The copy filmed here has been reproduced thanks to the generosity of:

Library of the Public Archives of Canada

The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol → (meaning "CONTINUED"), or the symbol ▼ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

L'exemplaire filmé fut reproduit grâce à la générosité de:

La bibliothèque des Archives publiques du Canada

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par le dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une teile empreinte.

Un des symboles suivants apparaîtra sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole → signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole ▼ signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents.
Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent la méthode.

ADDRESS.

The under figured Members of the House of Representatives, to their of species Constituents.

A Republic has for its basis the capacity and right of the peeple to govern themselves. A main principle of a representative republic is the responsibility of the representatives to their constituents. Freedom and publicity of debate are effential to the preservation of such forms of government. Every arbitrary abridgment of the right of speech in representatives, is a direct infringement of the liberty of the people. Every unnecessary conceasement of their proceedings an approximation towards tyranny. When, by systematic rules, a majority takes to itself the right, at its pleasure, of limiting speech, or denying it, altogether, when secret sessions multiply; and in proportion to the importance of questions, is the studious conceasement of debate, a people may be assured, that, such practices continuing, their freedom is but short lived.

Reflections, such as these, have been forced upon the attention of the undersigned, Members of the House of Representatives, of the United States, by the events of the present session of Congress. They have witnessed a principle, adopted as the law of the House, by which, under a novel application of the previous question, a power is assumed by the majority to deny the privilege of Speech, at any stage, and under any circumstances of debate. And recently, by an unprecedented assumption, the right to give reasons for an original motion, has been made, to depend upon the will of the majority.

Principles more hostile than these to the existence of representative liberty, cannot easily be conceived. It is not, however on these accounts, weighty as they are, that the undersigned have undertaken this address. A subject of higher and more immediate importance impels them to the prefent duty.

The mementous question of war, with Great Britain, is decided. On this topic, so vital to your interests, the right of public debate, in the face of the world and especially of their constituents, has been denied to your representatives. They have been called into secret session, on this most interesting of all your public relations, although the circumstances of the time and of the nation, afforded no one reason for secrecy, unless it be found in the apprehension of the effect of public debate, on public opinion; or of public opinion on the result of the vote.

Except the meliage of the Prelident of the United States, which is now before the public, nothing confidential was communicated. That meliage contained no fast, not previously, known. No one reason for war was intimated, but such as was of a nature public and notorious. The intention to wage war, and invade Canada, had been long since openly avowed. The object of hostile menace had been estentationally announced. The inadequacy of both our army and navy, for successful invasion, and the insufficiency of the fortifications for the security of our seaboard were, every where, known. Yet the doors of Congress were that upon the people. They have been carefully kept in ignorance of the progress of measures, until the purposes of administration were confummated, and the fate of the country fealed. In a fituation fo extraordinary, the underligned have deemed it their duty by no act of theirs to fanction a proceeding, so hovel and arbitrary. sy, they made every attempt in their power, to attain publicity for their proceedings. All fuch attempts were vain. When this, momentous Jubject was stated, as for debate i they demanded that the doors should be opened.

This being refused, they declined discussion ; being perfectly convinced, from indications, too plain to be miljunderstood, that, in the house, all argument, with closed doors, was hopeless; and that any act, giving implied validity to to flagrant an abuse of power, would be little tion, to which the underligned have thus been reduced, they are compelled, reluctantly to refort to this public declaration of fuch views of the flate and relations of the country, as determined their judgment and Vote upon the question of war. A measure of this kind has appeared to the underligned to be more imperiously demanded, by the circumstance of a message and manifesto being, prepared, and circulated at public expence, in which the causes for war were enumerated and the motives for it concentrated, in a manner fuited to agitate and influence the public mind In executing this talk, it will be the fludy of the underligned to reconcile the great duty, they owe to the people, with that con litutional respect, which is due to the administrators of public con-

In commencing this view of our affairs, the underfigned would fail · in du y themselves; did they refrain from recurring to the course, in relation to public measures, which they adopted and have undeviatingly purfued from the commencement, of this long and eventful fellion; in which they deliberately secrificed every minor consideration to, what they deemed, the belt interests of the country.

For a fuccession of years the underligued have from principle disapproved, a feries of restrictions upon commerce, according to their estimation, inefficient as respected foreign nations and injurious, chiefly to ourielves. Success in the system, had become identified with the pride, the character, and the bone of our cabinet. As is natural with men, who have a great stake depending on the success of a favorite theory, pertinacity feemed to increase as its hopelessness became apparent. the inefficiency of this system could not be admitted, by its advocates, without enfuring its abandonment, ill fuccels was, carefully attributed to the influence of opposition.

To this cause the people were taught to charge its successive failured and not to its intrinsic imbecility. In this state of things the underligned deemed it proper, to take away all apology for adherence to this oppreflive fystem. They were desirous, at a period so critical in public affairs, as far as was confiftent with the independence of opinion, to contribute to the restoration of harmony in the public councils, and concord among the people. And if any advantage could be thus obtained in our foreign relations, the underlighed, being engaged, in no purpole of personal or party advancement, would rejoice, in such an occur-

The course of public measures also, at the opening of the session, gave hope that an enlarged and enlightened fystem of defence, with provision, for or fecurity of our maritime rights, was about to be commenced. A purpofe, which, wherever found, they deemed it their duty to foller, by giving, to any fystem of measures, thus comprehensive, as unobstructed a course as was consistent with their general sense of public duty. After a course of policy, thus liberal and conciliatory, it was cause of regret that a communication should have been purchased by an unprecedented expenditure of fecret fervice money; and used, by the chief magistrate, to disseminate suspicion and jealousy; and to excite resentment, among the citizens, by fuggelling imputations against a portion of them, as unmerited by their patriotism, as unwarranted by evidence.

It has always been the opinion of the undersigned, that a system of peace was the policy, which most comported with the character, condition, and interest of the United States. That their remoteness from the theatre of contest, in Europe, was their peculiar felicity and that nothing but a necessity, absolutely imperious should induce them to enter as parties into wars, in which every confideration of virtue and policy feems to be forgotten, under the overbearing fway of rapacity and am-There is a new era in human affairs. The European world is convulsed. The advantages of our own fituation are peculiar. "Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and profperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalihip, interest, humour, or

In addition to the many moral and prudential confiderations, which should deter thoughtful men from hastening into the perils of such a war, there were some peculiar to the United States, resulting from the texture of the government and the political relations of the people. A form of government, in no small degree experimental, composed of powerful and independent fovereignties affociated in relations, some of which are critical, as well as novel, should not be hastily precipitated into fituations, calculated to put to trial, the strength of the moral bond, by which they are united 'Of all states, that of war, is most likely to call into activity the passions, which are holdile and dangerous to fuch a form of government. Time is yet important to our country to fettle and mature its recent institutions. Above all, it appeared to the underlighed from fight not to be mistaken, that if we entered upon this war, we did it as a divided people; not only from a sense of the inadequacy of our means to fuccess, but from moral and political objections of great weight and very general influence.

