Mr. Collenette: Filibuster.

Point of Order—Mr. Knowles

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, that was the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader. I was going to raise a special question of privilege with regard to him. I do not mind him wearing a bow tie but I do not know if it is within the rules of the House of Commons that he should wear the kitchen curtains! If he will just keep quiet I will finish speaking on this very serious motion. I am sure he will understand or remove himself from the chamber.

● (2110)

On rare occasions, with minor exceptions, what appears in the record of debate has actually been spoken in the House. I do not have to point this out to you, Madam Speaker. This is the House of Commons and it is part of Parliament. What is the origin of Parliament? Does it derive from the French word parler which means "to speak", to participate, or to debate? This is a forum. This is not a congressional hall in which we come forward and table documents which purport to be speeches. There are rules of which you are well aware. The rule is that no member can do this. Occasionally one is observed doing so, more in the breach rather than—I must admit that sometimes I am subject to cheating on the rules as well—

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —but only in the first week I was here, Madam Speaker. The fact is that Members of Parliament are not allowed to read their speeches. That is the rule of the House of Commons. Members are supposed to speak from the heart, from the bosom.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I simply want to say that is Parliament. It is not a question of tabling of documents or of somehow being able to get some researcher in your office to prepare something for you as a very scholarly treatise and then put it on the record. That particular objection would make this motion itself defective. It offends against the very principle of Parliament. It offends against the principles of the House of Commons where debate takes place, where the give and take of debate goes on and where members on the government side are able to participate occasionally by heckling, which has been the extent of their participation over the course of this Parliament.

I simply say to you, Madam Speaker, that is the nature of this House, and any motion which permits or directs those of us who want to participate in this debate as having the option of tabling and having appended to Hansard a speech prepared in our offices is offensive. It is offensive under the rules in the legal and parliamentary sense and it is simply not acceptable.

When we look at the motion itself, it underlines the basic objection I think I have with respect to it. It is a motion which purports to curtail the rights of Members of Parliament to participate in this debate; it limits the rights of members. I suggest to you, as Speaker of this House, that this motion must be carefully examined and allowed only if strictly to be found in accordance with the Standing Orders and precedents of the House of Commons. This is an important debate.

In the reading of the motion itself, and as my learned colleague, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton has said, the motion itself is confusing, it is unclear as to its consequences.

I want to bring to Your Honour's attention that we now have before us a resolution brought by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) on behalf of the Prime Minister, who finally spoke at length yesterday. I will not get into that because I am still waking up from the effects.

When one looks at this motion, it purports to do two things. First, in the preamble it outlines that there has been debate only on the amendment introduced by my colleague, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) up to this point, and that is quite right. But Your Honour will note as well that you have not, nor have any of the occupants in your chair in your absence, called to order any member of the House of Commons with respect to remarks dealing only with the specific amendment put forward by my colleague from Provencher. If one goes over the record and reads the speeches, he will see they cover the waterfront. They deal with every aspect of the constitutional debate. They deal with the consideration of what members who have participated feel about their country, about what they think should be included or excluded in this resolution and about the process. By no means can it be said that Members of Parliament here have been restricted by the fact that we have been debating a technically narrow amendment as put forward by the hon. member for Provencher. Indeed, the other interpretation is probably more appropriate. There has been no restriction. Your Honour understood, as I think did the other occupants of the chair, the gravity of this particular motion, this resolution, and the importance and the necessity to show flexibility in the interpretation of the rules respecting participation of members.

What does this motion purport to do? In effect it says that after the motion has been passed there will be two or four days of debate. After two days maximum, provided there are no further speakers, or speeches stop before that time, the amendment put forward by my colleague from Provencher will then be brought to a vote. The second part of this motion says that another two days can pass and after those two days all other amendments not then voted on must be called, with the resolution itself voted on at 15 minutes before the witching hour at the end of that time.

The motion is defective. The rights of Members of Parliament are being limited by this motion. The motion does not contemplate or ensure the ability of Members of Parliament to bring forward amendments. We will certainly have one amendment because there are two days in which to do that. But it is quite within the realm of contemplation that whoever is recognized first, whether we have to vote to see whether it is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, whoever gets the Speaker's eye after that vote will have his or her amendment put forward. Then there will very likely be no opportunity for any other amendment to come forward. The implication is that Members of Parliament are being deprived of the ability to bring forward amendments to this resolution. It is an infringement upon our rights. It is a defect in this motion. If I were to have given advice to the government House leader, I might have said that if he wanted to make this a valid motion, instead of including the tabling of speeches, he should have said that anyone who has an amendment would be allowed to table it, and even though there would not be a chance to debate—and I will not get into that argument—at least everyone who had a legitimate and receivable motion would have the opportunity of having that amendment voted on. That provision is not contained in the motion of the government House leader. Therefore, it is defective because it is an infringement of my privilege and the privilege of every member in this House of Commons not to be able to bring amendments to the resolution. It is stifling debate on the floor of the House of Commons. The motion by itself for that very reason, apart from the tabling of speeches, should be found defective and not permitted by Your Honour.

Incidentally, I was almost prepared to stand up today and support the government on its motion to allow tabling of documents until I heard the Prime Minister. Then I realized that was the one instance where that provision should have been included. It is contrary. It may be efficient, it may be novel, it may be innovative, but the government House leader has pointed out, whatever term it was he used, was trying to demonstrate that somehow he was being very magnanimous in this motion to allow us all an opportunity to table speeches. The descriptive adjectives he should have used were that it was restrictive, regressive and devious. Those would be more appropriate adjectives for the government House leader because that is the consequence of accepting this motion as far as operation is concerned.

The other observation I want to make deals with the precedent that will be established if Your Honour allows this motion to go forward. My colleague from Nepean-Carleton pointed out that this motion is discursive and descriptive. He pointed out the ruling of Mr. Speaker Michener disallowing a very similar kind of motion which had a statement of alleged facts preceding a motion to substantiate or build up the case for the motion put forward.

I know yours is not an easy job, Madam Speaker. I always try to be helpful. If you allow this motion to go through, God help us in the weeks and months to come with the motions that will come forward. They will be minor novels. They will list every possible deviation and every possible offence committed by members of the government. You will have a most difficult time if you allow this precedent.

We have a lot more facts to work with than those on the government side because the government has committed so many sins of commission and omission that any motion that is brought forward, if this motion is allowed to go through, cannot be ruled out of order because it lists seriatim all the sins of the government on the basis of alleged facts. That by itself should cause you to pause to think whether this precedent, which the government is attempting to create through the government House leader, should be allowed to become one of the precedents of our House.

The simple fact is, as Mr. Speaker Michener pointed out in his decision referred to by my colleague from Nepean-Carleton, the government party's version of Groucho Marx has now been interjected into this debate. I am glad to see he is participating with his maiden speech. The fact is I have read the decision of Mr. Speaker Michener. He makes the very valid point that if you are to allow this kind of extensive preamble with "whereas clauses", the proceedings of the House of Commons will be seriously prejudiced.

It has been a long time since I have seen a three-age motion which purports to say a lot but says little. On those bases I will conclude now—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Since the hon. member did refer to the ruling of my predecessor, Mr. Michener, I might point out that I am not reading it in the same way as the hon. member. For my benefit I would like him to give me his total interpretation of it. In his ruling, Mr. Speaker Michener said that a motion is not defective because it has these "whereas clauses."

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Merely because.

Madam Speaker: I interrupted the hon. member because he was repeating an argument brought forward by another member, but I would like to hear his interpretation. It would be helpful to me.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I am glad you will allow me to hone in on the pith and substance of this argument.

Mr. Blais: Be short.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No. Mr. Speaker Michener was not brief in his ruling. Neither is the government House leader in this motion. I am going to be very brief by comparison. I will look like a saint compared to the government House leader.

Mr. McKinnon: That's not difficult.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: As you will recall, Madam Speaker, the motion in question was moved by Mr. Regier, the then member of Parliament for Burnaby-Coquitlam. The motion dealt with a number of statements on the part of the minister of finance of the day, Mr. Fleming. The point was raised in the decision by Mr. Speaker Michener that if, in fact, a very substantial part of the discursive section of that motion were deleted, he would have found it in order. He said the reason was that while they were purported to be statements of fact, in the parliamentary context they tended to be in the nature of argumentative assertions in the course of amendment. In other words, they were building a case to support the passing of the motion.

The analogy is quite clear here. In his decision, he said that if they were able to delete all of those alleged statements of fact, the motion would possibly be in order. I will just read one part of his judgment:

Beauchesne's citation on the same subject has already been given by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) but for clarity I shall repeat it. This is citation 198 of Beauchesne's fourth edition: "A motion should not be argumentative and in the style of a speech, nor should it contain unnecessary provisions or objectionable words."

That is the essence of it. It should not be argumentative, it should not be in the style of a speech and it should not attempt to build a case for the motion. Once you open the door to that kind of motion, you will find yourself in a most difficult position in terms of conducting this House of Commons in proper order. It will tend to cause disorder, obscure the essence of the debate and allow Members of Parliament in the course of putting motions on the Order Paper to plug the Order Paper with long statements with respect to alleged acts of commission and omission; the sins of the government, the sins of the opposition, and the sins of splinter parties such as the NDP, Social Credit or libertarian. That is the essence of his statement.

I hope once Your Honour has a chance to consider this she will see the validity of my contention. This motion is almost an analagous situation to that dealt with by Mr. Speaker Michener. It was rejected because of the argumentative nature of the motion. He suggested that, had it been in a different form, it would have been accepted.

That was a debate with respect to a budgetary provision. Important as that is, I reiterate that this is on the Constitution of our country. This is a debate in which Members of Parliament have a particular vested interest. When speaking on the Speech from the Throne, the Prime Minister said he had a special message for members from western Canada. He said in that message that because there were no government members elected in western Canada there was a special responsibility on members from western Canada to articulate the hopes and aspirations of the people of western Canada.

In that spirit there are many members in this House who have not had that opportunity. They are being deprived of it because of the Draconian measure being taken by the measure to curtail debate arbitrarily, for whatever reason. Second, as I pointed out, the motion offends against the privileges of members of the House of Commons because we are not able in the normal parliamentary tradition to bring in our amendments, legitimate though they may be, our suggestions for improvements and suggestions for deletions to improve this resolution. We are to be deprived of that because there is no provision within the motion to allow those amendments to be brought forward. If you want to go back to the least important element which is almost laughable, we go back to the suggestion of tabling of speeches. It is more in accordance with the practice of the United States Congress where it is permitted, but not in any parliamentary system developed on the tradition of the British Parliament. Parliament means to participate, debate; it is a forum for free expression, and I think for those reasons I humbly submit that you, Madam Speaker, should find this particular motion out of order, reject it out of hand and let us get on with the nation's business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the issue with which we must deal today is in fact fairly simple. We must determine what is the true value and effect of our authorities' citations, more specifically Beauchesne's, because the arguments put forward by my hon. colleagues opposite are based exclusively on Beauchesne's citations. And it is important, I think, if we want to limit ourselves strictly to the question of procedure and law which must be relevant here, to try to answer this question to find the solution to this so-called problem.

Beauchesne's citations, with all due respect for authorities, are not the Standing Orders of the House of Commons. They make it possible for us to understand better previous decisions and regulations, as well as the traditions and customs of the House of Commons. I suggest that Beauchesne is a lot less conceited than some of the hon. members who have participated so far in this debate would have us believe. One need only read the preface to this work to discover what the editor was trying to do, and I quote from page V of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fifth edition:

Our decision was based upon the fact that it was a Canadian book dealing directly with the parliamentary procedure in our House of Commons. It had a system of numbered paragraphs for quick reference—

And here is where it becomes more important:

—and, of course, some of its citations were still useful in interpreting the rules and practices of the House. Initially, our task involved deleting the obviously outdated citations—

What does that mean, Madam Speaker? That means that from time to time, when we look into the fourth edition, the third edition, the second edition and the first edition, we realize that at one point or other some citation was dropped because it had become irrelevant, for as time passed the rules had changed, practice had changed, in line with the new parliamentary ways.

So Beauchesne does not deny the right to evolution. Beauchesne does not go as far as my Progressive Conservative colleagues do in denying any evolution of the parliamentary procedure. Beauchesne simply establishes the present rules or practices, it does not say that rules cannot be changed. Quite the contrary. It does not say either that the practices cannot be changed. It states the opposite. It does not say that tradition cannot be changed. The reverse is implied. And this publication is in itself an example of this, since in its five editions, Beauchesne was revised five times to adapt to the facts. One only has to read on in the preamble from Beauchesne to put the citations back into the right context and avoid giving a narrow-minded interpretation of some of them, which would likely distort their meaning. It reads as follows:

Since 1958, there have been many changes in our procedure. During the 1960s special committees on procedure met regularly, reporting their recommendations for improving the Standing Orders. The revised rules were adopted on December 20, 1968, with further amendments being adopted in subsequent years.

So between 1958 and 1968, Beauchesne's citations had to be adapted to changing times—it is even stated that after the new Standing Orders were updated in 1968, other improvements were made.

One of the major modifications, as you know, Madam Speaker, was the elimination of the right to appeal the rulings of the Speaker. Just imagine the general outcry that would have happened if a motion introduced then had proposed to eliminate the right to appeal, the protests coming from a party that claims to be conservative and not open to change. However, the changes have effectively been made, Madam Speaker. Today, your rulings cannot be appealed any more, that has been changed. Parliament has evolved into accepting this change, and in spite of those who steadfastly cling to tradition, time marches on, slowly but surely.

There have also been important changes in procedure with regard to appropriation bills. In the past, these were debated in the House sitting in Committee of the Whole, but now they are studied by the standing committees of the House, allowing the latter to deal with other subjects and giving twenty committees or so a chance to do more work.

Madam Speaker, this reminds me that not long ago, a motion I introduced in the House completely upset normal parliamentary procedures in the House.

Remember how, after the last election, changes were approved by the House with a view to rescheduling proceedings on supply bills. We managed to convince the House, which later approved it as perfectly normal and acceptable, that what would normally be looked into in standing committees should come back to the floor of the House sitting in Committee of the Whole. Remember those estimates. We chose the estimates of three separate departments to come back before Committee of the Whole instead of going to standing committees of the House. The House, on the second day of each one of those three periods, sat until midnight, past normal hours; yet, all those changes, those breaks with established practice since 1968 were not contrary to the parliamentary spirit: they were perfectly acceptable. They were the result of a special order of the House and there it was—

Beauchesne says it himself. House proceedings must primarily be governed by written rules, standing, sessional and special orders. Madam Speaker, allow me to quote Beauchesne, fifth edition, Section 7:

Standing, sessional and special orders are the rules and regulations which the House has agreed on for the governance of its own proceedings.

That, then, is how our proceedings are governed. First and foremost by standing, sessional and special orders. Everything else, traditions, authorities, is related to the written rules and to sessional and special orders. Beauchesne, like the others, has to abide by the rules of the House and is subjected to sessional orders, to special orders. Furthermore, Beauchesne has never claimed that he was not subjected to that. He merely says that he interprets current practices, but he does not say that these cannot be changed. And that is where lies the fundamental difference between our own approach to the way we conduct the business of the House, and the approach taken by the hon. members opposite who rose on the point of order tonight.

Madam Speaker, in the fifth edition of Beauchesne, Citation 9 reads as follows and I quote:

9. All rules are passed by the House by a simple majority.

This is crystal clear. Normally, I should sit down now since the matter is altogether settled. But let me go on with this citation:

All rules are passed by the House by a simple majority... there is no procedural reason why any private member or minister of the Crown could not introduce a motion to alter the rules.

All that is in Citation 9.

That being acknowledged, Madam Speaker, the only true way of regulating the business of the House is by means of written rules, sessional or special orders, as required now, which are to be voted upon and which can probably be passed by a simple majority. Let us deal now with traditions and jurisprudence which should be based on written rules and sessional or special orders. I think that Beauchesne is even more broadminded, much less conservative than those whose speeches we have heard up to now.

• (2140)

Parliament, and the manner in which it works, has developed—

I am sorry, I do not want to offend anyone on the other side, but the word "developed" is written in Beauchesne.

Parliament, and the manner in which it works, has developed over centuries and the written rules are relative newcomers to the procedural field. Indeed, increasingly, the written rules are being used, not to codify existing practice, but rather to trim and adjust historic traditions to modern needs.

Madam Speaker, if it is true, according to Beauchesne in Citation 9 and under our parliamentary practice since we have begun to change our rules—and we are increasingly in favour of written rules, while precedents and traditions have less and less authority—if it is true that by means of a motion passed by a simple majority, our rules can be changed or one or several of the 116 rules written in this little green book can be changed, then we must certainly be able, by means of a motion passed by a simple majority, to suspend some of these Standing Orders for a limited time and for a very specific debate.

This would seem to be only logical, and this is what we are now doing. To understand that and to be able to accept it, you need a certain openness of mind and you have to be able to admit that evolution is possible, desirable and has in fact occurred throughout the history of our Parliament. Those who have raised points of order this evening based their arguments essentially on a few citations of Beauchesne.

I have just quoted a citation to explain in which context these citations must be viewed. They state what the rules provide and what is the practice. However, Beauchesne does not forbid us to change the rules and practice either permanently or for one session or for a special debate. These are essentially my arguments in response to the points raised generally by the three members opposite who have expressed their views.

I am willing to deal specifically with each point raised by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Let us consider first of all the points which can be disposed of most simply, those raised by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton. I say this with all due respect because I believe that these points will take less time to dispose of in view of the points I have just made. I do not mean to say that the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton did not work as hard as the others. His first point was that the preamble of the motion is unacceptable, because it goes against Citation 423 of Beauchesne. It is argumentative, according to him, and he quotes a ruling made in 1961 by Mr. Speaker Michener to prove his point. However, Madam Speaker, let us examine the preamble. There is nothing like examining a motion to see what it contains, and before concluding that it goes against a citation or a ruling of a former Speaker, one has to know what the preamble contains. According to Citation 423 of the fifth edition—this also disposes of the point made by the member for Saskatoon West, Citation 198 of the fourth edition, which seems clever but Citation 198 of the fourth edition and Citation 423 of the fifth edition are exactly the same—a motion should be neither argumentative nor in the style of a speech.

Madam Speaker, it is surely not in the style of a speech. That can be ruled out immediately. It is not in the form of a speech. A speech is not full of whereas clauses.

We are dealing here with a preamble. There are such preambles in all our bills. Our parliamentary procedure recognizes them as such since even the preamble is put in Committee of the Whole. The constitutional resolution before us contains a preamble, and is it argumentative? I respectfully submit that it is not. All that we have are statements of facts that are in the record of the House. They are not arguments. It cannot even be questioned. It is a statement of the actual facts that have occurred during the course of this debate and that are recorded in the proceedings of both the House committee and the joint committee as well as in the Votes and Proceedings of the House. Therefore, to say, and I quote:

THAT WHEREAS the Prime Minister tabled in the House of Commons on October 6, 1980 a document entitled "Proposed Resolution for a Joint Address to Her Majesty—" —is not argumentative. It appears in the Votes and Proceedings of the House. It is a statement of fact that speaks for itself and cannot be denied.

AND WHEREAS the motion to refer the said document to a Special Joint Committee of the House and Senate was debated in the House on 11 days between October 6 and October 23, 1980, —allowing some 78 members to speak.

That is in the Votes and Proceedings of the House. It is not argumentative. It is taken from Votes and Proceedings.

AND WHEREAS the Joint Committee, on which some 132 members of this House served, held 106 meetings, sat for 267 hours, received over 1,000 written submissions and heard testimony from 95 groups and five individuals;

Just read the committee report submitted to this House, it is in there. It is a fact taken from the report. It is a statement of what has happened in committee and it is not argumentative, it is just a statement of fact. These are excerpts from the proceedings of both the committee and the House.

AND WHEREAS the Joint Committee, having had its reporting date extended twice, reported on February 13, 1981 with the recommendation that the government introduce a motion for the presentation of the address as modified by the committee;

There again, it is stated in the committee proceedings that the date was extended twice.

AND WHEREAS the motion of the Minister of Justice implementing the joint committee's recommendation was moved on February 17, 1981;

This is not argumentative. I am speaking to a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The minister is reading the resolution as if it were fact. If the minister will check the joint committee resolution as printed in Votes and Proceedings for Friday, February 13, I think he will find that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) did not in fact implement the recommendation of the joint committee as moved on February 17, 1981. There is a difference in substance between the committee's recommendation and what is presented before the House. I ask the minister to check Votes and Proceedings for that day. He will find that the statement he just read is incorrect.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: And I go on quoting the facts which are on record:

AND WHEREAS the motion of the Minister of Justice implementing the joint committee's recommendation was moved on February 17, 1981:

The Minister of Justice moved a motion implementing the recommendation of the joint committee, and that appears in the recorded proceedings.

AND WHEREAS the hon. member for Provencher moved an amendment to that motion on February 17, 1981:

That is not an argument, it is simply taking note of facts which once again are on record. And finally:

AND WHEREAS the said amendment has been debated by this House for some five weeks, with the result that as of March 18, 1981, there have been 52 speakers on behalf of the official opposition, 15 speakers on behalf of the New Democratic Party, and 31 speakers on behalf of the government;

Here again that is on the record. I even have the number of minutes during which the proceedings lasted. The official opposition spoke twice as long as the Liberal Party, they have so far devoted more than 55 hours to this debate on third reading.

But those are not arguments. It is not for the purpose of argument or debate that such things are alleged; we are taking note of the reality and of the facts which are recorded in the Votes and Proceedings of the House. Therefore in no way does that run counter to Beauchesne's Citation 423, or Citation 184 of the fourth edition as my colleague from Saskatoon West claims. Nor does it fly in the face of the ruling made by Mr. Michener because each case stands on its own merits and we are not dealing here with an amendment but with the main motion. The preamble here is not argumentative, it simply relates the proceedings before the committee and the House. So what is left of the substance of the arguments raised by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton? He states that our motion is self-contradictory because it provides that Standing Order 40 be suspended, whereas Section (7) of that order stipulates that when there is a special order of the House, Standing Order 40 shall be suspended. On the contrary, I fail to understand why he should make such a statement. The special order we are seeking does not apply solely to Section (7) of Standing Order 40, that is not hard to understand, it applies to Standing Order 40 as a whole.

Now then, a little further on Section (7) of Standing Order 40 gains even more weight. We did not have to say that, and I agree with him. We did not have to specify that there would be no adjournment debate, all we had to do was to ask to sit beyond normal hours and, pursuant to Standing Order 40(7), there can be no adjournment debate. That is what it says in Section (7).

But our motion does not provide that Standing Order 40(7) be suspended. It says that Standing Order 40 as a whole will not apply. Standing Order 40 deals with adjournment proceedings. That is the way we tried to make it more certain that there would be no adjournment debate; there is nothing contradictory in that, it is for emphasis, it goes even further.

So, as an argument to have us put our motion aside, it is not very convincing, it is not the find of the century, Madam Speaker.

There is also a third argument, Citation 411. I have read and reread it and, frankly, I must say that the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton has not proven to me how that citation could prevent us from moving on that motion, except that I retain this part of it, and I quote:

No motion is regularly before the House until it has been read by the Chair. Then it may be debated, amended, superseded, adopted, negatived or withdrawn, as the House may decide.

That is what Beauchesne says. And if we were to give it a literal interpretation, we could not hold the debate now in progress until the motion is put. This shows that Beauchesne's citations are not always observed. So, this is what I read in Citation 411.

I say it once again. No motion is regularly before the House until it has been read by the Chair; only then it may be debated.

Finally, as mentioned by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, according to Citation 311 we cannot table written speeches because this is against tradition.

Madam Speaker, there are many democratic countries in the world where written speeches can be tabled and those are not totalitarian states. One has only to look at what is going on in Washington; but regardless of the fact that written speeches can be tabled in several other democratic countries, if ever there was an independent country, it is the United States, and the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) will have to admit it.

Madam Speaker, there is a tradition here in this House that written speeches cannot be tabled. That is actually a fact. But as I said earlier in my speech, traditions are there to be changed. Madam Speaker, our parliamentary tradition has been a continuously changing process and Beauchesne does not say that in the future it will not be possible to table speeches, but simply says that up to now according to our practice, that is not acceptable.

But once again, we can change tradition by introducing written rules, sessional or special orders. Traditions may be subjected to any one of those three kinds of changes I mentioned earlier. And because we propose that a simple majority of the members in this House do pass a special order to allow honourable members to table written speeches, I would say that this is not against Beauchesne. Beauchesne's citations record the past, but do not close the door to evolution nor to future changes.

Point of Order—Mr. Knowles

The hon. member for Saskatoon West was saying, and once again this goes to show that Beauchesne's citations and other authorities do not have force of law nor are always implemented, and I will quote what he said:

[English]

"members should not read speeches"

[Translation]

I checked with Beauchesne whether it was true, because that is not the practice here, where many members do read their speeches. Citation 309 of Beauchesne reads as follows:

It is a rule in both Houses of Parliament that a member must address the House orally, and not read from a written, previously prepared speech.

And Beauchesne is also referring to Bourinot.

This is the best indication that these citations, Madam Speaker, fall short of the written rules, sessional or special orders which regulate our proceedings. Some of them are never implemented. Some are even ignored when new practices are evolved and traditions are changed.

The example given by the hon. member for Saskatoon West is the most blatant of all. I have just read a citation from Beauchesne which is not even implemented, namely, Citation 309 (1). It says that no hon. member may read from a written speech in the House and yet this is done and there are no written rules, sessional or special orders to prevent it but this practice developed and allowed us to set aside this tradition. If we can do it in this regard, why could we not do it as well in other areas? This is my answer to the argument put forward by the hon. member for Saskatoon West.

Then he said it was required to get the unanimous consent of the House in order to bring about changes in the Standing Orders of the House of Commons. Madam Speaker, this is not true. Citation 9 of Beauchesne, which I quoted earlier, states clearly that all rules can be altered by a simple majority. This practice has always been the one used to make changes in the Standing Orders of the House of Commons.

Now, as I said, to conclude, I do not wish to repeat myself, Madam Speaker, but it seems so obvious, it seems so clear that the motion is in keeping with the spirit of Parliament, in keeping with a long-established practice. There are special orders in specific debates to extend sitting hours, reduce the time limit on speeches, change the current rules, change the usual practice, the tradition. There is absolutely nothing there that is contrary to the spirit of Parliament. Quite the opposite, it is the end result of a practice that evolved over these last few years, particularly since we have these written rules, these sessional orders or special orders. In this case, we are not changing the Standing Orders nor the practice for the future, all we are doing is changing them for a specific debate, to adapt to circumstances and ensure that in this specific case, as has been done so often in other cases, certain rules will not apply and there will be special orders to determine the way the debate will be proceeding in the days ahead or until completion.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, what we are introducing is a motion that is quite in keeping with the Standing Orders and the spirit of Parliament. As I said, the points made by those who oppose its value, its content are based essentially, or exclusively on a few citations in Beauchesne, and in particular Citations 311 and 423. Incidentally, Citation 423 is not relevant because in this case our preamble is not a matter of contention, it is a statement of facts that are on record in the proceedings of both the special committee and the House of Commons. This leaves Citation 311, and as I said earlier, it is written in Beauchesne's fifth edition, in the preface, the foreword. Our intention is not to establish rules governing this House. What we are doing is recognizing how the rules were applied in the past, and how the tradition evolved until now. Beauchesne is proof that the progress of Parliament requires a change of rules, a change of traditions to keep up with the times, and this we are doing through a motion passed under the majority rule, not only when we want to make permanent changes to Standing Orders, but from time to time to change them for specific debates as is the case in this Constitution debate.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

Madam Speaker: The applause lasted long enough for me to now stand and adjourn the House. The hon. member for Victoria.

Mr. Beatty: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: It is ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—REPORTED REMOVAL OF "E" DIVISION FROM VICTORIA, B.C.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight because of a series of questions I have asked over the last couple of weeks concerning the projected move of "E" Division of the RCMP from Victoria to Vancouver. As far as the House of Commons is concerned, this issue started on March 6 when, after having heard rumours from Victoria of this move, I asked a question of the Minister of Justice (Mr.

Chrétien) in his position as Acting Solicitor General during the absence of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan). I would like to thank the Solicitor General for staying for the adjournment debate this evening.

The Minister of Justice knew nothing of the case, and, apparently, neither did the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove), who tried to answer a supplementary question I put to him.

I took this matter up again on March 9, when the Solicitor General was in the House. I asked him about the plan to move the headquarters of "E" Division of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police out of the city of Victoria. In my question I said:

I understand the Solicitor General has informed the media that this projected move is by no means certain. However, RCMP senior officers have said the move is on. Would the Solicitor General clarify this matter, please?

His reply was:

Madam Speaker, if the hon. member would tell me which members of the RCMP were saying that, I will get in touch with them and tell them the move is not on, not finally settled, and will not be until I have had an opportunity to discuss this with the provincial attorney general.

Those are pretty strong words from the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, he did not know anything about any press releases which had been issued, nor did he have any information about a move taking place. As far as he was concerned it was not on, it was not settled and he was going to discuss it with the provincial attorney general.

His answer to my supplementary question on the same subject as to whether there would be impact studies done on the move before it took place was that he did not undertake that there would be specific impact studies undertaken. He ended his answer by saying:

That is not a decision which will be made until I have consulted on the matter with the attorney general of British Columbia.

It is interesting to note that this was on March 9, when clearly the Solicitor General did not know the RCMP were even thinking of moving. But, on March 4 the RCMP in Victoria issued a press release which stated:

Deputy Commissioner G. W. Reed, Commanding Officer of the RCMP, "E" Division, British Columbia, confirms that reorganization of the RCMP in British Columbia is planned and part of this reorganization would be the establishment of the headquarters in Vancouver.

This reorganization is still in the planning stages and will take place over a comparatively long range period of time and the gradual movement of the headquarters from Victoria to Vancouver will not likely commence until the end of 1981 at the earliest and proceed over a two or three-year period.

After his bold words in the House of Commons, the Solicitor General roared like a lion and said if I would only tell him who had informed me of this he would get in touch with them and tell them the move is not on. He said he was really going to straighten them out. He then went out to Victoria and apparently he got straightened out by the RCMP.

The next thing we heard from him in the House of Commons was on March 18. I asked him if "E" Division was going to move and his answer was:

Madam Speaker, what I had in mind was that the move would be phased in over a three-year period—that there would be normal attrition and transfers during that period, and that all of the officials working in the program who wanted to do so would have a priority for transferring to other federal jobs—

In my supplementary question I said:

On Monday he told reporters:

"They were fully consulted about it during the last two years of planning."

However, the Hon. Allan Williams, Attorney General of B.C., stated today:

"To suggest that we have been consulted is inaccurate and misleading. This is a callous and insensitive move and I oppose it until it is supported by an economic and social impact study."

That brings us fairly well up to the present. I might say that the press release, issued in Victoria on March 4, five days before the Solicitor General knew anything about it, caused a great deal of concern on the west coast. The mayor of Victoria sent me a copy of his letter to the Hon. Robert P. Kaplan on March 5, which said:

This letter is to object strenuously on behalf of myself and the mayors of Saanich, Oak Bay and Esquimalt to this proposed move.

● (2205)

The local newspapers reported the following day that the acting mayor, alderman Bill McElroy, said:

This is not the stupidest decision the federal government has ever made, but it's definitely in the top two.

We are different in Victoria, I believe, in that we are very proud of the environment, the town we live in, and our community. People do not try to alter communities without a great deal of preparation. An impact study is absolutely vital. It should check into whether there will be a serious social impact for over 200 employees, and an economic impact on those who will pay for this move, considering that only three years ago $4 million or $5 million was paid for the buildings they moved into two years ago.

I would also suggest to the Solicitor General that he might consider polling his employees on their positions which he has now caved-in about and who will have to move whether they like it or not. Apparently he does not want to do any studies. The problem there is that the Solicitor General, if he looks back on the history of "E" division, will find that at one time they were grouped in one headquarters. In 1976 they were broken into two districts. Now you are going to put them back and get right back to your 1976 problems. There will be no change. The problem will simply be transferred from Victoria to Vancouver. This will mean there will be two problems: the problem of 1976 in Victoria plus the problem there will be in Vancouver.

I would submit to the Solicitor General that if he would have an impact study done on the economics of this, and would check into his own "E" division out there to find out if this is really in the best interests of the RCMP or only in the best interests of some individuals, I think he would find that his problem is not administrative, but one of personnel.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has now expired. The hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan).

Adjournment Debate

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated in this House, and when I was in British Columbia, that this move is now on, and it is obviously not a very popular decision for the people of Victoria. I fully understand that they would prefer to have the RCMP "E" Division headquarters in their city.

I therefore want to take the opportunity to briefly review how this decision was made. I say at the outset that the decision is the responsibility of the Solicitor General of Canada, under the regulations of the RCMP Act. The force has kept me informed of developing plans to move the headquarters. Until my formal approval was attached to the plan, it did not become—if I could put it that way—an official plan. Even now pieces of it require approval of the Treasury Board before implementation, and approval will not even be sought immediately for all of them. It is a two to three-year gradual phase-in process which I think will have a minimum impact on Victoria. However, approvals will proceed along that course.

One hon. member opposite shouted that I do not know the difference between Vancouver and Victoria. I do know the difference; but even more important, the commissioner of the RCMP knows the difference because almost two decades of his career have been spent in British Columbia. It is no secret that he always regarded its establishment in Victoria as a less effective location than Vancouver.

The proposed move did not come from an easterner of someone who does not know what is happening in the west; the move is being organized, planned and put to me by experts who know very well what the needs are for efficient policing in British Columbia.

I have a copy of a letter which Allan Williams sent to me a few days ago. I would be happy to table it if the rule and hon. members would permit. The letter makes it very clear that Allan Williams had discussions on the subject, and that his view is that the implementation of the plan will contribute to an improved delivery of police service to the people of British Columbia.

Our responsibility is to deliver good police service to the people of British Columbia. The attorney general, after his staff was consulted, and after writing and saying he recognizes that he is being consulted and that this decision would contribute to an improved delivery of service, then urges me to make further investigation into the matter. I know it is an unpopular decision but it is not for him to make; it is for this government to make.

I feel that we have acted in a responsible way and I hope, in a larger sense, the people of British Columbia recognize all the advantages of the efficient and improved policing that the force itself has put to me, that the attorney general of the province has approved on policing grounds, and that I fully believe will improve the efficiency and effectiveness of policing—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

I would remind the House that this is an adjournment motion. If the minister wishes to communicate copies of correspondence to the hon. member I suggest that he simply send it to him.

ENERGY—NEW BRUNSWICK OIL SHALES DEVELOPMENT

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) to explore the development potential of oil shale in the province of New Brunswick for two reasons: first, because it is important to Canada as we drive toward energy self-sufficiency and, second, because it is important to New Brunswick in that it would provide badly-needed jobs and be a tremendous stimulant in the field of development.

I should like to say a word about what the oil shales comprise. The oil shales are found in the Albert geological formation which in many ways can be likened to a large saucer. It results from an ancient lake. If I might go back to my analogy of the saucer, the centre of that saucer would be located in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the perimeter of the saucer would be developed from the centre at an angle of approximately 40 degrees. The oil shales are near the surface in the province of New Brunswick; they are found in the county of Albert and stretch from an area north of Moncton to an area midway between Sussex and Saint John. The shales comprise about 2,500 square miles in southeastern New Brunswick.

Around the turn of the century the local people discovered the potential of the shales and used it as an energy source. I do not think it was a viable commercial operation but I have seen what is seemingly a rock of oil shale ignited by a match which burned freely. I saw that happen in the last month.

The process of obtaining oil from the shale is to first grind the shale to a granular form, put it in a retort, and heat it to 900 degrees Fahrenheit. The oil then flows out through the bottom and gas escapes from the top. If the gas which escapes from the top is captured it can become the energy source for sweating the oil from the shale.

This process is quite similar to that which is employed in the tar sands of Alberta. A small pilot project is under way in Colorado in the United States operated by the Occidental Petroleum Company.

When the shale is located at a greater depth, tunnels are bored into the rock, a combustion chamber is hollowed out, fire ignites in the combustion chamber and heats to 900 degrees. The oil then flows through the bottom where vertical tunnels gather it and it is pumped to the surface. This is another technique that is used in Alberta. It is more costly and it is used for deep-seated shale.

Significantly, about one-third of the shale in New Brunswick is surface and can be mined in an open pit or in the strip-mining fashion. It can provide the nucleus for our energy resource in that regard.

● (2215)

Canadian Occidental Petroleum has done some initial exploratory work on an area of 1,000 acres of shale deposits with some surface exposure. They found a relatively constant thickness of 250 feet. The hydrocarbon content in the principal zone which was explored is estimated to be from 8 per cent to 10 per cent. The oil has been found to be of a light, sweet nature.

The study evaluation is required because the only area evaluated is this 1,000 square acres. The possibility of surface mining and surface retorting of crude bitumen is a very important potential, one I would like to see the Government of Canada and the government of New Brunswick join in considering. The potential, based on the small sampling done, indicates 15 billion barrels or more of oil. That is well worthwhile exploring. There are some uncertainties. There are environmental aspects which must be looked at and there are some really tremendous job creation benefits. There is also the potential of helping us nationally with our security of supply problem.

The National Energy Program appears to me to underestimate the potential for the New Brunswick oil shales and also the potential for providing a nucleus in a special field of research and development in the extraction technology.

Saskatchewan has a five-year $50 million heavy oil research and development program. New Brunswick has none. It would be my hope that we would not resort to DREE and its very slender funds to move in this development area. I would like to see it included in the inventories of our National Energy Program and developed in that way. I think it is essential to select a portfolio in research and development investments which recognize our regional diversities. I think if this particular potential is included in the National Energy Program inventory it will not only recognize the regional diversities, but it will provide a tremendous development stimulus in an area which needs it very badly.

I want to thank you, Mr. Speaker, and the House for its indulgence this evening.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member opposite has indicated, the New Brunswick oil shales have attracted attention for many years. From time to time efforts have been made to develop them commercially. In the past, such attempts have proved to be uneconomic. However, with the high world price of oil there is renewed interest in the potential of these shale deposits.

The oil shales in southwest New Brunswick are believed to cover between 1,000 and 2,000 square miles. They have not yet been thoroughly explored. It is obvious that a great deal of work needs to be done. Some work is currently being carried out on the evaluation of the potential of the oil shales. Under the Canada-Brunswick mineral and fuels subsidiary agreement, $60,000 has been spent on mapping the oil shale formations, compiling existing data and some preliminary investigation of oil recovery using microwave technology. A $75,000 program has just started to examine the use of oil shale as a combined sulphur entrapment medium and heat source when burned with high sulphur coal in fluid bed combustion.

Canadian Occidental Petroleum has large holdings of the oil shale formation. However, the company is expected to relinquish much of its ground next month. When this happens, the province may call for exploration commitment bids on six to eight blocks of 90,000 acres to determine if the private sector is preferred to carry out the work on the resource.

In February, a meeting took place in Ottawa between New Brunswick officials and those of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. A technical committee may be established to evaluate the potential of these oil shales.

The National Energy Program makes provision for assisting in the development of oil and gas resources. A proposal for the commercial development of the New Brunswick oil shales would be considered under the terms of the petroleum incentives program in the same way that a proposal for the commercial development of the oil sands in Alberta would be considered. For instance, the depletion allowance for approved expenditures on integrated oil sands projects can be earned at one-third of qualifying expenditures. In addition, there would be incentive payments to companies having a Canadian ownership rate of 75 per cent or more. An oil shale project would be eligible for reference pricing under the National Energy Program thereby providing a price for the product considerably higher than that pertaining to the traditional oil deposits of western Canada.

The New Brunswick oil shales may yet have a role to play in helping to ensure security of energy supply for the Atlantic region. Of course, much work would have to be done to prove the economic viability of this resource. However, for companies willing to take the initiative, the National Energy Program may offer a very helpful incentive.

HEALTH CARE—REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO BAN EXTRA BILLING BY DOCTORS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, March 16, 1981, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) confirmed the figures that the CBC had obtained which showed that the Canadian public was paying some $56 million more for health care than they should have to as a result of extra billing by physicians.

Some 71 per cent of this extra money is being paid out by the people of Ontario who, I might say, already pay for health care through general revenues and through regressive premiums, thus paying three times for what other Canadians pay for once through the tax system. One is truly amazed at the masochism of the Ontario people, demonstrated by the re-election of the Progressive Conservative government just recently.

Mr. Justice Hall in the Health Services Review of 1980 recommended that extra billing be outlawed by amending the Medical Care Act to provide that extra billing by physicians inhibits reasonable access to services and is contrary to the intent and purpose of the act. This is what I, as health critic for the federal New Democratic Party, implore the minister to do now and not to wait for the renegotiation of the Established Programs Financing.

March, 1982 is just too long to wait for a remedy to this extremely serious problem. We allow extra billing to increase in the meantime; that is between now and the renegotiation of the Established Programs Financing, at the peril of so seriously eroding the principles of medicare that people come to expect extra billing, particularly in provinces like Ontario. They take out insurance against it, then we have exactly the two-tiered health care system Mr. Justice Hall warns us against, one for the rich and one for the poor.

During the two recent election campaigns, the minister talked tough to the provinces; when she was the minister prior to May, 1979 and then when she was in opposition. Now she is backing off, citing improvements in New Brunswick while she turns a blind eye to events in Ontario, British Columbia, Manitoba and Alberta, to mention a few.

In her answer to me in the House the other day she posed the problem of doctors leaving a province that banned extra billing. That is precisely why we cannot expect even governments like Saskatchewan, which would like to so act, to outlaw extra billing by themselves. We cannot expect Saskatchewan to go through the trauma of giving birth to medicare once again while neo-conservative provinces sit idly by and watch the struggle.

Federal action will be required, the kind I am requesting of the minister. Federal leadership is required. That is what I and my colleagues in the New Democratic Party will wring out of this government if it is the last thing we do. We will not allow this government through sloth, cowardice, indifference or restraint to dismantle the heritage which the pioneers of our movement fought to get for the Canadian people in universal health care or in other social programs.

Let me give notice to the government that as we enter a period in which federal-provincial fiscal relationships are to be studied by an all-party task force, on which I will sit as the representative of my party, we will not accept or work within any hidden agenda that presumes a lessening of federal financial or philosophical commitment to medicare.

● (2225)

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, with respect to extra billing, I must first remind those who have tried to confuse this issue that this government is opposed to any form of extra billing. Mr. Justice Hall was justifiably concerned about extra billing and its possible impact on access to health care by disadvantaged groups in our society. He stated that "the practice of extra billing is inequitable" and would lead to a two-tiered system. He also noted that extra billing is twinned with the issue of protecting the legitimate interests of physicians when one way of increasing their income, the extra billing, is eliminated.

Mr. Justice Hall's solution to the problems of extra billing and reasonable compensation for physicians was to recommend that the provinces "outlaw extra billing" but also agree to establish and accept binding arbitration on compensation issues for which negotiated agreements could not be reached.

Mr. Justice Hall described the federal role as "a responsibility to set objectives which will reaffirm the national character of Canada's medical care program." He suggested that to fulfil this role with regards to extra billing and physician compensation, the federal government support the provinces my making legislative changes so that extra billing was declared contrary to the intent and purposes of national health insurance and to encourage the provinces to "develop a mechanism to ensure reasonable compensation to physicians." The minister strongly supports Mr. Justice Hall's views and intends to recommend to her colleagues in cabinet that, when the government begins bargaining with the provinces on fiscal arrangements with EPF, a primary goal of these negotiations should be an end to extra billing in conjunction with a system to ensure reasonable compensation for physicians.

Ever since the completion of the Hall report, officials of the department and the minister have been working with provinces to resolve this dilemma, and to build the groundwork for such negotiations. It is federal-provincial co-operation which will ensure that national objectives in the health sector are attained, and it will not be done by precipitous action on the part of the federal government.

As for the figures that gave rise to the estimated $56 million in the cost of extra billing for insured medical care services, this is, I repeat, an estimated figure. These data were developed in co-operation with the provinces on a tentative basis, and until, and only until they have been further reviewed by the provinces, the minister is not prepared to release any supporting documentation.

In conclusion, this government is not prepared to withhold payments from provinces simply because they do not immediately agree to ban extra billing. Such hasty action could result in a catastrophic disruption of services to patients, defeat the basic purpose of the Medical Care Act, and might leave the federal government open to court action. The key element of the Hall report is that his proposals should be achieved through negotiation, and the minister is confident that this will be accomplished through that same process. Thank you.

GREEK INDEPENDENCE DAY

TRIBUTE TO CANADIANS OF GREEK ORIGIN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I move a motion of great importance to the Greek Canadian community of our country, and ask unanimous consent for its passing.

In full recognition of the outstanding contributions made by Greek Canadians to the social, spiritual and economic fabric of our society, as well as adding significantly to the foundation of our mosaic Canadian culture, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That this House acknowledge such contributions by officially recognizing the significance of this day, March 25, which is Greek Independence Day, and the 160th anniversary of the freedom and independence of Greece, the cradle of democracy.

Madam Speaker: I am sure that the House will want to express its appreciation for those words by applause.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

CALL FOR PARTIAL WITHDRAWAL OF POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas today, March 25, marks the sad day when the one hundredth oil rig is leaving Canada; whereas each of those 100 rigs caused employment for dozens and dozens of Canadians with an economic multiplier effect of at least four times, and whereas only a Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and government which are totally out of touch with Canada's real needs could propose such a misguided energy policy, thereby destroying any chance of oil self-sufficiency, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the government immediately withdraw those parts of its energy policy which have caused those 100 oil rigs to leave Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATION OF CLEAN AIR TREATY WITH UNITED STATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Given the immediate need for both Canada and the United States to control and eliminate acid rain, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the Prime Minister put pressure on the United States not to weaken the provisions of the U.S. Clean Air Act which is up for review, and that the Prime Minister be instructed by this House to use any and all possible means available to the Government of Canada to bring to fruition, without further delay, the toughest treaty possible to control the long-range transport of air pollutants, the most critical environmental problem facing North America today.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TRANSPORT

GRAIN TERMINAL DEVELOPMENT AT PORT OF PRINCE RUPERT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43 which arises out of the fact that progress is once again being further frustrated and delayed in the grain terminal development of the port of Prince Rupert because of the federal government's refusal to honour fundamental articles in the memorandum of understanding signed and agreed to by the federal government and Prince Rupert Grain Terminal Consortium, specifically, the equal sharing of costs of the site preparation, including caissons for the new elevator. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise):

That the Minister of Transport instruct officials of the National Harbours Board to honour the articles of the memorandum of understanding negotiated in good faith, and further instruct his officials to proceed forthwith in ending the stalemate with Prince Rupert Grain Terminal Consortium so that further tenders can be called and the project be proceeded with.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

BROADCASTING OF PARTY LEADERS' SPEECHES ON CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that on Monday, March 23, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made one of the most important speeches in Canadian history and that neither CBC, CTV nor Tele Metropole in Quebec broadcast this historic event, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang):

That the television networks fulfil their responsibility of keeping the Canadian public informed, particularly on matters of fundamental importance to our nation, by rebroadcasting the Prime Minister's speech as well as those of the opposition leaders.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Settle the strike.

INCOME TAX

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN EDUCATION DEDUCTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the education deduction for full-time post-secondary school students of $50 a month, first introduced in 1972, has never been increased, and in view of the fact that since that time the cost of living has almost doubled, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That as a result of the fact that tuition fees, accommodation and other expenses for students have almost doubled since 1972, that this House recognize that students are as much affected by inflation as are other groups by urging the government to table a ways and means motion which would increase the present maximum deduction of $50 per month to a level more in line with the harsh realities of the eroded purchasing power of the dollar.

FUEL SURCHARGE EXEMPTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to see the Minister of Transport in his seat. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise to move the following motion.

Failure of the government to move in extending the fuel surcharge exemption to all Canadian flagships operating out of Canadian ports will add some $30 million to the operational costs of those fleets and thus seriously erode their competitive position offshore, as well as creating an unacceptable administrative burden for the government with respect to policing it. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That this House urges the government to extend its exemption on fuel surcharges to all Canadian flagships so as to bring into line all of the transportation modes, not later than March 31, 1981.

ALICE ARM, B.C.—CALL FOR REVOCATION OF AMAX SPECIAL DUMPING PERMIT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to move a motion.

Considering that the Liberal government issued a dumping permit by order in council to Amax Limited, in the middle of the 1979 federal election, and considering this action is opposed by the Nishgas and over 50 local groups and Canadians from coast to coast, on solid scientific and medical grounds, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House calls for the revocation of the special dumping permit to Amax until such time as a full public inquiry has heard evidence and ruled on the health and environmental implications of this project.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

GRAIN

COMPENSATION TO FARMERS FOR EMBARGO ON SHIPMENTS TO RUSSIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, I seek the attention of all hon. members of this House. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I rise to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Having recently returned from a visit to my native province of Saskatchewan I have become acutely aware of a very serious problem affecting western grain farmers. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister made a commitment to western grain farmers that they would be paid compensation because of the boycott policy of the previous government directed toward the sale of grain to the Soviet Union, and in light of the fact that many of these western grain farmers urgently need seeding money for the new crop year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie):

That this House give unanimous support to the government to act as soon as possible to provide the details of compensation for the western grain farmers to eliminate any further hardships that they may suffer as a result of this grain embargo.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

PROCESSING OF DISABILITY PENSIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I have reviewed this motion with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette), and I believe they will be comfortable with it.

Canadians suffering from a terminal illness, such as cancer, are naturally concerned about the financial well-being of their families. The greatest enemy of these people is time. Canada Pension Plan disability procedures are not set up to give any consideration to the severe problems these people face. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That this House instruct the Minister of National Health and Welfare to study the possibility of setting up priority processing of disability pensions for Canadians suffering from a terminal illness.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

PROGRAMS AFFECTING NEW BRUNSWICK—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The province of New Brunswick and its premier have been threatened by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), the Minister of Indians Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), and the member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail), with economic sanction, unfairly, unjustifiably and indefensibly. Despite the fact that they are more pomp and poop, there are citizens questioning the influence of these members. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie):

That the political minister for New Brunswick, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, reassure the people that the government intends to honour all its commitments and will continue to participate in such programs as the general development agreement and primary highway strengthening program as in the past.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

PROGRESS OF TALKS BETWEEN PROVINCIAL REPRESENTATIVES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister, who will know that Premier Sterling Lyon has reported that the eight provinces meeting now in Manitoba have made some progress toward agreement on constitutional proposals which will be far more acceptable to more Canadians than the constitutional proposal that is now before the House of Commons. In light of that progress that is being made, will the Prime Minister tell the House why he is intent on rushing his particular constitutional proposal through the House of Commons at a time when it appears that waiting a little longer would result in agreement on an amending formula and a constitutional package that would have the effect of uniting Canadians rather than dividing them? Why is he rushing through with his proposed Constitution?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am really happy to hear that the premiers are making some progress. I wish we could say as much for the debate in this House. When the hon. member opposite suggests that we are rushing things—

Mr. Beatty: Except for your speech.

Mr. Trudeau: —I have to remind him we have been on one single amendment for more than five weeks now. I have heard from the opposition party that they would like to see the charter improved in the area of rights of women, in the area of aboriginal rights, and so on.

An hon. Member: Property.

Mr. Trudeau: Property. I am amazed that the opposition call it rushing when they have prevented us from even considering amendments which would improve the status of women and so on. The Leader of the Opposition asks if a little more delay would be useful. Madam Speaker, the measure is still before the House. If the premiers have indeed reached an agreement and a consensus, we would be happy to hear from them about it. However, until we hear anything to the contrary, my opinion is that of Premier Hatfield when he said delay would only produce one thing, more delay, and that is what it has been doing.

AMENDING FORMULA

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, what is curious about the Prime Minister's position is that, while he pretends to be reasonable, he has before this House a motion of closure that would get this question out of Canada at the very time when there is an opportunity for agreement to be found in Canada. He might prefer Britain to settle our questions. We prefer Canadians to settle our questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: If the trained sheep so graphically displayed in Le Devoir the other day would be quiet for a moment I would put my question to the Prime Minister. He said on Monday, in his long two hour and 20-minute speech before he sought to impose closure on the House, that he did not personally prefer the Victoria amending formula but he was proposing that amending formula only, he made it clear, because it had been the subject of agreement. My question to the Prime Minister now is would he support another amending formula if it had agreement among the provinces?

• (1420)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition referred to many things, first of all to my long speech. I would point out that under the rules of this House the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition can speak without time limit. If he had more to say on the subject he would have made a longer speech.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Then we hear that closure is being imposed at the very time, in the words of the Leader of the Opposition, the very time the premiers are reaching agreement. Madam Speaker, the measure has been known to the premiers for many months now; I have no evidence that in the meetings they held in the fall and winter they reached agreement on anything. Why is he suggesting they reached agreement on anything now? If they had, surely we would have heard about it.

I think the Leader of the Opposition is only using this in the hope that he would destroy the chance of Canadians ever getting a charter of rights.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Holding Canada together.

Mr. Trudeau: He says he prefers holding Canada together.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Order, Madam Speaker. Even the Prime Minister is subject to the rules.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Right Hon. Prime Minister should be answering the one question that was put to him by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

An hon. Member: He has not answered a thing yet.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I am commenting on the very points raised by their leader. He raises some points. Surely fairness entitles me to deal with those points.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: When did you start dealing in fairness?

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition also suggested that he would prefer Canadians settle their questions rather than the British. So do we, and we are Canadians in this House and we represent Canada. And if the Leader of the Opposition really believes that, why have all his friends, the provincial premiers, why have they been in London for months lobbying the British?

An hon. Member: Where is Chrétien?

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Where is Chrétien?

Mr. Trudeau: I am asked where Mr. Chrétien is. Madam Speaker, the Minister of Justice accepted a long while ago—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: A long while ago—

An hon. Member: How about MacGuigan?

Madam Speaker: Order. I shall have to interrupt the Right Hon. Prime Minister and let the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition formulate another question, because that one just does not seem to be able to be answered while maintaining some order in the House.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister needs two hours and 20 minutes to answer questions in the House as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Let me ask the Prime Minister whether, as a matter of government policy, he has ruled out the possibility of another first ministers' conference or some other form of serious discussion of a different amending formula, between the federal and provincial governments? Has he ruled out the possibility of that kind of consultation before he forces his particular personal formula through this House using closure, despite the fact the premiers are meeting to seek agreement and despite the request of the Liberal leader in the province of Quebec for an opportunity to discuss this question if he forms the next government?

Will he consider holding another discussion on constitutional matters before he forces his measure by closure through the House of Commons?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition calls it my personal formula. May I remind him it is the formula agreed to by the ten premiers and the Prime Minister in 1971.

An hon. Member: No, no.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, I hear somebody say "no". I would like to have somebody substantiate that. Premier Davis and Premier Hatfield were there, I was there, the press covered that conference, and it is on record, Madam Speaker, that that is the only time in recent memory—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Answer the question.

Mr. Trudeau: They ask me to answer the question. Did the Leader of the Opposition not say that it was my personal formula, and was he wrong or right in saying that?

An hon. Member: Don't be so arrogant.

Mr. Trudeau: And if they cannot stand an argument and the truth—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Trudeau: —they should not ask questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I can see this is caucus day.

QUERY RESPECTING PROVINCIAL CONSENSUS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In his speech on Monday he quoted the Hon. George Brown, who made the point in 1865 that the time was now for Canada to form a union. In his speeches George Brown also made the point that one cannot move in a federal state unless there is widespread acceptance of a proposal.

In view of the fact that the provinces now are at a position where a consensus can be reached among eight of the ten provinces on patriation and a formula for amendment, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would accept that consensus as being sufficient for him to reconsider the proposal he has before the House and to meet with the premiers—

An hon. Member: You have two years.

Mr. Epp: —in order to develop the unity I believe Canadians seek for our country.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it would be easy and exact to say that the question is hypothetical, and has been for these many months—I should say these many years—when the premiers have not agreed on an amending formula and on patriation, and I have quoted that chapter and verse.

Rather than claim that the question is hypothetical, I would like to put to the hon. member that the resolution before the House does exactly what he hopes to do. It gives the premiers and the federal Prime Minister two years to get together, during which unanimity will be—the hon. member shakes his head. Would he please read the resolution? That is exacty what we say, and I am surprised that as learned a member as the hon. member for Provencher does not know that. We have before us a resolution which says that for the next two years no amendment can be made on basic matters respecting the Constitution without unanimity. That is in the resolution.

An hon. Member: We all know that.

Mr. Trudeau: If hon. members know that, why are they suggesting that I am in some sense imposing my formula? The formula which is brought in by this resolution calls for unanimity over a period of two years. After two years, if there is not agreement and if there is not consensus—

Mr. Nielsen: There is the problem.

Mr. Trudeau: I challenge the opposition to indicate what consensus is to their minds. However, let us assume that there is no agreement; then what do we do? We ask the Canadian people to choose between politicians who cannot agree. What is undemocratic or unfair about that?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I can see why the Prime Minister is frustrated, in view of the fact that the premiers now possibly could come up with a conclusion on a consensus.

However, in view of the fact that as Prime Minister his first responsibility is the integrity and the unity of the country, I would like to ask him why it is that he does not accept the position of the Liberal leader of Quebec, Mr. Claude Ryan, who as late as this morning reiterated that, if elected on April 13, he will insist on a federal-provincial conference. Why is the Prime Minister in such a hurry, prior to April 13, to have this matter go to Britain? Why will he not sit down with the federalist government of Quebec and the premiers who have now come up with a consensus? Why is he unwilling to sit down with his Canadian counterparts?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have been sitting down with the premiers of the various provinces since 1968. We have been looking for a solution to this problem, as other prime ministers and premiers have been looking for the solution to this problem since 1927.

Mr. Beatty: Why not wait two weeks?

Mr. Trudeau: How can they say I have not consulted? How can they say that I am not prepared to hear other views? They say, "How about two weeks more?" In the name of what?

● (1430)

Some hon. Members: Canada.

An hon. Member: Listen and learn.

Mr. Clark: Au nom du Canada.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I just have to remind hon. members opposite that that is exactly the line they were taking in the House when they prevented Canada from getting its flag.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: They do not like to be reminded of that. We hear groans when we talk about the flag, but they are on record, and many members sitting in the House were there then.

An hon. Member: Tell us about national unity again.

An hon. Member: Where were you when the country needed you?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I suppose it is impossible to answer a question when other members who do not have the floor keep asking questions. I urge those who answer questions to limit themselves to answering the question which was asked by the member who had the floor. Otherwise it is an encouragement for heckling to happen.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I thought you were drawing the attention of the school children in the gallery to the misconduct of the opposition members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You have really cheapened yourself, Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

PUBLIC SERVICE

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON SALARIES AND WAGES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I hope to have a chance to ask my question and hear the response—

An hon. Member: Don't count on it.

Mr. Murphy: My question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In light of the document which was released yesterday in which it was pointed out that inflation may be fought on the backs of public servants, and in which it was also pointed out that 68 per cent of the public servants whose contracts are expiring in the near future are already lagging behind the private sector, and since it is also pointed out in the document that the guideline of the government would, of course, have to override the principle of comparability in the determination of public sector compensation, would the minister explain to the House why it is government policy to force the public service to take the brunt of the blame for what is happening in terms of inflation, and would he also explain to the House what he considers to be a justifiable wage gap between the poorly paid public sector and those in the private sector?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the hon. member seems to be relying upon press reports and not upon the stated policy of this government with respect to public sector compensation. I answered the question directly in the House yesterday and he may have seen the press reports this morning. I believe the hon. member is referring to some suggestion, as I recall it, that a 10 per cent cap was to be applied. I can assure hon. members in the House that that is not the policy of the government. The government has consistently taken the view that public sector employees should be fairly paid. Those comparisons are available. I think the hon. member will find that we have been consistent and fair in our treatment of public sector employees, and will continue to be so.

EQUALITY FOR MALE AND FEMALE EMPLOYEES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, this is not a press release, this is a cabinet document. Since the cabinet document speaks of yet another group that is being picked upon by the government, that is, the postal operations group which is 75 per cent female and earns approximately $3.50 an hour less than the male group doing the same type of work, and since just last week the Canadian Human Rights Commission ruled against the Treasury Board proposals for the settlement of the equal pay for work of equal value claim of the general services group, will the minister confirm to the House that he and his government have no commitment to the Human Rights Act and that the government is going to ignore or stall any attempt to achieve equality in the workplace because it uses its workers as the victims of its policy?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, it is ironic for anyone to suggest that this government has no commitment to the Human Rights Act since it was the preceding Liberal government that introduced the legislation which enshrines the principle of equal pay for work of equal value in Section 11 of that statute.

We made an offer to the Human Rights Commission with respect to a settlement of the general services group dispute. The matter is extremely complex given that there are seven subgroups of the group, three of which are female dominated and four of which are male dominated, but within each one of those groups there are 13 different pay levels and there are 22 different pay zones in Canada. So the challenge for us was to come up with a formula which we thought was fair without creating reverse discrimination against the male employees in groups which could be moved behind some of the female dominated groups. We have made such a proposal and I was pleased that the Human Rights Commissioner, Mr. Gordon Fairweather, acknowledged that we were making a genuine attempt to resolve this difficulty.

We are re-examining the views expressed by the Human Rights Commission and I hope we will come forward with some other negotiated settlement. But the proposal we made, I think, was fair in the circumstances. It moved to an average and substantially increased the various levels of women's groups, in many cases beyond comparable levels for male groups, which, of course, could give rise to what we call the leap-frog effect. So the matter cannot be dealt with in a simple approach. It is a serious problem, one which we are working very hard to resolve on a fair basis to the women employees in the federal government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATIVE CHANGES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, the minister seems to think that just because Treasury Board made an offer, that is a real attempt to reach a settlement. It took a long time for the government to get around even to making an offer in this case which has been hanging on its back for months and months.

The document and the minister's memorandum to cabinet list what I would call a horror story of union bashing tactics, including limiting the right to strike, ignoring comparability, making the public service take lower pay increases than the cost of living, ignoring equal pay laws, lockouts, wholesale designations, deferring the right to strike, and even excluding some groups from the right to seek arbitration. Can the minister answer two questions: first, what legislative changes will he be proposing to the House, and second, what other unilateral action is he planning to take to deprive workers in the public service of their already limited right to negotiate a contract?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I think the view this government takes is that legislation should be re-examined from time to time to make improvements which are in the interests of both employees and employers, in the case of the PSSRA, for example. That act has been in effect since 1967. I would point out that the right to strike was also given by a Liberal government. There is absolutely no intention of being unfair to public service employees.

That document which the hon. gentleman keeps waving and which he alleges is a cabinet document, is simply not one. I do not know what other documents he has at his disposal, but I am quite prepared to discuss with the hon. member, or with any other members of the House, the kind of proposals they believe should be brought forward to make the right to strike more effective and to protect the interest of the taxpayers, the citizens of this country, as well as to protect the interest of the public servants.

TRANSPORT

GRAIN TERMINAL DEVELOPMENT AT PORT OF PRINCE RUPERT—DISAGREEMENT OVER SITE PREPARATION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It arises out of the stalemate in the negotiations which is further delaying the development of the grain terminal at the port of Prince Rupert. It arises out of the fact that the National Harbours Board is reneging on one of the fundamental articles of the memorandum of understanding signed by the federal government and the Prince Rupert Grain Terminal Consortium, that precise article being the equal sharing of the cost of site preparation, including the placements of caissons if necessary. I would ask the Minister of Transport why the National Harbours Board is refusing to honour that commitment. May

I also ask the minister whether he is prepared to intervene personally and instruct his officials to comply with the spirit and the articles contained in that memorandum of understanding which was negotiated and agreed to by both parties in good faith?

● (1440)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am surprised to a certain extent that the hon. member for Vegreville identified me as the cause of this difficulty, because he is on record as having said in the House of Commons that what I did at Prince Rupert was exactly what he would have done. Be that as it may, it was understood from the beginning that the consortium would build the elevator. So, what is happening now is a discussion between the National Harbours Board and the grain consortium as to the definition of site preparation. Of course, the consortium is interested in giving it a wider definition, because there will be a sharing by the federal government of the underground preparation of the elevator.

To the question itself, of course the National Harbours Board will meet urgently with the consortium and discuss the issue. I will await the results before deciding what I will do.

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, the difference between our government and this government is that we were prepared to honour the commitments which were signed and agreed to; there is no question about that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Further, there can be no question as to the obligation of the government in respect to fulfilling the commitment to share in the cost of site preparation, including the placement of caissons. That has been further concurred in, in the exchange of letters between the Department of Transport and the National Harbours Board.

The minister said that there are ongoing discussions. I am informed that a letter was directed by the consortium to the National Harbours Board indicating, in very blunt terms, that it will refuse to negotiate any further tenders until this matter is clarified. In order to break the log jam, will the minister personally intervene? If the government continues to be intransigent, as it is on this particular point, the entire project could be in jeopardy.

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, my accessibility is well known by everybody.

Mr. Mazankowski: Do something.

Mr. Pepin: This agreement was signed last November. Since then the consortium manifested no disagreement with the terms of the agreement whatsoever.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is wrong, and you know it.

Mr. Pepin: At the very last minute the consortium came up with a different interpretation of the meaning of "site preparation". The National Harbours Board is there to attend to those matters, and I will attend to it if a resolution of the conflict does not take place.

NATIONAL SECURITY

TASCHEREAU COMMISSION PAPERS REVIEW

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In reply to one of my Order Paper questions on March 11, 1981, the government said that it was continuing the investigation ordered by the solicitor general of the Progressive Conservative government into why the Taschereau national security papers were being or had been locked up again by this government for a further ten years. Also it said that it was anticipated that this review would be completed by May 1 of this year, in other words, in a month or so.

Is the Solicitor General now prepared to confirm to the House that Ralph Branscombe has been appointed to make the review as to whether the papers should be released? Who appointed him, along with terms of reference? Will the report be tabled in Parliament or made public on or about May 1?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I can confirm those questions that were asked. I will not confirm that this is a study which is continuing one begun by the Conservative government. In fact, the then prime minister indicated in the House, during the Clark administration, that they were considering having a study. But, I have no evidence that they ever put a committee together or that they got the study off the ground.

This study was organized by the Clerk of the Privy Council; it is under way now. May 1 is the anticipated date on which we will have the report. I am not prepared to make a commitment that it will be the exact date on which the report will be made, but that is the target toward which officials are working.

QUERY RESPECTING EXISTENCE OF BOOK CONTAINING PERSONS' NAMES

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, I am somewhat shocked to hear the Solicitor General say that he will not confirm this question; maybe it is because of the lie detector test he took in Montreal yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cossitt: Seriously, his government has already confirmed it in an answer given by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council. I know he did not say anything about Ralph Branscombe, so I remind him of that.

By prefacing my supplementary question, could I say that I discussed on different occasions—and the last time was as recently as this morning—the Taschereau papers with Mr. Igor Gouzenko. Will the Solicitor General at least tell the House that the Taschereau papers include a book containing about 150 names of persons attending meetings of communist party cells, which was found in the possession of a now prominent professor at an Ontario university, and also that the same Taschereau papers contain the names, among other names, of a former deputy minister of finance and certain past and present heads and members of Canadian Crown corporations and commissions?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I am certainly prepared to confirm that I have not read the Taschereau papers. I do not know what they contain.

Mr. Cossitt: Did you ask to read them?

Mr. Kaplan: I have not asked what they contain, but I have described the process being followed to make the decision on whether they can be released, in the public interest, earlier than the date which was prescribed some six or seven years ago.

Mr. Cossitt: What about Ralph Branscombe?

THE ECONOMY

INVESTMENT OVERSEAS BY CANADIAN CONTROLLED MULTINATIONAL CORPORATIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance. What action does the Minister of Finance and the government propose to take, on behalf of the over one million people who are unemployed in Canada, to bring into line the multinational corporations which are spending Canadian dollars developing subsidiaries abroad and creating far more jobs outside Canada than they are currently creating in Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, when I have any new policy to announce on that rather broad subject, I will make it clear to the House.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Would the Minister of Finance care to indicate whether he considers it acceptable that out of 52 multinationals operating in Canada and controlled in Canada which were studied, 26 of those which operate in Ontario, showed absolutely no growth in employment in Ontario at the same time as showing a 7.8 per cent growth outside the country; that 15 multinationals operating in Quebec showed a net loss of 1.5 per cent in employment terms, while showing an 18.4 per cent increase abroad; that in every region of Canada there has been a marked increase in multinational operations outside as they affect employment, while Canadians sit idle looking for work?

An hon. Member: It is because of the government.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I remind the hon. member that I have heard similar speeches in other countries about investment in Canada.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH AFRICA—EFFECT OF STATEMENT MADE BY PRESIDENT OF UNITED STATES

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It deals with a recent statement of the President of the United States about South Africa and the reaction among other black nations, particularly at the United Nations, to the visits of South African generals to the United States.

Will the minister explain that a policy of cozying up to a government with racial policies like South Africa can only weaken the relationship between other industrial nations and other South African nations? It can actually be counterproductive, in that it will make the climate more amenable to penetration by communist nations.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think it is fair to say that the position of the United States government toward South Africa at the moment is somewhat unclear. During the meeting last week we made our position very clear to the United States government. Especially with respect to Namibia, we made it clear that South Africa had no right to be in that country illegally, as it is, by international law.

HOUSING

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS FOR HOUSING FOR THE HANDICAPPED

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works who is responsible for housing. I understand he recently met with representatives of Canada's associations for the handicapped. I am encouraged by some indication that he agreed to increase the allocation for handicapped housing in Vancouver from its present level of 50 units. Could he confirm that he is increasing the allocation for housing for the handicapped in Vancouver and other urban centres in honour of the International Year of the Handicapped?

• (1450)

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I had the opportunity during the national housing conference, the all-sector conference, to hear representatives of the handicapped associations of Canada, the coalition of handicapped associations. At that time we indicated that the social programs of the government in place under section 56(1) of the act have been adjusted so as to respond to what appears to be an increase in requests for use of those social designated units.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): User pays.

Mr. Cosgrove: I can confirm—I have a recollection of a project in Vancouver within the last couple of days which has been designated for the handicapped under the social programs of the government.

Miss Carney: My supplementary question is also addressed to the minister responsible for housing. I might refresh his memory. I understand that his department has apparently tripled the number of houses allocated for the handicapped this year. He may look into that.

My supplementary question deals with the maximum unit price of housing for the handicapped which is set by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation at about $68,000. Considering the fact that the average unit price for homes in Vancouver is now $156,000, what measures is the minister taking to increase the $68,000 limit to more realistic market levels?

Mr. Cosgrove: The response of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation on the question of multiple unit prices—the MUPs, which is a control device to ensure quality for money expended and the integrity of the projects—is under constant review in all of the programs to which it applies. In the Vancouver market, for example, that particular design provision with respect to all of the designated areas under MUPs is under review. I am happy to say that so far as housing for handicapped is concerned, because of additional building requirements and expense involved in some of the multiple features, CMHC is also reviewing the relationship of the MUP price and the different categories within it, with a view to assisting handicapped people.

SLOWDOWN IN DRILLING RIG ACTIVITY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Today we have the unfortunate convergence of two unhappy events in the oil industry. As my hon. colleague previously noted, today marks the day the one hundredth rig has left this country since the National Energy Program was announced. We also have, in the Oilweek, the announcement that current rig activity this year is lower than last year; 480 wells last year against 467 wells this year.

Hon. members on this side, the drilling industry, and the oil industry have been forewarning this ever since the announcement of the National Energy Program, but the minister has pooh-poohed it at every opportunity. Matters will get worse before they get better.

What action will the minister take, now that these worst fears are being confirmed by actual activity? What action is he going to take to head off this exodus of drilling rigs which has been so damaging to the alleged number one priority of the energy policy, which is self-sufficiency?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is confirming that he and his colleagues on the other side are certainly very slow readers if they only discovered in the last few weeks that there would be a decline in the activity of rigs in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: As a matter of fact the drilling contractors association said, before the budget and the National Energy Program were announced, it was predicting a 30 per cent decline in drilling activity this year due to a surplus of natural gas in this country and an overbuilding of drilling rigs in Canada in the last three years. This was announced and published by the drilling contractors association quite independently of the National Energy Program in the October 28 budget.

My friend has obtained his information a little bit too late, I am afraid. He should have read—

Mr. Clark: Will you answer the question now, Marc?

Mr. Lalonde: —what the industry was saying before the budget, and the publication of the National Energy Program.

Mr. Wilson: Again, the minister has neglected to answer the question. Maybe "neglect" is not the right word. He does not want to face the truth.

Mr. Clark: That's right.

Mr. Wilson: What is happening here in Canada is a result of actions taken in the National Energy Program. Cutbacks in activity have been announced since October 28 by many oil industry representatives in this country. What is happening in Canada is in stark contrast to the United States. Let me give you a couple of figures. Three thousand, eight hundred drilling rigs were active there last year, against 4,700 this year. I might remind the minister that 100 rigs are Canadian. This is expected to lead to an increase of 12 per cent in drilling activity.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Wilson: Will the minister explain why he has championed this energy program when it is having such disastrous results for Canada; and is he proposing to announce changes in policy prior to the meeting on April 13 with Mr. Leitch, which will give some signal to these drilling companies to leave their drilling rigs in Canada so they can do the job in Canada, to produce supply in this country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I have already indicated to the hon. member that the drilling industry itself had predicted last year a 30 per cent decline in its activities in Canada. It is not at all surprising if similar activities have increased in the United States: that country is faced with a shortage of oil and natural gas, while Canada on the contrary has a surplus of natural gas. That there should be a very firm demand for derricks in that country is not surprising either.

As to the Canadian energy policy, the hon. member is perfectly aware that it is based on three fundamental principles: first, that Canadians should have greater access to that industry, second, that they should seek energy self-sufficiency as far as the oil supply is concerned through the development of oil sands and Canada lands reserves, and third, that they should set up an energy structure to ensure that they are not subjected to the kind of prices the Progressive Conservative Party wanted to foist upon them while it was in power. We have every intention of pursuing this policy.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

QUERY RESPECTING INCREASE IN PAY

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Minister of National Defence. Is it the intention of the government to increase the pay of the Canadian Armed Forces on April 1 and, if so, would he advise the House what percentage of increase on average will be awarded?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, because of the past military service of the hon. gentleman from Northumberland, I understand his interest in this question. He probably remembers the time when he was in the army and was paid a couple of dollars a day. But I remember—

An hon. Member: One dollar a day.

Mr. Lamontagne: The pay increase of the Armed Forces is under revision at the moment, but whatever it will be—the percentage by which we will raise it, or whatever we decide—we will take the special environment and special capability and competence of our Armed Forces into consideration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

KEABLE COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING RCMP

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. The Keable commission recently released its report in Quebec. Several important recommendations of the commission were directed to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, namely, one recommending that it prosecute the federal officers responsible for six illegal acts. However, the main recommendation dealt with the infiltration of supposedly subversive groups and insisted that officers or individuals acting as infiltrators receive prior authorization to do so by a judge's warrant. Has the government any intention of implementing that important recommendation of the Keable commission? What disciplinary measures does the government intend to take against the RCMP officers involved in the illegal acts described by the Commission?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I did indeed take note of the recommendations of the Keable commission but, as everyone knows, and especially the hon. member, the McDonald commission is still sitting; we are awaiting the results of that inquiry and the last report of the commission, which I have yet to receive, before reaching a decision in the matter. Nevertheless, as the hon. member also knows, recommendations were made not only with regard to the RCMP but also concerning other police forces in Quebec, and such recommendations were made to the attorney general of that province. The latter will assume his responsibilities when he sees fit to do so.

RCMP MAIL OPENING REPORT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, many Canadians are wondering when the Prime Minister's friends in the Privy Council office will finish their extensive editing of the McDonald commission report. One of the areas being studied by the McDonald commission is the question of RCMP power to open first-class mail. In view of the fact that both the Solicitor General and his Conservative predecessor as solicitor general have been quick to endorse the recommendations of the Marin commission to permit the RCMP to open the mail of Canadians with judicial rubber stamping, has the Solicitor General yet received the long-promised, revised report from the RCMP on the subject of mail opening and, if not, why is the minister rushing in so quickly to support this totally unwarranted intrusion into the private correspondence of Canadians?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I certainly reject the contemptuous statement made by my friend about the judiciary in suggesting that the judicial process would amount simply to rubber stamping—and I should like to indicate that the RCMP are not empowered to open the mail and that they are not opening it. For years I have held an opinion which I have expressed in the House, but until the whole matter has been considered by cabinet, after the McDonald report has been received and appropriate amendments have been made to the act, there is no way we will authorize the RCMP or any other police force in Canada to open the mail of Canadians.

MARINE TRANSPORT

FUEL SURCHARGE EXEMPTION—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and it concerns the question which I raised last week about bunker and diesel surcharges for Canadian flagships. May I ask the minister whether he is prepared to indicate to the House today the preparedness of government to extend the exemption which already exists for vessel trips between Canadian ports in Canadian waters, to all Canadian flagships prior to March 31, which he will recognize as an important date for the Canadian shipping industry?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will remember that there was a definite purpose in recommending a marine and aviation charge, because foreign fleets and foreign airlines were, in a sense, being subsidized by imported Canadian oil, and compensated by the Canadian taxpayer. In an effort to gather from these carriers the world price for oil, we put forward this particular proposal.

My officials have had very extensive discussion with representatives of the industry and with other departments. We have made a number of changes in order to meet the requirements, particularly of the Canadian fleet. We are still satisfied that this is the right course of action in the interests of Canada without jeopardizing the competitive situation of Canadian carriers in comparison with foreign carriers.

The hon. member mentioned the date of March 31. I do not know whether he had in mind that that was the date on which the charge was to take effect. If that is so I would like to tell him that, for administrative reasons, I am delaying for some weeks the tabling of the ways and means motion to bring the charge into effect.

Mr. Forrestall: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the minister's response, but he left me with the impression that he is unaware of the inequity that this imposes upon one mode of Canadian transport as opposed to other modes. I was specifically wondering if the minister could indicate to us whether he is prepared to extend to all Canadian flagships the type of exemption that should be given to certain classes of Canadian flagships with respect to the movement of goods? Or, is he about to build in an inequity and place in serious jeopardy the capacity of the Great Lakes shipping fleet to move grain from Thunder Bay out to salt water and iron ore back up the system, at an economical and advantageous commercial rate? Is he giving consideration to making sure that Canadian business entrepreneurs can operate and receive equal treatment from government regulations, whether or not they may be in trucking, in rail, in shipping or in air?

Mr. MacEachen: Indeed, Madam Speaker, that is our desire, not to create a bias in favour of any particular mode or, to put it another way, to discriminate against other modes of transportation. I will be pleased to examine the detailed question put by the hon. member about the application of this order.

In conclusion, I would say to him that the purpose of this is to try to put those carriers in international commerce on the same level as their competitors on international routes, both air and marine. That is the purpose, in order to equalize the purchase of oil at the world price.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. ANDRE—USE OF DOLLAR ITEMS IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C)—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) addressed the House yesterday on a point of order relating to the use of one dollar items in the Supplementary Estimates (C), 1980-81. He alleges that these dollar items are being used to legislate programs rather than simply to seek the approval of the spending of money for programs previously authorized by statute, or that they amend legislation other than former appropriation acts.

The hon. member recited the history of these estimates since the substantial rule changes in 1968. Under the old system, there was opportunity in the committee of supply to take exception to items in the estimates and they were objected to but nevertheless tolerated.

Since 1968 there has been only limited time to consider supplementary estimates, hence it was felt that they should be restricted to proper items and not contain anything that should be done by statute.

In 1971 hon. members commenced to take exception to those items in supplementary estimates which in effect were amending statutes other than appropriation acts. The hon. member mentioned those occasions commencing with the ruling of March 10, 1971, leading to the ruling of December 7, 1977, on a point of order which the hon. member himself had raised on that occasion.

Because it was a new point in 1971, the Speaker disallowed only some of the items objected to on the ground that they were obvious amendments to statutes other than appropriation acts while permitting, with a warning, less obvious items to remain in the estimates. On December 10, 1973, the three items objected to were considered not to be properly before the House and were allowed to remain in the estimates only by unanimous consent.

In 1974, on March 26, the Speaker said he was not convinced that the item establishing the Food Prices Review Board program was a legislative item because it did not seek to establish a "legislative principle".

In 1976, the Speaker found that while there may be existing legislative authority to permit the establishment of and funding for Loto Canada to pave its way in a supplementary estimate, he went on to say that where a question of principle was involved in an urgent situation, such as that which has given rise to this course and this particular situation, it would be considered an extremely singular situation and would not be repeated in the future.

In 1977, on March 22, the Speaker reviewed the previous rulings on the question of the estimates and pointed out that whether it is a one dollar item or not, a vote in the estimates may not "contain legislative content". He went on to say:

> On the general question, it is my view that the government receives from Parliament the authority to act through the passage of legislation and receives the money to finance such authorized action through the passage by Parliament of an appropriation act. A supply item in my opinion ought not, therefore, to be used to obtain authority which is the proper subject of legislation—

The Speaker struck down two items as being legislative items and said that while he had grave doubts about four others as being proper he would give them the benefit of the doubt and the remaining items to which objection was taken were less clear but that in any case, in the absence of a procedure which allows a full exchange on these matters, he would allow them to remain. He cautioned members, however, not to take this lenient approach as a precedent.

Then on December 7 of the same year, the Speaker struck down the item in the supplemental estimates covering VIA Rail as representing an amendment to legislation.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre, in a well prepared argument, submitted that the part of Vote 5c energy, mines and resources relating to the purchase of Petrofina by Petro-Canada was a legislative item for, among other reasons, it did not request even the traditional one dollar. With respect to Votes L18c finance, and Votes 7c and 8c industry, trade and commerce, he also says that there is no legislative authority to support these, and directs our attention to certain sections of the Financial Administration Act which, he alleges, suggest that the course of action to accomplish what is set out in these three votes should be done by statute and is beyond the traditional scope of an appropriation act.

With respect to the eight items which delete or cancel debts, that is 5c agriculture, 30c health and welfare, 1c national revenue (part), 5c national revenue, 10c public works, 20c public works, 1c regional economic expansion, and 5c supply and services, he points out that none of these items ask for any money, the traditional use of estimates but that Section 18(1) of the Financial Administration Act only permits that debts up to the amount of $5,000 may be cancelled. In other words, each of these items is in effect an amendment to Section 18(1) of the Financial Administration Act.

While the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) did not direct our attention to the authority under which they were to obtain the funds, he submitted nevertheless that the items in question were not legislative in nature and pointed out on more than one occasion that nothing in Supplementary Estimates (C) represents a departure from past practices.

I think that it is fair to say that this is the first time that we have heard arguments against the use of dollar items to cancel debts or to pay for programs set out in Votes L18c (finance), Votes 7c and 8c industry, trade and commerce, and 5c energy, mines and resources, particularly the line of argument raised by the hon. member for Calgary Centre. They have been in use for some time but there has never been any argument raised in the past.

When in 1971 and later objections were raised principally concerning using the appropriation acts to amend acts other than the appropriation acts, because of the novelty and also because of the time constraints, the Speaker felt compelled to remove only the most obvious cases of improper use of estimates and give a warning with respect to the other objectionable items.

I have been placed in this present position. It is clear in my mind that the eight items referred to above which cancel debts are pure legislative items and seek in each case to amend Section 18(1) of the Financial Administration Act and I would rule that they should be and are hereby deleted from Supplementary Estimates (C), 1981-82.

While I have grave doubts about the other items referred to by the hon. member for Calgary Centre, it is not as clear that they too infringe upon the traditional use of estimates. This is the first time that we have heard submissions concerning guarantees, and probably also the first time in connection with the use of the estimates for acquisitions such as Petrofina. A major concern here is the time constraints. Later this day all questions will be put to dispose of the supplementary estimates and interim supply.

As was done by my predecessor in 1971 and later, I would say that should they be raised at some future date. I will have to be convinced that the matters such as those raised in Votes 5c energy, mines and resources. L18c finance and Votes 7c and 8c industry, trade and commerce are not really legislative items that should be introduced by a separate statute.

There is now under way a reprint of the bill based on Supplementary Estimates (C) in which the items 5c agriculture, 30c health and welfare, 1c national revenue, 10c and 20c public works, 1c regional economic expansion, 5c supply and services, and the debt deleting portion of Vote 5c national revenue, will be deleted.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, will it be your intention, perhaps tomorrow, to deal with the substantive argument advanced by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), who based his argument on this question in debate yesterday on the impossibility of members giving any consideration to estimates that were not before the committee?

Madam Speaker: Yes, I did consider the arguments given yesterday by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). I think the House must understand that I have no way of judging whether there was sufficient time or opportunity to discuss some of the estimates, and I have to comply with the custom that, once the estimates are brought back in the House, they are deemed to have been studied by the committees. I have no judgment on that, but that argument was considered.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WILSON—NOTICE OF POSSIBLE QUESTION TO BE RAISED

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I just wish to give notice now that I want to compare answers given to questions which I posed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) today, with answers he has given to similar questions earlier in the session to see whether they are consistent. My recollection is that they are not consistent. At one stage or another the minister has not given us a straight answer, and I wish to review today's Hansard with previous issues. Therefore, I am serving notice that I may be raising a question of privilege tomorrow.

Madam Speaker: I take that as notice, but I just want to remind the hon. member that answers which are inconsistent, incomplete or unsatisfactory to a member do not constitute a basis for a question of privilege. I realize the hon. member is not telling me now that will be the basis of his question of privilege, but I do want to caution him that if what I have just stated is the basis for his question of privilege, I can tell him his question may not be very well founded.

MR. HOVDEBO—REPLY OF MR. WHELAN RESPECTING COMPENSATION TO FARMERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday in this House the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), in reply to my question regarding compensation to farmers for the grain embargo on shipments to the Soviet Union, chose to attack the work of a member of the parliamentary staff.

I believe that this attack on a person who works for all Members of Parliament was both unparliamentary and an abuse of the privileges of all Members of Parliament, for the following reasons. First, this person is unable to answer when his work is publicly disparaged. Second, the high reputation of the institution for which this person works, namely, the research branch of the parliamentary library which serves all Members of Parliament in a non-partisan fashion, has been called into question by the minister's remarks. Third, the reputation of the person in question as a researcher for all members has been unfairly questioned by the minister, who had not even taken the time to read the study on embargo compensation compiled by the researcher.

For these reasons, I ask that the Minister of Agriculture publicly withdraw his remarks. They are most unfair and debilitating to a person who serves all Members of Parliament in this House.

I ask you now, Madam Speaker, to rule on whether the minister's remarks are an abuse of the privileges of all members of this House. If you so find, I am prepared to move the necessary motion so that this matter can be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

● (1520)

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I do not think it will be necessary for the hon. member to put his motion. As I read the minister's answer, I see no question of privilege. If the hon. member feels this was an attack on a civil servant, it was certainly in the most indirect fashion. The minister said:

> The figures we used were figures presented by all the different people in the different departments concerned with grain marketing, by compiling all the information available in the grain trade and putting it together in a very thorough manner. When a decision is made, these figures will be tabled.

I do not feel there is any kind of attack in that wording on a civil servant, not even in an indirect way. Therefore, I do not find a question of privilege.

Mr. Hovdebo: Madam Speaker, the answer I was referring to in my question of privilege was the first answer by the Minister of Agriculture, not the second one.

Madam Speaker: I can only repeat what I said. I find no direct attack on officials in that answer. I cannot find a question of privilege.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. DOMM—METRIC SYSTEM OF MEASUREMENT—REPLY OF MR. OUELLET

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) will want to correct the record as it appears at page 8548 of Hansard for March 24. The minister incorrectly advised the people of Canada that they have until 1982 to object to an order in council. I have with me the order in council as it appeared in The Canada Gazette. It clearly stated they have until April 29, 1981, to object to the order in council making Canadian units of measurement illegal in Canada. In his answer at page 8548 the minister said:

> The answer is no, Madam Speaker. I believe that those who want to express their views have ample time to do so before 1982.

That is incorrect and I am sure the minister, his parliamentary secretary, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) or the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will want to correct it so the people realize they have only until April 29, 1981.

Madam Speaker: The minister is not in the House at the present time. I am sure this will be pointed out to him and he will want to correct it. I have no authority to correct an answer given by a minister. The hon. member's point is well taken.

COPIES OF COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN CABINET MINISTERS AND AMAX LIMITED

Motion No. 42—Mr. Fulton:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House before March 2, 1981, copies of all correspondence, telegrams or communications exchanged between cabinet ministers and/or their past or present staff and any officer or employee of Amax Limited.

Motion agreed to.

COPIES OF COMMUNICATIONS REGARDING PERMIT FOR AMAX LIMITED AT ALICE ARM, B.C.

Motion No. 43—Mr. Fulton:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House before March 2, 1981, copies of all correspondence, telegrams or communications exchanged between Mr. John Aird and cabinet ministers and/or their past or present staff regarding the permit for Amax Limited at Alice Arm.

[Translation]

Mr. Collenette: The Departments of the Environment, of Fisheries and Oceans, and of Indian Affairs and Northern Development have informed me that their files do not contain correspondence, telegrams or communications exchanged with Mr. John Aird. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

[English]

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I would ask that the motion be transferred for debate. It is very clear that the correspondence is between any cabinet ministers past or present and their staffs past or present, not the singular department referred to by the parliamentary secretary. I would ask that it be transferred for debate.

Madam Speaker: Transferred for debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I would ask that the remaining Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motions for the production of papers stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—ALLEGED FAILURE TO EXPAND PUBLIC PENSION SYSTEM

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

That this House condemns the government for failing to present, both to this House of Commons and to the forthcoming National Pensions Conference, a position for significantly expanding the public pension system in Canada in order to ensure that Canada's senior citizens, both now and in the future, will have an adequate standard of living in their retirement years.

He said: Madam Speaker, I present this motion today because I believe it brings into focus one of the important issues with respect to the state of pensions in Canada. It raises this question: Are we going to try to solve what has been referred to as the pension crisis by relying on the private sector to get its house in order and provide adequate pensions for our people, or are we going to realize that the only way in which to make sure that our retired people, both now and in the future, will have an adequate standard of living is by expanding the public role with respect to pensions?

With all the respect, appreciation and admiration I have for the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), I fear that she is being led in the direction of relying more than has been the case in the past on the private sector. I hope that in this debate today we might persuade her that the future of the older people of Canada—those who are older now and all the rest who will get there some day—is much more secure if we rely in the main on expanding the public role in pensions.

Often times when I speak of pensions in Canada, I say two things that might seem to be contradictory. On the one hand, I assert that we have come a long way in the last 50 or 55 years. Indeed, I am even known to boast on behalf of my party about the role that we have played in helping to win a tremendous advance in the whole field of social security. On the other hand—and I do not regard this as contradictory because it is simply a case of there being two ways of looking at reality—there is still a great deal to be done to achieve the retirement goals that all of us in this House accept. By the same token, I have kind words for the Minister of National Health and Welfare who I think has done well in her role as minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: She has accomplished a number of things. I think both she and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) take more credit than they deserve for what the $35 increase last year did, but at least she accomplished that. She kept a promise that she had her party make in the last election campaign, and although it may be a negative compliment I offer to her, I think she has done well to keep the right-wingers in cabinet at bay.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: I suspect that, had she not been there, we would have none of the improvements that we have seen recently and we might even have had cutbacks; so I am glad she is there. But just as I have said that there are two views with respect to pensions generally, so I say that her main job is still ahead of her. This is no time for any of us to rest on our laurels; the job is still ahead of us because everyone is talking today about the pension crisis.

Now, many people, when they hear that word, assume that it has something to do with the state of certain funds. People wonder whether there will be enough money to pay Canada Pension Plan benefits down the road or to pay old age security pensions at the indexed rates that will multiply in the next few years. I suggest that that is not the crisis. We pay pensions out of current production and income, not out of accumulations from the past, and any organized society can apportion the wealth that it produces to pay for the things it wants. If we want to provide adequate care for our children, provide education and adequate retirement income for the elderly, we can see that the money is available. The crisis relating to adequate pensions is not one of capacity to pay; it is the difficulty that older people are having in getting along on the amounts they receive. As the minister knows, about 60 per cent of the two million senior citizens age 65 and over live at or below the poverty line. That is all one needs to say to underline the fact that this is a state of crisis so far as pensions are concerned.

I point out also that about 53 per cent of the senior citizens who receive old age security also receive some or all of the guaranteed income supplement. To get all of that supplement one has to have virtually nothing else, and even to get a portion of it one has to have very little other income. This means, therefore, that 53 per cent of our senior population is in difficulty, as shown by the fact that those people have to apply for this supplement. Of the other 47 per cent, there are a few senior citizens, probably the top 10 per cent, who have an adequate, perhaps even more than adequate, income; but in between those two groups there is a third group of about 30 per cent who have just enough that they do not qualify for anything under public plans, and yet not enough to stay very far above the poverty level. So that is the crisis, namely, that for all we have done, for all that the minister and I will boast about—because we have come a long way since the middle 1920s when the first old age pension act was passed—for all that, life is still difficult for many of our older people.

If I may take a moment longer to spell out the positive side, yes, we not only have pensions ever so much higher than they were a few decades ago, but we have medicare and hospitalization that covers our senior citizens, indeed everyone, thanks to efforts that have been made in the social policy field. We have senior citizens' apartments in Canada that provide, for many people, better living than they knew in their working years. We have New Horizons grants and the many things we do to make life better. But when it is said that most of our senior citizens are living at or below the poverty line, we are admitting that persons of retirement age are consigned to a state of living less than that enjoyed by those who still work, and that is not good enough. It was good enough once upon a time when we first began to pay pensions of $20 a month to senior citizens to keep our senior citizens alive, but that was about all. And it may have been good enough a few years after that to pay pensions that provided a standard of living that was 40 per cent or 50 per cent of what pensioners enjoyed while working. But we are one people, one Canadian family, and we have reached the point where we believe and contend that our senior citizens have helped to build the country to what it is and are entitled, not just to a portion of the standard of living available generally to Canadians, but to share in that standard of living and have it increased as productivity and other factors make life better in this country as the years go by.

So the problem is there and it must be coped with. I am sure the minister and I see eye to eye on this, no question about it. I suspect she deplores just as much as I do the fact there is a tendency in this country to say: We have done enough for the old age pensioners, let us worry about some of the other problems. I face that all the time and I am sure the minister does. Worst of all, I suspect she faces it in the cabinet. As I said a moment ago, I am glad she is there to keep those right-wingers at bay.

The fact the minister realizes that the battle is not over and that old age pensions still have to be improved is, of course, attested to by the National Pensions Conference which she and the Minister of Finance have called for next week. I thank her for her personal invitation to me to be there. I hope to be there some of the time next week, depending on what is going on in this place Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of next week and what hours we have to spare.

I am concerned about statements which have been made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and by the Minister of National Health and Welfare herself about the aims and purposes of that conference. For example, speaking about the conference a few months ago she said:

> The preference of the government for accomplishing these reforms—

That is, reforms to the pension system.

> —is through the development of a stronger private pension system in Canada. I am not ruling out the possibility that there are improvements to be made in the public plans also; but I hope that the major emphasis will be on private plans.

That is where I feel my good friend the Minister of National Health and Welfare has been led astray. I am trying to get her back on the straight and narrow path.

A while ago the minister also said:

> We would prefer to achieve this . . . reform of the pension system . . . through improvements in the private pension system. For that reason, the National Pensions Conference will focus on how to improve private pensions in Canada.

I am all for the efforts the minister has made to get the private sector to try to get its house in order; I am all for any improvements she can win there. But she is relying on something which cannot be relied on at all if she thinks that the private sector will develop the kind of pension structure which will meet the needs of all our older people. The private sector is ready to do it. It is lobbying. Some spokesmen have been in touch with me already. They contend that if we could give more to them, they would solve the problem of security for our older people.

I am not against their trying to do it. I well remember when we had the lengthy sessions of the committee on the Canada Pension Plan that the pension and insurance industry representatives were there throughout. They presented all their arguments against that scheme, though there were one or two, like the late William Anderson of North American Life, who seemed to have a social conscience, and one or two of them admitted that the development of the Canada Pension Plan was not going to take away their business but might even improve their chances to do business in the pension field. That has happened. Once we took the means test off the original old age pension and it became possible for people to save something other than their government pension and not lose it, then the market for other kinds of pensions grew.

It is not for me to tell private industry that it does not need to worry, but I say to it that it does not need to do so. The more improvements we make in public pensions, the more people will feel there is some point and value to augmenting what they get, and private industry will have its way. But to rely on the private pension industry, the insurance companies and the rest of them to develop plans to cover the situation is something we must not permit.

I have already said that 60 per cent of our senior citizens are living below the poverty line; 53 per cent of those over age 65 have so little they qualify for the guaranteed income supplement. As for private plans, they cover away below 50 per cent of the working population. As for private plans which provide indexing of pensions after retirement, I think the figure is somewhere around 2 per cent. There is just no chance that those people out there will do the job.

I think we have to consider some of the factors which are involved in this situation. One of the things that the private pension people do by way of confusing the picture is to bring together such factors as savings, redistribution of income and a pension policy. They talk a lot about pensions involving savings and about how all this works together and the savings help to keep the economy going, and so forth. They have to be treated separately. The private sector wants to get into the pension field because it gets hold of savings, and then that is supposed to improve the economy. It just does not work that way. Saving is one thing to be done for the purposes of the economy. Redistribution of income through income tax arrangements and so forth in the economy is another thing. But pension policy guaranteeing that everyone will have a standard of living at least equal to what his standard of living was when he retired has to be a matter which stands on its own feet. There has to be a pension policy for the nation as a whole, and no private industry and no collection of insurance companies is in a position to be concerned about all our senior citizens in the way it is possible for that concern to be expressed by the government.

As I say, I am grateful for the invitation to the conference. I look forward to listening to the presentations which are made. Hon. members can tell me my mind is made up before I go there if they want. It is. I just know that the only way we will get coverage for all our people is for the government to have an over-all public pension policy. The statistics I have already given indicate that most of the people of my generation—and everybody knows I am seven years past the pension age of sixty-five—who have anything to go on have it because of what the government has put in place.

Earlier the government talked of old age security and the Canada Pension Plan as the base "and let the private people build on top of it". For most people the base is all they have, and most of our senior citizens who enjoy any kind of security in terms of income, housing, health or what have you, do so because of public policy.

In this respect, though I am being critical I am also being boastful and offering compliments. What we have done in this field is tremendous, considering what the situation was 50 years ago. However, we have to go on with this process. We have to keep in mind that what we want is for all our retired people to have a standard of living when they retire which is just as good as it was before retirement. We want that standard to go up, and the only way it can do that is by having the public sector carry the major portion of the responsibility.

I expect the Minister of National Health and Welfare to listen, as she will as one of the hosts of this National Pensions Conference, to the pleas which will be made there, but I regret that the minister has not, even before that conference, presented to this House and prepared for presentation to the conference policies which show that the government is prepared to expand the public side in this whole pension field.

As I say, that is the fundamental issue that is facing us in the pension field. We do not have to argue any more that there should be pensions and that everyone should be covered. It took a while to win that point. I was here for the battles, but we won them.

Whether we are going to have pensions which are adequate and whether senior citizens will have not just enough to stay alive but enough to enjoy the standard of living they have made possible depends upon whether we have a policy which will bring this about. A policy relying on the private sector will not. We need a policy relying on the public sector to do that important job.

I urge that the minister take this plea of mine seriously. I do not have to tell her that it is a plea from a friend. It is a plea from one who has been concerned about pensions and who is very appreciative of what we have accomplished. But if we start veering the other way, letting the private industry, with its concern for profits, have a larger role, if we cut back on the proportion of the job we feel that governments should do, there will be a state of crisis for our senior citizens down the road.

What we have to be concerned about in pension policy is not how many dollars a person now 50 years of age or 30 years of age will have at age 65. That is the approach that private industry takes; it thinks in terms of how many dollars have to be put into some fund or account so that there will be a certain amount at retirement age. There is no way of telling what amount of dollars will be required ten or 20 years from now for an adequate pension. What we have to establish is a relationship. We have to establish as a principle that people who have done their share of the nation's work, whether in industry or in the home, are entitled when they reach retirement age to a portion, a share, of that decade's wealth, that decade's production, so that their standard of living is equal to that of people who are still working.

Can the private sector do that? It could not possibly do it. The only sector which can concern itself with pensions as a matter of relationship, as a matter of fairness, is the public sector. That is why we have the Department of National Health and Welfare. I remember the time when we did not have one. When I first came to this House, there was no Department of National Health and Welfare and old age pensioners were an item in the estimates of the minister of finance. We usually reached that item on the last day of the session or thereabouts although I managed to make quite a few speeches before we got there. However, we got over that. Mr. King was the one who brought in provisions for a Department of National Health and Welfare.

We have come a long way since then. I know I have said it half a dozen times already, but I know how true it is because I remember what life was like for the generation before me. I remember the plight of the senior citizens 70 and 75 years old back in the 1920s and 1930s. As I said, since then we have come a long way. But it is no longer good enough just to provide sufficient money to keep these people alive. What we have to establish is a relationship according to which Canadians who are 65, 70 or 75 years of age or older are entitled to enjoy the same standard of living as that enjoyed at that time by younger people, with some differences, such as children in families to be cared for and the fact that you do not need certain things because you do not go out to work. You cannot measure these things in dollars. You cannot measure them in actuarial tables and contributions. You have to measure them in terms of a relationship, and the only body which can ensure that that relationship is maintained is the people of Canada through their government.

I say again that what we have done is tremendous and what the present minister has done is tremendous.

An hon. Member: Don't get carried away.

Mr. Knowles: Anybody who has kept the right-wingers in the cabinet from cutting back on pensions deserves—

Mr. Broadbent: Don't give her too much.

Mr. Knowles: —a compliment, and I do not hesitate to give it.

An hon. Member: That's enough, Stanley.

Mr. Knowles: My hon. friend, the minister, hears the remarks I am getting from behind me!

An hon. Member: We are beginning to suspect something.

Mr. Knowles: I am concerned that she not be led astray by the idea that we do not need to do any more through the public sector, that it can be done in the private sector. One of the ways in which the minister could demonstrate her realization that the public sector should start moving forward is to increase immediately the basic amount of old age security. She shoved me off the other day with such an absolute rejection of that suggestion that even I was a bit shocked. Here I was, quoting a William Mercer Ltd. official, Laurence Coward of all people, as conservative and cautious as he could be, pointing out that a scheme which does not meet the needs of 53 per cent must have something wrong with it. They were arguing that this money put into the basic old age security should be accompanied by a change in the tax structure so that those at the top who do not need it will pay it all back, and that was the solution. I say that something like that should be done and that certainly today's senior citizens should be getting pensions of $500 a month right now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: I believe the Canada Pension Plan must be enlarged. The proposal which came from the Ontario royal commission is not nearly as valuable and effective as it would be to enlarge the Canada Pension Plan so that, instead of paying pensions equal to 25 per cent of the income one had at retirement, the pension should be 50 per cent or 75 per cent; or, at least, a combination of the Canada Pension Plan and old age security should amount to 75 per cent or 90 per cent. We should start moving in that direction now.

Then there is the whole question of lowering the age of retirement. The minister, while she is in that office, really must correct that abomination of the spouse's allowance which protects certain women, since it is mostly women between the ages of 60 and 65 who get it, but does nothing for women who are unattached, single, widowed or divorced. She must do something better than she has proposed thus far about the Canada Pension Plan with respect to housewives. She must stick to what she knows is right in this field, and that is universality. We are not talking about ways and means of handing out welfare or meeting particular needs; we are talking about the philosophy of life which says our older people are just as much a part of the Canadian family as are the rest. That has to be done for the others too.

My friend, the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell), has a lot to say about what we should be doing for children. My friend, the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young), has a lot to say about what we should be doing for the handicapped. But let us not pull back from what we have done for our older people by trying to turn part of it over to the private sector.

While we are dealing with this, there are a few individual matters I should like to mention. As I said, we should be doing more for widows than providing these 50 per cent pensions. If the husband dies first, the widow gets only a 50 per cent pension, but if the wife dies first, the husband gets 100 per cent. This is for the birds. We have to do something about railway pensions. I mention that because for the most part they come under the direction of the federal government. We have to do something to improve the public service pensions and veterans' pensions.

I am mentioning these things briefly, one after another, because I see the clock moving faster than it does when other members are speaking! I see your finger, Mr. Speaker, and I am just about ready to sit down. This will not be my last speech on pensions. I shall be back again. But right now I agree with the suggestion that we are facing a crisis, not in terms of funds but in terms of the difficulties people are facing and the way in which the government is going to go for the future.

In my view, one of the best things this House ever did in all the years I have been here was when it made old age security universal. This is my final word, Mr. Speaker. I say to the minister that what we must look forward to is the day when not just a pension but an adequate pension is universal for all our older people. The challenge to achieve that rests upon the government, but for today it rests on the shoulders of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I heard it said years ago that an NDP member is a Liberal in a hurry.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Bégin: I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) must be an NDP member in a hurry because the contents of the motion he put before us for debate this afternoon on this opposition day is quite different from the program of the NDP which was put forward before the Canadian public during the last federal election campaign in January and February of 1980. This has to be reconciled. In any event, I cannot accuse the hon. member because he has been a key player in pushing governments, year after year and decade after decade, toward a better pension for Canadians. I cannot really accuse his party of not being concerned and having a position on pensions, but I cannot say that for all political parties in this chamber.

• (1600)

On January 23, 1980, the New Democratic Party published its political platform on pensions. The views of members of that party are different from ours, as are some of their priorities. They recommended a general, quite substantial increase of $40 per month for every pensioner in Canada through the basic old age pension. They did not refer in their document to increasing the tax portion of the money which must be paid back by rich pensioners; they did not touch upon this area in their document. Therefore, they want an expenditure which will be well over $1 billion. Without giving any details, they indicated that they would readjust the GIS, the supplement. Also they referred to a shelter allowance for senior citizens; I think it was called a shelter grant for pensioners in need. It was their priority. This would add another $1 billion to the actual system.

As a second step, they very clearly identified a complete reform of the private pension system based on four principles which were identical to the ones set out in the speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of April, 1979. We do not quarrel with the principles. In fact, we added one principle, the concept of flexibility in the age of retirement. But during the last public debate on the question, members of the NDP did not speak of enlarging the Canada Pension Plan, of doubling it, or increasing it in whatever way possible.

When the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre launched the debate on his motion today, he did not tell us—and I suspect I know why—by how much he wanted the CPP increased. He did not tell us whether it should be increased all at once, over several years, or when it should be done.

I realize it is a serious problem. The workers of Canada, if it is the route chosen, will have to pay a portion of that large increase, but this as yet has never been discussed with them. This is why we want a national conference to start discussing together what I call the updating of an old social contract; the relationship, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said, between salaries and what will come from where in terms of retirement income and who will pay for these layers of future retirement income.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre gave his own view today. It is different from the one of his party, unless his party has updated the document which was part of its platform exactly a year ago. I do not know the views of the Tory party on pensions. The only thing Canadians know is that in their budget over a year ago, they wanted to give $40 to senior citizens in need for the first year in the form of a tax credit for heating costs, and $80 in the second year for the same reason.

I should like to put before Canadians the views of the political party which forms the government, since we were elected by them, on a subject matter which was discussed throughout the country during the last election campaign, namely, our platform regarding pensions. We differ with the NDP. Of course, it is not difficult to differ with the Tory party because, as I said, I have never heard them discuss pensions much. It is a social issue and usually they do not feel very comfortable with social issues. We have put our concept of what we think should be the retirement income in the country and our priorities to the Canadian population, and we will be putting it forward again during the conference next week.

An ideal retirement income—and this is the only concept which was offered and never questioned, to my knowledge, by specialists—must be equivalent to average industrial wages which are now over $16,000.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: Now, what will form that income for Canadians? We want the first layer to be the basic old age pension, as it is now. It is not the full 15 per cent; it is approximately 13.5 per cent of the average industrial wage. We want to keep it the way it is and continue to save the value of the dollar by determined indexation every three months.

On top of that, Canadians receive about an additional 25 per cent in the form of their CPP cheques. The way the Canadian Pension Plan is now, when it has matured and is at the maximum it amounts to an additional 25 per cent of their ideal retirement income. These two cheques account for 40 per cent. The questions are: From where will the balance of the money come? Who will issue the cheque for the missing 60 per cent? Who pays?

This is the purpose of the conference, this is the question on which we want to focus. Usually it is assumed that approximately 10 per cent must come from the private savings of a person which were put aside during one's working life. Then there is the remaining 50 per cent on which we want to focus. We think a large portion of it must come from one's private pension from the company where one worked. This is the raison d'être of the conference which will take place Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of next week in Ottawa with approximately 300 participants.

[Translation]

We believe, if I speak now of reforms which should be made, that the situation is as follows. The basic old age security benefits that every Canadian receives would still be indexed quarterly as is now the case. However, when the pensioner does not have a sufficient income, he must necessarily ask for the guaranteed income supplement. We know and we have often repeated the commitment of this government to bring all the senior citizens who now receive the supplement over the poverty line. Some might criticize this objective, but it is a priority of the Liberal government. Those who live alone are often women. In spite of the increase of $420 a year which we granted after being returned to power, the couples who are now over the poverty line must not make us forget that many people who live alone, whether single, separated, divorced, widows or widowers, are still below the poverty line. As soon as economic conditions permit, we want to find and set aside the amount required to give them an income which will put them once and for all above the poverty line. We are speaking of about $730 million. We are therefore speaking of a large amount which is not easy to release in view of the present economic conditions. Last July, we released over $500 million and we placed the burden of this allocation on corporate taxes. I believe that this was a fair procedure to achieve social equity. However, we decided to act in two stages, which represented first an increase of $35 a month, or $420 more a year—and I would like to point out the large difference between this amount and the $40 a year increase suggested by the NDP—and there is still one stage remaining.

This is what we shall bring at the National Pensions Conference. At this conference, the private sector, which is not monolithic, but which includes people with sometimes diverse if not contradictory interests, whether they be life insurance agents, actuaries, pension fund managers for other companies or individuals, major employers with their own pension funds, and so on, all those who make up the private sector will have their first opportunity to meet one another and to also meet the other economic groups, including provincial and federal governments, senior citizens, women's groups, unionized and non-unionized workers, and to say what they are willing to do and how quickly.

[English]

I am pleased to note that there is no diversion of opinion at all; in fact, we have full support from the NDP. There are five objectives which I believe are now well known. We want universal coverage. We have not attributed specific costs and priorities to the five objectives, with the exception of the fifth one; more flexibility in the age of retirement is obviously not in the same league as the other four objectives.

The first four objectives are, first, universal coverage—right now only one half of Canadian workers have a private pension; some form of indexing, a way of keeping the value of the dollar; equity for women—survivors' benefits and other questions such as the splitting of pension credits will be discussed. Then, of course, we want portability and early vesting, as well as flexible retirement.

The motion triggers interest in and curiosity about the conference more than anything else; it surely does not criticize us very deeply. The motion suggests that we should go to the conference with a specified position. We have objectives, but we have kept enough flexibility to permit the various partners in the business of pension reform to play their role and come forward with proposals.

I believe this is the first time since I have become minister that I am directly involved in such a major undertaking with partners everywhere in our society, including all provincial, territorial and federal governments, and also the so-called private sector and many other groups in society. I must say that I am a bit astonished at the reaction expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, which I have heard in many quarters, both provincially and in the private sector.

People always complain that governments do not consult, that their ideas are already fixed when they go to the people and want their views to be accepted on certain matters. When we start the process, at its very beginning, with simple rules of the game and basic fundamental objectives, everyone thinks that there is a plot, and they want to know what your position is because you do not state it right away. But if you were to state it, you would not let the other partners really express their own views.

