WELCOME THE OLD BOYS Decorate! Decorate! Decorate!

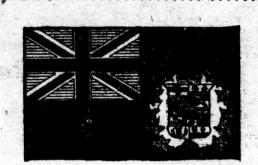

THE OLD BOYS are coming from all parts. Many a fond parent will greet and welcome home a dear son or daughter for the first time in five, ten, fifteen, and even twenty years or more. Many a citizen will clasp hands and welcome, with warm words of greeting, many a former schoolmate or chum back to the scenes of his boyhood days in the City of London.

Why shouldn't we decorate? Everybody who has the welfare of the Forest City at heart will be keenly interested in the decoration of every building throughout the entire city.

DECORATE your home or place of business. The cost will be small—the effect magnificent.

Months ago we were preparing for this great event, and today we announce that we are ready with by far the largest and best assorted stocks of FLAGS AND BUNTING suitable for the decoration of buildings, verandas, floats, booths, etc., we have ever shown.

MONDAY we commence the sale of the above goods in earnest. All our 61/2c Plain Buntings, beautiful soft colorings, and excellent quality, com-TRI-COLOR BUNTING-Red, white and blue combined, at per yard, 61/2¢, or 16 yards for$1.00

On motion of Hon. Mr. Aylesworth a resolution was carried and a bill introduced providing for the salaries for an additional county court judge in Manitoba, and for two additional district court judges in Ontario.

Hon. Sydney Fisher moved the second reading of a bill from the Senate respecting the marking of gold and silver, which fixes the minimum at nine carats. Replying to Mr. Borden, Mr. Fisher said he was satisfied that the public would be protected by the bill against fraud and imposition. Mr. Zimmerman, who spoke in support of the bill, said the manufacturers, wholesale and retail jewelers had had some twenty meetings in Toronto to discuss it and in its present shape the measure was practically as they had drafted it. BORDEN DEFENDS MILITIA DEP'1

Sir Frederick Says the Civil Service Commission Started

Ottawa, July 9.-In the House of Commons Sir Frederick Borden made a slashing attack upon the recent civil panies were put by Col. Reid. service commission for their findings said he did not think the commission had done its work so well as did that prepared a list of questions that were enth have made a reputation for them- ment to Quebec. submitted to the deputy heads and pared to answer them when called upon by the commission. The recent commission seemed bent upon taking the officials by surprise. There was every indication that the members of the commission entered upon their task with their minds made up, and not with the intention of reaching conclusions on the evidence brought out during the inquiry. It seemed to him that the chairman (Mr. Courtney) went into his work with some prejudices and Porter. jealousies, arising from his 30-years' service as deputy minister of finance He quoted from the report of the commission in support of this view, dwelling particularly upon the "gentle manner" in which he had dealt with the finance department and its officials The militia department. Sir Frederick Borden went on, was the department in which the expenditure was decided upon the policy adopted by Parliament as to the defence of the country.

Attack on Militia Department. He had looked in vain for any authority given the commission to conduct the examination of the militia department in the form they had adopted, particularly as they were notoriously, absolutely and utterly ignorant of the first principles which govern militia matters.

Part of the report constituted an indictment of the militia, and concluded was not so efficient as it was ten or fifteen years ago. In dealing with this, he proposed to quote from a memorandum prepared by Inspector-General Lake, whose services in this country under the late administration, later under the present Government, and during the South Africa war in the war office, where he had charge of the department handling transportation of troops (the only department which was not criticised in connection with the son, Robert Lindsay and Hy. White-war) ,entitled his opinions to great respect. Not the slightest attention had been paid by the commission to the the large audience demanding encores direct evidence given by General Lake in each case. Mr. Acheson Irwin, B. or the deputy minister of the department. Possibly this was an oversight, out in view of the character of the report it looked as though their evidence ity, which thoroughly aroused the enhad been willfully omitted. He read from a letter from General Lake to the acted as accompanist in a most effichairman of the commission, in which he protested against the assumption that the increased expenditure had not been accompanied by increased efficiency of the force. No opinion, he had urged, should in the interests of ing a few remarks. The chair was justice and the public service be re. filled by Mr. U. A. Buchner. Refreshported without far more searching inquiry and examination than the superficial examination the commission had been able to give. Misleading Statements.