It appears to the underlighed, that the wrongs, of which the United States have to complain. although in some aspects, very grievous to our interests, and in many, humiliating to our pride, were yet of a nature, which, in the present state of the world, either would not justify war, or which war would not remedy. Thus, for instance, the hovering of British vessels upon our coasts, and the occasional insults to our ports, imperioully demanded fuch a systematic application of harbor and fea coast defence, as would repel fuch aggressions, but, in no light, can they be considered as making a resort to war, at the present time, on the part of the United States, either necessary, or expedient. So also, with respect to the Indian war, of the origin of which, but very impersect information has as yet been given to the public. Without any express act of Congress, an expedition was, last year, set on foot and profecuted into Indian territory, which had been relinquished by treaty, on the part of the United States. And now we are told about the agency of British traders, as to Indian hostilities. It deserves confideration, whether there has been such provident attention, as would have been proper to remove any cause of complaint, either real or inaginary, which the Indians might alledge, and to fecure their friend. With all the fympathy and anxiety excited by the flate of that frontier; important as it may be, to apply adequate means of protection, against the Indians, how is its safety ensured by a declaration ofwar, which adds the British to the number of enemies?

As "a decent respect to the opinions of mankind" has not induced the two houses of Congress to concur in declaring the reasons, or motives, for their enacting a declaration of war, the undersigned and the public are left to search, essewhere, for causes either real, or ostensible. If we are to consider the President of the United States, and the committee of the house of Representatives, on foreign relations, as speaking on this solemn occasion, for Congress, the United States have three principal topics of complaint against Great-Britain. Impressments blockades ; and orders in council.

Concerning the subject of impressiments, the undersigned sympathize with our unfortunate seamen, the victims of this abuse of power, and participate in the national sensibility, on their account. They do not conceal from themselves, both its importance and its difficulty; and they are well aware how stubborn is the will and how blind the vision of powerful nations, when great interests grow into controversy.

But, before a refort to war for such interests, a moral nation will consider what is just, and a wise nation what is expedient. If the exercise of any right to the sull extent of its abstract nature, be inconsistent with the safety of another nation, morality seems to require that, in practice, its exercise should, in this respect, be modified. If it be proposed to vindicate any right by war, wisdom demands that it should be of a nature, by war to be obtained. The interests connected with the subjects of impressments are unquestionably great to both nations. And in the full extent of abstract right as assented by each, perhaps irreconcilable.

The government of the United States afferts that the broad principle that the flag of their merchant vessels shall protect the marriners. This privilege is claimed, although every person on board, except the captain may be an alien.

The British government afferts that the allegiance of their subjects is inalienable, in time of war, and that their seamen, found on the sea, the common highway of nations, shall not be projected, by the slag of pai-wate merchant vessels.

The underligned deem it unnecessary here to discuss the question of the American claim, for the immunity of their flag. But they count refrain from viewing it as a principle, of a nature very broad and comprehensive; to the abuse of which, the temptations are strong and numerous. And they do maintain that, before the calamities of war, in vindication of such a principle be incurred all the means of negociation should be exhausted, and that also every practicable attempt should be made to regulate the exercise of the right, so that the scknowledged injury, resulting to other nations should be checked, if not prevented. They are clearly of opinion that the peace of this happy and rising community should not be abandoned, for the sake of affording facilities to cover French property; or to employ British seamen.

The claim of Great Britain to the services of her seamen is neither novel nor peculiar. The doctrine of allegiance for which she contends is common to all the governments of Europe. France, as well as England, has maintained it for centuries. Both nations claim, in time of war the services of their subjects, Both by decrees forbid them entering into foreign employ. Both recall them by proclamation.

No man can doubt that in the present state of the French marine, if American merchant vessels were met at sea, having French seamen on board, that France would take them. Will any man believe that the United States would go to war against France, on this account!

For very obvious reasons, this principle occasions little collision with France, or with any other nation, except England! With the English nation the people of the United States are closely affimulated, in blood, language, intercourse, habits, dress, manners and character. When Britain is at war and the United States neutral, the merchant service of the United States, holds out to British seamen, temptations almost irresistable; high wages and peaceful employ, instead of low wages and war service;—satety, in lieu of hazard; entire independence, in the place of qualified servitude.

That England whose situation is insular, who is engaged in a war, apparently for existence, whose seamen are her bulwark, should look upon the effect of our principle upon her safety, with jewlousy, is inevitable; and that the will not hazard the practical consequences of its unregulated exercise, is certain. The question, therefore, prefented, directly, for the decision of the thoughtful and virtuous mind, in this country, is whether war, for such an abstract right be justifiable, before attempting to guard against its injurious tendency by legislative regulation in failure of treaty.

A dubious right should be advanced with hesitation. An extreme right should be afferted with discretion. Moral duty requires, that a nation, before it appeals to arms, should have been not only true to itself, but that it should have failed, in no duty to others. If the exercise of a right, in an unregulated manner, be in effect, a standing invitation to the subjects of a foreign power to become deserters and traitors, is it no injury to that power it Certainly, moral obligation demands that the right of flag, like all other human rights should be so used, as that, while it protests what is our ows, it should not injury that is another's. In a practical view, and so long as the right of flag is restrained, by no regard to the undeniable interests of others, a war on account of impressments, is only a war for the right of employing British seamen, on board American merchant vessels.

The claim of Great Britain pretends to no further extent than to take British seamen from private merchant vessels. In the exercise of this claim, her officers take American seamen, and foreign seamen, in the American service; and although she disclaims such abuses, and profess redress, when known, yet undoubtedly grievous injuries have resulted to the seamen of the United States. But the question is, can war be proper for such cause, before all hope of reasonable accommodation has sailed? Even after the extinguishment of such hope, can it be proper, until our own practice be so regulated as to remove in such foreign nation, any reasonable apprehension of injury.

The underlighed are clearly of opinion that the employment of British feamen, in the merchant service of the United States, is as little reconcilable with the permanent, as the present interests of the United States. The encouragement of foreign seamen is the discouragement of the native American.

The duty of government towards this valuable class of men, is not only to protect, but to patronize them. And this cannot be done more effectually than by fecuring, to American citizens the privileges of A. merican navigation.

The question of impressment, like every other question relative to commerce has been treated, in such a manner, that what was possessed is lost without obtaining what was sought. Pretensions, right in theory, and important in interest, urged, without due consideration of our relative power, have eventuated in a practical abandonment, both of what we hoped and what we enjoyed. In attempting to spread our slag overforeigners, its distinctive character has been lost to our own citizens.

The American feaman whose interest it is to have no competitors, in his employment, is facrificed, that British seamen may have equal privileges with himfelf.

Ever fince the United States have been a nation this subject has been a matter of complaint and negotiation; and every former administration have treated it according to its obvious nature, as a subject rather for arrangement than for war. It existed in the time of Washington, yet this father of his country recommended no such refort. It existed in the time of Adams, yet notwithstanding the zeal, in support of our maritime rights, which distingushed his administration, war was never suggested by him, as the remedy. During the eight years Mr. Jesterson shood at the helm of affairs, it still continued a subject of controversy and negotiation; but it was never made a cause for war. It was reserved for the present administration to press this topic to the extreme and most dreading refort of nations; although England has officially disavowed the right of impressment, as it respects native citizens, and an arrangement might well be made, consistent with the fair pretentions of such as are naturalized.