I would like to rebut a few points which were made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He referred to a text of mine but did not check with me first to see if I really said that. The text referred to the government preferring the private pension sector. That is not the situation. The government has decided that there are five objectives. The government has decided to have a National Pensions Conference, with the various players, as the starting point of a process which will lead us to a real change in the situation. However, we have not decided which avenue would be the best. There are several avenues, not only an enlargement of the Canada Pension Plan. In theory, we can identify four avenues; but we have no preferred philosophy. It is not a matter for philosophy, by the way; it is a pragmatic problem. We have no ideology, and any avenue which will give Canadians and all Canadian workers good pensions will be the favoured avenue for us.

A major increase in the Canada Pension Plan is only one avenue, one of four which I can easily review with colleagues in this House. In theory, the government could decide that the private sector would do the job. That attitude of laissez-faire would let things fall into the hands of the private sector. A major question is whether coverage will be provided for everybody. Coverage is one of the key elements in the problem today.

A second avenue, in theory, is that a mix of legislation and regulation by all 11 governments—I should say all 13, including the territories—could impose rules of the game on the so-called private sector. All the governments could agree on similar legislation to force the private sector to give a pension, whatever the size of the industry or employer, to make it portable, to provide for early vesting, and so on and so forth.

The third avenue is the one recommended by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, but not supported by his party, to my knowledge. This would be the enlargement of the Canada Pension Plan and one would say that we should forget the private sector. We will go the route of an imposed contributory plan where employers and employees have much larger compulsory CPP deductions from their paycheques. I suppose we would have to at least double present premiums. If the actual situation did not protect workers at all, and if so much was missing from the pot, the premium should be at least doubled, which would raise billions of dollars and create a fund to be reinvested, etc. At this point in time all these questions are open because we do not know what the private sector can do and is committed to doing.

The fourth avenue is a mix, and I call it the British model. It would be made up of an enlarged CPP, imposed on everyone. However, where a so-called good private plan existed, that employer would receive a certificate and would not be subject to compulsory CPP contributions. That would be the best of both worlds, because it would respect the private sector where a plan existed, while rapidly providing benefits to employees who do not have a plan.

The federal government is not alone in that reform because no government in Canada has the monopoly on jurisdiction over pensions. The federal government can cover about 10 per cent of the labour force and each provincial government shares a portion of the remaining 90 per cent. It is not fair to say that the provinces cover 90 per cent; that is not the way it is. Each province covers a portion of employers in one geographic zone. An example is the fact that the B.C. government can rule on B.C. employers, but B.C. employers in the pulp and paper industry can have affiliates in Quebec where a different province has jurisdiction. That is why the co-operation of all players in this reform is absolutely essential.

I think I have given the five objectives of the conference and I have attempted to review rapidly the four avenues of action that are open to us.

Following the conference we will assess the results and then discuss and finalize the federal position. We will then have numerous consultations and negotiations with the provinces. They will also have to formulate their own stand on the action they would like to see taken toward the reform of private pension plans in Canada.

I think it is fair to offer the so-called private sector an opportunity to remain in what I call a good business; after all, the private pension industry is worth some $45 billion. If it is weak because of the lack of proper coverage, indexing, portability, or survivors' benefits, we are giving it an opportunity to update what it offers people. We are telling the private sector to grab this opportunity, to offer pension plans to small employers who do not quite know how to go about offering one. We want the industry to give us innovative ideas about how a pool could be established that would protect employers who go bankrupt and whose employees, therefore, run the risk of losing their pension altogether. This is a business opportunity and the industry should grab it and offer us something.

I do not quite know when my time finishes, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to touch on the fact that we cannot conclude that the private sector is not ready to make changes. It has learned from history and from government that it was not giving the people as much as it should in terms of social benefits. The industry may have lost opportunities but I think it has learned a great deal.

Something that I have observed and which is quite positive is the regrouping of forces. In Canada we have often talked about the private sector, but the private sector does not exist in pension matters. There are many different players who are not regrouped as in Europe, where there is one single body of employers called "le patronat". We do not have that in Canada. However, they have started regrouping themselves in a very positive way, and there are now spokespeople for the so-called private pension sector. Many players in the private sector have made surveys and have set up task forces of their own. They have started moving toward pension reform.

As minister in charge of the Department of National Health and Welfare, in a way I am the voice of pensioners in cabinet, so I think it is fair for me to say that the government will assess the results of the conference. I hope these results will be published right away, after the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and I have co-chaired the meetings. We will be asking two questions. First, are the reforms proposed by the private sector enough and how do they meet our five objectives or, more precisely, the first four objectives in particular? The second question in assessing any of the avenues open to us is, will benefits be provided quickly enough? These are the questions that I will be asking. Other ministers, because of their responsibilities, will have to ask different questions, such as whether the economy can afford it and so on.

I think it is fair to repeat what I have often said in the country in discussions with groups about the reform of pensions—that these will be my criteria for an analysis of the results, leading to the choice of one avenue instead of several.

I will finish by dealing with a question that has often been put to me and which I am sure will be asked again next week at the conference. People ask how it is that we are in such a bad situation in Canada. I must say again that Canada and Sweden have the best public pensions in the world but, unfortunately, Canada and the United States have the worst private pensions in the world. It is important for members to act. We must now address the question of retirement income coming from one's employer—in other words, the company pension.

I do not know the exact explanation for this, Mr. Speaker, but I am told that in Europe, because of the war, the unions attached top priority, in their dealings with employers and in their collective bargaining, to the building of pension plans. In Canada, on the other hand, the unions have historically done more to bring about indexation of benefits and COLA clauses than to build private pension plans. This is not a criticism. I just want to try to explain why it is that all Canadians—and keep that image in mind, because that is why we are having a conference—in whatever revenue group they find themselves, in the five last years of their active life, the best years, the day they retire have their income cut in half.

That is the challenge that we want to address. It is not a fight against poverty that I am proposing; it is a fight for better retirement income for the vast majority of Canadians. I think that is quite a challenge. It is time for action. I want to thank the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for his opposition motion because it is quite a positive one.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, first of all, as one of the most recent members of this House, I should like to say how pleased I am to participate in this debate on pensions provided by the motion introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I think that the hon. member's great interest in the subject and his contribution to the whole area of pensions over the last number of years is well known to members of this House and, indeed, across this great country.

I welcome the opportunity to speak on the motion because it is of particular interest to me, and more important, it is of particular interest and relevance to my constituents in Okanagan North. As most Canadians are aware, Okanagan North is blessed with what is possibly the finest scenery and finest weather in all Canada. This fact is not lost on Canadians in other parts of this great land, particularly the prairie provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba. After spending a lifetime of hard work enduring the vigorous and sometimes rigorous weather on the prairies it has become somewhat of a tradition that in later years Canadians from these areas can spend their golden years in the Okanagan Valley. May I say we welcome them and we will continue to welcome them because they make fine citizens indeed.

However, it means that my constituency enjoys a much greater number of senior citizens than the national average. Therefore, the whole question of pensions, adequate incomes and adequate housing for senior citizens is of great importance to the well-being of the people in my area, so I welcome the opportunity to speak on this topic.

The National Pensions Conference is to meet next week commencing on March 31. It will continue until April 2. I suppose this conference has been called by the government in recognition that the existing schemes both in government and in private industry have been unable to meet some of the very pressing needs of our senior citizens. Our existing pension schemes have been criticized because they are inadequate and do not provide adequate incomes for those who have retired, or for those who are retiring and, perhaps, because taxpayers are asking more than what their contributions would provide.

It is interesting to make a comparison of the contribution rates with other countries for old-age, disability and survivors insurance. In Sweden, the total contribution made by an individual is up to 20 per cent; in France, it is 12 per cent; in Switzerland, it is 9 per cent; in the United States it is about 10 per cent and in Canada it is only about 3.6 per cent.

My belief is that the 1980s will see the whole matter of pensions as one of the major social concerns of our time. There are two basic areas in the programs we have in place which have to be reassessed and improved if we are to meet the needs of the people who wish to retire in later years, and meet the needs of those people already retired and no longer in the work force. Both the public and the private sector are concerned with pensions.

First, let me examine some of the inequities in the existing systems. It has already been mentioned in this House that our pension schemes are based on a three-tier system. We have public programs and the so-called private programs and systems. The public program consists of the old-age security, which is designed to provide a basic retirement income to everyone at the age of 65, regardless of means.

A second tier is the government program called the guaranteed income supplement, the purpose of which is to meet the needs of pensioners who have little or no income, apart from the basic old age security pension. This program, of course, is subject to a means test. Both OAS and the GIS are indexed.

If we examine these programs, we see they are really nothing more than guaranteed annual income. In the same tier is another program called the spouses' allowance. This program was introduced to provide assistance to couples where the oldest spouse was in receipt of OAS benefits but the younger spouse had not reached the mandatory age of 65.

The third tier of the pension system, and I believe the most important, encompasses the private pension schemes found throughout industry through employee-employer contracts and individual and tax supported registered retirement savings programs.

Unfortunately, because of a number of factors—mostly inflation—the system provides inadequate income for large segments of the senior citizen population. The most dramatic example of a group left out of the scheme are single women over the age of 60. It is a national scandal that this country has allowed this group in our society to subsist on less than the poverty wage, the ones who have given so much to our country in earlier years. I submit it is a national scandal and shame that this government, which runs a deficit of some $14.2 billion a year which, on a whim or by the stroke of a pen can spend $1.4 billion to buy an oil company, something which does not add one job, produce one drop of oil or in any way adds to our economy, allows these women to literally starve to death. I believe the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) later on to day will be enlarging on what I consider to be a national shame.

In a sense, the government pension schemes as practised by this government are somewhat of a fraud. This government points consistently to the $35 a month increase which was given to the elderly last year. The minister has again referred to that increase in pensions this afternoon. I commend the government for at least fulfilling one of its election promises.

However, I strongly condemn this government for following such irresponsible economic and fiscal policies which have wiped out any benefit this increase might have meant to senior citizens. Indeed, such policies have worsened the lot of every retired person and every person on a fixed income, to such an extent they are at this moment struggling for their very existence to overcome the terrible effects of an inflation rate of some 12.2 per cent.

The pension schemes as practised by this government are a fraud because, under the present method of financing, Canada Pension Plan contributions are not sufficient to fully fund the plan. Today, the rate of benefits paid out exceed contributions. Very shortly the Canada Pension Plan will have to be tax supported if it is to pay out the benefits promised to those who have made contributions.

The Canada Pension Plan does not provide any kind of protection against inflation. I suspect inflation will continue, because this government seems unable to change its policies, and the kind of protection provided will be completely inadequate to give even the smallest degree of retirement income and security to Canadians.

I condemn the government for failing to provide any leadership whatever in the whole area of public pensions and retirement income to overcome the problems of high interest rates, inflation and lack of adequate funding. These are the problems which threaten the security and well-being of every senior citizen in Canada.

The other area in which this government has failed to show leadership, and to provide answers is in the area of private pension schemes. By and large, it is estimated about 4.19 million Canadians are covered by these plans; that is about 62 per cent of the population. One hundred per cent of employees in the public sector are covered and 50 per cent in the private sector. Therefore, much reliance is placed by Canadians on these plans for security in retirement years.

However, most of these plans suffer from serious defects. Most of them are not adequately protected against inflation. Most of them do not provide adequate vesting or portability benefits and most of them do not provide adequate survivor benefits for spouses.

If private pensions are to fully do the job required of them, this government must show some leadership in providing adequate frameworks and plans which can be used by private pension plans—by employers, employees, unions and private individuals—so that the majority of private pension plans provide what is so necessary; that is, vesting at an earlier age, and I am glad the minister supported that concept; so that the majority of private pension plans provide complete portability, and I was glad the minister indicated her government might support that pension plans provide for portability so that a worker can have and take his benefits with him to another job or another province whenever it is necessary to do so, and so that the plans provide requirements for spousal survivor benefits to a much greater extent than now. That is one of the reasons many senior women are facing such hardship.

I am fully aware that pensions are to a large degree a matter for provincial control. I am also aware that this government's track record in negotiating with the provinces is pretty dismal indeed. It does not make one very optimistic about any future leadership role which this government may play in providing some direction for improved existing pensions.

I was very disturbed when the minister said her government has no philosophy, no ideology in connection with pensions. If this is true, it is clear this government has been running off in all directions and accomplishing nothing. I suggest this government would be wise to have some philosophy and ideology to guide them in the way they approach the whole pension field.

However, in spite of that, I urge the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to take her courage and her humility in both hands and proceed to negotiate a reasonable program to encourage the private sector to improve existing pension schemes. I am sure that, in collaboration with provincial governments, a scheme can be put in place so that the vast amount of our pension requirements over and above the government schemes are provided by private industry.

A problem which is basic to the question of pensions and one to which I must refer is the question of aging and population trends. It is a well-known fact that the age structure of the Canadian population will shift dramatically in the next several years. The result of this shift will be that Canada will see a steady increase in the proportion of its elderly and pensioner citizens, and at the same time, and this point is crucial, a much smaller work force.

The number of Canadians over 65 years of age is forecast by Statistics Canada to increase from the present 9 per cent of the population to 20 per cent early in the twenty-first century. That is more than doubling the number of senior citizens. The dependency rate for elderly Canadians, that is, the population of age 65 and over, expressed as a proportion of the population aged 18 to 64 will rise to 30 per cent over the same period from its present 14.5 per cent. Thus, by the year 2031 there will be three working adults for each senior citizen. There are now seven working adults to each senior citizen. It does not take much of a mathematician to understand the tremendous tax burden that will be imposed on those workers in the early part of the twenty-first century if we do not plan now to provide senior citizens with retirement income.

Briefly, we may expect in the future more old dependents and fewer workers to support them. These facts alone are reason enough that it is essential plans be put in place now to meet this future obligation of our society. We hope and anticipate that these elderly Canadians will be supported by their savings, employer pensions and government pension programs. However, since at that time there will be a relatively smaller working population, if the tax burden on those working people is not to be an excessive burden, we must plan now to encourage savings and properly funded private and government systems.

It may appear that the year 2030 is a long way off, but it is well to remember many of the Canadians who will retire in the critical period from 2010 to 2030 are already in the work force. If Canada's system of income security for the aged is to be altered, changes have to be announced well in advance so that people can take them into account when planning retirement. That is why it is so essential that the forthcoming conference on pensions mark the beginning of serious reform to solve existing inadequacies and future requirements.

I hope it will not be out of place for me to quote some statistics to place the matter in perspective. In 1979 there were approximately 2.1 million OAS/GIS pensioners in Canada, representing about 9 per cent of the total population. Over $5.365 billion were paid out by the governnment as OAS and guaranteed income supplement benefits in 1979. It is also well known that the elderly are significantly over-represented among the poor, whatever definition of poverty line is chosen. Employing Statistics Canada revised definition of low income—an income level such that more than 62 per cent is spent on basic necessities—the proportion of individuals 65 to 69 years of age with a low income was 46.4 per cent in 1976; the proportion among those 70 and over was even higher, 58.1 per cent. The average income for families headed by individuals over 65 was only about half the average for all age groups. In 1979 approximately 57 per cent of all old age pensioners qualified for the federal government's means tested GIS, another indication that Canada's elderly number significantly among the poor.

These statistics show to a degree the magnitude of the problem. We are speaking of exceedingly large sums when we plan a system of income security for older people. We must remember that this is only one of several valid social objectives in the national scheme in Canada, that health and education, and many other valid objectives place demands on our society and its capacity to pay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please, I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. He may only continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

● (1650)

Mr. Dantzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I have only a few minutes to go.

I repeat and emphasize that the methods we use to provide adequate income security for senior citizens must be those which will also encourage and assist the economy of this country in supporting our social objectives. We all know the resources of this country are limited, as they are everywhere. We must choose social objectives which are attainable and affordable. It is a principle of the Conservative Party that the government should assist those persons least able to help themselves. It is also a principle of my party that our senior citizens, who have worked long and hard to achieve a full and satisfying life, who have raised their families and contributed to this great country, should be rewarded and cared for by society in their retirement years. As a Conservative I feel this can best be done by ensuring that those policies are compatible with policies of economic direction which are designed to ensure that a healthy and vigorous private sector can provide the real economic wealth necessary to support these retirement programs.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very glad to have this opportunity to say a few words on the extremely important subject of pensions; that is, the income of retired people. I think it is obvious to everybody that the finance department and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) himself have a direct and special interest in the field of pensions. It is obvious as well that it is a subject of utmost interest to all government members because of the well-known philosophy of our party, namely, that our first concern is for those most in need, and it is a fact that retired people indeed account for a great many Canadians who are in dire need.

I would also like to take this opportunity to commend our Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) for the extremely significant and liberal works she is doing not only in the field of health generally, but especially because of her awareness of the problems experienced by the elderly and retired people.

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): Hear, hear!

Mr. Bussières: We all know that the National Pensions Conference is scheduled for March 31, April 1 and April 2. The aims of that conference have been very clearly defined by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and they were repeated by the Minister of Finance. I am convinced that spokesmen for the private pension sector, the government sector, the provincial governments and the other sectors of the population who will have the opportunity to participate in the conference will do a profitable, beneficial and advantageous job on behalf of retired Canadians.

It is always interesting to look at the figures even though you must always see them in a certain perspective if you do not want to overestimate them. However, it is worth recalling, for instance, that our present pension system does not provide what we could call a decent income for a great many senior citizens. On the average, the income of senior citizens in Canada is substantially lower than that of other Canadians. If we attempt for instance to make a comparison based on the average income for Canadians as a whole, which would be $16,300, the comparative income for senior citizens would come at most to nearly $7,000. We can see that there is a difference of over 50 per cent between the two, that is the average income of pensioners and that of other Canadians. We can look at other kinds of figures. For instance, when a worker retires, whatever his income when he was working, it is automatically reduced by about 50 per cent. This means that if the work income was $20,000, on retiring, this income will automatically be reduced to $10,000.

I shall keep to those two statistics even though, as I said at the very beginning of my intervention, they give only a rough idea of the facts, and I shall now draw the attention of all the members of this House to the problems that face people when they retire. Obviously, when your income is reduced by 50 per cent, you have problems paying your grocery bills, meeting your housing payments and buying clothes. All these needs do not change that much when you suddenly stop working and retire. We must still be aware of them.

The National Pensions Conference which I mentioned earlier will give us an opportunity not only to review the income problems of our pensioners, but also to examine all the other aspects involved in harmonizing and co-ordinating the various pensions plans available in Canada, whether it be the government plan, in other words the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan, whether it be the pension system ordinarily called the old age pension system, whether it be the guaranteed income supplement, whether it be the private plans established jointly by private companies and their employees or unilaterally by the employer for a group of employees, or whether it be an individual plan either through some type of insurance or another type of plan, all these means of providing a retirement income will be examined, for the purpose of standardizing these various plans. Naturally, any attempt to reach an ideal must eventually confront harsh reality. Obviously our economy is going through extremely difficult times, and in such a case the best thing to do is always to try to implement policies in keeping with current conditions. But I am confident that the groups that are to meet and will meet at that conference, under the joint leadership of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Finance will achieve an in-depth study of the problems confronting our society with regard to pensions, and that solutions will be found that will surely benefit Canadians.

I must limit myself to those few remarks, Mr. Speaker. In closing I advise the House that despite consultations with party representatives, we have been unable to reach an agreement on the application of Standing Orders 75A and 75B on the report stage and third reading of Bill C-59, to provide supplementary borrowing authority. I therefore have the honour, Mr. Speaker, of informing the House that in the course of a future sitting, I shall present a motion under Standing Order 75C to allot one sitting day to each of the stages of the bill I referred to.

Mr. Speaker, I wish that conference every success and I am sure all hon. members will be very happy to participate in the formulation and approval of new policies when the government introduces them.

● (1700)

[English]

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in this debate today. I wish to join other members in the House in expressing my affirmation of the importance of Canada expanding its pension system to meet the devastating need of so many of our senior citizens across the country.

I want to congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for his continuing concern. I want, however, to say that I differ with him as to whether the response to this lies just with government. Rather, I hope the result of the coming conference will be that we will find an accommodation between private and public sectors in order that this problem is addressed. As the minister has stated, the questions which will be addressed will surely be whether reforms will be enough and whether they will deliver benefits to those who need them most.

As a member of the official opposition and the Conservative party I am happy to be identified with social issues and to suggest it is in the balancing of concerns about compassion and incentive that we can find the resources to meet the needs of the men and women of our nation.

As we look at the problems facing us in respect of pensions, we see there is not enough money flowing through the system to the elderly. Only 13 per cent of the income to the elderly is generated by private pensions, while 55 per cent is generated from government sources. The coming conference will be important in that it will look at this imbalance.

In the few minutes given me I want to look at the specific problems facing elderly women regarding pensions. The needs of older women are the same as those of everyone else. They need interesting work to do, money to live on, a place in which to live and other people to care whether they live or die—"Being old does not mean that I will be alone". Unfortunately, three out of five women over 65, or four out of five women over 75 are widowed, divorced or single. Only half of Canadian women over 65 live with their husbands, their children or any other relative. They think, "At least I will have my home and my neighbours". But again that is true only if you are one of the lucky ones. Two out of five single, widowed or divorced retired women over 70 do live in their homes. One out of every four single, separated or divorced women over 70 lives in a rooming house, and almost 70 per cent of the residents of nursing homes are women over the age of 65.

Others will say: "Well, my nest egg will see me through; I have been saving through the years". Maybe, but when we look at the facts, we find that three out of four single, widowed or divorced women over 70 had annual incomes under $5,000 in 1977, and about 333,000 single, widowed or divorced women over 60 lived in poverty, three times the number of men.

We could also look for a moment at poor single parents who cannot afford to save for retirement. They stay poor, and the vicious circle continues.

Facts show that elderly women are poor, but that they suffer under current pension arrangements. In 1979, in preparation for the election campaign, there was this statement from the Progressive Conservative Party: "Improving the situation for older women is an important election commitment". The statement said, and I quote:

> Women suffer under current pensions arrangements. Many reports document the fact that old women are the poorest of the poor. They are largely supported by government. Problems of current pension schemes affect women even more severely than men: lack of stability, lack of coverage among small employers, lack of indexing of deferred pensions and pensions-in-pay and lack of survivor benefits.

Women suffer more because they are more likely to work for small employers, they are more likely to be in and out of the labour force due to family responsibilities and they are more likely to be widowed.

Subsequently the previous government recommended a full review of the pension and retirement income system and began contacting the provincial governments. This review will now be a part of the coming conference.

I was interested a few weeks ago to receive a letter from Lucy Pickard, the editor of The Owl, an adult recreation centre bulletin in Waterloo, expressing deep concern about women between the ages of 45 and 65. Lucy Pickard referred to women in that age group who find themselves doubly handicapped because of their limited education. Many of them had gone into teaching, for which they had inadequate qualifications. Many were provided with fewer educational incentives than then.

Lucy Pickard wrote:

The single woman restricted through her limited education was usually prevented from gaining the economic security derived from home ownership. Until relatively recently, lending institutions demanded the signature of a man as a guarantor in case of default in mortgage payments.

I have compared that tradition with another part of the Waterloo constituency; the matter of community building. I was talking today about the Mennonite tradition and the tradition of the doddy house, whereby the youngest son or daughter takes over the family farm and, through the years, the other sons and daughters are funded so they can buy their farms. I learned today of one family daughter who bought a farm from a childless couple near Heidelberg. That couple will live in the small doddy house. The tradition of caring goes on in parts of our community. Somehow to extend that tradition across the community is the challenge of the pension conference, soon to be held.

There are problems associated with the Canada Pension Plan, especially for women. The amount of one's pension under that plan is scaled to the amount of one's income, and, since on average women across Canada earn only 58 per cent of what men earn, automatically most women in the work force can expect lower pensions than men, but after retirement their needs are not fewer than those of men.

With respect to the eligibility of housewives, the recent Progressive Conservative convention confirmed that the Canada Pension Plan must be reformed to reflect more adequately the contribution of spouses to the economy. It recognized that there are big problems with the minister's suggestions for possible voluntary contributions by housewives. What happens, for example, if a working husband does not want to give his wife money to contribute? She will be unable to contribute. The government has not suggested an obligatory clause which would force husbands to allow wives to contribute. Wealthy spouses would be able to afford contributions, but not the poor. This would perpetuate the cycle of vicious poverty for the poor.

I must say we are encouraged by the start made in the income tax changes which will be retroactive to January 1 and which will allow spouses working in non-incorporated businesses to participate in their own right in the Canada Pension Plan, as do all other salaried workers in Canada. This provision was in the Crosbie budget, and we are encouraged that the minister has included this in the programs this government is bringing forward.

Private pension plans in the past have not been of much help to women. I am one who wishes these plans would deal with the problems faced by women. It is our hope that the National Pensions Conference to be held next week here in Ottawa will address some of these problems.

Company pensions do not help many women, as we are reminded by the Advisory Council on the Status of Women. Four out of five single, divorced or widowed women over 65 years of age receive no income from private pensions. A women does not automatically receive her husband's pension after he dies because he may not have had a company pension. Only one in two Canadian workers benefits from company pension plans, and of those who do less than half have a widow's pension option. Those widows who do get a pension from their husband's employer usually collect only half of what their husband would have received.

For women working in private industry, accessibility to private pension plans has been minimal because plans have usually been confined to upper income workers, which excludes many women and almost all part-time workers and, of course, part-time workers are almost invariably women.

Because women tend to live longer, private industry has the real actuarial problem of the equal cost of the plan versus equal benefit. The insurance companies in my riding have been telling me regularly of the dilemma they face in trying to address this real problem. For example, if women will benefit five to ten years longer on average than men, should women's payments be larger? Could a company which institutes such a program then be charged with discriminatory regulations on the basis of sex?

The facts show that more and more women are living longer than men. Everyone becomes old, but women can expect to live to the age of 77, or seven years longer than men, on average. Right now, one million women in Canada are over 65, a quarter of a million more women than men in the same age group. We are told that in just 20 years the number of women over 65 will reach two million, and half of them will be over 75. By the turn of the century women over 75 will outnumber men in the same age group by two to one.

The third problem we have is the problem of vesting. The recent Progressive Conservative convention favoured an immediate review of private pension plans to encourage earlier vesting and complete portability. It is essential that next week's conference should look at this issue as it is a particular problem for women.

There is also the problem of indexing. Employers in the private sector say they cannot afford to index pensions. The problem is that without indexation, women who have greater financial problems to face in retirement than they have throughout their lives will see their small pensions decrease because of inflation. For example, when there is no indexation, $100 at the annual rate of inflation of 8 per cent will be worth $24.87 in 18 years. If a pension has not been vested, we can see how the employee who leaves a job loses all rights to the employer's contributions on his or her behalf and simply gets back his or her contribution.

According to Statistics Canada, in 1977, 95 per cent of women who participated in private pension plans found that the plans did not provide full vesting until the employees had ten years or more of service. A comparison of this with turnover rates, which show that three quarters of women aged 22 to 44 change jobs at least every five years as compared to two thirds of men, demonstrates that very few women who participate in private pension plans are likely to get a pension when they finally retire. It is not realistic to expect this situation to change by itself in the coming years, at least not so long as women keep occupying the least interesting jobs and are still held primarily responsible for taking care of children.

These are problems which not only the minister but the conference and all of us are asked to face. What plans are there to help women aged 55 to 64 to become eligible for reasonable pensions, and how does the government plan to address the problems of voluntary contributions by housewives to the pension plan? Specifically, does the minister plan to discuss with private industry the problems faced by part-time workers in private industry and eligibility to private pension plans? I also hope that the actuarial problem of equal cost versus equal benefit, especially as it relates to women, will be discussed.

> Old women in Canada need help. They urgently need more money, housing assistance, better public transportation systems and adequate health and social services.
> Their poverty is not a result of an accident. Women are poor in old age because most of them have devoted their lives without pay to their husbands and families and were led to believe that if anything happened they would be taken care of. When they become widows, as they almost inevitably must under our present marriage customs, the vast majority find that the promised security does not exist.
> Another reason elderly women are poor is that they were discriminated against throughout their lives. Socialized to believe that they need little or no education and training, women end up working for low pay at subservient jobs that do not give access to pensions . . . most important, we must stop our present casting out of the old. Instead of complaining about the elderly becoming an increasingly heavy burden, we should allow them and help them to remain useful members of society as long as possible. This position was best expressed by Miriam Krieg in a presentation to the U.S. federal council on the aging in 1975:
> "We can no longer ignore the economic plight of the older woman. We have three choices: (1) Let her slowly starve; (2) provide her increasing expensive, inadequate welfare services; or (3) help her to remain an independent, contributing member of society.
> We can give her a fish and feed her for the day . . . or we can teach her to fish and she will feed herself, and perhaps some others too."

The motion suggests a concern, not only of the NDP, but of the official opposition, as it is the concern of the government. We look forward to being part, along with others in the House and from across the country, of the conference next week, and we look forward to addressing this great need across our nation.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I also welcome this opportunity to participate in the debate today on the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I listened rather carefully to what the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) had to say when she referred to the remarks of the hon. member, and specifically to the points she made when she spoke about her understanding of what is the NDP policy with respect to pensions and retirement income. The minister knows or ought to know that when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre stands up and presents the position of the NDP on pensions or retirement income, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is NDP policy on pensions and retirement income. I did not hear the hon. member for Winnpeg North Centre say anything which was not consistent with NDP policy, as I certainly understand it. Of course, in terms of policy, it has always been consistent.

As have other hon. members in the House, I have received numerous letters from senior citizens, not only in my constituency but across the country, in which they have expressed their continuing concern with the inadequacies of pension income. It is not particularly surprising to understand that, when even those of us who are not at retirement age and are still active members of the work force know exactly what inflation and the increasing cost of food and accommodation means. Even though it has a severe impact on those of us who are members of the work force, of course it has a severe impact on those people on fixed incomes. Certainly the senior citizens with whom I am acquainted are having an increasingly difficult time to make ends meet on a weekly basis. I am referring to the essentials of life, the costs of food and accommodation.

There is no one in the House who does not recognize the need for an adequate retirement income policy in Canada. I think that is obvious to everyone. My own practical experience within the private sector, particularly in industrial relations prior to coming to the House, convinces me that we will never achieve the level of retirement income both necessary and very much in need for those on retirement if we only rely on the private sector. We will never achieve that desirable state until we have full portability of pension plans. I think this can only come about through more government involvement in retirement income policies. While this has been perfectly true in the past, it is even more true today when one considers the decline in economic activity.

In the last ten years prior to coming to this place, I was involved in six plant shutdowns of varying employment force sizes. Although the Conservative members on my right seem to get some enjoyment from that, I can assure them there was no enjoyment for the 2,000 people affected by those plant shutdowns and lay-offs. They should remember the severe impact of those shutdowns on the lives of people who enjoyed fairly steady employment over a period ranging from 20 to 35 years. Those individuals suddenly found themselves without jobs, mainly as a result of decisions in head offices located outside of Canada. The head offices made decisions to transfer wealth from Canada to some other country. This was not because the plants were not productive, but because the corporations did not make enough profit and felt they could make more profit if they invested that wealth outside Canada.

Because of the existing legislation, those people did not have enough service with the companies to give them vested rights in pension plans. It is an example of what the hon. member who spoke prior to me said. Those persons were only entitled to receive back the contributions they had paid into pension plans. Some people with up to 14 or 15 years of service with those companies left with no guarantee of retirement incomes. I do not see anything humorous in that particular situation at all. We are talking about some form of financial security for people who have invested up to 15 years of their lives in corporations and end up knowing that those 15 years will not count in terms of retirement income at age 65.

Another area of concern is how the private sector treats people who leave work because of particular disabilities and apply to the Canada Pension Plan for disability pensions under its provisions. Many Canadian private pension plans have a provision which indicates that if an individual applies to CPP and receives a disability pension, any entitlement to a disability pension with private insurance carriers is deducted from the pension income, simply because he or she is eligible for disability benefits under the Canada Pension Plan.

This is inequitable because, when a person buys a pension in the private sector he or she is buying it with moneys regarded by employees as deferred wages or salaries. If the person did not buy a pension, it is assumed that the pension premium would otherwise be reflected in the wage package at the end of each week. Those are moneys to which that individual is and should be entitled when he or she becomes eligible, without being faced with private insurance carriers deducting those benefits when the individual most needs the money.

Pension funds are not small change. Collectively, pension funds in the private sector control some $40 billion worth of assets. Moreover, this figure is doubling every four years, and the Economic Council of Canada predicts that in the next 50 years pension assets will be worth two thirds of the gross national product. Also, pensions reflect a good chunk of total savings.

Between 1972 and 1976, 23 per cent of all savings or $40 billion was spent for retirement purposes. Where was this money invested? Most of it went into corporate stocks, and today pension plans own close to 20 per cent of all shares traded on Canadian exchanges. In addition, a sizeable amount was invested in mortgages and bonds. For example, in 1975 pension funds bought 41 per cent of new corporate bonds, 34 per cent of government securities, and 13 per cent of all mortgages.

There are some 15,000 pension plans in Canada. This figure covers the entire gamut of occupational pension plans, including the public and private sectors, multi-employers versus single employers, both defined benefits and non-defined contribution plans. These plans covered some 4.2 million people in 1978 or 40 per cent of the labour force. Most of these plans or 73 per cent of them, to be exact, have invested through insurance companies which are able to pool assets across a large number of small plants. While it may very well be that this arrangement is preferable for small employers, large employers have sizeable pension assets and they tend toward trust fund arrangements. Under this arrangement, large companies can pick and choose between trust companies and have a greater say in portfolio selections.

In 1978 trustee plans made up 27.2 per cent of all pension plans, but they comprised a much larger fraction of total plan membership, or in the area of 67 per cent. For the largest firms, pension assets are sufficient for self-management of the funds. For example, the Canadian National pension fund, with $2 billion in assets, is self-managed. As an example of its financial clout, the Canadian National fund owns 23.5 per cent of Siebens Oil and Gas Limited.

With these funding arrangements, it is apparent that the control of pension assets is highly concentrated in Canada. For the smaller plans, the investment decisions are made by a handful of insurance companies which specialize in this particular business. The trusteed funds, with the bulk of the assets, are managed by either a few trust companies or are self-managed. For example, the largest 50 pension plans hold two thirds of all pension assets. In total, it has been estimated that some 200 people control the investment of all pension funds in Canada.

It has been proposed that pension investments be redirected in the best interests of both pensioners and workers. In my view, this would involve a strategy of social or alternative investments in growing industries which would include housing, public facilities, and the like. This must be done in such a way as to protect the interests of current and future pensioners. In other words, alternative investments need to be scrutinized to see that they provide comparable rates of return to the fund to fulfil the pension promise. Alternatively, a portion of the fund's assets could be set aside for alternative investments without jeopardizing pension security.

There are numerous examples where pension funds could be redirected to benefit Canadians. For example, pension funds could be used to buy back our foreign-owned industry. The CN pension fund's holdings of Siebens Oil and Gas is but one example of this. Other large funds, like the OMERS—Ontario Municipal Employment Retirement System—fund, with assets of more than $2 billion, should be encouraged to do likewise. At the very minimum, this would stem the dividend outflow from Canada, thus increasing our supply of capital and improving our balance of payments position.

I see my time is practically up, but I would simply end by saying that in my view in the private sector there is a strong argument that the employees, through either the representatives in their unions or associations—and I argue this very strongly—must have the legal right to have representation on private pension boards so they can have a say not only in how moneys will be invested and as it is workers' money in the first place and in the main part, but also to have a say in how that money will be redistributed for those individuals who have paid into those pension plans for income security upon retirement.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young) for not using up all his time, as a matter of fact, in order to allow me ten minutes to speak very briefly on this extremely important subject.

There are certain issues which, for one reason or another, and I think this is one of those issues, that tend to be the pet interest, the main interest of all political parties. I am pleased that virtually all the contributions I have listened to today, without exception, can be considered to be positive. They reflect a concern that somehow the pension system in this country, desirable as it is, is wanting; it is imperfect and improvements are needed.

I am particularly pleased, as a Member of Parliament, one who has been concerned with social policy for a long time, that there will be a National Pensions Conference next week. I am not too sure if all hon. members quite appreciate the significance of this conference, but those of us who were, for one reason or another, closely associated with social policy in the 1960s can tell you that this type of conference was undreamed of and frowned upon less than a decade ago. The thought that private enterprise; that is, the pension industry, would join forces at such a conference a with labour groups, with senior citizens, and with government, both provincial and federal, was unthinkable. It is heartening and encouraging that we have reached that point.

Of course, one of the reasons for that co-operation is that we are reflecting public opinion. People are concerned. People want progress made in this particular field. People tend to live longer, homes are smaller, and the many problems of senior citizens are compounded. There is a growing awareness that somehow Canada must do more to make certain our senior citizens can live adequately, if not in luxury.

There is not the same—thank goodness!—tendency, when discussing pensions with senior citizens, to fall back on the old argument one hears in other fields where there is more resistance to helping the less fortunate: "Well, they should have looked after themselves. They should have looked after their old age." But, people do not have control over their jobs, their destiny, their health, war, whatever.

I want to say in the short time I have, because there is not really enough time to do justice to the subject, that to be a minister of health, one is required to be a certain type of individual. I was very pleased to hear the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) pay tribute to the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Begin). Her job is, at best, a vocation; a difficult role in the cabinet. One must plead quite often for help for the people who really do not have a lobby. There is really no such thing as a senior citizen's lobby or a pension lobby on the part of employees, like there is representing every other vestige of Canadian society. Lobbies are legitimate. However, there is really no one organization which comes forward on the Hill periodically to say, "Hey, we want something done about the inadequate pensions of this country." This is the difficult role of the minister. Other ministers around the table can say, "I speak for", or "I represent the views of this lobby", or this group or "the farmers or industry" or "the CMA" or the "chamber", or "labour"; "that is my role." There is nobody who can really stand up in cabinet and say, "My 1.8 million people want some improvement in our pension scheme."

Therefore, we are very fortunate—and I say this in a non-partisan way—to have the present Minister of National Health and Welfare. She has done yeoman service; she has worked very hard—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: —to bring this pensions conference to a head. She, more than any other single member of our government, is responsible for this conference. It was her concept in 1979. It was her realization that if we were going to do justice to this whole complicated subject it required the co-operation, in a conference, of all the groups in society which have a vested interest in pension planning. That includes the pension industry, as well as unions and other organizations.

I was pleased at the contribution of the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young), abbreviated as it was, because in this House we speak quite logically and often about senior citizens, war veterans, people over 60, 65, or 70. In this country we have done something to make their lives a little more bearable. Not enough has been said, however, about private pension plans, about the plans to which working people in Canada contribute day in and day out. Nor has enough publicity been given to the points raised by the hon. member for Beaches, such as the tragic circumstances of a worker who may have worked for a company for 20 years or 17 years or 19 years and then finds that company has gone bankrupt. The vested interest of the employer is lost and that person has to start all over to develop some equity in a pension in order to supplement what will be available to him at age 65. We must do something about vesting and about portability.

The challenge at the conference will be really directed to the industry. I do not know of any party which advocates that the government should take over the pension field. I have not heard that proposition put forward in debate by the NDP.

I have a theory which I should like to develop in the 30 seconds or so left to me. We are a unique country because of our social policies; family allowance, unemployment insurance, medicare, education. Free enterprise and the more enlightened people realize that they benefit from this as much as the employees. We have available the best educated work force in the world because of accessibility of schools and educational programs. Because of medicare, we have the healthiest people in the world. More important, as one vice-president of an automobile company mentioned when speaking about laying off hundreds of thousands of auto workers, "Thank God we have some form of income for people laid off. Otherwise there would be blood on the streets." That was his expression, not mine.

Regardless, our social policy has resulted in the fact that the major political parties in this House are moderate, not extremists to the left or extremists to the right, because there is no fertile ground for that kind of uncertainty or insecurity on the part of the less privileged that we see among people in the Third World.

We all have an interest in bettering the quality of life in this country, particularly that of the worker. Private enterprise recognizes that fact. That is why I believe in free enterprise. I think certain fields require the combination of initiative, drive and incentive that free enterprise employs with the federal government setting the parameters and standards and pointing out the issues at conferences. Government can say to private enterprise, "These are the flagrant abuses and weaknesses in your system." We need portability because the average Canadian worker will change jobs no less than six times in his lifetime, and female workers more than six times. This through no fault of the worker, but because of the changes in technology, because of recession, depression and all the other things necessitating a change.

When you think of that, Mr. Speaker, portability makes sense. There are problems, of course, and portability cannot be applied in all facets. It could be combined with a variation of the RRSP concept where week in and week out a contribution could be made from the employee's pay in cases where portability does not work out. I think that combination would bring portability well within the realm of possibility. Portability, combined with vesting, is the challenge facing the pension industry. If the private pension industry cannot meet that challenge within a reasonable period of time, then the Canadian public will demand that the government take steps. Quite often government is forced by public opinion into areas that could best be administered by private industry, but for one reason or another private industry neglects. I do not believe in more regulation; I believe in less, but most regulations I am aware of are forced on the government. The government is forced to implement them by public opinion and by the fact that for one reason or other private industry has not fulfilled.

While looking at the clock, I just want to say that perhaps the most welcome aspect from my point of view, as far as the conference is concerned, is that you have the direct participation not only of the people who put the money in, the employer and the employee, not only the federal and provincial governments, not only members from all parties in the House, but participation by the interested spokesmen on behalf of the industry. I do not mean the lobbyists who will go to try to prevent change. If they prevent change it will be at their own peril. Just as we were forced into maternity benefits because private industry refused to meet that responsibility. So will this federal government be forced into portability, vesting and taking a bigger role in the pension industry if the industry neglects to follow up the great opportunity this conference will provide.

ESTIMATES FOR FINANCIAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1982

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board) moved that Bill C-63, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1982, be read the first time and printed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Johnston thereupon moved that Bill C-63, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1982, be now read the second time and be referred to Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Francis in the chair.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 2 carry?

On clause 2—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, can the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) assure us there is nothing in this bill that ought not to be in it?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, the form of this bill is the same as that passed in previous years. The proportions requested in this bill are intended to provide for all necessary requirements of the Government of Canada up to June 20, 1981.

In no instance is the total amount of an item being released by the bill and the form of the bill is the usual one for interim supply bills.

The passing of this bill will not in any way prejudice the rights and privileges of members to criticize any item in the estimates when they come up for consideration in committee. The usual undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this bill.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

REVIEW BY STANDING COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Given that the latest Gallup Poll indicates a majority of Canadians support the return of capital punishment, and given that criminal activity is often compounded by the use of firearms, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That this House endorse the resolution recently passed by the regional municipality of Niagara and urge the Solicitor General to introduce legislation immediately whereby the minimum sentence for anyone convicted of a criminal act while carrying a firearm would be 20 years, and further that the death penalty be invoked if a police officer is killed in the line of duty, and that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for more study.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

FUNDING FOR ARENA IN ST. WALBURG, SASK.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I have been contacted by a firm in St. Boniface, Manitoba, regarding serious inconsistencies involved in the awarding of a contract to build an arena at St. Walburg, Saskatchewan. The contract, awarded by the Saskatchewan government under unorthodox practices, did not go to the lowest bidder, Western Steel Span Buildings Ltd. of St. Boniface. As this contract involved federal government funding, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the minister responsible for CMHC withhold all federal funding for this project until the minister has completed a full investigation into the awarding of this contract.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

SUPREME COURT RULING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I rise to propose a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the fact that many prominent Canadians, most recently the New Democratic Premier of Saskatchewan, have publicly stated that it would be improper for a joint resolution to be sent to the Parliament of the United Kingdom if the resolution was before the Supreme Court of Canada, and in view of the fact that the Supreme Court of Canada is seized with the Manitoba appeal, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That this House not act upon the joint resolution until the Supreme Court has had an opportunity to rule on its constitutionality and legality.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-48—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to raise an issue of urgent and pressing necessity.

On March 19, 1981, representatives of the Yukon and Northwest Territories' governments, the Committee for Original People's Entitlement, the Dene Nation, the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada, the Council for Yukon Indians, and the Northwest Territories Metis Association met, and in an historic unanimous decision opposed Bill C-48, the Oil and Gas Act, because the legislation has totally ignored the issues related to aboriginal people north of 60. Representatives of these people will be appearing before a committee of this House tonight and tomorrow. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources withdraw Bill C-48 and immediately convene a conference of northern leaders to redraft the legislation and that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development be compelled to live up to his responsibilities to the Crown and appear as a witness before the present committee meetings discussing Bill C-48.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

TRIBUTE TO ARMED FORCES SPECIALISTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley):

That this House recognize the daring and heroic efforts by the Canadian Armed Forces Search and Rescue specialists in their daring night mission to rescue three victims of a helicopter crash near Fort Severn, Ontario, in the past 48 hours.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CRIMINAL CODE

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT OF ABORTION PROVISIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43.

Whereas it is inconceivable that the mother's health was endangered warranting a legal abortion under Canadian law in the vast majority of the 65,000 abortions carried out in Canada last year, therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges):

That the government forthwith bring in amendments to the Criminal Code to stop this murdering of unborn children.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PROTEST AGAINST REPORTED PLAN TO CHANGE LEGISLATION IN UNITED STATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of some urgency. It was reported in the news today that the Reagan administration, supported by members of the United States Congress, plans to change parts of the American clean air act, changes which would prevent the act from being used to reduce emissions causing acid rain.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan):

That the Prime Minister immediately contact President Reagan to protest strongly the planned American action which would result in serious consequences, particularly in eastern Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SMALL BUSINESS

DELAYED INTRODUCTION OF COMPETITION BILL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The small business climate in Canada today is, to say the least, decidedly unhealthy resulting in part from crippling interest rates, government controls and regulations, lack of working capital and so on. Compounding these problems is the additional threat of being squeezed out by increasing monopoly mergers which further limit competition.

In view of the insensitive attitude by the Liberal government toward small business as a whole, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

• (1410)

That the government stop delaying the introduction and passage of a competition bill, as it has done for 13 years and, further, that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs introduce immediately an interim policy that will disallow any further potentially dangerous mergers such as the Hudson's Bay-Zellers bid prior to the perpetually forthcoming passage of stiffer competition laws.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for his motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL PRESS CLUB

CONDEMNATION OF SOUTH AFRICAN FUNCTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, whereas all members of this House should condemn racism wherever it exists and regardless of the political situation in which it occurs, and since all MPs are honorary members of the National Press Club, which operates in government-owned facilities, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That this House support the journalists who have announced their intention to protest against the Press Club hosting a South Africa night this weekend, since such an event serves to legitimize the repressive and racist regime of that country, and further, urges the Press Club to reject any applications in the future from countries which do not accept the United Nations Declaration of Human Rights, and further, urges the Press Club to cancel this Saturday's entertainment.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TRADE AND COMMERCE

RECOMMENDATIONS OF TEXTILE AND CLOTHING BOARD—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the need to foster growth, productivity, employment opportunity and prosperity of the Canadian economy, and also to ensure that Canadian business and industry in Canada survives and grows in the future with particular emphasis on the textile and clothing industry in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That this House direct the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to implement fully the recommendations made by the Textile and Clothing Board and to announce his decision on the board's report forthwith in order that Canada will continue to have a healthy domestic textile and clothing industry.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SEVERE ECONOMIC SITUATION FACING BIGSTONE BAND IN WABASCA, ALTA.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the rate of unemployment has reached a staggering 75 per cent for the Bigstone Indian Band in Wabasca; whereas funding for economic development has been virtually non-existent; whereas members of the Bigstone Band have been moved by their desperate situation to stage a 240-mile march from Wabasca to Manpower and Indian Affairs offices in Edmonton to draw attention to their plight, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That this House direct the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to meet with the chief and members of the Bigstone Band this week to seek an immediate and satisfactory solution to the severe economic situation facing the Bigstone Band.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

EQUALITY OF MEN AND WOMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) yesterday chose to address the Canada Club in London, a club which still bars women from its membership, and which is a questionable forum for sensitivity to the criticisms by Canadian women that the constitutional resolution does not guarantee their rights and freedoms, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney):

That this House deplore the hypocrisy of the government in pleading the case of the charter before sexist forums and urges the Minister of Justice to include in the charter a statement that men and women are equal, which could find acceptance on both sides of this House and from all parties.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

POSSIBLE DUMPING OF JAPANESE CARS ON CANADIAN MARKET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the fact that Japanese auto exports are continuing to rise, and that European countries are now ready to take defensive action, and given the fact the United States has begun discussions with the Japanese to review Japanese exports, it is clear that within the next six months the Japanese may feel it necessary to unload their current auto production on the Canadian market. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the government recognize the danger to Canadian auto workers presented by the possibility of Japanese auto manufacturers dumping unsold cars on the Canadian market and to this end the Canadian government should undertake immediately discussions with Japanese officials to discuss our concerns and prepare appropriate protective measures.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

MANITOBA APPEAL TO SUPREME COURT—REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION FROM CONSIDERATION BY PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister who will know that Beauchesne holds that the reference of a bill to the Supreme Court of Canada withdraws that bill temporarily from the jurisdiction of Parliament. And he will know that the reason for that parliamentary custom and rule is because a question cannot be considered by two public bodies at the same time. The Prime Minister will know that the Manitoba appeal of the government's constitutional position has now been accepted by the Supreme Court of Canada and that court is seized of that question.

Will the Prime Minister then follow the rules of Parliament and withdraw his constitutional proposal from this House until the Supreme Court of Canada has had the opportunity to decide the question?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition argues from Beauchesne and suggests that I know certain things. I do not know about this interpretation of the rules, but I would be prepared to wager with him that when Beauchesne talks about reference, he means a reference by the Government of Canada to the Supreme Court, not an appeal to that court by any constituent of Canada.

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister indicates that he does not know the rules of this House nor the custom set out in Beauchesne's.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: What is at stake here, and what is spelled out very precisely in Beauchesne, is the fundamental—

An hon. Member: Read it.

Mr. Clark: "Read it" someone says. I shall read it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The principle reads:

The question cannot be before two public bodies at the same time.

That is the reference.

Mr. Trudeau: What number?

Mr. Clark: And the rule very clearly is that when the question is before two bodies—

Mr. Trudeau: What is the rule?

Mr. Clark: The reference is Citation 338. When the question is before two public bodies, and one is the Supreme Court of Canada and the other is Parliament, then it is Parliament that withdraws to allow the Supreme Court to exercise its function.

Will the Prime Minister of Canada respect the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Canada, will he respect the rules and customs of this House, and will he withdraw that constitutional resolution until the Supreme Court has had the opportunity to decide the question?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition suggests I do not know the rules. I suppose if there is such—

An hon. Member: You said you did not.

Mr. Trudeau: —a rule he would have it open to him to raise a point of order and refer to you for judgment, Madam Speaker. However, if I can answer and express a view on the rule as I read it, I refer to Section 338, paragraph (4) of Beauchesne's, where I read these words:

The reference of a bill to the Supreme Court of Canada withdraws that bill temporarily from the jurisdiction of Parliament.

Now, unless the Leader of the Opposition does not know what the word "reference" means, or what a "bill" means, and that is a real possibility, Madam Speaker, I would suggest that he now argue that there is a reference to the Supreme Court and that he do it by using "reference" in the sense Beauchesne meant it.

REQUEST FOR CALLING OF GENERAL ELECTION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister, as is his custom, has quoted selectively from the rule—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —and conveniently ignored the statement of principle that the question cannot be before two public bodies at the same time. He refuses—

An hon. Member: Parliament is supreme.

Mr. Clark: —to answer my question. Someone behind him says "Parliament is supreme." Last night in London, when his Minister of Justice was lobbying the British on a matter still before this House, the minister said that the people of Canada are supreme and, if they do not like what the government is doing with its constitutional resolution, then they can throw this government out at the next election.

The Prime Minister knows that his constitutional proposal was not discussed during the last election. He knows he has no mandate for the constitutional proposal he is trying to push through this House of Commons.

● (1420)

Let me ask the Prime Minister of Canada, if he believes that the people of Canada have a right to throw a government out because it pushes forward a constitutional position the people do not agree with, will the Prime Minister of Canada call an election now on the question of the constitutional resolution?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Scrape up your courage, Pierre!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. This is quite early in the question period for my having to get up to call order constantly.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I did not think the Leader of the Opposition would use a debate on the future of the Constitution of Canada, use this device to prop up his leadership which has been withdrawn from him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Call the election!

Mr. Andre: Spineless!

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I am glad to respond to that challenge. Let us—

An hon. Member: Yes or no!

Mr. Trudeau: Let us pass this bill in all stages—

An hon. Member: No, no! Let's have it now!

Mr. Trudeau: They do not want to hear this challenge.

An hon. Member: Put it to the people first.

Mr. Trudeau: Let us pass this bill in all stages, both Houses of Parliament, let us send it to Britain, and then let us call an election.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: After the fact.

Mr. Trudeau: The people will obviously be called, one day or another, to judge this action by this House. I suggest that if hon. members opposite are so sure that the people would not support this—

Mr. Andre: You place your bets before the starting gates open, not after the race is finished.

Mr. Trudeau: They are afraid to answer my challenge of passing this bill, and then—

An hon. Member: You coward.

An hon. Member: Bill Davis did it last week.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Bill Davis won on it last week!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. members please let the Right Hon. Prime Minister finish his answer?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I think he is finished. He is finished now!

Mr. Trudeau: As to the referral to the rule, Madam Speaker, I read the end of the paragraph: "the question cannot be put before two public bodies at the same time." That is repeating my point made earlier. Who has referred a bill to the Supreme Court of Canada? If the Government of Canada had referred such a bill, then indeed it would not make much sense for the Government of Canada to press forward with this bill in front of the House. This is the obvious common sense meaning of this rule, and if the—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —if the opposition does not agree with the common sense meaning of this, let them appeal to the Speaker. She is entitled to rule on whether this bill is properly before the House or not.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister speaks about leadership. I am prepared to face votes, as he is not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister knows that he has no mandate for what he is trying to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: He is afraid of the views and the opinions of the people of Canada. He prefers to have Canadian questions settled in Britain. We want these Canadian questions settled here in Canada.

Why will the Prime Minister of Canada not call an election on this fundamental question so the people of Canada can speak clearly and settle our questions here in Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1425)

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition talks about leadership and the courage to face votes. Why will he not face a leadership convention?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

ELECTION CHALLENGE

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He is obviously, after his answers today, hiding behind the majority he has in the House. He is opposed by eight of the ten provinces and he is opposed by 64 per cent of the Canadian people. I ask him, if he is so brave—and he said the other day that this is no time for cowards—why he is not willing to accept the challenge of the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in the course of the debate on this resolution we have heard argument after argument from the other side that the referendum proposal in this resolution was unacceptable.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Let the people decide.

Mr. Trudeau: And they talk about going to the people. Well, there are provisions in this resolution for going to the people.

An hon. Member: Let's go now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I put it to the opposition that there are other ways of getting rid of their leader than going through an election. They will just have to take their courage in their own hands.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, I direct my question again to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Obviously the words of the Minister of Justice in London yesterday about an election were empty rhetoric. Today the Prime Minister's words are empty rhetoric, and obviously his words on Monday about cowardice apply to him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: I ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister why he is so stubborn and why he insists that he wants his package without having the people of Canada decide on it beforehand, and why he wants to leave as his legacy a divided country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the hon. member talks about cowardice. I wonder how one would describe a party that wants us to do their dirty work for them. Why do they not get rid of their own leader?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa.

An hon. Member: Here comes the relief.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Here is the little red rump.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

THE ECONOMY

IMPLEMENTATION OF WAGE CONTROLS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, there is nothing quite so lofty as a constitutional debate to bring dignity to Parliament, I always say.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I would like to ask—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I think there has been quite enough shouting for today. Let us call it quits for the shouting.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I hear my friends to the right saying something about—

Some hon. Members: You have no friends.

Mr. Beatty: Your friends are over there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. There are other parties in the House, besides the official opposition, that might have questions to ask.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: There is only one opposition.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Can we now hear the hon. member for Oshawa?

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I just want to say that I have read the leadership polls as they have—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: A couple of weeks ago the Minister of Finance stated the following in the House:

—there is no plan in my department to launch a program of wage controls.

Earlier this week I obtained a document from his department clearly outlining a process by which wage controls could be implemented. I would like the minister to clear up this confusion completely today by assuring the House that no wage controls in any form will be introduced in 1981.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, there is no plan in the department; I have no plan; I have brought no plan before cabinet to introduce wage and price controls.

POLICY TO COMBAT INFLATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I trust everyone noted that the Minister of Finance did not answer the question. He did not give us an assurance that wage controls will not be introduced this year. He knows, as well as I, that a secret document has been discussed in his department which lays out precisely a program for the implementation of wage controls, whether or not the government has yet decided to act upon it.

The same document makes clear that wages have not been the cause of inflation, but points to many other causes. Since the government has ruled out a fair prices commission, has turned down a policy which would lower interest rates—and, incidentally, they have just gone up again today—and has ruled out every other specific suggestion to control inflation made by this party and others, is he prepared to announce today one new policy to bring down the level of inflation, or is he saying to the people of Canada that they will have to sit back and take it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I want to repeat and amplify what I said earlier to the hon. member for Oshawa. I have seen no program anywhere in any document in my department for wage and price controls. I have no hesitation in telling the hon. member that no such proposal has been presented to me, that no such proposal has been approved by me, that no such proposal has been brought by me to cabinet. That is the situation. I remind the hon. member that he is asking me to say what may happen in 1981, 1982 or 1983.

Mr. Broadbent: No. This year, 1981.

Mr. MacEachen: It is rather irresponsible to request—

Mr. Broadbent: Oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —an assurance from me about a hypothetical possibility. If he wants a straight answer, the answer is that there is no plan whatsoever to bring in wage and price controls. If the situation changes, I assure him that in the normal course the House and the hon. member will be notified.

ENERGY

PRICING PRACTICES OF OIL COMPANIES—REQUEST THAT GASOLINE PRICE INCREASE BE ROLLED BACK

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance. It concerns energy, about which he can do something. Twenty-two days ago in the House I asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs about the six cents increase oil companies piggybacked on the most recent increase in the cost of gasoline. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources confirmed that rip-off.

Here is something which is visible and concrete, an anti-inflationary step which the minister can take right now; he will not have to wait until 1982 or 1983. Is the minister prepared to stand up and tell the House that he will roll back that six cents increase in the price of gasoline?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, of course I am not going to stand up and say that I will roll back that price.

Mr. Waddell: Why not?

Mr. MacEachen: Because I have no authority to do it. I remind the hon. member that this morning I picked up a newspaper and read that the Premier of Saskatchewan was saying the present policy of restraining world oil prices was insanity.

Mr. Waddell: It is not the same thing.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member must try to reconcile the various differing views which exist on the question of increases in oil prices. One thing which is clear is that at least the Premier of Saskatchewan has a view; he wants higher oil prices. The New Democratic Party has been very careful in the House to avoid any clear statement on where it stood on this very important point, except to come in from the margin and ask about six cents cost increases made by oil companies. Why don't you face the issue head on, frontally, and tell us what your policy is?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

LABOUR RELATIONS

REQUEST BY CANADIAN LAKE CARRIERS ASSOCIATION FOR INTRODUCTION OF BACK-TO-WORK LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Would he confirm that he met with representatives of the Canadian Lake Carriers Association, that the discussion included a request by the association for back-to-work legislation, and that this occurred in the new year, prior to the commencement of labour negotiations between the association and the Canadian Marine Officers Union? Would the minister not feel that this could be prejudicial to the bargaining in good faith between those two groups?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. My recollection is that I met with representatives of the Canadian Lake Carriers Association earlier in the year. They made representations in relation to the reforms in legislation they would like to see. I do not recall them talking about any back-to-work legislation. In any event I certainly made no commitment on any of the representations they made to me at that time.

Mr. McKnight: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. He has already admitted to meeting with that association prior to the commencement of negotiations between the carriers association and the marine officers. They requested legislation from him regarding back-to-work rules and changes they wish to see in the contract. Does he feel that is conducive to bargaining in good faith between two parties in Canada? Will he continue to deny what the union is saying, that they feel this is bargaining in bad faith on behalf of the association?

Mr. Regan: Madam Speaker, the hon. member is on one of those not so passive Sable Island ponies galloping to conclusions.

Mr. McKnight: It is better than riding the dead horse which the minister is on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Regan: Well, the hon. member is a leading authority on dead horses, when he sees the policies of this party on the Constitution at the present time; there is no question about that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Regan: In regard to this particular dead horse, it would do him well to stop beating it. The discussion I had with the representatives of the Lake Carriers Association was the same as the discussion I have had with labour or management groups from time to time. It did not relate to any contract discussions. To the best of my knowledge, I was not asked anything about back-to-work legislation. But the hon. member should be familiar, from my previous utterances on the matter, with the fact that I believe back-to-work legislation is very much a last resort, only when the social need of the country is so great that it is required.

TRANSPORT

EFFECT OF OUTCOME OF LABOUR NEGOTIATIONS ON MOVEMENT OF GRAIN

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It has to do with the concern of many of us over the present situation with regard to the marine officers union negotiations. At two recent meetings marine officers voted unanimously to reject the company's offers. Is the minister aware of this situation? Does he have any contingency plans to see that grain moves during a possible strike? I think this is very important in view of the fact that we can have a record shipping season because, as we all know, the Seaway will be open a week early this year.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, it is well known that I am a natural worrier; I worry about everything, and this particularly. Of course the grain situation is dependent upon the labour front. I inquired yesterday about that very subject, and I was given the impression that things were going reasonably well.

• (1440)

I was cheered by the settlement which was achieved at the Port of Montreal, for example. I follow the paper every night to see the good accomplishments made in terms of keeping peace on the labour front with respect to grain transportation.

CONTINGENCY PLANS FOR GRAIN SHIPPING ARRANGEMENTS

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same minister. It also has to do with grain transportation. I think the minister will be aware that a year ago there was the distinct possibility that Canada would be short approximately a million tons in its shipping on the Great Lakes. The thing that really saved our bacon in that situation was the American embargo, which freed some American shippers.

Has the minister had a chance to have discussions with officials of the Canadian Wheat Board with respect to preventing that from happening in the future? Has he discussed such things as long-term contracting, which the Wheat Board should be considering with some of the shippers? What can the minister tell us about that situation so that we do not again get trapped into not having enough shipping available to move the grain we are capable of producing?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will have a conversation with the minister responsible for the Wheat Board as early as I can arrange it, and I will report to the hon. member.

PUBLIC SERVICE

APPROACH TO CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION ON EQUALITY FOR MALE AND FEMALE EMPLOYEES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Yesterday I asked him a question about the government's commitment to equal pay for work of equal value. He dismissed my allegations at that time. Since then it has come to light that the Treasury Board has tried to make a sweetheart deal with the Canadian Human Rights Commission, asking it not to accept any more complaints on the general services group of PSAC in return for a final settlement offered by the President of the Treasury Board. With that in mind can the minister confirm this to be the truth? If it is, why does he feel he is above the laws of this land?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. Yesterday I took the liberty of supplying him with quite a detailed analysis of this particular complaint and the efforts which have been made by the Treasury Board to resolve this problem. Unfortunately, as I indicated yesterday, the matter is one of extreme complexity and I would not like to take the time of the House during the question period to review the entire formula.

Very briefly, I would like to explain that what was done was to take the national pay level for both the female-dominated groups and the male-dominated groups to establish an average pay level in each, then to take the difference, expressed as a percentage, and increase the pay level in the female groups by that percentage. For example, that would have the effect with respect to level two in zone 11 of increasing two of the female-dominated groups above male-dominated groups. You will recall that yesterday I mentioned there are actually 22 different pay zones in Canada.

The request to the Human Rights Commission was to the effect that if an averaging formula is accepted for what would appear to be a very equitable settlement of this particular claim, then clearly no more complaints could be accepted with respect to that complaint. In other words the averaging formula would make no sense. I think that is perfectly clear. There is no attempt to avoid in any way the application of the law. In fact, every attempt is being made to comply with the spirit of the legislation.

WIDENING GAP IN PAY SCALES FOR MEN AND WOMEN

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I wish I could thank the minister for his answer.

The point is that the Human Rights Commission did find the government's offer inadequate. A recent Statistics Canada study pointed out that a group of 1976 university and community college graduates working for the government are in a situation in which the women are earning $3,300 less per year than the men. This is indicative of the over-all problem of unequal pay in the public service.

I would like to ask the minister whether or not he will finally take some action to stop the widening gap between men and women in the public service. If he will not take action, then will his route be to ask the Secretary of State to exempt himself and his department from the human rights legislation? Is that his way out? Or will he finally take some action to resolve the problems which exist within the public service?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I have had the occasion to answer this question before in the House. Members of this government and myself continue to take action, and we are concerned. That is why we have an equal opportunities for women program. That is why we have introduced affirmative action pilot studies, which are moving forward very effectively. I would suggest there are a number of reasons, some systemic, which account for the differentials which were expressed in the newspaper article based upon Statistics Canada information, to which the hon. member makes reference.

I insist that any suggestion that we are not taking action is completely and totally unfounded. It is a matter of continuing consultation amongst my colleagues. I can assure the hon. member that I remain committed in every way to the affirmative action program and the equal opportunities for women program, as do all my colleagues.

INCOME TAX

INQUIRY WHETHER DECISIONS CONCERNING CANADIANS WORKING ABROAD WILL BE RESPECTED

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue and it concerns an injustice on the part of the Lévesque-Parizeau government against 2,000 Quebec families and companies.

Two and a half years after granting a tax exemption to at least 2,000 Quebecers who had obtained a non-resident status while posted abroad, the Quebec minister of revenue has just unilaterally decided to repeal the written agreements concluded for that purpose with some 200 Quebec professional firms and companies. Since the Lévesque-Parizeau government has made of those Quebecers second-class citizens and has discriminated against them in relation to their colleagues in other provinces, my question is as follows: will the Canadian government abide as a responsible government with the decision previously taken by its officials in connection with the non-resident status granted to those Quebecers and other Canadians working abroad during a certain period, that is, before the autumn of 1979?

[English]

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member that this government intends to keep the commitments it made to these citizens of Quebec or, indeed, of any other province of Canada, who work abroad for Canadian companies. There was a change in the regulations in 1980, whereby non-resident status was governed by a period of two years. Previous to that it was six months. But there were firms which entered into contracts abroad based on the previous ruling. We intend to keep our commitment to those firms, since the contracts were entered into in good faith. It is unfortunate if the government of Quebec takes a different view, but for our part we intend to keep our commitment to those workers.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

DISPUTE BETWEEN CORPORATION AND JOURNALISTS' UNION IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State and Minister of Communications. Last week, the CBC made the striking journalists of the French network an offer which it qualified as "final", knowing full well that some of its clauses would be rejected by the journalists, 78 per cent of whom in fact did so this week. The CBC now refuses to resume negotiations. Can the minister tell the House what steps he now intends to take in order to get the CBC back to the negotiation table?

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member pointed out, I too was advised by the CBC that last week it had made the union offers which it qualified as "final". The hon. member also knows that those offers include a 20.5 per cent increase for the last two years and a 10.5 per cent year raise for the year starting March 1, 1982. Those are the figures arrived at by the CBC. Those offers, in terms of the whole period, represent an over-all increase of 33 per cent. The Corporation itself has said its offers were final.

Mr. Bosley: Madam Speaker, the minister is well aware, I think, that the offer provides for an increase of 30 per cent, while reducing the power of the union over non-monetary matters. Madam Speaker, the responsibility of the government and the CBC is to make sure the Quebecers are not deprived of news coverage in French, especially now that an historic election campaign is being fought. Could the minister advise the House whether his refusal to settle this strike, as he had promised he would a few months ago, is based on his opinion that this strike should continue for reasons known only to the Liberal Party, or does he want to force the union into a position which the government could use as an excuse to adopt unjustified legislation to force these workers back to work?

Mr. Fox: As the hon. member no doubt knows, Madam Speaker, the CBC management is solely responsible for its labour relations. When I referred a while ago to the final offer made by the CBC management, I failed to mention that each journalist has been offered a lump sum of $3,500.

I certainly would like to know what is the position of the official opposition on the wage issue, and especially that of the hon. member for York Peel. I wonder if he would have the government agree to a settlement in the public sector which calls for a pay raise of over 33 per cent over a three-year period.

NATIONAL SECURITY

BRITISH REPORT OF ELECTRONIC BUGGING OF U.S.S.R. EMBASSY IN OTTAWA

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. World-wide publicity is being given today to a British report that when the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa was rebuilt in 1954, the Canadian intelligence authorities placed electronic eavesdropping and interception devices in the building in locations suggested by Gouzenko, in order to bug conversations by members of the KGB, but that due to leaks in the Canadian intelligence establishment, when they unsuccessfully swept the building, the KGB location was deliberately moved to a part of the building that was not bugged. The primary purpose of the exercise was thus foiled because of the leaks which originated in Ottawa in the first place. Has the minister inquired if that report is true? Can he tell the House whether the report is true or false?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I have, of course, been following these so-called revelations and have been briefed about them. But, more than anyone else, the hon. member will know very well that it is not the practice or policy of the Solicitor General to comment on such allegations, and I have no intention of doing so.

IDENTITY OF BRITISH AGENT WHO INTERROGATED IGOR GOUZENKO

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, in a matter which so vigorously attacks the reputation of the Canadian intelligence and security establishment and community, I would expect that the minister would be concerned enough to at least inquire.

My supplementary question is to ask if the minister has inquired about the allegations that he repeated the other day, to the effect that the information given to the British MI5 interrogator by Gouzenko differed substantially from information given by that interrogator to the British government. If so, what was the result of his inquiry, and has he now established the identity of that British interrogator?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I want to repeat that I did not in any way give any information about anything that took place between Gouzenko and others. What he had said was reported to me and I was asked to comment on it. I said that I had also read that in the newspapers, but I certainly was not prepared, and I am not now prepared to comment on that.

I should like to tell the House that the integrity of the security service is certainly a matter of concern to the Solicitor General and that we have operational policies in place to ensure the integrity of the service. It is my responsibility to be satisfied that those policies are in force and are effective, and I am.

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION—ROLE PLAYED BY CHARLES HOWARD ELLIS

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Solicitor General who is no doubt aware that Mr. Charles Howard Ellis, who was Britain's third-ranking intelligence officer at the end of World War II and who later rose to higher ranks in British intelligence, reported to have been a post-war Soviet agent and allegedly made a confession in the year 1965, which was never made public. Will the minister tell the House whether he has ordered or will order an investigation, or if he has been asked by another government to have one, about any contacts Mr. Ellis had with the Canadian security services?

More important, perhaps, is the minister prepared to recommend to the government that it follow the example of Mrs. Thatcher in England of setting up a royal commission to examine in detail what he says he wants protected, namely the integrity of the security service, and whether that integrity and security have been what they should have been from the time of the Taschereau papers to the present day?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, as to the integrity of Mr. Ellis, that obviously is a matter for the British to look into and for them to take whatever action they feel might be justified. From our point of view I can confirm that I have inquired about it. I have learned that Mr. Ellis had no direct contact with the security service and that he never came to Canada, for example, for meetings with our security service in a way which might have compromised that service.

Finally, on the question of whether a commission is justified, I do not think that anything that has happened suggests that a commission to investigate the integrity of the security service in Canada is justified. Far from it.

TASCHEREAU COMMISSION PAPERS REVIEW—TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, I preface my supplementary by saying that there may be no evidence that Mr. Ellis ever came to Canada, but I would point out to the minister that people can be communicated with without coming here. There is such a thing as a telephone, and I am sure that the minister must have heard of it at some time.

Yesterday the minister confirmed, in answer to one of my questions, that a review was taking place of the approximately 6,000 pages, that still have not been made public, of the Taschereau papers, in order to decide whether such items should be made public. I think he neglected to answer the most important part of my question and I would therefore like to repeat it today. What are the terms of reference of the man who is making the review? Can the minister tell the House what those terms of reference are? I am referring to Mr. Branscombe. Will his report be tabled in this House so that it will be public property, and can the minister guarantee to the House that there will be no government interference whatsoever with the recommendations made in Mr. Branscombe's report?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I confirm that Mr. Branscombe, who is the retired public servant who is doing this work for the Privy Council office, has been asked whether disclosure of the revelations or matters contained within those papers which, as I said yesterday I have not seen, would significantly damage the reputations of any living individuals. When his recommendations are brought forward they will be reviewed by the government and decisions will be made about them. I cannot confirm now that they will be made public because if the recommendations are that the Taschereau papers not be made public, obviously the information in the report ought not to be made public either, for the same reason, that its disclosure would perhaps significantly damage the reputations of individuals who are still living.

McDONALD ROYAL COMMISSION

INQUIRY RESPECTING OPERATION DIRECTED AT CHINESE EMBASSY IN OTTAWA

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Solicitor General. I want to ask if the McDonald commission inquiry has been given access to the record of the operation mounted by the security service, with assistance from the CIA, against a foreign embassy in Ottawa which was unfortunately interrupted by the unexpected return of the occupants of the apartment being used for that purpose. Given that the essence of such operations, commendable as they are, is that the agents not be caught, and as a result of this fact the then secretary of state for external affairs, the Hon. Mitchell Sharp, found it necessary to phone John C. Doyle, of Canadian Javelin fame, who just happened to be the owner or occupier of the apartment, when these agents were caught, could the Solicitor General tell us what ramifications, if any, flowed from this rather embarrassing incident? Is he prepared to say that the McDonald commission was given access to this for evaluation?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, let me begin by saying that I have no knowledge of that particular file, whether it exists or not, and whether it has been accurately described by the hon. member. I would certainly confirm, and it is a matter of public record, that the McDonald commission has been given full access to all the records of the security service of the RCMP and of the whole of the RCMP.

PROCEDURE FOLLOWED IN INTER-DEPARTMENTAL CONSULTATIONS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I want to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether, in instances like this where sensitive operations are mounted by the "E" specials or other arms of our security service against foreign embassies—in this case it was the People's Republic of China—there is any prior consultation between his officials and the officials of the department of the Solicitor General to see if these operations are properly mounted, and to give him, or his predecessors, advance warning in case something should go wrong, as was the case in this event?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, without accepting any of the premises of my hon. friend's question with respect to such operations, I can say that it is our practice, certainly, to consult fully among ourselves before taking any significant action as a government.

EMPLOYMENT

REDUCTION IN ALGONQUIN COLLEGE BASIC SKILLS PROGRAM

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In the last couple of days it has been announced that Algonquin College in Ottawa will probably have to cut its staff by 100 people. This cutback has been occasioned to a large extent as a result of a reduction in the number of seats which the minister's department contracts with the college, particularly for courses such as basic skill training and business. Given the very large number of people in Canada who are functionally illiterate and need this kind of training, would the minister explain why his department is cutting back these courses at Algonquin College and whether his department is ordering similar cuts in other community colleges across Canada?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in reply to the hon. member's question, the decision to cut back the basic skills program is a decision Algonquin College is making. It is not one that we are making. We happen to think that the investment in basic skills is a very useful one, and we want to see it continued, but that is a choice being made by Algonquin. However, I can assure the hon. member that in terms of training programs we are maintaining the assistance and the training allowance for the provinces at the same level or at a higher level in the coming year.

As the hon. member knows, each college and the curriculum of each college are determined by provincial authorities. We simply buy the places. In this case I think his question would be better directed toward provincial authorities.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, in each of the last five years there have been substantial reductions both in the funding and in the number of people who have been permitted to take the basic skill training or basic education programs. In every city where the parliamentary task force on employment has held hearings, we have had representations made emphasizing these programs and urging the government to increase rather than decrease the funding. Could the minister explain why this situation has occurred when he now says that it is the fault of the provincial government?

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, as changes occur in occupational areas, there are different demands for new skills. There has been increasing demand for skills of on-the-job training, skills which can be acquired in the industrial area, not in the institutional area in the experience of our commission. If the hon. member would look at the shift in funding and in the allocation of our funds for the last several years, he will notice that the funds increasingly have been going into the development of technical and manual skills where the demand is highest. This will apply both now and in the future.

We have tried to adapt to changing labour markets instead of being struck with the status quo. That is why we are shifting the allocation of our training skills into those areas where they are most seriously needed.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

IMPLEMENTATION OF JAMES BAY AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR REVIEW

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As the minister knows, there is a considerable amount of dismay, disappointment and anger on behalf of the James Bay Cree and the Inuit of northern Quebec regarding the way in which the so-called James Bay agreement has been implemented. Could the minister tell us whether he has any plans to introduce a new process or mechanism whereby this important agreement, which was considered to be something of a model, could be fairly and honestly implemented? In addition to that, could the minister tell us whether he would be prepared to accept suggestions and recommendations from the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development which is now carefully studying this very serious and urgent problem?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, to answer the first part of the hon. member's question, I have spoken to my colleague, the Minister of Justice, and we are prepared to review the agreement from the point of view of the implementation aspect in terms of it being adhered to and in terms of the spirit to which the parties entered into the agreement. As far as suggestions from the committee are concerned, yes, we are prepared to entertain the suggestions as they come forward.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, could the government House leader indicate to us precisely his intentions with respect to government business in the next day or so?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, if we do not proceed today with the debate on a motion to allocate a period of time to conclude the debate on the bill authorizing the government to borrow a certain sum of money, a bill which is very urgent and which as everyone knows the Progressive Conservative Party has prevented us from adopting within a reasonable period of time, we will proceed with that motion tomorrow or, I hope, some time next week. As for the rest concerning the normal business of the House of Commons we intend to begin today with the motion to allocate a period of time to put an end to the constitutional debate and, in the next few days, we will debate topics related to the Constitution.

[English]

STATUS OF MOTION TO EXTEND SITTINGS DURING DEBATE ON CONSTITUTION

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a matter for clarification. I refer to Hansard for March 24, 1981. At page 8566 in the second column under "Government Orders", the words appear "Business of the House—Motion to extend sittings during debate on Constitution". Then we read: "On the order: Government Notices of Motions: March 19, 1981—The President of the Privy Council:". There appears next the text of the motion which is subject, as you know, to a point of order. I raise this matter because I would like the status of the motion clarified.

When the motion was eventually called by the Table, the order was made, according to my recollection of what occurred in the House at that time, but the motion itself was not read. My recollection is that there was no request that it be dispensed with and the only reference on the floor of the House was with respect to the mention of the motion by the Clerk Assistant, and yet the motion appears in Hansard. As I have always understood it, Hansard is a verbatim account or an account of what would have occurred if something had not been dispensed with and there was no dispensation.

I raise this matter because I had a conversation with the Hansard office. That same evening I spoke, you will recall, on the point of order. When I went upstairs to the Hansard office, the person then in charge asked me whether or not that motion had been put in the House. I answered no, to my recollection it had not been put in the House, that although the first Clerk Assistant had just begun his preliminary remarks, no one had put the motion. Although I recall the conversation, I cannot recall the person's name, but in my presence that person called someone I believe in the legal branch of the House. I cannot recollect his name, but I think it is Cooke. The same question was put to him. The answer came back, as related to me, no, the motion had not been put in the House. As a result, the Hansard editor at that time took his pencil and ran it through the blues, from which this seems to be a transcription, striking out.

That becomes important from the point of view of processes which might be within the realm of the authority of the government to use so as to establish the status of the matter. I rise now to bring that to your attention, Madam Speaker. I must confess I have not looked at Votes and Proceedings because I have not yet had a chance, this having just come to my attention.

Given the importance of the subject matter, I think it is important that we have the status of this alleged motion, as it appears on the Order Paper, clarified. It may well mean you will have to consult with the officials of Hansard. There may be another explanation. However, I would like the matter clarified. Are we dealing with a motion that has been called or a motion that has been put? I put that to you, Madam Speaker, on the basis that the authorities of the House dealing with that matter on Tuesday night thought they were dealing with a motion that had only been called.

• (1510)

Madam Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on the same point? I can answer his question. If the hon. member for Yukon has another question, I will entertain it.

Mr. Nielsen: It is on the same question, Madam Speaker. You will recall I have raised on several occasions in the past the appearance in Hansard of matters that have not happened in this House, the appearance of words in Hansard that have not been uttered in this House. This is simply another example, and a gross example, I might add. I attribute no responsibility or blame for it; it has happened. In my submission in support of the opposition House leader, I say it should not have happened at all.

My recollection of the events of that day were that the Clerk Assistant very briefly called the subject matter of the motion. By no means did he read it word for word as it now appears in Hansard. At that point, Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre rose, the Chair recognized him and there arose as a result of that an exchange as to the traditional practices, courtesies or whatever of the House. I moved a motion that the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton be now heard, the division bells rang, the vote followed its normal course. At no time was the motion read by you, Madam Speaker.

In support of what the opposition House leader has said, not only does the fact that it appears in Hansard now as though it had been put, which it has not, affect the options which are available to the government, but it affects the submissions that the Chair is now in the process of hearing. As you know, Madam Speaker, I am next on my feet on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton. Depending on whether or not the House is seized of the motion is the direction in which the procedural arguments are going to go, because there are also different options available to the Chair, according to whether or not the House is seized of the motion.

In my submission, Madam Speaker, it leaves you in a much more flexible position to deal with this matter, as Mr. Speaker Michener dealt with a similar situation some years ago, if the House is not seized of the motion. In any event, I do not think there can be any doubt that the motion was not read, that the appearance of the verbatim transcript in Hansard should not be there because it did not happen in this place. I certainly submit to you, Madam Speaker, that your direction on the clarification requested by the opposition House leader should be, in view of the events that have transpired, that the motion has been called but not put.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, if I may, I should like to say a word about this matter. I do so because to my knowledge many times, perhaps scores or hundreds of times, Hansard has had to insert "On the Order:" and then whatever the subject was about. As I say, that has been done hundreds of times.

All that has happened in this case is that Hansard has put something in there so that it would be clear what we were talking about. Members do not get the floor or the right to speak if there is nothing before us; there has to be a point of order, a question of privilege, or some motion that has been moved. All that Hansard is doing in this instance is indicating that the discussion that follows is on the order of that particular motion. The motion is spelled out in Hansard so that readers of Hansard will know what we were talking about. There is no suggestion in Hansard and no suggestion in Votes and Proceedings that the motion was put or dealt with as such.

Mr. Nielsen: It wasn't put.

Mr. Knowles: I just said it was not put. If my hon. friends have not looked at Votes and Proceedings, it says:

> The Order of the Day for Government Business No. 41 in the name of the President of the Privy Council having been called;
> And the Chair having recognized the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles);
> Pursuant to Standing Order 29, Mr. Nielsen, seconded by Mr. Kempling, moved,—That the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) be now heard.

The vote is there and so on. If one looks at today's Order Paper, item No. 41, it is the same as it was the other day. There is no suggestion in any of the documents—Hansard, Votes and Proceedings or the Order Paper—that that motion was proceeded with. All that you have in Hansard in the printing of the motion is an indication of what we were talking about on the point of order. I suggest that Hansard is following a practice it has followed for a great many years and that it does not deserve this criticism.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I will start with the last intervention. I would say that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre put it almost as well as I could!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: If the motion appears in Hansard, it is only there for the purpose of members knowing what we were talking about. I want to make it quite clear that the order was called. The fact that it appears in Hansard does not indicate that the question has been proposed. The motion was called. I am now hearing points of order on that motion. In no way does Hansard indicate that the Chair has proposed the motion to the House. It has been called but not proposed.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, on several occasions I have asked the President of the Privy Council about certain bills now on the Order Paper. He replied that they have not been called and, in effect, blamed the opposition for holding them up by debating the Constitution. I would ask if he can enlighten the House—that is, when he has time to listen to what I am asking him—whether he is prepared to call some of these other bills or whether the government is prepared to introduce further bills to deal with high interest rates and inflation, which are far more important subjects than whether the BNA Act comes back. After all, it has been in England for 114 years. Actually, it is within his power and that of the government to withdraw the Constitution resolution and proceed to other business which is far more important at this time to this country. We can go back to the other later.

Has he forgotten that people are suffering from the effects of high interest rates and inflation? What is this government going to do about the situation in this country? Does it simply want to make a hero of the Prime Minister so that he can get into the history books?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, may I draw the hon. member's attention to the provisions of Standing Order 18(2)?

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked the government House leader about House business. The government House leader said something about dealing with Bill C-59, the borrowing authority bill, today or maybe tomorrow. Would he be more specific as to whether he intends to call Bill C-59 today on government orders, or is he intending to call it tomorrow? When exactly does he intend to call that bill?

• (1520)

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: As I said earlier, Madam Speaker, there is a certain urgency in proceeding with the report stage and third reading of Bill C-59. It may be recalled that we began the report stage last Friday and that the official opposition party introduced an amendment. It has become a tradition in the House that this type of bill to authorize the government to borrow a certain sum of money has to be debated for a limited time so it can be adopted. That was done when the Progressive Conservative government was in office and that is done practically every year. We had to do that to refer the bill to committee. When we reached the report stage we thought we could have final passage last Friday. But given the circumstances where the opposition would rather bring Parliament to a standstill, we were unable to complete third reading of that bill on that day. Therefore my answer to the questions of the hon. member cannot be more precise. We have been forced to serve notice that the debate at the report stage and on third reading will be limited to two additional days, that is one day per stage, and that notice was given yesterday. We are now in a position to move a motion to that effect, which will require two hours of debate, and then two additional days will be devoted to complete the study of that bill which should normally have been adopted in a few hours had the hon. member's party given us a minimum of co-operation.

He is asking me to tell him precisely when we will proceed with that study. I can assure him that we will do so as soon as possible after the House has approved the motion to grant two additional days for debate.

[English]

Madam Speaker: I would like to recognize only those members who rise on government business. I will recognize others later on.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I have no alternative but to reply to what the President of the Privy Council has just said. I spoke on that bill and I resent greatly being told that I was an obstructionist. The fact is it involves $14 billion of borrowing, yet the government House leader has the audacity to tell us that two hours should be sufficient. He is talking about $7 billion an hour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: That may have been a point of order but I doubt that it was a question on government business.

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, this arises from the discussion yesterday where you said that my point was well taken but the minister was not here to respond. I would like to draw the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs' attention to the answer he gave as recorded in Hansard for March 24 and—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I asked that only those members wanting to discuss government business rise at this time because I have other matters to deal with.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NIELSEN—OFFICE OF MR. MUNRO (HAMILTON EAST) IN WHITEHORSE, YUKON

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege involves the illegal use of government funds by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) which I submit directly affects my rights and responsibilities as a Member of Parliament and impairs my ability to carry out the duties expected of me. It has to do with a question responded to by the minister, but by no other government departments as yet, concerning the establishment of political offices in certain ridings with no sitting Liberal member.

My question appears in Hansard of March 9, 1981, at page 8026, and the relevant portion is paragraph 4(a):

> 4. (a) What is the rent paid for the office of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development situated at 307 Jarvis Street in the City of Whitehorse, Yukon (b) who is the landlord of the building (c) what is the salary being paid to the so-called ministerial assistant (d) what other staff is being hired and at what salary (e) what is the purpose in establishing such an office?

Then paragraph (5) reads:

> Are other similar offices being set up in other constituencies where there is no Liberal Member of Parliament?

The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette) responded on the same page that the rental was $7,560 per year; the landlord was Davos Holdings Limited. Part (b) of my question was answered by saying that in so far as the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is concerned, the salary being paid was $17,549 to $20,321. Part (d) was answered by saying no other staff was employed.

Coming to part (e), the central portion of the question which I would like the Chair to consider, it reads:

> The purpose of the office in Yukon is to provide a direct communication link to the minister's office in Ottawa, to allow Yukoners the same access to the minister of IAND as is provided to other Canadians, to facilitate more consultation with Yukoners on matters that affect them and to expedite the early resolution of concerns that may develop in respect to DIAND responsibilities in the north.

The fact is, Madam Speaker, that the Commissioner, the senior civil servant appointed by the minister, is responsible for co-ordinating the efforts of almost 3,500 federal and territorial civil servants in Yukon, as if that were not enough communication to the minister's office. If he establishes an office for the purpose of giving Yukoners the same access to the minister as other Canadians, what is the purpose of the Commissioner being appointed at all? What is he doing? He has a director of northern affairs responsible for almost 1,000 federal civil servants in Yukon, 1,000 direct links to his department, to say nothing of the director of northern affairs he appoints.

In short, Madam Speaker, the minister has established, in precedent-setting circumstances, a political office in Yukon. It is nothing less than that. It will be noted that the office was established in privately-leased premises, not in government quarters. It performs only the functions of an ordinary constituency office. This House makes a generous allowance to me, in my opinion, for the operation of a constituency office. The taxpayers have to bear that burden. It also provides a generous allowance for staffing that office. The individual who has staffed that office since its creation, I believe in 1972, has been providing a most adequate service to my constituents.

Then the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development comes along and establishes a political office for the purpose of undercutting, undermining and eroding my responsibilities. Whether it is myself or anyone else makes no difference; it is legally and morally wrong for the minister to take such a political action and use, as he has, public money to support that operation.

Search as you might in the Treasury Board guidelines for the establishment of ministerial offices, Madam Speaker—and this is something with which you are familiar—you will find no authority for ministers of the Crown to establish ministerial offices in constituencies which they do not represent.

• (1530)

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), who is in his seat, knows full well, as do you, Madam Speaker, and as does the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), that they are entitled to establish a ministerial office in their own constituencies so that they might perform their ministerial responsibilities when they are in their constituencies. Similarly, there is provision under Treasury Board guidelines for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, if he should so choose, to establish a ministerial office in his constituency for the purpose of discharging his ministerial responsibilities, and for that purpose only. But here he has established, going beyond those Treasury Board guidelines, a ministerial office, not only in my constituency, but also one in Yellowknife, according to page 8026 of Hansard, and one in Calgary, Alberta. He now has ministerial offices in places which have literally thousands of public servants to maintain that communications link which he gives as the excuse for establishing those offices.

In my submission, that is an illegal use of public funds; but more important to me is that he is impeding my ability to perform my responsibilities as a Member of Parliament representing that constituency.

I will let the hon. member from the Northwest Territories speak for himself with respect to the Northwest Territories, and those hon. members from Calgary who are here can speak for themselves with respect to the actions of the minister in their constituencies.

I would not be stretching any imagination, nor could I be accused of exaggeration whatsoever, if I asked you, Madam Speaker, to accept the fact that those offices have been established for political purposes. The individual on staff there, who has a salary range of $17,549 to $20,321—which, incidentally, is beyond the salary range which is provided for the hon. member's own staff in that constituency office—is performing exactly the same function that my constituency office and my constituency office secretary have been performing for eight years in a very adequate fashion. It erodes my function; it erodes my effectiveness as a Member of Parliament. Indeed, it creates a political situation which is extremely undesirable.

I am sorry that this matter had to be raised, because only one person staffs that office at the moment. However, if this practice is allowed to continue, then the rights of other hon. members will be affected, as have mine.

I do not know what to propose by way of remedy. The easiest remedy would be for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to close the office, in Whitehorse and the one in Yellowknife. Because there is no way he can convince any reasonable Member of Parliament that, with 7,000 or 8,000 public employees in the two territories combined, there is not sufficient communication linkage between himself and his departmental officials here in Ottawa. It seems to me that little purpose is served in setting up an office in the private business sectors of these communities and staffing them with individuals of his choice.

If you find, Madam Speaker, that I have an appropriate question of privilege and that the actions of the minister and his illegal use of public funds seriously impair my ability to carry out my responsibilities as a Member of Parliament, I would move the appropriate motion to have the matter referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. This might be a very wise moment to allow this question to go to the standing committee, before the practice grows, so that a decision could now be made as to whether this kind of practice will be permitted to expand. If the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development can do it, and taken back-to-back with what has happened in Broadview-Greenwood and all the other Ontario and Quebec constituencies, who will be the next minister to set up so-called ministerial offices beyond Treasury Board guidelines in constituencies where no Liberal member is sitting? That, indeed, seems to be the purpose and the practice. It is a practice which, in my own personal submission, should be stopped at the earliest possible moment. Even if you do not accept that personal submission, Madam Speaker, surely the easiest and fairest way to have the matter resolved would be to recognize that there is a question of privilege which should be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections so that the whole matter can be reviewed, to stop at the outset what appears to be a growing and highly undesirable practice by the minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I have listened carefully to this question of privilege which is now being raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I will listen to a few other hon. members who I have noticed are rising to speak on the question. However, I just want to remind the hon. members of the House that I have already ruled on questions which were very similar and very close to this kind of question of privilege; namely, the erosion of the capacity of an hon. member to function in the face of someone else functioning beside him, parallel, or in some other way.

The present example which the hon. member is submitting is different, on the facts, from the examples on which I have ruled. As far as I can see from the intervention of the hon. member for Yukon, the principles involved are very much the same, and it is on those principles that I have previously ruled.

I will accept that the hon. member is not commenting on a ruling, but I want to ask other hon. members who might be wanting to intervene on this matter to point out to me the privilege and not debate whether one could have an office in the constituency close by one's own. I would like them to tell me where their privilege has been breached. I remind hon. members that privilege must deal with molestation, arrest—

An hon. Member: Or interference.

Madam Speaker: —or violence preventing the hon. member from functioning as a member in this House. Those are the basic rules on which a question of privilege can be based.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I will not speak for very long on this matter. It is my contention that this is a slight variation on the question upon which you ruled a few weeks ago. You have intimated that, but you are being generous with the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) in allowing further debate.

I submit that the opening of ministerial offices in any part of this country really comprises part of the administrative duties of any government. I am sure that when the hon. member for Yukon was a minister of the Crown offices of the Department of Public Works were located across the country—

An hon. Member: Not political offices.

Mr. Collenette: —and performed work similar to that which is being done by the office—

Mr. Clark: That is not true.

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. The parliamentary secretary is way off line here. He says that I, as minister of public works, would have had ministerial offices throughout the country, and that is absolutely false. Even though I was permitted to have a ministerial office under Treasury Board guidelines, which are quite strict, in my own constituency of Yukon, I did not establish one there because I thought it would be too political to do so. I was probably the only minister in cabinet who did not establish such an office. Maybe there were others, I do not know.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I did not either.

Mr. Nielsen: But when he accuses me of having ministerial offices all over the country, that is simply false.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I said I would be brief and I will. I would appreciate the courtesy of the hon. member for Yukon, having listened to his argument, rather than raising a point of order and interrupting me somewhat rudely—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1540)

Mr. Collenette: It is my contention, Madam Speaker, that there is nothing unusual about this kind of practice. It falls within the normal ambit of the administrative duties of government. Therefore I think the hon. member for Yukon is really splitting herrings—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: He is pickling them!

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I am sorry for taking licence with the English language. Perhaps I have been in the House a little too much listening to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) putting more meaning into words than they have.

I think the argument is clear. There is no question of privilege; it is really a question of sensitivity on the part of the hon. member for Yukon. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) has special responsibilities for the Northwest Territories and Yukon which fall under the jurisdiction of the federal government.

Second, if you are going to permit further argument, I submit, Madam Speaker, that you should reserve your ruling on this case until the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development appears in the House and chooses to respond. That would be the courteous thing to do.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I will be extremely brief and to the point, unlike the previous speaker. I want to make the specific point that what has happened here is that there are certain facts which are determined and established beyond question. One is that the minister in this instance has breached Treasury Board guidelines with respect to the establishment of ministerial offices. There is no question of that; it is a fact. He is doing it illegally and there can be no argument about that.

The second point, which I think is germane to the rights and privileges of individual Members of Parliament, is simply, as Your Honour will know, that it has now been established under your direction and control that MPs are allowed to maintain constituency offices for the purpose of serving their own constituents. This is a welcome development of parliamentary practice in our country. What we have here is another aspect of the situation respecting the establishment of these offices, which is also beyond question and cannot be attacked as being anything but a fact, and that is that the purpose of these offices, which are created and established by ministers for political purposes, is to undermine the ability of the member in that region from carrying out his responsibilities toward his constituents.

In other words, the government is attempting, by virtue of these offices, to sidetrack the public from going to see their Member of Parliament. While there has not been any physical molestation in the sense of battering rams or "split herrings", I suggest that what has happened in this instance is that there is an infringement of the ability of a Member of Parliament to carry out his duties. In other words, what is there to prevent a cabinet minister—we have not heard from the cabinet minister responsible for my riding for some time—from opening up an office in my riding or in the riding of my colleague, the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight), in order to undermine our ability as members to deal with our constituents and also impair our ability to represent those constituents in the House?

That is the precise and simple point I want to bring to Your Honour's attention. I think that if one looks at what is involved in this question of privilege, one finds that it consists of the infringement of the ability of a Member of Parliament to carry out his responsibilities in the House of Commons. I say that so long as these illegal political offices are maintained in our constituencies and there are no provisions under Treasury Board guidelines, no governmental decrees and no rules of the House of Commons permitting the opening of such offices because the people who are manning these ministerial offices are members of the House of Commons, they are impeding my ability and the ability of my colleague, the hon. member for Yukon, in carrying out our functions as Members of Parliament.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, following on what my colleague, the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn), has said, it seems to me that the question you have to decide is whether or not the various privileges which are established by the House for its members, regardless of party, have any independent value or meaning, or whether they can be undermined or eroded by virtue of the unilateral decision of the government to establish any number of ministerial offices which offer a competing service, which compete directly with the service offered by an MP. As well, there is the question whether the general services which members are encouraged to provide are, in a sense, an extension of the function of being a Member of Parliament which is worthy of protection, or whether the government can unilaterally establish whatever institutions it chooses politically to establish, thereby rendering virtually meaningless the privileges and rights which the House has decided to establish for all its members—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I think I have to ask members not to repeat the argument that there is competition in a particular constituency because a certain office has been established, that office having to be regulated by criteria emanating from the Treasury Board. First, I cannot determine whether or not the regulations of the Treasury Board have been violated, or whether or not the matter in question is illegal. So I ask hon. members not to submit this kind of argument to the Chair because the Chair is not competent to decide it.

As for the matter of competition if another office is located next to a member's office, this matter equally is one which I cannot decide. If the hon. member were able to represent to me, as I thought the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) was going to do, that some physical barrier had been put up in order to prevent his constituents from coming to his office because of the fact that this other office was in existence, perhaps I could have entertained such an argument.

However, I do ask hon. members not to play on words but to come straight to the matter that they feel constitutes a breach of privilege, not repeat arguments which I have already heard; members know that when arguments begin to be repetitive, my inclination is to feel the Chair is sufficiently informed. So I want to remind the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) that I do not believe I can entertain those arguments. If he has other arguments to submit, I will be prepared to listen to them.

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, having heard what you have to say, I do not think there is much point in my continuing my submission. I say that you have to ask yourself how far governments can go in undermining the rights of Members of Parliament by establishing other services. It is a conflict between the unlimited power of government and the rights of MPs which have been established by Parliament itself. If Madam Speaker finds that argument repetitive or unconvincing, I am sorry but there is nothing more I can add.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I will attempt to be brief. The ministerial office in the Calgary area is staffed by a cabinet minister from the other place. I suggest that the barrier to my ability to represent my constituents and to the ability of other Members of Parliament in their areas is a matter on which there is confusion. When people who reside in that community in fact approach the minister in his office, they believe they are talking with someone who is representing them in the House of Commons. Madam Speaker will know in that particular case that it is not reality. The people feel they are speaking with a member of the House of Commons who can bring their case to this House—

Madam Speaker: I should like to ask the hon. member a question. Is it in any way indicated on the door of that office or printed somewhere else that the hon. member is from the House of Commons? If people believe he is a member of the House of Commons, that is nothing upon which I can act. But does that hon. member indicate anywhere that he is a member of the House of Commons?

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I have no first hand knowledge of any such sign. On a number of occasions the people who work in my office and myself have been directly informed by a number of individuals that it was the understanding with which they went to the minister's office, and that it took them quite some time to discover that in fact they had talked with someone who was not able to bring their case before Parliament. It might be worthwhile to have that barrier of confusion examined by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, as the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) suggested.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In answer to your question to the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), yes, there is confusion in western Canada. When they see a picture of the Hon. Bud Olson spread out and "Alberta's Man" in black letters right across the top of it, they believe that he is their representative in Ottawa.

Madam Speaker: That was not the object of my remarks, and the hon. member knows it.

Is the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) seeking the floor on this question of privilege?

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I rise on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). The thing which is most disturbing is trying to determine in my mind what is an infringement of my rights as a Member of Parliament in performing my duty in the House and representing my constituents. I will make this intervention a very brief but very sincere one. I have risen on this same question of privilege in other areas where my rights have been infringed respecting my duties to my constituents in my riding.

Let me tell hon. members opposite that this whole matter is like poison ivy; it is spreading all across the country. What is happening in my riding directly ties in with this question of privilege. In my riding of Peterborough, there is a steady stream of correspondence and telephone calls to the acting minister responsible for my riding.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Domm: Hon. members opposite can clap and applaud, but it could be their job some day. There is an erosion of our responsibilities as Members of Parliament by this kind of action.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Domm: Let me give some examples to which, perhaps, members opposite may care to listen. What happens when people come to ministers responsible for ridings which they were not elected to represent is not always good. It is bad, because these ministers who are supposed to be responsible for the riding of Peterborough lose more than they win. What has the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) ever done for Peterborough? He lost Parks Canada, he lost Eldorado Nuclear, he lost the de Havilland Dash—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is debating this question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: He has not yet brought forward one argument which is pertinent to the question of privilege. If he does not do so very soon, I will have to say that I have heard enough from him.

Mr. Domm: Thank you for your patience, Madam Speaker. As the matter pertains to my ability to serve my constituents, I do not feel members opposite have to run into my riding like a gestapo group and nail up a sign on my office door which says: "Do not visit the Member of Parliament for Peterborough; go down the street and visit the minister responsible." The point is: Where do we draw the line?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Domm: Members opposite are applauding. They would like to go into those ridings, so that they can win more things for them and gain those seats. In reality—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: They are proving their point.

Mr. Domm: They are just proving their point. Madam Speaker must be aware of the fact by now that these members are actually gloating in glory of the fact that they can walk into these ridings, gain prominence and importance, and win security in future elections. Well, they will never win any security in future elections if they lose everything when they intervene. We had more going for us when we were in government than they have ever brought to Peterborough since they started this practice.

If Madam Speaker does not see anything in this question of privilege which is eroding my responsibility to my constituents, then I suggest your Honour should review why my constituents are now writing to and telephoning directly cabinet ministers from other ridings who are responsible—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Domm: Listen, this is what is happening; it could happen in your riding. You will not always sit in government over there. You will be in the opposition some day, and you will stand up and say, "We do not want this government setting up offices in our ridings."

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I must call the hon. member back to order for two reasons. First, he is discussing a political matter; second, as he knows he must talk in the third person. It is not easy, but he must keep to that.

Mr. Domm: With all due respect, Madam Speaker, it is a very political matter. I will try to address my remarks to you directly.

The question we are discussing is whether the minister is responsible for the riding of Peterborough. I am not deviating from the subject. The minister responsible for the riding of Peterborough has been a complete disaster.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Domm: I ask you, as the Speaker of the House, to refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections in order that I will be given the opportunity, as a backbencher in the House of Commons, to go before that committee to plead the case that, when constituents elect Members of Parliament, they expect those Members of Parliament to represent them here in Ottawa.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Domm: With all due sympathy for the groans and moans of the government opposite over its concern about what it obviously feels is an infringement of our rights, I would beg Your Honour to refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections so that we do not have to take up hours in the House of Commons arguing what is purely and simply an infringement of our rights as Members of Parliament. I cannot function and represent my people with the interference of cabinet ministers who get nothing for Peterborough. I cannot operate in my riding with the interference of ministers who are not responsible for the riding in which they are interfering.

It will not work. The sooner we get this matter before the committee so we can present our case without time limitation, as is the case in the House of Commons, the sooner Madam Speaker will satisfy hon. members of the opposition that their privileges are not being infringed by ministerial offices being opened in ridings ministers were not elected to represent, or by regional ministers representing other members' constituencies and doing a lousy job of it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Does the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) want to speak on this question?

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I want to give you an authority.

Madam Speaker: I will hear the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton, but I am afraid after that I will have to cut off the debate.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, if I may say so, what is really at issue here is the question of equality among members. Any time we deal with the Standing Orders of the House, any time we deal with Parliament's traditions, precedents, or what have you, we deal with the question of the equal treatment of members in terms of their privileges—their right to speak and to represent.

This is really the issue, and it arises in a couple of ways. After a long period of effort through the work of the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services, the House created constituency offices, at a great deal of public expense, so that Members of Parliament for respective ridings in Canada could serve the people. I think they could serve them and represent them in accordance with all of the traditions of parliamentary democracy as we understand it. Therefore, it is not just a matter of the government dealing with an issue because it has a majority; I will be arguing a point with respect to that shortly. It is Parliament which established these offices, which set stringent rules saying, for instance, that offices could not be used for political purposes. I stress, they could not be used for political purposes.

• (1600)

The allegation, of course, is that ministers are in fact infringing on this whole aspect of the equality of each of us as Members of Parliament, whether ministers or private members—no one is a backbencher. Ministers are infringing on this question of privacy, whether we are dealing with matters of tradition, custom or rules of order. I think that is the principle. The fact is, rules of order are only a part of what makes Parliament work; the other parts are customs, traditions and precedents which are set forth. These are precedents which we build over a period of time, like the provision for constituency offices.

Beauchesne's fourth edition has this to say:

> The principles that lie at the basis of English parliamentary law, as Bourinot so aptly says, are: 'to protect a minority and restrain the improvidence or tyranny of a majority'.

It is not sufficient to say that it is not contained in the Standing Orders of this House. That is not what Bourinot says nor is it what Beauchesne says. It is not what Erskine May talks about in his learned treatises on parliamentary democracy. We talk about customs, traditions and precedents. If you translate that document, which applies to every aspect of our lives as Members of Parliament, and apply it to what is being done, as described by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm), the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), you see that there is an expenditure of public money and, in fact, an imposition on that aspect of equality, the aspect of the representative part of the life of a Member of Parliament. It is wrong. If it infringes on Treasury Board guidelines, as someone said, then it is more wrong than absolutely wrong. It is illegal.

I say with respect, Madam Speaker, that I cannot conceive how this could not be an appropriate subject for consideration by a committee of this House of Commons. Traditionally, that committee is the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Nowlan: We increased the allowance.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): As my hon. friend from Annapolis says, the matter of these constituency offices was before the members' services committee yesterday. Therefore, the House is seized of it in the committee structure of the House of Commons. I think that is very important.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) at one time in the course of an argument said something which is applicable here. He said:

> If any attempt is made to change the rules of this House and to do it in a manner which destroys that equality and gives the government not only the force of its majority, but the force of the rules—

The government is being given the force of the rules, since rules established a constituency office. The rights given by those rules are being affected in the sense that they are being diminished by the establishment of those offices. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre went on to say:

> —we have gone completely contrary to the basic principle of parliamentary procedure on which this House relies.

Every custom, every tradition and every precedent that we have quoted here before speaks to fairness, equality and even-handedness. When the House has attempted to make that member equal in his work as a Member of Parliament, whether he is a minister, a former minister, a parliamentary secretary or a private member, then I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that the customs, traditions and rules—small "r" or large "R"—are being affected by this action of the government.

I put that to you, Madam Speaker, because I felt I had to give you something to rely on from the point of view of traditions and precedents of Parliament. I think they are important. We raised this matter the other day, we have raised it today, and we may raise it later on in the debate from the point of view of the protection of those traditions and precedents. The argument I tried to make the other night applies in so many ways.

You, Madam Speaker, have the unique position of being the first Commoner to be the protector of those rights, freedoms and traditions and to take the Standing Orders and interpret them. I say that, with respect, having regard to the traditions of fairness and equality and the precedents and history of this place. Some people may say this institution is archaic, and maybe in a way it is, but those things grew up over time. They were fought for and argued about. They were gained, in an historical sense, against the wishes of people in other days who themselves thought that only the majority counted, that only power counted. This House of Commons is something else. It is not—

Madam Speaker: I believe the hon. member is debating the question as though I had decided there was a prima facie case. The debate on that question should take place once I have decided whether there is a case of privilege or not. I would like the hon. member to restrict himself to the area in which he thinks the privilege lies.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I conclude, Madam Speaker, by referring to the history of it all, since it relates to the very issue which you are deciding. Under the rules, customs and traditions of this Parliament, the point you must decide is whether it is appropriate and fair. You cannot decide on any other basis. If custom, tradition and precedent mean anything at all, then I say, with respect, that you cannot decide on any other basis. If there is any doubt, then the doubt must be resolved in favour of Parliament, in favour of the parliamentarian, not in favour of the government. The job of this Parliament is not to be the handmaiden of the government; the job of this Parliament is to make the government accountable.

I respectfully suggest that there are usages creeping into our practice which make me think that the reverse may be true. We must look to you, Madam Speaker. On the question of fairness under the rules broadly interpreted, as I have indicated I think they should be—and I say this with respect—there is a point of privilege here. It is time this matter was examined. It is particularly important that it be examined, because of the issues being raised with respect to the ability of Members of Parliament to represent the people who sent them here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I think I can now cut off the debate on this particular question. I have heard several interveners on this matter. I will reserve on this matter since the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) is not in the House. I think he should be allowed to reply, if he so desires—and I do not know whether he does. But I must give him a chance to reply.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker, with respect to why I think this question is relevant and comes within your domain. I speak as a member of the members' services committee which yesterday approved the recommendation of the Commissioners of Internal Economy. We have approved the fourth and fifth report of that committee increasing the allowances to constituency offices by $1,000. We increased it by $1,000 from $2,500. Anyway, Madam Speaker, you know what I am talking about and I do not have the minute before me. I listened to the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I was not going to participate in the debate but I thought the remarks of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae)—

● (1610)

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member have a point of order?

Mr. Nowlan: My point of order is that this matter has a very insidious aspect. I am not talking about power. I am not repeating the argument of the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm). I am talking about the power of the purse.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Nowlan: The order is the whole reason that this chamber was established. Something no one has mentioned yet is the power of the purse. If you marry these two things, the fundamental power of the purse is why we are here to begin with, not legislation or government—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is obviously arguing the question. I have said that I will reserve on this matter. The hon. member has told the House that the expenses allowed for constituency offices have been increased, and that is true—

Mr. Nowlan: But I have not finished that sentence!

Madam Speaker: That should be helpful to the hon. member rather than otherwise. However, the debate is closed on this particular point.

I shall now hear the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) on a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, in one sentence, I simply want to inform you that, because of the importance and relevance of those guidelines, I will be obtaining a copy of Treasury Board guidelines for the establishment of ministerial offices. I shall provide you with that copy so that it might be considered when you are considering the whole question.

Madam Speaker: That might be helpful and I thank the hon. member. The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta on a question of privilege.

MR. FRIESEN—USE OF CONSTITUENCY OFFICES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter which touches upon the privileges of all members of the House. I believe that when Your Honour has heard the evidence that I shall present, you will find there is a prima facie case of privilege.

It has always been my contention, and I am sure it is the belief of all members of the House, that we were elected to serve not only those people who voted for us but those who voted against us, as well as those who did not vote at all.

It is understandable that, after a hard fought campaign with emotions running high, some people might feel some reserve or hesitation about having a meeting with their Member of Parliament if he or she is not of the same political persuasion. That is unfortunate, but there is that possibility. It is therefore all the more important for an MP to serve all constituents. We must remove every possible impediment which might discourage citizens from seeking our help. Therefore, it is imperative that constituency offices do not advertise the political affiliation of the member who occupies that office.

My question of privilege arises out of impropriety on the part of some members of this House in the use of the services provided to them by the House of Commons and the privileges associated therewith, so that they might better discharge their responsibilities to their constituents as the Member of Parliament for that constituency.

The actions of these members, whether deliberate or not, have called into question the ability of all other members to serve their constituents in as non-political a way as possible when dealing with case work, and possibly have misled constituents into believing that one political party, rather than the elected member of that electoral district, represents them in the House of Commons.

Furthermore, and most important, it is against the rules established by the House of Commons under the guidelines, "Allowances and Services" to use the services in any other way for the constituency office. I quote Section 8, paragraph 9 as follows:

> The constituency office may not be used by electoral campaign committees and may not be located in political party headquarters.

This regulation finds its authority under the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services, as provided by Standing Order 65(1)(s).