Incidentally Sir Frederick Borden here referred to the misleading statements in the commission's report as to the headquarters staff. In one place it was stated to be 40, in another 52, while, as a matter of fact, it was only 28. With the direct evidence before them the commissioners had commented adversely upon the increased expenditure from $3,500,000 in 1903-4 to some $6,500,000 in the last year. They had chosen to ignore the assumption and maintenance by Canada of the Halifax and Esquimault garrisons, which accounted for $1,500,000 to $2,-000,000 of the increase. This, with the increase in strength and pay of the militia, provided by law and totalling $250,000 to $500,000, and an item of $200,000 for customs duties, which was only a cross-entry, accounted for the writer has seen all the important nearly all the total aggregate increased piano parlors in Toronto, Montreal, expenditure. He quoted from a letter of Lieut.-Col. F. S. Meighen, Montreal, strongly condemning the report of the commission as unjustifiable. Sir Frederick controverted the statements of the commissioners regarding desertions and the checking of stores, declaring that the insinuations in the report were absolutely without foundation. An Efficient Militia.

The commission had condemned the finished in old ivory, in which there paymaster-general, but had not thought will be magnificent mural paintings, It worth while to examine that official the work of Mr. E. The London meet is essentially a harness event, and yet today there are handsomely at previous meets, is a upwards of 30 runners stabled at the starter in the 2:20 trot, which also has London track.

A Classy Event

A most classy event, and one that will bring together four, and in all probability, five, of the most evenly balanced horses of reputation for gameness and speed, is the 2:15 pace, a $500 stake race.

There were a large number of entries for this contest, but the management owned by Art Leaky. decided to close with five, at the most.

The 2:10 pace contains some classy campaigners, including such wellknown horses as Collingwood Rooker. Darkey (2:09%), Billy W., (2:11%), Robert Kernan (2:091/4).

Perfection, Mr. George Campbell's speedy horse, who has taken two seconds and a like number of thirds on the circuit so far this season, is one of the entries in the 2:50 pace. > Old Boys in Woodstock. Woodstock Sentinel-Review: The Oxford County met to make further arrangements for the annual reunion in London the first week in August. There was a good attendance. The secretary pro tem was instructed to order badges the same as those used at the last outing three years ago. That badge was a very neat and attractive one, and the members thought it could not be improved upon. Communications were read from the secretary of the home

LONDON TO BID FOR CONVENTION

Grand Lodge, A., F. and A. M., Will Be Invited To Forest City Next Year.

A strong effort will be made by the London representatives at the annual convention of the Grand Lodge, A., F. and A. M., at Niagara Falls this week to bring the next convention of the Grand Lodge to London.

Mr. A. E. Cooper, the London member of the Grand Lodge executive board, today stated that London's natural advantages alone made it desirable that the Grand Lodge hold its next meeting here. London's hotel accommodations are second to none in Canada, with the exception of Toronto and Montreal, and the natural beauties of the place are unsurpassed It is expected that over a thousand representatives will attend next year's gathering, and it can readily be seen that it would be to London's benefit to secure the honor if possible. Next year will be to the Grand Lodge what is known as the "onyear," in other words, the time when the big elections of officers takes place, and the attendance will consequently be larger than ordinarily. It would appear that it was distinctly the duty of the reception committee of the city council to make every effort to bring the Grand Lodge convention to London next year, and it is felt that a little effort in the right direction will bring about the coveted result.

> DISTRIBUTING THE REVENUE. The reports of the various departments of a great railway system, would, if made public, often surprise the readers of current news. It has been gathered that the Grand Trunk Railway system has spent, within the past few years, not less than fifteen million dollars in double-tracking the est stretch of double track under one management, in the world. In addition to this they have spent other millions in stations, shops and other improvements, thus increasing the carrying capacity of the road, contributing to the upbuilding of the country, and at the same time affording added security to the lives and property of its patrons which the installation of block signals on a singletracked line could never secure. By the London Old Boys of Woodstock and expenditure of all these millions in Canada, they are distributing the revenue, or a good share of it, among

A sick fancy had come to her that she wanted to see youth at play. "Play," she said imperiously to Pip. Nothing was further from Pip's ability than that. He stood embarrassed and silent until she said: "Call Estella!"

