valued according to the price between two foreign parties. This could mean lower customs' values, and with it, lower duties and taxes. This was clearly never intended under the GATT Valuation Code.

The amendment is consistent with, and will serve to clarify, Canada's longstanding policy on valuation, a policy which is in complete conformity with our international commitments. Our major trading partners, who have long been aware of Canada's approach to valuation, are aware of our proposed amendment, and have not raised any concerns about our policy or the amendment.

I would now like to point out to my honourable colleagues that the legislation does contain one tariff increase. The British preferential tariff is being withdrawn from certain rubber footwear, thereby restoring the 20 per cent most favoured nation tariff rate. Former British preferential tariff imports will now compete on the same basis as other foreign suppliers.

At the same time, I would note that the bill allows for future improvements to preferential tariff treatment for the world's poorest developing countries.

To sum up, this legislation is about promoting competitiveness, increasing exports, and enhancing employment prospects for Canadians. Not surprisingly then, the great majority of Canadians affected by these changes will welcome them.

I therefore strongly urge all my colleagues in this chamber to support this bill.

[Translation]

Hon. Roch Bolduc: Honourable senators, as you know, trade is the motor of the Canadian economy.

Last year, our exports of merchandise and goods totalled $220 billion, more or less the equivalent of one-third of every dollar we earn in this country. This year, our exports are again expected to reach record levels.

[English]

Indeed, exports have doubled since the former Progressive Conservative government signed the Free Trade Agreement in 1988. Since then, exports to the United States have climbed in each of the 21 commodity sectors measured by Statistics Canada.

Honourable senators may recall how those who now sit on the government benches fought against free trade, saying it would destroy our economy and turn us into the fifty-first state. Honourable senators opposite may also recall the following from the Red Book:

A Liberal Government will renegotiate both the FTA and NAFTA to obtain: a subsidies code; an anti-dumping code; a more effective dispute resolution mechanism, and the same energy protection as Mexico.

No substantive changes were made to NAFTA prior to its implementation, and for good reason. Freer trade means jobs and opportunities. The FTA and NAFTA are working. However, as a trading nation, we also import goods and services. While free trade means that it is easier to bring goods into the country, we still have rules. Even though they may be diminishing in importance, we still have tariffs. Tariffs on imports can make goods produced in Canadian factories less competitive both at home and abroad by driving up the cost of the final product. About one-third of the inputs used by our factories are imported.

In 1992, the Prosperity Steering Group said Canada's most-favoured-nation, or MFN, rates on manufacturing inputs should be reduced to the levels faced by our competitors in the United States. MFN tariff rates in the U.S. on average are 3.2 percentage points below Canadian levels.

In the 1994 budget, the Liberal government said it would continue the previous government's review of the tariff system, including the effect of tariffs on input costs. Consultation with the private sector found broad support for lower MFN tariffs. Bill C-102 reduces most-favoured-nation tariffs on a wide range of inputs classified under some 1,500 tariff lines, retroactive to June 13, 1995. The cuts bring those rates in line with those in the United States. We are told that future cuts will be made as the United States lowers its rates to comply with the World Trade Organization Agreement.

The government has various programs to help relieve the effects of duty on business. For example, Ottawa will refund duties on inputs used to make goods that are then exported.

The government says that the changes in this bill will enhance export-based duty deferral programs, first, by streamlining such programs; second, by making the programs easier for businesses of all sizes to use by removing some administrative rules; third, by providing more up-front relief of duties; and, fourth, by allowing local government and business to market the programs more effectively abroad. Such measures are most welcome.

At the same time, we are told that the changes to the Access to Information Act will help keep confidential the information importers give to Canada Customs.

Bill C-102 raises the current duty-free limits for travellers retroactive to last June 13, bringing them in line with those of other countries.

Goods from most Commonwealth members also qualify for the British Preferential Tariff or BPT. These rates are usually higher than the general provincial tariff or GPF rates, but lower than most-favoured-nation tariffs.

In 1994, rubber footwear ceased to qualify for the lower general tariff, a response to concerns from Canadian manufacturers. However, several producers of footwear also qualify for the British preferential tariff. As a result, low-cost rubber footwear can still enter the country at reduced tariff rates. Bill C-102 ends the British preferential tariff for rubber footwear.

Bill C-102 will also give the government more flexibility when it extends preferential tariffs to the world's poorest developing countries. Ottawa could expand the list of goods from such countries as qualify for lower rates, or it could vary the tariff on certain goods, for example, by establishing a set of rates that is lower than the most favoured nation rate but higher than the general preferential tariff rate.

Finally, this bill contains a number of what we are told are mainly technical changes to various tariff-related laws. The government says that these tariffs are to clarify, streamline or make more transparent, various rules.

Honourable senators, let us move this bill into committee for further study.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Hervieux-Payette, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

CULTURAL PROPERTY EXPORT AND IMPORT ACT INCOME TAX ACT TAX COURT OF CANADA ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Michael Kirby moved the second reading of Bill C-93, to amend the Cultural Property Export and Import Act, the Income Tax Act and the Tax Court of Canada Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I rise today to move second reading of Bill C-93, to amend the Cultural Properties Export Act and Import Act, the Income Tax Act and the Tax Court of Canada Act. The simple purpose of this bill is to amend these acts in order to establish an appeal mechanism to the Tax Court of Canada for a determination from the Canadian Cultural Property Export Review Board of the fair market value of certified cultural property, most commonly a work of art. Having given you that long, wonderful, technical phrase, let me tell you what the bill essentially does.

In the budget of February 1990, the responsibility for determining the fair market value of cultural property donated to Canadian museums, libraries and art galleries was moved from the Department of Revenue Canada to the Cultural Property Export Review Board. The amendments putting this transfer into effect became law at the end of 1991, and the review board assumed its new responsibility in January 1992.

At the time this transfer was done, no provision was put in place for any appeal mechanism to the review board decision. Therefore if someone who wished to donate a certified cultural property to a Canadian cultural institution did not like the valuation put on the value of that donation by the review board, there was no way to appeal that valuation.

Prior to the creation of the review board, there had been an appeal mechanism in place. When this responsibility rested with Revenue Canada, an appeal mechanism existed. When the change was made, that was clearly neglected, and no appeal mechanism was put in place.

Consequently, people who want to donate cultural artifacts to various institutions — and indeed the institutions themselves are also affected by this — are left in a position where, if either side of a transaction does not like the value, there is no appeal process and they must simply take the value as given to them by the review board.

The purpose of this bill is to make one very simple change in the process, namely to put in place an appeal mechanism, that appeal mechanism being the Tax Court of Canada. Therefore, if you wish to make a donation to someone or some institution of a work of art, you go to the review board and have it valued. If you do not agree with that value, or if the institution to which you are making the donation does not agree with that value, either of the two sides can then go to a neutral third party called the Tax Court of Canada in order to appeal the valuation.

Honourable senators, all this bill does is puts in place a review mechanism within the purview of the Tax Court of Canada; a review mechanism that previously existed when the predecessor of the current review board, Revenue Canada, was in charge. When the change was made in 1990, the elimination of this review mechanism was merely an oversight. The purpose of this change to the Cultural Properties Export and Import Act is to put that review mechanism in place in order to ensure that there is a greater degree of fairness to the procedures involved in evaluating a donation that an individual wishes to make to a museum, an art gallery, archives, libraries, and so on.

Honourable senators, this is a very simple bill. I have explained briefly what it does. Therefore, I hope that we can support quick passage of this bill at second reading.

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, this legislation deserves support since it returns to donors, museums, archives and libraries, as Senator Kirby has said, a right they lost five years ago. The right to appeal to the Tax Court of Canada when the value of their gift is in dispute will not directly affect the vast majority of Canadians, but it will help preserve for them, and for future generations, millions of dollars' worth of culturally significant works of art, artifacts and papers. That is the intent of the Cultural Property Export and Import Act. This amendment before us, although largely a technical one, will help further that intent.

To give just one example of what could happen if we did not have this legislation in place, I recall the interest that was shown in Louis Riel's diary when it was discovered in Manitoba just 25 years ago. The 1885 record turned up in a box of papers held by a former Winnipeg newspaper man, an historian. At the time, archivists on the Prairies showed little interest in buying it. With no law to prevent it leaving the country and no tax incentive to encourage donation, the diary was sold at auction in Montreal for $26,500. A great deal of interest was shown by collectors from Texas. Fortunately, the successful bidder was former Conservative member of Parliament Gene Rheume and his partners, Bill Neville and Bill Lee. The Winnipeg woman who took it to auction recalls that the American collectors were somehow persuaded to allow it to remain in this country. The diary was sold again, and, in the mid-eighties, purchased from its Edmonton owner by the Saskatchewan government for $75,000. It now has a permanent place in the Saskatchewan Archives.

Six years after that Montreal auction, the Cultural Property Export and Import Act came into force. Since then, Canadians have donated objects valued at some $700 million based on fair market assessment. Not all have the immense historical value of a Riel diary, but, without question, they are worth far more today than the day they were donated and will only continue to increase in value.

Almost 300 museums, archives and libraries across Canada are eligible to receive these donations under the act and to encourage those gifts through reduced taxes. Our national institutions depend increasingly on these donations to build their collections. For example, in 1974, three years before the act was in place, the National Archives received papers valued at a very modest $102,000. Ten years later, the value had increased to $1.5 million, and by last year it had doubled to more than $3.8 million. The National Gallery has received gifts of art valued at almost $5 million in the last five years alone. That is almost one-third the amount the gallery spent to acquire new works during that period. Now many institutions are seeing their budgets to purchase new works reduced or frozen.

Critics of the act have called it a tax loophole for the wealthy. Certainly owners of cultural objects receive more generous tax concessions than our tax law gives others who donate money to charity. The amendments before us do not alter that situation, and perhaps that is something the government should review. It is worth noting that in practice, unless an object is valued at more than $1,000, the review process does not happen. The incentive aims to keep significant works of art, artifacts and papers in this country, not to create a widely used tax scam.

Critics suggest that some $60 million in tax credits yearly places too great a burden on taxpayers. I suggest it is false economy to eliminate something that almost immediately gives the public double its investment. In effect, taxpayers acquire objects at almost half price. Soon their value increases and their cultural worth is invaluable.

There has also been considerable criticism of the review board in recent years, particularly since 1991 when it began to determine the value of objects. Disputes have arisen in 10 per cent of the cases. The financial press has claimed that some donations have been greatly overvalued. Tax lawyers and collectors have complained of consistent under-evaluations. The slow pace of the process has been blamed for the loss of one painting in 1993 which sold at auction in New York for almost $2 million. That same year an independent consultant spoke with art dealers, collectors and the review board and found unanimous consent that a method of appealing the board's decision was needed.

That is all this legislation will do, restore to donors a right they had when Revenue Canada conducted assessments. First they must ask the review board for a reassessment, or the institution that receives the donation can ask the board for one. I have some concern about increasing the board's workload. It has a very small staff and is already so taxed that it has not delivered an annual report since the 1991-92 fiscal year.

Honourable senators, few of us are art experts, historians or tax experts. As parliamentarians, we can claim expertise in seeing the value of laws that preserve our country's history and identity. Our institutions do not have the resources to buy up everything of value. Experts who work in them, as some did 25 years ago after seeing the Riel diary, may occasionally fail to recognize a treasure and part with their limited money to acquire it. We need a strong system to encourage donations. The amendment before us modestly strengthens it and for that reason, on balance, I support it.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I assume that the bill will be sent to a committee for consideration. There are two or three questions I should like to have answered. I will mention them now so that when the bill is in committee the answers can be brought forth readily.

First, I should like to know what the average annual dollar value of the gifts has been over the last few years. Senator Spivak just now mentioned to some extent what the experience was with appeals when Revenue Canada was in charge of this program. I think we should be told in committee what percentage of the cases in which an evaluation was made went to appeal, when there was an appeal, and in terms of value what percentage went to appeal. The third question is how the criteria for evaluation are set. I am especially interested in the criteria used in evaluating papers which are donated to public institutions.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Michael Kirby: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. I thank Senator Stewart for his questions. I can assure him that we will deal with those questions in detail when the bill comes before the committee.

On motion of Senator Kirby, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

CONTROLLED DRUGS AND SUBSTANCES BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Marie-P. Poulin moved the second reading of Bill C-7, respecting the control of certain drugs, their precursors and other substances and to amend certain other Acts and repeal the Narcotic Control Act in consequence thereof.

She said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to speak today on Bill C-7, the controlled drugs and substances bill. This bill was first introduced in the House of Commons during the previous Parliament. Unfortunately, it died on the Order Paper at the close of the session. This government recognized the need for better controls over certain substances and believed it important for Canadians that this legislation be reintroduced at the beginning of its mandate.

When Bill C-7 was referred to the subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Health in the House of Commons, members of the subcommittee worked closely to ensure that the views of a broad range of concerned individuals were carefully considered. The subcommittee heard many witnesses and examined the complexities of this legislation. There was representation from health care providers, the legal profession, law enforcement agencies, researchers, public advocacy groups and other interested parties.

This bill demonstrates how consultation and cooperation have produced a balanced piece of legislation which addresses the concerns expressed. As a result, the subcommittee unanimously supported this bill in its report. I am now urging all honourable senators to support it.

Many substances we are dealing with here have strong medical components. The prime aim of this bill is to make them available to health professionals and their patients for legitimate medical purposes. We also want to control these substances because in the wrong hands, used in the wrong way, they can cause great harm to Canadians, particularly young people and their families, while damaging the social fabric of our great country.

Bill C-7 sharpens the tools that we can use to control the production and distribution of high-risk preparations so that they can be safely used as prescription drugs. Bill C-7 also recognizes a positive approach to treatment programs for those who are afflicted by drug addiction. It supports the availability of help and appropriate treatment for those who want to get back their health and resume a normal life.

• (1530)

In other words, the bill protects the rational use of some controlled substances as medicines, while acting against the illicit distribution of these same substances. It recognizes that controlled drugs are indispensable and that their availability should not be restricted or compromised.

Bill C-7 promotes the judicious use of medications by indicating ways in which controlled drugs can be handled, distributed and used. These substances are included in the legislation to protect the health and safety of the Canadian public, while allowing their use for medical purposes by the people who need them.

On the other hand, these substances have a strong potential for abuse. These substances are powerful. They have the power to do good and also the power to do harm.

[English]

This bill brings together the Narcotic Control Act and parts of the Food and Drugs Act to deal with controlled drugs and substances and narcotic preparations. It is aimed at modernizing existing procedures and controlling a wider range of substances. It is therefore more comprehensive and flexible than the legislation it supplants.

Honourable senators, the government has taken seriously the concerns expressed by witnesses at the hearings of the subcommittee of the House on this bill, as well as those put forward by honourable members from all parties of the House of Commons. Many of the witnesses who appeared before the House subcommittee not only addressed Bill C-7 specifically but wanted to put broader issues on the agenda. As a result, honourable senators will be pleased to know the subcommittee recommended in a separate report that the Standing Committee on Health undertake a broad review of the policies surrounding substance abuse. This review will provide an opportunity to explore the political, social, legal and economic impacts of drug abuse.

[Translation]

The central focus of Bill C-7 is therefore the health of Canadians, although some of its provisions deal with judicial measures and their enforcement. This reduces the risk that drugs produced for legitimate purposes could be diverted into the illegal street market. Canadians will have access, as before, through their physician or pharmacist, to whatever drugs they need to treat their illnesses.

In concluding, I would like to point out that consultations on this legislation have brought to the fore certain concerns about the availability of medicinal herbs in Canada. It should be noted that Bill C-7 does not in any way affect medicinal herbs or homeopathic products. These products will continue to be regulated by Parts I and II of the Food and Drugs Act. Provisions covering their use, distribution and sale will not change with the coming into force of Bill C-7.

Honourable senators, we know that as legislators our task is substantially to strike the appropriate balance to meet the needs of Canadians. I believe that we have done so with this legislation. Consequently, I urge all honourable senators to support this bill, as I do today. I would like to thank all those who contributed their comments, study and hard work.

On motion of Senator Kinsella, debate adjourned.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT BILL, 1995

MOTION TO INSTRUCT LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE TO TABLE FINAL REPORT—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government), pursuant to notice of November 1, 1995, moved:

That it be an instruction of this House to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs that no later than Wednesday, November 22, 1995, it present its final report to the Senate on the Message from the House of Commons, dated June 20, 1995, and on the motion of the Honourable Senator Graham dated June 28, 1995, regarding Bill C-69, An Act to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions and the readjustment of electoral boundaries.

She said: Honourable senators, this motion is an effort to get the Senate moving again on Bill C-69, concerning electoral boundaries readjustment. This is the second time in recent weeks that I have used this procedure to try to encourage the progress of important legislation into this chamber from committee, so that all senators in this house can have an opportunity to make decisions on bills which involve critical time elements or deadlines. This exercise is in no way intended to curtail the ability of a committee to do its work. Rather, it is an effort to get that work done in a reasonable period of time.

Redistribution of boundaries of constituencies represented by elected members of Parliament has been before this Parliament in one way or another since March 18, 1994. The issue has gone through the variations of two different bills and intensive study by committees in both the House of Commons and the Senate. It has been bounced back to the House of Commons twice by the Senate with amendments. In spite of all that, the issue has advanced nowhere at all.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: With reason.

Senator Fairbairn: The electoral clock is ticking. Bill C-69 is trapped, deep-sixed, if you will, in the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. Under the guise of a requirement for even further study, this important legislation has been buried in this committee without a meeting held or a witness heard since July of this year.

Some senators opposite have declared that this bill does not suit them, and therefore it should not apply for the next election.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Who said that?

Senator Fairbairn: Who said that?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: You said that some senators said the bill does not suit them.

Senator Fairbairn: Senator Lynch-Staunton, I do not believe that — Senator Lynch-Staunton: I am sorry to interrupt, but Senator Fairbairn said that some senators said the bill does not suit them, and I wondered which senators that would be.

Senator Fairbairn: I speak of my friend the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, who does not agree with the bill.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: That is something else.

Senator Fairbairn: Perhaps I should change the grammar of the sentence for Senator Lynch-Staunton, Senator Murray and others, to say that some senators opposite have declared that they do not agree with this bill, and therefore it should not apply to the next election, when candidates of all parties will come forward to seek nominations.

It would seem that it is now the Senate which is deciding the kind of process that will govern the selection of boundaries in all the constituencies in every part of the country.

Some senators, and I will say this clearly again, obviously do not like Bill C-69. That is pretty clear.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Quite right, too.

Senator Fairbairn: It sets out changes with which they do not agree. They want the process initiated —

Senator Murray: That is not the issue.

Senator Fairbairn: — by the former government to prevail for the next election. They are not moved at all by the fact that Bill C-69 was essentially drafted by the House of Commons Committee on Procedure and House Affairs in which a variety of political parties are represented.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: That is right, let the inmates run the asylum.

Senator Fairbairn: Senator Lynch-Staunton may disapprove of my grammar and implications, just as, I am quite sure, members of the House of Commons would take offence at being called inmates in an institution.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: After what they say about us, that is pretty mild.

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, please. If Senator Lynch-Staunton has something to say, he should get to his feet and say it so we can all hear him.

Senator Stewart: Please do not encourage him.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Senator Cools on a point of order.

Senator Cools: Honourable senators, Senator Lynch-Staunton has this habit; he interjects repeatedly, and it seems to be condoned. There is a place in debate for every point of view, especially Senator Lynch-Staunton's. However, Senator Fairbairn has the floor; let her speak.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: All right. I will pass that on to Senator Frith.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, it may strike a casual observer as odd that senators at the moment appear to be governing the electoral process of Canada —

Senator Doyle: And about time.

Senator Fairbairn: — particularly given the secure terms of their own appointments. The same casual observer might wonder why, after ample opportunity to express their views, their criticisms, their constructive suggestions, their sober second thoughts, the Senate is still not willing to permit this bill to come to a conclusion, one way or another, win or lose. Instead, the legislation is in a state of suspended animation within the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. With that, the uncertainty and the confusion as to the boundaries that will be in place for the next regular general election are escalating by the day.

Everyone in this house knows, particularly those on this side of the house, that the government cannot get this bill out of the committee because the government is in a minority in the Senate, and it is in a minority in each of the committees of the Senate. However, the government still has to keep trying. In its judgment, the bill is an important piece of legislation. It is a high priority, not just for the government, but also for the members of the House of Commons who are urging us not just to make a decision —

Senator Simard: Some Liberal members in the House.

Senator Fairbairn: — but to do so with the guidance of the precedence under which the Senate has permitted passage of such legislation in the past.

I will get to that point later, Senator Simard.

I am speaking of precedence guided by the words of our former colleague the Honourable Jacques Flynn, a former Conservative minister of Justice and also at various times Leader of the Government and Leader of the Opposition in the Senate. Mr. Flynn spoke for his party, the former Conservative government, in December of 1985 at second reading of Bill C-74, which, some colleagues may remember, was on readjustment of electoral boundaries. He said:

I would say this is an area that almost exclusively concerns the House of Commons, and I think that we as a non-elected chamber and as appointed legislators are hardly in a position to tell the members of the House of Commons how they should proceed to draw the boundaries of their electoral districts.

I know that honourable senators do not relish or like having those words from former Senator Flynn quoted back to them.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: No. Repeat them in French, if you want. Great opinion.

Senator Fairbairn: They argue, and have argued, that the context is different today and that those words were uttered a long time ago and are not relevant in current circumstances. However, honourable colleagues, those words from Mr. Flynn are as valid today as they were 10 years ago. We recognized them as such then, albeit perhaps reluctantly, and we do so now. The principle remains the same.

As we consider the motion I brought forward, we should recall how much time, energy, and constructive effort has already been devoted in this Parliament to bring forward a new redistribution process.

The current Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act has been in existence since 1964. In the opinion of both this government and the prior administration, the time had come to give the act a much needed reassessment and change. The current process, based on the results of the 1991 census, had already been interrupted by the previous government in June of 1992 in order to consider possible improvements in light of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Electoral Reform and Party Financing. However, the dissolution of Parliament in September of 1993 cut short the work of the special House committee on electoral reform.

Following the election, the new government decided that that work should be resumed, and resumed as quickly as possible. On March 18, 1994, Bill C-18, the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Suspension Act of 1994, was introduced in the House of Commons. Originally, Bill C-18 was to suspend the current redistribution process for two years in order to provide sufficient time for a comprehensive review by the House of Commons Standing Committee on Procedure and House Affairs.

However, there was a public concern, and a concern in this house as well, that a two-year suspension could prevent the establishment of new ridings based on the 1991 census in time for the next regular general election. In May of 1994, the Senate amended the bill to provide that the suspension would end on February 6, 1995, and if a new process were not yet in place, the current process would resume. The government, as well as the House of Commons, accepted the substance of that amendment. The date, however, was moved back to June 22 of 1995 in order to give the Commons committee and both Houses a realistic timetable in which to conduct their work. The new date was accepted by the Senate. Bill C-18 received Royal Assent on June 15, 1994.

The government, honourable senators, agreed to amend Bill C-18 in the belief that the Senate's overriding concern would be satisfied if the legislation was introduced quickly enough to have new ridings in place in time for the next regular general election. The government held up its end of the bargain and proceeded rapidly. In the House of Commons, the Standing Committee on Procedure and House Affairs heard witnesses all through the summer of 1994, thoroughly examined all aspects of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, and submitted its report, which included a draft bill, on November 25, 1994. The report was concurred in by the House of Commons on February 14 of this year. Two days later, on February 16, the government introduced Bill C-69, the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, 1995, which is based on that report. The legislation was adopted by the House of Commons on April 25 of this year.

Honourable senators, having accomplished what it had undertaken to do in the course of debates on Bill C-18, the government was, admittedly, surprised by the reception accorded to Bill C-69 when it arrived in the Senate on May 2 of this year. The opposition majority's response to Bill C-69 was, in simple terms, to "gut" the bill of its major innovations by amending its key provisions and sending a message to the House of Commons on June 8, 1995.

The House of Commons, apart from one amendment, rejected the Senate's changes as being contrary to the consensus achieved in the Standing Committee on Procedure and House Affairs on most of the key aspects of the bill. On June 20, it conveyed its views to the Senate.

Because of heavy legislative pressures, honourable senators, the House of Commons came right to the edge of the June 22 provision in Bill C-18, which governed the future activity of the current redistribution commissions, and it was right to the edge.

The Senate had three choices when it received the message from the House on June 21, 1995. It could follow former Senator Jacques Flynn's advice. Having made its views known to the House of Commons where those views were respectfully considered but, with one exception, not accepted, the Senate majority could have, with reluctance, passed the bill. Failing that, the Senate opposition majority could have declared that its principles required it to maintain its opposition, insist on amendments, send the bill back to the House, or defeat Bill C-69 outright. If that was not to their liking, the Senate opposition majority could force the bill back to committee, and through the process of neglect, virtually kill the new —

Senator Stewart: Indolence!

Senator Fairbairn: — legislation through delay — in other words, simply refuse to proceed with further study. Clearly, honourable senators, that is what has been happening since June 21.

The first thing we witnessed were procedural challenges, objecting to even having the message from the House of Commons brought forward for debate. When those objections failed, Senator Murray adjourned the debate until the next day. On that day, June 22, the opposition then brought forward the argument that the bill had somehow "lapsed" and was no longer valid. That view was vigorously rejected with, I believe, compelling argument by this side of the house.

When an appeal to the Speaker of the Senate failed, the opposition majority voted to refer the question of the validity of the bill back to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. Senator Lynch-Staunton stated at that time, in his usual colourful way:

...Senator Beaudoin will bring in expert advice which, I have no doubt, will save us the embarrassment of having to pass such a heinous bill as Bill C-69...

However, when the committee met, it was the opposition which faced the embarrassment of failing to produce a single witness who would lend any credence to the notion of a "lapsed" bill. The government, on the other hand, had the benefit of the expert testimony of Professor Beverley Baines, a law professor at Queen's University. She gave evidence that Bill C-69 was in fact valid, both legally and procedurally.

Honourable senators, having failed to gain any support for the proposition that Bill C-69 was a dead letter, the opposition majority on the committee, rather than approve a final report, suddenly discovered new concerns that required attention. Five new issues were raised, including determining the intention of the government as it advanced Bill C-69 and investigating the effect of the legislation on section 51 of the Constitution Act, 1867, which deals with the readjustment of representation in the Commons following a decennial census.

On July 12, we were told by Senator Beaudoin:

There are very important issues which certainly deserve further clarification.

And:

That is why the committee recommends that these issues be examined in depth and that the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs hold further hearings.

Honourable senators, that was almost four months ago. Though our members of the committee were prepared to carry on, not a single meeting has been held; not a single witness has been called; not a single word of testimony has been heard on these so-called very important issues.

I do not dispute Senator Beaudoin, that these are important issues, certainly to the opposition. One can only ask, if these issues were so very important, why did the committee not set aside days in early September to deal with them?

Honourable senators, the continuing failure to deal with Bill C-69 is, as I said earlier, creating confusion, uncertainty and concern about what boundaries will be in place for the next election. That confusion and uncertainty can be resolved by allowing the Senate to vote on Bill C-69 so that we can resolve the matter now.

Yesterday, when I gave notice of my intention to move this motion, Senator Lynch-Staunton remarked, and I quote with a chuckle, "The Langevin Block speaks again."

Senator Lynch-Staunton: It sure does.

Senator Fairbairn: He was obviously implying that the government alone is impelling the urgency of this bill. Of course the government has a deep concern about the failure of this house to complete its work on Bill C-69. It believes the bill will produce a better, more open system of electoral boundary review in this country and has taken its responsibility to try to have the new process in place quickly for the next election.

Honourable senators may mock these statements, but the government is deeply concerned that the process has been set aside since July with no attempt whatever by the Senate committee to continue its work and permit the Senate, and each member in the Senate, to reach a decision. This concern is also shared widely by members of Parliament in the House of Commons, who have worked hard and carefully on this issue.

Their view was made known to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on September 26 of this year when the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Procedure and House Affairs in the House of Commons wrote to Senator Beaudoin to express concerns about the Senate's treatment of Bill C-69. That letter represented the unanimous view of the committee representatives of the Reform Party, the Bloc Québécois, the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party. Not surprisingly, neither member of the Conservative Party was involved, but it was the unanimous view of the members of that committee.

The letter points out that Bill C-69 was prepared by the elected members of Parliament and that "it was the product of a long process involving members of all parties." It went on to say:

While not all members agreed with every provision in the bill, they all supported the process and wish to preserve its integrity.

The letter notes that the Senate had exercised its responsibilities in passing the bill with suggested amendments and sending it back to the House of Commons for further consideration. The letter also quotes — I will not repeat it — Senator Flynn. In the spirit of that quotation the letter goes on to say:

The Standing committee on Procedure and House Affairs, therefore, wishes to express unanimously its view that the delays imposed by certain members of the Senate in respect of a bill dealing with electoral affairs of the House of Commons are contrary to developed parliamentary precedent and principle.

Honourable senators, this concern and frustration is shared by the government, which places a very high priority on the bill. In fact, it would not have brought it forward if it did not place a high priority on the bill. I am quite aware that this sense of priority is not shared by members of the opposition. Their priority — and, I understand this also — is to protect the current redistribution process. That was made perfectly clear in July by Senator Lynch-Staunton when he said:

What the government should have done is, first, accept our amendments, the amendments of my friend's opposite, although we do not dispute their right not to accept them. At least they could say, "The current process is in place. It is nearly completed. It will be completed, hopefully, in November. Let Bill C-69 go into effect after that for the next revision." At least guarantee completion of the current process.

On that same day Senator Murray said:

I agree with the Leader of the Opposition that we should allow the present process to go forward.

The government respects the opinions of senators opposite. It certainly does not share them, nor does it share their conclusions. It understands their desire to protect a redistribution process that was launched in the final days of their administration, but it also believes that process to be flawed and in need of improvements.

Those improvements can be in place in time for the next election if we take this opportunity to move forward with Bill C-69. Why, honourable senators, should Canadians wait — as Senators Murray and Lynch-Staunton have suggested — until, in effect, after the turn of the century before they can vote in an election held on boundaries that reflect important improvements to the redistribution system?

The purpose of my motion is two-fold: First, to give our committee an opportunity and the encouragement to hold meetings on the five points raised in its report of July 11, 1995; and, second, to ensure that the findings of the committee are brought back to the Senate so that we can do our job quickly and conclusively.

Our Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs is a very important committee. Last month, Senator Lynch-Staunton described how the committee had been entrusted with many important issues. That is the very nature of the work of this committee. It is why many senators, including myself, have found it fascinating, instructive, daunting and time-consuming. I do not dispute that the committee has had a number of interesting and serious issues to deal with during this session but, honourable senators, nothing prevents its members from meeting any day of the week in an effort to tackle and complete the agenda.

The failure of the committee to meet on Bill C-69 since July 11 is not as a result of lack of opportunity but as a result of a lack of will on the part of the opposition to move the legislation forward. Clearly, with their majority, they have the ability to do that. We on this side also have a responsibility to try to give all senators in this chamber a chance to participate in the decision on this legislation.

Honourable senators, Bill C-69 goes to the heart of how Canadians exercise their electoral franchise. This chamber has been dealing with it in total since April of 1994. It is time to come to a conclusion, to move on to other matters, to lighten the load for Senator Beaudoin, and that is the purpose of my motion. Let the committee meet, let it complete its work, and then let all senators give their judgment on Bill C-69.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, would you allow me three quick questions, or just the first two if you prefer.

We are in the midst of a discussion about conflicts of interest. A number of senators are discussing this great project about conflicts of interest between members of Parliament and senators. Does the honourable senator not believe that we have before our eyes the perfect example of a conflict of interest involving members of Parliament?

Second, I am totally prepared to respect my longtime friend, Senator Flynn. Does the honourable senator not accept that listening to Senator Flynn means the end of the Senate?

[English]

If on any subject, on any discussion, ultimately the Senate will bow to the House of Commons, there is no raison d'être for the Senate. I want to speak on this subject eventually.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I wish to comment on Senator Prud'homme's remarks about Senator Flynn. Senator Flynn, as everyone who served with Senator Flynn in this house will know, was a most aggressive, articulate, erudite, engaged senator. There is no way that Senator Flynn would have said things according to my honourable friend's interpretation of his remarks. He was speaking to the particular issue before the Senate with regard to electoral boundaries. Certainly, no one took a second place to Senator Flynn in the vigour, enthusiasm and articulation he brought to his battles in this house and the other place.

His remarks were directed, as quoted, to this particular issue. I would just make that point to my honourable friend.

Senator Prud'homme: They do not refer to the conflict of interest faced by members of the House in dealing with their own future. There is no doubt about that.

• (1610)

Senator Fairbairn: Senator Prud'homme, who was an experienced member of that chamber, will know that such discussions have gone on, back and forth, for many years. They will continue to do so. That is not what is before the Senate here. Before the Senate is a bill which has been brought forward with an almost unprecedented amount of consultation on the other side, and we on this side have sent it back. We have amended it. We amended the other bill. We have done our job.

The purpose of this motion is to say, "Let's finish the job and enable all senators in this house to give their opinion through their vote on the issue."

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Claude Nolin: Before adjournment of the debate is proposed, I would like to ask a question to the government leader in the Senate.

In view of the fact that the minister gave us a detailed description of all the events that led to the consideration of this bill, would it not be appropriate for her to tell us the exact date the current process, which had been suspended by Bill C-18 and which now is following its usual course, will take effect? When will the electoral maps legally come into effect? Could the minister answer that?

[English]

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I believe that the petitions for change are still under consideration on the other side, and they have indicated November 30 as the date when they hope to have that review completed.

Senator Nolin: Does that mean that those maps will be officially legal by that date?

Senator Fairbairn: Not necessarily. I do not know whether they will have completed their review by that date. That is the date they have before them at the moment.

On motion of Senator Nolin, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Government Notices of Motion:

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I was asked to clarify some of the orders which may be before the Senate next week. I have already mentioned that we would have second reading of Bill C-7. We have heard from the sponsor of the bill already. There will be a speaker from the other side. Obviously, we will have further debate on Bill C-69, the electoral boundaries bill.

I understand that there will be more speakers today and next week on Senator MacDonald's motion relating to the report of the committee on the Pearson Airport Agreements. There are numerous other items on the Order Paper: reports of committees, motions and inquiries. It is not clear what other items may come from the House of Commons today, tomorrow and Monday. Of course, as outlined earlier, on Tuesday we will be dealing with Bills C-61 and C-103 at second reading. So the agenda is quite full.

The rules, of course, provide that we sit five days a week. We have sat three days this week. I am proposing that we sit three days next week, and perhaps four if it is absolutely necessary. If we do not have an adjournment motion today, in accordance with our rules we will be sitting tomorrow, Friday, at nine o'clock in the morning.

I cannot guarantee absolutely that we will not sit next Thursday if we come back Monday night. Indeed, it would be highly presumptuous of me to give any guarantees under the circumstances. I can say that if we deal efficiently and expeditiously with whatever business is before the Senate, we could adjourn on Wednesday.

[Translation]

Honourable Senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 58(1*h*), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Monday next, November 6, 1995, at eight o'clock in the evening.

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella (Acting Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wonder whether my colleague might tell us a bit about the week following, that is, the week of November 13. Is there some explanation? I am talking about Monday.

As you know, some senators will be having meetings in their ridings on Bill C-68.

[English]

Senator Graham: It is my understanding, honourable senators, that that is a parliamentary break. It is a parliamentary break, in the true sense, only for the other chamber. However, there has been agreement that, unless some very unusual circumstances intervene, we would follow the parliamentary calendar. There have been times when we have not done so. For instance, the House of Commons adjourned for the summer break on June 23. Because we still had legislation before us, we sat until the middle of July. We sit when it is necessary.

I see nothing on the calendar at this moment which would necessitate the Senate sitting during that week. As a matter of fact, there has been an understanding that those who wanted to hold hearings on Bill C-68 in various regions of the country would do so that week. Therefore, unless something very unusual were to happen, I believe that we would follow the parliamentary calendar as it is before us at the present time, and indeed take a break at that time.

[Senator Graham]

Senator Kinsella: I want to thank my honourable friend for that clarification. By way of recapitulation, my understanding is that we will sit next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday and, unless there are extraordinary circumstances, we will not be back Thursday nor the following week, which is the traditional parliamentary break period.

Senator Graham: As I have said, I cannot give guarantees. However, with the cooperation of all sides of the house, that is what we are aiming for.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, you have heard the motion. Is it your wish to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

PEARSON AIRPORT AGREEMENTS

CONSIDERATION OF SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Second Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on the Pearson Airport Agreements, (Address to His Excellency the Governor General requesting documents), presented in the Senate on Tuesday, October 17, 1995.

And on the motion in amendment of the Honourable Senator Kirby, seconded by the Honourable Senator Corbin,

That the Report be not now adopted but that it be amended by deleting the last paragraph thereof and replacing it with the following:

Therefore your Committee recommends that an inquiry be made of the Right Honourable Kim Campbell as to whether she is prepared to authorize the release of Submissions to the Treasury Board, dated August 1993, that relate to the redevelopment of Pearson Airport.—(Honourable Senator Murray, P.C.)

Hon. Duncan J. Jessiman: Honourable senators, I rise to speak to the motion by Senator MacDonald for the adoption of the second report of the Senate Committee on the Pearson Airport Agreements requesting documents, and in respect of which Senator Kirby moved an amendment.

The documents we are seeking — and which are the subject matter of this committee's second report — are three submissions to the Treasury Board and one decision letter of the Treasury Board of August 1993. If these Treasury Board documents were those of the present government, it is my opinion that they would be available to the committee because they do not involve security matters or international affairs.

It is also my opinion that, even if the pertinent documents did involve security matters or international affairs, as a strict legal matter the committee would have the right to demand to see them because the committee is the final arbiter in deciding whether it receives such documents.

These documents involve advice of certain senior civil servants to the Privy Council respecting a commercial transaction and, therefore, should be available to the committee. The committee receives its power from the Constitution Act of 1867, section 18; the Parliament of Canada Act, section 4; and the Rules of the Senate, rule 90, which I shall read, in part:

A standing committee shall be empowered to inquire into and report upon such matters as are referred to it from time to time by the Senate, and shall be authorized to send for persons, papers and records, whenever required...

In Diane Davidson's paper — presented to the Joint Committee of the House of Commons and Senate on the Scrutiny of Regulations on November 16, 1994, and referred to by Senator MacDonald when he spoke on this matter — she advised that she was in agreement with the Ontario Law Reform Commission in its 1981 report on witnesses before legislative committees. That report dealt with legislative committees because it was an Ontario commission. However, Ms Davidson said that it also related to committees of the House of Commons and the Senate. It was her position that civil servants and ministers are in the same position as any other witness. In theory, they can be compelled to testify on any issue, answer any question or produce any document. There is legally no guaranteed immunity from Parliament's broad power to call for information and, therefore, no special status is conferred.

The Law Reform Commission stated:

We are of the view that, as a matter of law, every witness before a legislative committee, including a civil servant, public servant and a minister of the Crown, is now and ought to remain subject to the applicable provisions of the Legislative Assembly Act.

It is important to note that just around the time of the Law Reform Commissions report in 1981, the federal government amended the Canada Evidence Act by adding section 39. The wording is relevant to the matter we are considering because it deals with information that the government certifies "constitutes a confidence of the Queen's Privy Council."

Section 39(1) of the Canada Evidence Act states:

39(1) Where a minister of the Crown or the Clerk of the Privy Council objects to the disclosure of information before a court, person or body —

I emphasize the word "body" because, at the time when I read this, it was my view that our committee might be such a body.

— with jurisdiction to compel the production of information by certifying in writing that the information constitutes a confidence of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, disclosure of the information shall be refused without examination or hearing of the information by the court, person or body.

If we were other than what we are, a Senate committee, if we were a court, or if we were some other person or inquiry, this section would enable the Privy Council to certify that this was something that they were not, and would not be, required to disclose.

The section goes on to state:

(2) For the purpose of this subsection (1), "a confidence of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada" includes, without restricting the generality thereof, information contained in — and I will only read the part that is relevant —

(b) a discussion paper the purpose of which is to present background explanations, analyses of problems or policy options to Council for consideration by Council in making decisions;

Certainly, three of these Treasury Board documents, being the submissions, would be included in that wording. Whether or not the letter, the decision, which was really a Treasury Board decision of the ministers, may not. The letter is not the important thing, as far as the committee is concerned; it is those submissions.

If the term "body" mentioned above could be interpreted, as I thought it could, to include a Senate committee, then this legislation would be relevant. However, although the word "body" in this section has not been judicially interpreted, other words in federal statutes have, and I have been advised that there is no doubt that the courts would hold that the word "body" in section 39 of the Canada Evidence Act does not include a Senate committee. The reason for this is that the power of the committee is derived from our Constitution, and cannot be reduced by mere federal legislation.

I say, however, if the act did apply — which it does not — to the Senate and to this committee, the documents would be available to the committee because subsection 4(b)(i) of section 39(2) provides that subsection (1), which I read into the record, does not apply in respect of a discussion paper if the decisions to which the discussion paper relates have been made public. There is no doubt that the decision to proceed with the Pearson airport contracts was made public.

These Treasury Board documents are not documents of the present government — or at least they claim they are not their documents. The documents certainly were not produced during their tenure. Those documents were provided to the previous government's Treasury Board by its Treasury Board secretariat, the secretariat being the senior civil servants who advise the political cabinet ministers.

Some may argue that these particular Treasury Board documents are subject to a convention dating back to the years of Prime Minister Mackenzie King, that a government should not — and does not — look at documents that are considered the property of a previous government, and that those documents should remain confidential to the ministers of that government. However, it can be argued strenuously that although there is such a convention, it does not cover the Treasury Board's submissions, as Senator Kirby implied in his submission to the Senate on Tuesday last.

I have read several letters passing from one government to another, dating back to Prime Minister Saint-Laurent. I requested and received late this afternoon a copy of a letter that was written by the Clerk of the Privy Council dated November 3, 1993, in the French version, and approved by Jean Chrétien on November 3. The English version that I have received as a copy to the Right Honourable Kim Campbell is not dated, but it was accepted by her. It is obvious that the government of Kim Campbell which was outgoing and the government of Jean Chrétien which was incoming agreed that certain documents are the property of the previous government. However, I do not see where these Treasury Board documents would be included in those documents.

Let us assume for the moment that the convention applies, as Senator Kirby has asked us to do. I do not think it does. I think the government should give them to the committee. It is the unanimous view of the committee that such documents should be available to the committee as it is dealing with a matter that is in the public interest. The only dispute is as to the procedure that should be taken in respect of those documents.

I believe it was Senator Stewart who said in committee, "We agree with you. We should get the documents, but you are putting the cart before the horse."

First, I argue that the convention does not apply and that, because these documents are not cabinet documents per se, they should be given to the committee by the present government without any request being made by the committee of the Right Honourable Kim Campbell to release the documents, as Senator Kirby suggests.

The majority on the committee is saying that if the convention does apply — and in my humble opinion it does not — then it is between the present government and the previous government, something to which this committee is not a party. There is no privity between the Senate committee and the previous government, whereas there is between the two governments. No committee members voted against the motion that outlined how the committee should proceed. The Liberal senators chose to abstain.

After hearing Senator Kirby on Tuesday, October 31, and giving further consideration to this matter, I am convinced that Senator MacDonald's motion is the correct way for the Senate to proceed. The only case that I could find — and now I am assuming the convention does apply — was one in which a commission of inquiry chaired by Justice David C. MacDonald in 1979, inquiring into a matter concerning the RCMP, requested certain documents of a previous government that were protected by the convention to which I have referred. In that case an exception was made to the convention and practice in Canada governing access to records of cabinet and cabinet committee meetings. A motion on the recommendation of the Prime Minister passed by the committee of the Privy Council stated that:

the Commissioners shall be granted access to the minutes of any Cabinet or Cabinet Committee meeting emanating from the Ministry of the Right Honourable John G. Diefenbaker only with the concurrence of the said Right Honourable John G. Diefenbaker, it having first been communicated by him in writing to the Secretary to the Cabinet;

The commissioners were not told to get Mr. Diefenbaker's consent before the government gave its consent to the release of the documents. The government passed the resolution to release the documents subject to the government receiving Mr. Diefenbaker's consent in writing so to do. That is exactly for what Senator MacDonald's resolution asks.

To get to the absurdity of the whole matter of the government refusing to release the documents to this committee, let us remember that if the government thinks the convention applies, then it is up to them to pass the resolution or to ask the previous prime minister, because it was their government that made this contract with the other government.

Let us remember that the document was advice to the previous government in August 1993, immediately prior to that government's passing a Treasury Board resolution on August 27, 1993 authorizing the Minister of Transport to execute the necessary documents to complete the airport transaction. This was before an election was called. No politician from August 27, 1993, until the 110 documents required to conclude the transaction were delivered on October 7, 1993, made any decision whatsoever as to the content of any of those 110 documents. Everything was done by the civil servants and the legal advisors to the government at the time because there had already been an agreement made. It had only to be documented.

These confidential documents which the committee is requesting, which are in excess of 200 pages, were given to Robert Nixon and his advisors sometime between October 29, 1993, and the first week of November 1993. Technically, it is possible that they were given before November 4, in which case one might argue that the old administration was still in place. However, a transition team had taken over between October 25 to November 4. After November 4 — and we cannot be clear as to when these documents got across — a 200-page document marked "Secret" from the Department of Transport was delivered at the request of the incoming Prime Minister. He was the one who said to the people at Transport, "Give them whatever is necessary."

Hon. John B. Stewart: That particular document is not specified.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I should inform Senator Jessiman that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with the consent of honourable senators.

Is it agreed that the honourable senator be allowed to continue?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Jessiman: Honourable senators, Robert Nixon and his advisors used parts of these documents in arriving at their conclusion to cancel the contracts. The same documents were also leaked to a reporter from The Ottawa Citizen who also used part of the documents to justify the Nixon report.

What has happened in this case is that Robert Nixon and his legal advisors, as well as the reporter, Greg Weston, have taken a number of the statements in these documents out of context. The statements made by Weston have all been refuted in a memorandum prepared by William Rowat, a senior official of Transport Canada, and published in a newspaper in October of 1993. Notwithstanding the answers given by Mr. Rowat, there continues to be the suspicion that unless the committee sees the 200-page document used by Mr. Nixon, his advisors and Greg Weston, the improper view which the newspaper reports have left will continue to linger in the minds of some.

As this is a matter that is important to the integrity of the government, both the previous government and the present government, the committee should have the opportunity to see these documents to enable it to complete its work and make whatever comments it decides are appropriate.

The importance of withholding production on the basis of public interest must be weighed against the public interest in the proper administration of a Senate committee attempting to get at the truth of the matter referred to it. In view of the facts as I have outlined them, there is no question that the committee should be given the documents requested. It is in the public interest to do so and no one will be prejudiced thereby.

I urge all members of the Senate to vote in favour of the motion of Senator MacDonald to adopt the second report of the Special Committee of the Senate on the Pearson Airport Agreements. If we are to vote first on the amendment by Senator Kirby, then I urge honourable senators to vote against it.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I understood Senator Jessiman to say that, in his opinion, the document prepared by the Treasury Board staff would not be regarded as a Privy Council document.

• (1640)

Senator Jessiman: Honourable senators, I did not say that. I said I do not think it comes within the convention, because it gives a list of documents. It says that the meaning of the term "cabinet papers," while not precisely defined, has generally been understood to include such documents as cabinet committee agendas, memoranda, discussion papers, minutes, reports and guidelines, briefing notes for ministers related to the above papers, and correspondence between ministers and related documents.

I suggest that the document prepared by the senior bureaucrats to advise in this particular case does not come within that definition. However, if it does, I am saying that it is up to this government, if they think it applies, to pass the resolution we are asking to be passed. The government can then decide. They will either ask the Right Honourable Kim Campbell for their release or they will not. It is up to them.

Senator Stewart: I understand that. I was raising a narrow point on what you dealt with before you got to your "if."

The language you quoted uses the expression "cabinet." They really mean the Privy Council. As I understand it, the Treasury Board is a committee of the Privy Council.

The point on which I wanted enlightenment was whether a document prepared for a committee of the Privy Council would be covered by the rule with regard to privilege, but you do not seem to wish to be emphatic or categorical on that point. I am not being critical. I just wonder if you have any evidence one way or the other.

Senator Jessiman: I can only give you the act they passed. Let us assume we are a court or an inquiry. We could not look at the document until the decision in respect of those papers was made public. Well, they made it public. They said, "We are going to sign the documents." There is a contract here. It is public. Those documents are now available to anyone.

On motion of Senator Kinsella, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, November 6, 1995, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, November 6, 1995

The Senate met at 8:00 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE YITZHAK RABIN

TRIBUTES TO FORMER PRIME MINISTER OF ISRAEL

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government):

Honourable senators, I rise tonight to add my voice to those of all Canadians who have expressed their shock, outrage and deep sorrow at the assassination of Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, made even more unbelievable by the fact that it occurred during the course of a rally for peace.

In the short hours since his death, there has been an outpouring of grief and condolences for his family's loss, for his nation's loss, and also for our loss, for he was that rare kind of person whose courage and conviction made him a visionary world statesman, a leader among leaders.

He has been eulogized over the last two days as a tough soldier who fought for peace, a war hero turned peacemaker, a hawk who soared like a dove. He was all that and much more. His fight for a lasting peace in his historically troubled region is the legacy he leaves to the world. One cannot forget his eloquent words spoken on the lawn at the White House in 1993, in the company of President Clinton and Yasser Arafat, an old foe but new partner in the cause of Middle East peace. Mr. Rabin said on that day:

We, the soldiers who have returned from battles stained with blood, we who have seen our relatives and friends killed before our eyes....We who have come from a land where parents bury their children....We say today in a loud and clear voice: Enough of blood and tears. Enough.

Sadly, honourable senators, it was not enough. For all of us, the fragility of the peace process in the Middle East was sharply underlined by the violent tragedy that unfolded on Saturday at a massive gathering for peace in the streets of Jerusalem. We hope and pray that his words will continue to inspire and move those who follow him.

Israel's Acting Prime Minister, Shimon Peres, who has been a colleague and companion in arms with Mr. Rabin in his cause, has affirmed his commitments to those words of 1993 and to the path to peace which they represent. We can do no less. The greatest and most poignant tribute we can offer in the tragic death of Yitzhak Rabin is to pledge our support and dedication to his vision of an enduring solution in the Middle East.

[Translation]

Mr. Rabin was a friend of peace, a friend of democracy and a friend of Canada.

As Canadians, we have a responsibility to endorse his vision, because we want peaceful and democratic solutions to the most heartbreaking problems.

[English]

Hon. Leo E. Kolber: Honourable senators, my own connection with the state of Israel goes back a long way. My wife's parents and family came from Palestine, and our son lives there as a citizen of Israel. As a matter of fact, he was on the platform with Mr. Rabin during the peace rally on Saturday, and shook his hand approximately four minutes before he was shot. Thus, the tragedy came home to me and was certainly felt very deeply, not only by the world, but by my family.

Yitzhak Rabin was the least predictable of peacemakers, an old soldier with an instinctive distrust of the kind of bright young intellectuals who contrived the Oslo breakthrough with the Palestine Liberation Organization. He visibly blanched when President Bill Clinton coaxed him to shake hands with Yasser Arafat on the White House lawn in September of 1993.

As Prime Minister for the first time from 1974 to 1977, Rabin could hardly steel himself to utter the word "Palestinian". He and his defence minister in that administration, Shimon Peres — who is one of my oldest and closest friend in the world — established the first Jewish settlements planted among Arab towns and villages on the spine of Palestine. As defence minister in the 1984-90 national unity government, Rabin ordered his troops to use whatever means necessary to stem the Intifada uprising.

Yet on the night of his death at the hands of a lone Israeli gunman, Rabin was singing "Shir Hashalom," the Hebrew hymn of peace, with 100,000 supporters of Peace Now. It was, Peres said afterwards, probably the first time in his life that the croaky-voiced Rabin had sung in public.

His farewell message had a ring of Martin Luther King's "I Have a Dream." His government, he said, had decided to give peace a chance. "I was a military man for 27 years," he said. "I waged war as long as there was no chance for peace. I believe there is now a chance for peace, a great chance, and we must make the most of it."

What wrought the transformation was the realization that Israel could not batter into submission the children and mothers of the Intifada without compromising its own humanity and alienating the civilized world, with which Israel identifies itself.

As early as the 1988 election campaign, Rabin and Peres argued that Israel could not go on ruling the large, hostile Arab minority if it wanted to remain a Jewish and a democratic state. The only alternative was — and I hate to use the word — separation: a line on the ground with Israelis on one side and Palestinians on the other. To the end, Rabin refused to acknowledge that his policy might spawn a Palestinian state.

The 1988 electoral stalemate denied the two labour leaders an opportunity to put “territory for peace” to the test, but after their victory in June 1992, Peres, as foreign minister under Rabin’s premiership, convinced himself and his chief that Arafat was ready for a symmetrical compromise. Isolated and impoverished by the historic miscalculation of siding with Saddam Hussein in the 1991 Gulf War, the leader of the PLO had finally become a partner for peace.

It was Peres, always the more imaginative and restless of the two, who selected and backed the freelance diplomats for the Oslo back channel. However, without Rabin checking every detail and reining in their enthusiasm, the deal would never have jelled. Without Rabin, elected on the platform of peace with security, the Israeli public would not have acquiesced.

Despite their history of bitter personal rivalry, Rabin and Peres were an extraordinary team. Both in their seventies, they recognized that a solution to a century-old conflict between Jew and Arab was indeed attainable. This was their last chance, and they did not intend to let mutual recrimination get in their way.

Nor would they be deflected by the enemies of peace, Arab or Jewish. After every Islamic suicide bombing, a grim-faced Rabin announced to the television cameras that negotiations would continue. Echoing a celebrated phrase of Israel’s first Prime Minister, David Ben-Gurion, he said that he would “fight the terrorists as if there were no peace process, and fight for peace as if there were no terrorism.”

Rabin was equally stubborn in defying a campaign of unprecedented vilification by the Israeli right and its Jewish paymasters abroad who branded him a traitor and an alcoholic, and portrayed him in the Nazi uniform or Arab keffiyeh headdress. To their enduring shame, leaders of the parliamentary opposition were slow to disown these excesses. Even when his progressive majority was reduced last month to a single mercenary MP, Rabin drove on. “A majority of one is still a majority,” he insisted.

Foreign critics accused Rabin of dictating a humiliating peace to a vulnerable Arafat. However, Israel, too, was paying a price, not just in territory but in personal security. By finely calculating when to accelerate the peace process and when to slow it down, Rabin stopped the pragmatic centre of Israeli public opinion from joining the settler ideologues at the barricades.

His tenacity won Israel a peace treaty with Jordan to match that which Menachem Begin signed with Egypt in 1979. It banished the kind of isolation that had dogged Israel in international fora for 47 years. Israeli commentators were quick to notice that when Rabin addressed the jubilee General Assembly of the United Nations last month, no Arab or Third World delegation walked out. As it happened, the Syrians and Libyans were not there.

Yitzhak Rabin was born in Jerusalem on March 1, 1922. His life and career marched step by step with the struggle for and consolidation of the Jewish state in the biblical homeland. His father, Nehemia, a working-class Ukrainian Jew who had emigrated to the United States, arrived in Palestine in 1918 as a volunteer for the Jewish legion, fighting to help the Allies oust Turkey from the Levant. His Russian-born mother, Rosa, the daughter of an Orthodox rabbi, immigrated with a Zionist uncle.

In the best pioneering tradition, Rabin studied at an agricultural school, then joined the Palmach, the elite professionals of the Haganah Jewish defence force, in the struggle for independence. During the 1948 Arab-Israeli war, he commanded a battalion that kept open the lifeline between Tel Aviv and Jerusalem.

He reached the peak of his army career as chief of the general staff in Israel’s resoundingly victorious Six-Day War in 1967. Rabin collapsed with nervous exhaustion on the eve of the war, but after two days’ rest he returned to his post. Moshe Dayan, the flamboyant defence minister, seized the international limelight, but the more taciturn Rabin was credited with the planning and control that expanded Israel’s borders to the Suez Canal, the Jordan River, and the Golan Heights.

After retiring from the military at the end of 1967, Rabin was appointed ambassador to Washington. He scorned the frivolities of the cocktail circuit, but established a highly productive working relationship with the Nixon administration.

He returned to Israel in 1973 and ran for election on the Labour ticket in the elections in December of that year. Israelis welcomed him as a leader with a record of success who was untainted by the almost disastrous errors that exposed Israel to invasion in the Yom Kippur war. In April 1974, he defeated Shimon Peres in their first contest for the party leadership.

In 1992, the Labour Party concluded that they needed to be led by Mr. Rabin because his moral authority could carry the day. It worked, but by a dizzyingly precarious margin. The peace process was the improbable outcome. In the tradition of the Palmach and the Israel defence forces, Rabin insisted on leading from the front. Just before 10 p.m. in Tel Aviv Square on Saturday, he paid for it with his life. Shalom, Yitzhak.

Hon. Erminie J. Cohen: Honourable senators, I rise tonight to express the sadness and grief we share with the people of Israel and all the people in the world who believe in peace.

I watched the events following the assassination of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin for the past two days with great emotion. The attendance at the funeral of so many world leaders — the attendance for the first time of President Clinton of the United States; President Mubarak of Egypt; King Hussein of Jordan; and Mr. Yasser Arafat — and the sight of so many Arab headdresses in the assembly were significant and made a powerful statement to the world. It showed the changing face of the Middle East.

The fact that the assassination of Prime Minister Rabin was the first such event in the life of Israel was difficult enough, but that the Prime Minister was killed by an Israeli, another Jew, for political reasons was shocking; yet one felt at the time some sense of relief that the assassin was not a Palestinian, as damage to the peace process would have been inevitable. The assassin was a religious fanatic, influenced by the ideological seeds of hatred and the rejection of peace.

Mr. Rabin changed the course of history in the first breakthrough with the Palestinian people. It was said that his life paralleled the history of his people, the history that he lived. He was at the centre of many of Israel's turning points, both as a soldier and as a diplomat.

Mr. Rabin typified the Israeli sabra, the fruit of Israel — tough and prickly on the outside, and tender and sweet on the inside. He had the respect of his people and walked a very lonely road, one he was prepared to walk if it led to a peaceful conclusion.

Honourable senators, the international community has suffered a great loss with his death, and it will leave a huge void in the Middle East. It is ironic that a man who started his career as a soldier died for peace.

Honourable senators, we know that terrorism, ignorance and religious fanaticism are the true enemies of peace in the Middle East. We wish Shimon Peres, Acting Prime Minister of Israel, the leaders of the Arab states and Arab and Jew alike the strength, courage and understanding as they continue on the road to peace, remembering at all times the words Yitzhak Rabin uttered in Washington not so long ago, that this land of milk and honey should not be a land of blood and tears.

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, for over 3,000 years, not far from the blood-drenched stones of Jerusalem, another great warrior leader, striving to unite his people and to provide them with security and peace with their neighbours, wrote these words, which are now customarily recited at a house of bereavement. It is the 23rd Psalm.

The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want.

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters.

He restoreth my soul; he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake.

Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.

Thou preparest to table before me in the presence of mine enemies; thou anointed my head with oil; my cup runneth over.

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life; and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever.

Honourable senators, we are told that King David was the greatest of God's beloved because David never lost faith. David was humble. He never blamed God for the failures of man or himself.

Yitzhak Rabin, may he rest in peace, was born in Jerusalem, the City of David. Farmer, soldier, general, strategist, politician, diplomat, statesman, peacemaker — he played a pivotal and leading role in each of the many wars that have engulfed Israel since the founding of that state in 1948. He became its youngest Prime Minister, the eighth Prime Minister, and the first to be born in Israel. As Senator Cohen said, Yitzhak Rabin was a "sabra", and the word "sabra", as she pointed out, is a desert cactus, tough and prickly on the outside and soft on the inside. This symbol personified Yitzhak Rabin's life and personality and, indeed, reflects the personalities of many of the citizens in Israel.

Honourable senators, I first met Yitzhak Rabin over 20 years ago, just after he became Minister of Defence. We met in his small office located in a temporary wooden building in the Defence compound in Tel Aviv for what was scheduled to be a very brief introductory exchange. At his insistence, this brief exchange turned into a dialogue lasting longer than two hours. Almost as if he was thinking out loud, he insisted on painstakingly reviewing the difficult options and the painful choices facing Israel in its search for security. I simply became enthralled by his precise grasp of the myriad issues, the minute detail and the knowledge that he had at his fingertips, ranging from the strategic to the tactical, from the public psychology to the private anxieties. I learned then what a meticulous thinker and a brilliant planner he was.

We know that God, like genius, lies hidden in detail. In that sense, Rabin was a genius, for he understood, as few other politicians did, that behind every public pronouncement, behind every public policy, a sure grip of detail was essential for public comprehension and ultimately for public consensus and acceptance. He seemed motivated at that time by an obsession, since he emphasized that there was a zero-sum margin for error confronting Israel's security. "Simply no room," he said, "for ill-considered ideas or shallow policies."

Honourable senators, Israel, at its widest point, covers a shorter distance than the boundaries that separate Greater Metropolitan Toronto. A hair's breadth separates Israel from its neighbours without, and a blink of an eye from its neighbours within. Yitzhak Rabin understood and lived this reality, and so he painstakingly and patiently analyzed each brick necessary to support and ensure the security and ultimately the peace for his people.

As time went on, I glanced at my watch, not wishing to intrude further on his tight schedule. Yet, he seemed to have all the time in the world. I was puzzled, quite frankly, why he spent so much of his precious time on me, for though interested in Israel and its security, I held no public office or influential position at the time. Yet, he seemed anxious for me, and I assumed countless others he encountered, to understand the complexity of the issues and the need for careful navigation through the minefield of problems. When we talked then of the "Palestinian problem," he shocked me by saying that the difficulties with the Palestinians will certainly be resolved, but only with great care and great patience. "Solutions would come," he said, "but it would take time." This was certainly not the conventional thinking at that time. "Palestinians," he declared, "were not the strategic problem."

The real strategic problem of security confronting Israel, he quietly argued, was Syria. Syria had the military strength; Syria had the military power; Syria had the military support and the political support to undermine and destroy Israel's security. Yet, when referring to Syria, he was optimistic. Again, he shocked me when he said that when Syria moves towards peace, Syria could be relied upon because Syrians, unlike any other group or state in the region, had always kept their word. This was new information to me. They had kept their word, he said, from the time they signed the first disengagement agreement on the Golan. He was convinced that they would keep their word once they signed an agreement for peace — a written agreement for peace.

That conversation, honourable senators, took place over 20 years ago in Israel. Many times since then, when I have watched Yitzhak Rabin or listened to his carefully crafted words, I remember that dialogue, and still I marvel at his perception, his precision and his vision.

The last time I saw Yitzhak Rabin was in his office in Jerusalem, just this last August, on the Wednesday morning following the signing of the agreement between Arafat and himself, which signing had taken place the night before in Taba. I arrived mid-morning just as a meeting of the Israeli cabinet responsible for security was breaking up. This committee was chaired by Rabin as Prime Minister and Minister of Defence, and the generals continued to noisily debate the issues as they moved outside the cabinet door. Some sat down beside me on a sofa to review detailed maps and schedules spread out on a coffee table in front of the sofa. I watched with some amusement as some of the military leaders would leave the discussion from time to time, walk into the cabinet room, fetch a piece of honey cake or a piece of fruit, and return to the coffee table to continue the debate.

Yitzhak Rabin emerged after hearing the commotion from his office, which was right next door, and glanced at me as the only stranger in the anteroom observing the scene. He was dishevelled, smoking heavily, looking for all the world as if he had just slept in his clothes or, worse, as if a tank had just rolled over him. We glanced at each other, and he returned to his office with a quizzical look on his face wondering who this alien was, who this stranger was, and what I was doing there at this critical time. He emerged a few minutes later talking to an assistant and a military aide, and again he glanced at me. Finally, there was a flicker of recognition. He quickly approached me, apologized for not being able to spend some time but, as I could see, he was quite busy. I reminded him that I was there primarily not to meet with him, but to meet with Mr. Eitan Haber, his chief of staff, whom I had met several times in Canada. A few minutes later, after Rabin had returned to his office, Haber came out, apologized for the delay, and ushered me into his office connected to Rabin's office next door.

Honourable senators, for those of you who watched Rabin's funeral early this morning, you will recall that Eitan Haber was the last speaker who spoke so eloquently, reading from the blood-stained words of the song sheet dedicated to peace that Rabin sang from and stuck in his pocket just before he was so cruelly struck down.

• (2030)

On that August morning in Israel, Haber and I discussed the deep divisions that both of us recognized within Israel. I had not been there for some time and I mentioned to him that I had never seen the divisions so deep and so vitriolic. Yet, Haber said that both Rabin and he were optimistic. Movements, manoeuvres and tactics were under way to unravel the polarization, to change the very dialectics of division, to alter the public dialogue.

We discussed at length the role of the orthodox community. We discussed certain leadership personalities within that orthodox community. We reviewed our respective roots that lie deep within that orthodox community and Mr. Rabin's relationship to that group. Mr. Haber reviewed for me the complexities and difficulties necessary to gain political momentum to overcome the internal objections to peace and to the peace process. He covered the ground, as Rabin would, with a lucid, optimistic and penetrating analysis stressing, not minimizing, the day-to-day difficulties facing the Rabin government — making peace with both its neighbours on the outside and seeking to reconcile the deep and passionate divisions splitting Israeli society on the inside. His voice echoed the wear and tear, the stress lines, that I saw deeply etched on Rabin's face that morning.

Honourable senators, those in Israel now face a double tragedy — the death of a great leader and caused by the hand, of all things, of a fellow Israeli and co-religionist, unheard of since the founding of the state and so contrary to the basic tenets of Judaism, so inimical to the precious value system of Israel itself. This cowardly, vicious act will compel those within and without Israel to probe the foundations of their inner beliefs, to question how Israel could have fallen from a state of grace. This introspection and soul-searching will continue in every corner of Israel and amongst its supporters throughout the world, until a moral equilibrium is regained, until a collective sense of human dignity and respect for human life is at least partially, if only partially, recaptured.

Honourable senators, watch now. Watch carefully how this vile act will convulse the very core of that democratic society, constructed as it is on the very first principles of civilization.

Even at this early stage, is there a parallel lesson one can learn from this tragedy? The Hebrew sages remind us that we must train ourselves to seek to repair every disaster to the human condition. These sages tell us that words can kill, that ideas can kill. At the end of each service, at least three times daily, Jews the world over conclude their prayers with this phrase: "Oh, my God! Guard my tongue from evil and my lips from speaking guile." This self-restraint from speaking and spreading evil lies deep at the heart of Jewish morality.

Those in Israel and beyond who are deeply religious, orthodox in their beliefs, as well as others, have forgotten their prayers, forgotten the tenets of their faith. The uncivil discourse, the crude analogies, the obscene name-calling acted as a catalyst for this vile and venal act. Guarding one's tongue is a lesson that all of us must learn in our daily political discourse if we are not to incite others to acts of violence. Words have always been important to Israel. Now those words must be carefully chosen to continue the endless search for peace.

Jews, honourable senators, do not mourn death. The Kaddish, the blessing commemorating the passage of a human soul, contains words that celebrate life. We celebrate the words, the deeds and the life of Yitzhak Rabin. The final words when reciting the Kaddish are these:

He who maketh peace in his high places may he make peace for us and for Israel and let us say, amen.

To Yitzhak Rabin, for all of his works, for all of his acts of humility, for all of his public dedication and personal sacrifice, for all of his deeds of greatness, for all of his mitzvot, let us say amen.

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, today, the world community showed its capacity for solidarity in the face of evil. It also showed the high premium we place on peace, as more than 80 global leaders, including the Prime Minister of Canada, gathered in Jerusalem to bury a great peacemaker of our time, Yitzhak Rabin.

This son of the City of David and Solomon was an instrument of peace, courageously sowing hope where there had only been hatred, seeking understanding where there was only injury and despair. Canadians — along with men and women of goodwill everywhere — expressed their dismay and sadness at this great loss and, in the next breath, expressed the wish that the good seeds sown by Prime Minister Rabin will continue to be nurtured and cultivated so that a great harvest is yielded in the wonderful fruit of shalom.

May Yitzhak rest in the bosom of Abraham.

Hon. Jean-Louis Roux: Honourable senators, as honorary president of Artists for Peace and as a member of the arts community in Canada, I wish to express before this house the tremendous emotion I felt when I heard the news of the assassination of the Prime Minister of Israel, Mr. Yitzhak Rabin, on Saturday, November 4, 1995.

[English]

I took full measure of the man's words on September 13, 1993. The whole world witnessed the historic moment at the White House as he, albeit reluctantly, extended his hand to the PLO's chairman Yasser Arafat. I remember being deeply moved to see those two men join hands in an effort to put an end to the generations-long Arab-Israeli struggle.

Beholding this bold act of courage and goodwill, the crowd stood aghast, then met it with a resounding and joyful applause.

[Senator Grafstein]

Who could have foreseen that, one day, we would hear the same words uttered by lifelong and irreconcilable enemies. Enough violence! Enough butchery! Let us give peace a chance.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, there are probably a host of complex reasons why Rabin and Arafat decided to recognize the right of the state of Israel to live in peace and security, and the right of the PLO to represent the Palestinian people. Economic considerations must have weighed heavily. To wage war is a costly business. The manufacture and purchase of extremely sophisticated weaponry, and keeping a large military establishment or hordes of terrorists combat ready, probably played a major role in destroying the economy of both sides.

[English]

However, I dare say — indeed I hope — that it is their respective peoples that allowed Rabin and Arafat to clear the hurdles toward lasting peace in the Middle East. The fanatics may yell louder and, sadly, may even be so blinded as to pull the trigger on their own to further their political ends, but it is inconceivable to imagine that the great majority of men and women that inhabit this planet would accept to allow their children, their parents or their friends to be mindlessly murdered for whatever cause it may be. I like to think that it is precisely the Israeli and the Palestinian peoples who made it possible for their leaders to renew hope on that occasion.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, all the commentators and all the politicians said at the time that it was not the moment for smug celebration; that the road to peace would be rocky and would require a steadfast communal will to carry on to the end; that Jewish or Arab extremists would push all the more violently and aggressively to ensure the venture failed. Alas, in the past two years, events have proven them right. So many women, children and men sacrificed to fanaticism. The latest victim, to date, is the Israeli Prime Minister, Yitzhak Rabin. He was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize together with Yasser Arafat, in recognition of their courage and determination in establishing long-lasting peace in the Middle East. Beyond their fight in mortal combat, each came to realize that Saint-Exupéry was right in having the father of he who reigned over the Empire say:

You must never meet man in his superficiality; you must look for him at the seventh level of his soul, his heart and his mind. Otherwise, if you seek for yourself in your most vulgar movements, you end up spilling blood uselessly.

[English]

• (2040)

The cruel irony is that Rabin was shot and murdered while preaching peace, and even worse, at the hands of a fellow Jew. I heard on Saturday night an American official suggest that this tragic assassination might actually galvanize support for the peace process initiated two years ago.

As a member of Artists for Peace and as a Canadian citizen, I pray with all my heart that he is right and that out of this tragedy, Israelis and Palestinians may find the courage to strengthen their resolve for peace.

I call upon all honourable senators to join me in paying tribute to a hero of peace such as the world will so desperately need in the future, Yitzhak Rabin.

SENATOR'S STATEMENT

SOLICITOR GENERAL

EFFICACY OF SECURITY ARRANGEMENTS
AT RESIDENCE OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, while I certainly associate myself with all that has been said with respect to Prime Minister Rabin, I would say at the same time that we should thank God that tonight we are not paying tribute to our own head of state. I refer to the break-in which occurred at 24 Sussex Drive during the weekend.

I must confess I was shocked and I was outraged. This is our head of state.

An Hon. Senator: He is our Prime Minister, not our head of state.

Senator Kelly: He is our Prime Minister. He is my head of state.

I do not know how long it will take for Canadians to outgrow this deep-seated attitude that these things cannot happen here. We are so convinced that these things happen elsewhere, but not here. Presidents, heads of state, prime ministers — important people who involve themselves in government — are attacked or assassinated elsewhere but never, ever in Canada.

Honourable senators, the recent referendum developed great passion in this country, passion at a level that in many countries could have excited violence aimed at leaders of both sides of such an issue. In any other country, security would have been stepped up but, of course, not in Canada, because serious things of this nature do not happen here.

I am not suggesting by any means that the referendum debate had anything to do with the break-in at Sussex Drive. Nonetheless, prudence in this case might have avoided the incident that happened over the weekend.

Honourable senators, it is easy to blame the police. Perhaps they have earned a great deal of the blame; I do not know. None of us knows yet. However, I have had firsthand experience with Canadian political leaders, particularly at the levels of premier and prime minister, on matters of security. In almost all the cases, the security arrangements put in place fell far short of the security arrangements recommended by police agencies and protective agencies.

It is considered bad politics in Canada for leaders to be seen taking precautions of the sort that we believe belong in the U.S., the United Kingdom, France, Italy, Greece, or even Australia.

Look what happened when Prime Minister Mulroney was seen to permit security arrangements in excess of what had been normal in Canada. The media ridiculed him. Canadians were persuaded to laugh. They thought that was silly. Let me tell you an interesting anecdote that occurred at that time.

I had occasion to discuss the issue with a well-known member of the Ottawa press gallery, and he said, "Senator, I understand your viewpoint, but there is a major difference. In the countries such as you mentioned — Indonesia, Iran, India and elsewhere — an assassination usually heralds an overthrow of a regime and a new government. In Canada, if our head of state were assassinated, the party in power would simply elect a new leader who would then become the new prime minister, and we would get on with the business of the country." How bloody cynical! That kind of attitude, I think, is pretty serious.

Honourable senators know my long-standing concern about international terrorists. My main objective is to try to keep ahead of events because terrorism has many faces. How many airplanes, for example, must be bombed and people killed before we take serious, maximum protective measures? During the debate on Bill C-71, I remarked on how slowly we are dealing with the problem of detection of plastic explosives. How many more planes, or briefcases, or apparently innocent-looking baby carriages must explode before we feel we should hurry a bit?

We all mourn the tragic death of the leader of Israel. Surely, it would have been prudent to review immediately security arrangements at 24 Sussex Drive. We are doing that now but, as usual, after the event. Fortunately, this was not a tragic event, which only goes to prove the other thing that Canadians believe: We are really lucky. Well, let us hope that we continue to be lucky.

QUESTION PERIOD

SOLICITOR GENERAL

EFFICACY OF SECURITY ARRANGEMENTS AT RESIDENCE OF PRIME MINISTER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Colin Kenny: Honourable senators, I echo and support Senator Kelly's comments regarding the appalling breach of security at 24 Sussex Drive. I should like to know if the Leader of the Government in the Senate can provide us with any more information as to what might have happened there. I should like to know if the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has offered his resignation and, if not, why not?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I join with Senators Kenny and Kelly and every member of this house in deploring the events that took place at 24 Sussex Drive. I should also like to add a personal tribute to Aline Chrétien.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Fairbairn: Those who have met her will know that she is a woman of character and strength, with a very cool head. She deserves a great deal of credit and, indeed, our thanks.

The Commissioner of the RCMP held a news conference this morning in which he, too, indicated that the events which took place were totally unacceptable. Today, obviously, the security arrangements at 24 Sussex Drive have been not only under review but have been the subject of strengthening. Indeed, a review of all security arrangements at official residences has been instituted, including the Governor General's residence at Rideau Hall, and the residence at Harrington Lake.

The specific incident is now under urgent review by Assistant Commissioner Martell of the RCMP. It is hoped that the results of the review will be received quickly, possibly by the end of the week.

REVIEW OF SECURITY ARRANGEMENTS AT OFFICIAL RESIDENCES—PUBLICATION OF RESULTS—
GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: Honourable senators, might I ask whether we can anticipate that the results of this review will, in fact, be made available to the public?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, because these matters are of a security nature, I imagine that they will remain just that. They will not be made public, any more than the methods to strengthen the security will be made public.

The honourable senator can rest assured that action has been taken already. This event is unprecedented in our history. The Solicitor General and the Commissioner of the RCMP have both said very clearly that it will not happen again.

Senator Forrestall: Honourable senators, the purpose in asking my question is to underscore the determination and the absolute necessity of the Canadian public to know what happened, how it happened, and how it may not ever happen again. Having due regard for the requirements of the security measures being taken by those who are charged with the protection of our national leaders, the basis for my question is the need for Canadians to know how, and under what circumstances, their national leaders are protected.

Once again, I ask the Leader of the Government not to hide behind the absolutely ridiculous press conference that was held today. I felt embarrassed, as I am sure most viewers of it did. Canadians must understand and know that their leaders are being protected, and should not fear a repeat of what happened to the Prime Minister last night. With all due respect to everyone, there is a need for people to know. In the absence of that, there will only be continued fear.

I ask the leader to bring forward some enlightenment on this matter.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I am certain that the Commissioner of the RCMP, the Solicitor General and, indeed, the Prime Minister himself will weigh carefully the events of recent days, and whatever information is possible to give out will be given out, but not at the expense of the strength of the security surrounding the Leader of the Government and others.

Senator Forrestall: What security?

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have one delayed answer in response to a question raised in the Senate on June 13, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Spivak regarding the report on the state of the environment and discussion on sustainable development at the G-7 Summit.

ENVIRONMENT

CANCELLATION OF REPORT ON STATE OF ENVIRONMENT—POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSION ON SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT AT G-7 SUMMIT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Mira Spivak on June 13, 1995)

Environment Canada is not cutting the report. It is planning to bring out the 1996 state of Canada's environment report in an electronic format. The report will be made available chapter by chapter on the Internet, starting this year. In 1996, when all chapters are finished, a complete version will be made available on CD-ROM and a printed edition will follow if a private sector partner can be found.

Environment Canada remains committed to a comprehensive state of the environment reporting system. By finding a different way to produce these reports we can save $3.5 million over the next three years, and still provide Canadians with the information they need.

Environment Canada will be working over the next 12 months to put in place new, more efficient arrangements.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT BILL, 1995

ALLOTMENT OF TIME FOR DEBATE

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before we proceed with Orders of the Day, I want to mention that there has been lengthy discussion with the other side about allocating a specified number of days for the consideration of Senator Fairbairn's motion to instruct the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee to table its final report on Bill C-69. I am happy to report that we have been able to reach an agreement.

Accordingly, pursuant to rule 39, I move:

That at 5:30 p.m. on Tuesday, November 21, 1995, any proceedings before the Senate shall be interrupted and all questions necessary to dispose of the motion by the Honourable Senator Fairbairn, P.C., dated November 2, 1995, to instruct the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs to present their Final Report to the Senate on the Message and on the Motion regarding Bill C-69, An Act to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions and the readjustment of electoral boundaries, shall be put forthwith without further debate or amendment, and that any votes on any of those questions not be further deferred.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

An Hon. Senator: On division.

• (2100)

Hon. Lowell Murray: This may be a good time to congratulate the government, and in particular the Deputy Leader of the Government, for invoking yet another of the excellent new rules brought in by Senator Robertson and her committee several years ago.

Motion agreed to, on division.

EXPLOSIVES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Colin Kenny moved the third reading of Bill C-71, to amend the Explosives Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ENERGY, THE ENVIRONMENT AND NATURAL RESOURCES

AUTOMATION OF WEATHER STATIONS—INTERIM REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the seventeenth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources (study on the safety implications of automated weather observation systems (AWOS)), tabled in the Senate on Tuesday, July 5, 1995. — (Honourable Senator Kenny).

Hon. Colin Kenny: Honourable senators, this order has been standing in my name for some time now, and if no other senators wish to speak to it, I should like to have it removed from the Order Paper.

Before doing that, I should like to make a few brief comments relating, to some extent, to Senator Carney's Notice of Inquiry, No. 66, with which we will deal later in the day.

Simply put, the committee's report on AWOS was that the committee had no confidence in the automated weather system which the government was installing because the pilots do not believe that the new scheme, even though it saves a great deal of money, is safe. Until the committee is convinced by the pilots flying the aircraft that the new system is safe, I believe that there will be bipartisan opposition to this proposal. Until the government gains the support of the pilots who are responsible for the safety of flying passengers, and using this new system, your committee will continue to oppose this proposal.

Later tonight, or perhaps later this week, Senator Carney will speak at some length about the committee's unhappiness with the lack of response we have been receiving from the government on this matter. We issued an interim report on July 5, four months ago, and we asked for a response from the ministers involved: the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the Minister of the Environment, and the Minister of Transport. Members of the committee from both sides are extremely disappointed that we have not had the courtesy of a response.

Frankly, the only way that Senate committees will have any impact is if we insist that the government reply to our reports, and if we continue to call back members of the government to respond to our reports until we get satisfactory answers. This is a serious issue that affects all senators. It affects all of our committees. Honourable senators should know that the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources intends to make an issue of this until we receive a response from these ministers.

We are not asking necessarily even for a favourable response; we are simply saying we would like a response.

Senator Carney: We want a favourable response.

Senator Kenny: We would prefer a favourable response, Senator Carney, you are quite right. However, having said that, we have heard nothing from them, and that is not acceptable.

On motion of Senator Carney, debate adjourned.

PRIVILEGE

ORAL NOTICE

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, I rise today to give notice that I wish to raise a question of privilege pursuant to rule 43(1)(a) of the Rules of the Senate of Canada. I ask the Speaker of the Senate to rule whether there is a prima facie breach of privilege, and if so found, I am prepared to move the necessary motion.

The office of the Speaker of the Senate deserves our individual and collective support. The role of the Speaker of the Senate is quite different from that of the Speaker of the House of Commons. In legislative and constitutional powers, the Speaker of the Senate possesses no more powers than any other senator. In respect of statute-making authority, all senators are equal, and all possess the same powers. As senators, we must be mindful of this, and cause no deliberate or inadvertent intrusion into his position; that is, we must cause no imposition.

Honourable senators, I contend that such an imposition took place during debate on October 19, 1995, which is an imposition on the Senate itself and, consequently, constitutes a breach of the privileges of the Senate. The issues today concern a point of order that was raised in debate in this chamber on October 19, 1995. In the process, I ask senators to assert their individual powers, privileges and immunities, and thereby relieve the Speaker of the Senate from the growing burden of demands on him to exercise powers that he does not possess, and from requests to perform a role which is not the role of the Speaker of the Senate.

Honourable senators, there is developing in this chamber a practice of using points of order as implements for arresting and impeding debate. The result is the prevention of honourable senators from exercising their functions and duties as senators. The use of a point of order cannot exceed the authority, limits or purpose for which points of order are intended and cannot exceed its legitimate purpose as a point of order. In addition, points of order are precisely that — points — identifiable, discernible points, rules or orders that have been breached. The particular point must be identified and measured against the particular rule or order that has been impugned. Simply put, points of order are to maintain order, and points of order which create disorder are simply not in order. I refer to the point of order raised and advanced on October 19, 1995, by Senator Kinsella and supported by the Speaker pro tempore, Senator Ottenheimer, and by Senator Lynch-Staunton.

Honourable senators, the Speaker of the Senate is not the voice of the Senate, nor of the senators, and is not chosen by them. This was planned by the Fathers of Confederation and is embodied in section 34 of the British North America Act, 1867. Further, the Senate's powers and privileges are embodied in section 18 of the same BNA Act. Our Fathers of Confederation were very prudent and astute. They constituted and composed the Senate most deliberately. Further, a point of order cannot be used to compromise the Speaker or the position of the Speaker, or to limit the powers and privileges of the Senate. No point of order may ask the Speaker to adjudicate on the competence of the Senate to pass legislation. Competence is a question of the legal and constitutional powers of the Senate. Beauchesne's 5th Edition, rule 240, tells us that:

The Speaker will not give a decision upon a constitutional question nor decide a question of law, though the same may be raised on a point of order or privilege.

Further, in 1969, the Speaker of the House of Commons, Lucien Lamoureux, ruled that:

I have had occasion in the past to indicate that it is not the responsibility of the Chair to rule on questions of law or on constitutional questions. This ruling has been made in many instances by previous speakers.

These limitations to the Speaker of the House of Commons are even more marked for the Speaker of the Senate.

Honourable senators, sections 34 and 18 of the BNA Act cannot be amended by the personal assertions of some senators. Though leaders on their side, they simply cannot effect a constitutional change by a wish or whim. Words are insufficient to change the Constitution and the constitutional powers of this Parliament, this Senate or the Senate Speaker. The powers of the Senate and of senators are not amended, altered or limited by any senator's say-so or wishes. No senator may hold up the business or prevent the Senate or senators from exercising their functions and duties as senators.

Honourable senators, on Thursday, October 19, 1995, the only breach of order was committed by certain honourable senators while claiming a point of order. They shielded their actions from being called to order because a point of order cannot be raised on a point of order. When I called their attention to their breach saying "Your Honour, there is nothing before us. I did not move anything," they paid no attention. The Speaker pro tempore, in the name of order, did not permit me to move and second the question, the question being the motion for second reading of a bill.

Honourable senators, on October 19, 1995, there was no proper point of order raised by Senator Kinsella. In addition, Senators Ottenheimer, Kinsella and Lynch-Staunton were the ones breaching order. Beauchesne's 5th Edition, rule 296, tells us that:

It is a paramount principle that no Member may speak except when there is a question before the house.

In blocking the motion for second reading, they essentially prevented second reading debate. Bill S-11, concerning one Karla Homolka, is a bill like any bill seeking second reading. Certainly, those honourable senators know that it is in order for the Senate to pass bills, to debate second reading of a bill, and that bills are incipient acts of Parliament's statement.

Honourable senators, Senator Kinsella, under the claim of a point of order, though himself out of order, asked the Speaker pro tempore to make a determination on the substance of Bill S-11 while they blocked me from speaking on the substance. This was an improper request of the Speaker, an imposition. The Speaker pro tempore was asked to make a determination on the same substance, in particular, the powers, privileges and competence of the Senate. This determination of substance, that is, powers and competence, belongs to the Senate, not to the Speaker. Senator Kinsella asked the Speaker to appropriate a function and a power that belongs legally, constitutionally and politically to the Senate collectively.

Certainly no proper point of order was raised on October 19, 1995. When I asked the precise point of order that I had breached, neither of those three senators would identify the particular point, rule or order that they claimed had been transgressed by myself or Bill S-11. Also, I repeat, they themselves were out of order because there was no question before the Senate. The question of second reading had not been moved and seconded.

Their actions, destined to confound, designed to prevent the motion for second reading of Bill S-11, concerted to prevent second reading and second reading debate and to hinder the bill's movement through the Senate by placing it into the Speaker's cognizance, are actions that constitute a breach of this chamber's privileges.

Senator Ottenheimer, Speaker pro tempore, and Senators Lynch-Staunton and Kinsella, Leader and Acting Deputy Leader of the Opposition, know the rules of the Senate. Though Senators Carstairs and Stewart kindly reminded them of Senator Molgat's ruling of May 9, 1995, on points of order before questions are moved and seconded, they insisted and persisted on their course. Senator Molgat's rulings clearly indicate his and the Senate's concurrence with the time-honoured Senate rule that there may be no question before the chamber until such question is moved and seconded. On May 9, 1995, the Speaker of the Senate said:

...I do not think a point of order can be raised on a matter that is not yet before the Senate. The bill is not before the Senate. Until such time as Senator Tkachuk moves second reading, it is only on the Order Paper. It is not really before the Senate.

Earlier, on December 15, 1994, Senator Murray concurred with the Speaker of the Senate in saying:

...Senator Cools has given notice...of her intention to move a motion on that matter. Now is not the time to discuss whether or not the motion is in order, much less whether it is appropriate. However, I reserve the right to raise those questions when the motion is before us.

Senator Robertson also concurred. On February 14, 1995, she asked our Speaker the appropriate time to raise a point of order:

Honourable senators...I would like your direction. I wish to raise a point of order on the motion when it is put....Shall I wait until the motion is put, or should I raise my point of order this afternoon?

Senator Molgat replied:

Honourable senators, there is no motion before the Senate at this time. Until such time as Senator Cools moves the motion and it is read from the Chair, there is nothing before us. A debate at this point would be on an issue which is not really before the Senate.

Senator Robertson concurred again saying:

Honourable senators, that is why I raised the matter, because we do not have a motion before us.

• (2120)

Honourable senators, it is a breach of our privileges and powers to paralyse our legislative rights and functions by asking the Speaker to adjudicate the Senate's powers with regard to the substance and legislative result of bills as a device to block debate and senators' opinions.

Honourable senators, the Speaker of the Senate has no power or authority to adjudicate the substance and intention of Bill S-11 or of any other bill. He has no power to settle questions regarding the judicial result of Bill S-11 or regarding the Senate's pleasure to pass or not to pass Bill S-11, or the appropriateness or righteousness of the Senate's actions in this regard. The settlement of these questions belongs to the Senate institutionally, and the manner in which the Senate usually settles such questions is by consideration and debate of the bill.

The Senate's acceptance or rejection of Bill S-11 is a judgment and a pleasure that belongs to the Senate collectively and not to the Speaker individually. The Speaker, as all senators, may participate in these considerations, may debate and vote, but from the floor, not from the chair.

Honourable senators, a similar use of a point of order occurred in debate on November 1, 1995, found at page 2170 of the Debates of the Senate. Raising a point of order, Senator Lynch-Staunton interrupted the senator speaking. He raised certain issues for the Speaker's adjudication, issues which the Speaker had already spoken to, settled and ruled upon in his ruling on July 11, 1995. Senator Lynch-Staunton used a point of order to interrupt and impede debate and also as a mechanism to debate, question, reopen and even negate Speaker Molgat's ruling. I believe that to use points of order in this way is also a breach of privilege.

Honourable senators, the situation of October 19, 1995, involved no breach of any order or rule of the Senate by myself or Bill S-11. There was no breach of order other than the breaches by Senators Ottenheimer, Kinsella and Lynch-Staunton. However, honourable senators, there was a breach of privilege.

I ask the Speaker of the Senate to rule as to a prima facie case of privilege regarding the use of a point of order as a device to block debate and to bypass the Senate and the Senate's expressions of its views and opinions on Bill S-11; in short, to rule as to the use of a point of order to circumvent the Senate, to block its legislative functions and to compel the Speaker of the Senate to decide questions of law, constitution, competence and pleasure of the Senate. Such use of a point of order denied the exercise of our functions as senators, denied the Senate its legislative functions and denied the people of Canada adequate representation in the Senate. It denied the representative, legislative and constitutional functions of the Senate and the senators. In addition, to use a point of order to compel the Speaker of the Senate to assume the powers that rightly belong to the Senate has the effect of involving the Speaker in controversial discussions. This compromises the Speaker and the Senate's constitution.

Honourable senators, it is patently obvious to Ontarians that there exists a legal and political malignancy. Those brutal murders, the Crown's plea bargain agreements, Karla Homolka's secret trial, Mr. Justice Kovacs' judicial action and publication bans, lawyer Ken Murray's retention of the videotape evidence, the former Ontario Attorney General's case —

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Cools, you are getting into the substance of the matter and away from the point of order. Perhaps you could keep to the matter before us.

Senator Cools: It is a question of privilege, not a point of order.

I was trying to say that the public of Ontario perceives a terrible miscarriage of justice. This is a Medusa's head which requires Perseus' actions. The Senate's powers are crucial in light of the serious problems afflicting the legal profession, the Law Society of Upper Canada and the former attorney general's office.

Honourable senators, the practice of law as commerce — that is, the legal profession as a competitive, commercial interest — has placed the profession's self-interests —

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Cools, I hesitate to interrupt you again, but your point, as I understand it, is the power of the Speaker. It seems to me that you are now getting into the substance of the other argument which is not before us now. It is the power of the Speaker with regard to ruling on points of order.

Senator Cools: No, that is not it totally. That is insufficient. Your explanation is insufficient. What I am attempting to say is that the powers of the Senate and of the Parliament of Canada are more crucial and more critical at this point in our history, particularly in the life of Ontario, than at any other time. We are in a particular era, a particular phase in the development of this country, when it is time for these institutions to assert and to exercise their powers rather than to run timidly and to say, as does Senator Kinsella, that we have no powers.

I assure you that I have not spoken to the substance of the matter. I assure you that if I had gone into the substance of the matter, I would have been clear.

In any event, what I want to say is that there is a crisis of confidence in the administration of criminal justice, and the exercise and assertion of Parliament's powers are necessary to overcome it. Torontonians and Ontarians are deeply perturbed by these matters. Daily, the Toronto press and the people of Ontario state these concerns.

As a senator from Ontario, I request action from the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Cools, I hesitate to interrupt you, but the question before us deals with the powers of the Speaker, not what the people of Ontario feel. The question is: What are the powers of the Speaker? That, as I understand it, is the question you are raising. I would ask you to stay on that point, please.

Senator Cools: I was saying, as a senator from Ontario, that I request action from the Senate. Senator Kinsella's capricious point of order of October 19, 1995, is a breach of privilege that has denied me and this Senate the fundamental right to advance the concerns of the people of Ontario in this place.

Honourable senators, I have been very restrained and very dispassionate. However, our Hansard record of October 19, 1995, at pages 2139 to 2143, is less restrained than I.

I ask the Speaker to rule as to a prima facie case of privilege. I am prepared to move the necessary motion.

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, I disagree with the arguments raised by the Honourable Senator Cools that there is a prima facie case of breach of our orders here in terms of the authority of the Speaker to take decisions on points of order that are raised by honourable senators.

I refer honourable senators to rule 18(1) which makes it very clear that the duty of the honourable senator who is in the chair as Speaker is to preserve order and decorum. That is the general duty required by the rules. It also makes eminent sense that, unless there is order, very little wisdom will come forward from any kind of deliberation.

The Speaker is not without a fair history of guidance and well-defined parameters within which he or she makes the decisions on points of order and other matters that would interfere with order and decorum in the chamber.

The most fundamental argument is that which is implicit in rule 18(4) which says, of course, that, if the honourable senators are not satisfied with a decision made by the Speaker, the honourable senators may appeal and that the decision of the senators then becomes the final decision.

In essence, the role of the Speaker is clear in determining points of order. To safeguard the authority of the Senate as a chamber, we have the added provision of appeal so that, in the end, it is the senators' decision that determines what constitutes proper order and decorum. The point of order just raised does not contain a great deal of substance to it.

In her argument, Senator Cools did make reference to the objection with regard to the point of order that was raised. When a motion to present a bill in this chamber is brought to our attention, the bill being proposed by an honourable senator is printed and circulated. That is what happens at first reading. That is when we can first apprehend the action that is intended by the proponent of a project.

In this case, when we examined the bill at first reading, I rose on a point of order because it was clear to me that it was not the kind of bill that is appropriate in this chamber. I asked His Honour to rule on that as a point of order, which is quite different from the case referred to by Senator Cools in the matter of Bill S-10, which was moved by the Honourable Senator Tkachuk and ruled upon by His Honour. The difference is that there was no question about challenging the appropriateness of Bill S-10, at whatever stage of reading we were at; whereas, in this instance, there is a question concerning the appropriateness of the bill and, therefore, it was quite appropriate to have raised a point of order at that time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, does any other senator wish to speak? If not, then, Senator Cools, do you have a question?

Senator Cools: Yes, I should like to put two questions. I made it quite clear that I was raising a question of privilege, but I would still love to give Senator Kinsella the opportunity to tell me precisely what order or rule this Bill S-11 has transgressed. It is simply not good enough for the senator to keep repeating vague words about the appropriateness or the inappropriateness of a bill. That is a judgment that the members of this chamber have a right to make. The fact that Senator Kinsella disagrees with the bill is simply insufficient cause for him to raise a point of order and to suspend the bill and to take it out of debate. Senator Kinsella's personal opinions and personal beliefs are insufficient to form the opinion of the Senate.

That is my first point.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Cools, is that a question that you are asking of Senator Kinsella?

Senator Cools: Yes. I have asked him the question countless times before. He has raised a point of order. He has a duty to tell us the point that has been transgressed. That is what a point of order is. Perhaps we should have some debate in this chamber at some time concerning the difference between a point of order and a point of debate. Some of this is quite tiresome. If Senator Kinsella could tell me the rules or orders impugned, I would be grateful and appreciative because then I would understand him a lot better.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if there was urgency in the matter, I would be prepared to rule now. It seems to me that rule 18 is fairly clear. However, in fairness, I do want to have the opportunity to read what Senator Cools has said. Therefore, I propose to defer my judgment until later.

Senator Cools: I take it that Senator Kinsella will not answer, or does not want to answer, or wants to defer his answer.

The Senate, collectively, must reach its own conclusion.

The Hon. the Speaker: I think the question, Senator Cools, was more on the substance of the argument rather than on the powers of the Speaker. I think that is the question that is before us.

Senator Cools: Yes.

The Hon. the Speaker: I will defer that question and address it at a later date.

In fairness to you, I want to read carefully what you said. I must tell honourable senators that I do not make my judgments lightly. I have officials with whom I confer and I can assure you that we have hot debates quite frequently on the subject-matter. I propose to do the same in this case.

Senator Cools: I thank you, Your Honour. I have no doubt that you will, as always, be erudite and judicious.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

FIREARMS BILL

LETTER INVITING SUBMISSIONS TO TRAVELLING PANELS OF SENATORS

Hon. Lorna Milne: Honourable senators, I rise today to draw to your attention a situation which I believe needs some clarification.