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members are well acquainted with the rules governing the services which they can offer their constituents. I should like the hon. member to tell me the point that he is trying to develop. Who has breached what rule, and is it a rule of the House of Commons? I have to remind the hon. member that the rules governing these services are policed by members themselves, who delegate that authority to the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services. I do not know at this point, but this might not be properly addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, I would refer you to the telephone directory for the lower mainland of British Columbia. On page 820 there appears in bold face type the heading, "New Democratic Party of B.C." Under that heading is listed the NDP office of Burnaby-Edmonds and all the other provincial constituency offices. Scattered among them is the telephone number of the office of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), with his office address and phone number. When I cross-reference that with his name, Mr. Waddell, I find that the address is the same as the number listed under the New Democratic Party of B.C. and the telephone number is the same. I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that the constituency office that is used by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway is doubling as the office for the political party.

What is even worse, I see that the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) is functioning in the same way. That office is listed as being at 722-12th Street, New Westminster, phone No. 521-8111. It lists Dennis Cocke MLA at the same address and gives the same phone number. Pauline Jewett is listed at the same address and with the same phone number. I throw in parenthetically, that it does not even mention the other half of her constituency which is Coquitlam, so I take it that it is not represented in that office.

When I cross-referenced the telephone directory, I found that under her private listing she has an office address and an office phone number which, coincidentally, happen to be the same as the NDP office on 12th Street in New Westminster.

Moving over to the director—

Mr. Rae: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I realize that the definition of filibuster is reading from a telephone book, but I wonder whether it might not be in keeping with parliamentary practice and courtesy, if the hon. member has a point which he wishes to address concerning the practices of certain Members of Parliament, to give notice to those members. This would allow them to be in the House when he raises a question.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, I would direct the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood to the fact that I was just going to the telephone directory for the city of Winnipeg. I see that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is here. At page 437 of the Winnipeg telephone directory, under "New Democratic Party", there appears "Winnipeg North Centre, 1036 Notre Dame", with the telephone No. 722-5795. Or is it 6795?

Mr. Knowles: It is 775-1019.

Mr. Friesen: As I cross-reference I find that he is also listed under his name at 1036—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member. He has not even mentioned the word "privilege" yet. From what he has said until now, I think this is obviously a question that has to be dealt with in other circumstances. This is not a question for the Chair to decide as Speaker of this House. This has to do with the rules which are policed by members themselves through the competence of the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services. If the hon. member is not satisfied with the way these rules are being applied or with the way the rules are set down, then he can submit his case to the particular committee and hon. members can correct whatever he feels is not done properly. I cannot hear him along the line of his argument and the facts he has advanced up until now. Unless the hon. member now goes directly to a question of privilege very well framed, I will have to disallow his question.

• (1620)

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, I began by saying that I was rising on a question of privilege. My question of privilege arises from the regulations and the rules established by this House that constituency offices may not be used as electoral campaign committees and may not be located in political party headquarters. I was going through the references which indicate—

Madam Speaker: Order. These rules are not established by the House. They are established by the members and pertain to their constituency function. These are not rules of the House.

Mr. Elzinga: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It has always been my understanding that this committee reports directly to you. The ultimate decision and the ultimate responsibility for carrying out these regulations pertaining to the House of Commons falls under your jurisdiction.

In my humble opinion, Your Honour, in all fairness to the hon. member, he should have an opportunity to present his case, and after hearing his case I think you will be in a better position to give a fair judgment as to whether or not he does have a question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: I have been listening to the hon. member's case now for about ten minutes, and after hearing his case for this period of time I feel this matter should be brought before the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services.

That committee does not report to me. It advises me. I appear before it on occasion when members want to transmit to me some of the things they might want. The Speaker then gets authority through discussions with the Commissioners of Internal Economy. That point has to be quite clear. I do not think the hon. member is dealing with a question that should be dealt with here in this House.

The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, I have a question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am already hearing a question of privilege. I could entertain a point of order, but as I am seized with a question of privilege, I have to deal with it before I can hear another one.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, I have a question of personal privilege arising out of what the hon. member said in his reference to me.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, in the debate on the question of privilege preceding this one, one of the long and serious arguments which you heard was that each of the offices had to establish its own independence. I remember members of the New Democratic Party arguing this very point, that the government ought not to use tax dollars to establish offices that are separate from those of Members of Parliament.

It seems to me that if we find that tax dollars are being used to help political parties, we have to have recourse somewhere, and I appeal to you, Madam Speaker, to hear this question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member's recourse is to the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services. Therefore, I have to rule out that question for consideration as a question of privilege.

I will hear now the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who has asked to be heard on a question of personal privilege.

MR. KNOWLES—REMARKS OF MR. FRIESEN RESPECTING USE OF WINNIPEG CONSTITUENCY OFFICE

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I ask to be heard on a question of personal privilege. The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) has made a general reference to Manitoba and the only Manitoba member to whom he has referred is the member for Winnipeg North Centre. He did not get around to it, but he is implying that I am responsible for accepting tax dollars for premises used for political purposes as well as for my constituency office.

I strongly suggest to the hon. member that he ascertain his facts before he makes a scurrilous charge such as that.

You do not know it, Madam Speaker, but this can be checked with the officers of the House. It is true that my constituency office is in a building that we, the New Democratic Party, own.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: Wait for it, fellows.

Mr. Knowles: Such lack of intelligence really startles me.

The present Clerk, the previous Clerk and all of the officials involved in this matter know that I have insisted, even though I was told I could do otherwise, that because my office is in a building we own I do not want any rent paid by the government at all, and no such rent is paid.

My constituency secretaries, two of them, are paid as we are entitled to have them paid, but there is no rent charged to the Government of Canada.

Mr. Kilgour: What about the rule?

Mr. Knowles: What rule?

Mr. Kilgour: What about the rule which says you are not supposed to have it in your office?

Mr. Knowles: The rule is that you cannot collect rent for premises which are used for other purposes. I collect no rent at all. I suggest that the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta, if he is the gentleman I believe he is, apologize forthwith.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, maybe the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has not been in his office lately. I would point out to him that the rule does not say "pay rent." The rule says, and I will read it to him—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is continuing to debate this question. I reiterate to the hon. member that the proper place to deal with this matter, if he does have a case, is in the members' services committee.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has indicated that something has been said or implied, and he used the word "scurrilous" with respect to the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen). That is the opinion of the member for Winnipeg North Centre. Coming from a member of his stature in the House, it is a very serious charge.

Mr. Cousineau: He should have respect for that.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Just do not get excited.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): What I want to suggest, given the seriousness of the charge that the hon. member has engaged himself in scurrilous behaviour, is that the member, rightly or wrongly, should be given an opportunity to deal with that charge. I thought he was about to do that, Madam Speaker, and I wonder, therefore, whether he might be allowed to do so.

Madam Speaker: If my understanding is correct, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) did not accuse the member of being scurrilous. He said there was a scurrilous charge, and that is a different matter. Let us not enter into this kind of debate. It seems to me that the hon. member at the time did not use any unparliamentary language.

I have notice of a question of privilege from the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt).

MR. COSSITT—RIGHT OF MEMBERS TO BE HEARD

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, I rise on what to me is a very serious question of privilege concerning the rights of Members of Parliament to be heard in this chamber. I did not receive this right on a question of privilege that was before the House on Tuesday. It is a similar situation to that which I notice has occurred on several previous occasions. The specific question of privilege raised before the House concerned a matter in which I was directly involved.

First, may I refer to the remarks made Tuesday by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). In reply to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) on the so-called Taschereau papers, the Prime Minister directly referred to me twice. I am not saying that he said anything derogatory; I simply mention that I was drawn into the question by having my name mentioned on two occasions. The hon. member for Durham-Northumberland also referred in his remarks to the member for Leeds-Grenville, I think on two occasions. So even if I had not wanted to be, I was involved in the question of privilege by having been mentioned a least four times.

This is also a matter in which I have been heavily involved over the last three or four years, a fact which I think is generally known to most members of the House. Therefore, I believe a breach of my privileges occurred on Tuesday when I was unable to contribute the evidence which I had before me at that time on the matter on which you were about to rule. In some ways it seemed to me that the situation was somewhat like a court where judgment was being given before all the evidence had been heard.

Parliament, as has often been pointed out, is the highest court in the land, but surely such a situation does not apply here. To give just one example, I was in a position on Tuesday to offer absolute evidence that the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland was quite correct in stating that he had initiated an investigation into the withholding of the Taschereau file, but I did not have that opportunity. I agree with the view the Chair expressed on Tuesday.

Madam Speaker: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member. He is offering more comments on precisely the question on which I said the Chair was sufficiently informed. I remind him, as I did the other day, that even if the hon. member feels he has new evidence to bring forward with regard to the substance of the subject, the reason I did not hear him was that he was bringing evidence with regard to the subject being discussed and not to the direct matter of privilege. Today he is offering to bring new evidence as to what the minister did or did not do. That is not pertinent to the question of privilege and I cannot allow him to speak further on the matter. I said I was sufficiently informed. What he must do is raise a new substantive question of privilege. Otherwise I cannot hear him since I cut off debate on that question the other day.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I am not trying to introduce evidence pertaining to something that has happened. I am trying to base my question of privilege on the right of members to speak in this House. I merely cited that as an example. I can cite many other examples. My question of privilege has to do with the right of members to speak in this House.

Madam Speaker: There is a right to speak in this House, but at that particular time the right of the hon. member to intervene had to be frustrated. It was my duty then to terminate the debate on that particular question because argument had been sufficient. The first intervener had not convinced me there was a question of privilege. Therefore, I thought that other interveners not directly affected by the question of privilege could not further inform me as to where the privilege lay.

Freedom of speech is not absolutely unrestrained in this House. At some point other rules come into play in order to at some point limit the right to speak of an hon. member. That is the way the procedures of this House are organized. Therefore, it is not a right completely unrestrained. If that is what the hon. member is telling me, I have to tell him that I am under a duty to restrain members when I feel that other members' privileges are being impeached.

Mr. Cossitt: Bearing in mind the remarks you have just made, Madam Speaker, I feel that when a member has been mentioned in the House as being connected with a very serious matter before the House, that member has the right to take a stand on the matter and be heard.

I am not referring specifically to what happened on Tuesday. In another question of privilege before this House a moment ago, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) exercised his right to be heard as a result of having been mentioned. I think I have that same right.

The former member for Prince Albert, the late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, gave us our present bill of rights. Section 1, subsection (d), guarantees freedom of speech. I agree that freedom of speech does not of itself give us a licence to do anything. However, in the charter of rights resolution before the House, after guaranteeing freedom of speech, Section 31(1) reads:

> This charter applies
> (a) to the Parliament and Government of Canada and to all matters within the authority of Parliament—

They may not seem appropriate, but I think the words of Thomas Jefferson are appropriate. He said, "For God's sake, let both sides of the question be heard." That statement really sums up what I am trying to say. I stand to be corrected, but I know of nothing in the rules of the House that prevents me from taking part in a question of privilege in which I have been specifically mentioned.

I cited only one example and perhaps I should not have used that one. However, it is very clear from British parliamentary practice and the traditions of this House that it is the duty of the Chair to protect the rights of members. Part of the protection that should be extended to us is the right to defend ourselves or to reply when our names are mentioned in a question of privilege or point of order, and to say what we think is the truth if we think that something that has been stated is inaccurate.

If we are deprived of that right, we may come to the point where freedom of speech is gone in this chamber. I am certain that is not the wish of the Chair. I am sure it is not the wish of most members in this House, although I can think of a few who would wish that that was so, without mentioning any names or specifics.

I believe I have a legitimate question of privilege. I see nothing in the rules or in Beauchesne which says that a question of privilege should be cut off by the Speaker at a specific point. The Speaker has to make a judgment as to when it should be cut off. However, I have been in this House approximately nine years when two of your predecessors, Mr. Speaker Lamoureux and Mr. Speaker Jerome, were in the chair. When a question of privilege arose pertaining to specific members, pretty well all those members were allowed to comment. There was no restriction.

I have noticed recently a tendency to move a little in the other direction. Maybe I am incorrect in the way I am observing it, but with all respect I feel that a tendency in this House to move toward limiting speech rather than to go maybe a little too far in the other direction is not in the best interests of freedom of speech and the rights and privileges of members of this House.

An hon. Member: What about our privileges?

Mr. Cossitt: I hear remarks from the NDP. I do not know what they are saying.

Mr. Deans: Why don't we get on with things that are important?

Mr. Cossitt: When I tried to raise the subject of interest rates today, they heckled me. That is not important to them. They do not care about interest rates. They do not care about inflation. They do not care about anything.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cossitt: This is not the New Democratic Party; "NDP" stands for "no damn principles."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: You are wasting time.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I cannot conclude if those on my left are going to keep up this barrage of nonsense.

Mr. Deans: You concluded years ago.

Mr. Cossitt: I am still here. I have been here a little longer than the hon. member and I will probably be here when he has gone.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member conclude his question of privilege.

Mr. Cossitt: Yes, Madam Speaker. If the parlour pinkos to my left will give me permission to do so, I will be glad to attempt to conclude it in a very few words.

An hon. Member: What are you, the big blue behind?

Mr. Cossitt: I do not think a remark such as that is worth the dignity of a reply. The hon. member talks about a blue behind. All they are is blue after what happened in the Ontario election.

Mr. Clark: They are behind too.

Mr. Cossitt: There are other kinds of behinds, like certain animals. I conclude, Madam Speaker, by asking that this matter be given serious consideration. I raise this question not in any way as a severe complaint against the Chair or questioning the judgment of the Chair, but in the interests of members knowing where they can go, cannot go or should go. I ask the Chair to refer it to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections so that they can consider what limits they would recommend to this House. Madam Speaker, it is very difficult to talk with this bejabbering over on the left.

• (1640)

Mr. Deans: Just keep talking, you are making no sense anyway.

Mr. Cossitt: Well, the people of Ontario showed they thought you made no sense.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member was just about to conclude and I am dying to hear that conclusion.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I would not want the Chair to suffer such a fate, even though I might wish it on the gentleman on the left, so I will conclude by saying that I hope this matter will be given consideration and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Madam Speaker: I want to make it quite clear to the hon. member that the determination of a prima facie case of privilege does not necessarily demand a full debate. Nor is it pertinent to submit that, if you can contribute new evidence to the subject which brought forward the question of privilege, that is pertinent to the question itself. I did not establish that the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) had a prima facie case of a question of privilege; therefore, the hon. member cannot complain that he was not allowed to speak on it. I could not entertain a question of privilege because quite clearly there was no question of privilege. So I feel that, on the basis of his intervention today, I cannot even think of submitting it to the committee as there is no prima facie case of privilege.

Mr. Cossitt: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. I abide by your decision and I will not pursue the matter further because I also respect the wilting health of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Madam Speaker: Of course not. The hon. member cannot pursue the matter further because I have ruled on it.

MR. WILSON—NOTICE OF QUESTION TO BE RAISED

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, at the end of yesterday's question period I gave you notice of my intention to raise a question of privilege relating to an answer I had been given. I wanted to relate that answer to answers given to me on several occasions by the same minister concerning the National Energy Program, and particularly with relation to the activities of drilling rigs in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. While it is true that the hon. member gave me oral notice yesterday of his intentions, that is not sufficient. He has to give me a written statement, which he did not, so I can hear him another time.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I will give you notice in writing for tomorrow.

MR. FRIESEN—USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE BY MR. KNOWLES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of personal privilege arising from the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who is speaking to his soul mate from—I said "soul mate" not "cell mate".

An hon. Member: You are a disgusting bunch.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, I intend to refer this matter to the management and members' services committee, but when I rose earlier I was simply reading the regulation that constituency offices may not be located in a political party headquarters. I then proceeded to read—

Madam Speaker: Order. Those rules are not the rules of the House.

Mr. Friesen: I understand that, Madam Speaker.

An hon. Member: Then sit down.

Madam Speaker: What I do not understand is why the hon. member persists in bringing this question before the House when the whole matter is governed by rules established by members themselves and policed by the committee in question.

Mr. Friesen: It was raised, Madam Speaker, and there is no way that should have aroused the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in the way it did. I would simply refer him to Beauchesne's fifth edition, which he may have had on some occasion an opportunity to read. On page 110 it lists the word "scurrilous" as being considered unparliamentary, a word he used in relation to me and the remarks I made, and I would ask him to withdraw it.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, if you direct me to withdraw it, I shall do so and substitute the word "disgusting."

Madam Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for his co-operation.

MR. MAYER—REPLY OF MR. PEPIN DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege is long-standing and arises partly from an answer I received today during question period from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), who was responsible to this House for the Canadian Wheat Board.

I would like to point out to you, Madam Speaker, that the Canadian Wheat Board is not a government department like other departments. It is not funded out of general tax revenues but, rather, largely by western Canadian producers. We have had many, many problems over a long period of time getting answers to some of the matters raised by our constituents regarding the Canadian Wheat Board.

We now have a situation where the minister responsible for that board does not sit in this House and therefore cannot be responsive to those problems, because by definition a minister from the other place cannot speak in this House.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That does not constitute a question of privilege. The custom of having members sitting in the other place responsible for certain government matters is well established. It has happened in governments of all parties, so that in itself does not constitute a question of privilege.

I would ask the hon. member to state clearly and briefly what his question of privilege is, and it has to be related directly to today's deliberations. The hon. member said "partly"; there is no question of "partly"; it has to be related to the deliberations of today.

Mr. Mayer: Madam Speaker, I asked the Minister of Transport what he was doing to see that there was additional tonnage available for shipping during the current shipping season and, to paraphrase his answer, he said he would have discussions with the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. If this is not a question of privilege, Madam Speaker, I appeal to you to give me some direction as to how I can better serve my constituents with regard to the Canadian Wheat Board.

I have documentation in the form of letters to the clerk of the Standing Committee on Agriculture and also the clerk of the Standing Committee on Transport. I have had discussions with and written a letter to the government House leader, asking him to see if he could get the board in front of the appropriate committee so that all members could ask the officials of the Canadian Wheat Board the appropriate questions.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The fact that an hon. member is not satisfied with an answer that he received in the House does not constitute the basis for a question of privilege; that has to be quite clear to hon. members. I cannot allow the hon. member to continue on that particular question of privilege on that basis. I have listened to him for five minutes and I still do not know what the question of privilege is.

Mr. Mayer: With all due respect, it has been a very short five minutes. If it is not a question of privilege, then maybe the Chair can give me some direction. The board is a very large operation in western Canada. The total budget of the Canadian Wheat Board is approximately equal to the total budgets of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba, yet Wheat Board officials have not appeared in front of a parliamentary committee so that those of us who have constituents—

• (1650)

Madam Speaker: I am in no way capable of helping the hon. member in this respect. If he wants a particular body to appear before a parliamentary committee, he is perfectly capable of requesting that in the proper place. I have no authority to call witnesses before any committee. I am simply here to apply the rules of the House. The rule that I am applying now is that whatever the hon. member is discussing at this point is not a point of privilege. I cannot hear him any longer if he does not have a clear question of privilege to present to me. What he has said up until now has nothing to do with privilege. I can help him only by saying that if he wants to help his constituents he can continue to ask questions, to probe or discuss this matter at times when the House is debating these questions, but not through the device of raising a question of privilege.

Mr. Mayer: With all due respect, Madam Speaker, how am I to ask questions of a minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board when he is not present in the House? Can I then give you notice, Madam Speaker, that I would like to raise this question as a point of order at a later date?

Madam Speaker: The hon. member may raise a point of order when he wishes to.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CLARK—THE CONSTITUTION—APPEAL TO SUPREME COURT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I am rising on a matter discussed in question period today which dealt with the propriety of the question whether the constitutional resolution should be before the House of Commons at a time when the Supreme Court of Canada is seized with a question having to do with that very resolution.

The House will recall that in an exchange earlier today I asked if the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) would respect the rules of this House and the traditions of the Supreme Court of Canada and withdraw the resolution until the matter with which the court has now been seized is resolved. The Prime Minister, while not answering my question, invited me to present the case in the House of Commons before yourself, Madam Speaker, as to whether it is appropriate to have simultaneous consideration of the constitutional resolution by the Supreme Court of Canada and the House of Commons.

I am now responding to that invitation by the Prime Minister to argue that point of order, to argue that it is inappropriate for these two institutions, under our rules and practices, to be simultaneously considering the same question.

At the time of the publication of the government resolution on the Constitution, there were a number of objections raised by a number of provinces. Certain provinces brought three specific questions before the Manitoba Court of Appeal. Those questions began to be heard in early December, I believe. The deliberations proceeded, and the decision handed down showed a three to two decision against the province of Manitoba and the other provinces which were raising questions regarding the legality of the constitutional resolution. Hon. members of the House who paid attention to that constitutional matter will remember that the justices in that court were very evenly divided because there were some very real questions of law which remained to be resolved. As a consequence of that decision, an appeal was brought before the Supreme Court of Canada by the government of Manitoba and others. That appeal was accepted by the Supreme Court of Canada and that court now stands seized with the same constitutional question on the resolution which is now before the House of Commons.

The matter which must be considered and decided by the Chair is whether it is appropriate, under the rules relating to questions which are sub judice, for this House of Commons to be considering a matter which is under challenge, which is under consideration by the Supreme Court of Canada. It may well be that an attempt will be made by the justices of the Supreme Court to have priority given to that question so that there can be a speedy dispatch of the appeal now before it. That matter is out of our hands, although it is my understanding that efforts will be made to ensure that it will come before the Supreme court with some dispatch.

In this House we have dealt with questions pertinent to the rule that matters which are sub judice—before the courts—cannot be discussed here in the House of Commons. It is a rule with some specific applications, but it has never been raised in the precise circumstances that I intend to raise today. I will come to that later in my argument.

Very frequently, questions have not been allowed to be put in the House because those questions were before the courts. On other occasions, there have been actions which the House wanted to take but was precluded from taking because those matters were before the courts. The basic principle is set out in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, which I quoted earlier today, citation 338(4). I will read that citation and then emphasize the particular principle which is most important. That citation says:

> The reference of a bill to the Supreme Court of Canada withdraws that bill temporarily from the jurisdiction of Parliament. If the constitutional situation of human rights is submitted to the Supreme Court, it thereby becomes sub judice and cannot be considered by a committee of the House until the court has given its decision. The question cannot be before two public bodies at the same time.

I repeat, the question cannot be before two public bodies at the same time.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Clark: An hon. member of the New Democratic Party says "nonsense". He is the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae). Perhaps he will write his own edition of parliamentary rules and forms—

An hon. Member: What you are saying is constitutional nonsense.

Mr. Clark: Most of us prefer Beauchesne to the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: If he were to associate himself with Beauchesne on constitutional matters, he would be in better company with constitutional matters than he has been in some of his more recent associations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Beauchesne reference which I have just cited, Section 338(4), entered into the categorization and writing of the rules of Parliament as a result of a decision of this House on April 12, 1948. At that time, an attempt was made to move a motion that a committee of the House consider a matter which was then before the courts. The ruling which I have just cited initiated this practice of the Parliament of Canada. It was introduced into our rules and forms as a result of that decision of Parliament in 1948.

The purpose of that rule is clearly spelled out in the nineteenth edition of Erskine May, page 427, in the paragraph relating to matters pending judicial decision. I think it is important to draw the attention of the Chair to the purpose for which that rule exists, which is quite concisely stated as follows:

—the Chair should not allow reference to such matters if it appears that there is a real and substantial danger of prejudice to the proceeding;—

That is to say, prejudice to the proceedings before the courts.

I want to underline the point that there is clearly a danger to the proceedings now before the Supreme Court. If this government is allowed to proceed with the resolution in the way it intends, rushing it through by closure, then the question under consideration by the Supreme Court of Canada will be removed from the jurisdiction of Canada and sent to another country. I cannot think of a more dramatic danger than to have that question taken out of a court in Canada and sent to another country by the Parliament of Canada. That is the intention of the—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I would ask Your Honour to bear the purpose of this rule in mind when you are considering your judgment later.

In his answer to me in the House, the Prime Minister indicated that the rule would only apply if there was a direct reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. I think he was trying to say that the Government of Canada had not made direct reference of the constitutionality of the resolution to the Supreme Court of Canada. The House will recall that many of us thought it would have been more appropriate, more direct and more respectful of Canadian judicial institutions if there had been that kind of reference, but there was not.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since there seem to be so many points to raise today and since the one which the Leader of the Opposition has raised just now is of great importance, I wonder if there would be unanimous consent to dispensing with private members' hour today so that we can carry on with the matters in which my friends are so deeply interested.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, normally I would agree to that, except for the fact that there are a couple of matters which, I gather from speaking to one of my colleagues, are of some urgency and on which the government intends to move. One of the matters is in the hands of the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier, which I think we can dispose of quite quickly.

Mr. Knowles: That will take only two minutes.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I have to say this because normally my friend is the defender of private members' business. There is also another member who feels he may have a point which he wants to raise. He might be able to withdraw it, but I do not believe I could ask the hon. member on the other side to withdraw his motion if he wishes to proceed. In any event, I think it is important that, notwithstanding these things, the rights of private members be respected. That is why I wanted to rise and explain the circumstances.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I should say that we are in perfect agreement with the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to continue the point of order. On the other hand, I do ascribe to the point of view outlined by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton because Bill S-16 in the name of the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills, a private member's private bill, is somewhat urgent. So I suggest, with all due respect, Madam Speaker, that perhaps we could, by unanimous consent, deal with that private bill and then dispense with the balance of private members' hour and continue with the point of order.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to this suggestion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper.

Mr. Collenette: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, because I know that today we are dealing with notices of motions for the production of papers as listed on today's Order Paper. As was stated a few minutes ago by me and by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton, we do have a rather urgent matter to deal with, namely Bill S-16, which is a private member's private bill in the name of the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills. If it is the disposition of this House to give consent, we should proceed with that bill at this stage and then we can revert to notices of motions for the production of papers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. My information is that Bill S-16 has not been reported from committee.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I was coming to that. The bill has not been presented by the chairman, the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier, but he is prepared to do so now with the consent of the House so that we can move to the other stages of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent of the House that the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier shall have leave to present the report of the committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE BILLS

[English]

PRESIDENT OF THE LETHBRIDGE STAKE OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills) moved that Bill S-16, respecting the President of the Lethbridge Stake of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Thacker moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank in particular those hon. members who attended the committee yesterday on a rather urgent basis to hear the debate on this bill at the committee stage. I offer my special thanks to the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), for the extraordinary efforts he made on behalf of my parliamentary agent and the members of the church.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, notices of motions (papers), private bills, public bills.

There being no items on the Order Paper under the heading of private bills, the House will proceed to notices of motions (papers).

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

DECENTRALIZATION OF DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville) moved:

That an order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence, notes, minutes of meetings and other communications relating to the decentralization of the Department of Veterans Affairs to the province of Prince Edward Island.

He said: Mr. Speaker, naturally one hesitates to proceed with this subject in view of the untimely death of the former minister to whose riding this institution was moved. Therefore, it is difficult to proceed, but I hope that anything I say will not be taken as criticism of any kind of the former minister or of anything he may have done, because I know that on all sides of the House we regarded him as one of the finest members of this chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cossitt: It has been my contention since the beginning that decentralization and moving these institutions out of Ottawa makes sense sometimes but does not make sense at other times. This was one of the times it definitely did not. It was a case where it appeared as if the government of the day was moving a very important cog in government machinery to a riding it was afraid it would lose in a subsequent election. It was moved there to prop up the cause of the Liberal Party. That was a pretty poor reason, when the government had facilities in Ottawa which were not inadequate, or could have been enlarged if they were slightly inadequate, at much less expense than taking a whole institution down to the province of Prince Edward Island.

• (1710)

Of course, the biggest problem was created for the veterans of Canada, who found that the service they were receiving from the Department of Veterans Affairs would be cut down because in effect they would be communicating with the extreme end of the country rather than the centre. Through all its branches in Canada and through its national executive, the Canadian Legion strongly opposed this move, but the government failed to listen in any way to the representations of the Canadian Legion on this matter. Also the government failed to listen to the representations of the opposition and went ahead on the basis of a straight political consideration.

Political consideration and taxpayers' funds should not be equated together. Unfortunately there has been too much of a history in the country, particularly with some administrations, of equating the two together, of using public funds to further political considerations. In my opinion, the move of the Department of Veterans Affairs to the maritimes was a straight case of political consideration, rather than service to the veterans or proper expenditure of money by the government on behalf of the taxpayers of Canada.

I presume the matter stands now as a fait accompli; it has got to the point of no return. There is no way this matter can actually be stopped without a great deal more expense to the Canadian government and to the taxpayers of Canada.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) but I would ask his indulgence for a minute before he closes off the debate on this notice of motion.

The normal courtesy in private members' hour and business in the House requires the co-operation of all parties. It is usual to ask each member whether he or she wishes to proceed with a private member's bill or notice of motion for the production of papers. We had already asked the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville and other members if they wished to proceed today and we had not got agreement. As Mr. Speaker will note, the order for today's discussion should have been order No. 32 in the name of my colleague, the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). I draw Mr. Speaker's attention to the fact that we have a terrible breach of courtesy here this afternoon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Leeds-Grenville has the floor.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I find what the parliamentary secretary just said confusing. Perhaps I should ask him to elaborate. Nobody consulted me as to whether this motion should be or should not be heard today. When I came into the House, I suddenly found that it was there. I am just wondering what the parliamentary secretary is getting at. He has left the chamber, but I am sure someone will inform him of what I say.

Many weeks ago I received a telephone call from someone whose name I do not even recall but who claimed to be a member of the Privy Council office; he was wondering if I wanted to proceed at that time. At that time the minister had just died, so I said that it would be rather untimely to proceed the week after the minister was buried, that it would be taken as being offensive. I did not want to proceed at that time for that reason, obviously it would be most inappropriate.

I did not know that it was on the Order Paper today. Perhaps it is my fault for not looking at that section of the Order Paper until about five minutes before I was called upon to speak. I was prepared to go ahead, even though I must say that much of the material I would use is in my office. I did not receive the courtesy of notification from the government that it was its intention to call this motion today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. parliamentary secretary does not have a point of order. The Chair has observed the rules; the item is on the Order Paper. Any arrangements made individually by members outside of the House are not recorded in decisions of the House. They are private matters; they do not concern the Chair.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker can rule as to whether or not this was a point of order but, as I said, it requires a certain amount of co-operation for private members' business to operate in this place. As we have just seen from the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), we usually co-operate in a very fair and equitable manner.

I have been informed that the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville notified the government—and we have to organize these debates—of his intention to withdraw this motion from the Order Paper. He did not do so, but I would like that on the record because he has gone back on his word.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is not a point of order.

Mr. Cossitt: I ask the parliamentary secretary to withdraw his remark that I have gone back on my word. In other words, he is calling me a liar. I consider that unparliamentary, and I am not prepared to accept it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has listened carefully to the language used. There are certain expressions which are unparliamentary, such as the one to which the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville referred. But with all due respect to hon. members, the Chair has not heard that expression used and would invite hon. members, in the circumstances, to come back to the item before us.

Is the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is really a question for clarification, so that there will be no misunderstanding. Certainly my understanding was that my motion was to be called today, but I will not dispute that at this moment. What I do want to ask—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized a certain order of business. We are proceeding in a routine way with an order of business. The hon. member for Leeds-Grenville has the floor.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is not establishing a point of order by referring to arrangements which may or may not have been made in other ways.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a direct question. Because the hon. member who is presently speaking introduced his motion, can we establish, as we are proceeding now, that he is in effect allowed to speak for the balance of five minutes, at which point in time there will be a reply from the government of five minutes, at which point the motion will be called?

• (1720)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand this item has been considered by the House for 59 minutes prior to today's debate. It is my understanding of the rules that debate can proceed until roughly 5.40 p.m., at which point a minister of the Crown will have the opportunity to reply for five minutes and the mover of the motion for five minutes. According to the rules, I cannot recognize the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville at this point.

Mr. Nielsen: He is already recognized.

Mr. Cossitt: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Leeds-Grenville on a point of order. I have clarified the amount of debate that has taken place up to this point. I have indicated that the 31 minutes remaining will expire at 5.40 p.m., at which time a minister of the Crown will have an opportunity to speak. At that point, subsequent to a minister of the Crown speaking, there will be five minutes remaining for the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville. That will be the procedure.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is in regard to the remark—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville rising on a point of order, or what is he rising on?

Mr. Cossitt: On a point of order, that is right, Mr. Speaker. It pertains to what the parliamentary secretary said about my going back on my word. You have ruled that is not unparliamentary.

To set the record straight, I should make this one elaboration, which I think the parliamentary secretary will recall is correct. I mentioned a moment ago that I declined to proceed at the time the minister died—within five or six days. On giving this matter further thought I have recalled that, when I was telephoned by someone from the Privy Council office and asked if I wished to proceed further—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There has been dispute on both sides of the House in regard to facts. It seems to me both sides have set out a position. At this stage, are there any members who wish to speak to the motion?

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak briefly on this motion. This has turned into quite a debate, especially in view of the remarks of the parliamentary secretary about the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) going back on his word and not withdrawing this motion when he had an opportunity to do so. The hon. member for Leeds-Grenville tried to have this motion removed but he was informed by officials of the House that he could not do so.

Mr. Cossitt: That is correct.

Mr. McKenzie: I think that point should be cleared up. It has absolutely nothing to do with the hon. member going back on his word, and we must proceed with this motion today.

I wish to point out that the move to Prince Edward Island is now a fait accompli. While the move is taking place we hope it will not be causing us any problems, but we have some very serious concerns about veterans affairs. I hope those concerns are not due to the move to Prince Edward Island.

We have had questions on the Order Paper for some time now in regard to a number of veterans' problems. There are serious concerns in the country about the estimated number of additional beds which will be required for domiciliary care for chronically ill veterans. This is a question we have raised many times. There are long waiting lists to get into these military hospitals. We do not know whether the move is causing delays in dealing with this particular aspect.

One of our more serious concerns is with regard to the pension commission and the length of time veterans must wait to have their pension reviews dealt with. Some of them are having to wait up to two years and many of them are dying before their application is reviewed. That is a ridiculous length of time for any veteran to have to wait for his pension to be reviewed. Some of the legions across the country which are assisting veterans with their applications are advising that there will be an exceptionally long waiting period before pension reviews will be dealt with. The legion and other service and veterans' organizations across the country are very concerned about this matter. We hope that the delay of the pension commission's reviews of these applications is not due to the move to Prince Edward Island.

There are many other concerns, one of which is with respect to the Veterans Land Act. We feel that some changes will have to be made in this act with regard to spouses.

There are also very serious problems now faced by ex-prisoners of war. When our committee meets in the near future we will be asking for a review of the prisoner of war compensation with a view to increasing the basic rates. We know today that any former prisoner of war who suffered prolonged incarceration is undergoing serious health problems.

I understand there have been some delays with regard to purchasing land in Prince Edward Island. There are also delays in construction. I hope that these delays will not affect veterans and veterans' organizations across Canada.

Unfortunately, the acting minister is not in the House. I think it is unfortunate that he was not informed that this motion would be dealt with today. I do not even see his parliamentary secretary in the chamber and I do not know who will be answering on behalf of the Department of Veterans Affairs. I hope that the government will have the minister here, or at least his parliamentary secretary, to answer some of our concerns about the move to Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I had not originally intended to speak on this motion, but I was so moved by the eloquence of my colleagues, and by the importance of the subject, that I felt compelled to do so very briefly, with your indulgence, sir, especially in view of the fact that my riding includes Charlottetown, the community to which the Department of Veterans Affairs is to be relocated from the city of Ottawa.

I have a great deal of sympathy with many of the causes which the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) pursues. But in this case I feel obligated to disagree with the sentiment behind his particular motion because, with all due respect to him, I believe it is a poorly disguised effort to oppose the principle of the relocation of the department from Ottawa to my riding and to my province. It is a sentiment with which I could not disagree more heartily.

Various people who oppose the relocation of the department to Charlottetown do so for a number of reasons. I think some of those reasons are not at all well founded. I would like to address that aspect in my remarks.

Before doing so, however, I want to stress the good, strong, and positive reasons why that department and, in fact, other departments should be relocated from Ottawa to other centres, including my region of the country. The first reason that comes to mind, and not necessarily the most important one, is the benefits to be derived from spreading the government, as an industry, as much as possible, across the country. We quite frequently think of government as being necessarily located in Ottawa-Hull or the national capital region, so-called, or, for that matter, central Canada. Yet there is nothing etched in stone which requires the federal government, that is, major departments and agencies thereof, to be located in all cases either in Ottawa or the national capital region.

Government, as an industry, produces many benefits apart from services. It produces jobs and creates wealth. It causes dollars to ripple through the economy. There is no single reason why those benefits should be concentrated exclusively in central Canada. In terms of national unity, it serves the country as a whole to have other parts of Canada, not just central Canada, receive the benefits from government as an industry.

Second, I think it is an advantage to have government located as close as possible to the people it serves. We should remind ourselves that not all Canadians are located in Ontario and Quebec. Canadians in western Canada and in the Atlantic provinces are as loyal to this country as those located in central Canada and are, therefore, as deserving of having services provided as conveniently as possible in the area in which they reside.

I recoil every time I see this government move to withdraw parts of major agencies like Canadian National from regions such as mine and I am horrified at the implications for national unity. It means that more and more of the federal government's presence in Canada is removed from regions like Atlantic Canada. Just as I oppose the withdrawal of Canadian National and other Crown agencies from the Atlantic provinces and from parts of the west, so also do I oppose any steps taken to prevent relocations of the kind we are speaking about now.

Decentralization as a principle of government is good when it can be accommodated without any loss of benefits to the people the departments are intended to serve.

There is no evidence the move of the Department of Veterans Affairs from Ottawa to Charlottetown is causing a single veteran in this country to be deprived of services provided by that department.

The fact is that complicated and sophisticated systems of communication are now so advanced that public servants can process applications and adjudicate them in ways that are not affected at all by geography. Whether a department is located in Charlottetown, the Yukon, Ottawa or in Timbuktu has no bearing on the level of services or the speed with which the services can be provided.

The third reason I am not very enthusiastic about this motion is that the federal government, as an institution, must be as visible as possible to all Canadians. That conforms to my remarks of a few moments ago about agencies such as Canadian National withdrawing from regions such as my own. Every time a CN office closes in the Atlantic region, every time Air Canada withdraws a service from my region, every time the federal government consolidates its operations in key centres and major metropolitan areas at the expense of small communities like Charlottetown, people in those communities become more estranged from the federal government.

In the name of national unity, and in the name of the federal government making itself available to Canadians in all parts of the country, and not just in central Canada, I think it is important that we oppose the withdrawal of agencies such as Canadian National from regions like mine. By the same token, we should be enthusiastic about legitimate efforts to decentralize and get away from the principle that bigness, by definition, is necessarily good or is always the best way to proceed.

All too often we have fallen into the trap of believing that governments and corporations in the private sector have to be big and impersonal; the result is that they become insensitive to the public they are designed to serve.

I maintain that government and business alike can be effective, efficient and, in the case of businesses, even profitable, without going hell-bent in the direction of consolidation and bigness.

Traditionally, we in Canada have prided ourselves on our diversity, our linguistic diversity, our economic diversity and our geographic diversity. Why then, all of a sudden, do we in government elevate to a high level of importance the principle that government must be monolithic, must be huge, must be concentrated only in centres such as Montreal and Toronto? Why can we not recognize, consistent with the principle of diversity, that a lot can be gained by appreciating the value of small communities in our country, of small provinces like Prince Edward Island, and of regions like Atlantic Canada that may not have the wealth of central Canada but, nevertheless, have the same attachment to the country as a whole and are, therefore, as deserving as other regions of a piece of the federal government pie?

By all means let us be rational, efficient and effective in government organizations, but let it not be at the expense of withdrawing the presence of the federal government from communities such as Charlottetown.

This government claims to be the champion of national unity. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) constantly wraps himself in the Canadian flag and present himself as the great Canadian patriot—perhaps the only Canadian patriot! I do not wish to digress from my subject or get into the constitutional debate, because I shall be speaking about the Constitution next week. I must say, though, I find it very strange indeed that the Prime Minister, who claims to be a great patriot, goes over the heads of the people of Canada, and of Parliament, to London to have passed there a package of so-called constitutional reform—a package for which he cannot get approval from the Canadian people. He is not a great Canadian patriot he is "the wild colonial boy."

Consistent with the principle that we should do things in Canada in a Canadian way, I think one of the traditions we should honour is an appreciation for the small communities that comprise the country. Consistent with that theme, I urge all members of the House of Commons to express outrage at any motion or any suggestion that departments of the federal government should not be located, when it is possible to do so, in communities outside central Canada, especially Ottawa.

I am a firm believer that the country as a whole, not just my own province, will be well served by having the Department of Veterans Affairs in Charlottetown, rather than in Ottawa. I regret very much, however, that this has been carried out in a very poor administrative fashion. I believe in the principle of decentralization and I commend the government, to the extent that it had anything to do with it, for proceeding with the relocation. But it should be recognized that it was the Clark government which did more in seven or eight months to bring about this relocation than the present government and the government before the Clark government did in some three years.

The principle of relocation is vital to Canada. I commend the government for recognizing that fact, to the extent that it has. But it has handled the administrative details of the relocation very badly. The community of Charlottetown, the province of Prince Edward Island and, I think, any reasonable person who knows anything about the subject, all recognize that the building that is to be the headquarters for the Department of Veterans Affairs should be located on the waterfront in Charlottetown.

I do not want to get into this in any great detail because I think the battle has probably been lost. The fact is, though, that the city of Charlottetown, the province of Prince Edward Island and the people of Prince Edward Island have long favoured locating the national headquarters on the waterfront in the city of Charlottetown. In that location it would complement a major urban development in the city, while not aggravating parking and traffic problems in the capital city of Prince Edward Island.

• (1740)

In a bullheaded and stubborn fashion, however, this government bucked community opinion, bucked the official representations of the city of Charlottetown, and bucked the same type of representations from the province of Prince Edward Island. Rather than locating the national headquarters on the waterfront, which made a lot of sense, the government has decided to plunk a huge federal government complex in the very heart of the city of Charlottetown, which will disrupt traffic and worsen the parking problems there. Also it will devour a very valuable part of the city of Charlottetown which could be better used for commercial purposes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I indicated previously that it was the intention of the Chair to interrupt the proceedings at 5.40 p.m. and at that point deem that the time provide under Standing Order 48(2) for consideration of this motion had expired.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I would like some clarification. There was some confusion earlier as the result of lack of notice on debating this item. That has been disposed of. You ruled it was not a point of order. However, I would submit that since the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) did not have the right to speak twice on his own motion, except as provided for under Standing Order 48 for five minutes in reply after the minister, that the time the member from Leeds-Grenville was on his feet erroneously speaking to the motion should not be counted as part of the 100 minutes allotted under the provisions of Standing Order 48.

Therefore, I would respectfully submit the 41 minutes outstanding in this debate should be counted from the time the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) took the floor, which was about 5.25 p.m., or around that time. I would submit that we should not interrupt the debate at this point to hear the customary reply from the minister. Incidentally, the minister to speak will be the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts). The Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) because of lack of notice could not be in his place for the speech.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 48, the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) is entitled to have the question put on his motion. I think members on this side might be disposed to extending private members' hour as long as it does not prejudice the right of the member to have the question put. It is not his fault that the parliamentary secretary got his wires crossed. It is not his fault that Standing Order 48 was not followed initially at the commencement of the debate. Therefore, he should not be prejudiced by private members' hour running out and the question not being put.

If the proper procedures had been followed, then the question would have been put. There would be no disposition on this side to follow the suggestion of the parliamentary secretary if it resulted in the right of the member for Leeds-Grenville to have his motion put to the vote, but if the House is disposed to extending private members' hour so as to allow that question to be put, there would be disposition, I believe, on this side to permit that to happen.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I suppose I am debating the point, but the confusion certainly was not on our side. We had the set normal practices. The hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) was prepared to go with the notice of motion for the production of papers appearing on the Order Paper as No. 32. The hon. member for Leeds-Grenville was permitted to speak. That procedure was in error. From time to time, these errors do happen. I must insist, from my point of view, that the balance of this debate should start at 5.22 p.m. and conclude when the remaining time has been used up.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You have no right to do that.

Mr. Collenette: With respect to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) on the extension of private members' hour, I find this difficult to accept. Earlier, as you remember, I sought consent to aid one of his colleagues, the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker). We got consent at that time but we did not get consent to waive private members' hour to deal with a very important matter, namely, a point of order which deals with the future of the constitutional resolution now before this place. I could hardly be expected to agree, on behalf of the government, that we should not observe the provisions of Standing Order 6(1) at this time.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, it is not merely a suggestion that private members' hour be extended and I would think that the parliamentary secretary would be one of the first to stand up in protection of private members' rights. There can be no doubt that the Chair has that responsibility, just as there can be no doubt that the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville has the unquestionable right under Standing Order 48 to have the question put forthwith when the procedures have been followed.

I might just read Standing Order 48(2). You have already referred to most of it, but the pertinent words with respect to the rights of the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville are as follows:

Unless the motion is withdrawn, as provided by Standing Order 50,—

That is, after the right of a minister and the right of the member to reply have been exhausted. The Standing Order continues:

—Mr. Speaker shall forthwith put the question.

There can be no doubt about his right. I would suggest that there was time before the parliamentary secretary rose in his place and there is still ample time for a five-minute ministerial contribution and a five-minute reply. It is still only 5.47 p.m. and the question can still be put. I would urge you, Sir, to protect the right of the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville and have his question put.

Mr. Collenette: I would not want the hon. member for the Yukon to assume that the government is going to act in any particular way on this matter.

Mr. Fraser: Or any other.

Mr. Collenette: There are two reasons why I wish you would observe the suggestion I made in terms of not counting the time used by the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville and starting the debate at 5.22 p.m. instead. First, the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) and the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) both want to make contributions to this debate, as members have on the other side. Second, as we know, the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs is unable to be here. I am trying to locate him so he can be here. Whatever the misunderstanding was, it was not on our side, but that is a debatable point. I am trying to get the acting minister of veterans affairs here, and I understand there may be a disposition on the part of the government to agree to the motion of the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville.

The hon. member for Yukon when talking about a division and putting the question is acting with great anticipation. It almost seems as if hon. members want to force a vote, ring the bells and continue to filibuster the very workings of this House, whether in normal hours or during private members' business.

Mr. Beatty: You are filibustering.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I will make it apparent right at the start that I was anxious to speak but I, too, want clarification.

I understand that this debate will go on for a period of one hour and 40 minutes and that the debate has taken up 59 minutes at the first session. I understand that it will continue for another 41 minutes today or until the conclusion of private members' hour.

Because the member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) was recognized by you at the start of this period, and at your discretion, of course, you recognized two other members of the official opposition, but on this side we have not had an opportunity to speak. I particularly want an opportunity to speak because, if you look back through the order papers for the last three Parliaments you will see an identical motion has appeared in my name. I would like to add some remarks in the light of events in 1981.

I suggest, therefore, that you determine whether the time that has already been taken up by the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville today forms part of the remaining 41 minutes. If not, that time should be struck from the record, thus allowing at least one more speaker—on this side I would hope, but at your discretion—to use up the period of time previously used by the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville. For me, personally, I consider this as a question of privilege now in that I should be given the same opportunity to speak as members of the Official Opposition, three of whom have participated today. I would like you, Mr. Speaker, to determine precisely what time is remaining in this debate and precisely what the procedure is to be that we are going to follow in the remaining ten minutes until six o'clock.

● (1750)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the issue in this matter is whether a Member of Parliament is entitled to the production of papers. In an era of freedom of information, the government has a bill before a committee now calling for openness in government. That is one issue. My respectful submission is that a member is entitled to the production of papers. The government has indicated it cannot say at this point whether or not it might agree.

The other issue is under the Standing Order my friend for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) referred to; there is a right to have the question put, but that right can be lost if we continue in this debate. It is now nine minutes to six. That private member's right can be lost if we continue. It is wrong for that right to be lost, whatever the confusion. I would like to clear up the confusion. Hopefully I can. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling):

That the question be now put.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could I reply to the point made by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton? The understanding of the Chair is if the vote does not take place, no right is lost because presumably the next time this period comes up in private members' hour the item would be called and the same rights of the hon. member would prevail.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I respectfully remind the Chair that there is now a motion before the House that the question be now put. I am aware of what you have said, Mr. Speaker, but no one has any guarantee that he will hereafter have the right to have that motion to receive that production. Therefore, it is important. The motion is there. I advanced it seriously in the interests of private members and the production of documents. I ask that you recognize that motion and put the question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair understands that the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton has moved that the question be now put. This is a debatable motion.

Mr. Nielsen: No it isn't.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the point I was going to make, although there are one or two other points I should like to make as well. Hon. members are shouting out right away that, no, it is not debatable. All I have had time to do is pick up Beauchesne's fifth edition and look under "Previous Question" on page 388 and there it is:

Members who spoke on main question may speak again—

There are several references there that can be looked up in Beauchesne. If I may say so, the practice is well known to any of us who have been around here for a while that the motion that the question be now put is debatable. You are, of course, caught with the other proposition, that this debate is not supposed to last in total more than 100 minutes. But certainly, as long as the time has not run out, any member, including the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville if he wants, can get up and speak to the proposition that the question be now put. I know it sounds silly to people who are used to that question being put immediately in other forums, but certainly it is debatable here.

There is another point I want to make. Perhaps again I am confirming something that has been said by the Chair. It has to do with the right of the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) to have a vote on his proposition. Absolutely he has that right. The Standing Order was drafted that way. I may say that I happened to write it when I was chairman of the sub-committee dealing with these matters. There is no question about his right to have it. It is a question of when. He would like to have it today. I do not blame him. However, if he does not get it today, because of the passage of time, he will get it on another occasion.

One other point, the request is being made that the time taken by the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville when, as it turned out later, he had no right to have the floor, should not be counted. This reminds me of times when Madam Speaker extends the question period because time was taken for applause, points of order and what have you. It reminds me of occasions when a member is speaking in a debate and his time is up, and Mr. Speaker extends it because there was time taken which should not have been taken.

I think, by the same token, the minutes that were used when the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville was speaking the second time should not be counted in the total of the minutes. There is no criticism of him for having spoken. What he said does not need to be struck from the record. However, I do not think that extra time should be added, just as I do not think he should count the time that has been taken on these various points of order. As for the motion that the question be now put, I refer my hon. friends to the rule books.

Mr. Roberts: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker. I listened with considerable interest to the remarks of the House leader of the New Democratic Party in relation to the motion which was, as I understood it, attempted to be moved by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). In addition to other rather grave objections which have been referred to, the attempt he is trying to make, surely in terms of the rules of the House, and I do not have the book close by me, is an attempt to move such a motion while rising on a point of order, and to do that on the basis of holding the floor of the House to express a point of order is clearly in opposition to the rules. I am sure there are other hon. members who could direct you to the specific citation, indicating that that is clearly the case. As has been pointed out quite correctly, that kind of motion is debatable. I believe under Citation 452 of Beauchesne that is not the proper kind of motion to be moved by an hon. member rising on a point of order. That is clearly and simply contrary to the rules. I would argue it is also a rather improper attempt, but that would lead us into a debate as to motivation of actions and I do not want that. I would ask Your Honour to look at Beauchesne to verify the point of whether or not the argument I am making is adequate, that it is impossible to make such a motion in the way the hon. member has attempted to do.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the remark. As you know from many long years of association with me, Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for the House, the Chair, the rules, the customs, traditions and precedents. I thank the minister for bringing that to my attention. It would never be my intention to offend the rules of the House. If the minister is correct in that, I would most definitely withdraw the motion.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, a moment or two ago the parliamentary secretary said he had some indication the government might be prepared to accede to the production of papers. What we are arguing here is not whether it was right or wrong for the decentralization to take place. The motion before the House is for the production of papers so that people on all sides with regard to any part of this question can see what happened. It is freedom of information. I compliment the hon. member for Hillsborough and others on what they said. What we are getting at is the production of papers so that we can have freedom of information. If the parliamentary secretary can assure us of that, the matter will be concluded.

Mr. Collenette: I do not want to belabour the point, Mr. Speaker, but we did not have notice that this was to be discussed today. I covered those grounds. We have been trying to get in touch with the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs so he may come to the House and give the assurances that the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville wants. I indicated that the government may well be disposed to allowing these papers to be produced, but, in all fairness, the hon. member for Laurier and the hon. member for Vaudreuil would like to speak.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CLARK—THE CONSTITUTION—APPEAL TO SUPREME COURT

Madam Speaker: I did not understand the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) had finished his intervention. Since he is not here on this point of order I will take it under advisement and rule later tomorrow.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ESTIMATES

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS RELATING TO PROPOSAL FOR REFORM OF ESTIMATES

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), it gives me great pleasure to table documents relating to the government's proposal for reform of the estimates.

Madam Speaker: Introduction of bills. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott), stand. The hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), stand.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, are we at the point were it is appropriate to discuss the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) regarding the motion of the House leader?

Madam Speaker: No, we are not there yet.

Point of Order—Mr. Clark

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CLARK—THE CONSTITUTION—APPEAL TO SUPREME COURT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, as you know, the bell sounded very quickly this evening before I had an opportunity to return to the House. You will recall that when you rose to call it five o'clock I was in the middle of a presentation of an argument that had not been completed. I am rising on a point of order now with regard to proceedings in the House.

That argument was only partially completed and there were indeed some very germane questions I wanted to draw to the attention of the Chair in the hope of aiding you in your decision. I would ask your guidance as to whether it would be appropriate for me to now continue with the argument I began before you rose at five o'clock.

Madam Speaker: I, too, am at a loss because I was very conscious that the hon. member was discussing a point of order. I came into the House, I waited for awhile because I was expecting to see someone but the hon. member was not here so I had to proceed. I suppose we would now require unanimous consent to revert to that point. I am in the hands of the House; I had to proceed.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I would imagine we are still at a point in the proceedings of the House where Your Honour would accept a point of order. The question before you is whether or not you would accept a continuation of a point of order which was being put before five o'clock and which was not completed. I am sure Your Honour would find that it would be appropriate to have argument completed on a point of order, and secondly, since I want to raise elements of that point of order which I believe are new in the practice of the House, you would want to hear them before you had to give consideration as to the appropriateness of the point. It is a point of order of some particular interest because I am making it at the express request of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who, during question period today, asked that I put forward the arguments that were requested. I would naturally welcome guidance and I would naturally be prepared to proceed either on a new point of order or on a continuation of the point I was raising at five o'clock.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if we were to accept the request of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) we would be party to their filibuster. Normally the House of Commons resumes its sitting at eight o'clock. Several Liberal members were in their seat and you waited many seconds in your chair before taking a decision.

We have absolutely no request to make. Had we wanted to we could or I could have taken the floor to seek unanimous consent to adopt the constitutional resolution and there was no one on the other side to say no, but we did not do that. All we did was discharge our responsibility to be in the House at the proper time. We were here and we were expecting that the Leader of the Opposition would pursue his argument. Obviously, on the face of it the point he has raised is sheer nonsense. Be that as it may, you have ruled that you would take it under advisement. His rights are not curtailed. You will be making a decision on one of their manoeuvres earlier today and I would suggest that the House proceed with the order of business as it appears on the Order Paper.

Madam Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) must appreciate that I found myself in an awkward situation when I saw he was not present. I took the question under advisement, for it seemed to me that I could not proceed any further without first settling the question of the point of order raised by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. I was really in an awkward position. I looked around me, I waited as long as I could, but I have to proceed and follow the Standing Orders as well.

I took the question of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition under advisement. If he has other points to raise after I have delivered my ruling tomorrow, I suppose he might perhaps raise new ones. For the time being I believe I have no other choice unless the House gives unanimous consent to enable us to revert to the daily routine of business. In that case, if the House agrees I will be prepared to hear the rest of the intervention of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. If the House does not agree I cannot proceed otherwise.

[English]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I see once again you seek unanimous consent of this House to allow the Leader of the Opposition, who was late and who knew he had the floor at five o'clock, to argue once again on a question that you have taken under consideration. Well, if they are all mixed up in their filibuster, there is no way we on this side will act as accomplices to such a low manoeuvre.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I, of course, have no interest in complicating your life or that of the House. There will be other occasions later this evening when it will be perfectly appropriate for me to raise that point of order again, and I will do so. I will, unfortunately, have to begin my argument again from the beginning and repeat some of the arguments I made earlier, but if that is the choice of the government House leader, particularly in contrast to the willingness of our party the other night when the Prime Minister sought extra time—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: —to speak in the constitutional debate, I am prepared to rise again to make the argument in all of its amplitude, repeating what I said earlier. It would be more expeditious, would save the time of the House, and would be more respectful of the traditions here if unanimous consent were given, as we gave the Prime Minister the other night. However, if that is to be denied by the government House leader for reasons of his own, I will raise the question at another point.

• (2010)

Mr. Pinard: Referring to the consent given the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in fact nothing was given to the Prime Minister. Under Standing Order 31(1)—

An hon. Member: Oh, yes, there was.

Mr. Pinard: Under Standing Order 31(1), the Prime Minister has a right to unlimited time. The only consent given at the time was to allow him to speak before six o'clock, and the private members' hour was postponed. It was not cancelled. Nothing was given to the Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: Don't worry about any other consent, ever!

Mr. Pinard: If the Prime Minister of Canada, according to the Standing Order, spoke for an unlimited period of time, he was allowed to. If he spoke two hours and 16 minutes, there was nothing wrong in that. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), who was the mover of an amendment according to the same Standing Order, spoke one hour and 16 minutes, and he is not the Prime Minister of Canada. He is a Member of Parliament. He is in the House sometimes and goes abroad sometimes; but he is not the Prime Minister of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I hope the government House leader will reconsider what he said. Of course the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has unlimited time. The Prime Minister used what time was required. It was rather important to the Prime Minister on that evening that we offered him the hour allotted to private members; it was important to the Prime Minister that that happen, that that be done, and he thanked us for that courtesy. I do not think that this is the place for meanness.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): This can be a place for procedural arguments and all the rest of it, but I do not think it should be a place for meanness. As the Prime Minister occupies a special place in the House of Commons, so does the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) have a special place in the House of Commons. He is an officer of this House. I think it is important that courtesies be extended for the convenience of the Prime Minister, and it is also important that courtesies be extended for the Leader of the Opposition, or, indeed, for the leader of any party in this House of Commons. I believe this kind of courtesy ought to be extended.

I think it is important, as well—and obviously must be important to the government—that the debate be continued and be completed within the rules of the House of Commons. It is important to us that it be carried on within the rules. It seems to me, if we regard this place as a place of harmony with great differences, it is inappropriate for the government House leader to say, with respect to the Leader of the Opposition, in any event, that the Leader of the Opposition ought not to be afforded certain courtesies.

I ask the hon. gentleman to notice that the bell was perhaps the shortest on record. It was about seven, eight or nine seconds. Madam Speaker did say she waited for a short period, and I would not doubt that. The Leader of the Opposition, following the custom which has developed in this House, when the bells began to ring, came downstairs to his place in the House. I would not want to describe the failure of that recognition which should be given to the Leader of the Opposition in the way it might be described outside of the House, but I think it is important to remember that while there are strong differences between us—

An hon. Member: Get up off your knees, Walter.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I am not on my knees, by any means. There are strong differences between them but I think it is quite appropriate, for whatever progress the government House leader wants to make with respect to this matter, that he reconsider, and give to the Leader of the Opposition the courtesy which I believe that position deserves. I frankly ask him for this.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: In view of the circumstances, Madam Speaker, I would say that the request of the Leader of the Official Opposition to the effect that we should not take into account the atmosphere in the House or the differences of opinion which can exist between the two sides of the House concerning matters under debate, as concerns his request; in view of his explanations, and if we consider the fact that he finds that the bell this evening rang for an exceptionally short time, I shall point out that we found for our part that the bell had rung for an exceptionally long time the day before yesterday. If we also consider that the government prefers the bells to ring more briefly to be able to get more work done and that the Progressive Conservative Party prefers to have the bells ring for a very long time to prevent Parliament from working; if we forget all that, if we put aside the fact that we have witnessed in the last few days a shameful filibuster on the part of the opposition, which is systematically preventing the Canadian Parliament from working, stopping this institution from meeting the aspirations of Canadians and preventing us from dealing with other matters which would be much more useful for the Canadian society; if we can forget this unacceptable and shameful attitude on the part of the opposition party at a time when we have many problems and when Parliament is expected to do much more than in the past, if we can forget all that, Madam Speaker, I would be willing to consider the request of the House leader of the official opposition, but on one little condition, which is quite normal in the circumstances following this long and unacceptable filibuster, namely, that he would allow me this evening to introduce my motion on time allocation to put an end to the constitutional debate, and I promise that tomorrow I shall allow his leader to reopen the debate and to give his views on the question of privilege that he raised today.

Madam Speaker: As I understand it, permission to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to continue his intervention tomorrow would be granted on the condition outlined by the hon. President of the Privy Council. I must ask whether the House agrees to this proposal.

Mr. Clark: We find this kind of blackmail totally unacceptable, and it certainly does not contribute to progress being made in the House. If the hon. members on the government side want to ignore the rights of the hon. members on the opposition side, we can accept their stubbornness and react in a way dictated to us by their own action and approach. This is not something which we have been seeking, but something which is imposed by the government House leader. We can certainly react in a way which is consistent with his approach. As I said earlier, I will have the opportunity some time tonight to raise again this issue which I raised this afternoon, and I have every intention to avail myself of this opportunity.

[English]

Madam Speaker: Just after the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition had mentioned he would bring this question up again later this evening, I wanted to say something, but the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) stood up, and I heard him. However, I cannot accept what the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said at that point to be taken as permission to begin, all over again, the matter which was raised after question period today. The question was raised. I said that I would reserve on it and rule later; that is tomorrow. Therefore, if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition wants to come back to the question, it should be a completely new point because I reserved my ruling on the one which he brought out today.

An hon. Member: Absolute nonsense!

Madam Speaker: I see no other way of applying the rule, and I must be firm on them because, as hon. members realize, this is a particularly difficult moment for the House. We have had several procedural points. I am trying to control the House as best I can; we will only be able to go through this in an orderly fashion if I am consistent. I do feel that if I am to be consistent now, I have to tell the hon. member that he may come back on a point of order tomorrow or tonight, depending on how far we get in the proceedings, but it would have to be on a completely new point.

Mr. Clark: Naturally I would not want to dispute the Chair or make your situation any more difficult than the circumstances of the debate, of closure, of the possibility of the government proceeding on a matter which may not be within its competence because it is already before the courts of Canada, now make the matter before the House. But I would find it surprising, I must say, if Your Honour would want to pass judgment upon an argument which has not been fully put.

As I indicated to Your Honour, there are elements of the argument which I had not come to because of the expiry of time this afternoon when we moved to private members' hour; elements that are new to the practice of this Parliament and new to the circumstances here. I know the care Your Honour always takes to ensure that your judgments are well based and well considered. I know you would not want to be put in the position of having to make a decision, having heard only part of the argument that the opposition, and in particular the Leader of the Opposition in my capacity as an officer of the House, might want to put forward.

That is the dilemma which has been caused by the fact that there was an unusually short bell tonight, and the House of Commons began with a regularity which perhaps should but has not been the custom. As I said, I do not think it would accord with your normal practice to make a decision after having heard only part of the case. Of course, I am in your hands. I will rise at a later opportunity, which will of course be open to me, to put forward new elements of the case I was raising earlier in the day. Of course, it would be then your decision as to whether you wanted to hear the full case put by the official opposition or make a decision on a more limited basis.

Madam Speaker: How can I know if an hon. member has put his full case? The only way I know that he has put his full case is when no one rises in the House. I was here at eight o'clock.

An hon. Member: First time ever.

Madam Speaker: I waited for a while. It was open to other members on this side of the House to continue the argumentation; I looked around, but no one did so. I then had to decide on that point of order, which I did. I decided that I would rule later on that point of order.

The hon. member knows that once the Chair has decided it is going to rule on something no further comments can be accepted. I did not create this situation. I am in a very difficult situation. My only guidance is in the rules and the practices of this House and, as far as I know, I am stating the practices of the House.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, there is another rule or practice of this House, if I may put it to you, and that is a sense of fairness, a sense of justice and a sense of equity. I am talking about it in terms of the Chair, not in terms of the partisan differences which may exist in the House of Commons. I am certain if one checked the rules, one would see that while the matter is reserved it is still open. I think it is possible for the Speaker under those circumstances, the matter still being open, to permit an argument to be put.

The situation in which we find ourselves is that you have heard the first five minutes of an argument upon which you were going to make a decision which could be binding on this House forever. It would then become a precedent on an issue, as the hon. member says, which is as fundamental as this. Under those circumstances, I certainly think that you must consider the enormity of a legalistic approach to this situation. I say to you, Madam Speaker, it would be not just unfair to the Leader of the Opposition, which it would be, but it would be unfair to Parliament, unfair to the development of precedents, it would fly in the face of the doctrine that practice and procedure must never be so applied and so dealt with that they lose sight of the equity of the situation.

This is the Parliament of Canada, and the decisions which you make, Madam Speaker, which are now unappealable, you may make on the evidence. That evidence is not even fully before you now on a case that is fundamental in relation to Parliament and the courts. I say to you, Madam Speaker, the decision which you will make is on an issue in the Constitution. You could be setting a precedent which could live to haunt this Parliament, succeeding parliaments, and render life in this place intolerable for everyone in it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is why, Madam Speaker, I am happy you said the matter was still open, at least in the sense that you have reserved it. Madam Speaker, you smile. I do not think there is anything to smile about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Shame.

An hon. Member: Insult.

An hon. Member: Shut up, over there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I think I owe an explanation to the House. I am smiling to indicate generally to the hon. member that I did not say the case was still open. I said I had taken it under advisement. Therefore, I did say quite clearly that when the Chair says a question is going to be taken under advisement, it is open to further comments. That is why I was shaking my head and smiling at the hon. member, to remind him that that is not exactly what I had said.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I should like to rise on a new point of order. I had the opportunity earlier this afternoon to discuss a point of order in relation to a matter which could be sub judice. And I made an argument which you have interpreted by your decision here tonight as being a complete argument on the element of the case I was able to discuss before five o'clock. There is a new element to this case which I would like to raise now as a new point of order because it has to do with a series of circumstances that have not been discussed before in the House and, indeed, do not fall within the normal circumstances, or indeed the precedents of this House.

• (2030)

Madam Speaker: The right hon. member has a new point of order. I am afraid I must listen to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who wanted to speak on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton. I would like to close that part of our proceedings. In this way we will proceed in an orderly fashion and I will then go to the right hon. member.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, all I wanted to say, and I say this as calmly as I can—I had my moment of warmth earlier today—is that in my view this whole discussion on whether or not the constitutional resolution is in order has been conducted at the wrong place.

The point of order the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) tried to raise is that the constitutional resolution is not in order, that it should not be proceeded with. It was not before us today; it was not before us when he raised it at 4.50 p.m., it is not before us tonight. I submit that any discussion, as to whether government order No. 36 is in order, should wait either for discussion or for a ruling until government order No. 36 has been called. We are not on that. We are in the midst of routine proceedings, and when we get through routine proceedings tonight, the point of order will be on order No. 41; it is not now on the constitutional motion itself.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Knowles: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is contending that because of certain citations in Beauchesne about the sub judice question, the constitutional package before the House is not in order. I, too, want to contribute to that debate, if I may, when the time comes, but this is not the time. He has to wait and the House has to wait until the order for the constitutional resolution is before the House.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my learned friend and colleague in House leadership is wrong. The question is not whether the constitutional package is in order; that is not the issue here.

As I understood the exchange and read the precedent or the statement in Beauchesne, the issue was whether when a new element had intervened, and that is the application, the leave to appeal, the notice of appeal, or the appeal which is now before the Supreme Court of Canada on a matter now before the House of Commons—it has been filed—it was proper that there be discussion in this House with respect to the question of constitutional amendment, not just with respect to the order, whatever is the number of that order. It is much broader than that. That response was dealt with.

I say to my friend that it is not inappropriate now. It would certainly be appropriate later; it would be appropriate today when the issue came up. It might have been appropriate yesterday, if we look over the question period. I do not believe it was, but it is appropriate today. It would be appropriate tomorrow, but the issue is not that raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The important issue in this matter is whether or not it is now appropriate—

Mr. Knowles: You are trying hard.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —for this matter—

An hon. Member: You have another 1.5 hours to go.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I am having trouble talking over the little red rump down at the other end of the chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Now the new issue is whether or not—

An hon. Member: Now it is a new issue!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition can raise another point of order. That is why he stood.

Mr. McGrath: That is correct.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is why he stood and began to argue. He is entitled to raise a point of order. Madam Speaker must make a judgment on the point of order, but there is no time like the present to raise a point of order, particularly when it may have related to something which occurred in the question period earlier today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, if I may, I would like to proceed with the new point of order.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Madam Speaker: I think I will have to study it for a while. I will consult with the Clerk. The reason the point of order of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition could be taken was that it flowed from the deliberations in question period. I said I would rule on that; I could rule on it narrowly with the arguments presented by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition regarding whatever he alleged happened during question period, or I could choose to rule rather broadly on the entire question of sub judice.

However, I might be excluded from doing that if, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said, it is not appropriate at this time to discuss that question because that proposition is not before the House and debate or points of order on that particular aspect of the resolution which will come before the House might be properly discussed at that time. I will have to consult with the Clerk on this. This is why I am not prepared just now, until I consult with the Clerk, to hear the new point of order.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I would imagine that you would want to take into account the fact that the argument which I would like the opportunity to place before the House of Commons may affect the ability of Members of Parliament to pose any questions at all in relation to the constitutional resolution. It may be that it is now in a state of being sub judice, which will prevent it from being referred to in any proceeding in the House of Commons.

If I understood correctly the argument put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), he said the matter could be raised only in relation to the actual introduction of that particular measure in the House of Commons. That matter has been the subject of frequent debate, questioning, and other activity in the House of Commons for some time. In other words, it is absolutely current. It is as current as any other matter raised in the question period today or might be raised later on. If it is sub judice, if it is not proper for this Parliament to be discussing this question at this time, then we all have to know it, and we have to know it now. That is the reason I want to raise my argument at this time.

Madam Speaker: Well, I think I can now answer the right hon. gentleman. I accepted his first point of order because it flowed from the deliberations during question period.

The right hon. member now raises a new point of order about something which is supposedly before the House. At the present time, there is nothing before the House. We are still in the course of routine proceedings. We have nothing before the House. Therefore, I fail to see how the hon. member could raise a point of order on nothing; there is nothing before the House at the present time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I do not think I can allow that. I think the right hon. gentleman will have to wait until such time as we have something before the House.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, what we have before the House, with my customary respect, is a matter raised in question period today in relation to its sub judice character. It was on that basis that I introduced and Your Honour heard one point of order. We disagreed as to when that was finished, but you made a ruling and I must accept it. You have established that standard in relation to one point of order concerning the question of sub judice.

I think it would be entirely consistent, both with your previous ruling and with your practice, to accept the same standard or to accept the same reason for allowing another argument of a different kind arising out of question period on the matter of sub judice.

I confess to being rather astounded that the government House leader took 40 minutes of the time of the House to prevent me from pursuing a case which his own Prime Minister invited me to pursue earlier in the question period today. I raised one element of that case earlier this afternoon. I seek the opportunity, flowing from the exchange in the question period today, to pursue another element of that case which has not been explored in this House before and which Your Honour would want to consider before you make any decision relating to any aspect of the cluster of argument I want to make relating to these two separate points of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, let us not split hairs. What the Leader of the Official Opposition is trying to do is to come again to bat after striking out earlier. That is pretty obvious. I wonder why you hesitate to find him out of order. He has pleaded his case and he was not here to proceed with it tonight. Parliament went on with its business; you have taken the matter he raised under advisement and you will hand out your decision. There is no reason why this hon. member should have the opportunity to speak again on the same issue. I find this contrary to our parliamentary practices, for it is about time for Parliament to continue with its business.

[English]

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, I rise partly because I have been here eight and a half years and I thought that—

An hon. Member: And you still have not learned.

Mr. Fraser: An hon. member opposite says that I still have not learned.

Mr. Kempling: The guy who said that has only been here a year.

Mr. Fraser: Through you, Madam Speaker, I thought when I came down here, and I have heard often enough since, that Madam Speaker's role is not to protect the program of the government but to protect the rights of members to be heard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, I apologize for the interventions on the other side. I can understand it because I listened to the House leader the other day when he told us that Beauchesne does not matter, that precedent does not matter, that tradition does not matter and that as long as they have the numbers that is all that matters. They can do anything they damned well want.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, my point is this. I find it outrageous—absolutely outrageous—that Madam Speaker, knowing that the right hon. gentleman who leads this party had not finished his argument, did not keep in mind the fact that as custodian of the rights of hon. members on this issue, there was some appropriate delay, or at least a question delivered to this side, such as: "Is the right hon. member coming back? Does he not want to proceed?"

An hon. Member: That is not the Speaker's job.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, I recognize the difficulty you are in when the government decides to push you right to the wall, according to the rules. I recognize that. But what we are talking about here is not the right of a government, it is the rights of members of this House, of which you are the trustee, custodian and guarantor.

There is another aspect of this, Madam Speaker, which is difficult for me to say to you, to continue with calm, when some of my friends—and I do have some friends on the government side—are not happy with what I am pointing out. They are not happy because they realize the public is watching this. The public has a better sense of fair play tonight than have the members opposite.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, there is another point to this. If the rules are to be applied without any concept of what was going on at five o'clock and what ought to have continued at eight, if they are to be applied with a sort of antiseptic severity which loses all sight of what it is we are supposed to be doing here and, as a consequence cuts off the right hon. gentleman after only a few minutes, when everyone knows he just got started, then I want to know this: When will the member for Vancouver South, myself, get a chance to talk on this issue? When will all other members here who believe there was a proper point raised get a chance to speak?

An hon. Member: Speaker's discretion.

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, I hear a member opposite shouting over to you "Speaker's discretion." I suggest to you with great respect that you have a discretion not to listen to those voices. You have an obligation to listen to your own conscience and—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, they do not like any talk of conscience because there is no action on the basis of conscience over there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, I have been here eight and a half years and it is very seldom I have ever used any strong words on a procedural issue—

An hon. Member: Where were you at eight o'clock?

Mr. Fraser: I spent many years practising law and I know more about procedure than most of you fellows do, so be quiet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, your duty is to protect our interests. Our duty is to protect your position. I understand that relationship. I think Your Honour will agree that since you have been the Speaker I have sometimes become over-excited, but I have always bowed to your wishes and your directives. I will do so again. But I do want to say, Madam Speaker, that the respect we hold for you is based on the fact you are the trustee, the custodian, the guarantor of the rights of members, not the rights of a majority government that believes, as the government House leader said the other day, that it does not matter about Beauchesne and tradition, as long as they have the numbers they can do anything they want. I say this to you, Madam Speaker, very seriously, and I have never said anything like this before, since I have been in the House, this House is not a happy place right now—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Fraser: It is not a happy place for reasons we all understand. We are trying to do our duty. It depends very much on the conduct of members and the confidence we have in how things are done in this House whether we do our duty appropriately in the interest of the Canadian people, or we are just completely stampeded by a majority that has gone absolutely mad in getting a proposition through before the Quebec election is ended, before the Canadian people have had a chance to know what is going on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, the member for Fraser Valley, as I recall, said this is not a happy place, and he is absolutely right.

An hon. Member: Vancouver South!

Mr. Deans: The hon. member for Vancouver South, I apologize.

Mr. Fraser: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has a point of order to make on the intervention of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) when he has not spoken yet.

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, I have a very brief point of order to make, and that is that I would hope the hon. member would respect the rules of this House and refer to me as the hon. member for Vancouver South.

Mr. Deans: I am sorry, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Respect the House by sitting down!

Mr. Deans: The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton tells me to respect the House by sitting down. That is advice which he might well take himself from time to time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, since the bell stopped ringing something in the order of 47 minutes have elapsed. I want to suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that the proceedings in 46 of those minutes were quite out of order. I do not understand how we can be dealing with points of order in the middle of the daily routine proceedings. What can possibly be out of order during the daily routine proceedings as long as the proceedings are followed in sequence?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I sincerely regret that my Conservative colleagues cannot continue their filibuster. I regret it for their sake. But, for the sake of the House, had they been here at eight o'clock they could have continued.

If I understand correctly what has happened this evening, we have reached the point in the daily routine proceedings where we should be hearing statements by ministers. If my understanding is correct, then at this point nothing can possibly be out of order.

I therefore ask you, Madam Speaker, in the interest of the House and the protection of all the members of it, that you call the next order of business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2050)

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Madam Speaker, I think this is a very important point of order, a very important time in debate. What appalled me, when listening to hon. members opposite, was the premise that somehow or other the Speaker of the House is responsible for the ineptitude of the House leader of the opposition. It is not the responsibility of the Speaker of the House of Commons to phone or inquire whether the opposition wants to continue with the point of privilege or the point of order they were debating at five o'clock.

As I recall the event, at the time the hon. Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Clark: Right hon., Bryce.

Mr. Mackasey: The right hon. leader. I apologize because I respect the courtesies of the House and I do respect the right hon. leader as a former prime minister.

At five o'clock the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) had an opportunity to continue the debate on that issue. Yes, I am certain he did. The important point, Madam Speaker, is that you should not be dragged into honest differences of opinion between the government and the opposition. Your job is that of custodian of the rules; your prestige and the effectiveness and efficiency of the House of Commons depends upon your impartiality. Your impartiality would not last very long if you had to cover up for the ineptitude of one side or the other. If there was no one on his feet at eight to continue the point raised at five o'clock, or that was debated at five o'clock, that was not the fault of the Speaker.

I remember very vividly that in 1968 in this very chamber the government of the day was defeated on a very important motion because at two or three or four minutes after eight o'clock, sitting quietly in their places, waiting for the speaker who was to participate, the member who was to carry on the debate was tardy, and someone at that moment, quite appropriately, asked the chairman of the Committee of the Whole to call for the vote. The chairman of the Committee of the Whole, recognizing his responsibility to be impartial and to call for that vote, called for the vote. You may recall that the government of the day was defeated.

An hon. Member: By two votes.

Mr. Mackasey: By one or two or 25. The important point is that the chairman of the committee had the sense of dedication, integrity and an awareness of his impartiality and did what was the appropriate thing, to call for the vote.

In the final analysis, Madam Speaker, in 1968 it was the fault of the government of which I was a member that someone did not rise in his place at eight o'clock to continue the debate. If there is an error tonight, it does not lie with the Speaker, but with members opposite who for one reason or another did not see fit at eight or five after eight to continue with the order of business we were discussing at five o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Perhaps I may summarize the situation. I do not need to recall the facts. Everyone knows I was here and waited and nobody rose, and that is very important; nobody rose. I looked around the House. The only indication to the Speaker that there are no more speakers is the fact that no one rises.

An hon. member on this side referred to the fact that I used my discretion and that perhaps I used it a bit too strictly. My discretion was not at stake. I did not use my discretion. There were no more speakers. I want to make that very, very clear. If I had used my discretion I am sure I would feel much more uncomfortable than I do now. When one uses one's discretion, of course, there is a judgment call. But I made no judgment call in this particular circumstance. There were no other speakers. There was one member present on this side of the House. He did not rise to speak and, therefore, I had to continue the proceedings. I had no other choice, and I repeat that.

If I am the custodian of the rights of members in this House, it is not by extending courtesies right and left that I will preserve those rights. My guidance, and my only guidance, lies in the rules, and I must apply them as well as I understand them. I may fail in this, but tonight I do not think I am failing. I must apply them as well as I understand them. I must comply completely with those rules and, when necessary, to look at usages and practices in order to integrate these usages and practices with the rules of the House of Commons. I repeat it, I used no discretion tonight.

The first point of order raised by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has been disposed of. No second point of order can be entertained on that particular question because it is not before the House. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition could raise a point of order, which he did and which I heard and disposed of because it followed the deliberations of this afternoon, namely, the question period. That is admissible and I heard the right hon. gentleman. The only course I can follow now is to continue the proceedings. If the right hon. gentleman at some other time feels he can bring in a new point, he can do so. I told him that I would rule, probably narrowly, after again looking into the arguments he gave me, on the question of sub judice which he raised today in the House of Commons. Once I have done that, and if the right hon. gentleman is not satisfied, then at the proper time it is open to him to raise another point of order.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I rise on a fresh point of order.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: There is a great deal of shouting around the House, Madam Speaker, but I shall try to overcome it and make my point of order. I raise it now because it flows, as did the earlier, separate point of order I raised, from the proceedings in the question period today. This is the first opportunity I have had to raise this particular point of order flowing from the question period today, and flowing in response, as my earlier one did, from the request by the Prime Minister that I make my points on the matter that was argued during an exchange between the Prime Minister and myself in the question period today.

As you will recall, Madam Speaker, there was reference to rule No. 338(3) of Beauchesne's having to do with the question of matters which are sub judice. That particular reference in Beauchesne's, with which you will be familiar, reads as follows:

> The convention applies to motions, references in debates, questions and supplementary questions, but does not apply to bills.

The reason it does not apply to bills is that there has never been, in the practice of Parliament, a desire to try to limit the capacity of Parliament to legislate on a matter which was before the Supreme Court of Canada, if Parliament wanted to bring in new legislation which would create new law.

What we are dealing with here is different from precedent in two cases, and different from what was argued before in two elements. The first is that we are dealing here with a resolution, not with a bill. The second is, and this is the nub of the question, and obviously a matter you will want to consider with the utmost care, we are dealing with a matter which may very well be beyond the competence of the Parliament of Canada to pursue in any event. We are dealing with a matter which may be beyond the constitutional competence of the Parliament of Canada. Indeed, it is precisely that question, as to the competence of the Parliament of Canada to deal with a matter which is before us, which is now being brought by—

Madam Speaker: I am very sorry, but I must interrupt the hon. member. Even though he now says he is raising a new point of order which flows from the deliberations of the day, namely, question period, the proper time to do that is before I commence proceedings, presenting reports—the normal proceedings of the day.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Andre: What citation?

Madam Speaker: When the hon. member raised the point of order today, somewhere around five o'clock, it was at about the point in the proceedings we usually reach at three o'clock and I could entertain the point of order. But I cannot entertain it now, even though—

An hon. Member: Why?

Madam Speaker: —he is trying to do indirectly what I just told him he could not do directly, and even though he now alleges that it flows from the question period. I could accept that if we had not begun routine proceedings, but we have. Therefore, if the right hon. gentleman has a new point to raise, he can raise it, but not at this time. I must now proceed to questions on the Order Paper.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Questions on the Order Paper.

Mr. Stevens: Point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Order!

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,943, 2,049 and 2,210.

[Text]

ARCTIC AIRPORTS—OWNERSHIP OR CONTROL TRANSFER

Question No. 1,943—Mr. Benjamin:

Does the government have any intentions of transferring ownership and/or control of Arctic airports from the Department of Transport to the (a) Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (b) territorial governments?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Ownership of the Arctic airports is vested in The Queen in right of Canada and will remain so. Assuming that the control referred to means operational responsibility, under present arrangements the smaller airports (over 40) are operated by the territorial governments with funding provided by Transport Canada. The government is examining whether it would be desirable and possible to give the territorial governments both operational and financial responsibility (under the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) for these airports. No consideration is being given to transferring Transport Canada's responsibility for the safety of air services in the north.

FISHERIES ACT—INFRACTIONS

Question No. 2,049—Mr. Greenaway:

1. Since 1975 to date, by year, in the province of British Columbia, how many legal proceedings have been launched by the Crown against resident native people for infractions against the Fisheries Act, and by case, which ones were (a) dismissed (b) appealed (c) won (d) lost, by the Crown?

2. In cases dismissed, what were the reasons?

3. In cases of appeal, how many were (a) won (b) lost by the Crown on (i) upholding (ii) reversal of the original decisions?

4. What was the total cost of (a) cases (b) appeals to the (i) Department of Justice (ii) Department of Fisheries and Oceans, and for what purposes was the money disbursed?

5. In cases where convictions have been upheld, what revenue accrued from (a) fines imposed (b) property, including fish, confiscated?

6. How many days of work were lost by employees of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans in appearing at these proceedings and what is the estimated cost to the department of this time lost?

7. In each case of acquittal, was confiscated property, including fish, returned to the owner(s) in good condition or was alternative compensation given and, if so, what was the nature of such compensation?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): The Department of Fisheries and Oceans does not keep separate statistics concerning the prosecution of native Indians as this could be interpreted to be discriminatory. For example, in 1979, several agencies questioned a form used by the department in reference to fishing activities which distinguished between "white" and "coloured" fishermen. The form was changed immediately.

The information requested would require a search of approximately 6,000 prosecution files from 1975 to 1980 in area and district fisheries offices throughout B.C. as well as at regional headquarters in Vancouver. It is estimated that the search would take up to eight person months to complete at a cost of $15-25,000. Regional staff would not be available to conduct such a search during the summer and fall fishing season; therefore, the department would have to contract the work.

SURVEY CONDUCTED BY DSS

Question No. 2,210—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was a survey recently sent out by the Department of Supply and Services and, if so (a) for what purpose (b) was it sent to approximately 1,000 business persons or companies (c) was it signed by the deputy minister, Mr. David Kirkwood (d) did the questionnaire ask if recipients were satisfied with the speed at which they were being paid by the department for work performed?

2. Has the department been concerned with the efficiency or otherwise of the cheque-issuing process and, if so (a) for what reasons (b) what is being done to correct the situation?

3. As of March 6, 1981, how many replies to the questionnaire have been received?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes.

(a) In accordance with Office of the Comptroller General policy, all components of the department's programs are subject to evaluation on a five-year cyclical basis. This survey is to obtain information for an evaluation of the component which includes the system to pay suppliers of goods and services.

(b) Yes.

(c) Yes.

(d) One question asked recipients how satisfied they were with the performance of the federal government's payment of invoices.

2. The department is always interested in the efficiency of the cheque-issuing process. However, this survey is not based on any special concern but is part of an evaluation process as explained in the response to 1(a).

3. Two hundred and one.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, a point of order.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if question No. 681 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Stevens: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Andre: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: The only points of order I can entertain now are points of order relating to the proceedings. No others are allowed at this time.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, my point of order is very much on a question of proceedings. Citation 232 in Beauchesne reads as follows:

> Points of order are questions raised with the view of calling attention to any departure from the Standing Orders or the customary modes of proceeding in debate or in the conduct of legislative business and may be raised at virtually any time by any member, whether he has previously spoken or not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Subsection 3 of Citation 233 states:

> Since the introduction of a time limit on the daily oral Question Period it has become the custom for the Speaker to recognize points of order only at the conclusion of the Question Period.

Citation 235 states:

> Any member is entitled, even bound, to bring to the Speaker's immediate notice any instance of what he considers a breach of order. He may interrupt and lay the point in question concisely before the Speaker. He should do so as soon as he perceives an irregularity in the proceedings which are engaging the attention of the House. The Speaker's attention must be directed to a breach of order at the proper moment, namely the moment it occurred. A point of order may be taken after a debate is concluded—

And the citation goes on.

Would you kindly explain for my benefit and perhaps the benefit of other members of this House why you are ruling that points of order at the present time are, in fact, out of order?

Mr. Crosbie: On what authority?

Madam Speaker: What the hon. member just stated is absolutely correct. I can entertain points of order relating to routine proceedings but I cannot entertain points of order relating to something that is not before the House.

I would draw the attention of the hon. member to the citation which says:

> The Speaker's attention must be directed to a breach of order at the proper moment—

I am telling the House that whatever points of order were raised earlier were not raised at the proper moment, namely, the moment they occurred.

An hon. Member: This is right after question period.

Madam Speaker: We have nothing before the House at the present time. Unless the hon. member wants to point out to me now any irregularity regarding the routine proceedings, I cannot hear the point. If the point is on routine proceedings, I will hear him with pleasure.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I wonder if all members of the House of Commons do not now have a question of privilege. That question of privilege is: whether or not the privileges of all members are being affected as a result of what I respectfully suggest is a misreading of Citation 233 in Beauchesne. This will bring us to the point that points of order are not now being allowed so we can deal with the customary modes of proceeding in the House. I think when we read the blues on this matter tomorrow we will be rather shocked at what happened. But as a result of what happened, especially with respect to the second point of order raised by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) if you do not hear him now, he, having the right to raise it at any time, will have lost his right to deal with a matter which falls within that general dictum of customary modes or proceedings in debate.

Never in eight years have I found that there is only one time to raise a point of order, and no other time, and especially no other time when the new point of order raised by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is on a matter which has been before the House daily.

I rise now because if there is not a point of order—and I say there is a point of order, a point of order having been raised by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition—there is now a question of privilege. It is the right and a privilege of members now to be heard—not just any member. It is the privilege of the Leader of the Opposition to be heard when he rises in an orderly way. Surely it is flying in the face of the dictum as well if he must wait to be heard.

Mr. Caccia: He was not here.

Mr. Kempling: Go on another trip, Charlie.

Mr. Nowlan: Go on another trip to Europe, the IPU.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I am not talking about the first one, I am talking about the second point of order. I say, with respect, that by failing to hear the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, another paragraph in Beauchesne is being affected. That affects my rights and privileges.

Our rules do not end with the Standing Orders. The Standing Orders are only the clarification for some things. They are not the Bible. They are not the whole text. They are not the old and the New Testament. They may be one testament but not all of it. We have some customs and some rules which are enshrined in Beauchesne's fifth edition, in May's and all the rest of them. One is that a point of order is always in order with respect to the conduct of legislative business.

Legislative business is not just a bill which might be before the House, it is the whole process of the House of Commons. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is not an ordinary member. He raised a new point of order in the conduct of legislative business, when it is always in order, according to Citation 233 in Beauchesne, to raise a matter calling attention to any departure from the customary modes of proceeding in debate or in the conduct of legislative business.

Part of the conduct of legislative business in this House does not mean just government orders. Part of the conduct of the business of this House includes all the routine proceedings which we are in the middle of right now.

For that reason, I ask you to consider very carefully the position we are in now, at least with respect to the second point of order raised by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. Because you have ruled on the first one and I cannot argue with that, but by not permitting him to proceed on his second point, without even listening to his argument beyond a sentence or two, you may have violated his privileges and you may, by so ruling, affect the privileges of every one of us to speak in accordance with the customary modes and proceedings in debate or in the conduct of legislative business.

However, the Standing Orders, the rules, règlement, customs, traditions and precedents go much beyond that. They are not nice, clear cut things you can punch into a computer and have an answer come out. One of the things those rules, customs and precedents are there to protect is my right as a Member of Parliament to rise at any time, that is on a matter or a question of privilege.

Other members should be heard with respect to that question of privilege. That goes fundamentally to our place in this House, to our ability to discuss and debate public issues and to raise public issues at the time they come up, particularly an officer of the House, as is the Leader of the Opposition.

It is not just my privileges that are affected. We are in grave danger of affecting everybody's privileges by what I call a legalism. With respect to the legalism, there is more to the rules of this House than merely the Standing Orders. There are the traditions, precedents and customs. In the discretion which you have in dealing with the question of privilege I now raise, you deal with the ability of members to function in terms of order in this House. That will be sadly affected. That affects my privileges as a member. That is why there must be another way of approaching this situation in order to permit the Leader of the Opposition to raise a point of order which by Citation 233 can be raised at any time there is "any departure from the Standing Orders" which is one thing, "the customary modes" which is something else, "proceeding in debate", something else or "the conduct of legislative business".

Although it is entitled routine proceedings on the order paper, that is only a label. The essence of it is that it is part of the legislative business of the House of Commons. I therefore ask you, Madam Speaker, to consider it from the point of view of a question of privilege that I raise, because I happen to have been recognized, on behalf of all members of the House, particularly the Leader of the Opposition who I respectfully suggest ought to be able to continue this argument now.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) for keeping his voice down, but I say to him that to call what he raised a question of privilege is a misnomer. It is not a question of privilege. He used that phrase to criticize a ruling of the Chair. I point out that under Standing Order 12 a ruling of the Chair is not debatable, cannot be appealed and there cannot be any discussion on it. Your Honour ruled that although the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) might well have other opportunities to raise a point of order, he does not have the opportunity or the right to raise a point of order during routine proceedings unless it is a point of order with respect to something in routine proceedings. I submit to Your Honour that we are in for trouble if under the device of calling it privilege we are going to have these attacks on the Chair. I hope my friend will think very seriously before he does that sort of thing again.

While I am on my feet, I want to say a word or two about this myth, even though it is based on a few words in Citation 233, that a point of order can be raised at any time. My friend the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) recited that a moment ago. It is like being able to present a motion to adjourn at any time. It is not that. You can present a motion to adjourn at any time that you properly get the floor to do that. As for the right to raise a point of order at any time, my friend from Nepean-Carleton read the very words:

—when one needs to call attention to any departure from the Standing Orders.

Has there been any departure from the Standing Orders in the tabling of documents, statements by ministers or answering questions on the Order Paper? Not a bit. I read on:

—or the customary modes of proceeding in debate—

We are not into debate. When we are in a debate you can get up at any time. Many times members get up. They may not have good ground for it but at least they have the right to get up. It continues:

—or in the conduct of legislative business.

Mr. Stevens: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: My friend says yes. We are not in the conduct of legislative business.

Mr. Stevens: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: No, we are not, we are in routine proceedings. We have not got to legislative business. We did not get to it all day Tuesday, I suppose we will not get to it all day today and I do not suppose we will get to it all day tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. Knowles: There you are. I have been through this kind of thing before. I plead with my friends in all corners of the House to recognize that the most important thing in a situation like this is the preservation of Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: One of the ways to preserve Parliament is to preserve and protect the person we put in the Chair to guide and direct the deliberations of this House. Attacks on the person in the Chair can lead to serious consequences.

I repeat, Madam Speaker, we are not in legislative business, we are not in debate. No one can allege with respect to what we are dealing with, namely, the various items under routine proceedings, that there has been any departure from the Standing Orders. If there has been such a departure, let a member get up and say so, but let him cite it and say what it is. We have not heard that.

If you erred at all, Madam Speaker, it is not in the ruling that you gave that the Leader of the Opposition should wait until another time. If you erred at all, it is in not proceeding one by one down the items of routine proceedings until we get to government orders and something gets called. If in that process anything is done that is wrong, if the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette) who just tabled questions, I think that is what he was doing in the hubbub, did something wrong or did not answer somebody's question and that member wants to get up and raise a point of order, that is legitimate, but the point of order has to relate to what is before the House.

That is spelled out again in one of the citations which the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton read. In 235, referring to members, it states:

He should do so as soon as he perceives an irregularity in the proceedings which are engaging the attention of the House.

What has been engaging the attention of the House this afternoon and tonight—routine proceedings, presenting reports by standing and special committees, tabling of documents, statements by ministers, introduction of bills, first reading of Senate public bills, government notices of motions, motions and questions on the Order Paper. These are the things that have been engaging the attention of the House, and at any point anything was out of order with respect to those items would have been the proper subject of a point of order. But to get up and claim that it is a point of order as to whether or not the sub judice doctrine is being respected in the case of the constitutional package simply has no relation to those now engaging the attention of the House. If we cannot respect these rules and respect the Speaker when she draws our attention to the rules, we are in for the kind of trouble that I do not want to see during the next ten days this House is in session.

An hon. Member: What happens after ten days?

Mr. Knowles: My hon. friend asks what could happen in the next ten days? I said earlier that we might have a day like this tomorrow and the answer from the Tories was that we would. I hope they will reconsider that I hope they have not had a council of war and they think they can proceed to tear this House apart.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: Talk to the government.

An hon. Member: When are you going to get a cabinet post, Stan?

An hon. Member: You might accept the Senate before you are through.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, I do not mind these insults. Of course, I have just had the worst insult of all, the suggestion that I would go to the Senate; never!

I do plead that we calm down. Later on tonight I hope we will get to Item No. 41. When we reach that a discussion on a point of order or several points of order that are already before the House, will be quite in order. When we get back some day to 36, which is the constitutional package, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition in my view would be perfectly in order in rising on a point of order and saying, with respect to what would then be engaging the attention of the House, that in his view it is out of order.

But now, Madam Speaker, I plead, not just through you, but to my friends in the House, that if you try to go on from the present item to the next they do not howl as they did a few moments ago. In my view, you are doing your best, you should stay with it and you are perfectly right that while routine proceedings are engaging the attention of the House it is not in order to raise a point of order with respect to something else altogether.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) said in his intervention he hoped there was another way we could hear the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). I hope so, too, because I would like to accommodate him, if it is at all possible according to our rule. However, there is not another way. I have to insist that what I said awhile ago, confirmed now by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), is the only way I can proceed.

I would remind the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton that points of order cannot be raised indiscriminately. For example, tonight we could not raise a point of order on a borrowing bill; it is not before the House and is not relevant to the present proceedings of the House. He quoted Citation 233, but it is not relevant to this particular situation. We are not at the present time conducting legislative business. We might come to it but we are not there at the present time, nor are we in debate. Therefore, I do have to rule that I cannot hear points of order unless they relate to routine proceedings. For example, if there is a point of order on questions on the Order Paper, which I have just called, I can entertain that. I have just called questions on the Order Paper and I will hear the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette) on that matter, and then we will proceed from there.

Some hon. Members: Point of order.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I had read out the numbers, and I did ask that if No. 681 could be made an order for return, the return would be tabled immediately. It was given to one of the ushers but I did not get your consent to do that. Following that I would ask that all remaining questions be allowed to stand.

An hon. Member: Question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: The questions have been—

Some hon. Members: Point of order.

Madam Speaker: The questions have been—

An hon. Member: A question of privilege takes precedence over any order.

Madam Speaker: Order. I will hear that at the proper time when I finish dealing with the questions on the Order Paper. Members know that usually I listen to the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council on questions on the Order Paper, that is the normal and usual procedure. I will deal with that and then I can hear points of order if there are any. For the time being the parliamentary secretary has the floor.

An hon. Member: Not on a question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: I will terminate with that procedure. The questions as enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure—

An hon. Member: Point of order.

Madam Speaker: I heard the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) say he had a question relating to the questions on the Order Paper and I will give him the floor.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, my question No. 1,418, asked on July 9, has not been answered. It is a simple question. I asked the government what money they loaned to Tanzania, whether the loans had been extended, what was the interest rate and was there any default? It is a simple matter and the government has not answered. My point of order is simply this, Madam Speaker: Why has that not been answered? Is it embarrassing to the government? Have they given away the taxpayers' money? That is important in other debates before this House and we want to know.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, since it appears there may be a number of interventions on points of order concerning questions on the Order Paper I will sit down and hear them all and deal with the answers seriatim, if that is acceptable. If you would like me to jump up and down after every member and say: I will do my best to get the answer, I am quite prepared to do that, I need the exercise.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member is not the only one jumping up and down tonight. I would urge him to answer the question as it was asked by the hon. member for Mississauga South. If there are others I guess he can rise and answer them too.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I shall do my best to give that answer.

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, I would like to bring some questions on the Order Paper to the attention of the parliamentary secretary. On December 9 I put a question on the Order Paper, No. 1,852. It is a simple two-part question dealing with the chairman of the Canadian Film Development Corporation. I asked whether or not he was included in the corporation's conflict of interest guidelines. I also asked whether he maintained an interest in a private law practice and, if so, with which firms and in what capacity, and whether or not the firm conducts business on behalf of clients in the film industry.

This is a very simple question, Madam Speaker, one that was put on the Order Paper three and a half months ago as a result of representations made to me by a private citizen concerned about this particular issue. I would have thought it possible for the parliamentary secretary, if he was concerned about doing his job and ensuring that Members of Parliament got swift answers to questions on the Order Paper, to have found it possible in three and a half months to get an answer to a question this simple.

I would also like to refer to two other questions, Madam Speaker, which have sat on the Order Paper now for two and a half months. The parliamentary secretary will note that questions No. 1,907 and No. 1,908 have sat on the Order Paper since January 12. Question no. 1,907 deals with the government's failure to promote the Telidon system at INTELCOM '80 in Los Angeles, and I asked why that was not done. I asked other related questions dealing with the whole issue of the government's promotion of that system. As the parliamentary secretary knows, I am this side's spokesman on communications and I think this is an issue which is germane to consideration of communication issues, and is one which could have been answered in that period of time.

Madam Speaker, the other question which I bring to your attention is No. 1,908 dealing with the CBC, and whether it was possible for independents to borrow CBC documentaries. Again, that is a very simple question which could have been answered over the course of two and a half months.

I think the delays here raise very serious questions about the utility of putting questions on the Order Paper, because if questions which are as simple as this stay on the Order Paper for two and a half or three months that renders the Order Paper useless as a means of obtaining information.

Members of Parliament put questions on the Order Paper because (a) they are of a technical nature and they cannot be asked in the oral question period, and (b) because they believe that a public response should be given. The vehicle of the question on the Order Paper enables us to do that. But what we find is that questions are put on the Order Paper, sit there indefinitely with no answer forthcoming, and that renders this vehicle absolutely useless. There are over 200 questions on the Order Paper ahead of the one I have mentioned, the one I put there on December 9. I have two questions among those two hundred which have sat on the Order Paper unanswered. It seems to me the system we have been following is one which has been very unsatisfactory for all sides of the House, because hon. members on all sides have questions on the Order Paper which remain unanswered.

I think it is incumbent upon the parliamentary secretary to give an answer to the members of the House as to what action he will take to ensure that simple questions which are placed on the Order Paper receive responses within a reasonable period of time. Perhaps, if it is not possible for him to do that, it would be appropriate for the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization to look at the whole procedure being followed here to see whether there are other mechanisms which can be followed to enable Members of Parliament to seek and obtain this sort of information from the government in a timely manner.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I am in agreement with one part of the comment made by the hon. member opposite, and that is that this whole practice of questions on the Order Paper should be looked at by the Standing Committee on Organization and Procedure. Last fall I made some public comments on the practice of one member having many questions on the Order Paper which are very expensive to answer. It engendered some public debate between the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt), myself and other hon. members. I certainly would take that point, and I commend the hon. member for bringing it forward this evening. Perhaps we should be looking at this particular aspect of our proceedings.

The hon. member talked about the delay in answering questions. I have repeated, on a number of occasions, that we have answered almost 80 per cent of the questions on the Order Paper. I would like to raise it to a 100 per cent, but the session is not yet over. Take for example, question No. 1,907 of the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) concerning Telidon. In part three of that question the hon. member says:

> Has the government any estimates of promotional budgets for competitive systems produced in other countries and, if so, what are such estimates?

That is a tall order to fill; to get that kind of information in two months, three months, or even six months. We have to find out who are our competitors. It is very difficult, in some respects, to find out who the competitors are because not every country is forthcoming with this information.

If my reply is somewhat lengthy, I am only trying to accommodate, I am sure, the very sincere questions of the hon. member opposite.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I would ask the parliamentary secretary to perhaps give the House an explanation as to why I have not received to this date—although it is over four months since I asked for it—an answer to question No. 1,774. This question deals with the estimated expenditures of de Havilland Aircraft of Canada for (a) advertising, (b) free or subsidized publication, and (c) other information conveyed to the public. I raise this particularly because, as we know, this is one of those unfortunate one dollar items that were included in the supplementary estimates and eventually passed in the bill that went through the House last night. I think it is unforgivable that the government, four months after the request, has not seen fit to give the House an explanation as to what, in fact, has been spent by that corporation in connection with the items I set out in my question.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I am glad we are having this exhaustive interrogation about this item because it gives me an opportunity to explain some of the limitations I have in bringing these answers to the House.

The particular question raised by the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), question No. 1,774, dealing with de Havilland Aircraft of Canada, deals with a company which I believe is a Crown corporation or the greatest shareholder is the Government of Canada. But one must realize that de Havilland Aircraft must operate within the marketplace, must keep certain information to itself if it is to compete with other companies. As a result, in respect of questions of this nature, when we are talking about the business practices of Crown corporations, or any company in which the federal government has a large interest, we have to respect—and I am sure the hon. members opposite would respect, given their support and belief in the principle of free enterprise—that there is only so much information we can make public without jeopardizing the commercial prospects of these companies. That could very well be the reason there has been a delay. However, I would again ask the hon. member for York-Peel, what constitutes a delay? Each question must be looked at in its own context.

There were questions raised by the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville concerning the Taschereau papers. This matter has come before the House in the last few weeks. I would like to inform the House that it took two years to bring these answers forward because they dealt with a very sensitive matter. The Taschereau papers were being reviewed, as was mentioned in those answers, and this is a very complex matter that goes back 40 years.

My purpose in giving this reply is to let the hon. member and others know that this is not a simple and easy matter of putting a question on the Order Paper and expecting a reply as of yesterday. Each question must be looked at in its own context. I believe it will then become apparent why replies are quick in coming forward or are slow.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, partly in the context of what the parliamentary secretary has now said, I noted that his rationalization for not giving us the information with respect to de Havilland was that it was a commercial concern, and that I would respect, in the free enterprise system, that sometimes that type of information cannot be made public. It is obvious to every hon. member that if that, in truth, was the answer, it could presumably have been given a week after I asked the question, and I could have taken appropriate steps to try to obtain the information from other sources.

My second point of order concerns question No. 1,775. This is another question which has been outstanding for four months. This question makes the same requests I made with respect to de Havilland, but this time we are dealing with the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I think the parliamentary secretary could perhaps offer an explanation to the House now as to why—in the case of a clear Crown corporation clearly there is no question of free enterprise or competitive advantage—they have chosen to keep secret what that company has been spending on advertising, free or subsidized publications or other information conveyed to the public.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I answered this question in part; I think it was yesterday. I am just trying to find the reference in Hansard. Perhaps this was in response to the hon. member for Dufferin-Grey-Waterloo. I may have that wrong. I am sorry.

An hon. Member: It may be a question of privilege, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Collenette: I stand to be corrected. I know that I was using the old boundary name before redistribution the last time, and I regret that, but I think everyone knows who I am talking about. Quite simply, there are a number of questions posed by this hon. member and the hon. member for York-Peel concerning the advertising budgets of various government departments, Crown corporations, and, as I said yesterday, we are trying to get the information in a group so we can present it to the House rather than give isolated answers. Some of the information is available on that series of questions and will be brought forward as soon as we get the information from other departments, so there is no real mystery on that particular question.

The hon. member for York-Peel talked about de Havilland Aircraft of Canada. I am not saying that is the reason, but I am simply saying this is the general constraint I sometimes find, when dealing with Crown corporations. Certain information cannot be released because of the competitive nature of the business that company may be engaged in.

● (2140)

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would point out to the parliamentary secretary that I put questions on the Order Paper asking separately about each company. I did that because I did not want the government to have the excuse, which the parliamentary secretary is now offering, to group all of the companies together before the parliamentary secretary could give us the entire answer. However, I will not press for information concerning certain expenditures of various other companies that is still outstanding. Let me refer the parliamentary secretary to question No. 2,042 in which I asked:

> 1. What was the total cost of the Prime Minister's December-January world tour?
> 2. What percentage of the total cost of the trip will be paid by the Canadian taxpayer?

I think this is something which is of great interest and I would like an explanation to be given to the House why, so long after the tour, we are still waiting for an answer to my question.

Mr. Collenette: I cannot answer that particular question tonight but I will try to look into it for the hon. member.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, my question too is on the failure of the parliamentary secretary to answer what would seem fairly simple questions on the Order Paper. I was glad to hear him say that the time taken depends on the context of the question. He is quite right. Simple questions should be answered much more quickly than the complex ones.

I asked a question on December 15 because of an answer he had tabled shortly before concerning the increase in real terms in the expenditures of the Department of National Defence. The answer which came back said that this excluded statutory costs. So I simply asked:

> What has been the increase in the real terms in the Department of National Defence's expenditures, including statutory costs, for each fiscal year 1970-71 through 1979-80?

All they had to do was to add statutory costs. I am sure that had I asked this question during consideration of the defence estimates, I would have had the answer before the end of the meeting; the question is that simple, yet for three months they have been unable to put it on the Order Paper. I fail to understand that. I suspect the reason is they send the questions, and after the department gives the answers to the parliamentary secretary he takes them to the Privy Council where they get lost in the morass. I cannot see why they are unable to answer such a simple question in less than three months.

I am tempted to run this into two points of order and to include both questions I am complaining about tonight under the same point of order. My next question is similar to the one raised by my colleague who has just spoken. It is question No. 2,035 which reads:

1. Was a Canadian forces 707 aircraft committed to the Prime Minister's use during his recent European-African-South American trip and, if so, for how many days and hours?

2. Were other service aircraft committed and, if so, for how many days and hours?

3. What was the total itemized cost for transportation of the entire trip?

I asked this, Madam Speaker, because I like to keep track of the money the Department of National Defence is spending. I am quite aware of the system they have used previously for working out the cost of a variety of flights of members and cabinet ministers. It was simplified almost to the extent of using a template. You just moved it to the type of aircraft and the number of hours. They would multiply the figures for you and give you the cost. It is quite simple. I did not make it complex. I did not ask for the extra cost of the Prime Minister's party being lost for a week in Austria. I did not ask if they had phoned for substitutes for the avocados he missed so much. I did not ask if they had to rent those running shoes which he was shown wearing in Brazil. It was nothing complicated at all. I did not ask if he had to stay in a hotel in Algeria because nobody would speak to him. I think these answers should be forthcoming as quickly as possible, and I am looking forward to hearing from the parliamentary secretary in a few days. I am sorry the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) is not here because I would like to say I do not believe it is the fault of the Department of National Defence, and there is no truth to the rumour that he is attending NATO exercises in Poland.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I regret that the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) appears to believe that the question asked by her colleague, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), is so funny. I think he has a legitimate and very serious question and I shall do my best to get the answers.

I would say to the hon. member for Victoria, however, that he answered his own question a few minutes ago when he said he could easily go to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence when the estimates are before that committee to get the information he sought through the Order Paper. This proves one of the points I have been raising from time to time, that a lot of the questions on the Order Paper are unnecessary. I would respectfully suggest the hon. member should take that route if he is assured of getting such a quick answer. Certainly I am doing my best to get an answer from the Department of National Defence.

With respect to question No. 2,035, it is linked to the question previously raised by the hon. member for York-Peel concerning the Prime Minister's recent visit. I expect that when an answer to that question comes, we can also expect an answer to question No. 2,035 since they are linked.

Madam Speaker: I had urged the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council to answer each question as it was raised, but I had no idea that this many questions would be asked. I will leave it to his discretion, whether he wants to answer them all at once or as they are asked. He had asked me if he could do that, but there are so many now. I leave it to his discretion.

Mr. Clark: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, on that matter. We have heard a great deal tonight about the importance of observing the customs and practices of the House of Commons. The custom of the House of Commons has been for a specific answer to be given to a question that was put specifically on Order Paper matters. I am sure Your Honour would want to retain that kind of consistency in ruling, and I am sure you would not want to allow the parliamentary secretary to depart from that consistency. Naturally I would leave it to him to exercise his judgment in his usual way to ensure that he responds specifically to each specific question that is raised.

Madam Speaker: I would point out to the Leader of the Opposition that the custom goes both ways. This is left to the discretion of the parliamentary secretary. A while ago I urged him to answer the questions one by one because I thought this would be more orderly, but now that I see there are a lot of questions and time is running out, I leave it to his discretion. There is nothing wrong with the custom. It has been done before.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, my point of order arises out of what the parliamentary secretary just said, that I could ask these questions at the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. He is quite right, except that at the time I wanted the answers, which was three months ago, there were no estimates before the House. I am surprised to hear him suggesting that I should be putting questions like this in committee when the committee is not sitting.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: The other reason is that I am not unaware what happens if you try to obtain answers to oral questions that are detailed. That is what the Order Paper is for. If a question is detailed you are supposed to give the routine an opportunity to work. Unfortunately, it is not working very well these days and that is why there are so many people here with points of order.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Obviously this is a complete farce and sham—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: He is out of order.

Mr. Waddell: Any five-year old would recognize that, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: I submit, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am anticipating the same thing hon. members are thinking just now, but I must at least hear a few sentences of what the hon. member says in order to know whether he does have a point of order which is related to routine proceedings.

Mr. Waddell: My point is, Madam Speaker, that you should simply not recognize members and move on.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: I thank the hon. member for that advice, but I cannot follow it.