She came along the dark passage like a star. "Play with this common boy!" said she disdainfully. "Why, he is only a laborer!" when Miss Havisham told her to play cards with him. "Well, you can break his heart," answered Miss Havisham. Thereafter it became a regular part of Pip's life to go to the dark old house once a week and play cards with Estella while Miss Havisham looked on, eager and with a weird smile. Then he would wheel her around in a chair through the dark rooms in her faded finery like a corpse.

Each time Estella was more haughty and more insulting. Pip looked at his coarse hands and his common boots. They had never troubled him before. Now he wished that Joe had been more genteely brought up, so that he, too, might be a gentleman.

His cogitations brought him to the decision to get learning, and soon he amazed honest Joe by showing him written characters. With the help of the village school, he stumbled through books. The bookcase in question was of bamboo, with light wooden shelves, and was evidently not of a nature to be injured by the weather. The books on It were paper backed summer novels and magazines, with not a bound volume among them. Nothing there was of sufficient value to tempt a thief, or to be a serious loss if an unusually sweeping storm should invade the porch. The novelty was not expensive, but it was a feature to commend itself to all who make the veranda a living room. More and more this is done, and the matter of porch furniture is considered of importance never dreamed of twenty years ago. In those days a few comfortable and more or less battered chairs were all that were needed, unless one introduced a long settee. There was the invariable hammock, of course, but little hesides but little besides.

The veranda of these days did not always lend itself very graciously to furnishing. In some parts of the country—notably the southern portions—wide ry—notably the southern portions—wide porches or galleries were a matter of course. But in the New England and Middle states the wide veranda is distinctly an innovation, except in the houses of well-to-do dwellers in country towns. In the "real country" there might be a square porch or "stoop," but if there was a piazza of any sort the way herely wide enough for two pears. it was barely wide enough for two peo-ple to pass one another on it when walking, and it would have left no room for passengers had it been endowed with furniture. When persons who lived in these houses wished fresh air, beyond that which came in the window, chairs, bamboo and willow and cane and rattan couches and seats are now in chief favor.

Two qualifications the veranda furniture must possess in addition to comfort and usefulness. It must be fitted to stand ordinary weather and light enough to be moved easily when a hard storm comes up. The tropical storms which we often have during the summer would be supported by the standard or the storm of the standard or the storm of the standard or the storm of the standard or the standard which we often have during the summer would ruin anything delicate or perishable. Manufacturers recognize this, and the furniture they offer for the veranda is warranted to stand tolerably severe usage from the elements.

There is an endless variety from which to choose if one can go forth and purchase at will. Long lounging chairs which are almost like couches. chairs which are almost like couches, deep sleepy hollow chairs with a pocket for books or work attached to the side, hammock seats or benches which may be used as a bed or napping place, low rockers, short, broad settles, hood-they sat on the grass or upon the steps. Now, however, furniture shops are crammed with articles labeled "porch furniture," and, although the wagon laden with plazza chairs and step ladders and similar wooden ware still goes about the country seeking purchasers, the brilliant red rocker which was once the ne plus ultra of veranda furnishings has lost its popularity. Mission

ed chairs for invalids, chairs with a book rack or writing tablet secured to

Other furniture besides seats is required for the up-to-date veranda. At least one small table, and, preferably, two or three, for afternoon tea or work or to lay books on; a "curate's" assistant—the three-shelved stand to hold cakes and sandwiches for tea-rugs, cushions, hammocks-nearly everything that is needed to convert a veranda into an outdoor living room. While it is not within the power of every one to supply a veranda with all these objects, there is yet opportunity in nearly every family to furnish a porch attractively. The straw rugs which come now in attractive designs are inexpensive, and cheaper even than these is the heavy grass matting sold by the yard, that, after being cut to the desired length, may be bound with wide tape to prevent raveling at the ends. Three or four such rugs as these, or even mats made from odds and ends of carpet and matting, may be laid on the veranda.