While I was visiting my daughter and newborn granddaughter in Calgary last week, it came to my attention that many members of the public and, in fact, members of Calgary City Council are under the impression that the committee of the Senate charged with the study of Bill C-68 has sent subcommittees or panels out across the country to take evidence. Having sat in on that committee as a replacement, I know that the Steering Committee of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs made a conscious decision not to travel.

Part of the confusion in Calgary seems to arise from a letter which was given to me by several of the aldermen on Calgary City Council, and, if honourable senators wish, I can table a copy of this letter. The letter, written on Senate of Canada letterhead, is from a Mr. Stephen Ball, who seems to be an assistant in the office of Senator Ghitter.

In his letter dated October 24, 1995, Mr. Ball informs the mayor:

Progressive Conservative Senators have decided that it is appropriate to provide Canadians a further opportunity to speak with Senators about Bill C-68.

Mr. Ball then invites the Mayor of Calgary to make a presentation to one of the "panels of three to five senators." Mr. Ball is apparently the contact person for those who are interested in appearing.

I think his opening is misleading. Perhaps it should have read, "Conservative senators have decided to provide Canadians an opportunity to speak with Conservative senators." The letter as it stands would almost suggest that the Conservative majority on the committee had voted to travel. We know that that is not the case.

Reference is made in one part of the letter to the full committee. In another part of the letter, reference is made to panels. This juxtaposition might lead the reader to believe that the panels are subsets of the full committee.

It is easy to see how people could be confused by this letter. I know that many have taken from it and others like it the impression that the Senate's committee studying the bill is travelling. I merely wish to know whether this is proper, and to clarify the record on this matter, since I understand that the steering committee took a decision not to allow the committee to travel because they preferred to hear both pro and con positions presented in a balanced way. I have been told that the full committee has heard over 65 hours of testimony from over 70 witnesses.

I find that the fifth paragraph of this letter is particularly disturbing. It states:

Groups and individuals who asked to be heard by the full Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, but who were not invited to the meetings in Ottawa, will be given first consideration for one of the 30 minute allotments.

This clearly, to my mind, leaves the impression that the travelling senators are part of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee and are acting on the committee's behalf. In committee, it was made clear to me that they are not authorized to speak for the committee, nor do they have to report back to the committee.

I believe that any misconception arising out of this letter should be cleared up, and I invite honourable senators opposite to settle my mind about this affair.

[Later]

Hon. Gérald-A. Beaudoin: Honourable senators, I agree that the expression "full Senate committee" used in the letter of October 24, 1995, by Mr. Stephen Ball to Mayor Al Duerr of the city of Calgary may perhaps indirectly lead to the conclusion that the Progressive Conservative senators who are travelling to different areas of the country are acting on behalf of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, or as subcommittees of that committee.

Of course, it is a question of interpretation. As chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, I must say that the senators who are travelling do not, legally speaking, comprise subcommittees of our committee because, as the Honourable Senator Milne has said, the decision of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee was to stay in Ottawa. However, they have the absolute right to act on their own.

I will bring to the attention of Mr. Ball Senator Milne's intervention in the Senate. Perhaps the word "full" should not have been used in that letter.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

SUGAR—FAVOURABLE CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL TRADE TRIBUNAL RULING

Hon. Erminie J. Cohen: Honourable senators, yesterday the Canadian International Trade Tribunal confirmed what the Canadian sugar industry has been saying for months: Sugar is being dumped into the Canadian market from the United States, South Korea, and Europe. The tribunal also confirmed that imports from the European Union are unfairly subsidized. Sugar from these countries will now face tariffs of up to 200 per cent.

I welcome this ruling, which deals with one of the two trade-related problems faced by the Canadian sugar industry. I am particularly pleased because it will help lift a cloud that has been hanging over the heads of some 250 workers at Lantic Sugar in Saint John, New Brunswick.

The other trade problem concerns our access to the overly protected United States market. We do not subsidize our sugar industry, yet exports of refined Canadian sugar to the United States have fallen dramatically because of new trade restrictions. Last January, the United States said that Canada could only export 8,000 tonnes of sugar. That meant a 77 per cent cut from the previous 35,000-tonne quota. What is left of our quota is in serious jeopardy if Congress passes its proposed anti-Cuba legislation.

Our industry is not unfairly subsidized, and who we trade with is our business. Now that the problem of unfair imports has been resolved, the next step is to ensure that we have proper access to export markets.

HUMAN RIGHTS

ESTABLISHMENT OF SENATE COMMITTEE ON AFFIRMATIVE ACTION—REQUEST FOR RESPONSE TO STATEMENT

Hon. Donald H. Oliver: Honourable senators, when will the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate be in a position to provide this chamber with a report on our request of about one year ago in relation to Senate renewal and, specifically, on the creation of a standing committee on human rights? This is an area in which Senators Kinsella, Andreychuk, Ghitter, Di Nino and many others on this side have a deep interest. When will we receive the report on that matter?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on the broader question of Senate renewal or reform, changes or improvements to this place, as I have indicated privately to Senator Oliver, our Deputy Leader, Senator Graham, will be pursuing those issues directly in conversation with him, as we have pursued them within our own caucus.

On the question of the precise proposal for a committee on human rights, this interest has certainly been expressed on both sides of the house, along with other areas of interest for committee studies or studies in some other form. I hope that Senator Graham can continue this discussion with the honourable senator in the near future.

UNITED NATIONS

RESOLUTION TO HALT NUCLEAR TESTING—WITHDRAWAL OF CO-SPONSORSHIP—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. A. Raynell Andreychuk: Honourable senators, it was with outrage and concern that I reacted to the article in this morning's Globe and Mail that Canada has withdrawn its co-sponsorship of the United Nations resolution seeking to put a stop to nuclear weapons tests. This move by the government is surprising because it comes on the heels of numerous improvements in this sphere over the past year. March 5 of this year marked the 25th anniversary of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, or NPT, bringing with it both a sense of accomplishment and hope for the future. Canada's commitment to the indefinite, unconditional extension of the NPT was heartening.

Last June, I followed with considerable interest the passage of Bill C-87, to implement a convention on chemical weapons. More recently, I noted Canada's stated reservations vis-à-vis France's controversial nuclear tests.

In light of these recent developments, the government's decision to reverse its decision and withdraw co-sponsorship seems to be a step backward in an area in which Canada has traditionally been a world leader. What message is the government intending to send to the international community? If Canada supports the resolution, as the article states, and is simply arguing about the words — which in my opinion are the correct words in the preamble to the resolution — then why have we withdrawn as a co-sponsor of the resolution? If we are prepared to support such a resolution, should we not be seen to be continuing the line of foreign policy that, in the past, has stood Canada and the world in good stead? Can the Leader of the Government clarify this situation?

• (1420)

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am advised that Canada's position on nuclear weapons testing has not changed. We did, indeed, vote in favour of the resolution, and support the cessation of nuclear weapons testing.

My honourable friend indicated that there was some concern about wording. In the end, while Canada did not co-sponsor the resolution, we support the resolution. The negotiation of a successful, comprehensive test ban treaty also remains a top priority for Canada.

Senator Andreychuk: Honourable senators, we have witnessed 167 million deaths in this century as a result of warfare. A world of peace and cooperation has been the aim of Canadian policy makers since Confederation. Moving into the new millennium requires forward policy planning by our policy makers, and calls for a bold and principled foreign policy. We cannot be seen to be voting for something we are not willing to co-sponsor. What is the difference, except that we are backing away from being leaders in this area, which I think we should continue to be?

The Globe and Mail suggested that we are backing away from our position and our aggressive stands against nuclear proliferation as a result of pressure from France. This would not be the first time that that government has reversed its stated foreign policy and pursued solely economic or political interests.

I would ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to comment on whether Canada was pressured into a reversal by France or by any other country, and why it would yield to such pressure?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, to my knowledge, Canada did not respond to any pressure by France or by any other government. As my honourable friend knows, at the time, Canada expressed its strong regret with the decision by France to resume nuclear testing. We stated at the same time, as did others, that we were encouraged by France's renewed commitment to sign the comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty. I believe that will be done in May of next year.

Again, Canada's position on nuclear weapons testing has not changed. Its main tenet remains that no nuclear weapons test explosions should be conducted in any environment.

Senator Andreychuk: Why have we backed off from our leadership role in this area? Virtually every delegation that has left Canada has been armed with aggressive moves on the non-proliferation treaty. I accompanied Senator Bosa to the International Parliamentary Delegation in New York when his sole purpose — supported by all of us — was to put as much pressure as possible on delegations from other countries of the world to support the extension of the non-proliferation treaty, and to do whatever he could to curtail the use of nuclear weapons. Why would we now be backing off from co-sponsoring this resolution and thus putting ourselves in the position of being followers and not leaders in this area?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I restate that Canada has not backed off in any way from its position against the testing of nuclear weapons. We have remained consistent with that policy. We will vote for the resolution. However, by reason of our disagreement with some of the language in the preamble to that resolution, we did not co-sponsor it. Nevertheless, we strongly support the principle. Canada voted against nuclear testing; that is the message that any delegation leaving from the Canadian Parliament to anywhere else in the world can take with it.

Senator Andreychuk: In light of your comments, may I say that that has been the historic precedent and tradition, particularly when the words dispute it. I cannot conceive of why we would not support the words, but should there not be some underlying reason why we did not?

In the past, we have always been in a position where we could indicate that we were voting for a particular resolution, and remaining as co-sponsors, but dissociate ourselves from the wording, particularly that of a preamble statement. We have chosen in this case to move away from co-sponsorship, and thereby to relieve ourselves of a leadership position in this area. Unless the government can produce a meritorious reason for doing so, to quibble about words when lives are at stake is not consistent with previous Canadian governments that have been leaders in this area.

RESOLUTION TO HALT NUCLEAR TESTING—
REQUEST FOR COPY OF OFFENDING TEXT

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, by way of supplementary, as a matter of interest and for the record, would the Leader of the Government state what the words are to which Canada took such objection that it withdrew as co-sponsor of the resolution?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would want to consult with the Minister of Foreign Affairs on that matter and respond on another occasion.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

CORNWALLIS PARK DEVELOPMENT AGENCY—REQUEST FOR ANSWER TO ORDER PAPER QUESTION ON KPMG REPORT

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: Honourable senators, my questions today are along the lines of those asked earlier last week by my colleague Senator Comeau about the Cornwallis Park Development Agency as it goes about the business of finding a future in what was once my home.

Can the Leader of the Government give me some indication of the status of the response to the request I made in my Order Paper question of September 7, 1995, for a copy of the KPMG report on the internal financial and administrative management of the Cornwallis agency?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will have to check on the status of those particular questions. I have responded to our colleague Senator Comeau on earlier occasions. However, I know that you were unavoidably absent on the day that the Cornwallis Park Development Agency issue was discussed.

In summary, ACOA has reviewed the agency's accounting and administrative procedures and has recommended improvements. Until those improvements are satisfactorily made and concluded, the funding for that organization, which, as my honourable friend knows, is a locally established one, will be withheld. When the improvements are satisfactorily made, the funding will resume.

Senator Forrestall: Honourable senators, with all due respect, the Leader of the Government in the Senate cannot have it all her own way. We might wait forever. This mess has been described by a very prominent Liberal in that part of Nova Scotia, in written form to Minister Dingwall, as "potentially the greatest boondoggle to hit this government in the last 20 years." It is not sufficient to say that the government is putting in place measures to correct what might have been a minor problem.

Honourable senators, 125 people were employed to do the work that we now understand could have been done by 20 or 25. Does the Leader of the Government intend to leave the Senate with the impression that the government will take no specific action and that no disciplinary process will be invoked with respect to this matter?

The actions in the winding down of that base come blatantly close to serious wrongdoing. It is not enough to shove the matter under the carpet and resolve to look at some report when it eventually arrives. We want to know about the expenses. How much is it costing us? What has been spent to date? To whom are the expenses being paid? What were the hiring procedures? What process was followed with respect to the disposal of material?

I buried my blessed father in a church three weeks ago. After the funeral, the priest approached me and thanked me for the great generosity of the government in Ottawa for providing the pews that were being used in that church. Incidentally, that church was built — and largely paid for — by my grandfather.

I want this mess brought into some kind of clear, public focus. We cannot do that by sitting around, waiting six months for another report. There are a dozen questions that need public answers.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, the Honourable Senator Forrestall has used some colourful language, as he is wont from time to time to do. He also indicated that I or the Liberal government may consider this to be a minor problem, and he talked about waiting around for six months.

I have stated no such belief or intention. I have said that the situation has been reviewed. Some recommendations have been made and, with respect to those recommendations, the development agency has, itself, engaged the services of a senior management consultant to review the operations and management practices of the agency.

It is my hope that the questions — which are of keen interest not just to my honourable friend but to Senator Comeau as well — will be dealt with as the review goes on, and as the management consultant investigation continues.

I am not in any way trying to minimize anything, or to hide anything. I have given the honourable senator the information that I have received. I shall seek other information for him.

Senator Forrestall: Honourable senators, the report was prepared and ready before September 7. This is now November 7. If the government is not trying to hide it, then why has the report not been tabled or addressed in any public comment? Presumably it deals with the procedures followed with respect to the agency, its winding down of that base, and the conversion to some other form of economic activity.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I can certainly have discussions with my colleague. However, my honourable friend probably knows about some of the recommendations made by ACOA following its review of the management practices of the agency, including: that an acceptable business plan be completed and approved by the board of directors of that agency; that the CPDA address the division of responsibility between its staff and the board of directors; that the CPDA clearly define its operating procedures; and that it have appropriate long-term financial forecasts developed. Those are some of the guidelines which came through in the form of recommendations.

I will endeavour to keep my honourable friend apprised as I learn more about this issue.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

AGREEMENT ON INTERNAL TRADE— NATURE AND TIMELINESS OF AMENDMENTS TO BILL— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Fernand Roberge: Honourable senators, last June, I asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate a question about internal trade, which was finally answered on July 11.

As I mentioned previously in my question, Quebec has serious reservations about the enforcement provisions in the present version of Bill C-88. The other provinces also said they had a problem with these provisions. Bill C-88 may give Ottawa powers that go beyond what was agreed last year by the provinces and the federal government.

The government answered my question as follows:

Amendments to Bill C-88 to clarify the intent of the legislation will be introduced at the appropriate time.

Honourable senators, Bill C-88 passed second reading last night in the House of Commons.

I have two questions today. First, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us why the government is taking so long to send the amendments to the provinces? Second, could she advise the Senate of the nature of these amendments to Bill C-88?

[English]

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the bill to which the honourable senator refers will be dealt with in detail in a House of Commons committee. I would not presume to speculate upon the amendments that may be introduced or approved by members of various parties on the committee.

The bill is now in the midst of the process which may result in amendments. Along with my honourable friend, we will wait to see how things go in the other place.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

CORNWALLIS PARK DEVELOPMENT AGENCY—INVENTORY CONTROL AND HIRING PROCEDURES—
REQUEST FOR PARTICULARS

Hon. Gerald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, my question also deals with the Cornwallis Park Development Agency, to follow up on Senator Forrestall's question regarding the base assets.

As we know, the assets have not yet been transferred from DND to the agency. Could the Leader of the Government provide us with the details of the inventory control procedures which are in place to protect taxpayers' assets?

Also regarding inventory protection, the Leader of the Government is no doubt aware that questions have been raised about the hiring of the local member of Parliament's riding president as the inventory control manager at Cornwallis agency. Given the government's Red Book commitments to integrity during the last election, could the Leader of the Government advise senators whether an open competition was held for that position?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will certainly follow up on my honourable friend's question and report back.

UNITED NATIONS

HUMAN RIGHTS IN CHINA—DEFEAT OF RESOLUTION—
REQUEST FOR COPY OF TEXT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question in connection with an answer given in reply to a question asked last June by the Honourable Senator Doyle on human rights in China. The answer tells us about action taken during a session of the United Nations Commission for Human Rights in which Canada co-sponsored a draft resolution containing what I thought was a rather powerful call to China to overcome violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and observe international standards in the treatment of political prisoners and equity and transparency in the judicial system, freedom of expression and freedom of religion.

What interested me was that this draft resolution in which Canada had a major hand was defeated narrowly when put to a vote. Approximately 21 countries voted against the resolution and 20 supported it, with 12 abstaining. I am quite interested in knowing what countries opposed this resolution and what reasons were given to justify members of the United Nations voting against principles which are of the essence of the United Nations Charter and its declarations. That would be very interesting.

It would also be interesting to have a copy of the resolution itself, in addition to the information regarding the countries that opposed the resolution, and the reasons for their opposition.

It is interesting that even today there is a majority at the United Nations Commission for Human Rights which opposes acceptance of a resolution of this kind. There must be an explanation that is not apparent in the answer, and one which would probably throw additional light on the difficulty that countries like Canada face in the international community when taking a leadership role in the promotion of human rights in countries such as China. Perhaps the Leader of the Government could add this further information at a later date.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would be pleased to obtain a copy of the resolution to which the honourable senator refers. If senators wish, I will provide it to the Senate. I shall also try to obtain clarification on the numbers, those who opposed and, perhaps, those who abstained and the reasons for so doing.

VISITORS IN GALLERY

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I would like to draw to your attention the presence in the Senate gallery of a distinguished visitor, our former colleague Joan Neiman.

Hon. Senators: Hear, Hear!

PRIVILEGE

MOTION PURSUANT TO RULE 43—SPEAKER'S RULING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, before we proceed with Orders of the Day, I should like to report on a ruling that was requested of me some time ago.

On October 5, 1995, as found on pages 2105 to 2107 of the Debates of the Senate, the Honourable Senator Cools raised a question of privilege in accordance with rule 43 of the Rules of the Senate of Canada.

The question of privilege related to an article in The Edmonton Sun in which a witness who appeared before the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs allegedly cast reflections upon the Senate and senators in connection with the work of the committee concerning Bill C-68, respecting firearms and other weapons.

In Senator Cools' opinion, the comments by this witness, as stated in the newspaper article, "demonstrate her contempt for the Senate and for parliamentary process and make manifest the true reasons she appeared before the Senate committee."

This is not the first time senators have attempted to raise, as questions of privilege, complaints that newspaper articles cast adverse reflections upon this chamber. However, as Beauchesne's 6th Edition, citation 69 page 20, states:

It is very important...to indicate that something can be inflammatory, can be disagreeable, can even be offensive, but it may not be a question of privilege unless the comment actually impinges upon the ability of Members of Parliament to do their job properly.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, in its May 6, 1993 report on the question of privilege raised in the Senate by Senator Carney, P.C., and approved by the Senate on June 10, 1993, the Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders made the following observation:

[English]

An adverse reflection upon a Senator or the Senate can constitute a breach of privilege, but only if it impedes the Senator or the Senate from performing parliamentary functions. As such, it has a very narrow application, and is to be distinguished from actions for defamation, which are available to all citizens and are pursued through the civil courts. It is extremely difficult to bring oneself within the protection offered by this aspect of parliamentary privilege. There must be a link or nexus between the alleged defamation and the parliamentary work of the Senator.

I can find no link between the description given by Senator Cools of the comments by the witness and the ability of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee or the senators who serve on it to carry out their mandate with respect to Bill C-68. Finding no link, I cannot conclude there has been any prima facie breach of the privileges of the Senate. Senator Cools has had an opportunity to speak on the comments made by this witness and I think that this is where this matter should end.

In my opinion, there is no question of privilege.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

AGRICULTURE AND AGRI-FOOD ADMINISTRATIVE MONETARY PENALTIES BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Dan Hays moved the second reading of Bill C-61, to establish a system of administrative monetary penalties for the enforcement of the Canada Agricultural Products Act, the Feeds Act, the Fertilizers Act, the Health of Animals Act, the Meat Inspection Act, the Pest Control Products Act, the Plant Protection Act and the Seeds Act.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-61 creates a system that allows officials of Agriculture and Agri-Food Canada to issue monetary penalties for serious or repeated violations of the regulations in the food safety, pesticides and animal and plant health program areas. These monetary penalties can vary up to $15,000 for companies and up to $2,000 for individuals not engaged in agri-business.

The legislation also enables an independent tribunal to hear appeals of the monetary penalties. Let me define the term "administrative monetary penalty." This term is used to differentiate monetary penalties which are non-punitive in nature and not administered by the criminal courts, from fines which are meant to be punitive and are imposed by the criminal courts for convictions of regulatory offences.

The purpose of the administrative monetary penalties system, then, is to provide Agriculture and Agri-Food Canada with appropriate and more flexible responses when dealing with violations of regulations, such as the marketing of indelible food products or the inhumane transportation of animals.

The legislation will provide a framework in which Canada's high standards for food safety and quality can be effectively enforced, and it will allow Agriculture and Agri-Food Canada to regulate in a more efficient and cost effective way, requiring less time and money than pursuing offences through the provincial courts system.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, Bill C-61 supports competitiveness among agricultural sectors because it provides the additional measures required to make enforcement of the regulations affecting imported and Canadian products more equitable. Members of the Canadian industry have been complaining for years that they must comply with more rigorous regulations than their competitors with respect to safety and quality standards.

The industry supports the proposed system because it allows Agriculture and Agri-Food Canada to quickly take effective measures against Canadian importers and businesses marketing products that do not comply with Canada's high standards on food safety and pesticide use. Fairly applying standards to imported and Canadian products promotes competitiveness among agricultural sectors. If Agriculture and Agri-Food Canada has the means to enforce standards effectively, Canada can maintain its reputation as a producer of safe and healthy food. When exported products do not comply with health standards, the reputation of the whole agri-food sector suffers.

• (1450)

The concept of using an administrative process and the application of monetary penalties to encourage compliance with agricultural acts — rather than relying excessively on the criminal system to punish offenders — certainly makes a lot of sense. This is a non-punitive administrative system that has compliance as its goal. However, we will still have the option to prosecute serious offences.

The system is fair and expedient. It allows for negotiated solutions to non-compliance. Administrative monetary penalties can be reduced to zero dollars if a violator will take immediate action — for example, by purchasing new equipment — to come into compliance. Immediate corrective action, of course, results in a better product, improved health and safety, and more effective enforcement.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, Bill C-61 provides for the establishment of a tribunal in charge of reviewing the proposed monetary penalties from an administrative point of view. The review tribunal appointed by order of the Governor in Council is an independent quasi-judicial body. Also, alleged offenders who are unhappy with the review tribunal's administrative review may ask for a judicial review by the Federal Court of Canada.

[English]

I should like to say a few words about the use of absolute liability. Bill C-61 allows the issuance of monetary penalties based on absolute liability. This means that the department only needs to prove that the alleged violator committed an act that is in violation of the regulations. There would be no defence of due diligence by which a defendant could avoid liability by establishing that he or she was not negligent.

Under Bill C-61, there is no possibility of imprisonment, no record of conviction for an offence is created, and penalties are modest rather than punitive in nature. Because of these factors, there is no constitutional or other legal impediment to proceeding on the basis of absolute liability. From a policy perspective, however, the use of absolute liability is essential to encourage the food industry to exhibit a high standard of care. This is important for matters involving the food chain, and consistent with the approach the courts take in civil cases.

The concept of absolute liability is important to the effectiveness of this system as a preventive measure. Let me give you an example of the standards necessary in the food chain:

To someone with peanut allergies, even a minute amount of peanut dust is enough to send them into anaphylactic shock. To such a person, the issue is not whether a company exercised due diligence as a preventive measure. The finding that a product is mislabelled by not indicating the presentation of peanuts in itself warrants a finding of liability. The focus is on prevention and remedial action with Bill C-61, not on a finding of fault.

The use of absolute liability will also provide for an effective and efficient enforcement system. The resource base for enforcing regulations is shrinking. Bill C-61 deliberately designs a simple, efficient system to deal with those importers or domestic companies that do not follow our health, safety, and quality regulations.

These are a few words of explanation and elaboration on this piece of legislation, honourable senators. I commend it to you. At the conclusion of debate on this bill, I will, of course, as is our practice, ask for its reference to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Hon. Eileen Rossiter: Honourable senators, I rise today to express my party's support for Bill C-61, the Agriculture and Agri-Food Administrative Monetary Penalties Bill. This bill will allow agriculture inspectors to fine businesses which fail to comply with health, safety, or quality standards for agricultural products.

To appreciate the significance of this bill, we must consider the current regulatory regime governing health, quality, and safety standards for agricultural products. It is a fact that Canada currently does not enforce regulatory requirements on imports as rigorously as do our major trading partners, especially the United States. To Canada's detriment, this is the consequence of making farm products less competitive in our own country.

An example of regulatory non-compliance or violations of health, safety, or quality standards includes improper or misleading labelling of a product, or failure to keep facilities that handle the product in a sanitary condition; another is importing feed, seeds or foods products not properly registered or labelled.

Under the current regulatory regime, warnings, seizure, and detention of products and criminal prosecutions are usually used to enforce regulations. However, these methods are lengthy and costly, and not always effective. The legislation before us today seeks to remedy these imperfections by setting up a new administrative monetary penalty system, or AMPS. As I interpret this provision of Bill C-61, the thinking behind the introduction of these monetary penalties to the regime governing standards for farm products is to ensure greater compliance.

To this end, Bill C-61 allows officials to fine violators to a maximum of $15,000, subject to criteria specified in the regulation portions of the bill, halves the penalties if the violator pays the fine within a prescribed period, and makes provisions for a violator to request to enter into a compliance agreement. In this case, the penalty may be waived or reduced, for example, by $1 for every $2 spent to remedy the problem. Bill C-61 also allows a violator who has objections to the penalty assessed to request a review by the minister or an independent tribunal, and includes provisions for absolute liability for regulatory violations. In other words, a penalty can be imposed without proving fault.

As I stated at the beginning, this side of the chamber is prepared to support Bill C-61 at this stage of the bill's reading. However, there are a few provisions of Bill C-61 that we will be questioning in committee. We will be questioning the provision of the bill dealing with interpretation by the minister upon appeal of fines by violators. Similar to the objections that Progressive Conservative senators who are members of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee have with the Order in Council provisions of Bill C-68, the firearms bill, there exists the possibility that this provision of Bill C-61 will introduce a small element of arbitrariness into how appeals under this legislation will work; an element of arbitrariness that Progressive Conservative senators would rather avoid.

A second objection is in the area of enforcement of penalties as established by regulation. It appears that the administration and regulation of the actual AMPS system could undermine one of the central objectives of the bill, which is to deal with the length, cost and effectiveness of the current system. Although the government claims that there will be substantial savings resulting from this bill, nowhere does the government specify what, or how much, these savings will be. In fact, when reviewing the system of fines, appeals by violators to tribunal or ministerial appointees, or possible further appeals to courts, it seems that Bill C-61 could create additional costs.

Having understood this, honourable senators, we are prepared to support Bill C-61 at this stage in the process.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, does any other honourable senator wish to speak? If Senator Hays speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on this motion for second reading.

Senator Hays: Honourable senators, I thank the senator opposite for what I think were supportive comments, although I noted her desire that the matter be dealt with further in committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Hays, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

EXCISE TAX ACT INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Peter A. Stollery moved the second reading of Bill C-103, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Income Tax Act.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-103 resolves a problem of which some of us who have been around for a few years are well aware. It goes back to Grattan O'Leary's commission on the magazine industry. The resulting bill stopped U.S. publishers from doing that famous split run in which the issue was written and produced in the United States, with their advertising, and when it came to Canada they would drop the U.S. advertising and use the same content to get Canadian advertising revenue.

I believe that issue was dealt with by Bill C-58 in the 1970s. I was a member of the committee at that time.

This bill addresses a wrinkle which has arisen. Apparently, Bill C-58 stopped material from physically being brought across the Canadian border. However, that provision is being circumvented by Sports Illustrated, which is beaming its product by satellite into Canada. This bill closes that loophole. As Senator Stewart says, it closes the heavens.

Honourable senators, Bill C-103 is a measure in support of Canadian magazines. The tax measure before us today updates a long-standing policy of successive governments to recognize the unique circumstances faced by Canadian periodicals.

More than 30 years ago, the 1961 Royal Commission on Publications, more commonly referred to as the O'Leary commission, examined the situation of the Canadian magazine publishing industry. I know that many senators here will recall that process.

After an in-depth study, they recommended the implementation of policy measures designed to encourage the flow of advertising revenue to the Canadian magazine industry. This would allow the industry to operate from a more secure financial footing. Canadian magazines must be fully prepared to compete for readers with their international counterparts. However, they cannot be expected to compete with their U.S. counterparts for the limited number of Canadian advertising dollars available. Canadian magazines must recover their costs in a country of 27 million people, thus their production runs must be proportionately smaller and at a higher cost per issue.

Their U.S. counterparts can recover their production costs in a market 10 times larger. They produce larger print runs at a lower unit cost and, therefore, need only charge Canadian advertisers a rate that covers Canadian printing and administrative costs. These rates could be substantially lower than Canadian magazine publishers could charge for the same ad space.

This is a legally contentious issue which will, I understand, be proceeding through the courts, so it is important to get some of these facts on the record for what may be a prolonged legal issue.

In order to level the playing field, the government acted on O'Leary's recommendations by implementing two complementary measures in 1965. They are section 19 of the Income Tax Act and tariff code 9958.

The first measure, section 19 of the Income Tax Act, allows a deduction for an advertisement directed at the Canadian market only if that advertisement is placed in a Canadian issue of a magazine or newspaper that is, one, 75 per cent Canadian-owned and controlled and, two, contains 80 per cent original editorial content.

Tariff code 9958 is a measure directed at restricting the entrants of split runs into the Canadian market. In a split-run magazine, a publisher uses articles and other editorial material prepared and paid for in the magazine's domestic market and inserts advertising aimed at another market; for our purposes, the Canadian market. Tariff code 9958 restricts the importing of magazines containing advertisements directed at Canadians. It authorizes Canada Customs to stop the entry into Canada of the subsequent four issues of a magazine after the publication of an issue that has been deemed to be a split run. This effectively discourages foreign publishers from exporting split runs into Canada.

Before tariff code 9958 was introduced, virtually all foreign magazines containing advertisements directed at Canadians were printed in the country of origin and imported into Canada for distribution. Tariff code 9958 has worked well for over 30 years. In January 1993, Time Warner announced that it intended to publish Sports Illustrated Canada. Sports Illustrated Canada is a split-run edition that is printed in Canada, using text electronically transmitted from the U.S. The editorial content of Sports Illustrated Canada is largely the same as that of U.S. editions of Sports Illustrated, but contains advertisements that have been specifically chosen to reach a Canadian audience.

Tariff code 9958 is not applicable to Sports Illustrated Canada because that magazine is printed in Canada, rather than being imported. The publication of Sports Illustrated Canada has sent a signal that it is now possible to contravene the spirit of tariff code 9958 by using a technology that did not exist when the tariff code was implemented.

The emergence of Sports Illustrated Canada as a new split run magazine demonstrated the limitations of Canada's existing policy instruments designed to support the magazine industry. Accordingly, a task force on the Canadian magazine industry was struck to examine the problem and to recommend new ways to promote Canada's policy objectives for the magazine industry. The task force on the Canadian magazine industry commissioned a number of studies. These revealed the difficult challenges inherent in the Canadian marketplace faced by the Canadian magazine industry.

The most significant factors defining the environment in which Canadian publishers compete for Canadian readers are the penetration of the market by imported magazines; the relatively small size of the Canadian population; the openness of Canadians to foreign cultural products, particularly film and television; the effect of the cover prices of imported magazines on the Canadian price structure; newsstand competition from foreign magazines; and the impact of overflow advertising on the potential advertising market in Canada.

Magazines have two clients — the reader and the advertiser. Thus, there are two streams of revenue — circulation revenues from sales to readers and advertising revenues. Magazines with large circulations attract advertisers. With these advertising revenues, magazines can create editorial content to attract readers. The task force on the Canadian magazine industry reconfirmed that advertising revenue is by far the most important revenue stream for Canadian magazines, accounting for 65 per cent of revenues. It supports the cost of the editorial content and makes it possible for the publisher to improve and increase editorial content and attract more readers.

One could make an interesting observation at this point. In the city of Toronto, not only is the revenue from sales to readers becoming less important, but give-away newspapers in Toronto have had a huge impact on the revenues of regular newspapers.

They have developed enormous circulations with no circulation revenue at all. The revenue comes entirely from advertising.

In effect, advertising is the lifeblood of the Canadian magazine industry. This is as true in Canada as anywhere else. In Canada, however, periodical publishers must attract advertising revenues and readers in the face of tremendous competition from American magazines for advertising revenues.

As the O'Leary commission stated:

If we hold that a periodical press is essential to the Canadian nation, no more to be produced for us by outlanders than our statute books, then we face an inescapable choice: either our periodical press must have preserved for it enough Canadian advertising to ensure its existence, or it must be subsidized by the state.

Honourable senators, after reviewing the state of the magazine industry in Canada, the task force issued its final report in March 1994. This is not the O'Leary commission, but the other task force. Its main recommendation was that an excise tax be imposed on split-run editions of periodicals.

In December of 1994, the government responded to the final report of the task force and indicated its intention to implement an excise tax on split-run editions. Bill C-103 will amend the Excise Tax Act to implement this tax. The tax will apply to split-run editions distributed in Canada that contain more than 20 per cent recycled editorial material and one or more advertisements directed at Canadians. It will be imposed at a rate of 80 per cent of the value of all the advertisements contained in a split-run edition. Certain magazines that distributed split-run editions in Canada prior to the creation of the task force will receive limited grandfathering treatment.

Honourable senators, this is a tax measure of general application. It will apply to any Canadian split-run edition regardless of whether it is published by a Canadian or foreign publisher. The government is not regulating the activities of advertisers, printers, publishers or distributors. This measure simply encourages Canadian advertisers to place advertisements in magazines which have original content. In this way, the government is promoting long-standing policy objectives consistent with Canada's international trade obligations. The measure applies to all split-run editions distributed in Canada with little original editorial content regardless of country of origin.

When the task force on the Canadian magazine industry was initiated, the government indicated that it was prepared to support its policy on magazines. Moreover, the government stated that:

Should foreign publishers decide during the work of the task force to undertake any new publishing activity which would contravene or sidestep the government's policy objectives for the magazine industry, they would do so at their own risk.

In addition to its recommendation concerning the Excise Tax Act, the task force made several other recommendations. These included a recommendation that an anti-avoidance rule be added to section 19 of the Income Tax Act. As I mentioned earlier, section 19 of the Income Tax Act is one of the principal policy instruments supporting the magazine industry. It allows deductions for advertisements directed at the Canadian market only if they are placed in Canadian issues of Canadian-owned and controlled magazines or newspapers.

Bill C-103 will amend the Income Tax Act to add an anti-avoidance rule to section 19. The purpose of this rule is to ensure that magazines and newspapers that purport to be Canadian are controlled, in fact, by Canadians.

To summarize, the two measures contained in this bill will ensure the continuing vitality of Canadian cultural expression. They will ensure that Canadian magazines continue to flourish. Canadians need Canadian magazines. They are a vital form of cultural expression. They provide a channel for the flow of Canadian ideas, information and views to Canadians. Canadian magazines provide a medium for discourse.

As noted in the O'Leary report in 1961:

Only a truly Canadian printing press with the "feel" of Canada and directly responsible to Canada can give us the critical analysis, the informed discourse and dialogue which are indispensable in a sovereign society.

Honourable senators, Canadians will continue to have access to foreign as well as Canadian periodicals. Canadians are indeed fortunate to have unparalleled access to publications from around the world. Nothing in this bill would deny Canadians the right to purchase magazines of their own choice. However, as noted by the task force on the Canadian magazine industry, choice would be lessened if there were no Canadian magazines.

Research conducted by the task force on the Canadian magazine industry found no evidence that Canadian magazine publishers are any less efficient than their U.S. counterparts. The issue here is one of relative market size and economies of scale, not of relative efficiency of markets or lack thereof in Canada.

It would be simplistic to suggest that the Canadian magazine industry should take advantage of the economies of scale that North American free trade offers. American popular culture is part of the everyday life of Canadians, and so the editorial content of American magazines is generally of interest to Canadians.

Canadian popular culture and Canadian issues are not part of the everyday life of Americans. Canadian magazines, if they were to succeed in the U.S., would have to change their editorial content so profoundly that they would no longer be important to Canadian cultural products.

In closing, honourable senators, let me emphasize that this government stands firmly behind the Canadian magazine industry and long-established magazine policy. The government recognizes that access to Canadian advertising dollars is critical to ensure the economic viability and the continued existence of the Canadian magazine industry. Canadian advertising dollars should support an indigenous Canadian magazine industry.

The measures proposed in Bill C-103 will help maintain Canada's long-standing policy of ensuring an adequate advertising revenue base for the Canadian magazine industry. I therefore urge members to ensure speedy passage of Bill C-103.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I thank the Honourable Senator Stollery for having placed so thoroughly on the record much of the background of this bill.

I am very happy to see Senator Davey in his seat this afternoon since he was one of my principal tormentors on this issue when I was Leader of the Government in the Senate. Actually, I think we saw eye to eye on the issue at the time, and still do, because I have no hesitation in declaring my support for the principle of this bill.

I do not have very much to add to the historical background that Senator Stollery has placed on the record. However, I will offer a few comments before concluding my remarks and presumably paving the way for the referral of this bill to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Honourable senators, Senator Stollery has pointed out that the bill is contentious in legal terms. I have on my desk a legal brief from a Toronto law firm which represents, I believe, the publishers of Sports Illustrated. I have not had an opportunity to read the brief, although I recall the same firm was active at about the time this issue first arose in 1993.

The committee should consider calling either the lawyers or their client to hear what they have to say, not because I think the committee should constitute itself as some kind of court to adjudicate legal issues, however, if there are valid issues, there may be remedies that the committee will want to consider.

As Senator Stollery has said, the main elements of the 1965 policy served us well for almost 30 years. Those two elements were the special code in the Customs Tariff and section 19 of the Income Tax Act. When in January of 1993 it was announced that Sports Illustrated intended to go ahead with a so-called Canadian edition, a test run of six, we found that the old policy was simply inadequate to deal with new circumstances.

First, the customs code was inadequate to deal with the new technology through which, as Senator Stollery said, the page proofs were electronically transmitted from the United States to Canada and then printed in Canada.

As for the income tax provision, it was still in place but considered inadequate to protect Canadian magazines from not just Sports Illustrated but from others that would come along taking advantage of the same technology and of the same loophole, if you will, in the law.

It turns out that the first edition of Sports Illustrated took about a quarter of a million advertising dollars out of Canada. It does not sound like a very large sum but, over five more issues, it would add up. Further, if, as we all expected and as I believe Time Warner acknowledged, it was in their minds to go on to 51 issues a year, then we would be looking at a considerable sum of money in the context of the perilous financial state of the Canadian magazine industry.

Magazines depend, as Senator Stollery has pointed out, upon advertising for 65 per cent of their revenues. Canadian magazines presently hold only a 40 per cent market share in this country, or so it was the last time I looked.

Further to that, as I say, it was not so much the Sports Illustrated case in itself but the precedent which would be created. There are some 40 United States periodicals available in Canada with a circulation of more than 50,000 each. People magazine, which is in the same family as Sports Illustrated, a Time Warner product, has a circulation of over 200,000. Clearly, the situation was unsustainable in terms of the economics of the Canadian magazine industry and had to be dealt with.

Even the protections that we thought we had under Investment Canada proved to be inadequate. Time Warner was able to persuade Investment Canada and obtain a ruling to the effect that what they were doing with Sports Illustrated was not setting up a new business and therefore was not reviewable by Investment Canada. Investment Canada gave them a ruling saying that because Time Warner already published a Canadian edition of Time magazine in Canada, the Sports Illustrated case was really the expansion of an existing business and therefore not reviewable.

The Customs Tariff had proven to be inadequate. We could not see how it could be made to be effective in a situation of this kind. All our advisors saw many ways in which it could be circumvented. The Investment Canada rules had proven to be inadequate. Section 19 of the Income Tax Act, while it was still in place, was not enough to do the job.

Sometime in early 1993, I believe it was in March, we appointed the task force under the co-chairmanship of Roger Tassé and Jeremiah Patrick O'Callaghan and put them to work. I recall very clearly what we had in mind in appointing the task force, and it was not simply a neutral examination of the policy. Mr. Beatty, the then Minister of Communications, made it clear that we wanted the policy brought up to date. We wanted to match the new climate, particularly the new technological climate, that was in existence. We encouraged Mr. Tassé and Mr. O'Callaghan to bring in an interim report before the final deadline of December 31, 1993. We were concerned that, now that the door was open, there would be a full-scale invasion by United States magazines looking to take advantage of this situation.

The interim report was presented in May of 1993, with two recommendations only. One was that the government should issue a policy statement reaffirming Canada's position on these matters dating back to 1965 and making quite clear our intention to take whatever steps would be necessary to block any further invasion of this kind — as I say, pour décourager les autres.

The second recommendation was to clarify the Investment Canada guidelines on this matter. As honourable senators may recall, June 1993 was a rather busy month, politically. There was a change of administration. Prime Minister Campbell took over at the end of June.

In the first half of July, the government acted on the two recommendations in the interim report of the Tassé-O'Callaghan task force. Monique Landry, then Minister of Communications, issued the statement that the task force had recommended, reaffirming Canada's policy in this matter and issuing, in effect, a caution, a warning to any U.S. or other foreign periodical publishers who might be tempted to follow the same road as Time Warner and Sports Illustrated had followed.

Second, and also in July 1993, the Honourable Jean Charest, who was then the minister in charge of Investment Canada, put out a ministerial directive under the Investment Canada Act entitled, "The Related Business Guidelines," which had the desired effect so far as the Investment Canada situation was concerned.

As Senator Stollery has pointed out, the final report came in a bit later than anticipated, sometime in early 1994. There were 10 or 12 recommendations in the report. Two of the most important ones are being acted upon now with Bill C-103.

I have not had an opportunity to read the legal brief which has been filed by the solicitors for Time Warner and Sports Illustrated. However, I do hope that it will be canvassed by the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee when the bill is before it for study.

I also suggest that we give the bill more than a cursory examination, not because I have any particular problems with it, but because of the importance of the policy context in which this bill is being brought. Perhaps Mr. O'Callaghan and Mr. Tassé could come and discuss the two recommendations which are incorporated in this bill, as well as the other recommendations in the task force report. Indeed, there may be other witnesses, such as the Canadian Magazine Publishers Association that will want to be heard.

We want to be sure we have an effective bill. We must be sure that we have a bill that does the job we want it to do. In that spirit, I simply indicate our approval in principle and our desire to see the bill go to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Senator Stollery: Honourable senators, if no one else has anything to say at this point —

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform you that if the Honourable Senator Stollery speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Stollery, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Poulin, seconded by the Honourable Senator Marchand, P.C., for the second reading of Bill C-7, an Act respecting the control of certain drugs, their precursors and other substances and to amend certain other Acts and repeal the Narcotic Control Act in consequence thereof.

Hon. Jean-Claude Rivest: Honourable senators, I would like to draw your attention to the importance of the legislation proposed in Bill C-7. This bill concerns how we control a very serious social problem in modern society: drug use.

This may be surprising, but it may be the only way to control this very serious social and human problem. The measures proposed in this bill are one more attempt to deal with the problem of drug trafficking but, and this is not only the case in Canada but in all western countries, they fail to resolve the other side of the problem: demand. Why do so many of our fellow citizens in Canada and elsewhere, and especially young people, use narcotics to try and experience what can only be the illusion of happiness?

We should probably take a long hard look at the existing demand for narcotics and drugs and at the structure and values of our society. We should realize that the economic and social problems facing society in terms of unemployment and the lack of a future for our young people have — and this should be our primary concern — a deeply human dimension which explains the current drug epidemic.

Bill C-7 is one of many measures available to the government to control the supply of drugs. The Parliament of Canada has on a number of occasions passed legislation to reinforce existing mechanisms.

The bill before us today is useful for a number of reasons. It has the effect of sending a very clear message to those who sell drugs, especially when they operate in the immediate vicinity of young people, on school property or inside schools. The bill provides that trafficking in drugs in an environment frequented by young people constitutes an aggravating factor and, as a result, the courts shall consider such factors when imposing a sentence. This is one more way, and many others have already been implemented, to prevent or try to prevent as many young people as possible from becoming addicted to drugs.

Bill C-7 allows something that is always rather controversial with respect to basic freedoms, but validates a procedure that is probably one of the most effective, and I am referring to police infiltration of networks engaging in the sale and distribution of narcotics. We are familiar with this restriction on individual freedoms. However, considering the importance and gravity of the problem, it is a restriction which in the meaning of the Charter constitutes a reasonable way to proceed in that it gives police forces a chance to infiltrate networks so as to eliminate them as much as possible.

The bill goes into great detail, not only about the drugs we know and often read about in the papers, but also the whole chemical aspect of this question; in other words, there is a group of products referred to as precursors which are used to make certain compounds.

I will not read all the schedules to the bill because this would turn into a lecture on pharmacy or chemistry, but there are any number of products used by drug traffickers to upgrade the value of the destructive merchandise they put on the market.

Honourable senators, I think the set of measures proposed in Bill C-7 is very important. More particularly, I want to stress the concern the government probably has, and which is shared by honourable senators, for having measures that are specifically targeted to young people. That is probably where we should start. These measures will probably be more effective, in the immediate and long term, in dealing with this problem.

Honourable senators, beyond these specific administrative or police measures to combat the scourge of drugs, I would like to say, on behalf of all senators, how important it is in the present context to encourage and preserve the many organizations working throughout Canada to prevent this scourge and rehabilitate those who have had problems with drugs.

In Canada, and particularly in Quebec, there is a significant number of volunteers and others working to help their fellow citizens overcome these serious difficulties.

These volunteer drug prevention and drug victim support organizations are concerned at the moment because they often depend a lot on public funds to help them continue their humanitarian activities. In the context of the present budget restrictions throughout Canada, I express the wish, and I think I speak for us all, that there be no cuts to these initiatives, which are absolutely vital in the field and probably provide prevention and rehabilitation activities for victims of drug problems. When you think about it, this sort of measure is much more effective than simply increasing police action, which is absolutely vital and specifically addressed by Bill C-7.

As I said at the start of my remarks, the problem with drugs is not a police problem as such and probably not just a matter of health, but, rather, a problem of human behaviour, of men, women, young people and seniors living in a society which does not always give the importance — and we know this all too well — due to individual approaches and to the ambitions and hopes people create for themselves and their family.

I think it important for the Senate to look at and begin to consider the significance of the drug problem in today's society. We must take all the necessary measures, regardless of the cost, to support the volunteers and their organizations so they may continue their work and ultimately try to reduce this scourge, which, unfortunately, is one of the most distressing signs of our modern world.

Hon. Marie-P. Poulin: Honourable senators, I thank Senator Rivest for his relevant comments in strong support of Bill C-7.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Poulin, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

CHILD ABUSE AND MORTALITY

INQUIRY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Anne C. Cools rose pursuant to notice of Wednesday, July 12, 1995:

That she will call the attention of the Senate to the issues of child mortality, child abuse neglect deaths (CAN deaths), child abuse and child maltreatment in Canada, including the physical injury of children, parental violence and aggression, child neglect, the "failure to thrive" syndrome, psychological injury to children, parental manipulation of children, and misadventure suffered by children in Canada.

She said: Honourable senators, I would like to draw to your attention child suffering and abuse in Canada, and in particular the increasing number of deaths and cases of abuse of children at the hands of their parents.

A case in point is the terrible death of three-year-old John Ryan Turner of Miramichi, New Brunswick, in 1994. The neglect and abuse of this little boy were well reported. John was routinely kept in a harness, locked in a cupboard, and had socks stuffed in his mouth to stifle his cries. When he died, John weighed half the normal weight for his age, was covered in bruises, and had broken bones. His father completely ignored him, and his mother showed him hatred and contempt from the day he was born. This abuse, neglect, and absence of love, known as the "failure to thrive syndrome," afflicted little John Ryan Turner, and ultimately led to his death and the trial and conviction of his parents this past summer.

In 1977, Toronto and Ontario were horrified by the child abuse neglect death of one-month-old Vicky Star Ellis. But for the initiative of the coroner, Dr. Elie Cass, this death would have passed unnoticed, as do many children's deaths. The five-week inquest cost over $2 million. The mother, Deborah Ellis, was a textbook case of an abused child having become an abusing parent. Deborah had grown up brutally abused by the women in her life, her mother and her grandmother.

In all, Deborah Ellis had six children, sired by different men. Of these six, three died in her care, and a fourth nearly died. Parrish, aged 17 months, drowned unattended in a bathtub; Darlene, aged 11 months, died of neglect; and Vicky Star, barely one month old, died of neglect. Charlene, aged two years, was rescued 15 minutes from death by able medical and hospital response. Of her six children, three were apprehended, including her sixth child who was apprehended at birth.

Part of Deborah Ellis' disorder was her compulsion to have children. She defiantly said:

No one can stop me having children — not the judge, or the coroner, or the Children's Aid Society.

About her personality problem, Dr. Clive Chamberlain, then director of the Family Court Clinic, wrote:

Since part of Mrs. Ellis' personality disorder was a compulsion to have children, and since nothing could be done to prevent it, she should have another chance, through Vicky, to learn how to mother for the sake of children yet unborn.

Little Vicky's life was to be an educational tool for Deborah Ellis, whose life was a tangle of pathologies. The judge returned newborn Vicky to her mother. This baby was dead within a month.

In 1976, a year prior, in Sarnia, Ontario, there was the terrible case of Kim Anne Popen's death at 18 months. Kim suffered physical and emotional abuse, and her condition was well known to police, social and health care workers. She died. The mother, Jennifer Popen, pleaded guilty to manslaughter and was sentenced to seven years' imprisonment.

Parental aggression, violence, infanticide and neglect are too common. The most defenceless people in our society, the children, are the innocent victims.

Honourable senators, the history of these unfortunate children is well documented and appears in much literature. Equally well known were the "killing nurses" or the "she-butchers," as they were called in England; those persons who acted as wet nurses, midwives, and home abortionists. Alix Kirsta, in her book Deadlier Than the Male, writes that:

... the scandal of Britain's 'lying-in houses', where babies were 'arranged' to be stillborn, was not exposed until 1868 — when it turned out that large areas of London's most salubrious districts, for example St. Marylebone, were a hot-bed of infant massacre and casual baby 'disposal', with corpses often to be found in public parks and ditches.

In 1845, Benjamin Disraeli, who had been Prime Minister of Great Britain, as the United Kingdom was then known, wrote in his novel Sybil that:

Infanticide is practised as extensively and legally in England as it is on the banks of the Ganges.

In Toronto, at the turn of the century, when a pond on the campus of the University of Toronto was drained, the bones of many newborn infants were discovered.

On March 2, 1911, in the House of Commons, Dr. J.B. Black, member from Nova Scotia, stated:

I have some figures here which will probably astonish some of us. In the city of Ottawa there were born last year, to the 31st of October, 1910, 2,100 children. Ninety percent of those should have lived. Of those born, 626 died, or nearly 32 per cent of all the children born in Ottawa up to that date died. This is the highest rate of mortality among infants in any city in the world where statistics are kept.

In 1912, the Legislative Assembly of Ontario published a report entitled Infant Mortality surveying infant mortality in Canada. The report said:

How many of the citizens of Ontario know that we buried nineteen babies under one year old every day in Ontario in 1909, or 6,932 — nearly 7,000 — in that one year?

About illegitimate children, the report stated that:

... their death rate is almost twice as great as the death rate of legitimate children. That death rate is often simply murder, and a slow and cruel murder of a helpless victim.

Honourable senators, an enormous advance in the detection of child abuse came about by the use of radiology — X-ray technology. In 1946, American John Caffey boldly and bravely declared his observations regarding the association between subdural haematoma, abnormal X-ray changes in the long bones of children, and injury, stating that these traumas were not caused by accidents but were wilfully inflicted. These revelations caused much shock. The examination of children's injuries was continued by another American, Dr. Frederic Silverman, and culminated in the work of Americans Dr. Ray Helfer and Dr. Henry Kempe, who coined the term "the battered child syndrome" in 1961.

One hundred years prior, Dr. Ambroise Tardieu's work in forensic medicine at the Paris morgue concluded that children had suffered greatly at the hands of their parents, and that the injuries did not match their parents' accounts. In 1860, he published that:

...those defenceless unfortunate children...that their lives, hardly begun, should be nothing but a long agony...tortures before which even our imagination recoils in horror, should consume their bodies...shorten their lives, and, finally, the most unbelievable thing of all, that the executioners of these children should be more often than not the very people who gave them life.... This is one of the most terrifying problems that can trouble the heart of man.

Honourable senators, these words of more than a century ago are just as relevant today. Between April and July, 1995, The Ottawa Citizen and The Toronto Sun newspapers reported 10 cases of death involving 11 children. These two newspapers alone reported nine cases of severe abuse and neglect involving over 20 children. These numbers reflect the reports of just two newspapers in four months in two cities. The true number across Canada is unidentifiable and unspeakable.

Other newspaper reports illustrate the nature and frequency of child abuse and neglect deaths. On March 29, 1995, The Toronto Star reported the death of 11-month-old Ashley Johnson. The mother, 23-year-old Tammy Johnson, had left Ashley and her three-year-old sister unattended in the bathroom. Minutes later, Ashley was found drowned in the bathtub. Four years prior, Johnson's first child had nearly died under identical circumstances. Johnson's four children were sired by four different men.

The Toronto Star reported that the court was told:

Had it not been for the previous case, Johnson probably would not have been charged with a criminal offence...

Tammy Johnson was given a suspended sentence and probation for three years.

On July 5, 1995, The Toronto Sun reported the story of the so-called "Toronto suitcase baby." The body of a black nine-month-old boy was found stuffed in a suitcase behind some bushes in a Toronto park. The newspaper reported that the 16-year-old mother found the infant dead, and kept the body for four days before disposing of it. The Sun reported a police detective as saying:

"...it's my opinion we're not anticipating any criminal charges" including one of improperly disposing of human remains... "I think she's suffered enough."

On July 15, 1995, The Toronto Star reported that little two-year-old Tyrell Noble fell 13 stories to his death through a torn screen. His mother, a single mother of three, was not in the room when Tyrell fell. The Toronto Star quoted a police sergeant who said:

"It appears to be nothing more than a tragic accident."

The mother was not charged in Tyrell's death.

As reported in The Toronto Sun of July 7, 1995, a Toronto woman broke two of her four-year-old daughter's ribs and hit her in the face after the child spilled some juice. Initially, the woman blamed the injuries on her husband. Later, she pleaded guilty to assault charges and was sentenced to 90 days in jail.

Honourable senators, in 1986, Dr. Cyril Greenland, McMaster University professor emeritus, did a study of child abuse neglect deaths from records of the Ontario Chief Coroner's office. In an article, "Preventing Child Abuse and Neglect Deaths: The Identification and Management of High Risk Cases," he reported that:

The risk of death due to CAN —

— child abuse and neglect deaths —

— is highest in the first year of life. The Ontario data, confirmed by most other studies, show that well over half of the victims...died before the age of 12 months. An additional 25%...died before the age of two years. Only five per cent of the victims were over the age of five years.

He also said:

Natural parents were the perpetrators in 63 per cent of the deaths; mothers were involved in 38 deaths, fathers in 13 deaths and both parents in 12 deaths.

Honourable senators, Statistics Canada, in its Juristat 1994 Homicide Statistics, devoted an entire section to infant homicide entitled "First year of life holds greatest risk of being victim of homicide." Honourable senators, I repeat this fact: Those at greatest risk of homicide, of being wilfully killed, are babies under one year old. Statistics Canada reports that 27 babies under one year old were victims of homicide in 1994. This represented a significant increase over the previous 10 years' annual average of 20. Of these 27 babies who were killed last year, 20 were killed by parents.

These data exclude many child abuse deaths. Child death caused by parents' criminal negligence and failure to provide the necessities of life and starvation, both of which are criminal offences, are not classified as homicides and are not counted in these data. Statistics Canada states:

In Canada, homicide is classified as first degree murder, second degree murder, manslaughter or infanticide. Deaths caused by criminal negligence, suicide, accidental or justifiable homicide are not included in the definition.

In addition, many of the children's deaths caused by parental neglect are not counted in the 596 total homicides for the year 1994.

The Globe and Mail of August 3, 1995, expressed this concern:

...the truth may be worse than the police statistics reveal. With the growing attention to child abuse has come a suspicion that some deaths previously categorised as accidental or unexplained may have been homicides.

Statistics Canada reported that of the 27 homicides of babies under one year old, seven mothers were charged with infanticide.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable Senator Cools, I am sorry to inform you that your time has expired.

Senator Cools: May I, with leave by honourable senators, finish my remarks?

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Cools: Section 233 of the Criminal Code states:

A female person commits infanticide when by a willful act or omission she causes the death of her newly-born child, if at the time of the act or omission she is not fully recovered from the effects of giving birth to the child and by reason thereof or of the effect of lactation consequent on the birth of the child her mind is then disturbed.

Honourable senators, there is no medical relationship between lactation and murderous behaviour. The significant fact is the diminished responsibility and the slight sanctions granted women, even though some very brutal and premeditated murders are the result. Sometimes sanctions are as light as three months' probation and suspended sentences.

Confronted with the grim realities contained in a century's account of child misfortune and misadventure, statistics, reports, studies, inquiries, victims and deaths, and with the significant revenues spent on child protection, it seems unimaginable that the number of infant murders for 1994 reported by Statistics Canada has increased from 18 in 1992 to 27 in 1994, an increase of 50 per cent, and that children should continue to die at the hands of their parents.

In British Columbia, the judicial inquiry by Judge Thomas Gove into the death of five-year-old Matthew Vaudreuil is continuing. Matthew suffered severe beatings at the hands of his mother, Verna Vaudreuil, including one which broke nine of his ribs, before the final lethal beating that killed him. Verna Vaudreuil is serving a four-year prison term.

What is tragic and disturbing is that the British Columbia Department of Social Services was aware of Matthew's abuse. A Vancouver Sun article of December 20, 1994, said:

Provincial court Judge Thomas Gove has been asked to determine why the ministry could not protect the boy from his mother despite repeated complaints to the ministry that he was suffering horrendous abuse.

Honourable senators, there were 60 protection reports about this child. The first one was written the day he was born and the sixtieth just two days before his death. Matthew had been seen by health professionals at least 48 times, and his mother and he had received the services of financial aid workers, home support workers, mental health workers, public health nurses, psychologists, foster parents and 16 child protection workers over the course of five years. Matthew Vaudreuil's history of maternal neglect and abuse was well known, and yet he died. The troubling fact is that Matthew's case was not an anomaly. Judge Gove explained in The Vancouver Sun of June 7, 1995, that:

• (1600)

At first, I thought that my job was to investigate Matthew's life and death alone. But after 11 weeks of formal hearings and 130 witnesses, it became painfully clear to me that Matthew's story was not an isolated case. The more I dug, and the more people I talked to, the more I realized that the errors which contributed to his death were not just anecdotal, but were systemic in nature.

He added:

...the unprincipled, dysfunctional and inefficient system...contributed to the suffering and death of Matthew, and of many others like him.

Honourable senators, 20 years earlier another judge in Ontario, Judge Ward Allen, in the inquiry into the 1976 death of little Kim Anne Popen — and I say a "little" because I worked in the field, and "little" is how we referred to these children at the time — had also concluded that:

Various departments, agencies and personnel of the Province of Ontario failed the child.

Honourable senators, child abuse and neglect are far too common. Daily, one observes yelling, scolding, hitting, slapping, kicking and yanking, acted out by parents — usually mothers — in public places. Many think that this behaviour is both normal and acceptable; that it is merely discipline or tough love, not at all like the stories in the news. Honourable senators, it is maltreatment, the consequences of which will remain with that child well into its adult years. Some scars will never heal. The physical and psychological damage done to children is profound.

A newly emerging form of child abuse is that from parents involved in matrimonial and custodial disputes. Parents use their children as bargaining tools, manipulating them to their own advantage, causing parental alienation of the other parent. With respect to children's pain and suffering during divorce and custody disputes, Dr. Hazel McBride, a Toronto area psychologist, said that children are "...put up as a prize, or used as a weapon."

Honourable senators, those who are maltreated learn to abuse. As Judge Gove advocated, we must ensure that those in the child protection system, those whose responsibility it is to protect children, have undivided loyalty to the safety and well-being of the child — that is, undivided loyalty to the best interests of the child.

On motion of Senator Berntson, debate adjourned.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSE TO SENATE COMMITTEE REPORTS

INQUIRY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Pat Carney rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, October 31, 1995:

That she will call the attention of the Senate to the issue of ministerial response to Senate Committee reports, in particular, noting that on July 5, 1995, as Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources, I submitted a copy of the Committee's report entitled "Pull up! Pull up!: An interim Report on the Safety Implications of Automated Weather Observation Systems (A.W.O.S.)" to the Ministers of Fisheries and Oceans, Environment and Transport, and asked for a response to our recommendations, and that, to date, none of these Ministers have issued a response.

She said: Honourable senators, on October 31, I drew the attention of the Senate to the failure of ministers to respond to senatorial committee reports. I specifically dealt with the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources, and our report called "Pull up! Pull up!:" An interim Report on the Safety Implications of Automated Weather Observation Systems (A.W.O.S.)." The latter report dealt with some of the consequences, or perceived consequences, of the government's decision to withdraw staff from weather stations used by Transport Canada and Environment Canada.

I pointed out at that time that although our report had asked for a ministerial response by October 31, only one minister had acknowledged receipt of the letter; no minister had actually responded.

Honourable senators, I feel strongly that the Senate might wish to take a look at this issue on the failure of certain ministers to respond, the boycotting of the Senate by other ministers, and the effect that that has on our work.

Our notice of inquiry must have prompted the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, Brian Tobin, or his staff to respond because on November 6, I received a letter signed by the minister, or at least his signature machine. The letter was in reply to our letter dated July 5, 1995, concerning the report. His letter stated that his department is participating with Transport Canada and Environment Canada in the preparation of a joint response to the report, which is being coordinated by Transport Canada, and that this response will be forwarded to the standing committee on behalf of three departments.

Honourable senators, that is not a good enough response, four months after the ministers had been asked to respond to an issue which affects the safety of Canadians, particularly Canadians travelling beyond urban centres and who rely on air transportation. Canadians, such as farmers, rely for their livelihood and their safety on weather reports. It is not good enough, four months later, to say that the response is in the mail and coming later.

I urge the Senate to consider the fact that this is not just something that is happening to our committees; other committees are also being ignored by the responsible ministers.

Honourable senators, I wish to draw the attention of my colleagues to the fact that, while ministers may be ignoring this report, we have had responses to the report from mayors, municipalities, cities and municipal associations right across the country, many of them from AWOS sites, supporting the evidence contained in the report that the AWOS system is considered unsafe. I want to draw to the attention of honourable senators some of the concerns of these towns and cities.

In order for honourable senators to understand the issue more clearly, I want to review the basic recommendations of our report. I will not read them all into the record, but I will refer to the prime recommendations.

Honourable senators, our committee recommended that, since safety is the prime consideration, AWOS equipment must be proven to be at least as accurate and reliable as the human observation-equipment mix it is intended to replace before human observers are removed. Americans have had similar problems with their equipment. The office of their Auditor General has suggested that possibly the automated equipment on which they have spent hundreds of millions of dollars will never be operational.

Our second recommendation was that the current moratorium on the commissioning of AWOS sites be solution-driven and not date-driven, as it is currently, and that no additional AWOS sites be either installed or commissioned and no human observers be removed until members of user communities are satisfied that such actions allow them to meet safety requirements.

I should tell honourable senators that we have had other correspondence from pilots indicating that this moratorium is not being honoured by Transport Canada. We will bring that information to the attention of the Senate at a later date.

Our third recommendation was that the moratorium be extended to include the proposed destaffing of lightstations, to ensure that human observers remain in place until automated equipment performs as well in the provision of local weather information.

Since that recommendation was made, the lightstation keeper at Nootka has recently pulled a local priest out of the water, a famous and valuable person who serves the West Coast community, and who, of course, was involved in the performance of his duties when the lightkeeper saved his life.

Another recommendation of the committee was that, during the moratorium, all AWOS users, not just those involved in aviation, be consulted in order to ensure that the replacement of human observers with AWOS meets their operational safety requirements. That is because, while Transport Canada is allegedly talking to some of the aviation users, the other users, such as the agricultural community, are not being consulted.

The last major recommendation was that Transport Canada return the human observers to all sites from which they were removed in favour of AWOS systems until problems with AWOS are resolved and performance criteria developed in consultation with users are met, with safety of the travelling public in all parts of the country being the overriding concern.

That recommendation was based on the information we were given, that the departments involved had reinstated humans in large urban centres, such as Edmonton and Montreal, but had replaced humans with AWOS systems in smaller rural centres. Apparently, the lives of urban Canadians are considered more valuable than the lives of people who live in non-urban or rural Canada.

We also asked the three departments that are replacing human observers with automated weather observation systems — Transport Canada, Environment Canada and Fisheries and Oceans — to coordinate their policies and, in an open and transparent way, to ensure that the cumulative impact of these changes does not endanger the safety of the travelling public. We have asked for the response by October. As I pointed out, we are still waiting.

To give honourable senators a sense of the flavour of the response to our report, the City of Thompson, Manitoba — which is heavily reliant on air transportation — has written Doug Young, the Minister of Transport, to say that the council endorses the interim report of the Senate committee, and they go on to say in their letter:

We would ask you to give your utmost consideration to the recommendation in the report for the re-installation of manned weather stations. It is our opinion, given the information contained in the Senate Report concerning Automated Weather Observation Systems, that it is only a matter of time before the inaccuracies of this system will cause a disaster. We do not want such a tragedy to occur in our community or any other community in Canada and we are sure you don't either.

Please heed the warnings and recommendations contained in the report for the sake of the travelling public.

That is signed by the mayor. I remind honourable senators that the pilots' union, CALPA, came before our committee to say that the AWOS system, which was put in place without adequate testing, is "an accident waiting to happen."

We also received a letter from Kelowna, British Columbia. Kelowna's Mountain Weather Station Office is still staffed, and it is one of the two in B.C., I believe, which will not be an AWOS-only site. Kelowna does not have a concern about its own safety. However, the mayor of the city has written:

...I do have misgivings about the number of fully automated sites planned across the country, and would agree with the recommendations of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources.

He thanks us for an informative report and for the opportunity to comment.

Let me now move on to Saskatchewan, in which, I am sure, our deputy house leader is interested.

Senator Berntson: Yes, very much.

Senator Carney: The Town of Meadow Lake, Saskatchewan, wrote us to say that the council has recently passed a resolution opposing the placement of an AWOS at their local airport and that:

Experience appears to show that these systems are unreliable and a possible safety threat to members of the aviation industry.

I would point out to senators that they are not just taking our word on this but the word of the people who live in their communities.

The mayor of the Town of Dauphin has written to say that Dauphin was one of the first recipients of the AWOS system, and they have found it to be unreliable. The mayor's letter reads, in part:

There is no doubt that this system of reporting weather conditions is at times unsafe for the air traveller. It is logical to have AWOS replaced with humans in the interim until new software is developed by DOT to address the deficiencies. Keep up the good work.

The City of Ottawa took the time to write to us. The mayor of Ottawa points out that, although this is not an area of the city's jurisdiction, it is a matter of great importance to ensure the safety of all those travelling to the Ottawa area and that, therefore, she concurs with the committee's recommendation, which is a thoughtful note for her to send to us.

I have already spoken to Senator Adams, who is in the chamber today. During its meeting on September 11, the municipality of Iqaluit in the N.W.T. passed a resolution supporting the Senate's position that weather stations in Yellowknife and Iqaluit remain open after their suggested closing date of April 1997 and pointing out that the N.W.T. Association of Municipalities had made similar representations to the minister.

Gander, Newfoundland, sent us a letter, signed by the mayor, saying that:

Considering the implications to our community both from an environmental accuracy, and human resources perspective, the Town of Gander is greatly concerned that the ongoing assessment of the AWOS system be conducted with great concern and accuracy for the weather reporting system in our country.

Her letter talks about some of the actions that the town of Gander has taken to discuss the implications of the AWOS system and feels that:

While...the aviation industry...is a critical component of our community, all aspects of ground, air and especially sea transportation will be affected within our province.

The mayor writes that she is looking forward with anticipation to the final report of the committee. Of course, we cannot do that final report until we hear from the ministers concerned.

We also have a letter from Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, signed by the acting city clerk, saying that the copy of the committee's report was provided to the mayor and city council and was considered by the city council at its last meeting. The letter goes on to state:

At that time, City Council agreed to support the recommendations of the Standing Senate Committee on the safety implications of Automated Weather Observation Systems. In that regard, the six recommendations included with the Interim Report have been supported.

They wish to be kept informed.

Next door, in the province of Alberta, the City of Calgary wrote to us on this issue as well. It is signed by the mayor. The mayor's letter says that the Calgary Transportation Authority was asked to look at the report and that:

The CTA has confirmed that the aviation community has been experiencing false and inaccurate weather reporting from AWOS and that this has given rise to concerns about flight safety. This is particularly critical in Alberta where, because of the close proximity of the Rocky Mountains, the weather can be very changeable and has the potential to deteriorate quickly.

The letter goes on to say:

Under present circumstances, we also see the value of having human observers on site who have the ability to interact with pilots about important questions related to present and incoming weather conditions.

The mayor of Edmonton also wrote us and expressed concern about the decision to discontinue manned weather services. You will remember that in Edmonton humans were reinstated after it was learned that pilots going into Edmonton Municipal Airport were using the local brewery sign to read the weather because the AWOS system was unreliable.

The mayor's letter says:

We are pleased that your committee has recommended the return of human observers to all sites from which they were removed, until problems with AWOS are fully resolved. We are also pleased that your committee has recommended that performance criteria be developed in consultation with aviation users with the safety of the travelling public being the overriding concern.

The mayor adds:

We look forward to a positive resolution of this problem.

I referred earlier to the N.W.T. Association of Municipalities which now represents 100 per cent of all eligible municipalities. They have expressed concern over the safety implications of AWOS. Mayor Bevington wrote to Minister Doug Young in a letter copied to our committee:

...There have been many stories that the AWOS reported weather conditions differed from actual conditions at the airport. Suppose AWOS gave inadequate weather information to an airline that supplies service once a week to a remote community. That community may be left without vital supplies for weeks before another flight could return. Add to this the fact that air medivac is the only source of travel for medical emergencies in many northern municipalities.

Given the information contained in the Senate Report concerning the Automated Weather Information Systems it is only a matter of time before the inaccuracies of this system cause a disaster. Your department must realize the impacts of imposing the use of such a system could be. It is with this thought that the N.W.T. Association of Municipalities fully endorses, through the attached resolution, the Interim Report entitled "Pull Up! Pull Up!"

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable Senator Carney, I hesitate to interrupt, but I must inform you that your time is up.

Senator Carney: I would like leave of the Senate to finish my remarks.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Carney: The Association of Yukon Communities had already passed a resolution opposing an AWOS in Mayo and in Whitehorse in May, before our hearings had begun.

...The Association feels strongly that it makes absolutely no sense to do this since Transport Canada has found AWOS to be unreliable and has initiated further research to see if they can be made workable and safe.

The City of Winnipeg, Manitoba, takes this position:

...Within the City we have had very little direct experience with AWOS technologies. As the report indicates the City of Winnipeg is one of the sites comprised of human observation with AWOS assistance...

In the interests of public safety I support all of the recommendations except the third (lightstations) —

— Winnipeg is a little short on lightstations —

— and fifth (unstaffed/AWOS-only sites) which do not pertain to the situation in Winnipeg.

Finally, the report and your covering letter make reference to the safety concerns of the travelling public and this is an obvious concern. It is hoped that Winnipeg will grow into an important multi-modal cargo destination and Winnipeg International Airport is a key component of these plans. To the extent that accurate weather information promotes safety of cargo flights, this should also be a concern.

Watson Lake has also written to us:

As Safety has to be the prime consideration these Senate Committee recommendations must be accepted by Government, otherwise we are putting a price on human life, a dangerous precedent for a Government to take.

The letter goes on to describe the situation in Watson Lake.

From Ontario, the Town of Geraldton sent a letter signed by the airport manager:

I...have heard many comments, mostly negative, from pilots that have had to use it due to it being the only source of weather in some locations.

The main concern portrayed to me is that the system is not reliable and does not always give the true weather picture. The equipment that the pilots have come into contact with is only able to give weather observations within the immediate proximity of the station and is unable to depict weather inbound i.e. thunderstorms. Another concern is that the ceilometer currently in use cannot always differentiate between rain, snow, bugs, smoke, fog, etc.

We have also had letters from regional airports in Waterloo-Guelph agreeing that the automated systems were prematurely installed and that human observers were removed from the system before it was proven reliable.

That is a summary, honourable senators, of some of the responses to our report. In view of the response from so many of the municipalities across the country, from coast to coast to coast, it is particularly reprehensible that the ministers have failed to respond to our concerns in a timely manner to deal with this issue of the safety of the travelling public. I draw it to the attention of the Senate. We, as the upper chamber, should deal with the issue of ministerial response to our reports. We will keep honourable senators informed of other responses to our report as we have the opportunity to do so.

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, I have some questions. First, I want to commend Senator Carney and her committee for their work on their report. The impending disasters which she described today hit very close to home. My son is a pilot in the Northwest Territories. I discuss this issue with him on a regular basis. There is much concern for safety. It is tough enough flying up there when everything is going right, and they do not need any more hazards placed in their way.

Perhaps Senator Carney could supply me with copies of the correspondence received, particularly from the two associations in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. It may be helpful for all senators to have that information.

Senator Carney: Some letters have been forwarded to committee members. Senator Adams is on our committee. I would be happy to forward to the honourable senator from the Yukon those responses which come from his part of the country. Perhaps that would be a reasonable suggestion for all senators, that they should receive any responses which originated in their particular regions. I also would be happy to send other letters to any senator who requests them.

The messages in all the letters are similar. They are afraid of AWOS and they want us to pursue the work before our committee to ensure that the system is safe and that human observers are kept in place until that safety is proven.

On motion of Senator Hébert, debate adjourned.

AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO STUDY THE PRESENT STATE AND FUTURE OF AGRICULTURE AND AGRI-FOOD

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Wednesday next, November 8, 1995, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be authorized to examine the present state and the future of agriculture and agri-food in Canada; and

That the committee table its report no later than June 30, 1996.

The Senate adjourned until Wednesday, November 8, 1995, at 1:30 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, November 8, 1995

The Senate met at 1:30 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

REMEMBRANCE DAY

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is a privilege to rise in this house today in anticipation of Remembrance Day, which occurs this weekend. On Saturday, Canadians will gather in communities large and small across this country, in every province and territory, at military cemeteries throughout the world, and here in Ottawa at the National War Memorial. We will gather to honour the memory of those who died in the service of Canada, and to rededicate ourselves in the cause for which they fought. We will commemorate the sacrifice of the men and women who served Canada during the First World War, the Second World War, the Korean War, and this year we mark the fiftieth anniversary of the end of the Second World War and the return to an era of peace.

Some of those Canadians will know in a very personal way about the sacrifices that were made. They will recall the faces, the laughter, the tears and the voices of those they knew. Inevitably, however, honourable senators, as the years pass, more and more who participate in these events take their recollections only from the history books.

With every passing year, therefore, it becomes more vital that we keep that memory alive and bright, as we saw last June in Holland, where our returning veterans were welcomed with such an outpouring of warmth, generosity and gratitude. We could not help but be touched by the young people of Holland who understood, much more than did our own young people, about the tragedy of war, the emotion of liberation and VE day through the memories of their parents and grandparents. We Canadians must make a more concentrated effort to ensure that our children and grandchildren are taught to remember what their families endured in order to protect our future.

Honourable senators, Canadians of this generation have lived their whole lives in a nation at peace, and it is dangerously easy to take our freedoms for granted. However, peace and freedom were both purchased for us with the sweat, the tears and the blood of those who fought to preserve them. So many died in those historic battles; many more came home in some way scarred from their experience, but filled with the strength and the courage to pick up their lives and contribute to their families and to their country.

We are what we are today and we have what we have today because of the people we honour on Remembrance Day. Only if we remember can we hope to give meaning to their sacrifice.

Honourable senators, we cannot help but reflect this week, as we grieve over the tragic assassination of Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, who died in his efforts to secure a truly lasting peace for the Middle East. His assassination serves as a reminder of what history has taught us: that peace has been lost because nations, again and again, did not realize it is their common cause and their common work.

Honourable senators, postwar Canada has chosen to make peace its cause. We were partners in that first United Nations peacekeeping mission in the Middle East, and our service throughout the world has been unbroken since. It comes at a price — the lives of 103 Canadian peacekeepers since the end of the Second World War and, most recently, in Bosnia. Thus each year, November 11 must be for Canadians, a day not only for remembrance and recognition, but for dedication to the hard and patient work of finding solutions before the battle starts.

I wish all colleagues in this house a meaningful day on Saturday as you share it with the people whom you represent in this chamber.

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, each year on the eleventh day of the eleventh hour of the eleventh month, Canadians from coast to coast to coast, in our villages, towns and great cities, gather around local memorials to mark with remembrance the sacrifice of Canadian men and women who have served in the cause of freedom and justice and the ongoing struggle for peace. It is good that we take time to pause and remember, not only in terms of the grand history upon which we all reflect at the time, but in terms of the occasion. It is one occasion when our solidarity as a people, with all our differences because of where we live in Canada, our diverse heritage and other characteristics that constitute our roots, comes together in a remarkable, unified manner to recall the sacrifices made by our brothers and sisters in this country.

We join with those around the world who mark these events in a symbolic way by wearing the flower from Flanders, which Canadians see as an important symbol of Remembrance Day and the sacrifice.

Honourable senators, many of the children in our schools across Canada have not experienced the tragedy of war. Happily, they are children of an era of peace in our country. Nevertheless, if you visit these schools, you will see on the windows and walls their drawings of the poppy. The symbol of the poppy represents a kind of coming together, of forgetting our differences and celebrating the peace which had been shattered years ago.

I express my solidarity with my colleagues in this place and with Canadians everywhere as we mark the fiftieth anniversary of the last great war in which so many Canadians fell. We will remember them in a special way on this Remembrance Day.

Hon. Doris M. Anderson: Honourable senators, on Saturday, we once again celebrate Remembrance Day. November 11 has special memories for each one of us. For myself, as a lifelong resident of St. Peters, Prince Edward Island, I am proud of the fact that our small rural community, made up largely of farmers and fishermen, in terms of population had the highest per capita enlistment of any place in Canada in World War II. Tragically, it had the highest casualty rate as well.

Because of this fact of history, St. Peters was chosen to host one of the first "Canada Remembers" events on July 30 and 31, 1994. The Canada Remembers program, from June 1994 until September 1995, gave Canadians an opportunity to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the events which brought to an end the Second World War in 1945. When inaugurating the Canada Remembers program, Prime Minister Chrétien said:

Fifty years ago, we were a nation of less than 12 million people. More than 1 million men and women were in uniform, both overseas and on the home front. Since then, our population has more than doubled. Many Canadians today are descendants of those who fought so hard for peace. Others have come from elsewhere. But all of us have inherited the legacy of those brave men and women who defended the values that Canadians have always treasured — peace, freedom, democracy, generosity and tolerance.

Honourable senators, today we remember with gratitude those brave men and women who brought honour and a new respect to our country. It was for our freedom that these young Canadians fought, and it was for that freedom that many of them died.

We remember our courageous veterans who fought so valiantly and endured so much hardship during the war and, since its end, with impaired health and, in many cases, constant pain. We honour the sacrifice of those men and women who gave their all that we might live in freedom.

Honourable senators, it is now our responsibility — and indeed our duty — to ensure that peace will indeed prevail in our country and elsewhere so that future generations will never have to endure the ravages of unrest and war. Canada has played and continues to play a leading role in peacekeeping missions around the world. One hundred and three Canadians have died on peacekeeping missions since the end of the Second World War, but that is the price of peace.

Honourable senators, each year, November 11 is a day for all Canadians not only of remembrance and recognition of sacrifices made, but also of rededication to the difficult but extremely important work of keeping the peace.

NATIONAL UNITY

AFTERMATH OF QUEBEC REFERENDUM— NECESSITY OF REVIEWING PEPIN-ROBARTS REPORT

Hon. Jean-Claude Rivest: Honourable senators, I know that many of my colleagues are very concerned about the referendum results in Quebec and what will happen next. Clearly, both the federal government and the provincial governments of Canada will have to deal with the implications of an outcome that is a matter of great concern for the future of our country.

I am very pleased, as are all Canadians I imagine, to see that the Prime Minister of Canada has set up a cabinet committee that will be asked to put these events into perspective and try to define options for the future of this country.

I wish to say more specifically to the Leader of the Government, who is a member of cabinet, that perhaps she should get the attention of the committee that is chaired by the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. This committee should think about these issues. Of course, according to the commitments made by the Prime Minister of Canada, the committee will have to take into account the Meech Lake and Charlottetown accords. The Meech Lake Accord is very important in Quebec. I think the Prime Minister of Canada is on the right track in this respect.

If he really wants to find a lasting and effective solution to the problem of Quebec within the Canadian federation, if he truly wants to reconcile the principle of provincial equality with the particular identity of Quebec within Canada, I would urge the Prime Minister to ask his colleagues to read again the Pepin-Robarts report, which is probably the most relevant document we have in these circumstances.

This report was drafted by two eminent Canadians, John Robarts and Jean-Luc Pepin. I think the Government of Canada will be able to find some answers in this report. Unfortunately, it was shelved as soon as it was published. It contains elements for a future solution which should have been introduced when the report was tabled, but which are nevertheless still extremely relevant, considering the resolve of Quebecers to be and remain Quebecers in every sense of the word, while continuing to share with all Canadians the hopes and aspirations of Canada as a whole.

THE HONOURABLE WARREN W. ALLMAND, P.C.,
MR. LEONARD HOPKINS, M.P.

FELICITATIONS ON THIRTIETH ANNIVERSARY
AS MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: I think it would be appropriate, in the interests of good relations with the other place, to point out the anniversary of two former colleagues with whom I had the privilege to sit for many years. In fact, I was there when they first arrived in Parliament on November 8, 1965.

[English]

Indeed, both members arrived on November 8, 30 years ago. I am sure many senators will remember that an election was called on September 8, 1965, with voting day on November 8, 1965. That election was supposed to bring us a majority. I am sure Senator Keith Davey will remember those days. We only won one more seat and remained a minority government.

Regardless of those events, today two members are still in the House of Commons. One of those good friends will be acclaimed tonight. I will have the honour to speak and to show that, in Montreal, those who speak French and those who speak English are equal. There is no such thing as a difference in votes.

• (1350)

There will be a big crowd tonight in Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, a riding that voted No in the referendum at close to 90 per cent, and a riding that is represented very ably in the House of Commons by a very long-time friend of mine. He is a dissident like me. I am talking about the Honourable Warren Allmand.

Also celebrating his thirtieth anniversary as a member of Parliament today is another person who broke ranks recently. He told me that it was extremely difficult, but he did so on the gun control bill. Here, I am speaking about Mr. Len Hopkins.

Both of these fine gentlemen are today celebrating 30 years of extraordinary good service to the Canadian people. I have sat with them, as well as some of my colleagues across the aisle, in the House of Commons. I am sure honourable senators will want to join with me in wishing these two members of Parliament many more years to serve in the House of Commons, and in congratulating them both very warmly.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before I move the adjournment motion, I should like to look ahead to what we anticipate will be taking place in the Senate on Monday, November 20, 1995. Specifically, on that date we will receive the report on Bill C-68, the gun control legislation, from our Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. That was part of the house order we unanimously adopted on October 18. The other part of that house order provided that all remaining votes on the bill will take place on Wednesday, November 22, at 5:30 p.m.

Honourable senators opposite have expressed a desire to begin debate on the report of that committee as soon as it is tabled on the Monday. Normally that would not be possible because rule 58(1)(g) requires one day's notice for a motion to adopt a committee report; consequently, debate could not begin until Tuesday. Any votes called for on Tuesday could be deferred by either whip, under rule 68, until Wednesday at 5:30 p.m. This means that, as things now stand, all votes on Bill C-68 would be held on Wednesday, November 22.

We on this side of the chamber are prepared to give unanimous consent to allow debate on the committee's report to begin on Monday, November 20, in order to provide the greatest possible opportunity to debate this important piece of legislation. However, that consent is conditional on the clear understanding that all votes on Bill C-68 would still take place on Wednesday, November 22. That understanding could be in the form of a house order, or it could be on the basis of an agreement in this chamber that no votes will be requested on the Monday.

If this approach is acceptable — and there have already been discussions on this matter between the leadership on both sides — I am prepared to move that when we adjourn today, we stand adjourned until Monday, November 20, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

If this approach is not acceptable, and we cannot begin debate on the committee's report until Tuesday, then I would move the adjournment until eight o'clock on Monday, November 20. However, as I understand it — and according to the discussions I have had with the leadership on the other side — we have agreement that all votes would be on November 22.

Hon. Eric Arthur Berntson (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it is true that we have had some discussion on this matter. It is also true that we run some small degree of risk of having debate seriously limited if we do not agree to proceed immediately to debate the report from the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee on Monday, November 20. To that extent, we have agreed with the position of the Deputy Leader of the Government that, for all intents and purposes, this agreement will have the effect of a house order, and I see it as such.

I have one additional question, which has nothing to do with this particular topic: There is another possibility. In the event that debate is concluded, and on the agreement of our respective whips, perhaps it would be possible on November 22 to advance the time of the vote rather than to adhere strictly to the house order, which says 5:30 p.m. There is a possibility that debate could be concluded earlier. Perhaps, at the discretion and agreement of the whips, we could advance that time.

Senator Graham: Yes, honourable senators, with unanimous consent we could advance the time of the vote.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I do not want the leadership to think that there is an independent at this end of the chamber.

Senator Prud'homme: Why not?

Senator Murray: However, there is one other matter that I should like to address, if I may.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: You are not in caucus now! Be careful.

Senator Murray: I should like to draw to the attention of the Deputy Leader of the Government a house order on which we have already voted to deal with Senator Fairbairn's proposed instruction to the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee on Bill C-69. We had agreed to have that vote on Tuesday, November 21. I want to be sure that, in planning the business of the Senate, my friend the Deputy Leader of the Government, who has control of the agenda, will allow time for some debate on Senator Fairbairn's motion. I should like to say a few words on that debate, and I think Senator Nolin would also like to be heard.

Senator Graham: As a matter of fact, Honourable Senator Murray, Honourable Senator Nolin, or any other senator who wishes could say a few words on it today, or tomorrow, or on any other day in advance of the time that we take to vote. However, it is to be understood that the vote will take place no later than 5:30 p.m. on Tuesday, November 21.

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Thank you very much for having informed me of all of these discussions and decisions. If a vote were to take place earlier on Wednesday on Bill C-68, precaution must be taken to ensure that every senator is informed of the change. I understand that you make deals or may come to an agreement with the official opposition, but it will be sad, as far as I am concerned, if for some reason not every senator is kept informed. I know that on Tuesday at 5:30, there is an order of the house. I, faithfully, will be there. There is also one at 5:30 on Wednesday.

I certainly agree to the proposal made by the honourable senator representing the official opposition, that we may advance the vote on Wednesday for all kinds of reasons. I accept that, as long as someone does not leave some of us in limbo, so that we arrive too late to exercise our vote.

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, I recognize the concerns that have been properly expressed by Senator Prud'homme. We would advance the vote, I assure you, only with the unanimous consent of every living, breathing senator who is able to vote on that legislation.

Therefore, honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 58.1(h), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Monday, November 20, 1995, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SEARCH AND RESCUE HELICOPTER REPLACEMENT PROGRAM—
RATIONALE FOR CHOICE

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: Honourable senators, I see that Senator Prud'homme has left the chamber. I just wanted to remind him that I was one of those who denied the Liberal government, on this day 30 years ago, the majority it wanted.

I should like to ask the Leader of the Government a question about the replacement program for search and rescue helicopters. Many Canadians will be surprised, and I am sure very pleased, to learn of Minister Collenette's announcement, made here in Ottawa this morning, regarding the acquisition of 15 new pieces of equipment.

Can the leader tell us whether there was any deliberate reasoning or rationale behind proceeding with the replacement for the Labradors before acquiring replacement equipment for the Sea Kings? Keep in mind, honourable senators, that it is the Sea Kings that have had all the trouble, not the Labradors. If there is a rationale, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us what it is?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I cannot. The Minister of National Defence has been working methodically on a series of priorities to provide the Armed Forces with the best possible equipment. Today's announcement dealt with search and rescue helicopters. The others will be dealt with at another time, which in no way detracts from the importance or the urgency of that decision.

Senator Forrestall: Honourable senators, could the Leader of the Government indicate whether there is any truth to the rumour that the government has already reached a deal or a settlement with Paxamax Systems and EH Industries for the cancellation of the EH-101 contract? Could she indicate, first, whether there has been any such deal struck? If so, how much is the settlement for? Will this amount be added to the $600-million figure that Minister Collenette has suggested would be the cost of an outright capital purchase, in addition to the $166 million we have already paid back to the contractor?

I am trying to get at the cost of this helicopter. Bear in mind that the government of which the Leader of the Government is proud to be a supporter told us that such a scenario was out of the question, that there was only one way we can go. In my judgment, it is irresponsible to continue to use the Cadillac-Chevrolet analogy when selecting equipment of a sensitive nature such as this.

I am trying to determine whether there is a game of smoke and mirrors being played to hide the real cost to the Canadian taxpayer of the search and rescue helicopters and the Sea King replacements. In the beginning, it was a single contract and the costs were shared.

Could the Leader of the Government give us an idea of whether a deal has been struck, for how much, and what portion of it will be borne by the search and rescue helicopters, and what portion will be left to the devices of the already overly strained National Defence budget?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, at the beginning of my friend's question he referred to rumours that were circulating. I can only deal today with the facts of the announcement that was made by the Minister of National Defence. That announcement spoke very clearly of his intention to seek the best possible equipment at the best possible price for Canadians. This will be an open process. Bids will be sought. It is hoped that he will be able to reach a conclusion through this open process later in 1996, when an agreement will be reached.

Senator Forrestall: Honourable senators, we are concerned about the total. The estimates of what we had spent on the EH-101 contract with pre-engineering work and the penalties which arose from the cancellation of it range up to in excess of $2 billion.

• (1410)

SEARCH AND RESCUE HELICOPTER REPLACEMENT PROGRAM—
NATURE OF REDUCTION IN CAPABILITY—
REQUEST FOR PARTICULARS

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: My final question for the Leader of the Government concerns what is, perhaps, the most important aspect of this whole matter. At the press conference this morning, Minister Collenette alluded to a 15 per cent reduction in the capability of these new search and rescue helicopters. Can the Leader of the Government tell us specifically just what are these diminished capabilities? Is there a reduction in terms of airborne endurance? Will the helicopters have three engines instead of two, thus limiting their capacity to hover over mountainous regions? Will the reduction in capacity relate to lift capability? How many people is it contemplated that these new helicopters will be able to carry? We have heard some very startling rumours that they may only be able to handle one or two people at a time, and that they may not have the over water night-flying or the de-icing capabilities which are so necessary, particularly in mountainous regions and off the Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, those are questions which deserve factual answers and not rumour. I would be pleased to obtain those answers for my honourable friend.

SEARCH AND RESCUE HELICOPTER REPLACEMENT PROGRAM—
PROPORTION OF CANADIAN CONTENT IN CONTRACT BIDS—
REQUEST FOR PARTICULARS

Hon. Pierre Claude Nolin: Honourable senators, does the Minister of National Defence require bidders to include a specific Canadian content, and if so, in what proportion?

[English]

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will undertake to obtain that figure for Senator Nolin.

NATIONAL UNITY

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—POSSIBLE REDUCTION IN ELDERLY BENEFITS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Thérèse Lavoie-Roux: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

During the referendum, on all sides, great use was made of arguments either to convince people to vote Yes, or to convince people to vote No. One of these arguments was used on the initiative of Mr. Bouchard and Mrs. Vézina, namely that if seniors voted No they would find their old age pensions reduced.

This took on such proportions that Minister André Ouellet intervened at one point to state that there was no question of this. Later on, Prime Minister Chrétien made a statement in the same vein as well. At that time, both stated that the amounts currently being paid to seniors would not be affected, regardless of what discussions might take place concerning social programs.

I would like the Leader of the Government to confirm to us again today that the government has no intention, even after the social program review, to reduce the pensions currently being paid to seniors.

[English]

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the comments made by the Prime Minister and Mr. Ouellet during the referendum campaign speak for themselves. I am sure that they will be honoured.

FIREARMS BILL

FUNDING ARRANGEMENTS WITH GOVERNMENT OF NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR PARTICULARS

Hon. Gerald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, last month, with respect to Bill C-68, the Premier of Nova Scotia stated:

I've stated quite categorically that this is a federal responsibility....We have established with the federal minister Allan Rock that there will be no cost to the province.

Will the Leader of the Government please advise this house of the contents of the deal that has been worked out between the federal government and the government of Nova Scotia? Will she table the deal?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will consult with the Minister of Justice on this matter. I am certain that the Minister of Justice was restating, as he has done all along, the difference between the responsibilities of provinces and the federal government in terms of this legislation. However, I will be pleased to have a further conversation with him in this regard.

AVAILABILITY TO OTHER PROVINCES OF SIMILAR ARRANGEMENTS—COSTS TO TAXPAYERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gerald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, would the Leader of the Government in the Senate also please advise whether the financial arrangements with the Province of Nova Scotia include payments for both the registration and the enforcement of the bill? In his response, the Premier of Nova Scotia said that there would no cost whatsoever to the taxpayers of Nova Scotia. If this is the case, has a similar deal been offered to the other provinces of Canada? I would assume that it must have been offered, since one province cannot be treated differently from another. Has a calculation been made of the total cost of such a deal to the Canadian taxpayer?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, first, I preface my response by saying that I do not concur with the words of the honourable senator, which refer to a special deal with any one province. The Minister of Justice has been very clear in his explanations about costing. However, I will be happy to double check that for my honourable friend.

HEALTH

NEW LEGISLATION TO CURTAIL TOBACCO CONSUMPTION— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, last June in this chamber, I asked the government to consider placing tobacco products under the provisions of the Hazardous Products Act, in order to fill gaps in legislation that would have the effect of reducing smoking. Since that time, our body of effective law has been substantially reduced, not enhanced. The Supreme Court has gutted the Tobacco Products Control Act, and we have seen good evidence that the law to prohibit sales to minors is not being well enforced.

In recent weeks, we have seen reports that after three decades of decline, the rate of smoking in Ontario has begun to rise significantly. A survey by the Addiction Research Foundation found, for example, that more than 30 per cent of students in grades 7 to 13 in Eastern Ontario are now smoking. It also found that the surge in smoking in both adults and teenagers is directly related to the lower price of cigarettes, effected by the current government when it slashed taxes.

In response to my question of June, the government stated that tobacco products cannot be placed under the Hazardous Products Act because it contends that the act's unwritten purpose is to make products safe, and that cannot be done with tobacco. Urea formaldehyde-based insulation and asbestos products can be regulated under the law, but not tobacco, which kills more than 41,000 Canadians yearly.

Now that we are seeing the effect of the government-induced price reduction on tobacco products, the government's failure to adequately enforce the ban on sales to minors and its inadequate defence of the law banning tobacco advertising, what new law to curb tobacco consumption does the government propose? If not the Hazardous Products Act or the Food and Drugs Act, what precisely does it have in mind to restore a downward trend in tobacco use?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I cannot give the honourable senator a specific answer to her question. She has described accurately the concern and dilemma of the Minister of Health over the use of the Hazardous Products Act in this case. She is quite right when she says that the response has been that it is impossible to make tobacco products safe. Thus, legislation that would place tobacco within this particular act would be ineffective.

However, the minister does agree that the Hazardous Products Act has features that would be very useful if included in legislation that deals specifically with the special and the difficult problems created by tobacco consumption. This subject is very close to the minister's heart. She is working assiduously on it.

Honourable senators, I cannot give my honourable friend an accurate time frame, but the minister shares my honourable friend's concerns and will be proceeding to find an alternative to the one prescribed by my honourable friend.

Senator Spivak: Honourable senators, the Supreme Court of Canada has invited such legislation. I do not doubt the motives of the minister, but the important thing is action. Perhaps I could ask the Leader of the Government if she would use her good offices to give us some idea of a time frame. This matter cannot be kept in limbo forever.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I would be pleased to do so.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

REPORT OF SENATE COMMITTEE ON PLIGHT OF ABORIGINAL VETERANS—REQUEST FOR RESPONSE

Hon. A. Raynell Andreychuk: Honourable senators, in light of the tributes paid to veterans and this time of remembrance that will culminate in ceremonies on November 11, would the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell me when the government will respond to the aboriginal veterans report that was unanimously passed in this house? If there is no answer to the report, have any initiatives been undertaken to answer the plight of aboriginal veterans? Since this issue was brought to the attention of the Senate, many of those aboriginal veterans have passed away. It is becoming increasingly important that this issue be addressed, and addressed quickly.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, to Senator Andreychuk and all senators who served on the committee that studied the matter, I would like an answer to that question as well, and I will pursue it.

TRANSPORT

AUTOMATED WEATHER OBSERVATION SYSTEMS—REPORT OF SENATE COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR RESPONSE FROM MINISTERS

Hon. Pat Carney: Honourable senators, my question is also to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Yesterday, I brought to the attention of this chamber the failure of three ministers to respond to our Senate committee's report on automated weather stations (A.W.O.S.), which Canadian pilots say is an accident waiting to happen. In the four months since we asked for a response to the report, we have received one reply from Brian Tobin's signature machine saying that at some point our report will be answered.

