It is not the more surely do they vanish into thin air. From the revelations made on the authority of state officials, as to the agricultural condition of many of the States of the heighboring Republic, which, of course, have access to the whole of the sixty million market, Canadian farmers are quite satisfied that there is for them nothing to gain, but much to lose by sacrificing our national independence to our neighbors.

The Canadian Commercial Unionists contend that if their theory were adopted our iron trade, above all others, would be greatly benefited. On this point the Boston Herald, which certainly cannot be accused of being unfriendly to the interests of New England, has the following to say:

"The prestige of Massachusetts as an iron manufacturing state has gone. Her formaces are cold in desuected. The chimneys of her foundries are moduless, and eave where an occutional iron masier etil struggles on,

Were we to judge by official returns, neither Michigan nor many of the Western States can compare in the general wealth and prosperity of the agricultural population, with Ontario; and when the condition of the farmers in New England, with Boston, New York and other large markets within easy reach, is taken into account, the fallacy of Grit representations is placed in the strongest light.

It will certainly tax Grit ingenuity to explain to the farmers of the Dominion, how they can hope to thrive by gaining free access to a market in which New England farmers are starving; where fertile farms are selling for four dollars an acre; where numerous homesteads are deserted, and their buildings are going to ruin.