That the real flate of this question may be understood, the underfigned recur to the following facts as supported by official documents. Mr. King when minister in England, obtained a disavowal of the British government of the right to impress "America seamen," naturalized as well as natives, on the high seas. An arrangement had avanced, nearly to a conclusion, upon this basis, and was broken off only, because Great Britain insisted to retain the right on "the narrow seas." What, however, was the opinion of the American minister, on the probability of an arrangement, appears from the public documents, communicated to congress, in the session of 1808, as stated by Mr. Madison, in these words, "at the moment the articles were expected to be signed, an exception of "the narrow seas" was urged and insisted on by Lord St. Vincents, and being utterly inadmissible on our part, the negociation was abandoned."

Mr. King feems to be of opinion, however, " that, with more time than was left him for the experiment, the objection might have been overcome." What time was left Mr. King for the experiment, or whether any was ever made has not been disclosed to the public. Mr. King foon after returned to America: It is manifest from Mr. King's expression that he was limited in point of time, and it is equally clear that his opinion was that an adjustment could take place. That Mr. Madison was also of the same opinion is demonstrated, by his letters to Messis. Monroe and Pinkney, dated the 3d of February, 1807, in which he uses these expressions. "I take it for granted that you have not failed to make due use of the arrangement concerted by Mr. King with Lord Hawksbury, in the year 1802, for settling the question of impress. On that eccosion and under that administration, the British poinciple was fairly rensunced in favor of the right of our flag, Lord Hawksbury baving agreed to probibit impressments on the high feas," and Lord St. Vincents requiring nothing more than an exception of the narrow feas, an exception resting on the obsolete claim of Great Britain to some peculiar dominion over them." Here then we have a full acknowledgement that Great Britain was willing to renounce the right of impressment on the high feas, in favor of our flag; that the was anxious to arrange the subject.

It further appears that the British ministry called for an interview with Mess. Monroe and Pinkney, on this topic; that they stated the nature of the claim, the King's prerogative : that they had confulted the crown officers and the board of admiralty, who all concurred in fentiment, that under the circumstances of the nation the relinquishment of the right was a measure, which the government could not adopt, without taking on itself a responsibility, which no ministry would be willing to meet, however pressing the exigency might They offered, however, on the part of Great Britain, to pass laws making it penal for British commanders to impress American citizens, on board of American vessels, on the high seas, if America would pass a law, making it penal for the officers of the United States to grant certificates of citizenship to British subjects. This will be found, in the fame documents, in a letter from Messrs. Monroe and Pinkney to Mr. Madison, dated 11th November, 1806. Under their peremptory instructions, this proposition, on the part of Great Britain, could not be acceded to by our ministers. Such, however, was the temper and anxiety of England, and such the candor and good sense of our ministers, that an honorable and advantageous arrangement did take place. The authority of Mr. Monroe, then minister at the court of Great Britain, now Secretary of State, and one of the present administration, who have recommended war with England, and affigned impressments as a cause, supports the undersigned in afferting, that it was honorable and advantegeous: for in a letter from Richmond dated the 28th of February, 1808, to Mr. Madison, the following expressions are used by Mr. Monroe, "I have on the contrary always believed and still do believe that the ground on which that interest (impressment) was placed by the paper of the British Commissioners of 8th November, 1806, and the explanation which accompanied it, was both honorable and advantageous to the United States, that it contained a concession in their favor on the part of Great Britain, on the great principle in contestation, never be-fore made by a formal and obligatory act of their government, which gas highly favorable to their interest."

With the opinion of Mr. King fo decidedly expressed, with the official admission of Mr. Madison, with the explicit declaration of Mr. Monroe, all concurring that Great Britain was ready to abandon impresiment on the high seas, and with an honorable and advantageous arrangament, actually made by Mr. Monroe, how can it be pretended, that all hope of fettlement, by treaty, has failed; how can this subject furnish a proper cause of war?

With respect to the subject of blockades; the principle of the law of nations, as afferted by the United States, is, that a blockade can only be justified when supported by an adequate force. In theory this principle is admitted by Great Britain. It is alleged, however, that in practice, she difregards that principle.

The order of blockade, which has been made a specific ground of complaint, by France, is that of the 16th of May, 1806. Yet strange as it may feem, this order, which is, now, made one ground of war between the two countries was, at the time of its first issuing, viewed as an act of favor and conciliation. On this subject it is necessary to be explicit. The vague and indeterminate manner, in which, the American and French governments, in their official papers, speak of this order of blockade, is calculated to millead. An importance is attached to it, of which, in the opinion of the underlighed, it is not worthy. Let the facts speak for themselves.

In August, 1804, the British established a blockade at the entranceof the French ports, naming them, from Fecamp to Oftend; and from their proximity to the British coasts, and the absence of all complaint, we may be permitted to believe that it was a legal blockade, enforced according to the usages of nations. On the 16th of May, 1806, the English Secretary of State, Mr. Fox, notified, to our Minister, at London, that his government had thought fit to direct necessary measures to be taken for the blockade of the coasts, rivers and ports, from the river Elbe to the river Breft, both inclusive.

* The terms of the order are these; " That the faid coast, rivers, and ports must! be confidered as blockaded," but" that fuch blockade shall not extend to prevent mentral thing and yell the laden with goods, not being the property of his Maisfly is

In point of fact, as the terms used in the order, will show this paper, which has become, a substantive and avowed cause for non intercourse, embargo and war, is a blockade, only of the places, on the French coalt, from Ostend to the Seine, and even as to these it is, merely, as it professes to be, a continuance of a former and existing blockade. For with respect to the residue of the coast, trade of neutrals is admitted, with the exception only, of enemy's property and articles coutraband of war, which are liable to be taken, without a blockade; and except the direct colonial trade of the enemy, which Great Britain denied to be free by the law of nations. Why the order was thus extended, in its form, while in effect it added nothing to orders and regulations, already existing, will be known by adverting to papers, which are before the world. In 1806, France, had yet colonies and the wound inflict 1 on our feelings, by the interference of the British government in our trade, with those colonies, had been the cause of remonstrance and negociation. At the moment when the order of May 1806, was made, Mr. Monroe, the present Secretary of State, then our minister plenipotentiary at the Court of Great Britain, was in treaty on the subject of the carrying trade, and judging on the spot, and at the time, he, unhesitatingly, gave his opinion, that the order was made to favor American views and interests. This idea is unequivocally expressed, in Mr. Monroe's letters to Mr. Madison of the 17th, and 20th of May, and of the oth of June, 1806.

And as late as October, 1611, the fame Gentleman, writing as Secretary of State to the British minister, speaking of the same order of blockade of May. 1806, says, "it strictly was little more than a blockade of the coast from Seine to Ostend." "The object was to afford to the United States an accommodation respecting the colonial trade."

It appears, then, that this order, was, in point of fact, made to favor our trade and was fo understood and admitted by the government of this country, at that time and fince; that, instead of extending prior enemies, and not being contraband of war, from approaching the faid coaft, and entering into and failing from the faid rivers and ports, four and encept the coaft, rivers, and ports, from Oftend to the river seine, already in a flate of first and rigorous blockade; and which are to be confidered as so continued," with a provise that the vessels "entering had not been lades at a port belonging to, or in possession of, the enemies of Great Britain, and the vessels departing were not destined to an enemy's port, or had previously broken blockade."