In view of the fact that nearly 20 municipalities and cities have written us to express their concern with this technology and their opposition to it being installed in their communities, what can you do to encourage the ministers to deal with this issue in a more timely manner?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Senator Carney, since this issue was raised in the Senate by yourself and by Senator Kenny, I have made inquiries. The lead department on this issue is the Department of Transport. It is coordinating the responses of other departments and hopes to have a coordinated response soon.

Senator Carney: Honourable senators, it is not good enough to tell us that we will have a response soon. It is the very fact that three departments are involved, all of them buck-passing this issue between themselves, that this particular ball will be fumbled and Canadian lives will be lost. I am asking the Leader of the Government to get us an answer now, not soon!

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I will be pleased to facilitate the speed with which this answer is given. The reason for the delay of the answer is not a question of buck-passing; it is a question of coordinating the best possible answer for the Senate.

INFRASTRUCTURE PROGRAM

EFFECT ON CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY—
GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Pierre Claude Nolin: My question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate and concerns the economy in general and the construction sector in particular.

On several occasions your government has promoted the infrastructure program. It referred particularly to the beneficial effects it would have on the construction sector. Could you explain to us how 56,000 jobs were lost in the construction sector between mid-October 1994 and the month of October 1995?

[English]

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will have to take that question as notice, check the figures, and get back to my honourable friend.

UNITED NATIONS

RESOLUTION TO HALT NUCLEAR TESTING—GOVERNMENT
OBJECTION TO WORDING IN TEXT—REQUEST FOR PARTICULARS

Hon. A. Raynell Andreychuk: Honourable senators, I have a further question related to the non-proliferation treaty. As I asked yesterday, if this matter was not an issue of pressure from other governments, could the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us why the government strongly disagrees with the wording "strongly disagrees with nuclear testing" in the resolution as it is presently before the United Nations? Historically, we have always strongly disagreed with nuclear testing. Why are we not in agreement with that wording today?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as I said in response to Senator Murray yesterday, I will seek advice on that particular question. Canada has followed through on its commitments, and I will seek to find more detail on the question that Senator Andreychuk and Senator Murray have asked.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

EXCISE TAX ACT EXCISE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-90, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS IMPLEMENTATION BILL, 1995

THIRD READING

Hon. Peter Bosa moved the third reading of Bill C-105, to implement a convention between Canada and the Republic of Latvia, a convention between Canada and the Republic of Estonia, a convention between Canada and the Republic of Trinidad and Tobago, and a protocol between Canada and the Republic of Hungary, for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income.

He said: Honourable senators, before I move third reading of this bill, I wish to respond to a question put to me and to the leadership by Senator Sylvain concerning the reason why Bill C-105, on conventions to avoid double taxation, had its origin in the House of Commons rather than in this chamber.

I made an inquiry of the Government House Leader, the Honourable Herb Gray, and he sent me the following reply:

In exercising my Ministerial duties with regard to planning the Government's legislative program, I must take into account the legislative burdens in each House when a bill is ready for introduction. It was my judgment that the House of Commons agenda was more conducive to consideration of Bill C-105 early in the autumn than it would be later in the session. It is for this reason that the bill was initiated in the Commons.

Having said that, if there are no other questions concerning this bill, I move the third reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL

November 8, 1995

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that The Honourable Peter deC. Cory, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 8th day of November 1995, at 4:00 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

Yours sincerely,

Anthony P. Smyth
Deputy Secretary,
Policy, Program and Protocol

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT BILL, 1995

MOTION TO INSTRUCT LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE TO TABLE FINAL REPORT—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Fairbairn, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Stewart,

That it be an instruction of this House to the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs that no later than Wednesday, November 22, 1995, it present its final report to the Senate on the Message from the House of Commons, dated June 20, 1995, regarding Bill C-69, an Act to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions and the readjustment of electoral boundaries.

Hon. Gérald-A Beaudoin: Honourable senators, I wish to rise at this point in the debate to establish the context and point of view under which the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has considered Bill C-69 up to now.

• (1430)

[English]

Section 51 of the Constitution Act, 1867, provides that the number of members of Parliament and the representation of provinces in the House of Commons are readjusted after each decennial census, the first one having been made in 1871, under the authority of Parliament. Parliament has a certain discretion, but, according to the letter and the spirit of the said section 51, the readjustment is mandatory, legally and constitutionally.

The last census was taken in 1991. The present government was elected in October 1993.

[Translation]

The House of Commons passed Bill C-18, an Act to suspend the operation of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, in its final form in 1994, after agreeing to the amendments proposed by the Senate. This provisional legislation was to remain in effect until June 1995, at the latest. The aim of Bill C-18 was simply to suspend the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Chapter E-3), during the time it took to find another process for readjusting electoral boundaries.

The suspension was to end June 22, at the latest, or earlier, with the passing of Bill C-69.

[English]

Bill C-69 was not adopted on June 22. Bill C-18 became spent or, as we say in French, caduc. As a result, section E-3 now applies. Bill C-69 constitutes a new process. The bill has the objective to abrogate and replace E-3.

Bill C-69, adopted by the other House on April 25, 1995, was studied by the Senate; six amendments were proposed by the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee. The bill as amended was reported in June 1995. The other House rejected five of the six amendments, but accepted the amendment on the criterion of residence. This is a technical amendment. As I said before, the amendment reducing disparity between constituencies was rejected.

[Translation]

The message from the other House was referred to the Senate. It passed it on to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

A second report was tabled July 12, 1995, in the Senate by the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

I have made arrangements for an expert to appear before the committee on the morning of November 21. I am waiting for confirmation today. I will also ask a senior official of Elections Canada to appear as well to deal with the legal and technical questions.

[English]

Our main concern has always been to do everything we can to assure Parliament that the next federal election will be based on the census of 1991 and not on the census of 1981. We think that the letter and the spirit of section 51 of the Constitution Act, 1867, leave us no choice.

What is the legal situation now? Section E-3 applies. We have returned to the previous legal situation. The Chief Electoral Officer has worked on that basis for a few months. I am informed that the new maps under E-3 will be ready in January 1996. They will be in force one year after; that is, January 1997. It means that if the current process continues, a general election could be held on the basis of the 1991 census after January 1997.

Some senators think that if the readjustment of boundaries of electoral constituencies is suspended again, and if we start again at square one, chances are that the next general election will not be based on the census of 1991.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, it has been said that the Senate should not intervene in an area that concerns the elected representatives of this country.

There is a tendency to quote from a speech made on December 18, 1985, by Senator Jacques Flynn, in which he said:

In any event, I would say this is an area that almost exclusively concerns the House of Commons, and I think that we as a non-elected Chamber and as appointed legislators are hardly in a position to tell the Members of the House of Commons how they should proceed to draw the boundaries of their electoral districts.

But they forget to add what follows — this is still Senator Flynn, and I quote:

Nevertheless, if there were some major questions of principle, the Senate would certainly have a contribution to make.

Personally, I regret the fact that the other place did not see fit to accept the amendment reducing the degree of disparity between ridings from 25 per cent to 15 per cent.

• (1440)

[English]

No doubt some will say that the courts of justice in this country and even the Supreme Court of Canada have accepted such a disparity in some cases. I do not contest that fact. I have read that decision. The Supreme Court has ruled, but it is still a question that is debated because, in my opinion, Canada is a great democracy. That is why I think such an amendment should have been accepted.

It is not surprising that some of us have expressed a desire to insist on the proposed amendments. We will hear witnesses on November 21. The whole Senate — as agreed earlier today by a special order, confirming a previous one — will be invited to express its opinion after a debate takes place on this bill. I am confident that the correct position will be taken in this case.

On motion of Senator Carstairs, debate adjourned.

UNITED NATIONS

FOURTH WORLD CONFERENCE ON WOMEN, BEIJING, CHINA—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Landon Pearson rose pursuant to notice of October 17, 1995:

That she will call the attention of the Senate to the Fourth World Conference on Women, held in Beijing, from September 4 to 15, 1995, which Senator Cohen and I had the privilege to attend as parliamentary observers on behalf of the Senate.

She said: Honourable senators, I rise today to report on the Fourth World Conference on Women held in Beijing from September 4 to 15, 1995, at which it was my privilege to be present as a parliamentary observer.

Since returning to Canada, I have thought a great deal about what I saw and heard there. I should now like to share with you why I consider that conference a success.

There are many ways in which one can evaluate an international gathering of this scale. I have chosen three: as a parliamentarian, as a Canadian and, for me, perhaps the most important, as a woman committed to the rights and the well-being of children, in this case, the girl child.

I enjoyed the presence of my parliamentary colleagues on the Canadian delegation and was impressed by their performance. There were 10 of us, ably led by the Honourable Sheila Finestone, Minister for the Status of Women. We represented different political parties, different parts of the country and, to some extent, different visions. However, each one of us took our responsibilities seriously and worked hard to make ourselves useful.

I was equally impressed by women parliamentarians I met from other countries. I felt strengthened as I listened to them in the plenum making formal presentations on behalf of their country women with eloquence and power. They were splendid models for all of us, but especially for the girls and young women present, of whom there were many.

As a Canadian, I was extremely proud of the role our country played in the success of the conference, not only at the conference itself but also in the years of preparation leading up to it. It was quite clear to all of us there that the leadership of Canada was greatly appreciated by the countries present. Canada has earned the respect of the world through commitment, hard work, and a remarkable capacity to work with others.

Our commitment to the cause of women was demonstrated by the careful work of Status of Women Canada in preparing our position and producing the necessary documentation. It was also demonstrated by the Government of Canada ensuring, through Status of Women Canada, Foreign Affairs and the Canadian International Development Agency, the presence of not only a large number of Canadian non-governmental organizations but also African and Eastern European women who would not otherwise have been able to attend.

Our hard work was demonstrated through the extraordinary efforts of Canadian representatives, governmental and non-governmental alike, at the preparatory committee meetings and at the conference itself, where our negotiators were quite simply brilliant. In conjunction with the work of Canadian delegates, both official and non-governmental, their success attests to our capacity to work well with others. At the Fourth World Conference on Women, I was proud to be a Canadian.

However, honourable senators, it was as an advocate for the girl child that I drew my greatest satisfaction from the conference. The Fourth World Conference on Women was the latest in a series of UN conferences on the situation of the world's women. Following the 1975 conference in Mexico City, 1976 to 1985 was declared the UN Decade for Women. In 1980, the Copenhagen conference produced the Program of Action for the Second Half of the UN Decade for Women. The 1985 Nairobi conference resulted in Forward-Looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, a blueprint for action through to the year 2000.

Each of these conferences addressed serious problems related to the status of women, but none of them gave a separate place to the situation of the girl child. However, since the unanimous adoption of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child in 1989, the consciousness of the world has changed. Now, every United Nations conference must take children into account. This was true at the Vienna World Conference on Human Rights in 1993, the Cairo International Conference on Population and Development in 1994, and the Copenhagen World Summit for Social Development in 1995.

With the Children's Convention, and through the United Nations, the world has formally recognized its responsibility for children and the obligation of states to protect, nurture and provide for them the opportunities they require to grow up as caring and responsible citizens in an increasingly complex world.

Honourable senators, I know that you have no difficulty in recognizing that children have needs and indeed rights that must be attended to. You also know that throughout the world children of both sexes are at risk. However, because she is female, the girl child has, historically, been particularly vulnerable to discrimination, exploitation and neglect.

It was the African countries that insisted the girl child become a "Critical Area of Concern" in the Platform for Action to be negotiated and decided upon at the conference. Then, Canada helped to redraft the initial text so that it would apply to all girls, no matter where they lived. The Children's Convention was used as a framework.

A completed text, section L of the Platform for Action, was brought to the conference in Beijing, but it contained many square brackets indicating the consensus was still lacking. The main issues of contention to be negotiated at the conference included early marriage, sexual exploitation, female genital mutilation, education, inheritance and parental rights and responsibilities.

At the conference, delegates agreed to the following: That child marriage is detrimental to the healthy development of a young girl and should be made illegal; that female genital mutilation is an act of violence — and this is the first time there has been an agreement on female genital mutilation at the international level — and that governments and non-governmental organizations should be obliged to develop formal and informal education programs that support and enable girls to acquire knowledge to develop self-esteem and to take responsibility for their own lives.

• (1450)

With respect to inheritance, the agreed text of the Platform for Action in paragraph 274(d) commits to:

Eliminate the injustice and obstacles in relation to inheritance faced by the girl child so that all children may enjoy their rights without discrimination, by, inter alia, enacting, as appropriate, and enforcing legislation that guarantees equal right to succession and ensures equal right to inherit, regardless of the sex of the child.

Finally, with respect to parental responsibilities, the Platform of Action in paragraph 267 reads:

Taking into account the rights of the child to access information, privacy, confidentiality, respect and informed consent as well as the responsibilities and duties of parents and legal guardians to provide, in a manner consistent with the evolving capacities of the child, appropriate direction and guidance in the exercise by the child of the rights recognized in the Convention on the Rights of the Child and in conformity with the Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women.

In all actions concerning children, the best interests of the child shall be of primary consideration.

Honourable senators, United Nations conferences like the Fourth World Conference on Women are essentially about language, about the evolution, shaping and refinement of the language the international community agrees to use in its analysis of the major issues of our times. Changing language may not immediately change attitudes or provoke action, but without the necessary language, progress, if it takes place at all, will be very slow indeed.

Listen now to how the language about children's rights has changed in this century. The first International Declaration on Children's Rights in Geneva in 1924 spoke primarily to children's welfare needs for food, health, protection, and so on. There was no reference to autonomy. In the text of the UN Declaration of the Rights of the Child in 1959, the emphasis is still on welfare and protection, though there is a new focus on child development. However, the same declaration indicates little understanding of the importance of children's views, nor does it address the concept of empowerment.

The Children's Convention in 1989 changed all that. For the first time the child is recognized as a person, as a holder of rights as well as entitlements, and as having a certain autonomy to be encouraged as the child matures. It is the convention's language that informed the negotiations in Beijing.

In the section on the girl child in paragraph 279(c) of the Platform for Action, governments commit to:

...promote human rights education in educational programmes and include in human rights education the fact that the human rights of women and the girl child are an inalienable, integral and indivisible part of universal human rights.

Honourable senators, as a result of the work at the Fourth World Conference on Women in Beijing, there will be a new climate for girls. Never again will a member state be able to neglect its responsibility to the health, education and protection of girls without incurring international censure. Never again can a state justify the violation of the rights of women and girls on the sole basis of custom, tradition or religion.

We know that the situation of girls will not improve overnight, that exploitation, neglect and discrimination will continue. Yet, I am here to say today that your granddaughters and mine, as well as countless little girls in the rest of the world, are more likely to now have their human rights protected and to have wider choices and greater opportunities to have their human potential fulfilled because of what happened in Beijing. This is no mean accomplishment.

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: Would the honourable senator entertain a question?

Senator Pearson: Certainly.

Senator Kinsella: Would the honourable senator explain to us the nature of the Canadian delegation to the Fourth World Congress on Women? In your inquiry, I note that the honourable senator used the phrase that she and the Honourable Senator Cohen were present as "parliamentary observers." What was the relationship of your participation and that of Senator Cohen's with the official Canadian delegation?

Senator Pearson: My understanding of how these delegations are created is that, aside from the actual negotiators and officials, all of us are described as "observers." I assume that that is the same case in all UN functions.

Senator Kinsella: Was any contact made during the course of the official intergovernmental meeting in Beijing and the meeting of the women's forum, which was made up of NGOs from around the world, some 30 or 40 miles outside of Beijing?

Senator Pearson: Was there any contact?

Senator Kinsella: Yes.

Senator Pearson: There was a great deal of contact. Senator Cohen and I went out two or three times. We interacted as the members of non-governmental organizations came in. Some were on the delegation.

While we were observers on the official Canadian delegation, we were all accredited to the conference. In that sense, we were all delegates. I have forgotten how many Canadian non-governmental women were accredited to the main conference, but I know it was a large number. Having spoken with many of them, I know that they were extremely active and effective.

Senator Kinsella: Honourable senators, criticism has been raised by a number of Canadian women who attended the women's forum. They indicated that on several occasions when they came in from the NGO women's forum to observe the UN conference they had a difficult time finding the Canadian delegation. Have you heard that criticism?

Senator Pearson: Honourable senators, I spoke last week in Toronto with several non-governmental delegates from York University. They expressed no particular problem. It was a very large conference. People who know their way around in those kinds of conferences know how quickly to make contact.

Negotiators conducted a formal debriefing with the non-governmental organizations in the main conference building every single day. However, it is possible that some Canadians were not aware of that.

Senator Kinsella: I read a criticism in the news media levied by women participating in the NGO forum against members of the official delegation. Apparently, for a considerable period of time, for a few days when the intergovernmental conference was on, the Canadian delegation was not present. It was off in a different city doing other things. Is that true?

Senator Pearson: A certain number of us — that is, the parliamentarians, not the other members of the delegation — undertook two missions to China. I went to the northwestern part of China to look at development projects involving women. It gave us a great opportunity to understand better the situation in China and, in particular, the situation of women in China. I can assure the honourable senator that it was difficult work. One of us came back with typhoid fever. It was not a junket. We did not desert our post.

Senator Cohen can speak for herself about the importance and significance of the trip that she took.

Honourable senators, after a week, we could see that our negotiators and officials were doing a superb job. There was no problem in our going away for a few days in order to enrich our experience and the Canadian presence in China.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, perhaps I could ask Senator Pearson a question. It has to do with the role of the Vatican delegation at the conference. There was considerable comment as to that particular role.

• (1500)

Can the honourable senator shed any light on what was filtered through the press? Did she have an opportunity to meet the lady from the United States who headed the delegation representing the Vatican?

Senator Pearson: Honourable senators, Senator MacEachen's question reflects, in a sense, the way the media reported on this conference. For those of us who were there, the media's reflection of what went on at the conference was not accurate.

It is true that the Vatican had a position and a great many concerns about some of the issues that were raised at the conference. Since the Vatican has but observer status at the UN, it expressed those concerns quite vocally through the countries which represent their points of view. I refer to Malta and some other countries. Those who were present expected there to be more contention than there actually was. That is because the language had already been agreed to at the population conference in Cairo, which reinforces the point I tried to make in my speech. Therefore, with respect to some of the issues on which one might have expected the Vatican to take a strong position, it did not.

I did not have the opportunity to meet the leader of the Vatican delegation. I am not sure whether other members of our delegation may have done so.

On motion of Senator Cohen, debate adjourned.

AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO STUDY THE PRESENT STATE AND FUTURE OF AGRICULTURE AND AGRI-FOOD

Hon. Dan Hays moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be authorized to examine the present state and the future of agriculture and agri-food in Canada; and

That the committee table its report no later than June 30, 1996.

He said: Honourable senators, the Agriculture and Forestry Committee has completed two reports, both of which were tabled in June. One dealt with the subject of farm machinery and safety issues. The other was the committee's findings pursuant to a fact-finding trip to Washington, as well as to Winnipeg where it heard from the Canadian Wheat Board.

The committee is currently without a reference. Accordingly, it is not in the position to hold public hearings, which is the reason I am requesting this rather general reference on behalf of the committee today. Currently, it is our intention to call the co-chairs of the blue ribbon committee which is making a report pursuant to a request from the Minister of Agriculture and the American Secretary of Agriculture concerning the grain trade between Canada and the United States.

We are also in the process of requesting and taking briefings from the Department of Agriculture on a number of policy initiatives that are in the works in Agriculture and Agri-Food Canada. We would like to have the ability to hold public hearings, if that would serve better our agriculture and agri-food constituencies.

We have included a report date of June 30, 1996. It is quite possible there may be a prorogation of Parliament before that time.

I would also point out that if the committee does settle on a specific subject, I anticipate that we will pass a specific request for such a reference, the budget of which it would then take to the appropriate subcommittee of the Internal Economy Committee and then in turn to the main committee for approval.

Honourable senators, if we do that, we would try, probably for the first time, to have the reference continue for at least a few days beyond the reporting date for the purposes of handling publicity, and so on, which matters are sometimes awkward to deal with the moment a report is tabled because the reference ends. After the reference has ended, there is no authority to deal with such matters as publicity, or even providing information about the report.

I would be happy to deal with any questions that honourable senators may have.

Motion agreed to.

The sitting of the Senate was suspended until 3:55 p.m.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Right Honourable Peter deC. Cory, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Deputy Speaker, the Right Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Canada-United States Tax Convention Act (Bill S-9, Chapter 34, 1995)

An Act to amend the Explosives Act (Bill C-71, Chapter 35, 1995)

An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act (Bill C-90, Chapter 36, 1995)

An Act to implement a convention between Canada and the Republic of Latvia, a convention between Canada and the Republic of Estonia, a convention between Canada and the Republic of Trinidad and Tobago and a protocol between Canada and the Republic of Hungary, for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income (Bill C-105, Chapter 37, 1995)

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Right Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, November 20, 1995, at 2 p.m.

PAGES EXCHANGE PROGRAM WITH HOUSE OF COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I would like to advise you that we have two new pages from the House of Commons, both of whom have been selected to participate in the exchange program with the Senate for the week of November 20 to 24. One of our pages is presently over in the House of Commons.

I would like to introduce to you Carine Lavoie, who hails from Noëlville, Ontario. Carine is enrolled at the University of Ottawa in general art studies.

We have as well Mark Coward from Burnaby, British Columbia, who is currently enrolled at the University of Ottawa in arts and philosophy.

Welcome, Carine and Mark.

region has grown in the last 30 years from 15 per cent to nearly 40 per cent.

Japan by itself is a world economic giant, and quickly developing to parallel status is China with 15 per cent GDP growth in 1994, and India with 8 per cent GDP growth in the same year. Indonesia, Thailand, Taiwan and Malaysia are examples of countries whose economic expansion in each year of this decade has been three times greater than that of Canada or the United States.

Prime Minister Chrétien told a meeting in Canberra, Australia, last week that:

The Pacific is Canada's future. APEC is extremely important because the money, the people, the growth and the dollars of tomorrow will be in the Pacific.

One year ago in Bogor, Indonesia, APEC leaders signed a declaration committing developed Pacific Rim nations to reaching a free trade deal by the year 2010 and developing countries to joining by 2020. By that time, APEC will represent seven of the world's ten largest economies.

A critical step in advancing Canada's interests in the Asia-Pacific region was achieved at the Osaka APEC summit on November 19. Secretary of State (Asia-Pacific) Raymond Chan announced that the 1997 APEC summit would be held in Vancouver. At that time, Canada will chair the APEC process and will host a number of APEC events, including the leaders' meeting, several ministers' meetings and meetings involving senior officials and the private sector. We will see a number of preparatory meetings held in other centres in Canada. It is estimated that 3,500 people from outside Canada will participate.

It is estimated as well that, by the year 2005, the Asia-Pacific community will represent 50 per cent of global economic growth, adding at least five new economies the size of Canada's to global consumption. To secure our own business growth, create the jobs we vitally need for our citizens and maintain our social security system, we must be significant participants in the Asia-Pacific region. We must plan on using 1997 to achieve a greater profile and greater business participation in the Asia-Pacific region.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I regret that Senator Austin's time has expired. Is leave granted for him to complete his remarks?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Austin: We in the Senate should do our part to make Canadians more aware of that region, where so many of our future prospects lie.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

ASIA-PACIFIC ECONOMIC COOPERATION

SUMMIT CONFERENCE HELD IN OSAKA, JAPAN

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, the purpose of these remarks is to draw your attention to some of the main features of Canada's role at the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation Summit Conference held in Osaka, Japan, last week. This summit meeting was among the heads of government of the APEC community, numbering 18 in all, including President Jiang Zemin of China, Prime Minister Tomiichi Murayama of Japan, Vice-President Al Gore of the United States and, of course, Prime Minister Chrétien. Other members of the Canadian group were Foreign Minister André Ouellet, International Trade Minister Roy MacLaren and Secretary of State (Asia-Pacific) Raymond Chan.

The reason for Canada's high-level focus on the Asia-Pacific region is clear: Our trade with the region is 50 per cent greater in value than our trade with the European Community. For example, in the first six months of 1995, Canadian exports to Pacific nations totalled $12.7 billion, compared with $8.1 billion to the European Community.

The Asia-Pacific region is an economic powerhouse with 2 billion of the world's population. World trade with this

FIREARMS LEGISLATION

PRESENTATION OF RESOLUTION

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, whereas since December 6, 1989, when 14 young women were killed at the École polytechnique in Montreal, over 1,000 people have been killed by firearms, 300 have died in accidents, and more than 6,000, including many young people, have committed suicide in Canada;

Whereas three million people own seven million guns in Canada;

Whereas since that day six years ago, a coalition of organizations, including several from Montreal, has called for effective gun control legislation in order to save lives;

Whereas the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police and the Canadian Police Association support the government bill designed to better control the movement of firearms;

Whereas in June 1995, the House of Commons passed Bill C-68 on gun control to the satisfaction of all those concerned;

Whereas this bill, currently under Senate consideration, must be passed quickly so that it can take effect in January 1996;

Whereas the Coalition for Gun Control, including the December 6 victims' foundation against violence and the families of the victims at Concordia University, is calling on the Senate to take all necessary measures to ensure that Bill C-68 is passed in time for the gun control legislation to take effect in January 1996.

It is proposed by Councillor Daviau, seconded by Councillor Lavallée and all the other members of the Municipal Council of the City of Montreal;

First, that the Municipal Council of Montreal ask the Senate to pass Bill C-68 quickly, that is to say, in time for the gun control legislation to take effect in January 1996;

Second, that a copy of this resolution be sent to each senator.

• (1410)

Therefore, I am pleased to table this resolution as I was asked to do by all members of the Municipal Council of the City of Montreal, who were kind enough to welcome me and who entrusted me with this delicate mission, which, of course, does not affect in any way the discussion I would like to have during the debate to be held in the next two days.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

CENTENNIAL OF ASSOCIATION WITH THE YUKON

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, in 1895, Inspector Charles Constantine and a troop of 20 men of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police arrived in the Yukon. Gold had been discovered and, within three years, Dawson City was transformed from a moose pasture to "the Paris of the North" with a population of 30,000 people — the largest Canadian city west of Winnipeg at that time.

During the stampede, Skagway, Alaska, was controlled by a gang of thieves and murderers led by the notorious Soapy Smith. Smith was eventually killed in a gunfight with a citizen, Frank Reid, who died a week later of his wounds.

On the Canadian side of the border, law and order prevailed because Superintendent Sam Steele and the Royal Northwest Mounted Police ruled with a fair but iron will. From these beginnings, the mounted police began its 100-year association with the Yukon.

This year, 1995, is our Yukon Royal Canadian Mounted Police centennial. Yukoners and tens of thousands of visitors have been treated to a fantastic year of celebrations, parades, music and displays by the force. We were even fortunate enough to have had the famous Musical Ride in the Yukon, which thrilled everyone who saw it.

Since Inspector Constantine's arrival in 1895, we have undoubtedly been serviced and protected by the best police force in the world. Members who have served in the Northwest Mounted Police have included, for example, former Corporal G.I. Cameron who, at 95 years of age, is still living in Whitehorse; Alan Innes Taylor and Special Constable Peter Benjamin from Old Crow, dear friends of mine who passed away some years ago; Inspector Frank Fitzgerald and his "lost patrol" who perished between Fort McPherson and Dawson City, and Inspector Jack Dempster, who located the bodies; and Captain Henry Larsen, who not only made the first crossing of the Northwest Passage but also made the trip in both directions. The first crossing west to east took three years from 1940 to 1942, inclusive.

Honourable senators, recent events at 24 Sussex Drive have made life very difficult for our Mounties across Canada. While corrective actions have been and will continue to be taken, surely this is a good time to let our members know that we appreciate and support the task that they have taken upon themselves on our behalf, and the difficulties that their families are suffering at this time.

I have personally been ticketed, arrested, assisted by, and have worked with the RCMP in the Yukon. As well, I have attended regimental dinners and coached RCMP hockey teams in Whitehorse during my 47 years in the Yukon. A finer group of people will not be found anywhere.

To Chief Superintendent Edward Henderson, soon to be retired, Commanding Officer of the Yukon "M" Division in Whitehorse, Sergeant Dana Gibbons at the Watson Lake detachment, Constable Karen Olito of the Old Crow detachment, and all their colleagues, I say: "Thank you for being there when we needed you."

NATIONAL CHILD DAY

Hon. Ethel Cochrane: Honourable senators, I would like to add my voice to those who have spoken in recognition of the celebration today of National Child Day.

As a former teacher, I have spent most of my adult life in the company of children and youth. Since my appointment to the Senate, I have frequently returned to speak at schools throughout my province. I am well aware that our young people represent the promise and potential of Canada's future.

Today, across our nation, we pay tribute to our future leaders, innovators and entrepreneurs, and our future workers in all sectors of our economy. Today, I salute the children and the youth of Canada.

Hon. Landon Pearson: Honourable senators, today, as my colleague has just said, is National Child Day, a celebration of children and a commemoration of the adoption of the Convention on the Rights of the Child by the United Nations in 1989.

The manner in which we celebrate demonstrates the value of what is being celebrated, and nothing is more precious to the health and prosperity of Canada than the well-being of our children. As elders of our nation, a category most of us fall into, we stand in a relationship of special trust to the children of Canada, far too many of whom are poor, neglected, abused and humiliated. We owe them protection, and we owe them support for their growth and development.

In the context of today's debate on gun control, I believe we also owe them a "culture of caution" respecting the possession and use of firearms. I acknowledge the legitimate use of guns and I respect the hunter, but I can never forget that guns are designed to kill. We must ensure that our children are safeguarded from their misuse, and that they do not fall victim to the use of guns, either by accident or design. At the same time, we must also do everything within our power to mitigate the difficult conditions in which so many of our children now live and grow. This is the only way we can make sure that neither today nor tomorrow will they be tempted, out of anguish or anger, to turn a gun on themselves or on others. On National Child Day, honourable senators, let us deliberate with children on our minds.

Hon. Sharon Carstairs: Honourable senators, I too rise to speak on National Child Day.

Last week I watched a program on CBC in which a number of male and female students were interviewed and shown interacting with one another at the high school level. The young women were portrayed as being terribly subjected to physical and sexual harassment. It was very sad to see the egos of those young women being damaged because of what they were subjected to on a daily basis. However, I also felt enormous compassion for the young men who were portrayed. Somehow or other, society has sent them the message that, in order to be accepted within their own peer group, they must behave in a "macho" way.

Surely today, National Child Day, we must understand that junior high school students, who are generally between the ages of 11 and 14, are children who need our guidance and our direction. These are the children who need some societal guidelines and objectives that unequivocally convey the message that each and every young person should and can be his or her own person, and need not feel pressure to be something they do not want to be. They should view the development of ego, with all of its strengths, as a positive challenge in their lives.

When dealing with young people, I ask that we all strive to give them the correct, positive images so that they can be the very best that they can be, rather than the worst that they can be.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FIREARMS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Gérald-A. Beaudoin, Chairman of the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Monday, November 20, 1995

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

SIXTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-68, An Act respecting firearms and other weapons, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, June 22, 1995, examined the said Bill and now reports the same with the following amendments:

1. Pages 52 and 53, clause 112: strike out lines 25 to 44, on page 52 and lines 1 to 25, on page 53 and substitute the following:

“112.(1) Subject to subsection (2) and section 112.2, every person commits an offence who possesses a firearm that is neither a prohibited firearm nor a restricted firearm, unless the person is the holder of

(a) a licence under which the person may possess the firearm; and

(b) a registration certificate for the firearm.

- (2) Subsection (1) does not apply to

(a) a person who possesses a firearm while the person is under the direct and immediate supervision of a person who may lawfully possess it, for the purpose of using it in a manner in which the supervising person may lawfully use it;

(b) a person who comes into possession of a firearm by the operation of law and who, within a reasonable period after acquiring possession of it,

(i) lawfully disposes of it, or

(ii) obtains a licence under which the person may possess it and a registration certificate for the firearm; or

(c) a person who possesses a firearm and who is not the holder of a registration certificate for the firearm if the person

(i) has borrowed the firearm;

(ii) is the holder of a licence under which the person may possess it; and

(iii) is in possession of the firearm to hunt or trap in order to sustain the person or the person's family.

112.1 (1) Subject to subsection (2), every person commits an offence who, being the holder of an authorization or a licence under which the person may possess a firearm that is neither a prohibited firearm nor a restricted firearm, possesses the firearm at a place that is

(a) indicated on the authorization or licence as being a place where the person may not possess it;

(b) other than a place indicated on the authorization or licence as being a place where the person may possess it; or

(c) other than a place where it may be possessed under the Firearms Act.

- (2) Subsection (1) does not apply in respect of a replica firearm.

112.2 (1) Every person who, immediately before the coming into force of subsections 112(1) and 112.1(1), possessed a firearm that is neither a prohibited firearm nor a restricted firearm without a firearms acquisition certificate because

(a) the person possessed the firearm before January 1, 1979, or

(b) the firearms acquisition certificate under which the person had acquired the firearm had expired shall be deemed for the purposes of those subsections to be, until January 1, 2001 or such other date after that date as is prescribed, the holder of a licence under which the person may possess the firearm.

(2) Every person who, immediately before the coming into force of subsections 112(1) and 112.1(1), possessed a firearm that is neither a prohibited firearm nor a restricted firearm and was the holder of a firearms acquisition certificate shall be deemed for the purposes of those subsections to be, until January 1, 2001 or such other date after that date as is prescribed, the holder of a licence under which the person may possess the firearm.

(3) Every person who, at any time between the coming into force of subsection 112(1) and later of January 1, 1998 and such other date as is prescribed, possesses a firearm that is neither a prohibited firearm nor a restricted firearm shall be deemed for the purposes of that subsection to be, until January 1, 2003 or such date after that date as is prescribed, the holder of a registration certificate for that firearm.”

2. Page 53, clause 115: strike out lines 36 to 39 and substitute the following:

“115. Every person who commits an offence under section 112, 112.1, 113 or 114 is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.”

3. Page 58, new clause 117.1: Add the following new clause:

“117.1 A museum is exempt from the payment of all fees prescribed under paragraph 117(p).”

4. Page 59, Clause 119: Strike out lines 20 to 23.

5. Page 73, Clause 139: Strike out lines 33 to 37.

6. Pages 77 and 78, Clause 139:

“offence who possesses a prohibited firearm or a restricted firearm, unless the”; and

(b) strike out lines 28 to 46 on page 77 and lines 1 to 11 on page 78 and substitute the following:

“(a) a person who possesses a prohibited firearm, a restricted firearm, a prohibited weapon, a restricted weapon, a prohibited device or any prohibited ammunition while the person is under the direct and immediate supervision of a person who may lawfully possess it, for the purpose of using it in a manner in which the supervising person may lawfully use it; or

(b) a person who comes into possession of a prohibited firearm, a restricted firearm, a prohibited weapon, a restricted weapon, a prohibited device or any prohibited ammunition by the operation of law and who, within a reasonable period after acquiring possession of it,

(i) lawfully disposes of it, or

(ii) obtains a licence under which the person may possess it and, in the case of a prohibited firearm or a restricted firearm, a registration certificate for the firearm.”

7. Pages 78 and 79, Clause 139:

(a) on page 78, strike out line 14 and substitute the following:

“offence who possesses a prohibited firearm or a restricted firearm, knowing that”; and

(b) strike out lines 42 to 45 on page 78 and lines 1 to 36 on page 79 and substitute the following:

“(a) a person who possesses a prohibited firearm, a restricted firearm, a prohibited weapon, a restricted weapon, a prohibited device or any prohibited ammunition while the person is under the direct and immediate supervision of a person who may lawfully possess it, for the purpose of using it in a manner in which the supervising person may lawfully use it; or

(b) a person who comes into possession of a prohibited firearm, a restricted firearm, a prohibited weapon, a restricted weapon, a prohibited device or any prohibited ammunition by the operation of law and who, within a reasonable period after acquiring possession of it,

(i) lawfully disposes of it, or

(ii) obtains a licence under which the person may possess it and, in the case of a prohibited firearm or a restricted firearm, a registration certificate for the firearm.”

8. Page 78, Clause 139: strike out lines 28 to 40 and substitute the following:

“indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years.”

9. Page 79, Clause 139: strike out line 41 and substitute the following:

“prohibited firearm, a restricted firearm, a prohibited weapon, a restricted”

10. Page 84, Clause 139: strike out line 32 and substitute the following:

“94(1) and the later of January”

11. Page 111, Clause 139: strike out lines 22 to 29 and substitute the following:

“(2) In making regulations, the Governor in Council may not prescribe any thing to be a prohibited firearm, a restricted firearm, a prohibited weapon, a restricted weapon, a prohibited device or prohibited ammunition if the thing to be prescribed is reasonable for use in Canada for hunting or sporting purposes.”

12. Page 111, Clause 139: add after line 29 the following:

“(3) The Minister of Justice shall lay or cause to be laid before each House of Parliament, at least thirty sitting days before its effective date, every regulation that is proposed to be made under subsection (1), and every appropriate committee as determined by the rules of each House of Parliament may conduct enquiries or public hearings with respect to the proposed regulation and report its findings to the appropriate House.

(4) For the purpose of subsection (3), “sitting day” means, in respect of either House of Parliament, a day on which that House sits.”

13. Page 137, Clause 193: add after line 17, the following:

“(3) Notwithstanding subsections (1) and (2), no order shall be made by the Governor in Council pursuant to subsection (1) or section 117 that applies to the aboriginal peoples of Canada until full and considered consultations have been carried out so as to ensure that the existing aboriginal or treaty rights recognized and affirmed by section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 would not be abrogated or derogated from by such an order.”

14. Page 137, New Clause 194: add after line 17, the following new Clause:

“194.(1) This Act or any of its provisions or any provision of any other Act enacted or amended by this Act as it relates to the registration of a firearm that is not a prohibited firearm or a restricted firearm shall come into force in a province in accordance with an order issued under section 193, unless an Act of the legislature of the province authorizes the possession of a firearm that is not a prohibited firearm or restricted firearm.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

TWENTY-FOURTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-93, An Act to amend the Cultural Property Export and Import Act, the Income Tax Act and the Tax Court of Canada Act, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, November 2, 1995, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN SYLVAIN
Deputy Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Graham, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SPECIAL COMMISSION ON RESTRUCTURING OF THE RESERVES—NOTICE OF MOTION TO REFER REPORT TO SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senator, I give notice that tomorrow, Tuesday, November 21, 1995, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology be authorized to examine the report of the Special Commission on the Restructuring of the Reserves, tabled in the Senate on November 7, 1995;

That the committee present its final report no later than January 15, 1996; and

That notwithstanding usual practices, if the Senate is not sitting when the final report of the committee is completed, the committee shall deposit its report with the Clerk of the Senate, and said report shall thereupon be deemed to have been tabled in this chamber.

(2) Subsections 91(1), 92(1), 93(1) and 94(1) and paragraph 117.03(1)(a) of the Criminal Code as enacted by section 139 of this Act as they relate to a possession of a firearm that is not a prohibited firearm or restricted firearm shall come into force in a province in accordance with an order issued under section 193, unless there is an Act of the legislature of the province that authorizes the possession of a firearm that is not a prohibited firearm or restricted firearm.

(3) An Act of the legislature referred to in subsections (1) and (2) means an Act that is in force on the day this Act is assented to or an Act that comes into force not later than six months after the day this Act is assented to.

(4) Notwithstanding that an Act of the legislature referred to in subsections (1) and (2) is in force in a province, this Act or any of its provisions or any provision of any other Act enacted or amended by this Act as it relates to the registration or possession of a firearm that is not a prohibited firearm or a restricted firearm shall come into force in that province eight years after this Act is assented to.

(5) When the provisions referred to in subsection (1) come into force in a province as a result of the repeal of the Act of the legislature referred to in that subsection or in accordance with subsection (4), every person who, on the coming into force of the provisions of this Act in the province, possesses a firearm that is not a prohibited firearm or a restricted firearm is deemed for the purpose of section 112(1) of this Act and subsections 91(1), 92(1) and 94(1) of the Criminal Code to be the holder of a registration certificate for that firearm for a period of two years.”

Respectfully submitted,

GÉRALD-A. BEAUDOIN
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Beaudoin, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 58(1)(g), report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration later this day.

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. John Sylvain, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, presented the following report:

[Senator Beaudoin]

GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of the constituency of Carleton—Charlotte in the province of New Brunswick, signed by 754 citizens who are asking the Senate to delete in their entirety all of those portions of Bill C-68 dealing with the registration of firearms.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on behalf of 210 Canadians who live in Elgin and Middlesex counties in Ontario, I should like to present a petition asking the Senate not to proceed with Bill C-68.

QUESTION PERIOD

JUSTICE

SALE OF AIRBUS AIRCRAFT TO AIR CANADA— ALLEGED CONSPIRACY TO DEFRAUD FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—APPROVAL FOR LETTER TO SWISS AUTHORITIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in its November 18-20 issue, which was available on Saturday, the Financial Post, in a front-page article, reported, in part, that the Justice Department had asked Switzerland for information to support allegations of, to quote the Justice Department's letter, "criminal activity on the part of a former Prime Minister" of Canada. According to the article, the letter is signed by Kimberly Prost, who is identified as a Justice Department senior counsel.

Honourable senator, I am unaware of any instance where, ever before in the history of this country, a former prime minister has been subjected to such extremely serious allegations. Were it to end there, it would be bad enough. However, the article goes on to say that the letter concludes that there was a "persisting plot/conspiracy by Mr. Mulroney [and others]...who defrauded the Canadian government in the amount of millions of dollars."

If this report is accurate, the letter goes beyond making allegations; it accuses Mr. Mulroney of serious crimes, in obviously carefully selected language.

Such a letter is not an ordinary letter. It is a government-to-government communication. It deals with suspected criminal activities by a former prime minister of Canada. Such a letter is certainly not simply put in the mail and sent on its way. It cannot have simply been signed by a senior bureaucrat in the Justice Department. It must have been approved by higher authorities.

Not only is one individual's reputation at stake, the entire country's reputation is at stake. When a former leader of the government is accused of crimes of such a nature, everyone in the rest of world who has been made aware of this accusation wonders exactly what is happening.

I am very distressed by this incident, as are many other Canadians. I want to know — and Canadians have a right to know — who approved this letter before it went out? When were the Deputy Minister of Justice and the Minister of Justice apprised of it? When did they approve it, and on what basis did they do so?

• (1430)

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as I understand it, the letter in question came about as a result of an investigation undertaken by the RCMP. In turn, the RCMP asked the Department of Justice to forward a letter to other authorities in an attempt to seek further information, which is the normal course in these kinds of procedures.

I wish to inform my honourable friend that in this case, and in others, the minister has not been involved. I repeat, he was not involved in this case, nor was he made aware of the request in this case. When asked about this story on Saturday while he was overseas, the Prime Minister himself indicated that he, too, was unaware of this case.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Honourable senators, I find that to be the most unbelievable answer to any question raised in Parliament since God knows when. I cannot believe that this letter is similar, as this press release tries to point out, to 100 or 150 such letters which are sent out during the course of requests by police departments across the country for information which can only be found in other countries.

I wish to quote from an article in today's Globe and Mail which is found in Quorum. It states in part:

— excerpts from a Swiss Federal Public Prosecutor's Office document —

It is the Swiss authorities who claim:

Director Kimberly Prost, acting on behalf of the Canadian Minister of Justice and Attorney-General —

Are we to accept the fact that a former Prime Minister of Canada can be subjected to such a request? Are we to be told that Kimberly Prost wrote this letter and that no one else in the department at a more senior level than herself saw it? This is a letter written on behalf of the Government of Canada to another government which affects the reputation of a former prime minister of Canada. Are we to believe that no one in this government knows what is going on? Are we to believe that the letter included the following information without the knowledge of anyone in the government, including the Minister of Justice, the Clerk of the Privy Council and the Prime Minister of Canada? The Swiss authorities write as follows:

The investigating authorities assume —

This refers to the Canadian investigating authorities.

— that, from 1988-1991 alone, more than Can. $11-million was transferred in this manner and, if all 34 aircraft had been supplied, the commissions would have totalled about Can. $20-million (possibly U.S.$), 25 per cent of which for the benefit of the accused Mulroney.

Is the Leader of the Government trying to tell us that the senior counsel at the Department of Justice wrote this letter on her own, that the Deputy Minister and the Minister of Justice knew nothing of it and that the Privy Council and the Prime Minister were not advised? Is this what we call the protection of the fundamental rights of Canadians? Shame!

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I will reiterate what I have said for the Leader of the Opposition. I understand my friend's point of view. However, this is a legal process that has been used by governments and by the RCMP over the years. Such a request is passed on internationally, as they have been many times before, through the Department of Justice. Ministers have not been involved in the past, were not involved in this case and, presumably, will not be involved in the future in such matters. Nor are they advised about the substance of these investigations.

Some Hon. Senators: Shame!

Senator Fairbairn: That is the procedure under the laws of Canada. The Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister did not know. That is the process that has been used in our country. It is the process that was used in this case. There was no intervention by a minister. The minister was not involved in the decision-making process of this case.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Honourable senators, by the refusal of the Minister of Justice to accept the responsibility, and by the Prime Minister once again detaching himself from what is going on around him, we can only assume that they gave their tacit approval to this accusation. Unfortunately, it reminds me of when the then Minister of Justice, Lucien Cardin, blurted out a word which turned out to be "Munsinger," and we were launched into the Spence inquiry. It was interesting that at the time, the government was privy to RCMP documents and fully informed, and used that information when it was appropriate to use it for political partisan reasons. I can only think that history is repeating itself today.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, the government was not privy to RCMP information. It was not manipulating RCMP information. It was not intervening in any case that was being carried out under the process of the laws of this country.

SALE OF AIRBUS AIRCRAFT TO AIR CANADA—ALLEGED CONSPIRACY TO DEFRAUD FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—MOTIVATION FOR RCMP INVESTIGATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Over and above all the other matters, the disturbing aspect of this incident is that it appears that actions are being instituted by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and other authorities within government, based on television programs and media reports.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am not, nor should I be, aware of the substance of the RCMP investigation. The RCMP has been undertaking an investigation, obviously, based on whatever information it has. It is not information to which I, the Minister of Justice or the Prime Minister should be privy. It would be totally improper and inappropriate if that were the case.

Senator St. Germain: Honourable senators, I am not referring to whether any minister should be involved in the process of the administration of justice as such. I am referring to the fact that, in a report broadcast yesterday by the CBC, the Prime Minister indicated that this investigation was taking place because of a TV program and a report in the media, and that they were the basis for this investigation proceeding.

Honourable senators, as a politician, I find it disturbing when our good friends at the CBC or some other network decide to put on such a program, when they have erred in so many cases before. They decide to take a run at someone in this place or the other place and, based on their reporting or innuendo, a major investigation is triggered into allegations that are possibly politically motivated, and which may get out of control. That is my concern.

Based on what the Prime Minister said in the interview abroad, I tend to believe that that is the basis upon which this particular incident is going ahead. Could other such instances not take place in this country, affecting members of this place and the other place? I should like the Leader of the Government to comment. It is time that we laid our cards on the table and found out what is going on. If this is a politically motivated activity, then Canadians should know about it.

• (1440)

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I thought I was clear but, obviously, I was not, so I will repeat what I said.

This is not, by any stretch of the imagination or in any way, shape or form, a politically motivated activity.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, Oh!

Senator Fairbairn: My honourable friends may laugh, but this process has been undertaken — I repeat — by the RCMP, using whatever sources of information are available to them. We are not aware of those details. It would be, I suggest, absolutely improper for the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice to be involved in, or to intervene in, any decision-making process involving the kind of investigations undertaken by the RCMP. That absolutely underlines my answer to my honourable friend. This is not, in any way, a politically motivated process.

Senator St. Germain: Honourable senators, the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate is not answering my question.

If there is a witch hunt or a fishing expedition going on, why is it that the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister are not intervening? My question relates directly to a TV program and a media report. According to the Prime Minister, this coverage triggered this particular incident.

I am concerned as a senator, and that concern extends to my colleagues in the other place. I am concerned about our parliamentary system as a whole if we allow people, based on some media report, to conduct a witch hunt or a fishing expedition, or whatever you want to call it, which would trigger an activity which is directed against any parliamentarian. This is reason for concern. It was the Prime Minister who said it was based on the media scenario, not me. That is the question I want answered.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, the question of what motivated the RCMP investigation is known to the RCMP.

Senator St. Germain: The Prime Minister said it on television.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I will be quite prepared to review comments made by the Prime Minister, but the Prime Minister, in his comments abroad, has made it perfectly clear that when this issue arose on the weekend, that was his first knowledge of it.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): It was just like the referendum. He just realized, a few days before, that it was being held. Where does he live, this man? The land of make-believe?

Senator Fairbairn: My friend has used certain rather aggressive words. I am simply saying to him, once again, that this process was carried out through the RCMP. The Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice and other ministers should not — and must not — be part of any kind of manipulation of those kinds of investigations.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: By way of supplementary, the RCMP are an easy target these days. However, the RCMP did not sign the letter; the RCMP did not send the letter. The letter was signed and sent by an official of the Department of Justice on the Department of Justice letterhead.

The RCMP went to the Department of Justice and said: "Look, we think we have something going here. Will you help us find what we hope to find?" The Department of Justice, on behalf of the Government of Canada, said: "Sure, we will have fun here. We will pick on Mulroney again. Let's go for it."

The Minister of Justice knows nothing; the PCO knows nothing; it just involves another 150 requests, as this press release says. It does not matter if you are a drug dealer, an accused serial rapist or if you are known across the world as a counterfeiter or a former prime minister of Canada, everyone should be treated the same. The minister knows nothing. The Prime Minister knows nothing. Nobody knows anything. Lay it all on the RCMP. I should stop this, because it just gets worse and worse.

Senator Fairbairn: The RCMP is a law enforcement agency in this country with a very high reputation. Again I say the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister should not be involved, and must not be involved, in these issues.

My friend opposite laughs at the news release. In the news release —

Senator Lynch-Staunton: It is so pathetic that I think it was written by Robert Nixon.

Senator Fairbairn: The process of this kind of investigation was clearly set out in the news release, as was the comment that the minister is not informed of these requests, and was not made aware of the request in this case.

RCMP INVESTIGATIVE PROCEDURES—REQUEST FOR PARTICULARS

Hon. Pierre Claude Nolin: Honourable senators, the Honourable Leader of the Government is referring to a longstanding procedure.

Would it be possible for you to transmit to us the specific text of this procedure so that we might be in a position to judge whether it has, indeed, been properly followed?

[English]

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the process was carried out, as I am advised, in accordance with the law and the rules of procedure that have governed that sort of process for many years. I will certainly convey my honourable friend's request, but this is not a new process. It is not a new way of dealing with these kinds of issues.

What would be extraordinarily new and inappropriate is if the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister of Canada were involved in this in any way. That would be improper.

[Translation]

Senator Nolin: Honourable senators, from the response of the Leader of the Government, I take it that even if it is an old procedure, it is surely written down somewhere —

Senator Gauthier: It is given in the Constitution.

Senator Nolin: No, it is not a constitutional question, but a question of the rules and procedures followed by the Department of Justice.

I would ask the Leader of the Government to provide us with the precise text according to which this Department of Justice employee acted, as well as the authority under which she acted, and the procedure she followed.

LAW—REQUEST FOR CONFIRMATION

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow: Further on this subject, I would like verification of the fact, although you have already done so, that no one in this country is above the law. It should be of no consequence if that person is a member of the Senate, the House of Commons, a former prime minister, or holds any rank held by any of the other people mentioned in the releases we are discussing.

I do believe — and I hope the Leader of the Government in the Senate is confirming — that, where any action is taken regarding any citizen, whether he be a former prime minister or otherwise, there should be no interference in that process. I am asking for confirmation that, regardless of one's position, no one in this country is above the law.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would be pleased to confirm that to my honourable friend. That underlines the very reason why no one, no matter how high their position, whether a minister of Justice or a prime minister, would be able to in any way influence or interfere in this kind of a process.

Hon. Eric Arthur Berntson (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate indicate how many of the 100 to 150 such requests that are made each year are made public?

• (1450)

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): To my honourable friend, I have no idea as to the classification of this information. Obviously, no matter who it touches, this is expected to be a confidential exchange of information. In any event, I cannot answer my honourable friend's question about the 100 to 150 requests, nor do I have the knowledge to judge whether or not that is an appropriate question.

Senator Berntson: Honourable senators, I notice that there was no paragraph in the press release deploring the fact that this particular request, out of a total of 100 to 150, was made public. Has there been any internal investigation to discover why this particular request was made public?

Senator Fairbairn: I would be pleased to follow up on that question.

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Before I ask my question, I would also suggest to the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate that if she can obtain an answer to my honourable friend's first question, it would be very informative for all of us. That is: Of the number of requests dealt with on an annual basis, how many are made public? I would like to have that information.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Only when it suits them.

SALE OF AIRBUS AIRCRAFT TO AIR CANADA—ALLEGED

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTER TO SWISS AUTHORITIES

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: Honourable senators, one is tempted to ask the Leader of the Government whether she might care to urge upon her colleagues in cabinet, particularly the Minister of Justice, that this particular letter be tabled so that Canadians might understand our concern with maintaining the very clear idea of what is an investigation and what is an outright accusation: an accusation for which I join with my leader in ascribing shame to each and every one of the members on the opposite side of this chamber.

Is there any possibility of having that letter tabled?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): I cannot answer that question, Senator Forrestall. I will take it as —

Senator Forrestall: Will the Leader of the Government take the earliest possible opportunity to ascertain whether or not it is possible to have this letter made available? After all, it has been made available to the world.

Senator Fairbairn: I will take the senator's question as notice.

FEDERAL COURT OF CANADA

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: As reported in the November 7 edition of The Globe and Mail, the Federal Court of Canada declared that it was unconstitutional to deport someone who holds membership in an organization that is likely to engage in terrorist acts. This was an issue relating to a Mr. Issam Yamani, a Palestinian who was alleged to have been a member of the PLO.

Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us what is the position of the Government of Canada on this issue?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): I regret, honourable senators, that I do not have sufficient background on that question. However, I would be pleased to obtain an answer for my honourable friend.

Senator Di Nino: Honourable senators, this is a serious issue. It is the kind of action which I believe weakens the tolerance of Canadians towards immigration.

Would the minister please also determine whether or not the Government of Canada is prepared to appeal this ruling to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Senator Fairbairn: I will seek information on that aspect as well, honourable senators.

ELECTIONS CANADA

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT PROCESS— EXTENSION OF DEADLINE—REQUEST FOR PARTICULARS

Hon. Pierre Claude Nolin: Honourable senators, the redistribution of the electoral map and the establishment of new electoral boundaries in Canada is drawing to a close. Some members have argued about the boundaries of their own ridings. We know that the present law provides for this process. The House of Commons decided to delay the deadline for considering and tabling its report with the Speaker of the House of Commons.

Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us the exact date the Speaker of the House of Commons will be given the final report?

[English]

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): I must tell my honourable friend Senator Nolin that I cannot answer that question in terms of the specific date, but I will speak with my colleagues on the other side with respect to this matter.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary on the same subject.

We know that the Senate was given assurances that the report would be tabled as scheduled. Members had until October 19 to make presentations, consider various aspects and ask the Speaker of the House of Commons to transmit their report to the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada. The Chief Electoral Officer would then transmit the report to the various commissions which had 30 days to respond.

It is now November 20, and the Commons committee is still considering these reports from the provinces. They asked the House for an extension and they were given an extension. My question is as follows: How many more extensions will they need to finish consideration of this bill?

The Senate was given the assurance that there was a definite time frame, but so far none of the deadlines have been met. We are to vote on your motion to the effect that the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be instructed to submit its final report to the Senate.

Meanwhile, all they have been doing in the House of Commons is to ask for postponements. This very straightforward process is costing taxpayers nearly $6 million. Of course this is not a speech but a question.

Could you give us some assurances tomorrow, before we vote on the motion? I do not want a written answer. I would like to have an oral answer here in the Senate. How much longer will the committee of the House of Commons postpone tabling its report?

[English]

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, obviously the area for which we have responsibility here is the progress of Bill C-69, which is currently before the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. Tomorrow, we will find out whether that committee is as yet ready to report on that bill and place its report before the Senate.

With respect to what is happening in the other place, they are involved in their own procedures. I know only what my honourable friend knows at this point: that their process at the moment takes them to November 30, I believe. However, I am not privy to any inside information from the other place.

Senator Prud'homme: This is not inside information. These are public requests.

There is a game now being played between the House of Commons and the Senate. They are asking to postpone something that should have been done a long time ago, in order to wait and see just what will happen to Bill C-69. In my humble estimation, there is no relation between the two. Bill C-69 is one thing, but the due process of law that should have taken place is something else. There is now a game of chicken going on between the House and the Senate to see who will give in first.

• (1500)

I do not think extending the time in the House of Commons on something that should have been completed, in order to see what will happen in the Senate, is conducting the affairs of the country in a proper manner. I hope that the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate will bring to the attention of those responsible in the other place our great displeasure at this move.

We understand the game being played. We are not fools. We know a game is being played between the two houses. It is not in the best interests of those of us who believe that we should defend, in a very strict way, the money being spent at the moment, and the money that would be spent if we were to pass Bill C-69.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, my primary concern is to see that this house and its committees do their jobs. That is what we are in the process of doing. Unlike my honourable friend, I will not characterize the activity of people in the other place one way or the other. They are operating within their area of authority; we are operating within ours. I hope we will do a good job.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a response to a question raised in the Senate on October 17, 1995, by the Honourable Senator ForreSTALL regarding the merger of the Canadian Coast Guard with the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

TRANSPORT

MERGER OF CANADIAN COAST GUARD WITH DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND OCEANS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. J. Michael ForreSTALL on October 17, 1995)

These reports are not accurate.

The speculation in the press regarding the elimination of some 150 shipboard jobs and 24 vessels from the service and the closure of the Coast Guard base in Dartmouth is based on a study completed in the fall of 1994 that examined options to have the Coast Guard and Fisheries and Oceans fleets operate within a more independent organization. The results of these studies were overtaken by events such as the Program Review and the announcement in the February 1995 Budget Statement that the Canadian Coast Guard would merge with the Department of Fisheries and Oceans (DFO). Copies of the studies are available upon request.

The only reductions affecting the Coast Guard continue to be the ones that were planned before the merger. To summarize, these reductions are: $32 Million based on restructuring and reengineering (e.g. Lightstations, Marine Communications and Traffic Services, EL/INM Integration, Shop/Base Maintenance); $30 Million in Levels of Service reductions (e.g. Dredging, Aids to Navigation Standards); $25 Million for CCG Fleet Integration (e.g. Best Practices, Seasonalization).

At this time there are two studies underway that are examining our facilities and ships. The Facility Rationalization study is examining all existing bases and locations where the combined fleet could be best supported. The Fleet Integration Study is examining the total DFO program requirement and the complete fleet needed to deliver the programs. The results of these studies are expected over the winter.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

FIREARMS BILL

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE— DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Sixteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented in the Senate earlier today.

Hon. Gérald-A. Beaudoin: Honourable senators, after conducting several weeks of public hearings, listening to more than 160 witnesses, examining more than 1,300 briefs and listening to a presentation by the Minister of Justice at the beginning and conclusion of our public hearings, today the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has tabled its report and proposes the following amendments to Bill C-68.

A number of questions were raised about the process for consulting with aboriginal peoples. A majority of committee members believes that Bill C-68 should not come into force before sufficient consultation with aboriginal peoples, in accordance with their treaties and the relevant provisions in the Constitution.

This majority also recommends that the coming into force of Bill C-68 should be at the discretion of each province; this option comes with a maximum extension of two additional years, after which the bill would automatically become law in the provinces that took advantage of the option. This amendment was the result of a joint presentation made before the committee last September by witnesses representing Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Yukon and the Northwest Territories in which they mentioned the various reasons why Bill C-68 would be difficult to enforce.

[English]

This is why a majority of members of the committee have proposed an amendment that we may designate as the "opting-in" formula. Through an act of its legislature, any province or territory would be able to delay the start of the implementation of the licensing and registration scheme with respect to shotguns and rifles for up to eight years. However, all provisions of the legislation would be fully enforced in all provinces and territories within 10 years.

[Translation]

As for the draft regulations, we propose that the Minister of Justice take a more traditional approach by tabling the draft regulations at least 30 sitting days before their effective date so that public hearings can be held, if necessary.

Another amendment is aimed at deleting the words "in the opinion of the Governor in Council" in subclause 117.15(2). Otherwise, the minister could add firearms to the list of prohibited weapons, and this decision would not be reviewable by the courts. In fact, the Canadian courts have said many times that their opinions cannot replace those of the minister, that is to say, of the Governor in Council. One way of allowing the courts to review the minister's decisions is to delete the words "in the opinion of the Governor in Council" in subclause 117.15(2) of Bill C-68.

[English]

The majority of the members of the committee are of the opinion that the registration system of firearms should not be criminalized. An amendment would transfer to the actual Firearms Act part of the offences related to the possession of firearms. The potential penalties and consequences for these administrative offences, as presently set out in Bill C-68, are, in their opinion, excessive when compared to similar offences related to motor vehicles and driving licences.

[Translation]

The minimum prison terms provided in clause 92(3) of Bill C-68 were discussed. Every person who possesses a prohibited or restricted weapon, knowing that he or she does not have the proper licence, is liable to a minimum term of imprisonment of one year in the case of a second offence, and of two years less a day in the case of a third offence. A majority of committee members feel that these provisions on minimum punishment are excessive and violate section 12 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Such provisions on minimum punishment prevent judges from using their discretionary power and assessing a penalty based on the circumstances of each case. Moreover, many crimes more serious than those provided for in Bill C-68 are not subject to minimum punishment provisions. This is the case for homicide, attempted murder and dangerous driving resulting in bodily injury. Consequently, the committee proposes that these minimum punishment provisions be eliminated.

A majority of committee members also feel that museums should be exempted from having to pay licence fees. The Canadian Museums Association stated that museums would have to pay more than four million dollars to meet the current requirements of Bill C-68. Under the existing act, museums do not have to pay annual fees. We feel that this should continue to be the case.

Other concerns were raised regarding antique weapons.

[English]

Muzzle-loading firearms, such as muskets and antique collectibles, do not pose a significant threat to society. The proposed section 84(3.1) of Bill C-68 would impose on antiques all the regulatory restrictions for regular firearms. The current law does not contain that requirement.

It would become a criminal offence, for example, to hang a musket on the wall over the fireplace. The committee recommends that this provision be deleted.

[Translation]

It goes without saying that these eight substantive amendments trigger several consequential amendments.

Honourable senators, that is a brief presentation on the amendments proposed by the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

• (1510)

[English]

Hon. Sharon Carstairs: Honourable senators, as I sat last Thursday in the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs and learned of the way in which senators opposite wanted to amend this legislation, my first reaction was to be absolutely appalled, because this was not sober second thought; this was evisceration. This was taking the blood and guts of a piece of legislation and throwing it out.

As I spent Friday, Saturday and Sunday in contemplation of these amendments, I was filled with deep sadness — sadness for the many victims who have been threatened, harassed, shot and, in far too many instances, killed by illegally owned weapons in this country; sadness for emergency physicians who see the attempted — and all-too-often successful — shootings and suicides; sadness for the police officers who will still not know what weapons are in a home to which they are called during an incident of domestic violence; and sadness for the families of children who are accidentally shot and, in far too many cases, killed.

Honourable senators, in my view, the amendments which have been presented to you today in this report range from the mischievous to the downright dangerous. The report of this committee, as outlined by Senator Beaudoin, contains seven substantive amendments, and I wish to deal with each and every one of those.

I shall begin with the three amendments which I consider to be mischievous. The first deals with the removal of fees for museums, the second with safe storage provisions for antique firearms, and the third with aboriginal peoples. Following that, I shall deal with the amendments which I consider to be dangerous.

First, with regard to the removal of fees for museums, there are 100,000 weapons in museums across this country. Some of them are prohibited; some of them are restricted; some of them are antique. Some of these museums operate for profit; some do not.

The minister made it very clear when he discussed museums that consideration would be given in the regulations to the budgetary limitations imposed upon museums. However we surely must have knowledge and information of what weapons are in those museums. We must assure ourselves of the safe storage of those weapons. We must certainly ensure that a group of individuals with a vast cache of weapons could not decide at some point to declare itself a museum.

Licensing and registration is a simple process. Registration takes place once during the ownership of a weapon by a museum. It is not onerous. The government has even gone so far as to give special consideration to museums with regard to safety courses which are a normal procedure for people handling weapons. In the case of an antique weapons museum, museum workers would only have to be trained in the narrow use of, for example, antique weapons. The government has addressed these very serious issues. I believe that the Senate committee was mischievous to recommend removing fees for museums but not for anyone else.

With regard to safe storage of antique weapons, antique weapons can be deadly weapons. Do you really think that a child of four or five knows the antiquity of a weapon? Do they say, "Gee, this is a 150-year-old weapon so I should not shoot this one"? Of course they do not. It is just as important to keep antique weapons in safe storage as it is to keep any weapon in safe storage. That again, in my view, is a little mischief-making by the other side.

I shall now deal with a more serious amendment, one having to do with aboriginal peoples. Honourable senators, I think we are all concerned that the cultural aspects of the aboriginal way of life be very carefully considered. That is why there is within the legislation a very clear power for the minister which has never existed before. Clause 117(u) of the bill states that very special and unique regulations can be made for aboriginal people, recognizing their culture and their traditions. In addition, there is a non-derogation clause in the legislation which states that the treaties of the aboriginal people must not be derogated by this legislation.

Quite frankly, honourable senators, it was insulting to the Minister of Justice when he appeared before the committee and members of this chamber told him that he had not done that which he clearly has done. He has indicated time after time which groups of aboriginal peoples he has consulted. He provided us with a 10-page list of the aboriginal groups with which either he or his consultative unit has met.

It is true that as a result of some of those consultations not all of the aboriginal people agree with what the minister is going to do, but that does not mean that the minister has not consulted them.

This proposed amendment states that, in the view of this chamber, everything the minister has done up to this point, everything he suggests he will do before the regulations are promulgated, and everything he has said he will do with regard to meeting with aboriginal groups in order that they can study the regulations to determine for themselves whether they are culturally sensitive and make changes to them before they are proclaimed, are of no consequence to some senators opposite. They have decided that there has been no consultation. Honourable senators opposite surely cannot dismiss the evidence before them quite that easily.

However, even if they were to do that, that is not what the aboriginal people who appeared before us wanted. Grand Chief Mercredi said that we have no power to make any regulations or pass any legislation with respect to aboriginal people. The chief of the Cree said, "I have nothing against regulation and licensing. I want to do it myself. I do not want to let the federal government do it." That was his testimony; that was his evidence.

What do you think will be achieved by this amendment demanding that consultation take place when it has already taken place? The only person who can judge whether it has taken place is the Minister of Justice. No one else can make that evaluation; not the aboriginal people.

• (1520)

Senator St. Germain: Can they not make this judgment?

Senator Carstairs: The amendment that you moved, Senator St. Germain, says that in the government's view, full and considered consultation has taken place, and when the government is of the opinion that full and considered consultation has taken place, then the government can proclaim the regulations and, in fact, the legislation. It has nothing to do with our aboriginal people.

What has angered me for so long in terms of our treatment of aboriginal people is that we pretend to do things for them. We say, "We will give you this little bit." We pat them on the back and say, "Come on, everyone, be happy with that." If we are not to do something substantive for the aboriginal people, then let us stop mischief-making. Do it properly or do not do it at all. I believe that, for the first time in history, the minister has done it properly with this legislation. He has engaged in consultation with our aboriginal people.

I wish now to address the other serious changes which this group of senators on the committee chose to introduce. These changes fall into what I call the "dangerous" category. For example, they have moved that under regulatory powers the Minister of Justice will no longer be allowed to list by Order in Council a prohibited weapon until the House of Commons has sat for 30 days. If tomorrow we were to get wind of a cache of weapons that we have never seen in Canada coming across the border, the Minister of Justice has the right to say that they are prohibited weapons. He has had that right since 1968. However, this amendment would take that power away from the minister. For six months, or perhaps even longer because it might be during an election or a summer recess, those weapons would be allowed to circulate in this country. We are talking about prohibited and restricted weapons. That is very dangerous, honourable senators, and not something that I think we should be contemplating in this chamber.

This regulatory-making power is an important power. It is absolutely essential that the Minister of Justice be able to act quickly by Order in Council. That is why such a provision was placed in the legislation in 1968. That is why such a provision was put into Bill C-17. Honourable senators opposite would now strip that power from the Minister of Justice.

Honourable senators, one of the issues that has been very difficult with this legislation is finding the means by which we can have the correct balance between the registration and licensing of long arms and rifles, and the criminal aspect where people fail to register their long arms and rifles. It is a difficult balance to find; no one questions that. That is why the House of Commons' amendment made in June was such a positive one. It said that for the first offence one would be charged by way of summary conviction, if one were clearly not a criminal and did not have criminal intent. Once one has been convicted of a summary charge, then what is one's excuse? What reason can one possibly then give for not knowing what is the law? By virtue of their summary conviction, one has been told what is the law. We would now suggest that, no matter how many long arms or rifles one is found with, the authorities should always proceed by way of summary conviction.

For example, let us say that a cache of weapons is found in the possession of a motorcycle gang. Let us say that it is a bunch of sawed-off long arms. Can they then be charged with anything beyond a summary conviction? Not by virtue of this amendment.

It is appropriate that we find a balance. I believe this bill achieves that balance. Universal licensing and registration will help reduce the smuggling and illegal trafficking of firearms. It will assist the police in criminal investigations. It will help the police to enforce the growing number of prohibition orders by the court and to remove firearms from situations of domestic violence.

However, the legislation must have some teeth. Some honourable senators opposite would yank the teeth right out of the mouth of this particular piece of legislation.

Honourable senators, another dangerous amendment would remove mandatory minimum sentences. There may be a lot of bleeding hearts on the other side but, with the greatest respect, my heart does not bleed for the criminal who is out there with a prohibited weapon. I think that criminal should be given a mandatory sentence. By removing mandatory sentences for the possession of prohibited and restricted weapons, senators opposite have basically invited criminals to pay not the slightest bit of attention to the law. That deterrence factor has been stripped from the legislation by this particular amendment.

The area that concerns me the most is the final one that I will address this afternoon. It is with respect to the opting-out clause available to the provinces. As many of you in this chamber know, as many of you have been in disagreement with me, the Constitution of Canada has been of great interest to me since I studied constitutional law in my undergraduate years. Over the years I have listened to people saying that we have to give more power to the provinces, that we have to make —

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable Senator Carstairs, I regret to interrupt you, but your time has expired.

Senator Carstairs: Honourable senators, I ask leave to finish my remarks.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Carstairs: I thank honourable senators.

In terms of provincial opting-out, this is a serious issue. I have never heard anywhere in this country a desire from the Canadian people that responsibility for the Criminal Code be split between the provinces and the federal government. If we have one sense of identity, surely it is the power of criminal justice at the federal government level. Yet, for a period of two years, this amendment will give provinces the right to decide what falls under the provisions of the Criminal Code in their province and what does not.

Can honourable senators imagine the difficulties that there might be during that period of time? I should like to provide a couple of examples in that regard. What happens when someone crosses the border between Canada and the United States? Does the customs officer say, "Are you entering a province that has opted out or are you entering a province that has opted in?"

Senator Berntson: Or, "Are you going hunting?", in which case it does not matter.

Senator Carstairs: How do you make it enforceable or workable? There is also a serious question as to whether or not it is in direct conflict with the Charter because some of the penalties for those who choose to opt in are different from the penalties for those who choose to opt out. Where is equality before the law if you can give one penalty in one province that has opted in and another penalty in another province that has opted out? Surely we are not serious about wanting to have two different criminal codes in Canada.

The proposed amendment actually suggests that the province have constitutional authority to pass criminal law. That is contrary to the Constitution Act, 1867. It is our duty as senators to amend legislation if we think we can improve it. If these amendments improved the legislation, yes, they would need to be given serious consideration. However, I do not believe they do.

I ask you, honourable senators, to think about what this unamended bill was intended to do. The bill was to protect children so that they do not have access to their parents' hunting rifle and accidentally shoot themselves, or, indeed, someone else. The bill was to protect women, women who are more often shot and killed by a spouse or someone they know than by a stranger. There are 48,000 prohibition orders in Canada, and this bill was introduced so that we could enforce them. This bill is also to protect police officers. With registration, stiffer sentences, and the smuggling provisions of this act, they will be able to do their job better while at the same time having better protection for their own personal safety. This bill sends a message to all who would own firearms in this country that the ownership of a firearm carries with it a responsibility, and that misuse of it is to be subject to a penalty.

This bill is supported by trauma doctors, by crime prevention experts, by suicide prevention experts, by victims' groups, and by a vast majority of Canadians. All of these groups have asked for speedy passage of this bill. They have asked senators not to delay this bill — not to put it into the mill once again where it may or may not see the light of day. They want this legislation, they want it now, and they want it without amendments.

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: I have a question for the honourable senator. Did I understand the honourable senator to say that if the government says it has consulted, that is the end of it and it does not matter what the aboriginal peoples have to say? If that is what she said, heaven forbid. If the country is run in that manner, it would be anarchy at its highest level. That is basically what the senator said. Does she wish to retract that statement?

Senator Carstairs: Honourable senators, that is what their amendment does. Their amendment says that if, in the minister's view, full and considered consultation has taken place, that is it. You put that, sir, in the amendment. It was your amendment which stated that the only person who would make that evaluation of full and considered consultation would be the Minister of Justice. I do not think that is good enough.

Senator St. Germain: Perhaps, the honourable senator will present an amendment which will deal with the concerns of the native peoples and not allow this to proceed. I also believe that this is constitutionally flawed and that it creates an egregious situation which we will impose on our native communities. If the honourable senator shares that view, then she should move an amendment which will deal with the constitutional rights of our aboriginal people.

If there is anything wrong with this legislation, it is to be found in the manner in which we have dealt with our aboriginal peoples. Having travelled in the north as I have, the honourable senator is well aware of that. I compliment her on taking that one step further, something which many of our other colleagues never did. I do not mean to be critical, because possibly they never had the chance, but it would have been most educational and enlightening had they done so. They may have understood the importance of this aspect of the legislation in dealing with our aboriginal peoples, and how it fails to deal with their situation as far as constitutional rights, treaty rights, and agreements are concerned.

Senator Carstairs: I am presuming that the honourable senator asked a question. Let me respond in the following way: Yes, I did meet with aboriginal people. I went into their hunting camps. The greatest concern they reflected to me was the need to make the regulations culturally sensitive to their needs. That is absolutely essential. It was for that reason I tried to introduce a recommendation to this legislation last week which reflected their concerns about how this bill would be implemented.

Hon. Ron Gitter: Honourable senators, I suppose there is always another side to an analysis of legislation, and I suppose what Senator Carstairs has just referred to in this chamber shows the complexity of this legislation and how difficult it is for legislators, lawyers, and experts to understand it, let alone the average individual on the streets of Canada.

As I rise to present my comments, I do so knowing that this bill presents some unusual challenges to all of us. We all wish our streets to be safer. We all wish for a society rid of domestic violence and suicide. We abhor the use of weaponry of any kind which destroys families, harms our citizens, and creates fear in the minds of Canadians. The question is how best to achieve those ends and how best to apply our limited financial resources to control the use of firearms in order to bring a sense of comfort back to Canadians, particularly in urban Canada.

I wish to preface my remarks with respect to this bill against the backdrop of tensions which exist in Canada today that, in my view, must be kept in mind when examining Bill C-68. These are very treacherous times for Canada. Our nationhood is at risk. Our leaders are groping for solutions that will keep our nation strong and maintain its survival; solutions which will recognize the great variances that exist in a geography with the demographics that lie within our borders; solutions that to this point have evaded us. These solutions must be found. We all recognize the fact that time is running out.

Leading up to the referendum on October 30, the federal government, through our Prime Minister, seemed to offer Quebec the right to a distinct and special society, along with the right to veto constitutional changes that affect their powers. These overtures were not exactly received favourably in many regions of Canada, and these attitudes will be not be easily overcome. The splits run deep; so deep that, when the premiers met after the referendum, one word seemed to reverberate across Canada, and that was "decentralization."

I do not believe we should embark on decentralization merely for its own sake, but there are areas where we must recognize and give scope to regional differences. We must respect them and use them as the cornerstone for refiguring this great nation. Whatever the solutions may be, we must all work to find them. There can be little doubt that if this nation is to survive, new arrangements must be undertaken which will overcome the tensions that have for too long been part of the Canadian psyche.

It is time for our leaders to stick up for Canada, its variances, its great history, its wonderful vistas, its mannerisms, its pioneering spirit, the recognition of our differences, our compassion, our freedoms, and our willingness to recognize a variety of aspirations, accommodate them, and work in a spirit of goodwill and cooperation.

Honourable senators, you might well ask what this has to do with Bill C-68, the bill which is before us, and I say, "everything." This bill is a microcosm of what is wrong with federal-provincial relations in our nation and what is missing in the treatment of our first nations peoples. We have before us today a piece of legislation that is bitterly opposed by the very jurisdictions that are obliged to implement, enforce, and even pay for it. In a totally unprecedented action, the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, the two territories, and separately, Ontario, came to us with, in the majority of the cases, a totally unanimous agreement in their legislatures and told us of their opposition to a number of elements in this bill.

In a joint submission of Alberta, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, we were told:

We are convinced that the dedication of large amounts of scarce public resources to initiatives of questionable value, on the scale proposed, is not the best use of the public purse.

• (1540)

Then they added:

The administrative burden the universal licensing and registration systems will impose upon our police services and affected provincial/territorial departments is contrary to the public interest.

The Solicitor General and Minister of Corrections of the province of Ontario stated before the committee that the amount of money that he has available to deal with serious crime, to deal with real gun control, to create real safety on our streets, will be wasted if applied to a universal registration system.

The leader of the Liberal party in British Columbia — probably, we understand, the next premier of that province — sent us a letter through a candidate in the next election to tell us that the Senate should set aside the universal registration proposals so that the positive aspects of the bill can proceed "...untarnished by the inadequacies of the bill that attack individual rights, cost millions of dollars and create only illusions of public safety."

From all the correspondence I have received, and notwithstanding the full court press that has been put on us and on Canadians by the Department of Justice and the minister, nothing could be clearer than the fact that the people directly involved, namely, the four million gun owners, are bitterly opposed to this bill. We now have the scenario in Canada where the citizens who are directly affected by this bill, and the governments that must implement, enforce and pay for it, are all opposed to it.

How well I remember an old law professor of mine who suggested that laws that are not followed by those who are directly affected by them, and those who have the obligation to enforce them, are bad laws because they will not be respected and they will bring law into chaos.

Last week, the Minister of Justice came before the Senate committee to charm us. I asked him, first, considering the divisions that we have in this country, and, second, considering that the Minister of Justice is an individual who has been appointed by the Prime Minister to sit on a committee to advise Canadians about the new Canada and the new approaches we must take to keep us together, would he consider amendments that would bridge the gap and take into serious consideration the positions of our aboriginal peoples and the many jurisdictions that are opposed to the bill. I suggested that these amendments would neither ruin the registration system nor in any way take away from it, but would help overcome the divisiveness that is being created in this country at a time when we should be trying to bring people together. I said, "Will you consider such amendments, Mr. Minister?" He had not even seen the amendments when he said: "No. It is my way or the highway", and left that room and went on television across the country saying, "I do not need amendments. My way is the way. I know how to do it."

Let me say, Your Honour, that this minister does great disservice to this country if he thinks that he will succeed with his legislation by jamming it down people's throats. In the best tradition of the Canadian Senate, where better can we conduct a process to try to bridge the gap and the division this legislation is causing to bring the country together and create understanding? That does not take major amendments. That takes an element of harmony, of compromise and of understanding. That is a process that will bring us together, not move us farther apart, which is what is happening now.

How in the world can we ever build a great nation? How can we ever reconstruct the great vision of a Confederation created for all our peoples when the Government of Canada is acting as the sole and supreme body, ignoring the views of its partners in Confederation? It will not work. With such attitudes, I hold little hope for Canada.

Whether or not one supports the legislation, there is no justification for such actions. I say to the government: Either show us some leadership, some understanding of our regions, some open mindedness and, yes, some humility, or this nation has no hope to find the solutions necessary to bring us together.

I want to take a few moments to explain the seven substantive, supposedly dangerous and mischievous amendments that are contained in the package before us today for consideration.

I will leave the value of the registration of arms aside. I will not deal with that because that is not before us. I want to deal in terms of these amendments and the impressions that this legislation has left as we travelled this country. Many honourable senators had the occasion, as did I, to travel to the west, to Whitehorse and Kamloops, and talk to people to get their views. It was quite an experience. I invite all senators to do so, not only from a learning point of view but because of the image it creates for a Senate that is willing to listen and not hide in Ottawa in this chamber.

What am I to think of legislation that I believe to be unconstitutional with respect to our First Nations peoples and that contravenes express provisions in treaties? What am I to think of legislation that creates criminals out of law-abiding citizens by Orders in Council that are issued behind closed doors, that do not have to be placed before Parliament for consideration? What am I to think of legislation that confiscates the property of law-abiding citizens without compensation?

What am I to think of legislation that allows the police or appointed inspectors to enter upon private property without a warrant and confiscate property? What am I to think of legislation that criminalizes Canadians for the failure to apply for a mere licence and then imposes penalties that contain mandatory minimum sentences that are more severe than the imprisonment penalties for rape, manslaughter, and all the serious, vicious crimes that, sadly, we have in our society?

What am I to think of legislation that forces antique owners to remove their collections from Canada and, in the process, to remove some of our history with them, and that taxes our museums for $4 million, which they do not have, for unwarranted procedures that have no reasonable application to this legislation? What am I to think of legislation that forces tourism in many important areas in many of our regions to die because of regulations that are not applicable?

Finally, what am I to think of legislation that forces our provinces to engage bitterly in a dangerous confrontation with the Government of Canada?

Would you not agree that such legislation should at least be examined? Would you not agree that the Senate, acting in our tradition, must endeavour to bridge the gap of the perception that exists throughout many regions of this country towards this legislation? Surely we have that obligation.

Let me deal with a couple of the amendments. My time is short but there are a few, and there must be a response to the comments Senator Carstairs made so that there can be some understanding of this legislation.

Let us talk about our aboriginals. Let us talk about their agreements that are being forgotten. Let us not just glibly say that we are being mischievous when we are concerned with our aboriginal people, and when our committee heard from three noted authorities on constitutional matters. I quote Ian Binnie, who, in conclusion, having examined the legislation, said:

Having regard to the foregoing, it is our view that some of the provisions of Bill C-68 in their present form would infringe the treaty and aboriginal rights of Yukon Indians, and that the federal government would not, at present, be able to justify the infringement. If this conclusion is correct, the result would be that the offending provisions would be inoperative in relation to Yukon aboriginal peoples and to the firearms and ammunition used in their exercise of constitutionally-recognized aboriginal rights.

Mr. Binnie said in his presentation that the federal government has a requirement by agreement to consult with the aboriginal peoples. "Consultation" is not just some word you take out of the sky. "Consult" or "Consultation" is defined in the agreement to mean:

(a) to the party to be consulted, notice of a matter to be decided in sufficient form and detail to allow that party to prepare its views on the matter;

(b) a reasonable period of time in which the party to be consulted may prepare its views on the matter, and an opportunity to present such views to the party obliged to consult; and

(c) full and fair consideration by the party obliged to consult of any views presented.

I asked the minister, "Did you do these things?" He did not answer the question and moved on to something else, because he did not do any of these things.

We then have Senator Carstairs and the minister coming before us and saying that he consulted. Of course, he did. He sent out 600 letters. That is "consulting." I travelled to a few locations. Our little committee that travelled to Alberta talked to some of the Treaty 7 people. We asked them, "Were you ever consulted?" They never even received a letter, let alone consultation. They have no understanding of what is occurring. They came to us grievously speaking about the impairment of their treaty rights and grievously speaking about their hunting privileges and how the bill will affect their rights to basic survival. They say that the federal government does not give a darn — their language was stronger — about us. The more I look at this legislation, the more I think that that is true.

• (1550)

Are we being asked in this Senate chamber to accept legislation which we know is not constitutional, which will force the aboriginal people to go to court, as they have told us they will, and which will leave a cloud hanging over their heads for seven to ten years while this goes all the way to the Supreme Court of Canada, not to mention the costs they will be forced to incur? That is what will happen because there has been no consultation.

Not only Mr. Binnie says that that is so; Ms Turpel also says that that is so. Another authority gave a lengthy opinion expressing the same view. The government has not done the consultation and it is not dealing with the aboriginal peoples in accordance with its responsibilities. That is totally inappropriate.

I shall talk about delayed implementation for a moment. This is a very important amendment. I am not sure whether my friend Senator Carstairs put this into the dangerous or the mischievous category. This amendment was recommended to us by various justice ministers in all seriousness after spending months examining the issues. I wonder how they would view their relations with Ottawa if I were to tell them that the federal government has said that their recommendations were mischievous or dangerous.

More important, what is the real purport of this amendment? There is great scepticism about this legislation in the provinces. There is a lack of understanding about the costs that will be incurred. We have heard estimates ranging from $85 million to $1 billion. No one seems to have an accurate figure.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senator, I hesitate to interrupt, but Senator Ghitter's time has expired.

Is leave granted to allow Honourable Senator Ghitter to continue?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Ghitter: Thank you, Your Honour, and fellow senators.

Delayed implementation will allow the provinces time to better understand legislation to which they are bitterly opposed. They will not be allowed to opt out of the legislation. The amendment will ensure that they accept the legislation after eight years. The delay will provide the provinces with an opportunity to finalize their financial arrangements with the federal government.

I am sure honourable senators are aware that the provincial governments are still waiting for money from the federal government under Bill C-17. Even before those arrangements have been finalized, we are moving on to something else. We must take into account that such long-term changes as these require long-term solutions.

More important, it will give those provinces which are sceptical an opportunity to see this working. If the Province of Quebec wishes to proceed with the legislation immediately, it may do so, and other provinces will be able to examine the results to determine whether it does work. If it works, the other provinces will also proceed, as they should. If it does not work, we can find a better way to reduce crime in our society than a registration system the likes of which has not worked anywhere in the world where it has been tried.

Let it be understood that this is not, as Senator Carstairs alleges, an attempt to create criminal law in one province and not in another. It must be understood that this amendment goes hand in hand with the decriminalization amendment. If it is decriminalized, it will not even be in the Criminal Code; rather, it will be in the Firearms Act.

I have a list of eight examples of delayed implementation in Canada. This has been done before with respect to the Criminal Code, the Young Offenders Act and the Referendum Act. This is not unprecedented. It has been done, and it has worked. It has worked because it recognizes that ours is a large country. It recognizes that laws for urban Toronto must be very different from those for Whitehorse. It recognizes that Alberta is different from urban Toronto. It recognizes that sometimes you must phase in measures such as this in order that people can become aware and knowledgeable of them and slowly accept them. We must not impose such measures on our native friends. We must give them time to accept them, to work out the regulations, to implement the legislation, and to trust the government.

This is "trust me" legislation. The Minister of Justice has said to Canadians, "Trust me in the regulations. Trust me to do it behind closed doors by Order in Council. Trust me to amend the Criminal Code by Orders in Council, which need never be laid before Parliament, to create a new class of criminal. Trust me, Canada. Trust me, aboriginal people. I will give you a wonderful set of regulations which you will love. Please trust me."

We have learned the hard way that trust does not exist today. We have learned the hard way, through the grief which our past Prime Minister is being put through. We should trust these people? We do not have to trust these people. This must be put in legislation. We do not govern Canada by regulation. We govern Canada by statute and legislation.

In conclusion, these amendments are not recommended facetiously. These amendments are not dangerous. These amendments are not mischievous. These amendments are necessary approaches which must be taken to create wholeness and harmony in our country. We must recognize that when the justice ministers come to us and tell us of their concerns, they do not do it to be mischievous or dangerous; they do it out of a deep concern that the laws of Canada will fall into disrepute, and that the laws of Canada will appear to many Canadians to be inappropriate to the needs of their regions. The least that the Senate can do is try to bridge that gap in order to bring Canadians together, rather than creating another wedge which divides us at a time when we cannot afford to be divided more than we are.

Senator Carstairs: Honourable senators, may I ask Senator Ghitter a couple of questions?

He made a statement to the effect that weapons had been confiscated without compensation. Can he give the Senate any specific examples of a weapon being prohibited without either the paying of compensation or the grandfathering of that weapon?

Senator Ghitter: Honourable senators, under this legislation, by Order in Council the minister can, if he wishes, prohibit certain weapons. If this legislation comes into force, he can confiscate prohibited weapons without compensation. Compensation has been paid for weapons that are presently classed prohibited, but in the future, under grandfathered legislation, there is no obligation to give compensation.

I believe Senator Stratton knows of other examples which he may wish to add.

Hon. Terry Stratton: Although I cannot respond to Senator Carstairs' question, I should like to ask a question of Senator Ghitter.

What happens when an individual legally purchases a long arm which subsequently becomes restricted and thereafter becomes prohibited? That situation has occurred to two individuals who currently reside in Manitoba. They purchased guns legally which subsequently became restricted weapons. They dutifully registered their weapons. Two months later, the RCMP informed them that the weapons were now prohibited, and they were confiscated without compensation. This occurred on two occasions.

Should he wish, I would be glad to provide the pertinent information on that to Senator Ghitter.

• (1600)

Senator Ghitter: I would appreciate that.

The other area I wish to discuss relates to prohibited firearms being inherited by family members. In the event of the death of an owner of a prohibited firearm, that weapon may be passed on down through his or her family. However, when that process ends, that gun is prohibited and must be turned over to the government. Again, no compensation is paid.

Honourable senators, it is a fact that, under this proposed legislation, the government will have the power to confiscate property without compensation. That is hardly the Canadian way, honourable senators.

Senator Carstairs: If Senator Ghitter believes that the provisions for our aboriginal people are so unconstitutional, why did he not introduce an amendment to exempt our aboriginal people? What would be the reaction to that exemption from Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon?

Senator Ghitter: Honourable senators, I do not believe that the aboriginal peoples, our First Nations, or the rest of the population of Canada want to build Canada on the basis of exemptions. Understand, however, that we are not talking about exemptions for our aboriginal peoples as much as we are talking about their treaty rights. We are talking about agreements and rights under which they are protected by the Constitution. It is not a matter of exemption; it is a matter of stating that these people have entitlements by our very Constitution and the agreements which they have entered into with the Government of Canada. I am not coming forward with amendments to exempt them. I do not have to. They are protected by agreements and by section 35 of the Constitution.

Honourable senators, I do not think the aboriginal people of Canada want to be excluded from the mainstream of Canadian life — I think they are begging to become part of it. I do not think that is where the answer lies; the answer lies in that if we are to have this legislation, then the minister has the ability to perfect it. If the minister were operating in a bona fide and honourable way, then all he need do is follow the obligations as set out in the legal precedents and agreements that I have referred to, and truly consult. Do not insult the aboriginal people of this country by sending out a bunch of letters, flying in to the communities and staying for 10 minutes, and saying "I have consulted". Wherever we went and talked to these people, we were told that this is what happened.

Consultation is not saying "hello" and running off; consultation is sitting around a table for however many months, days and hours you have to in order to create agreements. The minister did not do that. There was no consultation.

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, I also have a question for Senator Ghitter.

The opting out formula took me by surprise. It would delay the registration of shotguns and rifles.

I read the transcripts of the committee hearings. Never did I hear any justice minister from the three western provinces or the two territories suggest that they would find acceptable a delay in the registration. I heard them say they did not want registration. I did not hear them say they would accept a delay.

Did I misunderstand, or is there something here that was not brought out before by the ministers?

Senator Ghitter: Honourable senators, I have before me the abbreviated form of the presentation given by the justice ministers of Alberta, Manitoba, the North West Territories and the Yukon. They stated:

However, if a jurisdiction does not want to implement this program, it should be able to refuse to do so. We see no justification for the inflexible approach that the federal government has adopted.

Basically, they wanted the power to opt out entirely.

I then contacted Minister Evans from Alberta, the spokesperson for this group. I told him that I did not think that was acceptable, and that I did not believe any of my colleagues in the Senate believed that any province should opt out. However, I also said that there may be some support to delay implementation if he wanted to consider it.

Minister Evans then sent me a legal brief that spoke in terms of how delayed implementation has been utilized in Canada. It assisted us in drafting the amendment in the sense that it takes into account the type of amendment the provinces would find acceptable. As a result, the amendment before you has been vetted through these jurisdictions and was, basically, prepared by these jurisdictions. I felt that if they were going to delay implementation, they should do so by an act of their legislatures. In this way, the province of Alberta, for example, will have the ability to hear the debate in an open forum. They cannot merely proceed by Order in Council, as seems to be the case in the legislation before us. The provinces accepted that and felt it was useful.

We vetted this through Mr. Phillips in the Yukon. He is fully aware of it. We discussed this with him no later than Sunday. These jurisdictions will accept this measure and they feel that it is a step forward.

I thank the honourable senator for asking this question because it has given me an opportunity to respond to his concerns. I feel that the provinces would be much more comfortable if this amendment were incorporated into the proposed legislation.

What are we doing? We are extending the time limit by two years on a program that does not become effective for eight years in any event. It would be an appropriate way to bring these jurisdictions within our ambit, and the Senate would be doing good work if it were to pass this amendment.

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Did I hear the honourable senator correctly when he suggested that he did not trust the Minister of Justice to keep his undertaking to the Senate with respect to subsequent regulation?

Senator Ghitler: Honourable senators, the minister was talking about the non-derogation clause in the bill and endeavouring to show respect for their point of view regarding the creation of the regulations. The aboriginal peoples told our committee that they do not trust regulations. As a result, they want to see these measures in the legislation.

Honourable senators, I am not saying that I do not trust the minister. Frankly, I do not like the lack of humility we saw last week in our committee. That is personal but, in another sense, I do not have a distrust of the minister. I can tell you, however, that many people in Canada do.

Senator Grafstein: What is the basis upon which the honourable senator raises this issue? Could he point out to the Senate where the Minister of Justice has breached an undertaking to the Senate respecting legislation or regulation? Is there any single instance where this Minister of Justice has breached his undertaking to the Senate or to the people of Canada?

Senator Ghitler: Honourable senators, in my view, the minister breached his undertaking when he said that he had consulted with aboriginal communities. I say he did not. He has an obligation to do so, not only under the Charter but under the very agreements that Canada has entered into. I say he has breached that obligation.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Grafstein: I do not mean to belabour this issue, but that is not exactly what I heard the honourable senator say in the course of his comments.

Senator Berntson: But you agree.

Senator Grafstein: No, I do not agree with the senator's interpretation or with the allegation or interpretation that he cannot trust the undertaking given to the Senate in committee by the Minister of Justice. I cannot accept that. That is unacceptable.

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, Senator Ghitler mentioned that under this legislation museums will be taxed. However, it was pointed out in committee last Thursday that there are no taxes or fees for museums in this legislation. Would the honourable senator be kind enough to direct me to a clause in the proposed legislation where it states that fees will be charged to museums?

Senator Ghitler: I would be happy to find that clause for the honourable senator. Perhaps my friend has not seen the review that was given?

Senator Spivak: I happen to have been there.

Senator Ghitler: We have before us the response of the minister to the amendments. I received it only this morning. In the document prepared by the Department of Justice, it states that they can charge fees. Fees are determined by regulation. It is a matter of whether they will or will not do so.

I would rather see museums exempted than depend on the government to determine whether museums should pay fees.

Senator Spivak: That is exactly my point. There is a series of regulations; under those regulations, fees can be charged. However, I think that there are no fees to museums in this legislation. As a lawyer, I am sure the honourable senator can tell me if I am correct or incorrect in my assessment of the situation.

Senator Ghitler: A former lawyer.

• (1610)

Many members will remember when representatives of museums appeared before the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. They presented a brief that stated that in their estimation this legislation would mean $4 million in fees would be paid by them. We accepted that number which came from their association. I do not recall how they determined that figure, but it certainly sticks in my mind.

Senator Spivak: Senator Ghitter, what is there in this legislation that determines that fees will be charged to museums? You have not answered my question.

Senator Ghitter: The power is there for the government to do it. A document prepared by the Justice Department states that the fees for museums, if any, have not yet been determined; and, once set, will be submitted in regulation form to Parliament for full review. That does not tell me that there will not be any.

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow: Honourable senators, I, too, have a question for Senator Ghitter. When they appeared before the committee the attorneys general stated their opposition to the licensing of firearms. They were most adamant about that in their presentation to the committee.

The honourable senator stated today that the attorneys general were prepared to accept an amendment that would extend the period of time for applying the provisions of the bill. Is there any indication that they have backed off from their stand?

Senator Ghitter: Honourable senators, no. I think they are still very opposed to the registration provisions. They would accept this amendment as the fourth best solution, which I think expresses their point of view, Senator Sparrow.

Hon. Leonard J. Gustafson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Honourable Senator Ghitter. It concerns the implementation of these regulations.