The furniture may not be quite so simple a matter, but it is astonishing what favorable results may be achieved by a combination of old chairs or settees and a pot of green paint. Even a cheap kitchen rocking chair or an old-fashioned Boston-rocker, if freshened by a coat of paint and provided with a cushion or two, will make a smart appearance without a hint of its former shabbiness.

Much the same treatment may be bestowed upon a little table, which will serve to hold the afternoon tea tray, and between times may be used for books or work. Add a hammock or two and the veranda will be at-tractively furnished, even though the plenishing may be less expensive than if all the articles were newly pur-

The outdoor life implied by the veranda is not nearly so much practiced as it should be in this country. To this statement I must make some exceptions, for I know families who make regular sitting rooms of their verandas, and even use them for dining rooms as well. In one cottage all the meals are taken on the wide porch that runs around two sides of the house. One corner of it is wider than the rest, and is sheltered by an angle of the house. In the corner stands the dining table, and the family gather about it at three meals a day, unless the weather is stormy enough to drive them indoors. A long window, opening down to the floor, admits to The outdoor life implied by the vethe dining room, and, as the kitchen is just beyond this, there is little distance to carry the food or the dishes. Such a plan as this would hardly be Such a plan as this would hardly be feasible in those sections of the country most given over to the plague of flies and mosquitoes. That is, it could not be followed in an uninclosed veranda like that of my friends. But the practice of putting netting about the veranda is common in the Midthe practice of putting netting about the veranda is common in the Middle states, and protected behind these wires the family could eat in confort, secure from attacks of insects. One family of whom I have heard practically live on their veranda. Their meals are taken at one end, they have their sewing room at the other, and here there is always some one reading aloud or chatting with the workers. They take their afternoon siestas in hammocks swung in the porch and go indoors to dress and sleep at night, and little else. Indeed, I have known of occasions when the heat of the night has driven them from their beds and they have transferred their sleeping quarters to hammocks on their beds and they have transferred their sleeping quarters to hammocks on the porch.

I would not feel I had done my duty in telling of veranda furnishings without reference to a certain farmhouse I know up in the hills, where a rather narrow porch makes chairs awkward incumbrances. In place of these the seats are huge cushions stuffed with hay, on which the guests and family sit cross-legged in true Oriental fashion. Newcomers exclaim, but they, too, adopt the fashion in a short time, and are apparently as contented on their low seats as though they had been born and reared in Turkey.

Boil a fresh beef or calf's tongue, and, while it is hot, pare away the tough outer skin neatly. Let it get perfectly cold. Then lay it in an oblong mould. Soak half a package of clear gelatine in a pint of strained stock for three hours. Heat to a boil, and cool to blood warmth. Pour around the tongue as it lies in the mould. Set on the ice to form. If the housemother is disposed to cavil at the tediousness of this process, let me assure her that the result will amply repay her for the outlay of time and thought. A party of editors of western weekly papers, after a little visit around New York a while back, were checking their baggage at the ferry station upon the eve of their departure from this seaboard when the dilapidated, age-worn appearance of the trunk of one of the editors came in for a lot of guying. It was a small, very old-fashioned trunk, and it part, got back at the jolliers with this:

"I seemed to be making as much, not more, progress than any of the other suitors, but as I wasn't making much more than a bare living out of my paper, wasn't in any shape to propose, especially as the girl's father was extremely comfortable financially, and I couldn't entertain the idea of marrying a girl with considerable expectations until I had fixed things so that I had some worth-while expectations of my own.