† The following are extracts from these letters. In that of the 17th May, 1806, he thus speaks of that blockade. It is "couched in terms of rastraint, and prosesses to extend the blockade surther than was heretofore done, neverthelest it sake it from many ports already blockaded, indeed, from all East of Othend, and, West of the Scine, except in articles contraband of war and enemy's property, which are seizable without blockade. And in like form of exception, considering every enemy as one power, it admits the trade of neutrals, within the same limits, to be free in the productions of enemies' colonies, in every, but the direct route between the colony and the parent country." I Monroe adds, "It cannot be doubted that the note was drawn by the government in reference to the question, as if intended as the foundation of a treaty, must be viewed in a favorable light." On the 20th of May Mr. Monroe writes to Mr. Madison, that he had been "freegthened in the opinion that the order of the zoth was drawn with a view to the question of our trade with enemies' colonies, and that it promises to be highly fatisfactory to our-commercial interests."

blockades it lessened them; that the country from Seine to Brest, and from Ostend to Elbe was inserted to open them to our colonial trade and for our accommodation, and that it was never made the subject of complaint, by the American government, during its practical continuance 1—that is, not until the first order in council; and indeed not until the 1st of May 1810; and until after the American government was apprized of the ground, which it was the will of France should be taken upon the fubject.

Of this we have the most decisive proof, in the offers, made under the administration of Mr. Jefferson, for the discontinuance of the Embargo as it related to Great Britain; none of which required the repeal of the blockade of May 1806; and also in the arrangement made during the administration of Mr. Madison, and under his eye with Mr. Erskine. The non-intercourse act of March 1809, and the act "concerning commercial intercourse" of May 1810, vest the President of the United States with the very fame power, in the very fame terms. Both authorife him " in case either Great Britain or France shall so revoke or modify her edicts, as that they shall cease to violate the neutral commerce of the United States" to declare the fame by proclamation. And by the provisions of one law in such case, non-intercourse was to cease; by these of the other it was to be revived. In consequence of power vested, by the first act, the arrangement with Erskine was made and the revocation of the orders in council of January and November 1807, was confidered as a full compliance with the law and as removing all the anti neutral edicts. The blockade of May 1806, was not included in the arrangement, and it does not appear, that it was deemed of fufficent importance to engage even a thought. Yet under the act of May 1810, which vests the very same power, a revocation of this blockade of May 1806, is made by our cabinet a fine qua non; an indispenfable requisite! And now, after the British minister has directly avowed that this order of blockade would not continue after a revocation of the orders in council, without a due application of an adequate force, the existence of this blockade, is insisted upon, as a justifiable cause of war, notwithstanding, that our government admits a blockade is legal, to the maintenance of which an adequate force is applied.

The underlighted are aware, that, in justification of this new ground, it is now faid that the extension on paper, for whatever purpose intended, favors the principle of paper blockades. This however, can hardly be urged, since the British, formally, disavow the principle; and since they acknowledge, the very doctrine of the law of nations, for which

Mr. Fafter in his letter of the 3d July, 1811, to Mr. Monroe thus flates the doctrine; maintained by his government.

&quot;Great Britain has never attempted to difforte that, in the ordinary coarfe of the law of nations, no blockade can be justifiable or valid, unless it be supported by an "adequate force destined to maintain it and to expose to hazard all vessels attempting to evade its operation.

&quot;Mr. Foster in his letter to Mr. Monroe of the 26th July, 1811, also says, The blockade of May 1896, will not continue after the repeal of the orders in council unless his Majesty's government that thick fit to suffain it by the special application of a sufficient naval force, and the sac of its being se continued, or not, with a notified at the time.

the American administration contend, henceforth, the existence of a blockade becomes a question of fact: it must depend upon the evidence adduced, in support of the adequacy of the blockading force.

From the preceding statement it is apparent, that whatever there is objectionable, in the principle of the order of May 1806, or in the practice under it, on ground merely American, it cannot be set up as a sufficient cause of war; for until France, pointed it out, as a cause of controversy, it was so far from being regarded, as a source of any new, or grievous complaint, that it was actually considered, by our government, in a savorable light.

The British Orders in Council are the remaining source of discontent, and avowed cause of war. These, have, heretosore, been considered, by our government in connexion with the French decrees. Certainly, the British Orders in council and French decrees, form a system subversive of neutral rights, and constitute just grounds of complaint, yet, viewed, relatively to the condition of those powers towards each other, and of the United States towards both, the undersigned cannot persuade themselves that the Orders in Council, as they now exist and with their present effect and operation, justify the selection of Great Britain as our enemy; and render necessary a declaration of unqualified war.

Every confideration of moral duty, and political expedience, feems to concur in warning the United States, not to mingle in this hopeless, and to human eye, interminable European contest. Neither France, nor England, pretends that their aggressions can be defended, on the ground of any other belligerent right, than that of particular necessity.

Both attempt to justify their encroachments, on the general law of nations, by the plea of retaliation. In the relative position, and proportion of strength of the United States, to either belligerent, there appeared little probability, that we could compel the one, or the other, by hostile operations, to abandon this plea.

And as the field of commercial enterprise, after allowing to the decrees and orders, their full practical effect, is ftill rich and extensive. there feemed, as little wisdom as obligation to yield, solid and certain realities, for unattainable pretentions. The right of retaliation, as exifting, in either belligerent, it was impossible, for the United States. confistent with either its duty, or interest, to admit. Yet such was the flate of the decrees, and orders of the respective belligerents, in relation to the rights of neutrals, that, while, on the one hand, it formed, no justification to either, so on the other, concurrent circumstances, formed a complete justification to the United States, in maintaining, not. withstanding these encroachments, provided it best comported with their interests, that system of is partial neutrality, which is so desirable to their peace and prosperity. For if it should be admitted, which no course of argument can maintain, that the Berlin decree, which was issued on the 21st of November, 1806, was justified, by the antecedent orders of the British admiralty, respecting the colonial trade, and by the order of blockade of the 16th of May, preceding, yet, on this account, there resulted no right of retaliation to France, as it respect 1 the United States. They had expressed no acquiescence either in the British interference with the colonial trade, or in any extension of the principles of blockade. Besides, had there been any such neglect, on the part of the United States, as warranted the French emperor in adopting his principle of retaliation, yet in the exercise of that pretended right, he past the bounds of both public law and decency; and, in the very extravagance of that exercise, lost the advantage of whatever colour the British had afforded to his pretences. Not content with adopting a principle of retaliation. in terms limited, and appropriate, to the injury of which he complained, he declared, " all the British Islands, in a state of blockade; prohibited all commerce and correspondence with them, all trade in their manufactures; and made lawful prize of all merchandize, belonging to England, or coming from its manufactories, and colonies." The violence of these encroachments was equalled only by the infidiousness of the terms, and manner, in which they were promulgated. The scope of the expressions of the Berlin decree, was fo general that it embraced within its sphere, the whole commerce of neutrals with England. Yet Decrees, Minister of the Marine of France, by a formal note, of the 24th Dec. 1806, affured our minister Plenipotentiary, that the imperial decree, of the 21st Nov-1806, " was not to aff. If our commerce, which would fill be governed by the rules of the treaty, established between the two countries." Notwithstanding this assurance, however, on the 18th Sept. following, Regnier Grand Minister of julice, declared " that the intentions of the Emperor were that, by virtue of that decree, French armed veffels, might feize in neutral veffels, either English property, or merchandise proceeding from English manufacto. ries; and that he had referved, for future decision the question whether they might not possess themselves of neutral vossels going to, or from England, although they had no English manufactures on board." Pretensions, so obvioully, exceeding any measure of retaliation that, if the precedent acts, of the British government, had afforded to such a resert, and colour of right, it was lost in the violence, and extravagance of these assumed