In the hearings which I attended in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Whitehorse, people said, over and over again, that they would not obey this legislation if it passes. I heard that from the chiefs of three different Indian bands. I heard it from farmers, hunters, sportsmen and trappers. They all said, "I will defy the law. I have been a good citizen, but I cannot obey this law." Does the honourable senator think that the government can implement this bill in the way it now stands?

Senator Ghitter: There are offences for which a jail sentence is justified. In other instances, we must look at the offence and consider how serious it is. What we must understand is that 99.75 per cent of gun owners in this country respect guns, and they pose no problem. They, for whatever reason, may look upon this registration system with its criminality and say, "What have I done wrong? Why me?" Others may say, "You just have to fill out a little card and send in $10". I cannot answer what is deep in their psyches, but I know how deeply people feel about this legislation.

I do not think it is necessary to impose criminal penalties upon these individuals, Senator Gustafson. I do not for a moment want to suggest that people should break the laws of Canada, nor would any honourable senator suggest that people should do so.

Senator St. Germain: Honourable senators, my question to Senator Ghitter concerns the question of trust, which I think is key to this whole area. The honourable senator pointed out that the Minister of Justice wants Canadians to trust him on this particular issue.

At the same time, however, the same Minister of Justice has had one of his departmental officials write a letter concerning an international police investigation, yet he is not prepared to answer for the actions of that person.

In our hearings we heard representatives of various aboriginal groups state that their names were listed among the groups consulted by the Minister of Justice. They told us emphatically that they had never been consulted. Some of them said that they had received one of these 600 or so letters, but had never been contacted personally. Yet the minister listed their names as people with whom he had consulted.

In the hearings we conducted, is that not what we heard from the numerous aboriginal groups who came before us?

Senator Ghitter: Honourable senators, I am sad to say that that is the case. We received a list of people who had been consulted. The native people who were named on the list said that they had never had such meetings in which they talked to the minister.

On motion of Senator Roux, debate adjourned.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT BILL, 1995

MOTION TO INSTRUCT LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE TO TABLE FINAL REPORT—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Fairbairn, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Stewart,

That it be an instruction of this House to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs that no later than Wednesday, November 22, 1995, it present its final report to the Senate on the Message from the House of Commons dated June 20, 1995, and on the motion of the Honourable Senator Graham dated June 28, 1995, regarding Bill C-69, An Act to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions and the readjustment of electoral boundaries.

Hon. Sharon Carstairs: Honourable senators, this motion stands in my name. I ask that it remain in my name. However, I would prefer not to give another speech today. I will speak to this matter tomorrow. If any other senator wishes to speak, I would welcome that.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, November 21, 1995

The Senate met at 2:00 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE EMMETT M. HALL

TRIBUTES

Hon. David Tkachuk: Honourable senators, on Wednesday, November 15, 1995, the people of Canada laid to rest Emmett Hall, former Chief Justice of Saskatchewan and Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, who passed away peacefully at the age of 97 on Sunday, November 12, in Saskatoon.

Here was a man for the ages. Born in Saint-Colomban, Quebec in 1898, Emmett Hall distinguished himself as a lawyer. He was called to the bar in Saskatchewan in 1922, served as Chief Justice of Saskatchewan from 1961, and as a Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada from 1962 to 1973.

In 1961, he was appointed by then Prime Minister Diefenbaker to head up the Royal Commission on Health Services in Canada, which, because of its impact on Canadian social policy, became known as the Hall Commission. This blueprint became the basis for health care in Canada.

Emmett Hall received honorary degrees from nine universities across this country. He served as Chairman on the Committee on Aims and Objectives for Education in Ontario. He arbitrated labour disputes on behalf of the federal government between terminal operators and grain handlers on the West Coast. He was a school trustee and a member of the board of St. Paul's Hospital in Saskatoon.

He is remembered as a man who constantly worked, who enjoyed controversy and who served the country and our province with distinction, compassion and the kind of values that we in Canada should all emulate.

He is survived by his daughter, Marion Wedge, his son, Dr. John Hall, 12 grandchildren and eight great grandchildren. To all of them, on behalf of all of you, I extend sympathy and condolences.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

FIREARMS LEGISLATION

Hon. Terry Stratton: Honourable senators, yesterday I asked Senator Ghitter a question concerning the confiscation of firearms. I stated at that time that I would provide the Senate with information regarding individuals who had had firearms confiscated without compensation.

The information is as follows: Tom Ames lost $1,000; Cal Nordham lost $300; Wes Allan lost $25,000 with regard to a firearms collection; Jess Whitcher, a dealer, went bankrupt; Wolverine Supplies lost $2,200; Bruce Tage lost $4,000; Tom Brown lost $900; John Hipwell lost $2,200; Les Dalhun lost $25,000 with regard to a collection; and Larry Thiessen lost an unknown amount.

GREY CUP

CONGRATULATIONS TO ORGANIZERS

Hon. Leonard J. Gustafson: Honourable senators, I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Province of Saskatchewan and the city of Regina on hosting an outstanding Grey Cup game.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Gustafson: Some have said that it was the best Grey Cup weekend ever. The Province of Saskatchewan and the small city of Regina worked together to produce a tremendous display in that city. Some, however, did express concerns about the weather. Honourable senators, the Canadian Football League is not dead — not at all.

I would congratulate the organizers, the coordinators and the volunteers, all of whom did their jobs so well in hosting 55,000 people in Regina. To have met that challenge would have been an accomplishment at any time.

Senator Berntson: That amounts to about one-third of the city's population.

Senator Gustafson: To everyone involved in coordinating the "huddle-up" in Saskatchewan, I can tell them that it was a pretty good day. They showed Canada and the U.S. our great Saskatchewan hospitality. This Grey Cup will go down in history as one of the best ever.

Congratulations to Calgary for a great game; and to Baltimore for a great win.

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Hon. Rose-Marie Losier-Cool: Honourable senators, I am pleased to speak on an issue about which I am very much concerned.

This year, in October, women's history was celebrated throughout Canada. Women's History Month has been celebrated since 1992 to recognize the past and present contributions of Canadian women.

Keeping in mind the obstacles that these women have overcome in the past, and continue to overcome today, I invite you to promote public awareness during the month of November, which is Violence Against Women Month. As well, on December 6, a day to reflect and promote action to counter violence against women, I urge you to spread the word and to join all those who denounce violence in our communities, particularly violence against women.

[English]

Honourable senators, all Canadians are entitled to a reasonable level of safety. By acknowledging that it is primarily women who use public transportation, walk, or use bicycles to get around, municipal authorities should encourage public transportation officials to develop and implement an individual safety policy that meets women's needs.

Ensuring the safety of women in public places is an important step in the process of making our society safer for women. This must, however, be combined with a determination to respond to the most widespread type of violence against women — family violence.

As mentioned in the report by the city of Winnipeg entitled, "A Safer Winnipeg for Women and Children," it is in their own homes that women and children are most in danger; that is, among people they know.

[Translation]

According to Statistics Canada, 25 per cent of all women have been victims of violent acts on the part of their current partner or of a former partner. A weapon was used by 44 per cent of violent spouses.

Honourable senators, I invite you to denounce all forms of violence against women. As we near the end of November, we must be aware of the scope of that curse and realize that violence against women is not an individual problem, but a collective one.

Canada continues to take the lead by making the issue of violence against women a priority.

Bill C-68, which we are trying to include in Canadian legislation, seeks to put an end to the use of firearms for criminal purposes by establishing new offences and penalties to prohibit certain types of firearms and putting into place a new registration system.

Thus, Canada continues to ensure that future generations of women will feel safer at home, in the workplace and in their leisure activities.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 58(1)(h), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Wednesday, November 22, 1995, at one thirty o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

EVANGELICAL MISSIONARY CHURCH (CANADA WEST DISTRICT)—PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. Leonard J. Gustafson: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present a petition from the Missionary Church and the Evangelical Missionary Church, Canada West District of the city of Calgary in the Province of Alberta praying for the passage of an act to amalgamate the Alberta corporation known as the Missionary Church with the Canada corporation known as the Evangelical Missionary Church, Canada West District.

CANADIAN NATO PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

NORTH ATLANTIC ASSEMBLY—REPORT OF CANADIAN DELEGATION TO ANNUAL SESSION TABLED

Hon. Bill Rompkey: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the tenth report of the Canadian Delegation of the Canadian NATO Parliamentary Association on the Annual Session of NATO Parliamentarians held in Turin, Italy from October 5 to 9, 1995.

CANADA-EUROPE PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

COUNCIL OF EUROPE COMMITTEE ON ECONOMIC AFFAIRS AND DEVELOPMENT, PARIS AND STRASBOURG, FRANCE—
REPORT OF CANADIAN DELEGATION TABLED

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table a report of the Canadian Delegation to the Committee on Economic Affairs and Development of the Council of Europe on the activities of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development and the European Bank for Reconstruction Development held in Paris and Strasbourg, France from June 26 to 28, 1995.

COUNCIL OF EUROPE PARLIAMENTARY ASSEMBLY, STRASBOURG, FRANCE—REPORT OF CANADIAN DELEGATION TABLED

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the report of the Canadian Delegation to the Enlarged Debate of the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly on the activities of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, held in Strasbourg, France on September 27 and 28, 1995.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET
DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 58(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology have power to sit at three o'clock in the afternoon, today, November 21, 1995, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 95(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Senator Doody: Explain.

Senator Bonnell: I wish to thank honourable senators for giving me an opportunity to explain the reason for this motion.

• (1420)

For some reason, Air Canada was flying late this morning. Although our witnesses were scheduled to appear at nine o'clock this morning, we had to wait until eleven o'clock before they were able to attend. We heard them in a brief way, but the committee did not feel it should make any decisions in the two or three minutes remaining.

Honourable senators, we are asking permission to sit this afternoon to discuss Bill C-64, the Employment Equity Bill, and the testimony of our witnesses from this morning, and to make a decision as to our report. We do not want to sit tomorrow because there are more important things happening. If a vote is called, we can always return to ensure that committee members' votes are recorded.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIODNATIONAL FINANCE

REPORT OF AUDITOR GENERAL—LONG-TERM MANAGEMENT OF DEBT AND DEFICIT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Roch Bolduc: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate and deals with the national debt. In last year's report, the Auditor General called for better information about the debt. He said the same thing again in an interim report last October. In this morning's report, the Auditor General says this:

As we pointed out in our October report, we need better information on how short-term deficit forecasts fit into a long-term debt stabilization plan.

He goes on to say:

Furthermore, we should understand the size and repercussions of the federal and provincial governments' debts.

Does the government intend to give us this information regarding long-term debt management?

[English]

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall make inquiries on that question.

[Translation]

Senator Bolduc: Does the government also intend to sit down with provincial representatives, instead of offloading its deficit onto the provinces? Does the government intend to establish a long-term spending plan, so that the short-term debt can fit into a broader framework for the long-term management of Canada's national debt?

[English]

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I will also take that question to my colleagues.

TRANSPORT

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL STRATEGIC HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM—REPORT OF AUDITOR GENERAL ON DIVERSION OF FUNDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gerald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, my question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate is in regards to the report of the Auditor General that was released this morning. In response to concerns raised by our leader, the Honourable Jean Charest, the Auditor General confirmed that there was an apparent abuse of power on the part of those ministers involved in the diversion of $26 million from Highway 104 to the Fleur-de-lis Trail in Nova Scotia. I quote from his report:

... a review would have required that a thorough analysis of the priority, cost, benefits and other merits of the proposed project be presented to the Management Committee before amendments to the agreement were implemented. In this case, however, such a review was pre-empted by ministers who presented the matter as a "fait accompli" to officials who, in the circumstances, could only implement the decision.

With this revelation, what procedures have been put in place to ensure that ministers in the future not be able to manipulate the spending of taxpayers' money for their own political gain?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will not associate my remarks with my colleague's final comment. Ministers of the Crown are constantly exhorted to take the utmost care with expenditures involving taxpayers' money.

Senator Berntson: Clean up your act!

Senator Fairbairn: The specific question vis-à-vis that case has received a full airing in this chamber. I will be pleased to look into my friend's question and obtain an answer for him.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL STRATEGIC HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM—REPORT OF AUDITOR GENERAL ON DIVERSION OF FUNDS—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF PERTINENT DOCUMENTS

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: Honourable senators, I wish to tidy up one or two matters that the Auditor General dealt with in his report.

I turn first to the Fleur-de-lis project. The Auditor General has found, in fact, that it was a federal-provincial initiative, contradicting what the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Public Works had to say, and the Prime Minister himself said on May 24 at a press conference. It would appear that the contradiction has no lasting impact. The direction had been to restore the funding to the program.

We must carry this one step further. It places into some degree of jeopardy the integrity of the public service, which is involved on a day-to-day basis with the management of this type of affair.

So that we might lay this matter to rest, could the minister arrange to have tabled the documents relating specifically to this diversion of funds, the $26 million that went from the Highway 104 program to the Fleur-de-lis Trail?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will communicate Senator Forrestall's question to my colleagues to see whether or not it is possible to fulfil his request.

Concerning the honourable senator's earlier remarks, I must confess that I have not yet been able to examine closely the Auditor General's report. I shall do so as the week progresses.

JUSTICE

SALE OF AIRBUS AIRCRAFT TO AIR CANADA—ALLEGED CONSPIRACY TO DEFRAUD FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—REQUEST FOR APOLOGY TO GOVERNMENT OF SWITZERLAND

Hon. Marjory LeBreton: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Now that we have the full text of the request from the Government of Canada to the Government of Switzerland regarding former Prime Minister Mulroney, whereby information communicated to the Swiss government was presented in a totally misleading fashion, will the Government of Canada, in an effort to restore Canada's good name and reputation, apologize to the Government of Switzerland?

Senator Olson: That does not even deserve a reply!

Senator Berntson: Send them a pack of lies!

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can only respond in line with what I said yesterday. The letter which was transmitted by the Department of Justice to the Swiss authorities was sent on behalf of the RCMP in the process of its investigation. Other events have occurred around this issue. At the moment, that is all I can say.

Senator LeBreton: Honourable senators, is the government condoning the notion that it is proper for one government to misrepresent itself to another?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I will simply say to my honourable friend that the ministers of the Government of Canada —

Senator Berntson: Who did not know anything about this!

Senator Fairbairn: — have not been involved in any way in this matter. They have not been involved in any way in the communication which was transmitted in what is the normal course of such inquiries. Therefore, I cannot respond to the comment made about that letter.

SALE OF AIRBUS AIRCRAFT TO AIR CANADA—ALLEGED CONSPIRACY TO DEFRAUD FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—
KNOWLEDGE OF MINISTER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: Honourable senators, my question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate relates to a statement made by the Minister of Justice and his comment yesterday, that he knew nothing about this situation.

• (1430)

Yet, in broadcasts today, he said that, on November 4, Mr. Tassé approached him and wanted to have certain discussions with regard to this particular incident. Yesterday, one of the senators in this house raised the issue of the trust of the Minister of Justice. This is inconsistent in that, if he did not know anything, how could he make that statement yesterday and then turn around and say on November 4 that he had been approached on the same subject?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the Minister of Justice said quite categorically that he was unaware of the investigation and unaware of the letter being sent.

Senator Doody: Where does he live?

Senator Fairbairn: He was clear that he received a phone call from a lawyer on behalf of his client, asking if he could meet with him to discuss the issue. This is after the fact of the letter, November 4. The Minister of Justice felt that it was inappropriate for him to do so under the circumstances. It was for that reason he did not respond positively to that request.

Senator Berntson: What were the circumstances?

Senator St. Germain: Honourable senators, the question concerns what he did. He did know about it. He indicated reluctantly on television today that he had spoken to Mr. Tassé. That is a clear indication that he knew something about the scenario long ago. Yesterday, he made a statement on television that he knew nothing about the particular case. I find it very confusing that the man would say that he knows nothing about this, yet, on November 4, he was phoned regarding the very subject.

I can understand that a Minister of Justice does not want to interfere with the due process of law. However, a letter was written from a ministry of this government to a ministry in another country. Apparently, the minister's department wrote to the Minister of Justice in Switzerland. As a former minister, if a former head of state were involved, I would have found it very surprising if my department had not advised me as to what was happening and that the Prime Minister's Office did not know what was happening. I can understand the police department conducting an investigation, but when one department contacts a like department in another country, I find that to be strange. Perhaps the Leader of the Government in the Senate could clarify this situation today.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, the letter, as I believe my colleague has indicated, was not communicated by the Minister of Justice. It was communicated by the Department of Justice —

Senator Doody: For which the minister is not responsible.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: It is the same letterhead.

Senator Fairbairn: — which, traditionally, is the agency or the courier which transmits to another country the request from the RCMP or other police organizations. That is what it has done.

Senator Carney: Indefensible!

Senator Fairbairn: It is not appropriate for the Minister of Justice, for the Prime Minister or for the Solicitor General, in any way, shape or form, to be involved or knowledgeable about the substance and the internal workings of that type of investigation. There is absolutely no way in which the Minister of Justice should be involved in any kind of intervention process or decision-making process in this kind of circumstance. If the Minister of Justice had been involved, it would be conceded by members of this house to be inappropriate.

Senator Carney: Why did his department leak it?

Senator Fairbairn: That is my answer to the honourable member. I said it yesterday, and again today, and I will continue to say that there should be absolutely no political involvement in this kind of circumstance and this kind of process. The Minister of Justice has been very careful to make that clear in his comments.

Senator St. Germain: Yet, honourable senators, the Minister of Justice assumes full responsibility for what goes on in his department and what has transpired. How can one be responsible if one does not know what is happening? There is an inconsistency here somewhere. There is something wrong in what has transpired. If I am responsible for you, I must know what you are doing, or at least I should know what you are doing. I have the right to know what you are doing.

Senator Graham: The same situation applied to your government.

Senator St. Germain: The minister has clearly stated that he is responsible. There is confusion somewhere because you cannot be responsible for a department and not know what is happening.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, the Department of Justice has a responsibility to carry out its function in this kind of circumstance which, as was said yesterday, occurs on numerous occasions during a year. It carried out its responsibility. It certainly was not the responsibility of the Minister of Justice to be involved in the substance or have knowledge of this type of transaction. Again, it would be inappropriate, and indeed improper, for him to do so.

WESTERN ECONOMIC DIVERSIFICATION CANADA

REPORT OF AUDITOR GENERAL—
MANDATE OF AGENCY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, by way of supplementary, how can the minister reconcile that statement — which I interpret as trying to convince us that the Department of Justice is simply a conduit for the RCMP — with the translation of the letter sent on Department of Justice letterhead? The translation is unofficial. Perhaps the minister, if she does not agree, will give us a correction.

Page 1 of the translation, under the word “Demand,” reads as follows:

The Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada is most kindly asking the Minister of Justice of Switzerland for judicial assistance for the Canadian government in the investigation of breaches of Canadian law.

Nowhere do the letters “RCMP” appear. The demand is made formally by the Department of Justice on behalf of the Minister of Justice.

To suggest that the RCMP approached the Department of Justice and demanded that they sign the letter and mail it is absolute balderdash.

Senator Olson: You know better!

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I do not know that.

Senator Perrault: You had exactly the same guidelines when you were in government.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: We never made accusations against former prime ministers and leaked them in the way that this was leaked.

Senator Olson: Why do you not want the investigation to go forward?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: We do, and so does Mr. Mulroney.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I should stress again that the letter transmitted to the Swiss authorities was a confidential letter. I do not know exactly what my honourable friend is reading from.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I will send you a copy.

Senator Fairbairn: I suggest to honourable senators that the letter transmitted to the Swiss government was a confidential letter. It was treated as such by the Department of Justice. This process has been employed on many occasions with the Swiss government, which has been exemplary in its response to the recommendation.

• (1440)

With respect to the material which appeared to be in the hands of the media, this document has not been seen by the Department of Justice.

Hon. David Tkachuk: Honourable senators, I would return to the mundane topic of the Auditor General’s report.

The Leader of the Government in the Senate may know that the Auditor General has levelled some criticism at the Western Economic Diversification agency in Western Canada. The department’s response was that the Auditor General failed to take into account the fact that Western Diversification’s mandate differs from that of all other regional development agencies in that its primary purpose is to develop and diversify the western economy, while the other regional economic departments must address the question of regional disparity.

I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate: Which one is it? Is WED’s primary mandate to address regional economic disparity, or is it to develop and diversify the western economy?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the very name of the agency indicates that it is to use whatever tools it has to help diversify the economy in Western Canada and, through that diversification, to bring to every region of Western Canada the kind of equal opportunity for economic development which exists everywhere else.

As I understand it, the Auditor General’s report is very clear in its concern about regional differences and regional opportunities in this country. The Government of Canada shares that concern and will continue to use all available resources, such as WED, to assist in development and diversification throughout Western Canada. We want balanced opportunities for every province and every part of every province in Western Canada.

Senator Tkachuk: I have a supplementary question. According to an Access to Information Request made public one week ago, it was revealed that the minister responsible for WED made not one but two different promises and commitments to pay Western Diversification dollars to finance a new hockey arena in Winnipeg.

Under what public policy would such a hockey arena fall? Would a hockey arena fall under “regional disparity” because Winnipeg is perceived by the minister as some sort of destitute part of the country, or would it fall into the area of diversification, joining the thousands of other arenas that we happen to have in Western Canada?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, first, the City of Winnipeg is one of our most vibrant communities not just in Manitoba or Western Canada but in this entire country. When questioning the kinds of improvements that the minister has tried to direct within that province, the answer is that he is attempting to create jobs, to expand opportunity, and to increase the economic base in those communities, including the great city of Winnipeg.

Senator Tkachuk: I agree that Winnipeg is a great city, but now we have a third mandate for WED, which is that of a job creation agency. WED cannot be everything. If its mandate is to diversify the economy, please tell us how the building of an arena in Winnipeg will diversify the economy of Western Canada? If WED is to address regional disparity, how will a hockey arena in Winnipeg address regional disparity?

Senator Fairbairn: The question of economic diversification, wherever it takes place in Canada, carries with it the anticipation that, in the improvement of these economies, groundwork will be laid for greater job opportunities for Canadians. I do not believe there is anything within any of the regional agencies to exclude these kinds of joint responsibilities and joint expectations. The reason for the existence of these regional agencies is to improve the economy, the opportunities, the diversification and the employment opportunities in their areas.

Senator Olson: Does the honourable senator have a clearer understanding of the situation now?

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

FILLING OF VACANT POSITIONS WITHOUT COMPETITION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Pierre Claude Nolin: Further to the answer the Leader of the Government in the Senate just gave my colleague, remember that last week I asked this question: With all those investments in infrastructures, how did your government manage to lose 56,000 jobs in the construction sector? During the election campaign, this government talked a lot about restoring integrity in the Canadian government's operations.

Could the Leader of the Government give this house the assurance that, in the course of its routine business operations, the Canadian International Development Agency does not award contracts without a competition?

[English]

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am not intimately knowledgeable about the regulations governing CIDA, but I will certainly take my honourable friend's question to the minister responsible and bring the answer back.

[Translation]

Senator Nolin: Honourable senators, when the Leader of the Government makes these inquiries, or asks the minister to make them, could she ask him to find out whether any individuals or businesses with a family connection, in other words, cousins, sons or daughters of parliamentarians in your government, were hired on a contract basis, without competition, by the Canadian International Development Agency?

[English]

Senator Fairbairn: I will take that question as notice. If there is any further information which my friend can provide to help the process along, I will be glad to receive it.

[Translation]

Senator Nolin: I will provide this information as soon as I receive a reply from the Leader of the Government.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

REPORT OF LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE ON FIREARMS LEGISLATION—VOTES ON AMENDMENTS— REQUEST FOR ADVICE ON PROCEDURE

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow: Honourable senators, the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on Bill C-68 contains 14 amendments. The amendments and the bill will be considered, I understand, at 5:30 p.m. on Wednesday.

Is there provision for a vote to be held on each of the amendments in the report, or must the amendments all be voted on in one vote?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, that is a question which should be more properly put to His Honour the Speaker.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is not normal for His Honour to answer, but if it will assist the Senate, I will do so.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Doody: Well returned, sir.

The Hon. the Speaker: The question before the Senate is whether the report of the committee is to be adopted or not. Therefore, the question will be put on the whole report and not on individual clauses within that report.

Senator Sparrow: If additional amendments are made to the report in this chamber, will those amendments be considered individually, or will they be lumped in with all the other amendments in one vote?

Senator Doody: They certainly cannot be put to the committee.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, again, do I have leave of the Senate to reply?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: As I understand the procedure, if the vote is at 5:30 p.m., we will be voting on the report of the committee as a whole report. We will then proceed directly to third reading. There will be no interval providing for any other amendments. Sequentially, by the decision of the Senate, I believe that is the procedure.

• (1450)

Senator Sparrow: Honourable senators, I therefore ask His Honour whether it is correct that there is no provision for an individual senator to move an amendment to the report that will be voted on separately; or no provision for an individual senator to move an amendment to the bill itself.

The Hon. the Speaker: Amendments to the report may be proposed. What is before the Senate is the report of the committee.

Senator Sparrow: Your Honour, that was not the question. Due to the fact that Bill C-68 is not before the chamber at this time, is there any provision for a senator to move an amendment to the bill and have that amendment considered and voted on by the Senate as a whole?

The Hon. the Speaker: That can be done by proposing an amendment to the report.

Senator Sparrow: Does Your Honour mean to say, "not to Bill C-68 itself"?

The Hon. the Speaker: Essentially, what is before the Senate is the bill which is being reported from the committee, with amendments. Further amendments can be proposed to that report.

Senator Sparrow: Normally, at the third reading stage of a bill, a senator has the privilege of moving an amendment. Has that right been removed from honourable senators as a result of the original vote in the Senate?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Yes.

Senator Sparrow: Therefore, we do not have the right to move an amendment to Bill C-68.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the Senate has agreed that the vote will be held at 5:30 p.m. tomorrow, and that all matters would be disposed of then, which means that third reading will follow immediately. However, nothing prevents any senator from proposing an amendment to the report, which will have the same effect as proposing an amendment to the bill.

Senator Sparrow: Your Honour, it is not normal procedure that we have no opportunity to amend Bill C-68. Your Honour is saying that there is provision for amending the report, which does not amend the bill itself.

The Hon. the Speaker: It does because the report amends the bill. Any further amendments will further amend the bill.

However, I do not think that we should proceed to discuss this matter here in the chamber during Question Period. Perhaps the honourable senator and I could have a discussion later.

SOLICITOR GENERAL

EFFICACY OF SECURITY ARRANGEMENTS AT RESIDENCE OF PRIME MINISTER—REQUEST FOR RESULTS OF INVESTIGATION

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Perhaps I am being a little paranoid here, but the responses received to the inquiries of my colleagues on this dastardly deed dealing with a previous prime minister are merely a pointing of fingers at the RCMP. In effect, the government is saying, "The RCMP is at fault. They are the ones who are to blame if any blame is to be placed."

This brings me to another incident which has been discussed in this chamber, namely, the unfortunate incident of the break-in at the Prime Minister's residence. In regard to that matter, we are being told that the RCMP is at fault and that we will hang them because they have made all kinds of mistakes.

Because of the effect this will have on the morale of the RCMP — and, unfortunately, I think it is happening too often across the country to other police forces as well — could the minister find out for us whether the alarm system was really not functioning or whether it was turned off? If it was turned off, who turned it off? Also, were there other remedies available to the Prime Minister and Mrs. Chrétien to call upon the services of police forces that they may not have used?

I am concerned that so much blame is being placed on the RCMP unnecessarily.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think everyone in this chamber would agree and applaud when I say that the RCMP is one of the outstanding police forces anywhere in the world.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Fairbairn: Its activities, both nationally in the provinces where it operates as the provincial police force and internationally, are to be viewed with great pride by Canadians. That is fundamental to my response.

The Solicitor General has received a report on the situation surrounding the events two weeks ago at 24 Sussex Drive, the residence of the Prime Minister. He has indicated that he will try to make the findings of that report as public as he can under the requirements of security. He will, I am sure, do that.

The Senate will know, from public statements that have been made, that any shortcomings that existed at the Prime Minister's residence and the grounds have been addressed already by the RCMP, and there is every confidence that this kind of situation will not arise again.

Senator Di Nino: Honourable senators, could the Leader of the Government attempt to obtain an answer to the question that I asked vis-à-vis the alarm system?

Senator Fairbairn: I cannot make any promises, honourable senators, but I shall try.

JUSTICE

MINISTER'S VIEW ON EFFICACY OF JAILING NON-VIOLENT YOUNG OFFENDERS—APPLICATION OF SAME PRINCIPLE TO TRANSGRESSORS AGAINST FIREARMS LEGISLATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, in today's edition of that great Liberal newspaper, The Toronto Star, there is an article under the signature of Tim Harper, Ottawa bureau correspondent. The headline of the article reads: "Jailing youths a waste justice minister says."

The article states, in part:

Too many young, non-violent offenders are behind bars in this country, costing taxpayers money and doing nothing for victims of their crimes...

The Minister of Justice is quoted as saying in this article:

The most important thing we can do is restore and rebuild public confidence in the youth justice system....The system will not be effective unless it's credible....There are huge chunks of money being spent locking up kids who are no threat to us...

The article continues:

He said it costs about $100,000 a year to keep a young offender behind bars — up to $300,000 in the territories — with the tab totalling about $250 million each year for keeping non-violent offenders in custody.

Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate not undertake to try to convince her government and Mr. Rock, the Minister of Justice, that they should show more consistency in their approach to the justice system? There is no need to remind honourable senators that, later, we will be voting on Bill C-68, which contains a provision to jail non-violent people who are convicted of committing a second offence for a minimum of one year, and two years less one day for the third offence. Canadians in New Brunswick said no. Another Liberal government has told us that because the system is so overcrowded and so costly, they made a decision some months ago that, in order to reduce costs, they would hire a U.S. firm to supervise and keep an eye on the youth and other people presently in jail.

Senator Olson: What is the question?

Senator Simard: I am asking the Leader of the Government to undertake to try to convince her government and the Minister of Justice to take their time and reflect on some of these amendments that we are proposing. One such amendment deals with not criminalizing people found in possession of guns, so that they would thus not have a criminal record. Certainly, the options on penalties should be left to the judge, but such penalties should not include a one or two year jail sentence for non-violent people.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we started yesterday, and will continue today and tomorrow, a debate on Bill C-68 and the report on that bill that has been sent to us by the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. I certainly would not wish to prejudge any voting that would take place tomorrow. I am sure that these issues, and the one mentioned by my honourable friend, will undoubtedly be raised and discussed during the course of the debate.

I return to the beginning of my friend's question concerning young offenders and the review that is taking place with respect to the provisions in our system to deal with them. I will certainly convey those comments to the Minister of Justice. As with all other parliamentarians, over the next while the Minister of Justice will be trying to find a better way of ensuring that our young people in Canada have the kind of opportunities that will prevent them from becoming entangled in the criminal justice system, as well as having the most protective and fairest way of dealing with those who find themselves in trouble with the law.

Senator Simard: I have a supplementary question: How can the government and the Leader of the Government in the Senate reconcile the philosophy, the spirit and the content of Bill C-68 with the statement of the Minister of Justice that I just read into the record here a few minutes ago? He admits that too many non-violent people are in jail.

Everyone realizes that this bill came into existence and is being pushed through — or rather, railroaded — in the Senate. The government could take another six months to reflect on these amendments if six months is required. No doubt this bill is before us only as a result of something that appeared in the Red Book.

However, Canadians are seeing clearer with every passing day, that not only will this bill be costly, but also it will not, to any extent, end the violence towards women and other people. In other words, by asking us to vote tomorrow on this bill —

An Hon. Senator: This is Question Period!

Senator Simard: — we are being asked to borrow on an empty promise.

Therefore, will the Leader of the Government consider withdrawing her motion that the vote be taken tomorrow, in order that the government might reflect on the bill that is now before us, and perhaps come up with an improved bill?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, that sounds like the beginning of my honourable friend's speech in the debate. The bill, as he knows, has been before us since mid-June. I would only say to my honourable friend that this is not the time for debating the legislation.

There are varying points of view on this legislation. The Canadian people also have a point of view. A great many of them are holding out hope that this bill will help do what my friend does not believe it can. Others would disagree with them.

We need a sense of security in dealing with criminal activity in this country. That is part of the debate surrounding this bill. Undoubtedly we will be hearing more of it as the day goes on.

FIREARMS LEGISLATION—EFFICACY OF RESEARCH OF MINISTER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Leonard J. Gustafson: My supplementary question is along the same lines, triggered by an article in The Globe and Mail. That article states, as Justice Minister Allan Rock put it, that time is running out on the bill.

My question is simple: As a member of cabinet, do you feel that the minister conducted proper research with respect to this bill? I have never seen so much confusion across the country on anything as I have seen on this bill. The minister, in this article, is blaming the Senate, and he has not done his research.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, an enormous amount of work, consultation, discussion, research, evaluation and re-evaluation has taken place on this issue over a period of more than one and a half years. I cannot comment on what may or may not happen with the —

Senator Berntson: The research is supposed to be done before a bill is drafted.

Senator Fairbairn: — with the other place. There is an interest in what is happening in this place, and how we are getting on with our responsibilities. Our committee has reported; the debate is in progress. We will be reaching some decisions tomorrow, and we will go on from there. It would be wrong of me to presume to predict what may or may not happen tomorrow.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

CULTURAL PROPERTY EXPORT AND IMPORT ACT INCOME TAX ACT TAX COURT OF CANADA ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-93, to amend the Cultural Property Export and Import Act, the Income Tax Act and the Tax Court of Canada Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT BILL, 1995

MOTION TO INSTRUCT LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE TO TABLE FINAL REPORT—VOTE DEFERRED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Fairbairn, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Stewart,

That it be an instruction of this House to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs that no later than Wednesday, 22nd November, 1995, it present its final report to the Senate on the Message from the House of Commons, dated June 20, 1995, and on the motion of the Honourable Senator Graham dated June 28, 1995, regarding Bill C-69, An Act to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions and the readjustment of electoral boundaries.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I do not have anything to add on this motion and I will try not to repeat what has already been said on this side as to our feelings about Bill C-69. However, I want to comment on the fact that whenever senators on the other side have been speaking in support of the bill, their main argument has been not so much on the merits of the bill itself but on the assertion that the Senate should butt out of any interest in the electoral distribution process. "Butt out" is a rather crude term to summarize the use — by Mr. Milliken at one time, Minister Gray at another time, Senator Carstairs on more than one occasion, and Senator Fairbairn — of a quotation from Senator Flynn when he was Leader of the Government in the Senate when this chamber was looking at the Representation Bill, 1985. Senator Flynn, in proposing the bill, as quoted by Senator Fairbairn and others, said:

In any event, I would say this is an area that almost exclusively concerns the House of Commons, and I think that we, as a non-elected chamber and as appointed legislators, are hardly in a position to tell the members of the House of Commons how they should proceed to draw the boundaries of their electoral districts.

We all have great respect for the former Senator Flynn, who held important positions here and in the Government of Canada. After hearing this statement used over and over again, I finally decided to get in touch with Senator Flynn to find out exactly what the sense of that remark was, and still is. His reply was, "Read all I said and read what I said after."

Honourable senators, I went to our Hansard, the Debates of the Senate, and here is what he said immediately after this oft-quoted statement.

Nevertheless, if there were some major questions of principle, the Senate would certainly have a contribution to make.

At the time, the Senate was debating an amendment to the Constitution Act and to the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act to slow down the growth of seats in the House of Commons. The proposal was to change the formula so as to limit the number of members to 295 based on the 1981 census. The formula in place at the time would have seen membership in the House of Commons increase to 310, in 1991 to 343, and, based on projections in the year 2001, to 369. This fundamental change was more a technical amendment rather than scrapping a law and replacing it with another.

That was what the debate was all about. What Senator Flynn said at the time is what he said, but what Senator Fairbairn and her colleagues forgot to add is that Senator Flynn went on to confirm the responsibilities of the Senate, that when there is a question of principle, the Senate certainly has a contribution to make.

The principles involved in this bill are numerous. One of them is that the Government of Canada respect its obligation under the Constitution to engage in redistribution as soon as the figures of the previous decennial census are known.

Another principle, among many, is that the independence of the process be respected. Bill C-69 seeks to ensure that the next election is not based on the 1981 census. Certainly, the independence of the process is severely challenged.

Honourable senators, I had many notes to bring in support of my argument, but as I read the debate surrounding the Representation Bill of 1985 — a debate which started in December 1985 and went through to early February 1986 — I was struck by how the arguments used at the time by our friends opposite would serve me just as well. I feel, therefore, that if it is fair for our friends on the other side to quote colleagues on this side to support their cause, I can do the same to support mine. In this case, however, I will not lift the statements out of context. I will give their true meaning.

For instance, honourable senators, Senator Stewart told us in a very erudite and thoughtful presentation on this whole issue, well researched and certainly deserving of much praise, that one of the main functions of the Senate is to protect the interests of the provinces. He also went on to state that if that bill went through, according to him it would be unfair to British Columbia and Alberta as they would not have the additional seats to which they were entitled. To quote him, he said, "That is one reason why I believe that this whole venture is bad."

As I went on and caught up with other speakers, all of them questioning the purpose of the bill and its impact on a fair redistribution, I found the remarks of Senator Corbin, who took great issue with Senator Flynn's statement for four reasons. The first one was:

...we, as senators, are involved on four counts: first of all, as individuals, we are voters like any other Canadian who is entitled to vote...

Second, it has been understood ever since the beginning of Confederation that the Senate speaks for the interests of the regions and the provinces...

Third, senators are specifically involved in the adjustment process, as stated in clause 7 of the bill.

It said, as the current act says:

...any member of Parliament may make representations...

Of course, senators are members of Parliament.

He added:

...we are the chamber of sober second thought and of correction when the bills we get are badly drafted.

Honourable senators, we on this side are doing exactly what our friends felt was their obligations when they were on this side. No doubt the sentiments they felt then are certainly felt as deeply today.

Finally, Senator Corbin said:

The Senate was established to uphold provincial and regional interests, and to protect the House of Commons against its own excesses.

Now, if any excesses have been created by the House of Commons through self-interest, it is certainly Bill C-69 which is before us.

Senator MacEachen also made a contribution along the same lines. He deplored the fact that capping or limiting the gross number of seats would mean that the Atlantic provinces would be penalized. He went on to add:

The provinces of Ontario, British Columbia and Alberta, which, under this bill, and under the present law, are entitled to substantial increases in the number of seats, will be denied those increases...

Honourable senators, we are faced with the same problem today. If Bill C-69 is allowed to go through, it will more than likely mean that Ontario and British Columbia, which are entitled to additional seats, will not get them in time for the next federal election.

Last, but certainly not least, Senator Fairbairn, who quoted in part a key statement from Senator Flynn, also objected to the act. This is what she had to say:

...I wish to register my very real concern that the process which has produced this bill may already have jeopardized the opportunity of the Province of Alberta and its sister Province of British Columbia to finally claim the extra representation which they deserve in the House of Commons because of the growth of their populations over the last two decades.

Honourable senators, today we face the same problem the Senate faced in 1985; namely, to ensure that the redistribution process respect the constitutional requirement that the most recent decennial census be used as quickly and expeditiously as possible to allow for redistribution as much as possible for the full election. That has not always happened, unfortunately, because of the time needed to complete the process before the next election. What was said then is certainly valid today. I simply want to thank my colleagues opposite for allowing me to reinforce my arguments against Bill C-69 with even more convincing arguments which I can find, and have found, in their statements of 1985.

As for Bill C-69 itself, this bill is the result of a compromise reached between the two chambers after the government initially wanted to suspend the process for two years in a not too disguised attempt to ensure that the next federal election would be held on the basis of the 1981 census. We said that that was a bit much, that it was disrespectful of the constitutional obligation and, therefore, the delay should be shortened.

We compromised on June 20 or 21, 1995. Because of mismanagement — and it can only be called that — of the government's legislative program, the bill was not passed in time. The bill was not passed by the deadline. It still has not been passed.

The government now says that, when the deadline for passage of the bill had passed, the old process kicked back in; all that had been suspended when Bill C-69 was not passed has been reinstated. The maps were deposited in front of the House of Commons because they were nearly complete. Now we know where we stand.

We were told repeatedly that, if a deadline were not met, Bill C-69 would die on the Order Paper, and E-3, which is the current act regarding electoral redistribution, would be in place.

Honourable senators, these are not my interpretations; these are the interpretations of spokesmen for the government. For instance, Mr. Milliken moved third reading of Bill C-18 which then included a two-year delay. He stated then that if, at the end of that time, there is no new mechanism put in place by legislation, the redistribution commissions will restart their work.

When he appeared before our committee, Minister Gray, in reply to a question by Senator Jessiman concerning the logic behind the two-year suspension, said:

We thought that it would be wise to avoid the possibility that, before new legislation updating the process was passed by both the House of Commons and the Senate, the time period of suspension would elapse and automatically the redistribution would start up again under the old rules.

In other words, the government wanted enough time to avoid the predicament that they are in now, which is that Bill C-69 was not passed in time, and the old process has kicked in. After I briefly summarize the original arguments, those arguments which were accepted by both houses, I will turn to their new argument.

Mr. Boudria, the whip of the government — a not insignificant figure in the leadership of the majority on the other side — said in the other place on June 15, seven days before the deadline, that if the bill were not passed by the House of Commons later that day in its final version, the bill might well die, because under one of its provisions a bill must be passed by the other house and receive Royal Assent no later than the 20th day of the current month.

He said the 20th but he obviously meant June 22. He added that if this bill, with all its provisions, were not passed that day at the latest, they would be unable to deal with the matter and the bill would die.

Senator Stanbury, on June 21, as the spokesman for the government in this chamber, said that our time was very limited and that both sides had understood those time limitations. He said that if the bill were to become legislation before the end of the suspension to June 22 provided by Bill C-18, it needed to be given Royal Assent that evening.

Senator Stanbury: That is the key: “before the end of the suspension.”

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Government spokesmen were unanimous on the significance of the deadline: if the bill were not passed by that deadline, it would be a dead issue. But what happened on the morning of June 22?

Senator Beaudoin: The resurrection.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: The original process started up again, with the government saying that the bill was still on the Order Paper. We agree. Physically, the bill is on the Order Paper.

The government insists that, once it is passed, the current process will come to a stop again and the new process will kick in. This is in absolute contradiction to what was said during the entire debate in both chambers and in front of our committee regarding the significance of the deadline.

It is an interpretation of the deadline which we share. As far as we are concerned, Bill C-69 is a dead issue which should no longer be before us. But here it is, and we must decide this afternoon what to do with it.

What are we faced with? The House of Commons, within the next 10 days, will be reporting to the electoral commissions their recommendations on the maps which have been before the House for some time. This is the last step in a long process.

The electoral commissions will then make their own reports based on that advice and, by early June 1996, if the current process is allowed to be completed, the new maps will be confirmed and will come into force one year later, which is January 1997.

That means, based on the usual frequency of elections in this country, that it is more than likely that the next federal election — probably sometime in 1997 — will be held on the basis of redistribution which uses the 1991 census. It would mean that Ontario would get its four additional seats and B.C. would get its two additional seats.

What are the origins of Bill C-69? This bill was not a priority for the Government of Canada. It is not referred to anywhere in the Red Book. This bill came out of a sentiment of a number of malcontents new to the Liberal caucus, most of them from Ontario, who, by their own admission, on having seen the preliminary maps, suddenly realized that, if these were to be confirmed, their chances of re-election would be severely jeopardized because, in effect, they would have to start all over again.

One member, as matter of fact — and I paraphrase him because I did not bring his actual quote — said that he had worked for years to get to where he was, and that it was all being taken away from him.

We are being asked to endorse this proprietary attitude towards ridings: Once you are elected, it belongs to the member; forget about equal distribution, as extraordinarily difficult as it is to apply across this country; and keep in mind only the interests of the sitting members.

As a matter of fact, Bill C-69 would have played into the hands of these malcontents, despite the fact that they would have denied, at the same time, additional seats to Ontario and British Columbia.

To restart the process, which has already cost $6 million, would certainly cost another $6 million. We are now just a few weeks away from the end of a process which has not been criticized, except by those who find that their seats are being affected.

What is wrong with that? Why have a redistribution process if seats are not adjusted? Seats are not being adjusted to curry favour with sitting members; seats are being adjusted in order to ensure, as much as possible, that a vote, no matter where it is cast in this country, is as equal as any other vote. It is impossible to do so because of certain constitutional requirements, but the purpose of the electoral commission is to strive for that goal as much as possible.

If Bill C-69 is passed, the redistribution process will be delayed by one year. The calendar has already been fixed by Mr. Kingsley. It is public knowledge that if redistribution based on the 1991 census started immediately, it would not be confirmed and applicable until January 1998. Consequently, in all likelihood, the next election, in 1997, will be based, on population figures dating back to 1981, and neither British Columbia nor Ontario will have the benefit of additional seats according to its population.

• (1530)

Finally, Bill C-69 jeopardizes the impartiality of the process. At the moment, each province is entitled to three electoral commissioners: The chairman is named by the chief justice of the highest court of the province, and the two commissioners are named by the Speaker of the House of Commons. The Speaker has absolute autonomy and independence in selecting the two commissioners. There is no question that he or she, as the case may be, consults with the most interested parties and others. The selections must be pretty good under that system, because of all the criticisms that one hears about the process, never has there been one criticism about those three members in each province who contribute to improving the redistribution layout of this land.

Under Bill C-69, that changes drastically. The chairmen are still named by the chief justice in each province and the two members are each named by the Speaker of the House of Commons, except that Bill C-69 adds two words, namely, "after consultation". It does not say "after consultation with whom," but it does not have to say that because, as you go down the bill a little bit, it also says that, if 20 members of the House of Commons are dissatisfied with the Speaker's choices, they can move a motion in the House of Commons and call for a vote. In other words, members of the House are introducing two things: the possibility of a vote of non-confidence in the Speaker of the House of Commons; and, obviously, a key role in determining the majority membership of each commission. There is no question that if 20 members of the majority — or, combined with members of the minority — are unhappy with the selections, they can easily overrule the Speaker's decision.

The decision of the Speaker of the House of Commons, the final authority of our highest elected House, cannot be challenged. Unlike decisions made by our Speaker here, in the other place there is so much respect for his authority that none of his decisions can be overruled. Suddenly, the government introduces in an act the possibility, by resolution of the House, of overruling membership in a body which is to be as impartial as possible.

With Bill C-69, the government is trying to allow sitting members' input in the redistribution process right from the beginning by having a veto over the majority membership of each commission. That is also another question of principle. That, alone, is enough to reject this proposed act. That argument and all the other arguments, to which I have added those of our friends opposite to reinforce them, have convinced me and my colleagues that this country will be better off by allowing the present process to be completed and by having the maps, which will be confirmed and go into place in January, 1997. In so doing, there is a good possibility that the next election will be based on what is being completed now to confirm that British Columbia and Ontario will have their additional seats. Otherwise, Bill C-69 will, in all likelihood, see the next election fought on the basis of the present distribution.

That, alone, is enough reason for us to confirm that this bill is not in the public interest. It is in the interest of a small number of people who has its own selfish gains at heart more than those of the Canadian public and the regions of this country. That is what we are here for, and that is reason enough to vote against the motion.

Hon. Sharon Carstairs: Honourable senators, earlier the Leader of the Opposition suggested — and I will put it in that framework — that both myself and Senator Fairbairn said that there was no role for the Senate to play in this particular piece of legislation. That is the opposite to what Senator Fairbairn and I have said repeatedly. We have stated that there is a very clear role for the Senate, but the Senate in its entirety and not the Senate in committee. However, it has been the choice of those opposite to bury Bill C-69 in committee and not allow it to come to a vote on the floor of this chamber.

If all senators are to do their duty appropriately and to fulfil their mandate constitutionally, then one of the most fundamental parliamentary acts that they must participate in is a vote. That does not mean the few senators on the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee; it means all the senators. That is what we have urged over and over again, namely, that all senators vote on Bill C-69. That is why I urge you this evening to vote at 5:30 for that process to take place, so that all senators can stand up and be counted on Bill C-69.

My primary reason for speaking today is to address the remarks made earlier by Senator Beaudoin. Senator Beaudoin, in quoting from the entirety of Senator Flynn's speech — and in so doing, I think he made an important contribution — mentioned the same phrase that Senator Lynch-Staunton has just mentioned, namely, that the Senate had a real role to play in a matter of principle.

Senator Beaudoin then went on to address his remarks to the 25-per-cent rule, the rule upon which populations of constituencies should be based, except in extraordinary circumstances. It is that particular point that I wish to address today.

Honourable senators he believes that a 15-per-cent rule would be more equitable, and more representative of one citizen, one vote. However, honourable senators, the reality in Canada is that there is not a system of one citizen, one vote. We have, as a result of constitutional limitations and geographic disparity, tremendous differences in the number of votes per constituency that are eligible to be cast in any given election.

For example, we do not have a national quotient. We have provincial quotients. By their very nature, provincial quotients are extremely uneven. According to the 1981 census, upon which the present boundaries are based, the provincial quotient for P.E.I., for example, is 30,627 people. The provincial quotient for Ontario is 90,116 people. In other words, if you are a voter in Ontario, your vote is only worth one-third of a Prince Edward Islander's vote — perhaps that is appropriate — or, to put it another way, if you are an Islander, your vote is worth three times the vote of an Ontarian. Is that fair? Is it equitable? Of course it is not, but it is reality. It is reality because Prince Edward Island has a constitutional guarantee of four seats.

Honourable senators, that is not the only distortion.

What if we were to apply the 15-per-cent rule based on the 1981 census? I went back and looked at all of the constituencies in 1981 to see how many would be out of sync as the result of a 15-per-cent rule at the national level. The national quotient would be 90,000 minus 15, which would be 77,000; plus 15 would be 104,000.

I looked at the constituency boundaries and I discovered that, clearly, all four in P.E.I. would be in violation; two in Newfoundland; five in Nova Scotia; seven in New Brunswick; 12 in Quebec; eight in Ontario; eight in Manitoba; 10 in Saskatchewan; four in Alberta; two in British Columbia; one in the Yukon and both ridings of the Northwest Territories.

I decided I must look at those constituencies to find out what it was they had in common. All those ridings are in smaller provinces or in rural areas — and I include the north — or they are in both.

Honourable senators, this is the geographic reality of Canada. Surely these Canadians are entitled to some equality not just in their voting but in their representation. Surely their members of Parliament should be able to get to see them every now and then.

Madam Justice McLachlin, in the Supreme Court ruling in the so-called "Carters" case, which involved Saskatchewan boundaries, allowed the 25-per-cent rule in that province. Incidentally, we also have a similar 25-per-cent rule for communities outside of Winnipeg in Manitoba. This very important ruling states:

It is my conclusion that the purpose of the right to vote enshrined in s. 3 of the Charter is not equality of voting power per se, but the right to "effective representation"...

What are the conditions of effective representation? The first is relative parity of voting power...

But parity of voting power, though of prime importance, is not the only factor to be taken into account...

First, absolute parity is impossible...

Secondly, such relative parity as may be possible of achievement may prove undesirable because it has the effect of detracting from the primary goal of effective representation. Factors like geography, community history, community interests and minority representation may need to be taken into account to ensure that our legislative assemblies effectively represent the diversity of our social mosaic... The concept of absolute voter parity does not accord with the development of the right to vote in the Canadian context and does not permit of sufficient flexibility to meet the practical difficulties inherent in representative government in a country such as Canada.

With those words, she upheld the 25-per-cent variation.

Let us be practical for a moment. The last time I spoke, I talked about the Churchill riding in northern Manitoba. Because I think it important that you learn a little more about Manitoba every time I speak, I will speak today about the Dauphin-Swan River riding.

The Dauphin-Swan River riding meets the 25-per-cent test but it does not meet the 15-per-cent test. It runs about 17.8 per cent over its provincial variance. This is a very large riding, 300 kilometres long, 180 kilometres wide, with a square kilometerage of 47,260.

That means you could take nine P.E.I.s and put them in the constituency of Dauphin-Swan River. If you took all of Nova Scotia, it would fit into Dauphin-Swan River. It takes a member of Parliament — and I have done it many times, let me assure you — six hours to get from one end of her constituency to the other because of geographical barriers, such as Rocky Mountain Park, that one must go through. That riding is four-and-a-half hours by car from Winnipeg. Flights are only available to the town of Dauphin, and occasionally to the town of Swan River at the opposite end of the constituency, but to nowhere in between. That is very typical of a Manitoba or Saskatchewan rural constituency.

In the last redistribution, honourable senators, only five ridings in all of Canada failed to meet the 25-per-cent rule. It is used very sparingly, using provincial and not national quotients.

If you use the 15-per-cent rule, you would still only have 51 ridings that violated the principle. All of those 51 ridings were in remote areas.

In my view, that is why, despite the fact that the Lortie Commission recommended a move to 15 per cent of provincial quotient, it was rejected by the House of Commons committee which studied this report. Geography, I would suggest, got in the way. The reality of Canada got in the way. Practicality got in the way.

While I agree that it is a very laudable goal to get as close to 15 per cent as possible, it would simply put far too great a hardship on some Canadians to get appropriate representation. It would also put far too great a burden on some members of Parliament.

Personally, I believe that if we were truly interested in real representation in Canada, we would be concerned less with percentage factors and more with real representation.

In the last election, the Progressive Conservatives received about 18 per cent of the popular vote, and yet they won only two seats. I confirmed that recollection with Senator Nolin today; he and I agreed on that number. Frankly, that was a miscarriage of justice. If we had had a proportional representation system in Canada, at the purest level, the Progressive Conservatives would have 43 seats. That is a situation, as I have said to Senator Comeau before, which would be preferable over the present makeup of the House of Commons.

Even with a modified form of proportional representation, the Conservative Party in the last election would likely have had at least official party status, which, again in my view, would have been an improvement over the present "state of the nation" in the other place.

Yet, proportional representation, or PR, in any form was rejected by the Lortie Commission.

I have addressed many of the other aspects of this legislation which Senator Lynch-Staunton has addressed today. Clearly, I disagree with the points he has raised. However, as I have urged senators before, I urge senators again today to give themselves the opportunity to vote and fulfil their democratic duty.

The chamber decided not to vote on this bill in July, preferring to send it back to committee. The bill has remained in committee but, until this morning, we did not hold a single meeting on this bill through July, August, September, October and three-quarters of November.

This is not democracy. We would all agree that we are supposedly the chamber of sober second thought. Surely we are not the chamber of no thought.

If senators are opposed to this bill, then they must exercise their conscience and vote against it. It is neither appropriate nor parliamentary to hide behind a committee and refuse to allow the ultimate in parliamentary procedure — the vote of the whole Senate chamber — to take place. I urge honourable senators to support this motion, which does not have the effect of passing the bill. However, it will force the committee to report to this chamber, and honourable senators can then vote on the bill as conscience dictates.

• (1550)

Honourable senators should remember that this bill is a House of Commons bill, as are most of the bills we receive. However, this one is special because it does not affect us. It affects Members of Parliament. It is the first time since 1963 that the process has been overhauled. It was not a government process but a committee process.

If we act quickly, as we were informed this morning, it is likely that the next election will be fought on new boundaries. If we continue to delay, I suggest that so too, perhaps, will the House of Commons, and new boundaries will not be put into place. An all-party committee of the House of Commons has urged us to get on with it. I do not suggest we get on with it, I simply suggest we vote on it.

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, I should like to take this opportunity to make a brief intervention on this subject.

For those in this chamber who do not know who Elbridge Gerry was, please allow me to put on the record the reason why his place in history is assured. Mr. Gerry was a signatory to the Declaration of Independence and he was Governor of Massachusetts in the early nineteenth century. He was not above being party to a little questionable manipulation to achieve his goals. Mr. Gerry was a rabid Jeffersonian, and in the election of 1812, the Massachusetts electoral map was redrawn to favour Jeffersonian candidates. I would like to believe this is why Canadians and Americans fought the war of 1812, but obviously that is not the case. After Mr. Gerry's changes, the map was so contorted that it looked like a salamander. As I understand it, that is how the term "gerrymandering" came about.

Honourable senators, we have all heard the comments of Mr. Sarkis Assadourian, MP for the Ontario riding of Don Valley North, the gentleman to whom Senator Lynch-Staunton referred a few moments ago. If we succumb to the Chrétien government's pressure to pass this bill, we can then immortalize Mr. Assadourian, and Canada will have its own term when referring to future manipulations of electoral boundaries. The term will be "sarkising."

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say "yea"?

[Senator Carstairs]

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators opposed to the motion please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen:

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, pursuant to the order of your honourable house, this vote will be deferred until five thirty o'clock this afternoon.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SPECIAL COMMISSION ON RESTRUCTURING OF THE RESERVES—REPORT REFERRED TO SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government), pursuant to notice of November 20, 1995, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology be authorized to examine the Report of the Special Commission on the Restructuring of the Reserves, tabled in the Senate on November 7, 1995;

That the committee present its final report no later than January 15, 1996; and

That, notwithstanding usual practices, if the Senate is not sitting when the final report of the committee is completed, the committee shall deposit its report with the Clerk of the Senate, and said report shall thereupon be deemed to have been tabled in this Chamber.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

FIREARMS BILL

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—
DEBATE SUSPENDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Beaudoin, seconded by the Honourable Senator Grimard, for the adoption of the sixteenth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs (Bill C-68, an Act respecting firearms and other weapons, with amendments), presented in the Senate on Monday, November 20, 1995.

Hon. Jean-Louis Roux: Honourable senators, as a newcomer in the Upper House, I must admit that Bill C-68 is a real enigma to me. This bill was carefully drafted by senior officials of the Department of Justice and carefully reviewed by a committee of the other place, which heard from 64 organizations and six aboriginal associations, and whose report included over 11 amendments. This is a bill whose objectives are unquestionably commendable, since it seeks to protect the lives of innocent people and the right of every Canadian to enjoy a free, safe and peaceful life, and also to prevent the use of firearms for criminal purposes. It is a bill which, according to recent polls, enjoys the support of a large majority of Canadians across the country. Indeed, a recent Angus Reid poll shows that 64 per cent of Canadians support that initiative, while only 32 per cent are opposed to it. As for registration, 71 per cent of Canadians are in favour of such a measure, while only 26 per cent are opposed. Another poll conducted by Insight Canada Research shows that 61 per cent of Ontarians feel that firearms legislation should be more strict. This is a bill which has generated a very large number of letters addressed to our respective offices.

It is true that many who wrote, and most of them being from Western Canada, were opposed to Bill C-68. Personally, I made a point of answering each and every one of those letters and I sincerely hope that I helped change the opinion of their authors. However, just as many, if not more, letters came from people who expressed their concern at the large number of suicides, homicides and accidents resulting in death or injuries, which occur in Canada and which are due to firearms being stolen or not properly stored. Many of these testimonies came from young students at the elementary, secondary or college level. These letters had a profound effect on me because they came from those who represent the future of our country. This, then, is a bill which has all the basic elements for success.

• (1600)

Yet, the Senate deemed it advisable to have it studied again by its Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs; something that is perfectly legitimate. During that committee's hearings, a large number of witnesses, including many who already had been heard by the House Committee, appeared to repeat their presentations for or against Bill C-68. Many were heard once again when some of the committee members held rogatory hearings, particularly in the West and in the Yukon, the two areas in which there is a heavy concentration of opponents to the bill. Many honourable senators still have serious reservations about the bill, so much so that the committee's report recommends sizeable amendments. These, in my opinion, diminish the bill to such an extent that, in several areas, it is only an empty shell.

Why is there such persistent opposition? I do not doubt the sincerity of the senators, the individuals or the associations still in opposition to Bill C-68 as it now stands, so the only conclusion I can reach is that this attitude is the result of a misperception and misinformation, as well as the intervention — ill-timed, under the circumstances — of such bodies as the all-powerful National Firearms Association, which went to considerable expense to make its point of view known. Among other things, it made the far-fetched suggestion that women should be given weapons so that they could protect themselves against potential criminal assaults. This was included in the Montreal Assault Prevention Centre's brief to the Senate committee. One could die laughing at such a suggestion if it were not so sad. An attitude such as this ought to be enough to discredit all groups that associate themselves with it.

In my opinion, this misconception and misinformation is what lies behind nearly all of the proposed amendments, whether they relate to collectors' weapons, museums, regulatory powers, penalties for non-compliance with the legislation, permission for the provinces to adopt the regime established by Bill C-68, or the aboriginal nations. In this address, I shall restrict myself to a brief discussion of the latter, the aboriginal nations, focussing more on the penalties provided for non-compliance with the legislation.

As I said before in my first speech on the subject, when the bill was introduced for second reading, I have the greatest respect, admiration and esteem for aboriginal peoples, and I deplore the fact that I know so little about the way they live, think and work.

However, I hope to remedy that very shortly by visiting a number of aboriginal communities, and I will ask my colleague Senator St. Germain who is unfortunately absent right now, to help me organize this trip. In return, I will set up some trips in Quebec through all the regions and to several urban centres, where we will meet brothers and sisters, fathers and mothers of the victims of the Polytechnique massacre. Maybe then, as a former police officer, he will better understand why Quebecers so wholeheartedly support Bill C-68.

I think aboriginal people, with their concern for protecting the rights they have under the Charter, are acting well within the law. However, although I am not in a position to establish the impact of Bill C-68 on aboriginal rights, I believe that many of the problems that were raised are connected more with the implementation and administration of the bill than the bill itself.

The current constitutional agreement provides that the federal government is responsible for penal justice. The legitimate exercise of this power extends to measures to control the use and possession of firearms. Aboriginal people would probably be the first to admit that their communities are not immune to crime, violence and accidental injuries caused by the use of firearms. Considering the ease with which guns circulate in Canada and the obvious ineffectiveness of the fragmented legislation that exists in the United States, uniform controls are essential to public safety. Bill C-68 will bring about a definite improvement in the well-being of every person in this country, and in my opinion, it provides for satisfactory mechanisms that also guarantee the rights of aboriginal people. Other honourable senators have discussed or will discuss this aspect in greater detail.

As for the amendment with respect to penalties for violation of the act, in my opinion it is more likely to protect criminals than honest citizens — farmers or hunters — who own long guns and fail to register them.

To violate the clauses relating to licencing and registration in Bill C-68 is considered a criminal offence, which was already the case for any violation of the requirements for restricted firearms in the legislation currently in effect. Considering the very real problem of gun smuggling and the wrongful use of unlawfully acquired firearms; the fact that some people have already stated they intend to ignore the act; and taking into account the discretionary powers already available to the police, governments and the courts to exercise leniency, it seems to us that the penalties provided in Bill C-68 are entirely appropriate. There are, of course, other solutions such as confiscating firearms, but we believe it is important to maintain the option of criminal proceedings.

Bill C-68 does not constitute an undue burden for gun owners, and it protects their legitimate activities while ensuring that public safety is not at risk. Although certain weapons associations advocate breaking the law, as evidenced by the Firearms Digest, we should not give in to this sort of threat any more than we would to tax fraud or the contravention of laws on drunk driving.

Clearly, when the law is inadvertently broken, there must be room for leniency. The police already have discretion in such circumstances. Thus, in the context of the present legislation, we have to admit that we do not often hear about seniors being arrested and charged for having failed to register their handguns. The police would ask them instead to register them, or to turn them in for destruction.

There are, nevertheless, a million restricted firearms in Canada, and the Criminal Code provides penalties for those who have failed to register such weapons. I defy anyone, however, to give me examples of honest citizens being subject to severe penalties for having broken this law. Accusations may certainly be made in particular circumstances, for example, in the case of a weapon that is improperly used or unsafely stored. We should point out that legal action for possession of unregistered handguns is for the most part accompanied by other charges, such as armed robbery. Similarly, criminal proceedings relating to matters of storage are rare, except where death or injury is involved. Generally speaking, the police will simply ask the owner to correct the situation. There is nothing to indicate that they will behave differently once the provisions in Bill C-68 on registration and licencing apply.

This is why I continue to believe that, thanks to the discretionary powers of the police, the administration and the courts, honest citizens run little risk of being accused of committing a criminal act in failing to register their long gun. Furthermore, since clause 112 provides for a lesser charge in the case of a first offence, it therefore gives another option to police still wanting to lay a charge in a case that is not serious.

On the other hand, failure to obtain a licence is, in my opinion, a more serious offence, for which adequate provision is made in sections 91 and 92 of the Criminal Code. It is essential to be able to lay criminal charges if a person fails to comply with these provisions, even if it is a first offence.

When it is clearly established that a person deliberately tries to get around the law, either because he does not approve of the legislation or is involved in criminal activities, more stringent sanctions are provided. Clause 92 provides for penalties when a person knowingly fails to register a weapon or obtain a licence; these penalties may be imposed if there is clear evidence of civil disobedience or concealment of possession of a weapon. However, the mandatory penalty under clause 92 applies only in the case of a second conviction. Considering the serious nature of trafficking in prohibited weapons, this is entirely justified.

Make no mistake: So-called honest citizens who do not pay their taxes can become criminals, just like those who receive welfare or unemployment insurance benefits and fail to declare their income. Why should it be otherwise for so-called honest citizens who own firearms? If they do not want to become criminals, all they have to do is obey the law, like any other Canadian.

The legislation must have enough teeth to have an impact on the worst offenders, while allowing for sufficient flexibility in dealing with those who break the law through ignorance or pure negligence.

The proposed amendment goes well beyond that. It not only abolishes the offence of failing to register a long gun, it also abolishes the mandatory penalty for failing to register prohibited or restricted weapons. The majority of prohibited or restricted weapons are handguns or automatic weapons, so why get rid of minimum sentences for possession of non-registered handguns or automatic weapons when such weapons are largely used to commit crimes?

Honourable senators, it is our duty to make improvements in the bills entrusted to us after they are passed by the House of Commons. In the case of concern to us here, this last amendment, like all the others recommended by the majority report from the Senate Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, does nothing to improve Bill C-68, calling for more severe controls over firearm possession and use. When the time comes for us to vote to adopt or reject this report, when we have to endorse or reject the proposed amendments, I implore you, honourable senators, to leave aside any partisan spirit, to think of making this a final tribute to the fourteen women who fell victim to a mad killer at the École polytechnique de Montréal on December 6, 1989, and to the 1,400 other victims who are shot to death each year in Canada. I implore you to think of their right to live in peace and happiness. I implore you to pass Bill C-68 without further delay, as it stands, and to reject the proposed amendments. We owe as much to Canada, which is still one of the best countries of the world in which to live.

Hon. Donald H. Oliver: Honourable senators, I rise today to speak to Bill C-68 and the amendments proposed to this bill by my colleagues. Before I deal with the merits of the legislation before us, I want to make it clear that I support controls on the use of firearms. As with all of us in this chamber, I oppose the use of firearms by criminals, and support measures which effectively keep guns out of the hands of criminals.

As with all law-abiding Canadians, I deplore the acts of violence perpetrated by Valery Fabrikant at Concordia University, and by Marc Lépine at École polytechnique. Those who had contributed so much to society, those who had so much hope for the future, had their lives ended prematurely. I grieve for them and for their survivors.

Honourable senators, I am also acutely aware of the violence perpetrated against both women and children by those who come into possession of deadly weapons. As a former member of the Board of Directors, and indeed as the President of the Halifax Children's Aid Society, I experienced the pain and suffering brought to families through abuse.

I support those parts of this bill which are designed to counteract smuggling of firearms, and perhaps the government could give thought to making them even tougher. As well, I endorse those clauses which increase the punishment for crimes committed with firearms. However, I cannot support the other main thrust of the bill, and that is to impose on Canadians a completely unnecessary gun registration system.

Why is such a system unnecessary? Canada already has firearms laws that are among the toughest in the world. This is what you have to do now in order to own a firearm in Canada: take an optional federal course and a mandatory test to qualify for a firearms acquisition certificate, or FAC; submit to a thorough police examination of your social, employment and psychological history when you apply for the FAC; go through an interview process with police and provide solid references; wait a mandatory 28 days before your FAC is approved and issued with a photograph.

If you want to hunt, you must: take a separate mandatory hunting course, which also covers firearms handling and safety; submit to another provincial written and practical test on firearms handling; abide by strict federal laws that govern dozens of firearms handling and safety situations. They include: storing firearms and ammunition separately under lock and key; rigid transportation standards, and tough guidelines for using firearms.

By adding to these criteria, the bill will not accomplish the goals set for it by the Minister of Justice.

Honourable senators, Minister Rock says:

...such a registration system can contribute to greater public welfare without imposing excessive constraints on hunters, farmers and target shooters.

I say, nonsense! The lowest cost estimate that I have seen anywhere for this registration system is $100 million. Many people say it is higher. All farmers, hunters and target shooters who own guns must register them under the proposed law. You and I know that these are not guns used by criminals, and we are not likely to run into many criminals in the local gun registration line.

Mr. Rock says:

...registration will encourage compliance with safe storage requirements.

Honourable senators, my further question to that is: how? We are required already by law to safely store them. Minister Rock claims that it will better prepare police who are answering a distress call, since they will know if a gun is in that particular house. Does this mean that police answering these calls will come with their guns drawn? I hope not. This could lead to more violence.

Honourable senators, the minister cites statistics which gun registration in no way will address:

One woman every six days is shot to death...
1,100 Canadians commit suicide with a firearm each year.

• (1620)

As deplorable as these statistics may be, Mr. Rock's registration system will not save any of these people.

I received a fax this morning from the Nova Scotia Wildlife Federation dated November 21 and signed by a Mr. Tony Rodgers, Executive Director. He says, among other things:

Our debate is at an end, the ball is now in your court. After all the personal examination you have given this bill, I'm sure you understand what a poor piece of legislation it is. This bill is riddled with excessive powers for any Minister of Justice, spiked with reverse onus provisions, illegal search and seizure and it will bring negative actions against law abiding citizens in a manner that could be paralleled to the illegal imprisonment of Japanese Canadians during the Second World War. It will do nothing to reduce crime. This proposed law is nothing more than smoke and mirrors.

There are many other main arguments against the bill, and some of them can be enumerated as follows:

First, the registration system envisaged is expensive. Some estimates for implementation range up to $500 million.

Second, the system will divert scarce manpower and money away from crime prevention and crime solving. Policemen will be behind desks, not on the streets.

Third, the system will be run by the cash-strapped provinces which will be forced to cut other programs in order to install a registration system.

Fourth, the system is virtually unenforceable. It would require a nationwide house-to-house search to see if it was being obeyed.

Fifth, the registration system per se will do nothing to keep guns out of the hands of criminals or to reduce domestic violence.

Sixth, gun registration is not like vehicle registration, because if a gun is not registered, criminal penalties result.

Seventh, the parts of the registration system affecting Canada's aboriginal people may violate their constitutionally guaranteed treaty rights to hunt for food. It has been argued that any interference with this right makes certain aspects of the bill unconstitutional, if not the whole bill.

Eighth, the bill purports to regulate shooting clubs, firearms ranges, and gun shows. These are clearly matters which should fall within provincial jurisdiction and therefore beyond the jurisdiction of the federal parliament.

Ninth, section 103 of the Criminal Code proposed by Bill C-68 would permit the federal government to initiate and conduct prosecutions for a Criminal Code offence. Traditionally, the federal government's power to prosecute offences has been placed in statutes separate from the Criminal Code. In this instance, since we are dealing with import/export offences, such offences should be part of the Customs and Excise Act, otherwise there could be a federal invasion of the provinces' administration of justice powers.

These are the reasons I oppose this bill and support the amendments introduced by the Honourable Senator Ghitter.

I endorse the motion passed by the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs requesting the Minister of Justice to consult with the aboriginal communities of Canada. Such consultation should focus on whether the constitutional requirements, as set out in various agreements with the Yukon First Nations and the Cree people, are affected by the provisions of the bill.

I support the amendment that would allow provinces and territories, which are responsible for the administration of this bill, to delay implementation. This will allow them time to examine the costs, workability, and efficiency of the legislation.

Regulations made pursuant to this act should follow the same procedure as most other regulations. They should be laid before each house of Parliament for at least 30 sitting days before the implementation date. This will allow public inquiries to be held when appropriate.

I endorse the amendment which would decriminalize the offence of failure to register a firearm. It is unreasonable to threaten law-abiding citizens with criminal sanctions over the mere failure to register a firearm.

Along the same lines, the amendments proposed to clause 92(3) should be supported. This provision would punish a person who knowingly possesses an unlicensed, prohibited, or restricted weapon for a minimum sentence of one year on the second offence, and two years less a day for a third offence. These sentences take away from the discretion which a court should have to impose an appropriate sentence.

Finally, the Canadian Museum Association expressed strong concerns about the costs that the statute would impose on museums. It is estimated that over $4 million will be required from museums to meet the registration aspects of this bill. I support the amendment to exempt museums from licensing changes under the bill.

Honourable senators, I support the amendments proposed, and I urge all honourable senators to support them, as they will make Bill C-68 a more acceptable piece of legislation.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: If the honourable senator would allow me, I should like to put a question to him.

The honourable senator raised the matter of a letter he received from, I would not say a constituent, but somebody from his own bailiwick.

In my view, the letter appears to contain some excessive and unfounded language. Has the honourable senator contacted this person to lay out the facts as the bill recounts them? Does he intend to do so? Is he accepting at face value everything in that letter?

Senator Oliver: I thank the honourable senator for his question. I received this letter by fax this morning. It is from the Executive Director of the Nova Scotia Wildlife Federation, a well-known federation in the province of Nova Scotia. It was sent by Mr. Tony Rodgers, who is known to me. He has written to me on several other occasions about this particular piece of legislation, and I have responded. He must have read in the newspapers that this bill would be voted on some time soon, and he wanted to make sure that I knew his position.

I have not responded to this particular fax that I received this morning.

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, when I spoke on second reading of Bill C-68 in this chamber on June 20, 1995, my first comment was that I would not support or vote in favour of Bill C-68 as presently written.

My main, stated objection to Bill C-68 was, and continues to be, registration of rifles and shotguns, and the negative effect such legislation would have on Canadians in general and northerners in particular.

Let me be clear, honourable senators: I understand and respect people who support Bill C-68. As previously stated, I support a great majority of the proposed legislation contained in Bill C-68. Responsible gun owners everywhere support the provisions of Bill C-68 which deal harshly with criminals who commit serious offences with guns, and they demand enforcement of mandatory prison terms for offenders who commit serious crimes with guns.

They also demand that law-abiding citizens who do not commit crimes with guns and who obey the law not be treated as criminals and not have their rights and freedoms trampled by a clause in Bill C-68 that is virtually unenforceable, unworkable, very expensive and, unfortunately, will not accomplish any of the goals claimed by those who support the legislation.

Suggestions that those who oppose Bill C-68 are in any way less compassionate of the need to protect abused women and children than anyone else are false, and, quite frankly, they do not constitute an honest argument.

Honourable senators, we, as members of Parliament, must continue to do whatever is necessary to prevent future abuse of women and children. Registration of shotguns and rifles will not accomplish this goal, but it will make life extremely difficult for a very large number of Canadians, particularly aboriginal people.

I wish to quote from a letter dated November 8, 1995 from Mr. Phil Fontaine, the Grand Chief of the Assembly of Manitoba Chiefs, as follows:

There is no justification for imposing gun controls on our people. The regulatory scheme to be put into effect impacts disproportionately heavily on us. Whatever may be its effect on other Canadians, for us it is the death knell of our traditional rights and our current economic practices. And all of that is happening without there having been any, let alone adequate, consultation with our people.

We urge you to stop this travesty in its tracks.

During the Whitehorse hearings, the Senate panel heard from Kaska Elder Charlie Dick, who has been providing food for his family and himself since he was a child. When this legislation is put into effect, that will be very difficult, if not impossible, to comply with for people like Mr. Dick, then their fears become very real. As stated very clearly by Mr. Dick, his gun is used to provide food for the family, not to harm anyone. Why the sudden urge to register his firearm?

• (1630)

Honourable senators, the amendments proposed by the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee have come as a shock to me. We have been dealing with registration of rifles and shotguns for quite some time now, and never once have I spoken to, or heard from, a gun owner who said, "I am opposed to registration but will accept it if the implementation date is 10 years instead of eight." In my opinion that amendment is a complete abandonment of those who opposed registration of long guns.

Honourable senators opposite have heard me state publicly in Whitehorse that I would support an amendment that would remove registration of long guns from Bill C-68. This amendment does no such thing. Therefore, I will not be able to support the motion for acceptance of this report. Yukoners and other Canadians who were hoping to see a removal of registration from Bill C-68 will be bitterly disappointed with the proposed amendment.

Senator Ghitter, in reply to my question yesterday, said Yukon Minister of Justice Doug Phillips agreed with the amendment. I accept what Senator Ghitter has said, although I was very surprised to hear that my friend Mr. Phillips had changed his position. I will not change mine.

In concluding my remarks, may I once again thank senators who took the time to visit the Yukon to allow people to express their views. Some people were for Bill C-68; many were opposed. However, as I have said in this chamber for the past 20 years, Canadians not living in this area should be heard by members of the Senate. I attended meetings in Vancouver and Whitehorse and have heard from people in Alberta. They were very grateful for the opportunity to be heard. I know it is not easy or cheap to hold hearings away from Ottawa, but it is the proper thing to do. I thank Senator Ghitter and all the senators who participated. I encourage the Senate to hold more hearings away from Ottawa.

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: Honourable senators, I have a question for the honourable senator. I agree that there should be an amendment to this legislation excluding long guns by way of hunting rifles and shotguns commonly used for the purpose of hunting and sporting practices. However, if the honourable senator feels that way, why then does he not move an amendment in this house? I am prepared to stand and support the honourable senator, because I honestly think that this bill will adversely affect the people in the region that he represents. Anything we can do to help the aboriginal peoples, which the honourable senator could support, should be done.

I am appreciative of the fact that the honourable senator took time to be with us. I am sure that if I had not conducted the hearings, he would have done so. I feel that it is so important that the honourable senator deal with this matter that I should like to see him introduce an amendment that would resolve the situation in the way in which he feels it should be resolved. Could I hear the honourable senator's comments on that suggestion, please?

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, I thank Senator St. Germain, as I appreciated his input in the Yukon.

I was very surprised to hear Senator Oliver, for whom I have great respect, speak so clearly and so strongly against registration and then end by saying that he will support the amendments that will bring registration into law. You do it two years later, but you are doing it. That is the part that I find totally unacceptable. In answer to Senator St. Germain's question, his suggestion is exactly what we plan to do tomorrow.

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, for approximately 60 years, I believe, Canadians have been required by law to register handguns. Since 1932, they have complied. There are one million handguns in Canada now registered to police, target shooters and gun collectors. Occasionally, handguns also find their way into the wrong hands. Still, they account for only 21 per cent of all criminal use of firearms. Rifles and shotguns, on the other hand, account for almost half of all criminally used firearms in this nation. After 60 years of politically acceptable and widely accepted registration of one type of firearm, we are now engaged in a debate on whether several million more long guns should also be registered. That is the fundamental question which has sparked most of the opposition, as Senator Lucier has so aptly put it.

Where you stand on this question depends upon where you sit. Approximately four years ago, I sat on the Senate committee that examined Bill C-17, the gun control legislation which the government of the Right Honourable Brian Mulroney and his justice minister, the Right Honourable Kim Campbell, presented to Parliament in 1991. At that time, Parliament listened to the majority of Canadians who called for strong gun control. The Senate quickly passed Bill C-17, which spent only three days in committee.

Bill C-68 is in keeping with the fundamental principles found in the law enacted by the Mulroney government. In fact, some of the critics of Bill C-68 are perhaps unknowingly attacking provisions that were implemented by that and previous legislation, for example, firearms acquisition safety courses and order-in-council powers. Furthermore, Bill C-68 does precisely what the standing Senate committee urged the government to do in 1991 in addressing the deficiencies contained in Bill C-17. Approximately four years ago, the committee listened to witnesses but did not propose amendments or delay the bill's passage, maybe because the majority in the House of Commons and the Senate was of the same political stripe. Instead, it wrote a letter to Justice Minister Campbell on December 12, 1991, urging her:

...to take the following steps towards ensuring that the use of firearms in Canada is as safe as possible, and that no further lives are unnecessarily lost.

Specifically, the letter asked for universal firearms registration, for better control over safe storage of guns and for better training procedures. In short, Bill C-68 does exactly those things that the Senate committee urged the government to do.

I have not changed my mind on this issue since the drafting of that letter. As Margaret Thatcher put it, "Some ladies are not for turning. Some gentlemen are very wet." I believe that the intent of the policy of that government was right then, and that the logical extension, Bill C-68, is right now. Of course, some senators will say that it is not the principle of the bill that is at stake but that the legislation is flawed.

The issue before us, then, is the amendments presented by the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. I cannot support these amendments, simply because I do not believe they improve the bill.

I want to outline the reasons why I do not think those amendments improve the legislation we have before us. First, I want to deal with the amendment that attempts to address a most important issue for all of us: The concerns expressed by aboriginal groups who fear that their treaty and aboriginal rights, guaranteed under section 35 of the Constitution, would be affected.

The amendment would require "full and considered consultations" with aboriginal peoples before the government could proclaim any section of the act or regulations that would "abrogate or derogate." Leaving aside the issue of whether the minister has or has not fully consulted with aboriginal communities; leaving aside the non-derogation clause in the bill reaffirming section 35 of the Constitution, making it clear that there is no government intention to breach any rights under section 35; paying attention to what Professor Hutchinson has stated before the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee — namely, that it is the courts who must decide whether aboriginal rights have been infringed upon, and, in so doing, they will not have recourse to any derogation clauses but will look for evidence of what has actually been done — does this amendment protect aboriginal rights more strongly than would the bill left unamended? The answer is clearly in the negative.

If you imagine that the amendment has passed and the bill has passed, what then? The amendment attempts to put a pre-condition on the exercise of power by the Governor in Council to bring the bill into force. If the minister or the Governor in Council feels that the pre-condition has been satisfied, they would presumably simply bring the bill into force. The question of whether the pre-condition had been satisfied would end up before the court. Therefore, this amendment is empty and powerless to protect aboriginal rights any better or any more strongly than they are already protected under section 35 of the Constitution and the provisions in the act to give that effect.

The charge that the bill itself is unconstitutional has certainly been laid in many quarters. I believe Senator Ghitter mentioned it quite categorically several times in his speech. Yet, Professor Hutchinson, the Associate Dean of Osgoode Hall, whom he did not quote, believes that it is not quite as simple as that since there is little Supreme Court guidance on the matter, and there are different views about the effect of the Constitution on aboriginal rights. However, he believes that, given the provisions in clause 117(u) of the bill, which gives the power to introduce special regulations in dealing with aboriginal people in Canada, and given the existing regulations in place, such as the requirement of firearms acquisition certificates which has been in place for 20 years without court challenge, the court would not find this legislation unconstitutional.

Professor Hogg, the eminent constitutional scholar, testified that the solution lies in the direction of relieving aboriginal people from paying fees and providing for the appointment of an aboriginal officer. In other words, it should be done in the regulations. Professor Hutchinson reiterated this point when he said:

On the face of the legislation, it would seem to be on the limits of acceptability — the manner of administration will decide which way it goes.

Professor Quigley of the University of Saskatchewan states unequivocally:

Regulations have the force of law in just the same way as statute.

He went on to state:

In my legal opinion, aboriginal rights are not infringed by the gun registration scheme.

He states that, if we consider the Sparrow case:

Before you breach an aboriginal right you must find that the provision in question is unreasonable, imposes undue hardship or denies the aboriginal people the preferred means of exercising their right. If you test the gun registration scheme against that in my opinion there is not violation.

Professor Quigley goes on to make another telling point on the issue of constitutionality. He reminds us that when statutes or regulations are attacked under the legislation, the court typically endeavours to save as much of the legislation as it can, and to strike down only the offending parts. Therefore, to strike down the fee, for example, would not necessarily jeopardize the entire registration scheme.

As I understand it, the testimony given before the committee seemed to focus the constitutional argument along these lines: Aboriginal peoples have a constitutional right to own and use guns, which non-aboriginal peoples do not. The government can regulate in this area, but it must do so according to the high standards set in Sparrow. Aboriginal rights are taken to be protected unless the government can show that they have acted with considerable trust, that they have consulted, and that the reason for regulation is a substantial and compelling good.

To summarize this very important issue, this amendment on the aboriginal rights question has no substantive impact on their protection. It will not satisfy the legitimate concerns of the aboriginal peoples, nor can the Senate be justified, based on expert testimony, in amending Bill C-68 on constitutional grounds.

A second key amendment concerns delayed implementation of the registration scheme by provinces and territories who oppose it. To begin with, the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee was given an opinion that an opting-out scheme would be unconstitutional. This variation on implementation in some provinces and territories which are opposed would make a national program unworkable. Those intent on criminal activity will certainly seek out guns in regions where guns are not registered. Further, it would not be possible to assess the true costs and effectiveness of the legislation, as the attorneys general of the provinces would like, if registration is not in place, say, between British Columbia and Quebec.

If registration is not universal, then law-abiding gun owners will be penalized in other ways. A gun owner in Manitoba, for example, could not take his unregistered gun across the border to hunt in the U.S. or to take part in a target shooting event. A gun collector in Alberta could not sell his long gun to a collector in British Columbia. Gun manufacturers in Scarborough and Peterborough could not continue to export their products.

It has also been suggested that businesses in provinces where registration is not in effect could not continue to import guns from the U.S. or elsewhere. These are not measures for law-abiding gun owners. All this, as has been pointed out, is to postpone the legislation from 2003 to 2005.

That brings me to a matter that has been called "decriminalization." In this regard, one amendment would remove from the Criminal Code the offence of possessing an unregistered firearm. The other would eliminate minimum sentences imposed for a second or third conviction.

Without amendment, the bill allows police and Crown prosecutors to use their judgment and distinguish law-abiding gun owners from others clearly engaged in crime. Police will charge some legitimate gun owners who fail to register their guns, perhaps after giving them a warning and time to comply with the law. They will charge them with the summary offence under the proposed Firearms Act that this bill allows. Despite what gun owners in the west have been told, on conviction, he or she will not have a criminal record.

Police also need the power to charge members of organized crime, gun smugglers caught with a large number of unregistered guns, or someone about to commit a robbery, with a criminal offence. If we remove sections 91 and 92 from the Criminal Code, as the amendments suggest, we rob them of that power. In the guise of decriminalizing the bill for ordinary citizens, we decriminalize criminals.

The one-year minimum sentence for a second conviction under section 92 of the Criminal Code also clearly applies to criminals, not to ordinary citizens who fail to register their guns. It would not cause to be jailed a gun owner who had failed to register and had been found guilty of a summary offence under the proposed Firearms Act. It would not apply to a gun owner who had defied the law and was charged again under section 91 of the code. It would apply only to criminals already convicted of a serious offence under section 92.

For criminals, a much stiffer, four-year minimum sentence for using a gun in 10 serious crimes is provided for in this bill. The amendment would not change that. However, it takes away the minimum sentence for criminals who acquire and supply unregistered guns, and who have been convicted at least once. The minimum sentence tells the courts that Parliament believes gun possession for underground trafficking, or motorcycle gang wars, or organized crime is a serious matter. That message should stand.

I want to make a couple of comments before concluding. First, on the issue of regional representation, it is not accurate to characterize the West as a region entirely opposed to this legislation. Let me name just a few of the groups in Manitoba, which fully endorse Bill C-68. They are the Brandon Police Service; the Children's Home of Winnipeg; the John Howard Society of Manitoba; the Manitoba Action Committee on the Status of Women; the Manitoba Child Care Association; the Manitoba Teacher's Society; the Manitoba Police Association; the Portage Women's Shelter; the Winnipeg Health Department; the Winnipeg Municipal Council; and the Winnipeg Police Service.

The Manitoba Action Committee on the Status of Women cites statistics that show Manitoba has the highest annual average number and rate of hospitalization from firearm injuries of any province. The same organization has called attention to the role firearms play in domestic violence and violence against women. In Winnipeg, in a six-month period, 150 firearms were stolen in 90 break-ins, mostly by young offenders. All across the country, thousands of organizations and virtually every police association, except Saskatchewan's, support the legislation.

The Chair of the Law and Amendments Committee of the Canadian Police Association, who testified before the committee in the Senate, had this to say:

It is the view of the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police that gun control generally, and Bill C-68 in particular, is a positive, preventive, and powerful piece of legislation which will reduce crime, save lives, and significantly assist in the work of police officers.

In a letter of November 17 to the Leader of the Opposition, the Canadian Association of Police categorically stated that they support Bill C-68 without amendment.

Your Honour, may I have just a few more minutes?

• (1650)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: The rules require that I point out that the honourable senator's time has expired.

Is there leave for her to continue?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Spivak: Thank you, honourable senators.

The police association stated in its testimony that it had canvassed its members extensively. Many people say their view does not apply to the ordinary cop on the beat. Not a single member among the rank and file of police officers called me to suggest opposition to the bill. I am sure my friends here would have received such calls had that sentiment existed.

That brings me to the subject of national unity, a subject on which Senator Ghitter waxed eloquent yesterday. I fully agree with Senator Ghitter that that should be our primary preoccupation in these parlous times, but with regard to this bill, it is no surprise that I view the matter slightly differently. It seems to me that national unity would be well served if we were to concentrate on the problems which this bill is attempting to address: issues of public health, safety, security in our cities, towns and rural areas, crime prevention and violence.

We need to recognize that the provisions of this bill with regard to registration constitute a difference of degree, not of kind, since we have had licensing and registration in Canada for many years. This should not be used as a bargaining tool in the debate on national unity, nor should the criminal law power be involved in the demands for devolution on the part of the provinces — an insatiable demand, I might add. The enthusiasm of provincial premiers to vest more power in themselves is universal and profound.

Andrew Coyne coined a new term over the weekend, "unapologetic federalism," which carries with it the notion that the federal government should perform a vital, integrative role in the nation's affairs while allowing the provinces to exercise their traditional powers.

The Senate's role is to assess legislation and also to pass good legislation. That is the target here. The role of the Senate is not simply to bounce the bill back to the House so that they can simply return it to us unchanged, or not at all. In the immortal words of Izzy Asper, the Senate is not "chopped liver." The Senate has a role and a responsibility in Parliament.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, as the tragic date of December 6 approaches, we must remember the 14 innocent young women who left us on that day. Their legacy should be a nation that has taken itself in hand.

[English]

Hon. Terry Stratton: Honourable senators, I have a question on behalf of the Swampy Cree Tribal Council from in and around The Pas. They represent 10,000 folks up there. They have stated quite clearly that they oppose Bill C-68 and any regulations that are to be defined under that act at a later time. They say this is just another example of the Government of Canada doing something to native people instead of doing what the First Nations governments want. It is now time to change all that.

How does the honourable senator respond to that comment? These people are clearly against the bill because they have not been consulted.

Senator Spivak: From what I have read of the testimony — I did not go everywhere that other senators went; I was at only one meeting in Winnipeg — it seems to me that what the aboriginal peoples want is to be exempt from this legislation.

Senator Stratton: They want to be consulted.

Senator Spivak: Perhaps some of them wish to be exempted. I am sure all of them wish to be consulted. If the minister has not consulted — and apparently, from what I gathered in committee, he has time to consult — the regulations will not be finally established until 2003. He said in his appearance before us that no rights —

Senator Watt: But that is after the fact.

Senator Spivak: Apparently, regulations in law are the same in terms of constitutional and legal value. That is what we have been told. I am not a lawyer. You are the lawyer, and I value your opinion.

However, if they are not suspended — and I asked the minister that question deliberately for that reason — then does the minister not have from now until 2003 to get it right? If he does not get it right, since there is not all that much jurisprudence on Sparrow, is it not up to the courts? Sparrow is a court decision.

I see Senator Andreychuk wincing. Put me right, please. That is my answer to you.

Hon. Lorna Milne: Honourable senators, the honourable senator is a pretty hard act to follow.

I must admit that I am a bit over-awed and a bit nervous, for I had really intended to postpone speaking in this historic house until I knew something more about its traditions and the opportunities that it can offer for bettering life for Canadians. However, I really cannot let pass this report from the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs without imploping my honourable colleagues to defeat these amendments and to pass Bill C-68 as it was sent to us.

Senator St. Germain: On a point of order, is the debate continuing? I have a question for Senator Spivak.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I must recognize the honourable senator.

Senator St. Germain: I am being denied my question.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Order, please.

I have recognized Honourable Senator Milne.

Senator St. Germain: I yield to the honourable senator.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I recognized the Honourable Senator Milne to make a speech. I did not hear the Honourable Senator St. Germain say he wished to ask a question. I saw him stand up. I interpreted that as his wish to participate in the debate. The traditional custom is that one goes from right to left, alternating. For that reason, I recognized the Honourable Senator Milne, thinking that the Honourable Senator St. Germain wished to speak in the debate, and not being aware that he wished to ask a question.

Senator Milne?

Senator Milne: Thank you, honourable senators.

I freely admit that my original reasons for supporting gun control were very emotional reasons. It is now 20 years and six months almost to the very day since my husband reported in the other place on May 28, 1975, that there had been a horrific incident in the Brampton Centennial High School. He reported, and I will quote from Hansard of that day:

Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of grief and shock that I rise to advise the House that about an hour ago there was a major shooting in the town of Brampton —

I still cannot talk about it. I apologize.

— as a result of which a high school teacher and a student were murdered and possibly as many as — thirteen

— other students injured by the same gunfire. I should like to ask the Solicitor General if he would pledge his efforts to have the —

RCMP

— cooperate in any way they can with the local police relative to the gun issue and perhaps even question whether the government will seriously review gun legislation in Canada?

John Slinger, the 17-year-old who was murdered that day, was one of our son's best friends. As they were walking down the hall to go to their next class of "phys.ed.," John decided to use a washroom in the hallway while our son went on to the change rooms. Because of that innocent choice, one young man died and one young man lived.

Honourable senators, some of you will remember that day, for the sheer horror and shock that swept across Canada led directly to the passage of Bill C-51 in 1978. Many of the honourable senators opposite were deeply involved, as Senator Spivak was, with the passage of Bill C-17 by the last government in 1991.

Although that day in May 20 years ago was so personally traumatic, as you can tell by the tremor in my voice, I do not want to leave the members of this house with the impression that my emotions are still running away with my reason.

My friends, those two bills only began the process of giving our police forces the tools that they need to reduce street crime; to deal with the domestic violence and to increase community safety — goals to which I know we are all committed.

Although I have strong reservations about many of the proposed amendments to this bill that are included in the committee's report, I will confine my remarks to two specific features of these amendments. The first is the decriminalization of the bill which is dealt with in proposed amendments numbers one, two, six, seven, nine and ten, which remove all long gun possession offences from the Criminal Code.

As it stands, honourable senators, Bill C-68 provides for a first-time summary conviction offence which is aimed at first-time offenders who may have failed to register their long guns for some reason or another, including ignorance of the law. This was developed with input from many groups to address truly inadvertent factual situations. However, the bill also ensures that more serious second and repeat offences would be indictable under the Criminal Code. This provision was very carefully tailored so as not to trivialize the conduct of people who act in deliberate and repeated defiance of the law — in other words, deliberate criminals. Removing this provision eliminates any deterrent factor for not obeying the law; in fact, it trivializes the entire bill.

What effect would this amendment have on the following situations? For example, let us assume that a stash of long guns is discovered on the premises of one of these infamous motorcycle gangs whose members are suspected of selling sawed-off shotguns. The amendments would mean that these people could only be charged with a minor summary Firearms Act offence.

What if the police stopped someone with a long gun who appeared to be on their way to commit a convenience store robbery? Again, this would lead only to a tap on the wrist for the potential robber.

The bill as it stands — the unamended bill — seems to strike a good balance between protecting those who inadvertently fail or forget to register their long guns, and those who fail to register because of a serious criminal intent.

Honourable senators, one should consider that the justice system is not a cold, calculating computer. As my friend Senator Roux pointed out, police and prosecutors have discretion. It seems that critics of the bill have no faith in our system. I differ with that assessment. I believe that we can place our trust in the hands of the police and Crown prosecutors not to prosecute when there is a clear case of inadvertent omission. The objective of our justice system is to foster compliance, not to look for opportunities to fill our jails.

A person who reaches the stage where minimum sentences will apply is a person who has ignored numerous warnings from authorities and has been charged and convicted summarily of refusing to register a firearm. If such a person still refused to comply, he or she would merely be showing wilful disregard for the law. Such contempt for our system of justice should be treated harshly.

Honourable senators, I recall in committee the point was made several times that other jurisdictions with universal registration have seen only about a 60-per-cent compliance. This point was made to suggest that no system can gather sufficient data to make a registry useful to the police. Clearly, that fact really demonstrates the need for the option of resorting to criminal sanction in order to correct this non-compliance, and give the system some teeth.

As well, honourable senators, the amendment to the transitional provisions of the bill is structured in such a way, by deeming people to have licences and registration certificates by at least January 1, 2001 and January 1, 2003 respectively or such other later date as is prescribed, that licensing and registration of long guns need never come into force. Passing these amendments would completely gut the registration aspects of this bill, and for this reason I strongly oppose these amendments. I urge honourable senators to oppose them as well.

I also wish to touch on the powers of the Governor in Council because there was some reference in committee to secret proceedings by government which would somehow make people criminals without their knowledge. Although regulatory powers are not common in the Criminal Code, they do exist. In fact, the current Criminal Code provides that the Governor in Council may designate a type of firearm as a restricted or prohibited firearm by way of regulation. What happens is that these regulations come into force. Parliament may then examine them if it wishes. This regime was created in 1968 and confirmed and expanded by Justice Minister Campbell's Bill C-17. If a weapon were designated "restricted" or "prohibited" under the existing legislation and a person failed to register it, surrender it or grandfather it, under our present law, they would already be guilty of a criminal offence. This is the normal regulatory process and it is already law.