• (2150)

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I am hoping the parliamentary secretary will exercise a great deal of discretion. I am most interested in hearing the contextual rationale for the delay in answering a question which I placed on the Order Paper on October 6.

An hon. Member: Is this the British House of Commons?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): This is not the British House of Commons, in any event. In October I asked for some extracts of the public accounts as to the expenditures on airport improvements and capital outlays. Of course the parliamentary secretary will be aware—apparently I do not have his attention, so I shall wait until I do—that I have on more than one occasion stood in my place and asked about the installation of radar at Victoria International Airport. I am rather interested in knowing how many radar installations there have been since I started asking my questions about four years ago, and at what types of airports. I would be interested in knowing the way he will wriggle around this one and explain that there is more in it than the question seems to imply.

I put a second question on the Order Paper on October 7. I thought it was a very simple question. It related to the hon. Senator Perrault and whether he is entitled to exempt staff and, if so, how many? I should have thought by now, five and a half months later, if he has not been employing exempt staff, that fact might have been revealed. If he had exempt staff privileges, as do some ministers, it would have been possible within five and a half months to describe which positions had been filled, what was the job description and qualification for each position, and what is the salary for each position, I feel there is some cause for concern on my part that there should be such a delay in answering these questions.

The other two questions have been on the Order Paper for a less lengthy duration, but they are important questions. Again they request extracts of the public accounts or of the estimates. They relate to the coastguard.

As other hon. members have stood in their places and mentioned, questions are asked when answers are wanted. By the time the answers come, the need for the information which is being sought is sometimes past and out of date. I feel there is just cause for complaint on this side of the House for the lengthy delays.

My questions which have been on the Order Paper for a month concern figures which public servants can extract from the appropriate documents. I know from experience that answers to questions on the Order Paper are of first priority to public servants. It is the first thing each morning that a public servant receives on his desk. He is expected to deal with it expeditiously and get it, through his under secretary, to the minister. I cannot understand the lengthy delays we have been experiencing in this Parliament.

Mr. Neil: Madam Speaker, my point of order concerns a question which I put on the Order Paper approximately ten months ago, in June of last year.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Neil: It was a fairly simple question. It was an inquiry of Statistics Canada as to how many surveys were carried out which required personal contact by an employee with an individual or a householder. It also asked how many full-time and part-time employees were on the payroll in each province.

I put that question on the Order Paper because I received a letter from a constituent who, shortly after filing his income tax return, was called on by one of his neighbours who indicated that he was a part-time employee of Statistics Canada and was asked questions pertaining to his personal income and expenses. My constituent felt that it was rather impertinent of one of his neighbours to ask these personal questions, particularly when he had just filed an income tax return and the information was available to the government. In a very short period of time, that constituent will be filing his 1980 income tax return. I presume he may be called on again by one of his neighbours asking similar questions.

My question is fairly simple. It is directed to Statistics Canada. Since Statistics Canada is the department which keeps the statistics, certainly within a period of ten months it should be able to punch its computer or do whatever is necessary to extract the information I requested in this question.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, once before I asked the hon. parliamentary secretary about question No. 681 which has been on the Order Paper of 11 months and two days. I cannot understand why it is taking so long for my question to be answered, because Parks Canada has a sizeable staff. The reason I am asking this question is because Banff National Park is in my constituency. Many people in my constituency have asked why so many studies are being carried out, but there never is any action. I wanted a list of the studies carried out between 1974 and 1979, the subject of those studies, and whether they were put out to tender or conducted by the staff of Parks Canada. It is not a difficult question. Perhaps the studies have all been completed; they are all in the past. It is a simple case of going through the studies and marking down the three or four points the people of Banff should properly know. I do not think the government wants to withhold that information. At one point I asked the parliamentary secretary why I was not getting an answer. He said he would do his very best, but I cannot understand, for the life of me, what is holding up Parks Canada in regard to answering this question.

In the meantime, more studies are going on, but we do not even know what studies have already been completed. I urge the hon. parliamentary secretary to put a little fire under whoever is supposed to get these answers.

Mr. Towers: Madam Speaker, I suppose we all have our wishes, but I just wish the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) could exchange places with one of my constituents who is facing charges in the Supreme Court of Canada as a result of government policy regarding its metric conversion program. My question No. 811 has been on the Order Paper since May 8 of last year.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Towers: It is a simple question. I feel sorry for the parliamentary secretary because I think the Metric Commission is hanging him out to dry; they are not giving him the answers. This is the fifth time I have asked this question. I think my constituents have a right to an answer. Not only are they paying the costs, they are facing court charges. My question No. 811 reads as follows:

1. By year, what was the total amount of funds disbursed on the metric conversion programme?

2. (a) How many persons are employed under the programme (b) how many man-years are allocated to the programme?

3. (a) How many contract employees or consultants are employed under the programme (b) what was the total amount of funds disbursed, by year, on contract employees or consultants?

4. (a) How many contracts with consultants has the metric programme (b) who are the recipients of the contracts and what is the total amount of their emolument, by year?

5. What was the total amount of money disbursed to date, for paid media advertising to publicize or promote the metric conversion programme?

6. How many letters of comment has the Metric Commission received from concerned Canadians regarding the implementation of the programme and how many were letters (a) of complaint (b) praising the programme?

7. Are weights and measures that have been adopted in the Canadian metric conversion programme fully compatible and interchangeable with weights and measures used by other nations which use the metric system (b) is the Canadian "tonne" fully interchangeable with all other nations?—

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton. It is ten o'clock.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): When I asked the House business question earlier today, which the hon. member for Mississauga South followed up, the government House leader was somewhat imprecise as to what the government's business would be for tomorrow—

Some hon. Members: It is ten o'clock!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He indicated that it might be the borrowing authority bill or it might be something else. I wonder if the Government House Leader can tell us—if he can tell us now—what he intends to bring forward tomorrow.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, when orders of the day are called we will try to move our motion to limit time allocation on the Constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: In accordance with Standing Order 40, a motion to adjourn the House is deemed to have been moved.

ENERGY—DELAY IN CONSTRUCTION OF TAR SANDS PLANT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on November 12 I asked a question of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) concerning the National Energy Program and the dispute which had arisen between the province of Alberta and the federal government concerning energy pricing. I suggested to the minister that he should try to seek an arrangement with the minister of energy for the province of Alberta and that the question of the hold on tar sands and heavy oil plants, which Alberta had placed on these plants, be separated from the general negotiations relating to the pricing of oil, and revenue-sharing with respect to oil.

I suggested that at that time, because of a number of factors. The national resources and public works committee, of which I am a member, in its deliberations last fall discussed the very matter of heavy oils and tar sands. The committee held a number of discussions and meetings with the various companies involved. It became apparent to us that we were dealing with a massive program. The initial tar sands plant, the Syncrude plant, cost $2 billion or $3 billion, but the two plants which are now being discussed will cost some $8 billion to $10 billion and are not something in immediate play in terms of production but, rather, are long-term projects which will take several years to construct. They will require massive amounts of money to construct.

It seemed to me that the dispute between the federal and provincial governments with respect to oil pricing and revenue-sharing would be long settled one way or another before these plants ever come into production. I thought that would be a wise move in order to see this dispute set aside and taken away from the general difficulties which have arisen between the two levels of government. Indeed, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicated that day he had spoken on the phone with the minister of energy for Alberta and would be happy to see that course of action followed. However, as it turned out, it was impossible to have the two points of contention separated. So, the hold which the province of Alberta has had on those heavy oil and tar sands plants continues to this day.

I know the minister is to meet with the minister of energy for Alberta early in April. At that time I certainly hope he will strive to see the two issues separated so that those plants can go ahead. I think this is important because we are dealing not only with a production plant but a plant which has a certain research element in it, and which will not come into production for a number of years.

● (2205)

It seems to me the second factor is that the most hardship is being borne by the communities involved. I have here an article datelined Cold Lake, Alberta which appeared in the November 21 issue of The Gazette. The headline is "Don't delay oil project locals plead". The article begins as follows:

Cold Lake businessmen want Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed to let Imperial Oil Ltd.'s $9 billion Cold Lake heavy oil project proceed.

It states that Wayne Kowalski, former president of the Grand Centre Chamber of Commerce, is planning a meeting with the premier. His brother is the MLA for Barrhead, Alberta. He pointed out how important it is to see that these projects go forward.

I think the most devastating impact is felt by communities like Cold Lake and others in Alberta. Much of the steel industry in eastern Canada is working at near capacity, so the harmful effect is there.

I hope when the ministers have a meeting early in April that they will try to set this aside. The federal government has shown some good will by moving a reference price up to $38 per barrel, escalated to the CPI in the future.

Alberta has a very heavy club to use on the federal government and the eastern consumers by cutting off 60,000 barrels per day every 90 days until September. I believe this results in an increase of 75 cents to $1 per barrel every time production is reduced by 60,000 barrels. With that kind of bargaining tool, I do not think he has to shortchange the future on these tar sands plants. This is causing a lot of difficulty for the local communities out west, and at the same time sets back the time when we are going to be self-sufficient in oil from the heavy oil and tar sands plants in the future.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I join with the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) in hoping that we will soon see the commencement of the oil sands plants, a statement which the minister has also made on a number of occasions recently.

The government is fully committed to the expeditious development of western Canada's non-conventional petroleum resources. On November 12 the minister expressed his support for the concept put forward by the hon. member for Algoma that a separate "oil sands" agreement, independent of a general oil pricing agreement, be negotiated.

The record shows that the national government has always been ready to ensure that oil sands and heavy oil projects will take place. In this context, hon. members will recall that the federal government took the initiative in February, 1975, to save the Syncrude project. At that time the governments of Alberta and Ontario, and the three private participants, responded and the project went ahead on schedule.

Examination of the National Energy Program will show the emphasis being placed on oil sands and heavy oil development through such measures as the maintenance of the depletion allowance, the provision of special tax incentives for heavy oil upgrading plants, and the application of reference prices at or close to international prices to encourage the opening up of these resources.

The immediate development of the oil sands and heavy oil resources is especially important in the light of Alberta's declining conventional oil reserves. New discoveries are becoming more difficult to find. While the remaining undiscovered conventional oil is of an impressive magnitude—perhaps 3 billion barrels—it cannot be located quickly enough to compensate for declining producibility. Therefore, the National Energy Program has established a policy of steadily rising incentives to find this oil. It has been estimated that netbacks will almost quadruple during this decade. This will assure orderly development of this declining resource.

I should like to re-emphasize the efforts that the federal government has made during the past year to reach an accord with Alberta on the pricing of oil and gas and, in particular, on the basis of getting new oil sands projects under way. Throughout these discussions we have been willing to show considerable flexibility. For example, when it became apparent last October that an over-all pricing agreement with Alberta would be impossible at an early date, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) endeavoured to guarantee the future of the tar sands plants. In a meeting with the Alberta minister of energy he proposed a generous incentive price for tar sands oil which would be escalated annually with inflation.

When Alberta was not prepared to negotiate, the federal government then offered to loan $40 million to Imperial Oil so that the Cold Lake project would not be abandoned. These and other examples will show the degree to which the government of Canada is eager to see these projects go forward.

NUCLEAR ENERGY—SAFEGUARDS RESPECTING SALES OF NUCLEAR REACTORS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): My question on March 18, 1981, concerned the drastically reduced sale of Candu reactors by Canadians as the result of strict adherence to nuclear safeguards by this country without similar commitments by other nuclear exporting countries.

My question specifically asked what steps Canada has been taking through the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna to upgrade international standards to those of Canada, ensuring that the sales be used for peaceful purposes only and thereby giving Canada a more competitive position in Candu sales.

This question is raised by the fact that Canada has been instrumental in developing a very special nuclear reactor system named Candu. Candu has been developed rather slowly compared with most competing systems and with the utmost regard for the economics of power production and safety. It offers the possibility of clean, minimally-polluting power on a large scale at least for the next 50 years. During this time the fossil fuels of oil, natural gas, and coal will become gradually exhausted. It will give the human race a breathing space in which to make long-term plans.

Nuclear power need not cause any chemical pollution. The radioactive products of a fission reactor can be entirely contained in principle. The one genuine objection to nuclear power is the manufacture of plutonium.

The significant feature of various Candu reactors is that they function on fuel containing natural uranium. Most other commercial power reactor systems require enriched fuel; that is, they require the addition of separated uranium-235 or plutonium. Ours uses heavy water as the moderator, conserving neutrons. A great deal of thought and expense have gone into isolating from the outside world the system in the Candu reactor with a heavy concrete vault which has a special built-in huge vacuum mechanism to extract excess steam in the event of any serious leakage. Many other safety features are incorporated and are too technical to detail.

The reactor is acknowledged as technically superior to almost any other in the industrialized world. It should, therefore, be highly marketable and one on which a profit should be realized, instead of requiring repeated federal financial assistance for continued operation.

Since 1945 Canada has played a significant role in defining the international regime which has set up rigid safeguards and standards to eliminate the use of atomic energy for destructive purposes and to promote its widest use for industrial and humanitarian purposes, as per the Declaration of Atomic Energy of November, 1949.

Since 1955, it helped to organize the International Atomic Energy Agency which came into being in 1957, Canada has been on its board of governors since that founding date.

In 1974, when India detonated its "peaceful nuclear explosion", the Canadian government suspended nuclear co-operation with India and the government announced more stringent non-proliferation safeguards covering the export of Canadian nuclear and special material. Since that time the conditions established by this policy were applied to all contracts for nuclear exports, current and future, accepting full-scope safeguards. The government also made clear that it would end nuclear co-operation with any state which exploded a nuclear device.

Thus, by 1976, Canada developed the most far-reaching national safeguard of any nuclear supplier, a policy that went well beyond any other state at the time and beyond that subsequently agreed to in the nuclear suppliers group.

With this preamble, I again direct my stated question to the Parliamentary Secretary for the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Duclos).

• (2215)

Mr. Louis Duclos (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to comment briefly on the hon. member's statement that our sales of Candu reactors to foreign countries are not as good as they should be because our requirements, with respect to nuclear guarantees, are much more stringent than those of other exporting nations. Mr. Speaker, competition is fierce on the nuclear technology international market both for uranium and for the nuclear reactors themselves.

When Canada tries to sell its Candu reactors on this purchasing market, it is with the knowledge that the decision of a prospective client country will rest on a whole series of factors, including the nature of the technology offered, the financial terms, the opportunities for industrial participation and supply diversification and, foremost, the over-all political and economic objectives of the client country. The supplier's policy of non-proliferation and his nuclear guarantees is but one of many factors. Each one of those factors will have a different significance as dictated by the market and it is fair to say that none is likely to have a determining influence.

Mr. Speaker, Canada's nuclear export policy can be summed up as follows: Canada is seeking to export its uranium and its nuclear technology, making sure at the same time that those exports do not contribute to nuclear proliferation.

To meet this last objective, Canada has developed a comprehensive policy of non-proliferation and nuclear safeguards to promote implementation of a more effective non-proliferation international system and to minimize the risk of Canadian nuclear products being put to improper use. When this policy was implemented in December, 1976, the Secretary of State for External Affairs recognized that it was more advanced than that of other suppliers and he stated that Canada was willing to accept all the economic effects that would result from its unequivocal support of nuclear non-proliferation.

To come back to the question asked by the hon. member, during the seventies, Canada made considerable efforts to convince the other nuclear technology supplying countries to implement similar non-proliferation and safeguard policies. We have had considerable though partial success within the Nuclear Suppliers Group which approved in January, 1978, common guidelines concerning transfers of nuclear technology. These guidelines, however, are not as restrictive as the Canadian policy. Canada and other nuclear technology supplying countries with a similar philosophy on the subject, such as Australia and the United States, keep on trying for a greater international consensus in this regard at the meetings of the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna, and more specifically in the committee on security of supply recently established by the agency.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would say that the main objective of Canada is to promote the development of an effective international system of non-proliferation which would be closer to the Canadian standard. However, progress in this regard will be slow and difficult.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS—DELAY IN INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to participate in the only thing of substance today. The question I would like to elaborate on relates back to March 4 when I asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) about his intent in terms of introducing effective competition legislation in light of the oil company study by the director of investigation and research. I suggest that the minister's answers at that time were completely unacceptable. What has basically occurred here is that the minister is not treating some of the manoeuvring of the Canadian economy that has occurred over the past several years in a very serious manner. I think the main item facing us at that time was the investigation into the oil companies restrictive trade practices. I think what we have to look at are events which have taken place over the last few years. They are serious and have put a number of industries in the same kind of position to damage our economy and harm and exploit Canadian consumers. I would like to just point out this is a matter of increasing concentration in the Canadian economy, and there are several figures I would like to record.

In 1975 there were 264 mergers; in 1977 the department recorded 395 mergers. Then, by 1979 they had recorded 551 mergers, showing a definite trend of acceleration. The interesting thing is that by 1978 foreign takeovers had exceeded domestic takeovers. I would suggest that is a very dangerous situation. One of the few inquiries into that kind of activity was conducted by the Bryce commission, but I think its conclusions were not accepted by many people in Canada. People simply did not agree with them.

Within the different sectors of the Canadian economy were four firms accounting for 50 per cent or more of the total shipments involved in a given industry, and I would like to place some of these on the record. The four largest firms in the distillery industry accounted for 83 per cent of shipments; tobacco, 100 per cent; iron and steel, 77 per cent; motor vehicles, 90 per cent; electric wire and cable, 80 per cent; and our old friend sugar refining, 92 per cent. The message there is that what the oil companies did to us, as reported by the director of investigation and research, other companies are in a position to do.

Another matter which really shocks me, is the way in which merger data is gathered by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. They readily admit to running an extensive clipping file, but that is the only mechanism, and it just detects the tip of the iceberg. They do not record assets. In fact, the monitoring system in place has no effective way of assessing the impact on or damage to the Canadian economy that these continuing mergers have.

The suggestion is that the government, which apparently has the regulatory authority, demand that companies wishing to take over a Canadian company be required to give information in advance to the department so we can monitor effectively the effects on the Canadian economy. However, the main flaw is the legislation, and we have been fooling around with this since 1923—the last big thrust in the combines investigation field—and since that time there has been one successful conviction. There has been a tremendous demand over the last few years that this legislation be modified so the Canadian people will have some effective protection, by establishing a civil review procedure for potential mergers and public disclosure. I think the government has been extremely remiss over the last decade or more in not bringing this forward. It now has the opportunity in this session. I realize that we are hamstrung with the proposal before us, but that legislation should be brought into this House for discussion.

There are some very nasty aspects to this situation. I would just quote the government of Saskatchewan on the previous Bill C-13:

> Saskatchewan, for one, is not prepared to agree to the intrusion into areas of provincial jurisdiction that is entailed in the proposed legislation.

I think there are constitutional concerns about this, and concerns on the part of business and the public in general. It is important that the minister lay that legislation before the House as soon as possible so that discussion can begin. This is too important; we cannot leave it any longer. I hope to hear some good news from the parliamentary secretary this evening.

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) on his concern for Canadian consumers. I would like him to know the minister shares those concerns. For some time now we have been concerned about the issues he has raised. I would remind him of the history of our efforts.

It was the Liberal government in 1966 which asked the Economic Council of Canada to examine the entire question of competition policy in Canada and to make recommendations to the government. Subsequent to this report, in 1971 the then minister, the Hon. Ron Basford, tabled Bill C-256 in the House. This bill gave rise to a national debate that was unprecedented for an economic policy of this sort. In order to advance the debate, the government decided in 1973 to go ahead with an initial stage of the bill containing those provisions on which there was the greatest unanimity. The amendments came into force in 1976.

● (2225)

As to the other provisions which were still the subject of widespread disagreement, the government referred them for study to an independent committee set up in 1975. The committee report was made public in 1976 and led to the second stage of the amendments; these were contained in Bill C-42 which was tabled in the House in the spring of 1977.

This bill received first reading and, to speed passage, was immediately referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and to the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. The government had determined to finish this reform of competition policy, and to do so quickly.

As you are aware, the committee was inundated with briefs, which led to further national debate. The committee prepared its report, containing 90 recommendations relating to Bill C-42. Most of these recommendations were adopted by the government and incorporated in Bill C-13, which had its first reading in November, 1977. The government had decided to go ahead, but you will remember that a proposed merger of Argus and Power Corporations was making headlines at the time and Canadians were becoming aware of the danger of having economic power concentrated in the hands of only a few people.

In 1975, the government had set up the Royal Commission on Corporation Concentration, already referred to by the hon. member—the Bryce commission—which reported in the spring of 1978. The Senate committee submitted its report early in the summer of 1978. It seemed prudent to await the recommendations of the royal commission and of the Senate committee before proceeding any further with the amendments to the competition policy.

The House must appreciate the fact that one does not play around with policies that affect the very structure of Canadian industries. Every effort must be made to avoid mistakes, as they are irreparable. It is, moreover, essential that the proposed amendments receive the support of Canadians from all walks of life. In the past this support seemed to be lacking and, though there was general agreement that the act needed revision, no consensus emerged as to the actual amendments. The unprecedented wave of mergers in recent years and the increase in economic concentration have made Canadians aware of the need for action in this area. The director's report on the petroleum industry is another example which clearly shows the need to amend the act.

In our view, because of obvious and recent events, a consensus is now taking shape among Canadians regarding the need to make the Combines Investigation Act more effective and better adapted to Canada's economy. There will always be those who will oppose this reform. But consumers, small and medium-sized businesses and the public in general support it.

The minister intends shortly to table amendments concerning monopolies, mergers and conspiracies that will provide Canada with an effective policy to counteract the harmful effects of economic concentrations. If the proposals in Bill C-13 were lacking in clarity and precision, the amendments to be tabled will set out in precise and unequivocal terms what reprehensible trade practices are. Hence, they will not create the uncertainty which businessmen are so afraid of, but they will protect the interests of the Canadian consumers.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

JAMES BAY AGREEMENT—PROVISION OF HEALTH CARE SERVICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, yesterday in the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development members of this House were subjected to a litany of examples of the complete and utter abrogation of the government's obligations to the Cree and Inuit under the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement. Given the devastating effect that this abrogation has had on the health of the Cree, and specifically in light of the fact that tuberculosis is rampant in at least one Cree village, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare admit her residual responsibility for natives as outlined in Chapter 955 of the Indian health regulations under the Indian Act, and not withdraw health and social services to the Cree as is presently scheduled for March 31, 1981, until all commitments under the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement are fulfilled by both governments involved.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

JAMES BAY AGREEMENT—TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne McCuish (Prince George-Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the James Bay Agreement stipulates that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) must table an implementation report within 60 days of January 1, 1978, followed by annual reports for the following 20 years, and whereas the first of these was submitted 22 months late and the one currently due has still not been tabled, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway):

That the Minister of Indian Affairs immediately table this overdue report and that failure to report this year and any subsequent year as per the agreement shall be considered contempt of Parliament.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

JAMES BAY AGREEMENT—APPOINTMENT OF IMPLEMENTATION COMMISSIONER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my motion under Standing Order 43 is on the same matter. In view of the fact that the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement sets a critical precedent for future land claims settlements, and that the terms of this agreement have not been honoured by either the federal or Quebec governments, a situation that has created great hardship and resentment among the native people this agreement was designed to benefit, I moved, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That this government appoint an Implementation Commissioner with powers of the type enjoyed by the Commissioner of Official Languages and Human Rights, in order to oversee the implementation of this agreement and any further similar agreements between this Parliament and Canada's native peoples and that no further transfer of responsibilities from the federal government to provincial and native governments occur until this Commissioner tables an annual report to Parliament showing that all federal responsibilities to the James Bay Cree and Inuit peoples have been fulfilled.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

JAMES BAY AGREEMENT—GOVERNMENT IMPLEMENTATION OF AGREEMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on this same important and urgent matter. Since it is now clear that the James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Agreement has been breached repeatedly by a government acting in bad faith, with flagrant disregard for legal and moral responsibilities under the agreement, and since this government is presently threatening to abrogate health responsibilities as of March 31, 1981, withholding essential core funding to the Cree Regional Authority and quibbling over responsibility for improving desperate living conditions, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent):

That the government stop this shameful performance and immediately implement the agreement according to the spirit and the letter of the law.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FISHERIES

ISSUANCE OF NON-INUIT FISHING LICENCES FOR NORTHERN REGIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, my question under Standing Order 43 is on this same important subject. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) has demonstrated a lack of concern for the well-being of the northern fisheries as well as the Inuit people who depend on that fishery for 70 per cent of their diet, by licensing six fishing vessels, in spite of inadequate environmental and ecological information, and the fact that the Inuit developed the fishery. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

That the minister suspend all non-Inuit fishing licences in the James Bay and Ungava area pending an environmental impact study.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

JAMES BAY AGREEMENT—REIMBURSEMENT OF EXPENDITURES TO CREE AND INUIT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, whereas the federal government has failed to deliver services as provided in the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement, and since the result of this failure is that the Cree and Inuit have spent a total of $37 million of their own funds to provide such services to their people, I move, under Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway):

That the government reimburse in full the Inuit and the Cree for moneys spent, by the end of this fiscal year.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL PENSIONS CONFERENCE

REPRESENTATION OF TORONTO TASK FORCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The mayor's task force on disabled and elderly in the city of Toronto has been denied a seat at the National Pensions Conference scheduled for next week in Ottawa. In view of the large number of people that they represent in Toronto, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare be asked to reverse her decision and invite representation from the mayor's task force.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

CONSERVATIVE PARTY POSITION IN PARLIAMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, whereas this House has been debating a Conservative Party amendment on the Constitution for six weeks—

An hon. Member: Who wrote this, Bob?

Mr. Rae: —and the Conservative Party has been engaged in a systematic strategy, which it is continuing now, of preventing other parties from presenting their own constitutional amendments on women's rights and native people,—

An hon. Member: Go to the Senate, Bob.

Mr. Rae: —and preventing this House from even considering its own business, thereby gagging Parliament, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose):

That this House reaffirms its obligation to the country to consider, with full and fair debate, all matters of substance and concern to the people of Canada, and regrets the systematic obstruction of any improvements to the constitutional resolution currently being carried on by the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EMPLOYMENT

CUTBACKS IN MANPOWER TRAINING PROGRAMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, due to the cutbacks announced in the Canada Manpower Training Program, Connestoga College, centred in Kitchener-Waterloo, and other community colleges across Ontario, will have to discontinue programs abruptly in midstream, dashing the hopes of trainees for employment. Many of the affected courses have a 100 per cent employment record with great support from local industry. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That this House call upon the Minister of Employment and Immigration to explain to Parliament why these programs have been cancelled at a time of high unemployment and shortage of manpower with basic skills.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

GRAIN

COMPENSATION TO FARMERS FOR EMBARGO ON SHIPMENTS TO RUSSIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that uncertainty still surrounds the decision on compensation to prairie grain producers for losses arising from the Russian grain embargo, and in view of the fact that there has been no relief from the high interest rates and input costs facing the grain producers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski):

That cabinet make a decision on the amount of compensation immediately and arrange for the mailing of cheques within ten days in order that the producers will have some cash on hand to meet spring seeding costs.

LABOUR RELATIONS

SUPPORT FOR FISHERMEN'S NEGOTIATING RIGHTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, whereas the fishermen in New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia are presently denied even basic collective bargaining rights by the regressive legislation in those areas, and whereas the fishermen in New Brunswick are presently peacefully demonstrating in favour of that provincial government changing its legislation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker):

That this House express its solidarity with the fishermen in the maritime provinces and supports their right to negotiate a fair price for their catch.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROCEDURE RELATING TO WRITTEN QUESTIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I wish to move a motion which I think might very well receive the unanimous consent of the House because it expresses sentiments which have already been expressed by spokesmen for all parties.

Whereas last night and on previous occasions it has been suggested by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette), and agreed to by spokesmen from the opposition parties, that improvements might be made to the rules of the House dealing with written questions, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the Standing Orders and practices of the House of Commons relating to written questions be referred to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization for study and that the said committee be instructed to report back to the House with recommendations.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

ANNOUNCEMENT OF SUPREME COURT HEARING—REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION FROM CONSIDERATION BY PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, through the Chair I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will know that the Supreme Court of Canada has now set April 28 as the date on which it will begin to consider whether the government's constitutional resolution is within the competence of Parliament to enact alone. Rather than having Parliament risk acting illegally and rather than running the risk that Parliament would act in defiance of our own customs, will the Prime Minister respect Canadian custom, and will he withdraw his resolution until the court has decided whether it is lawful for Parliament to deal with that resolution?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Leader of the Opposition could elaborate a little bit on what he calls the custom. As far as I can study Parliament, it is customary for Parliament to deal with matters, and it is also customary for citizens or various parties to disagree in the courts. This process has always happened, and if Parliament were to interrupt its work every time somebody claims that its work is illegal, then we would be doing no work at all. That is the custom in this land. We do our work. The courts do theirs.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I will naturally accept the invitation of the Prime Minister to argue that case later in the day.

The Prime Minister will know that Premier Blakeney has now indicated that eight premiers expect to discuss today or, if not today, very, very soon—but probably today—details of a new constitutional proposal, which was discussed in general terms in Winnipeg on Tuesday, a constitutional proposal which would let Canadians decide our Canadian conduct here in Canada.

In light of this statement by Premier Blakeney and in light of the meeting which has occurred in Winnipeg this week, is the Prime Minister prepared to set aside his own stubborn deadlines, and is he prepared, in the national interest as the leader of the national government, actively to seek a meeting on constitutional change with the Canadian premiers before he bulldozes this resolution through Parliament and takes the Canadian question to another country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, we have been discussing this subject with the premiers since the spring of 1968, in a constant fashion through the decade. We discussed it very intensively beginning, I believe, around June 5 of last year. We had a first ministers' meeting.

We have, in the resolution now, a provision that discussions must go on for the next two years in order that we agree on an amending formula, following which, if we still cannot agree after that fixed period of two years—which hardly seems like bulldozing, to use the phrase of the Leader of the Opposition—then the people will be asked to decide for us in a referendum. Discussions are not only wanted; they are called for in the resolution before the House.

• (1120)

The Leader of the Opposition goes on to make the point, I think his words were "let Canadians decide". Madam Speaker, that is what we are asking: let the Canadians in this House decide and let us decide—

Some hon. Members: Call an election.

Mr. Trudeau: We are prepared to let this House decide any time. We will even let an amendment come to a vote.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INITIATION OF DISCUSSIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister appears to be under the illusion that his resolution has already passed and that the provinces are today without the power which his resolution tries to take away from them as he moves this nation towards a unitary state. That is not the situation in this country today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister has not yet succeeded in his goal of changing the fundamental nature of this country. There are provincial governments which represent the people of Canada as well as this Parliament does. They have a role to play in constitutional discussion. My question to the Prime Minister is this: since we know that he has his representatives over in Britain trying to make a deal with the government of another country, I should like to ask him whether he personally, or through his senior representatives, since the meeting in Winnipeg of the eight premiers on Tuesday, has been in touch or has initiated discussions with those premiers, to see if it might be possible to arrange a meeting which would allow all the governments of Canada representing all the people of Canada to come together here in our country to agree on a Canadian Constitution in a Canadian way, rather than following the practice which the Leader of the NDP in the province of Saskatchewan has said leads to bitterness in this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Clark: My question to the Prime Minister is whether he personally, or through any of his intermediaries, sought a meeting with the premiers since the Tuesday meeting in Winnipeg.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition talks about taking power from the provinces to make Canada a unitary state.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Trudeau: Surely if there is any shift of power in this resolution before the House, it gives more power to the provinces—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That's a lie.

Mr. Trudeau: —in two areas, Madam Speaker—

An hon. Member: At least blush a little bit.

Mr. Trudeau: —more powers to the provinces in defining the role which they would play in any amending formula in the future. It gives more power to the provinces—

An hon. Member: Just tell the truth, Pierre.

Mr. Trudeau: —in giving them greater jurisdictional resources by having what they do not have now, the power to levy indirect taxes and the power to regulate interprovincial trade. So if there is any shift of power from one government to the other, Madam Speaker, in these two areas it is a shift to the provinces.

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Trudeau: I am told to answer the question, Madam Speaker.

An hon. Member: Have you sought a meeting?

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition, in asking his question, made the assertion that there was a shift of power from the provinces. I fail to see how the opposite side lets the Leader of the Opposition make allegations before posing his question but would not let me answer those allegations before the question is answered.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The question was whether I had sought to communicate with the premiers since the meeting in Winnipeg last Wednesday. The answer is no, nor have they attempted to communicate with me.

• (1125)

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, by the Prime Minister's logic, he must have believed he was giving more power to the people he had incarcerated when he introduced the War Measures Act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Why did the Prime Minister not seek a meeting with representatives of provincial governments after the meeting on Tuesday? Will he tell the House of Commons whether he will initiate those discussions, as the leader of the national Government of Canada, to see if we can find a way to change our Constitution in our country, rather than shipping our business off to the British?

An hon. Member: You are rather desperate, Joe.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition refers to the people incarcerated under the War Measures Act.

An hon. Member: Four hundred and fifty persons.

Mr. Trudeau: Let me remind him that his party and his leader supported the invocation of the War Measures Act.

Mr. Andre: We believed you; that was the problem.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It was the last time we believed you.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Other hon. members of the House want to ask questions. I have already allowed the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition an extra question, which is not unusual. But we need the co-operation of the House so that I can allow everybody who wants to put a question today to be included in the Question Period. So, I would ask hon. members not to shout; we must conduct this debate in a serene fashion—

An hon. Member: Serene!

Madam Speaker: —and I would like members to co-operate—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: —with me.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, in so far as incarcerating people under the War Measures Act is concerned I would remind the Leader of the Opposition that they were incarcerated by the administration of justice of the province of Quebec; that they were in their prisons, by their policemen, by their acts; and that this was recognized when the government of Quebec paid damages to many of the people who had been incarcerated by them as a result of the War Measures Act.

The Leader of the Opposition asked if I would initiate discussions with the premiers. I have replied to that. We have been discussing for many months. A time comes when somebody has to make up his mind. The premiers seem unable to make up their minds because they have been meeting since October trying to find some alternative that they would even agree with among themselves. They have not communicated any such agreement to myself, to the press or, I take it, to the Leader of the Opposition. But I will initiate discussions with them, as soon as Canada has its own Constitution and as soon as Canadians have given themselves the means to improve that Constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF REFERENDUM PROVISIONS IN CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He said that he is giving more powers to the provinces; it is passing strange that eight of them would be rejecting those additional powers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: But I want to ask the Prime Minister—

An hon. Member: Say no more.

Mr. Epp: In his press conference yesterday the Prime Minister said, "What I want is the provinces to find some agreement among themselves", and he also said that he was willing to reduce the seven provinces to six, as well as the 80 per cent requirement. In view of the fact that the provinces have asked for the power to remove the odious referendum provisions in his proposals—

Mr. Lalonde: Not Ontario, not New Brunswick.

Mr. Epp: —is he now willing to remove the referendum provisions and, in fact, bring about the kind of consensus which he said yesterday he was willing to accept?

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): More applause?

Mr. Clark: Not for you.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Provencher said that it is passing strange the provinces would reject the additional powers we are giving them. I found that strange, too, and I said so in my speech on Monday that, in a sense, I regretted the amendment moved by the Leader of the NDP which would give more power to the provinces, because the provinces have still not said that they accepted those additional powers. They want even more powers yet. This proves my point that until the whole shopping list of powers is given to them they will find no agreement. They have not found agreement since this process began and they are not finding agreement now, for the reasons I have stated. They might agree on an amending process, but they will not agree to let it go forward until Mr. Peckford has the offshore—

● (1130)

Mr. Clark: That is not true.

Mr. Trudeau: —until Premier Lévesque has had the right to declare the sovereignty of his province written into the Constitution—

Mr. Clark: That is not true.

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition says it is not true, Madam Speaker. If he had been watching the conference—

Mr. Fraser: You are not an expert on truth!

Mr. Trudeau: —held in September, in Ottawa, he would have said that is exactly the situation which the premiers presented then—

Mr. Clark: And on the Friday morning?

Mr. Trudeau: I have had no evidence of whether they have changed that position now. Has the Leader of the Opposition heard Mr. Peckford say that Canadians could have the Constitution with an amending formula and a basic charter of rights without getting his offshore?

Mr. Clark: Yes, because I have asked.

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition says yes. I wish that Mr. Peckford would state that publicly.

Mr. Clark: Ask him.

Mr. Beatty: What would you do if he did?

Mr. Trudeau: I wish Mr. Peckford would state that publicly rather than through his little buddy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AGREEMENT ON HUMAN RIGHTS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): My supplementary question is to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Frankly, it seems to me from his answer he hopes the provinces do not come up with any consensus. That is the argument he has been using all along. If that consensus is, in fact, reached, even beyond the requirements of his press conference of yesterday, then would he not accept again to go to the bargaining table and try to reach a consensus among Canadians?

I now ask about positive action. In view of the amendment moved in the Senate yesterday, whereby the charter would apply equally to men and women, has the Prime Minister instructed his government House leader and his supporters in the other place to support that amendment expeditiously?

Mr. Broadbent: What hypocrisy! Speed it up for them.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am very happy to accept that suggestion and to state quite unequivocally that, if the House leaders of the other parties would agree with ours, then we will instruct the Senate to accept this amendment on women. We will instruct them to accept an amendment which has been negotiated on aboriginal rights.

Mr. Stevens: How about property rights?

Mr. Trudeau: We would let these amendments pass in the Senate and in this House, if we can all agree to do that within the next few days.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

POSSIBLE EXPORT OF OIL TO JAPAN

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It pertains to an announcement that five months ago the Japanese put together a consortium of the five largest shipbuilding companies in Japan to build the world's largest ice-breaking oil tanker—they are not LNG tankers, they are oil tankers. The intention is to use those tankers to carry oil from the Beaufort Sea in Canada's Arctic. Would the minister state categorically in this House that the government has not made a deal, or given an understanding, that there will be an export of Arctic oil to Japan?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, very definitely there is no such deal. There has never been any conversation along those lines. Canada is an oil importer, not an oil exporter.

The time when Canada would have a surplus of oil to export would be the time for the National Energy Board and the government to decide if exports should be authorized, and to which countries.

I can assure the hon. member that there has never been any indication to Japan that they could count on the import of oil from Canada's Beaufort Sea. On the contrary, I had meetings with a number of Japanese ministers when they visited Ottawa from time to time, and I went out of my way to make it clear that in the foreseeable future Canada was not in a position to consider exports of oil from the Beaufort Sea or the offshore.

ASSURANCES SOUGHT RESPECTING USE OF CANADIAN SHIPS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, the question which then arises is that the Japanese appear to be spending hundreds of millions of dollars and have the designs in place to carry out this work. They have targeted the Beaufort Sea and the Arctic as the locations in which these ships will work. Dome Petroleum has a financing agreement in one phase of it which apparently allows the Japanese a quarter of the oil there. Would the minister categorically indicate that the ships used to exploit and transport Arctic resources and offshore resources will be Canadian ships, built in Canada and operated by Canadian crews?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, that would certainly be my hope. However, this would again be a matter which would have to be examined in terms of the competitive bidding and also the ability of our shipyards to build the kind of ships which are required. The ability of our shipyards to build the size of ships which are required must be examined. The size of ships which are involved are very large ones indeed. We will have to see whether our shipyards, taking into account all the orders that are expected to go to our shipyards with offshore development, etc., will be in a position to handle this kind of order.

Indeed, Bill C-48, which is before the parliamentary committee at the present time, indicates that we certainly hope that arrangements would be made with developers to ensure that the Canadian people and Canadian business would be in a position to compete on very favourable terms with any foreign bidders in this regard.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, the Japanese are about seven years ahead of where we are in building this equipment. We are so slow to move. Bill C-48 is so weak in the Canadian content provisions that you could drive a truck through it—

An hon. Member: You could drive a tanker through it.

Mr. Skelly: All humour aside, the provisions are extremely weak and the Japanese are very far ahead. I think the minister should stop playing dog in the manger here. We must either tell the Canadian people—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member put his question?

Mr. Skelly: The government should be prepared to tell the Canadian people that either the Japanese will build that equipment or tell them clearly, and Dome Petroleum, that Canadians will build that equipment, and that no more of the equipment will go offshore, and that the Japanese may as well stop their production.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the Japanese business community has been very active since the end of the war in many fields. The hon. member is aware of this. Rather than complain about the initiative of the Japanese, we in Canada ought to encourage Canadian business to show the same type of initiative and dynamism which has been shown by business communities in other countries. This is what the government is trying to do under the leadership of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

As far as the question raised by the hon. member is concerned, I would like to remind him that, while he complains that the provisions of Bill C-48 are inadequate, in effect it is those very provisions which have given rise to protests from members of the OECD countries. On the contrary, those countries are protesting to the effect that the measures we are proposing in this respect are going too far. We have been the ones to defend those provisions in the international community by saying what was required for Canada.

Far from being found weak or inadequate, those provisions are viewed as severe by Canada's allies and friends. Indeed, we have had to fight in the international community to defend those provisions. I hope we will get the support of the hon. member in the committee in order to have those provisions passed by this Parliament soon.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—RESPONSE BY NATO COUNTRIES TO THREAT OF RUSSIAN INTERVENTION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He will remember that on Monday I asked him if it was the government's intention to meet with other member countries of the NATO alliance to formulate a western alliance response to the growing threat of Soviet intervention in Poland. At that time the minister dismissed the need for any talks by the NATO countries, but I am sure that even the minister would have to admit that the threat to Poland from Soviet intervention is growing daily.

Given the concern that is being expressed now in western European capitals and in the United States, and given the statement yesterday out of Moscow that the U.S.S.R. will not tolerate chaos in Poland, I should like to ask if he has since been in touch with his NATO counterparts and what action the Canadian government is contemplating, or is he just going to remain silent in the face of this grave threat by the Soviet Union to Poland and to world peace?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, it is certainly common ground between us and, I think, in all of the western world, that the situation in Poland is serious and is of great concern to all of us. But surely the hon. member realizes that the solution to the problem is not for some dramatic action by the western powers which could be interpreted to be the very kind of intervention that we are telling the Soviet Union it does not have the right to engage in. This is a matter for the Poles to solve, not for the rest of the world to solve. That has been our consistent position. This is a Polish problem, and we want all countries in the world to keep their hands off Poland.

ACTION TAKEN BY CANADA

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question to the minister is with regard to the threat to Poland from the Soviet Union, not within Poland itself. Surely he will have seen reports yesterday that the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact manoeuvres in Poland, which were to have concluded yesterday, have now been extended indefinitely. He will have heard the report, I am sure, that Moscow has said it will not tolerate chaos in Poland and reported this week that Polish and Soviet soldiers were capable of issuing a suitable rebuff to hostile ideological diversions.

Given that kind of threat to Poland and given the statement by the minister in December that his government's policy is clearly one that there will be a strong and appropriate reaction to any intensification of the crisis with respect to Poland, I should like to ask the minister what that reaction is? What is he prepared to do? Is he prepared to try to work out some kind of collective action with the other members of NATO, or will he remain silent, as he seems to be doing? Will he just take no action in this regard? Will he not understand the gravity of the situation?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, as I said, this is a matter of great concern to all of us. We are in touch all the time, through NATO, with all of our partners in the western alliance. I want to assure the House and tell the hon. member that this government puts the peace of the world and the freedom of the Polish nation ahead of political posturing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CONTROL OF ACID RAIN IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. In view of the fact that the Canada-U.S. memorandum of intent on acid rain, signed in Washington last summer, committed both countries to enforcing vigorously existing environmental laws, does the minister interpret that commitment to mean that the Reagan administration is not now free to weaken substantially environmental laws to control acid rain-causing emissions?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I am not sure if I exactly seized the intention of the question. It is true that we are pressing ahead vigorously with the United States to conclude an international agreement on trans-boundary air quality. Those negotiations are proceeding on track. We expect and the United States expects to begin the formal stage of those negotiations early this summer or late this spring.

I shall be in Washington on Monday to meet with the Secretary of the Interior to explore with him the American views in relation to that agreement as well as in relation to the Clean Air Act and other environmental matters. We intend to maintain that pace. There is as yet no indication that the United States wishes to withdraw it, if I understood the question correctly, and if the hon. member is asking whether we feel that the United States will not be held to previous agreements. There is no indication that they wish to escape from such agreements.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF ACTION BY UNITED STATES ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of the Environment. The Reagan administration has made it clear this week that it plans to weaken, quite substantially, the U.S.

Clean Air Act relating to acid rain control. In view of the fact that the memorandum of intent, signed between the two countries last summer, committed both countries to enforcing existing environmental regulations vigorously pending completion of a more formal accord, does the minister not view those actions as a breach of the spirit if not the letter of the memorandum of intent signed by the two countries last summer?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I do not think that the assumption which underlies the hon. member's question is accurate. There have been some press reports of a desire to separate consideration of the Clean Air Act proposals from the acid rain agreement proposals. Whether that is in fact the intention of the United States administration, and whether there are moves to do that in Congress, are things that I hope will become clear to me in the course of my discussions on Monday. Neither is it yet clear, even if such an action were to be taken, whether such action would make it more difficult or would be helpful in terms of the acid rain discussions.

AGRICULTURE

HOG STABILIZATION PROGRAM—PAYMENTS MADE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I should like to address some questions to the Minister of Agriculture regarding the administration of federal payments to farmers. As the minister knows, the value of these payments, particularly in periods when interest rates are as high as they have been, is of most use when they are made promptly. This has been a problem for the department on a couple of occasions. The program that I want to mention first is the hog stabilization program which was announced last May. In November the minister said that the payments would be out before Christmas. A number of producers still have not received payment. Will the payments be completed by March 31 and, if not, how many will still be outstanding at the end of this fiscal year?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, as of March 20, 1981, 26,871 applications had been received; 25,630 had been processed and paid. To date, payments have amounted to nearly $40 million under that program.

We are still receiving applications from producers from different parts of Canada, as many as 200 per month. They did not all come in last May, they were coming in by several hundreds or several thousands each month. As late as December there were 500 new applications. It takes time to process these to make sure that they conform to the guidelines put forward by the comptroller and the auditor general.

Some of the receipts that farmers produce and some of their bookkeeping leave a lot to be desired. If the hon. member has any influence with them he could suggest that they should not write illegible receipts on the back of match boxes and expect the stabilization people to make payment on that kind of document. This leaves a lot to be desired and has made things difficult.

Some of the payments to producers have been as much as $20,000. We have to be doubly sure what we are paying. We recognize that there is inconvenience to some farmers because of the high interest rates and their need for the money, but we have to be doubly sure that we are spending taxpayers' dollars in a proper fashion.

HERD MAINTENANCE PROGRAM—REQUESTS FOR RETURN OF PAYMENTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I would remind the hon. minister that most hogs are sold through computer sales techniques under marketing boards. The tapes were available to the government and it could have requested them. That would have helped handle the bulk of the program.

My follow-up question should probably be addressed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, but the Minister of Agriculture is also partly responsible for the herd maintenance program on the prairies. It has also had its share of administrative problems, first in determining who should receive payments, then who should be rejected, and finally, the newest wrinkle, which of the people who have received cheques should be asked to return them. How many producers have been advised that they should return their cheques, and for what reasons?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, in reply to some of the comments that the hon. member has made, I am sure he is aware that payments to piglet operators do not go through computers. This is where we had some of the greatest difficulty. There are also sales between producers and the small entrepreneurs in the slaughtering business, etc., who do not use the big computer system. The provinces do not all use the same system for keeping records and this makes things difficult. No payment has been made on hogs for ten years but we know a payment will have to be made for the year 1980. This will be easier because the system will be much better.

The hon. member talked about the payments under the herd maintenance program. From the applications which have been received, I believe 23,000 farmers have been paid. Criteria have been set down, and they are adhering to the criteria as closely as possible.

The hon. member also asked how many people who were improperly paid and have been requested to return the cheques. If I understand the figures correctly which were given to me, around 100 farmers in Manitoba and Saskatchewan have done so. I do not have the exact figures in front of me, but under that program we have already paid out around $40 million to farmers.

THE CONSTITUTION

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER'S SPEECH OF MARCH 23 BE PRINTED AND DISTRIBUTED

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether it is his intention to order a separate reprint of the Debates of March 23 with a view to sending to all provincial premiers, to the leaders of the provincial political parties, and particularly to the members of Parliament of Her Majesty the Queen in London a copy of the speech he delivered in this House on the patriation of the Constitution.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I will be very pleased to consider the excellent suggestion of the hon. member. Perhaps we might all agree to make sure that the speeches on the same subject made by the Leader of the Official Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party will be printed at the same time at the expense of the Crown. We could then send them to all the people mentioned by the hon. member.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

QUEBEC COMPONENT OF F-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT CONTRACT

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. It concerns recent press reports that pressure from the Quebec liberal caucus has caused bidding to be reopened on the contracts for the F-18 fighter because there would be little work for Quebec and all bids had come from Ontario, Manitoba and New Brunswick. As Quebec has been promised $1.5 billion worth of work on the F-18 by the Liberals, the rules will change to allow an unsolicited bid from Canadair, a Quebec-based Crown corporation. Can the minister inform the House if these allegations are correct? If so, what is the point of calling for bids if, six months later, the bidding is reopened to accommodate partisan political practice, in other words, pork-barrelling?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I think it is well known to all members of this House which were the commitments made when we chose the F-18 aircraft about a year ago. The bidding has been going normally. Nothing has been changed on the international principle of the bidding. Actually, the management of the contract itself is done by the Department of Supply and Services or the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As far as I am concerned, nothing either illegal or erroneous has been done.

Mr. Crosbie: Answer the question.

Mr. Fretz: Madam Speaker, if the minister alleges that the bids have not been reopened, what is the reason for the delays which constitute a loss of work for Canadian plants?

Mr. Lamontagne: Madam Speaker, I would suggest that the hon. member ask McDonnell Douglas about the delays if any.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: They are not in the House. Let's ask Herbie Gray.

FISHERIES

SCALLOP CATCHES ON GEORGES BANK—REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN LIMITS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. At the present time the size of scallops is smaller than usual being caught on Georges Bank. This has resulted in fisheries officers carrying out a survey of landings and some eleven ships have been found to have scallops of a size below the present legal limit.

In light of the resulting controversy, will the minister consider decreasing the catch limit per trip from 30,000 pounds to 20,000 pounds? At the same time, will he consider increasing the scallop count per pound from 40 to 50 pounds in the hope of stabilizing this section of the Canadian fishing industry? Also with the minister make proposals to his U.S. counterpart to the effect that the United States consider taking similar actions on Georges Bank?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, we have known for some time that the scallops stocks were under heavy pressure. This is not only related to what we consider heavier than usual fishing on the part of U.S. fishermen. Biologists have been warning us about this for some years.

However, the possibility of a breakdown of conversation, attitudes and measures, would obviously significantly increase the problems of all fishermen, Canadian and American.

In the conversations we had with Secretary Baldrige when he was here we tried to develop a conservation plan for all fishermen from both countries.

As to the suggestion from the hon. member, we have been meeting with the fishermen and processors in the area. We will be looking at the recommendations which they have made to us, with an open mind, and I hope that I will be able to announce some changes in the days to come.

DECLINE IN CATCH OF INSHORE LOBSTERS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, in the same area, fishermen along the south shore of Nova Scotia are complaining about the decline in their lobster catches. They are blaming some of the decline on the larger boats using larger traps, that is, fishing trawls with 20 traps on a line, in deep water on the offshore banks where the catch has been heavy with what we call seeded or berried lobsters.

Is the minister aware of these facts, and will he consider carrying out biological studies to determine whether the heavy offshore catches are affecting the inshore stocks?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, perhaps I could add one phrase to my previous answer before answering this second question. The Canadian catch of scallops this year has shown a significant increase over last year.

On the hon. member's second question, the problem is a long-standing one. Scientific opinion now is that there is an effect on the inshore lobster fishery more directly linked than we had assumed in the past. We are looking at more restrictive measures. This is part of the balance of trying to find a fair and equitable distribution of the benefits between the interests of two competing groups of fishermen.

CIVIL RIGHTS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF FRANCHISE TO PENITENTIARY INMATES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. As the minister knows, the government of Quebec recently amended its provincial elections act to permit prisoners the right to vote. Despite the fact that some 3,000 prisoners in provincial institutions are being granted this right to vote, 2,000 prisoners in federal institutions are being arbitrarily denied this fundamental democratic right by the minister, on administrative grounds.

In view of the fact that imprisonment involves the loss of liberty, but surely not the loss of all other fundamental civil rights, will the minister reconsider this decision and permit federal prisoners in Quebec to exercise the franchise extended to them by provincial legislation and not subvert the will of the Quebec provincial legislature, allowing these prisoners the right to vote in the upcoming Quebec election?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, in this matter there is a problem of order and security in the institutions.

Mr. Crosbie: Free them for the day.

Mr. Kaplan: It is quite right that it is a matter for the province to determine. However, we were able to permit the officials of the government of Quebec to conduct the referendum in the prisons, but conducting a referendum is much less complicated than conducting a full election. Votes go many hundreds of miles from prisons to polling booths around the province. Candidates also hundreds of miles away have the right to access to individuals in prisons.

I do not mean to indicate to the provinces that we would never allow elections to be conducted in federal institutions, although it is a fact that no other province or the federal government gives the right to these people to vote in their elections. I am anxious to see whether the problems of inmates' privacy, order in the prisons and security can be successfully dealt with in one case in this country, that is, the conduct of this Quebec election in Quebec provincial institutions. If all of the problems which I have indicated—and there are others which I cannot describe in the format of the Question Period—can be met and dealt with satisfactorily, we would in the future be prepared, as we were in the referendum, to allow federal institutions to accommodate provincial election machinery.

REASONS FOR POSITION TAKEN BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, naturally it is rather interesting to note that somehow order and security can be maintained in provincial institutions but not in the federal institutions.

The minister agreed at a recent session of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution that the proposed charter of rights may very well extend the right to vote to all prisoners at both the provincial and federal level. Why is the government now, naturally with the support and encouragement of the Quebec Liberal leader, Claude Ryan—and it is not surprising in view of the 80 per cent result in favour of the PQ position in the referendum campaign last fall—denying this fundamental right to vote to prisoners, and very likely violating its own charter of rights and freedoms?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, when the hon. member says that matters of order and security do not seem to arise in the case of the provincial institutions in the province of Quebec, he is taking quite a lot for granted. The vote has not yet been held. There are a lot of problems still to be resolved. I do not know whether those institutions will be able to conduct fair elections consistent with order and security. Even if they do, the institutions for which Canada is responsible tend to contain more dangerous and violent offenders because they have been sentenced to two years before we get them, whereas in the provinces there are often people who have just been sentenced to 30 days. It is a totally different problem.

As to whether the right to vote is accorded by the charter of rights and freedoms to inmates, I speculated in front of the committee that it might. I do not know how a court will interpret, whether it is reasonable, as our Elections Act provides, to withhold the right to vote from inmates. I indicated it would be a matter for the court to decide. Certainly if the court did decide that inmates should have the right to vote, we would proceed in the way we are proceeding now. Because Quebec made that decision we will try to accommodate that decision as best we can.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INCREASED COST OF SERVICES PROVIDED TO MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Al MacBain (Niagara Falls): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General. It deals with the RCMP negotiating contracts, particularly with the municipalities, and the extra cost that will result to municipalities as a result of bringing the RCMP fee for service into line. I do not necessarily ask the Solicitor General that they stop proceeding in that manner, but will he consider phasing in those additional costs over a period of, for example, four to six years? As a former municipal alderman I can tell hon. members that any big budget item that changes drastically in any one year upsets municipal financing.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, Canada has provided the services of the RCMP to provinces and municipalities for almost 70 years. The contracts, which expire every five or ten years, will expire at the end of this month. I have begun a process of negotiating with my provincial counterparts, who not only speak for the provinces but who represent the municipalities as well. I think we have resolved virtually all questions except the financial question. I indicated last week that I was prepared to discuss a generous phasing-in arrangement for municipalities, but not because the offer we made is unfair.

I think the offer we have made will still give them cheaper police service than they would have, for example, if they chose to establish independent police forces. Recognizing that the increase is substantial, I am prepared to discuss with them a phase-in proposal. I am only waiting now for my counterparts to agree to some date. I would be ready to meet them tomorrow or at any time, at any place in Canada, in order to try to settle these financial arrangements as quickly as possible.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CLARK—THE CONSTITUTION—APPEAL TO SUPREME COURT—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: Yesterday the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) raised a point of order to the effect that the House cannot debate the motion of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) since, in his opinion, the matter is presently sub judice.

I listened to his arguments and I promised that I would rule narrowly on the basis of the arguments he presented in the House. In his argument he quoted Citation 338(4) of Beauchesne's fifth edition, which I need not repeat here. I should point out, however, that this citation deals with bills referred to the Supreme Court of Canada—bills, I repeat—and not with motions.

Sub judice is a convention which is "a voluntary restraint imposed by the House upon itself in the interests of justice and fair play", as stated in Citation 335 of Beauchesne's fifth edition. I have not been persuaded by the particular argument brought forward by the Leader of the Opposition which he offered in his presentation yesterday, namely, that the House cannot debate that motion because the matter has been referred to the Supreme Court of Canada.

MR. CLARK—NOTICE OF INTENTION TO RAISE POINT OF ORDER

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise on a very brief point of order. As I indicated yesterday, and as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) again invited me to pursue today, there is a second point of order on this question which I wish to pursue after any questions of privilege that might be before the House are heard. I will be pursuing that matter because it does not deal with the questions that have been covered by your judgment.

Madam Speaker: I will take that as notice. I want to remind hon. members of what took place in the House last night. I remind them that points of order have to be pertinent to the matter before the House. The only reason I could accept the point of order of the Leader of the Opposition yesterday was that it flowed from the deliberations of the House yesterday. If that is the case again today, of course, I will be able to hear his point of order. I would hear it now, but I understand the Leader of the Opposition defers to the other questions of privilege.

Mr. Clark: Yes, Madam Speaker.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WILSON—REPLIES OF MR. LALONDE RESPECTING NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege, as I mentioned yesterday, relates to answers given to me by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) to a question I posed on Wednesday and other questions relating to the National Energy Program and drilling activity by oil drilling companies in this country, questions dating back to December and January earlier in this session.

On each occasion that I put questions relating to the expectations of the energy program, the minister repeatedly stated that we were taking a very gloomy view of the effects of the National Energy Program. He said our fears were unfounded. On a number of occasions he used the words "doom and gloom". We on this side, as well as members of the drilling industry and the oil industry itself, have been trying to draw attention to the shortcomings of this program and the very serious dangers it will have for Canada.

The minister continually contradicted me in answers to questions that I asked in this House. I want to make specific reference to the questions and relate them to the answer he gave me on Wednesday where he clearly reversed himself. He indicated that he knew all along that the caution we were expressing and the dangers we were drawing attention to in the energy program existed, but he continually cast these aside. It was clearly an attempt to force the legislation through before these dangers became readily apparent.

I want to draw specific attention to the contradiction in what he—

Madam Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I would like a bit of silence in the chamber if that is at all possible. It is very difficult for the Chair to follow the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I was saying that the minister had clearly reversed himself. In so doing, I believe he has misled the House. I will show in the references to the answers he gave to me on a number of occasions how he clearly misled the House.

I take to heart the caution that Your Honour stressed to me on Wednesday, that this must not be a dispute between two members, but that we must be looking at a clear change in the direction that the minister has taken, stating one thing on one occasion and something else which is diametrically opposed on another occasion.

I think it is important that he accurately portray his judgment on the impact of the NEP because it is such a far-reaching policy. We are in the middle of deliberations before two committees and I understand there will be further legislation brought in. If we are unable to get an accurate judgment from the minister, it makes it very difficult to judge the merit of the legislation before us. The impact on Canada is tremendous and far-reaching, and will be so for decades ahead.

On Wednesday I asked the minister about the decline in drilling activity announced in Oilweek, which he said he has specifically referred to as his main guide on drilling activities, and I pointed out that the latest issue stated there was a drop from 480 wells last year to 467 this year. I subsequently received an edition showing the number has dropped even further.

The minister responded to my question on page 8598 of Hansard, March 25, 1981, where he said:

> Madam Speaker, the hon. member is confirming that he and his colleagues on the other side are certainly very slow readers if they only discovered in the last few weeks that there would be a decline in the activity of rigs in Canada.

Well, Madam Speaker, we have been trying to get the minister to comment on this expected decline because we have been calling for one, and it is only now that he acknowledges he knew there would be a decline. He continued:

> As a matter of fact the drilling contractors association said, before the budget and the National Energy Program were announced, it was predicting a 30 per cent decline in drilling activity this year due to a surplus of natural gas in this country and an over-building of drilling rigs in Canada in the last three years. This was announced and published by the drilling contractors association quite independently of the National Energy Program in the October 28 budget.

Clearly he is saying to the House he has been aware of this decline for some time and he implies he was aware prior to the October 28 budget embodying the NEP. On January 12, 1981, at page 6079 of Hansard in reply to my question he said:

> Madam Speaker, supposedly the hon. member is comparing the figures for last year and this. The hon. member knows that quite frequently in winter there are fewer drilling rigs operating than during the rest of the year.

Clearly his information was wrong; drilling activities are higher in the winter, and we drew that fact to his attention. But then he goes on to point out the difference in drilling activity in 1980 and 1981, and draws the very clear conclusion that drilling rig activity is very healthy. He says there has been no decline and implies it will continue to be strong for the balance of this year.

On January 28, at page 6644 of Hansard, in answer to a question from my colleague the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson), he said:

> Madam Speaker, the hon. member contends that oil rigs are leaving the country. As of the last count by Oilweek magazine, 36 more rigs are in operation—

Then he goes on to say:

> So the gloom and doom picture which the hon. member is trying to paint does not seem to be supported by the facts.

Clearly he again implies everything is healthy in the industry.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is obviously debating the question. I have to remind him that not being satisfied with an answer, for whatever reason, does not constitute the basis for a question of privilege. I would ask him to try to come to terms with what he feels is the question of privilege so that I can make my determination.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, the clear question of privilege that I am trying to develop for you is that the minister has misled the House by his answers in December and January; I have other examples to give you. The question of privilege involves the question whether he was mistaken or had misjudged that information, or he was deliberately misleading the House. That is the question of privilege you must respond to.

I wish to give further examples—

Madam Speaker: Order. I really do not need further examples. If the minister has given the hon. member an incomplete, unsatisfactory, misleading or, for that matter, even a mistaken answer, that is for the minister to live with; it is not for the Chair to determine whether that is so. The Chair cannot make a judgment on the quality of the answer, and what the hon. member is doing now is debating the points on which he disagrees with the minister. That does not constitute a question of privilege. If that is the basis for his question, I would ask the hon. member to conclude in a few sentences so I may rule.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, the basis for the question of privilege is that the answer he gave on Wednesday last is diametrically opposed to those given previously, and I have five different references to make. He is misleading the House, and I think the question is in the context of whether the minister has been deliberately misleading the House. I would like to give specific references apart from those I have just given you.

On October 29, the day after the NEP was announced, we pressed the minister as to his expectations of its impact and he said, as reported at page 4210 of Hansard:

—we on this side of the House will not subscribe to the gloom and doom predictions of the hon. member or his colleagues on that side. As far as we are concerned, the energy program which has been put forward is one that is good for the industry, good for the producing provinces, good for the consumer—

And so on. As reported on page 4884 of Hansard, in response to my question, he said that the energy program is:

—quite normal and I am quite confident this will work out to the satisfaction of everyone.

Clearly it is not.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is a very logical person and I am sure he realizes he is now debating the question. The minister expresses an opinion that something is going well and the hon. member disagrees. This is obviously a matter of divergence of opinion on a particular government program and does not constitute the basis for a question of privilege. If the hon. member feels that the minister has deliberately misled the House, he has to come forward with that very serious charge and only under those circumstances will I be able to pursue this matter.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, you say I am a very logical person. I am, and my logic was clearly offended on Wednesday last by the minister's response. It was clearly opposite to what he has been saying in this House for six months. It is on that basis that I am putting the question to Your Honour as to whether Your Honour feels that the minister was mistaken or was deliberately misleading the House. That is the question I put to Your Honour. I believe it is supported by the facts.

● (1220)

I have one other reference. It is taken from the speech which the minister made when presenting Bill C-48, the proposed Canada oil and gas act, to the House. He referred to the National Energy Program and said:

We did so with a determination unmatched by any previous federal government, and we believe we have found a solid way in which to build our energy house.

A solid way to build our energy house, and at the same time drilling rigs are leaving the country. The minister tells us that drilling activity will increase, but we know that has turned around. It will decrease. It will decrease further by the end of the year. The minister is now admitting that he knew this earlier on in October prior to the announcement of the National Energy Program.

How can we as members of this House deliberate on the three pieces of legislation which are before us or are expected to be before us in the next little while? This legislation will have a very serious impact on the energy future of this country. There have clearly been contradictory statements by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. We have to rely on the judgment of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in a number of ways in coming to the conclusions that we as Members of Parliament must come to in considering these pieces of legislation.

In my judgment the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has misled the House. That is clear from the statement he made in answer to me on Wednesday. I have pointed out five different illustrations in statements he has made in the House in the last six months which clearly contradict what he said to me on Wednesday. I say that he has done so at a very crucial time in the development of the energy policy of this country. We are considering this energy policy at a very critical time. The cost to this country is very high. That is why I say this is a serious point for Your Honour to consider.

If Your Honour believes that the allegation I have made today on this question of privilege is well founded, I would be prepared to move the appropriate motion to have the matter referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Madam Speaker: I must give the hon. minister a chance to reply.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I will be extremely brief. I think it is quite obvious that this is another in a series of spurious questions of privilege and points of order the official opposition has raised. The official opposition is quite clearly obstructing the work of the House. It has been doing it for days and intends to go on doing it. I think the people of Canada clearly see through this. The allegations of the hon. member are clearly unfounded. His own argument shows that. Every time I was asked about drilling activity I answered using statistics provided by Oilweek magazine.

I confess to having misled the hon. member yesterday but, indeed, it was unintentional. In my answer I said that the drilling contractors' association had forecast a decline of 30 per cent in drilling activity this year. I apologize to the hon. member for having misled him. On October 16 the Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors made the declaration that that association expected the use of drilling rigs in Canada to drop to 59 per cent of available capacity over the next 15 months from full utilization in 1980. That was two weeks before the budget and the NEP were introduced. That forecast was made completely independently of the NEP and the budget. So I apologize to the hon. member for having told him that the decline expected by the industry, independently of the NEP, was 30 per cent. I apologize. The decline forecast was 41 per cent.

Madam Speaker: The logic I was asking the hon. member to use was that which should have applied to what he knows is the foundation of the question of privilege. If he feels that the minister has given him answers which offend his logic, that is another matter. It is a matter of debate and of divergence of opinions with regard to what I recognize to be a very serious question, but it certainly is not a question of privilege.

MR. BAKER (NEPEAN-CARLETON)—USE OF PUBLIC FUNDS TO ASSIST POLITICAL PARTIES

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The issue in this question of privilege is the probability that public funds have been used to support one political party only.

I will be referring to judgments of Your Honour's predecessor, Mr. Speaker Jerome, during the period of time in which our government was in office, and certain quotations from members of the New Democratic Party and members of the Liberal Party about the impropriety of using public funds and resources where caucus research funds should be used.

The case arises out of a news report in this morning's Globe and Mail which I am going to read, in part in any event, to frame the case.

Mr. Collenette: "Frame" is the right word.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The report is datelined Ottawa and reads as follows:

It's a rather embarrassing coincidence, but it appears that New Democratic Party leader Edward Broadbent and Liberal Justice Minister Jean Chrétien have the same ghostwriter.

The evidence turns up in a study paper Mr. Broadbent sent to British Labour Party MPs a month ago commenting on an internal Labour Party document, Canada and the Constitutional Question.

The story is referring to the contribution of the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). He is described as "Mr. Broadbent" in the article.

Mr. Broadbent's contribution, entitled Comments by the Office of the Leader of the New Democratic Party of Canada, contains several long passages—

This the point, "several long passages".

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not object to the Conservative Party's engaging in a filibuster, but I think hon. members opposite should observe the rules. As Your Honour knows, hon. members cannot refer to other hon. members by their proper names.

An hon. Member: He was quoting.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, a few days ago—perhaps it was last week—I drew the attention of the Chair to the fact that even when such language is used indirectly in quotations, it is clearly out of order. One cannot do indirectly what cannot be done in the House. I ask Your Honour to caution the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton that he cannot refer to members of this House by their proper names. He must refer to them by their party designation, their ministerial designation or their constituency name.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I am aware that there has been a conflict for some time on that particular point. Because it has been raised by my friend—and I have great respect for his helpful attitude and helpful interventions in relation to the rules, and this is one of them—I want to lay out why I believe it is appropriate for me to proceed in the way I did.

As all hon. members know, when a member completes an argument to the Chair, the Hansard messengers ask for all the notes and documents referred to by hon. members so that those items can guide Hansard in producing an accurate record. While it is inappropriate for me to identify an hon. member by his name in any other context, in order that Hansard will depict precisely what did occur on the floor of the House of Commons, I believe it is appropriate in those circumstances—when I am quoting from a document—to quote the words precisely.

Mr. McGrath: The Prime Minister does it all the time.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is inappropriate, of course, for me to do it in any other way, I suggest with respect. Cognizant of the issue which has developed, you will note, Madam Speaker, that when I tried to deal with the matter I identified the hon. gentleman by his constituency and then proceeded to read the quotation and refer to his name. I know there is a difficulty there, but I think it is one which perhaps the House would want to clear up.

I would have no objection to having this matter argued, since it has been raised by the parliamentary secretary in his usual helpful way, but I do reserve the right to complete my question of privilege. Your Honour may be prepared to rule on the matter now, but I hope we can expedite the proceedings of the House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —by your allowing us to continue with my question of privilege. I am in your hands, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: There is a considerable divergence of views as to the time when a member can be referred to by his proper name, whether a member, in the course of reading a quotation, can refer to another member by his proper name rather than by the name of his constituency. I tend to think that when a member is quoting, he might be allowed to quote the article as it is written, and if the name of a member appears in a quotation, it would be acceptable to read it that way since it is in the body of the quotation. Also, if the name of a member is used as a reference, such as, for instance, the MacEachen budget—

Mr. Beatty: Or the Trudeau disaster.

Madam Speaker: —or the Trudeau plan, or something of that nature, I would tend to think it is acceptable. However, there is considerable controversy about this and I am researching the matter. I will rule on it when I am ready to rule, but for the time being I would ask the hon. member to respect the parliamentary secretary's sensitivities and refer to the hon. member, when possible, by the name of his constituency. For instance, when quoting, he might have said "the hon. member for Oshawa's contribution", etc.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I have read the precedents, and, as a matter of fact, I have had an opportunity to discuss this matter informally with the government House leader. I know the hon. member for York East, the Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette), is interested in this matter and I will do my best to abide within what I guess is a temporary ruling until the research has been carried out. I am sure Your Honour was not considering adjourning the House while this research is being carried out. No, I did not think so.

I should like to go back to the argument and identify it for Your Honour. It is a report in The Globe and Mail of today, March 27, 1981. I will not read what I read prior to the intervention by the parliamentary secretary, for which I thank him, but I will carry on reading the quotation referring to the hon. member for Oshawa, the Leader of the NDP. It is as follows:

> Mr. Broadbent's contribution entitled Comments by the Office of the Leader of the New Democratic Party of Canada contains several long passages that turned up again verbatim three days ago when Mr. Chretien tabled an official government reply to the report of the British Parliament's foreign affairs committee, headed by Sir Anthony Kershaw.

The article continues:

> Both Mr. Broadbent's and Mr. Chrétien's papers use the same examples and arguments to explain British convention in dealing with the requests from the Canadian Parliament and use nearly identical words to describe their respective interpretations of last September's first ministers' conference:

At this point there is a quotation in the article, which I point out for identification by Hansard reporters. It reads:

> "Some premiers accepted some of the Prime Minister's proposals, the Prime Minister accepted some of the premiers' proposals, some premiers rejected the proposals of other premiers and some premiers rejected some proposals of the Prime Minister. When a summary of the position of all first ministers on each of the 12 items was made, it became clear that there was not unanimous consent on any of the 12 items, but, as explained above, the reasons for this lack of consensus were many and varied, and blame for the failure to reach consensus cannot be assigned to any single individual."

The only difference is in the last sentence. Everything else in what has been described as the Chrétien paper is exactly the same as what has been described as the Broadbent paper. The only difference—I have to point this out in fairness—is the following:

> (The Chrétien document closes by saying "... blame cannot be assigned to anyone").

I should just like to contrast the position taken by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), when he deals with the British, with the position taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) today in the House of Commons respecting his attitude toward provincial premiers. It is interesting that the argument when the emissaries, the ambassadors, go off to talk to the foreign government differs from the argument used here in the House of Commons. I know the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau) is blushing at that kind of inconsistency on the part of his leader.

I should like to go on quoting from the article in The Globe and Mail. The following does not appear in quotes, let me point out for the benefit of the Hansard reporters:

> As well, Mr. Broadbent goes on to defend a government memo detailing federal strategy that was leaked during the September conference by noting that "the object of the memorandum was to suggest how best to achieve consensus on as many of the 12 items as possible".

We all know what that memorandum is. It is the memorandum to which that constitutional giant, the hon. member for Oshawa, the Leader of the NDP, referred, and that is the Kirby document, the "dirty tricks" document to which the leader of the NDP referred, in a submission to the British Parliament—he did not make it here—when he said its object was to achieve a consensus. We obviously know what the object of that document was. It becomes exceedingly important because allegations have been made—

An hon. Member: What is your question of privilege?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —in Saskatchewan by a member of the Saskatchewan legislature that the NDP paper was written by a federal official, and there was a request made to the attorney general of Saskatchewan to investigate this matter, which is a matter—I hesitate to be unparliamentary—which borders on duplicity.

Madam Speaker, I intend to move a motion at the end of my remarks. The business of assistance given by governments to one political party and not to the other political parties in the House of Commons has been argued—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have difficulty because of the noise coming from the little red rump behind me; there seems to be great nervousness down there.

In any case, this issue has come up before in the House of Commons, the issue of the propriety of a government of any stripe giving aid to one political party and denying it to others, and what this does to the sense of fairness which ought to exist in terms of research facilities.

An hon. Member: Tell us about the sense of fairness.

● (1240)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): My friends ask me to tell them about it. I thank them for the invitation. I will tell them about it, naturally, because that is the issue.

I should like to refer to certain matters which occurred in the House of Commons, starting on November 5, 1979, with the comments of the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier). By the way, the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell is not with us today because of illness, for which all of us are sorry; he is a fine member. He sits in the chair from time to time and, therefore, he can speak with some authority on these matters. At that time he talked about the expenditure of public funds by the then minister of transport, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), to produce a paper known as the Neil report on railway abandonment. It was a job well done.

Our government, perhaps unwittingly, provided public funds for the preparation of a report by a member of our party. Those funds went to one party of the House of Commons, but they were denied to the New Democratic Party and to the Liberal Party. On that occasion great umbrage was taken by the Liberal Party and the NDP at the impropriety of it. This is precisely what we could be led to believe is happening now, and I want to argue why that is the case.

In any event, as reported at page 940 of Hansard, when dealing with the propriety of the subject matter, the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell said:

> Moreover, the minister recognized that he had authorized the spending of public funds for the preparation and publication of a caucus committee report—

Today we are referring to a caucus committee report of the New Democratic Party. It stands in the name of the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party. I am sure it was prepared with the knowledge and consent of the House leader of the NDP. At least, it was prepared with the knowledge and consent of those members of the NDP who support the government in the constitutional matter; I cannot say whether or not it was prepared with the knowledge and consent of those members of the NDP who do not support the constitutional matter.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. How long is the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) permitted to indulge in this speech before establishing his question of privilege?

Madam Speaker: I must say that I am having some difficulty in recognizing the question of privilege.

Mr. Chénier: He does not know where he is going.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am going through the article quoted; I am trying to find the statement of the hon. member. He opened his remarks by indicating that he would discuss the use of public funds when caucus funds should have been used, but he has not referred to it often in his remarks. I am still waiting for the hon. member to discuss that matter.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I am coming to that, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Well, it has been a long time and the quotations have been lengthy. I ask the hon. member to come to the point more quickly.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I am surprised at the interjection of the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): In any event, I think it is important Your Honour understands that the question of privilege is that it is improper for government funds to be used to support a single activity of an opposition caucus, according to the ruling of the Hon. James Jerome on December 10, 1979. This is my question of privilege.

Mr. Waddell: Then sit down.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I am doing my best to develop my question of privilege, but I am being subjected to the catcalls of the New Democratic Party and the interruptions of its House leader who does not want to hear the truth.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I will present my question of privilege as quickly as I can, but it is important to know what was said by members of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party which led to the judgment of the then Speaker of the House of Commons.

The following was said by the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell:

> Moreover, the minister recognized that he had authorized the spending of public funds for the preparation and publication of a caucus committee report, as well as made use of government facilities such as telephones, news releases, contacts and what have you, not to mention the services of public service employees—

Mr. Chénier: We have already heard that.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): At that time the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell said that it was improper. This is the issue here. Then the member went on to deal with the matter by saying:

> In specific terms, that group of five, that caucus committee, is really a political committee—

In that case he was referring to a "caucus committee"; in this case I am saying that there is no difference between a caucus committee and the entire caucus. He went on to say:

> —a partisan committee. When we look up the word "caucus" in Harrap's dictionary, we find the definition "political clique". That is precisely what I mean when I say it may not and must not be financed by taxpayers' money.

It is up to the House, and ultimately the committee, to establish it; I just have to establish a prima facie case. Then he went on to say:

> —proves that my question of privilege is well founded and that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) could be called upon to appear before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to explain the propriety or legality, if you would rather, of those expenditures.

Then he complained because the document was in the course of translation and not available in French.

Then the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), who was styled in the House at that time as the hon. member for Papineau, commented on the propriety of this procedure. All of us know that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs understands the House of Commons and the Standing Orders. As reported at page 942 of Hansard, on the very point I am raising now, he said:

Mr. Speaker, on this very point, it was not too clear to me from your remarks whether you will be looking at the propriety of spending federal funds for caucus research activities. What is at stake here, and I think it is important that you give some guidance on this question, is whether a caucus of the government should carry out some research on its own with public funds.

The issue was whether a caucus of a government should finance and support research activities out of public funds. He went on to say:

It is totally appropriate that a caucus should carry out such research, but whether it should use public funds for that purpose is the question.

Then members of the New Democratic Party had something to say about the matter. The very courageous hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) had something to say about it and, in the course of his argument on that occasion, informed the House—

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. gentleman just identified the principle upon which he wants to hang his hat. However, he has not yet advanced any fact upon which he could rely for the application of that particular principle.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is your interpretation; you are not the Speaker.

Mr. Blais: If he wants to identify the nature of the document to which he referred and indicate that the document has some sort of departmental origin which makes it not readily available, either under the freedom of information act, some other statute, or generally available to the Canadian public, he should so state.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, evidently the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) was out of the House or, as usual, was asleep when I identified the document. I said that the document was entitled: "Comments by the Office of the Leader of the New Democratic Party". As the minister well knows, there is no freedom of information legislation yet in place, but there is a very inferior bill now before the committee which this Parliament is doing its best to improve.

● (1250)

I want to deal with the comments made by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville. This is what he said:

—we now have information on the Order Paper that the federal government paid with public funds for the printing of this report.

Here is the relevant part—it comes a little later:

My question of privilege is that as a member of the NDP I do not have the privilege of being a member of that committee,—

Madam Speaker, I ask you to include with the word "committee" the word "assistance".

—nor do members of the liberal party or members of the Social Credit party.

I am saying that, as a member of the opposition, I am raising the same complaint that the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville raised on December 7, 1979. The coincidence is unavoidable. I do not have the same access to funds, to assistance and to help, to present my position as seems to have been given by the government to the New Democratic Party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member, since he has now been speaking for over 20 minutes on this question of privilege and has not yet indicated any real basis for it. The evidence for his question of privilege, which is not clearly demonstrated, is based on a newspaper article. The hon. member knows that a newspaper article may be quoted in order to support an argument, but it is not sufficient evidence for me to find a prima facie case of privilege.

I suppose what the hon. member is saying is that he does not have the same access to certain documents—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): No!

Madam Speaker: —which would have helped him to prepare a position paper for his party—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): No, you have got it wrong.

Madam Speaker: I am repeating nearly word for word the last sentence of the hon. member. What I have to find out, and what the hon. member must tell me very clearly, is why the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) cannot quote from a document which has been tabled in the House by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien)—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Because it has not been tabled.

Madam Speaker: —and why the Minister of Justice may not quote a document which might have been prepared by the hon. member for Oshawa or his party. I think that is a perfectly legitimate thing to do. One can quote the document if it is public, which is the case with the document of the minister; I do not know if the other document is public or not, but the minister might have knowledge of it.

The other argument the hon. member puts forward is that the document to which the hon. member for Oshawa allegedly has had access to was again allegedly written by an official. I would have to know clearly whether it has been written by an official. That is the first point.

The second point that I would have to know is in what manner the hon. member for Oshawa came in contact with this document. Did the government give it to him selectively and not to others? Nothing of that sort has been demonstrated in the hon. member's argument. It is extremely difficult for me to find grounds for a question of privilege in what the hon. member has said until now.

I must say that having listened for 20 minutes I cannot listen any longer. I feel that the hon. member does not have a question of privilege at this point. I see his indignation but he must know that the Chair has some difficulty—

Mr. Clark: And some responsibility!

Madam Speaker: —in listening to a question of privilege when other members might want to take the time of the House and the validity of the hon. member's question of privilege has not been demonstrated to me.

Mr. Beatty: I can demonstrate it, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Does the hon. member want to speak again briefly and try to enlighten me on the particular points which I have just referred to?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Of course I do, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Beatty: I have the evidence, too!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) also wants to speak. I also take it that the Speaker is interested in obtaining the facts and issues, since the duty of the Chair, as I understand it, is to find a prima facie case of privilege and then the committee does the rest.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Indeed, that is the duty of the Chair. But it is the duty of the member who raises the question of privilege, especially when he speaks for 20 minutes, to indicate to me where the privilege lies. If in the course of the hon. member's first intervention I do not see the light of a prima facie case of privilege, it has been my tendency not to listen to a second speaker, but I will listen now to the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton. I will then decide if I will hear other interventions.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I think you may have misdirected yourself, and I say this with respect.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The argument is not as to the availability of the report to the New Democratic Party. I am not arguing that. The question which was before Mr. Speaker Jerome in 1979 was not a question of availability; it went much further than that. The question was with respect to the provision of services. The fact of the matter is that the report from which the New Democratic Party drew was not available publicly, to my understanding. I think one would have to believe that when there is identical wording in a report from the New Democratic Party and in a government report, from the point of view of establishing a prima facie case one would have to be on another planet to suggest honestly that that is entirely coincidental. The possibility of this happening is about the same as the proverbial monkey sitting at a typewriter and producing the Oxford English dictionary.

The second possibility is that some agent of the New Democratic Party stole into the Privy Council office in the dead of night and made off with a draft of the government position paper.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I am sure that we do not have to believe that. If that had been the case, Madam Speaker, I am certain there would already have been a charge laid had some enterprising New Democratic Party person done that. I am suggesting that they had all the evidence in the world ahead of time of something which had not yet been published. The coincidence would lead a cautious person to consider how these identical quotations could come about.

The final possibility—and I think I must deal with all possibilities as to how this unusual coincidence could have happened—is that the representatives of the New Democratic Party were given help by those officials of the government in preparing the government's own position paper. That is the other possibility. In fact, it is the only remaining possibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The prima facie case of privilege arises from the fact that none of the resources of the government was made available on an equal basis to all members of the House of Commons.

Mr. Beatty: There is further evidence.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): There is further evidence which can be produced.

What I have stated is the basis for a prima facie case, Madam Speaker. This matter came up before and the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville argued it strongly. He was talking about the case in which I was involved, and I remember it very well.

I see the Sergeant-at-Arms is approaching the table. May I call it one o'clock, Madam Speaker?

Madam Speaker: I am waiting for the hon. member to finish his sentence.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I want to refer you to the judgment of your predecessor, the Hon. James Jerome, on December 10, 1979. I hope I will have an opportunity to expand on this. That judgment was given after a long argument in this House, which took place over several days and involved members of the then government, members of the Liberal Party, which was then the official opposition—and the country would be better off it they still were—and the arguments of the very distinguished member for Yorkton-Melville. I will refer to that judgment for the purposes of putting my prima facie case at two o'clock.

Madam Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

● (1400)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I should just like to reiterate the issue, which is the probability that funds have been used to support one political party in this House; that funds were authorized for that purpose.

I will say for the purpose of the prima facie case, that it can be identified in committee that the author of the Broadbent paper is a constitutional adviser in the FPRO, the Federal-Provincial Relations Office of the federal cabinet. Others will argue the significance of that but I want to mention it for the purpose of the prima facie case.

I want to turn to the argument just briefly. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) contributed to the argument on this point on December 7, 1979. When speaking to the prima facie case he said, as reported on page 2139 of Hansard:

Have the practices and rules of this House been offended?

That is, by the use of resources on that occasion. He then went on to say:

I feel that has been done in two ways. In the first place, I think that it is an affront to Parliament when a committee is set up which consists of members of only one party in the House. In the second place, I think that something is wrong when the government is able to provide money, whether it is only $9,000, $9 or hundreds of thousands of dollars, for a purpose not usually handled in that way.

Equally, Madam Speaker, if the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre had been right on that occasion, he would stand in his place today and say that if it were established that the allegation that the New Democratic Party had received the services that I am talking about—assistance in drafting their document which is not available to another party in the House of Commons—then it too would be wrong. I expect the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to stand up and announce that this is the case.

An hon. Member: Where are they?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, another important statement was made which I think relates to my question of privilege. On December 7, 1979, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, speaking in the course of the debate, said as reported at page 2136 of Hansard:

My question of privilege is as follows: Does it not infringe upon my privileges and rights as a member of Parliament not to have access to the same public funding—

Substitute "assistance" for "funding" in that statement. It continues:

—to the same services—

Substitute "assistance" for "services" in this particular case. Then he said:

We do not have that right as members of Parliament, and because of that I think it is a very serious question of privilege. I believe that this is a precedent.

It was a precedent on that occasion. This is a precedent. He continued:

I believe that this type of thing has never happened in the history of the country.

It had not happened until then. It was found wanting by Mr. Speaker then, and the same situation would apply today and it ought to be found wanting by Madam Speaker. I refer to the fact that party or government public resources are used to assist one party of the House of Commons rather than another.

The hon. member went on to refer to the position of Members of Parliament, and I quote again from page 2136 of Hansard:

Regardless of whether the Prime Minister thinks so or not—

He was referring to the then prime minister, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark):

—all of us in this House are equals and we must be treated as equals by the ministers of this cabinet and by all departments of the Government of Canada.

Given the fact that it is necessary only to find a prima facie case in this matter, one has to consider the coincidence, the alarming coincidence, concerning what appeared word for word in the so-called Broadbent paper—and I use his name from the point of view of title—and the paper prepared and submitted by the Government of Canada and tabled in this House, I believe last Tuesday. Others will argue with respect to the time, but I think the inquiry that must be made by the Chair is with respect to timing.

The interesting thing is that the evidence will show that the document from which the Broadbent paper was prepared was not tabled in this House, and that the Broadbent paper used the resources that were available to the government in the preparation of the paper of the Minister of Justice.

So the case is clear. I do not have to prove the case in this House beyond a reasonable doubt; I think at this point it will be up to the committee to deal with this matter—it will be up to members of the House who are on that committee to deal with the matter. My responsibility to the House is to make out a prima facie case.

I referred to your predecessor just before the adjournment, Madam Speaker. The particular case which I regard as a precedent was so serious, it being alleged that the then government of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was involved in something of this nature, that there were six notices of privilege filed at that time. They came from the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), who is in the House and may want to argue the case again but from a different point of view, the then hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie, the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), who is in the House today and might want to argue the merits of the case, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), who was in the House this morning and I am sure is still in town and lastly, the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming).

These Liberals and New Democrats argued that it was inappropriate to provide services, funding, to make resources available to one political party in the House of Commons and not to another. I think that is true; it is. That is why I think this case smacks—indeed, it goes further than that, it stinks—of exactly the same things, Your Honour's predecessor dealt with.

I want now to establish a prima facie case of privilege, and then I intend to put a motion which I would ask you to consider.

Mr. Broadbent: Are you catching your breath, Walter?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): No, I am looking for one of your quotes. Excuse me, Madam Speaker. I just want to—

Mr. Broadbent: That is better than what preceded it, Walter; it has more intellectual content.

Madam Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette) on a point of order.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, before we adjourned for lunch you indicated that you were not yet satisfied that the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton had established grounds for a question of privilege. Perhaps I could ask him, through you, Madam Speaker, how much time he wishes to have to try to prove that he has a question of privilege. I want to speak to this alleged question of privilege, but what he is doing right now by not articulating the question of privilege is prohibiting other members from this side or his own side from contributing to the point that he is raising.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, that is the usual useful intervention from my friend. I would not want to accuse him of filibustering in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cullen: Hypocrites!

Mr. Hees: Stop wasting time, you folks.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I am having some difficulty speaking over the gruntings from the other side. I guess my friend was not in the House—he was out in the lobby or somewhere—when I gave you some additional facts which establish what I think has to be established at this time, and that is a prima facie case of privilege. Circumstances which so fall together that they cannot be regarded by any rational person as anything like a coincidence are worthy of examination. That is the point. I think they do. I think there is a conspiratory aspect to this case. The coincidences just dovetail too much for any rational person to believe otherwise.

• (1410)

Having dealt with the intervention by my friend the parliamentary secretary, I shall now turn to how the Speaker dealt with these matters. On December 10, 1979, as reported in Hansard at page 2180, he said this:

> Both questions of privilege make reference to a practice which was admitted to by the Minister of Transport and, to a lesser extent—or to a less formalized extent—by the Minister of Agriculture, in the sense that in the months since the election and the formation of the new government committees which were in fact entirely committees of the government caucus were encouraged to carry out investigation work in their particular fields and, in addition to being encouraged, were in fact financially supported through government funding. In some cases this entailed assistance in travelling, in some cases in defraying staff charges of research advice and in others in printing and publication of documents.

That is precisely the case here. My allegation is that the assistance which has been given by the federal-provincial office to the Leader of the New Democratic Party, with respect to the preparation of its document which has now gone to Great Britain is research, advice and assistance in the printing and publishing of documents, all of which fell right within what Speaker Jerome found to be improper. Indeed, it gave an advantage in terms of research and service to one party which was not given to all parties in the House of Commons. That is my first point.

Speaker Jerome went on to say this:

> —but it is a very difficult point for the Chair to decide—

It had not happened before, as I said. He went on to say:

> —and before making such a decision I would want very much more detailed information and would wish to hear far more argument.
> However, I am able to say to the House that while I am absolutely satisfied—as I am sure the House is—that the practice initially entered into by the government since the election was entirely in good faith—

I do not know whether I can say that about this case, but you could say it about the case which was before Speaker Jerome. Speaker Jerome went on to say:

> —and while it may in fact be defensible against the argument of privilege of the House, I hope hon. members will understand that it is a rather dangerous practice to embark upon.

In the light of these circumstances, I think Speaker Jerome showed amazing foresight. If he were in the chair today, I respectfully suggest he would have difficulty saying that what was done was done in good faith, having before him a judgment of his own in 1979.

> I refer to the practice of supporting from public funds a committee composed of members of any one caucus. In theory, I suppose, it is not likely that government funds would be used to support a single activity of an opposition caucus, but in any case that is no better.

This case goes much further than that. This goes right through to the theory. In fact, the theory has been justified on the coincidences here. Services and resources were given by the government to one caucus for it to prepare a position on a matter now before this House of Commons. It is an advantage given to one party by the government and not given to another.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Again, on December 10, 1979, at page 2180, the Speaker said:

> The support of public funds, where applied to parliamentary activities, ought, I think, to apply across the floor of Parliament, particularly—

And Speaker Jerome concludes his sentence by saying this:

> —the provision of funds for researchers for individual caucuses.

That is what happened in this place, Madam Speaker. Research assistance from one party in this House of Commons was given to the little red rump down there, assistance which they were not prepared to give to the other party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Speaker Jerome continued:

This being the case, that fund is available for individual caucus committees to carry out research, to be used in whatever way the particular caucus sees fit.

That is the third injustice in this matter and the third point of the judgment of a former Speaker of this House with respect to this activity.

I shall not quote the whole of Speaker Jerome's judgment, but I think it is worth while reading and considering it. In my respectful submission, it applies precisely to the facts and allegations in this case. Speaker Jerome continues at page 2181 of Hansard:

—it seems to me to be preferable that it is strictly the caucus research budget that would be employed to that end.

It is not the budget of the federal-provincial relations office, the budget of the Privy Council or of any minister of the crown, but funds which are distributed on a more or less equal basis to all members of the House of Commons. That is a strong statement by the former Speaker of this House.

The last extract of Speaker Jerome's judgment which I will put on the record is this:

I am simply saying to the House, though not in a formal finding of privilege, that in my opinion the greater wisdom would be to ensure that in every case where this is done, where public funds are used to support such a committee even if it is an informal committee, such a committee consist of members of more than one party.

Obviously what he is saying is that it is improper for the government to use its resources in the public service and elsewhere to support only those groups of members or parties in this House of Commons who happen to support the position of the government. That is what happened here. There is a sense of unfairness.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, as I said earlier—and I will repeat it briefly because I know the member opposite who is smiling is impatient to get home—

Mr. Chénier: No, go right ahead.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We have three possibilities in this case. The identical wording of the New Democratic Party's study paper and the government report is entirely coincidental; that is the first possibility. It is an entirely fortuitous accident that that occurred. The wording is identical even right down to the commas.

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I just want to know how much time the hon. member has used up on this question of privilege. So far I have not understood his explanation.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Rose: I am sure the House would be prepared to grant unanimously a request by him for extra time so he can explain.

Madam Speaker: This is the difficulty in which I find myself. That is why I am listening to the hon. member, in order to make certain that I really understand the question he is putting before the House and make a judgment on it. I have to listen to him, but I must tell the House that I have several other questions of privilege to hear this afternoon. I do not want to push the House into concluding its business sooner than it would like to. Nevertheless, other members have questions of privilege. I have to listen to them all. I have no problem. I am here as long as the members want me to stay. But I think some fairness should be demonstrated in distributing time among members. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton knows that better than anyone else. I ask him if he would kindly come to the point.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I would not want to infringe on the rights of other members of Parliament. Therefore, I will sum up my argument.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): There is evidence available to substantiate further the allegation which I made. I want to repeat the allegation because it is part of the prima facie case. It is that "solid sources have identified the author of the Broadbent paper as a constitutional adviser in the federal-provincial relations office of the federal cabinet". That is part of the case that Your Honour must consider in terms of whether there is a prima facie case. There is other evidence as well.

• (1420)

I want to go back to where I was before I was interrupted by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose). I said that we have three possibilities in the prima facie case before you. They are as follows. The first is that the identical wording of the NDP and the government report is entirely coincidental.

Mr. Chénier: Absolutely.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Absolutely coincidental. No one read anything, no one prepared anything; the words came from heaven all the same. That is the first possibility. As I said before lunch, one would have to go a long way to honestly believe and accept that.

The second possibility is this. Some agent of the New Democratic Party in the dark of the night—I do not know who it would be, whether the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody who was wearing a bag on his head—stole into the Privy Council office in the dead of the night and made off with a draft of the government papers. It could be that. Virtue is claimed by that party. I am sure that if they did that, they would get up and admit it. Then the RCMP could lay the appropriate charges against them. That is the second possibility.

The third possibility is the only remaining one because the others are so incongruous as to not be believable. I suggest that an examination before the committee would reveal that the only remaining possibility is that the representatives of the New Democratic Party were given help by officials of the government who were preparing the government's own paper for London.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker Jerome settled a long time ago in this House that the resources of the government should be made available on an equal basis to all members of the House. If they are not made available to all members of the House on the same basis, then the privileges of members have been infringed. With that in mind, Madam Speaker, if you see a prima facie case, which is all that has to be shown at this time, I would move:

That the matter of the assistance given by the government to the Leader of the New Democratic Party, in helping him to prepare a document entitled "Comments by the Office of the Leader of the New Democratic Party", as evidenced by the identical wording of portions of that document and portions of the government document entitled "The Role of the United Kingdom in the Amendment of the Canadian Constitution", and the possibility that such help involved the allocation of public service manpower and financial resources to one party in the House of Commons in a discriminatory manner, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, it is always a pleasure to follow the master of synthetic emotion, the House leader for the Conservative Party, who takes longer to say nothing than any member in the history of the Canadian Parliament, if not the history of parliaments throughout the world.

We listened at considerable length to a series of banalities connected by semi-colons, commas, and occasionally even a period. Let me allay the hon. member's concerns right away. We do not have a spy that I am aware of in the office of the government to which he refers.

Miss MacDonald: No, it is a mole.

Mr. Broadbent: Second, in case there is any doubt in the hon. member's mind that certain material came from the federal-provincial relations office at our request, I want to tell him it is true. It is the scandalous reality that we requested certain information from the federal-provincial relations office. Having said that, I would tell the hon. member that if we thought we could have got comparable technical data that made any intellectual sense at all, I would have asked his party for it.

Unlike the House leader of the Conservative Party, if we can find relevant arguments in a book by MacGregor Dawson, Kenneth Wheare, Professor Cory or in a speech by a Conservative academic that we happen to agree with, not to mention a federal department employing civil servants, then we use those arguments. I never thought it an intellectual or political sin to take certain arguments from persons with whom on other matters you might disagree and use them. It is a problem for the Conservatives to accept that rather banal reality in the intellectual world, but for thinking people in the universe it is taken as elementary common sense.

I am a little amused but not surprised by the long, discursive, rambling pile of words we just had to sit through from the man who, through his brilliant management of the Conservative government, managed to bring that government down after nine months.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I must have hurt you, Ed.

Mr. Broadbent: He should have known that the federal-provincial relations office, even as it existed under the Conservative government, made information available to anyone who requested it, whether they were Social Crediters, members of the rhinoceros party, the Liberal Party or Conservative Party. I would have thought that a party which has preached a lot about freedom of information would have taken as an accepted fact that one of the established principles of the office of federal-provincial relations when it was established by the previous Liberal government was that it would provide information to whoever wanted it, and that that practice was continued by the Conservatives when they were in office. I am not aware that they changed that practice.

Of course, the feigned scandal and the mock horror of the master of synthetic emotion was precisely a bogus argument from the word go, intended simply to use up more time of Parliament. No one with an ounce of knowledge about the process of government or how governments work in providing information would take that argument seriously for one minute. It is a pile of nonsense and the member knows it.

I would be happy to provide the argumentation that was used in the document we prepared—

An hon. Member: Argumentation?

Mr. Broadbent: —part of which did come from the office alluded to. A substantial part came from some of us who have some experience in teaching Canadian government, to know something about the federal system, unlike my colleagues to the right. I would be happy to send the Conservative Party a copy of what he described as the Broadbent paper if they promise me two things—that they will read it and that they will attempt to understand it.

Having devoted about four minutes more than was necessary to that two-hour diatribe that the hon. member inflicted upon the House, I want to raise in this context a related question of privilege that concerns me as a Member of Parliament very much.

Mr. Fraser: I thought the NDP were not in favour of privilege.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: We are now in our third day in which no business of the people of Canada has been conducted in this House.

Madam Speaker: I presume the hon. member is not raising a new question of privilege; he is speaking of privilege in another sense. We cannot have two questions of privilege at the same time. I would have to dispose of one before I hear the next one. I understand the hon. member is speaking on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I respect your authority and accept your judgment immediately. When you rule on the substance of the question of privilege, which should take all of ten seconds, I would be happy to raise a related question of privilege.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I would like to contribute briefly to this question of privilege because I want to support some of the points just made by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). He states quite correctly that government departments in the normal course of business make documents and briefings available to the general public, the press, and that every member of this House can request certain information about them, whether through the Order Paper or a phone call to the minister's office. As the hon. member has outlined—and I was interested to hear his explanation—apparently his party, being in agreement with the substance of the resolution, sought some additional information from the government which apparently was made available.

Well, Madam Speaker, I submit there is no question of privilege outlined by my friend the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). He alleged that certain privileged information was being made available to one party in this House which was denied all other parties. As the hon. member for Oshawa pointed out, if members of the Conservative Party would like to have any information on the government's position on this resolution, anything that might alter their up until now unalterable and inflexible position, then certainly that would be made available.

However, Madam Speaker, it works both ways. I ask your indulgence because I want to read a few extracts from the deliberations of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada and its report. They will show that the kind of alleged behaviour that the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton objects to appears to me—and I stand to be corrected—to be the normal routine in this place and in committees, in the functioning of government, and in the give and take we have here.

I draw your attention to issue No. 56 of the proceedings of the committee, dated February 9, 1981, just before the committee adjourned. Senator Austin said:

> I would recommend that we keep the staff that supports us at our steering committee meetings, and that we should also ask three officials of the Department of Justice to remain—Mr. Tassé, Miss MacDonald, and Mr. Bertrand.

Mr. Epp then said:

> Mr. Chairman, I have no difficulty in terms of who the government wants. I would just like to suggest to honourable members that we be given the opportunity to decide who our staff members will be and that they be part of our delegation.

Then Mr. Epp said—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Collenette: Well, Madam Speaker, I am sorry—

An hon. Member: "The hon. member for Provencher".

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I know you left this question wide open. After suggesting to the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton that he follow my sensibilities—which are, incidentally, not based on personal pique but rather on the rules as I read them in Beauchesne and Erskine May—you allowed him to go on and break the rule. Nevertheless one should always follow one's own directive, and I apologize for having maligned the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) by calling him by his real name.

Senator Austin then said:

> Well, I would leave it to Mr. Tassé to decide if there are any other officials from the Department of Justice that he thinks would be helpful.

Then the hon. member for Provencher, otherwise known as "you-know-who", said:

> Mr. Chairman, if that point has now been determined, I think it is important, because this will be the last time, I take it, that we will be in public, that we thank publicly the people who have been here.

He was referring to Department of Justice officials, among other research staff. He continued:

> On balance, Mr. Chairman, I very sincerely want to thank all these people, including the people from the Justice department.
> I have mentioned them earlier, Mr. Chairman; but it has really been the first experience I have had where amendments we have moved as an opposition party were given additional and a great amount of help by people from the Justice department, who gave us of their professional abilities. I want to thank them for that.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I sat on that committee. Those services were available to all members of all parties, and I think that should be said at this point.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, my friend from Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) is always at his most erudite when he states the obvious. That is the point I make in reading these extracts. The hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) supported the hon. member for Provencher and said:

> Rather than singling out all of the different people who have assisted us, I would simply like to say that I join with Mr.—

"You-know-who", the hon. member for Provencher:

> —in thanking the many different people who have made the committee as effective as it has been.

Then Senator Austin said:

> Mr. Chairman, I would like to clear up one point before we adjourn.
>
> I was told that——the hon. member for Provencher—

> —I am sure because of a misplaced word or two suggested that the officials of the Department of Justice whom I suggested ought to be here tomorrow in case we wanted them as resources, were government committee member designees.
> I would like to place it on record that they are resource people for the committee and are not people I am suggesting should be here on our side in any partisan way.

I will not go on and abuse the time of the House as the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton did in formulating his non-question of privilege, but I would also like to draw Your Honour's attention to the report of that committee which was tabled in this House on Friday, February 13, 1981. I find this under the heading "Organization of Committee's Work":

The resources of both Houses of Parliament and the Library of Parliament, as well as those of the Department of Justice, the Federal-Provincial Relations Office and other government departments, the Prime Minister's office—

My goodness, Madam Speaker, the members over there have really deviated from their normal behaviour in acknowledging any assistance from the Prime Minister's office, given their daily tirades in this House. I continue:

—and the Parliamentary Centre for Foreign Affairs and Foreign Trade, were directed to the facilitation of the work of the committee.

There we have it, Madam Speaker. In dealing with the Constitution, we acknowledge the fact that members of the Conservative party themselves had technical assistance from advisers of the Department of Justice at those hearings. What is wrong with that? Indeed, my friend the hon. member for Calgary West agrees with my point. All I am saying is that any assistance required by any opposition member, whether of the NDP or the Conservatives, on any matter of government business had only to be requested.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the hon. parliamentary secretary should distinguish between the preparation of amendments for bills and the preparation of official party documents for another party. That is what the argument is about.

● (1440)

Mr. Collenette: It is awfully nice of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) to make that suggestion to me but, as I was stating, if any member of this House wishes to ask the government for an opinion on any matter, whether it is through Order Paper questions or through a direct request to a minister, or even through questions asked in Oral Question Period, answers will be forthcoming.

If members of the Conservative Party wanted assistance in drafting their amendments because they did not have the ability to put into words what they really had in mind—I think this has been only too evident, judging by the statements made by various members of the official opposition who, at many times during this constitutional debate, have contradicted themselves and talked about one certain formula and one type of amendment—it only had to be requested. It was requested of the Department of Justice officials, and those officials complied.

What I am essentially saying is that this is not a question of privilege. First, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) read from a newspaper article. The authenticity of that report has not been confirmed in any way, except the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) has said that he and his party have from time to time sought certain information from the government. If that information supports the position of that party, there is nothing wrong with that.

Quite simply, for an hour and a half or more—I suppose almost two hours from twelve o'clock today—the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton stood and spoke about nothing and continued a systematic filibuster of the business of this House of Commons. This filibuster has brought this House of Commons to a standstill and frustrated the normal legislative deliberations of the House. It has frustrated the will of the people of Canada who have sent us here to legislate and govern on behalf of all Canadians. If this kind of filibuster and obstruction continues, only the people of Canada will be able to decide.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Collenette: Only the people of Canada can decide in their very intelligent way. I must say that the people of Canada are much more intelligent and sophisticated than members of the official opposition give them credit for. This question of privilege and the other questions of privilege and delaying tactics we saw last night frustrate not only our normal business but also the will of the people of Canada. Furthermore, it is an insult to the intelligence of the very people who elected us to serve in this place. I think the people of Canada will condemn the official opposition for this outlandish turn of events.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I have listened quite carefully despite—

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, on the question of privilege—

Madam Speaker: Later.

An hon. Member: Throw him out.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have listened to this question of privilege submitted by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton, and I must note a few things about his presentation and about the way I can look at it.

The hon. member did not allege that the article itself represented a breach of privilege but used it as evidence to sustain an allegation that a breach of privilege had occurred, to the extent that government services had been made available to the New Democratic Party but not to his own party, and that therefore public funds had been used by the New Democratic Party in preparation of a certain document.

Mr. Lawrence: That was admitted.

Madam Speaker: I must say that beyond the newspaper article itself no other evidence was offered to support the allegation—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Except the admission.

Madam Speaker: —apart from the fact that the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton did identify the alleged author of that article. But beyond that we do not know anything else.

However, these arguments and allegations seem to be laid to rest by the intervention of the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). We know exactly how the New Democratic Party was able to use certain arguments and data in order to prepare that document. So I think that part of the argument can be laid to rest.

Then the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton invoked the precedent of December 10, 1979. That situation was described at length, but I must say it is not too comparable. At any rate, the hon. member used that statement of the Speaker, which was not a formal ruling. I must remind the hon. member that it was not a formal ruling because the Speaker did not want to make a formal ruling on that question. I think the reasons for that will become obvious at the end of my own intervention.

With respect to that precedent of December 10, 1979, it was alleged at that time that public funds had been improperly allocated to support the work of the task force composed entirely of members of one party in the House. That is exactly the situation to which the hon. member was referring. As I said, my predecessor did not make a formal ruling on that question but commented on the situation. I think that has to be very clear because that comment has been submitted to me in several questions of privilege which have been raised.

I have said repeatedly that I have studied the comments but that I would not be brought to make judgments on the propriety on impropriety of certain matters.

I want to remind the House of the concept of parliamentary privilege. It seems to me that it is important for me to tell the House again exactly what privilege is. I will quote to hon. members now two eminent authors, Abraham and Hawtrey, who say:

> A privilege in the legal sense of the term is an exemption from some duty, burden, attendance or liability to which others are subject. In parliamentary language, however, the term is also applied to the powers other than legislative possessed by either or both Houses and to the exclusive right of the Commons to grant supplies and to originate measures of taxation.
> The privileges which attach to Members of Parliament individually are freedom of speech, freedom from arrest, and exemption from serving on juries, attending as witnesses or serving as sheriffs.

The authors go on to list a number of powers other than legislative, which I will not enumerate, but I think it is my duty at this point to put again before the House the concept of a question of privilege and the basis on which I am called upon to judge a question of privilege.

I think for a member to argue successfully that he has a prima facie case of privilege, he would be bound to relate his argument very specifically to the concept of privilege which I have just cited. That is an important requirement of a question of privilege.

Therefore, if I may summarize, part of the argument of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton was based not on a formal ruling of my predecessor but on a commentary he made. I suppose the hon. member would want me to say that this particular action was improper or, even worse, to guess that it was improper, but I do not feel that he has brought before me sufficient arguments to bring me to conclude that these things were improper.

At any rate, I repeat that the Chair will not become a censor, that the Chair will not pass judgment on the propriety or impropriety of certain actions of governments.

I have another notice of a question of privilege—

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: It is decided. The hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) cannot intervene on the same question of privilege; I have ruled on it.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Unless I misheard you, my very clear recollection is that you said, prior to your ruling, that you would hear the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe.

Madam Speaker: No. I am sorry. I have to correct the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. It is true that the hon. member was rising, but I said "later". I did not say I would hear him on this question of privilege. As a matter of fact, I did not know why he was rising. I know now. I know now he was rising on the same question of privilege. I cannot guess when somebody is rising. I suppose hon. members did expect me to rule on this question of privilege, because I said before lunch that when the first intervener does not convince me that there is a question of privilege, I am not inclined to listen to a second speaker. However, the matter is closed.

• (1450)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, just for the record, I think if you researched the blues you would see that I did in fact indicate, during the course of my argument—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —that the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe would be speaking.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member did say that other hon. members wanted to speak, but I have to remind the hon. gentleman—and he knows that—that the number of speakers whom I hear on a question of privilege is left to my discretion. Despite the fact that many people might have announced they wanted to speak, it is still left to my discretion to determine that I will hear no other speaker, and that is what I have determined on this question of privilege.

MR. BROADBENT—RIGHTS OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which arises directly out of the one which you have just heard from the Conservative House leader and the kind of nonsense, as I regard it, that we have gone through for the past three days. I want to address the serious question of privilege that is connected with the dignity of the institution of Parliament—

Some hon. Members: Oh, sit down.

Mr. Broadbent: —the preservation of respect for the Chair of the House of Commons, and the recognition in Parliament of the right of the majority of members of Parliament elected by the people of Canada at some point to make a decision on a question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We have witnessed for the past three days not parliamentary debate but something that costs the people of Canada $300,000 a day. That is what the Conservatives are putting the people of Canada through, $300,000 a day.

An hon. Member: What price freedom?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Order!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am not sure whether the hon. member for Oshawa is discussing his privilege or his price.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: What is your price, Ed?

Mr. Broadbent: That comment from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) reflected all the wit and intelligence that enabled him to last in power as a prime minister for so long.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to say as a Member of Parliament, in addressing my comments to the House to those issues—

An hon. Member: We love you, Ed; cross the floor.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, we have been listening ad nauseam for some three days now to the Conservative Party on my right. Perhaps they will listen to the rest of the House now for a few minutes.

I want to address myself to the three areas that are connected with my question of privilege. First of all is the right of the majority of the people of Canada at some point to reach a decision in a debate. We have before us—

An hon. Member: The tyranny of the left.