To the Berlin decrees succeeded the British orders in council, of the 7th of January, 1807, which were merged in the orders of the 11th of November following. These declared "all ports, and places belonging to France, and its allies, from which the British slag was excluded, all, in the colonies of his Britannic majesty's enemies, in a state of blockade;—prohibiting all trade, in the produce and manufactures, of the said countries or colonies; and making all vessels, trading to or from them, and all merchandile, on board subject, to capture and condemnation, with an exception, only in favour of the direct trade, between neutral countries and the colonies of his majesty's enemies."

These extravagant pretentions, on the part of Great Britain, were, immediately succeeded by others, still more extravagant, on the part of France. Without waiting for any knowledge of the course, the American government would take, in relation to the British orders in council, the French Emperor issued, on the 17th of December following, his Milan decree, by which "every ship of whatever mation, which shall have submitted to search, by an English ship, or to a voyage to England, or paid any tax to that government, are declared denationalized, and lawful prize.

"The British Islands are declared in a state of blockade, by sea and land, and every ship of whatever nation, or whatsoever the nature of its cargo may be, that fails from England, or those of the English colonies, or of countries occupied by English troops, and proceeding to England, or to the English colonies, or to countries occupied by the English to be good prize." The nature and extent of these injuries thus accumulated by mutual efforts of both belligerents, seemed to teach the American statesman this important lesson; not to attach the cause of his country to one, or the other; but by systematic and solid provisions, for sea coast and maritime desence, to place its interests, as far as its situation, and resources permit, beyond the reach of the rapacity or ambition of any European power. Happy would it have been for our country, if a course of policy, so simple and obvious, had been adopted!

Unfortunately administration had recourse to a system, complicated in its nature, and destructive in its effects; which instead of relief, from the accumulated injuries of foreign governments served only to fill up, what was wanting in the measure of evils abroad, by artificial embarrassments at home. As long ago, as the year 1794; Mr. Madison, the present President of the United States, then a member of the House of Representatives, devised and proposed a system of commercial restrictions, which had for its object the coercion of Great Britain, by a denial to her of our products and our market; afferting that the former was, in a manner essential to her prospenity, either as necessaries of life, or as raw materials for her manufactures; and, that without the latter, a great proportion of her labouring classes, could not sublist.

In that day of fage and virtuous forethought, the proposition was rejected. It remained, however, a theme of unceasing panegyric among an active class of American politicians, who with a systematic pertinacity inculcated among the people, that commercial restrictions were a species of warfare, which would ensure success to the United States, and humiliation to Great Britain.

There were two circumstances, inherent in this system of coercing Great Britain by commercial restrictions, which ought to have made practical politicians, very doubtful of its result, and very cautious of its trial. These were the state of opinion in relation to its esseave among commercial men, in the United States; and the state of seeling, which a resort to it would unavoidably produce, in Great Britain. On the one hand, it was undeniable that the great body of commercial men, in the United States, had no belief in such a dependancy of G. Britain, upon the United States, either for our produce, or our market, as the system implied.

Without the hearty co operation of this class of men, success in its attempt was obviously unattainable. And as on them the chief suffering would fall, it was altogether unreasonable to expect that they would become co-operating instruments in support of any system, which was ruin to them, and without hope to their country. On the other hand, as it respects Great Britain, a system proceeding upon the avowed principle of her dependence upon us was among the last, to which a proud and powerful pation would yield.

Notwithstanding these obvious considerations, in April 1806, Mr. Madison, being then Secretary of State, a law passed Congress, prohibiting the importation of certain specified manusastures of G eat Britain, and her dependencies on the basis of Mr. Madison's original proposition. 'Thus the United States entered on the system of commercial hostility against Great Britain.

The decree of Berlin was iffued in the enfuing November, (1806). The treaty, which had been figned at London, in December, 1806, having been rejected by Mr. Jefferson, without being presented to the Senate for ratification, and the non-importation act not being repealed, but only suspended, Great Britain issued her orders in council, on the 11th November, 1807.

On the 21st of the same month, of Nov. Champagny, French minister of foreign affairs, wrote to Mr. Armstrong the American Minister, in the words following. "All the difficulties, which have given rise to your reclamations, Sir, would be removed with ease, if the government of the United States, after complaining in vain of the injustice and violations of England, took, with the whole continent, the part of guaranteeing it therefrom."

On the 17th of the enfuing December, the Milan decrees was iffued on the part of France, and five days afterwards the embargo was paffed on the part of the United States. Thus was compleated, by acts nearly cutemporaneous, the circle of commercial hostilities.

After an ineffectual trial of four years to controul the policy of the two belligerents by this fystem, it was on the part of the United States, for a time, relinquished. The act of the 1st of May, 1810, gave the authority, however to the President of the United States to revive it against Great Britain, in case France revoked her decrees. Such revocation, on the part of France was declared, by the President's proclamation on the 2d November, 1810, and, in consequence non-intercourse was revived by our administration, against Great Britain.

At all times, the underligned have looked, with much anxiety for the evidence of this revocation. They wished not to question, what, in various forms, has been so often afferted by the administration and its agents, by their directions. But neither as public men, nor as eitizens, can they consent that the peace and prosperity of the country should be facrificed, in maintenance of a position, which on no principle of evidence they daem tenable. They cannot fallify, or conceal their conviction, that the French decrees neither have been, nor are revoked.

Without pretending to occupy the whole field of argument, which the question of revocation has opened, a concife statement seems inseparable from the occasion.

The condition, on which the non-intercourse, according to the act of 1st May 1810, might be revived against Great Britain, was, on the part of France, an effectival revocation of her decrees. What the President of the United States was bound to require from the French Government was, the evidence of such effectual revocation. Upon this point both the right of the United States and the duty of the President seem to be resolvable into very distinct and undentable principles. The object to be obtained, for the United States from France was an effectival procession of the decrees. A revocation to be effecture, must include, in the nature of things, this essential requisite t—the wrongs done to the neutral commerce of the United States, by the operation of the decrees, must be stopped. Nothing short of this could be an effectual revocation.