For everything except the definition of restricted and prohibited weapons, the bill as proposed by the minister would delay implementation of any regulation relating to gun control by at least 30 sitting days or, as you know, a number of months. I believe the minister really deserves to be applauded for advancing such a new and open process. What is new in this proposed legislation is that Parliament will have to give a full airing of all these regulatory aspects of the gun control system before the regulations can be enacted, with the exception of the designation of restricted and prohibited weapons. These restriction and prohibition orders currently fall into the category of regulations that do not require advance parliamentary review before coming into force. Their status is not changed by the bill.

The amendments proposed by the committee seek to place these prohibition and restriction orders also in the class of regulation that requires 30 sitting days of review before implementation is possible. Creating such a delay would be inappropriate in this instance as the minister really needs to be able to continue to deal swiftly with any sudden developments in the weapons market to keep Canada free of these new and more lethal weapons.

Honourable senators, just so no one thinks this whole approach to regulation is new, I can provide other examples of this kind of regulation. The Narcotics Control Act allows the Governor in Council to designate certain substances as "controlled" substances for the purposes of the act. The act empowers the government to control dangerous drugs, in a general sense, but it is up to the Governor in Council to decide what specific substances constitute dangerous drugs. Other examples of such federal acts are the Hazardous Products Act, the Food and Drugs Act and the Explosives Act. This is nothing new.

Second, I should like to speak to amendment number 14, which would allow provinces and territories to delay implementation of this act — in effect, to opt out for up to 10 years. I want to reinforce what Senator Spivak said because, in my opinion, this is potentially one of the most dangerous provisions of all the proposed amendments. I believe it is illegal as well as unconstitutional, for it would create two different Criminal Code regimes in Canada which would be operating at the same time, an almost impossible administrative nightmare, not only for the police forces but also for Customs Canada.

Implementation of licensing and registration is already in this bill. It is to be phased in over a long period of time, six and eight years respectively. The longer we wait, the worse the problem becomes.

I also want to assure Senator Ghitter that I did not hide away here in Ottawa or in this room. I consulted with Calgary city aldermen, among others who assured me — some of them were quite heated about it — that we should, "Get on with the job, stop talking about it and, for Pete's sake pass Bill C-68."

Calgary City Council was one of the groups approached by senators as they wended their way through the West during the last few weeks. I understand that they turned down the opportunity to appear before the senators. They repeated their continued support for the Canadian Federation of Municipalities and their strong support for this bill.

This opting-in amendment has not been given enough serious consideration in view of the damaging consequences it would have on the appropriate and equal operation of the law. For example, by having two different Criminal Codes operating within different jurisdictions, a long gun owned by someone in an opt-in province — for example, Quebec — could not be sold to someone living in an opt-out province — like, perhaps, Ontario — because a licence would be required for that sale.

• (1710)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: The honourable senator's time has expired. Is there leave for her to continue?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Milne: Thank you, honourable senators.

I believe that this amendment would lead to, and even promote, interprovincial smuggling. All provincial and territorial governments have stressed to the Senate committee the need to have national standards.

This amendment also raises issues under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Under the old Part III of the Criminal Code, the transfer of a long gun to someone without an FAC is punishable by up to two years' imprisonment. Under the new Part III, the same action is punishable by up to five years' imprisonment. This raises questions about the equality guarantee within the Charter and the right not to be deprived of liberty except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice in the Charter.

I echo what Senator Carstairs said yesterday: By the division of powers in the Constitution Act of 1867, the provinces do not have the authority to legislate criminal law. By requiring them to pass a provincial statute to opt in, this amendment, in effect, gives them that power. It seems to me that this is unconstitutional.

Another point to consider is the difficulty that such uneven application of this law would cause Canada Customs. Importation and exportation are clearly and exclusively areas of federal law-making power. Under Bill C-68, a licence and a registration certificate is required to bring guns into the country, or to take them out. How could authorities possibly enforce different export rules among different provinces? What about foreign visitors or groups of hunters coming in? Would a licence certificate be issued for someone, for example, who arrives at the borders of an opt-in province but who intends to travel to an opt-out province? Should customs officers be trained differently according to where they will be stationed? How will the public perceive these differences? We cannot pass a bill that provides for differences in the application of the law according to province and territory. It seems to me that this is clearly bad law.

I might add that there are immense cost implications as well. Application of the bill as it stands was intended to be a cost neutral system, but this was predicated upon revenues received from registration across Canada, of gun owners who become licensed across Canada; not on some unknown fraction of that amount.

To sum up, the opting-in amendment would make this legislation so confusing, not to mention vague, that it would become unenforceable and unworkable. As I said before, it is simply bad law.

The bill will not prevent every crime under every circumstance, and I do not think anyone has ever claimed that it will. One can argue for or against any specific amendment, but I urge my colleagues not to lose sight of the forest through gazing at the trees. This bill will help in the continuing struggle to prevent Canada from becoming another gun culture.

A group of people was here from Montreal whose relatives had been slaughtered six years ago, and I wish to quote from one of them. Catherine Bergeron, whose sister was slain by Marc Lépine, urged this house, if I may paraphrase her, to go beyond partisanship; to go deep within ourselves to adopt the bill just as it is.

I urge honourable senators to join with me in defeating the amendments contained in this committee report, and sending Bill C-68 back to the other place in unamended form so that the process may begin.

Honourable senators, if I could ask your indulgence, this has been sort of an unusual maiden speech. Perhaps I will have the opportunity at some future time to give a more proper kind of maiden speech. This has been a little bedraggled, perhaps, and belated, but I should like to extol the many virtues of the place where I live. It is a wonderful place, a cosmopolitan place, and I should like to leave you with that thought rather than remind you of the traumatic and tragic incident that took place there 20 years ago.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, it being 5:15 p.m., and a vote having been ordered by the Senate for 5:30 p.m., pursuant to rule 67(3), I must interrupt the proceedings so that the Senate may proceed to the deferred division on the motion respecting the committee report on Bill C-69.

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow: Your Honour, considering the lateness of the day, would it still be possible to make an amendment tomorrow, or is there a time restraint of a day's notice before an amendment can be made? I have been waiting to speak.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: There is no requirement for a day's notice to make an amendment.

Senator Sparrow: Then it can be made tomorrow. Thank you.
Debate suspended.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT BILL, 1995

MOTION TO INSTRUCT LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE TO TABLE FINAL REPORT NEGATIVED ON DIVISION

On the Order:

On the motion of the Honourable Senator Fairbairn, P.C.,
seconded by the Honourable Senator Stewart,

That it be an instruction of this House to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs that no later than Wednesday, November 22, 1995, it present its final report to the Senate on the Message from the House of Commons, dated June 20, 1995, and on the motion of the Honourable Senator Graham dated June 28, 1995, regarding Bill C-69, An Act to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions and the readjustment of electoral boundaries.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the practice would be to ring the bells. Strictly speaking, the bells are supposed to ring for 15 minutes.

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Nil

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, before we proceed to the next order of business, which will be Bill C-68, I wish to advise you that, as there is a probability that we may be sitting later this day, the cafeteria will be open until 2030 hours and the Parliamentary Restaurant will be open until 2100 hours.

We will now proceed with Bill C-68.

FIREARMS BILL

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—
DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Beaudoin, seconded by the Honourable Senator Grimard, for the adoption of the Sixteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, (Bill C-68, respecting firearms and other weapons, with amendments), presented in the Senate on Monday, 20th November, 1995.

[Translation]

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. Last week we said we would vote on Bill C-68. There was talk of the possibility of a somewhat earlier vote, but no time was specified.

You know that, tomorrow, the Secretary General of the United Nations will be visiting. A number of people are involved. We want to be here to vote. We should know the time of the vote, so we will not be taken by surprise. Could we know exactly what was agreed on regarding the vote and the exact time it will be held tomorrow?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is the decision of this house that the vote will take place at 5:30 p.m. tomorrow, and that the bells will sound at 5:15 p.m.

I have received no other notice, unless the senators have reached agreement among themselves.

[English]

• (1740)

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is true that when we discussed the house order for a vote at 5:30, the possibility was raised that, with unanimous consent, the vote might be advanced. Indeed, the proposition was put forward by Senator Prud'homme at that time. I do not foresee at the present time that that vote would be advanced to earlier than 5:30 because of the number of honourable senators on both sides of the house who have indicated that they would like to speak to this very important piece of legislation. I would anticipate, at least from this side — and I would await comments from the Deputy Leader of the Opposition — that we will be debating Bill C-68 almost up to the time of the vote tomorrow afternoon.

Senator Berntson: Honourable senators, I think we have more interest in this debate than we have time for the debate. I agree with my colleague opposite, and I suggest that we put all musings aside and decide now that we will have the vote as previously indicated.

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, Canadians from across the country have passionately presented their views on both sides of this issue. I have attempted to listen to all, and have tried to keep an open mind.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, could I please ask for some silence so that the honourable senator may continue?

Senator Di Nino: Thank you, Your Honour.

Honourable senators, before I go any further, let me confess that my personal opinion on gun ownership is both extreme and unreasonable. I do not own nor do I intend to own a gun. If I could, I would ban all guns. But, alas, my Pollyanna stance ignores the Canadian reality.

Over the past several months, I have heard supporters of this legislation, an impressive list of respected Canadians and Canadian organizations, put forth positions with which I can identify. I must admit that, at the outset, I generally supported their arguments.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, could I please ask honourable senators who need to have conversations to please have them outside of the chamber, so that the honourable senator may be heard.

Senator Di Nino: I appreciate your direction once again, Your Honour.

I generally supported their arguments as I did during the debates on the previous gun legislation, Bill C-17. However, unlike 1991, this time I decided to listen to arguments of Canadians with opposing views. I have tried to read all that has come across my desk. I do not think that I have succeeded, but I tried. I have talked to Canadians from Whitehorse to Port Perry; from Toronto to Iqaluit; and from Saint John to Regina. I was surprised to discover that millions of Canadians oppose this bill.

Rosemary Kuptana, President of the Inuit Tapirisat, eloquently expressed the concerns of Canadians living in remote, isolated communities and, in particular, the effect that this legislation, if passed, would have on the lifestyle and, in many cases, the survival of natives in the Northwest Territories. John Williams of Port Perry, Ontario, was as eloquent in his representation of millions of Canadians who are law-abiding, contributing members of society who strongly and honestly believe that this bill is an unnecessary and serious infringement on their civil rights. Doctor Judith Ross who, when asked if this bill would marginalize gun owners the way smokers have been and make them second class citizens in the eyes of many, replied that Bill C-68 will not only marginalize gun owners but also criminalize them.

An organization which carries a lot of weight that would influence my opinion is the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police. I support, and I want to continue supporting our police forces. Too often in the past, we have not backed legitimate police concerns, especially in Metro Toronto. When speaking to rank and file officers, I discovered that many, if not most, oppose this bill. One officer with whom I spoke told me that the 40 officers in the unit for which he is responsible unanimously oppose Bill C-68. We know that the Ontario Police Association also opposes this bill, as do other police forces across Canada.

We have heard numerous arguments with supporting statistics which do not appear to stand up to scrutiny. I am tabling a copy of an article entitled: "Off the Mark," written by Karen Selick for the magazine The Next City. Among other things, it raises some interesting questions and challenges a number of assumptions put forth by Mr. Rock.

Because of time constraints — and I do not think the time allowed would permit me to quote fairly from this article in a balanced and just manner — instead of cherry-picking from the article, I would rather just table it. I hope that you will all read it. I do not necessarily agree with all she writes, but the article is thought provoking, and I recommend that you look at it before deciding how to vote tomorrow.

Honourable colleagues, the committee and Canadians have heard from four provincial governments and both territorial governments, including my own province of Ontario. They all oppose the passage of Bill C-68. Their arguments are well founded and thoughtful, and deserve our attention.

Mr. Rock dismisses their arguments unceremoniously. Mr. Rock has also turned a deaf ear to the millions of Canadians who disagree with Bill C-68. They believe that he has treated them disrespectfully and contemptuously, even though these millions of Canadians share the same concerns as Mr. Rock and ourselves about crime and criminals, but disagree with Mr. Rock as to whether this legislation will solve any of the problems created by those who misuse guns.

My personal opinion is that this bill does not deal severely enough with the criminals who carry or use guns. Bill C-68 does not contain harsh enough penalties for those who misuse weapons. We must send the strongest possible message to those who use firearms in the commission of crimes, those who smuggle firearms into Canada, and those who possess illegal weapons. We must let them know that law-abiding Canadians will not tolerate their actions, and that they will pay a heavy price. Those who believe that "packing a piece" is a status symbol must be taught a lesson they will not easily forget.

Honourable senators, Bill C-68 does not do this. This bill will do nothing to stop illegally owned weapons from getting on to our streets. If this legislation is passed, I am afraid that the streets will not be safer and neither will our schools.

It seems to me that Mr. Rock is playing political games with window-dressing and is not addressing the real problem of the criminals who threaten and shoot people. Bill C-68 may very well help criminals by expanding the illegal underground market for restricted and banned weapons.

For the past several months, Canadians have engaged in this passionate debate and, as anticipated, the debate has flushed out weaknesses in this bill. Some of the weaknesses are reflected in the proposed amendments.

What the amendments do not truly reflect is the frustration and anger felt by so many Canadians whose voices are being ignored. These men and women are not hoodlums or criminals, although Bill C-68 may criminalize some of them. They care as passionately as all of us about the painful and atrocious tragedies which result from criminal acts involving guns. They are farmers and professionals, small and large business owners, housewives and factory workers, grandparents and sales clerks. They are all citizens like you and me, and they come from every corner of our country. They have been understanding and patient. However, I fear they are reaching the limits of their tolerance. Yes, these are real Canadians, and there are millions of them.

• (1750)

Honourable senators, I may not totally agree with them, but I will not ignore them. Because of all the eloquent voices raised in protest to this bill by so many Canadians, I believe that the best way to deal with this issue is for the Parliament of Canada to delay the passage of this bill for a couple of years.

I ask the Minister of Justice to allow time for calm reflection, a period of thoughtful contemplation and dialogue among interested Canadians. What is the hurry, Mr. Rock? Why are we creating another divisive issue which pits Canadian against Canadian, especially at this time in our history?

With the thoughtful input of all the stakeholders during the next couple of years, we can craft a bill which will really get tough on criminals and be fair to law-abiding Canadians.

If this bill is passed now, then Karen Selick's prediction may come to pass:

But the debate that raged throughout Canada in 1994 and 1995 will ultimately prove to be just one of many battles in a long, long war.

Honourable senators, others in this chamber have spoken much more eloquently than I ever could on the pros and cons of this bill. What I have done is to listen to Canadians who are being ignored and, with my vote tomorrow, I will speak on their behalf.

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, I see the clock and I will try to speak within the time. I know that honourable senators opposite have regional caucuses scheduled for six o'clock. I assure honourable senators that I will not go beyond two or three minutes past six.

I want to address just one aspect of the current debate. I think it is best illustrated in a little story that I read about a few weeks ago. At a recent National Rifle Association convention in Phoenix, Arizona, all the delegates were observed to be walking the halls with empty holsters. The question which immediately crossed my mind was: Why would such ardent gun owners be caught without their shooting irons handy? The answer is a simple one: The NRA demands that their members deposit their guns at the door as a pre-condition to admission. In other words, the common good of the membership is served by a rigorous control of the individuals who make up the association.

Although NRA officials openly state that people, not guns, kill people, I believe the actions taken in organizing their conventions speak louder than their words.

Clearly, the organizers worry about the exceptions, and I emphasize the exceptions. The greatest threat to any free association is the fear of the unexpected; and the greatest threat to freedom is fear.

Robert Frost had the gift of saying important things with the beauty of simplicity. "There's nothing I am afraid of like scared people," he once observed. I would like to reflect briefly on this thought in stressing the great significance of the legislation before us today.

None of us can be unaffected by the waves of crime and violence so endemic in our country today. I do not think any supporters of this legislation believe that this will be the final chapter in the government's fight against the tragedy incurred by far too many of our citizens as a result of the actions of some gunmen. This, of course, can be of the random variety, but it can be of the far more dangerous, premeditated kind of violence as well. Frost was right in his observation — fear generates fear. It destroys confidence. It destroys optimism. It generates paralysis.

No nation can be free, no people can be free, living in a culture or society where people are scared. Closed doors are not the route of freedom. No nation living behind closed doors is free. The important thing to remember about freedom, honourable senators, is that it is really a state of mind. It is the openness of spirit with which we think of ourselves and others. That is why random violence and terror are so detrimental to liberty and democratic values. Such acts close the portals of the confidence citizens have in themselves and in their fellow human beings. Such acts have become part of the process of decay within peace-loving nations such as ours.

That is why, honourable senators, we must be as jealous of our responsibilities as we are of our liberties. Like the National Rifle Association, we must leave our weapons at the door or, to come to the present debate, we must register them because the fear of the unexpected, of the unanticipated, can ruin many a fine family, many a fine association, and many a country.

Someone once said that liberty means responsibility. Of course it is also true that many people dread responsibility. In lieu of the very focused opposition to gun control in some sections of our society, in some areas of our country, the gun control debate epitomizes the quandary that democratic governments must periodically experience in protecting liberty.

Somehow, governments must balance individual rights against the common good. This balancing act is never-ending. We must remember, as well, that the fight to make the streets of our nation safer has as much to do with things like literacy as it has to do with law. The security of Canadians is as much contingent on health as it is on gun control. Public safety has as much to do with living standards as with sentencing. It is in this regard, honourable senators, that I speak of the task of government as a continuing balancing act.

The important point to make today, however, is that gun control means the preservation of the common good, even though there may be some concessions individual gun owners will have to make. In other words, gun owners must consider coming to the association meeting with empty holsters, a concession, in my opinion, to the preservation of the common good of the community.

• (1800)

No one who loves liberty can fail to be impressed by the arguments of farmers, of hunters, of northerners, and of firearms enthusiasts generally. I have followed the debates very closely. They have mounted a significant and well-publicized campaign. They fear that gun control could mean prosecution of innocent Canadians for failure to register their weapons. They fear the loss of constitutional freedoms. They fear the loss of important sources of traditional incomes and the impact on livelihoods. In many instances, they fear the inconveniences and the costs associated with the registration plan. I recognize and empathize with what I am sure those individuals feel are their very legitimate concerns.

[Senator Graham]

However, honourable senators, there is a greater fear at work in all of this, and it is the fear which can destroy freedom, the closed doors which lock out the spirit of liberty from the hearts and the minds of Canadians. I must say that, for those victims of violence inflicted by guns, and for all those who live behind closed doors in fear of violence inflicted by guns, and for all those who have witnessed violence inflicted by guns, all other fears must be secondary. They have one simple request to make of Canadians: When you come to the meeting, leave your guns at the door. The common good of Canadians rests on the fact that we recognize that it is people with guns who kill people.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is now a few minutes after six o'clock. If it is the wish of the Senate, I will not see the clock. Under the rules, I am to leave the chair at six o'clock. What is the wish of the Senate?

Hon. William M. Kelly: I believe we are about to recess until eight o'clock. I am the next in line to speak. I hope that senators will indulge me and allow me to speak at eight o'clock. I am an old man and have to get to bed early.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it being six o'clock, I leave the chair, to return at eight o'clock.

The Senate adjourned until 8 p.m.

• (2000)

At 8 p.m. the sitting of the Senate resumed.

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, I apologize to Senator Doyle. I did not realize that he had a question which he wished to direct to Senator Graham. Therefore, providing that I can retain my place, I ask that Senator Doyle be allowed to ask his question now.

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Will you accept a question, senator?

Senator Graham: Absolutely; especially from you, Senator Doyle.

Senator Doyle: In that spirit, allow me to say how impressed I was with your contribution to this debate. From time to time, we all need reminding that we do not come to this chamber to be strangers. We are Canadians all, with goals to share and hopes to achieve. I have not spoken to anyone on either side of this chamber who does not wish for the wisdom to devise more effective gun control.

The question which disturbs me is this: Could we not have been closer than we are today to that goal had we come together at the beginning without legislation already passed in the other place and already assumed to be beyond improvement?

Would the honourable senator, in the spirit of his message, say to his colleagues that the time has come for a return of prestudy of bills in areas in which the public good would be best served by giving our committees the opportunity to work with open minds and empty holsters?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Graham: Senator Doyle always has words of wisdom. I do remember the days of prestudy. I recall that when we dealt with the emergency situation in the country with respect to the railway strike, we pre-examined that proposed legislation, but it was not prestudied.

In the same spirit of cooperation which Senator Doyle is seeking from this side, I say to him that it would have been very helpful if the bill which is now before us had been further examined. It could, indeed, have been dealt with by the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs over the summer when there were several months during which the committee could have done a proper examination of the bill, rather than waiting until time was running out.

I take Senator Doyle's suggestion in the best spirit of the chamber. It is something to which I would not turn a blind eye or a blind ear, particularly when it comes from someone with his very impressive credentials.

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, on several occasions during my time as a senator, this place has debated highly contentious and politically charged legislation. The first such legislation to which I was exposed dealt with the National Energy Program. Since then, we have had the GST legislation and, of course, Bill C-22, the bill relating to the Pearson International Airport. We have before us today, Bill C-68, which is as contentious as anything that has been brought before the Senate recently.

The lesson I learned from some of these debates, and in particular the marathon GST debate, is that we all lose when the Senate is motivated, or appears to be motivated, by partisan politics. We, as individual senators, lose and, more important, this institution, and the people whom we are appointed to serve, lose.

This place is, or should be, the house of sober second thought. I do not believe, and have never believed, that partisanship should be our preoccupation. It is perhaps in vain, but I would hope that we could put aside partisanship and partisan objectives in our consideration of Bill C-68. The debate on Bill C-68 has been emotional and polarized. Those supporting the bill and those opposing it come to it from the very divergent views of the society in which we live, and of the society to which we aspire. They also come to this bill from very different views of the motives, and of the proper role of government in that society.

I believe the Senate performs its best service to Canadians when it cuts through the emotions and the politics, and examines the essence of the proposed legislation which comes before it. That is what I should like to accomplish with this bill and the amendments to it which have been proposed by the committee.

Those of you who know me, know that I am an avid shooter and hunter. I therefore bring to this debate a certain perspective and a certain knowledge of firearms. The time available does not allow me to discuss each proposed amendment in detail. I will endeavour to be brief.

First, I have serious concerns about the proposed amendment which would allow individual provinces to delay enforcement of this legislation for up to eight years. In that regard, I have three concerns.

The first is that this could result in something constituting an offence in one part of Canada and not in another. I believe that, particularly in matters of criminal law, all Canadians, wherever they are in Canada, must be treated equally.

Second, I worry about the precedent we are establishing for asymmetrical federalism by statute in an area of exclusive federal jurisdiction. I do not believe we have considered the implications of that seriously enough. Is a special-purpose piece of legislation such as Bill C-68 the appropriate means to create such a far-reaching precedent?

Third, I worry that such a provision would encourage interprovincial smuggling of restricted firearms. We have seen how varying provincial taxation regimes led to the smuggling of tobacco on an unprecedented scale. I am afraid that, as a result of this amendment, the same type of situation would occur with respect to firearms.

I do not agree with the proposed amendment relating to antique firearms. As someone very familiar with firearms of all sorts, I know that antique weapons can be just as dangerous and lethal, in fact often more so, as modern weapons. I find it entirely reasonable, therefore, that they should be brought under the same regime.

• (2010)

Certain of the proposed amendments can be handled by regulation and, in fact, are better handled by regulation. I refer in particular to exemptions of bona fide sporting guns from the definition of prohibited firearms and the exception of bona fide museums from registration fees. The museum situation is an excellent case in point supporting regulations over a statutory amendment. What constitutes a bona fide museum will have to be carefully defined in order to avoid every gun owner, gun collector or gun merchant calling themselves a museum in order to evade the provisions of this legislation.

I also understand that bona fide museums should have no administrative difficulty complying with the provisions of Bill C-68. They will simply turn over their catalogue of pieces to the registrar and, if done in the first year after proclamation, will pay no fee.

Honourable senators, I have several reservations about the proposed amendment that would require full and considered consultations to ensure that aboriginal and treaty rights are not eroded prior to proclamation of any section of Bill C-68, or any regulation under Bill C-68 that affects aboriginals. I fully recognize that First Nations have special constitutional and treaty rights. My understanding, however, is that this requirement for consultation goes beyond the requirements in section 35 of the Constitution Act. It is also my understanding that the courts have held that aboriginal and treaty rights are not absolute, but this amendment would make them so, at least in the context of Bill C-68.

Again we are establishing a major constitutional precedent in a special-purpose statute. That troubles me.

I also fear that the amendment will muddy the waters. What constitutes full and considered consultations? Who decides? In my view, the amendment could easily be a recipe for endless court proceedings.

Finally, I do not agree with the amendment that removes minimum sentencing requirements for repeat offenders. This would have the effect of reducing considerably the teeth in the legislation to deal effectively with the illegal trade of firearms. The same applies with the shift from penalties under the Criminal Code to summary conviction under the Firearms Act.

We must ask ourselves how important this legislation is and how serious we are in its implementation. If this is important legislation and if we are serious, let us not water it down too much. Let us give the authorities the tools they need for enforcement.

On the other hand, the committee has proposed amendments in which I see merit. I have concerns about the minister or the Governor in Council being able to criminalize by regulation — if I may put it that way — as is contemplated by clause 119(6).

The government contends that the public consultation process which attends the making of such regulations guards against abuse. The consultation process involves prepublication in the Canada Gazette and a consultation period of at least 30 days, or 70 days if Canada's international treaty obligations are involved. However, I point out that this process exists by Treasury Board guideline, not by statute or even by regulation. It also does not involve Parliament. I have personal knowledge of at least one situation where departmental officials tried to sneak a proposed regulation through in the dog days of summer, and were brought up short only by a vigilant industry and by international complaints through diplomatic channels.

Accordingly, I do not have the same degree of faith in this process as my government friends. I sympathize with the spirit of the amendment proposed by the committee which would require tabling of any proposed regulation before Parliament. Incidentally, Bill C-7, currently before the Senate, raises exactly the same issue.

Honourable senators, because I disagree with some amendments and I concur with others, I am faced with the question: What am I to do? I have tried personally to go back to some basic principles. I have asked myself: Does this bill as a whole aim to satisfy a legitimate public policy objective? Will the bill as a whole likely be effective in satisfying that objective? Is there a proper balance in the bill as a whole between achieving that public policy objective and in safeguarding the established civil rights of Canadians?

Does this bill aim to satisfy a legitimate public policy objective? This bill aims to reduce the incidence of death and injury due to firearms. It aims to reduce criminal incidents involving firearms. It aims to reduce the threat to innocent Canadians from the misuse of firearms. Even those of us who believe in a minimal role for government in society, even those of us who would like to return to Adam Smith's "watchman's state" recognize that the essential role of government in civil society is public security and safety. That is the essence of a social contract between the government and the governed.

Will Bill C-68 be effective? There is no obvious, empirical evidence that Bill C-68 will work, nor is there evidence that it would not work. Experience with similar legislation in other countries varies. At least, the interpretation of that experience varies. Therefore, I must defer to the experts, the people on the front lines. I note that two national police associations, the Canadian Association of Police Chiefs and the Canadian Police Association, support Bill C-68 in its current, unamended form, as do 44 police organizations at the provincial and municipal levels across Canada. The police argue, in part, that 47 per cent of firearms seized in criminal incidents are rifles or shotguns compared to 21 per cent that are handguns. They state that, without the information obtained through registration, there is too little control.

I am also impressed by the fact that a very large number of health care organizations, over 50 I believe, such as the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians and many organizations representing suicide prevention experts and public health professionals, support Bill C-68.

I know that Bill C-68 is not the only solution to crime. It is not the only solution to abuse within the family or to suicide. It is a partial solution but I cannot help but be swayed by 46 police associations and over 50 health care groups who tell us that it is both an effective and a necessary step. More important, if the police organizations tell us that Bill C-68 is an important tool to add to their arsenal in crime prevention and apprehension, I am inclined to take their word for it and provide them with the legislative tools they seek.

That brings me to my third fundamental question: Does Bill C-68 as a whole achieve a proper balance between the ends it seeks and the means it chooses to reach that end? This has been a very vexing question. First, it must be noted that there is nothing in our Constitution that gives our citizens the right to bear arms. In this, therefore, there is a fundamental difference from our American neighbours. I am also told that there is nothing in our Constitution that bars the registration of firearms as contemplated by Bill C-68.

I personally do not object to the registration of firearms, any more than I object to the registration of my car or my dog. I would reject the claim which has been made by some, that registration is a Trojan horse for government expropriation, that once the government knows where these firearms are, it will swoop down and take them away. Quite frankly, with all due respect, I find this argument silly, although I admit that, in a public relations sense, it has been effective. It is based on a view of the world and a relationship between government and governed which is more reflective of the American right-wing militia than mainstream Canadian society.

Honourable senators, I have concluded that this bill, taken as a whole, meets my three tests. It is not a perfect bill, but I think we all agree that few bills that pass this place are without some flaws. My biggest concern is that, by supporting certain amendments, I may help put the entire bill at risk. I do not wish to be a party to killing this bill.

If we are committed to voting for or against the amendments as a slate, I will have to consider very carefully and weigh the risks inherent in supporting a set of amendments that may imperil the bill against my personal desire to support certain important amendments that I think would improve the bill.

Honourable senators, it is not an easy decision. I shall weigh the alternatives very carefully between now and 5:30 tomorrow evening.

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow: Honourable senators, first of all, I would like to thank the Speaker for attending my office earlier today.

Next, I want to speak on the committee report and on the amendments which are before us. At the end of my short address, I want to make a further amendment.

The members of the Senate who have spoken have all indicated that they are not opposed to greater efforts to control crime in this country, nor to additional penalties for criminals who commit crimes with firearms. I think we are all of one mind there.

• (2020)

My greatest objection to the bill, and I will speak in opposition to some of its provisions, is primarily the registration of the long barrelled guns. These are the so-called shotguns and rifles used extensively by the native community as a tool for livelihood and also by the agricultural and ranching communities who consider those firearms a tool. We fail to consider those of our citizens who may be from the larger, urban communities and who may have never owned a gun or used a gun. Perhaps they have never known anyone who owns a gun. They may have never been outside city limits where guns might very well be used.

I have some sympathy for those people who say, "As far as I am concerned, there should be no guns." There is a school of thought that exists out there because of that very issue.

Where I come from — and we can call it distinct society or whatever we want — there is a distinct difference in the way we think. That is true for various parts of this country. There is definitely a distinct way of thinking in Northern Canada, there is definitely a distinct way of thinking in Western Canada, in the agricultural community. It is unfair for us to say that those people are bigots, or whatever, because they are opposed to some provisions of this bill and, more particularly, the registration of those firearms.

Let me just talk to you for a minute about that aspect of the bill, namely the registration of guns. People who have never committed a crime, and who have no intention of committing a crime, wonder why it is necessary for them to register the tools of their trade. Let me talk to you about a farmer, or a rancher, and the use of guns.

Many of such people do not hunt for a living, but they use the tool of a rifle or a shotgun on the farm. They would use it, not necessarily daily but certainly at least once a week. When they have predators on their farms, be they porcupines, rabbits, skunks, rats, gophers, coyotes — any of those predators — the gun is a necessary tool. When people head for their pastures and ranches, they must take a gun with them in the event that a calf or a cow has broken a leg, and must be put down. Some animals, such as bears, may be predators on the calves, and the gun is a necessary tool.

Let me make this personal: I do not hunt, but I have two guns on the farm. They are tools. I must use those guns to give to the men who work on that farm, or to the members of my family who go from point to point. If I am required to register that gun, I must register it in my name only. I must register at the address where I live. I cannot take that gun to the four different areas in which I ranch or farm.

I have what we call bunkhouses on each of those places. They have only one room. When you stay overnight in that bunkhouse with a gun, you will be breaking that law. I cannot have my men go out with those guns because the gun is not registered to them. It is easy to say, "Well, get them to apply for a licence to own a gun." This involves all of my family members, and all of the people who may work on my farm. It may be a person who is working there for just one day, going out to the ranch or the farm for that use. It is unreasonable that they should be expected to conform to the desires of the problem areas in the city of Toronto. It is not fair. Why would we make criminals out of those farmers or those farm workers because they did not have a gun to register?

If a farmer attends to a farm 50 miles from his residence and he takes a shotgun and a rifle with him — which is the normal process — in his truck or car, because he will need it there, and he decides to stop on the way back, 25 miles out, to attend a Liberal meeting, he breaks the law. Maybe he should not attend that meeting, anyway. Maybe there should be a law against it. If you attend any type of meeting on the way back, you have broken the law because you are carrying a gun with you. You must then justify to the police officer or to the court that you were justified in having that firearm with you. It creates the opportunity for many of those people to become criminals under the existing legislation.

When you talk about the north country — and these gentlemen here will talk about that tomorrow — we are in that fringe area from where I live. A gun or a rifle is a tool of the trade for them. When they go out, must all those family members have a license to own that gun? Each time they borrow that rifle from someone else, must they have written permission to do so? This is an unreasonable approach.

If I was convinced that the act of registration itself would save lives, then I might take another look at that and say, “Yes, it might very well save lives.” However, the fact that a gun is registered has literally nothing to do with saving a life. If a person is intending to draw a gun on someone, they do not check first to see if it is registered. Obviously, they do not do that.

The police departments in Western Canada are basically not for this legislation because they are working with such people. If the police out there have access to what would be a gun registry on a computer, and if violence in a home is reported, the police can check that registry and say “Yes, there are guns in that home”; or, “There are no guns in that home.” If there were guns in that home, they would go out and surround the house, take out their loudspeakers and say, “Throw out your registered guns.” They would not ask for the guns that are not registered. Why would any policeman in his right mind go to any home where there is violence and assume that there are no guns there? The answer is “Absolutely not.” That would not occur.

Senator Gustafson: They all say that.

Senator Sparrow: Yes, they all say that it is not a protective tool for them in those particular circumstances.

When we talk about the native community, when they go out — which might very well be to visit in a one-room shack — how are they to register a gun if there are six people there? If any one of the farmers in my community has a criminal record for impaired driving, or whatever it may be considered, he cannot get a licence for that gun. It might be extremely difficult for him. His whole family and the whole operation suffers because he has a criminal record for something else. The whole community in which he lives will also suffer.

This is also true for the native community. We often hear that 80 per cent of the people in jails are native people with records. Upon release from jail, they cannot get a licence to own a gun in order to support themselves. That is what Bill C-68 will do to them.

I will put forward an amendment to this report to take away the need for registration of those tools. They are tools, not weapons. That would satisfy, in most instances, the people who feel that, primarily, not only their lives but also their livelihood is threatened by this particular aspect.

It is easy to say: What is the big deal about licensing? The Prime Minister and Mr. Rock have said that we license our bicycles, our cars, our dogs and our cats. We do not! There is not a farmer in Saskatchewan who has to license his bicycle, his dog, his cat, his tractor or his all-terrain vehicle.

One senator said to me, “We used to license our radios.” Perhaps we did. Do we want to go to that extent? Would they be happy in the city of Toronto, for example, to register their televisions? There is so much violence on television nowadays that it might very well be worthwhile controlling what is watched on TV. We are talking about getting at crime; corruption and crime by violence, yet we allow these things to happen.

• (2030)

It is said that deaths are caused by guns in the case of those who commit suicide or murder. There are far more suicides in the Province of Saskatchewan caused by agricultural crises than there are for any other reason, and they are usually not carried out with guns. Far more people are killed by tractors on the farm, by being bucked off a horse, or by being kicked by a cow. Some would take away those tools and say, “It is no big deal.” It is a big deal.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT—VOTE DEFERRED

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow: Honourable senators, I wish to move, seconded by Senator Lawson:

That the report be not now adopted but that it be amended

(a) by adding, on the first page, immediately before amendment number 1, the following:

“15.1. (1) A registration certificate is not required for any purpose under this Act or any other enactment for a firearm that is reasonable for use in Canada for hunting or sporting purposes.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), a registration certificate may be issued for a firearm that is reasonable for use in Canada for hunting or sporting purposes.

(3) For the purposes of this section, a firearm shall be deemed to be reasonable for use in Canada for hunting or sporting purposes if

(a) it is a rifle or shotgun designed or intended to be used for hunting or sporting purposes; and

(b) it is not a firearm described in

(i) paragraph (b) or (c) of the definition of "prohibited firearm" in section 84 of the Criminal Code, or

(b) by renumbering the subsequent amendments accordingly.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Hon. Eric Arthur Berntson (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I rise on a point of order, honourable senators. I believe that the house order is such that the debate should continue concurrently on the amendments and the main motion; and that all votes should take place tomorrow.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I believe that Senator Berntson is right in saying that all the Speaker has to decide now is whether the amendment is acceptable or not. If you decide the amendment is acceptable, discussion on the amendment will continue, keeping the general debate in mind of course. I do not think we are required to dispose of it at this point.

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker: Unless I misunderstand the house order, honourable senators, my understanding is that, provided this motion is in order, and I believe it is, then we must proceed to debate this motion. If there is no further debate, I will call a vote on it, but there will be no standing vote on it until tomorrow. The standing vote will be deferred until tomorrow.

The debate will now proceed on this amendment. If there are no honourable senators who wish to speak on the amendment, then I will call the vote.

Hon. Sharon Carstairs: Honourable senators, I wish to ask a few questions of Senator Sparrow, if he is prepared to accept some.

Senator Sparrow: Certainly.

Senator Carstairs: My first question is a practical one. Would the senator tell me exactly where in the legislation he is prohibited from taking a weapon to one of his cabins?

Senator Sparrow: First, I should like to quote from the bill in regard to carrying a weapon from one place to another if I am stopping at a meeting.

Clause 89 states:

(1) Every person commits an offence who, without lawful excuse, carries a weapon, a prohibited device or any ammunition or prohibited ammunition while the person is attending or is on the way to attend a public meeting.

(2) Every person who commits an offence under subsection (1) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

That means that I cannot carry a weapon from one place to another if I am to stop at a meeting.

Senator Carstairs: It means that you have to have a lawful excuse.

Senator Sparrow: That is right. I have to justify to a police officer or to a court why I had it with me there, that is correct. I said that.

Senator Lewis: Are you not talking about leaving it in your car or truck?

Senator Sparrow: Yes, I am.

Senator Lewis: That is not taking it from place to place.

Senator Sparrow: Yes, it is. It is interpreted that way.

With respect to the other issue of taking a gun from one farm to the other, if you overnight on that farm in a one-room bunk house, under existing law you have to have that gun in safe storage in a separate room. I do not have separate rooms.

I cannot then have any member of my family take that gun, unless they have a permit to own guns. I cannot give it to any man who may work as a rancher or a farm hand unless he, in turn, has a licence to own a gun. He also has to prove that he obtained permission from me to have that gun.

Surely, under the law, there will not be a blanket permission as such for every man who comes to work for me on a part-time basis, or whatever the case may be.

Yes, there are restrictions every step along the way, and I could be breaking the law at each of those steps.

Senator Carstairs: I have another question for the honourable senator. Let me say to the senator that the safe storage regulations have not yet been written.

Senator Berntson: Why not?

Senator Carstairs: The safe storage regulations found in Bill C-17 certainly allow you to transport a gun under those circumstances. However, the provisions of that bill do not allow you to carry it to a public meeting. I must suggest that I think that is not a bad idea.

Does the honourable senator not agree that an employee of his who is to take his gun should have some training in the use of that gun, and some knowledge of safety standards with respect to the use of that gun? Alternatively, does the honourable senator think that anyone should have a gun without any training whatsoever just because they want to have a gun?

Senator Sparrow: I thank the honourable senator for her question. It is ridiculous, but I am prepared to answer it.

You do not give a gun to someone without a reason. I explained the reasons why they would have a gun on the farm. They have a use for that gun. It is the same as the native community.

The honourable senator is implying in her question that only dumb people would give someone a gun to use for any purpose. I would ask her to consider the situation in the North. The aboriginal people do not give their guns out willy-nilly. They train their people in the use of firearms. We train our people. We will not give out those guns willy-nilly, either. Surely to goodness we are not that retarded, although you may think so. We do not use these tools the same as we would use a tractor, an all-terrain vehicle, a combine, a swather, any tool on the farm. That is what I am saying: The honourable senator just does not understand that aspect of this issue.

• (2040)

Senator Carstairs: I think I do understand. Quite frankly, I think that if they indeed have that knowledge about safety, it will be very simple for them to qualify for a licence.

I have one final question. How do you explain that the rate of suicide by guns, and particularly rifles and shotguns, and the rate of domestic violence using rifles and shotguns, is higher in the Prairie provinces, in the Northwest Territories, in the Yukon, and in rural Canada than in urban Canada?

Senator Sparrow: Honourable senators, that is a great question, and I should have covered that.

There are far more guns per capita in Western Canada on the farms than in the city of Toronto. Every farm in the community has a gun. Almost 80 to 90 per cent are gun owners. In the North, it is the same. In Toronto, it would probably be 2 per cent of people. Of course the per capita rates of gun accidents and suicides are higher there.

If you are trying to indicate to this house that, in fact, guns cause suicides, I say that is nonsense. Guns do not cause family violence. There are other issues. Youth commit suicide because they have no hope left. That is what happens in a lot of cases, certainly in the native community. It is not the gun that causes the suicide. It is not the knife or the rope. It is not the car that runs into the bridge that causes suicide. It is the drugs and the alcohol and the loss of hope, things that are not covered in this legislation.

Senator Carstairs: Honourable senators, I have to ask one more question. I would like to know why there are more deaths among young men by suicide, despite the fact that more young women attempt suicide than young men. Is that not a direct result of the fact that young men, tragically, choose to use guns, which are fatal, and young women choose alternative methods?

Senator Ghitter: You have no statistics to bear that out.

Senator Sparrow: Honourable senators, I have an answer to that one, too. It does not matter whether or not the guns that are used for suicides are registered. They will use the gun whether or not it is registered. If the honourable senator is telling me that a cabinet with glass on the front and a little lock on it will stop them from getting the gun and committing suicide, I would say that the honourable senator is fooling herself and fooling the people. This is really a method of fooling Canadians into believing that we are doing something about gun control and crime in this country. It is not working. Suicide is not caused by guns. It is caused by other social problems, and the registration and the licensing of guns have absolutely no bearing on those problems.

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: Honourable senators, I wish to make a brief comment on this issue, although I do intend to enter the debate on the main motion.

I compliment Senator Sparrow on his motion. I support this motion on the basis of logic. Senator Sparrow has brought to this debate straight logic and a common sense that reflects the areas that we represent, the North and the rural and remote areas. It is hard for people who live on Wellington Crescent, Southwest Marine Drive, or Forest Hill in Toronto to understand what he is talking about. I think Senator Olson fully understands. It is based on pure logic. The people are trained, not formally through courses that really do not mean anything, but through experience, because of necessity and survival.

This argument is not being presented to speak against urban communities. However, it is an argument that must be understood. That is why we wanted so many of you to come out to the hearings and travel to the North, to visit with Senator Watt and Senator Adams and the rest of those who occupy that vast 80 per cent of the land mass that governments which are opposed to this legislation represent. No one wanted to come. Most were too busy. Senators from every point of this nation are here to deal with this bill, but it was not important enough to go to Whitehorse. It was not important enough to go to the Beaufort Sea. You did not have time. You were too busy. You just did not understand. You do not want to understand because you do not want to hear the other side.

Some of us live in rural communities. We may come to urban communities and live in them, but we also live in another world. We are just asking you to try to understand the logic that comes with a motion like this. The Speaker, having grown up in this environment, knows the impact that this type of legislation will have on the Métis, the natives, and the ranchers. I can tell you. I have spoken to them. I was there.

Some may think that certain senators are trying to undermine this bill, but this is what we were told. What Senator Sparrow said here today is what we heard day after day in our hearings. These hearings were not partisan. I do not give a darn if it is a Liberal bill or a Conservative bill; it is still a bad bill. I did not agree with many of the provisions in Bill C-17, and they still cannot be enforced in the Northwest Territories. However, I am not here to talk partisanship.

This is logic, my friends. Please look at this bill for what it is worth. Listen to the logic and the message. Believe me, there are two sides to every story. Senator Sparrow has just transmitted an important portion of one side, the side that has driven this country and developed this country. It is the pioneers and the people who have gone to the remote regions and taken the risks who have made a great difference in our great nation.

The Hon. the Speaker: If no other senator wishes to speak on the amendment, I will put the amendment to a voice vote now. If a standing vote is requested, it will be deferred until tomorrow at 5:30 p.m. Are honourable senators ready for the question?

An Hon. Senator: Question.

The Hon. the Speaker: Those in favour, please say "yea."

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Those opposed, please say "nay."

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Speaker: I note the request for a standing vote. It will be deferred until tomorrow at 5:30 p.m.

• (2050)

We are now back to the main motion.

Hon. Terry Stratton: Honourable senators, I first want to thank senators who travelled to Manitoba to attend the hearings which we held at seven locations in that province. The legislation before us today, Bill C-68, respecting firearms and other weapons, has provoked a great deal of debate among Canadians across the country.

As many senators will know, there is considerable opposition to many parts of this legislation, particularly from residents of my home province, Manitoba. A Southam poll conducted in late May of this year indicated that 60 per cent of respondents in Manitoba are opposed to this bill. Since this legislation was first read in the House of Commons in February, and even before then, I have received hundreds of letters in my office from across Canada, representing both sides of this debate.

The majority of the letters I have received are from Manitobans opposed to a universal firearms registration system. I have met with individuals who are on both sides of this issue and listened to their concerns. I chaired a committee of senators who travelled throughout Manitoba to hear a broader expression of views on Bill C-68. I feel strongly that, as senators, we have an obligation to reach out to the communities we represent and ensure that their views are heard in the Senate. Representing the Manitoba region as I do, I believe that I have a good understanding of where Manitobans stand on this issue.

Honourable senators, I have heard the thoughts of the provincial government of Manitoba on this bill. It is no secret that it is opposed to certain aspects of this bill. Representatives of that government appeared before both the House of Commons and the Senate standing committees reviewing this legislation and presented their views on that matter.

The provincial government of Manitoba does not support a universal firearms registration system for Canada, and for very good reason: It believes, as do I, that universal gun registration will not deter the use of restricted or illegal firearms. Canada already has a ban on certain weapons, and has very tough registration requirements for handguns. Nevertheless, criminals still manage to use these weapons, despite the fact that handguns have been required to be registered since 1934.

Honourable senators, I am against spending millions of taxpayers' dollars on a universal registration system which the government has failed to prove will enhance public safety. In fact, I have heard that the administrative burden of gun registration will take police officers off the streets, and therefore have a detrimental impact on the safety of our communities.

This is a real concern to many people. From testimony that has been given at the hearings on this bill in Manitoba and in Ottawa, I believe that many Canadians are not convinced that spending millions of dollars on a gun registration system is the best way to go. Many Canadians sincerely believe that this money would be better spent in other ways, such as putting more police on the streets, educating citizens on existing gun regulations and enforcement of current regulations.

I should like to read to you an excerpt from a brief submitted at the Manitoba hearings on Bill C-68 by the Association of Women Shooters of Canada, who were not given the opportunity to appear before the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs to express their views. This is what they had to say:

If women's health and safety are truly of concern then one might reasonably consider taking the enormous amount of money that the federal government is so eager to spend on universal firearm registration and use that money in ways that actually will benefit women. For example, research on breast cancer, treatment programs for abusive men, and treatment programs for alcoholism (alcohol is almost always involved in incidents of domestic violence). These are all ways which will help women far more than additional firearms legislation.

Honourable senators, at the root of crime and violence in our society are many social problems. This message was delivered loudly and clearly by many concerned citizens who appeared at the Manitoba hearings on Bill C-68. There is a consensus that the federal government should be introducing crime control legislation rather than gun control legislation. Firearms are not viewed as the major problem in many communities. Drugs, alcohol and related difficulties such as poverty and hopelessness are seen as being the root causes of the problems. These are some of the real problems leading to crime and violence.

I believe that, in order to enhance public safety in Canada, the federal government must deal with the social problems which exist now. We need to look at ways of reducing the amount of violence on television. I am not an expert on how to do that, but if you have watched some of the programs on television or in the movie theatres, you know what I am talking about. That is what the young kids see. Those young kids then grow up and commit the violent crimes about which we all complain.

We need to place more emphasis on education. If we have generation after generation of people living on welfare; if we have generation after generation of people living without hope, we will have violence no matter what we do with gun registration. It will have no impact. Attack the real problem.

The Winnipeg Game and Fish Association said the following in its brief at the Manitoba hearings on Bill C-68:

No significant evidence is in hand to show that any amount of gun registration applied against law-abiding gun owners has, or ever will, produce a safer public or crime prevention results. The justice system and police should be dealing with real criminals and criminal activity, and leave law-abiding citizens alone.

Honourable senators, Canada has a long history of effective gun control policies, and Canadian law has always recognized that legitimate reasons exist for the possession of firearms, especially in the more remote areas of the country where guns are often required to hunt for food or to control predators and other animals, as Senator Sparrow has very clearly pointed out.

During the recent public hearings on this bill in Manitoba, the committee of senators travelled to both rural and urban communities in the province. During those hearing, the different realities which exist for rural and urban residents were made clear to me. Many witnesses testified that this legislation reflects urban needs, and reflects a lack of understanding of rural residents.

During the Manitoba hearings, rural resident after rural resident expressed disbelief at Justice Minister Allan Rock's comments regarding who should own guns. Many witnesses cited Minister Rock as stating that he believes the only firearms in Canada should be in the possession of the military and the police. This comment clearly shows a lack of understanding of farmers, hunters, trappers, competitive shooters and others.

Many farmers are worried about the federal government coming to seize their weapons, which are often used to kill varmints that carry rabies and other diseases, in order to protect their livestock. A farmer from outside of Brandon told us the following true story at the Brandon hearings: He had a problem with skunks in his chicken coop, which contained some exotic prize chickens. His gun was locked up in a cabinet, and the ammunition was in another location. A skunk got into the chicken coop and, by the time he had unlocked his gun and got the ammunition, the skunk had got away.

Some would say, "Three cheers for the skunk." However, there was more than one skunk; the farmer, in fact, had an infestation. Over the course of the summer, there were 10 skunks and one fox. Needless to say, the gun was no longer in the house under lock and key. The farmer broke the law; he had to do so in order to protect his livelihood.

Further to that, concerns were raised at the hearings that this legislation would make criminals of law-abiding citizens, which would be very unfair. It would appear that it is not politically correct at this time to own a firearm.

It is disturbing that one of the most prevalent statements made during the Manitoba hearings was that individuals would not comply with this law. Sidney McKay of the Swampy Cree Tribal Council of The Pas, representing 10,000 people, stated unequivocally that they will not obey such a law. You are on treacherous grounds when you pass laws that the public will not obey.

Honourable senators, one of the amendments which is before us deals with the wording of section 117(15) of the bill. This section permits the minister to add any firearms to the prohibited category except those which, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, are reasonable for use in Canada for hunting or sporting purposes. The concern which has been raised here is that this clause gives too much power to the minister, and that any decision by the minister to add a firearm to the prohibited category on the basis of this opinion as to its suitability for use in hunting or for sporting purposes is not subject to judicial review.

The wording of this clause has sparked enormous concern. Concerns were expressed by a vast majority of witnesses who appeared before the committee at the Manitoba hearings, including the Selkirk Game & Fish Association, The Pas Firearms Association, the Dauphin Handgun Club and many other concerned groups and citizens. Quite clearly, all of these witnesses asked that the Senate try to have this clause changed. I fully support this proposed amendment.

Honourable senators, there are some aspects of the bill which I do support. I believe that enhanced control of crime should be supported, and I agree with the measures in this bill which would work towards that end. For example, I support increasing sentences for people who use a firearm in committing a crime. I am also in support of the provisions of the bill which control the possession of firearms by those who have been convicted of an indictable offence.

These are the areas of the bill which I support. However, I want to make it very clear that the package of amendments which we have proposed will do a great deal to improve the legislation before us. As a senator, I see it as my job to deliver to Canadians the best legislation possible. The changes being proposed will substantially improve this bill. It is for this reason that I intend to support these amendments.

Hon. Landon Pearson: Honourable senators, ever since I arrived in the Senate a year ago, I have been aware of the controversial nature of Bill C-68, which was then in the drafting process. How could I not be? The issue of gun control raises such very strong emotions. All along, I paid close attention to the arguments which have been raised, both for the bill and against it, so that I could better understand the issues which seem so important to so many Canadians.

The question I posed to myself was: Where does all the emotion that surrounds this issue come from?

I believe it comes more from the symbolic nature of the debate than from its details. Symbols that have power are those that focus people's deepest feelings, especially when these emotions are related to their personal identity. It seems to me that the force of the gun control controversy derives from the fact that guns, because they are designed to kill, have come to symbolize power, ultimate power, the power of life and death. There are those who do not want this power to be curbed, not because they are criminals but because it has come to have such deep personal meaning for them. There are those who feel equally strongly that it must be curbed because they have directly experienced its misuse.

Let me reiterate, honourable senators, that I have no objection to the legitimate use of firearms for hunting, for culling, for protection, for the armed forces, for the police. It is not the killing of animals that disturbs me; I am not a vegetarian. It is the killing for pleasure; the unjustified and unjustifiable taking of life, and the use of guns to threaten, intimidate and humiliate.

Today, honourable senators, I would like to give voice to those who have spoken in support of Bill C-68; those who have written to me personally or to the committee; and those who have come forward as witnesses to the need for greater gun control because they have experienced in one way or another the misuse, by accident or intention, of a weapon that kills. These include women, health professionals, city administrators, the police, individuals who feel disempowered by the gun lobby, children and youth. Please listen to what they say for they, too, are ordinary Canadians.

Let the women speak first. Linda Taylor from the Children's Home in Winnipeg writes:

I do not think Bill C-68 is the answer: it is only a beginning. It presents a message to Canadians that ownership of guns is a responsibility, and one to be taken seriously. Perhaps there could be better bills. Certainly there could be far stronger ones. As a woman living in Winnipeg, I would support that... Bill C-68, however, is a small and necessary first step if we are serious about creating a society free of violence.

[Translation]

Mrs. Simone Baron, the mother of a victim, wrote us from Rosemont, Quebec:

I am the mother of a girl who was a victim, at the age of 19, of a criminal act involving a firearm... Bill C-68 is good and we support it very strongly. It should have been passed long ago.

[English]

Jennifer Allen Simons writes from Vancouver:

In the interest of public safety, I ask you to give Bill C-68 speedy passage through the Senate... This bill does not impede any lawful use of a firearm. It does, however, provide a tool for intervention where there is a reason for concern. Surely the prevention of any death or injury justifies the adoption of this legislation.

The YWCA of Canada writes on behalf of the National Council of Women; women's shelters and transition houses in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Ontario; the Action Committees on the Status of Women in Manitoba and Saskatchewan; and many other women's groups:

The YWCA supports the legitimate use of firearms for hunting, sporting activities and law enforcement. It is the misuse of firearms in domestic violence that poses the greatest threat to women and children. We believe the key elements of the legislation will have a significant impact on domestic homicide and women's and children's safety.

June Mitchell writes from Regina:

I am aware that a resolution opposing the new gun law was passed in the Saskatchewan legislature. I am also aware that less than half the MLAs chose to be in the legislature to vote on that resolution. I believe there are many citizens like myself who support this new gun law which was promised, and has been passed by our democratically elected government.

Of the many mayors and municipalities who have written, I have chosen to quote a very recent letter from Barbara Hall, the Mayor of Toronto:

I understand that the vast majority of gun owners are law-abiding citizens. Clearly, access to firearms is only part of the problem. Restrictions on firearms alone will not solve the problem of crime and violence in our communities. However, it is a significant part of the solution. The firearms restrictions, registration and minimum sentencing requirements as outlined in Bill C-68, along with other investments in our communities will ensure a more sustainable, safer urban environment.

Many health care professionals appeared before the committee, each one with a separate tragedy to report. As individuals who actually see the blood and guts, they all support the bill.

Anna Lovasik and Kathy Belton from the Injury Prevention Centre of the University of Alberta Hospitals in Edmonton write:

The cost of gunshot wounds to the health care system is $70 million per year. Approximately 40% of the women killed by their husbands are shot, usually with legally-owned guns. Bill C-68 would provide more tools for early intervention in domestic disputes, allowing police to remove guns where there is a risk.

A group of public health and safety professionals from Quebec wrote in an open letter last week:

As representatives of Quebec's major public health and safety experts...we are unequivocally opposed to any amendments at this point in the process. All the experts in crime prevention, public health, domestic violence and criminology who testified before the Senate legislative committee have called on the Senate to pass the bill as soon as possible, without amendments.... You must therefore be aware of the tremendous importance of this bill for the families of the victims of the Polytechnique massacre, as well as all Montrealers. If this legislation is still not passed on the sixth anniversary of the December 6th tragedy, we expect an outcry of national proportions.

From the New Brunswick Nurses Union-Syndicat des infirmiers et des infirmières du Nouveau-Brunswick, I heard:

We also understand that this Bill is not the whole solution, but it will help prevent injury and death. As health care professionals, we support Police Chiefs, criminal justice experts and women's groups in calling for stronger control on guns.

Law enforcement representatives, both union and management, appeared before us to support Bill C-68. I quote from a recent letter from the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police:

We appreciate that individual members of the Senate of Canada may have different views on the details surrounding Bill C-68 and we understand and respect the emotion and concerns raised in the debate. Nevertheless, we wish to impress upon you and your colleagues the importance of this bill to policing and law enforcement and to the communities to which we are accountable. We therefore repeat our request to the Senate of Canada to pass this Bill without amendment.

This bill has also received support from many individuals. For example, George Richards of Castlegar, British Columbia writes:

This bill has received support from many groups: the police, women's organizations, emergency room doctors, suicide counsellors, and a large majority of those Canadians living in cities. In addition, there are those who have a general antipathy to firearms and violence for a variety of reasons; engendered, in my case, by service in the Canadian Army during the second World War.

From Don Mitchell in Moose Jaw, I heard:

There are many of us in Saskatchewan who feel disenfranchised by the position taken by a majority of provincial politicians...The gun owners lobby obviously has a loud voice...but it does not represent a large constituency of informed and caring people at the community level who continue to view gun controls as a sound and progressive measure.

Like many members of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, I listened with particular interest to representations from members of aboriginal communities. There is no question that many of them are unhappy with the bill, and I have done my best to understand their reasons. I am not proud of our sorry history with respect to our aboriginal peoples, especially our arbitrary impositions on their culture and their way of life. However, I believe those who told us that they do not want to be regarded as different from other Canadians with regard to federal legislation. In addition to the problem of aboriginal rights, which I believe are protected in the bill, the prime issue appears to be the question of consultation and regulation.

I see the ongoing and proposed discussions with the aboriginal community with respect to the administration of the law as an occasion for some positive community development, especially for young people. We need to do everything possible for the young. As Doug Cuthand, who I believe is an aboriginal person, wrote in the Saskatoon Star Phoenix:

About 60 per cent of suicides in Indian country are carried out by firearms. This is disturbing and indicates the need for more effective gun control legislation and enforcement....The push for gun control came from the cities where crime is perceived to be on the increase. But, in reality, a person walking down a street in Montreal, Toronto or Vancouver is in little danger of being shot. Our people in Indian country have a far greater chance of being killed or wounded by firearms.

Children are especially sensitive to the currents of emotions swirling about them. While they do not have the sophistication to understand the complexities of the issues, they often go right to the heart of the matter. Seven-year-old Kathryn Hole wrote to us from St. Albert, Alberta. She said, "I think of guns as violence and cruelty. People should not get guns because if they are drunk they can kill themselves. They kill other people with them and they would sell them to create more violence. I want this to stop."

One can only wonder what Kathryn has already seen in her young life.

[Translation]

Finally, I would like to quote Jeunesse du Monde Montréal.

The young people of Jeunesse du Monde Montréal, aged 12 to 25, wish to express their support of the gun control bill. ... Young people are greatly concerned with violence and we feel that controlling firearms could make a contribution to improving our society and the relationship between humans and nature. We are inundated on all sides — by the media in particular — with gratuitous violence, often involving guns.

[English]

Honourable senators, during the months that Bill C-68 has been before us, I have examined it with the greatest of care. While I appreciate the sentiments of those who have spoken against it, particularly the concerns and anxieties of our aboriginal peoples, they have not convinced me that the bill is an unwarranted invasion of their personal lives leading to the destruction of their livelihood. On the contrary, I see some provisions of the bill as an opportunity for those who really need guns to demonstrate to the rest of us when the use of a gun is legitimate and when it is not.

For the aboriginal peoples, I see the process of creating culturally sensitive regulations as an admirable way to teach those of us who are not aboriginal what it means to truly respect the natural environment in which we live.

I will vote against the amendments which, in my view, do nothing to improve the bill, and for this bill as it stands because I am convinced it will make life in Canada safer, more respectful, more civil and more humane.

Hon. David Tkachuk: Honourable senators, the debate on Bill C-68 has formed some interesting political coalitions. For example, I will quote from 'Feminism and Gun Control' by Pat Lorjé, a former alderwoman in Saskatoon for over a decade, now a member of the legislative assembly for the New Democratic Party. She represents Saskatoon-Southeast. She is a noted feminist, and I will spend a bit of my speaking time quoting from her submission to myself, Senator Gustafson and Senator Sparrow in Saskatoon. She brings a unique perspective to the issue of Bill C-68. She said:

Now the easiest thing to do is just stay out of an emotional and distorted controversy. But I'm tired of the tyranny that passes for informed debate in this country. Shallow analysis and selective distortion of statistics painting men as brutes will not stop violence. It amazes me that a belief system like feminism, a philosophy of tolerance, now seems to represent intolerance. Is there no room in feminist circles for intellectual discourse about practical solutions, not extremes?

As a feminist, my first reaction to Rock's gun proposals was "Good on you." Then I investigated a tad further and discovered a modern version of Canada's "two solitudes." Contrast the reaction of the panicked big city dwellers with those you might call TRUC (The Rural Unsophisticated Canadians). They think "guns-ducks-lifestyle". Urban people, particularly feminists, think "guns-crime-violence." But how many of them have analyzed the practicality of Rock's proposals? They're all so busy saluting the gun control flag that they ignore the PR sham it really is.

Gun registration isn't, and hasn't been, a panacea for violence. There is a major danger this version may push some people from the proud Canadian position to gun ownership as a right. I don't want to see any further Americanization of this country. But it could happen. You can only prod a buffalo so far before it turns and stampedes. Of course we need to get guns off the street. But we need workable solutions to violence. Not just feel-good populist fixes that push the problem further out of sight, but not out of range.

Legislation that creates civil disobedience and drives a further wedge into an emotional issue is counter-productive. It merely adds to bloated bureaucracies, off-loads costs onto provinces, takes valuable time from the police...

No guns are manufactured in Canada. Since 1979, every gun is either smuggled into the country, or it comes across the border legally and is recorded at the point of wholesale and retail distribution. We already have a comprehensive way to record gun ownership. But nobody has bothered telling the clerks at Canadian Tire to slip the data on-line to their friendly police service so it can be cross-referenced with other information.

Many arguments have been presented on Bill C-68, but I will try to reflect the presentations of the ordinary and wonderful Canadians who made presentations to senators who took the time to listen to what they said.

I will say a little bit about the politics of the bill. Pat Lorjé is right. This is not a bill about gun control. There is massive support in Canada for gun control. I know of no one, not even one among all the people who came to see us, who is against gun control. Why, then, are we having this debate? Why are millions of Canadians who support gun control and who own firearms so vehement in their opposition to Bill C-68?

Bill C-68 is not about saving the lives of people who have lost loved ones. That is part of the problem with the politics of this bill. People who support gun control are told that because they do not support gun registration, they are somehow involved in the deaths of Canadians caused by guns, and that there is some sort of violence inflicted on people because guns are not registered. These are the same people who came to us and told us that they support gun control.

Why is there this political turbulence? Why is there this great division in our country over an issue about which everyone agrees, gun control? Because it is Bill C-68; because Bill C-68 does not save any lives and will not save any lives. I resent the fact that the presenters of Bill C-68 use violence in our society as the reason for this bill, particularly its gun registration aspect.

They say that those who oppose the gun registration aspect somehow do not have the same concerns.

Proposing a bill which potentially criminalizes people who are law abiding is in itself a violent act. Proposing a bill that the Prince Albert Tribal Council, which represents 17,000 people, including all those who live on reserves in Northern Saskatchewan, has said they will not obey, is, in itself, a violent act. Proposing a bill that causes ordinary, normal, law-abiding Canadians to say that they will not register their guns is in itself a violent act. Proposing a bill that divides rural Canadians from urban Canadians, and those living on Indian reserves from white people is, in itself, a violent act.

Who the heck do we in the Senate think we are? We are legislators and parliamentarians. As the friendly senator from Nova Scotia said, "Who do we think we are, passing a bill that causes these great divisions?"

I am not a gun owner. However, I am acquainted with guns. We sold them in our family's general store. I do not have memories of these firearms as instruments of violence, nor were they. People had them because they used them and, in most cases, because they needed them. No one carried them around. You learned to use them the same way you learned to use an axe or a knife. My negative image of firearms comes from television and from the cities. It is of bad people using violent means to achieve violent ends, where people who live in suburbs hire their guns. They fill the streets with police, all with guns. They have access to 911 and are 10 minutes away from the local man with a gun.

Up in Northern B.C., in Yukon and the northern part of Saskatchewan, there are no police. There is no one protecting the people there from the cougars in the Kootenays, as we were told, of which there are some 200 now, because you cannot kill them. One woman told us of watching her child being attacked by a cougar. By the time she could get her gun out of the box and gain access to her bullets, the child was dead. That is a stupid law, anyway.

City people tell rural people that it is not okay to carry a rifle from one place to another place. Gee whiz, you cannot go to a community meeting, you may have a gun in your truck. At community meetings in Montreal, there are guns everywhere.

We have this political debate going on over a bill which is called a gun control bill, something which we all support. Why did they write the bill in such a way as to cause this great division?

In order to acquire a firearm in Canada, you must take the firearms safety education training program. You must apply for a firearms acquisition certificate, which includes 35 questions. You are even asked if you are happily married, if you are divorced or not, or whether you are bankrupt. It requires two references, two photos and $50. The police check records, interview references, neighbours, employees and spouses. The firearms acquisition certificate is issued after a mandatory 28-day wait.

Then you must purchase the pistol. You must leave it at the dealer. You must then join the pistol club. You must apply to the police to register the pistol and fill out form C-300. You must then transport the pistol to the police where the permit is issued. You must then complete registration of the pistol and leave the pistol with the police.

Step number 11 involves having the registration certificate issued by Ottawa, which is form C-306. You must then obtain a permit to transport the pistol home, which is form C-301. You must apply to carry the pistol to the gun club, which is form C-302. Your police record is checked, and a permit, which is good for one year, is issued. You may now go target shooting.

Steps one to four must be completed up to the acquisition certificate stage to obtain a long gun. Then you may purchase the rifle or shotgun, take the hunting course, pass an exam, purchase a hunting license and go hunting according to provincial regulations. That takes only three to six months.

Would someone who supports this bill tell me how all those gangs in Montreal, Toronto, Edmonton and Saskatoon get their guns?

Senator Berntson: They plan ahead.

Senator Tkachuk: How do they get their guns? Did they take the course? Did they register their weapons? Did they fill out the forms? I do not think so. How did they get their guns? The only people we are registering here are people who have owned guns all their lives and who have never done anything wrong. Those are the ones who are left. They are the people on the farms who have owned guns all their lives and who have never done anything wrong. All those guys in Montreal, Edmonton and Toronto who are shooting people over drugs are to blame for this. They all have guns. Do honourable senators know why? Because it is easier to purchase an illegal gun than it is to purchase a legal one.

I would be a happy gun smuggler with this kind of gun law because then, even people who would never even think of breaking the law will just look at this and say, "I can get a gun in 30 days. What does it hurt?" It takes 15 minutes to buy a gun on any street in Saskatoon.

During the referendum campaign, the Prime Minister assured Canadians that all was well. He risked the entire country on his wrong political instinct. This bill reflects the wrong political instinct about Western and rural Canada. The large majority of elected municipal, provincial and federal politicians in Western Canada have said, "Do not do this." In my province, every municipality passed unanimous resolutions saying not to do this. They are not crazy. The attorneys general of three Prairie provinces, Yukon, the Northwest Territories and the chiefs of all the reserves asked us to reject this bill. That included Liberals and members of the NDP and the Conservative Party in provincial legislatures in Western Canada. They all asked us to reject the bill. Representatives of the tourism ministry, the wildlife federation, Ducks Unlimited, gun clubs and competitive shooters from local gun clubs to Olympians have said, "Reject the bill." Cattle associations, trappers, outfitters — the majority of the population — have said the same thing.

I do not know about the rest of you, but I am a Western Canadian senator. I was not elected. I was lucky enough to be appointed to the Senate. There is the same number of senators from the Maritimes as there is from Western Canada. There is the same number from Ontario as there is from Quebec. In all, there are 24 senators from each of those regions.

• (2130)

Senator Carstairs: There are 30 in Atlantic Canada.

Senator Tkachuk: There are six more from Newfoundland. Boy, they have a lot down there.

It seems to me that since I do not have to be elected, perhaps I have some reason for being here, and that is to represent my region, to somehow fulfil a mandate. Otherwise, perhaps, I should pack it in and run for election because —

The Hon. the Speaker: I am sorry, honourable senator, but your time is up.

Senator Tkachuk: May I have another couple of minutes?

Senator Sparrow: I have an appointment at twelve o'clock. Could you be finished by then?

Senator Tkachuk: I will be finished by then.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Tkachuk: As a Western Canadian senator, I have an obligation to listen. Even if I believed in this bill, I would have a tough time. I do not think I could do it. Who the heck am I to say to all of the attorneys general, "Oh, you guys are wrong; I am right. You guys do not know anything. You must go out every four years and be elected by ordinary folks, and I get to stay here and vote the way I want." I do not think so.

One last point: Do we have a crime wave going on in museums? What is happening at the gun clubs that I do not know about; and on the trapping trails and the cattle trails? Is there something that I do not know about happening at the hunting camps, at competitions at the Pan-Am Games, the Olympics, and guiding expeditions in northern British Columbia? Is there a crime wave going on? Are people being shot? Are duck hunters shooting each other? Are gun collectors amassing firearms to overthrow the government? Are those flintlocks awaiting a crime wave?

There are more guns in Saskatchewan per capita than there are in Toronto and Montreal, but at two o'clock in the morning I would rather walk in any part of the province: in any small town where everyone has a gun, on 20th Street, on 2nd Avenue, instead of walking down these streets that have no guns but, instead, have hired guns and policemen running around.

I do not understand this legislation. Are inheritors of weapons going nuts when their parents die? Do they go on a shooting spree? Are they saying, "Gee, my parents died; I've got a gun; I am going to go nuts today." That is what this bill is about.

Are trap shooters assaulting Rosedale or Westmount? I do not think so.

In all these situations, everyone has a firearm. I do not know how many of you have been to a shooting range, but they do not have any accidents on shooting ranges. I tried to find out if there had been any such accidents, and I found that there had been none. Everyone has a gun, but nobody is dead. How can that be?

Guns do not kill people; people kill people. That is the problem the Liberal government should be addressing. The problem is about drug addiction and alcoholism and gang violence and broken homes and family abuse, and no one is attending to those problems. This is the great scam, the great escape. We will impose gun registration to keep people quiet for a while, and we will allow all the other violence to continue.

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Listening to the debate so far makes me think that we are talking about two entirely different bills. The interpretation of what the bill says on one side is completely different from the interpretation of what it says on the other side.

Senator Tkachuk has asked us whether we think that all those people who are against the bill are crazy. Are all the people who are in favour of the bill crazy? There are many more people for the bill than against it.

Honourable senators, if I may, I wish to make a brief contribution to the debate.

I have a rural background and I have a military background, so I quite understand the productive and practical uses of guns. I can understand the attraction, and even the obsession with guns that some people develop. However, it would never have occurred to me on the farm or in the army that anyone would object to having guns in their possession recorded.

I have always known that the purpose of a gun was to kill, as painlessly as possible, a quarry as game or as food. I have also known that there are those who misuse guns to kill or maim other human beings or themselves, or to threaten to kill or maim others — neighbours, wives or children, or anyone else with whom they differ. I have always known that there are people in the hands of whom possession of a gun is not safe, such as those suffering from emotional or mental stress, or alcohol or drug-induced conditions. I have always assumed that society is entitled to know who has guns and when those protecting society are likely to be inhibited by the possession of guns by others.

The first time I came into face-to-face contact with the issue of gun control was during the regime of Prime Minister Mulroney. He had a young Minister of Justice for whom I had a good deal of respect. Her name was Kim Campbell. She brought forth a bill creating a fairly comprehensive firearms regime. All of the things that Senator Tkachuk was complaining about, the procedure you have to go through to get a gun, came from Bill C-17. That was passed by the other place, and it found its way into the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, on which both Senator Spivak and I sat. I welcomed it, as did the Progressive Conservative members of the committee, including the Conservative chairman, Senator Nathan Nurgitz, now Mr. Justice Nurgitz of the Manitoba Supreme Court.

We did our usual, in those days, non-partisan study of the bill and agreed to pass it without amendment, but we instructed our chairman to accompany that action with a letter which strongly recommended other steps, the most substantial of which was gun registration. That was the main recommendation of our committee and of the Senate at that time. I believe that all of the Liberal and Conservative members on that committee endorsed that report, and the letter which accompanied it, signed by our most eminent chairman. I do not recall a single voice being raised against it as it received third reading in this house. There is now this great uproar on this very point. I could speculate as to the cause and source of the uproar.

It is always legitimate for those in a business affected by a bill to lobby against it. Of course it is legitimate for those who seriously believe that registration will somehow impinge upon their legitimate use of target or hunting firearms to do their best to keep their sport or their means of gaining a living as unfettered as possible, within the limits and within the interests of public safety. However, the pile of misinformation that has been dissipated among the Canadian public, and has, through yellow journals, professional agitators and biased newsletters, found its way into the multitude of missives sent to the members of this house, and in many cases by well-meaning but emotionally charged people, has been downright scandalous. Some of it is so ridiculous as to be funny, but most of it is intended to prejudice our legislative process, and that must be taken seriously.

Some of it has a foreign tinge. Some say, "I have the constitutional right to carry a gun." Most people should know that that is part of the American Constitution. In Canada, we recognize that a democratic government is formed by citizens to ensure the security of the person. Our Constitution imposes on the government the obligation to preserve peace, order and good government.

People may feel that government has gone too far in regulating diverse aspects of Canadians lives, but surely this is not the issue on which to take that stand. This is the core of government responsibility. Violent crime has gone too far to allow the Canadian government to fail to take steps to regulate guns, and, fearmongering aside, that is all that this bill will do.

Honourable senators, I really cannot summon up great sympathy for those who are basing their objectives on myths, or who say it will be too much trouble in the interests of public safety to list up to 10 guns on a postcard and send the card and $10 into the local registry.

I do have real concerns for the aboriginal people whose culture has inculcated the principles of family and community care and the use of firearms, but those concerns have been shared by the Minister of Justice. He has already undertaken extensive consultations with aboriginal communities as to the best way to develop regulations which do not infringe on their constitutional rights, and methods of implementing the law to meet their needs. Still, he and they must acknowledge that misuse of firearms and the tragedy that flows from them is not the exclusive preserve of the non-native population.

Honourable senators, the purpose of guns is to kill. The misuse of guns to kill, maim and threaten is one of the most dangerous challenges to the peace, order and good government of our society. As such, our government, with the massive support of our people, has no alternative but to take the measures contained in Bill C-68 as a matter of public safety.

Honourable senators, I will vote to approve Bill C-68 without amendment.

Senator Sparrow: Would the honourable senator permit two questions?

Senator Stanbury: Certainly.

Senator Sparrow: First, in your initial remarks, you said you see no reason why people would mind admitting they have a gun. I would think those people who legitimately own a gun — there may be some exceptions — have no concern about admitting they have a gun. Every farmer in my country admits he has a gun. People who use guns in crime are the ones who will not admit they have a gun. Would you agree with that? You have been in Turtleford, have you not? You know the areas I am talking about. I am asking you if you believe that the reason there is opposition to this bill is that people are somehow hiding their guns from the rest of the population?

Second, you talk about the government need for gun control now. Is this need any more severe than it was 5, 10, 20 or 50 years ago? Is there any greater crime now that a licensing regime would stop?

Senator Stanbury: Honourable senators, in answer to my honourable friend's first question, I said that I did not believe anyone would object to admitting to having guns and having their possession recorded. I still do not believe that. When I was on the farm, we had a gun. If someone said we should register that gun, why would we have objected? We were not afraid to say that we had a gun, and we had no resistance to having it registered. This is just a matter of recording that you have the gun.

What was your second question, senator?

Senator Sparrow: Is crime worse now than it was in the past?

Senator Stanbury: Honourable senators, the fact is that the process in Bill C-68 has been going on for 30 or 40 years. The process goes back to 1981, and there was a gun control bill before that. It is gradually coming to be understood by legislators and the public that there is a need for a greater knowledge of where guns are located, and who has them. That is what the committee decided when they dealt with Bill C-17. If a Liberal government had not brought this legislation forward, it would have been brought forward by a Conservative government. Kim Campbell was already preparing the legislation to do exactly what we are talking about today.

Senator Sparrow: Do you know what happened to Kim Campbell?

Senator Stanbury: Yes, I do. However, I doubt that her passage of gun control legislation was the reason for her downfall.

Senator St. Germain: Honourable senators, I rise tonight because I think there may be some doubt as to where I stand on this issue. I want to make sure I am off the fence, especially for Senator Carstairs and others who may not know exactly where I stand.

Senator Stanbury began by saying that he figured there must be two entirely different bills. What we are dealing with, though, are two entirely different worlds. If you live on Wellington Crescent in Forest Hill, or if you live in Aklavik, there is a major difference.

Honourable senators, we came to this place to represent all Canadians. Somewhere along the way, I believe that perhaps we have lost sight of the fact that we represent all Canadians, those in Aklavik, those in Willow Bunch, Saskatchewan, and other places in this great country.

Senator Stanbury began his speech by saying that he has had military experience. Honourable senators, so have I. I spent five years in the military, and I spent about five-and-a-half years as a police officer, therefore I do not stand here inexperienced in the world of guns and violence. I spent months undercover in Vancouver with the drug community. I was an undercover agent in narcotics and various other areas of police work. I think I know a little bit — not much, but a little bit — when it comes to dealing with violence.

First, honourable senators, I want to state to all honourable senators that I am a strong supporter of gun control. Bill C-68, in my view, though, is not gun control — it is gun registration. A bureaucracy will be imposed on law-abiding citizens.

Honourable senators, I also support the safety and storage aspects of this bill. I think this is what distinguishes us from other societies in that we exercise a high degree of safety and control within our society. If I believed for one second that Bill C-68, as drafted, would improve the control of guns, I would be the first one to vote for it. If I believed that the registration portion of the legislation would do anything, I would be front and centre in supporting Bill C-68. However, I do support the criminal enforcement aspects of Bill C-68 because I think it is most important that we tighten our laws to impede those who would defy our laws.

I also respect the elected place in our bicameral system of Parliament. It is in that spirit that I support amendments to the legislation. I was shocked by the attitude of the minister who felt his bill was perfect. I have been around this place long enough, honourable senators, to know that nothing here is perfect. In spite of how great or how eloquent or how well-educated or how experienced one is, there is always room for improvement. I believe a minister who would not entertain, or even consider, any amendments is remiss in his or her duties.

To a degree, there is some intellectual dishonesty regarding gun registration when people say it will reduce crime and control criminals. I do not believe that it will.

If the minister and those who support him were to be really honest, do you know what they would be asking for? They would be asking that we ban all firearms other than for the police and the military. I do not know what the result of that would be in our society, but I do think that would have more credence than asserting that the registration of the firearms of law-abiding citizens will make a difference, because if all the guns we have in this country were to be registered, they would all still exist in their present form. As Senator Sparrow and others have said here today and on other occasions, it would make no difference because criminals would not register their guns anyway.

What difference would it make with respect to suicides? I have heard so many times that suicide would be reduced if all guns were registered. What difference would it make if every gun were registered in the Northwest Territories? Theoretically, this bill will cause everyone to send in a little slip to register their guns. When a registered gun owner reaches such a low point that he or she wants to end his or her life, registration will do nothing to stop them.

The Marc Lépins of our world will not go away because of registration. They will still be there, front and centre, because no government can legislate against insanity. We will always have those in our society who will be dangerous. I do not believe that gun registration, in any way, shape or form, will eliminate those people who become violent.

I do wish the minister had been honest and stuck to his guns when he said he believed that only the police and the military should have guns. Then he would have had some credibility with me. Then I could possibly believe that he was really committed to reducing violence in our society.

I would hope that the families of victims of violent crimes in this country are not used in the political agenda to pursue any kind of legislation. It is not fair to misrepresent the facts in that manner.

As most honourable senators know, I travelled with several senators across this country to hear what Canadians had to say about this bill. I apologize to Senator Prud'homme for not making him aware of the travels that we undertook; he would have accompanied us. However, we did hear, in the western provinces and in the north, what Canadians had to say on this issue. It is regrettable that the meetings were boycotted by those who support Bill C-68 because, as I said earlier, if someone could point out to me how gun registration would reduce crime, I would change my position and my views on this matter.

We did hear from school teachers, farmers, trappers, outfitters, that what we need in our society more than anything is education. We need the removal of violence from our media. We need to work with and build on the family unit. These are the issues which were brought forward to Senators Tkachuk, Stratton, Carney, Lucier, Lawson and others who were with us. These are the concerns that will make a significant change in our society.

We heard from our aboriginal community. We have, as a society, done things to these people for which we should all be very ashamed. I went and lived with the Inuit on the Beaufort Sea. I slept in a sleeping bag on the floor of one of their hunting cabins, which I shared with a family of seven. I spent the day with them. I saw how they lived. I did not want to come back here and just say that I believe I know how they live. I spent time with them.

I spent time with the Dene Nation, with Chief Bill Erasmus. I spent time with the Minister of Justice, Steven Kakfwi, in the Northwest Territories and with his people. I spoke to no native people, men or women, who were in favour of this legislation with the sole exception of Senator Marchand. He is the only native person with whom I have been in contact who supports this bill.

As I have pointed out before in this place, we have forced these people off their traditional lands. We placed them on reserves. We virtually persecuted them. One native at the Dene Nation meeting said to me: "Your white community should have practised gun control 150 to 200 years ago when they were killing all of us." When Senator Spivak talks about the need for gun control, I would point out to her that that is when it was needed.

We took their children and put them in residential schools. We had people running these facilities who sexually and physically abused their children. We told those native children that it was shameful to remember their culture or to speak their own language. We went one step further: We established the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and created a social welfare state. We removed from them every single ounce of dignity. We destroyed them as a people.

One young chief rose at a Dene Nation meeting in front of some 30 chiefs and said: "Senator, go back to Ottawa and tell these people we do not need gun control. I am the chief and there are only two of us in the tribe who are sober. The rest, elders and everyone, are under the influence. We need alcohol and substance control. Gun control is not part of our problem and it never has been."

Then we have our prison communities: In Stony Mountain prison in Manitoba, 55 per cent of the population is native, but only 7 per cent of the provincial population is native. My friends, we now want to criminalize them even further for not registering their tools.

The native people can hardly believe that this is happening. Senator Lucier can tell you about the elders in the Yukon who spoke to us, each one from the bottom of his heart. They did not make fancy speeches on the egregious errors or the temerity of this bill; they told us, in the most basic terms, how this bill will impact upon them negatively.

• (2200)

Why are we doing this? One senator told me that we will give them a break and only charge them with a summary offence and, on the second offence, they will become criminals. These people do not understand why they would be charged in the first place. They would logically commit the offence again because they would figure they were doing the right thing. Yet we want to criminalize and incarcerate them.

Honourable senators, this is the most horrible piece of legislation that we could impose on these people. It is totally unacceptable.

I do not know what the government is thinking. I was looking at the smug bureaucrat who sat beside the minister when he appeared before our committee. We asked them about consultation with natives. In our travels, we asked those who appeared before us about consultation. We heard in committee before we left that they had not been consulted. We were told this by Matthew Coon Come, Chief Erasmus and Ovide Mercredi — all of them told us that they had not been consulted. I said to the minister, "Why were they not consulted?" The minister provided us with a list of those with whom they consulted. The natives told us, "Our name is there but they never talked to us."

The bureaucrats at DIAND know better, just like all the other bureaucrats. They know what these people need. In spite of the fact that we have virtually annihilated them, we are still going at it.

Honourable senators, I wanted to change the amendment to include consultation for 12 months before the passage of this legislation. I was told that this would be seen as hoisting the bill. I understand that. I do not want to hoist any bills. I do not want to delay the legislation. I just want to see good legislation.

Honourable senators have talked about Kim Campbell's bill. I did not agree with it, either. All I want to do is deal with things logically. I do not believe that we are exercising logic in dealing with our native communities.

I would like to finish off by saying what I think this piece of legislation will do to our country. I was elected to the House of Commons in 1983. I did not know a living, breathing Tory when I got into this business. At the time I came into Parliament, I could see problems developing on the horizon as far as the unity of this country was concerned. I see four provinces and two territories representing 80 per cent of the land mass and 56 per cent of the population of this country saying, "This is not good legislation. This is not enforceable. We will comply with it if we are forced to."

Honourable senators, we are developing a wedge like the one that has developed in Quebec. It is not the same thing, but it is a division. It is divisiveness that I do not believe this country needs at this point in time.

I was told that the reason Quebec was allowed to hold a referendum in 1980 was that a duly-elected legislative assembly in that province wanted to exercise its democratic rights. Another referendum was held in 1995. What is wrong with the legislative assemblies of Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, the Northwest Territories and Yukon? Why are we not paying heed to what these people are saying? These people are not supporting any criminal activity. What they are doing is representing their regions. Until we recognize the diversity of this country, we are destined to destroy it.

I can understand why Quebec is where it is today. I can also understand what will happen if we continue along this track and continue to ignore the likes of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Ontario, the territories and Yukon.

In closing, the minister quoted his Liberal friend, the Attorney General of P.E.I. What a coincidence; they are both Liberals and they both have their own special view of Canada, which is basically the same view. There is more to Canada than P.E.I. and downtown Toronto: just ask Chief Erasmus, Mike Dudar from Ethelbert, Manitoba, Mayor Gary Pollock from Swan Hills, Alberta, or Jim Zimmerman from the Kootenays. These people are Canadians. They have a different view of what Canada is all about and what it is to be a Canadian.

Maybe we should ask the Quebecers. Instead of the manipulation that took place with them, how different would it be if the Constitution had not been patriated without them being a signatory to the document? Had the Meech Lake Accord gone ahead, perhaps today we would be a stronger country.

We are at a crossroads. All this is history in the making. We control the destiny and the future of this country. Let us not forget that we are all diverse. We all may see Canada through a somewhat different window, but we all see Canada in the background. Let us not lose our focus on Canada and its diversity.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would certainly not suggest that we have completed the roster of speakers on this particular bill on either side of the house. There have been discussions with the leadership on both sides. There seems to be an agreement that we might adjourn and resume tomorrow. If any honourable senator wants to speak tonight, then we still have time. However, I do not see anyone who is so inclined.

If there is agreement, I would adjourn the debate in the name of Senator Bacon.

On motion of Senator Graham, for Senator Bacon, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if there is agreement, I move that all remaining Orders, Reports, Motions and Inquiries stand.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Wednesday, November 22, 1995 at 1:30 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, November 22, 1995

The Senate met at 1:30 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

NIGERIA

EXECUTION OF KEN SARO-WIWA AND NINE OTHER Ogoni ACTIVISTS

Hon. Jean-Louis Roux: Honourable senators, I was shocked and appalled by the execution by hanging on November 10, 1995 of nine leaders of the Ogoni people in Nigeria at the hands of the military dictatorship of General Sani Abacha. One of these activists was the internationally acclaimed writer Ken Saro-Wiwa.

[Translation]

In addition to defending the rights of the Ogoni people, Ken Saro-Wiwa was a well-known writer and ardent environmentalist. He was president of the association of writers of Nigeria and known as a human rights activist through Amnesty International and PEN International, and for his defence of environmental rights through Greenpeace. In 1990, he abandoned his literary career to found the Movement for the Survival of Ogoni People.

[English]

Led by Ken Saro-Wiwa, the 500,000 Ogonis mobilized en masse to claim their fair share of the billions of dollars extracted from their homeland by multinational oil companies, such as Shell and Mobil. Several observers have noted that the revenues generated by this exploitation, an estimated $100 billion since 1960, were used indirectly to finance the repression of the Ogonis by the military rulers. As well, the Ogonis demand compensation for the ecological devastation caused to their traditional economy, which is based on fishing and agriculture, by badly maintained pipelines and oil blow-outs.

Despite the Ogonis' commitment to non-violence, an intervention by the Nigerian military to crush a demonstration against Shell in January 1993 led to the destruction of several villages and the mindless killing of several hundred innocent victims. In November 1993, the military junta annulled the presidential elections and incarcerated the presumed victor, arrested and persecuted hundreds of pro-democracy activists, muzzled the press, and engaged in widespread repression and corruption.

[Translation]

Saro-Wiwa was jailed in May 1994, after being charged with planning the murder of four pro-government Ogoni chiefs. Although he declared that he was innocent and was not even present when the incident took place, Saro-Wiwa and his fellow defendants were sentenced to death for these murders by a special tribunal, in a flagrant denial of the fundamental rights of the defendants, which was unanimously condemned as a parody of justice by many international observers. At least two witnesses have admitted they were paid by the government.

Despite appeals for clemency and protests from many organizations and many countries, General Abacha cynically turned a deaf ear and confirmed his odious reputation by executing the nine Ogoni activists. Outrage among the international community was instantaneous. In a decision unprecedented in the history of that organization, Commonwealth members, meeting in Auckland, New Zealand at the time the nine Ogoni leaders were executed, imposed a two-year suspension on Nigeria, during which time it would have to restore democracy and respect for human rights or otherwise be formally excluded from the organization. The European Union also broke off all cooperation with the military regime of General Abacha. Many countries, including Canada, also withdrew their ambassadors from Abuja, the capital of Nigeria.

We have known for some time the dangers inherent in political systems where freedom of expression is curtailed and any hint of dissent is silenced. Writer Ken Saro-Wiwa was among the first to be critical of the system in his country, Nigeria. The whole world will always be indebted to him, and I urge all my colleagues to pay him the tribute he deserves, bearing in mind this very apt comment by Albert Camus in Le témoin de la liberté:

In a world in which we are condemned to die, the artist testifies to that which refuses to die in us...

GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

Hon. Marjory LeBreton: Honourable senators, I wish to put on the record that I, like many of my colleagues, support strict gun control laws. I was honoured to be part of the government which legislated some of the strictest gun control laws in the world, particularly as the law relates to handguns and assault weapons.

I have spoken to many women who share these views on this issue. We now have a new bill before us for consideration. There is always room for improvement, and I intend to support amendments which seek to do just that: Improve the bill.

I would like to add, honourable senators, that many women who have spoken to me worry about the cost of the implementation of this new legislation. They ask: Would this money not be better spent on homes for battered women and children and on funding the child care package promised by the Liberals in their infamous Red Book, a concrete measure which would allow women to be freer to make choices for the overall betterment of their own lives and the lives of their children?

Hon. Lorna Milne: Honourable senators, in my speech yesterday, I had my eye on the clock, and I was unable to put on the record some thoughtful words we heard in committee on Bill C-68. I will take a moment to draw your attention to them.

The committee heard from the Honourable Alan Buchanan, Attorney General of Prince Edward Island. His words were echoed by his federal counterpart last week, and I think they bear repeating. He said:

I am a Canadian and I believe that this bill is an important legislative expression of what it means to be a Canadian. I believe the bill to be a timely reaffirmation of the essential beliefs and values that set us aside as a civilized nation.

He added later:

I am convinced that our long-standing cultural tradition as peaceful and law-abiding people is a fundamental part of our national character, a priceless badge of honour, and we should do everything possible to...strengthen this tradition. The federal government's legislation does precisely that and as a Canadian and as a parliamentarian I am pleased to support this legislative initiative...

Honourable senators, I agree with Mr. Buchanan, and I believe that his words should be reflected upon by all members of this house.

Hon. Pat Carney: Honourable senators, I too wish to address the firearms legislation that is before us this afternoon. I attended meetings recently in Vancouver to hear from people who feel they will be affected by Bill C-68, meetings that were called by my B.C. colleague Gerry St. Germain and attended by Senator Ghitter and others. I thought it would be timely to share with you some of the concerns expressed at those hearings.

Honourable senators, most of us in this chamber do, of course, support gun control. In 1991, our Conservative government, under then justice minister Kim Campbell, brought in the most extensive firearms legislation in existence in the recent past.

I have checked with our Vancouver police officer, and he finds that legislation quite effective. The officer in charge of firearms permits says he turns down about 10 to 20 per cent of requests for firearms certificates on the basis of that legislation. The man on parole does not get a licence; the man going bankrupt does not get a licence; a person showing signs of depression does not get a licence — in other words, we have effective legislation.

I wanted to mention some of the concerns from our hearings. A very important one was the effect that this legislation will have on aboriginal rights. One of the most effective agencies in my province is the Indian Homemakers of B.C. It is an advocate for women and children and a group that, I thought, would support this legislation. At the hearings, its president spoke to the contrary. It opposes this legislation because it feels the provisions in Bill C-68 will increase the level of violence against women and children among First Nations. That was disturbing to me.

Other concerns related to the impact of this legislation on international competition. As honourable senators know, the head coach of the Canadian Olympic team says that the provisions in this bill, whether by design or accident, would impede our ability to compete in the Olympic Games and the Pan-American Games. The Commonwealth Games could not have been held in Victoria had this legislation been in place. There is concern that an activity which is a recreational sport and an international sport to many Canadians is being unfairly targeted in this bill.

Concerns were raised about the cost imposed by this legislation, the millions upon millions of dollars that witnesses said should go to child care, violence against women, shelters, and policing activities against criminal elements. That is a very real concern.

There was concern that law-abiding Canadians could be found in violation of a minor infringement under this legislation, and could actually go to jail on a second offence. As one ex-police officer said at the hearings, "If we are not the target, why do we have to pay the price?"

Concern was expressed about the harshness of the penalties contained in the bill. It was pointed out that under this legislation the minimum penalties for failure to register a gun would be harsher than those for manslaughter or attempted murder. That is considered to be an inequitable application of the law in our part of the country.

There are concerns about hobbies. People interested in our history like to re-enact battles and feel they will be targeted by this legislation.

Some people were concerned about museums. Normally, we do not consider museums to be a hotbed of criminal activity, but museums say that they will be required to pay about $4 million in fees under this legislation.

There is concern that antique guns are included in this legislation. As we were told at the Vancouver hearings, there is no record of a 7-Eleven convenience store being shot up by anyone using a 200-year-old musket.

There is a private fear, publicly voiced, that under the computer registration provision of this legislation, homes could be targeted by criminals. As one female witness said, a computer list could turn into a shopping list for criminals. They fear that their privacy and safety will be affected.

I wanted to bring those concerns forward for the benefit of honourable senators who did not have a chance to attend the Vancouver hearings, the Kamloops hearings, the Yukon hearings, Manitoba hearings, or all the other hearings organized by our colleagues on Bill C-68.

CANADA COUNCIL

FUTURE OF ART BANK

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I did not have sufficient time to prepare myself for this statement. Nevertheless, I think it is important that a senator make a statement at this time about the future of the Canada Council Art Bank.

Some months ago, the president of the Canada Council and the director announced the establishment of a transition advisory committee to help the council decide what to do about the Art Bank, an institution which has functioned exceedingly well up until this point in time. I am not saying that there were no problems, especially managerial ones, but that is something I do not wish to speak about today.

Honourable senators, the fact is that a number of papers have articles on the presentation of the report, which was released only yesterday, though it had been in the hands of the president and the director of the Canada Council for over a month. The headline in The Toronto Star reads, "Keep Art Bank alive, but cut off funds, report says." The Globe and Mail reads, "Scale down Art Bank, advisory team says — Canada Council questions report."

• (1350)

[Translation]

Today's Le Devoir has a four-column-wide headline, which translates roughly as:

Survival hangs in the balance.

Canada Council Art Bank transition committee tables its report.

[English]

The Montreal Gazette had a four-column-wide headline:

Committee report on Art Bank's fate calls for it to be resuscitated.

The Ottawa Citizen's B-folio headline reads as follows:

Art Bank shouldn't be sold, panel says. Hiring managers, paring collection, also suggested.

The point is that the chairman of the Canada Council and the director of the Canada Council made up their minds, they say, with the few members who were then on the board of the council; but their number was small compared to the full complement of council members. Some months ago, they decided that the Art Bank would have to disappear. That was what was in their minds; they made the announcement, and that was that. They then established a transition committee to help them achieve that goal.

Notwithstanding the fact that it was not within its mandate, the transition committee has emphatically stated that the Art Bank should be maintained, although perhaps not in the specific way it is now managed and operated. They did single out the Art Bank as constituting a unique art collection spanning some 25 to 30 years of artistic production in this country. That goes directly against the will of those who direct the Canada Council today.