Mr. Broadbent: We have in fact the tyranny of the minority of the Conservative Party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We are dealing with the constitutional resolution which has probably been debated in the House of Commons longer than any other single matter in the history of the Canadian Parliament. Madam Speaker, just consider the following. The resolution, whether one is for it or against it—and I respect those who are against it in terms of their judgment—

Mr. Forrestall: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to remind the leader of the NDP that there are a number of us here who sat in this chamber when colleagues in this House to the left delayed the normal process of the business of this chamber for a period of about two years on the question of the writing of a new divorce arrangement into Canadian law.

Mr. Broadbent: That is totally absurd again. That occurred during private members' hour, and the hon. member knows that very well.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I would like to continue, Madam Speaker. It is interesting that the Conservatives want the opportunity to talk away, but they object when someone else rises to speak on what they said at different times, on the most important matter to come before Parliament. They have had their say; perhaps we can have ours for just a minute.

We have had the matter before the House for a total length of time of some six months, from the time we started last fall to the present. Before Christmas, some 78 Members of Parliament made speeches on this resolution, and since Christmas over 100 members have spoken, all but two of whom have spoken on one Conservative amendment. In terms of the discussion of this profoundly important matter, a committee met 106 times and its meetings were extended twice under pressure from both opposition parties. The point I want to make is that there were 106 meetings of that committee. Over 1,000 submissions in writing were put before that committee for consideration.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the anger of the hon. gentleman, but I must call to your attention the very strict ruling on questions of privilege and order—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —the very strict ruling on questions of order and privilege which you imposed upon the House yesterday. You spoke about the absolute necessity for all of us at the beginning to found our question of privilege. If the hon. gentleman has a question of privilege, then I would say that it is not because of the length of debate on the issue but rather because of the fact that the government of the day has decided to close debate on the issue.

An hon. Member: Supported by the NDP.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I am beginning to wonder now—

An hon. Member: You are a simple minded hypocrite.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —whether the hon. member for Oshawa is changing his position and is about to support the government, if and when we ever get to the question of closure imposed by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard).

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I trust my colleague will not be offended, but I will speak in the language with which I am more familiar. He has spent an hour and a half today systematically destroying and demolishing this noble institution by taxing your patience and raising a question of privilege which was totally unfounded. I have the right to speak French here and I will do so freely. If you want to shout—Madam Speaker, it seems to me it would be normal—

[English]

Mr. Clark: I rise on a question of privilege, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Let us be clear about what is going on. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) now has the floor and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) is asking for the floor on a question of privilege. We cannot have two questions of privilege at the same time. If he wants to raise a point of order, that is another matter.

Mr. Clark: I will do that, Madam Speaker. The point of order is very clear. One of the matters that has been respected—

Some hon. Members: Order.

● (1500)

Mr. Rose: There can be only one point of order at a time.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, I was somewhat confused. The hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) was on a point of order, so we must let the hon. minister finish his point of order.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We must observe the rules.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: That being said, Madam Speaker, if the Leader of the Official Opposition in the House can afford the shameful luxury of undermining this institution during an hour and a half, I wonder why the leader of a party, in this instance the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), should be prevented from trying to defend this institution and to inject a little more dignity into the proceedings of the House since the beginning of the week. Therefore, Madam Speaker, I think that the Leader of the New Democratic Party has every right to speak during at least ten minutes and demonstrate to you that perhaps he does have a prima facie question of privilege, whereas the House leader of the Progressive Conservative Party (Mr. Baker) has taken an hour and a half to—

An hon. Member: —to say nothing!

Mr. Pinard: —systematically run down this institution and put your credibility on trial.

[English]

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I will be very brief. I am sure this matter can be very quickly resolved.

[Translation]

—because I am convinced that perhaps the House Leader of the Government said something that he did not mean at a time when he was perhaps a bit angry. He accused members on this side of having objected to his speaking in French. This is what he said. And I believe that someone on the other side said that it was true that the members of the Progressive Conservative Party are against the use of French in this House. I am referring to the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Ostiguy), if I am not mistaken.

Madam Speaker, I believe that we have touched on a matter which could cause real problems for the House of Commons and the country. All my life, I have tried to defend the right of Canadians to use both official languages throughout Canada.

Madam Speaker, I can accept accusations and I can accept that, from time to time, even the most peaceful of members can lose their temper. That is a fact! However, when an accusation such as that is made not by an ordinary member but by the government House leader, I believe that it must have been a mistake and that it should be withdrawn. I believe that this creates a really serious situation for the House.

The minister said that he greatly respects the House, and I accept this statement. He has shown since his election to this House that he has a lot of respect for both official languages, and I think that he will accept the fact that I have also shown a lot of respect for both official languages in this House and for the fact that a member can use either one in the House. The minister made an accusation which was supported by some of the members of his own party. I believe that it is essential to have the minister immediately withdraw his accusation, because otherwise, there will be a really unhealthy atmosphere in the House, an atmosphere that no one wants to have.

[English]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) understood nothing. All I said is that I had the right to speak French, and members on the other side started to shout and heckle me.

I reiterate and repeat that I have the right to speak French, as the hon. member has the right to speak English. So, he understood absolutely nothing. I think he is just threatening and blackmailing us when he says that the atmosphere of the House will be worse just because I stated my right to speak French in the House. I think he is just wishing that it does not go so well in this place, as has been the case for the last many days.

I say once more that if the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) had the right to try to undermine this institution for an hour and a half, the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) has the right to try to plead the case of this institution and to bring some dignity to this debate. That is all I said.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. It may well be that I misunderstood the government House leader; I will accept that. I certainly did not misunderstand the interjection of the hon. member from Saint-Hyacinthe or from others who shouted from their seats, but it may well be that I misunderstood the words of the government House leader.

I am certainly prepared to accept that there was a misunderstanding, if the government House leader will stand in his place and admit that there was no opposition by members of the Progressive Conservative Party to his use of either of the official languages he wants to use. If he will do that, I will certainly be prepared to admit that I may have misinterpreted what he said.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, perhaps I could continue. I was almost three minutes into my question of privilege before the Conservatives thought they ought to interrupt. We listened to them for more than an hour and a half; I hope we will get a little further this time.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, a few moments ago—and it was quite audible to members at this end of the chamber—the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) referred to the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) as a simple hypocrite.

An hon. Member: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Cossitt: If one consults Beauchesne, the word "hypocrite" is unparliamentary.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cossitt: It also indicates that the right to intervene—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Broadbent: If an unparliamentary word is used against any member, I have the right to rise—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Cossitt: I am exercising my right; I intend to do so.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows the occurrence must have taken place in debate and it must have occurred in a manner that the Chair was aware of the expression used. It is not a valid point of order.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, it indicates that the following words are unparliamentary—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member please resume his seat. The hon. member is right when he says there is a list of unparliamentary words, and I will look at the list. But, in order for the Chair to declare those words unparliamentary, they must have occurred during the course of a debate and I must have heard them. Therefore, it is not a valid point of order.

Mr. Cossitt: Would Madam Speaker undertake to look at the blues to see if it was said?

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I rise on a further point of order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member still arguing his point of order?

Mr. Cossitt: I am asking for clarification from the Chair. Would Madam Speaker be prepared to consult Hansard to see whether those words were picked up? If they were, Madam Speaker would have to hear my point of order. Is Madam Speaker prepared to do that?

Madam Speaker: Yes, I am prepared to do that.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the continuing interjections of the Conservative member is a vivid demonstration of the precise point I am attempting to make.

So far I have said that in my judgment—and I have checked with some people—we have had a long debate on this constitutional matter. It has involved many speeches. In terms of witnesses, some 100 groups or individuals appeared before the committee. There have been a thousand written submissions. Almost 200 Members of Parliament have spoken. In the past six weeks, including the current one, there has been only one amendment before the House of Commons by the Conservative Party.

• (1510)

This is the leader of the party which in the past—and I used to believe it—talked, as he did in the 1979 election campaign, about respecting the dignity of Parliament and about trying to improve our parliamentary democracy. Madam Speaker, that is a party which has witnessed a debate that has gone on for a long time, involving not only members of the House but men and women across this country; a party which says to the women of Canada that it wants to move an amendment improving legal rights; and which says to our native people it wants to move an amendment improving the entrenchment of aboriginal and treaty rights. This is a party which says all that, but spends the past three days not even permitting us to proceed with House business. It is a hypocritical party which is ham-stringing Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the Conservatives cannot have it both ways. They pretend they stand for the dignity of Parliament and they want people to participate in a free and full debate when we have over a million unemployed in real numbers, when we have record levels of inflation we cannot get around to dealing with, when we have a six-month-old debate, and when its members exercise what can only be described as the tyranny of the minority over the majority of people collected in this House of Commons. That is unacceptable to anyone who believes in parliamentary democracy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, what concerns me is that a member who has only been here since 1968—many others have been here longer—and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) himself, and his party's constitutional critic, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), have said that despite having spent three days at a cost of $300,000 a day to do nothing, will not stop at this point. No, they are not content with that. They do not want us to have the right to a vote. They have said this process will continue up to the day of the Quebec election. I ask you, Madam Speaker, to count the number of days we will spend sitting here, listening to inane arguments, frivolous questions of privilege and spurious argumentation that any five-year-old in Canada would see through in 30 seconds.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: It is a party which was once led by a great Canadian, Sir John A. Macdonald. But it is responsible for what is happening right now.

I want to come to the second point raised by the House Leader of the Conservative Party yesterday, and which caused me some real concern. There is one position in this House, and it is not the Prime Minister's position, the Leader of the Opposition's or mine, which must have respect, and continuing respect. I refer to your position, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We heard it yesterday from that sleazy House leader of the Conservative Party—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: He heard your ruling, Madam Speaker. He got up and he smiled in his unctuous way and said "Far be it from me to question your decision, Madam Speaker." Then he proceeded with an argument, the only logical thrust of which was to undermine the credibility of the Speaker of the House of Commons. That is something this party will not put up with.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, surely at this point in our history the Conservative Party has made its position clear. I do not agree with that position. I know there are serious arguments which can be made in favour of it. I think they are seriously wrong but serious people can make them—

Mr. Clark: Allan Blakeney, Lorne Nystrom—

Mr. Andre: And 65 per cent of all Canadians.

Mr. Broadbent: Allan Blakeney is one of them. The point I want to make, as a Member of Parliament, is that one of the guiding principles and one of the privileges of every member in a democracy—not some kind of autocracy, whether a right-wing regime or otherwise—is that at some point we have the right, as Members of Parliament, to make a decision—for the majority to make a decision.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I contend that the people of Canada who are out there and are interested in this question also have an interest in other matters. They have concerns about the cost of living. They are concerned about jobs. When they have made their arguments, as they have, and they are understood, and when the government has made its argument, as it has, and it is understood, and we have made our arguments, as we have, which on balance we say are in agreement in principle with the government on this—

An hon. Member: What about the provinces?

Mr. Broadbent: —and when the final argument is considered and cleared up we will stand together at this historical moment.

Surely if we are to maintain respect for this institution—and this is what concerns me—we must know that if we continue on as the Conservatives want us to we will cease to be a democratic institution. I repeat, we have heard it from the Leader of the Opposition and from his party's constitutional critic that they have no intention of allowing us to come to the point at which we can make a decision. They have no intention of allowing us to proceed with House business. They want us to cease to be a democratic institution.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Do you favour closure?

Mr. Broadbent: They want us to perform as if we had a lock on the House of Commons. That is all we are accomplishing with their obstructionist tactics.

I am sure that every Canadian, no matter where he or she lives and no matter on what side of this important issue they are on, if they could witness the behaviour of this House of Commons in the last few days, would be ashamed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I apologize for interrupting the hon. member, but if he is exposing a question of privilege I would like him to indicate to me if he feels that any particular rule, or practice, for that matter, in the absence of a rule, has been breached. I would like him to tell me where his point of privilege lies. Of course the hon. member knows that democratic debate is part of what Parliament is all about. He would have to tell me that there have been some irregularities in the way these proceedings have been going on. If the hon. member would do that it would be helpful to me.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I promise to take no more than two minutes. I have listened to what has gone on in the House for three days. This is the last speech of this kind I hope will have to be made by anyone, because I hope the Conservatives—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Unctuous hypocrite!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to conclude by saying most seriously to the Conservative Party, which in many respects has both in Canada and Great Britain a responsible and honourable Conservative tradition when it comes to the governing process, read Edmund Burke and a contemporary Conservative, Michael Oakshott. If they read people like that they will understand that the rights and privileges of Members of Parliament are inextricably bound up with the principle about which you hear minorities speak. Listen to them. At some point in a democracy the majority must have the right to decide.

Some hon. Members: What about the provinces?

Mr. Broadbent: If that majority will is frustrated, if that majority of men and women elected from all parts of Canada is not able to decide because a minority wants to disrupt Parliament then—

Some hon. Members: Then call an election.

Mr. Broadbent: —the respect for which all members should be held in a free society is diminished. That causes serious harm to the democratic assembly when it is held in mockery by the people of this land. I am one who believes that the majority must have the right to decide at some point, which is the essence of my question of privilege. At this point the will of the majority is being frustrated by the irresponsibility of the minority.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I can bear name-calling from the Leader of the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Broadbent: How about "windbag"?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —although most of the time I have always spoken very kindly of him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is not the reason I rise. The reason I rise is with respect to the question of privilege he raised and what he said in the course of it about it being our intention to not allow the question on the constitutional matter which is before the House to come to a vote. That is resolution No. 41, or whatever it is. I recognize, and every member of this House recognizes, that whether we are talking about amendments or about the main motion, it will come to a vote. I think what has to be recognized is that there is a very strong difference of opinion on the resolution itself. There have been discussions amongst us, from time to time about how that might be expedited.

• (1520)

I have said categorically to my friend, the government House leader, on every occasion, that I took seriously—and maybe this is where I was wrong—two undertakings that were given by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). One of those undertakings was given the night he made the announcement in respect of the proposals before the government. What he said was that every Member of Parliament who wanted to speak would have the right to speak on that resolution.

Mr. Crosbie: We are not going to hold our noses here to put it through.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Then, prior to the Christmas adjournment the government House leader, on the instructions of cabinet, because I do not think he would do it on his own initiative—I think better of him than that—used the provisions of Standing Order 33 in the House to close off debate when Members of Parliament were exercising their right. As everyone knows, there was a great upset in the House of Commons, and I do not condone that kind of upset in this place.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: More hypocrisy!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): But it occurred, and that was the use of closure at the first stage. Then when we raised that, we were told by the Prime Minister again, "Don't worry, fellows. You still have the third stage."

In answer to a question from the hon. member from Athabasca (Mr. Shields) a line is recorded in Hansard in which he said he wanted to hear from every member. So, we had closure the first time with the promise that we would have the right to hear, at the third stage, every member who wanted to speak.

The fact is that as the debate has gone on—and you yourself can check—the speeches have not been 40 minutes; they have been much shorter than that, with one exception. That happened to be the speech of the Prime Minister. He is the Prime Minister and I am not going to quarrel with his right to do that. That is what we were promised, twice.

What we are faced with today as a result of the question I put to the government House leader last night is this: "I want to proceed to the motion that stands in my name on the order paper, the effect of which will be to limit debate in this House to four days." On its face it has an admission within it that members will not be allowed to speak. In fact, on its face it says that because members will not be allowed to speak—and this is Parliament where members are supposed to be allowed to speak on the most fundamental issue there is, "—you can file written essays, gentlemen, not beyond 3,000 words, please. We do not want to overburden Hansard so let's not do that."

That is the issue today. Madam Speaker, I said publicly and I am going to say in this House, that I will resist with every legitimate procedural device there is—not rushing into the House to call the bells early or anything like that, but, with every legitimate procedural device there is—the opportunity for the government to call the motion which stands in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) and that is that closure motion which, instead of the quick death of Standing Order 33, is a slow strangulation method. The end result is the same, that my colleagues will not be able to make their speeches.

We have, in fact used—and I use "we" collectively because members of the House on all sides have been involved in the discussions—a fair amount of parliamentary time. I want to say to my friend directly that while that motion stands on the order paper in his name, that closure motion, we are going to use parliamentary time and we are going to waste it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We are going to waste the time that could otherwise be used in allowing Members of Parliament to utilize the right which they believe they had because they believed the Prime Minister. Madam Speaker, that is the position which we take.

Mr. Crosbie: We are going to hangar down.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We are not objecting, after every member who wants to speak has the right to speak, to the question being put on the constitutional resolution itself. We realize that has to be the effect of the debate, but we take the view that this is so fundamental to Canada, to the sense of togetherness of the country, to the sense of this Parliament, to everything that all of us in this House, I think, should hold dear, no motion which is closure by another name ought to stand between the right of Members of Parliament to exercise what we believe is our right, and that is the right to speak.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, we on this side listened very carefully to what the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton had to say in the last few minutes. I hope he will listen to what I have to say in the next few seconds.

The House leader of the official opposition in this House just stated publicly that his party intended to deliberately waste the time of this House—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): No!

An hon. Member: That is not what he said.

Mr. Pinard: —if the government was not willing to withdraw its motion to limit time on the constitutional debate. Those were his exact words, Madam Speaker.

An hon. Member: No.

An hon. Member: You should listen.

Mr. Pinard: We are speaking now on a question of privilege raised by the hon. Leader of the NDP. The basis of that question of privilege is the right of this Parliament, this institution, to work. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton said, "We will resist with every legitimate device there is . . ." I say this is wrong. What they have been doing this week was not to use legitimate devices but was to use frivolous points of order, frivolous questions of privilege, to delay and obstruct this Parliament, and stop this Parliament, this institution, from working. That is what they were doing. This is not a legitimate device at all, Madam Speaker.

If I may be allowed and if my colleague is patient, I will quote from the constitutional debate those few lines, and I ask them, I beg them to listen very, very carefully as I read:

> The policy of the opposition was just this—they wished to spend the whole of March and the best part of April in the general discussion upon my motion; and then, when they could do nothing more to nauseate the House and disgust the country with the subject, when they had wearied the members and made the reporters sick with their talk they were to spend the remainder of April, all May and June, and run the debate well into summer, upon the amendments they intended to propose one after another. It is because these honourable gentlemen have not endeavoured honestly and candidly to discuss the question, but have played the game of prolonging the debate to midsummer and preventing the House coming to a final decision upon it, that the government have taken the step now proposed—

An hon. Member: Who wrote that?

An hon. Member: Machiavelli?

Mr. Pinard: No, that was not Machiavelli, that was Sir John A. Macdonald 116 years ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pinard: I just heard an hon. member from the other side say that I was quoting Machiavelli. I was quoting Sir John A. Macdonald when he was delivering his speech in the great debate on a resolution to establish confederation in Canada, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1530)

Mr. Pinard: May I remind my hon. colleague that I was quoting from the great debates on confederation, specifically March 5, 1865.

An hon. Member: It went on all summer.

Mr. Pinard: At that time debate on confederation started mid-January and ended on March 11 that year.

Sir John A. Macdonald uttered the words I have just quoted in 1865, and it is coincidental that 116 years later we find ourselves in an almost identical situation at about the same time of year. Sir John A. in the confederation debate was about to put the previous question. He did that on March 5, and described his motion as follows:

I move, sir, that the main question be now put.

Explaining his motion after having said that, he said:

That was the proposition made by the government. It was a fair, liberal, even a generous one.

Sir John A. Macdonald, after two months of debate put the question on March 5, 1865.

Mr. Clark: How many members were in the House?

Mr. Pinard: On March 10 or March 11, at one o'clock in the morning, the confederation debate was over. It was a former Tory Prime Minister of Canada who uttered the words which I have just quoted. If he were in this House today, he would be ashamed of the attitude of Her Majesty's official opposition. He found that after two months it was enough. Yet we have been debating this question almost six months. We allowed this question to go to a joint committee of the House and the Senate where many amendments were debated. We are now in the sixth week of debate on one amendment put by the hon. member for Provencher. We have not yet been able to dispose of this amendment and deal with the rest of the resolution.

The reasons the hon. member for Oshawa rose today are obvious. He is saying to the official opposition, and I join with him, that if they do not agree with our proposals, they cannot claim they have not had time to speak. They have been allowed almost six months, compared to the two months which were allowed by Sir John A. Macdonald, to deal with the old confederation. They have had ample time and they must recognize that, in a democracy, in a parliamentary system, there is a time when the government must have its way. There is a time when a question must be put and there is a time when elected representatives of the people of Canada decide if it is to be approved or rejected. But it is basically wrong for a House leader to say he will not allow a question that has been discussed over a six-month period of time to come to a vote—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I did not say that.

Mr. Pinard: —and will deliberately waste the time of the House of Commons of Canada. That is wrong, Madam Speaker. That is unacceptable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pinard: There are 25 minutes left before we reach private members' hour at four o'clock today. I am sure the official opposition will not allow me to put the motion to allow all members of Parliament to be on record, and allow most of them to speak for 20 minutes each over the next four days, each day comprising 13 hours. I am pretty sure the official opposition will not allow me to do that today.

We have the weekend ahead of us. I invite the official opposition to respect the dignity of this institution, to respect the Speaker and to allow this Parliament to work, and—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pinard: —and after six months to allow a question to be put. I invite them to reflect on what Sir John A. Macdonald said exactly 116 years ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I think I can dispose of this particular question of privilege. First, I want to tell hon. members that I am not trying to push ahead with business of the House, but I have several notices of questions of privilege. Like any good administrator, I must try to get rid of papers on my desk, if at all possible and I must insist on doing it that way when a question of privilege is obviously not a question of privilege. I think I can rule in that sense that this is obviously a debate.

The hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) did not indicate there had been any irregularities in the procedure or in the customs of the House. He does not like what some hon. members are doing during the course of this debate, but that is not for me to determine. The rules are there precisely to ensure that the democratic right of Members of Parliament to speak are protected. Since hon. members did not detect any irregularities in the proceedings, I have to say that, while it might be debate, differences of opinions—all of these things together perhaps—but the hon. member did not have a question of privilege.

The next question of privilege I have is in the name of the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence).

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, I gave you notice this morning at the earliest possible moment of a question of privilege. At the same time I gave verbal notice to the minister concerned. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) was here earlier, but he is not in the House now. I seek your guidance as to whether I should continue. You know the gist and the substance of my question of privilege because I gave it to you in writing. Perhaps I should wait until Monday when the minister will be here.

Madam Speaker: That is the hon. member's choice. I cannot tell him when to raise his question of privilege. His notice is in order. It came at the proper time. There is no rule about the order in which I should hear questions of privilege. However, I shall tell hon. members that I classify them in the order in which they reach me. I have now come to the hon. member's question of privilege. I know the hon. minister is not in the House, but that does not preclude the hon. member from raising his question of privilege. The only thing which might happen is that I would not rule in the minister's absence.

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, under the circumstances, I think as a courtesy to the minister, if you do not mind and as long as I am not abrogating any rights as far as my question of privilege is concerned, out of courtesy I would like to wait until the minister is here.

Madam Speaker: That is the hon. member's choice.

The next question of privilege I have is in the name of the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle).

MR. OBERLE—ALLEGED FAILURE TO FULLFIL STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I, too, gave you notice this morning of my intention to raise a question of privilege with regard to the failure of a minister of the Crown to live up to his statutory requirements under an obligation he has in connection with an act passed before this Parliament. I make reference to the statutory requirements which the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) has in connection with the James Bay and Northern Quebec agreement.

I shall quote the requirement in the act as follows:

> The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development shall, within sixty days after the first day of January of every year including and occurring between the years 1978 and 1998, submit to the House of Commons a report on the implementation of the provisions of this act for the relevant period.

I raise this question of privilege at this time because over the last few days before the standing committee we have had members of the native associations from northern Quebec who are directly affected by the agreement.

● (1540)

The James Bay Northern Quebec Agreement was not an ordinary land claims settlement or agreement. It is known as the most modern precedent-setting agreement ever reached in this country. I look around the House and see many of the members who served in the House and on the committee at the time the agreement was signed in 1977.

Because of the history of the treatment of native people in this country over the last 100 years and, indeed, much longer, we in the opposition at that time wanted to ensure that this agreement, which was to set the pace and precedent for all agreements to follow, would be one of which we could all be proud. We wanted an agreement that could be honoured by all parties which were a signatory to it. For that reason we insisted at the time that the minister, who was the guardian of the people affected by the agreement, make an annual report to Parliament. The minister has the responsibility for native people directly. He cannot pass that on to any province or agency. He is the guardian of rights of native people in this country.

We wanted to be sure that this agreement, which was negotiated and signed in good faith, would finally be honoured. For that reason the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) moved a motion to amend the agreement, "that the minister of Indian affairs be required to report to the House on an annual basis as to the implementation of the agreement".

We have the first report from the minister which was tabled in November, 1980. The report for 1978 was not tabled. The report for 1979 was not tabled.

Mr. Chénier: That was your government.

Mr. Oberle: The report which was tabled in 1980 was eight months late. It is now the eighty-sixth day of 1981 and the minister has still not tabled his annual report.

So serious is the infringement and the neglect of this particular agreement that the people came to Ottawa to meet with the minister and to appear before the standing committee. They told us of unbelievable horror stories. They told us their children are dying of disease because the government passed its responsibility for health care, as well as its responsibility for education, to someone else. It was not its right to do that under the agreement. It did not pass on the means and the funds required for the establishment of health care and education delivery systems.

For that reason the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) stood up and challenged the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), reminding her of her responsibility, which has not yet expired. He told her that ten small children had died in the area because of unsanitary conditions which occurred because the agreement entered into in good faith had not been implemented. The death of these children occurred because the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development did not report these conditions to the House, yet that is his statutory obligation.

So frustrating is this situation that the chairman of the Indian and Northern Affairs Development Committee said to the press last night, and I quote from the March 27 edition of The Globe and Mail reporting on what the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Penner) said:

> It's stupid to spend a lot of time and money investigating problems when you can't make any recommendations to Parliament. Perhaps that will provide the pressure-point to improving the implementation process.

The hon. member stated that the committee is not split along party lines, as most other committees. That is indeed a fact. All the members of the Indian Affairs and Northern Development committee agreed last night to sit behind closed doors to conspire and try to work out some kind of scheme whereby the members of the committee, including members of the governing party, could decide on a way to apprise the public of what is happening in northern Quebec in respect of that agreement. The article continues:

> "Most MPs feel they are fighting against the Indian Affairs bureaucracy," he added.
> Warren Allmand, Liberal MP for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce in Montreal and former Indian affairs minister, said it may be the first time all MPs on a committee have felt strongly enough about an issue to circumvent Parliament.
> The Inuit, who insist the James Bay agreement is a good one, want Ottawa and Quebec to pay the cost of implementing the agreement.
> Under the agreement, Quebec's 6,500 Cree and 5,200 Inuit or Eskimos gave up their rights to half the province so that Quebec—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is debating, and he knows that. If I let him go on, he will read the whole report to the House. I cannot allow that. The hon. member has yet to prove that he has a prima facie case of privilege. I would ask him to make some effort to indicate that to me.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, my privilege is simply this. It concerns the privileges of all members who serve on the Indian affairs committee. We are prevented from adequately discharging our duty by the fact that the minister is not reporting to the House the extent to which this agreement has been implemented. That is the question of privilege.

This is not the first time this kind of question has been raised in the House. When the House makes a conscious decision to include a requirement in a statute that there shall be a reporting to the House on an annual basis, that compares with the annual reporting of the Auditor General or the Commissioner of Official Languages and Human Rights. Why is there that requirement under statute that the minister must report? It is so that members can discharge their duties in line with the responsibilities they receive when they accept membership in this institution.

The minister has not reported to the House, as is his statutory requirement. For that reason, the members of the Indian affairs committee and all members of this House were not able to discharge their responsibility to those children who died in the Quebec region. The minister has a responsibility to those who live in that region in abject poverty, similar to that in Third World countries. I would point out when the Cree appeared before the committee, they could not identify their member of Parliament. That member knows this agreement has not been implemented properly. He is ashamed to go to that area lest he have to accept responsibility for some of the problems which occur there.

I would ask, Madam Speaker, that you refer to other debates throughout Hansard where other Speakers have ruled. In particular, I refer you to a debate on March 9, 1972, where my former colleague from Peace River, Mr. Baldwin, reported to the House the failure of the Auditor General to report his findings. The then hon. member for Peace River wanted the Auditor General called before the Bar of the House. The Speaker ruled that an officer of the Crown or an officer of the House could not be made accountable for his actions in that way, and that could not be done. It was quite clear. He said that even though the privileges of the members may have not been affected, it was a very serious breach of order of the House. There again he was referring to an officer of the House rather than a minister. In this particular case, Madam Speaker, we are talking about the statutory responsibility of a minister, and his failure to live up to that responsibility.

For that reason, Madam Speaker, should you find that I have a prima facie case of privilege, I am prepared to move the appropriate motion to ask this minister to appear before a committee to answer for his neglect and his contempt of Parliament.

Madam Speaker: I am afraid I have to deal with this question rather quickly as it is quite clear there is no question of privilege. I remind the hon. member that failure to comply with the law is not a matter for the Speaker to determine, but rather should be decided by the courts, and I quote Beauchesne's fourth edition, 71(5):

> The Speaker will not give a decision upon a constitutional question nor decide a question of law, though the same may be raised on a point of order or privilege.

I read that because I want the hon. member to understand it is appreciated that he brought this matter before the House, but of course I cannot be called upon to judge it. The hon. member has complied with this rule by bringing the matter to the attention of the House and, hopefully, the House will consider whether it has been inconvenienced by the fact that a certain thing has not been done. But, it is not for me to force the minister to comply with the law. I thank the hon. member for having brought it before the House.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, one final comment. What recourse—

Madam Speaker: Order. I think I have told the hon. member what his recourse is.

Mr. Oberle: There is no recourse.

Madam Speaker: Well, there is no recourse to the Chair because the Chair cannot decide.

Mr. Oberle: But it is the institution—

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, but when I am explaining the position to the hon. member he has to listen to the Chair. The recourse is not to the Speaker, and the hon. member surely has enough knowledge and experience of parliamentary and government affairs that he can inform himself of the necessary recourse. I am telling him now there is no recourse to the Chair.

MR. HAWKES—PROPOSED REPRINTING AND DISPOSITION OF PORTIONS OF "HANSARD"

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege arises from today's question period and involves an exchange between the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). You will recall the hon. member for Gaspé asked the Prime Minister if he would consider an extra printing of the March 23 edition of Hansard. This request was made so they could be supplied to the parliamentary members in Britain, and others whom I cannot recall.

I was positively disposed to this idea because of the quality of the Prime Minister's speech, and in particular his quotations of the Late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker during the flag debate when he indicated we would have a less united country some years later, which certainly is the case. I would be disposed to see that this was brought to the attention of parliamentarians in Britain.

However, the Prime Minister's response was that he was predisposed, I believe were the words, to have the Crown pay for extra printing of Hansard provided that it included Hansard for the days on which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) spoke on this matter.

As I reflected upon that, Madam Speaker, I thought perhaps the privileges of this House were likely to be circumvented by the predisposition and any action as a result of it. It is, I think, a basic principle of parliamentary law that we are the Commoners, equal in this House, and in that way our constituents are treated equally in this House. Certainly on such an historic debate I would believe that, even though this resolution says the people of my province, hence my riding, shall be second or third-class citizens compared to those of other provinces, at least we would not move in that direction in this House; that each of us here should be treated as first-class Members of Parliament, equals, and that the predisposition of the Prime Minister to have three days of debate sent off to the British parliamentarians would in fact infringe on the rights of the people I represent.

If in fact he is predisposed to do that, then I think, Madam Speaker, in terms of your responsibility to this House, you might advise the Prime Minister that he should send all of the issues dealing with this debate so that those on the list of the hon. member for Gaspé would receive all the speeches that have been made, and that is the brief point that I wanted to bring to your attention.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, you will recall that earlier today I indicated there was a point of order I wished to pursue arising from Question Period where I put a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) having to do with a question before the Supreme Court of Canada and the matter of this Parliament's ability to deal constitutionally with the resolution now before the House. I wish to pursue this matter now before the day expiries as it has to do with the question period, and in order that I can carry on that debate at some other time.

It is a matter of some very real concern to all of us on this side of the House that we are dealing with a situation in which the government—

Mr. Ouellet: Sit down, you are out of order again.

Mr. Clark: I understand when a point of order has been raised and I am speaking on that point of order, as you have earlier ruled, Madam Speaker, my point of order takes precedence over one raised from the floor. So the point of order I am pursuing has to do—

Mr. Ouellet: Order.

Mr. Clark: —with the very real concern we have on this side of the House at a time when it is possible that the premiers can come together and get agreement. André Ouellet, speaking as he usually does to judges, tells me that I should sit down.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Just so I can keep some order in the House, I have to dispose of the questions raised by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). However, I consider the hon. member has risen before four o'clock.

The hon. member for Calgary West understood, I am sure, that the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had suggested that the other speeches would be printed as he probably assumed this would not be a partisan thing. He suggested that the speeches of the other leaders of parties should be printed as well, but he expressed only the opinion that it would be a good thing. This does not in itself cause the speeches to be printed and appended to Hansard, or extra copies to be printed. It was not made an order of the House. Therefore, we have no such order of the House before of us and, for the time being at least, those speeches will not be printed.

• (1600)

The hon. member suggested that all of the speeches be printed so that all hon. members could be equal in this House. He would have to ask for the unanimous consent of the House for that to be done, and he could do that at some other date when procedure allows. For the time being, nothing is being printed, neither the speech of the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition, nor the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent).

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has the floor, and it is now four o'clock.

Mr. Fretz: Madam Speaker, on a point of order—

Madam Speaker: I cannot have two at the same time. I have a point of order—

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, my understanding is that I have the floor, but we are now into a different stage of the proceedings of the House, and I certainly would not want to intrude upon private members' hour.

Mr. Ouellet: What a farce.

Mr. Clark: I should specify my understanding.

Madam Speaker: I want to make sure whether the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition could still have the floor when the House resumes. I have not had that question presented to me before. I just want to make sure. I want to make it quite clear that my advice is that the right hon. member will have the floor when the House resumes the particular proceedings we are engaged in now, but for the time being—

Mr. Fretz: On a point of order—

Madam Speaker: For the time being it is four o'clock.

[Translation]

It being four o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

NOVA SCOTIA

OFFICIAL DESIGNATION OF THE NAME—NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants) moved that Bill C-217, respecting the official designation of "Nova Scotia", be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before dealing with the substance of my proposition, I should like to make a few preliminary remarks. First and foremost, I want to emphasize the fact that the introduction of this bill does not relate in any way to bilingualism. I am solely interested in the purity of the forms enshrined in legislation, documents and traditions.

[English]

Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Knowles: Carry on. Continuez en français.

Mr. Nowlan: I will have a few more words—

[Translation]

—a few words in French. Although I am not fully bilingual at the moment, I am studying French and I hope that by the end of this session I will be functionally bilingual.

[English]

But I seriously ask the House to consider Bill C-217, which has a very simple title but, frankly, does have a serious message.

This matter affects all members. Mr. Speaker, you and I have sat in this House when the then hon. member for Three Rivers used to rise in his place in a proper way and raise questions of privilege every time "Three Rivers" was used as a proper noun to describe that place. You remember that, I remember it, perhaps other hon. members remember it and I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) would remember it. I think that member was a former mayor of Trois-Rivières. Gilles Grégoire was also a member. I forget the name of the county, but every time the words "Seven Islands" were used, he stood in his place on a question of privilege and said, "The proper noun for my place is 'Sept-Iles' ". That was of particular interest to me because I used to work in Sept-Iles when it was called "Seven Islands", long before iron ore was developed in Ungava. I was on a survey crew for the Iron Ore Company of Canada to lay the centre line up the Moisie River. At that time it was "Seven Islands". It was a little fishing village. It is now Sept-Iles, quite properly.

There is probably no good time to present this type of bill because we are perhaps ultra sensitive with respect to language in this House. I actually had this bill before the House and on the Table at the time of the referendum. Frankly, I have had it on the Order Paper for about two years. There were always tense times with respect to language, and I deliberately delayed bringing the bill on. Perhaps I am bringing it on now because there may be no good time to bring it on, but—

[Translation]

Finally, by way of introductory remarks, may I say that I would have liked to deliver in French all my argument in support of this bill. Still, I will continue to make efforts and take lessons to improve my French, but I admit that those efforts have left me somewhat less than perfect. Therefore, I would not dare embark upon a long speech, keeping in mind the status I have achieved thus far.

[English]

Having said that, I want to emphasize by those preliminary remarks en français that this bill is not against anything. It is for the proper use of proper nouns. That is the whole purpose of this bill.

The proper noun for the Speaker, "Monsieur le Président", may be very apropos in view of the things which have gone on in this House for the last two or three days. "Sauve" means to save. Madame Sauvé, is the hon. Speaker of this House. That is stretching it a little. The man who was chastised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, Mr. Baker, is Monsieur Boulanger. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) is "Romeo the white". Even the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is the pit, in effect, almost.

Mr. Pepin: The "peep-in".

Mr. Nowlan: The "peep-in". My friend Bernard Loiselle—I know what that is en anglais. It is too demeaning to say in English. The hon. member is much finer than the translation of his name, as far as I know. There may be some jest, and I am glad there is because we know the temperature of this House rises and sometimes get a little too hot.

Frankly, for a period this afternoon I did not think this was the best time to bring this bill to the floor of the House in view of some of the things which were said, but I accentuate the fact that this bill has as its purpose the proper use of proper nouns with respect to some of the people I have mentioned, but especially with respect to places.

I have mentioned two places which stimulate my interest in my own province, the proper nouns, Trois-Rivieres, and Sept-Iles, because as some hon. members may not know the proper noun describing my province of Nova Scotia is neither English nor French. It is Latin. It is in the original charter given by King James way back in 1621 to William Alexander. In the original charter it was "Nova Scotia". Of course, in those days the educated people could not speak English or French. The only language they could speak was Latin. It is as simple as that. But if the name is "Nova Scotia" in Latin, I say with respect that it should not be translated because it would not be the proper name.

I gather all hon. members in this House know that the name "Canada" is not a French name or an English name. It is an Indian name. It is the Huron-Iroquois name "Kanata" meaning a village or community. We all accept "Canada" as the name of our country. We do not translate it. We do not have "Canada" on one side of a name card and "Village or Community" on the other.

The case of Quebec is very interesting. As all hon. members from la belle province know, "Québec" is an Indian name. The Algonquin name for Quebec means where the river narrows. I cannot say that in French but I do say I am proud and happy that Quebec is known by its proper name, and in my opinion and submission Nova Scotia also should be known by its proper name. The interesting thing about Quebec, which I did not appreciate, but scholars of French would know, and I imagine you, Mr. Speaker, would know, is that if you went down the river a little way you would get the translation of Quebec in French from the name of a little town called Détroit. In effect, Détroit means of the narrows, the same meaning as that of Quebec in the Algonquian language. Until I did a little research on this I did not appreciate that, and I thank those researchers who gave me that little hint.

Let us now move on to that great big province of Ontario. Again Ontario is a name which is not translated at federal-provincial conferences. It is not English or French, it is Iroquois. It has two names, ontare, meaning lake, plus io meaning beautiful, or beautiful lake. If Ontario means beautiful lake and Ontario is good enough for Ontario and for the Canadian public, and in federal-provincial affairs, we do not have to make it any prettier by calling it beautiful lake.

Nova Scotia is Latin for New Scotland, it is not Nouvelle-Écosse. Let us go out west to a couple of the provinces there. Manitoba in Cree and Ojibway means the strait of the manito or spirit. Saskatchewan is another Indian name. It is a Cree Kishiska name for rapid current. I could go on to the other provinces but I will not waste much time on them. They have names which are translatable into English or French even though, quite frankly for my purpose, in terms of the proper use of language, they should be known by their own proper names.

You could consider the names of members on both sides of the House, such as that of my friend, the former minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise). He wants to be known by his own name of John Wise, not Jean Le Sage. The whole thing could be carried to absurd lengths. Or let us consider the name of the former minister, the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) who, I am sure, would prefer to be known as Mr. Allmand, not Mr. German. There are so many other names, but I do not want to take the time of the House to go through them. Quite frankly, the proper name for British Columbia should be British Columbia, not Colombie Britannique. Trois Rivières is the proper name for Trois Rivières. I do not understand why that name is not translated but British Columbia is.

I want to stick to my own province of Nova Scotia. My own town, which is a very beautiful spot in Nova Scotia, is called Wolfville, and it is known as such. Anyone who tried to translate it to la Ville de Loup would find that, although it might help him to get through on the telephone system, he would be laughed at in my province. I seriously hope members will be disposed to give some direction and pass this very simple bill. It did not take a bill for us to correct what I consider to be an injustice in terms of Trois Rivières and Sept-îles.

Now that I have finally got this bill on the floor of the House, having started work on it eight years ago, I intend from now on, in a non-argumentative way, to try to stress the importance of using proper names for places in this country. Just notice, Mr. Speaker, how conditioned we are. The very title of my bill says in French "la Nouvelle-Écosse". That is in the official title of my bill. I will not go into all the pragmatic reasons I would like to see this changed in terms of tourism. We spend money in our part of the country to get tourists to come to Canada. I know that part of the country has a history of its own and I have received some very interesting letters from people in Nova Scotia and in Quebec, some very good Acadian friends of mine, who have sent me copies of their deeds 300 or 400 years ago. Some of them are in Nova Scotia, but some of the early Acadians even then were calling it Nouvelle-Écosse because they had translated the Latin name of Nova Scotia. That is all right. I am not suggesting we could get this changed overnight and condition people to calling Nova Scotia by its proper name.

I see the former premier of Nova Scotia, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Regan), in the House. Had I known he would be here on this late Friday afternoon, I perhaps would have tried to get him to second this bill in the hope it could move through, because it will hurt no one. Frankly, at this time when we are trying to renew federalism, as has been discussed from time to time when we are revising constitutions, and as we have certainly heard from time to time, we should allow reform on the proper use of language and call proper nouns by their proper names.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, I have to say at the outset that this is a tough act to follow. Like most of his fellow members from la Nouvelle-Écosse, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) is a great speaker and he has clearly laid out his reason for putting this bill forward. I have to say I support him. I think it is a good idea. He wants to make common usage official usage. I think that is a good idea. He has spent a long time in his speech telling us he is not against anything and, like most of the people from Nova Scotia who I know, such as our Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) or our Minister of Labour (Mr. Regan), I think it is a constructive idea from a constructive person. He really made his point with me when he said he is dealing with a standardized approach. He wants to make Nova Scotia, like Moose Jaw, a name that we know from coast to coast, the same name in every language. I think it is a great idea and I cannot stress enough how much I support it. It is an idea that follows a trend. It stresses the bilingual aspect of our country by picking out a third and quite acceptable compromise.

We have seen this with things like Air Canada and a lot of other official government names. We are now seeing it creeping slowly and surely into our use of place names. The proposal is logical and practical. I think it recognizes tradition, it recognizes the great history of that province as the first colony of Great Britain to possess a royal charter and a flag of its own. As he said, it harks back to the days of King James I when the only language of the educated was Latin.

However, the hon. member belongs to a party which has taught us that agreement and high-minded principle are not enough in this House. Being a new member here, I would like to apply one or two of the tests I have been learning over the past few weeks to this particular bill. I have listened to the constitutional debate and I have learned that the end does not justify the means. I hope the hon. member can apply some rigorous tests to his idea. I wonder, for example, what the other provinces say about this. Has the hon. member discussed this with the current Premier of Nova Scotia, let alone, for example, the premier of my province, Mr. Davis, who has been known to take an independent stand on some things. After all, Mr. Davis in my province will have to change all the maps of some areas, and little children will have to learn all kinds of new things. No longer will the people of Sudbury be saying Nouvelle-Écosse; they will be saying Nova Scotia. Do we have the Premier's consent to make that change? I really wonder whether we can proceed to steamroller this idea over those premiers. Perhaps if they do not agree, we could opt in and opt out. Perhaps in Sudbury it will still be Nouvelle-Écosse, whereas on Vancouver Island, Nova Scotia will ring loud and clear. What does popular opinion say? Have we had a Gallup, have we had a Goldfarb, have we had an election on this? Did the hon. member campaign on this the last time around? Does he have a clear and ringing mandate to bring this to this House, or he is trying to push through his own ideas? Principles are not enough; we need to have popular consent. Does the hon. member want to call an election on it? Would he like us to discuss this with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)? Perhaps we should be discussing trilingualism from coast to coast; not unilingualism, or bilingualism, but the idea that Canada needs to remember her great Latin roots. Maybe we should just have a special referendum, although I know that idea, as I heard today, is particularly odious in some corners.

As a Liberal, one can see I am cautious. I do not want to shove Latin down the throats of every Canadian. I do not want to add to a bureaucracy where we would have to change the maps and spend thousands of dollars just to bring this idea into line.

Perhaps the hon. member can tell me: Does Parliament have the right to decide? Should we take it to the people? Should we take it to the premiers? Are we acting out of line here? Perhaps we have here from Annapolis Valley-Hants a red Tory, a man who wants to take us back.

I am happy to support this bill. I think it is a great idea. I think it reflects the respect for education, the high standards and traditions which prevail in Nova Scotia. I would like to say quite seriously that I personally believe that Nova Scotia is becoming tomorrow's country. The change of attitude which has existed in that province for the last ten years has been remarkable. Today, Nova Scotians are high-minded and optimistic about their future, but I am sure they, as all Canadians, have a respect for Parliament.

I will cut my speech short, just so that I do not waste time and filibuster on this important idea. Having expressed my reservations, I hope that the due process will now take place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That is a tough act to follow.

Mr. Peter Stollery (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, yes, it is a very difficult act to follow. After all, it is not simple to argue against what seems at first to make sense. It is a Latin name. The hon. member proposes that we should effectively make "Nova Scotia" the name of that province in both official languages. But I would argue that it would start a whole series of changes in names which go back many hundreds of years.

[Translation]

It introduces in the French Canadian language what is known as "Franglais"; in my opinion, a great many people in Canada who already find it difficult to cope with two languages would find this unacceptable; we must oppose this idea of mixing French and English, which would destroy both languages and we would end up with "Franglais". This suggestion would establish a precedent which a great many Canadians would find unacceptable.

[English]

I noticed with interest that the hon. member mentioned Three Rivers and Trois-Rivières in his speech. Personally I have always thought that we live in a bilingual country. As an English Canadian, when I am speaking English I refer to Three Rivers, whereas French Canadians refer to it as Trois-Rivières. That is the spirit of bilingualism, as I understand it as a reasonably bilingual Canadian of English background. I do not see anything wrong with it.

It is rather difficult to expect unilingual Canadians to switch back and forth. These problems do not really arise very much with bilingual Canadians; they come up more with unilingual Canadians. It is difficult to ask them to switch suddenly to an unfamiliar pronunciation. In the case of Nova Scotia, the precedent dates back approximately 300 years. The hon. member talked about Nova Scotia getting its charter in 1621. I do not think the reason it was written in Latin at that time was because educated people had difficulty speaking English or French; it was probably a custom at the time.

I have read most of the works of Samuel Pepys in that 1659-60 to 1669 period. In those days it was common to use a Latin description for titles and such things, not because people could not speak English or French or because educated people spoke Latin. Certainly in the early part of the seventeenth century in England people did not speak Latin.

It is interesting to look at the map of Quebec. There have been many recent name changes in the northern portion of le Nouveau Québec. I should like to refer to this business of suddenly deciding to change a name which has been in existence for 300 years, as is the case of la Nouvelle-Écosse, and suddenly saying—

[Translation]

I intend to spend a holiday with my family in Nova Scotia. It would not sound right in French if I said: "Bon, je vais avec ma famille passer mes vacances en Nova Scotia."

[English]

It is not really what bilingualism is supposed to mean in Canada. I think it is unreasonable to ask for this, as the hon. member is doing in good faith. I am not suggesting the idea does not make some sense, but it is unreasonable to ask people all over the French-speaking world to suddenly change their atlases and their customary way of referring to the province of Nova Scotia. It gets into this business of "franglais" which, as the hon. member knows, is resisted rather strongly in many French-speaking countries. It will not work. In fact, name changes will lead us in Canada into more difficulties than can readily be seen.

[Translation]

Considering the systematic effort of the Government of Canada to make our federal institutions bilingual ever since the enactment of the Official Languages Act in 1968, we do not hesitate to describe as regressive this attempt at "unilinguization", Mr. Speaker, it is on purpose that I used the word "unilinguization". I could even have termed it an attempt at English "unilinguization".

• (1630)

[English]

I would point out to the hon. member who proposes this idea that one of the very important points against his bill in the province of Nova Scotia today is that there is a fairly substantial French-speaking minority. This morning when I was looking at the figures I noted that the minority had declined in only five years in the 1970s from about 6 per cent of the population to approximately 5 per cent. In other words, it is already difficult for French-speaking Canadians to survive in Nova Scotia as French-speaking Canadians, for all kinds of reasons. It seems to me we would be putting, unnecessarily, one more nail in their language coffin. For all of recent history, and going back to the time when the Acadians came back, I guess in the early part of the nineteenth century—

Mr. Nowlan: In 1755.

Mr. Stollery: They didn't come back in 1755, that is when they went out. They did not get back until quite a long time after that. We could discuss at length what the province was called before the Acadians were expelled. I am sure that since they have been back they have always referred to it as Nova Scotia.

Mr. Nowlan: It was Acadie.

Mr. Stollery: They have always referred to it as Nouvelle-Écosse.

Mr. Nowlan: Acadie.

Mr. Stollery: I am saying since they came back; it was Acadia that they were expelled from. As the hon. member knows, the people who were actually expelled were the Acadians who lived in the French Shore, who had agreed that they were the treaty Acadians.

If I recollect my Francis Parkman, whom I have not read for many years, they were the treaty Acadians who then got into some trouble because of various New England versus Quebec arguments. Finally, they were expelled. At that time they probably called themselves Acadians but, in fact, they were treaty Acadians. The French had ceded the territory to the New Englanders.

I suspect that after they were expelled in 1755 and came back, up until 1930 they were still drifting back to New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. There is no question that ever since then they have had a very difficult time maintaining their culture and language. I know the hon. member supports the efforts to maintain the very ancient French culture of Nova Scotia, but I think changing the official name of Nova Scotia would also make it just a little more difficult for those people.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I think the idea has some merit. I also think there will be some problems. There are many name places for which we use English words which in fact are not English—there are hundreds of them. I think to get into the business of legislating what a place is to be called and changing traditional practices would be counterproductive.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, if I had not known the sponsor of this bill for many years and if I had not known his father before him for a great many years, I would be very suspicious of his intentions. The advantage of sitting in this House for a long time is perhaps that you get to know well each member on both sides of the House and you can tell the difference between those who understand the spirit which must prompt us Canadians, and I am not speaking about French Canadians or English Canadians, but about all of us Canadians in this House. Some have reached a higher degree of Canadianism than others, but I have every confidence that one day, we shall all have reached the high degree of Canadianism required if we are to understand not only what the institution of Parliament, but also every province and the federal government represent for us.

I might be afraid for my hon. friend and colleague that the francophone minority in his province would become suspicious and consider this a second attempt to expell the Acadians, but I say this with a smile. Fortunately, we can be seen on television, because those who know me will realize that I have no intention of dividing the Canadian people according to whether they speak French or English. However, I would like the hon. member to reflect on what this would mean for the French Canadians. I know that he has made considerable efforts to learn French, and I congratulate him as he, or rather as his father congratulated me on learning English as I could hardly say a few words of English when I was elected to this House. I learned English with difficulty in the beginning, and this is why I would not want the hon. member to become discouraged because he is making considerable progress. However, I can imagine what it would mean for francophones who, as my colleague the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery) has noted, would talk of spending their holidays in a place called Nova Scotia while the traditional term has always been "Nouvelle-Écosse" in French. This designation has been traditionally accepted, and if there were a sudden change, people would wonder who brought about such a change and whether it is another regressive step. Let us imagine for a moment people telling us: I plan on spending my holidays—

[English]

I am going to go for the summer to Newfoundland. It is rightfully universally accepted by everyone in Canada—at least every Canadian of French-speaking tongue—so you know where I put the emphasis "Canadian of French-speaking tongue". It is not my fault if the translation is bad and in English we are called "French Canadian". In French we call ourselves "Canadiens français", but in English it is not my fault if they put the emphasis somewhere else. One thing I know is that we say to ourselves, "Nous allons à Terre-Neuve". We do not say, "Nous allons in Newfoundland". Maybe some day we will say that. I know my friends opposite may like that, but I did not think it acceptable for us. They will not say, "I am going this summer to British Columbia". They say, "la Colombie-Britannique", even though when I was young at school I was taught that there was a nice province called "Canadian Columbia", because the word was offensive to some. It is not offensive to me. Then do you say, "I am going to go to New Brunswick"?

[Translation]

Would I go spend my holidays "au Nouveau-Brunswick" or in New Brunswick? People say "le Nouveau-Brunswick". Do people say, Will you be spending your holidays "à la Prince Edward Island"? Of course not, people say. I will be spending my holidays "à l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard". Are you going to suggest at some other time that the name of Newfoundland be changed?

[English]

I can see my very good friend jumping in his seat, and rightfully so. If someone would say that "Newfoundland"in French means "Terre-Neuve" and in Latin it means "Terra Nova", so let us all go next summer to Terra Nova, then I think that would be unacceptable. That is not historical. What is historical is that we have customs. We have good customs. This one is universally accepted. Because I get along very well with some hon. members on the other side, I should not like to add to their difficulties by too solidly supporting the bill. I am ready to believe in the very good intentions of the hon. member who is the son of a very prominent friend of mine, a man who sat in this House. I always like to recall that because as a student I knew the hon. father of the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan).

I should like to say that people who are suspicious of certain intentions of certain members and certain political parties—I should like to stay above partisan politics—will say that this is something about which to be suspicious. They may not say it in English but I can assure the hon. member they would say in French that they are taking something away from us. I hear so much in this country about people who think we want to impose something on them.

There are other people who may say we are used to saying "la nouvelle-écosse". Why, suddenly, is there this new interest to call it, en français and in English, Nova Scotia? I am trying to help my hon. friend from the other side and to help his political party too. There is so much misunderstanding and he knows about the true feelings of some of the Conservative Party on bilingualism in my own province. I am not joining in that; I am only saying to them that they should reflect upon what may happen or could happen or how people are going to interpret that—people who are used to the words "la nouvelle-écosse".

I will conclude by saying that I should like to see this bill have a chance to come to a vote. I do not want to participate too long and take up the time that would deprive my hon. friend of a vote. I shall help him, as I always help other hon. members. I have not abused the time of the House of Commons in the 17 years I have been here because I do not believe in that. At times I believe I can be helpful in certain situations. I repeat, I do understand the good intentions and the good faith of my friend from Nova Scotia who introduced the bill. I want to tell him, however, that people will not understand it that way, especially those who are used to the words "la nouvelle-écosse".

I hope I can convince my hon. friend, if we do come to a vote, to withdraw the bill from further consideration with the permission of the House. In that way we would not have to vote against his bill and show division on his good intentions. If that is the case, I am sure we will not have to vote and divide ourselves. If he pursues it, however, I suppose someone else will speak and then we will not have to take a decision. I think we should not have to accept the bill at this time.

Designation of Nova Scotia

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (London-Middlesex): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) proposes that the name currently used in the English language to designate the province of Nova Scotia be also the official usage in the French language.

There are, no doubt, practical reasons for such a proposal. The most obvious is the administrative simplicity of a single identifiable name which is immediately recognizable and never needs to be translated from one language to the other. There is also, unfortunately, an appearance that one of our official languages, French, is being slighted by removal of the French name for this province, a name that has been in official use ever since the King of France ceded Acadia, of which Nova Scotia formed part, to the British Crown.

We have come far, especially in recent years, toward making francophone Canadians feel at home in many parts of Canada. The Government of Canada, and numerous members of this House, have taken special pains in the very recent past to proclaim Canada's deeds in this respect, and to give assurances of further progress to the people of the province of Quebec when they were asked to make a fateful decision concerning their future and that of our country. Much is being done. It is generally agreed that among the ways in which francophone Canadians will be made to feel more at home is to increase the number of Canadians learning the French language and to improve the quality of tuition.

The federal government gives financial aid to the provinces and territories to provide education in the minority official language, that is to say, English in Quebec and French in other areas of Canada. This assistance is calculated according to instruction costs and student participation rates. For example, in assisting minority language education at the elementary and secondary levels, a percentage of the average annual provincial per student cost is paid to provinces with respect to each student who is studying in the minority language on a full-time basis. Similarly, assistance for second official language teaching is based on a percentage of the cost per student enrolled in such instruction and takes into account the amount of time spent studying the second official language. The government also pays a percentage of the provincial per student cost, based on the total number of minority official language school-aged children in the province, toward administrative costs of minority language education. A further contribution is made with respect to capital expenditures relating to minority language education at the post-secondary level. Similar assistance is provided to the two territories under a separate agreement. Total payment in this program during 1979-1978 was approximately $140 million.

In addition, some $30.4 million was allocated last year for a variety of programs approved by the Secretary of State (Mr. Fox) upon recommendation by the Council of Ministers of Education in Canada.

Under a special projects program, federal contributions designed to assist the provinces to develop and expand minority official language education and second official language instruction, in areas specified by the provinces as needing special attention, amounted to $13,721,080 for 249 projects. In order to qualify for funding, the projects had to represent an innovation or an addition to programs already in existence, or else respond to a pressing need which otherwise would remain unanswered. Examples of such projects are the implementation of new core French programs, teacher upgrading, community college courses, development of teaching materials, immersion programs, evening courses for adults, university courses, and educational television programming. Funding here is provided on a cost-sharing basis, with the federal government's share normally not exceeding 50 per cent of total project costs.

Other programs include the fellowship program, in which the Department of the Secretary of State spent some $2,500 on bursaries for each post-secondary student to pursue studies in their second official language, or to undertake studies in their own language if the students belong to an official language minority group in a province. In addition, almost $40,000 was spent on travel bursaries for students unable to pursue studies in their first official language in their province of residence or within commuting distance. Other bursaries totalling almost $2,270,000 were awarded to second or minority official language teachers to upgrade their language skills.

The federal government also provides funds for the establishment and support of minority language teacher-training institutes for the improvement of provincial language training centres. Last year $957,000 was contributed to aid provincial language training centres in five provinces.

In addition, the Council of Ministers of Education in Canada and the provinces, administer two programs for language learning on behalf of the Secretary of State. Last year, disbursements for the summer language bursary program, which enables students to take intensive summer courses in their second official language, totalled more than $5,840,000. Expenditures for the official language monitor program, which pays several hundred post-secondary students for helping language teachers while undertaking post-secondary studies in the milieu of their second official language, were approximately $3,870,000. The Yukon and the Northwest Territories received financial assistance of about $170,000 for activities such as fellowships, teacher bursaries, northern allowances for second language monitors and the hiring of French consultants.

● (1650)

It may seem that I have drifted somewhat from the subject, but I have a point to make. This incomplete description of government activity in the encouragement and maintenance of secondary language education tells something of the great effort the government is putting forth to give equality to the two official languages and to continue on the road of reassuring francophone Canadians that they are, indeed, accepted and needed by their anglophone compatriots.

The proposal before us, that the term Nova Scotia be used unchanged in French, is a negation of that policy. While in point of fact the words are Latin rather than English, as the hon. member said, they are perceived as English through long usage. I suggest the small administrative economies and efficiencies that would result from this move are heavily outweighed by the discord such a move would almost undoubtedly make. Obviously, such a move would affect Canadians throughout the country, not just in Nova Scotia.

I am reminded of remarks once made by a specialist in public relations on the subject of building a company image. He emphasized attention to detail. He said:

A company can spend millions on building a good company image for itself, and this entire program can be destroyed by one impolite telephone receptionist.

I believe actions such as this, however well-meaning, would be to overlook the feelings and aspirations of any sector of the Canadian population and should be discouraged.

Mr. René Cousineau (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, when I read this bill aimed at changing a name, that is doing away with the expression "Nouvelle-Écosse", the first question I asked myself—true, the hon. member has personal reasons to introduce this bill—but I asked myself what benefits would the residents of that province stand to gain in their everyday life. What economic benefits will flow from it?

If we agree to this change the first thing we will know in the House is that we will have to do the same thing for "Colombie-Britannique", "Terre-Neuve" and "Île-du-Prince-Édouard". The hon. member may very well have personal reasons which prompt him to want that, but I also have personal reasons to want to keep the name "Nouvelle-Écosse" because I must say quite frankly that the name "Nouvelle-Écosse" is part of history and, for all practical purposes, I would like that name to remain in our history books and not be changed through the adoption of this bill. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I have to say now that I will vote against Bill C-217 introduced by my colleague opposite.

[English]

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, it is a very interesting motion we have before us in Bill C-217, an act respecting the official designation of Nova Scotia, introduced, I think, by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan). As I explained last night, I am still living in the previous distribution of names and seats and I am sorry if I have maligned members by sometimes not only calling them by their proper names, which is against the rules, but also calling them by their proper names incorrectly. I hope you can figure out that logic.

I know the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants is sincere. He has been a member of this House for many years. He is a distinguished member whose father sat in this place as a minister of the Crown. I know he is one member whose motives cannot be challenged and whose sincerity for the people of Nova Scotia and the traditions of Nova Scotia cannot be called into doubt. I say that the intentions behind this bill are extremely noble. They are in keeping with our history, and when I say "our history", I speak to the hon. member as a fellow English Canadian.

There is a great history in Great Britain and in the English-speaking world of acknowledging the derivation of our English words from other languages. That might have been Norman French, Danish or Scandinavian. Many of our words have come from the northern countries but many of our words are based on Latin and that is from which Nova Scotia comes. As one who studied Latin at school, those two words "New Scotland"—in Latin Nova Scotia—have a very distinguished and distinctive ring to them. As a student of Latin, I am proud to live in a country which has kept our heritage and the heritage of our language, not only the English language but also the French language. The French language is also based on Latin. English is a very eclectic language. I was going to use another word which was unparliamentary, but I do not want to create another fuss at this time of the day. In any event, English is an eclectic language having embraced the traditions of the many people who have conquered Great Britain, including the Romans. I think the words Nova Scotia have a nice ring to them.

Before getting into the reasons I will not support this bill, I will return to the remarks made by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants when he introduced the bill. He talked about iron ore from Uganda. I think it was a slip of the tongue. He was talking about Ungava. There may well be iron ore in Uganda and many other things, but as everyone knows, Uganda is not in Canada and Ungava is. The hon. member also talked about "almond, almond, almond". I found this a bit strange at first because I did not know what he was getting at. I think what he was really saying was Allemagne which translated into English is Germany. He was not in any way talking about a brand of nuts one can have at Christmas time, or was he in any way maligning the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) by calling him in an unparliamentary way by his proper name.

That aside, why do we want to replace the French words Nouvelle-Écosse with Nova Scotia? If so, do we then want to replace Colombie Britannique?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Yes.

Mr. Collenette: My friend from Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) says yes. Because I was born in England, I have a great respect for the British tradition, unlike that shown by members of the Conservative Party opposite over the past three days. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich who, quite frankly, is more English than the English is asserting the supremacy of the English culture in derogating or perhaps deriding the contribution the French culture has made to this country. He wants to change the words Colombie Britannique to British Columbia.

[Translation]

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I would really like to know whether the hon. Parliamentary Secretary would like to see the name changed of a fairly large city of Saskatchewan to read, in the French version of our atlas, as "la mâchoire de l'orignal"?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, if I may continue my little speech, I would say that the names of the other provinces are also Indian names: Ontario, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Quebec. However, we have names like British Columbia—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

It being five o'clock, the House stands adjourned until Monday at 2 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—WARNING AGAINST OUTSIDE INTERFERENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, given the seriousness of the situation in Poland, this motion I am sure, will get the unanimous consent I believe it deserves.

Noting the continuation of difficulties in Poland, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett):

That this House sends its warmest support to the people of Poland and strongly urges that all outside countries continue to refrain from any military interference in that country's internal affairs.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TRANSPORT

MAINTENANCE OF CROWSNEST PASS FREIGHT RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, despite the fact that western farmers have expressed their support for the Crow rate as an essential component of an over-all transportation policy, the Liberal leader in Manitoba has called the Crow rate "a major handicap" to western agriculture. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That this House abhors the statement by the Liberal leader which shows more sympathy for the views of the railways than those of western farmers and this House recognizes that such statements demonstrate why the Liberal Party is nearly extinct in the west; and further, that when Mr. Lauchlan, in the long tradition of defeated Liberal leaders, receives his Ottawa reward after the next Manitoba provincial election he not be appointed to any board or Crown corporation that deals with transportation policy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

ASSURANCE OF QUICK PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION TO ASSIST WIDOWS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), I move:

That this House assures the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs that it will give quick passage to legislation to eliminate or shorten the six and a half year phasing-in period with respect to the payment of pensions to widows of disabled veterans where the veteran's disability was below 48 per cent, and that this House therefore urges that such legislation be introduced without any further delay.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

HEALTH CARE

REQUEST FOR PROLONGATION OF SERVICES TO WASWANIPI, MISTASSINI AND GREAT WHALE RIVER CREE INDIAN BANDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seeking the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion related to an urgent matter.

As a result of a conflict between the Cree Indians and the Quebec government over the health services budget, a new 32-bed hospital at Chisasibi (Fort George) is empty while tuberculosis and other serious diseases threaten three Cree communities which have so far been unable to reach agreement with the Quebec government on the terms and conditions of the transfer of health services of the two higher levels of government. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Deniger):

That the House strongly urge the Minister of National Health and Welfare to extend health services to the Cree bands of Waswanipi, Mistassini and Great Whale River until the parties to the current conflict reach an agreement, so that those three communities will not be deprived of basic health services after March 31, 1981.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

WESTERN DEVELOPMENT FUND

IMPROVEMENT OF HIGHWAYS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In recognition of the strategic economic importance of the Yellowhead Highway to western Canada's economic development I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell):

That the terms of reference for the western Canadian development fund include improvement to those highways used to move goods to and from western Canadian ports.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—WARNING AGAINST OUTSIDE INTERFERENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Collenette: This is a repetition—almost—of the motion of the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) noting the continuation of difficulties in Poland.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis):

That this House sends its warmest support to the people of Poland and strongly urges that all outside countries continue to refrain from any military interference in that country's internal affairs.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

EL SALVADOR—FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF MURDER OF ARCHBISHOP ROMERO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, last week the motion I am about to move was not passed because of one hon. member who, I found out later, was not thinking about what he was saying at the time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ogle: I am sorry I used those words. He did not hear what the motion was.

Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, and I trust my motion will receive the unanimous consent of the House.

Last week was the first anniversary of the murder of Archbishop Oscar Romero of San Salvador. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House join in an expression of solidarity with the people of El Salvador as they remember some of the last words of their beloved archbishop, "They can kill me, but the clamour for justice among the people they cannot silence."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I take it from the applause of the House that the House does want to express these sentiments.

PETRO-CANADA

APPOINTMENTS TO BOARD OF DIRECTORS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the Government of Canada announced last week some appointments to the board of Petro-Canada, amongst whom were Ione Christiansen and Jerry Grafstein, plus another appointee from the maritime provinces who has firm links with the Liberal Party, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae):

That in future appointments to Petro-Canada, if the government really wishes to take Petro-Canada seriously, it appoint to the board of directors people with some experience in the oil business.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ALICE ARM, B.C.—DUMPING OF TAILINGS BY AMAX—CALL FOR IMPACT ASSESSMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the position taken by the Most Reverend E. W. Scott, Primate of the Anglican Church of Canada, calling for the withdrawal of the special order in council permitting Amax Corporation to dump its effluent into Alice Arm and to declare a moratorium on development of the resources until technology is developed to dispose safely of the tailings, and in view of the support given this intervention by the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops chaired by the Most Reverend Remi J. De Roo, and the refusal of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to meet with the Primate regarding this issue, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House call unanimously for a comprehensive environmental impact assessment and a full public inquiry on the Amax project and go on record supporting the positions of the Anglican and Catholic churches of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ECONOMY

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, in light of the continued decline of Canada's manufacturing sector caused primarily by high interest rates for mortgages, business inventories, business expansion and consumer purchasing, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House require that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce produce for this Parliament his long overdue industrial strategy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

SUPREME COURT HEARING OF MANITOBA APPEAL—REQUEST FOR DELAY IN SENDING JOINT ADDRESS TO BRITISH PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question would be to the Minister of Justice who I thought was going to be in the House today, but in his absence, and the absence of the Prime Minister, I will ask either the Acting Prime Minister or the Acting Minister of Justice.

The government will know that the Supreme Court of Canada will hear the Manitoba constitutional appeal on April 28, and that an expeditious hearing has been assured by the court. Will the government now give its assurance that it will delay sending its joint address to the parliament of another country before Canada's highest court has had a chance to rule on the constitutionality of that joint address?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Acting Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I understand the Prime Minister will be here before the end of question period, and in view of that I take note of the question on his behalf.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Can you assure us of that?

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, if we can take that assurance, I will wait until the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice arrives.

Mr. Kaplan: I am sorry; the information that I have is that the Minister of Justice will be here before the end of question period.

An hon. Member: Here he is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, on behalf of the House may I welcome the Minister of Justice back to a chamber in which men and women are offered equal admission.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: My question to the Minister of Justice, whose late arrival momentarily delayed some of the proceedings of the House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —was to draw his attention to the fact which he will already know, that the Supreme Court of Canada will hear the Manitoba constitutional appeal on April 28, and that they have promised an expeditious handling of that appeal. I ask him whether the Government of Canada will now give its assurance that it will delay sending its joint address to the parliament of another country until Canada's highest court has had a chance to rule on the constitutionality of that joint resolution?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, the position of the government is well known. This House will be called upon to vote on the resolution and, after it is passed, it will be transmitted to the Parliament in Westminster. We have no intention of delaying. We have said since the beginning that we have to legislate, and the courts have to adjudicate, and we should not mix the two.

POSSIBILITY OF REQUEST FROM SUPREME COURT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Some of us would prefer a system that would allow the courts in Canada to adjudicate in Canada rather than rushing the question out of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Let me ask the Minister of Justice a question on government policy. If the government were to receive a request from the Supreme Court of Canada that the joint resolution not be sent out of this country until they have the opportunity to rule on it, beginning April 28, would it be the policy of the Government of Canada to accept that request to keep that Canadian question in Canada, or would it be the policy of the Government of Canada to send that question out of our country before our courts decide?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I said earlier it is for this House of Commons to legislate and for the courts to adjudicate. I think the policy is well known, that we want to settle this matter in the House as quickly as possible, and in fact when it is settled the courts will have a definitive situation to deal with.

As to such a request, I do not think it would be appropriate for us to mix the political debate with the role of the courts. The courts decide on what this House has disposed of, and I do not think we should try to mix the political debate into the problem before the courts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1420)

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, that is precisely the point. We do not want political considerations to deny the right of the Supreme Court of Canada to come to a legal decision, which is what the Government of Canada is trying to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSSIBILITY OF INDIVIDUAL REQUESTS FROM SUPREME COURT JUSTICES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Let me ask the Minister of Justice whether the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, any justice, any other member or official of the Supreme Court of Canada has sought an assurance from the government that the Supreme Court of Canada would have the opportunity to consider the question of the joint resolution in Canada, before that matter was sent out of our country to another country? Has there been such a request that the courts should be given the opportunity to do their job before the case before them is shanghai'd off to another country?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Not that I know of, Madam Speaker. If the hon. member would like to be useful in the matter, I think he should permit the courts to have a final decision in front of them, and we should have the power and privilege of disposing of this matter in the House as quickly as possible so that the courts will know exactly with what they have to deal.

MINISTER'S TALKS WITH MEMBERS OF BRITISH CABINET

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice in his role as Attorney General of Canada. The answer he just finished seems quite inconsistent with the action of the government in the 1978 constitutional package, known as Bill C-60, which dealt only in federal jurisdiction, and which the federal government in fact referred to the supreme court for a ruling.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Possibly the minister could answer that. As well, when the minister was in London did he tell the British House leader, the Right Honourable Mr. Pym, or other ministers in the Thatcher government, that the Canadian government would insist that Westminster proceed with the Canadian constitutional resolution, before our Supreme Court had ruled on its constitutionality?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, in every circumstance the policy of the government has been the same and it remains unchanged. We decided we were going to dispose of the resolution here in the Parliament of Canada and then send it to London, and the British Prime Minister has repeated that several times at Westminster since last August. She has always said that the policy of the British parliament was to dispose of the Canadian resolution in accordance with the precedents and the tradition, that is to say very rapidly, and we have no intention of urging the British Parliament to change the policy which has been the only correct one since 1867, namely to accept a resolution of the House of Commons and the Senate of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. He did not answer either one of the questions I asked him, but he said that the British Parliament indicated that it would act according to precedents and that it would not change its policy. If that is the case, I should like to ask him about stated policy.

During his meetings with the British ministers, did any British minister repeat to the Minister of Justice, in any form of words, the substance of the warning of November 10 of the then House leader, St. John Stevas, when he said, expressing British government policy, the "British Parliament could not act if any challenge before the Supreme Court of Canada"?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, the answer to the hon. member will be very well known, because I hope that the British government will table very soon its reply to the Kershaw report. Personally I am convinced it will act in accordance with the word of Mrs. Thatcher and rapidly dispose of the resolution in light of the precedents and the law.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ALICE ARM, B.C.—DUMPING OF TAILINGS BY AMAX—REQUEST FOR REVOCATION OF ORDER IN COUNCIL

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He has risen in the House on a considerable number of occasions and indicated that his scientists have always supported the idea of the special order in council for the dumping of mine tailings at Alice Arm by Amax. On October 31, 1980, he said in the House:

> —the officials in the Pacific region did make a review as I requested. They have now made it clear that nothing has emerged from their re-examination to lead them to change the recommendations they had made and which were eventually put into the order in council which was passed.

However, a member of the task force which looked into the dumping at Alice Arm said the following:

> In the present situation, the records will show that the JDCC approved the task force recommendations. This, of course, is false.

In the same letter, the minister's own scientific team rejected the project in 1978, for the following reasons: "The heavy metals associated with the tailings—"

● (1425)

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The quotations the hon. member is reading are quite long for the question. Could the hon. member proceed to his question?

Mr. Fulton: In view of the fact, Madam Speaker, that the minister has stood in the House a number of times and said that his scientific team has always said that this project was fine and that there were no problems, will the minister rise in his place and tell us on what scientific data he bases that? In light of this information will the minister revoke the special order in council?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I did say some months ago, when the question arose, that I was asking my department to review this matter, which it did. They said that there was no new evidence to change the recommendation which had been made to approve, by order in council, the regulations which were put into effect.

At what I would call the first level of expertise, an interdepartmental committee did examine this question. There were conflicting views. The next level of authority in the department came to the conclusion that this was a desirable approach, on the opinion of an outstanding scientist dealing with the problems of marine dumping. Following normal departmental procedure, the recommendation was to the effect that permission should be granted. This is the recommendation upon which I acted.

As I said, there was a difference of opinion at the primary level of discussions between officials of different departments. I have asked that this be reviewed to ensure that the divergent opinions had been transmitted as the subject moved up through the various levels. I have not yet received information on this matter.

CALL FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, this matter has been raging in the House of Commons for a year now. Of the original task force four of the five scientists, the Canadian Wildlife Service, the oceanographic people, and the minister's own Department of Fisheries and Oceans are opposed to this project. In light of Mr. Trethewey's letter, which describes the joint committee report as being highly irregular and completely unacceptable, would the minister tell us why he will not place a moratorium on the project, revoke the special order in council and call for a public inquiry, since there are only two days left until the dumping begins?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, a week ago, after a considerable delay, partly due to the worries and fears which the hon. member has been spreading—

An hon. Member: Sit down!

Mr. LeBlanc: Finally, a panel of reputable scientists got to work. They are examining the data which was provided when the decision was made, and when the recommendation of the first level of scientists was overruled by the next level. This is not an unusual procedure on a highly technical and complex scientific matter. The panel will indicate to us if the procedures were correct, if the scientific data was properly examined, or if changes in the monitoring and changes in the regulation should be put into effect.

Surely, at the moment, since the hon. member has been clamouring for an independent investigation of this issue, he would not want to prejudge or paralyse further the work of the panel of reputable scientists who are looking into this matter. The scientists on this panel are not governmental people.

POSSIBLE DANGER TO HUMAN LIFE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, this is the most serious issue facing us here in this House at this point in time.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Fulton: According to the minister's own officials, human life is being endangered by this measure. They have said:

The heavy metals associated with the tailings discharge will result in the elevation of heavy metal levels in sediment, algae, invertebrates, and fish within Alice Arm, possibly to levels which exceed the recommended maximum for human consumption.

Is the minister telling us that we should allow dumping to commence and accept a sort of tinkering form of review over the next couple of months when human life is in danger? Let us see some guts. Let us see him call for a moratorium, in this House, today, before they start dumping.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): It is obvious that the hon. member has decided that he will gain footage out of this issue.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. LeBlanc: The fact of the matter is that for weeks now the hon. member has stood in this House and used words like "toxic", "poison", and a great many scare words to create headlines. I am sorry if I have to disappoint him. By the way, Madam Speaker, he quotes from reports which are not identified. At no place, in any of the documents that I have seen, was there any indication of danger to human life or human health.

● (1430)

An hon. Member: It's in your own report!

Mr. LeBlanc: If the hon. member has any evidence to this effect, besides selective quotes, I wish he would make it available to me.

INFORMATION GIVEN TO MINISTER

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): As you know, in reply to my question a couple of weeks ago, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans said that:

The reality is that I have looked in the records to see if there was unusual haste—I have no evidence of this at all.

He went on to say:

It was made very clear when the permit was issued and the order in council was passed, that on judgment of the scientists who had reviewed this situation they felt this type of tailings deposit was acceptable.

When the minister gave that answer in the House of Commons, had he seen or been informed of the communication from Mr. Trethewey to Mr. R. Hoos, dated December 11, 1978, which talked about the process and the task force report as being against the final recommendation, including the use of the words "unilaterally prepared", "without approval"—that is, of the task force, and—"did not reflect the majority of the task force"—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Fraser: My question, given all that, in view of the fact that in addition Mr. Trethewey's statement said that there were—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Fraser: —levels which would exceed the recommended maximum for humans—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that he should not use long quotations in a question, and I would ask him to proceed to a question now. Otherwise, I will have to recognize another member.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Did the minister know about this document when he gave the answers to me in the House a few weeks ago? If he did know about it, how can he continue to say that all the scientific evidence showed that it was acceptable to proceed?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I did not know the details of these conversations which had taken place in what I call the first level of interdepartmental discussion, any more than the hon. member knew, when he was minister of the environment and he wrote a letter of congratulations to the Amax company wishing them well in their new project. He did not know, and I did not know what had been the discussions at the working level of departmental officials, the interdepartmental committee. That information would then be passed on to the next level, and then finally to those who have to make clear recommendations in the region. I did not know what those details were. I have been apprised of those in the last few days, and I am looking into this right now.

Mr. Fraser: In reply to the minister, if I made a mistake, I admitted it. The minister has made a mistake, and does not admit it but compounds it by continuing without a public hearing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC HEARING

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): In view of the fact that now, because of a leaked document, the minister knows something he has to take responsibility for, and which he should have known before, will he take steps immediately to change the terms of reference to the scientific committee and insist on a public hearing, and insist that guidelines will be laid down in such a way that both sides of this issue will be properly aired, and in the meantime, take steps in consultation with the company to ensure that dumping will not proceed on April 1?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): If having more information now than one had a week ago constitutes a mistake, then I made a mistake. I had incomplete information. I had the information and the recommendation that I was given.

As for the matter of public hearings, it is very clear. I understand the scientific panel intends to hold public hearings. They are perfectly entitled and invited to have a total public discussion of the issue. I hope that they do it on a scientific basis, and if we did make a mistake and if the permit should be cancelled, then I will approach my cabinet colleagues with this issue, and I will ask for a change in the order in council. But surely, while this matter is being discussed now—

An hon. Member: What about the dumping?

Mr. LeBlanc: —I do not think I could proceed, and I do not think the hon. member would have proceeded differently when he had this position.

NATIONAL SECURITY

TASCHEREAU ROYAL COMMISSION PAPERS—INVESTIGATION OF FURTHER SPY RINGS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): My question is directed to the Solicitor General, if I could have his attention. In light of the disclosures which are continually being made in Britain, and in light of the findings of the Taschereau-Kellock report, more than one spy ring was disclosed, and those people involved in one of the spy rings were brought to justice. I am wondering if the minister could tell us, from his knowledge of the papers, what has happened to the investigations into the second, third, fourth and fifth spy rings.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): As I indicated, I have not read the Taschereau papers. They are now being examined under terms of reference which I described to the House a few days ago. Hopefully, if the investigation permits or recommends that they be made public, and if they are, the hon. member will have his own opportunity to comment on them.

ACCESS TO PAPERS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I would like to inquire how it came about that these papers now are being made available for examination when access to them was denied to the Solicitor General in the previous government.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): I do not agree that access was denied to the solicitor general in the previous government. I think earlier question periods established that the former government had exactly the same right of access to them as the present government. In fact, the present Leader of the Opposition, when he was Prime Minister, indicated in this House—on December 12, I believe it was—that he was planning to establish a task force, or a committee of some sort, which would review those papers to determine whether they should be made public. His answer at that time made it perfectly clear that he had the same authority to make that decision that this government does.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): If we had access.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN GAS PRICES—INQUIRY WHETHER CONSUMERS WILL BE REIMBURSED

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

The minister is certainly aware that the annual report of Imperial Oil shows a 70 per cent increase in profits, that is, of $682 million. A month ago, this same minister told this House that his department would investigate the recent increase of 6 cents on a gallon of gas. I therefore ask the minister if this investigation is finally completed and if he is willing to refund the Canadian consumers who have been ripped off?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): No, Madam Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Waddell: I wonder if the minister is aware that because he did not do anything on this matter, for 30 days, Canadian consumers have lost, with a six-cent increase piggybacked—as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources admitted—onto the previous increases, $25 million. That is $1 million per day. I again ask, in light of those figures, and in light of the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has said that there was something wrong with this increase, is the minister prepared to tell this House now that he will roll back that price increase pending the report of his department?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: No, Madam Speaker.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INVESTIGATION OF BIRTH DEFECTS IN BAY OF QUINTE, ONT.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. A week ago Friday the hon. member for Regina East asked a question in the House which could indicate that there is an unnatural amount of dioxine in the Bay of Quinte, and further that it was causing birth defects. I frankly both resent and regret this type of irresponsible scare tactic, and ask if the minister would clarify this situation.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Data concerning the number of stillbirths in the Bay of Quinte area during a four-year period in the early 1970s—to which a member of the New Democratic Party referred last week—came from a student at the University of Ottawa who carried out this study as a class project. I just want to make that very clear to the House, because I am not saying the project is good or bad. I am just stating its limitations. I have asked my officials to review the project.

● (1440)

Mr. Ellis: I have discussed this with the medical officer of health for the area. He finds nothing irregular in the number of birth defects or stillbirths in the area. Would the minister assure us that she will give us facts and figures on that, either now or when the report is ready?

Miss Bégin: I can give that assurance. I find it important in view of the technique of spreading anxiety without good findings and data, to make these findings public as soon as I receive them.

COMMISSION ON TEXTILES AND CLOTHING

INQUIRY CONCERNING GOVERNMENT POSITION ON COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I shall address my question to the minister responsible for small businesses.

As suggested in the report submitted nine months ago by the Canadian Textile and Clothing Commission requesting that the government make public its position concerning the recommendations of the commission before March 31, can the minister tell the House whether he intends to make this position public today or tomorrow and, if not, when he intends to do so?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, as previously indicated by my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the government will be able to make its position public in this regard in the very near future.

INCOME TAX

POLICY RESPECTING TRANSPORTATION PASSES

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Is it the intention of the government in future to tax the free transportation enjoyed by those people employed by transportation companies and educational institutions?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, there was a report suggesting that we would tax passes for employees of air, rail and other modes of transportation. That is an error. The author of that particular article did not consult with the department but simply inferred from an interpretation bulletin that the passes were to be taxed. At the present time, although the situation is under review, these passes are not to be taxed. With regard to tuition, it is true that in future taxation years those people who receive tuition will have to pay taxes on that, but for the 1980 and 1981 taxation years, tuition will not be taxable.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

FUNDING FOR PROGRAMS IN NEW BRUNSWICK AND OTHER MARITIME PROVINCES

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister who is responsible for New Brunswick, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Can the minister tell the House what advice he has given to his colleagues in cabinet concerning the funding, for New Brunswick in particular and Atlantic Canada in general, for such programs as the general development agreement, primary highway strengthening programs, tourism, DREE, and other programs?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am not sure that this is within my area of responsibility as Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. If the hon. member wants an answer, then the advice I give is that we should make sure that the federal government gets credit for federal money spent. Not only that, federal Members of Parliament are also elected to represent the people from my province and they should be consulted before agreements are signed in a definite way.

Mr. Corbett: Based on the minister's answer to the House, I assume that he supports the request from the Premier of New Brunswick that the Prime Minister instigate an investigation into the allegations by the hon. member for Restigouche that there has been misspending of funds in New Brunswick. Can the minister tell the House, specifically, if he supports the future funding of those programs in New Brunswick and Atlantic Canada—yes or no?

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, I really think that now I am in an area that is the responsibility of my colleague, the minister for DREE. I am certainly in favour of anything that helps the people of New Brunswick.

EMPLOYMENT

EFFECT OF MICRO-ELECTRONIC DEVELOPMENTS ON DISPLACEMENT OF WOMEN IN WORK FORCE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. The Women's Bureau of his department just sponsored a conference on the effect on women in the workplace of the development of the micro-electronics industry. Given the fact that it has been estimated that one million to one and a half million women workers in offices will be displaced in the next ten years by micro-electronics, can the minister tell the House what plans his department, or the Department of Employment and Immigration has made to protect the right of women who wish or need to work, to be able to continue to work?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. member for a very timely question. The conference to which he refers, on the effect of microtechnology on employment, not just of women workers but of all workers in the future, is still under way at the Chateau Laurier. There are exceptionally able authorities from many parts of the world participating in an examination of exactly what will be the effect of the microchip revolution. Indeed, the authorities who are speaking are quoting sources that indicate everything from a vast reduction in jobs to, in some cases, an actual increase in the number of jobs.

The conference is sponsored by the Women's Bureau because of the fact that the type of jobs that are most likely to go out of existence as a consequence of the microelectronic revolution, are jobs in the banking industry and offices, that have traditionally been held by female employees. I think the results of the conference will enable my department and other departments, and other governments, to plan to meet this challenge in the future.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO PROTECT WORKERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, in the 18 months since the Carrothers report was made, four times as many people have been laid off from jobs as in the 18 months before that. Yet the only comment from the government is an indication that it would implement the proposal of the Carrothers commission. Is the minister's department working on any real legislation which would protect workers who are laid off because plants are closing down as the result of microelectronic expansion?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will be aware of the announcements made by the Department of Labour of intended legislation as part of the industrial adjustment package that the government brought forth about a month ago. In addition to that we have undertaken such things as this conference, which has been in the preparation stage for a substantial period of time and, as I say, has brought together what are perhaps the best authorities in the world on this subject. It is hoped that this conference will show the way for the type of legislation about which the hon. member speaks.

PENITENTIARIES

PROCEDURES GOVERNING SURVEILLANCE OF INMATES ON DAY OUTINGS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General of Canada. Would he please advise this House whether the government is considering revising the surveillance procedures on prisoners who are taken on special day outings, or doing away with that completely in the interest of public safety?

I raise this question in light of the recent escape in Toronto of a convicted murderer of two children who, with several other prisoners, was allowed to visit the Sportsman's Show at Exhibition Place. The prisoner has since given himself up.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, in the case of that particular inmate I should like the House to be aware that he had been under psychiatric care during the period that he was incarcerated and had been pronounced to be sane. On that basis he was returned to the general inmate population at Warkworth. He had had a number of absences under escort from the institution which had gone very well indeed. On this particular occasion it was highly unpredictable that he would have escaped from escort at that time. As the facts indicate, he turned himself in a couple of days later.

We have no 100 per cent accurate way of predicting the behaviour of any human being, let alone of someone who has been incarcerated in an institution. I think the system we have is a secure and safe one in over 99.5 per cent of all cases. I cannot tell the House that any dramatic changes are possible which would make the system more secure than it is now.

REQUEST FOR RE-EXAMINATION OF PROCEDURES

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. As I understood the hon. member's question, it was whether the situation was going to be re-examined, notwithstanding the assurances of the Solicitor General. Would the Solicitor General undertake to the House that he will look into the question and re-examine the procedures that are in effect, given the importance of this matter to public safety?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I am looking into it. In fact there is a study on conditional release which I will be making public sometime soon, which examines this and other forms of conditional release of inmates. I think conditional release is a justified form of program for inmates, when you consider that almost all of them are eventually returned to society. This type of program gives them an opportunity to be released under supervisors with some attention to their reintegration into society. That is what was happening in this case.

● (1450)

I cannot imagine a change which could be made in the future which would completely eliminate the risk that we take which, as I indicated, in the case of these temporary absences is a very small one. In the case of Kehoe, the only offence that was committed was the escape. As far as we are aware, no other offences were committed by the individual during the two days he was at large.

SALE OF DRUG PARAPHERNALIA ON OPEN MARKET

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. There is some concern across the country with regard to the establishment or development of a number of so-called "head shops", stores which sell drug paraphernalia. Attorneys general of the provinces, of whom action has been requested, have indicated that this is a matter of federal concern. Does the minister plan any legislative initiative with respect to the curtailing of this kind of activity and the availability of drug paraphernalia on the open market?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I will look into the matter. I am not in a position to give the hon. member an answer today.

HEALTH CARE

PROVISION OF FEDERAL SERVICES TO JAMES BAY CREE INDIAN BANDS

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare and concerns the impending withdrawal of federal health services from the James Bay Cree tomorrow, March 31, 1981. The minister has told this House that "as for the health of the Cree, wherever we have the slightest responsibility, we fulfil it completely. I monitor the situation once a week." If she is indeed doing so, weekly, why did her officials tell us at a meeting of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs on Thursday, March 25, that there was only one case of tuberculosis in the village of Mistassini when in fact Dr. Elizabeth Robinson, a medical practitioner, reported finding seven active cases and 20 suspects fully two weeks before that date?

Is the minister receiving the correct information from her officials? Is she fully aware of the deplorable lack of sanitation facilities and services in the villages, facilities and services that were promised by the governments of Canada and Quebec upon signing the agreement?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has asked two questions regarding the transfer of health facilities to the Cree health board and the province of Quebec. The agreement includes seven parties. I discussed the possibility of obtaining a legal waiver from the Cree to make us free of any legal responsibilities, but that does not cover the right of the other six parties to the agreement.

I have asked the Minister of Justice to review the situation once more. The way the agreement stands, and because the province of Quebec has lifted the trusteeship of the Cree health board and is ready to receive the transfer, I must execute it. By the way, the Cree lost three injunctions against us in this matter. In other words, I do not have the choice the hon. member suggests.

As to the cases of tuberculosis, I am satisfied from information I have received from Dr. Lyall Black, the Assistant Deputy Minister in charge of medical services, that the hon. member's figures are wrong.

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, I disagree with the last part of the minister's answer. We spoke to two medical doctors who were up there last week. They definitely found seven active cases at Mistassini and are treating 20. This was reported in the Montreal press on two occasions. I disagree wholeheartedly with the minister's figures. A way out of this could be Section 5 of the National Health and Welfare Act which reads:

> The duties, powers and functions of the minister extend to and include all matters relating to the promotion or preservation of the health, social security and social welfare of the people of Canada over which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction—

In light of this, will the minister reconsider withdrawing these important services from the Cree tomorrow?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I suppose the hon. member is referring to the general mandate of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. When we talk of the specific situation in northern Quebec which follows the James Bay agreement, we talk of an agreement signed by seven parties, I repeat, which forces me to transfer facilities according to a calendar worked out with the Cree some time ago and which includes the transer by March 31 of some facilities in some communities. I must honour that transfer. I am satisfied that the province of Quebec has informed me officially as to the rules of the game—

An hon. Member: It's not a game.

Miss Bégin: —that it is ready to take over the facilities and provide the health services required for the Indians. I would like to inform the hon. member that the social services for Indian communities in Canada are under the responsibility of the Minister of Indian Affairs, not my department.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

ANTICIPATED DROP IN WELL DRILLING ACTIVITY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In answer to a question last Wednesday, the minister stated to me that he has been aware for some months about the drop off in drilling activity in the oil and gas industry in 1981. I am sure he has seen the recent report which shows the drop off has continued for one further week. What level of drilling activity did the National Energy Program anticipate? Last year there were 9,000 wells and this year it is anticipated there will be 6,000. What level did the National Energy Program anticipate for 1981 and 1982 relative to those figures?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I can say to the hon. member that when we developed the National Energy Program we examined the projections of the drilling companies association which forecast that the drilling industry would operate at only 59 per cent of its capacity this year. We have no additional information on this subject.

[English]

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I am astounded that the minister is unable to answer a question as basic as that. Let me try to go about it another way. Since the future production of oil in this country is directly related to the drilling activity that is now taking place and will take place in subsequent years, will the minister advise whether the objective of self-sufficiency as set out in the National Energy Program, and the numbers put in that program to achieve that objective, are consistent with the level of drilling activity projected for this year of 6,000 wells?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, they are certainly not inconsistent with that objective.

Oral Questions

AGRICULTURE

HERD MAINTENANCE PROGRAM—DELAY OF PAYMENT IN DISPUTED CASES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for PFRA. As we approach the end of March the herd maintenance review board is reported to be holding about 4,000 cases in which a dispute exists between the review board and PFRA officials as to whether a payment should be made. Since at some point ministerial intervention will be required, can the minister tell us what kinds of issues are being reviewed, whether he will be looking at changes to the snowfall data being used to determine precipitation, whether there will be changes to use actual rather than extrapolated rainfall data, or will superior farming techniques be allowed to go into the computation? If none of these, what will his criteria be?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member is speaking of a dispute between the review board and PFRA. There can be no dispute because the only authority of the review board, PFRA or the minister responsible for PFRA, is to implement the criteria set by Treasury Board. There can be no discretion as to whether to issue a payment except in accordance with the regulation of Treasury Board. That is the first step. I hope that all cases will be processed before April 15. Then all cases worthy of further consideration will be sent to me. Cabinet and Treasury Board will then have to decide which of those which have been rejected should be paid. This is the second step which is beyond the authority of the review board, PFRA or the minister. It will be cabinet and Treasury Board which says that.

Mr. Althouse: I hope members of the Treasury Board will be aware that there was a meeting at Invermay over the weekend with about 240 affected producers present, of whom over 90 per cent had applied for payment and had been turned down. Of the 240, some seven had received cheques. Even though a number of them had crops of two to three bushels per acre they were not eligible; they had no hay and spent $20,000 for Ontario hay. Will the minister assure us that Treasury Board will be given this information and use it to redraw the requirements under the program so that in the end justice will prevail for these producers?

Mr. De Bané: Madam Speaker, I will certainly bring to the attention of my colleagues all those cases which are worthy of further consideration. Second, while I do admit the program does not help every person who has suffered from this drought, if we compare what the federal government has been doing for farmers with what the provincial governments, particularly the government of Saskatchewan, have been doing, I do not think there has been any relationship whatsoever between our efforts and the efforts of provincial governments.

Last week the federal cabinet adopted another measure concerning water supply in the west, and I think in the next few days we will announce other measures also.

NATIONAL SECURITY

DANGERS POSED BY BLACKMAILING ACTIVITIES OF SOVIET OFFICIALS

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, the Solicitor General last week outside the House confirmed that Sir Roger Hollis had been one of the interrogators of Gouzenko, that he had taken away Canadian security secrets at least twice from this country, and also that the British government had later warned the Canadian government of the suspicions, at least, respecting him. On February 24 of this year, as reported at page 7609 of Hansard, I asked the Solicitor General to report to the House:

—some of these situations which have been hidden in the past on the grounds that these circumstances would endanger the security of those self-same allies?

The Solicitor General replied that he would be glad to look into that matter to see whether there are any such matters which could be made public at this time. My question to the Solicitor General now is, has he been briefed by his officials and can he now report some of the circumstances of some of these matters to which reference has been made?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I have indeed been briefed on some matters touching our national security over the past few decades in respect of which countering and deterring action was recommended by the security service. Perhaps as was the case for my hon. friend when he held this office, I am not prepared to disclose any details of them which have not already been made public.

OPERATION "NAIL POLISH"

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question to the Solicitor General is simply this. Why can he not tell the story, for instance, of the two Canadian traitors and the other blackmailable activities which took place in the Canadian mission in Moscow which are code named in his own files under the code name of "Nail Polish"?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I am familiar with the operation which is known under the code name "Nail Polish", but I will not comment to indicate whether the Nail Polish operation was accurately or inaccurately described by my hon. friend. I have no comment to make on it.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CLARK—THE CONSTITUTION—APPEAL TO SUPREME COURT—PROPRIETY OF PARLIAMENTARY CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I am rising to pursue a point of order I raised for the first time late in the day on Friday having to do with an exchange during the question period on that day in relation to a matter which has been before the House for some time. It has to do with the appropriateness of this House of Commons dealing with the government's constitutional resolution at a time when that matter is under consideration by the Supreme Court of Canada.

On Friday Madam Speaker made a ruling in relation to a similar question but on a very different point. Her ruling at that time had to do exclusively with a citation in an earlier argument I had made, Citation 338(4) of Beauchesne's fifth edition. Let me quote that citation for the record:

The reference of a bill to the Supreme Court of Canada withdraws that bill temporarily from the jurisdiction of Parliament. If the constitutional situation of human rights is submitted to the Supreme Court, it thereby becomes sub-judice and cannot be considered by a committee of the House until the Court has given its decision. The question cannot be before two public bodies at the same time.

In making her ruling on Friday, Madam Speaker indicated this particular citation referred specifically and narrowly to bills and not to motions.

I want to distinguish the situation I am raising now from the ruling that Your Honour made on Friday. I can do that initially by referring to an earlier subsection of Citation 338, namely, 338(3), which states:

The convention applies to motions, references in debates, questions and supplementary questions, but does not apply to bills.

The reason it does not apply to bills—and I will not dwell on this at any length—is that there never has been the intention to preclude Parliament from taking legislative action on a matter which happened to be before the Supreme Court. In other words, our ability to be the highest court of the land was not intended to be limited by the rules of the House. There have been precedents in relation to motions, references and debates, and other matters of that kind.

I want to make specific reference to another element of Citation 338(4), because it refers to a reference by the federal government. That is an important point and it is a point on which I wish to dwell for a moment in making the case I want to bring before Your Honour; that is, that we should not be properly dealing with a matter, the legality of which is under consideration by the Supreme Court of Canada. I will be arguing that later.

The federal government had the option—I will get into the citation evidence available to us as parliamentarians regarding proof of the option that exists for the federal government—knowing that there was question about the legality or constitutionality of what it was proposing, to make a direct reference of that question to the Supreme Court of Canada. The government had a precedent for doing that.

Not very long ago there was another bill before this House which attempted to change the nature of the Senate of Canada. Questions were raised as to whether it was proper for the Parliament of Canada, acting alone in relation to a federal institution like the Senate, an institution in which the provinces had a very real concern, to proceed with that bill.

The government at that time decided that the question of constitutionality was sufficiently important that it would exercise its right to refer that question directly to the Supreme Court. After that reference was followed through, the Supreme Court decided in fact that what this government had tried to do to the Senate was illegal; it did not possess the powers under our Constitution to proceed as it had intended.

During the time that matter was before the Supreme Court of Canada, debate on the question was suspended in this House. We did not consider in this chamber a matter, the constitutionality of which was before the Supreme Court of Canada. As I say, the Government of Canada, knowing that the constitutionality of what it was proposing was very much in question, had the option to do that in this case. It declined to do so. I believe you will treat this belief as you will.

I believe the reason the federal government declined to act in this case, as it did in an earlier case when there was an accusation of illegality about its actions, was that it believed what it was doing was not constitutional and it did not want the Supreme Court to stop the matter as the Supreme Court stopped the Senate matter.

The first point I want to ask the Chair to consider today is the question whether there is any significant difference caused by the fact that this question of the legality of Parliament's action is before the Supreme Court of Canada as a consequence of a reference made by a provincial government as distinct from a reference made by the national Government of Canada. I think that that is a very important point and one on which I want to elaborate. As the House knows, and as the Chair knows, only governments have a right of reference. A private citizen cannot make a reference as to the constitutionality of a question. As the Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition, I cannot make that kind of reference. Only governments can make that reference, and each provincial government in our system of two orders of government can make that reference only to the superior court in its jurisdiction. In other words, it is not possible for a province to make a direct reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. Provinces make direct references only to the highest courts in their jurisdiction. Only the Government of Canada can make a direct reference of the constitutionality of a question it is debating to the Supreme Court of Canada.

As I say, the matter I want to raise is whether the question of directness and indirectness is germane. What has happened here is that a number of provinces exercised their right under our law and practice to make a reference as to the constitutionality of this measure to the superior court in their jurisdiction. It happened to be the superior court in the province of Manitoba. They had nowhere else to go, nor did anyone else have anywhere else to go. The only people who could have brought the matter to the Supreme Court of Canada directly were representatives of the Government of Canada, and they declined to do that. They preferred to run through something that may not be legal rather than exercise their exclusive right to have the legality of what they were doing referred directly to the Supreme Court of Canada.

The point I want to make here is that the question on which the Supreme Court of Canada will begin consideration on April 28 and the question with which it is seized is the same question which would have been referred by the federal government had the federal government referred it. The question is the same. The court is the same. The only difference is the process of getting that question to that court.

To summarize again, the federal government can take one step to get this question of the legality of its actions to the Supreme Court of Canada. A province has to take two steps to get the same question to the same court. If the federal government had acted, Parliament would be precluded from talking about this question.

I want to dwell on that for a moment. If the federal government had made the reference which Manitoba has made, and if the question which is now before the court was before the court because the government in Ottawa moved it there rather than because governments of the provinces moved it there, then we would be denied the opportunity to debate that question in this House. We would be precluded from having the opportunity to debate that question in the House. All that is at stake here is not the nature of the question and not the nature of the court but the nature of the process by which the matter got there. It got there through the provinces by two steps: first, by going to the highest court in their jurisdiction, and then, on appeal, going to the Supreme Court of Canada.

The question which Your Honour will have to decide is: When the question is the same and when the court is the same, does the fact that it takes two steps to get a reference to that court rather than one step change the practice absolutely? I argue as strongly as I can that when we are dealing with a question of importance so fundamental to our system as the legality of the actions of Parliament or the integrity of our country on the constitutionality of things, this Parliament should not alow a very minor question of process to change the practices which exist in this House.

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

ASSASSINATION ATTEMPT—CONDITION OF PRESIDENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): If I might impose upon the House, I have just been advised that, contrary to earlier reports, the attempted assassination of President Reagan this afternoon did result in President Reagan being wounded. He was hit in the left chest. I am sure

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CLARK—THE CONSTITUTION—APPEAL TO SUPREME COURT—PROPRIETY OF PARLIAMENTARY CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION

The House resumed consideration of the point of order of Mr. Clark.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): To get back to the matter before you, Madam Speaker, the first question I raise for Your Honour to decide is: When the issue is the same and the court is the same, does the fact that the process is different make so overwhelming a difference that what would be illegal for us to do if this government had acted becomes legal for us to do because it was another government which got the same question to the same court? That is very much a question of judgment.

I remind Your Honour of your words on Friday when you said, and I quote:

Sub judice is a convention which is "a voluntary restraint imposed by the House upon itself in the interests of justice and fair play", as stated in Citation 335 of Beauchesne's fifth edition.

I think that is absolutely correct. The Chair will have to decide whether justice and fair play have to do with the substance of the question rather than with how many steps it took to raise the question or how many steps it took to get a contentious question before the court which must ultimately decide it.

I want to go back, if I might, to the principle of sub judice in our parliamentary system, and I would like to cite briefly from the nineteenth edition of Erskine May, page 427. The general principle is stated as follows:

Matters awaiting the adjudication of a court of law should not be brought forward in debate, subject to the right of the House to legislate on any matter—

In other words, that does not preclude the right of this Parliament to act on matters which might be before the courts in the application of existing law. But, when there are questions which relate to the substance of that law, the principle stated by Erskine May is quite clear:

Following the first report of the Select Committee on Procedure, 1962-63, the House passed a Resolution—

That was on July 23, 1963.

_-which set out the rule in detail. This resolution bars references in debate—

As well as in motions and questions.

—to matters awaiting or under adjudication in all courts exercising a criminal jurisdiction and in courts martial from the moment the law is set in motion by a charge being made to the time when verdict and sentence have been announced, and again—

This is germane.

—when notice of appeal is given until the appeal is decided—

There is then some reference to courts martial, which is not relevant here.

The resolution of 23 July 1963 also applies to the civil courts, and in general it bars reference to matters awaiting or under adjudication in a civil court from the time that the case has been set down for trial or otherwise brought before the court, as for example by notice of motion for an injunction; such matters may be referred to before such date unless it appears to the Chair that there is a real and substantial danger of prejudice to the trial of the case; the ban again applies when notice of appeal is given until judgment is given.

So the appeal procedure, which is the matter we are dealing with here, is very much within the practice cited by Erskine May.

On 28 June 1972 the House came to a further resolution, that notwithstanding the resolution of 23 July 1963 and subject to the discretion of the Chair, reference may be made in questions, motions or debate to matters awaiting or under adjudication in all civil courts, in so far as such matters relate to a ministerial decision which cannot be challenged in court except on grounds of misdirection or bad faith, or concern issues of national importance such as the national economy, public order or the essentials of life; and that in exercising its discretion the Chair should not allow reference to such matters if it appears that there is a real and substantial danger of prejudice to the proceedings—

Prejudice to the proceedings of the court is a matter to which I want to turn some attention now. I find it difficult to think of a prejudice to the proceedings of the court that is more dramatic or substantial than exporting the question to another country before our courts can decide on it. In my opinion, there is a very real and substantial danger, to quote the authorities, if the question that the Supreme Court wants to decide is rushed out of our country before the court has had a chance to consider it.

● (1520)

We received today from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) a very clear indication, if the government get their way in pushing this matter through the House of Commons and if you decide it is legal for this matter to remain before the House, it is their intention to get this question out of the country before the Supreme Court can begin consideration of it on April 28. That seems to me to be a real and substantial danger of prejudice of the most extreme kind. I cannot think of prejudicing a court's decision in a more dramatic way than to, in effect, kidnap the question and get it out of the country before that court can become seized of it.

We are told part of the reason for this is that there is a timetable problem in Westminster; they want to deal with it more quickly. Well, I think we as Canadians, as a sovereign Parliament, have the right to ask why the timetable of Westminster should prevail over that of a Canadian court.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Now, Madam Speaker, that is one question I would ask you to turn your attention to—whether or not the process of getting the question before the courts makes a significant difference. Then, if you find the process does not matter, I ask you to find whether or not there is the kind of real and substantial danger of prejudice to the court that is referred to in all the authorities.

The second matter to be dealt with is whether Parliament can proceed with a measure when the Supreme Court of Canada is considering precisely the question of the legality of Parliament's enacting that measure. That has nothing to do with how the question got there; it has to do with the fact the question is there and it speaks directly to the legality of what the House of Commons and Senate of Canada are being asked to do. Let me draw everyone's attention to the questions that were put before the Manitoba court. I apologize for taking the time to do this, but I think it is important we know precisely what is at issue here before the issue is forced out of the country. The first question to the Manitoba Court of Appeal was:

If the amendments to the Constitution of Canada sought in the "Proposed Resolution for a Joint Address to Her Majesty the Queen respecting the Constitution of Canada", or any of them, were enacted, would federal-provincial relationships or the powers, rights or privileges granted or secured by the Constitution of Canada to the provinces, their legislatures or governments be affected, and, if so, in what respect or respects?

The second question is:

Is it a constitutional convention that the House of Commons and Senate of Canada will not request Her Majesty the Queen to lay before the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland a measure to amend the Constitution of Canada affecting federal-provincial relationships or the powers, rights or privileges granted or secured by the Constitution of Canada to the provinces, their legislatures or governments without first obtaining the agreement of the provinces?

The third question is:

Is the agreement of the provinces of Canada constitutionally required for amendment to the Constitution of Canada where such amendment affects federal-provincial relationships or alters the powers, rights or privileges granted or secured by the Constitution of Canada to the provinces, their legislatures or governments?

You will see, Madam Speaker, that each one of those questions has to do directly with whether or not we have the legal power as a Parliament to do alone what this government is asking this Parliament to do alone.

There are other questions raised by Mr. Justice O'Sullivan. For example, he made the point that when the Parliament of Canada is controlled by a party majority in both Houses, what is happening, in effect, is that it is not a parliamentary decision but a party decision that is being taken in this case. That was obiter dicta in the Manitoba court but it is a matter that Your Honour may well want to consider. What is precisely at issue before the Supreme Court is the right of Parliament to act alone on this question. That is precisely the legal question.

Now, I think there are real questions as to whether what we are being asked to do is legal. The court will begin to consider the legality of the government's proposed action on April 28. The government wants to act before the court decides whether our action is legal. That certainly offends my sense of justice as an individual Member of Parliament and as a Canadian, but it also fundamentally offends our rights and practices as a Parliament and people, and does so on one of the most fundamental questions that Parliament can ever by seized of.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Point of Order—Mr. Clark

Mr. Clark: The difficulty for you and this House, Madam Speaker, and the reason I raise the matter, is that we are on new ground here. To my knowledge, this matter has not been raised in Parliament before. If the question has arisen in practice, it has not been raised in this House before. We have never been involved in a direct conflict between a timetable of the Canadian government and that of the Supreme Court, yet that is what we are involved in here. The Supreme Court has set a timetable that begins on April 28, and the government is following a timetable that will end before that date. They are trying to get the question out of the country before the courts can begin consideration of it. To my knowledge, that has not happened before so you will have to consider the newness of this question in coming to your decision.

When Parliament has ruled on questions that are sub judice, the practice has always been to avoid prejudice to the courts; to protect the right of Parliament to bring in bills and legislate, but always to avoid prejudice to the courts. And as Madam Speaker argued in Friday's citation, the criterion has always been justice and fair play.

What must be decided now, in circumstances in which there is no specific parliamentary precedent, is whether it is just, fair, and without prejudice to the courts to allow a party majority to enforce enactment of a matter before the courts have a chance to decide whether that action is legal. That is the question before us and it is one of very real importance to us all.

In coming to your decision, Madam Speaker, you will want to consider a number of matters, including the stated intention of the government in the so-called Kirby document. I want to quote from that document because, among other things, it made reference to possible legal challenges to the unilateral implementation process. Under the heading "The Legal Position" it says:

As soon as the contents of a unilateral patriation package become known, upon introduction in Parliament, it can be assumed that opposition both inside and outside Parliament will focus more on the validity of the procedure than on the contents of the package and most likely will demand that a reference be taken to the Supreme Court before the resolution proceeds further in Parliament.

In other words, the government expected that would happen back in August and September of last year. It goes on:

It will be necessary to have a position on this matter at that time.

As to the question of validity, it is the view of the Department of Justice—

This is not just somebody in the Privy Council writing a memorandum; this is reporting the view of the Department of Justice.

—that a law passed by the U.K. parliament to patriate the Constitution, with an amendment formula and other changes, could not be successfully attacked in the courts.

What that is saying, Madam Speaker, is that if we get this question out of Canada to Britain, then it could well be beyond the courts of Canada forever. That is the view of the Department of Justice upon which presumably this government is acting. That is why the government want to get away from our courts now, because they know that if they do the question will never again come to our courts.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Clark: The briefing goes on to say:

It seems abundantly clear that the legal power remains for the U.K. parliament to enact such a law for Canada—

That is the view of the Government of Canada:

And it also seems clear that they will do so whenever so requested by the Parliament and Government of Canada.

I will not get into the argument on that particular paragraph. I want, though, to continue the quotation:

The more troublesome question is that of the requirements of the conventions that is the practices of the Canadian Constitution with respect to constitutional amendment. While the convention is that the U.K. parliament will act when requested to do so by the Canadian Parliament, there is a potential problem with the Canadian convention concerning the role of the provinces prior to such a request being made.