Without reference to the other wrongs resulting from those decrees to the commerce of the United States; it will be sufficient to state the prominent wrong done by the 3d article of the Milan decree. The nature of this wrong effentially confifted in the authority given to French fhips of war and privateers to make prize, at sea, of every neutral vessel, sailing to, or from, any of the English possessions. The authority to capture was the very effence of the wrong. It follows therefore, that an effectual revocation required that the authority to capture should be Granting therefore, for the fake of argument, (what from its terms and its nature was vertainly not the case) that the noted letter of the Duke of Cadore of the 5th of August 1810, held forth a revocation, good in point of form, and unconditional, yet it was not that effectual revocation, for which the act of 1st May 1810, alone authorised the Prefident of the United States to issue his proclamation, unless in consequence of that letter, the authority to capture was annulled. The letter itself is no annulment of the authority to capture, and it is notorious, that no evidence of the annulment of this authority to capture, ever has been, adduced. It has not even, been, pretended. contrary there is decisive, and almost daily, evidence of the continued existence of this authority to capture.

The charge of executing the decrees of Berlin and Milan was, so far as concerned his department, given by the terms of those decrees to the French minister of Marine. According to established principles of general law, the imperial act, which gave the authority must be annulled by another imperial act, equally formal and selemn; oro at least, the authority to capture must be countermanded by some order, or instruction, from the minister of marine. Nothing short of this could annul the authority according to the rule of the see service, was such annulling act ever issued by the French Emperor? Were any such countermanding orders, or instructions, ever given by the French minister of marine? In exercising a trust, committed to him, by the legislature, on a point, so interesting, to the neutral commerce of the United States, and so important to the peace of the nation, was it not the duty of the President to have the evidence of such annulment, be-

&quot; Art. III. The British islands are declared to be in a sate of blockade, both by land and sea. fore the issuing of any proclamation? Has he ever, insisted upons such evidence? Was it of no consequence in the relative fituation of this country, as to foreign powers, that the regular evidence should be received by our administration and made known? Why has a matter of evidence, so obviously proper, so simple, in its nature, so level to general apprehension and so imperiously demanded, by the circumstances of the case, been wholly omitted? And why, if the Berlin and Milan decrees are annuled, as is pretended, does the French Emperor withhold this evidence of their annulment? Why does he withhold it, when the question of sevocation is presented under circumstances.

Not only has it never been pretended that any fuch imperial act of annulment has iffued, or that any fuch orders, or intructions, countermanding the authority to capture, were ever given, but there is decifive evidence of the reverie in the conduct of the French public armed ships and privateers. At all times since Nov. 1810, these ships and privateers have continued to capture our vessels and property, on the high feas, upon the principles of the Berlin and Milan decrees. A numerous list of American vessels, thus taken, since the 1st of November 1810, now exists in the office of the secretary of state: and among the captures are fever al veffels with their cargoes, lately, taken and deftroyed, at fea, without the formality of a trial, by the commander of a French squadron, at this moment cruizing against our commerce, under orders, given by the minister of marine, to whom the execution of the decrees was committed; and these too issued in January last. In the Baltic and Mediterranean feas, captures by French privateers are known to us, by official documents to have been made, under the authority of these decrees. How then are they revoked? How have they ceased to violate our neutral commerce?"

Had any repeal, or modification of those decrees, in truth taken place, it must have been communicated to the prize courts, and would have been evidenced by some variation either in their rules, or in the principles of their decisions. In vain, however, will this nation seek for such proof of the revocation of the decrees. No acquittal has ever been had, in any of the prize courts, upon the ground that the Berlin and Milan decrees had ceased, even as it respects the United States. On the contrary the evidence is decilive that they are considered by the French courts as existing

There are many cases corroborative of this position. It is enought to state, only, two, which appear in the official reports. The American ship Julian was captured by a French privateer, on the 4th July 1811, and on the tenth of September 1811, the vessel and cargo were condemned, by the council of prizes at Paris among other reasons, because she was visited by several English vessel. On the same day the Hereules an American ship was condemned by the imperial court of prizes, alleging "that it was impossible, that she was not visited, by the enemy's ships of war." So familiar to them was the existence of the decrees and such their eagerness to give them effect against our commerce, that they seigned a visitation to have taken place, and that not withstanding, the express declaration of the captain and crew, to the Secretary of State, dated 8th May 1811, fays "it may not be improper to remark that no American vessel captured since the 1st November 1810, has yet been releafed."

om. notthe From this it is apparent, that the commanders of the national velicle, the privateerimen, and the judges of the prize courts, to which may be added also the custom house officers, who, as the instruments of carrying into effect the decrees, must have been made acquainted with the repeal had it existed, have been from first to last, ignorant of any revocation; and uniformly asted upon the principle of their existence.

If other evidence of the continued existence of those decrees were requilie; the acts of the French government afford fuch as is full and explicit. Champagny, Duke of Cadore, minister of foreign relations, in his report to his majesty the Emperor and king, dated Paris 3d December, 1810, speaking of the decrees of Berlin and Milac, says expressly. "As long as England shall persist in her orders in council your majesty will persist, in your decrees." Than which no declaration can be more direct not only that the Berlin and Milan decrees are unrevoked, but that they will to remain, until the English orders in council are And in the address delivered, by his imperial majesty, withdrawn. Napoleon, to the council of commerce on the 31st March, 1811, he thus declares " The decrees of Berlin and Milan are the fundamental laws of my Empire. For the neutral navigation I confider the flag as an extention of territory. The power, which suffers its flag to be vio-lated, cannot be confidered as neutral. The fate of the American commerce will foon be decided. I will favor it if the United States conform themselves to these decrees. In a contrary case their vessels will be driven from my Empire."

And as late as the 10th of March last, in a report of the French minister of foreign relations, communicated to the confervative Senate, it is declared, "that as long as the British orders in council, are not revoked, and the principles of the treaty of Utrecht, in relation to neutrals put in force, the decrees of Berlin and Milan, ought to substit; for the powers who suffer their flag to be denationalized." In none of these acts, is there any exception in favor of the United States. And on the contrary in the report of March last, by placing those decrees on the basis of "the principles of the treaty of Utrecht," the French Minister has extended the terms of revocation beyond all prior pretenfions.

Those who maintain the revocation of these decrees, as it respects the United States, rely wholly upon the suspension of the decisions of the French prize courts, in relation to some sew vessels, and the liberation of others, by the special direction of the French Emperor. Can there be stronger presumptive evidence, of the existence of those decrees than this—that no vessel is excepted from their operation, until after the special exercise of the Emperor's will, in the particular case.

If the decrees were effectively, revoked, there would be no captures; or if any were made, liberation would be a matter of course & of general right; instead of being an affair of particular savor, or caprice. Is it for vexations and indulgencies like these, that the people of the United States are to abandon their commerce and peace? Is it for such favors, they are to invite the calamities of war? If the resources of negotiation were exhausted, had the government no powers remaining to diminish the causes of national controversy, by preventing abuses? Aster this, had it no powers to provide for protesting indisputable and important rights, without waging a war of offence? In the regular exercise, of legislative and executive powers; might not the fair objects of interest for our country have been secured completely, by consistent and wholesome plans for defensive protection? And would not a national position, strictly defensive, yet highly respectable, have been less burthensome to the people than the projected war? Would it not be more friendly to the cause of our own seamen; more safe for our navigation and commerce; more savorable to the interests of our agriculture; less hazardous to national character; more worthy of a people jealous of their liberty and independence?