To me, that is indicative of there being something gravely wrong within the Canada Council.

Honourable senators may agree or disagree with some decisions the Canada Council has made over the years but, in my opinion and in that of many senators, overall, it has served the cultural interests of Canada exceedingly well, in spite of incidents or accidents. I do not think we should throw the baby out with the proverbial bath water.

The time has come for Parliament to re-examine the operation of the Canada Council. I believe it should be maintained. However, the Canada Council, existing by virtue of a law of Parliament, mandated by Parliament, has to come to account with the way it is directing that institution. The Senate is in an excellent position to take that initiative and, indeed, to have a second look at all of our cultural institutions and what they bring to the identity and unity of Canada. In the near future, we should set ourselves that task.

REFORM PARTY

BID TO BECOME OFFICIAL OPPOSITION IN HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: Honourable senators, if my information is correct, this afternoon Preston Manning will attempt to achieve his lifetime dream of becoming the Leader of the Official Opposition in the Parliament of Canada, and to have his colleagues rise and sing our national anthem.

On the surface, this is laudable. We enjoy the presence of our flag on the floors of our respective chambers, but we have refrained for a very good and valid reason from the practice of singing our national anthem.

Anthems, of course, are living things and, as such, from time to time they should reflect the society in which we live, our history and culture, our hopes for the future, our own separate beliefs and our own separate gods. However, honourable senators, when we subject those symbols to the peril of ridicule or politicization, then I believe we do a disservice.

As one of the two remaining parliamentarians who had the rare and deep privilege of helping to rewrite our national anthem back in the mid-1960s, I take exception to the Reform Party of Canada's attempt to — just what it is, I am not sure. If they are attempting to bring into disrepute the flag of Canada and the parliamentary process, then I would be very upset.

Honourable senators, it will be obvious whether certain members of another party, who have every right to be in that other chamber, respect the singing of the national anthem. If they sit and do not participate, then I ask you to consider what that will do to our national anthem as a symbol of our lives in Canada.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the eleventh report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology. This report concerns Bill C-64, respecting employment equity.

I ask that the report be printed in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: When shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Graham, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

PRIVATE BILL

EVANGELICAL MISSIONARY CHURCH (CANADA WEST DISTRICT)
FIRST READING

Hon. Leonard J. Gustafson presented Bill S-12, to amalgamate the Alberta corporation known as the Missionary Church with the Canada corporation known as the Evangelical Missionary Church, Canada West District.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Gustafson, bill placed on Orders of the Day for second reading on Wednesday, November 29, 1995.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Michael Kirby: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday, November 23, 1995, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have the power to sit at two o'clock in the afternoon, Thursday, November 30, 1995, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 95(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

STATE OF CANADIAN FINANCIAL SYSTEM—
NOTICE OF MOTION TO EXTEND DATE OF FINAL REPORT

Hon. Michael Kirby: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, November 23, 1995, I will move:

That, notwithstanding the order of reference adopted by the Senate on Wednesday, November 30, 1994, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to continue its examination into the present state of the financial system in Canada;

That, in conducting this study, the Committee pursue, in particular, its examination into Crown financial institutions, corporate governance, and the 1992 reform of financial institutions;

That, notwithstanding usual practices, if during the winter adjournment the Senate is not sitting when the Committee's report on its review of Crown financial institutions is completed, the report may be deposited with the Clerk of the Senate and it shall thereupon be deemed to have been presented to that Chamber; and

That the Committee present its final report no later than September 26, 1996.

GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Eric Arthur Berntson (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have in my hand a petition containing 4,370 signatures from rural municipality 92, Wawota, Saskatchewan. It states:

TO THE HONOURABLE THE SENATE OF CANADA IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED

The PETITION of the undersigned, residents of Canada,

Humbly Sheweth:

THAT the majority of Canadians are law-abiding citizens who respect the law;

THAT the crime rate in Canada will not decrease if mandatory registration of firearms legislation is passed; and that stricter penalties on offenders would be a more appropriate solution to crime;

THAT the majority of Canadians are opposed to those measures in the Government Action Plan and in Bill C-68 that impose needless burdens on law-abiding Canadians such as the registration and licensing of firearms;

THEREFORE your petitioners pray that: The Senate of Canada will do all in its power to defeat Bill C-68;

AND as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Honourable senators, there are now 4,371 signatures on this petition, as I have added my own to it.

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the following petition signed by 2,500 people from every region in the province of British Columbia from Prince George to Delta and Surrey:

TO THE HONOURABLE SENATE OF CANADA IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED

The petition of the undersigned citizens of Canada humbly showeth that Bill C-68, a bill concerning firearms and other weapons, is unwarranted and intrusive legislation which needlessly targets law-abiding firearms owners and which attacks the very foundations of the democratic principles of this country.

Hon. Leonard J. Gustafson: Honourable senators, I should like to present the following petition:

TO THE HONOURABLE SENATE OF CANADA IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED

The petition of the undersigned citizens of Canada humbly showeth that Bill C-68, a bill concerning firearms and other weapons, is unwarranted and unnecessary legislation which needlessly targets law-abiding Canadians and which attacks the very foundation of the democracy principles of this country.

There are thousands of signatures here. I have not counted them, but they give some indication of the concern about this legislation, especially in rural Saskatchewan, parts of Alberta and B.C.

Hon. Duncan J. Jessiman: Honourable senators, I have the following petition to present:

TO THE HONOURABLE SENATE OF CANADA IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED

We, the undersigned, do not feel that registering and restricting the use of sporting guns will reduce crime in this country. It will only add cost and waste time for honest and responsible gun owners. It will also cost taxpayers a lot of money to enforce. We enjoy the sport of hunting and shooting, and hope our children, too, would get the chance to enjoy it. Additional costs and hassles introduced by further restrictive legislation will no doubt discourage them from taking up the sport.

This petition was signed by approximately 1,000 persons in the province of Manitoba outside the city of Winnipeg.

Hon. Willie Adams: Honourable senators, I have a petition to present with 1,552 signatures from the Baffin region, the Keewatin region and Aklavik, with regard to forcing Bill C-68 upon the Northwest Territories.

QUESTION PERIOD

JUSTICE

SALE OF AIRBUS AIRCRAFT TO AIR CANADA—ALLEGED CONSPIRACY TO DEFRAUD FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—TABLING OF LETTER TO SWISS AUTHORITIES—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: Honourable senators, I invite the Leader of the Government in the Senate to respond to a question I asked of her on November 20 concerning the complexity of tabling a pertinent letter in this chamber. That letter concerned the request of another government to pursue a certain matter.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have made inquiries. I was advised that, no, it would not be possible to table that letter. That letter is confidential.

Senator Forrestall: Honourable senators, it certainly is confidential; there is no doubt about that. So that the record is clear, could the minister indicate what makes it confidential? Is it confidential because of an agreement that would require the permission of another authority to release it, or is it an internal matter?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, the letter to which the honourable senator refers — that is, the original letter — is a confidential letter that was transmitted in that manner, very carefully, to the Swiss authorities. It remains confidential. Other varieties of correspondence which have found their way into the media are not the document of the Department of Justice.

[Translation]

SALE OF AIRBUS AIRCRAFT TO AIR CANADA—ALLEGED CONSPIRACY TO DEFRAUD FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—
DEPARTMENTAL LETTER TO SWISS AUTHORITIES—
SOURCE OF LEAK TO MEDIA

Hon. Pierre Claude Nolin: Honourable senators, yesterday afternoon the Minister of Justice admitted, in connection with this letter, that it was important to find out how the infamous letter had been leaked. Yesterday afternoon, at the very same time or just shortly after, RCMP authorities contacted admitted that they were not aware of any investigation into this famous leak. Could you please enlighten us about this confusion?

[English]

• (1410)

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we have no idea how an edited version of the letter to the Swiss authorities found its way into the hands of the Canadian media. As I believe I have made clear, Department of Justice officials confirm that the edited document is not a federal government document. The original letter was a confidential letter between the appropriate Canadian and Swiss authorities, as I have already told Senator Forrestall.

With regard to my honourable friend's comments on the RCMP, I will follow up on that matter with my colleagues.

[Translation]

Senator Nolin: The Minister of Justice was very clear: The source of the leak must be found. Canadians are entitled to conclude from the minister's statement that he wants an internal investigation carried out. That statement also sent the media after the RCMP to ask if an investigation was under way. The response is confusing. I think we are entitled to know whether this confusion is going to be cleared up.

[English]

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I will, of course, do anything I can to clear up any confusion experienced by the honourable senator with regard to this issue.

However, I will state once again that there is no confusion about the fact that the Minister of Justice has confirmed that the original letter between Canadian and Swiss officials was confidential, and documentation which is out in the media or elsewhere is not Canadian government documentation.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

CORNWALLIS PARK DEVELOPMENT AGENCY—ALLEGATIONS OF MISMANAGEMENT—FINDINGS OF NATIONAL DEFENCE
INVESTIGATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gerald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, my question is a follow-up to a question I raised previously with regard to the removal of assets from DND property in Cornwallis, Nova Scotia. The leader may be aware that the Military Police from CFB Greenwood have finally been called in to investigate the suspicious removal of base property.

Given that the Military Police were not doing their jobs when the assets were being removed, what assurances do Canadians have that the findings of the DND investigations will be made public?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I was not aware of the information which the honourable senator has provided. I will follow up on that matter.

Senator Comeau: Honourable senators, given that the findings may be of incompetence, or worse, will the minister assure the house that the findings of the investigation will be made public?

Senator Fairbairn: I should like to refresh my memory on the details relating to my honourable friend's original question before I give such an assurance.

HUMAN RIGHTS

NIGERIA—EXECUTION OF Ogoni ACTIVISTS—POSSIBLE
RESTORATION OF DEMOCRACY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, I should like to associate myself with the comments made by Senator Roux on the tragedy which occurred in Nigeria recently. Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate update us on what action the Government of Canada is taking in dealing with those who are running that country?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to associate myself with the remarks of Senator Di Nino and Senator Roux, as I am sure all of us in this house would, on the enormous tragedy which occurred in Nigeria. It occurred, in effect, in the face of the Commonwealth, which was meeting at that time.

As Senator Di Nino will know, the Canadian government and the Prime Minister very strongly condemned the decision by the Nigerian authorities. Indeed, Prime Minister Chrétien was very outspoken in his efforts to mobilize public opinion against the occurrence of such a tragedy.

In concert with other nations, Canada has recalled its chargé d'affaires from Lagos for consultation. The Canadian government is considering a number of measures against Nigeria's military regime to promote the return to democracy in that country. The honourable senator might appreciate that the most effective manner of doing this is through multilateral action. The kinds of measures which might be taken will be discussed with Canada's Commonwealth allies, and also within the United Nations family.

Senator Di Nino: Honourable senators, it is laudable that our colleague the Leader of the Government in the Senate agrees with us. I have no doubt that she does, and I am delighted to hear it.

However, is the government prepared to take some leadership in this matter, and take some action against the hoodlums who are running Nigeria, or will it be as cowardly in dealing with this issue as it was in dealing with the hoodlums who are governing China?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I will not repeat the answer I gave to the honourable senator earlier. I will only add that Canada very definitely took the lead in advance of its Commonwealth allies on this issue, and intends to follow up this tragedy with action. We have already taken certain diplomatic actions, and other actions are being suggested in discussions among Commonwealth nations and the United Nations.

From past history of movements toward governments such as the government of Nigeria, we have learned that the effectiveness of international action is based primarily on the unity of nations, and on the response emanating from them. In concert with its partners both at the United Nations and in the Commonwealth, Canada is very actively attempting to reach some agreement on what kind of action will produce an effective and meaningful result in Nigeria.

Senator Di Nino: We look forward to your actions.

MANUFACTURE AND USE OF LAND MINES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. A. Raynell Andreychuk: Honourable senators, staying on the international front, I wish to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate with regard to land mines and the conventions dealing with them. I associate myself with her comment that multilateral action is the way to go on certain issues of human rights and international difficulties. I am pleased that Canada is involved multilaterally in trying to curb the use of land mines.

I am, however, distressed by the fact that, on a bilateral basis, the minister in charge has stated that Canada would continue to manufacture certain parts which can be used only for land mines.

In trying to discern what the government policy is, I got contradictory statements from various departments. In the end, my office was told that the whole matter is under review.

• (1420)

Could the Leader of the Government enlighten me as to where we stand today on land mines and the countless deaths that they have caused? We do not know the names of the dead, but we see the horrors in many countries: Cambodia, Vietnam, Bosnia, and the list goes on.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I, too, have been seeking information on this very issue, and I will share it when I receive it.

ENVIRONMENT

REDUCTION OF GREENHOUSE GAS EMISSIONS— ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL STANDARDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, at a recent federal-provincial meeting discussing greenhouse gas emissions, there seemed to be a difference of opinion between the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Natural Resources. It seems that the Minister of Natural Resources favours a voluntary approach on the part of the provinces in curbing greenhouse gas emissions, while the Minister of the Environment, who is attempting to achieve federal standards for curbing levels of greenhouse gas emissions, does not.

I should like to know the Leader of the Government's personal views on this matter, as well the policy of the government in terms of national standards.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, one thing that is sure is that both of my colleagues are united in their desire to see an orderly reduction of greenhouse gas emissions. I know there was a meeting a few days ago among ministers in Edmonton. I should like, to look into that meeting and obtain a report on the exact outcome.

Senator Spivak: Honourable senators, environment is a matter of shared jurisdiction. I know that there have been efforts to harmonize environmental evaluations. However, in making her enquiries, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate clarify how all of this will eventually play out?

Greenhouse gas emissions are a major concern. The reason for Minister Copps' position is that there has been new scientific information on global warming. Could the minister clarify whether, if it chooses, the federal government will be able to set federal standards? That is a very important question.

Senator Fairbairn: It is an important question, honourable senators. I agree that the issue itself is enormous, both internationally and for Canada. I shall try to obtain an answer for the honourable senator.

TRANSPORT

SEARCH AND RESCUE HELICOPTER REPLACEMENT PROGRAM—STATUS OF EH-101 CONTRACT— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: Honourable senators, I should like to try to clear up another matter. It has to do with search and rescue helicopters. As the Leader of the Government is no doubt aware, her colleague the appropriate minister has announced a final settlement with EH Industries for the contract that was cancelled by her government on assuming office.

I know she understands the importance of making the settlement public, because it speaks directly to the total cost of cancelling the EH-101 contract. It is also important because it is relevant to the $600-million price tag that the minister has outlined for the purchase of replacement equipment.

I would appreciate it very much if, sooner rather than later, the leader would shed some light on this matter so that we might have her answer as part of our record.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): I will certainly do that, honourable senators. I cannot do it today. On an issue like this, I would not even attempt to do so. I will try to obtain the relevant facts for the honourable senator as best I can.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE— DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Beaudoin, seconded by the Honourable Senator Grimard, for the adoption of the sixteenth report of the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs (Bill C-68, an Act respecting firearms and other weapons, with amendments) presented in the Senate on Monday, November 20, 1995.

Hon. Lise Bacon: Honourable senators, in a few days we shall be commemorating the horrible massacre at École polytechnique in Montreal.

On December 6, 1989, 14 young women lost their lives because a madman happened to cross their path, a madman with a gun. The École polytechnique massacre, like many other tragic events, reminds us that all too often firearms are part of our day-to-day reality. Cases of family homicides are surprisingly common in our country, and it is a shock to realize that firearms are the weapon of choice in spousal homicides.

Also terribly common are suicides involving a weapon that was too readily accessible, and made the difference between an irreparable outcome and an instant when the worst could have been avoided.

Bill C-68 was drafted in order to spare the women and men of this country from having to experience, or to fear, such situations any longer, and delaying its application and proposing unfounded amendments is not the way to start any effective action.

First of all, I shall address one of the amendments which is to delay implementation in certain provinces or in the territories. Allow me to state, honourable senators, that I find it somewhat ironic, when there is talk of equality between the provinces, that there is a desire to make some of them distinct cases. This amendment would allow provinces and territories to delay total Canada-wide implementation for up to ten years. This amendment is tantamount to allowing the provinces and territories the possibility of not implementing the firearms act for ten years. A ten-year delay means a heavy risk to the health and safety of Canadians.

This proposal cannot be supported, for a number of reasons — practical, economic and legal.

In his final submission to the Senate committee, the minister addressed the possibility of withdrawal, and its consequences for public safety and crime prevention.

Firearms from the provinces and territories deferring implementation will end up in jurisdictions that have chosen to implement registration promptly, thus undermining their program of universal registration.

Provincial and territorial governments told Parliament and the Senate committee why there was a need for national standards for enforcement of the legislation. The experience of other countries has illustrated the problems that occur when universal registration is not mandatory throughout the country. For instance, in Australia, universal registration exists in five of the country's administrations but not in the other three. The national committee on violence, an intergovernmental committee that examined violence in Australia, found that gun control was seriously undermined by the differences that existed from region to region. The committee recommended making universal registration mandatory throughout the country.

The provinces and territories could all elect to postpone implementation until all governments are ready to implement the program. Ten years would be too long and would not be acceptable, considering what Canadians expect gun control legislation to do in terms of protecting the public.

An assessment of universal registration by a few governments would not be very helpful. Unregistered guns and rifles would be moved from territory to territory, and the benefits of universal registration would be lost.

We need registration in all provinces and territories. According to a report on the unlawful entry, exit and circulation of firearms in Canada, in 1993 nearly 5,000 firearms were recovered by the police, which means 10 police forces serving 40 per cent of the rural and urban population of Canada. Half of these weapons were guns and rifles, which was one of the reasons why the task force recommended that all guns, and not just handguns, be registered upon entry into Canada.

What would be the consequences of this amendment? The police would not be able to trace the ownership of many of the firearms they recover. They would not know whether they were stolen, illegally imported, sold, or used previously to commit a criminal act.

Enforcement would create problems for Customs Canada. How could Customs officers enforce export regulations that differ from province to province? In the case of foreign visitors, would a licence and a certificate be issued to someone who arrives in a province where the program is in effect? Should the training Customs officers receive depend on where they work? How will the public react to Customs laws that vary, depending on the province and territory?

Parliament has an obligation to ensure that responsible owners of firearms are able to comply with Bill C-68. This provision for opting in or opting out would not be in the public interest. It would upset owners of firearms, hunters from other countries and the police who must enforce legislation that is passed to protect the Canadian public.

The financial framework of the Canadian firearms registration system, tabled by the Minister of Justice before the committee of the House of Commons, shows a balance between expenditures and revenues. However, this financial framework is based on the assumption that the money will come from three million owners who will register seven million firearms.

The Senate committee's proposal to amend Bill C-68 would make the legislation so confusing and so vague that it will be impossible to enforce and will benefit no one. Province by province implementation would mean that the present Part III of the Criminal Code and the new Part III provided under Bill C-68 would need to be in effect and enforced at the same time. One wonders whether this would be legally feasible.

With its application in different administrations with different criminal codes, an individual in a province that has the registration system in effect could not sell a long gun to someone in another province that does not, because no licence would be required.

Clearly, serious consideration has not been given to the disastrous effects this amendment would have in terms of the application of the legislation.

The amendment also poses problems in terms of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Under Part III of the present Criminal Code, two years' imprisonment is the maximum sentence provided for the transfer of a long gun to an individual who is not authorized to acquire a firearm. Under section 101 of the new Part III, five years' imprisonment is the maximum sentence for this offence.

Those proposing the amendment on participation and withdrawal will not want to impose such unfair and discriminatory legislation on Canadians.

The amendment is obviously incomplete. It aims at suspending the application of provisions of Bill C-68 pertaining to the registration of long guns. However, the section proposing the amendment does not indicate which clauses of Bill C-68 are involved. Many of the provisions relating to selling, lending, importing and exporting refer simply to "firearms" and concern their registration. There is no way of knowing whether these provisions are involved.

These questions cannot be justified by the Senate. If the amendment is passed, it will tarnish the image of every senator in the eyes of Canadians.

Furthermore, the dates indicated in the new clause 194 are in contradiction with both the provisions of this clause and those of clause 193. According to clause 193, the bill must come into effect by January 1, 2003, at the latest. However, according to the proposed subclauses 194(1) and (3), Bill C-68 must come into effect, in the case of long guns, a maximum of eight years after Royal Assent, which, obviously, does not coincide with January 1, 2003.

The essential cooperation between the provinces and territories and the federal government can only occur if we all make a commitment to achieve the purpose of this bill, namely the public health and safety of all Canadians. Bill C-68 addresses crime through gun control in order to promote safety in homes and on the streets across the country. The provinces agree with this Parliament that, at the end of the day, gun control legislation must be supported by the public. The gun control legislation must be fully implemented.

In conclusion, honourable senators, the purpose of Bill C-68 is to make our society safer and gun owners more responsible. That is the basic principle underlying this bill.

Bill C-68 is aimed at protecting family members from the dangers of unsupervised or easily accessible weapons. It is also designed to protect police officers, and to make their fight against crime more effective. Thanks to the registration of firearms, to harsher sentences and to other measures provided for in this bill, police officers will be better equipped to do their job while enjoying better protection.

Gun control represents an important and even an essential milestone in the fight against crime and violence. Honourable senators, we all want a safer, more secure society, and that is what Bill C-68 proposes.

[English]

Hon. Janis Johnson: Honourable senators, I rise today to express my support for the government's gun control bill, Bill C-68. I support this bill as it stands, without amendment. I ask each and every one of you to approach this as a matter of conscience. This is not an easy decision for any of us.

In the Senate, honourable senators, our most important role is to provide careful and ethical analysis of legislation. On matters as important as gun control, we must consider the ethics of our decision, and we must vote according to personal principles.

This is one of the most divisive issues to come before this house in recent memory, but the controversy is rooted in politics and the power of certain lobby groups. The fact is that the great majority of Canadians support tougher laws for the use and ownership of firearms, and this bill expresses the will of the Canadian people.

A poll taken by Angus Reid last October indicated that a clear 70 per cent of the 1,504 adults surveyed support tougher gun regulations. An Environics poll indicated that 90 per cent of Canadians support a law requiring all firearms to be registered. In the same poll, Canadians, particularly women living in large urban centres, show even higher levels of support than the national average. These statistics are impressive and cannot be overlooked. There is substantial support for this legislation, particularly in the province of Quebec.

My dear friends in the Senate of Canada, many organizations and groups in my own home province of Manitoba also support Bill C-68. When one hears people from the West speak, one would think that no one in Western Canada supports this legislation. This is not true. The Manitoba Action Committee on the Status of Women, the Manitoba Police Association, the Manitoba Teachers Association, the Manitoba Child Care Association, the John Howard Society of Manitoba, the Children's Home of Winnipeg, the Portage Women's Shelter, the Winnipeg Health Department, the Winnipeg Police Service — and I could go on with many more — all support the passage of this bill. I support the position of these groups.

I am concerned about public safety in Canada and, as honourable senators are aware, many police associations representing hundreds of officers across Canada support Bill C-68. I would remind my honourable friends of what was said by Chief MacDonald, President of the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, on this matter. He said, and I quote:

Without information about who owns guns, there is no effective gun control.

In his letter of February 24, 1995, he stated:

Opponents of gun control argue that the registration of firearms will not reduce crime. In fact, it is the position of the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police that cost effective registration is a key component of the new proposed gun control legislation. Registration of firearms will help control smuggling, gun theft, and the misuse of legal firearms in a number of important ways. The illegal gun trade is a major problem, particularly in large urban centres.

Regarding the effect of the registration system, the chief also stated the following in his letter:

Registration will help to ensure that gun owners are held accountable for their firearms and do not sell them illegally or give them to individuals without appropriate authorization.

Honourable senators, this is not a perfect bill. We are a patchwork of cultures across this country, and some groups such as trappers, hunters, farmers and aboriginal people have argued quite convincingly that this legislation runs counter to their life style. I think they have a point. However, this legislation will prove to be nothing more than an inconvenience to those groups. They certainly have a right to oppose inconvenient legislation, and they have done so with remarkable vigour. In my travels, listening to hunters, farmers and other gun owners — and, keep in mind I grew up in rural Manitoba — I have yet to encounter any explanation of how exactly this bill will constitute anything more than just that: a minor inconvenience.

Guns are designed to kill. Handguns and assault weapons in particular exist for no other purpose than to kill human beings. That being the case, this bill is only a moderate step. Any law-abiding Canadian citizen will, under the terms of this bill, retain the right to purchase and use a vast variety of guns. In no way does this legislation diminish the right of law-abiding Canadians to own guns.

The cornerstone of this proposed legislation is registration of those guns. While registration may indeed prove to be a nuisance, I have yet to comprehend why registration should be such an affront to gun owners. We live in a society that routinely registers everything, from my dog, to bicycles, to fishing boats. Perhaps, just perhaps, I am missing the point.

After listening to testimonials in town halls in rural Manitoba, I am still at a loss to understand how registering a deadly weapon is somehow un-Canadian or undemocratic. In these meetings the witnesses suggested some excellent, and quite reasonable, amendments to this bill.

Many gun owners feel that the bill targets law-abiding citizens instead of criminals. They argue that the first line of attack against gun crime should properly be directed at individuals who use guns in the commission of a crime. Of course, that is a reasonable argument. Many law-abiding gun owners have expressed strong support for much tougher penalties for the criminal use of firearms. I have to say that I am in agreement with these points of view. Although I feel that this bill inadequately addresses those concerns, I do not believe that is enough to defeat the bill.

All of us bring our own wish list of amendments to this bill. However, if we insist on the adoption of these amendments at this stage, we know very well that the bill may not survive another passage through the house.

It is not being overly dramatic to point out, honourable senators, that the lives of many people hang in the balance. These people are alive and well as we speak but they could well become victims of gun violence. They are people that you and I have probably met or may have known. They are tomorrow's victims, the people who appear as simple names and statistics in a game of political football.

One of them may be a woman with no job, no education, and a family of five children. She is in a long-term abusive relationship with a man who continually threatens her with a gun. By this time next year, she will probably have become another statistic.

Consider the 10-year-old boy alive, and well today, who will be killed while playing with a loaded gun. Consider the depressed teenager, the jilted husband, the mean drunk, the mentally deranged individual, and the 14-year-old gang member with something to prove. Consider that it is becoming increasingly easy for people like these to obtain firearms from across the border, from house break-ins or from the black market in unregistered guns. Consider the Canadians who must live with the consequences.

I am not speaking about people of privilege like you and me, honourable senators, some of whom live in the safest of society's enclaves. I am speaking about the victims: the person who earns $12,000 a year driving a taxi at midnight; the police officer who must ring a doorbell in the middle of the night in a domestic dispute, not knowing whether a gun waits on the other side of the door. We have all seen that officer's photograph in the newspaper, the handsome young father cut down in the prime of life. We will see that tragic photograph again.

That, honourable senators, is not in question. That is a fact. People will live or die as a result of our decision, and that is why this is an issue where ethics and personal responsibility must supersede politics.

In conclusion, I ask you to approach this vote as a matter of personal conscience.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Edward M. Lawson: Honourable senators, I am in favour of crime control, but I am opposed to mandatory gun registration.

It is somewhat ironic that in the next few weeks we will be asked to vote to decriminalize marijuana, and today we are being asked to vote on a bill that can criminalize decent, law-abiding Canadian citizens such as hunters, aboriginal people, and farmers.

Although I was impressed to some degree by Senator Johnson's presentation, two matters bother me. In the name of God, whatever happened to the word "compromise"? If we are dealing with crime control, we should have before us a simple bill with the toughest penalties, and it would meet with the unanimous approval of every farmer and rancher across the country as well as the whole Senate chamber. I repeat, "...whatever happened to the word 'compromise'?"

The other matter that causes me concern is that we talk about this being a life-and-death issue. If you take literally what has been said two or three times today, with the passage of this bill — from tomorrow forward — no one will die from the misuse of an unlocked gun; and no one will be killed by a crazed killer. All of that violence will disappear.

Honourable senators, it is fraudulent to suggest that to the Canadian public. They are being deceived because that will not be the case. The day following passage of this bill, or next week, or next month, people will die because guns are not being properly controlled. People will die at the hands of criminals and this bill will not prevent it.

• (1450)

I have been told that those of us who dare to oppose the legislation are somehow captive to the ideas of the National Rifle Association of the United States. I know something about the NRA. I know they are the largest political pack in the U.S. They raise more money than any other organization, including the medical association. They influence the election of more congressmen and senators. I am also aware of the letters that they send out to their members, which under the name of any other organization would be regarded as hate literature — so much so that, as you may recall, President Bush resigned from that organization.

I have seen their buttons — they corrupt teenagers by selling them buttons that say: “Yes, you may take my gun when you tear it from my cold, dead fingers.”

What a fraud! I consider the National Rifle Association to be almost an evil organization. However, I am not captive to their ideas simply because I oppose the fraud that is being perpetrated on Canadians with this bill.

A couple of incidents have had some influence on my thinking: A female public official in British Columbia told me to go back to Ottawa and tell the government to improve the legislation by banning all guns with the exception of police arms. I asked what she would have me tell natives and hunters who hunt for survival, and who feed themselves and their families on animals that they kill with guns? She said to tell them to get their meat at Safeway, the same as the rest of us.

Have we advanced very far in 200 years? Is that any worse or any better than “Let them eat cake”?

We had another incident in my “backyard” of British Columbia involving animal rights protectors. A number of mink farms operate in the Fraser Valley, where Senator St. Germain and I come from. On the mistaken assumption that these animals were being harvested with guns, in the dark of night 10 or 12 people turned thousands of the animals loose. Fortunately, about 80 per cent of the animals were recovered. Of the other few hundred, some were killed on the highways in traffic. Those that made it across the road would die an agonizing death from starvation, because those animals are domesticated, and cannot fend for themselves. One of the animal activists remarked: “Better that kind of death than to be living in a cage.”

These are economic terrorists of the worst kind. They are misguided, and without any regard for the economic damage done to the farmers who are trying to make an honest living. You can almost forgive that kind of ignorance. I really must ask, though: What is Allan Rock’s excuse?

We have all had thousands of letters and form letters. Setting aside the form letters, we received from legitimate Canadians 2,380 letters: 197 agreed with the bill, and 2,183 were against. From my own province, I received 1,320 individual letters: 34 were in favour of the bill, and 1,286 were against. That had some influence when taken with my own experience and my views of the bill.

I was pleased to join with my colleague from British Columbia, Senator St. Germain, as well as Senators Ghitter, Tkachuk, Carney and Lucier, at the hearings in Vancouver and Kamloops. We sat for a full day in both communities. Almost every group began by saying: “Finally, here is the Senate performing its function, hearing from ordinary people, and associations, and protecting regional interests.” They had been denied the opportunity because of logistics, or because of the numbers of people wishing to appear before the Senate committee in Ottawa, or because they could not reach Allan Rock, but this was their chance. Almost without exception, they prefaced their presentations with applause for the Senate.

I would like to add my applause to the Conservative senators who took the initiatives in holding these hearings. I was pleased to join with them to hear from ordinary Canadians in Vancouver and in Kamloops.

What did these ordinary Canadians tell us? My friend Senator Sparrow made an amendment which I seconded, and which I support. He talked about hunters and ranchers, and really made the case for city versus country. That is what this bill is all about. Why do we not have a city bill and a country bill? We heard today about how Senator Sparrow, as a rancher, deals with predators.

We do not have capital punishment in Canada; we have not had it for years, with one exception: On the farms and ranches of Canada, we still have capital punishment. If a predator steals a chicken, or kills a sheep or a cow, he must pay the ultimate price.

I do not know how many of you have had the experience of dealing with predators. I am a farmer. If you do not have your ammunition in that gun, and if you do not have the gun cocked and the safety off before you step out from the barn or the house, and that predator hears that click, you will never get a shot. These are simple, practical facts about the reality of what happens on farms and ranches.

In California, Governor Wilson ran for re-election on the platform that the economy and the environment were compatible. He said he had to do this because, in southern California, there are many sheep ranchers. He said that the old farmer who had been around for a long time, on seeing his sheep attacked by coyotes, would, like his father and grandfather before him, take out his rifle and chase down the predators.

Under the new system, along comes the environmental officer to tell the farmer he cannot do that. The farmer then asks how he is supposed to deal with predators, and the environmental officer replies, “Under the new system which allows you to get rid of your guns, we will follow the coyote to his lair and spray it to cause the coyote to lose its desire for sex.” The farmer then says, “Well, sonny, I don’t know what those coyotes do in the city, but out here in the country, they eat the sheep.” This is a country-versus-city issue. Those kinds of “cures” for these kind of problems simply do not work.

At the hearings I attended, we heard some very valid points from native women's groups. Some of these native women were hunters themselves. They had recommendations for the justice minister if he is concerned about suicide and about violence to native women. They said he should arrange for some federal funding for British Columbia to restore the suicide crisis line; that he should arrange federal funding for alcohol and drug abuse. They see funding as the problem, not the hunting of food for the survival of the tribe.

Some of you heard Senator Tkachuk's presentation last night. Look at the Application for Registration forms with the 20 questions. This was another issue that was raised at the hearings. A native chief from Kamloops said, "I hate to tell you this, but there are many in my tribe who cannot read or write." How can we reconcile the promotion of the use of those application forms with that statement? I asked the chief, in his opinion, although his people may not be able to read or write, whether they would have the equivalent of a master's degree in the safe handling of firearms, and he replied: "Yes, they are taught from a very young age. They can safely handle guns. They could even teach about firearms." Under this bill, no one seems to be concerned about those kinds of things.

In Vancouver, we heard from one very impressive young woman who was a competitive shooter. She had won at a number of venues. This is a pastime that she enjoys pursuing with her husband and her family. She showed us, as she said, "Exhibit A, my small hand." She could not use a gun with a barrel any bigger than four and a half inches. She had an expensive little Smith & Wesson for target shooting. She told us it falls into the category of "Saturday Night Specials." It is not, but it falls into a category of weapons that will become restricted or abolished. Why should she have to pay a price like that? She is a law-abiding citizen who has done everything right. She even works for the government as a public servant.

Of greater concern was the point made — a valid point, in my opinion — about computer lists. People are worried about that. This is not propaganda emanating from the National Rifle Association, promoting fear of being stripped of handguns. This is a simple question: What guarantee do we have about the security of such a list? We are now told that that list will be safe. We had a presentation about it.

Some may recall that a number of years ago the U.S. government invited a dozen professional hackers to test the security of the computer systems. Within 48 hours they had cracked every one of them. That is not very comforting. You then read — and we heard about this earlier today — that the Mulroney letter, secure in the hands of the Justice Department and the RCMP, is out on the street. That does not provide a lot of comfort to ordinary citizens and gun owners.

Some have said, "You have all these crazies out there who want guns." We had one presentation in Kamloops that sounded a bit like the National Rifle Association in its rhetoric. Senator Ghitter was quick to draw to their attention that they did their cause no good by exaggerating and putting forth false information in their presentation. We put an end to that.

In addition, we had a good system, which was instituted by the chairman, Senator St. Germain. After the formal presentations, he allowed time, in both the morning and afternoon sessions, for individuals in the audience to take four minutes to come forward and express their views. Two things were made clear by both of these groups when they made their presentations: First, they were for crime control. They were for harsh, severe penalties against criminals charged with the misuse of guns, but they were opposed to national registration. They were concerned about the costs to themselves, and many were concerned about the costs to the government.

Someone said that if you could wave a magic wand and all the guns would disappear, we would have a much better and more civilized country. I have a lot of friends in police departments. I served with them for a number of years as their negotiator. I am on the Vancouver Police Foundation. I speak regularly to senior officers of both our Vancouver police and the RCMP. They say that if you did wave a magic wand and all the guns disappeared within 72 hours, any criminal or anyone else could acquire a gun from those that are smuggled across the border.

I am talking here about the police, and that is their position, in spite of the position taken by the Canadian Chiefs of Police Association. I understand why they would make such a presentation, since they must be seen to be on the side of motherhood and gun control. However, I am told that to meet the registration requirements of this legislation they will have to take from resources within their various police departments; resources that should be used for fighting crime, and that it will turn them into bookkeepers and registrars. They also say that if they do not get federal funding to assist in this undertaking, they simply will not do it.

We heard a presentation from the Kamloops department — a three-man RCMP department — whose concern is that one-third of their force will be doing registrations and will not have time to deal with matters of police responsibility.

The conclusion is that we will incur costs of millions of dollars. I do not accept the premise that it will balance out nice and neat. That is nonsense. It never works that way. It will cost ordinary Canadians millions of dollars — ranchers, farmers, natives, and so on, who use guns as tools of their trade, or for their livelihood. Who knows how many millions, but it will be significant. I could understand the expenditure if we knew that this legislation would have some effect on crime issues, or solve all the problems about which we are concerned. However, we know up-front, based on the New Zealand experience, the Australian experience and the U.K. experience, that gun registration does not work. The maximum that they were able to achieve in New Zealand and Australia was approximately 60 per cent registration. The key feature in all those jurisdictions was the same: They had to take from resources that could have been used for policing.

I would support a tougher crime control bill in a single, pure form, which would include: tougher penalties, no plea bargaining for those who use a gun, and some training for judges. On one occasion, a judge on the Supreme Court of British Columbia had a career criminal before him, an old bank robber who had been charged with armed robbery with a gun. The judge said, "I must give you 14 years. Do you have anything to say before I pass sentence?" He said "Yes, judge. I am 70 years of age. I just cannot do 14 years." The judge replied, "That is different. Just do as much as you can."

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, according to the rules, the honourable senator's time has expired.

Senator Lawson: I have one sentence in conclusion.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that the honourable senator be allowed to finish?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Lawson: If the government ever puts together a tough crime control bill, they will have my support. In the absence of that, and given the deficiencies of this bill, which misleads ordinary Canadians, I will support Senator Sparrow's amendment and the amendments in the report of the committee in the hope that, upon returning the bill to the other place, they will look into a crime control bill separately.

We do not have to punish one group of Canadians for what we want to do to another group of Canadians. Therefore, I will oppose Bill C-68.

Hon. Leonard J. Gustafson: Honourable senators, I rise to speak on Bill C-68. First, I want to congratulate the committee for the work it did. Second, I want to congratulate the senators who travelled to hear from Canadians across the country. People of the rural areas, in particular, were very appreciative of the fact that those senators had come to hear what they had to say. I want to clarify one thing — and several comments have been made about this point: These people are the best educated people when it comes to firearms safety. Many of them are sportsmen, farmers and natives who have taken training in the use of firearms. They are not illiterate people when it comes to the use of firearms.

As farm boys and girls, they have been raised to handle firearms in a safe manner. They do not have the fear of a gun that you might find in an urban centre. Unfortunately, this is becoming a rural/urban situation. That is not good. We in rural Canada are in the minority. I speak for native people, farmers and ranchers, hunters and trappers. We are a minority.

I should like to remind honourable senators of something that the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau said. He said: "A nation can be judged on the way they deal with their minorities."

While we farmers, ranchers and native people may be in the minority, we are very important to Canada. We are good citizens who produce for this country, and who happen to see things in a little different light. I ask you for one thing: Give us a little consideration in this bill.

Senator Sparrow gave an excellent exhortation here on the practicalities of agriculture and of the native people. I will not take up a lot of your time because I know that other senators on both sides want to speak about this matter. However, I want to place a couple of things on the record.

We heard from the people in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia and Whitehorse, Yukon. I remember particularly a couple of young native fellows, perhaps 18 or 19 years of age, who made an excellent statement. They said something to the effect: Does it come as any surprise to you people that we do not live in four-storey apartments? Many times we are out in a tent in the summer; or we are in a one-room cabin. We have been taught from a young age that that gun is hanging over the door, loaded, should we encounter a brown bear or another animal — and a tent is no problem for them to destroy — and should we need to protect ourselves. We saw on the news what can happen in the national park west of Calgary just this summer.

Is our legislation practical? I am talking about some of the legislation that was brought in by our own government but has never been enacted or tried on farmers. It is the same thing.

• (1510)

By way of a personal example of that, about three weeks ago, I was cultivating one of my son's fields. From across the field came a coyote that looked bigger than a wolf. A cattle herd was grazing nearby, which included small calves. The coyote watched the herd while the cows formed a circle. Had I run home to get the gun out of the cabinet and the ammunition from another place, the coyote would have been long gone before I returned.

I cite those examples pertaining to the native community and the ranching community only to say that we must be practical. Let us try to understand the different regions of this country.

We heard from native people, including at least three chiefs who represented largely populated areas. One represented 24 bands from the Prince Albert area, and another represented a number of bands from The Pas. We also heard from Sol Sanderson from Regina. They all basically said that native people would not abide by this legislation.

As a good Canadian citizen, it disturbs me to hear others make those kinds of remarks. We asked them: "Are you telling us that you will not abide by this legislation; that you will not register your guns?" They said, "We will not." We heard that time and time again. We heard it from veterans, from clubs and from individuals. Honourable senators, it is a divisive issue. We do not need more issues that will divide this country.

It behooves every honourable senator to look at this legislation in terms of criminalization and in terms of how it affects the people who use guns as tools and not as weapons.

We are not opposed to clamping down on criminal activity, on guns being brought across the border illegally. We are in favour of that. We must crack down on criminals and give them adequate punishment. This legislation must have the ability to deal with those situations. However, we must not penalize the law-abiding people who are opposed to this legislation, even though we are a minority. We may only comprise one-third of the population of the country; but we are a very important one-third. We have a voice. I represent those people in Saskatchewan and in the west in general.

I know of the concerns in our large urban centres, and there is no question that those are legitimate concerns. However, I feel very safe walking on the streets of Macoun, a village of 150 people. I know almost everyone in every house in the village. I know that every farmer has a gun, but I feel safe nonetheless, as I should. I wish all of Canada were like that village.

I will cite one statistic before I close. In Switzerland, every able-bodied man has a gun, because he is a member of the reserve army. The guns are not .22 calibre guns; they are larger guns. Yet, Switzerland has one of the lowest crime rates in the world. The same is true of Denmark, Sweden and Norway.

I have heard many speeches here about the atrocities committed with guns. Most of us have lived through enough history to know who has committed the greatest atrocities with guns. A female senator spoke eloquently about the use of power. The greatest misuse of power has been by ill-directed governments and dictators who, with armies and police forces, have annihilated many thousands of people.

Our greatest concern must be to ensure that the Government of Canada works for the people, rather than the people working for the government. Many people have had too much government interference in their lives, and want no more of it.

Honourable senators, I ask you to give this matter serious consideration so that this legislation can deal practically with all of the requirements of every part of this great country in order that we might build a better Canada.

[Translation]

Hon. Rose-Marie Losier-Cool: Honourable senators, it is a pleasure to speak to you today about Bill C-68.

Bill C-68 deals with firearms, a subject of particular concern to me and to all Canadians.

[English]

Bill C-68 provides an important framework for preserving that deep sense of civility and peacefulness which is part of our heritage. The proposed firearms legislation has been drafted in order to help preserve the kind of country we as Canadians want, and to reflect the values that are fundamental to it.

[Translation]

This bill, which has been under consideration for many months, will help us correct some of the many problems connected with firearms in Canada. Once in place, the measures proposed in Bill C-68 will help reduce the number of incidents or deaths caused by firearms.

Women are certainly not immune to such incidents. In fact, on average, one woman is shot to death every six days.

Between 1974 and 1992, 42 per cent of the women who were killed by their spouses were shot. Canadians understand what happens in a society where firearms are available to criminals and to people who are a threat to themselves or to others, including women and children in violent or high-stress situations.

Although domestic violence is a complex problem that cannot be solved simply by passing a stricter gun control bill and increasing controls over access to firearms, we will be able to avoid a few more tragedies.

I am concerned about amendment number three, which would exempt museums from paying the cost of firearms registration. As a member of the board of directors of the museum of New Brunswick, I realize that the budgets of our museums can no longer absorb additional costs in these times of budgetary restrictions. The 100,000 firearms in our Canadian museums must be registered, otherwise they would be given special status, which would undermine the universality of this bill.

[English]

The term of museum licences will be three years as opposed to one year for other businesses. This modification was made at the House of Commons committee stage of the review of Bill C-68 in order to reduce any possible administrative burden on museums, which are widely variable in size, and to facilitate a reduced fee.

In terms of fees, actual amounts have not yet been determined for any type of business, including museums. The fees, once set, will be submitted in regulations to Parliament for a full review.

[Translation]

The department has already advised government representatives and others defending the interests of museums that it appreciates the fact that they generally operate on a non-profit basis, on limited budgets, and that the rates would be established accordingly. Furthermore, they would be established on a full cost recovery basis, and there is considerable emphasis on modern technology that would make it possible to operate more efficiently.

In concluding, I would like to quote from this morning's Le Droit. I am referring to an article by Murray Maltais, in which he said:

According to their conscience —

He said that today, senators will vote according to their conscience, and went on to state:

The amendments proposed by the Conservative majority in the Upper House are basically aimed at making the bill less strict, to more or less legalize the possession of arms that are readily available, which would of course be welcomed by the powerful lobby financed by the people involved in the manufacture and sale of firearms.

I am opposed to these amendments. Bill C-68 will receive my support and that of the majority of Canadians, in addition to the support of many national organizations that came to testify before the parliamentary committees.

Hon. A. Raynell Andreychuk: Honourable senators, I will restrict my comments to a number of areas, although I have concerns on both sides of this issue that I wish we had more time to discuss.

Honourable senators, I grew up in this country understanding and accepting two concepts. The first was that, in the democracy that I thought Canada had, the will of the majority would prevail, not at the expense of a minority but taking into account the views of that minority. This was especially true if the minority were disproportionately affected. Sensitivity was the key and civility was the rule.

Second, I grew up in a Canada that looked at criminal law starting with the question of what behaviour or action we would find collectively intolerable. In most cases, to be successful, a criminal law requires significant support from those affected to be effective. Utilizing the Criminal Code for social engineering is rarely successful. We are most successful when the rules are rules which we all understand, and which we are able to protect. In other words, we build a fence within which normal, appropriate behaviour is tolerable. If you go beyond the limits, that is criminal behaviour. We try to leave as much room for people to use their own discretion with the changing times.

I make those comments, honourable senators, because those two concepts underpin where I wish to start. While I believe that we should be governed by our conscience, I respectfully disagree with Senator Johnson in the most vehement terms. This bill, uniquely, sets out a fiduciary relationship.

I will return to this point, but before I do, I want to say that I have deep regrets with respect to Bill C-68. I regret that the bill does not go far enough or fast enough in its stated objective of attacking the criminal use of firearms. I regret that the roots of violence are not attacked sufficiently. We are again dealing with the symptoms. We are trying to cure, not prevent.

I regret that there is no overall strategy to look at firearm registration within the context of the conventional and non-conventional use of weapons in the international setting. We cannot combat the improper use of firearms without an international strategy like the drug strategy.

We must understand that globalization is a factor in our daily lives, and I regret that this bill is silent except when talking about holding our borders accountable to the extent that the bill outlines, which I believe is inadequate.

I also regret that Bill C-68, the Young Offenders Act and many other criminal statutes do not have a wellness model for justice. At least we are struggling in the field of health to use a wellness model, not a curative model. We have a long way to go in justice to make that adjustment.

I regret that the will of the majority does not function in such a way as to take into account the minorities.

Honourable senators, I would return now to what I believe are our fiduciary duties. The duty of Parliament is not to say that this legislation is inconvenient to our aboriginal peoples; the issue is much deeper, and it does a disservice to the aboriginal people and to our history to say that, to them, it is simply inconvenient legislation.

History tells us that the rights we gave aboriginal peoples are not to be trifled with, and not to be taken lightly. If we consider section 35 of the Constitution, and if we consider the treaties, the covenants, the agreements we signed, we must ask ourselves: Did we sign them as people of integrity? Did we sign them as people who care about their word? Did we sign them as people who care about the rule of law? Did we sign them because we believe in democratic principles? If we did not, we can continue being paternalistic and fragmented; and we have no right to believe that our values are worth keeping. I feel very strongly about this.

Honourable senators, we can trace our treaties and covenants to the Sparrow case and to section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982. I will point out a number of areas in the Sparrow decision because I think it is something that we all should have read, or should read before we vote today.

The Supreme Court in the Sparrow decision stated the following:

For many years, the rights of Indians to their aboriginal lands — certainly legal rights — were virtually ignored.

The Supreme Court went on to say that, to the credit of the Honourable Jean Chrétien, Minister of Indian Affairs, there was an expression of acknowledged responsibility, but by no means a legal right. Then we, the people of Canada, incorporated section 35 into the Constitution Act, 1982.

The court went on to state:

It is clear, then, that s. 35(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, represents the culmination of a long and difficult struggle in both the political forum and the courts for the constitutional recognition of aboriginal rights.

The judgment states further that the following principle that should govern the interpretation of Indian treaties and statutes was set out in a number of decisions before the 1982 constitutional changes, but that nothing has changed before 1982 or after in this principle. The principle is that, when it comes to governing the interpretation of Indian treaties and statutes, "treaties and statutes relating to Indians should be liberally construed and doubtful expressions resolved in favour of the Indians."

Another principle enunciated in these cases was the emphasis on the importance of Indian history and traditions as well as the perceived effect of a treaty at the time of execution.

• (1530)

The judge also cautioned against determining Indian rights "in a vacuum." The honour of the Crown is involved in the interpretation of Indian treaties and, as a consequence, fairness to the Indians is the governing consideration. The principles to be applied to the interpretation of treaties have been canvassed over the years. However, in approaching the terms of a treaty, quite apart from the other considerations already noted, as the decision in fact states:

...the honour of the Crown is always involved, and no appearance of 'sharp dealing' should be sanctioned.

This view is reflected in recent judicial decisions which have emphasized the responsibility of Government to protect the rights of Indians arising from the special trust relationship created by history, treaties and legislation.

Further on in the Sparrow decision, it is stated that the government has the responsibility to act in a fiduciary capacity with respect to aboriginal peoples.

I believe that every senator must understand that that fiduciary relationship, as laid out in the British North America Act, is on your shoulders. The decision goes on:

The relationship between the Government and aboriginals is trust-like, rather than adversarial, and contemporary recognition and affirmation of aboriginal rights must be defined in light of this historic relationship.

I believe we have a duty to act on a trust basis with the aboriginal people, and not on an adversarial basis. The minister pointed out to the Legal and Constitution Affairs Committee that the onus is on the aboriginal peoples to prove the infringement of their rights. That is true, if we go to court. It is true that they must prove a prima facie case that this act infringes their rights. It is also true that the rights of the aboriginals are not absolute. In other words, national interest and public interest can overrule these aboriginal rights. However, the power to legislate must be read together with these two comments.

In other words, the minister is saying, "I am putting legislation into place. Let the aboriginal people prove that they are being infringed upon." Is that not adversarial? Is that really trust?

Section 35 quite properly points out that we cannot avoid our duties. The inclusion of clause 2(3) into Bill C-68 does not help our fiduciary responsibility. In fact, the constitutional experts have indicated that this clause does not take away or, indeed, add to aboriginal rights.

In my opinion, consultation only occurred after the bill was tabled. In fact, by letter, the minister advised that there would be some gun control legislation, and I respect that that effort was made. However, I do not accept that that is proper and adequate consultation, nor is the fact that the minister then met with a number of groups in a general way. I do not believe that that is adequate consultation. At that point, the aboriginal community had already been forced into an adversarial role. There was the bill. They had not sat down at the table to discuss it. What else could they do but start talking to the minister about what they liked and disliked and to express their fears?

Someone asked why they had not raised this issue with regard to Bill C-17. If I had been here when Bill C-17 was being considered, I would have raised the same questions, because I think they may have applied. However, the wrongs of the past cannot be brought forward as justification for the wrongs being committed today.

In my opinion, all indications are that aboriginals were not consulted appropriately. If you look at the bill, honourable senators, you will see that there is nothing in it for aboriginal people. They were not consulted; they did not sit down at the table; they did not get to the point of being able to talk about their rights.

Although I do not have the time today, I believe that we senators should take the time to read the decisions and the comments of the aboriginal community. Suffice it to say that it is not good enough to consider aboriginal rights in the formulation of regulations. It is not good enough to consider aboriginal rights by saying, "Trust me, we will correct it."

There is nothing in the bill which says that we have looked to the constitutional imperatives that are put forward. The minister indicated that he had consulted with the aboriginal community. Virtually every aboriginal leader in Canada has told us that he or she was not consulted on Bill C-68.

That creates a dilemma for us, honourable senators. Do we accept that there was adequate consultation because the minister said that there was? Do we accept that there was not just because all the aboriginal leaders said there was not? I do not believe that is the position we should take. We should look to the legislation to determine our responsibilities. In my opinion, our responsibilities are to ensure that there is not an adversarial situation between the aboriginal peoples and the Crown, but a trust-like situation.

There is nothing in the bill that indicates to me that the government took into account aboriginal rights. The minister, however, after tabling the bill set in place an adequate program to look at regulations and how they will affect aboriginal people. This comes as a result of clause 117(u), which indicates that cultural situations and aboriginal rights must be taken into account so as to have the least form of intrusion on aboriginal rights. However, the clause is permissive. It states that the minister "may."

At every turn, and I do not have time to go through all of it, whenever the issue of aboriginal rights —

The Hon. the Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the honourable senator but her time has expired. Is there leave for the honourable senator to continue her remarks?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Andreychuk: I thank honourable senators.

Had clause 117 been put in place earlier, it might have been of value. It could have been of value if it stated that the minister "shall" make regulations. However, that was not the case.

Honourable senators, after over 100 years of saying that we care about the rule of law, we have breached our fiduciary responsibilities. As I understand it, a delegation of eight Canadians is attending the international aboriginal talks in Geneva. Not one of them is aboriginal.

At every turn we continue to overlook opportunities to live up to our fiduciary responsibilities and to abide by the obligations that I think have been placed upon us. The minister says that he has consulted. In his first appearance before the committee he said that he would consider amendments to the bill and that he wanted to improve it. He said that he had concern for aboriginal issues. However, when he arrived for his last discussion with the committee, he said, with regard to consultation, that the court states that the minimum requirement is to inform the aboriginal peoples of Canada, and that he had at least done that.

Honourable senators, I do not think that, after so many years, we should still be doing what is minimal for aboriginals. We should do what is honourable and expected.

• (1540)

The minister also indicated:

My experience with the animal called "consultation" is that it bears the meaning which the person using the word chooses to give it. Consultation, in my experience, only exists if you do exactly what the person being consulted asks you to do. Let me give you an example.

The example of course is of the Yukon.

I believe that if we are to take consultation seriously, we cannot start out by believing that those who consult simply want their way. The aboriginal people want to be at the table. They have a right to be at the table; they have a right to be heard. We have not given them a full and adequate hearing. We did not bring them into the process early enough.

The constitutional experts said that consultation was a precondition to the passage of this bill. Have we, in fact, met that precondition? Mr. Binnie, who gave a long assessment, said that the consultations had to be before the bill was proclaimed and that we could, in fact, have the consultation. In committee, Mr. Binnie said:

However, one way or another, consultation is established as a condition precedent which must be satisfied before a valid limitation can be imposed.

Then Senator Beaudoin, the chairman, asked Professor Hogg if he agreed with that statement, and Professor Hogg, who I think most of us rely heavily on in constitutional law said: "Yes, I agree with that."

In other words, consultation is a condition precedent. It cannot be something that can be perfected after the act is passed. If that is the case, honourable senators, I have a dilemma. While I want the gun control bill, do I have to sacrifice aboriginal rights? Do I have to put my own opinions before my responsibilities to the aboriginal people?

Not being blessed with the wisdom of Solomon, I have been seeking the opinion of other senators as to what we should do in this case. I agreed with Senator Carstairs that the amendment put forward on aboriginal people did not go far enough, that it perhaps restated known law and known positions. I thought it was an honest compromise, a compromise that would have acknowledged that we have not done what we should in terms of consultations, and that would have demonstrated that we respect our fiduciary relationships by undertaking to ask the minister to conduct more consultations.

We would not then be put in the position of saying that the minister's consultations were adequate or not; and we would not put the aboriginal community in a position where we would disagree with them and say that we believe they were consulted, or that we accept their word in that regard. In other words, I do not believe we should be that adversarial. The amendment would allow us to have a compromise.

I will vote for the amendment because I think the minister can speedily call all the aboriginal people together and sit down at the table with them. As Minister Irwin has said, we must sit at the table with them and discuss this matter.

I have yet to find one aboriginal leader who does not want some form of gun control, who does not want firearms regulation. Their concern is that their rights are respected and that they have a say as to how this legislation will be implemented within their reserves, their territories. I do not believe that anything less is desirable.

I find myself in a conundrum, in that I believe in the fiduciary responsibility that consultation is a condition precedent, and that we should not pass this bill until such time as the consultation takes place. Nonetheless, I am still willing to vote for the amendment that in some way diminishes, perhaps, or puts aside for a time, aboriginal rights completely, but allows a form of compromise. We cannot do anything less than attempt a compromise respecting this bill.

I appeal to the minister, and I appeal to honourable senators, not to disregard this aspect in haste, because we will then be continuing the legacy of paternalism which has caused so many difficulties for aboriginal peoples.

We talk about victims of violence. There are many types of violence. I have not told my personal, emotional stories of how it has touched me, but I can assure you that it touches me as much as it touches anyone else. We cannot put our personal tragedies before the rights of the aboriginal peoples because, if you want to see death, if you want to see destruction, if you want to see disruption in its rawest, crudest form, you will find that it has happened to their people, and we have been, in part, responsible for their problems. Surely it is time that we became part of the solution.

We cannot force the aboriginal community to go to the courts so that, one more time, someone can ask, "What do they want now?" If we do that, we encourage what is already a growing pocket of what I believe is discrimination between non-aboriginals and aboriginals in some areas, because some people believe the aboriginals are in court too often asking for too much. What they are now seeking is what they were entitled to at the start: nothing more, nothing less. We do them a disservice by forcing them to seek a judicial remedy. As Senator Forsey said, and I paraphrase him, that in a well-functioning democracy, citizens should not have to go to court to prove their rights. If there is any doubt, we must find some other way of dealing with it.

I also have a concern that, if we do not deal with this legislation now, the law will not be universal because the outcome of a win for the aboriginal people in the courts will be that the law does not apply to them. If the law does not apply to them, how do non-aboriginals and aboriginals live together in the communities in the North and in the West, in Ontario, in Quebec, and in Atlantic Canada? We must help the aboriginal community to contribute its full share to the destiny of Canada, and we cannot separate our people.

So little separates us now. What separates us is not the fact that we do not have a valid national objective that is justified; what separates us is not that there is one way or another way of legislating gun control; what separates us is that we have not taken into account people who have a right to be included.

Many of the things that I believe about aboriginal rights are not enshrined in rights, per se, and they are equally valid with regard to the minorities in Canada who must also be considered.

If we want to be judged as a fair and just society, we must bring them to the table, whether it is with regard to this piece of legislation or another piece of legislation. In this instance we have a fiduciary relationship. It is a legal requirement beyond a moral requirement.

The United Nations Human Rights Centre, in its study of indigenous people, said that many treaties carry a great symbolic meaning to indigenous peoples. In Canada, those treaties are more than symbolic, they are actual legal rights. They are seen as providing recognition of indigenous self-determination and a guarantee of the collective rights of the peoples concerned. An agreement which has the character of a solemn pledge by one people to another, when fully honoured by both parties, breeds mutual trust and respect, and has a potentially vital role in promoting and protecting human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous peoples.

Honourable senators, aboriginal rights in Canada are human rights. In our zeal to correct many of society's problems, let us not create even more tragic ones.

• (1550)

We can find a middle road. It is unfortunate that we have needlessly pitted one group of citizens against another. Let us not further compound the problem.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Robert Gauthier: Honourable senators, I would like to express my support for Bill C-68, an act respecting firearms and other weapons.

I endorse the arguments of my colleague Senator Carstairs, who has clearly analyzed the amendments before us and has followed this bill in committee in a most exemplary manner. I would like to thank her for her work and to tell her that I personally have greatly appreciated the way she has conducted herself. As you know, I feel that the Senate is the house in which regional considerations need to be expressed. I have no problem in listening to various senators eloquently defend the views of their regions.

In my region, I must tell you, there is majority support for Bill C-68. In Ontario, 82 per cent are in favour of the bill and 77 per cent support weapon registration.

Like all of the other senators, I have received briefs, letters, all manner of communications concerning Bill C-68. I am neither surprised nor inordinately influenced by letters that have sometimes been copied from other letters in mail-in campaigns. I believe that they do have a message to get across.

There is one thing I have noticed. In the National Capital Region, almost all letters and comments to me were in support of the bill. I must admit that the bulk of the other letters, from Western Canada, were against it.

I am an Ontario senator and therefore represent my region, and the views I express here in the Senate today will be those of a senator who believes strongly that this chamber has a duty to reflect regional considerations.

If I may, I shall read just a few examples of the testimonials received from people I believe to be credible and serious.

[English]

The letter is signed by Brian Ford, Chief of Police, Ottawa-Carleton Regional Police Services. I will read just one sentence:

I am writing to you... to convey to you our support for the passage of Bill C-68 on gun control. Gun control is to the police community a very important piece of legislation because it is both preventative and also gives a starting point for the investigation of crimes involving firearms.

I have a letter from Marion Dewar, Chair, Ottawa Regional Police Services Board, approving of Bill C-68.

[Translation]

I have numerous letters but I shall read only a few of them, otherwise it would take all afternoon. I would, however, like to quote a few sample comments from the President of the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, who states as follows:

[English]

He writes to Senator Lynch-Staunton:

I am writing to express my considerable dismay that neither you nor the Caucus —

He is talking about the Conservative caucus.

— would meet with representatives of the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police.

He goes on to say:

...the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police wishes to confirm and clarify that they support the passage of Bill C-68 by the Senate of Canada without amendment.

The Canadian Federation of University Women wrote to me on November 16 expressing their support for Bill C-68. I could go on — the Canadian Teachers' Federation, the Canadian Public Health Association, and so on.

However, honourable senators, I have received from my region alone credible support for Bill C-68.

[Translation]

In the 1993 election, the Liberal Party undertook, in its Red Book, to provide a more rigorous control of firearms. This is what we said. I ran in those elections; I supported this measure then, and continue to support it now.

Revenue Canada and the RCMP have already implemented certain measures in the fight against smuggling. The passing of the bill before us marks another important stage in the commitments made by the government and supported by the people of Canada in 1993.

These measures include, among other things, minimum imprisonment of four years plus the prohibition in perpetuity of possession of restricted or prohibited firearms following a conviction for one of the 10 designated violent offences perpetrated with a firearm; the prohibition against future importing and selling of .25 and .32 calibre handguns, and handguns with a barrel length of 105 mm or less; the creation of a national system for the registration of all firearms, to be administered by the RCMP, in cooperation with the provinces and territories.

I do not need to tell you I have heard arguments against the registration of firearms. I have not heard or seen, nor have I seen in the amendments, a single proposal that would improve the system.

I have seen amendments eliminating certain things. I am sorry, but you cannot oppose a part and, at the same time, support the whole thing. National interest must prevail.

I can understand the reluctance of some senators from the West and the North, who want to eliminate firearms registration from the application of the bill. However, it is only one of the measures. We cannot kill the bill because we do not agree with one of its provisions. I think that national interest must prevail and that this bill will improve our chances of having a safe country.

The firearms registration system will help the police solve murder cases when a gun is recovered, and determine the origin of recovered firearms, allowing the police to return to their legitimate owners some of the 3,000 weapons that are lost or stolen every year, which, I assume, will prompt owners to store their weapons more securely.

Bill C-68 will make it possible to provide gun owners with direct and inexpensive information on firearms storage and handling regulations. It will also enable the police to know how many and what kind of firearms they might face when answering an emergency call.

Honourable senators, the vast majority of murders by firearm are committed by someone known to the victim. In Canada, a woman is killed by a firearm every six days, most often at home by someone she knew, using a legally owned rifle or shotgun. Making access to firearms more difficult in cases of domestic violence is a public security measure.

We never claimed that this bill would definitively solve the problem of family violence, or put an end to all violence in our society, as some of the speakers I heard here have said. This is not a piece of legislation which will solve crimes; it is a measure that will help to better organize crime prevention.

Let me quote the Report of the Firearms Smuggling Work Group:

There are approximately seven million firearms in Canada. ... About one in four Canadian households owns at least one firearm. About 1,400 Canadians die each year in an incident involving a firearm: 78 per cent in suicides; 15 per cent in homicides; 5 per cent in accidents; and 2 per cent from a legal intervention or some undetermined cause.

It goes on, and I quote :

Half of all firearm homicides since 1991 have been committed with a handgun: this constitutes an increase from about 35 per cent prior to 1991. It has been estimated that, each year, there are almost 10,000 firearm-related violent crimes in Canada. About 8,000 of these are firearm robberies — firearm robberies increased by 44 per cent from 1988 to 1993.

This study also showed that nearly half the firearms recovered by police in the urban centres examined were rifles or shotguns, and that they were used in criminal cases.

Some 10 per cent of Criminal Code offences are violent crimes. Yet, 40 per cent of the crimes in which firearms were recovered were violent. This finding shows an important link between firearms and violence.

In 1993, two years after the adoption of Bill C-17 tightening gun control, the reported crime rate fell by 5 per cent, the biggest drop since 1962. The proportion of firearm-related deaths — homicides or unknown causes — reported in Canada shrank from 36 per cent in 1991 to 34 per cent in 1992 and 31 per cent in 1993.

Whether it is a father who decides to commit suicide or to kill his family, a group of young offenders who fire at a passer-by, or an individual who shoots a convenience store cashier, we are all concerned about this kind of violence and we want the means to fight it. As I was saying, the polls show that Canadians support this bill. According to a poll conducted by Angus Reid for Southam News, the majority of Canadians, 66 per cent, support this bill.

Honourable senators, I heard leading lights say that this bill needed to be improved. We have considered the proposed amendments. I did not find a single amendment that improved the bill. Not a single one. Some may tell me that I misread the bill; it is possible. Honourable senators, every amendment has been debated in this chamber.

I, for one, think that this bill should be adopted today, without amendment, so that it can be ratified as soon as possible.

Honourable senators, I will not take any more time, because I know that several senators wish to address this issue. I will conclude by saying this: I listened to people in my community, I heard very eloquent expressions of support of this bill by honourable senators, and I am convinced that, in supporting this bill, I am doing what I should be doing as a senator. Honourable senators, I represent my region and I care dearly about the national interest. I will vote in favour of Bill C-68.

• (1600)

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, before I call on the next speaker, I want to apprise you of a problem that we have. It is now five minutes after four, which leaves us one hour and ten minutes before the bell must ring. I have presently on my list approximately 12 speakers. Quite obviously, at 15 minutes for each speaker, it would be impossible to hear from every one of those senators. Could we have an agreement that we limit speeches to a shorter period than that: for example, a maximum of 10 minutes? I am in your hands. If it could be less than ten minutes, it would be preferable, so that everyone gets a chance to express their views. Would that be agreeable?

Some Hon. Senators: No!

Hon. Eric Arthur Berntson (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to accommodate everyone. However, the rules say that the speeches must be limited to 15 minutes. From here until the bell commences, we should follow the rule book as strictly as we can.

I know that some people have an argument to make that they could not make in less than 15 minutes, but I would urge all senators to stay within the time limit of 15 minutes, if they can, in an effort to accommodate all senators to the extent that we can. I expect that both leaders would want the opportunity to wrap up for their respective sides. That leaves us little more than half an hour.

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, bearing in mind what the Deputy Leader of the Opposition has said, we on this side would be quite comfortable in limiting future speeches to 10 minutes. However, if the opposition prefers to go by what is provided under the rules, namely to the maximum of 15 minutes, then that is fine. In any event, we should be mindful that at 5:15 p.m., all debate ceases; the bells will begin to ring, and all votes will be taken at 5:30 p.m.

Senator Berntson: Honourable senators, in keeping with what is the Canadian way, could we find a reasonable compromise and limit to ten minutes the speeches of those who do not hold our respective leaders' chairs, as it were? I am sure that your leader would want to have more than ten minutes for her wrap-up on this bill, and I am sure that in the case of my leader, he would want to have more than ten minutes. Perhaps at quarter to the hour, or 20 minutes to the hour or whatever, we could agree to have our respective leaders wrap up the debate, taking whatever time is left.

Senator Graham: My leader assures me that she will not go over 15 minutes. She could whittle it down to ten, but if the Leader of the Opposition would like to have 15 minutes, we are prepared to accommodate him, perhaps at the appropriate time.

The problem I am having right now, however, is that we are using up valuable time in discussing this arrangement. Could we agree that others participating in the debate be limited to ten minutes, and that the leaders have the regular 15 minutes?

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it my understanding that we are agreed that I will call each speaker at ten minutes until quarter to five, at which time I will be prepared to recognize the Leader of the Opposition; and then at five o'clock, the Leader of Government. Is that understanding agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: On that understanding, then, I recognize Senator Atkins. I will need to be very strict on that limit of ten minutes. I appeal to honourable senators. If they can keep their speeches to less than ten minutes, that would accommodate other senators who will then have a chance to speak.

Hon. Norman K. Atkins: Honourable senators, in common with most citizens, I favour a form of crime prevention legislation. I am even in favour of the registration of firearms. However, I have some real difficulties with this bill, unamended, because I believe that it is seriously flawed.

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has proposed a number of amendments to Bill C-68, the firearms bill. I would like to express some of my concerns regarding this bill.

I wish to state clearly at the outset that these changes alone will not resolve all the difficulties which have been brought to our attention through the thousands of letters received, the testimony heard by the committee and the meetings which have been held with concerned citizens.

The first issue we need to address is the constitutionality of Bill C-68 as it relates to the aboriginal peoples. The first part of that issue is whether the consultation process has been adequate and meaningful. It is clear that the aboriginal people are united in expressing their dissatisfaction with some aspects of this legislation. Senator Andreychuk has made a very strong case with regard to this point.

While in Canada we have some of the toughest gun control legislation in the world, there is a presumption that a citizen is entitled to possess a firearm such as a rifle or a shotgun. Citizens owning such firearms are not, in general, presumed to be criminals-in-waiting or criminals of the day.

Bill C-68, unamended, will change that. It will become necessary for our citizens to prove, on demand by authorities, that they have not committed a criminal offence, by producing both a licence to possess the firearm and a registration certificate. The ability to provide such proof should clearly be administrative, not criminal.

It has been said that for a long time Canadians have registered their cars, dogs, marriages, births, et cetera. However, failure to do so does not result in a charge under the Criminal Code. If this bill passes without amendment, the consequences of not registering a rifle or a shotgun will be out of proportion to the seriousness of the offence. I believe that these offences should be moved from the Criminal Code to the Firearms Act, unless the offence involves a prohibited or restricted firearm.

As a summary conviction offence, failure to register a firearm still carries a substantial penalty. The maximum jail term is six months and the maximum fine is $2,000, which is administered at the discretion of the judge. The penalties allow sufficient flexibility to impose suitable punishment. We should bear in mind that these charges are independent of any other offence an individual may have committed. Clearly, this still allows the government to create a national registry, does not alter the intention of the registry, and does not interfere with the court's discretion.

Most provisions of Bill C-68, amended, will still come into effect at the same time in all parts of the country. The narrow exception is that provincial governments will be permitted to delay implementation in their jurisdictions of the licensing and registration of rifles and shotguns. Since the offences related to licensing and registration have been transferred to the Firearms Act, this delayed implementation does not mean that the Criminal Code of Canada will be applied differently in different parts of Canada, although the Firearms Act will be.

There is ample precedent for delayed implementation of federal legislation in some jurisdictions, not only in the case of regular statutes but in the Criminal Code itself. Many restrictions and regulations governing the use of rifles and shotguns for hunting purposes now exist in the provinces, and they vary greatly. The proposed flexibility will not create substantial confusion, because variations already exist and Canadians are aware of them.

Provincial governments will require positive affirmation through their provincial legislatures to delay implementation in their jurisdictions. Regions which feel strongly about this issue will have the opportunity to make their decisions on behalf of the people they represent.

There is a widespread belief that the cost of implementing the licensing and registration schemes will be much higher than the estimate of $85 million given by the Minister of Justice. The experience of those provinces which proceed immediately with all aspects of Bill C-68 will give others the opportunity to assess some of the practical difficulties before moving ahead with the scheme in their own jurisdictions.

The additional time granted will not involve an additional cost to the government. The existing firearms acquisition certificate program is essentially continued in the form of a licence to acquire and possess firearms in the new regime, and the federal government may be spared the costs of registering firearms in any areas which choose to wait for a while before beginning to implement registration and licensing.

The amendment introduced requiring that regulations made under the Criminal Code be tabled 30 sitting days before they come into effect is consistent with current provisions of the Criminal Code. One of the normal functions of Parliament is to review regulations. It is important that Parliament not surrender its powers to at least look at regulations before they become law. It should concern us that, as the bill is presently written, the Governor in Council will be able to pass regulations without them being subject to review by Parliament.

Furthermore, I believe that the words "in the opinion of the Governor in Council" should be removed. These words allow the government to avoid judicial review. They permit the minister to alter the status of an item, to restrict or prohibit it, and to deny Canadians the right to meaningful appeal to the courts.

Honourable senators, we should note that this amendment was accepted by the Justice Committee of the House of Commons and was removed by the Minister of Justice. It seems to me that when the majority of the members of a standing committee in both Houses accept an amendment, it should be honoured, or at least be given fair consideration.

I believe that the vast majority of Canadians encourage the increase of mandatory minimum sentences for the use of firearms in the commission of serious offences such as attempted murder, manslaughter, robbery, sexual assault with a weapon, and so on, and that the amendments proposed do not affect these areas. The amendment dealing with minimum sentences in clause 92(3), which relates only to the case of an individual who has committed a second or third possession-related offence in the full knowledge that it is an offence, simply gives the court the discretion to decide whether the particular case merits a significant jail term. It remains an indictable offence with a maximum sentence of ten years in prison.

It is my opinion that our museums should be exempted from the payment of fees. This will guarantee that additional costs will not cause undue strain on their very limited resources. The owners of antique firearms, which are almost never used in the commission of a crime, should also be exempted from the regulations. Antiques may be stolen from time to time, but they are bought for their intrinsic value, not for the remote chance that they could be used in the commission of a crime.

Honourable senators, I believe that the amendments being proposed are modest and reasonable. They improve the legislation and seek to reduce the impact on citizens who have committed no crime, while maintaining licensing and registration which is sought by the government.

A frequently expressed concern is that the new administrative scheme contained in the legislation is both intrusive and unnecessary. It adds yet another expensive level of bureaucracy, and complying with the new provisions will take time, effort and great care, in view of the penalties which may be applied.

I remind honourable senators that in the registration of rifles and shotguns we are not talking about people who are committing any criminal offence beyond failure to acquire a document from the government. Presently in this country, we have no minimum sentence for dangerous driving causing bodily harm, or for manslaughter. We leave it to the courts to determine what is appropriate based on the facts. I find it unbelievable that a missing piece of paper could incur a heavier penalty than killing or hurting a person.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable Senator Atkins, I am sorry to interrupt you, but your allotted time has expired.

Senator Atkins: I have one and a half pages remaining.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it the pleasure of honourable senators to allow Senator Atkins to continue?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Atkins: Thank you, honourable senators.

I believe that Bill C-68, with these amendments, will enable our courts to penalize criminals using firearms in the commission of an offence. It will allow the courts to impose fines and jail sentences, in conjunction with the sentence for the commission of a crime with a weapon. This then allows Bill C-68 to become a crime control bill while not hampering the intent of the legislation to create a national registry.

At a time when we have just completed the highly divisive exercise of the Quebec referendum, and at a time when the federal government has indicated that it is prepared to look closely at a more cooperative and flexible approach to the concerns and wishes of provincial and territorial governments, these amendments provide an opportunity to give a demonstration of that new attitude of compromise and understanding of regional needs.

Honourable senators, this is the first opportunity following the referendum for the federal government to indicate just how serious it is about this commitment. I hope all honourable senators would agree that this is an appropriate means by which to respond to the concerns many provincial governments have raised. They are the ones who have asked for some of these amendments. I find it inconceivable that the Minister of Justice is not prepared to examine these amendments in an attempt to make Bill C-68 more acceptable to Canadians from coast to coast.

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators, I stand here today to speak to the rule of law, and our duty as senators to uphold the Constitution of Canada. I will explain why the proposed amendment numbered 13 — the one respecting the aboriginal peoples of Canada — must be adopted by the Senate and by Parliament as a whole.

As parliamentarians, we do not have a choice about respecting the Constitution of Canada. We must — and I underline the word “must” — uphold and defend the Constitution. This includes ensuring that any legislation adopted by Parliament respects the constitutionally entrenched aboriginal and treaty rights of aboriginal peoples.

Honourable senators, this is a conclusion supported by various legal opinions from across the country: For example, expert testimony by Professor Mary Ellen Turpel-Lafond and Mr. Ian Binnie before the Senate committee confirmed, in the strongest possible language, that there are very serious problems with this bill in terms of aboriginal rights. These experts concluded that those problems cannot be fixed later by regulation. There must be some form of statutory amendment.

Mary Ellen Turpel-Lafond made it very clear that the fiduciary duty of the federal Crown attaches to each stage of the legislative process, including consideration of this bill by the Senate. Furthermore, this constitutionally entrenched duty requires Parliament to discuss and consider options for ensuring the least restrictive intrusion on aboriginal and treaty rights.

Honourable senators, the expert testimony and the testimony of the aboriginal peoples clearly points out the need for some change to this bill to ensure that it respects the Constitution of Canada. It is also clear that the federal government's duty to consult fully with aboriginal peoples has been carried out in a less than adequate fashion. I would point out that the consultation process had focused on regulation-making power rather than on the bill itself, and even that process is still not complete. In addition, the federal government has failed to use the consultation mechanisms established under the various land claims agreements for this purpose.

In summary, honourable senators, the government has been informed that there will be many instances of conflict in relation to constitutionally protected rights if this bill is adopted as it now stands. Therefore, each of us as senators have a responsibility to ensure the fulfilment of Parliament's fiduciary and constitutional obligations.

We should also consider that several aboriginal peoples have spent many years, and much money in negotiating complex agreements that spell out in great detail their hunting rights. We must remember that these rights are essential to the preservation of aboriginal cultures. On many occasions, the courts have confirmed that these hunting rights include a right to own and possess firearms. This is spelled out in the various land claims agreements. As Mr. Binnie pointed out to the committee, this bill would make those constitutionally protected rights subject to the discretion of firearms officer.

Why should aboriginal peoples have to waste their money, and taxpayers' money, in litigating to have parts of this bill struck down by the courts when their rights have already been recognized in constitutionally protected agreements? These agreements are intended to provide legal certainty. They are intended to discourage litigation by requiring the government by law to respect aboriginal and treaty rights. These agreements are entrenched in the Constitution to prevent exactly this type of situation — legislation that ignores aboriginal and treaty rights except to challenge aboriginal people to litigate.

In terms of practical impacts, this bill will interfere on a daily basis with the traditions and practices of aboriginal peoples. For example, the simple task of a non-hunter collecting firearms after a hunting expedition to place in storage will require possession of a licence and a registration certificate for each gun. Likewise, the need to lend a firearm to women and children left in the camp to protect themselves from animal predators will become a bureaucratic nightmare under this bill. The storage and transportation regulations are not only not suitable to the North, they are unsafe in an environment where animal predators are a fact of life.

Honourable senators, the registration requirements of the bill will mean that those people in the North with the greatest need for a gun and the least access to government services will wait the longest to obtain the necessary permission; permission that they should not need to seek because their way of life is constitutionally protected.

These are just a few examples of how this bill will harm aboriginal peoples and how it will infringe upon their rights. This bill will force aboriginal peoples to either forgo their rights or fight again in the courts to have those rights recognized. This is not fair; this is not equitable; this is not constitutional. We must adopt the very modest amendment proposed by the Senate committee. In doing so, we will be giving the government another chance to get it right, and to uphold the honour of the Crown.

That is why, honourable senators, I stand today to urge the adoption of the aboriginal amendments. I do recognize the importance of the requirement for gun control, but not at the expense of aboriginal peoples.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Watt, I regret to interrupt you, but your ten minutes are up.

• (1630)

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, I very much regret interrupting Senator DeWare, but we did allow Senator Atkins to go over the allotted ten minutes. If Senator Watt does not require more than two or three minutes then, with unanimous agreement, we could allow him to continue.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Watt: Honourable senators, just to conclude my remarks, I should like to touch on the fact that firearms, at times, are used for wrongful purposes. I, too, sympathize with the families of those who have been victimized by the misuse of firearms.

I would ask all honourable senators to give serious consideration to what we said in committee and in this house. I should like to express my appreciation to those who have spoken on behalf of our people. Please continue to do so!

This is probably the first time that, day in and day out, I have heard speeches about aboriginal people being made by everyone in the house. Perhaps one day our French and English people will receive the same attention. There are many similarities between our French society and our aboriginal society. At times, we are misinterpreted as wanting to be different, or wanting to have more than anyone else. That is really not the case. We must face the fact that we are slightly different in some ways because of our way of life.

Hon. Mabel M. DeWare: Honourable senators, I rise today to speak on the importance of the vote which will occur later today on Bill C-68. I must confess one thing has been puzzling me today, and that is: Why is the government leading the public to believe that these amendments cannot be sent back to the other place without ultimately killing this bill? That is not true. We saw an editorial in The Globe and Mail today, and we have seen other news articles to that end. By whom is this idea being fostered?

We are not trying to kill this bill. Several weeks ago we agreed on a date in this house by which we would vote on this bill. We did this in order to allow the government ample time to deal with any potential amendments.

If the government did not feel that was a sufficient amount of time, it should have been made known then. We did appreciate the fact that we had an extra week or two in which our members could travel. We feel that is probably one of the most important things that has happened in all of our deliberations on this bill.

I am sure you will agree that the government has more than ample time to pass this bill, even with amendments. If this bill does not become law, it is not our fault.

Many of us want to see parts of this bill amended. However, we compromised partly because we want this bill passed by the Christmas break. How then can anyone really say or believe that we are trying to kill this bill? The amendments which were chosen are fair; they represent the concerns of many witnesses who appeared before our committee. That, honourable senators, is the role of the Senate.

Some of my honourable colleagues have already explained the thinking behind the amendments proposed by the Conservative members. However, I would like to focus on a section of the bill which has not been amended. I refer especially to the gun registration section. Will registration really work, or are we just entering into another bureaucratic nightmare?

The current firearms registration process, which has been in effect for over 60 years, is woefully ineffective. Firearms are often inaccurately described. Assembly numbers are recorded as serial numbers. Records are lost. Cheap copies of guns are registered under well-known brands they resemble. Furthermore, firearm owners move or die, and often, as is human nature, there are time lapses before address changes are reported to the proper authorities, if they are ever reported.

These are just a few of the problems which will also occur in the costly system which the government seeks to implement. This does not include the numerous people, including law-abiding citizens, who will just downright refuse to register their firearms.

Despite the concerns of some, including myself, the committee chose not to amend this section on registration.

To all the women's groups who fought against amendments to this section, I should like to say that I, too, want to see an end to violence against women. My opposition to registration does not contradict this position.

I was shocked and horrified, as we all were in the committee, when a group of witnesses revealed that a woman will go back to her abusive partner, on average, 30 times. Money would be better spent to ensure that these women do not have to return home to abusive partners, rather than on a registration system which might lead to confiscation of a firearm but which does nothing to address the underlying causes of abuse.

Every senator who has spoken against this bill has confirmed that he or she would support the bill if there was any indication or proof that registration reduces violence against women or violence in the home, or that it reduces homicides and suicides. Yet, honourable senators, we did not seek to amend the registration clause. We pray it provides the solutions Canadians are hoping for.

Honourable senators, I hope we can come together today to adopt these amendments, in order to give the government sufficient time for speedy passage of the improvements to Bill C-68.

Hon. P. Michael Pitfield: Honourable senators, this is a very important bill. It is, unfortunately, seriously flawed. I am deeply concerned about its insensitivity to farmers and outdoorsmen and, particularly, to the people of the North.

The recognition of the needs that flow from the interaction of great space and small numbers is the particular duty of Canadian federalism, and especially of its federal ministers. This bill does not meet that test: something poignant, indeed, in the circumstances of these days, in times immediately following yet another referendum springing from somewhat similar issues of insensitivity. Perhaps Ottawa is as arrogant as many people seem to think it is. Maybe we should examine our consciences.

The Attorney General of Canada and Minister of Justice is no ordinary minister when it comes to these issues of equity and the duties of political leaders in a federal structure. He has a unique position. I believe he should have found a compromise in this case. He has not. I find that most regrettable. I have never met the honourable gentlemen, but all reports are that he is an extraordinarily intelligent man. We need such people in Canada desperately, but we must also preserve the capacity to compromise.

In that light, I simply do not understand why we must choose between a well-intentioned, largely useful, sincerely compiled piece of legislation on the one hand and, on the other, the legitimate interests of a significant group of our fellow citizens whose interests the bill certainly ignores, even encumbers.

• (1640)

To my mind, this bill shows that the Liberal Party still has to learn the lesson of the reversal it suffered in the 1980s. For those of us who think of themselves certainly as philosophical Liberals, this is very bad news. When liberalism came under attack, many, if not most, of its adherents seemed to think it was their principles that had somehow lost the support of the people. In fact, it seems to me that it was the way those principles were being asserted in a modern, complex society that people found objectionable. People simply rebelled against the monstrous mechanisms of policy and process that were being used by governments, even, and I might say especially, so-called conservative governments, to realize those principles. Again, it was not the principles of liberalism but the mechanisms of their realization that were unacceptable.

A decade later we now have a prime example of this same phenomenon. It seems to me that those concerned have not yet learned, and we ordinary back-benchers are pressed to try to sort the situation out.

This is not an easy question. I have thought it through as best I can. On the one hand, there are the undisputed benefits of the bill. On the other hand, there is its unbelievable, naive faith in machinery, its lack of a certain degree of ordinary sense, its blind reliance on bureaucratic process.

Perhaps I am unduly influenced by the scene last night when our colleagues denied, as I see it, the elected government the right to manage the government's business. Vote down the electoral boundaries, as some of us wanted to do, but do not refuse us the right to bring it out of committee so we cannot vote at all.

I might not make this judgment normally. However, it seems to me the message of these circumstances today is that if we are to have a bill at all in the current circumstances of divided power in this house, then we can only have a flawed one. I regret that. It is the role of the Senate to try to avoid that kind of situation. We are a chamber of sober second reflection.

The minister has not made our role easy. However, we have not made it easy for ourselves, either. I have reluctantly concluded that, in this instance, I will support the government's right to legislate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, looking at the clock, I see that it is 4:45. It was agreed earlier this afternoon that at this time we would hear from the Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton for 15 minutes, followed by the Honourable Senator Fairbairn.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am sure that nothing I will say on the bill itself will change any minds, as all minds are obviously pretty well made up by now. The debate has been eloquent, convincing and, certainly for the most part, extraordinarily well thought out.

However, I want to clarify the position of this caucus on its approach to the bill. First, I want to say that the Progressive Conservative Party, as represented by this caucus, unanimously has never opposed gun control. As a matter of fact, it was the Mulroney government, with Kim Campbell as Minister of Justice which, in 1991, introduced and legislated, if not the toughest gun control law in the world, certainly one of the toughest gun control laws in the world. Yet Canadians are unaware of that. Only this morning Senator Meighen was telling us about a highly educated, well-informed friend of his who asked him last night while talking about Bill C-68, "Why are you delaying it? Anyone can walk into a shop and buy a gun, legally." That is the sort of ignorance about gun control that there is in this country, which, unfortunately, is leading people to wrong conclusions about the laws that we have, and how strict they are.

Let me tell honourable senators about how they can acquire a gun in Quebec today under the law which we passed in 1991. If you want to buy any kind of a gun, for whatever legal purpose — target shooting, let us say — did you know that you have to take two safety courses, be investigated by the police on three separate occasions and produce 12 letters of reference? That is just part of the process which can take up to one year. There is no other country in the world which imposes such conditions on those who want to legally acquire firearms. This is our doing, but it has had a negative effect. It has led to a drop in the issuance of firearms acquisition certificates and, as a result, an increase in the smuggling of illegal guns and the trade in them.

One must be careful in designing legislation that becomes so strict and so onerous that some people just cannot cope with it, and will use other means to attain the same ends.

It is this party that allows us to look at Bill C-68 today. Had there been no Bill C-17, there would be no Bill C-68 today. It is because of the pioneering work of Brian Mulroney, Kim Campbell and the Conservative caucus that we can at least discuss Bill C-68 today.

What disturbs many of us is that the principles on which Bill C-17 is based have not been honoured. When Ms Campbell introduced Bill C-17, she said that the legislation "was to provide better protection for all Canadians against firearms violence, while avoiding undue or unnecessary interference in the activities of Canadians who use guns legally, responsibly and safely." Russell MacLellan, who was then the Liberal critic, said:

The objective of the legislation is to control access to firearms and ammunition in Canada and not to place excessive or undue restrictions on responsible gun owners. I think that has been achieved.

Those were the comments in 1991 of the two main parties in the House of Commons on our legislation.

Those principles and those objectives have been abandoned with Bill C-68. What the government should have done is introduce two bills, one on gun control exclusively, increasing the penalties and the sanctions for those who trade and bring in arms which are illegal or not acceptable. There would have been hardly any debate on it, except some of us may have thought that the sanctions were not severe enough, as such a bill would have gone after the criminal element.

Another bill on registration should have been introduced, a law which affects law-abiding citizens. Criminals do not register their firearms, nor do they ask for firearms acquisition certificates. They thumb their noses at Bill C-17, just as they will thumb their noses at Bill C-68. If Bill C-68 is passed, all Canadians will be deemed as suspect because they will be mixed with the criminal element. This is why so many law-abiding citizens are concerned and upset, because they are being treated as suspects right off the bat; being targeted by a law which aims at both the criminal element and themselves.

Look at the amendments. I will not discuss the details because they have been extremely well analyzed by those who are supporting them. These amendments in no way affect the gun control feature of the bill. They do not affect in any way the registration feature of the bill. They are but a modest response to complaints heard, not just in one part of the country but across the country. These complaints and concerns were expressed not from a well-financed gun lobby about which I have heard so much — I can tell you honestly I have never met nor spoken with such a group — but rather from concerned, law-abiding citizens, including their elected representatives, in four provinces and two territories.

I am sure that these amendments are a great disappointment to those citizens. These amendments represent a minimum response but, to many of them, they are below the minimum. They expected more from us, particularly after so many of our colleagues went out across the country and listened to responsible, law-abiding citizens who, as one example, did not want their gun collections confiscated, which Bill C-68 allows.

As another example, the Canadian Olympic shooting team has told us that, had this bill been in effect at the time of the Commonwealth Games, there would have been no shooting competition.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: That is totally inaccurate. I confirmed it today; completely inaccurate.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: The regulations would allow the minister to ban the guns used in international competition.

Senator Perrault: Absolutely incorrect. You are spreading another falsehood. May I read the section to you?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: No.

Senator Perrault: It is in the bill, if you would read it instead of reading propaganda.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I am not reading propaganda; I am reading the testimony of the Canadian Olympic shooting team.

Senator Perrault: It is incorrect. I will send you the citation. It may help you.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Please do. Thank you.

What you cannot deny is that a gun which is purchased legally and then put on the restricted list, which means it has to be registered and then put on the prohibited list, which means it has to be confiscated, can be expropriated without compensation. That has already been done, and it will continue with this bill. Senator Stratton gave us examples yesterday.

The most troubling feature of this bill is that it raises expectations which will not be met. Although this too may be challenged, let me read you an analysis of the bill by Dr. Taylor Buckner of Concordia University, an associate professor of Sociology:

Bill C-68, presently before the Senate, will have little or no effect on homicides, suicides or accidents. Its proponents have not offered a single piece of evidence or research that it will reduce homicides, suicides or accidents, because there is no such evidence or research. It may well allow for an increase in violent crime as police efforts and funds are diverted into bureaucracy. It will certainly increase the overall crime rate, as almost every gun owner in Canada will inadvertently be in violation of one or another of its confusing provisions.

Honourable senators, the Minister of Justice is falsely claiming that if this bill goes to him tonight with amendments, there is a strong possibility that the House of Commons cannot deal with it. Is he so ignorant of the procedure over there that he does not know that the rules of the house favour the majority, and that any bill can get through in the time that the majority wishes, with or without the cooperation of the opposition?

Is the legislative agenda there so heavy that time cannot be made for this bill? Do I hear them discussing a bill which will abolish the GST? There is nothing of immediate importance going on over there. Is this government in a minority position? There is nothing to stop them from getting this bill tomorrow, amending it, and returning it to us next week, in plenty of time for the Christmas recess.

The minister is really saying that he does not want to see this bill back in the House of Commons. He fears another debate. He fears revealing again the deep splits in his own caucus, the deep opposition which will be expressed to him publicly and privately that Canadians by the hundreds of thousands object to being treated as suspected criminals by the policies underlying this bill.

The minister will not be able to show that he has properly consulted aboriginals as required by the Constitution and by treaties and agreements. Consultation does not mean sending 600 letters. The minister will not be able to show that he has consulted adequately with four provinces and two territories.

Speak to the ministers and attorneys general out there and ask them about the consultation. It was information. It was a monologue. These are the provinces which are responsible for the application of the Criminal Code. Provincial-federal relations at all times are tense, difficult, awkward and frustrating, and never more so than since the referendum. Yet, this government does not seem to accept that the days of "Daddy knows best" are over.

We are in a period where we should have been long ago, a period of consultation, of open discussion, even if it takes longer than one might want to come to agreements. We need an end to destructive letters from the Minister of Health demanding that the provinces follow the rules or be cut from the payroll; or destructive edicts back and forth from the Minister of Human Resources saying, "Do it my way, or no way."

The provinces have requested that only the registration of long arms be delayed so the system can be assessed, and then the provinces could do a better job in applying it. The rest of the bill would apply to all of the provinces.

The aboriginal people are asking only for consultation. They are saying, "We have a way of life here which is different from yours in Ottawa, Toronto and Montreal. We have a way of life which is essential to us. To us, a rifle is a tool. It is an essential, defensive weapon. We are law-abiding citizens. We cannot join your culture, but we do not want to be outside the mainstream. You have pushed us out over the years. You have taken our lands. You have put us on reservations. You have ignored our education. You have tried to abolish our culture. Now you are trying to make some reparations; that goes nowhere without respect. That is what consultation is — respect."

Yet, the Minister of Justice says to aboriginals, to provinces and to every Canadian citizen, "I do not care what you say; you will do it my way."

The minister came, as someone mentioned earlier, to our committee. Even before he entered the room, he said, "I do not care what amendments they have. I will not change one word of this bill."

That is not how the Parliament of Canada works.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh! Oh!

Senator Lynch-Staunton: There are those here who heard it.

Senator Thériault: That is not what he said.

• (1700)

Senator Lynch-Staunton: The minister's thoughts were well expressed. I will end on that note. He said, when he became justice minister, "I came to Ottawa with the firm belief that the only people in this country who should have guns are police officers and soldiers."

It is with that kind of mindset that Bill C-68 has been conceived. The most dreadful part is that Bill C-68 does not meet his goals. He has yet to restrict weapons, as is his intention, to police officers and soldiers. What restrictions will he conceive of next?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am pleased to be able to participate in this debate. It is an important debate. I think the contributions that have been made over the past several hours and days have indicated, once again, that when there is an issue of great national importance and emotion, the Senate responds to that issue with eloquence and with great care.

This is an important issue, honourable senators. For the last several years, one of the subjects for which concern has risen steadily among Canadians is that of safety and security — safety in terms of health; security in terms of economics — in private homes and on public streets; in large cities and sprawling urban areas; and in rural towns, villages, and remote communities in the north and south of this country.

This concern, honourable senators, touches every part of our society. It has deep roots in poverty, rapid change, lost opportunities, unemployment, drugs, illiteracy, shifting social values and changing family structures, and all of the manifestations that these combinations produce in terms of anxiety, anger, desperation, crime and violence. It is much more than just statistics, polls, media headlines and sensational trials; it is a public attitude of anxiety which is pushing institutions at all levels to take action, to do something, whether it be through governments, schools, churches, protective services, or the criminal justice system itself.

All of our institutions, honourable senators, are challenged with these demands, and they are challenged in the troubling context of diminished resources all across this land. There are no quick fixes for the problems that have taken root and grown, in ironic and even tragic parallel with years past of growth and prosperity in Canada.

While longer term efforts to reach the causes must accelerate, right now, attention has focused on strengthening means for protection through the law, through education and through trying to regulate and manage more effectively the tools which, if misused, result in crime, violence and death.

As all of us know, the issue of gun control has become a central feature of this process. It is a controversial issue which defies unanimity, but one on which, as honourable friends opposite have noticed, successive governments have sought and achieved varying degrees of consensus. For the past two years, the current government has tried to find a formula which bridges both protection and fairness. Already, there has been a great deal of consultation — real consultation — debate and compromise.

Bill C-68 is aimed at striking a balance between the legitimate use of firearms by law-abiding citizens of this country — whether they be aboriginal peoples, farmers, ranchers, people who use guns for hunting and recreational purposes, people who are involved in sports competition or who are interested in collecting and preserving guns — and the need to promote public safety and to curtail criminal activity.