● (1530)

This is one of the matters which has been raised by the provinces in the courts; it was foreseen in August and September by the government. The government document goes on to indicate:

An argument is already being advanced by Ontario that patriation with an amending formula would involve a change of a fundamental nature affecting the provinces and that on the basis of past practices there is now a clear convention in Canada that such action requires consultation with, and the consent of, all provinces.

According to the government's document, this was the position of Ontario which was put forward during the summer. Presumably this is still the position of Ontario. Certainly it is the position of eight other provinces involved in court actions. The document goes on to indicate:

This is based on the premise that the "unilateral" adoption of an amending formula would affect existing rights of the provinces, at least their "right" of veto over amendments. (Unilateral patriation combined only with an amending formula requiring unanimity would, on this basis, not be assailable.)

But that is not what we are dealing with; we are dealing with something that by the extension of logic would be assailable. It continues:

Further, it is argued that this convention would be enforced as a rule of law by the courts.

They anticipated that at the time they decided whether they would exercise their exclusive right to make a direct reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. I suspect, on the basis of this document, that one of the reasons they decided not to act in this case, as they acted on the Senate case, was that they were afraid the Supreme Court would find that what they were proposing was illegal now, just as it found what they were proposing was illegal in the case of the Senate.

I think it would be highly unsatisfactory for a country like ours to allow a legal device, such as the refusal of the government to exercise its exclusive right of reference, to permit the passage of a matter which would be unconstitutional. The document goes on to indicate:

It may therefore be fairly safely assumed that if the question somehow came before a Canadian court, it would uphold the legal validity of the U.K. legislation affecting patriation.

In other words, if they can get a British law back here, we cannot touch it. It continues:

The court might very well, however, make a pronouncement, not necessarily for the decision, that the patriation process was in violation of established conventions and therefore in one sense was "unconstitutional" even though legally valid.

That was the advice the government received from its own advisers back in August and September of last year. The document continues:

Obviously, the foregoing suggests that while unilateral action can legally be accomplished, it involves the risk of prolonged dispute through the courts and the possibility of adverse judicial comment that could undermine the political legitimacy, though not the legal validity, of the patriation package.

In other words, they are arguing and clinging to the narrowest kinds of interpretation of law. They are admitting, in light of the advice of their own advisers, that even if what they are doing were legal—and we on this side have yet to be convinced of that—it is illegitimate.

The document goes on to offer advice which unhappily was not taken:

This points up the desirability of achieving agreement with the provinces on a patriation package.

Obviously the government did not follow that course. Instead of waiting today for premiers who are looking for agreement on an amending formula, the government is continuing to ignore the advice received from its own advisers back in August and September and is trying to bull this question through.

The point is that this advice offered by its own advisers back in August and September was not accepted by the government. Instead, they acted unilaterally; they refused to make the reference to the Supreme Court which only they could make to ensure that what we were doing was legal, to ensure that what we were doing respected and did not abuse the constitutional law and practice of this country. They have sought to avoid the courts. After the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has been waiting, as he is fond of saying, for 54 years, why else would he want to rush this through before April 28? If we have waited 54 years, surely we could wait for the Supreme Court of Canada to act within 29 days.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Now they are trying to export the question before the courts can decide on it.

There is a section of this document which is germane to Your Honour's ruling because it speaks to the state of mind of the government, particularly as it addressed the question as to whether it would make a reference. I remind Madam Speaker and the House that if the government had made a reference, there would be no question about our ability to discuss the question: we could not discuss it. It would not be discussible before the House of Commons if the government itself had made a reference. I respectfully suggest that Your Honour must give some consideration to what caused the government to avoid doing in this case what it did in the Senate case, why it did not exercise its right to make a reference in this case.

I suggest that the answer is contained in the subsection entitled "Legal Strategy" on page 52 of the leaked Privy Council memo, which reads as follows:

(6) There would be a strong strategic advantage in having the joint resolution passed and the U.K. legislation enacted before a Canadian court had occasion to pronounce on the validity of the measure and the procedure employed to achieve it.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Clark: The advice to the government then continued:

This would suggest the desirability of swift passage of the resolution and the U.K. legislation.

This has clearly been the purpose throughout, to try to bull this through the Parliament of Canada.

Most of us have focused on what it has done to our institution, the institution in which we work. We know the damage it has done to Parliament; I will not repeat those arguments. But the point is that there was also an attempt made to get around the Supreme Court of Canada. It was not simply an attempt to get around the Parliament of Canada but to get around a second major and central Canadian institution. I suggest that was done with absolute deliberateness. The fact that it was done deliberately is a matter which will have to weigh upon Madam Speaker's decision as you consider whether or not the interests of justice, of fair play and of the importance of prejudice to the courts have been respected in this case. That is the Kirby document.

Another matter Your Honour will want to consider—and we are dealing with new ground here—is the questions upon which some authorities have written but on which no legal or parliamentary authorities have yet decided. I am sure Madam Speaker will want to consider such commentary upon questions of sub judice as has occurred in learned writings, such as the book entitled "Judicial Review of Legislation in Canada", the author of which is Mr. Barry Strayer, who is presently the deputy minister of justice of the Government of Canada. I should like to quote from two sections of Mr. Strayer's book. The first appears on page 188 after a review of the practices concerning the relation between courts and Parliament. He said:

From this brief historical review of the reference system two facts emerge which place it in an interesting perspective. First, it may be seen that at both the federal and the provincial level this device was looked upon as an integral part of the functioning of the Constitution.

It was not something incidental; it was at the very base of the functioning of the Constitution. He continued:

After several years of experience with the reference power under the Supreme Court Act, unsatisfactory as it had been, both government and opposition in the House of Commons were agreed that it should be retained.

In other words, when the question had arisen before in this institution, both government and opposition decided that the principle, which the government decided not to exercise for its own partisan reasons, was sufficiently important to the system that it should remain a part of the system. He continued:

The debates in 1890 and 1891 primarily reveal a concern that the system should be made to operate properly.

I want to emphasize the following sentence:

There was a general assumption that this is an important device for ensuring that neither Parliament nor the legislatures exceed their constitutional powers. Similarly, the resolutions at the 1887 interprovincial conference show that the provinces placed great emphasis on this device, their concern being that they should be equally entitled to resort to it.

I raise the question, that if they are to be equally entitled to resort to it, they should be equally entitled to all the consequences of a resort to the reference. One of the consequences of a resort to the reference, when it is exercised by the federal government, is that this Parliament cannot debate the question. What I am arguing is that it has always been the understanding in relation to references to the Supreme Court of Canada that wherever the reference arose, so long as it arose legally from a province or the federal government, the consequences should be the same. If a federal reference would have stopped Parliament from debating the matter, then a provincial reference should stop Parliament from debating the matter.

● (1540)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: This device, then, has always been seen as a protection of the Constitution. It has always been seen as being a guarantee against excesses by one level of government or the other. There are many cases which come to mind. I can think of some cases in my own province where, in the past, actions were taken by the provincial government of the day which seemed to be excessive. We can all think of cases where those excesses have been taken. We all know the need to have some protection in a federal system against those kinds of excesses being taken. The reference device is there precisely to provide that kind of protection, as Mr. Strayer said in his authoritative and respected work.

I want to quote one last reference from Mr. Strayer's book because it specifically deals with one kind of excess. On page 193 he says:

Finally, references provide a flexible means for each level of government to police the constitutional excesses of the other level of government.

I emphasize, Madam Speaker, "to police the constitutional excess."

We have been arguing, and it is a matter of argument in this House, whether or not there is a constitutional excess being practised now. The point is that the question whether there is a constitutional excess has moved beyond this institution into the Supreme Court of Canada. As Mr. Strayer points out in his authoritative work, the reason for the reference provision is precisely to provide either level of government—the provinces in this case and the national government in other cases—a means of protection against that kind of excess. That, I suggest, Madam Speaker, is something you will want to consider very carefully in coming to your decision.

Point of Order—Mr. Clark

On Friday Your Honour ruled on a very limited question with respect to the forms that were used, that is to say, bills as against motions, and that kind of thing. The question I am raising today does not have to do with forms; instead, it has to do with the nature of the government's initiative and whether it is inappropriate for Parliament to pursue the discussion of that initiative while the question is being considered by the Supreme Court of Canada. The government wants to proceed on a process which the court has not decided is legal. That question is very much before the courts. There was a very preliminary decision in the Manitoba Court of Appeal where the question was decided very narrowly—three to two. There is no clear legal opinion on that question. If there were, the Supreme Court would not be seized of it. The Supreme Court is seized with it and we will not have a clear legal opinion until after April 28. We want to ensure that the resolution will still be in Canada for the courts to be judging on a Canadian question rather than passing opinions on a matter that has been exported to another country.

By proceeding with the resolution, by refusing to exercise its right with respect to a reference and by threatening closure again, as it has imposed closure before, the government wants to get the question out of the country before the courts can decide. I make the point again that action may well put this fundamental Canadian question beyond the Canadian courts forever. It may well never come back here, which could create for us, in our country, some very real legal problems.

I do not intend to quote at length from the proceedings before a committee of this House, but Professor La Forest in his presentation to the joint committee established by this House to look into this matter asked a question which you, Madam Speaker, and the rest of us must consider. He asked:

—what would be the situation if Canadian courts decided that the act was not valid because it has not been properly presented to the British Parliament? The act would be valid in the United Kingdom—

But there would be some question as to its legality here. The government believes it could not be challenged, but according to Mr. La Forest:

We would be left in a judicially created limbo from which it would be hard if not impossible to extricate ourselves by legal means.

There is a way around this. The way around that legal limbo is just to wait awhile to let the Supreme Court decide whether or not what the government is asking us to do is legal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: There were other quite important observations made in the testimony before the joint committee. One question was put to Mr. Justice Clyne, the former chief justice of the Supreme Court of British Columbia, which had to do with whether or not it would be appropriate for Parliament to be considering the matter while the courts were considering it. His answer was categoric. He said:

I think my own opinion is clear, that if the matter is before the courts then action should be suspended until the courts rule.

That was the answer of Mr. Justice Clyne, the former Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of British Columbia and a jurist respected for his reputation as much as for the positions which he has occupied.

Professor Cohen, who is a very distinguished Canadian jurist, was brought before the committee as a government witness and as an expert. In answer to a question posed by my colleague, the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), he said:

In answer to your question I must say that politically I think it unwise of Parliament to proceed helter skelter with a piece of legislation when before the Supreme Court of Canada the same problem is now in issue.

I think it does something to the respect for the court—

I remind you, Madam Speaker, how important that is to the sub judice rule. He went on to say:

—something for the respect of the legal system. I am not willing to go that far for the provincial courts because, certainly on a reference case, because I think the reference can be abused as a technique for halting the work of Parliament.

He said "abused as a technique." We are now beyond that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ouellet: Beyond that!

Mr. Epp: Listen to what he has to say.

Mr. Clark: I will not comment on the hon. member's former associations with the courts.

Mr. Ouellet: Go ahead!

Mr. Clark: The fact is that we are not dealing here with a matter that has now been confined to a reference to a province. We are now dealing with a matter which has moved beyond a reference raised by a province. That was the only way it could be raised, since this government refused to raise it in the Supreme Court of our land. It has moved on to become a question of which the Supreme Court of Canada is seized.

Professor Cohen went on to say:

Having said that, Mr. Beatty, I am reluctant to really go much deeper into this because it is almost a case by case situation, but the general principle I think that ought to be a guideline for all of us is this. Do we do anything which brings the work of the supreme tribunal into any disrepute or give it the attribute of appearing to be second rate in its importance, and that we should not do.

So said Professor Cohen and so I say to you, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

matters would be persuasive to yourself, Your Honour, to any parliamentarians, or to any Canadians.

Those who did appear were quite consistent in what they said. They warned of the dangers to our system of allowing the government to proceed in the way it is now trying to proceed—to get the question out of the country before its constitutionality has been decided by the Supreme Court in this country.

The sub judice rule has been raised in this House in a variety of forms before. Some cases are clear and Your Honour ruled on one of them on Friday. But some cases are not so clear. This is one of them, in my judgment. It is brand new. There is obviously no obstacle to Parliament acting to change a law which it chooses to change if that law is within the jurisdiction of this Parliament. That is beyond dispute. But precisely what is in dispute today? What is at issue before the Supreme Court of Canada is whether the matter we are being asked to enact is sufficiently within our jurisdiction to allow us to pass it in a way that the Canadian courts would not strike down if they were given the chance to strike it down.

I repeat, this government has very recently tried to act beyond its jurisdiction on the Senate case. When the Supreme Court became seized of that case, it decided that the government was acting illegally, that it was trying to do something that it should not be allowed to do, and so the Supreme Court stopped it. The government is now stopping the courts from stopping the government because it will not let the question go to the courts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The principle of the sub judice rule has been to protect the courts; the principle of the sub judice rule has been to uphold the law, including—although this is a new aspect of it—the constitutional law; when one level of government tries to act in a way that is beyond its jurisdiction, it then finds a device by which it can sneak the question out of the country before its constitutionality has been decided.

What is in question here is whether the resolution before the House is within the legal competence of Parliament to pass. That is exactly the question which is now before the Supreme Court of Canada.

Through our long practice in this place and in Parliament, we have established that when there is a conflict between what the courts can do and what Parliament can do, we have acted, in the past, to protect the courts and to protect the law. Authorities on this brand new question—which it falls to Your Honour to decide—have expressed deep concern about the effect on the courts. These are not passing authorities. They are not men on the Clapham omnibus. I believe I have correctly cited that. These are former chief justices of the Supreme Court of British Columbia. These are distinguished legal authorities. These are people who have made a life work of their study of and respect for the courts of the land. They are concerned that there could be damage done to the respect for the legal tradition, respect for the courts of the land, respect for the authority of the Supreme Court of Canada, if this Parliament acts on a matter, the legality of which that court wants to decide before Parliament can consider the question.

My argument to you, Madam Speaker, is that just as the Senate provision should not have been discussed by this Parliament while it was before the Supreme Court of Canada, so should this resolution not be discussed or considered by this Parliament while the Supreme Court of Canada is seized of this resolution. I want to protect the Canadian way of doing things.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We have argued here before about federalism and the damage this measure does to the Canadian partnership. We have argued, too, about the damage that closure does to the Canadian way of parliamentary debate. What we are arguing now is that there is another institution being menaced by the proposal this government is bringing forward, and that is the Supreme Court of Canada. I respectfully submit that it is important for you, Madam Speaker, to decide a complex question—a question which you would probably not to have to face but, nonetheless, a complex question—as to whether this Parliament is being asked to act in a way that damages the Supreme Court of Canada and abandons the Canadian way.

In my submission, that is what we are being asked to do and that is wrong. I hope you find, Madam Speaker, that the proposal put before the House of Commons by the Government of Canada—that we should ignore and consequently endanger respect for the Supreme Court of Canada—should be put down, and that this debate should be stopped until the Supreme Court has had the right to decide. We have all sorts of other matters to discuss. We would like to talk about inflation. We would like to talk about energy policy. We would like to talk about housing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: There is not a lack of will in this House to deal with the real issues which are facing Canadians, but the government controls the agenda of the House. The government has been pushing forward a bill which we have argued, in the past, was not high on the priorities of individual Canadians who face high rates of inflation and unemployment in the country today. We have argued that in the past, but our argument now is that there is another dimension to what the government is doing. That other dimension is that if it persists in its action, then it will damage, perhaps very deeply, another institution of this country, the Supreme Court of Canada. We do not want that court avoided. We do not want that court damaged.

I make my case and appeal to Your Honour to make a decision which will respect the practices of Parliament, respect the Canadian way and protect the right of the Supreme Court of Canada to discuss a question which should be before it, rather than allow this government to rush that question out of our country before our highest court can decide on its constitutionality.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) both on Friday and again this afternoon, has spoken on a point of order. I propose to offer a few comments on the point of order. In other words, I do not choose to comment on the merits of asking Parliament to wait until the Supreme Court has made a decision. I do not choose to comment on the greater importance of other legislation. Rather, I propose to direct my remarks specifically to the point of order raised by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

I thought he stated that point of order succinctly and clearly in a sentence uttered not many minutes before he concluded his remarks. Referring to the constitutional proposal which is before this House, he asked this question: Is it within the legal competence of Parliament to pass it? I believe I am doing full justice to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition when I say that that is the point.

During the course of his remarks he referred to constitutional items as well, but certainly I think it is fair to sum up the case which has been made to Your Honour by saying that he wants you to rule the proposed resolution out of order on legal and constitutional grounds. Madam Speaker, I am sure you have been pouring over the literature in the last few days. You must be completely aware of citations which tell you that that is precisely what Your Honour must not do. For example, I refer to Beauchesne's fifth edition, pages 38 and 39, Citation 117, paragraph 6:

> The Speaker will not give a decision upon a constitutional question nor decide a question of law, though the same may be raised on a point of order or privilege.

In other words, there is no question about the right of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to raise questions regarding the law and the Constitution, but it is clear that Your Honour must not rule on legal or constitutional questions. That same dictum is found at page 79 of Beauchesne's fifth edition, Citation 240, which reads as follows:

> The Speaker will not give a decision upon a constitutional question nor decide a question of law, though the same may be raised on a point of order or privilege.

Your Honour will be aware that this issue has been raised in the House of Commons a good many times. If I were to dig out all of the rulings from the Chair on the question, I would take up a lot more time than I want to take. I have chosen a couple within reasonably recent times.

● (1600)

On Friday, October 25, 1963, Mr. Speaker Macnaughton had before him a question of the law and the Constitution and he gave a ruling which begins on page 488 of the Journals for the day. Having quoted quite a bit by way of preliminary remarks, he said:

> In other words this limits the powers and responsibilities of the Speaker to deciding on questions of order, not questions of law. This is further confirmed in Citation 69(3) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, at page 59: "Standing Order 12 being restrictive should be given the strictest literal interpretation—"

Then he quotes from a ruling made by Mr. Speaker Wallbridge on June 25, 1864. None of us was here then! He brings it up to date by saying:

> Lastly, I should like to refer to a more recent ruling made by Mr. Speaker Lemieux, reported in Hansard for June 4, 1925, page 3875:—

These are pretty important words and I shall be quoting them again as Mr. Speaker Lamoureux used them:

> "The Parliament of Canada is supreme, and if it should pass any act which is ultra vires, the courts would decide the validity of such act. It is not for the Speaker to declare—although he presides over the highest court in the land—as to whether any proposed legislation is ultra vires"—

We have before us proposed legislation. The ruling is clear that Mr. Speaker does not rule as to whether or not proposed legislation is ultra vires. Mr. Speaker went on to say:

> For these reasons, and in view of the citations to which I have just referred my honourable friend and which I have brought to the attention of the House, I cannot agree with the validity of the point of order raised by my honourable friend.

That was said by Mr. Speaker Macnaughton on October 25, 1963. A little later, on Tuesday, July 8, 1969, Mr. Speaker Lamoureux had a point that was raised by a good friend of all of us, the former member for Peace River, Mr. Baldwin. Mr. Speaker went through all of the precedents and citations, and finally he said:

> In other words, this limits the powers and responsibilities of the Speaker to deciding on questions of order, not questions of law.

Remember that what the Leader of the Opposition is asking you to decide, Madam Speaker, is that it is not within the legal competence of Parliament to pass the resolution that is before us.

Then he goes on to apologize to the hon. member for Peace River for going back almost as far as the hon. member had gone in his argument. Still quoting the former Speaker, he says:

> "The Parliament of Canada is supreme, and if it should pass any act which is ultra vires, the courts would decide the validity of such act. It is not for the Speaker to declare—although he presides over the highest court in the land—as to whether any proposed legislation is ultra vires"—

I submit, Madam Speaker, that there is the utmost of common sense in that proposition. If this Parliament were to be run by the Chair on the basis of the Chair's decision that certain matters were not legal or certain matters were not constitutional, that would certainly inhibit to a considerable extent the rights and privileges of this Parliament as the highest court in the land.

So, Madam Speaker, I defend on the basis of the citations the right of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to raise this matter as a point of order. But I suggest to Your Honour that the citations make it clear that you cannot rule on a point of law, on a constitutional issue. That is the position in which you will find yourself, not only from citations but from the precedents that are on the books from many learned Speakers.

I move on to a second point that was raised by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. I have in mind that portion of his speech where he dealt with the sub judice convention.

Incidentally, while he was talking, I was reading the books that I have in front of me, Beauchesne and May. He referred particularly to the fact that we must not say things in this House that are prejudicial to the courts. I do not find that phrase anywhere in the literature that I have before me. The restriction is that the House must not say things or debate things in a way that would be prejudicial to the proceedings of the court or prejudicial to the parties before the court.

As a matter of fact, the citations relating to sub judice state that there are some exceptions to the rule that matters in the courts must not be dealt with here because, in the final analysis, Parliament is supreme. Parliament has the right to legislate as it will. The courts can rule on the legislation afterwards, but the right of the House to legislate as it will is not to be restricted by some doctrine of sub judice.

Let me read the main citations. On page 118 of Beauchesne, Citation 335 is brief and clear. It reads as follows:

Members are expected to refrain from discussing matters that are before the courts or tribunals which are courts of record.

Let us pay close attention to this:

The purpose of this sub judice convention is to protect the parties in a case awaiting or undergoing trial and persons who stand to be affected by the outcome of a judicial inquiry. It is a voluntary restraint imposed by the House upon itself in the interest of justice and fair play.

Citation 336(1) reads as follows:

The sub judice convention has been applied consistently in criminal cases.

Then there are other references and it continues:

(2) The precedents in criminal cases are consistent in preventing reference to court cases before a judgment is rendered; however, the convention ceases to apply after the judgment is given . . . Nevertheless, the convention is applied again when an appeal is launched.

Citation 337(1) reads:

No settled practice has been developed in relation to civil cases, as the convention has been applied in some cases but not in others.

As I say, I have read more in Beauchesne, and I have read a good deal in May, the nineteenth edition, and the rationale for the sub judice convention is well spelled out. It is not that we lose our rights to legislate as we see fit, but we must not do things here that would prejudice proceedings in the court or prejudice the position of either party to a dispute in the court. If we carry that to the conclusion that we must not discuss the Constitution because it is in the courts, that in my view goes way beyond any of the language that is to be found on the sub judice convention.

In particular, I chide the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition for saying so often that the sub judice convention is one that keeps us from doing anything prejudicial to the courts. I do not find that phrase in any of the literature available to me.

Point of Order—Mr. Clark

• (1610)

I have referred to May so let me pick up one or two things here. In May's nineteenth edition, at page 333 there appears the following:

By a resolution of the House matters awaiting or under adjudication in a criminal court or a court martial, and matters set down for trial or otherwise brought before a civil court may not be referred to in any debate or question; though the House has more recently resolved to allow reference to be made to matters awaiting or under jurisdiction in all civil courts, subject to the discretion of the Chair, provided that there is no real and substantial danger of prejudice to the proceedings.

That is the phrase which keeps coming back.

If the subject matter of the question is found to be, or becomes, sub judice after notice of the question has been given, the member is asked to withdraw it, or the Speaker may direct it to be removed from the notice paper or refuse to allow it to be asked if it is on the Order Paper.

As I say, all of this deals with the courts as dealing with issues between parties. In all fairness, we say that if an issue between parties is in the courts, we should not prejudice the proceedings or the position of either one. Like many members of this House, I have no training in law school, but it seems to me that these things are simple and very clear.

I then refer to page 368 of May's nineteenth edition where some of this language is repeated. I quote:

Subject to the discretion of the Chair, reference may be made to matters awaiting or under adjudication in the civil courts in so far as they relate to certain ministerial decisions or concern certain issues of national importance.

Surely the issue of the Constitution is one of national importance and that is excepted from the list of things that the Speaker of the British House must not allow to be discussed.

The general rule applies to motions for leave to bring in bills, but the House has expressly resolved that in cases other than motions for leave to bring in bills, the rule is subject to the right of the House to legislate on any matter.

It seems to me that is the doctrine. The Leader of the Opposition has all the right in the world to raise this as a point of order and all the right in the world to plead with the government to leave the matter. However, to put it on the basis of its being sub judice is contrary to the citations as I read them. Of course, in asking you to rule that this motion is out of order, he is asking you to make a decision on something that the citations and the precedents enjoin you against doing. The only other sentence I would like to read from May is at page 427:

Matters awaiting the adjudication of a court of law should not be brought forward in debate, subject to the right of the House to legislate on any matter;—

This is the highest court of the land. Can other persons or governments, if you will, stop the proceedings of this highest court in the land by referring the matter to the Supreme Court? I do not see how they can. As I said, Madam Speaker, I am trying to avoid a discussion on the merits of the issue or the substance of it. I am trying not to get into the Constitution debate. I am trying to be helpful to the Chair. It seems to me that you cannot call it sub judice if you are asked to discuss a matter concerning which we wish to legislate in this House. You cannot be expected to rule on a matter that is legal or constitutional in view of the very clear prohibitions against the Speaker doing that.

The third part of what I want to say—and here I say I have had the gall to divide my remarks into three parts—has to do with the reference again today by the Leader of the Opposition to Citation 338(4) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, which reads:

> The reference of a bill to the Supreme Court of Canada withdraws that bill temporarily from the jurisdiction of Parliament. If the constitutional situation of human rights is submitted to the Supreme Court, it thereby becomes sub judice and cannot be considered by a committee of the House until the Court has given its decision. The question cannot be before two public bodies at the same time.

That is the citation. The other night I was arguing for something and I was quoting citations as though they were iron-clad. Your Honour may throw that back at me when you get to rule on that point. Incidentally, in going through the book today I find that there is a citation that says we can address the Speaker as "Mr. Speaker," "Sir," or "Your Honour". You, Your Honour, are not a sir, so there are some things in Beauchesne that have to be considered as to their origins!

Citation 338(4), as it is stated right there in the book, had its origin in the Journals of April 12, 1948, at page 344. The first thing I did when the issue came up the other day was to send to the Library for the Journals of April, 1948.

Miss Jewett: You mean you didn't remember?

Mr. Knowles: My friend the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) says, "didn't you remember?" I have to confess that the matter rang a bell.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles: As members will discover in a moment, I was here. The bell that was ringing was not in the belfry, it was a real one. What was before the House at the time was a government motion proposed by Prime Minister Mackenzie King that a joint committee of both Houses of Parliament be set up to consider the question of human rights and fundamental freedoms. That was in 1948, 33 years ago, and it has not got there yet. At any rate, Mr. King presented this motion. A respected friend of ours, the late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, moved as an amendment to that motion:

> —that in order to assist the committee in its deliberations the government do immediately submit to the Supreme Court of Canada such questions as are necessary to determine to what extent the preservation of the fundamental freedoms of religion, speech, press, assembly and the maintenance of constitutional safeguards of the individual are matters of federal jurisdiction.

There was considerable debate on the procedural admissibility of that amendment. Mr. Speaker Fauteux ruled at that time. Since they are both gone, I can say that John Diefenbaker used to like to say of the Speaker that he was a dentist, and he sometimes pulled some boners.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles: That was his humour, not mine. The ruling was as follows:

> This amendment actually proposes that the Supreme Court be asked to consider the same matter that the main motion proposes to refer to a select committee. It seems to me that both those propositions cannot be approved at the same time by the House.

It had nothing to do with a bill or with anybody referring something to the Supreme Court. The issue was that right here on the floor of the House of Commons there was a proposal that the question of human rights and fundamental freedoms be referred to a committee and, by way of amendment, that at the same time it be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada. Mr. Speaker Fauteux ruled it out of order. It is in that context that he says the question cannot be before two public bodies at the same time.

This means that Citation 338(4) in its attempt to abbreviate that long ruling has missed the point. There is nothing in this ruling about a bill. It has to do entirely with the House of Commons itself trying to do two different things with the same subject at the same time. The Speaker of the day said that that could not be done. I suggest, therefore, that to ask you, Madam Speaker, to rule the discussion on the constitutional resolution out of order in this House because some provinces have referred the matter to the Supreme Court is not covered by this citation at all.

● (1620)

I go on just a moment more in this regard to say to hon. members—and if I seem to be doing what we are not supposed to do, forgive me for it—that right after the ruling out of Mr. Diefenbaker's motion, the Journals state:

> And the Debate continuing on the main motion;
> Mr. Knowles, seconded by Mr. Jaenicke, moved an amendment thereto:—

I will not read it as it is a bit lengthy. My motions and amendments were much longer in those days than they are now. The gist of my motion was that the committee to which the matter was being referred be given the power to request a reference to the Supreme Court if it wished to do so. What happened to that motion? The Speaker allowed it and the House passed it.

In any case, I conclude now by summarizing the three points I have sought to make. In the first place, I contend that the citations are clear, that Your Honour does not have the authority, the power or the right to rule on a matter which is legal or constitutional. My second point is that the custom regarding sub judice, if it is looked at carefully, does not prevent this highest court of the land from considering or dealing with any matter concerning which it feels it has the right to legislate. My third point is that Citation 338(4) does not cover the case of a request being made to the House of Commons to send the same thing to two places at the same time. That is not the present situation.

I go along with those who have referred to the citations that say that this is the highest court of the land, that our acts can be reviewed by the Supreme Court or by courts up to the Supreme Court and can be thrown out, but the courts do not have the right to tell us what we can do before we start.

I leave the merits and the substance of the subject before us to others, but on the procedural point I hope that what I have said will be helpful to you.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has covered the question very well. It would be pretentious on my part if I wanted to add anything at all to the arguments he has raised. He has covered the question very well and I must confess that his rational and intelligent explanation did contrast with the remarks made by the member who spoke before him.

While resorting to his procrastination tactic the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) indicated that his party was serious and wanted the House to make progress in fields other than the constitutional issue. We will have a good opportunity today to test his sincerity. We will be in a position to do that very soon because again I want to confirm what the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) said to the Progressive Conservative Party critic, namely, that when motions are called today we have the intention of moving the motion aimed at granting two days of debate to end the discussion on the bill authorizing the government to borrow a certain sum of money.

Since the adoption of that bill has become very urgent we have no alternative other than introducing that motion, and if the Leader of the Official Opposition had been really sincere—and that is why his remarks sound false—we would not have been forced to proceed with that motion today because he would have agreed to let that bill through report stage and third reading without our having to give the notice required under Standing Order 75C. But we will take him at his word today and see to what extent he can be sincere. If we can move that motion today and debate if for a maximum of two hours, as provided in the Standing Orders, we will see if at least we can make progress on a question of procedure since otherwise we cannot get anywhere on the constitutional question.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, I support the representations made to you by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. His explanation really covers the entire matter, and I regret that the Leader of the Official Opposition has essentially tried to do indirectly what we are forbidden to do directly. There is an old legal principle, Madam Speaker, as any graduate in law will tell you—my colleague can ask his fellow member on his left to confirm this—which says that you cannot do indirectly what you are forbidden to do directly.

What the Leader of the Official Opposition did today was nothing but present the same question that he himself submitted last Friday when he asked you, on the basis of so-called precedents, to find that the House could not study the constitutional proposal because it had already been submitted to the Supreme Court. He is now submitting exactly the same question, but since his argument could not be supported by the precedents, or by our rules, traditions, and practices, he is now saying that he is on new ground. Well, Madam Speaker, this is not a very good argument. Moreover, I respectfully submit that this is a way of doing indirectly what you had forbidden him from doing directly. I find it unfortunate that he has wasted one hour of the time of the House today in an attempt to abuse the rules of this House and get around what he had no right to do as your decision already covered this matter. In view of the circumstances—

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: We are already on a point of order.

[English]

Madam Speaker: Order please. We are already dealing with a point of order and I cannot entertain two at the same time.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I would ask the hon. member if he would entertain a question.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I shall close by saying that your ruling of last Friday is another argument that I add to those given by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. As indicated on page 8694 of Hansard, you stated the following in giving your ruling, and I quote from the English version of Hansard:

[English]

Sub judice is a convention which is "a voluntary restraint imposed by the House upon itself in the interests of justice and fair play", as stated in Citation 335 of Beauchesne's fifth edition. I have not been persuaded by the particular argument brought forward by the Leader of the Opposition which he offered in his presentation yesterday, namely that the House cannot debate that motion because the matter has been referred to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, you ruled on this very question, except last Friday you ruled on the basis of citations from Beauchesne and the rules and practices of this House. Today the Leader of the Opposition wants to try his case again. Since he lost it on the basis of practice, the rules and Beauchesne, he says it is now on new ground. I understand what kind of new ground he is talking about. He said, "I want to protect the Canadian way of doing things." If we look at what he did last week and what he is doing this afternoon, we certainly are on new ground, particularly when we see this kind of filibuster.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have a pretty good idea of what this point of order is all about. Several citations have been brought before us which I am sure will help me to make a judgment. I want to give notice that I will not be listening to too many interveners as I feel that many citations have been brought forward. When I find there are no new arguments being offered I will cut off debate.

Point of Order—Mr. Clark

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, in respect of the point of order argued so eloquently by the gentleman who has now become the deputy House leader of the government, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I have to say with respect—

Mr. Knowles: You call that respect?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —that his point of view was narrow indeed. I should like to raise some points in rebuttal and to refer Your Honour to a precedent which has not been referred to in the course of the discussion during this debate. This is a precedent of the Canadian House of Commons on the matter of sub judice.

• (1630)

If I may say so, I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was wrong—of course, the government House leader was wrong as well to adopt the argument of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—when he said that the Chair will not decide a question of law or stand in the place of the Supreme Court. I listened very carefully to the argument put forward by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), and that is not what he said at all. He was not arguing that Your Honour should stand in the place of the Supreme Court of Canada. He was arguing precisely the reverse, that is, that the Supreme Court of Canada is another institution, an institution which ought to be respected by the rules, precedents and practices of the House of Commons. That is the first point, and I think it speaks for itself.

The second matter he argued—and I thought he was becoming a bit of an advocate before a court rather than a parliamentarian in Parliament—was that the court would have the opportunity to deal with the constitutional matter after it had been decided in a foreign country, as put by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. The court would have a chance to deal with it, but that, of course, is wrong. At least it is wrong in so far as the Kirby memorandum is concerned, and I believe it is wrong in so far as the Pitfield memorandum is concerned. It is also apparently wrong in so far as the Department of Justice is concerned because the Department of Justice has given an opinion which I presume it would advance in a court of law. It certainly advanced it to the government and to the Privy Council. The opinion of the Department of Justice is that precisely the opposite is true and that after the foreign country, Great Britain, has dealt with it—Westminster—and it comes back to Ottawa, it is beyond the purview of the courts. That is what the Department of Justice said. If there was any assertion made on the floor of this House, it was the assertion made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) himself to his own colleagues as to the propriety and importance of the sub judice rule. I have to agree that we have to look at each case on its merits, and to the Chair the opinion given by the Department of Justice is an important consideration.

In speaking of the sub judice convention, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred to two publications on the customs, traditions and precedents of the House. He referred to the sub judice conventions as set forth in Beauchesne and May. I suggest there are other matters on sub judice to consider which ought to give Your Honour pause with respect to the importance of this argument. I am referring to a report of the House of Commons itself. It is the report of the special committee of this House on rights and immunities of members of the Thirtieth Parliament of 1976 to 1977. The committee was composed of some rather distinguished members and former members of this House. One was the former member for Peace River, Mr. Ged Baldwin. Another was Mr. Gordon Fairweather, who is now the chairman of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, and yet another was the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre himself.

Mr. Nowlan: Oh, no.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The report was unanimous. I think it is important that Your Honour consider this report of the House of Commons. Just to put it in context, the order said in part:

That a Special Committee of the House to consist of Mr. Speaker—

This was a committee chaired by the Speaker.

—and seven other members be appointed to review the rights and immunities of members of the House of Commons, to examine the procedures by which such matters are dealt with by the House and to report on any changes it may be desirable to make.

The committee held a number of meetings on how the rights and immunities of members were affected by the sub judice convention or related directly to that. During the course of those proceedings, the committee received the assistance of Mr. Alistair Fraser, a former distinguished Clerk of this House of Commons, Mr. Phillip Laundy, the director of the research branch of the Parliamentary Library, and Mr. Norman B. Willans, a legal research officer with the Library of Parliament.

The matter with which we are dealing is very important. It is not something we can treat lightly. I will read part of the report because it does demolish some of the things which have been said about where the rule of sub judice applies. Paragraph 3 of the report reads in part as follows:

The freedom of speech accorded to Members of Parliament is a fundamental right without which they would be hampered in the performance of their duties. It permits them to speak in the House without inhibition, to refer to any matter or express any opinion as they see fit, and to say what they feel needs to be said in the furtherance of the national interest and the aspirations of their constituents. This basic parliamentary freedom is to some extent limited by the sub judice convention. Under the convention as it has developed over the years members are expected to refrain from discussing matters that are before the courts. No distinction has ever been made in Canada between criminal courts and civil courts for the purpose of applying the convention. It has also had application to certain tribunals other than courts of law. The purpose of the convention is to protect the parties—

Litigants.

—in a case awaiting or undergoing trial—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Then the report goes on to broaden it even more than that.

Mr. Knowles: Who is on trial?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton):

—and persons who stand to be affected by the outcome of a judicial inquiry.

If my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, was to be affected by it, then he would have that protection. If the province of Ontario was to be affected by it, it would be entitled to it. If the province of Manitoba and the province of Saskatchewan were to be affected by it, they would be entitled to it.

Mr. Knowles: Who is on trial?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is interrupting me in an uncharacteristic fashion.

Mr. Knowles: Who is on trial?

Mr. Crosbie: You are on trial.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): If the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will contain himself, I will get on with the question of who is on trial. Paragraph 3 goes on to say:

It exists to guarantee everyone a fair trial and to prevent any undue influence prejudicing a judicial decision—

It does not say who is on trial. It says "a judicial decision". The Supreme Court of Canada is a judicial body. That stands.

—or a report of a tribunal of inquiry. It is important to emphasize that it is a convention and not a rule. It is a voluntary restraint imposed by the House upon itself in the interest of justice and fair play, but which the House is free to disregard should it so resolve.

There has been no resolution of the House to disregard or stand aside the principles of justice and fair play.

Then the report goes on—and this raises a point for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre with respect to who is on trial—in paragraph 4 to say:

A definition of "prejudice" is not easily formulated. An attempt was made by a select committee of the British House of Commons—

It should apply here. If we are going to send our Constitution to Great Britain to be decided, perhaps we can regard some of our decisions in the light of the Parliament to which we are going to send our fundamental documents. It says this:

"In using the word 'prejudice' your committee intend the word to cover possible effect on the members of the court, the jury, witnesses and the parties to any action. The minds of magistrates, assessors, members of a jury and of witnesses might be influenced by reading in the newspapers comment—

And so on.

The research efforts of the Committee have not succeeded in providing a more precise definition. What effect a parliamentary discussion may have on "the court, the jury, the witnesses and the parties to an action" is not easy to determine. One thing that can be stated with certainty is that courts in interpreting statutes have no regard for anything that might have been said in the course of parliamentary debate.

That is with respect to statutes, because they deal with words of precision. We are dealing with conventions in the case of a reference to the Manitoba court. That is the issue. Finally, it says—

Point of Order—Mr. Clark

Madam Speaker: May I interrupt the hon. member to tell him that it would be in his own interest if he could address the particular question we are dealing with here. I know the citation to which the hon. member is referring very well; he is referring to the effect that might have on individuals. He is referring to commentary in Parliament concerning individuals who might be on trial. With respect to such cases I have some citations which say that the House would exercise some discretion, although it is open to the House in some cases to comment on them. I would like the hon. member to refrain from pursuing that line, because it seems to me quite clear that is with reference to civil or criminal cases but perhaps not too germane to the particular situation we are discussing now.

• (1640)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, with respect—and I will have to point the argument because I want to put it to you—I think the sub judice rule has been almost beyond dispute with respect to criminal cases. The difficulty has always arisen in the interpretation of the rule with respect to civil cases. There have been some civil cases where it was allowed, some where it was not, and in considering the appropriateness of this House proceeding while the issue is before the Supreme Court of Canada, one has to consider what it is. It is a reference put to the Supreme Court as set out by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition in a civil proceeding under the reference provisions and rules of practice in the Manitoba Supreme Court. It is a civil proceeding.

Now, I put it to you that there is a party involved; there can be a prejudice involved, and that is the issue of the rule. That is why the report of this Parliament put it precisely this way. I do not think there is any doubt as to the rule. It has always been the practice in this House, and it is the rule, that a matter which is the subject of a judicial inquiry is outside the purview of the House during the proceedings. So the rule is not limited to criminal or civil matters; rather it is wide ranging and includes an inquiry. As the Leader of the Opposition has said, it is new ground and includes a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada on a matter before a provincial court.

The rule evolves, it moves ahead. This is the first time this has been considered in this context. That does not say that this process is not subject to the sub judice rule. In fact, the burden would be on those attesting otherwise, because the object of the rule is to ensure that the interests of the parties are not affected by a proceeding in the Parliament of Canada. That was the essence of the case and that is the burden on the Chair.

It has applied, Madam Speaker, in many civil cases. The report refers to one in 1938, one in 1973 and another in 1966. The reports are replete with them. So I have to say that the sub judice rule is a dynamic thing. It is not narrow, as the member for Winnipeg North Centre and the government House leader seemed to argue; it is a dynamic concept that moves as it is applied.

I can think of no place where it ought to apply more fundamentally, more strongly and firmly than in a matter dealing with the Constitution of Canada and with the rule of law. What we are really asking the government to do—whether or not they will consider it is something else—is that in observing the rule of law and the concept of sub judice, they are being asked to put off the ultimate decision on this question until the Supreme Court of Canada has ruled, in about three weeks, on the appropriateness of the appeal from Manitoba.

I have read the reasons for the appeal and I submit that it makes good and interesting reading because it covers the customs, traditions and law, all the issues involved. All we are saying is that this country is—at least, I thought it was—a country governed by the rule of law, not by the rule of men, and that it is inappropriate for there to be advanced here something which might remove it from the jurisdiction of the courts.

To put the matter the other way, supposing the memorandum was wrong and after Westminster there was a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada that went against this resolution. What constitutional position would the country be in? I do not know how that has been explored, but it has been explored by the Minister of Justice and they say we will not even get that far. That is why I commend this report to you.

I will not argue much longer, Madam Speaker. I have done my best to stay on this point, the sub judice rule. I have asked you to consider the new ground that has been presented by the Leader of the Opposition and consider it in light of the importance of the case. It is a case that has split the NDP, it has caused the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Duclos) to make a speech in this House saying he will vote against his party, and it has caused the member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) to say that he is going to vote against his party. This is the right of every member. But I think it is also the duty of Parliament to ensure that nothing is done here to prejudice legal rights, even when we are breaking new ground. That was the purport of the brilliant argument advanced by the Leader of the Opposition, and I support him. I ask you, Madam Speaker, not to decide the issue on narrow, procedural grounds, as you have been invited to do by the deputy House leader of the government and the member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Madam Speaker: There are no other members of the other parties in the House rising; therefore I will hear one more speaker on the opposition side.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I will be brief; I do not want to delay the proceedings of the House unduly.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: In dealing with this matter I am going to make reference to some of the arguments put forward, because I submit to you, Madam Speaker, that this question raised by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) is indeed new and novel, one that has to be considered by you.

I want to make this observation with respect to the matter before you to underline that particular point. What we have before us today, notwithstanding the statement of precedents and citations by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that this somehow is a matter of legislation, is something quite different. It is a resolution in which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) asks this House to address itself to a proposed bill to be passed by Westminster. Therefore, I want to look at this question from the point of view of finding out precisely what we are dealing with.

I suggest that when we read the precedents and the citations presented to us, we are in fact dealing quite specifically and precisely with our order of the House, a matter completely within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada and not one which calls upon Your Honour to consider and resolve any question of law or of constitutionality, whether it be a legal interpretation or any of the references made by the member for Winnipeg North Centre. What we are talking about now is the appropriateness and propriety of this House dealing with a matter which is before the Supreme Court of Canada. We are creating disorder in this House by proceeding on the resolution of this matter in final form before the Supreme Court of Canada has an opportunity to rule on whether or not what we are doing is in fact legal. That is the very simple fact of the matter.

● (1650)

What is before the Supreme Court of Canada? As I have said, this is a matter of which your Honour can take judicial notice. The matter before the court quite frankly is a reference under the provisions of the Manitoba reference act dealing with whether or not the resolution before us is within the powers of government or Parliament to deal with.

To put it another way, the statement has been made that in this resolution we are dealing with matters which in fact infringe on provincial jurisdiction and provincial rights. Does Parliament have the right, in terms of this resolution, to beg the Parliament of the United Kingdom to proceed with legislation, based on the premise of a resolution for which there is no legal justification, no justification in the rules of the House or under existing law with respect to the ability and power of the Parliament of Canada? This is the question facing the Supreme Court of Canada.

I do not want to deal with the consequences of what might happen if the British Parliament acts on this resolution. It constitutes a message. It is not a bill. It is not a piece of legislation which raises the taxes or in fact changes the specific laws of Canada under what we normally call legislation. It is a resolution brought in under a motion.

I never thought I would see the day when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, or the New Democratic Party, would associate themselves with the facilitation of closure in this House. The fact of the matter is that in this particular situation we are looking at a motion. I should like to turn to the citations quoted by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He referred to Citation 338 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fifth edition, wherein Subsection (3) reads as follows:

> The convention applies to motions, references in debates, questions and supplementary questions, but does not apply to bills.

It applies to motions, and that is with what we are dealing here. We are not dealing with a bill. We are dealing with a motion, a resolution, a unique situation in which the Parliament of Canada, by this joint resolution, addresses itself to the Parliament of the United Kingdom and asks it to take legislative action.

In the press conference which he held last week, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicated that once the matter gets out of the Parliament of the United Kingdom, the Supreme Court of Canada will have no jurisdiction over the matter. The contention of the Prime Minister last week was that we wanted to get this matter through because the Supreme Court of Canada, at that point, will not have the jurisdiction to judge or pass on the constitutionality of a bill or legislation of the Parliament of the United Kingdom. So it is an unusual and unique situation.

We must ask ourselves what is the role of the Supreme Court of Canada and what is the role of the House of Commons and Parliament at this point in time. Certainly the role of the House of Commons is to ensure the resolution of the motion we are sending to the United Kingdom in fact is within the jurisdiction of the House of Commons. If a simple resolution was brought forward—perhaps for the purposes of illustration this is an extreme example—to abolish the Senate or to abolish the provinces, in both cases Your Honour would give some serious consideration, if the matter was attacked in the courts, as to whether or not it should be postponed until the courts determine the constitutionality of either of those particular resolutions.

I should like to quote no less an authority than Mr. Justice Huband of the Court of Appeal of Manitoba who addressed himself to the question of the reference we are now discussing. During the course of his judgment, he said:

> It would be unthinkable if Her Majesty acted upon a request of the provincial legislatures to assent to provincial legislation purporting to limit the scope of powers conferred upon the federal government under the British North America Act. The Queen would not heed such a request, and if by chance assent were granted, the courts would deem it an error, and would rule such legislation ultra vires in spite of Her Majesty's assent. The converse is also true. If Her Majesty acted upon the request of the federal authority to assent to federal legislation purporting to limit the legislative powers enjoyed by the provinces, such legislation would be struck down.

This is part and parcel of the decision of Mr. Justice Huband of the Court of Appeal of Manitoba. The matter has now been received, the notice of appeal has been received, and the order has been made in the Supreme Court of Canada with respect to the hearing of this appeal. This was not done unilaterally; this was a consent order which the Attorney General of Canada, who is sitting across the aisle this afternoon, concurred in and consented to. The government agreed to this appeal proceeding. Also it agreed to the terms of the appeal, the date on which it will be heard, the participants and the intervenors, the dates of filings of facta. Every aspect of this matter has been concurred in; the order was with the concurrence of the Attorney General of Canada.

So where do we find ourselves? We find ourselves in a situation which has been referred by Professor Cohen—

Mr. McGrath: A government expert.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: As the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) points out, Professor Cohen was an expert presented on behalf of the federal government's position. In the course of his evidence before the parliamentary committee with respect to the whole matter—

Madam Speaker: I apologize for interrupting the hon. member, but I must put the subject matter of the questions to be debated this evening.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy)—Income Tax—Inquiry whether decisions concerning Canadians working abroad will be respected; the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott)—Health and Safety—Measures to eliminate hazard of infant crib deaths; the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn)—Grain—Compensation to farmers for embargo on shipments to Russia.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CLARK—THE CONSTITUTION—APPEAL TO SUPREME COURT—PROPRIETY OF PARLIAMENTARY CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION

The House resumed consideration of the point or order of Mr. Clark.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I gather we are not having private members' hour today.

Madam Speaker: No.

Mr. Chrétien: You are just buying time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It allows me to carry on without breaking my train of thought. I would not want to think up new and more cogent arguments over the supper time, because what I am about to say now will be devastating to the position of the government House leader.

With reference to the whole question of proceeding before the Supreme Court of Canada has had an opportunity to adjudicate on the process of what were we are doing in this resolution, Professor Cohen said:

> That would be very, very unwise to do, very unwise of Parliament to say: we stop talking about a particular subject because it is before the Court of Appeal of Manitoba or Newfoundland or Quebec because of the way it can be abused.
> However, when the matter is before the Supreme Court of Canada that is a different kettle of fish. There I am not so sure that I would want to see a serious public debate about an issue of this kind while the case is pending before the Supreme Court—

This is a very important and telling argument out of the mouth of an expert brought forward by the Government of Canada whose representative in the House, the government House leader, is arguing that we should proceed with this resolution, notwithstanding the fact that the Supreme Court of Canada is dealing with the constitutionality of the process on a resolution which admittedly moves in areas of acknowledged provincial jurisdiction. Certainly that is not the question before Madam Speaker. The question is whether or not we should be proceeding in this House while the very issues we are discussing are being decided by the Supreme Court of Canada.

The question on the process which is being carried out by the government, with its mere majority and not by unanimous consent, is of serious consequence to the future of our country. We in the official opposition have opposed this measure and we make no apology about that.

We can look back to an analogous situation in 1978 when the government had a constitution package called Bill C-60. That was a bill before the House. It was an actual bill as opposed to a resolution. It was a bill which dealt with matters totally and exclusively within the jurisdiction of the federal government. In that bill there was no attempt made, at least on the face of it, to interfere with the rights of the provinces. If we look back to the precedents with respect to that bill, we will see that the government respected the convention which had been established. The government respected the expert witnesses who were brought forward before the committee and who made reference to the Supreme Court of Canada with respect to amendments to the Senate of Canada.

I would like to point out, Madam Speaker, that while the matter was referred to the Supreme Court of Canada, the consideration by Parliament of amendments to our Constitution was then suspended. That was the proper way to deal with the matter. It was the proper convention and an appropriate decision on the part of the government. But the opposite is happening now, notwithstanding the fact that this matter is coming up within the month to be determined by the Supreme Court of Canada. The government is proceeding before determining whether the process it is using is, in fact, valid and within its jurisdiction.

The first point I wanted to make to you, Madam Speaker, is to reinforce the point that we are not talking here about a bill. We are talking about a motion. If we are to use Beauchesne as a guide to what the traditions of Parliament are with respect to this matter, then let us read Beauchesne very carefully. Let us make sure that we understand that we are not talking about legislation in the strict and literal sense of the word. We are talking about a resolution which will lead to an address to Her Majesty the Queen and to the British Parliament. It asks these parties to take some steps in the name of Canada and its provinces.

In this particular instance I suggest to Your Honour that there has never been, and should not be, any question as to whether the Supreme Court of Canada is about to adjudicate whether or not what we are doing is proper and legal and we should proceed. I agree with those members on both sides of the House who have said that Parliament, and the Supreme Court of Canada representing the judiciary, are separate on the division of powers. There is a separate role to play where the courts have the constitutional ability to determine whether or not the process going on in the House of Commons is valid and constitutional. The House of Commons should defer to the court until it is able to make a decision on the whole process which is taking place in the House of Commons.

I wanted to make that point because I think it is quite important to understand that we are not talking about a bill here. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre raised points to the effect that Parliament has a right to pass bills and that we should not be constrained with respect to court actions which are taken. He said that somehow we can proceed with legislation and bills before the House, which is very much different from what we are facing today. What we are facing today is a resolution, not a bill. The court is considering what is happening in the House of Commons and whether or not what we are doing is within our competence. That is a very different proposition from the one pointed out by the New Democratic Party House leader in his defence of the government.

I also want to reinforce that point by giving a different interpretation to you, Madam Speaker, with respect to the reference made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He referred to events which took place on April 12, 1948, as entered in the Journals of this House. You will recall, Madam Speaker, that was with respect to a reference of a bill to the Supreme Court of Canada, withdrawing that bill temporarily from the jurisdiction of Parliament. In that context the Speaker at that time was looking not at a bill but at a resolution, or motion, to establish a special committee, as the hon. member pointed out.

The decision that was rendered at that time was that a question cannot be before two public bodies at the same time. I suggest that is a very interesting, analogous situation, but it does not have the same weight with respect to the issue now before us. I have a quite different interpretation of the decision reached at that time from that of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The reason my interpretation differs is that in that instance what was attempted was to look at ways in which the House can protect civil liberties and human rights, and at the same time ask the court to make an adjudication with respect to the ability of the House of Commons to deal with that issue. The Speaker at that time was saying that if the matter is before the court then it would be inappropriate for the House to deal with it. I think those circumstances are very supportive of the question raised by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition in his outstanding presentation to you this afternoon, Madam Speaker.

I submit that this is a situation which we in Parliament must look at, not only from the point of view of our own rules of procedure, since we are a political body, but also from the point of view that what we are doing will allow us to proceed under the rule of law. I say that with all seriousness at this point of time in our history. If we do not operate under the rule of law we will have legal anarchy in our country.

Another point I wish to develop briefly for the Chair's consideration is that you must be cognizant of the expert advice which was given to the members of the committee, not only by those witnesses brought forward by the government but also by those who were brought forward by the opposition parties, witnesses who were acknowledged experts in their field. The point they make is a very interesting one, particularly since they exposed a unanimous point of view.

If we proceed with this resolution and it goes to the Parliament in the United Kingdom, if in its wisdom that body passes the package which it has been requested to pass, and if in its wisdom the Supreme Court of Canada determines that the process was not within the competence of the Parliament of Canada, then we would have a situation of legal anarchy. There would be legal chaos in our country and the rule of law would be prejudiced. When the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition refers to the fact that by proceeding we attack the judicial system and the Supreme Court of Canada, he is quite right. What we do by our action is put the Supreme Court of Canada in an impossible situation.

The argument put forward in the Kirby memorandum, and in the Prime Minister's own words in his press conference last week, is that the Supreme Court of Canada is not seized with an interpretation of the jurisdiction of the legislation because it is a statute of the United Kingdom. So what happens is that we get the United Kingdom passing a bill which says, "We wash our hands of any further responsibility on constitutional matters and, incidentally, here is your charter of rights, here is your amending formula, here is your bill, your Canada Act. Au revoir, goodbye, and good luck, Canada". That is the end of it. They have no further legislative powers. If the Supreme Court of Canada finds that we, in effect, had no jurisdiction to make that resolution, what would happen to our judicial system? What would happen to the Supreme Court of Canada?

● (1710)

An hon. Member: It's a prejudice to all Canadians, every Canadian.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Every Canadian would be subject to the abuse that has been perpetrated upon them because of the fact that we moved against a convention which should be observed by the House of Commons and our Parliament, that we should not move until such time as the Supreme Court of Canada has decided the question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The rationale of the government is mystifying because its action is a complete reversal of what it is suggesting in its package. What the government is saying is that henceforth matters with respect to the Constitution, as defined in the constitutional package, will be outside the purview of Parliament. In other words, the courts will be responsible for interpreting the package, and legislators will not be able to take steps, collectively or individually, that would go against the principles contained in the constitutional package. But now, when we are talking about the whole process and whether the courts should adjudicate at this point in time, the reverse argument is used by the government. It says that it is a political question; the courts have no role in this process. The government cannot have it both ways. The House of Commons cannot have it both ways. We must decide whether the rules are consistent, whether the courts have the right and the ability to adjudicate not only upon the constitutionality of laws, but also the processes within Parliament. Nobody disputes that. No one in this House would stand in his place and deny that the court has a recognized and fundamental role to play. Under our Constitution, under the British parliamentary tradition, in any democratic system, the court must have the ability to adjudicate upon what is happening within the House.

How can the government House leader, in all seriousness, argue, before the courts of this land have the chance to say that what we are doing is proper, that the courts should not be referred to before we take the next step on this process? I make no apology for it. If the courts say it is within the jurisdiction of the House of Commons to proceed, that is fine. We have had the courts speak on this matter. We may not agree with the decision which has been taken by the government and the way in which it has moved, but at least the courts have spoken on this matter.

What is the situation if the courts find against this matter, and we have already acted and cannot undo what we have done? I do not subscribe to the position taken by the Minister of Justice. When he was asked about this very matter, he said there would be absolutely no purpose in having this matter go to the Supreme Court of Canada. We should move on it; it is a political issue. The Minister of Justice said at that time, in response to a question, "I do not want this question to go to the Supreme Court of Canada because the courts are unreliable". Unreliable!

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I would have expected the Attorney General and Minister of Justice of this country to have shown a far higher regard for the judicial process. The Minister of Justice is a Shawinigan lawyer. He is the best kind of lawyer: he is a country lawyer. He knows of the value of an independent judiciary in a properly democratic country. The fact is that what we are doing here is taking steps which cause me to have serious concern for what we will have perpetrated on the people of our country.

It is not a matter of interpreting laws and whether we should answer a constitutional question one way or the other. It is a process which you must address yourself to, Madam Speaker. Should you, as Speaker, rule that the House may proceed with the completion of this particular resolution before the court has adjudicated upon the process? If that happens, we may all be standing in different parts of this country in years to come. If the court does hold as I have indicated, we will be asking ourselves, "How do we recover from the position we have put the people of Canada in? How do we recover as far as the courts are concerned?" That is the matter that should be considered by Your Honour, and I very strongly support the submission and the excellent presentation made by the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I would like to rule immediately on this important point of order, but precisely because of the importance of the arguments brought forward and the very numerous references and citations that I will be called upon to reconcile, I will take the matter under advisement and rule on this point of order later.

I have some questions of privilege and I will call first the one that was deferred yesterday by the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence).

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAWRENCE—ALLEGED MISLEADING ANSWER GIVEN BY MR. KAPLAN

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, on Friday, the last sitting day of the House, on coming to my office I found certain press comments. As a result, I gave you written notice of what I considered to be a breach of my privileges as a member of the House.

Because it does summarize the matter, and since this is a very serious point of privilege, as far as I am concerned in any event, may I merely for the attention of the House read the letter that I sent to you on March 27:

Madam Speaker:

It has just now come to my notice, upon reading the Canadian Press wire story in The Globe and Mail of today's date, that I have what I believe to be a question of privilege, and I give you notice that I wish to raise it today, this being the earliest possible moment.

You will remember that in the House yesterday, after the oral question period, I asked the Solicitor General two questions relating to security occurrences of approximately 20 to 25 years ago. On both occasions, the Solicitor General refused to answer my questions on the grounds that it would not be in the public interest, and that traditionally the Solicitor General has made no public comment on such matters.

I am therefore more than surprised, I am disappointed and hurt, and I believe my privileges have been transgressed to just now read in the above mentioned Canadian Press wire story, that the Solicitor General, minutes later, went outside the House and in a press interview answered both questions that earlier he had refused to answer in the House of Commons.

Yours truly.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Lawrence: I am aware of Citation 19(2) of Beauchesne, found on page 12, which says:

The failure of a minister of the Crown to answer a question may not be raised as a question of privilege.

I am not arguing that point. I am not arguing that the minister of the Crown involved in this matter did not answer my question. He answered my question. I have no argument at all with a minister if he wants to sit down and do nothing; but in this case, this did not happen. The minister answered my question.

It does not fall under Citation 19(1) either, which I quote:

A dispute arising between two members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfil the conditions of parliamentary privilege.

I am not arguing that point. This is not a disputation between the minister and myself as to an allegation of fact.

Citation 19(3) says:

Statements made outside the House by a member may not be used as the base for a question of privilege.

I am not arguing that the statements made outside the House by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) constitute my question of privilege. My question of privilege is simply this. In answer to a question in this House, Madam Speaker, the minister misled me and he misled you; he misled all members of this House. I think it directly pertains to my privilege as a member of this House because he was answering my question.

● (1720)

I would just bring to your attention the question that I asked in the House. I asked if he, as Solicitor General would establish the identities of the British interrogators of Mr. Gouzenko. One of two questions that I asked was whether the Solicitor General had established the identity of the British interrogators of Mr. Gouzenko? In his answer the Solicitor General said to me, to you and to this House that he refused to answer that question and he implicitly referred to his answer to my first question, and I quote:

—it is not the practice or policy of the Solicitor General to comment on such allegations, and I have no intention of doing so.

"I have no intention of doing so." Then the minister has the gall and the nerve, I suggest to you, to breach my privileges in this House by going outside the House and, in a press interview with a number of members of the press gallery, give the very answer that I requested him to give in this House and which he said he had no intention of giving.

I cannot find a more blatant, blunt attempt to mislead me. I know I can get into trouble if I say that the minister intentionally did that so I will not say that, but I will point out to you that less than 12 minutes elapsed between the time the minister said in the House that he had no intention of answering that question and the time he gave the answer to the press outside the House. I do not say that he intentionally did that.

Mr. Nielsen: How could it be anything else?

Mr. Lawrence: I am not agreeing with anonymous voices that come over the PA system asking whether it could be anything else. I say it was a breach of the privileges in this House, if not a breach of common courtesy and etiquette to all members of the House.

That, simply, is my question of privilege. I believe that the Solicitor General misled this House, misled you and misled me by an answer which he completely contradicted a few minutes later outside in the corridors of this House.

There is no question now in my mind concerning the information that he gave to the press outside this House, because since Friday morning his comments have appeared in direct quotations in a number of other press stories. I shall not repeat them to you as I do not want intentionally to hold up proceedings in this House.

I bring to you now, Madam Speaker, what I sincerely and honestly believe to be a very serious breach of my privileges as a member of this House resulting from the actions and comments in this House of the Solicitor General. If you are prepared to find that a prima facie case exists, I have prepared a notice of motion in the usual form for reference of that matter to a committee.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I should like to begin by thanking you for deferring consideration of this question of privilege until I could be present in the House. I was watching the proceedings on television the other day when my hon. friend rose to begin his question of privilege. I prepared to rush into the House but I saw, after one or two seconds, that you decided to defer it.

Like my hon. friend, I do not want to prolong the matter or to appear to be engaging in any dilatory tactics. I would simply observe that I do not believe a valid question of privilege has been made out. Beauchesne's fifth edition is quite clear on this. I draw your attention to Citations 363(1), 19(2) and (3) and 264 without even quoting them, since they have been quoted so often in this debate.

I would simply say that the question that the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) asked me contained a great many allegations that I did not want to comment on and which I still have not commented upon. I did not reply to the part of the question, only a small part, which touched on the identity of British interrogators.

I have not received a full answer to the question whether Mr. Gouzenko had been interrogated by other British interrogators. I do not know the full answer to that question; I have not got to the bottom of it. I knew, though, that he was interrogated by one in particular, whom I identified in reply to a specific question outside the House. If the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland had asked that very specific question in the House instead of the long song and dance that constituted his question, I would have given him the straight and direct answer to it.

As I understand the rules of this House, I am not obliged to do that. If I were to respond to every allegation that he laid and every question that he asked me, I would have needed all of the question period to do so and he knows that perfectly well.

In conclusion, I do not think that a valid question of privilege has been raised or, from the point of view of gentlemanly practice in this House, that I was in default in any way.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order regarding something I have discussed with the government House leader. It is with respect to what he said in the middle of his statement on the sub judice question which is now before you. It relates to House business.

I confess that I did not hear quite what he said as well as I might have, so I wonder what his intention is. What did he say with respect to the borrowing authority bill and his intentions, I believe on motions, with respect to that matter? Could he repeat that for me please?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as I said to my colleague in the hall a few minutes ago, and I am glad to repeat it here, if we were to reach motions, that is, even before orders of the day, before six o'clock, then the Minister of State for Finance will move the motion to allocate two days to conclude the debate on report stage and third reading stage on the borrowing authority bill. If he cannot move it before six o'clock, then we will see about it later.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I want to thank the President of the Privy Council for clarifying that question. I have an additional question.

The motion in the name of the Minister of State for Finance says that he gives notice of his intention to move a motion at the next sitting of the House to allocate one sitting day to each of the stages of the bill. There are two stages left, the report stage amendment and third reading stage. Can the government House leader tell me what his intention is with respect to calling the report stage and third reading stage of this bill? Does he intend to call it tomorrow and the next day and the next day? I think it would be helpful if we knew what the government's intentions were with respect to the other business that he refers to.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, it has not been decided yet when the two-day debate to be granted under the motion is going to take place. Still, in view of the urgency of the matter, we shall act quickly. As for the suggestion of the hon. member to proceed with one or two days this week, we shall certainly take it into consideration. As soon as a decision has been made, probably some time tomorrow morning before the question period, I shall be pleased to advise him accordingly.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAWRENCE—ALLEGED MISLEADING ANSWER GIVEN BY MR. KAPLAN—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: I should like to go back to the new question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence). He took great care to tell me what citations did not apply and he read Citation 19 from Beauchesne. There is another citation which I should like to put before hon. members in response to that question of privilege, namely, Citation 264 of Beauchesne, on page 87, which reads as follows:

The option of a minister to make a statement either in the House or outside it may be the subject of comment, but is not the subject of a question of privilege.

● (1730)

I remind hon. members of the ruling by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux on February 28, 1972, where he said:

—suggestions that statements not made in the House were made outside the House, or that information not given to members in reply to questions was supplied to the media or in some other way given outside the House. There is a long line of learned rulings, going back many years, indicating that this is more a grievance than a breach of privilege—

Therefore, I think I am on solid and traditional ground in ruling that the hon. member might have a grievance, that he might be hurt and disappointed by the fact that the question was not answered in the way he would have wished, but that the matter of privilege does not cover that kind of situation.

I have notice of another question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Yes, I have others. I will call them in the order in which I have received them.

MR. FRETZ—ALLEGED UNSATISFACTORY ANSWER FROM MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege flows from answers which the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) gave me in this House on Friday as a result of questions I posed to him. The answers were misleading and contradictory. I would like to read in part the questions and answers.

It concerns recent press reports that pressure from the Quebec Liberal caucus has caused bidding to be reopened on the contracts for the F-18 fighter—

I asked the minister if those allegations were correct. He replied:

The bidding has been going normally. Nothing has been changed on the international principle of the bidding . . . As far as I am concerned, nothing either illegal or erroneous has been done.

My next question was:

—if the minister alleges that the bids have not been reopened, what is the reason for the delays which constitute a loss of work for Canadian plants?

The minister replied:

—I would suggest that the hon. member ask McDonnell Douglas about the delays if any.

We have a confession by the chairman of the Quebec Liberal caucus. It was confirmed on Thursday that the Quebec Liberal caucus pressed the McDonnell Douglas firm to reopen bidding on the contracts months after the competition had closed, giving a Quebec firm a chance to bid late. McDonnell Douglas reopened bidding in February to consider what it called a late unsolicited bid from Canadair Limited of Montreal. In the original bidding period last year, Canadair had gone after only one of four contracts because it was busy with other work.

The chairman of the Quebec Liberal caucus said that his group met with the directors of Canadair a month and a half ago to force them to reconsider and submit bids on all the contracts. He stated that Canadair did not have any choice. The firms affected are in Ontario, Manitoba and New Brunswick. Sources close to the situation say that two Ontario firms would have won the contracts if the federal government had accepted McDonnell Douglas' first recommendation.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is well aware that if he is not satisfied with an answer received from a minister in the House, that does not constitute the basis of a question of privilege. The hon. member has been speaking now for a few minutes and has not yet stated what the question of privilege is. I would ask him to do that very promptly because my suspicion is that he does not have a question of privilege. I cannot deduce that from what he has said. He is debating the matter of the question of privilege, but he is not exposing or debating the privilege itself.

Since there are several other members who have given me notice of questions of privilege, I would ask the hon. member to be brief. In any event, he may have a long series of arguments to put forward. I cannot force him to be brief. I can ask him to come to the point very quickly.

Mr. Fretz: Madam Speaker, my question of privilege is that the minister said that the bidding has been going normally. My question of privilege is that it is not going normally. If bidding has been reopened as a result of pressure from the Liberal caucus—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That is obviously a difference of opinion between the minister and the hon. member. It is debate. The hon. member has to tell me why he feels he has a question of privilege, not to debate anything pertaining to the specific question asked during the question period or any of the answers which were given. That does not constitute a question of privilege.

Mr. Fretz: Madam Speaker, the answer the minister gave me was that things were going normally. As we can see, they have not been going normally. That affects me as a member. What about the plants in my riding which are affected as a result of something that is going on here? That affects my privileges as a member.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may feel that things are not going normally and that he has arguments to support that. The minister might have arguments to support exactly the contrary. This is obviously debate. Up until now the hon. member has not proved to me that he has a question of privilege. Unless he stops debating the question immediately, I will have to rule that he does not have a question of privilege.

Mr. Fretz: Madam Speaker, what I would like to do is move that this go to a committee. May I move that motion? I move, seconded by the hon. member—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The motion would only be in order once I had decided there was a prima facie case of privilege. Up until now the hon. member has not proved to me that there is a prima facie case of privilege. Therefore, since the hon. member does not have any further arguments to produce in support of his question of privilege, I have to rule that the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) does not have a question of privilege.

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. I do not quarrel with the ruling at all, but it has been a long-standing practice in this House that notwithstanding the correctness of what you have just stated, you allow a member raising a question of privilege to say "if the Chair finds that I have a question of privilege, it would be my intention to move the following motion". It may be something quite acceptable. That is a long-standing practice, Madam Speaker, and the hon. member should have been allowed to do that.

Madam Speaker: Hon. members may sometimes offer a motion before I rule, but the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) said "if". That was a very big if in light of the exchange that just took place between the Chair and the hon. member for Erie. I did not think it necessary to read the motion because I had already found there was not a question of privilege.

MR. McKNIGHT—USE OF INITIALS MP BY SENATOR

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): As you will recall, Madam Speaker, I gave you notice of my question of privilege by letter on Friday last and again today. As I said today, the matter affects the ability and the capacity of all members of this House to respond and to discharge their official duties for which they have been elected by the unauthorized and unfairly misleading use of the initials MP, which are commonly accepted and traditionally used to designate members elected to the House of Commons, by individuals other than those elected to this House.

That being said, I will carry on hopefully to present to you several instances regarding the use of the initials MP. I should like you to keep in mind that I will be referring to the initials MP, not the written words Member of Parliament, as those words, through usage, common acceptance by the people of Canada and, indeed, common acceptance by members of this House, reflect that we are members of the House of Commons.

• (1740)

I am fully aware, as are all members of this House, that our Parliament is made up of two Houses; the House of Commons in which we serve, and the Senate. I am not attempting in any manner to present any argument which would suggest members of the Senate are not members of the Parliament of Canada. I am attempting to point out to you what the initials MP have become over the past years to represent to the people.

Let me point out to you that I have a copy of a letter—and I believe other members of my caucus have received similar letters—from the hon. Senator H. A. Olson, where at the bottom in which, under his signature he includes MP. If you will allow me to continue, Madam Speaker, I would remind you that on March 26 last you asked my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), a question. He was referring to another matter concerning members of the House, and then you said:

> If people believe he is a member of the House of Commons, that is nothing upon which I can act. But does that hon. member indicate anywhere that he is a member of the House of Commons?

I should like briefly to give you some outlines of how the initials MP have been accepted in Canadian usage and by the Canadian electorate of Canada, and draw attention to the fact that a member of the other place, in this case Senator Bud Olson, in using the initials MP is signifying in the minds of the electorate of Canada that he is a member of the House of Commons. We all know he is not. Let me refer to the Canadian Almanac—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member is speaking exclusively of members of the other House who allegedly have used those initials to indicate they were members of Parliament, then that question should be raised in the other House. There is no way this Speaker can reprimand a member of the other House or correct a situation or an action taken by him. In order that we do things here properly, we must concern ourselves with the business of our own House and not that of the other House.

I know the initials MP have traditionally been used to designate members who sit in the House of Commons. The hon. member has pointed out rightly that Parliament means the House of Commons, the Senate and the Queen. I do not know in what sense the hon. member from the other place might have used those initials, but I am sure this question must not be dealt with in this House but in the other place.

Mr. McKnight: Madam Speaker, I do not intend, far from it, to enter into debate with the Chair. I know that you exercise your authority to protect the privileges of the members of the House of Commons, those who have been elected to serve constituents across this land. Unless people know and understand, and I am talking of the electorate of Canada, what the designation MP is, and if those initials are being usurped, and I think I am using that word properly, then it is your duty to protect the rights and privileges of those of us who serve in this House.

Going beyond that point, I would return to the Canadian Parliamentary Guide for 1980. At the back of the guide I find the personal index. On looking at several names, I find that the members who serve in this House have the initials MP after their names, and Senator Olson's name from the other place is designated as "Hon. Horace A. Olson, PC".

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will probably be bringing up all sorts of indications of how those initials have been used in the past. This refers to usage and has nothing to do with the Standing Orders of this House. I can understand the hon. member being concerned about this matter, but all matters are not to be solved in this House. There are other places where questions of that nature can be brought forward and discussed properly. It is not for me to determine that the initials MP will be solely applicable to members sitting in this House. Many members, and other people outside this House, would perhaps argue that the meaning could be more general and that other Members of Parliament might be able to call themselves Members of Parliament, perhaps without using the initials. Even if they did use the initials, it would have to do with usage. This is not a matter for me to determine. I would plead with the hon. member to refrain from raising this now. I cannot hear this question as it does not deal with members of this House. I would not want to rule on it.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, without again in any way questioning the decision you have made, may I urge you, Madam Chairman, to refer to page 36—

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: What did I say?

Mr. Knowles: You said "Madam Chairman".

Mr. Nielsen: I am very sorry. I did not realize that. Madam Speaker, I would urge you to consider page 36 of Beauchesne's, Citation 111 which states:

The Speaker of the House of Commons is the representative of the House itself in its powers, proceedings and dignity. His functions—

I should state "his or her" functions. The citation continues:

—fall into two main categories. On the one hand, he is the spokesman or representative of the House in its relations with the Crown, the Senate and other authorities and persons outside Parliament.

That is as far as I need go with that citation. Might I suggest that you reconsider the question and how you have directed yourself in dealing with the matter raised by the hon. member, and perhaps confer with your counterpart in the Senate with a view to determining whether a member of the other place has the right to use letters which by right belong and have always belonged to members of this place. It is just as illogical to assume they have that kind of right as it is for members of this place to assume they can call themselves senators, perish the thought.

You might wish, Madam Speaker, to take that citation under consideration and perhaps discuss the matter with your counterpart in the Senate with a view to stopping a very undesirable practice. I received the same kind of letter from the senator concerned. I might say, it is the only instance of which I know when an individual senator has used those letters.

Madam Speaker: I am thankful to the hon. member for pointing out this particular citation, but he did not quote it to its end. I read:

On the other hand, he—

It should read "he or she". We will have to change Beauchesne. It continues:

—presides over the debates of the House of Commons and enforces the observance of all rules for preserving order in its proceedings.

That is what I have to do. When I see there is no rule I can apply to a particular situation, it is not for me to invent or write a new rule in order to resolve a situation. I am sure hon. members will understand that all I can do is apply the rules as they are written in our Standing Orders, and there is none which pertains to this particular circumstance.

• (1750)

I contend, and I stand to be corrected because I am not now applying the rules, that hon. members are quite capable of walking to the other place themselves and discussing this with senators or deciding between themselves who will be entitled to put the initials MP after their names.

I have notice of another question of privilege.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would not the simplest way to solve this problem be to abolish the Senate?

Mr. Gauthier: Question.

Mr. Knowles: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: I have notice of another question of privilege in the name of the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens).

MR. STEVENS—ALLEGED LACK OF IMPARTIALITY OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA IN CARRYING OUT HIS DUTIES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, as you know from the letter I delivered to your office before one o'clock I wish to raise a question of privilege which, if you should find a prima facie case in my favour, would lead to my moving the following motion:

That the increasing tendency of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada to act in a manner incompatible with the separate requirements and traditions of each of his two portfolios, and the continued inability of the House to obtain independent legal advice from the Attorney General in keeping with the proper constitutional place of that officer of the Crown, as set out in the Department of Justice Act and in particular Section 5 thereof, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Having read that proposed motion into the record, I would like to emphasize that my question of privilege centres on the obligation of the Attorney General of Canada to provide independent, impartial legal advice to this House and to every member of this House with respect to certain issues which may arise from time to time which the House considers.

My argument will take us through various authoritative sources. I intend to refer Your Honour to various provisions in the Department of Justice Act itself, but I will begin by summarizing the main thrust of what I hope will satisfy Your Honour that I have a prima facie case.

I will start by saying that one of the duties of the Attorney General is to provide legal advice to the House of Commons in a non-partisan fashion, even if such advice should prove embarrassing to the government itself. That is in part the crux of what we will be arguing.

The Attorney General of Canada is a unique officer of the Crown. We find that in defining the duties of the Attorney General of Canada Section 5 of the act itself draws attention to the fact that the Attorney General of Canada shall:

(a) be entrusted with the powers and charged with the duties that belong to the office of the attorney general of England by law or usage, so far as those powers and duties are applicable to Canada, and also with the powers and duties that, by the laws of the several provinces, belonged to the office of attorney general of each province up to the time when the British North America Act, 1867, came into effect, so far as those laws under the provisions of the said Act are to be administered and carried into effect by the Government of Canada;

I read that section into the record because I feel that I can make a case that our Attorney General of Canada has so compromised his position in his partisan endorsation of the government's constitutional resolution that is before us that he no longer can freely advise members of this House concerning our legal position in dealing with that resolution.

I say that because I will be reading into the record what certain supreme court and court of appeal justices have already said concerning the possible illegality of what we in this House are being asked to do. When we face the reality of a government having brought in a resolution which is being contested from various quarters of the land and which has already been before the Court of Appeal in Manitoba where two justices have indicated in their judgments that there is considerable doubt as to its legality I suggest it is absolutely essential that we have an Attorney General in the House—who, after all, is responsible to this House, and I emphasize that—who does not compromise his impartiality and remains in a neutral role which would allow us to call on him for specific legal advice on the legality of what we have before us.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I had some grave reservations when I saw the text of the written notice which the hon. member sent to me with respect to his question of privilege. I felt that the way it was written came very close to what I am now sure he is doing. I think he is reflecting upon the conduct of another member, and I want to read to him from Erskine May at page 428. I refer to the paragraph entitled "Reflections on the Sovereign, Etc.". It says:

Unless the discussion is based upon a substantive motion, drawn in proper terms, reflections must not be cast in debate upon the conduct of—

A number of people, including members of either House of Parliament.

Nor may opprobrious reflections be cast in debate on—

The people referred to.

The hon. member is reflecting on the conduct of the minister and on the way he has carried out his duties, and I am afraid I can only hear him under a substantive motion in which he clearly charges the hon. minister with whatever he feels has been done improperly.

I cannot judge whether a minister or a member has properly carried out his duties. Therefore, there is no point in discussing that in the House unless the hon. member wants to make a substantive motion, and then he can give us notice of that.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, certainly over the dinner break I will read the citation in Erskine May to which I have referred, but I suggest that if you hear me out on the main thrust of what I am raising as a question of privilege, you will agree that the office of Attorney General of Canada is in truth a very unique office, especially in relation to this House of Commons. Madam Speaker, this is not a reflection on a member, as you say. It is a question as to whether the person filling the office of Attorney General of Canada can, because of certain other extenuating circumstances, continue to perform his function as Attorney General of Canada as the House of Commons may from time to time require.

In order to substantiate my case I will have to refer Your Honour to some of the precedents which are available concerning the role of the attorney general in England. I will be reading into the record some very important statements which have been made by previous attorneys general in Canada as to the nature of their role—

Madam Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, during the dinner break I had an opportunity to refer to the quotation on page 428 of the nineteenth edition of Erskine May to which you referred earlier and I would like to have the subprivilege of being able to comment concerning your dilemma as you outlined it to the House just prior to dinner. On reflection, Madam Speaker, I felt you were really saying that if I was saying something that was a reflection on a Member of Parliament or, in this case, a minister of the Crown, I could only speak to that through a substantive motion. I felt that then brought me to the dilemma of how to put the substantive motion before you, because if we refer to the general heading "Matters Requiring Immediate Intervention of the House," Erskine May, in dealing with the bringing forward of a question of privilege, points out that before a substantive motion on a question of privilege is moved, the member must first make a prima facie case.

So, Madam Speaker, I am caught in what is colloquially called a Catch-22 situation. However, I think I have some help for you because I was able to find precedents which, I think, will show clearly my approach is quite in order, and if you will permit me to make what, I believe, is a prima facie case, I would then move my substantive motion.

Madam Speaker: I want to interrupt the hon. member because I, too, during the break had a chance to look at this question and I also looked at the blues and the motion that the hon. member would propose if I found a prima facie case of privilege. Looking at that motion and the notice of the question of privilege as submitted by the hon. member, I find that whatever he wants to say about the minister does cast a reflection on his conduct in quite a vague manner, he has not given the reason for which such reflection should be made, and his own motion says that the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Chrétien) acted in a manner incompatible with the separate requirements and traditions of each of his two portfolios.

It seems to me that what the hon. member is saying in this motion leads to questioning the ethics of the minister in one or both his functions. The hon. member should be very precise in order to allow me to judge very soon whether this should be considered as a question of privilege or a motion under Standing Order 35, in which case the hon. member would have no trouble in giving the House notice of his substantive motion. If he wants me to advise him on how to get his motion before the House, I can tell him that he must simply give notice of that motion, following which it is debatable and the House may vote on it. This question of privilege requires a different kind of procedure.

So I would like the hon. member to be very precise because I will not allow these kinds of aspersions to be made on different members of the House. If he has a distinct charge to make, he can make it under his substantive motion. If he has a question of privilege that he is not satisfied with an answer or with something the minister has said, that is a different question and I can hear him.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I will try to satisfy you on all counts, and in saying that, I hope that you will be reasonably patient with me because I am dealing with a subject which perhaps has never before been raised in this form in the House. As I see the thrust of your comments, you are in effect saying that I should clarify whether I have made or intend to make a reflection on a minister of the Crown, and in that connection I would draw you attention to the fact that even if I were to make a reflection on a minister of the Crown—which I think I can satisfy you I will not be doing in the sense that it is an unparliamentary reflection—I would point out that only last Friday, March 27, you accepted two motions that I think could easily have been regarded as reflections on ministers of the Crown. I refer to proceedings under Standing Order 43 where the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway), as reported on page 8639 of Hansard, said:

> Madam Speaker, yesterday in the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development members of this House were subjected to a litany of examples of the complete and utter abrogation of the government's obligations to the Cree and Inuit under the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement. Given the devastating effect that this abrogation has had on the health of the Cree, and specifically in light of the fact that tuberculosis is rampant in at least one Cree village, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish):
> That the Minister of National Health and Welfare admit her residual responsibility for natives as outlined in Chapter 955 of the Indian health regulations under the Indian Act, and not withdraw health and social services to the Cree as is presently scheduled for March 31, 1981, until all commitments under the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement are fulfilled by both governments involved.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That was a substantive motion on which, had the House given its unanimous consent, it would have voted upon, and that is what I am telling the hon. member. If he has a charge to make against a minister, he can do it under a substantive motion.

Mr. Stevens: Well, Madam Speaker, my dilemma—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: I was referring you to the procedure which I understand, partly from Erskine May, I have to follow before I can put my substantive motion. Under my question of privilege, as I understand the references in Erskine May appearing on page 345 and others, I have to satisfy you of my prima facie case prior to—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member is not as confused as it appears. There are two things: if the hon. member wants to raise a question of privilege, then he has to satisfy me that there is a prima facie case. Now, I am telling the hon. member that from what I know of what he is about to do, he is about to cast a reflection upon the conduct of a minister, and because I have some doubts about that, I am asking the hon. member to be very specific now about what he wants to bring before the House. If it is a grievance, or if he wants to express an opinion about the conduct of a minister, he can do it under a substantive motion. The member does not have to explain to the Chair his substantive motion before he gives notice of it. He simply gives notice of it; then it will be debated and we can hear the hon. member on the subject of his substantive motion. What I am saying is that a substantive motion can be debated and voted upon, but a question of privilege is different and must be dealt with in a different manner.

● (2010)

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, my question of privilege affects every member of the House including myself. The question of privilege upon which I am attempting to make my prima facie case centres on the rather unique job which our Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), who in turn is also the Attorney General of Canada, must perform. Because of the way the Department of Justice Act is worded, it is a job which puts an extremely heavy onus upon the Attorney General of Canada to perform his function in a neutral manner in various capacities. One of those capacities happens to be his role to supply legal advice to the House of Commons.

The reason this is so significant is that when we refer to the various comments made by previous attorneys general, either in Canada or in the United Kingdom, we find that this duty or role of trying to be neutral and to give an independent, unchallengable advice to Parliament is a very, very important function.

For example, I refer to the functions of the attorney general of the United Kingdom. As I read into the record earlier, Section 5 of the Department of Justice Act makes the precedents of the United Kingdom applicable to the role of the Attorney General in Canada. I should like to refer to an article which was written by the Right Honourable Silkin, Q.C., MP, Attorney General for England. On page 154 of his article, he spoke about the English counterpart of the Attorney General of Canada. Mr. Silkin stated:

> As an officer of the House of Commons, the Attorney General is often asked and customarily undertakes to give legal advice to Parliament, and in that capacity to take part in debates and to attend before committees of the House. In giving legal advice he owes a special duty to the House, separate and apart from his duty to the Crown, and in these matters he occupies a different position from an ordinary minister of the Crown.

I am attempting to outline what the Department of Justice Act sets out are certain duties of the Minister of Justice, but in Section 5 it incorporates all the duties and obligations which fall on an attorney general, in this case the Attorney General of Canada. Specifically it refers to the precedents which exist in the United Kingdom.

We are in a situation where Parliament should feel free to call on the Attorney General of Canada for advice on what is relevant concerning parliamentary activities. For example, those activities touch on various matters of procedure. Mr. Silkin specifically said that they touch on the duty to the House, that is, the duty of the Attorney General of Canada to the House does not extend beyond the giving of legal advice in relation to the Constitution of and conduct of proceedings in the House, the conduct and discipline of members, and the effect of proposed legislation.

The problem before us is that in question period today, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) put certain questions to the Attorney General of Canada as to what was his attitude with regard to the legal status of the constitutional resolution before the House and which may be debated later this week or some time during April. The Attorney General said that essentially it was for this House of Commons to legislate and for the courts to adjudicate. In that answer, I felt, was confirmation of the notice I have given. My notice was based partly on what I had read about what the Attorney General of Canada did and said in the United Kingdom.

As I read what he did and said in the United Kingdom, I felt that he could no longer be held out as an impartial person who could be called upon to advise us on our legal rights as members of the House. In short, he seemed to take the role of an advocate in the United Kingdom, an advocate of the resolution he was hoping would be passed by this House and subsequently by Westminster. If that is so, we must think of the consequence.

As we read the various judgments which have already been rendered in the court of appeal of Manitoba, we can see the significance of what perhaps the Attorney General of Canada has done. For example, I draw Your Honour's attention to the opening sentence—this is not buried in the judgment—of Mr. Justice O'Sullivan in Winnipeg who stated that in this constitutional case, the submission of the Attorney General of Canada ends up in the proposition that a political party, if it forms the majority of both Houses of the Canadian Parliament, has the power to amend the Constitution of our country as it pleases.

Surely it is a question of privilege to be able to call the Attorney General of Canada before the appropriate committee to find out if his feeling is that any party having the majority of both Houses of the Canadian Parliament has the power to amend the Constitution of our country as it pleases. I say this remembering that the Attorney General of Canada, in effect, is an officer of the House of Commons. Among his functions, he is expected to advise us on the legal implications of whatever we are being asked to do.

I could go on to cite what Mr. Justice O'Sullivan mentioned as to what he feels may well be the illegal grounds which we are being asked to accept. He stated that by a non-legal convention the British Parliament is bound constitutionally, but not legally, to amend the Canadian Constitution in whatever way both Houses of the Canadian Parliament concur in requesting. I could mention the various instances where Mr. Justice O'Sullivan quoted the Attorney General of Canada as taking certain positions with respect to the question which may be before us later this week or during the month of April. I would like to put it succinctly, Madam Speaker. It is as simple as this. I, as a sitting Member of Parliament, and other Members of Parliament who have read the various judgments which have been rendered in the Manitoba Court of Appeal, are being told that it may be that the resolution we are being asked to pass is, in effect, illegal. We are told that we in this House are being asked to do something which invades or somehow detracts from the sovereignty of provinces and which is beyond our jurisdiction.

● (2020)

Surely it behooves every member of this House now that this matter, only within this week, has been referred to the Supreme Court of Canada and will be finally adjudicated starting on April 28, to seek out our own legal advice as to whether we are possibly doing something illegal if we continue not only to consider but eventually to pass the constitutional resolution the government has asked us to deal with. I say this because, as I indicated before, Madam Speaker, you will recall that prior to his trip to the United Kingdom the Attorney General of Canada, in a release which bore his name, put out a rebuttal of the Kershaw position in the United Kingdom, a decision of a committee on the Westminster House. When you read that item, Madam Speaker, you can see clearly that the so-called rebuttal is a stout defence of the government's or the Crown's position on this question. It is not a matter of a neutral Attorney General keeping his impartiality. He is an Attorney General who is indicating that he is more like the prosecutor or the advocate. He is the person advancing the case. That is why I feel I do have a prima facie case of privilege.

As far as the minister is concerned on this matter of whether or not I am unduly reflecting on the minister, I would point out that if I am reflecting on the minister, much worse language has been held to be parliamentary previously, much worse language touching on ministers. In that connnection, at page 12387 of Hansard for April 1, 1976, there was an exchange in this House in which the then member for Lévis stated:

> Mr. Speaker, we have the worst President of the Privy Council we have ever had.

That president of the privy council is no longer in this House, Madam Speaker. The former member for Lévis then rose and said:

> Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

He then changed his point of order into a question of privilege. He wanted to challenge that wording, and the Acting Speaker said:

> The hon. member probably did not like the words of the hon. member who has the floor but there is nothing unparliamentary in what he said.

To use the words of the then Acting Speaker, if there is nothing unparliamentary in saying that the president of the privy council was the worst that they had ever had, surely when we read my words we will see that they are extremely timid. To say that I am reflecting unduly on the minister and that you cannot hear me out, Madam Speaker, I think would be odd.

There is another case dealing with the subject that I have referred to. It appears extensively in Hansard, again in 1976. As far as this case is concerned, I can remember it well. I see certain members in this House, my colleague the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), my colleague the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the hon. member who now represents Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey)—I have forgotten the riding he represented at that time—

Mr. Comtois: Verdun.

Mr. Stevens: They all spoke on this case. At that time, as the sitting member for York-Simcoe, I was challenged for making a statement about members of the cabinet in general and indicating that they may have been involved in certain illegal activities and yet, in spite of being so involved, carrying on in power. There is a lengthy discussion in Hansard concerning what is a reflection on a minister. The arguments begin at page 11950 of Hansard for Friday, March 19, 1976. The ruling of Mr. Speaker Jerome is given on March 22, 1976, wherein he stated:

> In reply to a question of privilege raised by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), I indicated I would want some time to deliberate on the matter. The question arises from certain remarks made in the course of debate on Thursday evening of last week.

These were remarks made by myself, Madam Speaker.

> The basic rule of the House with respect to the procedure and practice in this regard can be found in Citation 140 of Beauchesne's. It is probably familiar to all hon. members, and it reads as follows:
> "The rule relating to personal reflections occurring in debate may be stated thus, namely: that it is doubly disorderly for any member, in speaking, to digress from the question before the House and to attack any other member by means of opprobrious language applied to his person and character or to his conduct, either in general, or on some particular occasion, intending to bring him into ridicule, contempt, or hatred with his fellow-members, or to create ill blood in the House."

With all due respect, I would like to say, in case there is any doubt, that my statement, and certainly the form of my proposed motion, if you find I have a prima facie case, would do none of those things that Mr. Speaker Jerome indicated. He did refer to the same Standing Order 35 that you have referred to, Your Honour. He then went on to deal with the question of this word "illegal", and finally he asked that I withdraw the word. I then said I would withdraw the word "illegal" and put in its place "improperly" or "wrongfully". As a result, I then stated: what administration at a senior level of government in Canada, other than this administration, would allow cabinet ministers who have acted improperly or wrongfully to carry on in their posts? At the conclusion of the question of privilege, as reported at page 12001 of Hansard, Mr. Speaker said the following:

> MR. SPEAKER: Order, please. I should like to thank the hon. member for York-Simcoe for his very important intervention and simply conclude the matter by indicating that, in the opinion of the Chair, in any event, whatever offensive language was used in the hon. member's intervention has now been rectified.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, in short, changing from the word "illegal" to the words "improperly" or "wrongfully" was sufficient, as far as Mr. Speaker Jerome was concerned, to satisfy him that I was not unduly reflecting on the minister who happened to be the president of the Privy Council at that time.

The present Attorney-General has demonstrated his lack of impartiality by, first, publication of the role of the United Kingdom in the amendment of the Canadian Constitution which presents the government's view on constitutional amendment. Second, he has demonstrated his lack of impartiality by his recent trip to the United Kingdom in that he argued the government's position. I could refer to the various newspaper articles which followed his trip to the United Kingdom. The various quotations which are attributed to the Attorney-General include one which appeared in The Globe and Mail on March 26, wherein he is reported to have stated:

> Of course, we can't do this with the agreement of all the provinces . . . But if they don't agree, the people of Canada can throw us out.

The minister is reported to have said the move is "a gamble—but that is democracy." He went on to say:

The British parliament is not "a rubber stamp," the text quickly added, but Westminster "understands that its role is to give legal effect . . . to the wishes of Canadians as expressed by a sovereign sister Parliament."

I could read into the record various other quotes which I think would show very definitively that the Attorney General, certainly when he was in England, spoke not like a neutral attorney general and not like a person who was, in effect, going to England saying that there are arguments on this side and there are arguments on that side. In short, unlike the attorney general of England—who, incidentally, is not even a member of their cabinet, because the office is put in that type of relationship to the government of the day—our own attorney general of Canada when in England was advocating the government's case.

● (2030)

My dilemma now—

An hon. Member: Shocking!

Mr. Stevens: My dilemma is: how can we members of this House turn now to that same Attorney General of Canada and say, "Do you feel that the resolution that the government has put before us is of such a nature that those judges in Winnipeg are perhaps right, and there are illegal aspects to what we are being asked to do?"

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: In the March 25 edition of the Ottawa Citizen, the Attorney General is quoted more definitively. He states:

Chrétien is in London today for a four-day visit in which he will put the federal government's case for patriation to British authorities.

As I have indicated, the act empowering our Minister of Justice as an ex-officio attorney general of Canada makes it clear that he must observe the precedents and the traditions, in other words, the rule of law which exists in England concerning the role of the attorney general.

An hon. Member: We are not in England.

Mr. Stevens: As I have often indicated, one of those very clear roles, is to operate as an officer of the House of Commons to give us impartial and free legal advice. I have referred to one article concerning the role of the attorney general in England. I would like to refer briefly to another article. This is the Cambridge Law Journal of 1969. It is from the office of the attorney general, written by the Right Hon. Sir Elwyn Jones, attorney general, in England. In that article, at page 50, Mr. Jones states:

—but the basic requirement of our constitution is that however much of a political animal he may be when he is dealing with political matters—

He is referring to the attorney general.

—must not allow political considerations to affect his actions in those matters in which he is to act in an impartial and even quasi-judicial way.

I notice that the hon. members on the government side are becoming a little more aroused as we go along. But perhaps—

An hon. Member: Sounds like Gilbert and Sullivan!

Mr. Stevens: Perhaps they will note what one of their former colleagues said in 1978 concerning the role of the Attorney General of Canada. I am referring to the then minister of justice, now the Hon. Ron Basford—

Mr. Crosbie: Gone to his reward.

Mr. Stevens: —who, speaking in this House on March 17, 1978, at page 3881 stated:

The first principle, in my view, is that there must be excluded any consideration based upon narrow, partisan views, or based upon the political consequences to me or to others.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stevens: Here was a former attorney general of Canada, who happened to be serving under the partisan Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) at that time, who was stating what he felt was the proper role for an attorney general in Canada. He went on to say:

In arriving at a decision on such a sensitive issue as this, the Attorney General is entitled to seek information and advice from others but in no way is he directed by his colleagues in the government or by parliament itself. That is not to say that the Attorney General is not accountable to Parliament for his decisions, which he obviously is.

The then attorney general went on to say, as reported at page 3882 of Hansard:

—the Attorney General should ensure . . . as a member of this House, he has responsibilities toward the rights, privileges, traditions and immunities so necessary for the proper functioning of Parliament;

That is the heart of my question of privilege. We have evidence before us, in the press, in what has been tabled in this House, in statements made in this House by the Attorney General of Canada as recently as today, which indicate that the present Attorney General of Canada is no longer an impartial officer of this House who is available to give us the legal advice that I would suggest we will need before we can proceed to consider the constitutional resolution before us.

An hon. Member: Completely compromised.

Mr. Crosbie: Completely partisan.

Mr. Stevens: I touch on those references because I hope it will bring the thrust of what I am saying into focus. Even more to the point, I would suggest that Parliament is being forced to act in a manner which has been declared illegal and unconstitutional by at least two justices in the province of Manitoba. Parliament should be able to ask the advice of the attorney general on the issue; but because he has compromised his position, he is no longer fit to render that advice. As he is unable to fulfil his responsibility to Parliament, the Attorney General should be requested to resign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: If I remind the House of some of the statements which have been made by Mr. Justice O'Sullivan as to the nature of the resolution before us, surely every member of this House of Commons will say that, rather than press on, we should secure proper legal advice. In his judgment, Mr. Justice O'Sullivan has made statements like this:

In my opinion it would be unconstitutional and illegal for her federal ministers, or for her federal parliamentarians, to give her advice in matters for which they are not responsible under our Constitution.

Mr. Justice O'Sullivan was referring to the advice that, in effect, this resolution would be coming to Her Majesty in the right of Canada.

Madam Speaker: I am afraid the hon. member is going into the point of order which was put forward by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) on which I said that I would rule later. I would ask him not to refer to the matter which was raised by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition but, if he can, to conclude his argumentation for his question of privilege.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I am well aware of your earlier ruling today concerning the point of order raised by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition; but I am just giving illustrations of the type of point on which we members of Parliament should normally call upon our attorney general to advise us, because here we have a situation where two judges in the Manitoba court of appeal have made certain statements. That entire appeal is now before the Supreme Court of Canada. As we want to know what course to follow in this House, I think it is relevant that we know what the Supreme Court of Canada may subsequently hold, should we continue with our course of action of considering the constitutional resolution, dealing with it and even passing it.

● (2040)

For example, at another point, Mr. Justice O'Sullivan stated, "It is constitutionally incompetent and illegal—."

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is discussing the point of order brought up by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. We cannot discuss it anymore. It is under advisement and I shall rule on it later. Those examples should not be referred to, first of all, because the question is under advisement, and, second, I thought the hon. member had a new question of privilege which I am trying to understand. It would be helpful if he kept to that question of privilege so that I may rule upon it.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, if I may, I should like to have taken as read the various references I might have read into the record concerning the judgments in the Manitoba Court of Appeal. I indicated to you in my letter that my position is that I believe the Attorney General has compromised his position. I would sum up simply by saying that if you—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I did not realize I was so popular with members of the government!

Mr. Chénier: Stick to banking.

Mr. Stevens: If I am that popular, I can always continue.

An hon. Member: No, sum up.

Mr. Stevens: I know that some of my colleagues want to speak on the—

An hon. Member: On the Constitution.

Mr. Stevens: —the question of privilege that I have raised. If I may, I should like to once again emphasize that if you feel I have a question of privilege and if you feel that I have made a case that the Attorney General of Canada who should have this impartial neutrality—

Mr. Nielsen: He is so impartial, he is not even here.

Mr. Stevens: —I could read to you various quotations from Professor Edwards in a booklet he prepared for the McDonald commission setting out the clear role of the Attorney General in Canada and how he has this rather unique role as adviser to Parliament. I could read those sections into the record, but I know we want to get on with the business of the House. In summary, if you find that I have a prima facie case, I would propose to move:

That the increasing tendency of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada to act in a manner incompatible with the separate requirements and traditions of each of his two portfolios, and the continued inability of the House to obtain independent legal advice from the Attorney General in keeping with the proper constitutional place of that officer of the Crown, as set out in the Department of Justice Act and in particular Section 5 thereof, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Madam Speaker: As I understand the grievance of the hon. member—

Mr. Nielsen: Not a grievance.

Madam Speaker: —the question of privilege which the hon. member has just exposed, he feels that the legal advice on the resolution of the Constitution given by the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada was not impartial. Whether it was or was not—

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, I have a point of order.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I do not take my orders from the hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. Nielsen: He has a right to be heard.

Mr. Crosbie: Before you make a ruling, I have a submission to make on the same point. This is a very important point and a very important subject dealing with the competence of the Attorney General of Canada. I have some further evidence that I should like to present to Your Honour before you make your ruling.

An hon. Member: Where did you get it, South Africa?

Madam Speaker: I take that representation very seriously but, as I said before, when the first speaker does not convince me that there is a prima facie case of privilege, I have the tendency not to listen to a second one.

Mr. Crosbie: Maybe I would be more persuasive, Madam Speaker.

An hon. Member: Impossible!

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Madam Speaker: I do not doubt that the hon. member could be—

Mr. Crosbie: I wonder, Madam Speaker, could you give me a try?

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether that advice was partial or impartial, surely the hon. member for York-Peel does not expect the Chair to adjudicate that. That is not a matter on which the Chair can make any kind of pronouncement at all.

He also contends that the rebuttal which was tabled in the House by the minister, the Kershaw report, was one-sided. That might be, but am I to judge that document? I will not even say whether it is normal or not that a minister of the Crown, wanting to defend the position of the government, is quite legitimately capable of expressing an opinion in this House.

When and if we discuss the resolution, I am sure the hon. member will be able to give his own opinion about the Kershaw report. That is normal debate in the House of Commons and, therefore, I do not think the fact that that document, in the opinion of the hon. member, is one-sided, constitutes a reason for me to see a prima facie case of privilege.

He says that his words are mild compared to other words, when I cautioned him not to cast any kind of reflection on members of the House, and he quoted some other words which were not judged unparliamentary but he was speaking in terms of unparliamentary language. He says his words were rather mild.

I want to remind the hon. member that he can express opinions in this House, even very strongly, so long as he does so in parliamentary language. Opinions may be expressed, but if the hon. member wants the House to judge the action or the conduct of a minister in the House, the only way he can achieve that is by bringing forward a motion on which the House will pronounce itself. If the hon. member wants the House to judge what the hon. Minister of Justice has done in regard to advice he has given concerning the resolution on the Constitution, he would have to do it in another way.

The hon. member quoted the requirements of the office of the attorney general in the United Kingdom. He quoted some documents from the United Kingdom describing what the requirements of the attorney general are. I believe that the quotations referred to legal advice which the attorney general would give about a prosecution. If he were giving advice about a prosecution, he would have to be impartial and conform with all the requirements which the hon. member referred to in this document.

This is really not grounds for a question of privilege, and I did not find, in the argumentation brought forward by the hon. member, which he made very carefully and to which I listened very carefully, that there is a question of privilege in this particular case.

I have another question of privilege in the name of the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm).

MR. DOMM—ALLEGED MISREPRESENTATION OF FACTS BY EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF METRIC COMMISSION OF CANADA

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I delivered to your office this morning before the hour of one o'clock, two letters on two questions of privilege which I wish to bring up. I will bring up one now dealing with the matter of the executive director of the Metric Commission of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2050)

Mr. Domm: If you should find that I have a prima facie case, I should like to move:

That the actions of the executive director of the Metric Commission, Mr. P. C. Boire, have obstructed me in the discharge of my responsibilities and that his actions be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

I will endeavour to show you this evening, in as few words as possible, how the executive director has clearly overstepped the mark of propriety. He has hampered me in my ability as a Member of Parliament to function in a responsible manner. He has attempted to create an atmosphere of fear and thus created a climate of mistrust. This situation has made it very difficult for me as a Member of Parliament to pursue my responsibilities, not only to this House, but to my constituents. I cannot point out as a member of the opposition exactly what we are getting into through this dictatorial attitude of harassment on the part of the executive director of the Metric Commission.

I will be quoting from Beauchesne, Erskine May and other precedents to indicate to you why the situation deserves reference to the privileges and elections committee. If I had been the first to raise this matter of harassment, I would have some reservations about doing so when we are dealing with something as important as the Constitution of Canada. However, in the Friday, January 23, edition of the Ottawa Citizen, it was pointed out that the Professional Institute of Public Servants laid a charge of harassment against the executive director of the Metric Commission. At the time I passed over this, waiting for a decision to be made through the proper channels, which I am sure are being followed. I then found the same thing was happening to me as a Member of Parliament in the carrying out of my responsibilities and presenting the other side of this forced march to metric being experienced in Canada.

Before quoting from Beauchesne, I wish to place on the record and for your consideration exactly what happened in the last 30 days which causes me to appeal to the Chair for consideration in reviewing this matter.

I was invited to appear on the Jack Webster show in British Columbia on February 10. I was asked questions by phone-in listeners and was interviewed by the MC. I dealt with the matter of the Metric Commission and its attitude with regard to the implementation in the retail food sector. It was not enough that I appeared on that show to answer questions and to present evidence, but on returning here—

Madam Speaker: Order. I would like the hon. member to state his questions of privilege. Up until now he has been debating. He is probably not very happy with the application by the Metric Commission. That is a matter for debate in the House, not a question of privilege. The hon. member will have to indicate to me very soon where his question of privilege lies.

Mr. Domm: The prima facie case I wish to make deals with this 33-page document put out to discredit a Member of Parliament by the executive director of Metric Canada. It is the method by which this document has been entered into the records to which I take objection. I feel it is a discredit to the executive director, endangers my position, hampers my ability and discredits a Member of Parliament. If that is not a question of privilege, then I beg you to bear with me as I point out some of the concerns.

It is the responsibility of a Member of Parliament to interpret matters as he or she sees them. It is not the responsibility of a senior bureaucrat to throw harassment in the face of debate. I object to the way in which this was done.

The executive director of the Metric Commission, who comes under the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, produced a 33-page transcript, purchased a tape from the Jack Webster show at a cost of $425, called in the staff of the Metric Commission to a closed meeting, to which I was not invited or of which I was not advised, and reviewed with them false statements and facts with regard to the implementation of metric. He brainwashed those people in the Metric Commission with regard to what is going on and discredited a Member of Parliament with regard to his duties and responsibilities to interpret legislation and regulations.

I wish to read into the record from the statement of the Professional Institute of Public Servants, which appeared in the January 23 edition of the Ottawa Citizen, in support of my prima facie case of privilege affecting my responsibilities as a member of Parliament. It not only affects every member of this House but it affects also the civil service through union action by their leaders because of intimidation and harassment by the executive director of the Metric Commission.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member need not read these quotations unless he is talking about something related to the proceedings in the House. A question of privilege does not cover the kind of grievance the hon. member is now airing before the House—definitely not. There is nothing to indicate a question of privilege in anything the hon. member has said up until now. I will now not allow him to quote at length from documents he has not yet identified. The Chair is unable to know what document he is talking about or indeed what documents appear to be a harassment and impede him in his function as a Member of Parliament. The hon. member must relate to what constitutes a question of privilege. A question of privilege cannot be used to air differences of opinions or grievances about the way the government conducts its business. There are other occasions to to do that through other proceedings in the House. A question of privilege is not one of them.

Mr. Domm: I will move on and refer the Chair to Erskine May, page 147, where the following is stated:

> Acts tending indirectly to obstruct members in the discharge of their duty.
>
> Conduct not amounting to a direct attempt to influence a Member in the discharge of his duties, but having a tendency to impair his independence in the future performance of his duty, will also be treated as a breach of privilege.
> —Molestation of Members on Account of Their Conduct in Parliament—It is a breach of privilege to molest any member of either House on account of his conduct in Parliament.

Madam Speaker: Order. Has the hon. member been molested or prevented in any way? The hon. member has to make that argument, otherwise it takes ten or 15 minutes before we know whether there is a foundation for a question of privilege. Hon. members must go directly to the core of the matter. I know these quotations from Erskine May and I can refer to them when making a judgment on a question of privilege. They need not be read into the record at this particular time.

● (2100)

Mr. Domm: With all due respect, Madam Speaker, it says in here at page 147:

> Sending insulting letters to members in reference to their conduct in Parliament or letters reflecting on their conduct as such members—

If that is in fact an obstruction of a member's duties, then I must ask the Speaker of the House whether she will not consider these points prior to referring specifically to the statements that have been made. I am trying to give some of the background and reasoning. I would go to page 13, Citation 22 of Beauchesne, which states:

> The power of the House to enforce its rules extends not only to Members and others admitted within the precincts of Parliament, but also to members of the general public who may interfere with the orderly conduct of parliamentary business.

I would like to inject here another passage from the proceedings in a case of "Breach of Privilege and Contempts" at page 148:

> "Written imputations, as affecting a Member of Parliament, may amount to breach of privilege, without, perhaps, being libels at common law" (b), but to constitute a breach of privilege of libel upon a member must concern the character or conduct of the member in that capacity—

Madam Speaker: Would the hon. member tell us what edition he is reading from because we cannot find the references to which he is referring?

Mr. Domm: It is in respect of "Breaches of Privilege and Contempts" at page 148 of Beauchesne. It is in that part dealing with "Complaints Against Strangers Founded Upon Documents." It is at page 159 and is "Proceedings in Case of Contempt."

Madam Speaker: I thought the hon. member was reading from Erskine May. He is now suggesting he is quoting from Beauchesne. If it is Erskine May, which I think it is because the pages given to me do not relate at all to Beauchesne, will he tell us what edition, because even there it is difficult for us to find.

Mr. Domm: I apologize, Madam Speaker. I am referring to pages 147, 148 and 159 of Erskine May, nineteenth edition.

Madam Speaker: It is edition eighteen, not nineteen.

Mr. Domm: At page 159 it states:

When complaint is made of something published in a newspaper or book, a copy of the newspaper or book, and when complaint is made of a letter sent to a member, the original of the letter said to have been written, must be delivered in at the table—

I am presenting that now as evidence and I will give you examples from this article, letter or document which clearly reflect a question of privilege and a move of harassment against a Member of Parliament.

In this particular document entitled "Bill Domm/Jack Webster Interview February 10, 1981" printed by the Metric Commission of Canada comprising 33 pages I will refer to four instances which I consider clear and simple harassment, misrepresentation of the facts by the executive director of the Metric Commission in an effort to discredit disparagingly the remarks of a Member of Parliament made in the performance of his duty as a Member of Parliament.

On the Jack Webster show I made this statement and it is quoted in here according to the executive director:

He went into a creative study for one year in which they would look at the implementations of metric and the ratifications of it. The net result of that study was that we weren't ready to proceed.

That was my statement. The Metric Commission responded to that statement by saying:

They indicate that the majority of Canadians understand metric units and the desirability of the objectives, and accept the use of the International System of Units in their daily lives.

That is not true. There are ample indications that he is misleading the people and is refuting a statement I made that is fact based on a test centre in Peterborough. There are ample surveys to indicate that my information is true while his is not, and this is an effort to discredit a Member of Parliament.