For entering into these kostilities is there any thing, in the friendship, or commerce, of France, in its nature very interesting, or alluring? Will the reaping of the scanty field of French trade, which we seek, in any way compensate for the rich harvest of general commerce, which by war we are about to abandon? When entering into a war, with Great Britain, for commercial rights and interests, it seems impossible not to enquire, into the state of our commercial relations with France, and the advantages the United States will obtain. We may thus be enabled to judge whether the prize is worth the contest.

By an official flatement, made to Congress during the present session, it appears that of 45,294,000 dollars of domestic productions of the United States, exported from September 30th, 1810, to October 1st, 1811, only 1,194,275 dollars were exported to France and Italy, including Sicily, not a dependency of France.

France is now deprived of all her foreign colonies, and by reviewing our trade with that country for several years past and before the date of the orders in council, it will appear that, exclusive of her foreign possessions, it has been comparatively inconsiderable. The annexed statement marked A. taken from official documents, thows the quantity of particular articles, the produce of the United States exported to all the world, distinguishing the amount both to France and to England and her dependencies from 1810 to 1811. From this statement it appears, how small a proportion of the great staples of our country is taken by France. While France retained her colonies,

* It appears by it that for twelve years past, France has not taken in any year more than

Cotton 7,000,000 Pounds F Tobacco 16,000 Hogheads
Rice 7,000 Tierces / Dried Pith, 87,000 Quintals
Of fleur, naval flores and lumber, none of any importance.

It also appears, by it, that the annual average taken by France for twelve years, was, of

Cotton 3,664,090 Pounds Tobacco 5,927 Hogsheads
Rice 2,253 Tierces Fish 24,735 Quintals
Of late years some of those articles have not been shipped at all directly to France, but they have, probably, found their way thither through the northern ports of Europe.

her colonial produce found its way to the mother country through the United States, and our trade with her in these articles, was not inconsiderable. But since she has been deprived of her foreign possessions. and fince the establishment of her municipal regulations, as to licences, this trade has been in a great degree, annihilated? With respect to colonial produce none can be imported into France except from partieu. lar ports of the United States and under special imperial licences. these licences our merchants must pay what the agents of the French government think proper to demand. As to articles of our domestic produce, they are burdened with fuch exorbitant duties, and are subjectted to such regulations and restrictions on their importation as, in ordinary times, will amount to a prohibition. On the 5th of August 1810. the very day of the Duke of Cadore's noted letter, a duty was imposed on all fea-island cotton, imported into France, of more than eighty cents per pound, and on other cotton of about fixty cents per pound, amounting to three, or four, times their original cost in the United States. And as to tobacoo, the French minister here, on the 23d of July 1811, informed our government that it was " under an administration (en regie) in France; the administration (he says) is the only confumer and can purchase only the quantity necessary for its confumption." And by other regulations not more than one fifteenth of all the tobacco consumed, in France, can be of foreign growth. The ordinary quantity of tobacco annually confumed in France is estimated at thirty thousand hogsheads, leaving only about two thousand hogs. heads of foreign tobacco to be purchased in France.

In addition to these impositions and restrictions, the importer is not left at liberty with respect to his return cargo. By other edicts, he is compelled to vest the avails of his importations, if, after paying duties and feizures, any remain, in fuch articles of French produce and manufacture, as the French government, thinks proper to direct. Two thirds at least must be laid out in filks and the other third in wines, brandies, and other articles, of that country. To show that this account of our commercial relations with France does not rest on doubtful authority, the underligned would refer to the statements and declarations of our government on this subjects. In a letter from Mr. Smith, the late Secretary of State, to the minister of France here, of the 18th December 810, speaking of our trade to that country, under its regulations, after the pretended repeal of the decrees, Mr. Smith fays, "The restrictions of the Berlin and Milan decrees had the effect of restraining the American merchants from sending their vessels to France. The interdictions in the system that has been substituted. against the admission of American products, will have the effect of im-poling upon them an equal restraint."

"If then, for the revoked decrees, municipal laws, producing the same commercial effect have been substituted, the mode only, and not the measure, has undergone an alteration. And however true it may be, that the change is lawful in form, it is, nevertheless, as true, that it is effentially unfriendly, and that it does not at all comport with the ideas, inspired by your letter of the 27th ult in which you were pleased to declare the "diltinctly pronounced intention of his imperial majefty of favoring the commercial relations, between France and the United States, in all the objects of traffic, which shall evidently proceed from their agriculture, or manufactures? "If France, by her own acts, has blockaded up her porte against the introduction of the products of the United States, what motive has this government, in a discussion with a third power, to insist on the privilege of going to France? Whence the inducement, to urge the annulment of a blockade of France, when, if annulled, no American eargies could obtain a market in any of her ports? In such a state of things, a blockade of the coast of France would be, to the United States, as unimportant, as would be a blockade of the coast of the Caspian sea."

And to far has the French emperor been from relaxing, in whole, or in part, these odious regulations as to us, in consequence of our submitting to give up our English trade, that they have been made a subject of special instructions, to the minister, who has been sent to the court of France. Mr. Monroe, in his letter of influctions to Mr. Barlow of July 26, 1811, fays, "Your early and particular attention will be drawn to the great subject of the commercial relation, which is to fublift, lu future, between the United States and France. Profident expects that the commerce of the United States will be placed. in the ports of France, on fuch a footing as to affort it a fair market: and to the industry and enterprise of their citizens, a reasonable encouragement. An arrangement to this effect was looked for, immediately after the revocation of the decrees, but it appears from the documents. in this department; that that was the case; on the contrary that our commerce has been subjected to the greatest discouragement, or rather, to the molt eppressive restraints; that the vessels, which carried coffee, sugar, &c. though failing directly from the United States to a French port, were held in a state of sequestration, on the principle, that the trade was prohibited, and that the importation of these articles was not only unlawful, but criminal; that even the veffels, which carried the unquelcionable productions of the United States, were exposed to great and expensive delays, to tedious investigations, in unusual forms, and to exerlitant duties. In short that the ordinary usages of commerce between friendly nations were abandoned."

Again Mr. Monroe, in the same letter, says, "If the ports of France, and her allies are not opened to the commerce of the United States, on a liberal scale and on fair conditions, of what avail to them, it may be asked, will be the revocation of the British orders in council? In contending for the revocation of these orders, so far as it was an object of interest, the United States had in view, a trade to the continent. It was a fair legitimate object and worth contending for, while France encouraged it. But if he thuts her ports on our commerce, or burdens it with heavy duties, that motive is at end." He again says, "you will see the injustice and endeavor to prevent the necessity of bringing in return for American cargoes, sold in France, an equal at anount in the produce or manufactures of that country. No such obligation is imposed on French merchants, trading to the United States. They enjoy the liberty of selling their cargoes for cash, and taking sack what they pleased from this country in return. It is indispendent

Sle, that the trade be free, that all American citizens regaged in it be placed on the fame footing, and, with this view, that the lystem of carrying it on, by licencer, granted by French agents be immediately anult-

The despatches from Mr. Barlow, by the Hornet, most clearly show that the expectations of our government have not only not been realized, but that even the promises obtained, by our minister are of a very unsatisfactory nature. Indeed while Bonaparte is sending armies to the north of Europe, to take possession of the ports on the Baltic, and by his sast saling squadrons, is burning American vessels, on the Atlantic, all expectations of a free rade from France, must be worse than vain-

Notwithstanding the violence of the belligerents, were the restrictions of our own government removed, the commerce of the United States might be extensive and profitable. It is well known that from the gallantry of our seamen, if merchant vessels were allowed to arm and ussociate, for self desence, they would be able to repel many unlawful aggressions. The danger of capture would be diminished, and in relation to one of the belligerents at least, the risk, under such circumstances, would foon be measured by infurance.