There has been a great deal of discussion and debate in the House of Commons, and extensive testimony in its Justice Committee. That led, not to closing the door but to countless amendments and compromises to the original legislation. Here in the Senate, many more witnesses were heard. Senators held meetings across the country, some most recently in days and weeks, but others also throughout the summer, in the areas that they represent. We are now engaged in what may or may not be the final debate on this legislation.

As with all measures designed to strike that balance between competing interests, this legislation has its critics. They are vocal, and they have often been the most vocal in this debate. It is important to remember, however, that these proposals also have a long list of supporters in every part of this country. Often, their voices are not loud and easily heard. They may be members of social services, protective services, or police forces. They may be women and men in fear and distress wherever they live in Canada — urban or rural. They may be victims themselves; they may be families of victims who have been killed or wounded.

I cannot speak today without remembering that it was almost at this time of year in 1989 that 14 families had their daughters killed in a tragic event which took place at l'École polytechnique in Montreal. Some of those families are here with us today. We will not forget that event as a symbol of the other side of the coin in this legislation.

Sometimes, honourable senators, only the strongest come forward to speak. However, the trends of public surveys have shown consistently that a majority of Canadians do support gun control, as my honourable friend the Leader of the Opposition has said; they do support gun control measures, and, honourable senators, they also support this legislation.

There is no question that the levels of support vary in different regions of this country. That has been expressed forcefully and well in this debate. I, too, have heard those variations firsthand for months in my own province of Alberta, particularly in the southwest corner where I live. That is predominantly a rural area. Honourable senators, the views that I have heard are strong and forcefully expressed, but they are also mixed. They are not monolithic.

The thing that strikes me, when we are engaged in debate and argument on issues such as this, is that we very often communicate in extremes such as: "This bill will do nothing to solve our crime problems." Or, as Senator Lawson said earlier, when he suggested that other people were speaking in extremes: "The day after this legislation is passed, there will be no shooting." That is an extreme as well. Obviously, we concede that.

Other extremes are: "The registration system will not work at all"; "The law will not work"; "The money budgeted, no matter what it is, will not be enough"; "The government is really out to confiscate firearms from individuals"; "The museums automatically will be charged fees"; and "There will never be consultation sufficient enough or sensitive enough for the needs of aboriginals and northerners."

Honourable senators, all of those comments are extremes. We have heard these messages, not just in recent days but for months and for years.

• (1710)

I do not believe that this bill is built on extremes but, rather, it does seek consensus and compromise on what is clearly a very difficult issue for Canadians and for each individual senator in this house. We know that our political institutions and those who serve in them are viewed with scepticism and even distrust by many Canadians. Sometimes that occurs because we take it for granted that our messages are heard beyond Parliament Hill and that we are clever enough to make them easily understood.

Sadly, while communication should be a political strength, all too often we do a very poor job, both of listening and explaining. In the case of this bill, and the emotion and the controversy which surrounds it, the messages sometimes are confused, and they are contradictory.

I would suggest, honourable senators, that a great deal of effort has gone into the groundwork and the preparation of systems proposed in this legislation. This has not been a careless exercise and it will not be a thoughtless implementation.

I was not part of the committee which studied the bill, although I followed its work with very keen interest because it reminded me a great deal of Bill C-17, of which I was the sponsor when our party was in opposition back in 1991. The issues were similar; the testimony was similar; the frustration and the controversy were similar; and there was a great desire at that time to propose amendments to the bill to reflect some of the testimony which we had heard.

My honourable friend opposite is absolutely right: It was a good bill, and it was not just a good bill because it came from the former government; it was also a good bill because senators on both sides of this house worked strongly together to make it so and to support it. In the end, the committee chose to report the bill without amendment but with very strong recommendations to then justice minister, Kim Campbell. We did not see that bill as the final word on gun control but, Liberals and Conservative together, we put forward recommendations, and some of them, honourable senators, involved safety, training, and registration.

I believe that we should give the bill before us today a chance to prove itself to Canadians. We should give this bill a chance to work. Let us cooperate — not condemn but cooperate — with the justice department to inform our citizens, to ease the implementation process, and to demonstrate that Canadians and their governments have the ability, the creativity and the determination to make our laws work properly. Let there continue to be the broadest consultation with our aboriginal people so that the law will be implemented in a way that respects the realities of their way of life and their special culture.

The Minister of Justice again today assured me that every effort will be made to ensure that section 35 of the Constitution will be respected in terms of implementation of this legislation. Let us build, honourable senators, on the goodwill and the conscientious practicality with which most gun owners approach their work, their hobby, their sport, and most particularly the means of sustaining themselves and their families. Let us help to provide the climate in which this bill can work.

Honourable senators, this has been a very important, a very provocative, and a very moving debate. Last night, Senator Doyle observed:

We are Canadians all, with goals to share and hopes to achieve.

I believe, honourable senators, that this legislation takes us a step closer to achieving our common goals and hopes: namely, the building of a culture and a society where the safety and security of all Canadians is enhanced. It is for this reason, colleagues, that I sincerely hope we can pass this legislation today in this Senate, and thus take our responsibility seriously because, speculate as you will, we do not know what will happen to Bill C-68 tomorrow, and I would sincerely hope we can work together to pass it today.

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to thank honourable senators for staying strictly within their time limits. It now being five fifteen o'clock, pursuant to the order of the Senate and to rule 67(3) I order the bells to be rung for no more than 15 minutes.

Please call in the senators.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT OF SENATOR SPARROW
NEGATIVED ON DIVISION

On the Order:

On the motion in amendment of the Honourable Senator Sparrow, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lawson:

That the report be not now adopted but that it be amended

(a) by adding, on the first page, immediately before amendment number 1, the following:

“15.1. (1) A registration certificate is not required for any purpose under this Act or any other enactment for a firearm that is reasonable for use in Canada for hunting or sporting purposes.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), a registration certificate may be issued for a firearm that is reasonable for use in Canada for hunting or sporting purposes.

(3) For the purposes of this section, a firearm shall be deemed to be reasonable for use in Canada for hunting or sporting purposes if

(a) it is a rifle or shotgun designed or intended to be used for hunting or sporting purposes; and

(b) it is not a firearm described in

(i) paragraph (b) or (c) of the definition of “prohibited firearm” in section 84 of the Criminal Code, or

(ii) paragraph (b) or (c) of the definition of “restricted firearm” in section 84 of the Criminal Code.

(4) Notwithstanding any other provision, no person who possesses a firearm that is reasonable for use in Canada for hunting or sporting purposes commits an offence under this Act or any other enactment by reason only that the person is not the holder of a registration certificate for the firearm.”; and

(b) by renumbering the subsequent amendments accordingly.

REPORT OF THE AD HOC PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE ON LIGHTSTATIONS—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Leave having been given to proceed to Inquiry No. 59:

Hon. Eric Arthur Bernston (Deputy Leader of the Opposition), on behalf of Senator Carney, rose pursuant to notice of June 21, 1995:

That she will call the attention of the Senate to the report of the Ad Hoc Parliamentary Committee on Lightstations.

He said: Honourable senators, on behalf of Senator Carney, I will speak two words and then adjourn the debate on Inquiry No. 59, dealing with the parliamentary committee on lightstations. The reason for the adjournment is that we simply have not had time to get to that item on our agenda, with all the other things we have had on our plate. Senator Carney would like to debate this item at a later date.

On motion of Senator Bernston, for Senator Carney, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if there is agreement, I move that all remaining orders, reports, motions and inquiries stand.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, November 23, 1995

The Senate met at 2:00 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair

Prayers.

VISITORS IN GALLERY

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I draw your attention to distinguished visitors in our Speaker's Gallery. I refer to the Honourable Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Manitoba, Speaker Louise M. Dacquay. She is accompanied by the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly of Manitoba, Mr. Binks Remnant.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

CONSEQUENCES FOR ABORIGINAL COMMUNITIES

Hon. A. Raynell Andreychuk: Honourable senators, yesterday I abstained from the final vote on Bill C-68. I did so because I respect the Constitution and because the bill remained unchanged. Therefore, abstention was my only method of registering my continued concerns.

The bill, contrary to popular opinion, belief and the government hype, does not get tough on crime immediately, but it does get tough on lawful citizens. If the bill were really tough on crime, I might have had some reason and logic for putting aside my responsibilities to the aboriginal peoples in favour of its passage. I might have been able to put the interests of minorities aside. However, the bill did not, in fact, deal with the issues of crime and violence with which I feel we need to deal.

The Senate must now contemplate how committed it is to the aboriginal community. How committed are we to minorities, one of our three fundamental responsibilities? Of what value is the aboriginal community? Does the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs really deal only with legal and constitutional issues?

Honourable senators, before we face such a situation again, we should reflect on our respective roles and renew our commitment to finding workable compromises.

Hon. Willie Adams: Honourable senators, I wish to explain why I abstained last night on the vote on Bill C-68.

During the debate on this bill, we heard many speeches expressing concern for aboriginal peoples, their rights and their way of life. Following those speeches, 64 senators voted for Bill C-68.

Over the past several months, we heard from approximately 160 witnesses, and we heard consistently that the aboriginal peoples will have to go to court if Bill C-68 is passed. I believe that that is the only way we will win our rights back, and I believe that we will be in court some time after Christmas.

I have been serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples for the last two years, and I have always thought that we were doing a good job. However, after last night, I realized that the Senate is not concerned about aboriginal rights.

Effective immediately, I tender to my whip my resignation as a member of the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples.

INTERNATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF FRENCH-SPEAKING PARLIAMENTARIANS

EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION AND SEMINAR
HELD IN PORT-AU-PRINCE, HAITI

Hon. Jean-Robert Gauthier: Honourable senators, in July 1994, the United Nations Organization authorized a military intervention in Haiti to unseat a military junta which had forced the elected president, Jean-Bertrand Aristide, into exile in the USA.

I need not go into all of the tumultuous events that have occurred since the return of President Aristide and the arrival of the UN peacekeepers in order to ensure a peaceful transition from a military dictatorship to a democratic presidential regime with a bicameral parliament elected by universal suffrage.

From November 16 through November 29, the Canadian section of the International Assembly of French-speaking Parliamentarians, of which I have the honour to be the head, held seminars at Port-au-Prince to exchange views and information with our parliamentary colleagues in Haiti focussed on issues essential to Parliamentary action in a democracy. Within a few days, I shall be tabling in the Senate a complete report on this Canadian initiative. The seminar was organized as part of the Canadian program of international cooperation and financed through Canadian funding provided by the Cultural and Technical Cooperation Agency which, as you know, is the key organizer of francophone summits and the body which dispenses assistance to development within la Francophonie.

Other, similar seminars for newly-elected parliamentarians were held in Africa recently, involving parliamentarians of a number of fledgling democracies. I am pleased to tell you also that AIPLF Parliamentary Affairs Committee Chairman Senator De Bané chaired most of these seminars. However, this is the first time we have had this kind of discussion and information seminar on parliamentary action in a democracy in the Americas.

The delegation I chaired consisted of three federal members — Raymond Bonin, Michel Daviault and Geoff Regan — and three members of provincial legislatures — Solange Charest of the Quebec National Assembly, Gilles Morin of the Ontario Legislative Assembly and Greg O'Donnell of the New Brunswick Legislative Assembly.

The subjects discussed during the seminar were as follows: the separation of powers, which is the foundation of any democratic system; the relationship between Parliament and the executive, where Canadian parliamentarians stressed the concept of ministerial accountability; the role of the opposition in a parliamentary system, a topic that raised many questions from Haitian parliamentarians and fuelled a lengthy debate.

Canadian delegates pointed out that the presence of an opposition that was well organized and structured according to a well-defined set of rules was fundamental to the effective operation of a parliamentary democracy.

Other topics were the consideration of bills in the House and in committee, administrative structures and services essential to the effective functioning of Parliament, and the relationship between elected representatives and their constituents.

Canadian delegates were impressed by their Haitian colleagues' grasp of the subjects being discussed and by their very active participation in the exchanges that took up two full days. In fact, more than half of Haiti's two Houses of Parliament, about 70 members and senators, took part in these discussions, despite the fact that both Houses were sitting while we were there. The Speakers of both Houses also took an active part in the proceedings.

We found that Haitian parliamentarians were well informed. They are determined to work very hard to establish a strong parliamentary democracy in their country, despite the serious problems they are facing.

Honourable senators, if you have a chance to go to Haiti, I would urge you to take advantage of this opportunity, as we did, to meet and talk to parliamentarians.

NATIONAL ANTHEM

OBLIGATION TO PERFORM BY MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS— CONSEQUENCES OF DEMAND BY REFORM PARTY

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, on January 11, 1967 the Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson tabled a government motion to set up a joint committee on Canada's national and royal anthems.

I will forego the series of events that followed that historic date. As Senator Forrestall said yesterday, only two members of that committee still sit in Parliament. The other members of the Senate and of the House of Commons have left us. Senator Forrestall and I are the two MPs who were present at that historic moment, and we are now in the Senate. We recommended to the Parliament of Canada, that is, to the House of Commons and the Senate that "O Canada" be our national anthem.

Senator Forrestall and I fully agree. We both remember exactly the same thing: it was agreed that a national anthem, like a flag, like the monarchy, is a symbol that must be respected. Loyalty must be total, absolute and voluntary.

Like him, I sincerely regret that, for reasons of base political partisanship — and I underscore these words — and in the hope of embarrassing the official opposition, that is the Bloc Québécois in the House of Commons, the Reform Party committee asked the House committee that looks after procedural matters to kindly allow the members to sing "O Canada" every Wednesday. This, in my opinion, makes a total mockery of the symbol that should unite us.

Honourable senators, I object to this request. I have so informed the people concerned. They ignored it. I heartily regret that they politicized the national anthem for reasons of base partisanship, in the hope, perhaps, of embarrassing the members of a party by obliging them to sing, or not to sing, the national anthem, whereas in Quebec like everywhere else in Canada, spontaneously, at all major events where "O Canada" is sung, even those who do not have my federalist faith politely rise and sing, or at least rise. If we have to politicize our national anthem starting today, I predict that people will politicize it. I state publicly that the blame falls squarely on the members of the Reform Party who decided that, starting yesterday, they should sing the national anthem.

I must also congratulate — and do not take offense — Mr. Plamondon of the Bloc Québécois on his intelligent attitude. He said:

We will not rise to the bait. We will be polite. We will rise. If we are present, we will rise out of respect for those who wish to sing this fine song.

You see: "this fine song."

Honourable senators, I would like to remind you of a point of history. Perhaps I should congratulate the members of the Reform Party for wanting to honour the Quebec City Saint-Jean-Baptiste Society, because "O Canada" was not written to be sung on July 1, but was composed and written at the request of the president of the Saint-Jean-Baptiste Society of Quebec City in 1880. At that time, the president decided that it would be nice in Canada to have a fine song, and made the appropriate request of Félix Calixa Lavallée and Sir Basile Routhier, whose great grandson was Mrs. Tremblay's husband.

I must congratulate the Reform Party. Perhaps they wanted to honour the Saint-Jean-Baptiste Society of Quebec City. Each time they sing "O Canada," I will thank them on behalf of this society, which, in Quebec City, remains federalist.

Therefore, on behalf of the Saint-Jean-Baptiste Society, let us hear it for the Reform Party.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 58(1)(h), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, November 28, 1995, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

FIREARMS BILL

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, pursuant to rules 57(1)(2) and 58(2), I give notice that I will call the attention of the Senate to the speech I had intended to give yesterday, Wednesday, November 22, 1995, during debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Beaudoin, seconded by the Honourable Senator Grimard, for the adoption of the sixteenth report of the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on Bill C-68, respecting firearms and other weapons, with amendments, presented in the Senate on Monday, November 20, 1995; the speech that I was unable to give due to time limitations imposed by the Senate Order to conclude debate by 5:15 p.m. and vote at 5:30 p.m. on Wednesday, November 22, 1995.

NATIONAL FINANCE

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, November 28, 1995, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance have power to sit at four o'clock in the afternoon on Tuesday, November 28, 1995, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 95(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

QUESTION PERIOD

JUSTICE

SALE OF AIRBUS AIRCRAFT TO AIR CANADA—ALLEGED CONSPIRACY TO DEFRAUD FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—DEPARTMENTAL LETTER TO SWISS AUTHORITIES—MINISTER'S INVOLVEMENT

Hon. Marjory LeBreton: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It is with regard to yesterday's news reports that the Minister of Justice is investigating how the media became aware of the fact that the Department of Justice had made an official representation to Swiss authorities regarding certain numbered accounts. We now know that Mr. Roger Tassé, a former Deputy Minister of Justice, now acting on behalf of former Prime Minister Mulroney, called the minister on November 4. Mr. Rock has publicly acknowledged this. We also know that Mr. Tassé wrote to Mr. Rock on November 8.

Media people have confirmed to me personally that Liberal operatives were trying to peddle this story for at least a week before the story broke on the CBC news on November 12, and in the newspapers on November 13 — in other words, from November 5 or 6 until November 12.

After Mr. Rock discussed this matter with Mr. Tassé on November 4, what did he do? With whom in his department, the Prime Minister's Office and/or his political staff did he discuss this matter?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, obviously, I have no knowledge of those specific details. I will take the honourable senator's question as notice. Also, I have no knowledge of the honourable senator's comments concerning operatives peddling a story.

Senator LeBreton: Perhaps the Leader of the Government should talk to those who will give her that information.

Honourable senators, if Mr. Tassé had made a phone inquiry on behalf of Mr. Chrétien, Mr. Turner or Mr. Trudeau, would the Minister of Justice have treated this matter in such a cavalier way?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the Minister of Justice has said quite openly, and repeatedly, that he did not respond to the request by Mr. Tassé because it would not have been proper, nor would it have been appropriate.

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT

REFORM OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE SYSTEM—GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME AS PART OF PACKAGE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gerald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, my question is addressed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It is regarding an announcement that is expected next week by her colleague the Minister of Human Resources Development regarding unemployment insurance reform. I should like to refer to a statement made by the same minister in the House on November 2 in response to a question, in which he said:

— I will tell the hon. member that one of the most important elements we are putting together as part of the new unemployment insurance package is what the Prime Minister talked about in his speech last night. He said that we will provide basic protection for families on low income with children. It is something we have been talking about in this country for a long time, and we intend to do it.

The minister seemed to imply that this basic benefit will be part of the UI reform package. Can the leader clarify her colleague's statement? Is he suggesting that a guaranteed annual income would become part of the UI package?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as my friend noted at the beginning of his question, the Minister of Human Resources Development will be bringing forward legislation soon. If my honourable friend would wait until the legislation appears, his questions may be answered.

TRANSPORT

SEARCH AND RESCUE HELICOPTER REPLACEMENT PROGRAM—STATUS OF EH-101 CONTRACT—NATURE OF MILESTONE PAYMENTS

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: Honourable senators, I have a brief supplementary to a question I posed yesterday regarding the final EH-101 contract. While the leader is endeavouring to get the information I requested yesterday, which I believe is necessary, could she check into and obtain for this chamber the amounts of the other payments which have been made? I refer to those payments which were described as "milestone" payments.

Together with the amount of these so-called milestone payments, I am anxious to know whether or not they were being made under the guise of compensation. I ask this question to ensure that the amount of money paid out under the milestone arrangements will be added to the total amount which will be paid to cancel this particular contract.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will add my honourable friend's questions to the questions he asked yesterday.

NOVA SCOTIA

INDUSTRIAL MARINE PRODUCTS—RELOCATION OF PLANT FROM NORTH SYDNEY TO AMHERST—POSSIBLE DELAY IN IMPLEMENTATION OF DECISION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: Honourable senators, I am forced to ask this question today because apparently none of the Cape Breton members of Parliament are sufficiently concerned about employment in North Sydney to bother to respond to urgent requests from IMP employees. Industrial Marine Products took over an $18-million to $20-million federally-funded plant, for which it paid $4 million to $5 million. It now intends to move its machinery out of North Sydney to Amherst. That is fine. They are moving from an area heavily burdened by unemployment to a relatively burdened area with respect to long-term unemployment of this nature. That is a decision which a corporate body can make. Surely, before taking such a decision, there is a responsibility on the part of the government, either provincially or federally, or perhaps both, to ensure that all the options are considered, and that they are considered in conjunction with meaningful consultation with the unions involved.

Will the minister approach her colleague in cabinet, the Minister of Public Works, the senior minister from Nova Scotia, and ask if he might intervene with a view to seeking a 30- to 60-day moratorium to ensure that unionized and other employees at that plant have every opportunity to make their case known before IMP pulls out the machinery and moves it to Amherst, causing the loss of all those jobs?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will be pleased to take Senator Forrestall's representations to my colleague. I am not aware of the context of the question, but I shall refer it to the minister.

• (1440)

JUSTICE

SALE OF AIRBUS AIRCRAFT TO AIR CANADA—ALLEGED CONSPIRACY TO DEFRAUD FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—RANK OF RCMP OFFICERS ENGAGED IN INVESTIGATION

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators, my questions are supplementary to questions asked by Senator LeBreton and are directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Minister, you have been at pains to convince this chamber that no member of the cabinet or no ranking officer of the Department of Justice had any early knowledge of your government's approach to the Government of Switzerland to ferret out any stuff that might be used to indict a former prime minister of Canada for secret crimes against his country.

The Leader of the Government, like the cabinet colleagues with which she runs, takes no responsibility for what was done, or said, or leaked, or what was intended to be the terrible result of that secret letter to Switzerland.

My question is: If the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were given total responsibility for the hunt for such a villain, why was no officer above the rank of sergeant found to take charge of the posse?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would like to read that question before I attempt to respond. I will seek information for my honourable friend on this matter. As I have said repeatedly, no member of the cabinet was aware of the investigation, nor of the contents of the letter.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): I do not believe that.

Senator Fairbairn: You may not believe it, but it is a fact.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I do not. Did you go after a former prime minister without at least one cabinet minister knowing about it?

Senator Fairbairn: That is precisely what I have said.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: But you are happy to go after him in letters, and call him a crook!

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I will follow up on Senator Doyle's question.

Senator Doyle: There are 1,710 sergeants presently in the RCMP force. How did they decide which one of them would get the job? Why were all of the 1,390 Mounties above the rank of sergeant left behind to restart the burglar alarms at 24 Sussex Drive?

HEALTH

CONTROL OF SALE OF TOBACCO PRODUCTS—NEED FOR LEGISLATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, will the Leader of the Government in the Senate inform this chamber as to whether the government will bring in legislation controlling the sale of tobacco products in Canada, in view of the fact that the Supreme Court has ruled on the constitutionality of the Tobacco Control Act with regard to advertising and found it lacking, and in view of increasing representation from the anti-tobacco lobby for control of tobacco products, which cost 41,000 Canadian lives annually, and a loss to our economy of about $15 billion?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Tobacco kills more than guns. That is where their priorities are.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the Minister of Health is actively looking into this question. I do not have an answer for my honourable friend now, but I will endeavour to obtain for him whatever information I can. Naturally, Ms Marleau is deeply concerned about this issue and will be trying to find the most appropriate way to deal with it.

INDUSTRY

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY RESEARCH—CUTS TO BUDGET—TIMING FOR RELEASE OF STUDY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, the research and technology community in Canada is anxiously awaiting this government's policy in the area of science and technology research. In the last budget, honourable senators will recall that this government cut $77 million from the budgets of the National Science and Engineering Research Council and the Social Science and Humanities Research Council. They did that notwithstanding recommendations to the contrary by the Finance Committee in the other place. As well, last year's budget slashed some $10 million from the budget of the Medical Research Council. We can understand, therefore, the concern under which the research community in Canada is labouring. Some suggest there has been an abdication of promises, which are easy to find in the infamous Red Book, and that there be stable funding in the area of research.

In a letter to the Canadian Association of University Teachers dated this month, the Minister of Industry Canada states that the federal government remains committed to making science and technology a top priority.

Honourable senators, my question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is this: Is priority being given by her government to establishing a well-articulated and well-defined policy for Canada in the area of science and technology research?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): In general terms, honourable senators, the answer to that question is yes. A high priority is being given by the government to the area of science and technology. That was evident in the review carried out by the Minister of State, Dr. Gerrard. The results of that cross-country process are now being studied for possible future action.

It is true that there are budget constraints. However, science and technology research is an area which is considered very seriously, and is a high priority with this government.

Senator Kinsella: Honourable senators, perhaps the honourable minister can tell us when she expects the government to be in a position to release that study, which is known in the research community to have been undertaken? They are anxious to see what that study will say. Does the honourable minister have any indication as to when it will be released?

Senator Fairbairn: I will talk to my colleagues, honourable senators. I do not know personally at this moment what the intention is vis-à-vis a release, or a date, or the timing on a follow-up to that study, but I will attempt to obtain that information for my honourable friend.

Senator Kinsella: Honourable senators, the minister may recall that an indication was given that this blueprint of policy would be out this fall. We are now getting towards the end of the fall. Is that the type of time line the research community can count on?

Senator Fairbairn: I will try to find that out for you.

DELAYED ANSWERS

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a response to a question raised in the Senate on November 8, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Comeau regarding firearms legislation funding arrangements.

FIREARMS BILL

FUNDING ARRANGEMENTS WITH GOVERNMENT OF NOVA SCOTIA—AVAILABILITY TO OTHER PROVINCES OF SIMILAR ARRANGEMENTS—COSTS TO TAXPAYERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Gerald Comeau on November 8, 1995)

In the document entitled a Financial Framework for Bill C-68, An Act Respecting Firearms and Other Weapons tabled by the Minister of Justice with the House Justice Committee on April 24, 1995, anticipated costs and revenues were identified.

The Federal Government has every confidence that the Financial Framework document reflects the anticipated revenues and expenses entailed in the design, development and implementation of the registration system.

As for responsibility for costs incurred, the federal government has made it clear throughout that the provinces will not be called upon to pay for the design, development or implementation of the registration system.

A letter was sent to the Government of Nova Scotia May 24, 1995 from Justice Minister Allan Rock on the issues of costs. Similar letters were also sent to the Governments of all the provinces and territories.

Its continuing costs of administration will be funded by revenues paid as fees by firearms owners.

The actual amounts will be set by regulations that will be subject to Parliament's review, and Federal-Provincial/Territorial Firearms Financial Agreements.

The administration of the Canadian Firearms Registration System will be fully funded by the federal government and costs recovered through fees.

Similarly, the actual issuing costs of all Firearms Licences, Registration Certificates, and Authorization Permits will be recovered by the provinces and territories through fees set in regulations to be reviewed by Parliament and included in the Federal - Provincial/Territorial Firearms Financial Agreements.

The objective of the Government is to make the entire Firearms Program cost-neutral. Furthermore, it is the Government's intention not to remove the front line police officer from their duties in protecting the Canadian public.

PRIVILEGE

SPEAKER'S RULING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, before I proceed to call Orders of the Day, I wish to give my ruling on a matter of privilege raised by the Honourable Senator Cools. I would ask that my ruling be distributed to all honourable senators so that they may follow the text of my comments.

Honourable senators, on November 6, 1995, the Honourable Senator Cools raised a question of privilege to challenge whether a certain kind of point of order can properly be raised, and whether it is within the power of the Speaker to rule on such points of order. In her submission, Senator Cools stated that:

A point of order cannot be used to compromise the Speaker or the position of the Speaker, or to limit the powers and privileges of the Senate. No point of order may ask the Speaker to adjudicate on the competence of the Senate to pass legislation.

Honourable senators will find that quote at page 2202 of the Debates of the Senate.

[Translation]

By way of background, honourable senators will recall that on October 17, Senator Cools presented to the Senate Bill S-11, an Act concerning one Karla Homolka. On October 19, following the Table Officer's reading of the Order of the Day for the second reading of Bill S-11, Senator Kinsella raised a point of order to the effect that the matter contained in Bill S-11 was out of order and not properly before the Senate. Following a discussion involving a number of senators, and in which some interesting points were raised, the Speaker pro tempore reserved his decision. I refer honourable senators to the Debates of the Senate of that day at pages 2139 to 2143.

[English]

• (1450)

In her question of privilege Senator Cools stated:

...the Speaker of the Senate has no power or authority to adjudicate the substance and intention of Bill S-11 or of any other bill. He has no power to settle questions regarding the judicial result of Bill S-11 or regarding the Senate's pleasure to pass or not to pass Bill S-11 or the appropriateness or righteousness of the Senate's actions in this regard. The settlement of these questions belongs to the Senate institutionally, and the manner in which the Senate usually settles such questions is by consideration and debate of the bill.

The accepted definition of parliamentary privilege, based on Erskine May, and stated in Beauchesne, 6th edition, at citation 24 explains that:

Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of...Parliament, and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions...

Among these collective privileges, Beauchesne states, at citation 33:

The most fundamental privilege of the House as a whole is to establish rules of procedure for itself and to enforce them. A few rules are laid down in the Constitution Act, but the vast majority are resolutions of the House which may be added to, amended, or repealed at the discretion of the House.

Citation 26(1) of Beauchesne defines a point of order as a "question of order" which "concerns the interpretation to be put upon the rules of procedure..."

Since the concern expressed by Senator Cools is about how this chamber is to proceed when conducting its business, it seems clear to the Chair that she is not questioning the fundamental right of the Senate to lay down procedural rules. Rather, she is questioning the interpretation of our rules and their application to a particular fact situation.

The essence of her question appears to be whether the point of order raised with respect to Bill S-11 is in order, and how the presiding officer should act when asked to rule on such a point of order.

[Translation]

With respect to the substance of Senator Cools' concern, there are many examples where senators have raised points of order and asked the Speaker to make a ruling as to the procedural acceptability of a bill or of amendments proposed to a bill. I refer honourable senators to the following precedents in the Debates of the Senate: 1977-78, at pages 464-5, concerning a motion in amendment to a bill proposed by Senator Forsey; 1986-87-88, at pages 2720-22, concerning a motion by Senator Graham with respect to Bill C-103, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency Bill; and 1989-90-92, at pages 156-157, concerning two bills, S-3 and S-4, dealing with veterans allowances. In this latter example, the Speaker was asked to rule whether the bills "were in order and form suitable for the Senate to consider." The Speaker ruled that the bills infringed the financial prerogative of the Crown and ruled them out of order.

[English]

There are other precedents as well which clearly establish that a senator may ask the Speaker to rule whether a certain bill or amendment is in order according to our rules and practices. In the present case, Senator Kinsella has raised a point of order because, as he maintained, Bill S-11 should not be considered by the Senate since, in his opinion, the bill is not one which falls within the traditions, customs and rules of this chamber. To support his position, he cited a precedent from the other place. By raising a point of order, Senator Kinsella was invoking rule 18, whereby the Senate has authorized the Speaker "to enforce the rules of the Senate."

At this point, I wish to digress from my written ruling, which you have before you, and refer directly to our Senate rule book.

Rule 18(2) says:

The Speaker shall decide points of order and when so doing shall state the reasons for the decision together with references to the rule or other written authority applicable to the case.

I refer you as well to rule 4(13) which says:

"Shall" is to be construed as imperative, and "may" as permissive.

Under this rule, not only does the Speaker have a right, he has an obligation.

In my opinion there was nothing improper in what Senator Kinsella did, nor did Senator Ottenheimer or Senator Lynch-Staunton act improperly.

Accordingly, I rule that there is no prima facie case of breach of privilege with respect to the matter raised by Senator Cools.

Finally, I am still considering Senator Kinsella's point of order raised on October 19. I will give my ruling soon.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

NATIONAL UNITY

RESULTS OF QUEBEC REFERENDUM—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Donald H. Oliver rose pursuant to notice of Wednesday, November 1, 1995:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the results of the Referendum of October 30, 1995 in Quebec.

He said: Honourable senators, I rise today to speak to an inquiry that I put on the Order Paper to permit honourable senators an opportunity to express their views and concerns on the future of a united Canada, in view of the troubling results of the recent referendum in Quebec.

The Canada that I know and love includes Quebec. The Canada that the United Nations has a habit of calling "the best country in the world" includes Quebec. The country that makes us proud to flash our Canadian passports when abroad includes Quebec.

Why am I, a unilingual politician from Nova Scotia, so concerned about Quebec's separation? It is because Quebec's contribution to our daily lives, our unique culture, is quintessential Canada. To lose Quebec is to lose a bit of ourselves or what we have become.

You are all well versed in the Quebec Act, the tradition of the Roman Catholic religion, the French language and the civil law traditions in Quebec, but as background for my comments on the Meech Lake Accord, let me say a few things about culture.

My wife and I are attempting to become bilingual by immersing ourselves in French-language training at St-Jean, Quebec. Our professors teach us not only grammar and syntax, but have opened the doors for us to the richness of the cultural traditions of Quebec.

Canada has been elevated in the eyes of the world by the creative contributions of French artists, painters and artisans. The artistic genius of a multiplicity of Quebec artists is at the heart of what many around the world love and respect about Canada. These artists explain, in one way or another, what it means to be Canadian. They discuss that we have emotions, sensations and instincts that determine our actions and reactions, and they put it in such a way that they speak to all mankind. However, I do not for a moment rule out our liberal democratic traditions of liberty and freedom that distinguish us from so much of the world.

I have time only to touch briefly upon the influence of French culture. I am referring to writers, architects, poets, authors, composers, dancers, visual artists, pop and operatic vocalists and sculptors. The more I read and study the cultural traditions and the influences of Quebec in Canadian culture, the more I appreciate what being Canadian means. I am aware that today we have new artistic geniuses of such descents as Chinese, Japanese, American, African and other new Canadians, but let us not forget about the awesome contribution of the French from Quebec.

I have always subscribed to the view that artists, philosophers, poets, painters, writers, and so on, see where the world is going before most of us do. It has always taken time for cultural developments to reach people at large. You could, for example, see the French Revolution on canvass and in verse long before the actual storming of the Bastille!

Have we in English Canada immersed ourselves deeply enough in the works of contemporary Quebec artists to understand the soul of the French people in Canada? Art is a necessary and normal means of human expression. Revolutions in attitudes and values, unlike political revolutions, proceed mostly below the surface of man's actions. I am not surprised, therefore, when people near my farm ask me: "What do the people of Quebec really want?"

It may be instructive for we English-speaking Canadians to go back to Rousseau, Voltaire and Montesquieu. They encouraged us to have a new look at old institutions. Maybe there is a hope for a better social order by rethinking and restructuring some of our federal institutions. Is that not the lonely cry that we hear from Quebec, and is that not similar to the cry we are hearing from Canada's western provinces?

There are several things we of this body of sober second thought can and should do to help restructure Canada for the twenty-first century, the new millennium, that would not only be a modern symbol for world democracies but would also probably have the effect of creating a new united Canada.

Here are some of my ideas, for what they are worth:

At an appropriate time, an all-party committee of senators should be established to go to Quebec and to meet with Quebecers. All Quebecers who wished to express an opinion on Quebec within Canada could then be heard. The committee should then meet with opinion makers from all other provinces and territories. It should meet with senior political figures in Quebec City and also with other Quebecers — that is, executives, business people, entrepreneurs, artists, artisans — who continue to paint Quebec society within Canada. It will be from these people that senators will learn what it means to be a Quebecer and to be part of a cultural and linguistic minority both within Canada and in North America. It will be through meetings with the working people of Quebec that senators will discover the hopes and dreams of “this people” — hopes and dreams fashioned over hundreds of years, now exhibiting themselves in the movement for sovereignty.

[Translation]

Senators will know the answer to the following question: What does Quebec want? They will be able to pass on this information to all Canadians.

As senators know, this kind of mission would normally be carried out by a special joint committee that would include members of the House of Commons. However, this is not appropriate under the present circumstances.

There are in the House of Commons two political parties whose prime objective is not to keep Quebec within Canada. At least the Bloc Québécois does not hide its intention to get Quebec out of the federation. As for the Reform Party, judging by its position on the issue of the referendum, it is clear that it would love to kick Quebec out of the federation.

[English]

In my view, it would be completely counter-productive to involve the other place in such a fact-finding mission within Quebec. The Honourable Jean Charest, the leader of the federal Progressive Conservative Party, has shown, by his willingness to do whatever was required of him during the referendum, that the Progressive Conservative Party stands for a united Canada. Mr. Charest's support for the Prime Minister, both before and after October 30, illustrates that partisan party politics can be put aside when the future of the country hangs in the balance.

Much more, however, must be done in the weeks ahead than the establishment of this committee to ensure that the people of Quebec understand the love and affection that exists for them in the rest of Canada.

On Friday, October 27, the demonstration in the streets of Montreal was effective and impressive. As the editor of Maclean's magazine, Robert Lewis, has stated, “It was the silver lining for federalism in the outcome of the referendum.” Canadians stood up to be counted. The Quebec referendum aroused a passion for Canada not seen in many years. Mr. Lewis pointed out that parents took their children out of school to attend pro-Canada rallies, and citizens by the thousands called and wrote to Quebecers, urging them to vote “No.” He believes that the Quebec referendum illustrated for us the powerful lesson that no nation can ever take itself for granted. These efforts could have been much more effective if they had begun earlier. If the Montreal demonstration had been held earlier, it could have been followed by other demonstrations. The Friday demonstration would not have been an isolated incident that allowed separatists to question the sincerity and motives of those who took part.

Efforts to let Quebecers know the positive feelings from those outside Quebec must be greatly increased. This increase must take place between now and the next time Quebecers go to the polls in either a provincial election or the next inevitable referendum on sovereignty. Who should make this effort? It must be a concentrated effort made by all Canadians. It must include our political leaders from all levels of government in Canada. In fact, it must be broader than that. It must include schools and universities from across Canada, those in senior citizen residences — all Canadians who believe that they can reach out and who believe in a united Canada.

Letters should be written, visits should be undertaken to Quebec and, ideally, Quebecers should go to other parts of Canada to experience the deep concern and love all of us feel. Canadians should keep up the pressure on Quebec through meetings, travel, letters to the editor and magazine articles that concentrate on the benefits of a united Canada.

As Peter C. Newman has stated:

If Canada, outside Quebec, continues to ignore the province's dreams and aspirations, there is now no doubt that the next time around will truly be the country's last chance.

If we are to win the hearts and minds of Quebecers, the virtues and benefits of a united Canada must be emphasized. I would hope that if we have learned anything from October 30, it is that negative scare tactics are not only ineffective but also may prove to be counter-productive.

I believe that those who have received the Order of Canada owe a special duty to this country to spread the good news of the future of a united Canada. They can reiterate, as citizens of a united Canada, that we all benefit from the critical mass of the Canadian economy, which has given us membership in the world's most exclusive club, the G-7. Canada is a founding member of NAFTA, APEC, the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation organization, and it also plays a strong leadership role in La francophonie.

As Jean Monty, President and CEO of Northern Telecom stated recently:

Canada is both an Atlantic and a Pacific Rim nation with unusually privileged access to the North American market. Canada's future lies in reaching outward, not looking inward, and by building on the strengths of the Canadian brand name, one of the most recognized and respected in the world.

Quebecers must be convinced that they, too, benefit from Canada's place in the world because of its trading alliances, the strengths of its economy, and its place in the community of nations, as evidenced by the high respect accorded to it in such organizations as NATO and the United Nations.

It is my hope that, through the vehicles which I have outlined, Canadians who live outside Quebec will begin to know and appreciate the hopes, the dreams and the fears of a Quebec society.

What form should this take? There are those who would shy away from constitutional change, intent on resolving our problems through administrative agreements. I believe that if we are to make changes that will ultimately result in Canada and all of its component parts functioning more effectively and efficiently, we might as well open up the Constitution; as has been stated by a noted constitutional scholar, Professor Max Cohen, "the revered script of our national passion play."

When determining what prescriptions may be utilized to resolve the differences within our country, one need look no further than the Meech Lake Accord and certain parts of the Charlottetown Agreement. Before discussing the sections of the Meech Lake Accord which may benefit us, let us in this chamber reflect on the fact that it was initiated by Prime Minister Mulroney, supported by the Right Honourable John Turner, as Leader of the Opposition, as was the Charlottetown Agreement supported by Mr. Chrétien when he was opposition leader.

The section of the Meech Lake Accord which attracted the most comment, both negative and positive, was the distinct society/linguistic duality section. The Constitution Act 1867 was to be amended to include a new rule of interpretation whereby the Constitution could be interpreted so as to recognize linguistic duality as a fundamental characteristic of Canada, and Quebec as a distinct society. More than a million francophones live outside of Quebec.

Controversy swirled around the question of what was meant by this clause for Quebec and for the rest of Canada. The distinct society clause articulated in the Constitution a political and sociological effect. Its effect was best described by Senator Beaudoin, prior to being summoned to the Senate, when he appeared as Professor Beaudoin before the Special Joint Committee on the Meech Lake Accord.

In my opinion, as in the opinion of a good number of lawyers, the recognition of a distinct society ... is an explicit and important interpretive clause but it does not change the distribution of powers or the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. But it can, in certain cases, in particular under section 1 of the Charter and in grey areas concerning the distribution of powers, give more weight to certain arguments.

... it is an express rule of interpretation. It is important. It is fundamental. It may influence the interpretation of the courts under section 1 of the Charter or the interpretation of the division of powers, but it is not more than that and it is not less than that. It is a rule of interpretation.

The Right Honourable Robert Stanfield also expressed an opinion on the distinct society wording when he said:

It is true it recognizes something special about Quebec — not for the first time, by the way — and a role for Quebec in connection with that identity. But it is a very limited thing. There are no specific powers given to Quebec in that connection. I find it very difficult to see how that puts the country on any kind of a slope, and I do not have any difficulty living with that degree of asymmetry in the Constitution.

On the other hand, I think that we have been on a very slippery slope following 1982. That is the slippery slope. If the accord that has been negotiated is rejected, I think we are on a very slippery slope indeed. To me, that is the slippery slope we should be watching.

The accord went on to deal with immigration, giving constitutional recognition to federal-provincial immigration agreements such as those negotiated between Quebec and Canada since 1971. It constitutionalized Quebec's traditional veto over major constitutional change. It also dealt with the Supreme Court of Canada. It set out in the Constitution Quebec's right to have three judges from Quebec on the court, and established a procedure whereby provinces would nominate judges and the federal government would appoint them from the list of nominees.

The accord also contained a mechanism for governing the establishment of new shared-cost programs between the provinces and the federal government. This clause attempted to regulate the use of the federal spending power in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction. It obligated the federal government to provide reasonable compensation to the government of a province "that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program" if the province carries on a program or initiative that is "compatible with the national objectives."

While the accord went on to deal with changes in the method of appointing senators, and constitutionalizing federal-provincial conferences, I believe that both of these matters will have to be addressed anew later on.

Such matters as education, health care, and manpower job training can be dealt with through administrative agreements or through constitutional changes, if the parties so desire. As well, it is possible that negotiations would touch on areas of overlapping jurisdiction such as environmental regulation, forestry, tourism, mining, and regional development. The view here would be to eliminate federal participation.

The genius of our federal form of government is that it can respond to various stimuli for change. It offers us the structure within which we can reform and renew our system of government.

As I said at the beginning, before we embark upon this journey of change, we must determine what is in the hearts, minds and souls of Quebecers. We must immerse ourselves in their culture, because only in that way can we truly begin to understand the sense of frustration, alienation and grievance which has led us so recently to the brink of splitting up this great country.

Therefore, I conclude, honourable senators, with a plea to our leadership; a plea to establish an all-party committee of senators to go to Quebec, and in particular to Quebec City, to look into the real needs of Quebec and to explore them with a view to resolving those needs.

On motion of Senator Gauthier, debate adjourned.

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

DECISION ON PRIVILEGES OF THE COURT— INQUIRY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Anne C. Cools rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, November 2, 1995:

That she will call the attention of the Senate to a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, privileges of the Court, and the learned judgment rendered by the distinguished Justice, the Honourable Mr. Justice Peter Cory.

She said: Honourable senators, for generations, Canada was governed by persons of high moral standing and high personal moral fibre, many of whom learned these moral standards through Christianity. Canada's national propensity for this high standard was internationally renowned and respected. A notable example was the late Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson, whose success during the Middle East crisis in 1956 was largely attributed to the exceptional regard and esteem held by all sides for Mr. Pearson's personal moral stature and strength of character. Sir Lyman Duff, Chief Justice of Canada from 1933 to 1944, was another example of a Canadian with such well-regarded personal character.

Honourable senators, for some years now, much public evidence has highlighted the enormous problems within the legal profession and within the Law Society of Upper Canada. These problems have their origins in the collapse of the moral and professional standards of an earlier age and are largely centred in the abuse of process, abuse of legal and judicial privilege, and the commercialization of their positions as officers of the court.

Today I wish to draw the attention of the Senate to the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in the case of Casey Hill versus the Church of Scientology and Morris Manning. This case is an appeal from the Ontario Court of Appeal, and the civil litigation lasted eleven years, from 1984 to 1995, and involved many prominent lawyers from Toronto. The distinguished Mr. Justice Peter Cory, in an exhaustive judgment, dismissed the Church of Scientology and Mr. Manning's appeal, affirming the judgment of the Court of Appeal. In addition, Mr. Justice Cory declined to adopt the "actual malice" rule, as in the New York Times v. Sullivan decision, upholding the adequacy and sufficiency of Canadian common and statute law.

To summarize, Casey Hill was a Crown attorney in Toronto involved in investigating the Church of Scientology. The lawyers for Scientology were Clayton Ruby, Michael Code, and Morris Manning. The issues to be determined by the court were solicitor-client privilege, privilege relating to documents in judicial proceedings, occasion of privilege, libel, slander, defamation, and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Barristers Clayton Ruby, Michael Code, and Morris Manning endeavoured to destroy Casey Hill in a style and manner common in the practice of law and litigation currently. The technique is the employment of false statements to deliver hurt and injury, to impair an adversary, both personally and legally, and to deter him from proceeding. To this end, Barristers Ruby, Code, and Manning made certain false allegations about Casey Hill's reputation and instituted contempt of court proceedings against him, seeking his imprisonment.

To promote this court proceeding, the Church of Scientology and their lawyers held a press conference on the steps of the courthouse. Fully gowned in his lawyer's robes, Morris Manning read to the media from a court document, a notice of motion not yet filed with the court, announcing some poisonous and untrue allegations about Mr. Casey Hill. The media coverage was extensive.

Scientology's — and Mr. Manning's — contempt of court proceedings against Casey Hill was heard by Mr. Justice Cromarty in late 1984. Casey Hill was exonerated, the matter was dismissed, and the allegations by the Church of Scientology and its lawyers about Mr. Hill were judged to be unfounded and untrue. The evidence was overwhelming that the allegations of Scientology, Mr. Ruby and Mr. Manning against Mr. Hill were false, and Mr. Justice Cromarty's judgment was unequivocal.

Subsequently, Casey Hill sued the Church of Scientology and its lawyer, Morris Manning, for damages caused to Mr. Hill's reputation by their impugning his character, competence, and integrity. Scientology and Mr. Manning argued the defence of privilege, claiming that the court documents, their utterances, and the occasion of these words were protected by judicial privileges which sheltered them from liability. Moreover, Scientology and Mr. Manning were supported by the media in their initiative as they urged the Americanization of Canadian law through the adoption of the United States' "actual malice" rule of the New York Times v. Sullivan decision in defamation cases.

Honourable senators, the problem is a profound one, and is at the heart of the crisis in civil and criminal justice in Ontario. The problem is the use by barristers of the court process for harassing and injuring others, that is, for civil molestation. The technique is the utilization of false accusation, untruth and falsehood in court documents and the subsequent shielding of these words and actions behind judicial privilege. It is their use of the courts, court documents, court privileges and proceedings as instruments of malice and injury. The entire field of judicial privilege, including solicitor-client privilege, begs clarification. The abuse of legal and judicial process by the legal profession compels attention and examination.

Regarding Scientology's attitude to Casey Hill as a Crown attorney, Mr. Justice Cory in his judgment states:

Long before he gave advice to the OPP in connection with a search and seizure of documents which took place on March 3 and 4, 1983, Casey Hill had become a target of Scientology's enmity. Over the years, he had been involved in a number of matters concerning Scientology's affairs. As a result, it kept a file on him. This was only discovered when the production of the file was ordered during the course of this action. The file disclosed that...Scientology closely monitored and tracked Casey Hill and had labelled him an "Enemy Canada." Casey Hill testified that from his experience, persons viewed by Scientology as its enemies were "subject to being neutralized."

Despite the fact that Casey Hill was cleared of the allegations, and Mr. Justice Cromarty had made a judicial determination to this effect, the Church of Scientology and Mr. Manning persisted in their attack on Casey Hill. Mr. Justice Cory states:

Scientology continued its attack against Casey Hill throughout the trial of this action, both in the presence of the jury and in its absence. More than once, it reiterated the libel even though it knew that these allegations were false. Clearly, it sought to repeatedly attack Casey Hill's moral character....Counsel for Scientology subjected Casey Hill to a lengthy cross-examination which the Court of Appeal correctly described as a "skilful and deliberate attempt at character assassination."

Mr. Justice Cory continued:

The day after the jury's verdict on October 4, 1991, Scientology republished the libel in a press release delivered to the media. A few weeks later, it issued another press release attacking the verdict of the jury as "outrageous" and "so exorbitant..." Shortly thereafter, it proceeded with a motion before Carruthers J. to adduce evidence which, it contended, would bear "directly on the credibility and reputation of the plaintiff S. Casey Hill."

Mr. Justice Cory cited the Ontario Court of Appeal about barristers Manning and Ruby's insistence saying:

What the circumstances of this case demonstrated beyond peradventure to the jury was that Scientology was engaged in an unceasing and apparently unstoppable campaign to destroy Casey Hill and his reputation. It must have been apparent to the jury that a very substantial penalty was required because Scientology had not been deterred from its course of conduct by a previous judicial determination that its allegations were unfounded nor by its own knowledge that its principal allegation...was false.

About defamation and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, Mr. Justice Cory said:

Certainly, defamatory statements are very tenuously related to the core values which underlie s.2(b). They are inimical to the search for truth. False and injurious statement cannot enhance self-development. Nor can it ever be said that they lead to healthy participation in the affairs of the community. Indeed, they are detrimental to the advancement of these values and harmful to the interests of a free and democratic society.

Mr. Justice Cory condemned false allegations saying:

False allegations can so very quickly and completely destroy a good reputation. A reputation tarnished by libel can seldom regain its former lustre. A democratic society, therefore, has an interest in ensuring that its members can enjoy and protect their good reputation so long as it is merited.

Mr. Justice Cory outlined the religious and legal history of the affirmation of truth and the punishment of untruth. He referred to the Roman era, the Bible, the Mosaic Code and the Talmud. He traced the history of the common law action for defamation to the efforts of the Star Chamber to eradicate duels and blood feuds, the favoured method of vindication for injured parties. Mr. Justice Cory upheld the time-honoured principles on false allegations saying:

To make false statements which are likely to injure the reputation of another has always been regarded as a serious offence.

Mr. Justice Cory, though pressed by Scientology's lawyers and the media's lawyers, declined to adopt the American rule of "actual malice." Mr. Justice Cory pointed out that, in the United Kingdom and in Australia, this rule has been refused. Moreover, he noted that a number of jurists in the United States have advocated a reconsideration of this rule, and quoted American Justice White that:

...these First Amendment values are not at all served by circulating false statements of fact about public officials. On the contrary, erroneous information frustrates these values....As the Court said in Gertz: "There is no constitutional value in false statements of fact. Neither the intentional lie nor the careless error materially advances society's interests in 'uninhibited, robust, and wide-open' debate on public issues."

Finally, on the issue of judicial privilege as a protection from liability, Mr. Justice Cory ruled that the court's privileges are not to be abused, that wrongdoing can oust privilege and that barrister Manning's behaviour defeated any privilege, saying:

...it is my conclusion that Morris Manning's conduct far exceeded the legitimate purposes of the occasion. The circumstances of this case called for great restraint in the communication of information concerning the proceedings launched against Casey Hill. As an experienced lawyer, Manning ought to have taken steps to confirm the allegations that were being made....In those circumstances he was duty bound to wait until the investigation was completed before launching such a serious attack on Hill's professional integrity. Manning failed to take either of these reasonable steps. As a result of this failure, the permissible scope of his comments was limited and the qualified privilege which attached to his remarks was defeated.

The press conference was held on the steps of Osgoode Hall in the presence of representatives from several media organizations. This constituted the widest possible dissemination of grievous allegations of professional misconduct that were yet to be tested in a court of law. His comments were made in language that portrayed Hill in the worst possible light. This was neither necessary nor appropriate in the existing circumstances...it was certainly high-handed and careless. It exceeded any legitimate purpose the press conference may have served. His conduct, therefore, defeated the qualified privilege that attached to the occasion.

About the negative effect of the defamation, Mr. Justice Cory said:

The written words emanating from the news conference must have had an equally devastating impact. All who read the news reports would be left with a lasting impression that

Casey Hill has been guilty of misconduct. It would be hard to imagine a more difficult situation for the defamed person to overcome....A defamatory statement can seep into the crevices of the subconscious and lurk there ever ready to spring forth and spread its cancerous evil. The unfortunate impression left by a libel may last a lifetime. Seldom does the defamed person have the opportunity of replying and correcting the record in a manner that will truly remedy the situation.

Mr. Justice Cory noted the planned nature of the barristers Manning and Ruby's defamatory statement, as well as the location of the defamation. He said:

The publication of the libelous statement was very carefully orchestrated. Members of the press and the television media attended at Osgoode Hall in Toronto to meet two prominent lawyers, Morris Manning and Clayton Ruby. Osgoode Hall is the seat of the Court of Appeal and the permanent residence of the Law Society. The building is used as the background in a great many news reports....In the minds of the public, it is associated with the law, with the courts and the justice system. Manning went far beyond a simple explanation of the nature of the notice of motion. He took these very public steps without investigating in any way whether the allegations made were true.

Mr. Justice Cory revealed the deliberate nature of barristers Manning and Ruby's action saying:

The existence of the file on Casey Hill under the designation "Enemy Canada" was evidence of the malicious intention of Scientology to "neutralize" him. The press conference was organized in such a manner as to ensure the widest possible dissemination of the libel....It pleaded justification or truth of its statement when it knew it to be false.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Cools, I am sorry to interrupt, but your speaking time has expired.

Senator Cools: Honourable senators, I would be happy to adjourn my remarks until Tuesday.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is not a question of adjourning your remarks. Your time has expired. Unless leave is granted, it is not possible for you to adjourn your remarks.

• (1530)

How much time does the honourable senator need?

Senator Cools: Five minutes. I would be happy to carry on. It is not a problem.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Cools: Mr. Justice Cory spoke firmly to malicious injury, saying:

In summary, every aspect of this case demonstrates the very real and persistent malice of Scientology. Their actions preceding the publication of the libel, the circumstances of its publication and their subsequent actions in relation to both the search warrant proceedings and this action amply confirm and emphasize the insidious malice of Scientology.

About the conduct of Scientology and its barristers, Ruby and Manning, Justice Cory said:

Scientology's behaviour throughout can only be characterized as recklessly high-handed, supremely arrogant and contumacious. There seems to have been a continuing, conscious effort on Scientology's part to intensify and perpetuate its attack on Casey Hill without any regard for the truth of its allegations.

Honourable senators, Toronto's newspapers report daily on the enormous problems of the Law Society of Upper Canada and the legal profession in Ontario. The new Attorney General of Ontario, the Honourable Charles Harnick, has vowed to mend the myriad problems which have developed and hardened over several years. No doubt Mr. Harnick will meet resistance from members of the profession and the Law Society itself. I encourage Mr. Harnick to meet this challenge, to stand firm, and not to back down in the face of opposition, detraction or resistance from the lawyers. At risk are the proper administration of justice in Ontario, the elimination of unjust practices and offensive and dishonourable initiatives in the administration of justice and in the practice of law. Mr. Harnick's initiatives as Attorney General are timely and necessary.

Honourable senators, this judgment by the Supreme Court of Canada, rendered by the distinguished and learned Mr. Justice Cory and concurred in by Mr. Justice La Forest, Mr. Justice Gonthier, Madam Justice McLachlin, Mr. Justice Iacobucci, and Mr. Justice Major, is a benchmark decision, not only because of the legal principles and statements, but especially because of the moral position adopted. Justice Cory, in his judgment, upholds the position that moral ground and moral principles must found the basis of judicial action and the practice of law. He upholds the Aristotelian maxim that moral principle and moral ground must be inherent in the exercise of power in the courtrooms and in Parliament. He upholds the principle that lawyers, because they are officers of the court, have a duty to the administration of justice, to justice itself and to truth itself.

The barristers in this case, representing the many interveners, included Brian Finlay, Q.C., Christopher Tzekas, Marc Somerville, Q.C., Ross Wells, Robert Armstrong, Q.C.,

Kent Thomson, Lori Sterling, Hart Schwartz, Robert Sharpe, Kent Roach, Edward Morgan, Peter Hogg, Brian MacLeod Rogers. The interests were numerous and financially enormous. About their intervener status, the pecuniary interests and their interventions, Mr. George Bain, in a Maclean's article dated August 28, 1995 called "The Pressure to Change Libel Law, writes:

By their demonstrated interest in the case, the media have encouraged Scientology in arguing that Canadian libel law contradicts the 1982 constitutional guarantee of freedom of expression....The media also encouraged the notion that the time has come to make Canadian libel law more American...

Mr. Bain notes that:

...of the 11 bodies that had standing as interveners at the appeal, only two — the Canadian Civil Liberties Association and the Attorney General of Ontario — had no discernable interest in the commerce of putting words on paper or on the air. The others were: the Writers Union of Canada; the Canadian sprig of the international writers-and-rights organization, PEN; the Canadian Association of Journalists; the Periodical Council; the Canadian Daily Newspaper Association; the Canadian Community Newspapers Association; the Canadian Association of Broadcasters; the Radio-Television News Directors Association of Canada; and the Canadian Book Publishers Council jointly with the Canadian Magazine Publishers Association.

On recognizing the media intervention in the case, and pointing directly at the commercial interests and profitability fuelling these interventions, George Bain goes to the heart of the matter with his question:

What was such a nice bunch of nationalist publishers doing in the Supreme Court arguing for the Americanization of Canadian Law?

Honourable senators, many commercial interests are at work in this country, not the least of which is that of the legal profession and the Law Society of Upper Canada. The Law Society of Upper Canada is governed by the benchers. Justice Cory points out in the judgment that Mr. Ruby, during this unconscionable and mean-spirited legal offensive, was simultaneously a bencher of the Law Society. About Mr. Ruby's harsh letter to Mr. Hill of September 6, 1984, Mr. Justice Cory said:

It should be noted that at the time this letter was written, Clayton Ruby was a Bencher of the Law Society and Vice-Chairman of the Law Society's discipline committee.

The letter implied that there could be disciplinary proceedings brought before the Law Society of Upper Canada....

The conclusion is self-evident. Mr. Ruby exercised his powers as a barrister recklessly and then compounded the wrongdoing by using his position as a bencher and vice-chairman to threaten Casey Hill with disciplinary action from the Law Society. I am told, honourable senators, that such threats by benchers to their adversaries are not uncommon. Honourable senators, ruminate on this situation and the result, had Casey Hill complained to the Law Society about Mr. Ruby's conduct and activities.

Honourable senators should also note that during these events, Clayton Ruby's partner and friend, Michael Code, Casey Hill's other adversary and detractor, was appointed by Premier Rae to be Casey Hill's boss, to wit, to be the Assistant Deputy Attorney General of Ontario. These situations are troubling and need discussion and examination.

Honourable senators, in conclusion, this travesty of justice lasted eleven years and ended in July 1995 when Mr. Justice Peter Cory delivered his judgment. His judgment asserted that judicial privilege cannot shelter wrongdoing, that lawyers shall not rely on judicial privilege to shield them from responsibility and personal liability, that lawyers shall not use court processes and judicial proceedings to commit slanderous behaviour, and that the administration of justice and the practice of law cannot be founded on untruth, mean-spiritedness or wrongdoing.

Honourable senators, it truly was, I believe, an outstanding judgment. It is an outstanding piece of thinking by Mr. Justice Peter Cory. I recommend it to all for reading and study. Also, honourable senators should know that Casey Hill is today a judge of the Ontario Court (General Division).

On motion of Senator Gauthier, debate adjourned.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET
DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government) for Senator Kirby, pursuant to notice of Wednesday, November 22, 1995, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit at two o'clock in the afternoon, Thursday, November 30, 1995, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 95(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

STATE OF CANADIAN FINANCIAL SYSTEM—NOTICE OF MOTION TO EXTEND DATE OF FINAL REPORT WITHDRAWN

On the Order:

That, notwithstanding the order of reference adopted by the Senate on Wednesday, November 30, 1994, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to continue its examination into the present state of the financial system in Canada;

That, in conducting this study, the Committee pursue, in particular, its examination into Crown financial institutions, corporate governance, and the 1992 reform of financial institutions;

That, notwithstanding usual practices, if during the winter adjournment the Senate is not sitting when the Committee's report on its review of Crown financial institutions is completed, the report may be deposited with the Clerk of the Senate and it shall thereupon be deemed to have been presented to that Chamber; and

That the Committee present its final report no later than September 26, 1996.

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on behalf of Senator Kirby, I ask that Order No. 115 be withdrawn.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is there unanimous consent, honourable senators, to withdraw Order No. 115?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order withdrawn.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 28, 1995, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, November 28, 1995

The Senate met at 2:00 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

VISITORS IN GALLERY

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I should like to draw your attention to the presence of a distinguished group in our gallery today. I refer to a parliamentary delegation from Romania.

We welcome both of you to the Senate.

SENATOR'S STATEMENT

UNITED NATIONS

PERMANENT SECRETARIAT ON BIOLOGICAL DIVERSITY
TO BE LOCATED IN MONTREAL

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, a few days ago we were delighted to learn that the Permanent Secretariat of the United Nations Convention on Biological Diversity will be located in the city of Montreal. The Government of Canada had made an official offer to have Montreal selected, and the Conference of the Parties to the Convention voted in favour of Canada at a meeting in Jakarta earlier this month.

Four cities were proposed: Geneva, Madrid, Nairobi and Montreal. We faced stiff competition, but the Canadian bid, which was supported by three levels of government, was a strong one. Canada has a solid scientific, technological and industrial base, and a wealth of experience and expertise in this area of biological diversity.

The successful conclusion of this bid was the result of hard work in many quarters. The preparation of the proposal itself took cooperation and planning by officials in the federal, provincial and municipal governments. Then there was the big sales job undertaken by officials, diplomats and politicians.

One of the reasons I am raising this subject today is to speak about the role of the Inter-Parliamentary Union as a forum where we can promote Canadian interests. Earlier this fall, I informed honourable senators of a special session of the Inter-Parliamentary Union to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations which was held at the United Nations headquarters in New York at the end of August. This event was attended by 253 parliamentarians from 74 countries.

The timing of this IPU conference was especially propitious, for we used this occasion to speak to our colleagues from other countries about the advantages of locating the permanent secretariat in Montreal. The Deputy Leader of our delegation, Mr. Maurice Dumas, MP for Argenteuil-Papineau, and I divided the workload, with Mr. Dumas meeting the leaders of the francophone delegations while I spoke to the others. This special meeting, which brought us all together for three days, provided us with the opportunity to speak to other delegates and to advance the Canadian bid.

I can tell honourable senators from first-hand experience that the Canadian proposal was well received by other parliamentarians, and several asked for further details about our bid. I should like to pay tribute to the tremendous staff of our mission in New York who assisted us throughout this exercise.

We are all delighted that Canada has been recognized internationally for its strong infrastructure and scientific achievements. It is gratifying to me personally that, as a member of the Canadian IPU delegation, I could help to advance this worthwhile and important cause. We rejoice in having succeeded in our bid to establish the Permanent Secretariat of the United Nations Convention on Biological Diversity in Canada.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

AGRICULTURE AND AGRI-FOOD ADMINISTRATIVE MONETARY PENALTIES BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Dan Hays, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, presented the following report:

Tuesday, November 28, 1995

The Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has the honour to present its

TWELFTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-61, An Act to establish a system of administrative monetary penalties for the enforcement of the Canada Agricultural Products Act, the Feeds Act, the Fertilizers Act, the Health of Animals Act, the Meat Inspection Act, the Pest Control Products Act, the Plant Protection Act and the Seeds Act, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, November 7, 1995, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

DANIEL HAYS
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Hays, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

QUEBEC

PRIME MINISTER'S PROPOSALS—MEANS OF GAINING NECESSARY
CONSENT OF PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, my question arises from the statement made by Prime Minister Chrétien yesterday concerning measures to be placed before Parliament, measures of a non-constitutional character but touching upon the Constitution. In particular, I draw the leader's attention to the undertaking by the Prime Minister that Justice Minister Rock will table a bill in the House of Commons on Wednesday that will require the consent of Quebec, Ontario, and the Atlantic and western regions before any constitutional amendment can be proposed in Parliament by the Government of Canada.

There are many questions which arise from that, but my question is, how will that consent be obtained? Is it to be obtained in consultation with the governments of those provinces, through the legislative assemblies of those provinces, or by way of referendum?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have asked myself this question: What does "direct consent" mean? The Prime Minister has outlined the three obvious options, and, as I understand it, it would be up to the federal government to decide which route would be chosen.

I need to get more information on that point myself, but the options laid out were the three that the honourable senator has mentioned, these being a direct executive-provincial government approach, a legislative assembly approach, or referendum.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I presume, however, that the bill will not be silent on the matter. I presume the bill will state how the federal government would obtain that consent. It would not be left to some future discretion of the federal government, would it?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I have not seen the detailed bill. It will be out tomorrow.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SEARCH AND RESCUE HELICOPTER REPLACEMENT PROGRAM—
REQUEST FOR TABLING OF STATEMENT OF REQUIREMENTS AND REPORT ON SEARCH AND RESCUE CAPABILITY REQUIREMENTS

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: Honourable senators, my question for the Leader of the Government relates to the purchase of the 15 new search and rescue helicopters. There appears to be somewhat of an air of secrecy surrounding the details of the purchase of this new equipment. Apparently the Statement of Requirements, which includes pertinent information on performance capability requirements, is not readily available from the Department of National Defence.

Given the difficulties we are having in obtaining this document, could the Leader of the Government please give us an undertaking to obtain and table that particular document for us?

• (1420)

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can give my honourable friend an undertaking that I will attempt to do that.

Senator Forrestall: Honourable senators, given that the government has indicated that there is no secrecy regarding the requirements for this new equipment, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate also provide us with a copy of the Search and Rescue Capability Requirements Report prepared by the Director of Air Operational Requirements in June of 1990? Perhaps the honourable leader could also advise this chamber whether that document was, in fact, updated in conjunction with the purchase of this new equipment, and if so, could she provide senators with the updated document?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, with respect to all of those questions, I will be in touch with the Minister of National Defence. I will see what I can find out on behalf of my honourable colleague.

Senator Forrestall: Honourable senators, the reason for the importance of having these documents tabled is to ascertain the priorities of the government in terms of what these search and rescue helicopters will be equipped to do. The 1990 Statement of Requirements states very plainly:

Some inherent subjectivity exists in quantifying SAR requirements; speed, range and capacity are examples where any decision for greater or lesser capability would undoubtedly result in lives saved or not saved in the future.

The Minister of Defence indicated that this equipment would have 15 per cent less capability than the EH-101. Given the serious implications of any reduction in capability, as I have now cited from the 1990 document, would the Leader of the Government in the Senate please ensure that all relevant documents, including the 1995 Statement of Requirements, are tabled in this chamber? What we want to see is the difference between the 1990 report and the 1995 Statement of Requirements.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I will do what I can for my honourable friend.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

SCHEDULE OF WORK OF THE COMMITTEE— POSITION OF CHAIRMAN

Honourable Jean-Robert Gauthier: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the chairman of the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Could the chairman inform us of the schedule of his committee's meetings for the next few days, so that it may terminate its task and report to the Senate on Bill C-22, an act respecting certain agreements concerning the redevelopment and operation of Terminals 1 and 2 at Lester B. Pearson International Airport, as well as on Bill C-69, an act to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions and the readjustment of electoral boundaries?

My question is a simple one: When can the Senate expect to have a report from the committee, or news of what is going on in committee?

Honourable Gérald-A. Beaudoin: Honourable senators, to begin with Bill C-22, we have reached the conclusion that the amendments that had been proposed by the government do not fully comply with the principles of the primacy of law and the rule of law. Our objections and arguments in this connection are based on the following principle: with these amendments, the bill does not completely re-establish access to the courts, and thus we do not consider that the principle of the "rule of law" has been respected.

I am fully prepared to call the committee again to consider Bill C-22 and report on it if you wish, but I must tell you immediately that the report will state that the bill does not adhere to the principles of the primacy of law and the rule of law, which are part of the Canadian Constitution.

As for Bill C-69, only a few days ago we heard the testimony of Professor Hutchinson of Toronto, a constitutionalist. We have also heard from two jurists representing Mr. Kingsley, the Chief Electoral Officer, and our conclusion is still the same. If we accept Bill C-69 as worded, the next federal general election will probably be based on the 1981 census, rather than the 1991 one.

We consider that section 51 of Canada's Constitution requires Parliament to hold the next elections on the basis of the 1991 census.

The Senate has every right to cite a principle in the Constitution in not voting in favour of a bill that infringes the Constitution. If we had to make a quick report on the subject, this is what I would say. We will discuss the matter in committee.

In both cases, however, our position is based on a principle of constitutional law. I think the House of sober second thought is perfectly entitled to reject a bill or two that infringe the Canadian Constitution. That is my answer for the moment.

Senator Gauthier: Honourable senators, you will note that my question did not concern the substance of the bills, but the committee chairman is answering me as if it did. This bothers me a bit. It is not up to the committee to decide for the whole of the house what should take place here.

I therefore put my question again: What is the committee's agenda for the coming week or until the Christmas holidays? Can we expect a report, or at least that the committee will sit between now and Christmas?

Senator Beaudoin: I am perfectly prepared to have the committee sit to hear other witnesses and prepare a report before Christmas, if you like.

For the moment, committee members are studying Bills C-45 and C-7, and we have plenty to do. We will return to the other two bills later.

Senator Gauthier: Honourable senators, is the chairman of the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs telling us that they have a veto on this committee, allowing them to suspend work on Bills C-22 and C-69? Am I to understand that the committee has decided not to proceed any further, that the committee has absolutely vetoed a question that concerns the Senate?

Senator Beaudoin: We have not decided not to go any further. I can tell you that, if there is a vote in committee, the bill will be defeated.

Senator Gauthier: How can you anticipate that?

Senator Beaudoin: I tell you, our position rests on two principles of constitutional law: The first is the rule of law and access to the courts, and the other is section 51 of the Canadian Constitution. We have heard witnesses and we can hear more. They will come and confirm what the others have said. At some point, we will have to have a vote in committee.

Senator Gauthier: That is what I want to know — when?

Senator Beaudoin: I am ready to take it at any time.

Senator Gauthier: That is my question. Can the chairman assure us that these bills — C-22 and C-69 — will be reported to the house within 24 hours, given that the situation is such that the chairman himself expects a negative vote. Let the committee chairman take the vote and report to the Senate that there was dissidence on the committee. That is all.

HEALTH

REORGANIZATION OF BLOOD SUPPLY SYSTEM—TIMING OF FINAL REPORT OF KREVER COMMISSION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators, some weeks ago I received answers to questions that I had asked of the Leader of the Government in the Senate last June about the reorganization of the blood supply system. The text of the reply, some 700 words — longer than most of my questions — was strong on assurances and short on details. Special attention was given to the interim report of Justice Krever, who:

...recognizes that the system today is dynamic and undergoing changes at a rapid rate.

The reply then continues:

Where practical and warranted, the government is prepared to apply its expertise to assist others in implementing Justice Krever's recommendations relating to their jurisdictional authorities.

The reply continues further:

General questions about the national blood supply system would best be served by referring to Justice Krever's advice in his final report which is due to be submitted to the government by December 31 of this year.

Many senators share my concern that without evidence of action in preparation of a contingency plan, only delay will follow the submission of the report; delay in response to the terrible neglect of the 1970s and 1980s; neglect that resulted directly in the spread of AIDS through the blood supply that the Red Cross, government agencies and other interested parties had reason to believe was contaminated.

Honourable senators, we are told that Justice Krever has applied for a further delay in the submission of his final report. Could the Leader of the Government tell us how far down the road that report might be?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am aware of the application for a further extension. I will check with my colleague to see if any decision has been made on that, and reply promptly to my honourable friend's question.

Senator Doyle: When that time comes and we know what date we might expect to hear from Justice Krever, will the government then have an answer for the suppliers who have resolutely refused to apologize for their part in the contamination of the blood supply more than a decade ago?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I share my honourable friend's concerns, and I will try to find a response to that question.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

REPRIEVE FROM PLANNED EMBARGO ON CANADIAN FURS— POSSIBILITY OF BANNING LEG-HOLD TRAPS— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, as The Globe and Mail reported on Friday, Canada has won a one-year reprieve from the European Union's planned embargo on Canadian furs, but the victory will be wasted unless the government now turns to helping trappers give up, within that year, the leg-hold traps that Europeans find so objectionable.

That is the opinion of Brian Craik of the Grand Council of the Crees of Northern Quebec. The vast majority of Cree trappers already use the Conibear trap, which is acceptable to the EU.

What steps will the government take within the next 12 months to ensure that trappers have shifted to more humane traps, and that this reprieve is not wasted?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I join with my honourable friend in expressing satisfaction that we have a year in which to try to resolve this long-standing dispute that is of particular concern to the aboriginal people in relation to their livelihood in the north. It would be the intention of the government to use that year to try to find a solution which meets the concerns of our aboriginal people, as well as the concerns of the European Community, and I can assure her that I will try to obtain any details that I can. This is a matter which the government takes very seriously, and I can assure my honourable friend that we will be using this reprieve, as she terms it, to address this concern.

Senator Spivak: Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell me which is the lead ministry on this question? Of course, while it is primarily the trappers who are concerned, there are also manufacturers, some of whom are based in Winnipeg, who would very much like to know under whose jurisdiction this matter will be dealt with.

Senator Fairbairn: I would imagine, Senator Spivak that, because of its very nature, there will be a cooperative effort on this matter, but the lead department will be the Department of International Trade.

MARITIME AND AERIAL SURVEILLANCE AND CONTROL— ENHANCEMENT OF ARTIC CAPABILITIES— GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Gerald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, I should like to quote from the 1993 Liberal Foreign Policy Handbook, which promised that:

A Liberal defence program will include a continued role in maritime and aerial surveillance and control, with particular emphasis on enhancing Arctic capabilities.

I have done some research, and I have been unable to find that any action has been taken to enhance Arctic research. As we know, and as was raised by my colleague the Honourable Senator Forrestall, there has even been a 15 per cent reduction in capability of the new search and rescue helicopters. Therefore, would the leader agree that her government's promise to enhance Arctic capabilities has been, in fact, another broken promise?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I certainly would not agree with the honourable senator. However, I will try to find some information for you on the status of that commitment.

HUMAN RIGHTS

IMPOSITION OF EMBARGOES AND SANCTIONS AGAINST TRANSGRESSOR COUNTRIES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. A. Raynell Andreychuk: Honourable senators, the government has indicated consistently that it is not in favour of either sanctions or embargoes against countries, since it does not wish to isolate them on matters of differences in policy. On October 17 of this year, we were informed by Senator Graham that Canada was not contemplating imposing an embargo on any country in the world at present. However, soon after, at the Commonwealth conference, we learned that the government was contemplating sanctions against one country, that being Nigeria.

• (1440)

Could the leader explain what processes or factors are now being considered when preparing a decision to impose an embargo against another country? Are there any other countries upon which the government is contemplating the imposition of sanctions or embargoes? What does the Minister of Foreign Affairs mean when he states that he is looking at this matter very carefully?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will be pleased to speak with my colleague the Minister of Foreign Affairs. As Senator Andreychuk will know, the country under consideration at the moment is Nigeria. The Canadian government is working not only within the Commonwealth but also the United Nations to find the best multilateral approach to dealing with the tragic and unacceptable situation which has developed in that country.

Senator Andreychuk: If the leader is bringing in an answer at a later date, perhaps she could also bring in the reply to the following: The Honourable Minister Ouellet stated on November 9 that the Liberal government ought not to isolate any person or any leader of any country or any government because we do not share their policies. However, he also stated that, in extreme cases, Canada could scale back development assistance to countries which persist in abusing the rights of its citizens. Do we need to wait until there is an execution before contemplating such matters, as in the case of Nigeria, or will the government begin its considerations once it becomes evident that there is persistent abuse?

In the case of Nigeria, for example, the rule of law was not present. Democratic principles were not present. The person in charge of the country was there by military means only. The repression and degradation of the people had existed for quite a considerable time. Is it only after an execution that Canada begins to consider scaling back its development assistance?

FISHERIES AND OCEANS

TIMELINESS OF ANNUAL DEPARTMENTAL REPORT— GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Roch Bolduc: My question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I received this morning the 1994-95 report of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

Is it normal for Parliament to receive a departmental report 18 months after the end of the fiscal year? In your opinion, did the minister responsible for this report follow up as he should have done?

[English]

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will certainly look into Senator Bolduc's question.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a response to a question raised in the Senate on May 11, 1995 by the Honourable Senator Prud'homme regarding lobbyists involved in the acquisition of submarines.

DEFENCE

REASONS FOR ACQUISITION OF UPHOLDER CLASS SUBMARINES—LOBBYISTS INVOLVED IN ACQUISITION— REQUEST FOR PARTICULARS

(Response to question raised by Hon. Marcel Prud'homme on May 11, 1995)

The proposal to acquire four Upholder class diesel-electric submarines from the United Kingdom in support of Canada's defence policy is currently being considered by the Government. It will take a decision on the merits of this proposal and in conjunction with the other defence-related proposals that it is currently assessing. It has communicated this position to the British government and will complete any negotiations that may be necessary if it decides to proceed with this project.

BILL CONCERNING KARLA HOMOLKA

POINT OF ORDER—SPEAKER'S RULING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I am prepared to give my ruling on the admissibility of Bill S-11, concerning Karla Homolka.

On Thursday, October 19, when the order for second reading of Bill S-11, an act concerning one Karla Homolka, was called, Senator Kinsella rose on a point of order. The purpose of his point of order was to object to proceeding with the bill because, in his view, the bill is not one that falls within the traditions, customs and rules of this house.

[Translation]

In stating his case, the senator explained that there are only two kinds of bills considered in our Parliament: these are either public or private bills. Assessing the nature and scope of Bill S-11, Senator Kinsella concluded that the bill is in the nature of a bill of attainder falling into a special category of public bill for which our practices do not provide.

[English]

To substantiate his position, Senator Kinsella referred to a ruling made by the Speaker of our House of Commons in May 1984 on a bill that had sought the execution of a specific criminal. The Speaker determined that the bill was unacceptable. Consequently, it is Senator Kinsella's opinion that:

...the matter contained in this bill is out of order and not properly before this chamber.

Speaking on behalf of the bill, Senator Cools pointed out that the bill is not, in fact, a bill of attainder but, rather, one of pains and penalties, and that our Parliament has the power to enact such bills. After describing the objective of such a bill to redress an injustice and impose a suitable penalty to a terrible crime when the courts have failed to exact one, Senator Cools went on to explain that Parliament and its individual houses have the power of judicature.

[Translation]

Senator Stewart then intervened to suggest that the procedural issue for the Speaker to resolve was whether there might be "any prohibition, as a matter of order, against this house, dealing with a bill which is, in effect, retroactive in a criminal matter."

[English]

I wish to express my appreciation to the honourable senators who participated in the discussion on this point of order. I have read the arguments that were made on October 19 and I have reviewed the authorities cited, as well as the precedent of 1984 that took place in the House of Commons. Before proceeding with my ruling, I wish to make it clear that I am not commenting in any way on the substance of the bill itself. My task is to answer the point of order raised about the procedure on the proceedings of the bill, not its content.

First, let me begin by saying that I agree with Senator Cools that Bill S-11 is of the nature of a bill of pains and penalties and not a bill of attainder. The distinction between the two, as I understand it, is that the penalty provided in the bill of attainder is execution, whereas a bill of pains and penalties inflicts a lesser punishment. Nonetheless, the special procedures that are traditionally used in the consideration of either a bill of attainder or a bill of pains and penalties are the same, and so the point of order raised by Senator Kinsella is not affected by this distinction.

The real issue to be decided is the objection of Senator Kinsella that Bill S-11 is a species of public bill that is not known to our practice. Aside from the precedent of 1984, when a member of the House of Commons sought to introduce a bill to secure the execution of Clifford Olson, I am not aware of any other similar bill of attainder or of pains and penalties presented to our Parliament for consideration. As Senator Kinsella pointed out, in 1984 the Speaker of the House of Commons ruled the bill out of order. In his decision, the Speaker noted that the procedure regarding bills of attainder or bills of pains and penalties had been obsolete in Britain for many years, and that "it has never existed in Canada."

In the absence of any precedents or of substantial evidence to the contrary, I feel bound to take note of the provisions of rule 1 of the Rules of the Senate, which stipulates:

In all cases not provided for in these rules, the customs, usages, forms and proceedings of either House of the Parliament of Canada shall...be followed...

Accordingly, I accept the decision that was made by the Speaker of the House of Commons in 1984 and rule that, for similar reasons, Bill S-11 is out of order. The order for the second reading of this bill should be discharged and the bill struck from the Order Paper.

In conclusion, I might add that there are other means available to Senator Cools to respond to public opinion brought to the senator's attention, and she may wish to consider them.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY CONFERENCE

NINETY-FOURTH CONFERENCE HELD IN BUCHAREST, ROMANIA

Hon. Peter Bosa rose pursuant to notice of Wednesday, November 8, 1995:

That he will draw the attention of the Senate to the 94th Inter-Parliamentary Conference, held in Bucharest, Romania, from October 7 to 14, 1995.

He said: Honourable senators, it is my privilege to present the report of the Ninety-fourth Inter-Parliamentary Conference held in Bucharest from October 7 to 14. I attended this conference in company with my distinguished colleagues Senators Bacon and Comeau, and with three other members of the House of Commons: Ms Sue Barnes, Ms Brenda Chamberlain and Mr. Derrick Wells.

Before speaking about the deliberations at the conference, I should like to mention a few points about our host country. Since 1989, Romania has made considerable progress in moving toward a more democratic and market-oriented system. The current government coalition of Prime Minister Nicolae Vacaroiu has been hampered by several votes of non-confidence which have delayed the passing of additional political and economic reforms. Much needed privatization is proceeding, though at a slow pace.

Canadian parliamentarians observed the elections in May of 1990 and in September of 1992. Bilateral trade and political consultations were held in November and December of 1992, and in May of 1994 a memorandum on economic cooperation between Canada and Romania was signed.

Romania is Canada's third largest trading partner in Eastern Europe, after Russia and Poland. In 1993, Canada-Romania two-way trade reached $85 million, and increased by 50 per cent in 1994. Since 1989, Canadian companies have invested over $60 million and set up over 400 joint ventures with Romania.

The Canadian Technical Assistance Program for Romania began in 1991. Since then, over $11 million has been disbursed or committed to some 50 projects. The program has budgeted expenditures of $3 million to $3.5 million for fiscal year 1994-95. Notable successes of the program include: the first full MBA course delivered in Eastern Europe, the first loan guarantee fund for small businesses established in Eastern Europe, and the first stock market entirely established by Canada.

The Cernavoda nuclear plant is Canada's largest capital project in the region. Since 1978, the plant has generated nearly $500-million worth of Canadian exports to Romania. Last year, AECL and the Romanian utility, RENEL, signed a five-year lease for heavy water.

Our visit to Romania enabled us to learn more about the transition process, and to see at first hand developments in Eastern Europe. October 1985 was a busy month for our Romanian hosts, since the week following our conference the Speaker of the Senate, the Honourable Gildas Molgat, participated in an official visit.

I turn now to the conference itself. At the outset, I should like to express our thanks and appreciation to the officials from Foreign Affairs and International Trade Canada, the Canadian International Development Agency, the Department of Justice and the Office of the Ethics Counsellor who briefed our delegation prior to our departure, as well as to the researchers in the Library of Parliament who provided background papers.

I would also pay tribute to the Canadian Ambassador, Mr. Gilles Duguay, and his colleagues for their assistance and support during the conference. At the beginning of our work, Mr. Duguay and other staff members provided a comprehensive and informative briefing on Romania. Our ambassador also hosted a reception during the conference at which we met some Romanian business people who were interested in Canada. Throughout the conference, Mr. Donald Banks, a counsellor, assisted the delegation. We want to express our thanks and appreciation for their hard work.

Before speaking about the topics on the agenda of the conference, I want to refer briefly to the work of the women parliamentarians at these inter-parliamentary conferences. During the 1985 IPU conference in Ottawa, a decision was made that the women delegates would meet prior to the opening session to discuss matters of mutual interest, as well as ways of increasing the participation of women parliamentarians within the union and its various activities.

As part of its ongoing work to correct the imbalances in the participation of men and women in political life, last year the union decided to review the IPU's statutes and rules to ensure that the vocabulary used could in no way be construed as suggesting the superiority of one sex over the other. This task was undertaken by a small working group composed of representatives from one country whose language is English, one country whose language is French, and two bilingual countries.

Canada agreed to be a member of this working group together with Cameroon, India and Egypt.

The Canadian group worked extensively on this subject and has submitted guidelines currently in use in Canada. In Bucharest, our colleague Senator Bacon was elected as chairperson of this working group. Throughout the week, she and Ms Barnes worked on a text that was presented to the Inter-Parliamentary Council. The adoption of the proposed text will take place at the next Inter-Parliamentary Conference in April 1996.

• (1500)

The first topic on the agenda of our conference was "Parliamentary action to fight corruption and the need for international commitments in this field." At this conference, we were using a new format whereby the debate on the specific subjects took place at committee meetings rather than in plenary. Accordingly, Ms Barnes spoke on this subject in the Committee on Parliamentary, Juridical and Human Rights Questions.

Fourteen countries, including Canada, submitted draft resolutions for consideration. Canada was one of 12 countries nominated to serve on a drafting committee. I am pleased to report that Ms Barnes was selected chairperson. Most of the Canadian draft resolution was included in the final text. I would like to report that there was considerable interest in the mechanisms developed by Canada to handle questions relating to codes of conduct and conflict of interest, both by other delegates and by the Romanian journalists.

The second topic on the agenda was "Strategies for effective implementation of national and international commitments adopted at the World Summit for Social Development in Copenhagen." Again, the debate occurred at a meeting of the Committee on Economic and Social Questions, where Ms Chamberlain presented a joint statement on behalf of herself and Mr. Wells. Canada was one of 19 countries that submitted a draft resolution for consideration.

At each conference, there is an opportunity to vote on a supplementary item to be included on the agenda. Subjects are selected because they are topical and of international concern. This is one activity where the IPU carries out valuable work. An examination of the voting patterns on those supplementary items is a useful guide in plotting shifts in parliamentary attitudes and, ultimately, policy decisions.

Following our last IPU conference, I reported on the voting patterns concerning the Iraqi proposal for a debate on lifting the economic sanctions imposed on that country. At seven of the past eight conferences, the Iraqi group has submitted this subject, and the Bucharest conference was no exception. However, the Iraqi group withdrew its proposal in favour of a proposal made by the Arab group for a debate on the status of the Holy City of Jerusalem.

On this occasion, there were seven proposals for the supplementary item, but several countries withdrew or combined their proposals. Votes were held on three subjects: the rights of minorities, Jerusalem, and nuclear tests. "To comprehensively ban nuclear weapons testing and halt all present nuclear weapons tests" was the subject selected as the supplementary item. Our colleague Senator Comeau represented Canada at these meetings and spoke about the need for parliamentarians to request strongly that a stop be put to nuclear testing.

There was also a plenary debate on "the general political, economic and social situation in the world." I used this opportunity to speak about land mines. On a couple of occasions this subject had been proposed as a supplementary item but had not been selected. This subject was especially timely, since the first formal review of the Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons was under way in Vienna. This meeting focused our attention on the gravity of the problem, and the thousands of innocent victims who die or are injured each year.

I would also like to mention the report of the IPU Committee on the Human Rights of Parliamentarians. As you are aware, the Canadian group has been very active in the work of this committee. Our colleague retired Senator Joan Neiman, who was instrumental in its establishment, was a member for a number of years. During the Bucharest conference, the violations of the rights of 69 members or former members of Parliament in 12 countries were brought to the attention of the delegates. The 69 cases involved one from Albania, one from Bulgaria, five from Burundi, six from Cambodia, six from Colombia, one from Honduras, one from Indonesia, two from Maldives, 17 from Myanmar, formerly Burma, seven from Nigeria, three from Togo and 19 from Turkey.

In conclusion, I want to speak briefly about the achievements of the Inter-Parliamentary Union. Sometimes we wonder whether the work at these conferences is significant and whether our participation is worthwhile. The response of our Romanian colleagues and their overwhelming enthusiasm for the support of the union during the transition from a communist state to a multi-party democracy reinforced my belief in the value of such international gatherings.

At the inaugural ceremony, the President of the Romanian Senate, Mr. Olivu Gherman, expressed his appreciation for the Inter-Parliamentary Union, noting that it was a "real school of modern democracy" for Romanian parliamentarians. He said:

Many of the steps forward made by the Parliament of Romania in the past few years are the fruit of our participation in IPU activities and a consequence of the constant support we have received.

This statement, made by a prominent Romanian parliamentarian of an emerging democracy, speaks volumes about the importance of the Inter-Parliamentary Union.

The Hon. the Speaker: If no other honourable senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

The Senate adjourned until Wednesday, November 29, 1995 at 1:30 p.m.

SENATOR'S STATEMENT

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

SCHEDULE OF WORK OF THE COMMITTEE— RESPONSE OF CHAIRMAN

Hon. Gérald-A. Beaudoin: Honourable senators, yesterday, in response to a question from Senator Jean-Robert Gauthier regarding the agenda of the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, I said that committee members were currently reviewing Bills C-45 and C-7. That is what has already been decided. We have a lot of work to do before the Christmas break. We have given priority to these two bills.

As for Bills C-22 and C-69, I wish to make a correction: These two bills are still in committee for the reasons stated yesterday, and a report is out of the question for now. As recently as last week, on Tuesday night, a majority of senators defeated a motion to report on Bill C-69 by November 23.

As for Bill C-22, the experts who came to testify have clearly established that the bill remains unconstitutional. In the absence of new amendment proposals from the government, the bill is still in committee.

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Michael Kirby, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, presented the following report:

Wednesday, November 29, 1995

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

TWENTY-FIFTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-102, An Act to amend the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff and to make related and consequential amendments to other Acts, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, November 2, 1995, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

MICHAEL KIRBY
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Kirby, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT BILL, 1995

NOTICE OF MOTION TO INSTRUCT LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL COMMITTEE TO TABLE FINAL REPORT

Hon. Sharon Carstairs: Honourable senators, pursuant to rule 58(1)(f), I give notice that on Thursday next, November 30, 1995, I will move:

That it be an instruction of this House to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs that no later than Monday, December 11, 1995 it present its final report to the Senate on the Message from the House of Commons, dated June 20, 1995 and on the motion of the Honourable Senator Graham dated June 28, 1995, regarding Bill C-69, An Act to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions and the readjustment of electoral boundaries, and

That in its report, the Committee recommend to the Senate that it not insist on its amendments to which the House of Commons has disagreed on June 20, 1995.

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. We voted on this subject last week. I believe that the rules forbid a vote on the same subject twice in a session.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I believe that there is a difference between this particular motion and the one of last week. I will attempt to ascertain that this is so, and I would ask that this matter be left until later this day so that I can compare it to the specific motion of last week. Is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

AUDITOR GENERAL ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-83, to amend the Auditor General Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Graham, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday, December 5, 1995.

BRITISH COLUMBIA TREATY COMMISSION BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-107, respecting the establishment of the British Columbia Treaty Commission.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Graham, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday, December 5, 1995.

CRIMINAL CODE

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

Hon. Anne C. Cools presented Bill S-13, to amend the Criminal Code of Canada (abuse of process).

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Cools, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday, December 5, 1995.

QUESTION PERIOD

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

CORNWALLIS PARK DEVELOPMENT AGENCY— SUPPORT FOR INVESTIGATION BY AUDITOR GENERAL INTO ALLEGATIONS OF MISMANAGEMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gerald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, as you may be aware, my colleague Senator Forrestall had written to the Auditor General requesting an investigation into the activities of the Cornwallis Park Development Agency. Given that serious questions have been raised about the management of the agency, or should I say the mismanagement of taxpayers' money at the agency, and the recent allegations regarding the removal of assets from the base, would the Leader of the Government in the Senate consider lending her support to my colleague in his request for an investigation?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would prefer to await the Auditor General's response to Senator Forrestall.

Senator Comeau: Honourable senators, given that there have been delays due to certain questions, given the urgency that this matter be resolved, and given the Prime Minister's promise during the last election that the base would not be closed, would the honourable leader not consider it timely that this investigation be conducted as quickly as possible so that the agency can get on with providing jobs for the people of this community who badly need jobs? By lending her support, I suggest that the investigation might be completed more quickly.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, as we discussed in Question Period a while back, there have been investigations through ACOA. I have a great deal of confidence in the Auditor General's position and judgment on issues of this nature. I would prefer to await his response to my colleague's request.

VISITORS IN THE GALLERY

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to draw your attention to some visitors in our gallery representing the Arab Canadian Women's Association of Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

POINTS OF ORDER

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before Orders of the Day are called, our rules provide that points of order can only be raised following Routine Proceedings. Nevertheless, the Speaker did accept that Senator Phillips raise a point of order and that Senator Carstairs reply to it during the proceedings.

However, we do not have a copy of Senator Carstairs' motion before us. Our objection is based only on what we have heard. We would want to discuss the point of order after we have seen the text of her motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I believe that copies are being made, and will be distributed.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Before you come to a decision, Your Honour, will you allow us to debate the point, at the appropriate time today or tomorrow, once we have had a chance to reflect on the significance of the motion?

The Hon. the Speaker: That is certainly in order. Normally we ask for opinions on points of order. When the Speaker has heard enough opinions, he can either rule or take the matter under advisement.

We had agreed that we would return to this matter later this day. Once the hard copy of the motion has been distributed, we will address the issue.

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON FARM SAFETY—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Ninth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry (special study of farm safety), tabled in the Senate on Friday, June 30, 1995.—(Honourable Senator Spivak).

Hon. Eric Arthur Berntson (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on this particular item I have consulted with both sides of the house. If no other senator wishes to speak on this order, we could consider it debated.

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): We are agreeable to that.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

FIREARMS BILL

INQUIRY

Hon. Anne C. Cools rose pursuant to notice of November 23, 1995:

That she will call the attention of the Senate to the speech that she had intended to give on Wednesday, November 22, 1995, during debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Beaudoin, seconded by the Honourable Senator Grimard, for the adoption of the sixteenth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs (Bill C-68, An act respecting firearms and other weapons, with amendments) presented in the Senate on Monday, November 20, 1995; the speech which she was unable to give due to time limitations imposed by the Senate Order concluding debate by 5:15 p.m. and votes at 5:30 p.m. on Wednesday, November 22, 1995.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, before Senator Cools proceeds with this inquiry, I should like to put a statement on the record.

I am somewhat troubled by the terms used by the honourable senator in stating her inquiry. The notice makes it explicitly clear that the speech which the senator intends to make was originally to be given as part of the debate on the consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs respecting Bill C-68. By order of the Senate, debate on this report and the third reading of the bill concluded last Wednesday, and the matter has been decided by a vote of the Senate.

My reservations about the terms of this inquiry stem mainly from the long established practice mentioned in Beauchesne 6th Edition, at citations 479, 480(1) and (2). The citations make it clear that:

479. A Member may not speak against or reflect upon any determination of the House, unless intending to conclude with a motion for rescinding it.

Then 480(1) says, in part:

...Members...cannot revive a debate already concluded...

nor should they refer to debates of the current session —

...even if such reference is relevant, as it tends to reopen matters already decided.

At the same time, I do not wish to unduly restrict the senator from raising a matter which is important to her. I would suggest, therefore, if the senator is agreeable, that she reconsider her notice of inquiry and rephrase it in more general terms so as to minimize any specific reference to the proceedings on Bill C-68.

Senator Cools: Honourable senators, I would be happy to rephrase the inquiry. However, it was my clear understanding that inquiries request no conclusion of the Senate; they are largely instruments of exchange. Perhaps His Honour can suggest for me a better articulation?

The Hon. the Speaker: I am afraid I could not do that now, but I would be prepared to discuss the matter with the honourable senator outside of the chamber.

The facts are that even an inquiry would be resuming debate on an issue which has already been settled, and that is against the rules.

Senator Cools: In any event, as I said before, if it is the wish of the chamber that I rearticulate the inquiry, I will do that.

Senator Kinsella: Let us hear your speech.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable Senator Cools, if you are asking leave of the Senate to proceed in this way, of course, any senator can do that. That is not for me to decide.

Are you asking for leave to proceed with the order as it is structured?

Senator Cools: Yes.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Cools: Honourable senators, as I was about to say, the intention of my inquiry today is to call attention to what I had intended to say last week.

Honourable senators, spousal violence is an age-old problem. Men and women connected by sexual relationships, upon the breakdown of those relationships, are known to inflict hurt on each other. Some even kill one another. Folk music is dotted with examples. The famous folk song "Frankie and Johnny" relates an experience of lovers and of lethal violence.

Frankie and Johnny were lovers,
Oh, Lordy, how they could love.
They swore to be true to each other...