It is not bad enough that he takes this upon himself in his capacity as a senior bureaucrat, discrediting a Member of Parliament, the seriousness of this is that he does it behind closed doors with civil servants who have already charged him with harassment, as I referred to earlier in my remarks, namely, the Professional Institute of the Public Service. The staff is angry with him, Members of Parliament are angry with him and he is clearly and simply harassing us in our responsibility as we try to interpret what this Metric Commission is doing.

The second area in which he has clearly and plainly harassed a Member of Parliament is to be found in these words:

—whereas in Peterborough all but three (67 out of 70) stores converted back to selling by the pound.

In other words, he is saying there are three stores in Peterborough which are still using metric. That is not true.

These are the facts. In my riding of Peterborough I do not know of one store that does not show the price per pound of the food they sell, and I invite and challenge the Metric Commission and its executive director to inform me of the names of those three stores which do not print on the wall the price per pound of every pound or ounce of meat or goods they sell.

At page 8 of this same document it proceeds to harass and discredit, a Member of Parliament throwing a disparaging light on him. We find this statement made by the Metric Commission to this closed group:

—Statute Law (Metric Conversion) Amendment Act, 1976 . . . was debated in Parliament over a period of nine months,

That is what it says in answer to my statement that metric is being forced on the people of Canada through order in council. My answer to that was that:

This is a particularly gratuitous example of the MCC distorting the statutory and regulatory basis for enforced conversion.

It gives the impression that Parliament debated the bill exclusively for nine months—

That is not true.

At page 9 of this same document we find another statement. I might add that the Metric Commission engaged a lawyer at $250 a day for seven days to come up with these brilliant answers. The Metric Commission says that a Dominion Stores' survey in Peterborough in January, 1980, showed that some negative attitudes prevailed. A Steinberg survey in Sherbrooke revealed a different position. In a way, the Metric Commission said, it would appear that the surveys and stores' interpretation of the results may have reflected the attitudes of the stores at that time rather than the customers' attitudes.

● (2110)

The truth of the matter is that the Metric Commission of Canada has also been particularly keen on maintaining that scale conversion is a program which will be instituted in close co-operation with the retail food industry, the very sector it condemns in this attempt to mitigate the adverse results of the Dominion and Steinberg surveys.

On the same page, page 9, the Metric Commission says:

Of the top thousand . . . manufacturing companies in that country, more than 60 per cent are converting to the metric system.

That is, 60 per cent of the major companies in Canada are converting to metric. The truthful answer to that is that 60 per cent of the top 1,000 companies in the United States are not converting completely to metric. A report of February 6, 1981, said that American industry is not exactly rushing to convert to the metric system. In fact, only half of the industrial buyers surveyed reported any of their dollars going toward metrication. One respondent, according to an industrial publication, summed it up as follows:

There is no need for metrication for products made and sold in the United States. This is being shoved down the throats of most Americans.

Those are the facts in the United States. In addition to that, the metric commission in the United States has advised the U.S. Congress that it should not proceed with metric in the retail food sector for at least ten years and maybe never. That is the fact, not the propaganda being spread by the executive director of the Canadian Metric Commission.

On page 18 of this same report which I am tabling in the House, the Metric Commission says:

Perhaps a look at a Buick Skylark, and Oldsmobile Omega, a Chevrolet Citation or Chevette, and their owner manuals will help to convince you that there may be some value in boning up or catching up on metric units.

That is not true. That is misleading. I drive a Buick, a General Motors product. It is a 1980 model, and I can tell on the speedometer how many miles an hour I am going down the highway. I defy the Metric Commission to move into General Motors at Oshawa and tell them that they cannot put miles per hour on speedometers the way it will try to tell the retail merchants in Canada when this act comes into place. That is clearly misleading.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Domm: In my performance as a Member of Parliament, I do not need to be told to bone up or catch up on metric implementation. I defy the executive director, Mr. Boire, of the Metric Commission, to take a trip to Peterborough and to ask the retail merchants there if they are overwhelmingly in support and ready to accept forced metric in the retail food stores. They are not. This document is a waste of taxpayers' money, as is the $45 million which has been spent by the Metric Commission.

To give further examples of harassment by the executive director of the Metric Commission in this report behind closed doors I would like to refer this House to page 21 of this document. I have copies available for any hon. member in this House and I would be pleased to supply them. I said the following on the Jack Webster show:

—what Peterborough has done they have gone back to imperial 100 per cent.

What does the Metric Commission do with its $250 a day lawyer who has studied this matter in great detail? He said:

MCC has been advised that there are still three stores in Peterborough which continue to sell by the kilogram.

The reason they sell in kilograms is that they cannot afford to buy imperial weigh scales because they were forced to buy metric weigh scales. They have to use them because they cannot afford $4,000 to buy imperial weigh scales. That is why they are still doing it.

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member realizes that he is debating now. He was doing very well in trying to convince me that he had a prima facie case when finally he identified the document and began to say what in the document constituted a breach of his privilege and in what way his reputation or his ability to function as a Member of Parliament had been affected by that document. If he could keep to that type of argument and not debate the fundamental question of metric conversion, which is a matter for debate in the House, and if he can continue to make that distinction, I will be able to listen to him, although I am inclined to look at his question of privilege in the light of the document. I have not seen it yet, but I will see it later on. Perhaps he could try to conclude. I think that would be helpful to the House.

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, I apologize for getting carried away in the heat of the moment. Going back to page 21, being very specific and reading word for word, the Metric Commission said:

MCC has been advised that there are still three stores in Peterborough which continue to sell by the kilogram.

My answer to that is that, to my knowledge, only one store in Peterborough continues to weigh in kilograms, but the fact is that not one store in the city of Peterborough displays signs in metric. There might be small print so that they can figure out the weigh scale, but in merchandising and on the signs on the wall they definitely use imperial measuring units.

On page 22 of this document of harassment, I said the following on the Jack Webster show:

More on the idea now of trying to develop some industrial strategy that will bring about some jobs.

The Metric Commission says this:

Metric conversion is an industrial strategy that is helping to create new jobs and to maintain those Canadians now have.

It has never created one productive job. It has never done one thing which could not be done in imperial weights and measures with less cost to government. My answer is that the Metric Commission of Canada has been at pains in other parts of this document to point out that theirs is only an advisory and a co-ordinating function which relies heavily on volunteers from industry. Nowhere does it say itself, nor is it said anywhere on its behalf, that it is involved in promulgating an industrial strategy. If the commission is in fact involved in such an operation, I suggest that a review of its mandate is in order. In addition, I defy the Metric Commission to produce a single job, apart from its own, which has been created as a result of metric conversion.

I hope Your Honour will refer this to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. I would like to read a letter Mr. Boire sent me as a Member of Parliament after I had sent him two letters asking for a copy of the videotape he purchased for some $425 from the Jack Webster show. That show normally does not supply these tapes. I tried to get one and could not. I did not have $425, but obviously the Metric Commission does.

An hon. Member: The taxpayers do.

Mr. Domm: The taxpayers do. After I had sent two letters to the Metric Commission and a message by courrier service to Mr. Boire personally, he sent the tape over for my observation. He also sent the document I have in my hand. This 33-page document has travelled coast to coast. I had a conversation today with the people who attended the meeting in Vancouver this past weekend, the retail trades sector of the Metric Commission, I was in conversation with a member of the voluntary group of this working retail trade sector of the Metric Commission. Just tonight I learned, as best I can recall, that he was advised by the Metric Commission that I had a poor researcher and that the information I was spreading across Canada about this forced march to metric in the retail food sector was improperly researched and inaccurately accounted. If this is travelling to Vancouver, then in my opinion it is clearly and simply a question of privilege. Can a senior bureaucrat in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce go about his function, with the bureaucracy he has around him and with a $6.5 million annual budget, discrediting a Member of Parliament?

Let me read the letter he wrote to me. It reads as follows:

I regret that I was not able to respond to your request of 1981-02-07 before now. Since your original request was received, the MCC Information staff members have been preparing a detailed commentary on your remarks in order to assist you—

This is the executive director of the Metric Commission telling me that he is going to assist me in being as factual as possible in my future interviews across Canada. As Speaker of this House, you must give serious consideration to my question of privilege.

● (2120)

There is a prepared brief, and I am tabling it for your information, entitled, "Public Service Union Requests Probe of Harassment by the Executive Director of the Metric Commission." Harassment of the professional institute. I will just read one paragraph:

Boire organizes an annual two day staff meeting at the RA Centre. Consists of officers from the four directorates and admin. services—includes CO's. information officers and admin. officer (A.S.). About 40 attend. There is simultaneous translation, free booze one evening. Simultaneous translation alone cost $2,000 though none of the staff asked for it. Boire organizes and orchestrates the whole show, although he states that staff do it. Boire picks the venue, the date, the subject matter to be discussed.

It must be obvious to everyone here that we have the professional institute laying a charge of harassment. We have clearly and precisely demonstrated tonight that I have been harassed in my area of responsibility as I scrutinized the Metric Commission and the regulations through statements made on the Jack Webster show. It is obvious to this House that precedents have been set for consideration of a privilege where written documents have clearly shown that a member's function has been curtailed or hampered, and the executive director of the Metric Commission is clearly and simply creating an atmosphere of distrust in Members of Parliament through his actions. It is bad enough that we have to fight these things by appealing to the compassion of the Chair, but it is really sad that Industry, Trade and Commerce will set up a bureaucracy and spend between $6 and $8 million a year to expound on the virtues of metric, and then spend X-thousands of dollars to discredit a Member of Parliament as he tries to delve into the justification for forced metric conversion in the retail food sector.

I really feel that if the opportunity were given to each Member of Parliament to properly represent his constituents in the various areas of Canada, whether in the agricultural, business or industrial communities, I think we would be better off if we did not have a Metric Commission. If we have to have one, it could be on a voluntary basis, truly representative of the people's concerns as they march toward forced implementation of metric conversion in the retail food sector.

I do not wish to debate at this time the pros and cons of metric conversion. I am debating the privileges of a Member of Parliament, and I appeal to the Chair to refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections so that I can debate this subject there and present far greater evidence than I have tonight. I could have read the whole 33 pages, but I thought seven of the items in question would be enough so that you would graciously rule there is a prima facie case of privilege and you would refer it to the committee as quickly as possible.

So I would like to move that the actions of the executive director of the Metric Commission, Mr. P. C. Boire, which actions have obstructed me in the discharge of my responsibility, be referred to the committee so that we can show the facts of the case in more detail.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member has quoted extensively from a document which I am sure would be very helpful if he would leave it with me. I will want to look at his argument in light of that document, and I will take his question of privilege under advisement.

Now, we have a second question of privilege from the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm).

MR. DOMM—RELOCATION OF PARKS CANADA OFFICE—ALLEGED MISREPRESENTATION OF FACTS BY MINISTER OF THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I am sure this will take far less time because it is far easier to get to the point on this question of privilege because your rulings have led me to where I am tonight after almost one year of frustration in trying to deal with statements in this House by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) and his parliamentary secretary. If you will bear with me, I will go back to the statement that was made in this House by the hon. member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons), which caused you to rule later on a question of privilege, that if I wished to pursue this matter of the Parks Canada move from Peterborough back to Cornwall, I had ample opportunity to do that. On page 1014 of Hansard of May 13, 1980, Madam Speaker, you said:

The hon. member, if he is still not satisfied with the explanation that he has received, might, for instance, put a notice of motion on the order paper . . . There are also procedures to obtain those documents, under certain conditions, of course. But if those conditions are met and the minister is capable of tabling those documents, I suppose that they could be obtained through the normal procedure.

I followed all your recommendations, starting first on May 12, 1980, when the hon. member for Burin-St. George's said:

—it was the administration of which he was a part—

"He" being myself when we were in government:

—which deferred the move for ten whole months—ten painful months for the people of Canada?

That was the first statement by the hon. member for Burin-St. George's that I challenged through a question of privilege in this House. On May 13, 1980, at page 1012, the hon. member for Burin-St. George's said:

The hon. member quotes me correctly. It is my understanding based on information that was given to me—I was not here at the time as hon. members are aware.

● (2130)

Also the hon. member for Burin-St. George's said:

I am saying to the hon. member for Peterborough that he did quote me correctly. The hon. member reads Hansard well. The statements which I made last night were made on the basis of information with which I have been supplied. I would be pleased to make that information available to the hon. member and, in so far as I know at this moment in time, the information is correct. It was given to me by senior departmental officials—

That is the key, Madam Speaker. He continued:

—and until I have been shown otherwise I will stand by that information.

I questioned that information, and Madam Speaker's ruling was that I had a course open to me—I could ask for the production of documents. I did that, and then on November 25, 1980, as reported at page 5081 of Hansard, the hon. member for Burin-St. George's said:

—I made no commitment to him.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am just warning the hon. member that he might talk himself out of a question of privilege. A question of privilege and the facts relating to it must be brought to the attention of the House on the earliest possible occasion. The hon. member is referring to matters which took place on May 12, 1980, and on May 13, 1980, which is a long time ago. If the hon. member has been aggrieved by any of these occurrences, he should have brought them before the House much earlier.

If he continues to go back into history, he will have talked himself out of his question of privilege. I urge him to come closer to the event which aggrieves him so that I can understand his question of privilege.

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, I will bring you right up to February, 1981. I need to give the background information in order to give the facts on the question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: No, no. The hon. member should state now, quite clearly, his question of privilege, to what particular circumstances he attaches it and then, if he wants, in the course of his argument he can make some other references to earlier events. Then perhaps I could entertain it. But just now he must come directly to the question of privilege.

Mr. Domm: If Madam Speaker feels I have a prima facie question of privilege, I would move that this Parliament has been misled by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) in the production of documents under Order No. 27 of November 20, 1980, at which time at your suggestion I called for the production of papers which were offered to me by the hon. member for Burin-St. George's to prove his point. At your suggestion, I called for the production of papers because he volunteered those, if required.

I called for the production of papers. Finally the Minister of the Environment answered that call this year. I feel I have a question of privilege because in the production of the documents to substantiate the statements of the hon. member for Burin-St. George's, they produced the speech of the hon. member for Burin-St. George's but no confirmation of any senior official or no direction from any of the deputy assistants of the Department of the Environment. It was just a copy of his speech in the late show debate. I feel this House was misled when they produced documents which were not what was called for and what they were committed to produce.

I refer to page 178, the fourth paragraph of Citation 212 of Beauchesne's fourth edition wherein it reads:

The addition of particulars to a return, not specified in the order of the House of Commons, has been ruled by Mr. Speaker to be an irregularity.

When they produced a document to substantiate the claim that it was the Conservative government of the day which deferred the move of Parks Canada, when in reality it was the present government which deferred the move, they produce a false document. The document does not give any substantiating evidence whatsoever to the fact that it was the Conservative government which deferred the move of Parks Canada.

I have the announcement of the Conservative government which clearly indicated that the hon. member for Peterborough announced, on behalf of the then minister responsible for Parks Canada, the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), that the Ontario regional office of Parks Canada would be moved to Peterborough during the summer of 1980.

For the hon. member for Burin-St. George's to say that it was our government which deferred the move and that it was their government which took action is truly false. The Minister of the Environment undertook to produce a document to substantiate that, but it in no way substantiates it.

Order No. 27 reads as follows:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence, notes, transcripts and all other communications exchanged between the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment and senior departmental officials cited by the Parliamentary Secretary in the House on May 13, 1980—

The wrong document was produced. It is not the right information; it does not substantiate the statement. Your Honour suggested guidelines for members of the opposition to follow, that if they have an argument following a question in the House, they should bring up the matter in the late show debate, which I did. Your Honour suggested also that if members have a question in the late show debate and do not get satisfaction, they should call for the production of documents, which I did. The government produced documents which have no relationship whatsoever to the facts they are committed to produce. There was a commitment to the House on November 20, 1980. After several months, they produced the speech in the late night debate of the hon. member for Burin-St. George's. The Minister of the Environment abrogated his responsibilities. He was prepared to take the instructions of the House and produce the documents as requested by the hon. member for Peterborough. So, a year and a half later hundreds of hours have been wasted on this subject. There is a clear indication in Hansard; it has been falsely documented for a year by members of the government that it was our government, when it was in power, that deferred the move. This is a gross error; it needs to be corrected.

I ask, on a question of privilege, for this entire matter to be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, so that we can again open the door on the whole issue of the Parks Canada move which I have claimed from the beginning is crass, political pork-barrelling. It should never have occurred. It is another Eldorado Nuclear; it is a de Havilland Dash-8; it is a shame, it is a disgrace, and it is a clear question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fraser: I rise on the same question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: Later, later. Well, I want to speak on that now. I think that is precisely what the hon. member is doing; he is opening up the whole debate to which he is referring. From what I can see, the documents were produced on February 6, 1980, which is quite a while ago. Questions of privilege should be raised at the earliest possible opportunity. The reason for that is: if there is a question of privilege, the House could not function without having dealt with it. The hon. member has waited since November 6 until now, so I think in that itself there is some indication that there was not a real question of privilege.

The question of privilege which he described flows from a return to an order of the House which called for all correspondence, notes, transcripts and other communications. Documents were tabled, as was requested in that order, but the hon. member is not satisfied with the documents he received. It is not for me to judge whether or not the documentation given to the hon. member is complete. If the hon. member has proof that the documentation is not complete, and that there are other documents which have been voluntarily withheld by the minister in this particular case, he should have invoked that and given me an indication of the documents which have not been tabled; but he has not done this. I feel that the hon. member does not have a prima facie case of privilege.

• (2140)

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, on the same question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: It must be made quite clear that the hon. member has risen twice now saying that he wanted to speak on the question of privilege. If he wants to rise on a point of order, that is quite in order. I must warn him that he must not comment on the question of privilege which has just been raised.

Mr. Fraser: I say this with the greatest respect, Madam Speaker. My point of order is that the hon. member made it very clear that in answer to the production of documents, he did not receive any documents—

Some hon. Members: That is not true!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member did say that he received a document. He did not indicate to me that he knew of other documents which had been withheld. There is no question of privilege there. The hon. member did not indicate that he felt that some documents had been withheld voluntarily by the minister and that he had been frustrated in his desire to obtain all the documents that exist with respect to this particular issue. The question of privilege has been dealt with, it is over. I cannot come back to these arguments.

The hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) has a question of privilege as well.

MR. SPEYER—TEXTILE AND CLOTHING BOARD INQUIRY—QUESTION PRE-EMPTED BY GOVERNMENT MEMBER

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege deals with a set of circumstances which culminated in question period today. I would like to ask for your patience so that I may outline the importance of the question of privilege which I wish to bring to your attention.

On August 31, 1979, pursuant to section 19 of the Textile and Clothing Board Act, Madam Speaker, the Textile and Clothing Board embarked upon an inquiry which was tabled in this House on June 30, 1980. That dealt with the inquiry regarding the effects of imports on the textile and clothing producers in Canada and upon employment in that industry.

There have been many questions raised in this House with respect to this issue, the latest being a question on February 24 put by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). Recently there have been motions moved under Standing Order 43 with respect to this matter. The importance of it is highlighted in one of the recommendations in the report. That recommendation is that in the first instance the government should announce its decision no later than March 31, 1981, with respect to the recommendations of this report. Obviously, we are now at March 30, and I now wish to pose certain questions concerning the recommendations of the Board of Textile and Clothing inquiry.

This morning I learned that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) would not be in the House today. There are 500,000 Canadians who are employed either directly or indirectly in the textile and clothing industry. Over 2,500 of them are employed in my riding. As a result of this, I phoned the minister's office and made his assistant, Mr. Kerr, aware of the fact that I was going to pose a question with respect to when the government's position with respect to the report would be made available to the people of Canada. Second, I was going to ask a question with respect to the government's position on this important matter. As a result of that, I specifically told Mr. Kerr of the minister's office exactly what my questions would be. I asked him to notify the acting minister, so that he would not be caught unawares. I see many ministers in the House tonight. I say that I wanted to honour a tradition in this House, it being that you should give notice to a minister, who is an acting minister, so that he may be made aware of the nature of the inquiries you intend to pose.

This afternoon it transpired that when I tried to be recognized—and you know from your list, Madam Speaker, that I tried both on Friday and today—I was pre-empted in my question by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier) who asked precisely the question that I was about to ask and of which I had given notice to the minister.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speyer: As I said, there are certain traditions that are honoured in order that this House functions. There are certain confidentialities that ought to have been honoured. My assertion to you, Madam Speaker, and the basis upon which I bring my question of privilege, is that my statement to Mr. Kerr this afternoon stating precisely what my questions to the minister would be, was repeated to the hon. member for Sherbrooke, whereupon he pre-empted me, although I had notified the government of the questions I would be posing this afternoon.

I say to you, Madam Speaker, if we do call members "honourable members", where is the honour when a minister or a member of his staff advises another member of the government where he can pre-empt the person who gave notice? Is there no shame on the other side when notice of a question is given and someone asks another member to ask the question, thereby pre-empting us? In my respectful submission there is an implied breach of confidence, Your Honour. There is a breach of tradition. I suggest to you that if you find a prima facie case on this important matter, I will put forward the appropriate motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I have referred to my list for this afternoon, because I was wondering if, in fact, the hon. member had not asked a question. I see that his name has not been crossed out on my list. I distinctly remember that I put his name on the list quite early in the question period and then he left the House. I came to him and I looked—

Mr. Speyer: That was after.

Madam Speaker: I looked at the hon. member's seat, since his turn had come, according to my list, and he was not in the House. After that it was too late. I had gone on to other hon. members. That is why he was not recognized. At any rate, that is not important. I am just giving the hon. member an explanation because I did wonder whether he did have a chance to ask a question this afternoon. I can see from my list that he did not. I try to go from one side of the House to the other during the question period. At any rate, I cannot see where there is a question of privilege that I can judge. If a minister or other member tipped off another member about a question that the hon. member for Cambridge thought he would ask, it is not a matter that the Chair can rule upon. I do not know ahead of time what the question will be. The hon. member will have noted that I recognized a Liberal member at about the same point I usually do. That member happened to be the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier). I remember that quite distinctly.

There is no question of privilege in the hon. member's question this evening.

The hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt).

POINT OF ORDER

MR. COSSITT—UNPARLIAMENTARY REMARK BY AN HON. MEMBER

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, I would like to raise a point of order. This is the first opportunity I have had to do so since the matter occurred last Friday. In doing so I would like to refer to page 8711 of Hansard for March 27, 1981. At that time I raised the point that a member of this House had referred to the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) as a "simple-minded hypocrite." At that time I said that this was unparliamentary language and the Chair agreed that it was, indeed, unparliamentary language. I then said further:

> I am asking for clarification from the Chair. Would Madam Speaker be prepared to consult Hansard to see whether those words were picked up? If they were, Madam Speaker would have to hear my point of order. Is Madam Speaker prepared to do that?
>
> MADAM SPEAKER: Yes, I am prepared to do that.

● (2150)

When I consult Hansard, page 8709, for last Friday, I find the words:

> AN HON. MEMBER: You are a simple-minded hypocrite.

This interrupted the remarks by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton. Therefore, I obviously contend that unparliamentary language was used at that time. I drew the attention of the House to the fact that it was a very honourable remark from this end of the Chamber. I am sure that it was very honourable to Hansard because they have recorded it.

An hon. Member: A member of the NDP made it.

Mr. Cossitt: It was made, of course, by the New Democratic Party benchers to my left. In particular, I would like to refer, as I did at that time, to the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), who made that remark, as was apparent to all of us. It may be contended that because Hansard reported that it was said by an hon. member, without specifically identifying the hon. member for Skeena, it is really irrelevant because we are all hon. members. I am therefore sure that the hon. member for Skeena—who is not in the House at the moment—being an hon. member, would want to acknowledge that indeed he had said this, and would want to withdraw the unparliamentary remark he made.

Mr. Nielsen: First thing tomorrow morning.

Mr. Cossitt: I would therefore suggest that tomorrow, if the hon. member for Skeena is in the House—or the day after, or as soon as he is here—he should have the opportunity to withdraw his unparliamentary remark which you, Madam Speaker, ruled as unparliamentary. To illustrate my point, of course, I would like to refer to the Hansard of July 8, 1961. At that time, Mr. Johnson, an hon. member from the riding of Chambly-Rouville in the province of Quebec, said to Lionel Chevrier:

> Tell the truth, do not be a hypocrite.

At that time, the deputy speaker in the Chair replied:

> I have heard a term which is certainly not parliamentary.

Then Mr. Chevrier proceeded to draw attention to the fact that he had used a similar expression on a previous day, and had been forced to withdraw it as it was indeed unparliamentary. Therefore, Mr. Johnson had to withdraw his remark. The fact that it might be contended that the hon. member for Skeena was not in his own seat at the time this remark was made would be irrelevant according to the ruling of the Speaker of the day, because the hon. member who made the remark said:

> Mr. Speaker, I should return to my seat, because I am not now at my regular desk.

Then he returned to his seat and retracted the remark. Therefore, it is my contention, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. While the hon. member was making his point of order, I was reading Hansard in order to see what was said on Friday. Yes, the hon. member is right. I said that I would be prepared to look at Hansard to see whether those words had been spoken. I see from the Hansard I have in my hand that those words had been spoken. They had not come to the ear of the Speaker. Since some hon. members insisted that they had been spoken, I said that I would look at Hansard. I now read Hansard and find that the words are not reported in Hansard under any particular hon. member's name.

Therefore, I am afraid that if it is not in Hansard—I did say that I would look at the blues. The blues do not report these words. Therefore, I am at a loss. I do not think I called on anyone to withdraw an expression which does not appear in Hansard and which has not been heard by the Chair.

As for the term "hypocrite," I understand it is listed as both unparliamentary and parliamentary language. Hon. members will understand that that puts the Chair in a very difficult position. I would say that it is not a very appropriate expression in the House, but since it was pronounced by no one, at this point, I cannot call on anyone to withdraw it.

Mr. Cossitt: With all due respect to the Chair, Madam Speaker, I must contend that the words were used, and they appear on page 8709 of Hansard. We in this end of the chamber have identified the hon. member for Skeena as having said them. I would therefore think that this matter should be held until such time as he has the opportunity to either deny that he said them, or to admit—as an hon. member would—that he did indeed say them. Then at that time, I think, it would be up to the Chair to decide whether he should be asked to withdraw the words, or whatever the case may be. It is very clear that it is an unparliamentary expression. It is very clear to all of us here that the hon. member for Skeena made those remarks. I think that he should at least have the opportunity, before the Chair makes a ruling, to say whether or not he is prepared to acknowledge that he made those remarks, if he did. If he is an hon. member and does—and I am sure he does acknowledge that—then I would think we should have a ruling from the Chair.

Madam Speaker: Yes, I now see that on page 8709 of Hansard, at the bottom of the page, it says that an hon. member said:

> You are a simple-minded hypocrite.

The hon. member must understand what kind of a predicament I am in. Whom can I ask to withdraw these words? The hon. member—

Some hon. Members: Skeena!

Madam Speaker: Yes, well, that is the hon. member's contention, but I cannot ascertain it because I did not hear those words. They are not identified in Hansard. Therefore, it is impossible for me to ask an hon. member, any hon. member who is not identified to withdraw his words. I can ask no one, so I cannot do that. The hon. member cannot ask the Chair to do that.

As for the expression "hypocrite", if it is on both lists, then that puts me in a position where I guess I have to determine whether it is unparliamentary, and I would say that it is; but since there is no identified hon. member, to my knowledge, who has pronounced those words, I guess the matter is closed.

Mr. Cossitt: I have a second point of order. Before proceeding to it, I would like to acknowledge the statement you have made and ask if you would be prepared to wait until the hon. member for Skeena is here so that he can tell the House whether, as an hon. member, he did or did not make those remarks.

Point of Order—Mr. Cossitt

MR. COSSITT—USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY WORDS DURING DEBATES

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): I would like to proceed to my second point of order, if that is in order. It goes back again to last Friday, on the same page, page 8711 of Hansard, where the Chair is reported as having said that in order to declare words unparliamentary—and that is roughly paraphrasing your statement—they must have occurred during the course of a debate. It is my contention that the publication is that for something to occur in the course of a debate—and the rule is that it is only unparliamentary when it occurs in the course of a debate—during questions of privilege, during motions under Standing Order 43, or during points of order, we are in a position to use unparliamentary language because, technically speaking, those matters are not debates. It is my contention that in Beauchesne's rules, the word "debates" is meant to be broadly interpreted; otherwise, for example, I could look across the floor at this time and say that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) is a liar, and I would be called to order; yet I am speaking on a point of order. Therefore, according to your ruling on Friday, I would be able to do it and nobody could say anything about it.

Therefore, I am asking clarification from the Chair as to whether an hon. member is saying unparliamentary words if he utters them during an actual debate rather than during a question of privilege, during a point of order or during motions under Standing Order 43 and other types of matters which are not actually debates in this House.

Now I see it is ten o'clock, Madam Speaker. If it is ten o'clock, I would prefer to finish this tomorrow.

Madam Speaker: I think we should finish it today, if hon. members will allow me not to see the clock. It is not quite ten o'clock.

Mr. Cossitt: Maybe I could finish my point, then.

Madam Speaker: I think I can explain to the hon. member—order, please. The hon. member for Leeds-Grenville.

Mr. Cossitt: Well, I was simply saying that I would prefer to finish tomorrow as it is ten o'clock, rather than prolonging the other proceedings which are to start now. As I understand it, at ten o'clock you must proceed to other business, unless there is unanimous consent to do otherwise. Therefore, unless I am totally blind, I see it is ten o'clock and I would ask permission to continue this matter tomorrow.

● (2200)

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have already ruled on that question so I do not think we need to pursue it tomorrow. What I said in the course of debate, and when I say "in the course of debate" I mean debate in the largest sense, was that in order that they be declared unparliamentary, words must have been said in the course of debate. I must have heard them and they must be recorded in Hansard.

I must tell the hon. member that I hear a lot of things whispered around here during the course of debate, but they are not all recorded in Hansard. Some of them might be quite unparliamentary, but they must have an official character so that they can be declared unparliamentary.

I cannot identify the hon. member who allegedly uttered those unparliamentary words, and therefore the question is obviously closed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

INCOME TAX—INQUIRY WHETHER DECISIONS CONCERNING CANADIANS WORKING ABROAD WILL BE RESPECTED

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, last March 26 I asked the Minister of National Revenue if Canadian citizens living in Quebec enjoy the same advantages as the other Canadians as far as the export market is concerned. My purpose in taking the floor tonight is to ask the Quebec government authorities whether Quebecers are considered to be on an equal footing with other Canadians when it comes to taxation or international trade expansion, or whether Canadians residing in the province of Quebec are considered as second-class citizens on the international market.

I also asked the minister if after two and a half years now more than 2,000 Quebecers and Quebec firms are being penalized because the Lévesque-Parizeau government refuses to acknowledge following a written guideline that those firms or those 2,000 Quebec citizens who went to work abroad were granted non-resident status. Only Quebecers find themselves in that situation, particularly when we consider the importance for Canada to develop its manufactured products export trade, not only on the traditional American market but also on other markets abroad.

● (2205)

The Canadian government has set up a new structure, namely, a special committee which was to look into the possibility of creating a national trading corporation precisely to direct all our talented people, engineers, workers in small and medium-size businesses, toward export markets. The Canadian Government granted non-resident status to all Canadians who for two and a half years now have enjoyed the benefits extended through that written guideline. But unlike Ontario and all the other provinces Quebec has refused to acknowledge the non-resident status granted by Canada. The objective was to develop export markets because the Government of Canada, like the other provinces, is aware that $1 billion worth of manufactured products mean 40,000 jobs in Canada.

The Quebec government refuses to acknowledge the written guidelines. So, Mr. Speaker, during the period allotted to me, I want to ask the Lévesque-Parizeau government to acknowledge a written directive which is an important component of an economic program, if Quebecers are to be considered as full-fledged Canadian citizens. Mr. Speaker, I refer to several articles that have been published during the conference held last week which was sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce, and I wish to point out the speech made by Mr. Marcel Sicard, president of the large firm Tecsult as well as chairman of the board of the Ahuntsic Cegep, who said about the attitude of the Lévesque-Parizeau government that it reminds him of the slogan about physical fitness: Go play outside, to which one would add: Now let's lock the door.

I have in hand an item published in the newspaper La Presse of March 16 and signed by Roger Blais, who specifically mentions, and I quote:

Since I am one of the victims—

The 2,000 victims to whom I referred when I put my question to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey). He went on to write:

—would you allow me to make some personal comments?

To leave one's country and everything is not easy; it is merely logical that the sacrifices and constraints should be compensated by some advantages which are mainly financial benefits in the form of tax exemptions granted by the Ottawa and Quebec governments.

Approvals for such purposes were officially confirmed to me by both governments in 1978; I went abroad with those duly signed assurances and I returned to Canada in 1980.

To this day, the Government of Canada has met its previous obligations to Quebecers as well as to other Canadian taxpayers. Conversely, after almost three years since its original decision, the Quebec government fails to meet its obligations to its taxpayers and is claiming back taxes from them, while charging with incompetence those responsible.

Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to sensitize my colleagues in the House of Commons, as deputy chairman of a special committee of a national trading corporation. We wish to develop the export market because we are aware of the fact that it is an important aspect of the Canadian economy. It seems to me that when the Lévesque-Parizeau government refuses to acknowledge a commitment, a written guideline, it is committing a glaring injustice toward the firms and the citizens involved, who now have to reimburse an amount of $10,000. As a member of the House of Commons, representing a Quebec riding, this is the question I ask on behalf of all families who now have to reimburse the total amount of $20 million because of false representations, in view of the written guidelines issued at that time. How can anyone believe the many solemn promises now being made during the present electoral campaign in Quebec, especially when we know that we cannot even trust the written commitments made by the Lévesque-Parizeau government?

Mr. Claude Tessier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question and I support him when he denounces the attitude of the Quebec government in refusing to remedy an unfair situation, to say the least.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, a recently published report reveals that the Quebec revenue department has revoked the non-resident status of some 2,000 Quebecers working in Saudi Arabia or other countries for Canadian employers; we cannot remain indifferent to this matter; quite the contrary, for we know and recognize that several of those Quebecers or Canadians made personal sacrifices and even accepted to run the risk of increased costs by accepting work outside Canada. We must recognize that those Quebecers like other Canadians will face serious financial problems if they do not obtain special tax relief in view of the circumstances.

Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say what the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) and the Government of Canada have done to correct the situation and thus maintain the competitive position of Canada in the international labour market. Indeed, as it became obvious after recent court decisions that Canadian taxpayers working abroad temporarily, without any intention of cutting their ties with Canada, are not residents for tax purposes unless they work outside of Canada for more than two years, the federal Department of National Revenue took the position that when a Canadian is away from Canada for a period of at least two years he will be considered as a resident for tax purposes. However, as several taxpayers had made commitments prior to this new interpretation, in order to be fair, it was decided not to apply the new rules to those Canadians who left the country before the new policy was announced, that is before July 24, 1979. In addition, the new policy will not apply to anyone who has to leave Canada to complete a contract that is under way and must be completed.

So that Canada will remain competitive in the international labour market, the Government of Canada passed recently a new measure relating to the Income Tax Act, according to which in the 1980 taxation year and in subsequent years, the employees of taxable Canadian corporations who have been working overseas in designated countries for more than six months will be partially tax exempt in Canada. That provision will apply to those persons working on building, equipment, agricultural and engineering projects related to resource development—and exploration projects or to other prescribed activities in most developing countries as well as in other countries.

HEALTH AND SAFETY—MEASURES TO ELIMINATE HAZARD OF INFANT CRIB DEATHS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, a week ago today, as reported at page 8496 of Hansard, I addressed questions to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) concerning the continued sale of these popular colonial-style infant cribs. I pointed out that even the manufacturers admit that the tall corner posts are hazardous. There has already been one tragic incident in Canada when a little girl was accidentally strangled with her pyjamas in Peace River, and there have been 14 similar deaths involving these colonial-style cribs in the United States.

Some manufacturers, however, are unwilling to modify the design of these corner posts on their own for fear of competitive disadvantage. Several manufacturers have asked Mr. Jim Black, head of the Consumer Affairs Department product safety branch, to press for government intervention to compel all crib manufacturers to withdraw these cribs from the market, pending some modification of the design.

In the meantime, many spring catalogues carry advertisements of these colonial-style cribs in the absence of an official order by the Government of Canada to eliminate this hazard at once.

• (2215)

When we are dealing with the free marketplace, I and many of my colleagues on this side of the House would argue strenuously for less government regulation, less government intervention and more freedom for crib manufacturers and, indeed, manufacturers of any household product to operate in as truly a free enterprise system as possible. I draw the line, however, when these products can affect the lives and safety of Canadians, particularly our children, the little ones who are powerless to make judgments on what may be a hazardous product and what is not. When it gets to the point where the manufacturers themselves recognize the clear danger present in the current design of these cribs and are requesting a government order to withdraw them from the market before any more tragic deaths occur, then I feel I am justified in asking the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs the kinds of questions I put to him last week.

What progress is his department making under the Hazardous Products Act in connection with these colonial style cribs, and what is behind one of the minister's departmental official's charging that there has been foot dragging on this matter and another being quoted as saying he would "try to do something, but that will be a slow process"?

The minister was unprepared to answer my questions last Monday. He said he would check with his officials on both matters raised. I am sorry the minister left the chamber only a few moments ago. I thought he would want to say personally where his product safety branch stands in connection with the specific issue of the colonial-style cribs.

I am told that Vancouver retailers are taking their responsibilities seriously. Many large chains are voluntarily pulling these cribs off the floors. At least one west coast retailer is offering refunds to customers if they purchased these colonial-style cribs prior to May 1. That may be happening elsewhere in Canada. It is an indication that retailers are sensitive to public pressure and will, when necessary, voluntarily pull hazardous products off the shelves and out of the showrooms. Of course, there will be other retailers who know they have a popular thing going and, in the absence of legislation, will not remove these admittedly dangerous products.

One other thing worries me: there is nothing to prevent manufacturers who may feel compelled to withdraw these products from the domestic market from exporting these cribs to other countries. I would be interested in knowing what latitude the government will allow Canadian manufacturers to export hazardous products if, as, and when the department recognizes that these popular cribs can be dangerous.

The questions raised, however, about the high corner posts on infant cribs, in my view, go to the heart of the ability of the product safety branch to protect the public from obvious hazardous products; obvious, at least, to the manufacturers themselves and obvious, certainly, to Canadians who have experienced tragedy because of these products. I worry about the capacity of the minister's department to deal with urgent situations which arise such as the one we are discussing this evening.

Let me quote one disturbing paragraph in an article in the Ottawa Citizen of Monday, March 16, 1981—"Hazardous cribs still widely sold"—in which Dr. Kamlesh Gupta, the consumer department's chief of mechanical and electrical hazards "admitted the department has been dragging it heels on the issue. He said a lack of resources forced the department to rely on slowly evolving crib safety research being conducted in the United States." I would like to know what else Dr. Gupta, Mr. Black and others in the product safety branch are waiting for? On how many other products on the shelves, floors and showrooms of this nation must we Canadian await word from slowly evolving studies in the United States? Do we have to wait for serious injury or death in Canada to have the departments attention drawn to the need to alert and safeguard the consumer?

I realize that it is unfair to ask the minister to deal specifically with anything other than the subject matter of tonight's adjournment debate, but I serve notice that at the earliest appropriate time I will ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to table a list of products that the product safety branch is investigating, and particularly the list of products on which we have been awaiting word from the United States, such as the hazardous colonial style cribs.

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, as crib finials—or corner posts, as they are popularly known—of the type involved in the death of the child referred to by the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott) are not covered by regulations under the Hazardous Products Act, departmental officials have been engaged in a study of such features.

The department first learned of the child's death in July, 1980. The next month the director of the product safety branch advised manufacturers and importers of furniture for juveniles and those who had expressed an interest in product safety matters—about 1,000 persons in all—of the potential hazard associates with cribs incorporating these design features. Manufactures and importers were asked to examine the design of their products and to eliminate voluntarily those features that could cause problems. A deadline for comments was set for September, 1980. Only three replies were received.

● (2220)

The director then wrote to the heads of 58 companies known to manufacture or import cribs requesting that their cribs be viewed as safety devices and that, voluntarily, they eliminate purely decorative features such as finials and posts that could put a child's life in jeopardy.

From the 27 replies received, it appeared that, in general, the industry was looking for specific guidance from the department. Colonial-style cribs are much in demand so, unless voluntary action is taken across the board, manufacturers who act in good faith could be placed at a marketing disadvantage by those who are less co-operative.

I might also mention that departmental officials have reviewed crib regulations in other countries and have found that finials and posts are only dealt with in a Swedish standard. Authorities in the U.S. are also interested in this subject and the product safety branch has been working with them in their studies.

Since the introduction of regulations on cribs in 1973, all deaths, with the exception of the one referred to, have been associated—and the hon. member should take note of this—with the use of inadequately mentioned cribs manufactured before regulations came into force.

In November of last year, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs launched a major information campaign to alert consumers and retailers of used furniture to the possible hazards in the use of second-hand cribs. The department has also enlisted co-operation from the hotel and motel industry in checking the condition of their cribs to see that they are adequately maintained to ensure protection for young children.

GRAIN—COMPENSATION TO FARMERS FOR EMBARGO ON SHIPMENTS TO RUSSIA

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, my question tonight arises out of questions that I posed to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) on March 10 in which I asked him once again about the long awaited payment to farmers in Canada on the grain embargo imposed by our government and for which there was a commitment to reimburse farmers for any losses they may have incurred by virtue of the imposition of that grain embargo.

I am pleased to see that the response tonight will be given by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bockstael) who, I should point out to those watching tonight on television, is from western Canada, the city of Winnipeg, and who has the distinction—as far as I can make out, and I have been giving this a lot of thought—of being one of the few Liberals in western Canada who has not been appointed to the board of directors of Air Canada. Nevertheless, he will, as a western Canadian, understand the very serious concern there is across this country, in the west in particular, with respect to the untoward, unprecedented delay on the part of this government after a commitment was made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in March of 1980 that the compensation would be paid.

I just want to review for you, Mr. Speaker, some of the background of this matter to show precisely that there is a long history on the part of this government of broken promises concerning payment to farmers, particularly in western Canada. Last summer the Minister of Agriculture announced that a statement would be made by August 1 with respect to the amount and time of payment of the compensation. He subsequently gave the matter some further thought and later was reported to have announced that the statement on payments would be made in November of 1980. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) during the course of that summer promised the payments to the farmers for November, 1980. Senator Argue, the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, said in October of 1980 they would likely be made early in January, 1981. We go on then to a debate that took place in this House on December 9, 1980, and at page 5549 the Minister of Agriculture is reported to have said the following:

The final report has yet to be submitted, and I hope this will take place within a few days.

It has been a few months since he made that statement, yet we have received no indication as to when Canadian farmers might expect the payment or, indeed, any statement on the part of the government as to the basis upon which the computation will be made.

● (2225)

On February 23, 1981, as reported at page 7550 of Hansard, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said:

I understand that officials of the various departments involved, in co-operation with the farm groups, are establishing those damages and will be finished their work very soon.

On March 2, 1981, as reported at page 7771 of Hansard, the Minister of Agriculture said:

—the recommendation was made to the government this January. It is being considered by the departmental committees at the present time and I hope it will soon come forward to the government.

On March 10, the information we have is that departmental officials had told the Minister of Agriculture that the matter at that time was—and I was so informed in my office—before cabinet. What had happened was that the proposal had never been on the cabinet table prior to that time because the Privy Council office felt that there were details which had to be attended to before cabinet consideration, or there was a possibility that it would have to be considered twice by cabinet. Therefore, it went to the departmental committees for minor alterations.

Finally, on March 10, in response to questions by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) and myself, the Minister of Agriculture said that he would know the amount soon. In response to a question which I put, he said that the payment would be made no later than the end of March, and that if everything went smoothly it could be possible.

The fact of the matter is that this is a substantial amount of money to which the farmers of Canada are entitled. Saskatchewan economists have found that the amount of money payable to prairie farmers alone should be $117.5 million. It is important for this money to be received now by western farmers and by farmers across Canada to help meet the cash flow problems associated with spring operations.

In conclusion, I say that the responses of the Minister of Agriculture have been unsatisfactory. He tried to explain it by saying that farmers did not want the money to be shown in their incomes for 1980. Of course, the excuse could now be used that they do not want the money to be shown in their incomes for 1981. Do we have to wait until 1984 until we receive any kind of response from the government? When can they expect this money? Western farmers want to know.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on January 4, 1980, in response to U.S.S.R. military intervention in Afghanistan, the United States announced it was imposing a number of economic sanctions against the U.S.S.R. The United States government met with other major grain exporters to seek their support. Canada in support of the American action agreed to restrict its shipment of grain to the U.S.S.R. to a level which was regarded as normal and traditional.

When the decision of the Canadian government to join in restricting exports of grain to the U.S.S.R. was announced, the prime minister of the day, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), announced that Canadian grain producers would be compensated for losses arising out of actions taken by the Canadian and United States governments. Subsequently, the present government made a public commitment, which has been repeated on several occasions, to compensate grain producers for losses in income which can be legitimately attributed to government actions to restrict grain shipments to the U.S.S.R. below normal levels.

By restricting shipments to the U.S.S.R., extra supplies of grain accumulated in the rest of the world and this tended to depress prices. These price-depressing effects were offset by United States' decisions to remove some grain from the market through purchases by the Commodity Credit Corporation and by allowing more grain to enter the farmer reserves program.

Any Canadian losses due to the embargo can be divided into two categories, namely, losses in volume of sales and losses in price. Given the commitment of the government to which I have already referred, an interdepartmental committee was established to examine the basis upon which compensation was to be determined, the amount to be paid, and the method of payment. In addition, a number of other agencies and institutions have made estimates of the losses incurred by Canadian producers, and these estimates have been examined by the committee. The analysis of this issue took longer than we originally thought. Much of the data required for the analysis was not immediately available. As hon. members will appreciate, the problem is an extremely complex one and many other factors affected the market during this period, in addition to the embargo.

● (2230)

This means that the measurement of the impact of the embargo on grain prices was very difficult. The other factors which have influenced world grain markets since the embargo was announced on January 4, 1980, include higher interest rates—which increase the cost of holding grain inventories—early expectations of large grain crops in 1980-81 in the United States and the world, and the appreciation of the United States dollar against other major currencies.

At present, the interdepartmental committee has completed its work and a full report has been prepared. This report has been brought before cabinet by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), and the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Cabinet is currently in the process of considering this memorandum and—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. parliamentary secretary will know that I regret having to interrupt him. I have had to do it before and I am sorry, but the rules relating to the adjournment motion are very strict indeed.

The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

At 10.31 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION OF PRESIDENT REAGAN—EXPRESSION OF HOPE FOR SPEEDY RECOVERY

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, yesterday we all experienced a similar feeling of amazement and concern when we heard the news about the attempt made against President Ronald Reagan's life. I believe that all hon. members in this House today express a similar wish for a prompt recovery of the President and the three men who were injured at his side. Some people look upon that lunatic attempt as fresh evidence that unfortunately violence can break out at any moment in our civilized societies. I for one would rather admire the courageous behaviour of the President in this ordeal and equate it with a new proof of the nobility and greatness of the human spirit in the face of adversity.

[English]

His eagerness to reassure and comfort others, his concern for those who were wounded with him and his constant sense of humour, even when the extent of his own injury was still unknown, all demonstrate qualities of character which are in the finest traditions of American leadership.

Throughout Canada today among all our people there is profound relief that the attempt on the President's life did not succeed. There is, as well, an outpouring of good wishes for his quick recovery. I am sure all of us would want to express today, to a man who so recently came to this chamber to assert his friendship and respect for Canada, our gratitude that he is well and our hopes that he will soon be fully recovered.

Our thoughts and prayers are with him and Mrs. Reagan today, and with Mr. James Brady, Mr. Timothy McCarthy, Officer Thomas Delahunty and their families. May this awful event unite people throughout the world in a renewed determination to abhor and reject violence in the affairs of mankind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise to associate myself and my party with the words expressed by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and on my own behalf and that of my party I want to express our shock and sorrow over the attempted assassination of the President of the United States. We deplore this act of outrage which offends the high standards of civilization and freedom which the American people have established.

As neighbours and as friends, our prayers are with Mrs. Reagan and the families of the other victims. We wish them all a speedy recovery.

I am sure all in this House will recall that on March 11 the President himself remarked in this House on the ability of the American people to unite in adversity. He said at that time, and I quote: "I have found there is a wellspring of spirit and faith in my country which will drive us forward to gain control of our lives."

All of us in the House wish the American people and the American President strength and perseverance in this latest crisis in a nation which has long triumphed over crisis, and long excelled in adversity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, on behalf of my leader, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), and on behalf of all my colleagues, I am happy to join with the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) in expressing the sentiments they have already conveyed to the House.

Like all Canadians, we were shocked at the news which came to us from Washington yesterday. We deplore violence in our society, and we deeply regret the suffering of the President and of the other three who were wounded yesterday.

We join in expressing our sympathy to all of the families, and we wish the victims an early and speedy recovery.

CANADIAN FEDERATION

THIRTY-FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF NEWFOUNDLAND'S UNION WITH CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. On March 31, 1949, 32 years ago today, the dominion of Newfoundland joined the Canadian federation as the tenth province. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

S.O. 43

That this House notes with pride and affirms the concepts and principles of confederation and of the nature of the federal system upheld so firmly and clearly in Newfoundland today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Does the House give unanimous consent to this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

RULING BY SUPREME COURT OF NEWFOUNDLAND ON CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, today is the thirty-second anniversary of the dominion of Newfoundland becoming a province of Canada. It is not without coincidence that the Appeal Division of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland at twelve o'clock today brought down a unanimous ruling upholding the position of six provinces on the government's joint constitutional resolution now before the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I quote very briefly from a part of the unanimous judgment of the court.

The framers of the British North America Act decided in their wisdom that Canada should not be in a unitary state, but a federal one.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: The quotation goes on:

● (1410)

Canada, however, could in effect be converted into a unitary state if that act could be amended simply at the request of the Canadian Parliament without the concurrence of the provinces.

I therefore move, with the unanimous consent of the House, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That in view of the decision of the Newfoundland Supreme Court upholding the position of the provinces, that the government withdraw forthwith the joint constitutional resolution now before the House, until the Supreme Court of Canada brings down its decision.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED DELAY IN CONSIDERATION OF CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of today's unanimous decision of the Newfoundland Supreme Court against the federal process and proposals relating to the constitutional resolution now before the House, and in view of recent remarks on the television program Question Period by the Hon. Robert Stanfield, one of Canada's most serious and highly respected political statesmen, when he said the Trudeau package is a "constitutional coup d'état", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That the government forthwith delay any further consideration of the constitutional resolution until the Supreme Court of Canada, which is now seized of the matter, has had an opportunity to decide whether the rule of law or the Prime Minister's rule shall prevail in this country.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

REQUEST FOR SPEEDY INTERVENTION BY GOVERNMENT IN DISPUTE BETWEEN CORPORATION AND JOURNALISTS' UNION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with a most important matter.

Since it is urgent to settle the conflict which has been crippling for too long the French and English news services of the CBC and considering the importance of the election campaign now under way in Quebec, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That the House condemn the uncompromising attitude of the CBC authorities and that the Ministers of Communications and Labour intervene as soon as possible and ask the president of the CBC to resume negotiations and find quickly a solution to that conflict which is depriving Quebecers and other Canadians of essential information.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

RETURN OF EXPROPRIATED LAND AT MIRABEL AIRPORT TO FORMER OWNERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that many farmers living on expropriated land at Mirabel International Airport are only tenants of the Crown, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin):

That the House blame the government for its absurd expropriation policy at Mirabel and propose that the government hand over management of the land in the airport peripheral zone to the expropriated owners.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

STRIKE BY QUEBEC JOURNALISTS' UNION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move the following motion. Whereas the strike between the CBC and its TV journalists has gone on so long that independent observers increasingly believe there has been a political decision to prolong the strike, a strike which I am glad to see the NDP has finally discovered—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bosley: —therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour):

That this House instruct the Minister of Labour to convene an industrial inquiry under Section 196, et alia, of Part V of the Labour Code, as it was requested to do on Friday, in order to determine whether the CBC has been acting in good faith and the extent of the Liberal party's involvement in its continuation of the strike.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for his motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CHARITABLE FOUNDATIONS

REVIEW OF STATUS OF RENAISSANCE CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In light of the fact that recent newspaper advertisements taken out by a hate organization known as Renaissance Canada have clearly violated the rules with respect to political activity of charitable organizations, to say nothing of the rules of good taste, and that this organization launched hate campaigns against a number of Canadian politicians over the past six months, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae):

That the Minister of National Revenue be instructed to review the propriety of Renaissance Canada having charitable status under the Income Tax Act.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ROLE OF PARLIAMENT OF CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the unabashed, premeditated and systematic obstruction of the work of the House by the Conservative Party—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peterson: The evidence is before us, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peterson: Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Guelph (Mr. Schroder):

That this House reiterates the sentiment expressed by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition when he stated last June, "Parliament speaks for 23 million Canadians. If the first ministers of the federation cannot make marked progress toward changes which fit the Canada of the 1980s, then the Parliament of the federation may have to assert a stronger role".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: They are making marked progress.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: Joe said "No".

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I said "No". Of course there is no unanimous consent.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

AIRPORTS

PROVISION OF GARBAGE TREATMENT FACILITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, many of Canada's international airports do not have adequate facilities for burning or sterilizing garbage from international flights. This deplorable situation unnecessarily exposes the Canadian livestock industry to risks from exotic and dangerous diseases. In fact the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) recently warned of precautions against the spread of the dreaded hoof and mouth disease to Canada. Therefore I move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and seconded by the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight):

That the government be condemned for allowing this situation to linger and, further, that the government move immediately to construct disposal facilities for proper sterilization of all garbage left in Canada from international flights.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

METRIC CONVERSION

CALL FOR DISBANDMENT OF BOARD—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Canadian government notified the people of Canada through The Canada Gazette of February 28, 1981, that shortly only metric measurements will be permitted in retail food stores throughout Canada and that persons daring to use imperial after the said date will be liable for fines in the amount of $5,000 and/or imprisonment of up to two years. The Government of Canada is doing this, not by an act of Parliament but by an order in council. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker):

That this House orders the government to rescind immediately the said order in council, to fire the chairman and to retire the balance of the metric board.

We are not in a unilateral country.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PARLIAMENT

RIGHTS AND PRINCIPLES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (London-Middlesex): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the historical tradition in British parliamentary democracy that Parliament, as the highest court in the land, is supreme, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead):

That this House reaffirms its right to discuss any matter it so chooses and that it reaffirms the principle that the courts of the land can only adjudicate those laws duly passed by this Parliament.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is out of order.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

RULING BY SUPREME COURT OF NEWFOUNDLAND ON CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, who will know that the Newfoundland Supreme Court today ruled unanimously that the federal government—and I wish to quote from the ruling—"has . . . no authority to request an amendment that would directly alter provisions of the British North America Act affecting federal-provincial relations or the powers, rights or privileges secured by the Constitution of Canada to the provinces without first obtaining provincial consent." Those are words from the unanimous ruling of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland this morning. So the Newfoundland Supreme Court has declared the Prime Minister's constitutional resolution illegal.

Does the Prime Minister intend to continue to force through this Parliament of Canada a resolution which the Supreme Court of Newfoundland has declared illegal?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, naturally, we are somewhat disappointed by the judgment of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland, but it is certainly a very important one. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition suggests we should not act because the court decided we were acting illegally. I remind the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that he did not reach the contrary decision when the Manitoba Court of Appeal decided we were acting legally. He did not then agree to pass the resolution which is before the House.

These two decisions which are in conflict, and the fact that the Supreme Court of Canada has now decided that it would hear the appeal from Manitoba, and presumably any other appeals which are brought before it on this subject, before the end of April, leads me to remind the House of what some of the judges in the Manitoba case said, including the Chief Justice. They said that as long as the resolution was not out of the House the first question put to the court was hypothetical, indicating that it would prefer to judge not on a hypothetical bill but on a real bill. As a result of that, I wonder if we could not agree to pass the resolution and make sure the Supreme Court of Canada is acting, not on a hypothetical case, but on a real case, and agree to respect the decision of the Supreme Court.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR DECISION BY SUPREME COURT BEFORE RESOLUTION SENT TO BRITAIN

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister will recall that the decision of the Manitoba Court of Appeal was three to two. The decision of the Newfoundland Supreme Court was a unanimous decision against the federal government. The Prime Minister will also recall his own Kirby memorandum in which there was cited a judicial opinion by the Department of Justice to the effect that a law passed by the U.K. Parliament to patriate the Constitution with an amending formula and other changes could not be successfully attacked in the Canadian courts. In other words, the legal opinion that the Government of Canada has, which it will not make available to Parliament, is that if it can get this question out of Canada, then the Supreme Court of Canada cannot act on any decision that the British Parliament might take. That is why he is trying to get this question out of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I would like to ask the Prime Minister if the Government of Canada intends to appeal this unanimous decision of the Newfoundland Supreme Court. If so, will the Government of Canada await the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada on its own appeal before it forces this resolution through Canada and tries to export this question, this Canadian question, from our country to another parliament?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I just indicated that we have had one appeal court render in favour of the resolution. There is still a decision to be rendered by the Appeal Court of Quebec. That is why I am taking this matter very seriously.

• (1425)

I repeat the suggestion to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and to other hon. members of this House, keeping in mind the statement of the Chief Justice of Manitoba and other justices' statements that they did not want to rule on a hypothetical case, that we give to them—

An hon. Member: Yeah, refer it to the Supreme Court.

Mr. Trudeau: —a resolution which will obviously be taken into account by the Supreme Court of Canada, not as a hypothetical thing but as a real thing.

The Leader of the Opposition suggests that this party is trying to hasten the resolution over to Britain so that the Supreme Court of Canada will not have a chance to judge on it.

An hon. Member: That's right.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, hon. members over there say, "that's right", and so on. I am prepared to suggest that if we can agree on some form of time allocation which would not only get the resolution improved, with the amendment dealing with women's rights—which I believe has been pressed from various sides of the House—and an amendment which has been discussed on aboriginal rights—

Some hon. Members: Property!

An hon. Member: Too much of this is tongue in cheek!

Mr. Trudeau: If the hon. members opposite do not want to improve the resolution another way, my offer will still stand; that we get a resolution to the Supreme Court of Canada in return for which the government would certainly undertake not to press the United Kingdom to pass the resolution until it has seen the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada, and if the—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: An hon. member says that I have come a long way. Indeed, we were quite certain that the courts would render in our favour, as indeed—

An hon. Member: Can we believe it?

Mr. Trudeau: —one of the appeal courts has done. I am taking cognizance of this new situation, and I am making a very serious offer to the various hon. members of this House that, if the House leaders of three parties can agree on some way in which we can get this resolution out of the House—improved, if possible—get it before the Supreme Court of Canada before Easter, or any time before the Supreme Court of Canada is going to look at the factums, then we will undertake not to press its passage in the United Kingdom until after the Supreme Court of Canada has judged.

If the Supreme Court renders in favour of the resolution, I take it that would settle the matter and we could put an end to this debate which has been going on for several months. Of course, if it renders against us, the government would have to admit that it cannot proceed in the United Kingdom with the resolution in this form.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DIRECT REFERRAL TO SUPREME COURT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, that is a very interesting proposal put forward by the Prime Minister, which we would be prepared to consider. I assume that that would mean the withdrawal of the notice of motion that stands now in the name of the President of the Privy Council. I would like that confirmed.

However, my question to the Prime Minister is: since the Prime Minister is now concerned about the legality of the position which he is putting forward, would he consider applying precisely the same standard to this situation which he applied to the situation in respect of the Senate, in the former Bill C-60, when a proposal he made was considered to be unconstitutional, and he then undertook a direct reference to the Supreme Court of Canada to determine the constitutionality of that position before this Parliament acted? We would like to know that what we are doing is legal before we do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

Mr. Clark: If the Prime Minister was prepared to do that with respect to the Senate provisions of Bill C-60, will he apply his own standard in this case so that Parliament can be assured, before we act, that what we are doing in this House of Commons and in the other place is legal?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition asks for the assurance that the notice of motion before the House would be withdrawn. Of course we can withdraw that motion, providing the House leaders can agree on some other form of time allocation or agreement to pass the resolution so that it gets to the Supreme Court in time. It does not have to be the motion standing in the name of the House leader of the government, but there would have to be some agreement between members of this House that debate progress and come to a conclusion.

The reason I repeat that, and the reason why I think I should point out to the Leader of the Opposition that it is not the situation with Bill C-60 where debate had not progressed, is that—we are now in the situation where debate has been going on for six months, where the resolution has already in its present form been referred to two courts of appeal, one rendering in favour and one against, and where we have the opinion of the Chief Justice of Manitoba and other judges to the effect that they cannot judge a hypothetical situation. If that is the case—this is not a referral, I would remind hon. members of the House, not a referral by the federal government—it is a case taken by six provinces.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I understand that hon. members do not want to let their leader study this proposition, but I know him to be interested in it. I ask that he do study it, that we look at the possibility of getting the bill out since we have invested more than six months in it, that we get the bill out, that it pass both Houses of Parliament in good time for the Supreme Court to consider it.

I repeat, if the Supreme Court should judge against it, we will, of course, not press the United Kingdom to pass it in all stages. The point which has been so laboriously fought for by the Leader of the Opposition will have been proven to be legally right and founded. But if the contrary happens and the Supreme Court, which we all want to see adjudicate on this, decides in favour of the bill, then we will not have to begin this debate ad nauseam again but will merely ask the United Kingdom to continue its passage.

GOVERNMENT'S INTENTION TO PROCEED WITH CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In view of the statements he has made today in question period, and in view of the statement that was made by the Minister of Justice today, namely, "That the federal government intends to push ahead with its constitutional package despite a Newfoundland court of appeal decision backing the provinces that oppose it", is the Prime Minister saying now that that position that was put forward by the chief spokesman of the government on the Constitution, namely, that the decision did not change anything in terms of the government's action, has now been repudiated and that the Prime Minister is looking at a new manner in which to proceed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not at all, Madam Speaker, I think the Minister of Justice was speaking much as I did when I answered the Leader of the Opposition. When we had an appeal court decide in our favour, that did not mean that the opposition threw up its hands and said, "All is finished; we will pass the resolution." They said, "We will continue blocking it." Now that an appeal court has decided against us, we are taking the same attitude as the opposition. We are pursuing our course, except that I just made a serious offer, to the Progressive Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party, to ensure that we can end this debate and then have what hon. members opposite have been asking for, for so long—we can have an adjudication by the Supreme Court of this land. Then we will be able to know whether or not our actions are legal and whether or not it is justified to present this precise measure, not some hypothetical measure as the Manitoba court said, but this precise measure, in the United Kingdom.

EFFECT OF RULING BY SUPREME COURT OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice. Up to this point in time there has been an argument and debate in this House and across the country on whether the proposition before Parliament had a moral basis. An argument has been made about its legitimacy, whether or not it was legitimate. Now the position has been taken by the Supreme Court of Newfoundland that in fact the proposition, the joint address, is illegal. Therefore I would like to ask the Minister of Justice, not only as the Minister of Justice but also as the Attorney General of Canada, the chief law officer of the Crown, why he persists in his actions to want to move ahead, in view of the fact that an appeal court has now decided that it is illegal? Why does he not fulfil his responsibilities and maintain the rule of law?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister replied to that question and I gave that answer yesterday. It is a very clear one. We said that the Parliament of Canada and this House are called upon to pass legislation.

When legislation is passed it is up to the court to adjudicate and, of course, Parliament and the different Houses in the provinces accept the rule of law. If we are to take the view that, every time there is a problem that is debated in the courts, we cannot operate our legislatures, we are running the risk of mixing the legislature and the judiciary. The proposition of the Prime Minister is a very simple one: let us finish our work here in which we have invested six months of effort and after that there will be a decision of the Supreme Court.

Of course, the Prime Minister said, and it is the position of the government, that we respect the decision of the courts. But we will finish our duty as Members of Parliament to finish the work that we started in the fall and, of course, we will wait for the decision of the Supreme Court before deciding to press the matter in England—yes or no.

THE CONSTITUTION

DEADLINE TO MEET SUPREME COURT HEARING

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, in view of the concession that the Prime Minister has made in making the statement that the resolution would not be pressed upon the Parliament of the United Kingdom until there has been a ruling of the Supreme Court, can he indicate by what date a factum would have to be presented to the Supreme Court on behalf of the Government of Canada? Also, can he say whether an early meeting of House leaders might be arranged to see if we could come to some agreement on time, bearing in mind the question I have already put to him?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, on the second part of the question I can assure the hon. member that our House leader would be prepared to meet from three o'clock onwards with the opposite House leaders to try to solve this question of timing.

I cannot say when the Supreme Court would require the factums and the resolution in its final form. Just looking at the calendar I realize that Easter is less than three weeks away and that it is at the end of Easter week that the Supreme Court, the Monday after Easter week, that the Supreme Court will be hearing the pleadings. I would suppose that the latest we could effectively get this measure out of the House would be on Holy Monday, or Tuesday, at the very latest, that is to say, less than two weeks from now.

TRANSMISSION OF RESOLUTION TO UNITED KINGDOM PARLIAMENT

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I wonder if the Prime Minister could be a little more precise about what he means when he says that this matter would not be pressed on the parliament of the United Kingdom. Does that mean it would be sent over there but put on the backburner, or that it would not be sent until the Supreme Court had made its ruling?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would be happy to empower our House leader to negotiate such things. What I had in mind would be that we would send it over in a very informal and low-key way—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Not likely.

An hon. Member: By bicycle.

An hon. Member: By mail.

Mr. Trudeau: —or send it over with fanfare, if this would please leaders of the opposition. Whether they gave it first reading or not seems rather secondary. What I am saying on behalf of the government is that we would not press for its passage. Whatever way the combined opposition wants to interpret these words, I will accept that interpretation.

• (1440)

Mr. Clark: Would you resist its passage?

SUBJECT MATTERS FOR DISCUSSION BY HOUSE LEADERS

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, my further supplementary question has to do with what we can discuss at a House leaders' meeting. I wonder if it could be understood that we could discuss the point which the Prime Minister has just now made concerning when the resolution is sent to Britain, whether it is sent over and left aside or whether it is kept here until after a Supreme Court ruling has been made.

Will we also be able to discuss at a House leaders' meeting arrangements for a further debate that will include the guaranteed right of further amendments, such as amendments entrenching aboriginal rights and improving the position with respect to women?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as far as our party is concerned, I could give an unequivocal answer yes to both of those questions. The first question is that it could be decided at what state, if any, the resolution would be reaching Britain.

The second would be that we would see it as very important to improve that resolution, at least with those amendments upon which all parties seem to be agreed, namely, the one concerning equality of men and women, and the other providing for an improvement, perhaps, on the amending formula with regard to aboriginal rights. I am not sure whether there is agreement on that. I think there is on a text between the New Democratic Party and our party. I am not sure where the Conservative Party stands on that.

My answer is yes, for a very simple reason, that all parties in this House believe we should have our Constitution, that it should have an amending formula, and all parties believe that our Constitution should have a charter of rights. The hon. member for Provencher has made that quite clear on behalf of his party. The leader of the New Democratic Party has said that he thought it was the best charter in the world. But we want this content. We did not know, we did not agree, if we could proceed legally the way we are. What I am proposing is that we obtain a judgment from the highest court in the land as to whether we are or whether we are not proceeding legally. If we are, then I suggest that settles the matter and the United Kingdom will act expeditiously.

That is the proposal I am making to the Leader of the Opposition and to the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION AND REFERRAL TO SUPREME COURT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In so doing, I cannot help but make the comment how sad it is to see the Dean of the House, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, having to stand up on behalf of his party and swallow himself whole.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Clark: Cosgrove is awake.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McGrath: If there is any shame, it is on that side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: In view of the fact that the Prime Minister cites part of the judgment of the Chief Justice of Manitoba in stating that he had only a hypothetical question in front of him, and the Prime Minister takes that as an enjoinder to us to get on and pass the resolution so it can get to the court—but I say to the Prime Minister, surely if he wants to eliminate the hypothesis—

Mr. Lalonde: Ask the question.

Mr. McGrath: —from this question, why does the Right Hon. Prime Minister not do the honourable thing and withdraw the resolution from the House and refer it to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): For the very simple reason, Madam Speaker, that I am trying to get before the Supreme Court of Canada a resolution which would be improved in the way that the House leader of the New Democratic Party has suggested; that I believe the lady from Kingston—

Mr. Clark: The hon. member from Kingston.

Mr. Trudeau: —has suggested, and that we have suggested, namely, that we put these things in the resolution. Then we will have before the Supreme Court of Canada the kind of charter which everybody says is a very good one. All that will have to be determined then is the legality of it. As the Minister of Justice has said many times, this is the way the House always proceeds.

Mr. Clark: Except on Bill C-60.

Mr. Trudeau: It adopts bills. The hon. member constantly refers to Bill C-60. There was a disagreement on Bill C-60.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Members of the opposition did not agree with the substance of Bill C-60. But they have told us repeatedly—

Miss MacDonald: The committee report on C-60 was unanimous.

Mr. Trudeau: —and I wonder whether they were giving us the truth or not—that the people of Canada wanted a charter, that the people of Canada wanted their Constitution.

Mr. Clark: What about the amending formula?

Mr. Trudeau: That was not the position on Bill C-60. They never took that position that I can remember. That is why we are saying—

An hon. Member: What about the referendum?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member is talking about the referendum. I am beginning to wonder if they think the courts should impose an amending formula on us or not.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They could not do it anyway.

Mr. Trudeau: If that is not their position, Madam Speaker, surely all they are asking the courts to do is to do what the court of Manitoba and the court of Newfoundland have done, and that is decide whether this particular resolution is intra vires or ultra vires. That is what has to be decided.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I can understand that some hon. members do not like this kind of a suggestion. They have been arguing for days and weeks that the Supreme Court should decide. I am putting a proposal before them that will permit the Supreme Court to decide. If the Supreme Court decides against us, then obviously the resolution will not be sent to Great Britain. Isn't that what the Leader of the Opposition has been looking for?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister seems to be changing his position with each answer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Consequently, we will have to examine very carefully what in fact he has said.

I want to remind the Prime Minister, in putting this supplementary question to him, that when the government took its responsibility and referred Bill C-60 to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Supreme Court stated that the process was ultra vires, that the federal government could not unilaterally change the Senate.

Now the Supreme Court of Newfoundland is saying the same thing, that the process involved in the resolution before the House is illegal and ultra vires because it changes the federation—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: By refusing to refer it to the courts, the Prime Minister is asking me and the members of this House to be—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has the floor only to ask a question.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister whether he will reconsider what he has said because he is asking the House, in the face of the unanimous decision by the Supreme Court of Newfoundland, to pass something which is, in fact, illegal. That is the point.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Therefore, I ask the Prime Minister if he will do on this—

An hon. Member: Who are you?

An hon. Member: The Supreme Court of Newfoundland said it.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: —I am not saying it, it is the Supreme Court—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member does not go directly to his question, I will have to recognize another questioner.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, I merely want to ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister why does he have this double standard. Why does he not do on this resolution what he did on Bill C-60, namely, withdraw the resolution from Parliament and refer it to the Supreme Court of Canada? That is simply what he has to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the opposition seems to have only one fallback position, and it is Bill C-60. I remind the hon. member that Bill C-60 was referred to the Supreme Court, not to know whether the federal government was acting against some constitution or convention; the case was were we acting within the authority of Section 91(1) of the British North America Act.

An hon. Member: That is the Constitution.

Mr. McGrath: It is the same process.

Mr. Trudeau: We have a section of our present Constitution—

Mr. McGrath: You have gone outside Section 91 on this.

• (1450)

Mr. Trudeau: Does the hon. member want an answer?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: We were asking the courts whether, within our present Constitution, Section 91(1), the federal government could do certain things. Now there is no section of the Constitution, as hon. members know, and no written document, which says how the Constitution of Canada can be amended. It is a different situation from that in respect of Bill C-60. The hon. member keeps repeating that what we are doing is illegal. I repeat to him: why did he not conclude it was legal when Manitoba rendered in our favour, and what will he do if Quebec renders in our favour? Will it suddenly become legal, or will it still remain illegal because—

An hon. Member: Send it to the Supreme Court.

Mr. Trudeau: That is precisely the offer we are putting before this House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member says we should withdraw and send it to the court. I ask hon. members whether they are interested in determining the legality of this action, or in delay? If they want more delay, then they are certainly taking the right course. If they want a decision on legality, then the course I am suggesting is the only one for sure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PORTS

DEVELOPMENT OF ROBERTS BANK, B.C., SUPERPORT—ENVIRONMENTAL OBJECTIONS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, while the Prime Minister thinks a little more deeply about the pickle he is in, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment.

In March, 1979, the Environmental Assessment and Review Panel studying the proposed expansion of the Roberts Bank superport in Delta, British Columbia, reported to the cabinet and recommended against a major expansion of the Roberts Bank superport being proposed by the National Harbours Board, an expansion which would increase the area of that port by some five times. Cabinet opposition was confirmed by the fact that the Minister for the Environment at that time supported the recommendations of the Environmental Assessment and Review Panel for a much smaller scale of development at Roberts Bank.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. First of all the question is rather long and, secondly, may we have a bit of silence in the House?

Mr. Siddon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Has the minister chosen to bypass the findings of the EARP in 1979, has he given his formal consent, together with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, for the project of expansion at Roberts Bank on a scale approaching that which was originally envisaged and which includes a massive turning basin and at least three additional pads, therefore disregarding the recommendations of EARP?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's question, as you say, was rather long and rather complicated. I can say to him that we do not have environmental objections to the project proceeding as planned. It has been a little bit of time since I have reviewed this issue and, if the hon. member would like, I would be happy to respond to him at greater length in a letter.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF DREDGING CONTRACT

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is rather timely and I believe the Minister of Transport will confirm this. Will he confirm that his department will announce Treasury Board approval of a contract for dredging at Roberts Bank to develop this much larger project, a contract in the amount of some $35 million to a foreign-owned dredging company, to use Dutch dredging equipment, and that the contract will be announced within the next three or four days, a contract giving this foreign dredging consortium special concessions regarding duty exemptions? If that is so, so much for the environmental review process. Will the Minister of Transport confirm that such a decision will be announced shortly?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, that is exactly it; such a decision will be announced. I think the decision will come forward on April 4. I cannot see why my hon. friend has already made a conclusion on a decision that has not yet been announced.

FISHERIES

REGULATIONS FOR 1981 SALMON FISHING SEASON ON WEST COAST

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

In two weeks the B.C. west coast salmon fishery season will open, and it will open in total confusion unless the minister can elaborate on some of the announcements which have been made in the press regarding the regulations for the 1981 fishing season. When will the minister state definitively what regulations will be in effect for the 1981 fishing season, and will he now state if the regulations announced through press release will actually be proclaimed?

The fishermen want to know now what regulations the fisheries officials will be enforcing during the 1981 fishing season. They want to know now how many girdies they will have to take off their fishing vessels, and what kind of equipment they will have to put on the ends of their lines.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the last reference allows me to think the hon. member's question deals mainly with the troller fleet. In that regard the policy was announced quite a few months ago. There is, this very day, a meeting with Pacific gillnetters along the Fraser area where there is a problem. We are hoping to find some accommodation following the consultation which is going on between my department and the fishermen involved.

REPORTED DELAY IN PROCLAIMING REGULATIONS

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): I thank the minister for that answer, Madam Speaker, but some of these regulations were proclaimed by press release only, as far back as October. They have not as yet been put into regulations and the fishermen have not been able to get any information from the minister's department regarding the kind of gear they are going to be able to use and what will happen to the Fraser River gillnet fishery. I would ask the minister whether the delay in proclaiming those regulations, or suggested regulations, may not be connected to some agreement that may be under discussion presently with the United States in respect of the west coast troll fishery and, particularly, does it have any effect on the interception of Canadian chinook bound for the Fraser River at Point Roberts.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, it is quite traditional for policy to be announced and, from that, detailed regulations discussed with fishermen's groups, and then proclaimed by order in council. I have no information that there is undue delay. I will check into this and give the hon. member the information. As of this morning, when I had a lengthy meeting with Pacific coast senior officials, this did not emerge as an issue.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

JAMES BAY AGREEMENT—MANNER OF IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

This morning the minister was delivered a strongly-worded statement by the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development concerning the unacceptable manner in which the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement has been and continues to be implemented. What is generally regarded as a very good agreement has been soured, in part by bureaucratic bungling, lack of funding, and endless haggling over the interpretation of the various sections of this agreement. Will the minister now tell the House whether he will press his colleagues in cabinet, his officials, and also the government of Quebec, to honour this agreement in its spirit, and to cease and desist from the narrow and legalistic approach which has been followed heretofore?

Finally, Madam Speaker, I would like to know whether the minister will agree to arrange a visit to the Cree and Inuit communities in northern Quebec in order that he may learn at first hand just how serious the situation there actually is?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I did meet this morning with the hon. member, the chairman of the committee, and various opposition Members of Parliament who are members of that committee. As the hon. member knows, I informed him and the committee that I have discussed this matter with the Minister of Justice. We are of the same view that, although the legal advice we have obtained is that the agreement has stood up in the courts, is very valid, and has not been breached in a legal context at all, we would be prepared to review the agreement, as the hon. member puts it, in terms of its spirit and good intent, aside from a strictly legal interpretation. That review by the Minister of Justice and our department is under way.

● (1500)

Second, as the hon. member knows, I have already agreed with the committee, despite the fact that I have been doing a great deal of travelling, that I should see this particular area, and I have agreed to go up there with some of my officials and advisers within the next ten days to two weeks.

Oral Questions

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

RESIGNATIONS OF GENERAL PARADIS AND OTHER HIGH RANKING OFFICERS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. He is well aware that there has been another resignation of a senior officer, Lieutenant-General Paradis, from the Canadian Armed Forces. Can the minister explain why General Paradis, whose ability, knowledge, forthrightness and dedication to the forces were well known, decided to resign some three years before his normal retirement date?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the retirement of General Paradis prior to his retirement date is just normal. It was the choice of General Paradis to take that step.

I know General Paradis very well. I have talked with him, and his retirement is according to his own choice and nothing else.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, in the last year we have seen the early and, I submit, the arranged retirements of Lieutenant-General MacKenzie, the commander of Air Command, Major-General St. Aubin, and Admiral Martin, the commander of the Maritime Command, Pacific. The commander of Maritime Command was transferred out of his command in less than a year, and now General Paradis is resigning, having been made an offer he could not possibly accept.

Can the minister explain why he is getting rid of so many of his most capable officers?

Mr. Lamontagne: Madam Speaker, as the hon. member must know, because he is a former defence minister, our Armed Forces have a very elaborate and very good retirement plan. That gives many high-ranking generals the advantage of retiring ahead of time when they feel they have other work to do. I think they have a great advantage. All these retirements ahead of time have been taken as a matter of choice. No one has been forced to retire.

As far as General Paradis is concerned, I regret that he is leaving because he is a very able man.

McDONALD ROYAL COMMISSION

EXTENSION OF MANDATE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Solicitor General. As the minister knows, the mandate of the McDonald commission expires today, almost four years after its organization, and after the expenditure of $10 million. Last October when the minister gave the commission its March 31 deadline he told the House, "This is the final date being established now. It is a sufficient time for the commission to complete matters that should be completed".

Will the minister now confirm that the McDonald commission has asked for yet another extension of its mandate, and will he tell the House how much longer the people of Canada will have to continue funding this commission, which is the longest running judicial road show in Canada's history?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, indeed today is the last day provided in the existing order in council, but a little over a week ago the McDonald commission was in touch with the government indicating that it required a few more weeks to complete its work. An order in council is in the course of preparation today. It will extend the mandate of the McDonald commission, at its request, to Friday, May 15.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, it is interesting to note the order in council has not yet been prepared, so the commission legally dies at the end of today.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

QUERY RESPECTING LEGISLATION AND COLLECTIVE BARGAINING RIGHTS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question relates to promised legislation with respect to the RCMP. The minister has been promising regularly since last April that he would proceed as a top priority with long overdue revisions to the RCMP Act arising from the Marin report. In May of last year he admitted that the present procedures were unfair to members of the force.

When will the minister stop playing games with members of the RCMP and bring forward this long overdue legislation and, in particular, when will he, as urged by the Association of Seventeen Divisions, grant collective bargaining rights on pay and working conditions to members of the RCMP, the only police force in Canada whose members are denied the freedom of association contained in the government's charter of rights?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, the RCMP do not have the right to collective bargaining, but there is a very effective system in effect for dealing with industrial relations within the force, with which I am quite familiar after a year on the job. I think that system is effective and satisfactory to the overwhelming majority of members of the force.

So far as the death today of the McDonald commission is concerned, I want to comfort the hon. member by reassuring him that an order in council went to cabinet this morning, but it has not yet been signed by His Excellency. I think that during the course of the afternoon it will be signed by or on behalf of the Governor General.

As to the third question which was enclosed in that supplementary question about the RCMP Act, I am glad to be able to inform the House that amendments to the RCMP Act will be brought forward soon.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CLARK—THE CONSTITUTION—APPEAL TO SUPREME COURT—PROPRIETY OF PARLIAMENTARY CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) raised a point of order on Friday which he continued yesterday. It relates to the fact that the Supreme Court of Canada is seized with more or less the same point that the House is discussing as contained in the joint resolution on the Constitution. The matter was very ably argued by all hon. members and by the right hon. member, who took part quite at length in the debate.

There are essentially two matters or two issues which have been raised, the sub judice aspect and whether the Speaker may rule on the constitutionality of the joint resolution.

With regard to the sub judice aspect, at the outset it should be made quite clear that any practice or convention of the House to discontinue or not initiate discussion on a matter for the reason that it was then before the courts would have to be a voluntary or self-imposed practice or convention because the Bill of Rights of 1688, which is part of the law of the Parliament of Canada, provides that:

—freedom of speech and debate and proceedings in Parliament may not be questioned . . . in any court or place out of Parliament.

Sub judice is such a practice or convention. It is one that the House has imposed on itself to avoid discussing matters which are then under judicial consideration or before the courts.

Sir Robert Peel probably best summed up the essence of the convention when he said in 1844:

—that the right of Parliament as the highest court in this land to discuss what it will cannot be limited, but that good taste and sense of fair play should in some circumstances limit the exercise of that right.

The purpose of the practice is to avoid any discussion in the House which might have a prejudicial effect on an accused or on the parties to a civil action, since it might influence a jury or witness when they read of it in the newspapers or see it on television. It is rightly doubtful that judges are liable to be influenced by anything spoken in the House.

In respect of criminal matters it is clear both here and in the United Kingdom that once a person has been charged in the courts in a criminal matter, it is the correct practice not to permit the matter to be raised in the House.

In respect of civil litigation matters the United Kingdom House in 1963 laid down a rule that once the case is set down for trial, the issues should not be raised in the House.

The position of the Canadian House in this respect appears to provide more latitude. In 1976 the Speaker said, and I quote:

—in any event no restriction ought to exist on the right of any member to put questions respecting any matter before the courts, particularly those relating to a civil matter, unless and until that matter is at least at trial.

In 1971 the United Kingdom House resolved to allow references to be made to matters awaiting or under jurisdiction in all civil courts, subject to the discretion of the Chair and provided that there is no real and substantial danger of prejudice to the proceedings. This seems to provide even more and wider latitude.

In this context, in the same year, 1971, the Speaker of the Canadian House felt that the traditional position that a member while speaking must not refer to any matters upon which a judicial decision is pending, as set out in Beauchesne:

—should be interpreted as narrowly as possible. I doubt very much if the Chair should be called upon to intervene whenever a member refers to a matter which is before the Courts.

Furthermore, whatever self-imposed practice exists both in the United Kingdom and Canadian chambers in respect of matters that are before the courts, it is settled both here and in the United Kingdom that the practice would not be applied in the case of a bill, that is, while the House is involved in the legislative process—and I insist on that word. In other words, the House will not for any reason stop discussing outside events while embarked on the legislative process. Otherwise, it would mean that the courts could bring parliamentary proceedings to a halt, whereas one of the corporate rights of the House is to manage its internal affairs without their interference.

● (1510)

The proceedings in Parliament relating to the proposed address to the Queen contained in the proposal presently before the House is not only a parliamentary procedure in Canada but is also part of the legislative process in respect of constitutional amendment. The address contains the proposed bill and the process being undergone comes within the exception referred to by Erskine May, in that the practice of sub judice is not applied to the legislative process.

With respect to issues beyond those relating to Criminal Code offences or traditional civil litigation, the present rule in the U.K. House is that subject to the discretion of the Chair, reference may be made in the House to matters awaiting or under adjudication in all civil courts in so far as such matters concern issues of national importance, such as the national economy, public order or the essentials of life. Of course, if the matter is before the courts by virtue of a resolution of the House of Commons, the sub judice convention would no doubt be invoked, but only then. It is trite to say that the subject matter of the minister's resolution is an issue of national importance.

With respect to the discretion which is left to the Chair, it is interesting to note that both Erskine May and the report of the Special Committee on Rights and Immunities tabled in the House April 29, 1977, more or less suggest or recommend that the Speaker should only exercise the discretion of invoking the convention in exceptional cases where it is clear to the Speaker that to do otherwise could be harmful to specific individuals.

Under the circumstances, since the House is embarked on the legislative process, I am not prepared to say that the sub judice doctrine is applicable and therefore I need not exercise the discretion of invoking it.

With respect to the matter of the constitutionality of the joint resolution and the draft bill that it contains, hon. members are reminded that the Speaker is not empowered to rule on the constitutionality of any measure before the House. There are ample authorities in support of this and I will cite but one by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux in 1969. He said:

> In other words, this limits the powers and responsibilities of the Speaker in deciding on questions of order, not questions of law.

The status of the House of Commons or Parliament was described by the same Speaker on that same occasion. He said:

> The Parliament of Canada is supreme, and if it should pass any act which is ultra vires, the courts would decide the validity of such act. It is not for the Speaker to declare—although he presides over the highest court in the land—as to whether any proposed legislation is ultra vires.

Accordingly I cannot find that this is a valid point of order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DOMM—ALLEGED MISREPRESENTATION OF FACTS BY EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF METRIC COMMISSION OF CANADA—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: I would like also to rule on the question that I took under advisement in the name of the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm), which related to certain activities of the Metric Commission. While he referred in his argument to certain passages in an early edition of Erskine May, he did not establish that any breach of his privileges has occurred. His argument was entirely related to the substance of the issue of metric conversion rather than privilege.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, just a few moments ago there was an exchange between the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition during which the Prime Minister first admitted that there is at least possibly an illegality in the process that has been exercising all of us here in the last few days. I think it is also important, since there was what the Prime Minister chose to call an offer for consideration, that we find out now the intentions of the government with respect to its business today.

Is the government intending to proceed now with respect to business in the way it has been proceeding in the last three or four days, to get eventually to the motion that stands in the name of the President of the Privy Council, or is it the intention today to proceed to another piece of business, considering what occurred in the question period today? If so, can he tell us precisely what that business will be?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, my colleague has heard the offer made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister during the question period. If his party is willing to accept this offer to negotiate the agreement which he describes so well, I shall be available for a meeting of the House leaders immediately or within the next five or ten minutes. If such were the case, the Minister of State responsible for Finance could without any difficulty introduce his motion to allocate two days of debate for the bill to authorize the government to borrow a certain sum of money.

My colleague knows that the motion will require at least two hours of debate followed by a vote and that this will take nearly the rest of the afternoon. While this motion which will help us to move along with the business of Parliament is debated, we could start the negotiations mentioned by the Right Hon. Prime Minister. If the Progressive Conservative party is not interested in the proposal made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister to the effect that such an agreement be negotiated, we still intend to allow the Minister of State responsible for Finance to move his motion so that we may limit the debate on the bill to authorize the government to borrow $13 billion. As my colleague is aware, this bill must be passed urgently. We told him about it yesterday, and we were prevented from moving this motion by the tactics of which he is well aware. I repeat today that it is my intention to move this motion which could require up to two hours of debate.

Afterwards, if this meeting can take place and if we can make serious progress in our negotiations, I shall be happy to reconsider the item on the order paper. However, if the Progressive Conservative Party is not interested in discussing the offer made by the Prime Minister, we shall leave our motion to limit the debate on the Constitution on the order paper.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, as you know, there was a contention put by the official opposition with respect to the way in which we might proceed, and it would be our intention in those negotiations to discuss both arrangements or offers that were made. The government cannot dictate the discussions. The President of the Privy Council will know that there was a very serious proposition put to him about a way of proceeding other than what the Prime Minister has proposed, but in any event I just want to make it very clear to him that those considerations might go beyond that which is set forth by the government leader. Those are the propositions in the general area that we are prepared to discuss.

Having said that, I want to know now—because we are going to have to deal with it in a few minutes—what is the government's intention with respect to business when we reach that point? Is it the unequivocal undertaking of the government House leader to tell the House that we will be moving to the motion which imposes Standing Order 75C on Bill C-59, the report stage of the borrowing authority? If he would tell us that, then I think we could deal with it. I am not playing games with my hon. friend; I want to know what today's business of the House is?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I am sorry, perhaps my colleague misunderstood me. I will repeat. The Minister of State for Finance will, if we reach motions, move the motion to allocate time on the borrowing authority bill. I am saying now in English exactly the same thing that I said in French a minute ago.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is the translation.

Mr. Pinard: I am sorry if my colleague did not understand it. That is very clear and unequivocal, and that is what the minister is going to do.

Mr. Blenkarn: Would the government House leader advise, if we were to complete the discussion on whether closure should be employed under 75C, whether we would continue with the borrowing authority bill tomorrow and Thursday?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, closure cannot be imposed on 75C. That is a motion dealing with the allocation of time. Once it has been decided later on today, then the government knows that two days will have to be allotted to complete the report and third reading stages of the bill.

Will those two days be tomorrow and the following day? All I can say to the hon. member is that it will be very soon, but I would like to look at our plans later today once I know we have a House order that will allot two specific days to conclude debate on that bill. I cannot give the undertaking now that this bill will be discussed tomorrow and the following day, but I can give the undertaking that it will be dealt with in the very near future.

• (1520)

Madam Speaker: Do I understand, then, that the House wants to continue the normal procedures at this time and perhaps negotiations can take place later on? There is no agreement now to go to anything else but the normal procedures at this time?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, no, we have not discussed that. The question we were discussing, just to be clear, is exactly what business we would deal with if and when we get to orders of the day, or what would normally be motions. I wanted to know the business of the House. In view of the offers and the exchange of offers which have been made in the House, we now know what it is. That is all; there is no question of an agreement. The government House leader has given his unequivocal undertaking on that point.

Madam Speaker: Very well. However, I want to tell the House that I received notice of eight questions of privilege to be heard at this time. I am prepared to hear them, and I want all hon. members to have a chance to raise their questions of privilege. If all are to be heard today, I would suggest that hon. members try within ten minutes to expose their questions of privilege, so that each and every member who has given notice is able to proceed with his question of privilege.

The first one is in the name of the hon. member for St. John's East. Before recognizing the hon. member for St. John's East, I should like to indicate that since there is some similarity between the question of privilege of the hon. member for St. John's East and the one of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), I will hear those two questions at the same time. Once I have heard the hon. member for St. John's East, I will ask the hon. member for St. John's West to make quite sure he is not overlapping the first question of privilege.

PRIVILEGE

MR. McGRATH—THE CONSTITUTION—DECISION OF NEWFOUNDLAND COURT OF APPEAL

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I am very conscious of your ruling today on the point of order raised a few days ago by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). I want to impress upon Your Honour at the outset that my question of privilege raises a whole new point. It does not attempt to go over the ground which was so ably put forward by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

It is interesting that in Your Honour's ruling today, if I may refer to it—I am not questioning it; I accept it—you pointed out precedents of your illustrious predecessors in which they stated that the Chair was merely to rule on questions of order, not on questions of law; that it was not for the Chair to decide whether or not a question was constitutional, within the Constitution, or ultra vires of the Constitution; that, in fact, was a question for the courts to decide.

It is interesting that my question of privilege today arises out of just such a situation. It arises out of the unanimous ruling brought down earlier today by the appeal division of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland on questions submitted to it by the six provinces. It is not without interest that the ruling should come down on the thirty-second anniversary of the dominion of Newfoundland becoming the tenth province of Canada.

I intend to lay out what I consider to be a very important question of privilege arising out of the decision of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland and the business before the House. The questions on which the court ruled were four in number, three of which were submitted by the six provinces; the fourth question dealing specifically with the terms of union between Newfoundland and Canada was submitted by the province of Newfoundland. It is important for me to read the questions because they are relevant. I think it is important that they should be on the record. Certainly in terms of my argument it is important that they be placed within the context of my question of privilege before Your Honour. They read as follows:

1. If the amendments to the Constitution of Canada sought in the "Proposed Resolution for a Joint Address to Her Majesty the Queen respecting the Constitution of Canada", or any of them were enacted, would federal-provincial relationships or the powers, rights or privileges granted or secured by the Constitution of Canada to the provinces, their legislatures or governments be affected and, if so, in what respect or respects?

2. Is it constitutional convention that the House of Commons and Senate of Canada will not request Her Majesty the Queen to lay before the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland a measure to amend the Constitution of Canada affecting federal-provincial relationships or the powers, rights or privileges granted or secured by the Constitutions of Canada to the provinces, their legislatures or governments without first obtaining the agreement of the provinces?

3. Is the agreement of the provinces of Canada constitutionally required for amendment to the Constitution of Canada where such amendment affects federal-provincial relationships or alters the powers, rights or privileges granted or secured by the Constitution of Canada to the provinces, their legislatures or governments?

The fourth question was the one submitted by the government of Newfoundland; it deals specifically with the terms of union. It reads:

4. If Part V of the proposed resolution referred to in question 1 is enacted and proclaimed into force could

(a) the Terms of Union, including terms 2 and 17 thereof contained in the Schedule to the British North America Act, 1949 (12-13 George VI, c. 22 (U.K.)), or

(b) section 3 of the British North America Act, 1871 (34-35 Victoria, c. 28 (U.K.))

be amended directly or indirectly pursuant to Part V without the consent of the government, legislature or a majority of the people of the province of Newfoundland voting in a referendum held pursuant to Part V?

On each question the Court of Appeal of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland unanimously ruled in favour of the provinces. I intend to place before Your Honour arguments indicating that this decision directly affects my privileges as a member of this House. Today I am speaking to a matter of personal privilege. I should like to refer to Beauchesne's fifth edition, Citation 16, which reads in part as follows:

The distinctive mark of a privilege is its ancillary character. The privileges of Parliament are rights which are "absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers". They are enjoyed by individual members, because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its Members; and by each House for the protection of its members and the vindication of its own authority and dignity.

Also in that citation Beauchesne refers to Sir Erskine May's Treatise on the Law, Privileges, Proceedings and Usage of Parliament, nineteenth edition, 1976, at page 67.

It bears repetition to note what Beauchesne said, that the House cannot perform its function without the unimpeded use of the services of its members and by each House for the protection of its members and the vindication of its own authority and dignity. I am being asked, as a member of this House, to do something which the courts have ruled to be illegal. That speaks directly to what Beauchesne had to say. Obviously, it is something that I cannot do. I cannot stand in my place and vote on a resolution that has been declared to be ultra vires and, hence, illegal. To do so would be flying in the face of the trust I have of the people who elected me to represent them here. But, more particularly, I would be flying in the face of the solemn obligation that I have as a member of this House to uphold the rule of law.

● (1530)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: In its unanimous decision the Newfoundland Appeal Court stated:

By attempting to secure from the Parliament of Great Britain an amendment that would affect the fundamental rights of the provinces without first obtaining the consent of the provinces, the Canadian Houses of Parliament would be arrogating to themselves an authority they do not possess, an authority that would negate the plenary and exclusive power of the provinces to legislate on matters within their competence and would provide access for Parliament into the provincial domain from which they are constitutionally excluded. They would, in fact, be asserting a jurisdiction that would enable them to obtain indirectly what they cannot legally obtain directly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I might say that is practically word for word the position that the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), and those of us who are associated with him, took when we participated in the deliberations of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution.

Finally, I would like to quote again from the judgment of the Newfoundland Court of Appeal:

The framers of the British North America Act decided in their wisdom that Canada should not be a unitary state, but a federal one. Canada, however, could, in effect, be converted into a unitary state if that act could be amended simply at the request of the Canadian Parliament without the concurrence of the provinces.

As I have indicated, Madam Speaker, you have already ruled on the very important point of order raised by my leader, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. I do not think I would be out of order if I were to repeat that the pith and substance of the question of privilege I want to place before Your Honour goes right to the privileges of the members of this House; that is, whether or not we as Members of Parliament should be called upon to vote on a measure which has, in fact, been ruled to be illegal by the unanimous decision of one of the federally-appointed superior courts of this nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: The fact that the court is the Supreme Court of my own province gives this matter an added dimension in terms of its direct impact on those of us, the seven of us in this House, who represent Newfoundland constituencies. How can I be asked to vote on a measure that the highest court in my own province has unanimously ruled to be illegal? As I said, to do so would be a betrayal of my trust.

There is another point I wish to raise, Madam Speaker. I referred Your Honour today to the exchanges between the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), my colleague the hon. member for Provencher and myself, because they are very germane to the point I want to make at this time. If the federal government decided—and this would be a normal thing for it to do—to appeal the decision of the Newfoundland Supreme Court to the Supreme Court of Canada, then we would have ipso facto a reference by this government of its resolution to the Supreme Court of Canada which, of course, is clearly covered in Beauchesne's fifth edition, Citation 338(4).

On the other hand, if the government does not exercise its right to appeal the decision, in my view it is logical to draw the conclusion that the government is accepting that what it is now doing is illegal and unconstitutional. I am not a lawyer, but certainly there is no question that it would be illegal in terms of the province of Newfoundland. As well, I believe the impact would be national in scope in terms of the jurisdiction of our courts.

That brings me back to my question of privilege. As a Member of Parliament from Newfoundland, I am being asked to do something which is illegal. It is my respectful submission that Your Honour, as the custodian of our rights and privileges, should protect me from being placed in this position. To add to what I have already said, of the four questions referred by the provinces, the fourth question was exclusively referred to the Supreme Court of Newfoundland by my own province. In its judgment it said:

> Referring to a potential unilateral amendment relating to denominational education and boundaries (Terms 2 and 17—

That is the boundary between Newfoundland and Quebec. Term 17 covered Newfoundland's right to its unique denominational system of education. The judgment continues:

> —of the Terms of Union and section 8 of the BNA Act, 1871) the court concludes:
> Both of these sections can be changed by the amending formulae prescribed in section 41 and the Terms of Union could then be changed without the consent of the Newfoundland legislature.

That clearly places me in an impossible position as a Member of Parliament from Newfoundland. I am being asked to betray the interests of my own province. I am being asked to do something illegal. I am asked to vote on a measure, the amending formula, which could unilaterally bypass the legislature of Newfoundland and change the Terms of Union between Newfoundland and Canada. Clearly, I should not have to face this situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I might also say, Madam Speaker, that the other members of Parliament from Newfoundland must face the same dilemma. However, they will have to deal with that in their own way.

In any event, Madam Speaker, if you should rule that I have a prima facie question of privilege, it would be my intention to move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher:

> That the question of the ruling of the Newfoundland Supreme Court on the government's constitutional proposals, now before the House, affects the rights and privilege of members of this House, and therefore should be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Before ruling on this matter I will hear from the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie).

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I would like to be heard on this matter as well, if I might.

Madam Speaker: There are so many questions of privilege today that I must use some of my discretion in order to hear them all today. Since there are eight questions of privilege, I will be rather strict in the allocation of time with respect to the different questions of privilege; otherwise, it would not be just to all of those members who have questions of privilege.

MR. CROSBIE—THE CONSTITUTION—ALLEGED ILLEGALITY OF PROCEDURE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, first, I would like to point out that there are questions of privilege and questions of privilege. Questions of privilege are sometimes raised for frivolous reasons, but there has never been a more serious question of privilege than this to come before this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: While I am very pleased that you are hearing me on this question of privilege—of course, I have already given notice of a similar question of privilege—I certainly feel that my colleague, the justice critic of our party, should be allowed to expand on this matter also since this is in no way a sleazy question of privilege.

This is a matter of great constitutional importance for this House of Commons. My submission is that, in addition to infringing and breaching the privileges of individual members of this House, as my hon. colleague for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has mentioned, if the government proceeded any further with the constitutional resolution it would be breaching the privileges of all members of this House. In fact, it would be what the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) described a few days ago—a fantastically "sleazy" practice. He used that word with reference to our House leader; he said that he was behaving in a "sleazy" manner. In view of the judgment given by the Supreme Court of one of our provinces, the tenth province, the Appeal Court, the highest judicial authority in that province, for the government to proceed in the face of such a judgment with a resolution that is already doubtful as to its legality, as now shown beyond doubt by one of the appeal courts of our ten provinces, would be a practice sleazy beyond all belief, one which would have its effect on all members of this House.

● (1540)

I want to refer to several points which have been made by the Newfoundland Court of Appeal. By the way, never have I been prouder to be a Newfoundlander than I am today—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: —when Chief Justice Mifflin, Mr. Justice Morgan and Mr. Justice Gushue have struck a blow to preserve the federal system and structure in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I would just like to quote one or two sections from page 46 of the judgment, where the learned judges say this:

The division of powers prescribed by the Constitution excludes federal jurisdiction over provincial autonomy within their legislative competence, and thus a proper request to Her Majesty's parliament in Great Britain to change such fundamental aspects of the Constitution can only be made after the provinces have agreed to such change.

Reference is made to a "proper" request, Madam Speaker. That means that the full appeal court of the province of Newfoundland has said that this resolution now before this House is improper. What the government is asking the hon. members of this House to do is to engage in an impropriety. In other words, this is a conspiracy to cause the hon. members of this House to commit an illegal act, an impropriety, and that is the finding of our Supreme Court.

Before we go any further in Parliament with these proceedings, every member of this House should read the judgment of the Newfoundland Court of Appeal. Then they will understand what the nature of the objections on this side of the House have been to this whole process and procedure.

Continuing with the judgment handed down today, the judgment quotes the learned Mr. Justice Ivan Rand—and I cannot think of a greater judicial authority in Canada—said as reported at page 26:

Legislatively, a unique situation has been created.

He was discussing the Statute of Westminster.

The British parliament has in effect become a bare legislative trustee for the dominion.

Then our court went on to say this:

We adopt that statement fully with the important addition that the parliament of Great Britain is a 'bare legislative trustee' for both the federal Parliament and the provincial legislatures in relation to the matters within their respective legislative competence. Any amendment enacted by the parliament of Great Britain affecting the legislative competence of either of the parties, without the party's consent, would not only be contrary to the intendment of the Statute of Westminster, but it could defeat the whole scheme of the Canadian federal Constitution.

For the government to proceed with this resolution is to ask the members of this House to join it in a conspiracy which could defeat the whole scheme of the Canadian federal Constitution. What could be more threatening to the privileges of members of this House than to be invited to go ahead and assist this government in an act which has been found ultra vires and without the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada?

We have ample precedent as to what happened in a previous situation where hon. members were not put in the position of having their privileges breached. I refer to Bill C-60. I have in my hands the Senate report on the Constitution, 1978-79. I wish to quote from page 1:6:

Essential parties to any form of wide-ranging constitutional reform are the provincial governments. Their negative reaction to Bill C-60 is well known.

Then it goes on to say where it was expressed:

Following a challenge, by expert witnesses, of the claimed legal right of Parliament—

Who claimed this legal right? Why, the very government that today claims the same legal right, and has done so for the last six months, that has tied up this honourable chamber, claims which are now found to be improper and illegal.

Following a challenge, by expert witnesses, of the claimed legal right of Parliament to proceed unilaterally on the proposals regarding the monarchy and the House of the federation, the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Constitution adopted a resolution recommending that the question be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada for decision. Shortly afterwards, the Minister of Justice announced that the question in so far as it concerned the House of the federation would be so referred.

There we have an incident occurring several years ago where the same government, in the same way, on a matter of considerably less importance but still important, attempted to tell this House of Commons and our brethren in the Senate that the proposals were intra vires. Because of a lot of opposition to that position, the matter was referred to the Supreme Court of Canada, with the result that the court held that it was ultra vires and outside the powers of this chamber.

My hon. colleague the hon. member for St. John's East quoted a very pertinent part of the judgment, which I will not quote again, about attempting to do indirectly what one cannot legally attain directly. Let me read one further section from page 49 which is of great moment to members of this House:

'The framers of the British North America Act decided in their wisdom that Canada should not be a unitary state, but a federal one. Canada, however, could in effect be converted into a unitary state if that act could be amended simply at the request of the Canadian Parliament without the concurrence of the provinces. The requisites of the Constitution in a federal state by which the legislative authority of the federating parties are defined, and supremacy circumscribed, must be strictly enforced if the rights of minorities are to be adequately protected'.

That is why we have struggled on this side of the House. We want to protect the rights of the minorities and the Supreme Court of Newfoundland has done the same.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I have been invited by the government opposite to do this, and this is what the Supreme Court of Newfoundland has said:

'Undoubtedly, the Canadian Houses of Parliament have the constitutional authority, of their own accord, to request the parliament of Great Britain to amend the British North America Act in matters of federal concern only, but in our opinion it has no such authority to request an amendment that would directly alter provisions of that act affecting federal-provincial relations or the powers, rights or privileges secured by the Constitution of Canada to the provinces, without first obtaining the consent of the provinces to such amendment.'

Is it any wonder why the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) ran for cover today? He has to get out of this illegal situation in which he has placed this House. But we cannot trust him to do that. We cannot trust him to stop this illegal procedure, to cease breaching our privileges. We have to ask you, Madam Speaker, to force him, by your ruling, to remove this illegality, this illegal conspiracy, from the Order Paper of this House. We must ask you to make sure that the Prime Minister has no option but to withdraw the motion he has put before the House because of its illegality.

I have just one last quotation.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has spoken for quite some time and he is arguing that, this motion being illegal, I should be in a position to say so and prevent it from coming before the House. I have to remind the hon. member that I have already ruled that I cannot do that. This is precisely what the Standing Orders enjoin me not to do. Therefore, that argument will lead the hon. member nowhere in proving to me that he does have a question of privilege.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, all I request you to do, in your position as Speaker, is to find that there is a prima facie case. I am not calling on you to find that this procedure is illegal; that has already been done for you by the Newfoundland Court of Appeal. You need worry no more about that. The whole procedure is completely illegal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: What I am asking Your Honour to do is to find that there is a prima facie case to be considered, and to allow my colleague the hon. member for St. John's East to move his motion.

I have just one final quotation from pages 54 and 55 of a judgment that is going to go down as one of the great judgments of our judicial history. In 114 years there has not been a judgment which overreaches this judgment. It will go into the books with the Magna Carta.

The learned judge said this:

> Without getting into specifics, it is clear that a charter of rights and freedoms must infringe upon the powers of the provinces to legislate in respect of property and civil rights, as granted by Section 92 of the act of 1867. Further, amendments to the present Constitution of Canada which would affect provincial rights and powers cannot at present be made without provincial consent. Under the proposed amending formulae, there is no doubt (and this is not denied by the Attorney General of Canada) that the rights of one or some of the provinces could be altered, abridged or in fact displaced without the consent of those provinces.
> Finally, it is patently obvious on the face of it that the provisions of Section 52 of the proposed Constitution Act must affect the rights, powers and privileges of the provincial legislatures as its effect is to render void or repugnant legislation passed within a province which is otherwise 'intra vires' the legislature of that province.

● (1550)

It is very clear what the general nature of this legislation is and that all of the judges of the Newfoundland Court of Appeal found against it. Two of the five judges of the Manitoba Court of Appeal found against it. It is very clear that one can say, at the very least, that there is some doubt about the constitutionality of the resolution that this House has been asked to pass.

I should like to refer to Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice, the eighteenth edition. In looking at this edition of May, I was very pleased to realize that one of the historic cases in the history of privilege is dealt with at page 107. It is Crosbie's case—C-r-o-s-b-i-e; it is not even misspelled, Madam Speaker! At page 107 there appears the following:

> In 1640, Sir Pierce Crosbie, sworn as a witness in Lord Strafford's cause, being threatened with arrest, was allowed privilege, "to protect him during the time that this House examine him"

I call now upon the authority of Sir Pierce Crosbie. I had an uncle called Pierce, by the way, Madam Speaker, who apparently was named after Sir Pierce. Here we are, 341 years later and I am arguing a case of privilege before Your Honour. I hope the verdict will go as well as it did in 1640.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: On page 64 of the eighteenth edition of May, in a discussion of the distinction between function and privilege proper, there appears the following passage:

> The distinctive mark of a privilege is its ancillary character. The privileges of Parliament are rights which are "absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers". They are enjoyed by individual members, because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its members; and by each House for the protection of its members and the vindication of its own authority and dignity.

If the government is put in a postion where it can force the members of this House to make a choice on a resolution or an act where there is grave doubt concerning its legality, then surely the services that we can perform in this House are being interfered with. As a matter of fact, as I mentioned earlier, it is in the nature of a conspiracy to deceive. This subject is dealt with at page 137 of May as follows:

> Conspiracy to deceive either House or any committees of either House will also be treated as a breach of privilege.

This is, in effect, an act of conspiracy by the government to deceive members of this House. How is that? It was an action taken to deceive the members of this House by a resolution brought before the House that was clearly intra vires and within the legislative jurisdiction of this House, when the government knew or ought to have known that there was a very, very serious legal question as to the whole procedure. The government knew from a matter that went to the Supreme Court of Canada two years ago and was found to be ultra vires despite what the government had said was a proper approach.

Is any evidence of this conspiracy needed, Madam Speaker? I would quote to you now from the October 6, 1980, edition of the Toronto Globe and Mail. In an article in that newspaper the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) said this:

> Asked why the federal government does not refer its course of action to the Supreme Court of Canada for a ruling on the constitutionality of the process, Mr. Chrétien replied "because the Supreme Court is very unreliable and timing is very important. We have to do it now. The people want us to do it now."
> In any case, he said, "I am opposed to that route."

That is the very route that the Prime Minister is suggesting today that he has been brought kicking and screaming to—a route that his Minister of Justice said on October 5 that he was opposed to. He said: "I am opposed to that route". Well, the Minister of Justice has got the root and he has been brought to the route, and the Prime Minister has now thought better about the route that we are going to be asked to take.

This is why I say this is part of a conspiracy to defeat the proper course of justice in this House. The Minister of Justice himself tried to avoid the Supreme Court, giving as the reason that "the Supreme Court is very unreliable." Yes, the Supreme Court of Newfoundland is a very unreliable one from the point of view of constituted executive authority that wants to change the nature of this country without the consent of its people and without the consent of its provinces. It has proven to be extremely unreliable from the point of view of the Minister of Justice but very, very reliable from the point of view of the rights and privileges of the members of this House and the people of Canada.

The Prime Minister this afternoon—

Madam Speaker: Order, order. The hon. member is really arguing the substance and I have to stop him from doing that because I need him to argue the matter of privilege. Furthermore, the hon. member has now been speaking for nearly 20 minutes. He does not have to comply with my enjoinder to try to restrict himself to a shorter time in order to allow other members of the House to explain their question of privilege, but I am just asking him to try to do it so that I can be fair to other members.

Mr. Crosbie: Right, Madam Speaker, I agree with your submission. I certainly want to have others give their views on this matter.

I would conclude by saying that the strength of the question of privilege brought by my hon. colleague from St. John's East and presented so well by him in his usual calm and rational approach to problems before this House and the question that I have brought here today has been amply supported by the attitude and remarks of the Prime Minister this afternoon. For the first time he has had to admit that this whole process is an extremely dubious one, and that there are grave constitutional and legal questions about it. He has been shocked by the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland.