"Well, anyhow, the frequency of my visits and the cordial welcome got from the girl aroused the jealousy of the other suitors, naturally enough, Although I do not hold with many and one evening after I had been a caller at her house for about a year, they put

"I was troubled with Nervous Debility for many years. I lay it to indiscretion and sxcesses in early youth. I became very despondent and didn't care whether I worked or not. I imagined everybody who looked at me guessed my secret. Imaginative dreams at night weakened me—my back ached, had pains in the back of my head, hands and feet were cold, tired in the morning, poor appetite, fingers were shaky, eyes blurred, hair loose, memory poor, etc. Numbness in the fingers set in and the doctor told me he feared paralysis. I took all kinds of medicines and tried many first-class physicians, wore an electric belt for three months, went to Mt. Clemens for baths, but received little benefit. While sinduced to consult Drs. Wanted: Man With Courage; He Will Stay on the Track

By Dr. Madison C. Peters.

Courage is the quality which enables | True courage calmly weighs the probapering into our ears words of hope for ton, said: the issues at stake.

The man of courage may fail, but he won't fly the track. He may be defeated, but he will ever be up and at it, and keeps! at it until he nails the colors of victory to his standard. There is almost no difficulty that cannot be surmounted by intense effort, and such effort can never be put forward without indomitable courage

Our desires are often the precursors of hesitating find everything impossible, because it seems so, but to the brave man nothing is so impregnable that it cannot be overcome by unflagging energy and inswerving application.

The courageous never court failure, but always woo success; at first she may repulse them, but they never become disheartened and still worship at her shrine until she consents to smile upon their suit, embraces them and rewards their ardor with her fairest gifts.

The coward, on the contrary, loses heart at the first rebuff, abandons hope, and dolefully goes down to despair, useless to himself and valueless to the world. Take Longfellow's advice:

In the world's broad field of battle, In the bivouac of life, Be not like dumb driven cattle, Be a hero in the strife.

Carve your way with undaunted courage through all opposition, never acknowledging defeat. Meet difficulties with unflinching perseverance, and they will lose their formidable appearance. The stout oak can resist the fiercest winds that blow; it towers in solemn majesty, confident in its strength to withstand the fury of the tempests. Be as the oak, defying the fierce onslaughts of temptation and majestically facing the threatening dangers; but you must not be t eckless and rush to the brink of precipices you can avoid, lest you fall to destruction in their yawning depths. AND MARRIAGE

WICK BROUGHT NEW

It was not until the accession of the House of Brunswick that German ideas on the subject of royal marriages began to be prevalent at the English court, no doubt because a "misalliance" neight have caused a dispute as to the succession of the Electorate of Hanover. In 1772 the royal marriage act was passed. This act made it impossible for any descendant of George II., "other than the issue of princesses married into foreign families," to coptract valid marriage without the previous consent of the King signified under the Great Seal. "But in case any descendant of George II., being above 25 years old, shall persist to contract a marriage disapproved of by his majasty, such descendant, after giving twelve months' notice to the Privy Council, may contract such marriage . . without the consent of his majesty and it shall be good except both Houses of Parliament shall declare their disapprobation thereto." Queen Victoria seems to have had English ideas about love matches, for not only did she allow her cousins the Princess Mary of Cambridge to marry the Duke of Teck and the Princess Frederica of Hanover to marry the Baron von Pawel-Rammingen, both "misalliances" by the German rule, but marriage of her fourth daughter, the Princess Louise, to the Duke of Argyll, and of her youngest daughter, the Princess Beatrice, to Prince Henry of Battenberg. But worse was yet to come, from a German point of view, for the present King's eldest daughter, the Princess Louise of Wales, who at the time might easily have succeeded to the throne, was married to the Duke of Fife, at that time an earl of modern creation; and the present Prince of Wales, the direct heir to the throne, was permitted to marry the Princess Mary of Teck, whose pedigree would by no means satisfy the German court genealogist.

National Cash Registers handle 39 million dollars every day and never make a mistake

That's a fact.

Our records prove it.

There are 650,000 National Cash Registers in use all over the world.

A thorough investigation proves that the average amount handled by these registers every day is $60.00.

That means that there is an absolutely accurate record kept each day of $39,000,000.

Remember, it is mechanically impossible for a National Cash Register to make a mistake.