Johnny went by, 'bout an hour ago,
With a girl named Nellie Blye...

Frankie got out at South Clark Street,
Looked in a window so high
Saw her Johnny man a-lovin' up
That high brown Nellie Blye...

But Frankie took aim with her pistol
And the gun went root-a-toot-toot.
He was her man, but he done her wrong.

She, Frankie, shot Johnny dead.

Honourable senators, the Minister of Justice, the Honourable Allan Rock, holds that spousal and domestic violence is a major reason for this initiative, Bill C-68. Mr. Rock told the Ontario Women's Liberal Commission on April 12, 1995:

There are women who are at risk in their homes and police didn't have the information or the tools to protect them.

On other occasions, he has maintained that the firearms issue is a women's issue. The Honourable Sheila Finestone, Secretary of State for the Status of Women, agreed. In a news release of December 6, 1994, Mrs. Finestone stated:

Firearms control is a life-and-death issue for women in Canada.

Feminist groups repeatedly told the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs that women live in a constant state of threat and fear of death inflicted by men with firearms in their homes, and that children live in a constant state of threat and fear of death inflicted by men with firearms in their homes.

Honourable senators, domestic violence is insufficiently understood. We are just now beginning to gain some comprehension of the terrible tragedy of spousal violence. Comprehension is also required of feminine aggression.

Family violence is deeply troubling. My life's work has been in the area of spousal and family violence. In many relationships, there are tangles of pathologies, coercive patterns and numerous dynamics which reinforce one another.

Many gender feminists interchange the term "domestic violence" with "domestic homicide." This is not a true picture. Most spousal violence will never reach the state of spousal killing. The essential element that must be present if spousal conflict is to become spousal homicide is murderous intent. I have seen several relationships where murderous intent was present. Often, couples do not recognize its presence, and have no insight into its workings. Murderous intent is the key element. When present, there is a probability that the situation could escalate to spousal killing, but spousal abuse has no escalating spectrum. A spousal slap does not inevitably become a spousal homicide.

• (1400)

Common spousal abuse is a different social problem from spousal homicide. Spousal homicide remains a largely misunderstood and tragic social program. Some bold initiatives are required to probe the darkness that lurks in violence, sexual interaction and impulses to hurt and to kill.

Honourable senators, I am disquieted that much testimony before the Senate committee was either incorrect, inadequate, misstated, manipulated, exaggerated or loaded as a gender issue. Some confounded the issues. Their techniques include playing with percentages and combining the unrelated, and are obvious to those knowledgeable in the field.

Honourable senators, various feminist groups appeared before the committee to support Bill C-68. Ms Arlene Chapman of the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters insisted that:

Almost half of the women killed by their husbands are shot.

Ms Jill Hightower of the B.C. Institute on Family Violence stated that:

Front-line transition house staff report that women are frequently threatened by their partners, and many of these threats involve firearms.

Ms Virginia Fisher of the Provincial Association of Transition Houses Saskatchewan said that "...46 per cent of women killed by their husbands are killed with guns" and that, "There are 50,000 women living in households with guns who feel their lives to be in danger."

When asked about the number of women served by them who have been killed by husbands using firearms, they declined to give numbers, stating such reasons as, "I do not have that figure off the top of my head" or "We do not have funding to do follow-up work on what happens to women after they leave the shelter." These individuals never supply hard, precise or accurate data to support their assertions because supporting data does not exist.

Further, most of these individuals know little about spousal homicide. Spousal homicide is a terrible occurrence, the understanding and treatment of which eludes most agencies and helping professionals. Moreover, the data collection mechanism at many shelters is indeed questionable, since many shelters view data collection and research compilation as male-dominated preoccupations. Many gender feminists are resistant to scientific inquiry and investigation. Moreover, imagination and fantasy have resulted in profit and lucrativeness, rather than reason.

Some gender feminists told the Senate committee that children are at risk of abuse with firearms in the home. I note that among the numerous witnesses before the committee, there was not one witness from child protection agencies or children's aid societies. I spoke to child protection agency officials in Toronto. Metro Toronto's Children's Aid Society, the largest children's aid society in Canada, informed me that they have no concern that children in Metro Toronto are at risk of abuse with firearms in the home. I spoke to executive director Bruce Rivers. If children were at risk, child protection agencies would have been active in appearing before the Senate committee.

I also observed that not a single witness appeared from community crime prevention agencies in Toronto, and I also note that not one witness was black. The illicit use of firearms by certain black criminals in Toronto is commanding attention and intervention.

The frolics and caprices with data and statistics were revealed when one particular witness, Dr. Katherine Leonard, gave testimony stretching credulity and scientific inquiry. On conclusion of her testimony, another witness, Dr. Judith Ross, herself a psychologist and a target shooter, overheard Dr. Leonard say to someone, "How did you like the science fiction?" Dr. Ross, on September 27, 1995, wrote to me as follows:

I find it appalling and disgraceful that a witness at a Senate committee would knowingly present material that was a fiction cloaked in a pretence of scientific validity.

I read Dr. Leonard's testimony. I pondered about the reliance on such testimony by any minister of the Crown.

Honourable senators, certain gender feminists insist that firearms are a gender issue; that firearms are a vehicle for male violence and aggression. Central to the belief system of radical gender feminism is the maxim that firearms constitute the phallic symbol of male violence, and are symbols of the patriarchal society. In a patriarchal and heterosexist society, the allowance of guns is a sign of misogyny.

Honourable senators, this is patriarchal nonsense; it is patriarchal rubbish, and supports the notion that women should live in fear and trembling, not only of men but of men's instruments — guns. Needless to say, they view heterosexuality as an oppressive state for women.

Gender feminist theory is an example of intellectual fraudulence and is a theory based on philogyny, tribadism and misandry. This theory currently stalks the social and political life of this country. It is predatory, and seeks to dominate and terrorize. It is a personality disorder in the body politic of this nation.

During the Senate committee hearings on Bill C-68, the Manitoba Attorney General, the Honourable Rosemary Vodrey, testified. I asked her:

I should just like to know how many wives were killed by husbands in your province last year by firearms, and how many children in your province alone?

She replied:

I can just tell you women on homicides by firearms. I gather the figure is zero.

Ms Vodrey gave more detail. She said:

The statistics I have are for 1994, and they relate to deaths due to domestic violence: Three by stabbing; three by strangulation; two by beating; one by asphyxiation; none by firearms.

Honourable senators, it is no simple task to identify the actual and precise number of women killed by spouses using firearms. I have studied this question using Statistics Canada's published data on homicides. In 1994, the actual number of women killed with firearms by conjugal intimates was 23. I repeat: The precise number of women killed by spouses using firearms was 23.

Statistics Canada defines "conjugal intimates" as including spouses — legal, common-law, separated, divorced — boyfriends, extramarital lovers or estranged lovers. Neither feminist groups nor the Minister of Justice have placed the number of 23 on the table in this debate. I am unsympathetic to the act of toying with or exaggerating the true numbers.

Please be clear that Minister Vodrey's answer that no woman in her province had been killed by the use of a firearm in a conjugal-intimate relationship in 1994 surprised the committee.

In 1994, the actual number of children under the age of 12 years killed with firearms by a parent was two. The favoured weapon of murder in Canada is bare hands and feet — the human body. For example, in 1994, 27 babies under 12 months of age were killed, most with bare hands. In 1994, the total number of homicides was 596, of which 196 were by the use of firearms. Of these 196 with firearms, 157 of the victims were men and 39 were women. Consistently, more men are killed with firearms than women; in fact, four times as many. The tragedy of domestic homicide is too horrific to be trivialized by numerical manipulation.

Honourable senators, in the murders of three teenaged girls in Toronto, Karla Homolka and Paul Bernardo used their hands, the favoured weapon of murder. The brutal absurdity of this discussion was made manifest at the Homolka trial. The Crown and the judge significantly forgave Ms Homolka in relation to two murders, and totally forgave her in relation to her sister's murder, and gave her a 12-year sentence. As part of her 12-year sentence for killing with her hands, Mr. Justice Kovacs imposed an order prohibiting Homolka from possessing a firearm.

Honourable senators, time does not permit me to speak to the extraordinary measures of this bill. Millions of men and women in this country come from cultural backgrounds of hunting, target practice, marksmanship and precision shooting. This heritage of marksmanship is a Canadian phenomenon. Young people learned from their parents how to shoot as part of their heritage. Canada's World War I hero, Billy Bishop, learned to shoot as a boy in Owen Sound, Ontario, with a rifle given to him for Christmas by his father. It is a similar situation for young women. Linda Thom, at age 8, learned to shoot with her father. She won a gold medal in the 1984 Olympic Games. In gun sports, men and women compete as equals. There is even a group of women shooters called the "Gun Grannies."

Canada's heritage of marksmanship and mastery of the instruments of force is legendary. In 1914 and in 1939, the Canadian military met its responsibility. The marksmanship training of many Canadians by various rifle and gun associations assisted Canada's wartime efforts. A proud example is the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association, founded in 1868, which has trained generations of Canadians in the responsible use and care of firearms. Canadians consistently win international competitions.

Those who engage in the recreational and economic use of firearms are persons who are law-abiding citizens, who abhor the illegal and illicit use of firearms. They see that crime and the illegal use of firearms bedevils Canada's big cities, especially Toronto. In Toronto, aggressive and successful initiatives are required in the area of crime prevention, including initiatives in law enforcement, criminal judicial processes, plea bargaining, sentencing and, most important, in race relations, to solve Toronto's enormous crime problems.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable Senator Cools, I am sorry to interrupt, but your time has expired.

Senator Cools: Honourable senators, I need exactly one minute or so to complete my remarks. I would be happy to have leave to continue.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Cools: These law-abiding citizens feel violated when they are likened to criminals because of the mere possession of their firearms or, worse, they are criminalized. Moreover, they resist the persistent invasiveness of governments into their lives. In fact, they view the government's initiative, Bill C-68, as creating a thought process which some will promote as the new Canadian morality: to wit, firearms are inherently evil and so are their owners.

I note how conveniently this concept falls into the gender feminists' maxim that men are harmful to women, and that all firearms are symptomatic of this harmfulness and should be discouraged and, ultimately, destroyed. Legitimate gun owners believe that when firearms are outlawed by governments, only outlaws will have firearms.

Honourable senators, gender feminist theory based on the innate evil of men and the innate virtue of women is seriously flawed. Social policy based on flawed theory is flawed social policy. Legislation based on flawed social policy is flawed legislation.

The Minister of Justice as a minister of the Crown, is no ordinary minister. This minister has a duty to be less worldly and less obviously political than other ministers. The Minister of Justice also has a duty to find accommodation among disparate interests.

Honourable senators, I am a senator from Ontario, the former Upper Canada. In the early 1800s in Upper Canada, there was something that was locally known as "stump law." Stump law was legislation passed by the then Tory government as a compound of arrogance and force. Liberal reformer members like Dr. William Baldwin were brutalized by the use of such legislative power. Bill C-68 is reminiscent of old Upper Canadian stump law.

I hope my Inuit colleagues, Senators Willie Adams and Charlie Watt, are not too damaged. I hope my support of their just cause has brought them a measure of comfort.

The proposition that Bill C-68 addresses the problem of domestic violence, that it is a bill to protect women, is not supported by the information put before the Senate. The premise and foundation for Bill C-68, we are told, is the good of women. Those who attempt to demonstrate this do so insufficiently. In fact, the research points in a different direction.

Honourable senators, I reject the premise that firearms ownership and use is a women's issue. This bill is begging for amendment. Since my side will accept no amendments, I am prepared to support the amendments to Bill C-68 as put forward in the committee's report, and by Senator Sparrow.

Honourable senators, that was the speech I had prepared and was quite ready, willing and able to deliver last week. I thank you for your indulgence, and for the opportunity to have made my speech. For myself, I would have found it somewhat discomfiting and a little disquieting not to have had the opportunity to give my speech, to the extent that I had put time and trouble into composing it.

I should also like to say, honourable senators, that I look forward to an opportunity when I can rise and speak uninterrupted in the Senate. It seems to be a very difficult proposition for me to do so in this chamber.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT BILL, 1995

NOTICE OF MOTION TO INSTRUCT LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE TO TABLE FINAL REPORT—POINT OF ORDER

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, before we proceed to the adjournment motion, which is the next item, I am prepared to consider any advice that honourable senators can give me considering the point of order raised by the Honourable Senator Phillips on the motion proposed by the Honourable Senator Carstairs.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we have a number of valid objections to this motion being placed on the Order Paper. First, Senator Carstairs introduced it under the rubric "Government Notices of Motion." If we have any respect for the rules, it is that we follow in order, and respect the significance of the headings within Routine Proceedings. The only senators who can introduce motions under the rubric "Government Notices of Motion" are the Leader of the Government in the Senate, the Deputy Leader of the Government, or one of their designated replacements whose name is known to the Senate before proceedings begin. For that reason alone, I urge the Speaker to declare this motion out of order.

It may seem a trivial, technical argument, but the success of our deliberations is impossible without a respect for the rules. If this motion is accepted then it means that, at any time, any honourable senator can get up under any chapter heading and suggest anything that he or she wants.

I support the point of order on the fact that the notice of motion was presented under the wrong chapter heading, and consequently, the rules were not respected. I urge His Honour to rule with that in mind.

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, I wish to follow through on what Senator Lynch-Staunton has said, while not wishing to detract from the points he has made, which I think are sufficient to dispose of the matter at this point. However, should His Honour wish to hear some arguments concerning the propriety of the order, and whether or not there is any respectful order in the motion brought forward by Senator Carstairs, I wish to draw the attention of honourable senators to rule 63 of the Rules of the Senate. Rule 63(1) provides:

A motion shall not be made which is the same in substance as any question which, during the same session, has been resolved in the affirmative or negative, unless the order, resolution, or other decision on such question has been rescinded as hereinafter provided.

Honourable senators, what follows next is very telling. Rule 63(2) says, in effect, that yes, a chamber may rescind a decision that it had taken previously, but the test that must be met to do the extraordinary — that is, to rescind a decision that had already been taken — requires at least two-thirds of the senators present to vote in favour of the decision to rescind a motion that had been previously passed.

The rule I just read is not arbitrary. It speaks directly to the question of the sanctity of a deliberate decision of the chamber. That decision, once taken within a Parliament, cannot be rescinded arbitrarily, or on a whim. It requires that a very heavy test be met. Two-thirds of the senators present must agree to rescind.

This speaks a bit to the extraordinary argument made by the leader of the Reform Party in the other place during the referendum last October. He argued that all you needed was 50 per cent plus one to break up the country. What an extraordinary, distorted view of democracy and the sanctity of the parliamentary system. It operates on deliberation in the ordinary course of events, such as we have here where the decision was made. However, if you are then to rescind or do something extraordinary, you must meet a much more serious test.

If the government side is serious about proposing that this chamber rescind a decision that it had already taken, then the test that is provided for in rule 63(2) comes into play.

No doubt His Honour will take guidance from the procedural literature. Erskine May, at page 326, speaks to matters already decided during the same session and to the fact that a motion or an amendment, which is the same in substance as a question which has been decided during a session, may not be brought forward again during the same session. The same position is articulated in Beauchesne at page 172, paragraph 558. On page 178, there is another reference.

This is a serious matter, as I have attempted to underscore. The procedural literature on this matter leans to the side of caution on this matter, to not allowing this motion. There is not much of a question to be explicated or explored in terms of whether or not the substance of this motion is substantially the same or different from that which was decided by the house a few days ago. I think it is a prima facie case, and that it is the same, by the plain language in which the motion is couched.

I urge His Honour to accept the point of order that has been raised, and to rule this motion out of order.

Hon. Sharon Carstairs: Honourable senators, I wish to address the three issues raised by the honourable senators on the other side.

First, Senator Lynch-Staunton raised the question of whether a member other than the leader or deputy leader could indeed introduce such a motion under Government Motions. It is very clear that I am a government member of this chamber.

Senator Berntson: You are a supporter, not a member.

Senator Carstairs: In addition, I have been the sponsor of Bill C-69 and first addressed it in this chamber at second reading.

Second, I would argue that this motion is, indeed, substantially different because, in its second paragraph, it orders the committee to report back without amendments. That is very different from the original motion proposed earlier in this chamber.

Third, it is clear that rule 63(1) and (2), which I have read carefully, refer to substantive motions. This is a procedural motion, clearly, asking for a committee of this chamber to report. It does not, quite frankly, affect anything of a substantive nature, other than the report of a committee. It is procedural in the same way that a motion to adjourn is procedural, and that can be done every single day in this chamber.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I checked the original motion in the Debates of the Senate. The only difference in the wording is that it states that the committee will report no later than Monday, December 11. Everything else in that part of the motion is identical to the one we voted on last Tuesday.

Senator Carstairs has stated that this motion gives instruction to the committee. I question whether the Senate has the authority to direct the committee on how it should report.

In making your decision, Your Honour, I ask you to look up a decision made by His Honour Jean-Paul Deschatelets. I remember well that decision because I moved the motion, and it was seconded by the Honourable Senator Grosart. His ruling is to the effect that the Senate cannot instruct a committee.

This is an instruction to the committee. What would be the purpose of having a committee do a study if a motion by an individual senator, who may or may not be a member of that committee, can instruct the committee what to write? Therefore, it is completely against our normal procedure.

Our committee reports are made up by the members of the committee in committee sessions, not in this chamber. They report to the chamber. The chamber does not instruct the committee what to report.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I had not planned to intervene on this discussion, but a point just made by Senator Phillips seems to me to be so wrong that one feels compelled to rise to refute it.

Senator Phillips is advancing the proposition that the Senate, once having referred a matter to a committee, abandons any right to attempt to retrieve that matter.

Senator Murray: No, he is referring to the content, to the second part of the motion.

Senator Olson: That is why Senator Phillips is wrong.

An Hon. Senator: Pay attention!

Senator Stewart: There are two things running together here. One relates to the view, implied by Senator Phillips today and put forward previously by Senator Beaudoin, that a committee, having decided that the content of a bill is unconstitutional, has the right to pigeon-hole that bill. That device used to be used — perhaps is still used — in Washington, D.C., and it is deplored by all so-called parliamentarians. I hope that we will not go that route.

• (1430)

Surely when the Senate has ordered a committee to examine a bill that the Senate wishes to amend, the Senate can follow the practice which is used continuously at Westminster, and even in Ottawa; that being rather than attempting to change the bill at third reading, instructing the committee to make that change.

I do not remember the precedent to which Senator Phillips has referred, but if there is such a precedent, we should not follow it because it will take us down a path which I think is procedurally quite dangerous.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, what follows may not help Your Honour reach a resolution of this matter, but I cannot help but comment on the statement that Senator Stewart has made objecting to the idea that a committee could, as he put it, “pigeon-hole” a bill.

In a previous Parliament, there was at least one example that springs readily to mind in which a committee pigeon-holed a bill for far less substantive reasons than that it posed constitutional problems. The bill had been passed by the House of Commons and related solely to that body in that it dealt with the pay and perks of committee chairmen. It came to this chamber, was sent to committee and when I, in my usual mild way, protested about the lack of progress by the committee, I was told, plain and plumb by the then Leader of the Opposition, Senator MacEachen, that I would not see that bill again at any time, that it would stay in committee because the opposition objected to its content.

As I say, that is no help to Your Honour in reaching your decision on this matter, but I thought I should place it on the record lest Senator Stewart's version of what the proprieties are go unchallenged.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I must say that it is surprising to discover that one statement by Senator MacEachen is sufficient to make Senator Murray change his mind.

Senator Doody: They are both Cape Bretoners, you know!

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I am sure that Senator Carstairs is not the only one who aspires to being Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Senator Kinsella: It is that obvious.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: To declare that she is a representative of the government is, unfortunately, not recognized by our rules. She is a supporter of the government. There is only one representative of the Government of Canada in this chamber, and she happens to be the Leader of the Government in the Senate. There is no other representative of the government in this chamber. There are many who aspire to becoming so.

Senator Phillips: Watch your back, Senator Fairbairn!

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Only the Leader of the Government, or her delegate in her absence and in the absence of the deputy leader, can move under the rubric "Government Notices of Motions."

Second, to have the gall not only to ask the committee to report, but also to instruct it what to report, demeans the whole committee system of the Senate.

Senator Stewart: That is the substance of the motion now.

Senator Berntson: They are just puppets!

Senator Lynch-Staunton: If the report is unacceptable when it comes to the chamber, it can be amended. However, if we tell the committee ahead of time, "This is what we want you to say," we might as well look again at the value of the committee system. Presently, in our eyes, it is such that we have a lot of respect for it. That is another reason why we feel this motion should be declared out of order.

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there may well be a valid point with respect to the point that the Leader of the Opposition has raised with regard to the individual senator who put forth this motion. That is a matter of judgment and certainly one, I believe, of flexibility in this chamber, given the way we have operated.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: No. It is a rule.

Senator Graham: Both sides of the house have allowed debates to proceed. We have reverted to previous orders on the Order Paper with unanimous consent. It might very well be that, if His Honour ruled in favour of the point raised by the Leader of the Opposition — that it was out of order for Senator Carstairs to give a notice of motion on behalf of the government, even though she was the sponsor of the bill — we could ask for permission for leave to revert so the Honourable Leader of the Government or the deputy leader could put the motion.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: That's right.

Senator Graham: In considering your decision and possible precedents, Your Honour, I ask you to note that on September 3, 1987, there was a motion in amendment concerning Bill C-22. We all remember, those of us who were here, the drug patent legislation. That motion dealt with an instruction to a committee and was defeated. I refer honourable senators to page 1801 of the Debates of the Senate, September 3, 1987.

As well, honourable senators, on September 15, 1987, another motion was moved on the same bill. Even though objections were raised that the Senate had made a decision several days earlier, it was put to a vote because it was different. It was more limited in scope than the earlier motion.

Senator Berntson: This one is not.

Senator Graham: Indeed, honourable senators, this motion is more substantive and expansive.

Senator Doody: It is totally procedural.

Senator Graham: It is more substantive and certainly different from the original motion.

Senator Berntson: It is identical.

Senator Graham: I submit, honourable senators, that the motion is in order.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Honourable senators, I should like to make a clarification on our concern with respect to the rules. The tabling of documents cannot take place under "Introduction and First Reading of Government Bills." The first reading of Commons public bills cannot take place under "Inquiries." Petitions cannot be introduced under "Delayed Answers." We have a set, standard form of proceeding prior to the Orders of the Day. That must be respected. If an honourable senator can rise under Government Notices of Motions and move any type of motion, that interpretation of the rules would mean, then, that under "Introduction and First Reading of Government Bills," I can present a petition.

Senator Doody: Anarchy.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: The least we can ask is a respect for Routine Proceedings, which is a tradition in Parliament. The Rules of the Senate must be respected.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, this bill is a never-ending story. We know that the longer we wait, the greater the administrative nightmare will be during the next federal elections. The Chief Electoral Officer has said that waffling between two pieces of legislation was quite unacceptable if we really want to have an election system which is the envy of the whole world.

Your Honour, I do not understand the motion. You will explain it in your ruling, which will undoubtedly be very wise, and I will abide by your ruling.

I do not understand how we can tell a committee what it is supposed to report. Each political party, be it Conservative or Liberal, can give its members on the committee instructions regarding policy. Should the motion be adopted, the committee will report on its conclusions. Even though I do not sit on any committee, I always attend the meetings of some committees, including this one. I would find it absurd to be given prior instructions, to be told what to do at a committee meeting.

In its wisdom, the Senate has delegated its authority to a Senate committee. It is up to the committee to decide what it wants to report to the Senate.

I am trying to understand the logic of a Senate commission at this time. Why should we have a Senate committee if it is told ahead of time what its conclusions should be?

We understand the politics behind this motion. I sympathize with members of Parliament who say they are losing their riding; others claim that this piece of legislation is not the business of the Senate.

I did not get involved last time, but I can tell you that if this bill is again referred to the Senate, I will take part in the debate. I find it ludicrous for members of Parliament to hold such views about the senator who, after all, have a constitutional right.

When I was a member of the House of Commons, I used to defend the Senate, even before I knew I might be appointed here. There have been some very acrimonious debates between the Senate and the House. I submit, honourable senators, that this motion is quite out of order.

The Hon. the Speaker: I find you are speaking to the content of the bill and not to the point of order that was raised.

Senator Prud'homme: With regard to these few considerations, honourable senators, I submit that the question has been debated during this session. A decision has been made, and a vote has been taken. According to old British traditions, once a matter has been resolved, it cannot be raised over and over again until one catches people at fault because they are not present in the Senate. The question was examined at length and a vote was duly taken on it.

Unfortunately, it is true that, for all sorts of reasons, some senators were not present at the time of the vote.

We can only wait until the next session of Parliament to study another bill.

Meanwhile, I think that we would place the Chair in an awkward position if we were to ask for reconsideration of an issue which has been decided upon.

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, in a moment I will ask leave to revert to Government Notices of Motion —

Senator Berntson: Do not embarrass yourself!

Senator Phillips: Forget it!

Senator Graham: — so that the notice of motion can be properly given.

Senator Doody: So you concede that it has been improperly given?

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, may I then have leave to revert to Government Notices of Motion?

The Hon. the Speaker: I regret that I cannot entertain the request at this time. There is a point of order before the Senate on that matter, and I must first deal with that point of order.

Are there any other senators who wish to speak to the point of order? If no other senator wishes to speak, I wish to look more closely at the references which have been made to parliamentary authorities and precedents both in the other house and here. I will take the matter under advisement.

Senator Murray: I take it that when Senator Graham intended to ask for leave, he was conceding the first part of Senator Lynch-Staunton's point of order?

The Hon. the Speaker: I did not hear the comments.

Senator Carstairs: Honourable senators, there appears to be some concern that I introduced this matter under the wrong heading. For that, I apologize. That was the information I was given as to the appropriate timing. In order to facilitate the proper reintroduction of the motion by the deputy leader, I will withdraw my motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: I regret that the motion cannot be withdrawn.

Senator Prud'homme: It is not our decision.

SENATOR'S STATEMENT

MEMBER OF THE GOVERNMENT

DEFINITION

Hon. Sharon Carstairs: Honourable senators, yesterday I was somewhat surprised at the offence taken by Senator Lynch-Staunton to my use of the term "government member." Because I love words and their very usage, last evening I had a wonderful time reviewing old political science texts and dictionaries to refamiliarize myself with the definitions of these words. My study confirmed that the terms are indeed used in a variety of ways.

First, my study told me that the word "government" can be used in a generic manner to refer to a kind of government. For example, it could be a democratic government, a presidential style of government, a parliamentary system of government, or a republican form of government. Thus, we have the generic use of the word.

The second reference I found said that the word "government" refers to a collection of individuals, elected or appointed, who have the majority of seats in a parliament or legislature. They gather together into a caucus for the purpose of discussion and development, and support the initiatives of the executive branch. I found references to such terms as "government members," "government backbenchers," and "the government side of the chamber." The counterparts, of course, to those expressions were "opposition members" or "the opposition side of the chamber." Sometimes I found references to third parties, fourth parties, and even fifth parties, depending on the distribution of seats, and also the term "independent member".

"Government" can obviously mean a member of a legislative body that supports the government or one who is a member of the governing party, and that was the context in which I referred to myself yesterday.

The third definition of "government," and the narrowest one of all, is in the Canadian concept which refers to the executive branch of our system, the cabinet. These are the individuals assigned specific executive authority and administrative functions. The government in this sense is ably represented in this house by Senator Fairbairn who, as Leader of the Government in the Senate, also has responsibility for literacy. Her title is an interesting one. As Leader of the Government in the Senate, she leads government members, of which I am proud to be one. Perhaps Senator Lynch-Staunton thinks she leads all of us, but I think he perhaps would not accept that suggestion.

Senator Lynch-Staunton may not use the term "government member" to refer to a member of Parliament who is not in the cabinet. However, let me assure him that it is used often — and frequently in my Province of Manitoba — by government members, opposition members, and members of the media.

If Senator Lynch-Staunton could refer me to the correct usage of the term "government" in this chamber, I would appreciate it. I am deeply committed to the principle of life-long learning, and I always welcome an opportunity to expand my knowledge.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT BILL, 1995

NOTICE OF MOTION TO INSTRUCT COMMITTEE
ON LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS TO TABLE FINAL REPORT—POINT OF ORDER

On the Order:

That it be an instruction of this House to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs that no later than Monday, December 11, 1995, it present its final report to the Senate on the Message from the House of Commons, dated June 20, 1995, and on the motion of the Honourable Senator Graham dated June 28, 1995, regarding Bill C-69, An Act to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions and the readjustment of electoral boundaries.

That in its report, the Committee recommend to the Senate that it not insist on its amendments to which the House of Commons disagreed on June 20, 1995. —
(Speaker's Ruling)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, under this item, "Government Notices of Motions," yesterday a point of order was raised on a motion by Honourable Senator Carstairs. I am ready with the ruling, but there is the matter of having it typed up and translated. I would ask that I be allowed to bring this matter back later this day, provided I get my typewritten and translated report on time.

Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed

NATIONAL UNITY

INDIAN AFFAIRS—DOCUMENT ON POST-REFERENDUM POLICY PURPORTEDLY PREPARED BY OFFICIAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and relates to an article in yesterday's Globe and Mail, concerning a document that supposedly was leaked from the Department of Indian Affairs. On the one hand, I guess it is not surprising to read something along the lines of what is stated in that leaked document. Is this document a true representation of the views of the administration of the government? Further, does the document come from the administrative level or from the political level of the government?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I assume that my honourable friend is referring to the article concerning the Department of Indian Affairs and post-referendum policy. I can say most categorically that that document does not come from the political level. It was a highly speculative piece of paper put together by someone in that department, and had nothing to do with the minister or anyone at the political level. Indeed, I would say its contents were not only naive, but very disrespectful of aboriginal peoples.

PRESENCE OF ABORIGINAL PEOPLES AT QUEBEC ROUND—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators, will the aboriginal peoples of this country be involved in the next round of discussions between the Government of Canada and the provincial governments with respect to the distinct society provisions and the veto put forward by the Prime Minister as an offer to the government of Quebec?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the measures currently before the House of Commons are purely legislative in nature. They reflect the commitment or the intent of the Government of Canada to act in a certain manner in relation to the possibility, if any, in the years leading up to 1997, of dealing with the veto and also the commitment of recognizing the reality of Quebec.

Aboriginal peoples are fully protected under section 35 of the Constitution. Absolutely nothing in the two measures currently before the House of Commons in any way infringes or derogates from any of the rights or obligations under the Constitution for aboriginal peoples, including their claims, and the government's commitment within section 35, for recognition of their inherent rights.

Senator Watt: I take it, then, that aboriginal peoples will be invited to the Quebec round of discussions, as opposed to being left out and dealt with separately?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, the only discussions contemplated in the area of constitutional change will be in 1997 when the Constitution itself says that the amending formula, currently in the Constitution, is up for review and discussion.

However, at this point in time, the only thing being dealt with is what is currently before the House of Commons. As I understand it, this is not a question of engaging in a round of discussion or negotiation.

Senator Watt: Honourable senators, I realize what the Prime Minister is attempting to do. I also understand the reply of the honourable leader to my questions. Nevertheless, even though the proposals from the Prime Minister are merely legislative initiatives, they certainly have a constitutional impact.

My question is this: Even though the Constitution itself is not being dealt with in the Quebec round of discussions leading up to Canadian unity, and even though this is a legislative measure, will aboriginal peoples be involved in these discussions in the future?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, when those negotiations and discussions do take place in the future — although certainly not at this point in time — aboriginal peoples will have a role to play. I am certainly supportive of that.

Senator Watt: It worries me when the honourable leader says "not at this time." Why can these discussions not take place at this time? Why is it that aboriginal peoples must take a back seat when dealing with the question of unity?

Aboriginal peoples are the basis of this country. The federal government should recognize the aboriginal peoples of this country once and for all, rather than merely referring to only two founding nations. For that reason, aboriginal peoples must be involved in this process.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: The government takes you for granted, that is why.

Senator Fairbairn: I firmly support my honourable friend's position on the importance of the aboriginal peoples in this country, and their role in the debate on national unity. The issues currently before the House of Commons relate strictly to the commitments made during the referendum by the Prime Minister: nothing more and nothing less. In constitutional terms, the position of aboriginal peoples is absolutely secure.

ETHICS COUNSELLOR

DESIRABILITY OF INDEPENDENT COUNSELLOR REPORTING TO PARLIAMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gerald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, today's Montreal Gazette and La Presse contained a propaganda insert from the Liberal Party of Canada, seeking to collect funds. The insert makes reference to Red Book promises that have been kept by the government. One such promise, in particular, was that an independent ethics counsellor would be appointed, after consultation with leaders of all parties in the House of Commons, and would report directly to Parliament.

Honourable senators, while in fact an ethics counsellor has been appointed, he is not independent. He reports to the Prime Minister, not to Parliament.

An October 27, 1994 editorial in The Toronto Star called this the most blatant betrayal of the Red Book promises. It observed that the inevitable result would be to have an ethics watchdog loyal to his political master, not to the public.

Honourable senators, to make the ethics counsellor truly independent as was promised, would the government consider changing reporting arrangements so that the counsellor reports to Parliament and not simply to the Prime Minister?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will convey my honourable friend's question to the Prime Minister and others in the government. I would simply say to my honourable friend that the ethics counsellor who was appointed, Mr. Howard Wilson, is a very responsible individual, and carries out his duties with the utmost care.

Senator Comeau: I do not wish in any way to suggest that this gentleman would not apply due diligence to his job, but we must remember that he who pays the piper calls the tunes.

Given that the Prime Minister pays this gentleman's salary, would it not be more appropriate to have someone who is viewed, at least by the public, as being independent? In keeping with the spirit of suggestions which we will be making, I suggest the Auditor General of Canada, Mr. Desautels, be considered for appointment. Certainly no one questions his pursuit of integrity.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I will convey that question as well to my honourable colleagues. I am sure that my honourable friend did not intend to imply anything by his comments, but the current ethics councillor is not dancing to anybody's tune but, rather, to the mandate which he has been given.

EXISTENCE OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON CODE OF CONDUCT

Hon. Peter Bosa: I rise on a supplementary question, honourable senators.

Is the Honourable Leader of the Government aware that there is a joint Senate-House of Commons committee studying the code of conduct at the present time, and that members are free to attend those meetings?

Senator Berntson: I would be very surprised if she was not aware.

Senator Bosa: Are you aware?

Senator Berntson: Yes, I am aware.

Don't disappoint us. You are aware, right?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am very much aware of the committee, as I am sure are all my colleagues in this chamber. This issue touches all of us. I know that the joint committee will conduct itself incisively, will not be dancing to anybody's tune and will be concentrating on its mandate.

[Later]

JOINT COMMITTEE ON CODE OF CONDUCT— RELEVANCE TO PARLIAMENTARIANS

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, Senator Bosa has raised a rather interesting point. Every once in a while we must go through a code of conduct operation. I suppose it is like a trade association in that, when it prints its code of ethics, it makes them feel warm all over.

In reading through the transcripts of the joint committee so far, I am somewhat puzzled. I can see them getting into matters involving conflicts of a certain kind. However, I really wonder whether the accumulated experience of these people before they came to this chamber — their upbringing by their parents, their education and their spiritual beliefs — is not enough, in combination with the appropriate sections in the Parliament of Canada Act and the Criminal Code. With that accumulation of experience and those statutes to guide us, if we do not understand what is expected of us, then we should not be here.

Honourable senators, I find that whole process offensive, and I think that, in your hearts, most of you will tend to agree with me. This is a charade. They may come up with a few small things, such as if you have a share in a certain company you should not sit on a certain committee, but on the basis of morality, on the basis of being able to determine what is a bribe and what is not, or how one should behave oneself, do you not find that this whole exercise is useless?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have sympathy for what Senator MacDonald has said. However, I hope it is not a useless exercise. The preface to the honourable senator's question is, in large measure, very true. As the honourable senator will know, over the years, regardless of which party has been in power, this issue has arisen almost cyclically. It arises again and again, demanding to be examined.

I am sure that there are always points which can be re-emphasized and set out with greater clarity, perhaps not for the benefit of those who serve in our chambers but for the reassurance of people outside our chambers.

I have followed this issue for a great many years. I know that the senators and the members of the House serving on that committee are doing so out of goodwill. I am sure that their intent is to reflect in their report anything that would be helpful to us or to the public.

Honourable senators, I agree with Senator MacDonald that in public life, as in private life, the degree to which the standards are reflected is based very much upon what is inside the individual.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, is the honourable leader aware that the teachings of our parents, the ethics by which we try to abide and all the things which pertain to behaving properly, including the Criminal Code, have been taken into consideration in studies conducted in the past? It is not the case that we have suddenly reached a level of ethics such that there is no longer a need to attempt to improve the situation.

Senator Fairbairn: Yes, honourable senators, I am aware of that. I know that members of the committee are finding parts of the study very interesting, even engrossing, and are putting their minds to the task. I emphasize that, in fact, the exercise is a useful one. It is useful for the participants as well as for the reassurance of those in the public who may have a view of our activities which differs from reality.

Ultimately, however, as Senator MacDonald has said, the compliance with all the rules known to humankind which can be put down on paper is within the wills and the hearts of those serving in public life.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

RIGHT TO SELF-DETERMINATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, further to the questions asked by our colleague Senator Watt, is it the position of the Government of Canada that the aboriginal peoples of Canada have the right to self-determination?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators are aware of the position aboriginal people hold within the Constitution. The aboriginal people have been a fundamental part of the building of this country. They have contributed to the unity of this country. That will continue. In constitutional discussions down the road, whenever they occur, I am sure they will be playing an active role.

Senator Kinsella: Honourable senators, is it the position of the Government of Canada that the aboriginal peoples have the right to sovereignty?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I would wish to examine with others the import of the honourable senator's question. In terms of the position of aboriginal peoples in this country, their inherent right to self-determination is protected under section 35 of our Constitution, as the honourable senator well knows.

RATE OF ILLITERACY AMONG NATIVE YOUTH— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, those questions were motivated by the questions raised by Senator Watt.

Independently, I wanted to question the minister on the development of aboriginal communities across Canada. I would like to draw attention to aboriginal youth in Canada. The Minister of Human Resources Development announced some time ago that 16 new programs, aimed at 17,500 Indian youths on reserves, would start this month.

Statistics cited by the minister indicated that 60 per cent of the people on reserves are illiterate. As minister responsible for literacy, what percentage of native youth is classified as illiterate? How big is that problem for which you are responsible, Minister?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would not wish to put a statistic on that question. Because of the nature of gathering statistics in this country, any number would probably be understated.

One issue which has always been in the forefront of the minds of aboriginal peoples is their inherent right to self-government. Another fundamental issue for aboriginal communities is the education of their people. As my honourable friend knows, the reach of the programs in which I am involved is, of necessity, limited. However, I can assure honourable senators that there are aboriginal programs in place through the National Literacy Secretariat and also through cooperative efforts with the provinces. We support these aboriginal programs to the fullest extent possible. We also support the literacy efforts of the Assembly of First Nations. I only wish we had more resources to give them for their work.

I know that my colleague the Minister of Indian Affairs is also concerned with this issue. This is a fundamental issue for aboriginal people, and any development, opportunities and solutions must begin with their youngest people. I wish I could do more.

Senator Kinsella: Some native leaders with whom I work at the university in my province held a seminar on this issue. This question arose: In the last two years, how many new programs have begun, directed specifically to combat illiteracy with native youth?

Senator Fairbairn: I will have the officials at the National Literacy Secretariat provide me with that information as we have it. Again, my honourable friend will know that we are restricted in what we can do. Some of the efforts that exist in this area also exist at the provincial level. I will try to get as much information as I can for my honourable friend.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a response to a question raised in the Senate on October 17, 1995, by the Honourable Senator Spivak regarding the bovine growth hormone.

HEALTH

BOVINE GROWTH HORMONE—EVALUATION OF HEALTH RISK— REPRESENTATIONS FROM UNITED STATES— GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

(Response to question raised by Hon. Mira Spivak on October 17, 1995)

Neither the Minister of Health nor Health Canada have any knowledge or evidence of high level pressure tactics being applied at any governmental level by multinational companies to influence the evaluation and licensing decision of rBST by Health Canada.

This position is substantiated by the fact that Health Canada scientists, in their evaluation of rBST from the Monsanto Company, have requested further scientific information with regard to animal safety and efficacy. The evaluation of this additional information cannot commence until the manufacturer has forwarded it to Health Canada, a process which could take many months.

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-102, to amend the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff, and to make related and consequential amendments to other acts.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY BILL

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY—REFERRED BACK TO COMMITTEE

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the eleventh report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology regarding Bill C-64, respecting employment equity, presented in the Senate on November 22, 1995.

Hon. Rose-Marie Losier-Cool: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of the report.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

Hon. Eric Arthur Berntson (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, after some discussion with my counterpart, it has been determined that there may be some deficiencies in this bill. In any event, there may be some interest in calling further witnesses before the committee.

For that reason, in amendment I move, seconded by my honourable friend Senator Lynch-Staunton:

That the report be not now adopted, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology for further consideration.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

EVANGELICAL MISSIONARY CHURCH
(CANADA WEST DISTRICT) BILL—SECOND READING

Hon. Leonard J. Gustafson moved the second reading of Bill S-12, to amalgamate the Alberta corporation known as the Missionary Church with the Canada corporation known as the Evangelical Missionary Church, Canada West District.

He said: Honourable senators, I should like to take this opportunity to make a few short remarks on the amalgamation of two churches: the federal corporation, known as the Evangelical Missionary Church, Canada West District, and the Alberta corporation, known as the Missionary Church. They are continued by this enactment as one corporation under the name Evangelical Missionary Church, (Canada West District).

Honourable senators, I have been a member of one of these churches which are amalgamating. There are several very positive reasons for the amalgamation of these two churches. They both have their roots in the Wesleyan movement of many years ago, originally out of Great Britain.

I want to quote from some of the recommendations that were put forward by the churches as reasons for amalgamating. Under "Values of Merger" it states:

Considering merger is an appropriate response to scripture. In the book of John, Jesus prays, "May they be brought to complete unity to let the world know that you sent me and have loved them even as you have loved me."

Basically, they are saying that unity is very important. These churches are amalgamating. There are times when churches separate, but unity is better than separation. That is the main reason that the churches put forward for unity. They go on to state:

Merger would give us a stronger national identity and voice. Besides being larger, both present denominations would gain churches in areas where they currently do not have any.

I will touch on a few points to bring senators up to date on exactly what is happening under this bill. The networking that churches would develop through this merger is significant. They would retain more people who move to new locations, instead of losing so many who have learned to appreciate and support the program of their local churches and denominations. Church planning would be given a stronger boost in the networking of churches, especially in Western Canada.

Pastor placement would be enhanced by a larger pool of churches and pastors. We always work towards excellence in fitting pastors to congregations. A broader range to select from increases the possibilities of ministers serving in a situation appropriate to their gifts.

The process of merging gives us an opportunity to re-examine denominational, district and local church structure and policy, and to effect positive changes that will make us more effective in carrying out the work of the Kingdom.

Merger would result in better stewardship for western conference costs. Instead of having two conferences and two district conference offices, there would be one office. Further, by combining the present number of salaried positions, we could provide greater specialized ministry to our pastors and churches.

Honourable senators, I ask for your support in this matter, and move that this bill be sent to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Gustafson, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

UNITED NATIONS

FOURTH WORLD CONFERENCE ON WOMEN, BEIJING, CHINA

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Pearson, calling the attention of the Senate to the Fourth World Conference on Women, held in Beijing, from September 4 to 15, 1995, which she and Senator Cohen had the privilege to attend as parliamentary observers on behalf of the Senate.—(Honourable Senator Cohen)

Hon. Erminie J. Cohen: Honourable senators, I was privileged to have been asked to attend the United Nations Fourth World Conference on Women as a member of the official Canadian delegation and as a parliamentary observer. This was the first opportunity I had had to participate in a United Nations forum, and I found it an exhilarating experience, greatly enhanced for me, both personally and professionally, by the company of my colleague Senator Landon Pearson, from whom I learned a great deal.

On November 8, my colleague spoke of the tremendous achievements made at the conference in bringing to world attention the plight of the girl child. I will highlight some of the other issues addressed, and Canada's leadership role in moving some of them forward.

Some of the Western media reports claimed that there was a sense at the conference of preaching to the converted. However, when you consider that many women came from countries where they have no legal rights toward their own children, let alone any property or inheritance rights, it is easier to see what an achievement it was for many just to be there. In a setting where political dissent of any kind is not tolerated, it was impressive to see women demanding social, economic and political change.

To draw the contrast more sharply, I refer to a story reported by CTV's Diana Bishop on what it means to lose face in China. As in many Eastern cultures, it is imperative that one not be embarrassed in public. Great pains are taken to ensure that this does not happen. In China, if a woman causes a man to lose face, her punishment is to be permanently disfigured by having sulphuric acid thrown in her face. Upon hearing about this, the only remote Western parallel I could think of might be the 17th century custom of forcing adulterous women to wear the letter "A" to remind the public of their transgression. This gives you some idea, honourable senators, of how far Chinese women have to go before they achieve real equality.

That the conference went forward at all may have served to open the eyes of Chinese authorities, and perhaps provided some measure of hope, not only to Chinese women but to all those in that country who are struggling for human rights, and the world acceptance that comes with respecting those rights.

In China, even informal women's groups are subject to surveillance. That applied to us, as well. We had to show our hotel registration cards every time we entered the elevator, and no visitors were allowed in the hotel rooms. If they saw a "Do Not Disturb" sign on a door, they would ask why. There was a real concern among the Chinese security officials that we would engage in subversive activities.

Between August 30 and September 15, there were over 30,000 women in Beijing and Huairou attending the NGO forum and the UN conference. Of these, 17,000 registered delegates from 189 countries participated in the conference, making it the largest UN conference ever held.

The official government delegation was made up of parliamentarians, federal officials, and representatives from provincial and territorial governments, youth, labour, business, churches, academia, and non-governmental organizations.

Five hundred Canadians participated in the NGO forum. They brought with them the experience of their local realities, and kept the discussion of issues grounded in the real and the possible. Now, NGOs have another role to play: Holding governments accountable for implementing the agreements reached, and for ensuring that cultural excuses do not stand in the way of women's equality rights.

As Suzanne Mubarek, the first lady of Egypt, so eloquently put it:

We are not here so that some of us may impose certain values or beliefs, which others may consider to be against their religion or their morals. If you have the right to believe in what I reject, I also have the right to reject what you believe in, or believe in what you reject. Without this type of understanding, relationships would be based on oppression and submission, and not on equality or justice.

During the course of the 10 days we were there, we met with the All China Lawyers Association — the equivalent of the Canadian Bar Association — the Chinese Ministry of Health, the All China Women's Federation and many others, including Ken Sundquist, the chargé d'affaires and Acting Canadian Ambassador in Beijing.

• (1450)

As parliamentarians, we held private meetings with our Chinese counterparts. The Chinese cabinet includes three women ministers out of a total of 32, all three of whom were part of the official Chinese delegation. It became obvious very soon that they were not speaking for themselves as women but more as representatives of the state.

We also met with the Chinese YMCA and YWCA. Although it has been around for most of this century in China, the "Y" had to go underground during the cultural revolution and has been active again only since 1980. It now has over 700,000 members in Shanghai alone.

The "Y" is neither independent nor autonomous. Like all women's groups in China, it is closely affiliated with the government-run All China Women's Federation. The federation is governed by a national congress of Chinese women that meets every five years to decide policy. In reality, the congress merely acts to publicly affirm policies already decided upon at the top levels of the Communist Party and of the government.

Through the course of previous UN preparatory meetings, 12 areas emerged as primary considerations for the future of women in the world: poverty, education, health, violence, armed conflict, economic structures, power sharing and decision-making mechanisms to promote the advancement of women, human rights, the media, the environment, and the situation of the girl child. I will not go into detail on all of these issues today, but I would like to touch on a few.

To demonstrate the progress that has been achieved through these world conferences, we have only to look at the issue of violence against women. The issue was introduced internationally by Canada at the Nairobi conference in 1985. Now, 10 years later, a consensus has been reached that violence against women will not be tolerated anywhere, no matter what cultural excuses a country might use.

Canada again led the way in negotiating the inclusion of very strong wording on this subject. The Beijing declaration asks governments to be responsible for protecting women from violence in the home and in society. It recognizes that the terrible effects of violence reverberate throughout society, and cannot be written off as a private issue.

The Canadian team was instrumental in achieving a number of other major changes. Our delegation sponsored a resolution calling for worldwide recognition that rape in armed conflict should be considered a war crime. Canada also won support for our initiative to promote the development of guidelines for accepting refugees based on gender-related persecution, an initiative that had its genesis under the previous federal government.

Some of us in the parliamentary delegation left the confines of the conference site to visit Shanghai, a city where Canada maintains a consulate. While there, we met with the Shanghai Women's Federation. A tour of their facilities included a women's credit centre that receives some of its funding from CIDA. It is one of many examples of how women are being encouraged to help themselves.

Micro-credit programs such as this one are aimed at giving small loans to the poor so that they can run their own small businesses. They can rarely get such loans from conventional banks, even though a study by the World Bank shows the clear success rate of these programs. In Third World countries, these programs have a full repayment rate of 93 per cent or more in one year.

Micro-banks, such as the Grameen Bank in Bangladesh, started by lending as little as $10 to poor rural women. Gradually, the women began to apply for loans of $200 to $300. Grameen lends $1.5 million each day in loans that average $140. The on-time repayment of loans by the Grameen Bank's poor women borrowers is 98 per cent.

Muhammed Yunus, director and founder of the Grameen Bank, also referred to as the "barefoot bank," was in Toronto last week to receive an honorary doctorate from the University of Toronto. He believes that:

Access to credit is a basic human right, not a privilege.

Over the past 20 years, he has helped make that belief a reality for millions of landless poor, most of them women.

The World Women's Banking Organization has enjoyed an outstanding recovery rate of 97 per cent in one year. It has been shown that with a loan as small as $100, a poor woman can, with her own business, double her family income and lift her family out of poverty after five years.

Similar success stories can be found here in Canada, where the Federal Business Development Bank runs micro-credit programs targeting the native community and native women in some cases.

Conventional banks in this country have been chastised repeatedly for their poor lending rates to small business. Their excuse is that they do not make enough profit on such loans because of high administrative costs. Thankfully, the message seems to be getting through to some banks, where an effort is being made to streamline their operations and adjust their priorities to meet the needs of small enterprise. I understand the repayment rate of these loans to women is very high.

CIDA's Canada Mission Fund has funded some 70 small projects that have empowered women in China in very real ways. In one extracurricular foray, Canadians, led by my colleague Senator Pearson, were the first parliamentarians to visit the Ganzu province of China, where they saw how even a small sum of money can empower women to change their lives and those of their families. For $20,000, CIDA brought water to 2,000 people living in three villages — a project, honourable senators, which saved women five hours a day in labour. Needless to say, the entire village came up to welcome this delegation.

Sustainable economic development depends upon educating and investing in women, but the fact is that 70 per cent of the world's poor are women. Governments and financial institutions must be urged to give these women a chance by making more credit available to them.

The benefits of encouraging these women go far beyond increased income. They are better able to take care of their families. They are able to send their children to school, reinvest in the community, and plan for the future. They experience pride and hope.

As Hillary Rodham Clinton noted in her speech, so often when woman come together to talk, the discussion turns to their children. Taking care of the family has always been a priority for women, and that link is the foundation of our society. While some would say the family is falling apart, it is not because that fundamental link has been severed. Women still take care of the children and the elderly, yet most of the work they do is not valued — not by economists, historians, government leaders or the popular culture, and too often not even by the fathers of the children involved.

One of the goals of this conference was to strengthen families within societies by empowering women to take greater control of their own destinies. This cannot be fully achieved unless private industry as well as governments here and around the world accept their share of the social responsibility to protect and promote the physical and economic well-being of women and children.

The reality of world poverty make programs such as micro-lending imperative. James Wolfensohn, the new president of the World Bank, spoke on the last day of the conference as one who needed no convincing of the economic impact of improving the lives of women. He said:

Transformation ... will require not just the liberation of women, but also the liberation of men — in their thinking, attitudes and willingness to take a fair share of the responsibilities and workloads that women carry on their shoulders. To bring about real improvement in the quality of women's lives, men must change, and action must begin at home. For each of us, change lies in the kind of household we live in, the society we help to build, and the institutions we work for.

This, honourable senator, by the President of the World Bank.

A coalition of NGOs was established in Beijing called Women's Eyes on the World Bank, to ensure that such words are followed up with concrete action. The World Bank is now lending an average of about $5 billion a year for projects which include some specific measures to strengthen the role of women in development. The bank has recognized the need to match economic with social considerations in the programs they support, and Mr. Wolfensohn committed the World Bank to further action.

Prior to the conference, we were told in our briefing that Canada had adopted a plan for gender equality. One of the key elements of the plan is that all future policies and legislation will include an analysis of their impact on women. It was an important breakthrough and a prestigious achievement for Canada, but looked at through the eyes of women from countries where girl children are denied a basic education, it is impossible to be smug about such achievements. The Beijing conference was an achievement for many reasons. That it actually took place after so many obstacles were put in its way is an achievement in itself.

• (1500)

As Gertrude Mangella, the secretary general of the conference, said:

Women are not guests of the planet. This planet belongs to them too...The decree of solidarity that was achieved...is reflected in one principle, which is not to be compromised. This is the equality between human beings, equality between men and women. The message of Beijing is not further analysis but meaningful action for which we all are accountable.

That a strong and united message of human rights emerged from within a country famous for its disregard of such rights is a remarkable achievement. It is encouraging that the conference got so much media coverage in the West, at a time when the story of women's quest for equality had already been told so often.

Now that the conference is over, the challenge is to fulfil our commitment to the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action. My hope is that Canada will continue to act as a leader in promoting women's equality rights and build on the work of our delegation.

Those of us who have the opportunity to be heard have the responsibility to speak for those who cannot, and I thank you, honourable senators, for the opportunity to do so in this chamber today.

The Hon. the Speaker: If no other senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT BILL, 1995

NOTICE OF MOTION TO INSTRUCT COMMITTEE ON LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS TO TABLE FINAL REPORT—
POINT OF ORDER—SPEAKER'S RULING

On the Order:

That it be an instruction of this House to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs that no later than Monday, December 11, 1995, it present its final report to the Senate on the Message from the House of Commons, dated June 20, 1995, and on the motion of the Honourable Senator Graham dated June 28, 1995, regarding Bill C-69, An Act to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions and the readjustment of electoral boundaries.

That in its report, the Committee recommend to the Senate that it not insist on its amendments to which the House of Commons disagreed on June 20, 1995. —
(Speaker's Ruling)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have received my copy of the ruling. Unfortunately, copies have not been made for the use of the Senate. Is it your wish that I proceed to make the ruling?

Hon. Alasdair B. Graham (Deputy Leader of the Government): Proceed.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Next week.

Hon. Eric Arthur Berntson (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Tuesday.

The Hon. the Speaker: What is the wish of the Senate?

Senator Graham: Proceed.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Next sitting.

The Hon. the Speaker: It will take about five minutes to have the copies made.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: We will wait. We are cooperative.

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: Out of respect for the Speaker, we will wait.

Senator Graham: Perhaps we can adjourn for five minutes.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your wish, honourable senators, to suspend the sitting for five minutes?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The sitting of the Senate was suspended.

• (1530)

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, during Routine Proceedings yesterday, Senator Carstairs sought to give notice of a motion to require the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs to report on the message from the House of Commons and the motion of Senator Graham of June 28 relating to the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Bill, Bill C-69, no later than Monday, December 11, 1995. At the same time, the notice of motion also instructed the committee not to insist on the Senate amendments to which the House of Commons has disagreed.

On a point of order, Senator Phillips objected to the notice because, in his view, a similar question had already been proposed and voted on, and that to permit this motion to be debated would be contrary to our rules. Later in the sitting, I sought the advice of this house before considering a ruling.

In the exchanges which took place between the senators just before yesterday's adjournment, three basic issues were contended: The first is that Senator Carstairs does not have the right to propose this motion under the rubric "Government Notices of Motions." The second objection relates to the point of order raised by Senator Phillips, that a motion that has already been decided cannot be raised again. On this issue, specific reference was made to rule 64 and to several citations from Erskine May and Beauchesne.

The third point relates to the ability of the Senate to instruct or guide the deliberations of one of its committees. With respect to this issue, Senator Phillips suggested that I consult a decision of the Honourable Speaker Deschatelets regarding a case where an instruction to a committee had been proposed.

[Translation]

I want to thank those senators who participated in the debate on this point of order. I have had the opportunity to review the arguments that were made yesterday and to consult the authorities and precedents that were mentioned, including that of Speaker Deschatelets. In order not to impede the house in its proceedings, I am prepared to rule now on an issue which has proved surprisingly complex. I propose to deal with each of the three objections that were raised.

[English]

With respect to the objection that Senator Carstairs, not being the Leader of the Government, the deputy leader or a designate of the government, should not be permitted to give a notice of motion under the rubric "Government Notices of Motions" I find that the objection is well founded.

Before 1991, the daily order of business did not recognize any distinction between government and private senators for the purpose of giving notice to a motion. Since 1991, however, the distinction has been recognized in our rules, and if it is to have any meaning, then it must be to limit the right of those who may give notice under "Government Notices of Motions" to those who are designated to speak for the government in this house.

Consequently, I find that Senator Carstairs does not have the right to propose a government notice of motion. This must be done by either the leader or deputy leader, or a designate in the absence of either. Alternatively, Senator Carstairs can propose the motion under "Notices of Motions."

As to the second objection that a motion ought not to be put to the Senate a second time during the same session, the issue is not as simple as it may seem. The advice provided by the British parliamentary authority Erskine May is not straightforward. While it states that a —

...motion or an amendment which is the same, in substance, as a question which has been decided during a session may not be brought forward again...

Erskine May goes on to explain that:

Whether the second motion is substantially the same is finally a matter for the judgment of the Chair.

It appears that the Senate's precedents for determining whether a question is the same in substance are not conclusive. I have examined the earlier motion of Senator Fairbairn, seeking to have the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs report on the message of the House of Commons and the motion of Senator Graham that was defeated on division last week. That motion proposed that the committee report no later than Wednesday, November 22. This new motion orders the committee to report no later than Monday, December 11.

Given that we are soon approaching an extended adjournment and a possible prorogation of the parliamentary session, I am persuaded that, on the whole, there is sufficient difference in this motion, in comparison with the one that was proposed last week, to allow it.

The third objection raised has to do with the instruction that is a part of Senator Carstairs' motion. The notice of motion directs the committee to recommend in its report that it not insist on its amendments to Bill C-69, to which the House of Commons has disagreed. I find this part of the motion to be quite troubling. As an instruction, I believe it is out of order. Most instructions are intended to allow a committee to do something it would not otherwise have the power to do.

In this case, the committee already has the power to recommend that it not insist on the amendments to Bill C-69. To order that the committee report with a specific recommendation by way of a mandatory instruction is, I find, quite irregular.

The precedent of the decision of Speaker Deschatelets was mentioned yesterday. In a ruling dated March 10, 1971, the Speaker, faced with a point of order objecting to a similar instruction, noted that:

Many precedents are referred to by Bourinot...whereby instructions to committees were declared to be irregular because the committee concerned already had the power to take the action indicated.

Furthermore, I would point out that an instruction can be inadmissible if it also proposes an objective which is inconsistent with a decision already taken.

Applying this principle to the present case, it seems to me that the proposed instruction is seeking to nullify the decision of the Senate to authorize the committee to consider the message of the House and the motion of Senator Graham.

For these reasons, I do not find the notice of motion of Senator Carstairs to be in order.

Before I resume my seat, I would like to make a point, because I would not want what happened yesterday to be established as a precedent.

I would refer honourable senators to rule 23, page 24, which reads:

During the time provided for the consideration of the daily Routine of Business and the daily Question Period, it shall not be in order to raise any question of privilege or point of order.

In other words, the point of order raised yesterday was not raised at the proper time. I simply indicate that, in order that it will not be established as a precedent for the future.

• (1520)

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, now that we have moved back to Government Notices of Motions —

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I beg your pardon? Say that again.

Senator Graham: We are now under Government Notices of Motions.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: No, no. That is stretching it a bit.

The Hon. the Speaker: We reverted to Government Notices of Motions in order that I could make my ruling.

Senator Graham: Accordingly, pursuant to rule 58(1)(f) —

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I am sorry to interrupt. I should like some clarification. Your Honour just gave a ruling. Why did we have to revert to Government Notices of Motions in order to give the ruling?

The Hon. the Speaker: When we reached Government Notices of Motions earlier today, I rose and asked that this item be deferred until later in the day because I did not have my ruling ready. The item was deferred at that time in order that I could make my ruling later.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Do I understand correctly that rulings are only given under the item under which they arise?

The Hon. the Speaker: I normally make my rulings on the item under which the objection was raised.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I ask this only for clarification. I hope Your Honour will bear with me. Do I understand correctly that when the Speaker's ruling is given, it can only be given under the rubric under which it is challenged? Had the point of order been raised under Inquiries, for example, would the ruling have been given only when Inquiries were called?

The Hon. the Speaker: Yes. I would normally give the ruling when that particular inquiry is called.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I inquire only for clarification. Thank you.

Senator Kinsella: Honourable senators, it was my understanding, although we would have to check Hansard, that when His Honour interrupted the proceedings, he said that it be agreed that he be allowed to revert to this item for the purpose of delivering the ruling, but we had moved on, as far as that item is concerned, to other matters. The agreement given was on the request to revert to this item for the ruling of the Speaker. Therefore, no other matter can be dealt with without leave.

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, there was a clear understanding on this side that His Honour the Speaker had asked that consideration of Government Notices of Motions be deferred until he could bring his ruling forward and make copies available to all honourable senators.

The Hon. the Speaker: It was my understanding that I had asked for the item to be deferred.

Senator Thériault: That is what you got.

The Hon. the Speaker: I suppose I shall have to see what Hansard says.

Senator Berntson: Review the record and bring it back next week.

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, pursuant to rule 58(1)(f) —

Senator Lynch-Staunton: No, no. We want to follow the proper procedure. Senator Kinsella has raised the point which I tried to express, and I thank him for having done so. The agreement was that we would revert to Government Notices of Motions in order to hear the Speaker's ruling, and that that would be the end of our return to that rubric. We never accepted the suggestion which has been presented by the Deputy Leader of the Government, that going back to Government Notices of Motions was for other than receiving the Speaker's ruling. We have now received the Speaker's ruling. Therefore, we go on to whatever else there is on the Order Paper.

Senator Thériault: It was deferred.

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, that is not the understanding of this side. We agreed that it be deferred because we were in a state of paralysis. We could not proceed under Government Notices of Motions because we did not have the ruling of the Speaker, which, under ordinary circumstances and by all precedent and convention, should be distributed to honourable senators so that we may examine it appropriately at that time.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Rulings of the Speaker can be given at any time during our deliberations. It was only out of courtesy that we agreed to revert to the rubric under which the challenge was originally made. The Speaker can give his ruling at any time.

Senator Thériault: That is what he did, at any time he wants. There is a problem over there. What is the problem?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: The problem is that we are now away from Government Notices of Motions. The purpose for reverting to it has now been accepted and resolved. Therefore, we carry on with the rest of the orders.

Senator Berntson: The adjournment motion is in order.

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, I appeal to the Chair for understanding in this matter. We did not proceed with the item as intended at the clear request of the Chair that we wait until we had copies of his decision before proceeding on this specific item: Government Notices of Motions.

Senator Kinsella: Honourable senators, we have moved into the exception of when agreement is given to move away from the ordinary schedule of business. When Government Notices of Motions is called, it is an opportunity for all Government Notices of Motions available to be brought forward. None were brought forward today. His Honour asked for the consent of the house to come back to this item for the purpose of issuing his ruling which relates to a matter raised during yesterday's sitting under that rubric. That was agreed to. That is all that was agreed to.

The exception to the proceedings, agreed to by unanimous consent, was that the Senate go back to this item for the purpose for which the Speaker had asked. There was no request from the Deputy Leader of the Government to revert for notices of motions which he was intending to bring forward. In order to do that, we would have to have the unanimous consent of the house.

Senator Graham: The notice of motion which I want to move at the present time was entirely dependent upon the Speaker's ruling.

Senator Kinsella: Clearly, if there is a government notice of motion to be brought forward, the appropriate time to do that would be now, if we grant unanimous consent to revert to that item, or at the next sitting of the house.

Senator Graham: We could have agreed at the time for the Speaker to read his decision to all honourable senators. However, it was the unanimous agreement of the chamber, at his request, that we delay and then revert to this specific item: Government Notices of Motions. I appeal to the Chair that, in all fairness, we be allowed to proceed under that particular item.

Senator Kinsella: Honourable senators, chaos will only ensue under the vision advanced by the Deputy Leader of the Government. It is quite common that senators ask for leave to revert to one item or another, and leave is often granted. However, the reversion is always to the specific item requested by the honourable senator, that is, Presentation of Petitions or Notices of Motions. In my experience here, leave has always been granted on a specific matter, as it was in this instance to the Speaker.

Hon. Sharon Carstairs: Honourable senators, with the greatest respect, we have an Order Paper. I clearly violated that Order Paper yesterday, for which I accept responsibility. That may be attributed to my not having as clear a knowledge of the rules as some other honourable senators.

However, when the Speaker called for Government Notices of Motions, before the government could introduce a single motion under that listing on the Order Paper, the Speaker continued. He said, "I wish to defer this motion because I have a ruling under Government Notices of Motions." As a result, that item was deferred in its entirety because no one was given the opportunity to speak — neither the leader nor the deputy leader — because His Honour had asked for permission to defer, and we gave him that permission.

[Translation]

Hon. Roch Bolduc: I am not certain just what the senator is saying. To be certain, we would have to look at Hansard as suggested by His Honour the Speaker. Since it is not available today, we will have to wait until Tuesday to see what was said.

[English]

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I doubt very much that Senator Carstairs violated the rules yesterday. In my opinion, she was wrongly advised. It will be clearer for me because I doubt very much that she would willingly violate the law. Senator Carstairs, you came prepared and well advised by people who should have known better. Of that I am convinced.

I would hate very much to proceed as Senator Graham is suggesting. I should like to leave the Chair out of this at this time, Senator Graham. Earlier today, the Chair, being unable to give his decision in both languages, asked that it be done so. What would be the net result if anyone — myself included — had said "No"? That would have been the end of the debate for today. We would have received this very well-written advice from His Honour on Tuesday next. Now, we want to revert back — I am sure so that Senator Graham can do today, legally, what was not done yesterday.

I say to Senator Graham, to have a very harmonious Senate, you will not get consent today for anything that may require the unanimous consent of the Senate. In good spirit, you are only delaying everything, and are not placing His Honour in an embarrassing position by delaying until Tuesday what you want to do later on this afternoon.

That could be the end of the debate. Otherwise, we will not give in on this issue.

Therefore, everyone was in error. Who misunderstood His Honour? We do not know yet. We shall know later on. I would not have found myself being ungracious to His Honour by saying "Tough luck. If the translation is not ready, we shall proceed when it is ready" and that would have been it for the day. We would have waited, then, until Tuesday.

We are placing the Chair in an embarrassing position where he is being asked to take sides, in a way, in a debate that is ambiguous for everyone. I make an appeal to Senator Graham and ask: Why not do on Tuesday what you want to do this afternoon?

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, there is no taking sides. This is normal procedure. His Honour simply asked to defer "Government Notices of Motions" until he was prepared to give the reasons for making his ruling. In anybody's common sense, it opened up the subject-matter of "Government Notices of Motions." For God's sake, it is very simple. There is no taking sides here. It is common sense. No one is embarrassing His Honour. He knows what he is doing. For God's sake, let us have a little common sense.

[Translation]

Senator Bolduc: However, he did not know you intended to present a motion.

[English]

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I was not here when all these agreements were being made.

Senator Berntson: That will not slow you down, will it?

Senator Olson: The argument I want to make is that sometimes it is useful to have an objective view of what went on.

Senator Doody: And you are always objective!

Senator Olson: Yes, because I was not involved in this matter.

The opposition cannot have it both ways. We already know that the reason Senator Graham did not get to the business that he wanted to introduce was that there was an agreement to set aside that item until they had the translation and the printed copy. Both sides have agreed that that is what happened.

Senator Berntson: We agreed to wait for the ruling.

Senator Olson: Of course you were waiting for the ruling. However, Senator Graham told you, very frankly and very plainly, that his motion was dependent on what the ruling said.

Senator Berntson: You were not here.

Senator Olson: You admit that?

Senator Berntson: No, I do not.

Senator Olson: You cannot have it both ways. You cannot stop him now when you agreed to set aside that item until the ruling was ready.

Senator Berntson: We got the ruling.

Senator Olson: You now have the ruling, and you also have the reasons for the ruling.

It is perfectly clear to me. It was not to start with, but it is clear now, as a result of what both sides have said. Both sides agreed to set aside that rubric or that item for the purpose of receiving the ruling. Senator Graham told honourable senators that his motion now — and I do not know what it will be, because I was not here — depended upon what that ruling said.

You cannot put the cart before the horse and have it both ways. If you agreed to set aside that item, pending what the ruling said, which Senator Graham —

Senator Berntson: We should invite His Honour to review the record, then.

Senator Olson: Senator Graham said — and you have not disagreed with him — that he required to know before he moved his motion. Do not try to have it both ways.

Senator Berntson: He will move it on Tuesday, then.

Senator Olson: I am sure that is perfectly clear to you, Your Honour.

Hon. Gerald R. Ottenheimer: Honourable senators, I have listened with the usual amazement and great respect to the logic of the Honourable Senator Olson. I am sure it is more a deficiency in my own reception than in its transmission that the logic is not immediately obvious. However, I am sure upon study that it will become so.

It may be that, for the first time in the Senate's history, we are making a mountain out of somewhat of a molehill in the procedural context, not in the substantive context.

In my opinion, the matter can be resolved very simply without embarrassing the Chair. The Senate, apparently, gave leave. That is an action of the Senate; it is not an action of the Chair. However, we are not sure of what we, as a Senate, did. Did we give leave to revert to "Government Notices of Motions," full stop?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: No.

Senator Berntson: No.

Senator Ottenheimer: Or did the Senate give leave to revert to "Government Notices of Motions" for the purpose of a ruling from the Chair?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Senator Olson: Do not stop there!

Senator Ottenheimer: We can only learn that, not by reading one another's minds, not by reading entrails of crows or birds flying south, or by waiting for the ides of March to join in with the Julius Caesar context in reading those entrails. Much easier, less messy, less smelly, less sticky, to read Hansard and leave the entrails to the soothsayers.

Senator Berntson: Call in your soothsayer.

Senator Graham: Solomon, where art thou?

Honourable senators, I listened, as did other honourable senators, with continued confusion and confounded amazement. All honourable senators on this side do not want to embarrass the Chair or cause more confusion in this chamber, because there will be other days and other times between now and the Christmas break when we can debate or prolong matters of this nature.

I should point out, however, that this whole debate arises out of a point of order which was raised yesterday contrary to our rules, as His Honour just explained in his very useful addendum to his judgment. It was alright for Senator Lynch-Staunton to raise his point of order yesterday at the wrong time, but it is not okay to do something similar today.

Further, in the future, honourable senators should remember that to raise a point of order before the Senate, one must have an issue upon which to base the point of order. Yesterday, Senator Carstairs simply gave notice of a motion. Nothing at that point in time was really before the Senate; it was a notice of motion.

In my judgment, and perhaps it is something we should consider in the future, the point of order should properly have been raised when that motion had been moved, in the proper place, at the proper time, by the proper senator. The point of order should be raised when the motion is properly before the Senate, and that can only be at the time the motion is actually moved.

However, I think it would be useful to review Hansard. Accordingly, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, December 5, 1995, at 2 p.m.

PAGES EXCHANGE PROGRAM WITH HOUSE OF COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, before I call for Senators' Statements, I should like to advise you that we have with us today two House of Commons pages who have been selected to participate in the exchange program with the Senate this week.

I wish to introduce to you Nadine Nickner, who is from Timmins, Ontario. She is pursuing her studies in political science in the Faculty of Social Sciences at the University of Ottawa.

We also have with us Heather Brydon. She is studying at the University of Ottawa and is enrolled in the Faculty of Arts. I must make special mention of the fact — and I trust honourable senators will understand this — that she comes from Winnipeg, Manitoba.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

THE LATE ROBERTSON W. DAVIES

TRIBUTES

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, last Saturday night, Canada lost a great man of letters, a man whom I admired intensely, Robertson Davies. He was one of those very special people who was discussed, argued about, respected and appreciated, not only here at home but around the world. He was, of course, famous for being a novelist, a playwright, teacher, University of Toronto professor, master of Massey College, and as an actor, having "trod the boards" with the Old Vic Company in England.

My own appreciation of Robertson Davies began back in the early 1960s when I was a student at Carleton University, aspiring to a life of journalism. To me, Mr. Davies was a terrific newspaper man, and that was high tribute. He was the lively and outspoken editor and publisher of the Peterborough Examiner, and he also wrote a monthly column called "A Writer's Diary." I became an avid fan of his writing then and have remained so ever since.

Using his special gift, Robertson Davies not only told Canadians in writing something about themselves, but he also told the world something about Canadians. Just as important, he educated all his readers about the mysteries and the soul of the human condition, a goal to which every writer aspires, but one that so few are able to reach. He did it with intelligence, with wit and with humour.

Honourable senators, perhaps one of the things you notice most of all when reading a Robertson Davies book is that he wrote with love and depths of insight, empathy and understanding, which I found truly inspiring. He received dozens of awards during his lifetime, and indeed, any new book that he produced always attracted worldwide attention. However, of all the attention and awards and tributes to his talent, he stated:

I never feel like a success. I always feel that the next book had better be better than the last one. I think that when you begin to think of yourself as a success, you are in danger. Never be satisfied with your own work.

The New York Times once said of him:

He is one of the most learned, amusing and otherwise accomplished novelists of our time. His novels will be recognized with the very best work of this century.

And this about a man, honourable senators, who told his own biographer, "You're wasting your time. I haven't got a story to tell."

Honourable senators, there certainly is a story to tell, and it is a great story. It is a story about a compelling and engaging man who made a very large and lasting contribution to the cultural life of this country, which he loved intensely.

As well, he was a very special human being. Perhaps his wife Brenda expressed it best when she said on Sunday, "He was a very humble human being. Anyone who talked to him genuinely thought so."

Honourable senators, the last time I spoke to Robertson Davies was over a year ago when he was appearing at the National Gallery reading excerpts from his latest book, The Cunning Man. I had the privilege of introducing him. He was generously making an appearance on behalf of literacy for the Ottawa Citizen Literacy Foundation. He was delighted to do so, and he enthralled the audience.

Although he is gone, he will never be forgotten. It is unlikely that we will ever see anyone quite like him again in Canada.

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators, there is rarely a Canadian who makes as great an impression on his fellow countrymen without earning their distaste and disownership as Robertson Davies.

I first met Robertson Davies when I went to work at The Globe and Mail as a copy reader in the fifties. While Davies was not on the staff of The Globe and Mail, as he was busy with the Peterborough Examiner, he covered opera for the Toronto paper. That was something which, at that point, the music editor did not do, and the drama editor would not do. No one would concede what kind of glorious entertainment or blasphemy grand opera was. However, Robertson Davies delighted in the opportunity and would come rushing in — late, of course — after each performance of the Canadian Opera Company to put his stamp upon it.

I had the opportunity to be associated with him in a number of enterprises after that. I was interested to read in the last few days, as the tributes came in, how many people spoke of what a quiet, gentle man he was; that he always spoke softly. Well, that was not the Robertson Davies I knew. He spoke quietly; he did not stamp his feet; he did not even make speeches anywhere near the Senate, but he could, in two or three words, put people down or elevate them, as he might choose.

He was the distinguished master of Massey College — the first master — and he was intensely interested in his job as a teacher. That left him lots of time, he felt, to be involved in newspaper politics, the family business, writing the Deptford Trilogy and doing all those other things he did without ever seeming to hurry.

I mentioned the Deptford Trilogy. That, as you know, was written about Thamesville and Dresden in Southwestern Ontario. It will, I think, be a monument in our literary heritage. I rejoice in praising him.

BRITISH COLUMBIA

PROPOSALS ON NATIONAL UNITY ISSUES— UNFAIR TREATMENT OF PROVINCE

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: Honourable senators, as a representative of the province of British Columbia, I am very disappointed with the Prime Minister's proposal for constitutional change and the recent unfair treatment British Columbians have been receiving from this government.

On numerous levels, British Columbians are not getting their fair share from this government. For example, an analysis of federal expenditures and procurement in B.C. prepared by Peat Marwick KPMG Management Consulting on behalf of Business and Industry Development B.C. exposes the fact that federal government spending in B.C. is significantly lower than in any other province or region in Canada. There is a widening gap between B.C.'s contribution to Canada's economy and what the province receives in return through federal government expenditures. It is estimated that B.C. receives as little as 5.2 per cent of major Crown projects. Recent legislation, such as Bills C-18 and C-69, try to deny B.C.'s proper representation in the House of Commons; Bill C-68 is opposed by the western region as a whole; and now we have Bill C-110, which fails to recognize the emerging prominence of B.C. as an important region within Canada.

I understand that today the Minister of Human Resources, the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy, announced that he will reduce transfer payments to B.C. by $47 million as a penalty to the Government of B.C. for trying to address its welfare crisis.

Fellow senators, I do not believe that the people of B.C. are getting their fair share. Nor do I believe that the Prime Minister has a mandate to make such arbitrary decisions in regard to the Constitution. In fact, during the last federal election campaign, he spoke against making changes to the Constitution as such.

By proceeding with Bill C-110 and other legislation recently introduced by this government, the Prime Minister is driving a wedge through this country instead of building a nation.

I call on all senators and members of the other place from British Columbia to put aside their partisanship and join thousands of British Columbians in opposing this unfair and divisive treatment. Let us start standing up for our people, senators and members of the House of Commons from British Columbia. Let us stand up for our province in the face of these vicious attacks against our constitutional rights and unfair treatment in this country.

THE LATE BRUNO GERUSSI

TRIBUTES

Hon. Jean-Louis Roux: Honourable senators, it was my intention today to mark the passing of two distinguished representatives of Canada's artistic community. The first of these was Robertson Davies, but after hearing the moving and eloquent words of Senators Fairbairn and Doyle, I shall say no more. I shall speak only of the second great figure whom the arts have lost.

Honourable senators, I did not have the privilege of knowing the great writer Robertson Davies personally, but such was not the case with the second artist to whom I would like to pay tribute today, actor Bruno Gerussi. He died suddenly some two weeks ago, although I learned of the sad event only recently.

[English]

The son of an immigrant Italian stonemason who settled in Medicine Hat, Alberta, Bruno won a scholarship to the Banff School of Fine Arts and honed his gifts as an actor with the Seattle Repertory Theatre. He was also part of the Stratford Shakespearean Festival for many seasons, where I saw him for the first time in 1954 playing old Gobbo in the Merchant of Venice. Though playing opposite the great German actor Herbert Volk in the role of Shylock, I have kept a most vivid memory of his portrayal of that small part.

I did not know it at the time, but I myself would be part of the Stratford company two years later and would play on the festival stage with Bruno Gerussi. It is still an open question as to who had the idea of asking French-speaking Canadian actors to impersonate the French court in Henry V. I thought it might be Michael Langham, since he established the first contacts with us. Recently, Tom Patterson insisted that he was the first to have had the "great" idea. In any event, I do know that I played the French ambassador in the second scene of the first act, and Orleans in the rest of the play.

If memory serves, Bruno played various parts, including Bardolph, formerly a servant to Falstaff who became a soldier in King Henry's army.

[Translation]

• (1420)

This meeting of the two groups of actors, anglophone and francophone, was an important milestone in the history of Canadian theatre, culminating later on in the creation of the National Theatre School, among other things. Relationships were quick to develop, quite cordial ones for the most part. The cordiality was more spontaneous with some than with others, but with Bruno Gerussi, it was instantaneous. He was extremely open and friendly with us; this was a man of innate generosity.

[English]

• (1420)

We had a great time, drinking, joking, and more often rebuilding the world and reshaping our country, Canada, in a spirit of tolerance, mutual understanding and happiness.

In the late sixties, Bruno Gerussi became a young widower with two children to raise. He began to give them the best in education and comfort and, consequently, had to leave the stage. After being host of that three-hour national celebration, Morningside, one of the finest programs on CBC radio, he became the star, for 19 years, of the most successful CBC television series ever, The Beachcombers, played in 30 countries from Australia to Germany.

I very seldom saw him in The Beachcombers. As a result, the Greek character he portrayed in that program will luckily not be my last memory of Bruno. I much prefer thinking of him as Peer Gynt or Romeo, two of the innumerable characters he portrayed, mainly with the Canadian Players and with the Stratford Shakespearean Festival.

As Peer Gynt, he was capable of all the excesses, fantasies, lies and incredible fables the character borrows from the legends of his country, through which he pretends to have lived. Of all the portrayals by my friend Bruno Gerussi, his portrayal of Romeo is the one for which I most fondly remember him. He brought to Montaigne's young son the bearing of a flippant little punk, the leader of a teenage gang who liked to fight, bully, shout and quarrel. However, once he had met his Juliet, played by Julie Harris, he was transformed into a passionate lover; not a romantic ballad singer, perhaps, but an adolescent full of energy and vital strength, a truly modern lover.

From that image of Romeo, years ago, Bruno had physically turned into a Falstaffian character. Had he not renounced the stage, this part would have suited him famously. This is probably why, on learning of his sudden death, the following words came back to my mind:

...He's in Arthur's bosom, if ever man went to Arthur's bosom... A' made a finer end, and went away...at the turning o' the tide...

WORLD AIDS DAY

EFFECT OF PANDEMIC ON YOUTH

Hon. Landon Pearson: Honourable senators, I rise today to speak about AIDS-affected children and youth in conjunction with the Eighth Annual AIDS Day which was last Friday, December 1. This year, the World Health Organization has chosen the theme "Shared Rights and Responsibilities" to emphasize the importance of solidarity in the global response to HIV/AIDS.

Since the onset of the AIDS pandemic, over 1.5 million children and youth, mostly in Africa but increasingly in Asia and even in North America, have been infected with HIV. By the year 2000, it is predicted that this number will increase to between 5 and 10 million children. In addition to these sick and dying children, millions of others under the age of 10 will have lost one or both parents to AIDS. The impact of AIDS on children is devastating, whether or not they are sick. There is the terrible grief caused by the lingering death of their parents and there is physical and intellectual impoverishment.

In Africa and elsewhere, many families remove children from school to nurse their dying parents, to care for younger siblings, or to augment or replace the family's meagre income. Girls are usually the first to have to forego their education. Worse, when one or both parents die, children often find themselves rejected by relatives and other members of the community in which they live because of the stigma associated with AIDS.

Nor is Canada immune to this tragic epidemic: 12,119 cases of AIDS have been reported so far, including 116 paediatric cases of children under the age of 15. Most have died. These cases are full-blown AIDS. The numbers of HIV-infected persons in Canada is much higher, and many of these are teenagers. Those at greatest risk are street kids, gay youth, aboriginal youth and some immigrant youth. However, when we realize that 41 per cent of grade 11 students admit to being sexually active without protection, we need to recognize that the risk is more widespread than we would like to admit.

Honourable senators, it is tempting to turn away from this terrible disease. It seems so intractable. What can we do? Rather than wring our hands, we should join them with others. When we ratified the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, we undertook to share responsibility for the health of the world's children, including our own.

There is a number of things we can do. First, we must keep ourselves informed. Then we must promote awareness in others and support efforts at prevention. At home and abroad are many organizations on the front line we can help — organizations like UNICEF and Save the Children. In Canada, the Inter-Agency Coalition on AIDS and Development, a network of Canadian NGOs, AIDS service organizations and government agencies seeks to provide greater understanding of how to address the socio-economic and child welfare problems that emerge as the epidemic progresses.

Honourable senators, we must not give up on this issue. The AIDS pandemic is possibly the greatest health crisis the world will be facing as it enters the new millennium. Eventually it will affect us all, as increasing numbers of young people are felled in the prime of life. The World Health Organization has asked us to use World AIDS Day to show solidarity. Let us respond.

QUESTION PERIOD

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS

DISTRIBUTION OF VETO POWER— STATUS OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, yesterday the House of Commons read for the second time Bill C-110, an Act respecting constitutional amendments, which was referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of the House of Commons.

Having always brought to the attention of my friends the importance of Canadian harmony, when I sat in the House of Commons —

[English]

Having made many speeches on the unity of Canada, I will not repeat them all during Question Period. However, I have come to the conclusion that to have a better, more harmonious country, there should be a veto for British Columbia. I have always felt that Canada is composed of five regions. Therefore, each of the five regions should have a veto. What is given to one does not take anything away from the others. It is a recognition of facts.

Is it the intention of the government to allow amendments to Bill C-110, the study of which starts today? I have been told that the bill will be given a rather quick study in committee in order to return it early to the House of Commons for third reading, after which it will be sent to the Senate. Of course, when the bill reaches the Senate, we will have more to say about it.

Is it the intention of the government to allow committee members to present amendments at this stage pertaining to a veto for the province of British Columbia?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I understand the concern of my honourable friend. However, he will appreciate that I cannot predict or speculate about what might happen in a committee of the other place. They are just commencing their hearings. I think we will need to keep an eye on that committee as they proceed with their deliberations.

Senator Prud'homme: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate sits in cabinet. She also sits in the national Liberal caucus, which will be meeting tomorrow. Would she kindly relay to her cabinet colleagues, and to her colleagues in the national Liberal caucus, that some members of the Senate would like to see the bill amended during the committee study, adding a veto for British Columbia?

Senator Fairbairn : Honourable senators, I am sure that members in the other place read the Debates of the Senate. They will be aware of my honourable friend's views, as well as the views of others. Of course I could not — and would not — comment on anything that might go on in either the cabinet circle or within the Liberal caucus.

Senator Prud'homme: If there were discussion in the national Liberal caucus tomorrow on this issue, would the minister at least relay to her colleagues that this matter was raised today in the Senate?

Senator MacEachen: Why do you not return to the fold, Marcel?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, as we all know, discussions within caucuses are, perhaps, the most private of all discussions. Parliament Hill is a small community. I am sure that the views of my honourable friend and others are known and noted. We will keep an eye on the issue as it unfolds.

TRANSPORT

SEARCH AND RESCUE HELICOPTER REPLACEMENT PROGRAM— PURCHASE OF UNITS WITHOUT TENDER— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gerald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, my question is for the minister. On Saturday, this past weekend, the urgency of replacing the Sea King helicopters once again became evident during a dramatic rescue off the Atlantic coast. A commendation should go out to our armed forces for the dramatic rescue they accomplished.

We now learn that the federal government is not holding an open bidding process for the selection of the replacement helicopters. Instead, the government is looking to purchase American-built Sikorsky Sea Hawk helicopters without going to tender. The rationale is that the government would get this equipment at under $1 billion, thereby freeing up money to buy four British submarines. Would the minister please confirm to this chamber that her government is actually considering not going to an open bidding process to make such a purchase?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, to my honourable friend, I will take that question as notice.

SEARCH AND RESCUE HELICOPTER REPLACEMENT PROGRAM—SUITABILITY AND SAFETY OF REPLACEMENT UNITS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gerald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, as a member of cabinet, the minister must also be aware of the safety concerns regarding some of the limitations of this equipment that her government is preparing to purchase. The majority of a shipboard helicopter's flying time occurs over open water. The Sea Hawk has been proven to be unable to stay afloat in the water for three minutes after shut-down. Given these limitations, can the minister confirm that her government has actually minimized that requirement for the new purchase — in other words, downgraded it from essential to desirable to fit the Sea Hawk's limitation? Also, are she and her colleagues in cabinet actually willing to put the lives of our armed forces at risk by purchasing unsafe equipment in order to strike a good deal and to get the submarines?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, to my honourable friend, the answer to the latter part of his question is, "definitely not." Obviously, it is the position of the government that it will be making these purchases with exactly the opposite in mind — that is, to ensure the safety of the people who operate the helicopters and, as well, the best possible results for those who have need of them.

I am a little puzzled by my honourable colleague's comments in that it has been my understanding that the competition for this purchase will be open to any bidder who can meet the specifications required. However, I will check to see if there has been any change. I know that interest in this subject has been expressed in the media but, as far as I am aware, the situation has not changed.

Finally, I would like to express, I am sure, on behalf of everyone in this chamber, very hearty and heart-felt congratulations to the crew of the helicopter and indeed the crew of HMCS Calgary, which I had the distinct honour of commissioning last June, for a very successful mission. They have done a splendid job. It is quite uplifting to see the speed and the tenacity with which they handled what could have been an extremely tragic situation. It was a fine job, and I am sure we would all want to congratulate them.

Senator Comeau: Honourable senators, I simply want to be absolutely sure that there will be a completely open bidding process. I want to be absolutely sure that this will not be a non-bidder purchase.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, to my knowledge, the government has made that quite clear. I will check on that matter but, to the best of my knowledge, bids will be called for and, as I said earlier, are open to any bidder who meets the specifications of the requirements. I do not believe there has been any change on that, but I will check.

EMPLOYMENT

FLUCTUATIONS IN JOB CREATION STATISTICS—
SITUATION IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Fernand Roberge: Honourable senators, employment figures for the month of November are quite disturbing. A net total of 64,000 jobs disappeared. Those 64,000 jobs were lost, if you exclude the growth in part-time employment. In the past 12 months, the Canadian economy generated only 41,000 new jobs, compared to an average of 189,000 new jobs per year over the past decade. That is not enough to give jobs to the young people now coming into the labour force. In fact, the number of youths aged 15 to 24 with jobs is down by 69,000 over this past year. The youth unemployment rate stands at 15.2 per cent. While the government likes to talk about the infrastructure program, Canada has 51,000 fewer jobs in construction, less than a year ago.

I find these figures quite disturbing. Does the government have an explanation for what is happening in the job market?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Roberge will know that in the past two years there has been a very high level of job creation in this country. There is no question that the figures that came out just a few days ago were disappointing in terms of the fall in employment in November, which declined in terms of full-time employment but increased in terms of part-time employment. At any rate, the industries that were most affected in this area were goods-producing industries, service industries, as the honourable senator would know. The indicators are that the economy is not moving as swiftly as any of us would wish. Despite the employment decline in November, the average level of employment for the past two months is at 0.7 per cent, which on an annual basis is above its third quarter level — not much, but a bit above. If there is one hopeful sign, it is the increase in the help-wanted index across this country.

Honourable senators, having said all that, the statistics are deeply distressing. Because of the increase on the one hand and the decrease on the other hand, we are not seeing a change in the unemployment percentage in Canada. The rate has to be of great concern to all of us. It certainly is to the government, which is why it is putting a continued emphasis not just on job-creation measures but also on efforts to help Canadians. For example, training, retraining and skill development are in some of the new measures that have been put on the table by the Minister of Human Resources Development. The country is making a distinct effort, and the government along with it, to get Canadians working and to a level where they can be competitive in the job market. This is very much at the heart of the government's agenda.

Senator Roberge: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question on Quebec, where the figures are even more disturbing. In November 2,000 jobs were lost. Compared to one year ago, employment is up by only 2,000 jobs. Eleven per cent of the labour force is without work, and for young people, the rate is 18.7 per cent. In the last 12 months, 25,000 manufacturing jobs have disappeared in Quebec. In view of those figures, is the government prepared to take new measures to deal with the continuing problem of high unemployment, both in Quebec and the rest of Canada?

Senator Fairbairn: The government is constantly attempting to act in one particular area of which this house is well aware, and that is our economic situation generally, including the control of our deficit, and the keeping down of our interest rates. One of the best ways of increasing jobs for Canadians, and for young Canadians in particular, is to remain very firm on the targets we have outlined.

• (1450)

The question of youth employment, and the entry of young people into the job market, is deeply disturbing. As my honourable friend is probably aware, over recent months special programs have been introduced with a view to training young people for the job market so that they can gain the kind of experience that will permit them to enter and prosper in that market. I am sure continued efforts will be made along that line.

I know when my honourable friend reads the statistics that are in his possession, any words that I could say to him would not be sufficient. However, the fundamental answer I will give him is that, yes, this situation is of incredible concern to the Canadian government. We will be working in every way we can to alleviate this situation, and give our young people the best opportunity to acquire the experience and the background to enable them to enter the job market.

NATIONAL FINANCE

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX—STATUS OF INTERGOVERNMENTAL NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, I have two questions. The first one is easy. It is my way of sympathizing with the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I am referring to the difficulty she had in responding to the previous question. She quoted two-year-old statistics. She mentioned the job increases of two years ago. She quoted percentages. The fact is that it is very difficult for the government to explain its inaction and the results of its inaction. The measures she mentioned earlier will make it easier for her to provide answers the next time questions dealing with unemployment and employment statistics are put to her. That was my preamble.

A Liberal Party propaganda document was released last week during a Liberal fund-raising dinner. It outlines the policy achievements of the Liberal Party. It did not, however, say anything about following up on the Liberal Party of Canada's promise to eliminate the GST.

My question is this: Can the Leader of the Government report on the status of negotiations between her government and the provinces that could lead, if not to the elimination of the GST, at least to a major change in this tax?

[English]

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as I have said before in this house, the Minister of Finance has been engaged in such negotiations over a period of time, and his discussions with the provinces on the subject of the GST and its harmonization are a continuing priority. He is still hard at it.

Senator Simard: Do you suppose it will take less than two years?

Senator Fairbairn: I would say to my honourable friend that it might take a little bit of time and a great deal of patience. The Minister of Finance is determined that he will achieve his goals on this particular and very thorny issue, and that he will take the time to get it right. That is what he is attempting to do.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX— TIMING OF RESIGNATION OF DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: By way of supplementary, it has been 778 days since Sheila Copps, the Deputy Prime Minister, made the following statement:

I have already said personally and directly that if the GST is not abolished I'll resign. I don't know how clear you can get. I think you gotta be accountable for the things that you say you're going to do, and you have to deliver on them.

Given that the Liberal government has already broken its promise to Canadians to abolish the GST, when can we expect the Deputy Prime Minister to deliver on her personal commitment to resign? To put it another way, if she will not resign, will Mr. Chrétien undertake to fire her?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wish to assure my honourable friend that the Minister of Finance is pursuing the question of replacing the GST. He indicates to me that there has been some progress on that issue. That is very encouraging.

I am sure that the Minister of Finance would wish me to assure my honourable friend as well that he will be acting in such a way that no thought need be given of the Deputy Prime Minister having to resign; we will all be celebrating the fulfilment of our goal.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX—UNDERTAKING OF PRIME MINISTER ON DEADLINE ON REPLACEMENT— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, by way of supplementary, it is good to know that the Minister of Finance is so encouraged by the progress being made on this matter, because he is facing a deadline. The deadline was set by the Right Honourable Prime Minister quite recently when he undertook that Mr. Martin would bring in a replacement tax for the GST in his next budget, expected in February. Would the Leader of the Government confirm that undertaking now?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would not begin to speculate, even in the broadest way, about what might or might not be in the upcoming budget. Suffice it to say that the Minister of Finance is working away. From the moment that he took on the job, he has been of the view that he had a couple of alternatives with respect to the GST and its replacement. He could either do it fast, or he could do it right. He is working along the latter track. Although an agreement with the provinces is not yet in sight, I would repeat that he is expressing encouraging progression.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I was not asking my friend to speculate on what might be in the next budget. I was asking her to confirm the undertaking given by the Prime Minister with regard to the GST. She may wish to consult Mr. Chrétien on this matter.

OLD AGE SECURITY—UNDERTAKING OF PRIME MINISTER
DURING REFERENDUM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lowell Murray: While the honourable leader is doing that, would she also confirm the undertaking which the Prime Minister gave during the recent referendum to the effect that, in the forthcoming budget, Mr. Martin would not be taking any action which would negatively affect old age pensions?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have gone as far as I want to go with respect to the progress being made on the GST. I wholeheartedly support the Prime Minister and his views in relation to having a replacement for this tax as quickly as possible.

On the question of seniors, I believe the Prime Minister and others have made it very clear that nothing will be done to cause any concern to seniors currently receiving pensions.

• (1500)

As my honourable friend knows, the five-year review is proceeding on the Canada Pension Plan. The last budget of the Minister of Finance indicated that a public paper would be produced, after public discussion had taken place, on the question of the sustainability of the Canada Pension Plan. We want to guarantee for seniors the future security they deserve. During the referendum, the Prime Minister and others commented on the security of current pensioners. I have no reason to believe that there is any change at all.

Senator Murray: My honourable friend referred to the Canada Pension Plan, which is a separate issue. For greater certainty, when she is asking the Prime Minister's Office for confirmation of this undertaking, my understanding of his commitment is that it was with regard to the recipients of the Old Age Security and Guaranteed Income Supplement.

Senator Fairbairn: I believe my honourable friend is correct.

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE REFORM—MEETING BETWEEN REPRESENTATIVES OF FEDERAL AND NEW BRUNSWICK
GOVERNMENTS—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTATION

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government. I am asking her, in fact, to table all documents exchanged between the Government of New Brunswick and the federal government regarding the reform of unemployment insurance or employment insurance, which is the term used in the document tabled last week by the minister, Mr. Axworthy. Could the Leader of the Government undertake to table these documents within a week, preferably before the Christmas break?