The discussions of our government, in relation to the British orders in council, give a currency to the opinion that they exist, without any modification according to the extent of the first principles, on which they were issued. And the French minister, in his last communication, on this sabject, made to the Conservative Senate, on the 10th of March last, speaks of the blockade of the 10th of May 1806 " as anihilating the rights of all maritime states and putting under interdiction whole coasts and empires;" and of the orders in council of 1807, as though still sublisting, and that according to their principles all vessels were compelled "to pay a tribute to England, and all cargoes a tariff to her cultoms." What the real extent and principle of the blockade of May 1806 were, have already been explained. With respect to the British orders of 1807, the truth is, that by a new order issued on the 20th of April 1809, they were revoked or modified, and the obnoxious transit duty called by the French Minister "tribute and tariff" was done away. The new order of April 1809, which, is now the subject of somplaint is limited to "all the ports and places as far north as the river Ems, inclusively, under the government styling itself the Kingdom of Holland, and all ports and places under the government of France, together with the colonies, plantations, and fettlements in the possession of those governments respectively, and all ports and places in the northern parts of Italy, to be reckoned from the ports of Orbitello and Pesaro, inclusively."

The effect then of the British orders of blockade, now in sorce, is to deprive us of the commerce of France, Holland and a part of Italy. And they leave open to us the commerce of all the rest of the world. What that is some estimate may be formed by recurrence to the subjoined table, which exhibits the state of our commerce during 1806 and 1807—The two last years antecedent to the operation of our restrictive system. By that table it appears that the value of the exports of our domestic products to France, Helland and Italy was during those two years, at an average only of about six and a half millions of dollars. Whereas the average of our domestic exports, to all other parts of the world, and which are now left free, to us not-withstanding the effect of the British orders in council exceed thirty-eight millions! So extensive a commerce, it is proposed to surrender, for the restricted trade the French Emperor will allow. A trade but-thened by impositions, or liarrassed by vexations, from French domination, and French Douaniers, or custom house officers, in almost every port of continental Europe.

As in the scale of commercial advantages France has little to offer, in return, for the many obvious hazards, which according to the wish of her Emperor, the UnitedStates are about to incur; so, in the moral estimate of national prospects, there is little character to gain, or consolation to expect, in the dark scene of things, on which we are entering.

A nation, like the United States, happy in its great local relations; removed from the bloody theatre of Europe; with a maritime border, opening vast fields for enterprize; with territorial possessions, exceeding every real want;—its firefides safe;—its altars undefiled;—from invasion nothing to fear;—from acquisition nothing to hope;—how shall such a nation look to heaven for its 1 illes, while throwing away, as though they were worthless, all the blessings and joys, which peace and such a distinguis, ad lot, include? With what prayers can it address the most high, when it prepares, to pour forth its youthful rage, upon a neighboring people; from whose strength, it has nothing to dread, from whose devastation it has nothing to gain?

If our ills were of a nature, that war would remedy; if war would compensate any of our losses; or remove any of our complaints, there might be some alleviation of the suffering, in the charm of the prospect. But how will war upon the land, protect commerce upon the ocean? What balm has Cauada for wounded honour? How are our marinets benefitted by a war, which exposes those, who are free, without promising release to those who are impressed?

But it is faid that war is demanded by honor. Is national honor a principle, which thirse after vengeance, and is appeased, only by blood; which trampling on the hopes of man, and spurning the law of God, untaught by what is past and careless of what is to come, precipitates itself into any folly, or madness, to gratify a selfish vanity, or to satiate some unhallowed rage? If honour demands a war with England, what opiate lulls that honor to sleep over the wrongs done us by France? On land, robberies, seizures, imprisonments, by French authority; at sea, pillage, sinkings, burnings, under French orders. These are notorious. Are they unselt because they are French? Is any alleviation to be found in the correspondence and humiliations of the present Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States at the French Court? In his communications to our government, as before the public, where is the cause for now selecting France, as the friend of our country and England as the enemy?

If no illusions of personal feeling, and no solicitude for elevation of place, should be permitted to misguide the public councils; if it is, indeed, honorable for the true statesman to consult the public welfare, to provide, in truth, for the public defence, and impose no yoke of bondage; with full knowledge of the wrongs inflicted by the French, ought the government of this country, to aid the French cause, by engaging in war, against the enemy of France? To supply the waste of fuch a war and to meet the appropriations of millions extraordinary, for the war expenditures, must our fellow citizens, throughout the union, be doomed to fustain the burden of war taxes, in various forms of direct and indirect impolition? For official information, respecting the millions deemed requifite for charges of the war; for like information, respecting the nature and amount of taxes, deemed requisite for drawing those millions from the community, it is here inflicient to refer to estimates and reports made by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Committee of Ways and means, and to the body of resolutions, passed in March last, in the House of Representatives.

It would be some relief to our anxiety, if amends were likely to be made, for the weakness and wildness of the project, by the prudence of the preparation. But in no aspect of this anomalous affair can we trace the great and distinctive properties of wisdom. There is feen a headlong rushing, into difficulties, with little calculation about the means and little concern about the consequences. With a many comparatively nominal, we are about to enter into the lifts against the greatest marine on the globe. With a commerce, unprotected and spread over every ocean, we propose to make profit by privateering, and for this endanger the wealth, of which we are honest proprietors. An invasion is threatened of the colonies of a power, which, without putting a new thip into commission, or taking another foldier into pay, can spread alarm, or desolation along the extensive range of our feaboard. The resources of our country, in their natural state, great beyond our wants, or our hopes are impaired by the effect of artificial restraints. Before adequate fortifications are prepared for domestic defence, before men, or money are provided for a war of attack, why haften into the midst of that awful contest which is laying waste Europe? It cannot be concealed, that to engage, in the present war against England is to place ourselves on the side of France; and exposes us to the vassalage of states, serving under the banners of the

French Emperor

The underligned cannot refrain from alking, what are the United States to gain by this war? Will the gratification of some privateerLinen compensate the nation for that sweep of our legitimate commerce by the extended marine, of our enemy, which this desperate of invites. Will Canada compensate the middle states, for New York; or the western states for New Orleans? Let us not be deceived. A war of invasion may invite a retort of invasion. When we visit the peaceable, and, as to us innocent, colonies of Great Britain with the horrors of war can we be assured that our own coast will not be visited with like horrors?

At a crisis of the world such as the present, and under impressions such as these, the undersigned could not consider the war, in which the United States, have, in secret been precipitated, as necessary, or required by any moral duty, or any political expediency.