If Your Honour will take this question of privilege under advisement and look at the transcript of his remarks this afternoon, it will be very clear that what he said, in effect, supports the question of privilege we have put before you. I ask you to find a prima facie case so that this question can go to the proper committee to be looked at in a serious fashion and reported back to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Madam Speaker—

An hon. Member: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, I said I would hear only one speaker. I would only hear a second speaker if I had any doubts about whether the privilege was founded or not.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I want to say to the hon. member for St. John's West that his question of privilege is not quite as good as the other Crosbie's. The other Crosbie's case was about a sworn witness who had been threatened with arrest and therefore the privileges of the House—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I have a point of order.

Mr. Lambert: A point of order, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Members may not raise points of order while the Chair is addressing the House. I will hear any points later on.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are assuming—

Mr. Lambert: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. Will the hon. member resume his seat.

Mr. Lambert: Madam Speaker, I insist—

Madam Speaker: Will the hon. member resume his seat.

Mr. Lambert: I insist that before you make your ruling we be heard.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Madam Speaker: Order, order. I plead with the hon. member, who was a Speaker in this House and understands—

Mr. Lambert: That is why—

Madam Speaker: —what I am trying to do.

Mr. Lambert: I would never do what you are doing.

Madam Speaker: Would the hon. member please resume his seat.

Mr. Lambert: I would never do what you are doing.

An hon. Member: What a silly thing to say.

Madam Speaker: I want to explain to the House that I have so many questions of privilege to deal with that I am applying a discretion which I applied yesterday.

An hon. Member: It is closure.

Madam Speaker: It is not closure. It is a discretion that the Speaker has and it is given to a—

Mr. Lambert: Only to satisfy—

Madam Speaker: —Speaker for a very good reason, that is, to maintain the flow of debate in the manner in which it should take place in the House. That is the only discretion the Speaker has at this point and that is the one I want to apply. I applied it all day yesterday to the satisfaction of all members. I repeat, I will hear a second speaker only when I have some doubt about whether or not a case of privilege is founded.

In these two particular cases or privilege, members will have to agree with me that the questions brought up were extremely close to the one on which I have just ruled. It is a different court that has made a decision on a matter which hon. members wanted to discuss, but the purport of it is quite close to the one on which I have just ruled. I feel I can rule having heard those two members.

• (1600)

Mr. Lambert: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I was telling the hon. member for St. John's West that his case was not as good as the other Crosbie case to whom privileges of the House were extended. He was not even a member of the House; he was a witness assigned to a particular case. As he was threatened with arrest and would not then be able to testify, the privileges of the House were extended to him. That is not the proper quotation, nor is it an argument that I can take into account in ruling on his question of privilege.

I will have to rule on both questions of privilege separately. I will start with the one raised by the hon. member for St. John's West. Again, the hon. member is referring to the impropriety or to the legality of something or to doubts about its constitutionality. It is quite clear in the Standing Orders that the Speaker cannot rule on the constitutionality of a particular question being discussed in the House. That is not for the Speaker to determine; it is for other authorities in other arenas to have that discussion, certainly not for the Speaker.

The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) also argued questions of legality and questions of constitutionality on which I feel very strongly that I cannot make a pronouncement. I cannot determine these.

Of course, there might be a political argument that the minister should not proceed at this time, but that political argument would be more properly made if and when the motion comes before the House. Both members feel that they are being asked by this House to do something which is illegal and which reflects on their function as a Member of Parliament.

An hon. Member: The court has decided.

Madam Speaker: They know all too well that even if the House were asking them to do something which they feel is illegal or improper, they have the means to deal with it. They will be called upon to vote on such matters.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: I cannot determine that a question is proper or improper. Hon. members are not impeded, nor will they be impeded, from expressing their opinions if and when that motion comes before the House. If they were, I would consider that to be a privilege on which to vote when the proper time comes to do so. Therefore, I cannot find in these two cases a prima facie case of privilege.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. HNATYSHYN—RIGHT OF MEMBERS TO BE HEARD

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to choose my words very carefully because I do not want to reflect on the position of the Speaker of this House. It is one which is regarded by members of Parliament with the greatest degree of care. However, I want to underline that the issues we are now discussing, in terms of the point of privilege raised by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), are matters on which there should be no question to Madam Speaker or to the people of Canada. They are points on which our party is determined to deal with the greatest of resolve as we see appropriate on behalf of our constituents.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, before you rose to pass judgment on this matter, I sought the floor on a point of order to request the opportunity to address myself to the specific points of privilege raised by my colleagues.

Madam Speaker, we all know what the rules are. It is so terribly important for you to listen to points of order and requests from the floor with a degree of flexibility, because we recognize there is no appeal from your decision.

Mr. McGrath: We have made you infallible.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: As a result, if this House is to function, you should err on the side of listening to points of privilege and the supporting arguments in favour of points of privilege to assure that it cannot be said of you, as Speaker, that somehow you rule arbitrarily after hearing one or maybe two members. Members on the government side take this lightly and laugh and jeer, but I can tell them that the people of my constituency and across Canada are not laughing at the government now.

Mr. Pinard: Order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: My contribution may not have swayed your decision, but I felt I had germane comments to bring forward. If we are to have order in this House, I simply ask and I plead with you to let me know what the rules are going to be. If I feel I have some contribution to make to the debate, am I going to be deprived from making it because I am not the first person to rise? Must I come forward with a new question of privilege every time I want to speak in this House? What will the rules be? I would like to know and I think the rest of the members want to know.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I think I can enlighten the hon. member on what the rules are going to be. The rules are quite clear. In listening to questions of privilege, the Speaker may determine at what time she feels she is sufficiently informed. I explained a while ago, before the hon. member rose on his point of order, why I felt I could rule at that time, namely, that I had already heard one similar question on which I had ruled, and these two questions of privilege were very similar to that on which I had ruled. Therefore, having listened to both arguments, I decided I could make a ruling.

That is the Speaker's discretion. If the hon. member is raising a point of order, he would have to point out that I have been in contravention of one of our rules. I do not feel that I have. I am exercising a discretion. I think hon. members have noticed that I have been exercising that discretion a little more strictly for the past few days. As we go along, members will realize that this is a most unusual situation. We have not been able to reach orders of the day for four days. I think we are on the fifth day now.

Mr. McGrath: That has nothing to do with it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: That is unprecedented.

I have two duties. One is to listen to speakers who have the floor and the other is to listen to those who want to have the floor. I have to exercise a balance between these two things and I am trying to be fair.

Yesterday I heard several questions of privilege and restricted the procedure when I felt that I was sufficiently informed, to one speaker. If the first speaker does not convince me that he has a question of privilege and I am sure that another speaker not personally affected or close to that privilege will be able to convince me further, I will hear him. In order to hear all members and to protect all hon. members' freedom of speech, I feel that I have to apply my discretion a little more strictly so I can get to all of the questions of privilege that are before me today.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I rise on the point of order and I will be very brief. I listened to your ruling and also to the arguments of my friends and colleagues from St. John's East and St. John's West.

I have full appreciation of the delicate situation and the difficulty facing the Chair, especially at this time. Situations like this do occur from time to time in the life of a parliament. I am not talking about all members of the House but about the two members from Newfoundland, confronted with the decision brought down by the highest court of their province which indicated that a certain resolution on the floor of the House has been rendered ultra vires or illegal. We all know what the privilege is—that members are not to be restricted from the performance of their duties.

I ask this for clarification, Madam Speaker. By ruling against the point of order, do I understand that, in effect, we thereby put those two hon. members in the untenable position of condoning an illegal act? Those two members representing Newfoundland constituencies have to follow the precedents and deliberations of their highest court, and by not ruling that there is a privilege in this respect are we, in effect, condoning an illegal act?

Madam Speaker: No. The decision of the Speaker as to whether there is a prima facie case of privilege was simply that the particular question raised does not represent privilege and does not supersede other deliberations in the House. The reason I listened to the question of privilege was that the House might be prevented from functioning if the question of privilege were not dealt with. Therefore, what I have just said is simply that there was not a prima facie case of privilege. The debate can continue under other circumstances and at other times, but if the matter is raised now as a question of privilege, I can only say that there is not a prima facie question of privilege. That is all I have said. The implications and the conclusions the hon. member has drawn from my decision are a bit excessive in respect of what is the limit of my decision and my authority.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise on the point of order raised by my colleague, the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn), in my capacity as an officer of the House of Commons who shares your concern for the conduct of this House and for the respect we all want to have extended to the Chair.

We have been in unusual circumstances for the last few days, as you have indicated to the House, as a result of measures introduced by the government and as a result of the active interest that has been taken by a number of members on this side of the House by way of questions of privilege and other questions. There have been several questions raised.

There is no question at all but that the Speaker has discretion regarding the conduct of the affairs of the House of Commons. I think no one would question the existence of that discretion.

You have admitted, Madam Speaker, in response to the point raised by the hon. member for Saskatoon West, that you have been very strictly applying your discretion in the unusual circumstances of these last three of four days. I guess the danger I see as someone who respects Parliament, as you do, is that by following and exercising that discretion very strictly in these unusual circumstances you may be establishing a standard which would apply in other circumstances and which would have the effect of limiting, rather than enlarging, the rights of freely elected Members of Parliament to make their cases on questions important to them, to their constituents and to the conduct and the business of this House.

You indicated earlier, I believe, in a comment today that you had been exercising the strictness yesterday as well and there had been no disagreement with or challenge to it. I think it fair to say there were several people who were concerned about the strictness being followed, but there is a long established practice in this House of challenging a Speaker or expressing reservations only with the utmost care. Consequently, it would probably be an error for Your Honour to assume there was agreement simply because there was silence in response to the strictness in which you exercised your discretion yesterday.

An hon. Member: There doesn't have to be agreement.

Mr. Clark: Someone across the floor says it does not require agreement. That is exactly correct. You do not require agreement, you have discretion. You gain, exercise and maintain that discretion by earning respect in all parts of the House of Commons. It is precisely to address that question of being sure this House is able to function effectively that I rise now. I would not want to see imported into the practices of this House precedents regarding the number of people who are to be heard on a question of order or a question of privilege; precedents which are narrower than those that have been customary, formed in a period of unusual debate; precedents which in the future might not be confined to periods of unusual debate but might become part of the regular practice of this House, to the detriment of individual members of Parliament whose protection you and I have a particular responsibility to assure.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I hope you will not let the member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) intimidate you with this type of argument. What he is attempting to do is to challenge your right to use discretion as you have. Under the Standing Orders you have every right to decide how many members you will recognize on any question of privilege or any point of order. You know that perfectly well and you have acted appropriately.

Madam Speaker, the member for Yellowhead is trying to make us believe that we ought not to establish new practices in the House whereby the Chair, using discretion, would limit the number of speakers on points of order or questions of privilege. However, Madam Speaker, let me say that he is about to establish a new practice which is altogether shameful and unacceptable. Indeed for five days now he has been doing his utmost to prevent the government from proceeding with regular House business. This is the fifth day, Madam Speaker, in which the member for Yellowhead has gone out of his way to frustrate the parliamentary process and prevent us from reaching orders of the day. That practice deserves to be denounced. I find it shameful, unacceptable and hypocritical to the nth degree to see him rise in the House today—

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: The hon. minister already has the floor on a point of order. I cannot entertain another point of order while this one is being debated. I will recognize him later.

Some hon. Members: Make him obey the rules.

Mr. Pinard: Well, Madam Speaker, as you have so aptly put it, I am already on a point of order and I cannot be interrupted even by the member for Yellowhead. What I am trying to explain, Madam Speaker, is that in the exercise of your—

Mr. Clark: I rise on a question of privilege, Madam Speaker.

[English]

Madam Speaker: I stand to be corrected, but it seems to me I cannot hear two points of order at the same time.

Mr. Clark: This is a question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: Privilege in the middle of a point of order?

An hon. Member: You cannot have two points of order.

Madam Speaker: All right. If it is a question of privilege the point of order may be interrupted for that purpose.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, the question of privilege can be resolved very quickly if the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) withdraws his accusation that I am a hypocrite, that being unparliamentary language but language he just used.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I never said that the Leader of the Official Opposition was a hypocrite. I said that his behaviour was hypocritical. That is different, it is not condemned by the authors and it is perfectly parliamentary. So, if I may—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. As a matter of fact, I do not know whether the President of the Privy Council was in the House yesterday when that question was raised, but it had to do with an expression roughly similar to the word just used by the minister and which was not recorded in Hansard but which an hon. member claimed he had heard from another member. The expression did appear on the official record, but not the name of the hon. member, and the hon. member would have wanted me to call to order the other member involved.

• (1620)

First of all, before calling him to order I had to establish whether the word was parliamentary or not. In Beauchesne it appears in both the list of parliamentary expressions and the list of unparliamentary expressions. So I said I thought that expression was not quite appropriate for the House of Commons Debates and I would ask the hon. minister to use it as little as possible. I know he did not address it directly to—

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Madam Speaker: —he did not address it directly to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. Still I think he would make things easier for the House if he were to withdraw that word and replace it by another one more acceptable.

Mr. Pinard: Very well, Madam Speaker, if I can use this as an example to show my colleagues opposite that I respect your authority in this House. I shall be happy to withdraw the word "hypocritical" which I used even though it expresses my feelings quite correctly. I shall withdraw it unequivocally. All I can say is that the behaviour of the Leader of the Opposition in intervening at this stage, after five consecutive days during which, as admitted by his House leader, his party has systematically wasted the time of the House, is totally unacceptable, especially since what he was trying to do was to question your judgment. He complained about the fact or expressed the fear that a practice would develop in this House whereby the Speaker using discretion would limit the number of members who could speak on certain matters. Yet, not only the spirit, but also the letter of our rules states clearly, Madam Speaker, that it is your duty when you are convinced that there is no privilege involve to stop the interventions so that this Parliament can operate in an orderly fashion.

What the right hon. member is now advocating today, in a manner which is far from open, is quite simply to maintain disorder in the House. In his intervention, Madam Speaker, he seems to advocate disorder, and I find this unacceptable. I want to say, Madam Speaker, that we, on this side of the House, wish to proceed with the business of the House and get on with our work in Parliament, and it is a shame that the Leader of the Opposition would lead a team which has been trying to demolish the Canadian Parliament for the last five days.

[English]

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. What the Leader of the Government is doing—in a way that displays the heat that indicates the pressure under which he has found himself in the last little while—is almost coming to the point where he is defending an illegality which was admitted today by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the offer he was making. Unfortunately for the government House leader, he is using language and phraseology with respect to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) which Your Honour yourself has said is not conducive to the appropriateness of debate in the House. When he withdrew one, he used another one which is not appropriate to debate in the House of Commons.

What the Leader of the Opposition was trying to do—and if the Leader of the Opposition was out of order, Your Honour would have called him to order—was to bring to the attention of the Chair a concern he has as a leader in the House of Commons. As an officer of the House, I thank Your Honour for listening to him and for recognizing his intervention for what it was, a real attempt to be helpful to the Chair.

As Your Honour has said publicly, it has been our objective not to do anything that is other than helpful to the Chair.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I have to say that I am not very interested in being helpful to the government, but I am interested in being helpful to the Chair. All of us are.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I do not pretend to be a procedural expert, nor have I heard too many in recent weeks, but I am fascinated, perhaps because I am not a member of the legal profession, to listen.

I am impressed by the standard which Your Honour has set in the last week or ten days. I think the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) referred briefly to the standard of excellence which has characterized Your Honour's performance in the Chair.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: When I first came here—and this is very relevant—I was overwhelmed by the number of expert references on this subject: Bourinot, May, Beauchesne; I could go on and on. I think it was the minister of transport of the time, Mr. Pickersgill, who said that the best rule of thumb in parliamentary procedure is common sense.

I was induced to participate in this point of order when I saw the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) refusing to take his seat when requested to do so by Your Honour. This would be unpardonable enough if it was a member such as myself or my good friend from down east, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan), but the hon. member for Edmonton West is a former Speaker of the House of Commons and he more than anyone else should know that, when requested by the Speaker to take his seat, he should take his seat and set an example for all of us. I am appalled. When I arrived here in 1962, the hon. member for Edmonton West was the Speaker of the House of Commons, and he should set an example for this debate.

What have we had for eight or ten days? There have been questions of privilege. I am not particularly appalled at what is occurring in the House. The rules are there to be used. Rules are there to make debate equal. What I am a little concerned about—but that is not what I am discussing at the moment—is the abuse of those rules.

It worries me when members stand and say that Your Honour has spent too much time or not enough time in determining whether a prima facie case of privilege exists. Surely it is inherent in the rules that Your Honour and only Your Honour can determine whether you want more argument, whether the contributions being made are becoming repetitive or whether, because of the fact that you are hearing questions of privilege or apparent questions of privilege day in and day out and month in and month out, you can come rapidly to the conclusion that certain questions are not questions of privilege.

If this House is to function, we must appreciate that Your Honour and only Your Honour can make such decisions. We are—unintentionally, perhaps, and none of us is without sin—undermining—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mackasey: This is funny to some hon. members opposite who have not been around here long enough, and may not be around here long enough, to get an appreciation for the dignity of the House of Commons, on which I do not presume to have any monopoly. I know some hon. members opposite care as deeply as I do about the House of Commons, but I know one thing, and that is that this place cannot function if we unintentionally—or intentionally, worse still—undermine the dignity and the apparent impartiality, in the opinion of some people, of the Speaker. That is the most important function in the House of Commons.

As was said the other day, the Speaker of this House of Commons is more important in the House of Commons than the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Leader of the Opposition or any particular member. I must say on this point of order that it is important to the point that Your Honour has conducted herself with impartiality, with integrity, with wisdom and with patience over the last ten days.

Mr. Taylor: Flattery will get you nowhere.

Mr. Mackasey: Hon. members opposite do not agree. I am sorry they do not. I do not question their right to disagree, but I happen to believe that we are blessed with a great Speaker and that the last ten days has proved that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member continues, he will embarrass me. He will be making a serious reflection on a member of this House.

Contributions to points of order should be kept extremely brief, and I ask that of the hon. member because others also want to speak.

Mr. Mackasey: Madam Speaker, I do not want to embarrass you with the truth, and I will not embarrass you as the hon. member for Edmonton West did by refusing to accept your instruction to sit down when you were on your feet.

If we are going to operate over the next week, two weeks or one month along this vein—it is quite conceivable we might—then surely to goodness all of us can understand the importance to the whole procedure of the role of the Speaker. We are lucky enough to have a good one. Let us not destroy her.

• (1630)

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): I rise on that point of order, Madam Speaker. Just to be sure, you were addressing yourself to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) at a point when the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) were rising to speak on that question of privilege and you ruled that you had already heard enough on that question. With respect, I submit that the only way you could make that judgment is if in fact those two hon. members were speaking and adding nothing new, and with that in mind I respectfully request that you hear them to see whether they were simply being repetitive.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, I cannot comply with the hon. member's request because I have already ruled on the matter. I guess it is implicit in my decision that I thought I was sufficiently informed and that some of the same arguments were surfacing, namely the constitutionality, legality and propriety of a certain thing. However, I thank him for his suggestion.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I rise on the same point of order, Madam Speaker. If I heard the government House leader correctly, he said that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) was advocating disorder in this House. That statement goes beyond normal political debate, because if there is anyone staying within the rules, it is members on this side of the House. That is quite clear. The only side of this House which is attempting to rewrite the rules and proceed with a matter which could be illegal is the government side. It is obvious, if you look at the motion, that at least in four instances the Standing Orders are to be either disregarded or rewritten. I do not think that it falls properly on the Leader of the Government to suggest that this side is being disorderly when the government is trying to rewrite the Standing Orders.

In light of a provincial supreme court's ruling that what we are doing here is beyond the competence of Parliament, and with two justices of another provincial Supreme Court having come to the same conclusion, there is at least the argument that what we are doing is of questionable legality.

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member is now arguing the substance of the question on which I just ruled. We are now on a point of order and I ask the hon. member to refer to that and not to the ruling.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The point of order was that on more than one occasion you have said that you are not called upon to rule on the legality or constitutionality of, or to give a legal opinion on, a matter under discussion; you backed away on those grounds and I think that is quite right. However, no one on this side asked you to give a legal opinion or make a ruling on constitutionality. You were merely asked to have a matter brought to the floor for a vote so that the issue could be referred to a committee for decision. With all respect, Madam Speaker, you are not being asked to make a legal ruling or one on a matter's constitutionality; no one would ever presume to do that.

Madam Speaker: It goes without saying that I dissociate myself from this debate, but I think I have to comment on some aspects of it and I wish to read to hon. members from Erskine May. Under the heading "Speaker's Discretion in Permitting Matter to be Raised", at page 346 it says:

> As a motion taken at the time for matters of privilege is thereby given precedence over the pre-arranged program of public business, the Speaker requires to be satisfied, both that privilege appears to be sufficiently involved to justify him in giving such precedence (or, as it is sometimes put, that there is a prima facie case that a breach of privilege has been committed): and also that the matter is being raised at the earliest opportunity. If he is not so satisfied when the circumstances are first brought to his attention privately—

That is, when the hon. members give me written notice of their question of privilege. On occasion the Table officers have contacted hon. members to point out that they did not have a question of privilege and to indicate how they might otherwise seek redress, and some members have then decided to withdraw their question of privilege. However, that refers to the practice where:

If he is not so satisfied when the circumstances are first brought to his attention privately, he may inform the member that he is not entitled to raise the matter as a question of privilege—

Which we in this House never do.

In the United Kingdom the practice is quite different and goes to the point where the Speaker rules on the question of privilege on the basis of the written statement and does not hear members in the House. Or he may allow a member to make a statement with a view to ascertaining whether or not a prima facie case can be made out. That is where the discretion of the Speaker can be exercised.

As to the comment made by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, I do not think I said I was applying this discretion strictly but that I was progressively applying it more strictly. That did not mean that I would cut off debate inevitably after one speaker; rather, I will cut it off when I feel I am sufficiently informed, and that is the latitude that the Speaker has. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition fears that I am going into precedents and that this practice might be applied to other circumstances. Well, no. The discretion of the House has been used in different ways, listening to several speakers or just one. So the precedents are on both sides and I am not departing from any custom of this House in doing what I have been doing today and on previous days.

I am not inventing a new rule, it is already there; the practice is established and I am applying it in my discretion. Of course, I do not deny that and I think hon. members would recognize that I have that discretion. I want to assure them that I apply that discretion only when I feel, from the written statement to begin with and then from the statement made in the House, that I am sufficiently informed and ready to rule. I want to give hon. members the absolute assurance that I am as careful as possible not to deprive them of the ability to bring up or better explain a question of privilege if I have the least doubt about it.

Furthermore, I want to say that no one in the House is violating the rules. If any members were, it would be my duty to prevent them, to call them to order, to reprimand them or to impose the sanctions I can impose on hon. members when they are violating the rules. At the present time, none of them is violating the rules; that is the statement with which I must associate myself.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I was elected by the people of my constituency to help keep Canada together. I object to the name-calling of the hon. minister when he discribed myself and other members on this side of the House as a demolition gang.

We are not a demolition gang. We are helping to build Canada. If Canada is being destroyed, it is members on the government side who are doing it; their policies are doing it.

Certainly the minister will not help things in Canada by calling names, particularly untrue ones. I am not part of a demolition gang; I am part of a building gang trying to save Canada from the Liberals.

An hon. Member: Name-calling.

Mr. Andre: What a terrible thing to say.

Madam Speaker: If I may speak to this point of order, the expression is not unparliamentary. The hon. minister expressed his opinion in his way, and the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) expressed his opinion. I must leave it at that. The particular expression was not unparliamentary.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I just wanted to intervene very briefly on the point of order of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor).

An hon. Member: He did not have a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: Then I will raise my own. If the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) gets snarly, as he is, then I will raise my own point of order.

When we were in office from October 9, 1979, until December 14, 1979, the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) was basking in the chairman's chair of Air Canada. During that time, without counting the allotted days, there were 49 sitting days. During that time, 231 of those government members who are trying to tar this party with the brush of obstructionism raised a combined total of 130 questions of privilege and points of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: When they speak of demolition gangs, let them examine their own record. Before they start throwing stones, let them examine their own record.

We were prevented, during those few short sitting days, from doing anything in Parliament. It was a deliberate effort made by hon. members opposite, when they were sitting in opposition, to prevent us from doing everything we wanted to do. We were not talking about the Constitution, something so basically and fundamentally important to our land; we were talking about economic measures to assist Canadians. But let them not cast the first stone, in view of their own dank, dark, bleak record.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

MR. CORBETT—DESIGNATION OF MR. LEBLANC AS MINISTER RESPONSIBLE FOR NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege arises out of the question period yesterday when I put a question to the minister the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has designated as the minister responsible for New Brunswick. I wish to state my question of privilege at the outset so that Your Honour will have knowledge of what I wish to bring to your attention and of the manner in which I feel my privileges as a member of the House have been brought into question.

The Prime Minister stated in the House that members of cabinet have responsibilities pertaining to certain regions of the country and, in some cases, each province. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) was named by the Prime Minister as being the minister responsible for New Brunswick. The same minister said that he does not think he has those responsibilities for the province. I feel my privileges as a member of the House of Commons are being infringed upon if I cannot rely upon the word of the Prime Minister in matters which are obviously critical, or if the minister in question is not prepared to accept the responsibilities conferred upon him by the Prime Minister without prior reference to the House, which he has had ample time to do.

Later in my remarks on this question of privilege, I should like to refer Madam Speaker to Beauchesne's Citation 361 on page 133, which I feel certain you will bring into question. I draw your attention to the fact that I am cognizant of the particular citation, but before getting to that I should like to refer to a publication entitled "The Canadian House of Commons" which was written by Mr. John B. Stewart, a well-known and recognized Canadian who is well-versed in matters of procedure in the House of Commons.

To substantiate Mr. Stewart's qualifications, I should like to indicate that he was elected to the House of Commons in 1962 as a Liberal. He gained a great deal of knowledge as parliamentary secretary to the Hon. G. J. McIlraith. Also he was vice-chairman of the special committee on procedure and organization. I feel this is quite pertinent to the points I should like to make in my question of privilege. Also Mr. Stewart served for a year as legislative adviser to the Hon. D. S. Macdonald, who was the government House leader between 1968 and 1969, during which time a number of procedural reforms were made.

In his publication, Mr. Stewart indicated many things concerning the role of the House of Commons, but one item to which I should like to draw Your Honour's attention is in the second paragraph of page X of the "Preface" of that particular publication. Mr. Stewart states:

> However, the House, like the provincial legislatures before it, has found it desirable to make certain "Standing Orders".

The following is the critical part:

> Indeed, it is mainly by changing old Standing Orders and by making new ones that the House changes its rules.

I feel those quotations are particularly pertinent to the question of privilege I am attempting to make.

On page 56 of his publication, Mr. Stewart writes:

> The basic requirement for an oral question is that it be sufficiently urgent and important to warrant the use of the time of the House. When the Speaker thinks that a question does not meet those qualifications—urgency and importance—he may refuse to allow the minister to answer.

In view of the words of Mr. Stewart, Madam Speaker, I can only assume that you consider the question that I put to the minister designated by the Prime Minister to be responsible for the province of New Brunswick to be of sufficient importance to take up the time of the House. Indeed, because of your non-interference, or at least because of the fact that you did not rule the question out of order, I trust that the question was in order as it was put.

• (1650)

To refresh Your Honour's memory as to how the question was put, I stated:

> Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister who is responsible for New Brunswick, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

I want to make it perfectly clear that in no way am I questioning or arguing with the response I received from the minister; that is not the thrust of my question of privilege. There is no argument with the response I received from the minister who is responsible for the province of New Brunswick. I accepted totally the response that he gave me.

I feel I should now refer to the point I alluded to earlier, which is contained in Beauchesne's fifth edition on page 133, Citation 361, which states:

> A question may not be asked of a Minister in another capacity, such as being responsible for a province, or part of a province, or as spokesman for a racial or religious group.

That was based on a ruling by the Speaker of the House of Commons on October 16, 1968 and is referred to in the House of Commons Journals on pages 132 to 134. The ruling was made as a result of a question which was raised by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), which dealt with the attendance in the House of ministers of the Crown during Question Period. The ruling of the Speaker at that time is quite lengthy and I do not want to take up the time of the House by reading the entire decision. To that end, I will not read the entire decision unless it is the desire of Madam Speaker or members opposite that I should do so.

On page 133 of Mr. Speaker's decision, in the third paragraph, he refers to page 3756 of Hansard for June 1, 1966, the page to which the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond had alluded. Apparently, the hon. member had filed a question seeking information from the then minister of national health and welfare, presumably in his capacity as minister responsible for Nova Scotia. Page 133 of Journals for October 16, 1968, reads in part as follows:

> A ruling was then made to the effect that a question must be addressed to a minister in relation to his administrative responsibilities.

Madam Speaker, I would like you to take under consideration the fact that I believe there has been a precedent set in the House during the past few weeks, particularly during the month of February. In that month a question of privilege was raised by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), who took exception to the fact that the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) was taking over responsibilities which were, in the opinion of the member for Broadview-Greenwood, hiw own. At that point he asked the hon. member for York Centre to clarify his position. The hon. member for York Centre stated, as reported at page 7426 of Hansard for February 18, 1981:

—because the ridings for which the Prime Minister asked me to assume this responsibility do not only include ridings held by members of the opposition, but as well a number of ridings which are represented by Liberal members.

I believe this statement by the hon. member for York Centre began the precedents which are being set in this House of Commons which indicate that ministers were given the responsibility by the Prime Minister to answer directly questions put to them by members of the opposition, which would be, if not acceptable, contrary to Citation 361 of Beauchesne which reads:

A question may not be asked of a minister in another capacity—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member is on a point of order and not a question of privilege. He is referring to matters of order and not to privilege at all. I will allow him to pursue this matter briefly, but I ask him to relate his arguments to the question of privilege and not to a point of order.

Before five o'clock, I must read the following:

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Order, please! It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—McDonald royal commission—Inquiry respecting operation directed at Chinese embassy in Ottawa; the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman)—External aid—Concept of tripartite aid; the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong)—Canadian Armed Forces—Testing of chemical defoliants—Monitoring of effects.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CORBETT—DESIGNATION OF MR. LEBLANC AS MINISTER RESPONSIBLE FOR NEW BRUNSWICK

The House resumed consideration of the question of privilege of Mr. Corbett.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I appreciate your direction. I can assure you from the knowledge I have of the matter that it is extremely important, from my point of view, that Madam Speaker have the advantage of all material and all issues which have been raised in this House pertaining to the responsibility that the Prime Minister has conferred upon members of the cabinet who, after all, must answer in this House of Commons. I feel quite strongly about this and, indeed, I hope Madam Speaker will agree that what I have said is the case.

● (1700)

I would like to refer you, Madam Speaker, to this very point, which was substantiated by the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) as reported in Hansard on February 19, 1981, when, in response to a question by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood, he again stated:

What I would like to tell the hon. member is that ministers for various regions of the country have special responsibilities within the cabinet for representing the interests of those regions.

He goes on to state:

For example, for almost 17 years now I have had a special responsibility within the cabinet for representing the interests of my region, namely, the province of Nova Scotia.

Madam Speaker, I want you to realize that I am not questioning the responsibilities which the Prime Minister has given these ministers. In that regard, I do not believe that I am more apt to have a point of order than a point of privilege. I am simply pointing out that this is, in fact, a responsibility which these ministers have accepted as members of cabinet and as ministers of the Crown.

The Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance went on to say, again from the same page of Hansard:

—but I think it is essential, in our system of government, that ministers be given responsibilities for representing in a special way the interests of their regions in the cabinet and around the cabinet table.

I believe that the words of the Deputy Prime Minister, in his recognition of the special areas of responsibility, are significant enough to contravene the particular section of Beauchesne to which I have referred. However, following that the Prime Minister of the country was drawn into the question. On February 25, 1981, at page 7673 of Hansard, he stated:

Madam Speaker, I want to enter into this debate on the question of privilege because I must confess or admit that I have been responsible for the setting up of this system of traditional regional representations in so far as my party is concerned.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has now been speaking for over 15 minutes, and I cannot see that he will be able to tell me more in the rest of his time than he has already. I already understand what that question of privilege is—and it is really not a question of privilege. I do have to ask the hon. member to conclude. The hon. member is discussing a matter on which I have ruled. Ministers have been given regional responsibilities by the Right Hon. the Prime Minister which are of a political nature. I have ruled that as far as this House is concerned, the mere fact that the Prime Minister has tabled a list of regional responsibilities for ministers does not change the rules of this House. Ministers still answer questions related to their administrative responsibilities. They are entitled to answer those questions. The article from Beauchesne which the hon. member quoted is a direction to a member who is asking a question. A question may not be asked of a minister acting in another capacity, such as being responsible for a province. So that is quite clear. The rules have not been changed.

Political responsibilities or other types of responsibilities might have been assigned outside of this House; but in this House ministers may only answer questions related to their ministerial responsibilities. That has been made quite clear. If that is the question of privilege which the hon. member has raised and which I understand is his question of privilege, he does not have one because that question has already been decided.

Mr. Corbett: I am sorry, Madam Speaker, I am obviously not making the point which I intended to make. I was hopeful that my reference to the publication "The Canadian House of Commons", by the well known Canadian author, John B. Stewart, in which he said that indeed it is mainly by changing old Standing Orders and by making new ones that the House changes its rules, would make my point. Surely we cannot find this House to be so inflexible that it must forever and for eternity stand behind rules which have been laid out for years now that we have a precedent being set in the House which would indicate that those rules should be changed.

Madam Speaker, I will not take up very much more time, but I believe the words of the Prime Minister did not indicate, to any substantial extent, that the ministers he appointed as regional representatives, or as ministers responsible for regional or provincial difficulties or problems, were to deal with matters entirely of a political nature. Madam Speaker, if you would refer to his words found in Hansard on February 25, you will see that he makes many references to the fact that "We have made sure that there was at least a voice from the province at the cabinet table". Surely there must be matters more of a substantial nature which are discussed in cabinet than simply matters which are specifically and peculiarly of a political nature. We can only assume that cabinet is working in the interests of the future of this nation.

So, Madam Speaker, I would ask you to recognize that the appendage found on page 7690 of Hansard, for February 25, 1981, gives validity to our argument that ministers who have been given that responsibility by the Prime Minister and are taking decisions from cabinet—surely cabinet is responsible to this House, and these are the words of the Prime Minister—must either accept those responsibilities or refuse them.

Madam Speaker, I would ask that you refer to these particular issues of Hansard, to the words of the Prime Minister, to the edition of Beauchesne, and to Mr. Stewart's publication before you make a definitive ruling on this particular issue. I would plead with you to give the benefit of the doubt to the common members of this House of Commons who do not have the opportunity or the privilege of sitting in cabinet but must take the word of the Prime Minister, who must abide by and work within the framework of the rules of this House of Commons. This would give us an opportunity to serve the interests of our constituents as best we can with the full machinery which is available through the question period and other areas of procedure in this House of Commons.

I would ask you to consider my submissions and to find that I do indeed have a question of privilege, as do the rest of the members of the House of Commons who are outside cabinet, including members opposite. If you feel, after consideration of these various points that I have raised, that I have a prima facie case of privilege, then I am prepared to move that the matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

• (1710)

Madam Speaker: The hon. member has argued that I should find some validity in the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has tabled a certain document in order to take it upon myself to change the Standing Orders of this House. If hon. members feel that some changes have to be made to the Standing Orders, it is up to the members to follow the procedure which would lead to amending the Standing Orders of the House. Surely the hon. member does not feel that the Speaker may on her own alter the Standing Orders of this House.

During the point of order which was previously raised in the House, members pleaded with me not to depart not only from the Standing Orders but from the usages of this House, and I agreed with that plea. I try never to depart from the rules or practices of this House in the course of conducting the debates in the House of Commons.

The hon. member therefore does not have a question of privilege. If he wants to change the rules of the House he can look up the procedures which would lead to that; but it is certainly not achieved by raising a question of privilege, and certainly not by asking the Speaker to act on her own.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath).

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, I want respectfully to submit at the outset that I am not challenging and indeed I cannot challenge your ruling. I am just trying to reconcile the ruling which you have made with the precedent that was established yesterday. I refer to page 8734 of Hansard, where you allowed the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett) to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) in his capacity as minister responsible for New Brunswick and you allowed the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to respond in that capacity. Then you allowed the hon. member for Fundy-Royal a supplementary question, asking the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to respond to areas that were outside his ministerial competence, and again you allowed the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to reply.

I took that as a precedent whereby I could direct a question, for example, to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) in his capacity as minister for Newfoundland. I am trying to reconcile that precedent which Your Honour allowed yesterday with your ruling today.

Madam Speaker: If the hon. member said he was asking a question of the minister in his capacity as regional minister—I do not remember what the question was about, whether it was about fisheries or not—it is up to the minister to determine that a certain question is not within the purview of his administrative responsibility. The Speaker cannot direct a minister to answer a question. The minister is free to answer the question and to determine whether it is within the purview of his responsibility. I recall that at the end of the answer pertaining to one part of the question asked by the hon. member, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans said that that part of the question or that question—I am not sure which—ought to have been directed to the minister responsible for DREE, if my memory serves me correctly. So there is no precedent established there.

At any rate, the rule is quite clear to hon. members. It is the responsibility of the minister to answer or not.

The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) on this point of order?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Yes, on this point of order, Madam Speaker. As a member from the province of British Columbia, there being no minister with responsibilities in that area whom we can question in this House, it is just possible that our ability to function is impaired. Since we cannot direct questions in this House to a minister who claims to have governmental responsibilities in the province of British Columbia, that puts us in the position of being second-class Members of Parliament. Those members who do have ministers claiming responsibility for provinces in this House can address their questions to that minister.

I feel, therefore, that there might even be a question of privilege for me in protesting that my ability to function has been impaired by the fact that there is no member on that side to whom I can speak if there are problems relating to my province.

Madam Speaker: It seems to me that I have been clear. There is no such thing in this House as a minister responsible for a province. I did say that if that particular responsibility had been assigned by the Prime Minister outside this House as part of the way that the Right Hon. Prime Minister wants to conduct the affairs of his government, then that is no concern of the House. The rule is clear. It has not been changed; it still stands. Members may ask questions of ministers relating to their administrative responsibility. It is very simple; it is very clear.

No question of privilege arises if a member cannot ask a question of a minister supposedly responsible for the province of British Columbia or another province. A member may ask a question relating to the administrative responsibility of a minister; that rule is clear.

The hon. member for Fundy-Royal is rising on the same point of order?

Mr. Corbett: Yes, Madam Speaker. I am in no way challenging your ruling. I just want to make a point.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member may not challenge my ruling and he may not comment. I have ruled on his question and it is quite a clear question. I will not allow comment on a ruling that I have just made. I have accepted a point of order, quite a legitimate one which was brought up by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). We have discussed this and we have discussed that, and we have answered it. If the hon. member has another point of order I may entertain it, but I will not allow him to comment on my ruling.

Mr. Corbett: Madam Speaker, I was just in the process of saying that I was not going to comment on your ruling. My point of order is that the Prime Minister has designated certain ministers in the House, has tabled the relevant document and has given them administrative responsibility. I believe these ministers with that administrative responsibility should address themselves to the responsibilities that the Prime Minister has given them. That is purely my point of order.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: With all due respect, the hon. member is still arguing his question of privilege. I see no difference between the argument offered now and some of the arguments he brought forward earlier, and I listened very patiently for nearly half an hour to his question of privilege.

The hon. member has seen fit to comment further. The comments have now been heard in the House, but I feel that he should have accepted my enjoinment not to comment.

The hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon).

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, earlier today I asked your co-operation that I might raise this afternoon a question of privilege, one relating to a rather major federal government project to be constructed in my riding. I refer to the expansion of the Roberts Bank superport facility. I seek your co-operation in raising this question because I want—

Madam Speaker: I thought the hon. member was rising on a point of order. He does have a question of privilege and he has given me notice of it. I have placed them in a certain order, and that is the order in which I received them. I should like to follow that order. There is a certain sense of justice or fair play in that. If the hon. member allows me, I will now listen to the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), whose question of privilege comes, in my ranking, ahead of his.

MR. OBERLE—ROLE OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I have given you notice of my question of privilege. In the course of what I have to say I hope to demonstrate to you and to the House how a new order has emerged in the House over the last few years, and in particular over the past few months, which has systematically and substantially altered the role of private members in this House. It is one which has changed significantly the role of a private member in the way he represents his constituents. I have numerous examples. I will not cite them all but I hope you will allow me to cite a few to demonstrate how the present government is asserting extra-parliamentary jurisdiction and control over public business through its political friends.

● (1720)

What has happened to this institution in the last little while? Are we, as Members of Parliament, still servants of this institution or have we become the masters? Are we still here to adjudicate and advocate the legitimate aspirations and rights of those who have elected us to this House? How presumptuous of us to say that the institution to which we have been elected should be ours to change. It is somewhat akin to joining a football team. As soon as you are chosen to be a quarterback, you change the rules of the game. It is not for the quarterback or for the members of the team to change the rules. The rules, the Constitution and the order of this House, the time-honoured traditions of this House, cannot be changed by the membership here, and I include in that membership members of the government. We are saying that the House of Commons is the highest court in the land, yet you, Madam Speaker, are being told every day that there are some members who stand accused of being in contempt of that high court.

As you recall, I raised a question of privilege a couple of days ago. I clearly made the case where a minister, a senior official of this House of Commons, was guilty of contempt of the laws made in this House. It is a strange high court where one can be contemptuous, yet a person cannot be accused of being in contempt; where a person can stand up and lie and yet cannot be accused of being a liar.

I would like you to reflect seriously upon what has been happening here in the last few days, Madam Speaker. We are being accused of filibustering the debate, call it what you may; but what this government is doing is harvesting the seeds of discord and dissension by the arrogance it has shown over the last ten years, particularly over the last six months.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is debating something which is not even clear to me. The hon. member is certainly debating. Would he please state very clearly his question of privilege?

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, in my notice to you I stated my question of privilege, namely that the government is asserting itself in an extraparliamentary way in that certain ministers of the Crown and certain persons, who have never been Members of Parliament but have become members of a very privileged class in this country, are asserting themselves publicly. This seriously reflects on me as a Member of Parliament and upon every other member of this House.

Madam Speaker: I interrupt the hon. member to say this much. His question of privilege relates to certain extraparliamentary practices. I want to remind the hon. member that a question of privilege has to be related to proceedings in the House. If he cannot relate, whatever it is he wants to raise to proceedings in the House, it will be very difficult for me to find a question of privilege, but I am open to the hon. member's arguments.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, it is certainly my intention to give references to demonstrate that at least one former high-ranking minister of the government has in a serious way offended the conflict of interest guidelines tabled in this House on two occasions, first in 1979 by the government headed by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), and then in 1980 by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

In order to make my case, I have to preface my remarks so I can be assured that you will be able to adjudicate on my question of privilege. I have said that this country is beginning to be ruled by a very privileged class. To become a member of this privileged class, you have either to be a member, a supporter or a friend of the Liberal Party. Three weeks ago a person who has never been in the House of Commons seriously harmed me by coming between me and my responsibilities in this House of Commons.

I found it necessary to consult with the minister responsible for housing to seek his support in the building of a community college residence in my constituency. This was a matter of the highest priority, not only to the college but to the whole area. I attempted to take this case to the minister. I phoned his office in an attempt to arrange a meeting. After several attempts I was asked by the minister's executive assistant whether the matter had to do with the building of a students' residence at the college of New Caledonia. I told him that it did. I told the assistant it was most important that I see the minister. The reply given to me was that the matter had been brought to the minister's attention by a Monica Becott. The minister had told Mrs. Becott, who brought the matter to Ottawa, that he did not have a mandate to build community college residences in different areas.

Monica Becott is the person who ran against my colleague the hon. member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish) in the last election. Mrs. Becott happens to be the only Liberal in Prince George who is a member of this privileged class.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. There is no question of privilege that I can see up until now. The hon. member is referring to all sorts of things except matters relating to the privileges of members of this House. If the hon. member wants to make a case against a minister who has not paid sufficient attention to something that was brought to his attention by the hon. member, he can do that, but not under the guise of a question of privilege.

I would ask hon. members to interpret privilege in the sense that I have many times recalled to the House. I do not think I need give members a definition of privilege again; I have given it to the House several times. I am sure the hon. member will want to make certain that he does have a question of privilege in the sense that it is defined according to our rules.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, I respect your concern and I understand your anxiety. Nevertheless, I will have to lay before you some of the groundwork so that you can see what is at stake. In this case a minister of the Crown chose to discuss a certain matter, which was considered by a city and a region of our country to be of the highest priority, only with a person who was a friend of the Liberal Party. The minister's secretary would not allow me or my colleague from Prince George-Bulkley Valley to lay the case before him. In fact, I insisted that I see the minister and threatened his secretary with public exposure. I was able to see the minister and I pointed out to him that he does have a mandate to build community college residences. Indeed, he or his department has just recently given approval to the building of a college residence in Vancouver. Surely that is proof of that mandate. I found the minister to be quite co-operative and excited about the project. I am looking ahead in the next week or so to a favourable response from the minister's office.

• (1730)

The minister was denied proper information that could only be given by a Member of Parliament, through restricting himself, or instructing his secretaries and the people around him to keep members of Parliament away, only talking to Liberal friends or twins, or whatever they call them, who are now asserting themselves in a serious way in public business throughout the country.

I wanted to tell you this because I am now coming to the basis of my question of privilege which involves a former president of the treasury board, the Hon. Robert Andras. This matter involves him and other former ministers—and I hope to demonstrate this to you very clearly—in that they have seriously injured, fractured and offended the most basic conflict of interest guidelines this House has the right to have respected and adhered to.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. If some ministers or other members have not lived withing the conflict of interest guidelines, that is not a matter of personal privilege which the hon. member should present at this time. If he has any indication of that, he can pursue the matter on other occasions, make a charge, or follow whatever procedure he feels he has at his disposal in order to make that point before the public and before the House.

The hon. member has now been speaking for 12 minutes and he has not spoken at all of anything which is remotely related to a question of privilege. Hon. members want me to abide strictly by the rules, and I am trying to do that. There is an equal responsibility on the part of members also to abide by the rules. The hon. member cannot suggest he does not know the rule. I have several times read before this House what constitutes the basis for a question of privilege and I know he is capable of relating to that definition. I am sure he would not want to bring before me matters which are not related to privilege. I have to tell the hon. member that for the last 12 minutes that is exactly what he has been doing.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, you know me well enough, having been with me in this House for nine years, to know that I do not abuse the rules. I make it a point not to do that. Surely the narrow definition of a question of privilege is that when a member finds he cannot exercise the mandate for which he has been elected, in one way or another, he has some recourse to the Speaker with an opportunity to air a grievance by way of a question of privilege. I have certainly told you that I have not been able to exercise my mandate, having been denied access to a minister for a considerable period of time. I am now about to tell you how a former minister has breached the conflict of interest guidelines, and I relate that again to the way I have been hampered in the discharge of my duties in this House. I will get to that and I will not use any more time than necessary in making this point to you.

It is my belief that the Hon. Robert Andras, the former president of the Board of Economic Development Ministers and president of the Treasury Board, has, since he decided not to seek re-election in the February, 1980, general election, acted in a manner which violates the conflict of interest guidelines established by the two Prime Ministers—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Not only is the hon. member not speaking about a question of privilege, he is speaking on a matter of debate regarding whether some individual has followed guidelines, and he is referring to a former minister to whom these guidelines tabled in this House do not apply because he is no longer a minister of the Crown. I would ask the hon. member to use some of his logic in order to defend his question of privilege.

Mr. Oberle: Again with respect, Madam Speaker, I beg to differ with you. These guidelines to which I am about to make reference do apply to former ministers. I will quote from the guidelines which were tabled by the present Prime Minister in May, 1980. These are guidelines which relate to post-employment, and they state in part:

> Former ministers are requested not to engage in the activities described in category A for a period of two years after leaving a given position, and to delay for one year any participation in activities described in category B.

These are guidelines which were adopted and tabled in the House of Commons and they apply to former ministers.

I want to go to category A which states that a minister must not:

> (a) accept appointment to a board of directors of a commercial corporation which, as a matter of course, was in a special relationship with the department or agency for which they were responsible on an ongoing basis during the last two years of their participation in the Ministry;—

It also states that ministers must not:

> (b) change sides to act for or on behalf of any person or commercial corporation in connection with any specific proceeding, transaction, case or other matter to which the Government of Canada is a party and in which they had a personal and substantial involvement on behalf of the government during the last two years of their participation in the ministry;—

Without quoting further, I would like now to tell you what happened in the case of the Hon. Robert Andras. He was the economic development superminister and the president of the Treasury Board before he left. As you know, Mr. Andras became president of the Board of Economic Development Ministers in November, 1978. He held that post until the Liberal government's defeat in the 1979 election. He continued to serve as a Member of Parliament until the Clark government's defeat in December, 1979, at which time he announced he would not seek re-election.

On February 18, 1980, the date of the most recent election, by sheer coincidence, this particular ad appeared in the Financial Times of Canada:

The Rt. Hon. Roland Michener, chairman of the board announces the appointment of the Hon. Robert Andras, PC as Senior Vice President of Teck Corporation. Mr. Andras left a successful business career to devote the last 14 years to public service and held a number of Ministries in the Federal Government during a period of 11 years ending in May, 1979, the most recent being president of the Board of Economic Development Ministers and president of the Treasury Board. Mr. Andras will also be a director and member of the executive committee of Teck Corporation and a key member of the management team responsible for continued growth of the economy.

Having regard to his appointment, Mr. Andras was quoted in the Vancouver Sun on July 12, 1980, as saying:

The fact that I had been a senior minister and, therefore, one might consider well connected with the power structure I'm sure was not a negative thing.

By accepting this position with Teck Corporation less than eight months after he ceased to be the super minister of the Board of Economic Development Ministers, I believe Mr. Andras seriously violated the principle of both the August, 1979 and May, 1980, guidelines for the conduct of former ministers.

• (1740)

Let me just briefly, and without taking up too much more time, illustrate what happens when the skids get greased and the right person is appointed to the board of directors of such a corporation. On August 6, 1980—

Madam Speaker: Order. I will concede one point to the hon. member. Those guidelines apply for two years, but I believe the election was held in May of 1979, and Parliament must have been dissolved six or eight weeks before that, so we are very close to the two years, but I will concede to the hon. member that the two years might not be up.

However, that being said, the fact that a former minister, or even a present minister, would have violated the guidelines of conflict of interest does not constitute a question of privilege.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, it does violate my privilege to act effectively in my responsibility to represent a very important area of Canada. I will come to that by illustrating now what happens when a person as well connected with the central power structure as Mr. Andras considered himself to be joins such a corporation and becomes active in greasing the skids.

On August 6, 1980, Senator Olson dispatched a cable which was recently tabled by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) in the House. The cable was in connection with Teck Corporation's activities in beginning a megaproject in British Columbia—in my constituency, in fact—in connection with the export of coal from northeastern British Columbia. I will not quote the whole document, but I would like just to put on the record two salient sentences in the document. In fact, Senator Olson used this document to convey to the province of British Columbia that the federal government was no longer interested in making available public funds to enhance the economic viability of the project. This is what Senator Olson said:

The current proposal from British Columbia, however, provides no indication that either government could directly recover its investment.

"Either government" being the government of British Columbia or the Government of Canada. Another sentence says:

—we wouldn't want to be in the situation where southeast and northeast producers were being played off one against the other, or worse, Canadian interests being played off against other international competitors.

In other words, the coal producers in the province of British Columbia had asked the federal government for a very significant subsidy on freight rates to get the coal to tidewaters and also for very significant subsidies to build a port in Prince Rupert and to help through other departments and agencies with the procurement of infrastructure.

Something happened between October 6 and February 9 because after consultation with people who were formerly well connected with the power structure, such as the Hon. Ron Basford, who is now the coal czar of British Columbia, being engaged at a daily rate of $600, and other well connected Liberals who are involved in this particular scheme in British Columbia and after they were asked to act and grease the skids and remove the blockage that had obviously occurred in Ottawa, this happened on February 9, 1981: the same minister sent another communique to Victoria. This time he said that the federal government was prepared not only to assist with a fixed throughput charge to the port of Prince Rupert and to help on a 50-50 basis to put in place the facilities at the port, but also to assure between now and 1989 that the coal would be dipatched at a fixed rate of $3 per tonne, which is called a throughput charge. The federal government also committed itself through the CNR to an expenditure of $225 million for the upgrading of facilities.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Really, I do have to interrupt the hon. member. Will the hon. member not co-operate with me and conclude immediately, or will I just have to determine the matter right now, after having listened to the hon. member since 5.20? He has not yet discussed the matter of privilege which he wants to bring before this House. Nothing in what he has said has related to privilege. I do not want to read the riot act and give him the definition of privilege, but he knows in his heart of hearts that he has said nothing which relates to privilege. He is actually using this occasion to air a number of facts about which he is aggrieved. This is not the time to raise these things, but he is in fact doing so. I must consider that to be unfair to other hon. members who might have questions of privilege to raise this afternoon but who will not be able to do so.

So in the interest of the House the hon. member should come to the point. This would be in the hon. member's interest as well because I think there is a certain credibility attached to the way an hon. member discusses his question of privilege. I think I will not hear the hon. member for more than five minutes more.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, it may be true that I have been speaking for 20 minutes, but it is also true that you have interrupted me four times in that period. Every time you do, Madam Speaker, I get to the point where I find it very difficult to restrain my temper.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, if you want to know how my privilege is affected, there is a scheme afoot between this government and the government of British Columbia to build in my constituency, no more than 30 miles away from my home, a new town to house 10,000 people, and I am not being told what it is all about. I have a difficult time getting any information from this government in order to make any contribution to this debate. The minister has tabled in this House a document which shows that there have been 42 studies in connection with this project. I suppose I can get hold of any one of those studies and look at them, but of the 42 studies not one deals with the socioeconomic effects of this whole mega-project. There is not one that deals with native people who will be affected by this project. There is no information about that. There is reference to one study which deals with public information. It is yet incomplete. It is to be a public information brochure. There are 42 other studies which deal with archeological projects, fish and wildlife, but nothing about people. That is my question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Oberle: Does anybody in this House care about people any more? That is my question of privilege. I demand the right to access to information, not just because I am a member of Parliament in this House, but because I am a citizen of an area of Canada where the future lies and on which all of Canada depends. I do not demand access to that kind of information just because I am a member of the House or because I am a member of this privileged class of which I have given Your Honour some examples—and I could give some more. I want to know all about this project because I am chosen by the people of that crucial area to represent them and to represent them adequately in this House, and my people are being denied a voice in this House by these people opposite who act as if they were in this world alone and as if everything which has gone on before should no longer be. They act as if they had better ideas. They think we should change the Constitution and entrench rights. They think they know best what everyone's rights are. That is my question of privilege. I admit that had it not been for this arrogance—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Oberle: The sheep on the other side are baaing. If I pause for a moment, Your Honour can hear it through the microphones. They are trained sheep on the other side, and they are baaing.

We are into a very serious debate in this House. We are shaking the very foundation of this institution because Members of Parliament are no longer fulfilling the role they were elected to fulfil. As indeed the Prime Minister once said, Members of Parliament are nobodies when they leave this institution and when they are gone. But as long as we are here, in the confines of these four walls, I have the right to speak. I do not care what this demagogue tells me when I leave this House, because the people of Canada will judge him sooner or later. But as long as I am here, I will speak for my constituents. I will demand information about what these people are doing to my constituents and to my country. And, Madam Speaker, my question of privilege is that you have a responsibility to ensure that, so long as I am between these four walls, these people will listen. I have the right to speak, and if they do not want to listen, they can go out behind the curtain and carry on with their parties and phone their privileged friends all over the country and do whatever they want, but I want the right to speak and I do not want to be interrupted 15 times just because it takes me a little longer than the next guy to make a point.

• (1750)

Now, I hope I have made my point. If you find that I have a question of privilege, I want you to allow me to take my case before the appropriate committee of this House. I do not want you, Madam Speaker—and you would not want the burden—to rule on whether or not I have a case, that is why we have the committee of privileges and elections, but you cannot forever hold back this anger and frustration; it will boil over. And when it does, we all, the country and this institution, will suffer. So I plead with you, Madam Speaker, to take one of these questions of privilege and let it go to committee and let them decide whether these people are behaving in a manner which is not traditional and which is not consistent with the great history of this country.

Madam Speaker: I think the hon. member has an indication of what I am going to say. He certainly has indicated to this House that he is obviously quite concerned about the matter he has raised, and I am sure the House has noted his concern, but the matter he has raised is one for debate, certainly; it is perhaps a very serious one but that is not for me to determine. The hon. member is right, I do not rule on questions of privilege, I must only find whether there is a prima facie case, after which the matter might be sent to a committee for study, but I am unable to find a prima facie case on this particular question.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. RAE—EARLY DETERMINATION BY MADAM SPEAKER OF PRIMA FACIE CASE

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I suppose after what has happened the last four or five days none of us mind that the House is being used as a forum for primal scream therapy, but it occurs to me as a member of this House that we also have rights here. You mentioned other members have questions of privilege they want to raise and their rights are being affected by the fact that they cannot speak. I seem to remember a time not very long ago when we discussed things other than questions of privilege in this House, and that was not the only other item of business being delayed by these questions of privilege.

I would like to ask you, Madam Speaker, to consider on behalf of all members of the House whether it would not be possible for you, on the basis of the initial arguments being put forward by a member, to determine whether or not there is a prima facie case. I can think of very few forums, courts or institutions in which I have operated, very few caucuses, very few democratic forums, city councils or trade union meetings that I have attended where there is an assumption that each and every member has the right to expound on his own private theories or concerns at whatever length they choose while the rest of the country sits back and waits for the process to end.

It would seem to me in this context the Chair has a certain responsibility at a very early stage of the presentation of an argument to determine whether or not the case is spurious, simply made for the purpose of using up time or making a private point, or whether in fact there is a genuine argument being put forward. I admit that is a difficult task for the Chair, and I certainly admit the Chair has been put in a difficult position over the last few days, but I would say to all members of the House that at some point—only time will tell when that point comes—we have to ask ourselves how long we as a chamber can function when, for the fifth day, now we find ourselves unable to contemplate our own business and the only thing we can contemplate is the navel of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, and I object to that. I think the Chair has a role in seeing that every question of privilege does not go on for half an hour and then finding that, in a strict procedural sense, there is nothing the Chair can do about it. I think we have an obligation not to use up that time before we come to the end of the road and find nothing there. There is a need for the House to get on with its business, and I would hope that the Chair would bear that in mind.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I cannot let the remarks made by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) go by unchallenged. He, of course, is a new member here and is not aware of the history of his own party in raising points of order like this. I see he has made his brief contribution and disappeared from the House. I would point out to him that he raised a question of privilege with respect to the establishment of regional ministers, one of whom was appointed, amongst others, for every constituency in Ontario and Quebec by this Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)—a radical departure from practices in the past. And that member, with other contributors, took up some two hours on his question of privilege. Yet he is asking you, Madam Speaker, to judge that while he has the intellectual capacity to raise questions of privilege deserving of serious consideration, no one else here has.

Point of Order—Mr. Rae

This period in which we find ourselves was commenced with a question of privilege raised by myself, which the Chair still has under consideration, concerning the abuse of taxpayers' funds and the illegal use thereof in establishing constituency offices, impeding my activities as a Member of Parliament. He cannot now stand there and say that these questions of privilege are spurious; he contributed to that very question of privilege. Indeed, Madam Speaker, he cannot complain about you not coming to quick decisions because his contribution was terminated by the Chair on that occasion.

Speaking of navels, Madam Speaker, it seems to me that the parliamentary navel of the NDP is so minute that it would take their combined intellect and they would all still have the room to wear an extra hat inside it.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I am a new member here, not as studied as the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), but the role of the Speaker is clearly defined in Section 84, page 25 of Beauchesne's. It is quite simple and contradicts the implication of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) that you should be able to make a snap decision on these matters. It says:

> The Speaker requires to be satisfied, both that privilege appears to be sufficiently involved to justify him in giving such precedence . . . and also that the matter is being raised at the earliest opportunity.

To judge whether a question of privilege is involved requires that you yield to that member sufficient time to make his case. That is quite clearly set out in Beauchesne's, and I hope we will not be subjected to further unnecessary interventions from the member for Broadview-Greenwood.

Madam Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m. this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. At six o'clock I was about to respond to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) wherein he suggested that it should be in the hands of the Speaker to do something about containing—and I do not remember his words—certain questions of privilege.

I just want to say to the hon. member that it is not possible for the Speaker to change any of the rules or to make any suggestion in this respect. I am presiding over the deliberations of the House according to the rules which have been set by the House of Commons. If the House of Commons wants to do anything about this, if it has any suggestions, I am in the hands of the House. I am its servant; I am not its master. So, I must respond to the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood in this sense.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HAWKES—RINGING OF BELLS BEFORE COMMENCEMENT OF SITTINGS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, as near as I can tell, my question of privilege this evening is one which has not been argued before in the House of Commons. I feel it is important because it affects the privileges of all members, whether they happen to be cabinet ministers or backbenchers.

My question of privilege is built on the foundation of five citations. If I may begin, I should like to refer to Citation 16 which is contained in Beauchesne's fifth edition. This citation concerns the definition of "privilege", and it reads as follows:

Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by members of each House individually,—

I think an emphasis of the word "individually" is important. It continues:

—without which they could not discharge their functions and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals. Thus, privilege, though part of the law of the land, is to a certain extent an exemption from the ordinary law.

The distinctive mark of a privilege is its ancillary character. The privileges of Parliament are rights which are "absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers". They are enjoyed by individual members, because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its members;—

I think the following is a crucial statement: "without unimpeded use of the services of its members". It continues:

—and by each House for the protection of its members and the vindication of its own authority and dignity. Sir Erskine May, Treatise on the Law, Privileges, Proceedings and Usage of Parliament (19th ed., 1976), p. 67.

I think Beauchesne felt that part of the thrust of that citation was important enough to be repeated in Citation 104 under the section entitled: "Access to the House of Commons" which reads as follows:

The time-honoured privilege of members to have free and unimpeded access—

Again we find the word "unimpeded". It continues:

—to the Parliament Buildings should be recognized even if there is some question as to the extension of the term "parliamentary precincts", and in particular whether the jurisdiction of the Speaker, exercised on behalf of members, extends beyond the limits of the Parliament Buildings themselves.

I think it is clear that extends to those within the Parliament Buildings.

I should like to refer to how that was interpreted by Erskine May in the nineteenth edition. Turning to Chapter X, "Breaches of Privilege and Contempts", the first paragraph reads as follows:

It would be vain to attempt an enumeration of every act which might be construed into a contempt, the power to punish for contempt being in its nature discretionary. Certain principles may, however, be collected from the Journals which will serve as general declarations of the law of Parliament. It may be stated generally that any act or omission—

I emphasize the word "omission". It continues:

—which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament—

Again we find the words, "obstructs" and "impedes". It continues:

—in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any member or officer of such House in the discharge of his duty, or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce such results—

That is a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce the result of obstructing or impeding. It continues:

—may be treated as a contempt even though there is no precedent of the offence.

Turning to page 220 of the nineteenth edition of Erskine May, there is a section entitled: "Access to the Houses of Parliament" which reads as follows:

To facilitate the attendance of members without interruption, both Houses, at the commencement of each session, by order, give directions that the commissioner of the police of the metropolis shall keep, during the session of Parliament, the streets leading to the Houses of Parliament free and open, and that no obstruction shall be permitted to hinder the passage thereto of the lords or members. The police accordingly give every facility to members and officers of the two Houses to cross the streets and approach the Houses of Parliament without interruption and where necessary hold up the traffic for this purpose. The Speaker has informed the House when for some special reason it is expected that the police will have difficulty in complying with the terms of the sessional order.

I have read that fourth citation simply because it brings to light, in a somewhat graphic form, the importance of that part of our traditions which has been attended to over the years in terms of the very important principle that something is wrong when the attendance of members coming to this House is impeded.

● (2010)

Madam Speaker, my question of privilege relates to those principles which I have read out of Beauchesne and Erskine May and which first came to my mind a couple of nights ago. I have spent some time gathering evidence related to the purpose of the bells. I think there are precedents in Erskine May and in the Standing Orders for the use of bells related to divisions, but I have searched our Standing Orders and there is an omission with respect to the use of bells to call members to the sittings of the House. The only reference which I could find which deals with the issue of warning is in the last reference, which I would like to read. It is found in Beauchesne's fifth edition, Citation 203. It deals with the opening of a sitting of the House. You may note, Madam Speaker, that it does not deal with the commencement after the dinner break, but simply with the opening of the House. I think the first three words of the citation are most critical, although not very precise. The citation reads as follows:

A few minutes before the appointed hour for the opening of a sitting, on the day following his election, and every sitting day thereafter, the Speaker and his suite leave his library for the chamber. They march in the following order: The Chief Constable and two sergeants, the Sergeant-at-Arms bearing the Mace, the Speaker, the Clerk of the House, the Clerks Assistant. A page, walking to the Speaker's right, carries documents to be read by the Speaker. They proceed to the Hall of Honour and the front corridor. At the chamber door, the men who precede the Mace halt and stand at attention whilst the others enter the chamber. Members, who may then be in their seats, rise as the Speaker walks to the chair. The Sergeant-at-Arms stops at the end of the Table, waits until the Speaker has taken the chair, then places the Mace on the Table, bows and goes to his desk. When there is a quorum present the Speaker reads Prayers (alternatively in English and French on successive days) the Clerk saying Amen at the end of each invocation.

The reason I read Citation 203, which is related to the opening of a sitting of the House, is that any reader of that citation can tell that the procedure does take some minutes. A practice has been developed in this House of ringing the bells when the parade commences, thus giving warning to all members of this chamber, no matter where they happen to be, whether in the Confederation Building, the West Block or an office in this building. The ringing of the bells signifies that in a few minutes the proceedings of the House will take place. It gives each of us an opportunity to be present in the House to form part of the initial quorum and to represent our constituents in the manner we were elected to do.

There is no citation in Beauchesne's, or in the orders of the day, that I could find which deals with the issue of the ringing of the bells prior to the evening session. Having sat here in this chamber for the past few days, Madam Speaker, I have noted that the ringing of the bells has varied between something close to two minutes to as little as 21 seconds.

When the House rose at six o'clock this evening I looked at two clocks which are located in the chamber, one at the end of the chamber and one opposite from where I am standing. There was a one-minute difference between those two clocks. It is interesting to note that there is nothing in Beauchesne, Erskine May or in the precedents of this House which deals with the issue of which is the master clock. The Standing Order says that we shall recommence on Tuesday evening at eight o'clock. But how is a member to define eight o'clock? Is he to look at the clock at the end of this chamber, the clock on the side wall or a clock in the Confederation Building?

As you well know, Madam Speaker, the proceedings of the committees are an extension of this House, therefore, vital to our functions here. I have seen clocks at each end of the room where committee meetings are held which are as much as five minutes apart. Are we to commence a meeting scheduled for 3.30 in the afternoon by consulting one clock which reads 3.30 or another which reads 3.25? A member arrives at 3.30, according to one of the clocks in the room, but the proceedings have been under way—

Madam Speaker: I cannot say what I must say in English.

[Translation]

If the clocks did not agree and if the hon. member noticed it, he should have got to his feet at that time and brought the matter to the attention of the House. Then the situation could have been remedied. The House having been made aware of the situation, proceedings in the House could have started on the basis of the clock indicating the correct time. Finally, the right time is not a topic on which a question of privilege can be based.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: I know that the clocks in the chamber are self-correcting. I believe you, Madam Speaker, are in charge of all of the facilities in each and every building which constitute Parliament. I believe there are many clocks in those buildings which are not self-correcting from a central point—

Madam Speaker: I must interrupt the hon. member. At some point one must have a bit of fun. I believe there was a time in the middle ages when there was a clock man who went around and set all the clocks. Maybe we should have that service here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: That is a solution which had not occurred to me, and it might be one worth considering. I think it is a point about which it is somewhat easier to see humour in rather than some other points. I would hate it if by the introduction of humour or a smile on my face I were to indicate to you that I do not believe that this is a serious long-term issue.

Drawing from my own experience, there are days when I am in my office in the Confederation Building at 2 p.m. At that time I am often so engrossed in the work that I do on behalf of my constituents that it comes as a shock to me when the bell rings. If it is necessary for one to be in the chamber at the commencement of the sitting day, and if one leaves his office immediately, one still arrives at a time when the business of the House has commenced. Perhaps I see this in somewhat of a different vein than you might expect, Madam Speaker. I see the absence of a warning bell ringing a sufficient length of time to alert me to come from wherever I may happen to be on the Hill as an obstruction. It is an obstruction which perhaps is in the same category as a barrier placed across the street. Those of us who are assigned offices in the Confederation Building by Your Honour sometimes run into traffic which impedes the form of transportation available to all of us. That delays our appearance in the House even further.

I think it is incumbent upon the House to have a set of Standing Orders which are fair to all of its members, no matter where his office is situated. As I look across the chamber I see some hon. members opposite who face the same kind—

• (2020)

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I think I have the gist of the hon. member's question of privilege. I must tell the hon. member that there is nothing in the Standing Orders which obliges us to ring the bell. We do it as a form of assistance to members, to alert them that the House will begin its deliberations. How long should the bell ring? It has been a standing practice that at eight o'clock the bell rings until such time as the Chair sees a quorum. That seems to be a legitimate time. For instance, how am I to know that the hon. member for Calgary West might come into the House that night, and should I be waiting for him to come into the House? If the bells were ringing for a number of minutes, would it be helpful to the hon. member if, at that particular time, he happened to be shopping in one of the stores of the national capital? The bells would not ring over there. It is absolutely impossible to give that kind of warning. Hon. members are held responsible for coming into the House at the time that they want to come into the House, and they know very well at what time the House starts its proceedings, be it in the afternoon or in the evening. There really is no question of privilege in what the hon. member has been talking about since the beginning of this session, and I must tell him that I see no question of privilege, and I cannot hear him any longer.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. NIELSEN—EARLY RINGING OF BELLS BEFORE SITTINGS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have a point of order having to do with the function of the House. I think it is trite to say that all hon. members should be treated equally. I know hon. members over there have treated this question of privilege as being frivolous, but it is quite serious. On a question of order, the practice of many years has been that those bells have been rung for two reasons: one, to call a quorum; two, to call division. The bells were established when this place was established. This was the only building in the parliamentary precincts that housed hon. members. We now have the Confederation Building, the South Block, the West Block and the East Block.

All that the hon. member is suggesting to the Chair is that perhaps, since this place must commence its proceedings at predetermined times, those bells should start at a time—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Nielsen: —when all hon. members have equal warning. It may well be that the Chair, the Speaker, who is the only person who sees the clocks in this place, might afford all hon. members equal treatment by commencing those bells at a time which would permit all hon. members to have sufficient warning to get here at the times when this place is obliged to sit by the Standing Orders. It is not a question of—either that, or do away with the bells.

An hon. Member: Different hours!

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, with all due respect to my friend, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) who has long service in this House, he has offered, a moment ago, one of the most infantile arguments I have ever heard in my years in the House. I am parliamentary secretary of the government House leader.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

Mr. Collenette: My office is located in the Confederation Building. Surely hon. members know that the House reconvenes at eight o'clock following the dinner break, and that one makes provision. As parliamentary secretary to the government House leader, I know that I must leave my office perhaps five or ten minutes earlier than that other hon. member to be here at eight o'clock. I am sure that when Hansard is read many years hence, when we see the steps to which the opposition has resorted to delay debate in this House, those people who read Hansard at that particular point in time will be incredulous. I find it equally incredulous that we have spent, I suppose, 25 minutes since the bells stopped this evening—

An hon. Member: You are filibustering.

An hon. Member: No. 24.

Mr. Collenette: —on the point of order of the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), who should know better, but what disturbs me even more is that we have listened to the interjection of a learned hon. member who has been here for 23 years, the hon. member for Yukon—

Mr. Nielsen: Twenty-three and one half.

Mr. Collenette: —who argues that there should be some kind of a preferential bell. The electorate of Canada—

An hon. Member: What's a preferential bell?

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, the electorate of Canada sends us here to behave as adults to legislate in the name of all Canadians. If one cannot organize one's time so as to make sure that we are here at eight o'clock—if one's building is located just off the Hill, as it is with the Confederation Building—then we really have no business being here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Collenette: I have been here for five days, and I have listened to the delaying and the obstructionist tactics of the hon. members opposite.

Madam Speaker: Order. The point of order is getting a bit long, and I think the hon. member for Yukon gave me my cue in this particular question of privilege raising a point of order. He did say that the bells have been traditionally used in this House to call a quorum and for division. If the hon. members objected to their ringing, if the Standing Order did not oblige us to ring the bells at eight o'clock, that would be one thing. But the Standing Order is quite clear that at six o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, Mr. Speaker is to leave the chair until eight o'clock. That is sufficient warning to all hon. members to come here at eight o'clock. If they are located a little farther from the House of Commons, it is up to them to allow more time. We can do nothing about it, just as we can do nothing about ensuring that they will not miss their train if they live farther away than somebody else and they leave five minutes too late. There is nothing the Chair can do about that.

The hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon).

Mr. Cossitt: On the same point of order.

Madam Speaker: No, I have just—

An hon. Member: The point of order has been dealt with.

Madam Speaker: I have disposed of this point of order.

Mr. Cossitt: Well, Madam Speaker, I raise—

Madam Speaker: Is the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) rising on a new point of order?

Mr. Cossitt: With respect to this matter of bells, I think there is another—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Madam Speaker: Order!

Mr. Cossitt: There is another factor which has not—

Madam Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Cossitt: Well, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Cossitt: On a further—

Madam Speaker: Order! I said that the point of order has been disposed of. I think it is quite clear to any hon. member who can understand my English that it has been disposed of. The hon. member said he was rising on a new point of order. It was not a new point of order. He spoke again about the bells. I will not hear him.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, it is a further point of order. How do you know, if you have not heard it, Madam Speaker?

An hon. Member: She did not recognize you.

Mr. Cossitt: I have a further point of order. How can Your Honour say you cannot hear me unless you—

Madam Speaker: Order. I have recognized the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). The hon. member said he had a new point of order. It was not new. He was talking about the bells. I will now recognize the hon. member for Bow River.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I was not permitted to elaborate on what my point of order was.

An hon. Member: That is because she can only take one at a time. Wait your turn.

Mr. Cossitt: I will wait my turn. That is right.

MR. TAYLOR—INACCURACY IN "HANSARD" IN RECORDED TIME OF SITTING

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I want to refer to the point of order in regard to the record in Hansard. In Hansard it is reported that we start at eight o'clock every evening. That is not accurate. Future generations, when they read that, will say, "They are certainly accurate in the House of Commons." However, as a matter of fact, I have been keeping tab on time for several weeks. Last week, on Monday, March 23, we started at six minutes after eight o'clock. On March 24, we started at seven minutes after eight o'clock.

An hon. Member: It is because the Tories were not here!

Mr. Taylor: On March 26, we started at 8 p.m. sharp. The first time and the only time—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: Hold your clapping for just a moment. That was the first time and the only time since this session started that we did start at eight o'clock. There have been occasions when I waited for 12 minutes or 13 minutes for the government to get a quorum, yet the next day in Hansard it was recorded that we started at eight o'clock. This is not accurate. The only place where I find time is kept accurately is at the Table, and the Clerk at the Table has these times.

So when we start six minutes, seven minutes or ten minutes after 8 p.m., we encourage hon. members to be late, because one old-time hon. member said to me. when I raised this point, that this has grown through practice because some hon. members are farther away and they must have a reasonable amount of time to arrive here, equal to other hon. members of the House of Commons.

I do not know what the history is; but I know that Hansard is not accurate. I have been keeping time since the beginning of this session, and I know that the only occasion on which we started at eight o'clock was the other night; and that was a fast one that the Liberals tried to pull, and it backfired on them.

• (2030)

Madam Speaker: Hansard does not say that debate resumed at eight o'clock—"the House resumed at 8 p.m." It does not say debate started at eight o'clock. That is point number one.

The other point is that the bells start ringing but Standing Orders say nothing about ringing the bells. We could resume the House at eight without ringing the bells. If that is what hon. members want, they can let me know and we will stop ringing the bells. I am in the hands of the House. This is the custom. The bell rings at eight o'clock.

We start when there is a quorum but the Standing Orders say nothing of a quorum either. The practice has been that we wait until there is a quorum for the very good reason that any member could get up in his place and call for a quorum, so we may as well wait for it. And we usually get it at 8.03, 8.04 or 8.05 p.m.

At any rate, the hon. member says that the the only time that the House began its sitting at eight o'clock was that other night. I have to tell him that every time I have been sitting in the chair at eight o'clock, I have been here at eight o'clock sharp.

Mr. Taylor: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

An hon. Member: What point of order?

Mr. Taylor: I did not mention bells at all. I could not care whether they ring or not; that is the least of my worries, but when Hansard next day said we started at eight o'clock when it was six minutes after eight, ten minutes after eight, we are not putting—

Point of Order—Mr. Cossitt

Madam Speaker: I gave that answer and explanation to the hon. member. "The House resumed at 8 p.m." Hansard does not say that the debate started at eight o'clock.

Mr. Taylor: A point of order. The House did not—

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) on a new point of order.

MR. COSSITT—RINGING OF BELLS BEFORE SITTINGS

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, I will not mention the word "bells" because I now realize that is a dangerous word to use at this point. I feel that the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette) made a statement that reflects very severely on the privileges of members of this party or members of the official opposition when he said something to the effect, if I may paraphrase his words, that in future years people would look at Hansard and comment on what a terrible way the opposition behaved. That is the effect of what I said. That, I suggest, is really debate, but if that is going to be allowed then I would make one comment and that is that I suggest that in future years people will look at Hansard and say it is incredible how the government behaved in trying to smother opposition to a dictatorship in this country.

As I said "bells" is a dangerous word so I will not mention it, but I agree with the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) that this House starts at various times. For example, there are occasions when we have constituents here whom we may meet in our offices or they may be our guests in the dining room, as has happened to me on many occasions. They do not know exactly when this House is to meet.

Madam Speaker: Order, order, please. The hon. member will recognize that I interrupted the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette) when he started to debate rather than expose his point of order. I think the hon. member has about reached that point now. I have to interrupt him.

The hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Siddon: Thank you Madam Speaker. Earlier today I—

Madam Speaker: I am sorry. I do have another point of order from the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I just seek some clarification. I listened to your ruling and I wonder if there can be one clock within the precincts of Parliament that is the official clock? I wonder if that is set by some other standard which could be made available to us so that we might all have a common sense of time because I think on occasion, in the proceedings of Parliament, an exact sense of time is very important.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I would doubt if the hon. member reads my ruling in Hansard tomorrow that he would not understand. I think it was quite clear. The hon. member for Richmond-South Delta.

PRIVILEGE

MR. SIDDON—ROBERTS BANK EXPANSION—ALLEGED MISLEADING STATEMENTS BY MINISTERS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Thank you Madam Speaker. This is my third try today and I hope that it will not be my last or I am out!

Earlier today I sought your co-operation on raising a question of privilege at the earliest possible time in relation to the proposed expansion of the Roberts Bank superport located in Delta, British Columbia which, incidentally, lies within my riding.

The proposed expansion of this port facility will have massive consequences for my riding and the surrounding area of British Columbia. The cost of the development is predicted to approach $50 million.

The point I should like to raise this evening concerns the process that has been followed for several years where such major environmental projects are subjected to review by the so-called FEARO office or the Environmental Assessment and Review Process.

Indeed, in the case of the Roberts Bank superport project, that process was followed. A recommendation was offered to the former Liberal government in 1979, and that recommendation of a reduced scale project because of certain environmental risks, was endorsed by the government opposite.

My point concerns the government's apparent decision to broaden the terms of that project in complete contradiction to the recommendations of the Environmental Assessment and Review Process panel.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is discussing substance; he is not discussing a question of privilege. I will not hear him another minute if he does not come straight away to what his question of privilege consists of.

The written notice that he has given to me indicates to me quite clearly that he wants to discuss the subject of the dredging contract of the Roberts Bank superport in British Columbia. It is quite clear from the written statement.

The hon. member has been speaking for a while and he is discussing the substance of this particular question. Unless he comes straight away to tell me where he has a question of privilege, I will not be able to hear him.

Mr. Siddon: With all due respect to the Chair, I have only been given about 60 seconds. As I read earlier today, Beauchesne at page 25 sets out the role of the Speaker. It says that the Chair must be sufficiently convinced of the involved nature of a question of privilege to make a decision whether such motion should be submitted to the appropriate committee.

The government has taken a position on the Roberts Bank expansion, as was indicated earlier today by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts), which is at complete variance with the recommendations with the Environmental Assessment and Review Process panel. That makes my life very difficult in being able to explain to my constituents why it is that the government has opted for a much larger plan—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: If we might have a little more respect from those members to my left who are usually concerned about environmental matters—

Madam Speaker: The hon. member might be inconvenienced by whatever the government or the minister has done, but he has to tell me that he has been inconvenienced to the point that he has been harassed, molested or that someone has attempted to stop him from performing in this House. That is privilege. If a minister did not give the proper information or if in some other way he feels that he has a grievance toward a certain minister, he can voice that grievance. I encourage him to do it but not under the guise of a question of privilege.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, that is exactly what I am trying to establish. It is a fact that I have not been provided by the government opposite with the factual scientific information to present to my constituents in order to justify a plan of action which is at complete variance with the findings of a properly constituted environmental assessment panel established by this government and whose recommendations were endorsed by the previous minister of the environment of the previous government.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, the recommendations I seek would be in the form of a report which is available to the public, to members of my constituency and to myself as the Member of Parliament, in order to argue on the government's behalf that the conditions under which this project—to which a contract is to be let by April 4, according to the Minister of Transport—is to proceed are at complete variance with the environmental recommendations brought forward in good faith to the public in my riding and of British Columbia.

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member is repeating what I said did not constitute an argument. If something is at variance with the recommendation of an environmental committee, that does not constitute a question of privilege. I cannot repeat it any more clearly to the hon. member. He has to bring some other argument to prove to me that he has a question of privilege.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, we have a process of environmental review in this country which enables Members of Parliament to gather information, to take that information and help to advocate or oppose the recommendations of the government. What has happened in the present case—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. A point of order, the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

• (2040)

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order pursuant to Citations 18, 19 and 84 of Beauchesne. In part, Citation 17 reads:

A question of privilege ought really to come up in Parliament.

A question of privilege is a serious matter. It is not a question of grievance. We are here to represent our constituents and not to waste taxpayers' money.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): I draw to your attention paragraphs 1 through 4 of Citation 19. A dispute arising between two members does not constitute a question of privilege. In Section 19 (4), we read:

Many matters, such as the absence of a minister of the Crown from a committee studying his estimates, may constitute a grievance but not a question of privilege.

What is being attempted to be foisted on this House as a question of privilege may be a grievance. In the case of Roberts Bank, it may well be a legitimate grievance. I share the hon. member's concern. But to abuse this House with grievances under the guise of a question of privilege, which is a serious matter, not only is a waste of taxpayers' money but is a waste of the time of this Parliament.

With respect, Madam Speaker, I draw your attention to Citation 84 which concerns the role of the Speaker in a question of privilege. It states that it is essential that the matter be raised at the earliest possible opportunity.

I suggest that it is no mere coincidence that all of these alleged matters of privilege, which, in some cases constitute grievances and in other cases constitute a flagrant violation of privileges of other Members of Parliament in carrying out the responsibilities we have on behalf of our constituents, could have been raised some time ago and pursuant to Citation 84, they should have been raised some time ago.

Under the rules there is a requirement that you be given notice of the proposed question of privilege. I suggest, with respect, when you look at those notices, pursuant to the rules, that you should have in your mind whether or not this is a question being raised and which has been raised at the earliest possible opportunity. Citation 84 states that is your role as Speaker in considering questions of privilege.

I suggest, in the light of that and in the light of Citations 18 and 19, that we get on with the business of the House and deal with questions of privilege, which really are serious questions of privilege, and failing that, get on to the orders of the day.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order concerning the one just raised. We have now listened to two interventions from the left, one raised by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) and the other raised by the member who has just taken his seat. With his halo around his eyes, he forgets, he does not see now, he does not remember now that his party's very first act when we came here last January, because his party disagreed with something the government said, moved a motion to adjourn the House. Is that not a waste of taxpayers' money? Just because that party had a difference of opinion, that was not a waste of taxpayers' money. Their holier-than-thou attitude does not sit well. His party should examine its own actions and its own attitude before starting to cast stones here.

Madam Speaker: I do want to respond to that point of order. This is precisely what I was trying to bring to the attention of the hon. member who was speaking on a question of privilege. A question of privilege is a very serious matter which has to be related to the definition of privilege in the House. The hon. member need not read the definition because it has already been read this evening and I have read it before myself.

The hon. member does not leave me much choice. If he continues to discuss substance, I will not be able to hear him. The hon. member for Burnaby is right. As soon as I realize that the matter being raised is not a question of privilege which the member is discussing but something else, I must intervene. I already warned the hon. member that his written statement made me suspect very seriously that there was a basis for a question of privilege. I must also tell him that the arguments he has brought forward up until now have not convinced me either.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, with all due respect, I believe that you would want to feel that this question of privilege which I raise is "sufficiently involved", to quote from Citation 84(1). I would suggest sufficiently involved means that I should be accorded the same courtesy which other members have received in being granted two or three moments to lay out the case about which I am so concerned.

We have a case where ministers of the Crown have not made any public commitment to a project but they have said in private forums that they concur with such projects.

Mr. Stollery: Order.

Mr. Siddon: This is a very serious matter.

Mr. Stollery: The Speaker has ruled on the matter twice.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, with your permission, I want to draw a parallel with the Amax project. What we have—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is still discussing the substance. The parallel with Amax will lead him nowhere with regard to a question of privilege. Perhaps it would be useful in a debate, but we are not debating just now.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, I am very disappointed that the House and the Chair will not hear me out. The matter which I raise could have permanent implications for the people of my riding and the people of British Columbia. We are going to be faced with a decision that we will regret at some point in the future because ministers have contravened their responsibilities. In the case of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) it is covered under Sections 31 and 33 of the Fisheries Act. In the case of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts), he has not complied with his own environmental assessment and review procedures which are clearly set out in his mandate and responsibilities.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member says that I did not hear him out, but he started to speak at 8.35 p.m., and that is a little over 20 minutes ago. I have heard him out.

Mr. Nielsen: It is 11 minutes ago.

Madam Speaker: I am afraid I cannot hear him out. It is quite obvious that he does not have a question of privilege. He is debating a question. He probably has a grievance.

Mr. Siddon: It is much more serious than that.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member is disappointed that a certain number of things are being done in his own constituency which have some implications here. The hon. member knows that this is not the time to raise these kinds of grievances or concerns. There are other occasions in the course of the proceedings of the House when he can do that totally within the rules of the House. But just now I refer him to the intervention, which I might have made myself, by the hon. member for Burnaby who was simply quoting Beauchesne that a question of privilege has to be brought at the earliest possible time. This project is not absolutely new. The hon. member probably had an opportunity to bring that matter to the attention of the House before. The hon. member is discussing substance, and I cannot accept that as a question of privilege.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. You have not allowed me to address the question of time limits. Every time I have stood up you have intervened before I had finished. Where is the freedom of speech in this country?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have allowed the hon. member to speak. I have tried to assist the hon. member in coming to the right type of argument to use in order to prove to me that he had a question of privilege. I have done all that I could and I ask the hon. member to be mindful of the kinds of arguments he has to entertain. I can only conclude that the hon. member had no other arguments to bring forward.

On the basis of what I heard and on the basis of the written notice, I have to tell the hon. member that he does not have a question of privilege.

MR. KILGOUR—ALLEGED CONFLICT OF INTEREST IN GOVERNMENT HIRING OF DEFEATED LIBERAL CANDIDATE

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I have two questions of privilege. I assume that I may deal with one, which is a matter not so dissimilar from matters raised by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) and the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). It is a different application of the same principle.

• (2050)

You used the expression "question of an obstacle to a member in the performance of his duties" in response to the hon. member for Yukon the other day. I hope to be able to convince you of an obstacle posed to me and I believe to other Members of Parliament from northern Alberta, an indirect obstacle. I think a discussion of the facts will make it clear why this indirect obstacle was placed in the way of all members from northern Alberta carrying out the duties with which they have been charged.

The facts are important and, with your permission, I will deal with the facts first and then discuss some of the principles I believe are involved. Let me first indicate that only on Friday when I initially provided you with notice did I learn about these facts. I brought them to your attention in a notice which I think you felt was not sufficiently detailed, so you discarded it. That is why I have provided you with another notice today.

The facts which I want to put on the record as I believe them to be were obtained form Mr. Herschel Ezrin who is the acting executive director of the Canadian Unity Information Office. He informed me on Friday that he has hired on a contract basis one Pat O'Hallorhan, whose duties are to include "monitoring media reaction to Canadian government programs" in the Edmonton area. Office space will be found shortly for this young woman by the Department of Public Works. I am not sure whether that space will be in a government building or in the building where I have my constituency office, or somewhere else. I do not know that that point is particularly important.

Let me outline the basis of my privilege. The fact is that if this woman's name were Pat Smith or Pat Leblanc, it would make no difference, but the background particulars in respect of this person are that she is a past president of the federal Liberal party in Alberta and a past president of the Wetaskiwin Liberal Association. I would point out to hon. members that there is such a thing as a federal Liberal party in Alberta.

An hon. Member: All three of them.

Mr. Kilgour: She is a twice defeated Liberal candidate in Wetaskiwin. I think she got her deposits back, but the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) can enlighten you in that regard. She certainly will not get it back the next time. I am informed and believe that until she was appointed to this government position on taxpayers' money she was a full-time employee on the payroll of the federal Liberal party of Alberta. The point is that her very quick move from one position to the other without the two-year delay, which applies to the CBC, represents a violation of the conflict of interest rules. She moved from the position of a full-time worker for one of the federal political parties to the position of a contract employee of the federal government, which in my opinion constitutes an indirect obstacle to those of us who have been elected in the province of Alberta.

This is somewhat like the twinning concept. I would argue that the twinning concept was adopted in order that the people of Alberta think they would be better off to go to the Liberal twin with their problems. I believe I have been twinned with the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). This concept was adopted to create the impression in the minds of the people of Alberta that they would get better results if they went to see the local MP's twin, in my case the hon. member for Trinity, or to the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) or the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona. The same principle—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member is now departing from—Would the hon. member resume his seat. I am sorry but I have to insist on that. If I do not insist on decorum, there will not be any. I want to tell the hon. member I feel he is departing from the kind of argument that might be useful. What I would like to know is how the appointment of this individual has indirectly impeded the hon. member. I must warn the hon. member that there has to be a direct impediment in order for his question of privilege to qualify as a prima facie question of privilege.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I appreciate that you have not had to go through the ordeal of attending law school, but there is an important principle in respect of the interpretation of rules. I would respectfully point out that John Willis, who has been a professor to many of us, pointed out that one should take a wide and liberal interpretation when interpreting statutes. I would invite you to take a wide and liberal approach in interpreting the rule in relation to "an indirect obstacle". Let me refer you to Erskine May at page 151, and I quote:

> Conduct not amounting to a direct attempt to influence a member in the discharge of his duties, but having a tendency to impair his independence in the future performance of his duty, will also be treated as a breach of privilege.

Obviously this woman is not creating a fence around Members of Parliament from Alberta, but the perception is being created that people are better off to go to Miss O'Hallorhan with their problems than they are to go to the democratically elected Members of Parliament from Alberta. In my respectful submission that is an indirect obstacle placed in the way of Members of Parliament from Alberta in the performance of their functions.

I listened carefully when you used the word "obstacle" in response to the hon. member for Yukon, and it seemed to me, with respect, that you were calling for a very narrow interpretation of the word "obstacle". I would invite the Chair to adopt a wider view of the word "obstacle", perhaps one more in line with this ruling referred to at page 151 of the nineteenth edition of Erskine May.

You may suggest that no letter has been sent as referred to in the ruling which I believe you have before you. Are we to draw narrow limits around the word "obstacle"? Why in the 1980s can we not take a broader view of that word? Why can we not say there is an obstacle created for the hon. member for Yukon by the minister establishing an office in his riding, or that members from Edmonton face an indirect obstacle as a result of a publicly financed defeated Liberal candidate being installed in office space in northern Alberta, presumably to get between members and their constituents? Why do we have to take this narrow, unimaginative, wooden, you might say small "c" conservative approach to the word "obstacle"? Why can we not take a wider view, a more open view, something more in keeping with the rules of the House than has been the case to date?

Can those people across the floor appoint every one of their defeated candidates to public office? They have appointed most or many of them already to judicial positions and the like. Can they appoint every defeated candidate in every election in order to fill the office space in the buildings where MPs in Alberta have their constituency offices? As it happens there are about ten vacant offices in the building where my office is located. Can those members opposite appoint one defeated Liberal candidate under some phony title, supposedly in the public service, to fill each of those vacant offices in my building and in every building where other elected Alberta members have their offices? You might suggest that is reductio ad absurdum, but where are we to draw the line in respect of this sort of thing? I submit in this case, as in the case of the hon. member for Yukon and the case of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood, the Speaker has to say "enough is enough".

• (2100)

Spending power can be abused to the point where members of Parliament might as well not even bother to get elected because the power of the purse could choose people for every empty office in their ridings.

I do not think I can usefully say very much more on this subject. I respectfully submit that a prima facie case of privilege has been shown. Perhaps Your Honour might wish to reserve on this question because, I submit, it is reasonably close to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Yukon on which Your Honour reserved about a week ago.

In due course I would ask leave to refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member has certainly exposed certain facts which might have been useful in a debate on a question related to the matter he has discussed in his question of privilege. He has asked the Chair to take a broader view of the question of privilege and, despite the fact I have not studied law, he invited me to broaden my interpretation of the rules. He asks why one has to take such a narrow view of what constitutes a question of privilege. I tell him that the reason is that the Standing Orders distinguish between a question of privilege and a point of debate, and that is why the interpretation of a question of privilege has to be narrowed down in order not to include what is normally considered to be debate.

The Standing Orders and the commentaries on the Standing Orders have defined the question of privilege for what it is, privilege, and it is quite clear that only if a member has been gravely impeded in the discharge of his duties in the House can the Chair rule there is a prima facie case of privilege.

The hon. member invites me to draw the line far beyond where it has been drawn up until now, and he quotes Erskine May at page 151 that the House will treat as breaches of privilege not only acts directly tending to obstruct officers of the House but also any conduct which may tend to deter them. Erskine May gives examples of what he considers indirect breaches such as abusing a committee clerk on account of acts done by him as clerk of a committee. That is indirect obstruction which would constitute a question of privilege. Otherwise, it is defined: molestation, assaulting, insulting, abusing, striking, kicking; in other words, doing something extraordinary to prevent a member from coming into this House physically to discharge his duty as a Member of Parliament.

That is the interpretation which, according to all authors, binds me. The hon. member must know what jurisprudence is, and the task of a Speaker is mostly jurisprudence because one question of privilege does not resemble the other and one point of order does not resemble the other. The rules are more or less a framework. Some are precise, and some are more general. The hon. member is right. Most of what the Speaker does in the House is very much closer to jurisprudence than to anything else. On that basis and with those reminders of what a question of privilege is, I have to tell the hon. member that I will not reserve my judgment. I can say right here and now that he does not have a question of privilege.

The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona has a second question of privilege he wants to discuss.

MR. KILGOUR—ALLEGED ILLEGALITIES IN FEDERAL LIBERAL PARTY FUND RAISING

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, this is a far more serious matter, as I think my letter to you has indicated. Perhaps I should read the letter to put it on the record. It is short. It is dated today.

Dear Madam Speaker:

I wish to give notice that I will rise today on a matter of privilege, on the basis that certain fund-raising practices of the federal Liberal party are bringing this House of Commons into disrepute, thus impeding the ability of members of Parliament to carry out their functions, and possibly in violation of the provision of the Criminal Code having to do with secret commissions.

I intend to refer to some recent correspondence with Senator Hastings on the subject.

On March 12 I wrote to the Senator as follows:

It has been suggested that shortly after any contract for federal government work is awarded within our province you call the successful party and ask for a donation to the federal Liberal party.

Would you be prepared to reply to this allegation in order that I can perhaps correct the person who informed me of the matter?

I received a letter from the Senator on March 17 which reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Kilgour:

Thank you for your letter of March 12, 1981.

If you will let me have the name and address of the person making the allegation, I will be more than happy to respond. You will appreciate that one should not be obliged to answer vague charges made by a person or persons unknown.

Kindest regards.

Yours very sincerely,

I wrote him back on March 26 as follows:

Dear Senator Hastings:

In reply to yours of March 12, you doubtless know that my informant is one of those unhappy souls who, while thoroughly disgusted by your party's conduct in dealing with the public trust you daily abuse, is not prepared for now to jeopardize his prospects for future federal government work.

Knowing that Mr. Trudeau appears to use the Criminal Code as his only guide in matters ethical, permit me to suggest that you look at the sections in it dealing with secret commissions and the like.

Yours truly,

I have personally been informed by members of the legal profession in Alberta that when a CMHC mortgage is issued to a person, within weeks or months that person receives a call from a particular friend of the party asking for a donation based on the amount of the CMHC mortgage received.

In this case I was personally informed by an Edmontonian that he had received a contract to do some federal government work and, as I mentioned before, within 24 hours of the contract being awarded, he received a telephone call from Senator Hastings asking for a donation. Incidentally, the donation requested was 10 per cent of the value of the contract.

I refer Your Honour to Martin's annual Criminal Code section 383 which deals with secret commissions and reads as follows:

Every one commits an offence who

(a) corruptly

(i) gives, offers or agrees to give or offer to an agent—

The next subsection is not relevant.

a reward, advantage or benefit of any kind as consideration for doing or forbearing to do, or for having done or forborne to do, any act—

And so forth.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising from the remarks being made by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) for two reasons. First, he has made reference to certain correspondence which originated March 12, I believe, as a result of certain accusations which apparently were made. Those accusations were certainly not confirmed in the reply of March 17. The hon. member has had from March 17 to the present time to raise this question of privilege in the House. Under Beauchesne's Citation 82, a question of privilege must be brought to the attention of the House at the first possible opportunity. There has been absolutely nothing since March 17 last which has prevented this hon. member from bringing these very serious charges before this House. Furthermore, I would suggest to you that the hon. member in at least imputing criminal conduct to a member of the other place, or perhaps indirectly the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and I do not know whether there has been any suggestion this is the case but the hon. member refers to the Criminal Code, I would point out Beauchesne's Citation 319, the well-known practice of this House that it is completely unparliamentary for a member to impute criminal activity on the part of a member of either House.

● (2110)

On the grounds, Madam Speaker, that this is a matter which could have been but was not raised at the earliest possible opportunity as required under Citations 82 and 84, and because of the unparliamentary suggestion of criminal conduct, that this particular speaker should be cut off and we should get on to the orders of the day.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): The hon. member who has just spoken is, as usual, wrong again.

An hon. Member: In your opinion.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, the member from Toronto—

Mr. Stollery: Spadina, but I did not say anything, although the fact you would be wrong does not surprise me.

Mr. Nielsen: I would draw your attention, and the hon. young fellow's attention over there, to the time in 1963 when criminal motives were imputed to members of this House which had very dire consequences for the government of the day. And there is nothing out of order in that if the hon. member who imputes motives or makes charges is prepared to stand by them and take the consequences.

An hon. Member: Then go outside the House and say it.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order as raised earlier by the member of the New Democratic Party. It was my intention to wait until the hon. gentleman had completed his remarks to draw to his attention the seriousness of what he has read into the record. This is an extremely serious accusation, and, as the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has pointed out, if there is any substance to this charge or allegation, then Senator Hastings must be prepared to accept the consequences. By the same token, the hon. gentleman who has made the allegation, despite the senator's request for specific information, has taken advantage of his parliamentary immunity to read into the record an extremely serious charge, and I challenge him to have the courage of his convictions and to refer his charge or allegation or accusation to the appropriate committee of the House and be prepared to accept the consequences. If he is not prepared to do so, then I think at the very least he owes the senator an apology, and I fully intend to pursue the matter.

I am rather appalled that he has taken full advantage of his parliamentary immunity to slander and cast aspersions on the reputation of a member of the other place, who, in response to a request in the letter, wrote back and asked for nothing more than specific information.

As I recall the correspondence read into the record, the so-called aggrieved individual did not have the courage to put his reputation on the line and reveal his name. To say, simply and pathetically: I do not want to reveal the bribery charge in case I lose further orders; that makes me wonder who would be the bigger crook if indeed such bribery took place.

Now, I would suggest in conclusion that the hon. gentleman had better, in the next 48 hours, be prepared to withdraw his allegation or do the honourable thing and refer it to the appropriate committee of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I was just about to move in on the hon. member to warn him that if he is referring to offences under the Criminal Code, he had better very clearly lay the charges and be very careful not to throw around allegations. He has to stand behind any charges he makes in this respect.

Mr. Kilgour: I assure the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) that there is nothing that disgusts me more than this type of practice and that is one of the reasons why I am not a Liberal. You guys have been living with this kind of thing for too many years.

I would point out again, Madam Speaker, as I read the letter, I did not accuse anybody of committing a crime and I guess I have been a Crown attorney for too many years for the hon. member for Lincoln. I simply referred him to the provisions of the Criminal Code and invited him to read them because I suspect that he, like many people, was not aware of that section and I am certain the hon. member for Lincoln is not aware of the section.

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. members opposite may think it is funny but I do not. My point of order is an important one. There are certain customs, traditions and privileges which we are talking about that we want preserved in this House and that is why you rise on a question of privilege. That is why I am not overly concerned about the number of questions of privilege if indeed we want to retain the privileges we are entitled to. One of the privileges we have as members is immunity from lawsuits, and I am not a lawyer but I know that this is an extraordinary immunity that makes it possible for us to speak to the fullest extent in order to make our point. I am not talking about criminal charges, I am saying that in order to preserve that freedom, that privilege, it is incumbent upon us not to abuse it, because if we do, we are going to see it removed.

In the 1960s, Madam Speaker, and I do not want to go into history, but I can remember a young member named Lord, a young lawyer attached to Mr. Favreau's office who, despite later exoneration by the appropriate court, had his career ruined by innuendo in this House by members who were just within the legal—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I would not like to discuss this point further; it was well made by some hon. members. I again remind the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona that he must be careful not to make these accusations without being prepared to folow them up with the proper charges. If he is referring to dispositions of the Criminal Code, he might be able to do that, but he would have to be very careful not to accuse anyone of anything he is unable to stand behind. If the hon. member will try to summarize or resume his question of privilege—

Mr. Kilgour: I am finished, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Well, it seems to me that this whole matter of donations to political parties, no matter how they were solicited, is not a question covered by the Standing Orders of this House. It might be improper, it might be all sorts of things that the hon. member might want to expose, but it certainly does not fall under the purview of the question of privilege nor does it relate precisely to the proceedings of this House. There was some delay which I have to take into account as well, but the matter itself does not come under the purview of a question of privilege.

Presenting reports from standing and special committees.

Mr. Andre: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre).

POINT OF ORDER

MR. ANDRE—ITEMS UNDER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES—RAISING OF OBJECTIONS OUT OF ORDER

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order which is very similar to the one I raised on March 24. At that time I was dealing with the supplementary estimates and items contained therein which, in my view, were out of order—

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: I am awfully sorry, but the estimates are not before us. That point of order should have been raised at the time—

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, they are.

Madam Speaker: What is the point of order? It must be related to the proceedings of the House.

Mr. Chrétien: Call orders of the day.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, my point of order—

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, my privileges are in question, as I am sure are the privileges of all members of the House. In view of the fact that Your Honour called "Presenting reports from standing or special committees"—

Some hon. Members: No, she has not.

Mr. Collenette: As a result, it is incumbent upon Your Honour to recognize any point of order or question of privilege relating to that aspect of routine proceedings alone. Since Your Honour has decided, in your wisdom, to move to that part of our proceedings, I would submit that the present point of order is completely out of order. My privileges and the privileges of every member in the House are being abrogated, unless we continue with points of order, questions of privilege or some proceeding relating to the presentation of reports from standing or special committees.

Madam Speaker: Well, I cannot recognize a point of order if it is not related to the proceedings of the day.

Mr. Andre: Then, I rise on another point of order.

Mr. Chrétien: Order!

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, the subject matter to which I referred has been raised in the House on many, many occasions going back to 1971. It has been raised and adjudicated upon by Speakers from March 10, 1971, to most recently.

Mr. Smith: Raise it at the appropriate time, which is not now.

Mr. Andre: The most recent occasion was last week. I did not go through the whole list of previous rulings, but I mentioned from 1971 to 1981, or the last ten years. On some of those occasions, especially in the early period, members rose when the appropriation bill, to which objection was being raised, was before the House. On those occasions, Mr. Speaker Lamoureux and Mr. Speaker Jerome said that it was too late. They said, "Your point is in order. The items are out of order, but it is too late. Therefore, I have no choice but to leave these out of order items in the appropriation bill because members did not raise their objections at the appropriate time".

Mr. Speaker Jerome appealed to members of the House, when I was a member, to raise such points of order well enough in advance so that the Chair could rule and argument could be heard.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Madam Speaker: It is true that point of order was raised, but the hon. member had given notice of the point of order. That is the procedure which has been followed by previous Speakers.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I respectfully submit that there is no Standing Order which requires any member to give the Chair notice of a point of order. My understanding is that the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) is on a point of order. No notice is required, even though the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who purports to know so much about the rules, broke those rules or practices when he smuggled in his notice yesterday, I think it was. There is no requirement for that practice, and it should not be allowed to grow.

Madam Speaker: It is true that there is no Standing Order to that effect, but there is also no reason why I should hear a point of order which is not related to the business of the House.

Mr. Stevens: It is.

Mr. Andre: May I explain how it is related?

Madam Speaker: I did not give the hon. member the floor yet. The hon. member has explained his position, and I told him that I could not entertain that point of order at this time. If it were related to the proceedings of the House, I could entertain it.

Also I answered the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). It is true that the Standing Orders do not indicate anything to that effect, but there is no reason why I should hear a point of order which is not related to the proceedings of the day; I think that is fair.

Mr. Andre: On a question of privilege, Madam Speaker—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, with respect to whether the matter is before the House, the estimates to which the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) referred have been tabled in the House of Commons and are now before the House in committee. This is what the hon. member meant when he stated that these matters are now before the House. This is why I respectfully submit that it would be an appropriate time for the hon. member to be heard. He could have been heard yesterday; he might be heard tomorrow. But it is appropriate that he be heard now.

Mr. Andre: The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) is here tonight.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): In addition, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) is here tonight.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I am surprised the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) used this argument because, quite clearly, the estimates are now before committee.

Mr. Nielsen: That is the House; it is an extension of the House.

Mr. Collenette: A point of order would only be relevant at this particular stage in the proceedings if those estimates or any item had been reported before the House. At the moment we are on the item under routine proceedings which is the presentation of reports from standing or special committees.

Mr. Nielsen: No, we are not.

Mr. Collenette: I submit that no point of order or question of privilege is in order at this particular point in time, unless it is related to that particular aspect of routine proceedings.

Mr. Andre: A question of privilege, Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: I am afraid I still must refuse to hear the hon. member on this particular point of order, because the bills to which he referred have left the House, gone to the Senate and have been passed, and they will be up for royal assent tonight—

Mr. Stevens: No, they will not.

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Madam Speaker: —and the main estimates are in the committee. Therefore, if a matter is in committee, it cannot be the subject of a point of order in the House.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, my privileges as a member of Parliament are affected in this way—

Mr. Chrétien: What about ours?

Mr. Stevens: Go back to England; they like you in England.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, previous Speakers have said repeatedly, to me among others, that it is too late to raise a point of order in respect of the estimates when the appropriation bill is before the House. Now you add to that the absurd contention that a point of order cannot be raised—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Smith: Apologize!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Collenette said that.

Mr. Andre: —when the estimates are before committee.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have a point of order from the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). Since we are on a question of privilege, I suppose I can entertain it.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, on a point of order, surely it is out of order for an hon. member, under the guise of a question of privilege, to question the ruling of the Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): That is precisely what is being done here. Madam Speaker has made a ruling; orders of the day have been called. Under Beauchesne's—

Some hon. Members: No, they have not.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Citation 275 of Beauchesne's fifth edition reads in part as follows:

When an order of the day has been read, it must thereupon be proceeded with, appointed for a future day or discharged.

Madam Speaker's ruling has been made. It is unparliamentary to challenge that ruling under the guise of a question of privilege. I suggest we move on to orders of the day as required by Beauchesne's Citation 275.

Mr. Stevens: Privilege, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Cossitt: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The main estimates will be deemed to come back to the House on May 31, and the hon. member will have all the time in the world to raise a point of order on this particular subject. Therefore, I will not hear his point of order at this point.

Mr. Andre: Privilege, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Stevens: A question of privilege.

Mr. Cossitt: A point of order.

Madam Speaker: Presenting reports from standing or special committees.

• (2130)

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, I can understand that it has been a long day.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Andre: I can understand the frustration of the troops opposite.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. In the name of decorum and in the spirit of co-operation with the Chair, I would appreciate that hon. members make no reference to the fact that my day has been long.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I am working quite well, despite the fact that the day has been long.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, I was not referring to Your Honour in my remarks, I was referring to members opposite.

I have been sitting in my place all day long annotating the book. As Madam Speaker has indicated, the votes contained herein are presently before—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Andre: —a committee. The items contained herein—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Andre: I am prepared and confident that I can show—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, if I do not have the opportunity to explain, then how can I ever get to my point?

Some hon. Members: Order!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have ruled that the hon. member could raise his point of order up until May 31, when these questions will be back before the House. He is still referring to them in his question of privilege and, in a sense, commenting on my ruling. Therefore, I cannot allow that.

Presenting reports.

Mr. Cossitt: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Leeds-Grenville on a point of order.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, a few moments ago the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette) said that we could not proceed further with respect to points of order or questions of privilege. I believe he put it something like that. He alleged that you had called something further on the agenda. I would point out that at that particular stage there were three members on this side of the House—

Some hon. Members: Not true!

Mr. Cossitt: —on their feet calling "Point of order".

Some hon. Members: Not true!

Mr. Cossitt: I am being called a liar, Madam Speaker. I demand that the hon. member retract his remarks.

There were three members on their feet—

An hon. Member: Not so.

Mr. Cossitt: —one was the member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), the other was myself, and the third is a member opposite who is sitting next to the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). I forget his riding. We were all on our feet asking to be recognized on a point of order. Therefore, Madam Speaker, I refuse to yield the floor if I am not permitted to raise my three very important points of order. I have the right to raise them.

Madam Speaker: There were not three members on their feet when I said "Presenting reports".

Mr. Cossitt: Yes, there were. I was on my feet, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: No. There were not three members on their feet.

Mr. Cossitt: So was the hon. member for Calgary Centre, as was the hon. gentleman opposite.

Madam Speaker: I said "Presenting reports from standing and special committees" and then some members got to their feet.

Mr. Cossitt: I got up before that.

Madam Speaker: Presenting reports from standing and special committees.

The hon. member for Pontiac.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON ALTERNATIVE ENERGY AND OIL SUBSTITUTION

PRESENTATION OF SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Thomas H. Lefebvre (Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present the second report of the Special Committee on Alternative Energy and Oil Substitution. If the House gives its consent, I intend to move concurrence in this report.

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Thomas H. Lefebvre (Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle): Madam Speaker, there have been discussions among the three parties of this House, including the official opposition, the New Democratic Party and this party, and there is agreement that this report be concurred in without debate. If that is correct, Madam Speaker, I would so move, seconded by the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin).

Mr. Cossitt: On a question of privilege, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Leeds-Grenville on a question of privilege. I must warn the hon. member that his question of privilege must be related to Presenting Reports from Standing and Special Committees.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, you place me in a very difficult position—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cossitt: —which I am sure members opposite enjoy.

I cannot go against what I have seen in this House and what other members have seen. Surely the hon. member opposite—I cannot remember his riding, but he is sitting next to the hon. member for Algoma—and two others were on our feet. We were ignored by the Chair—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I have a question of privilege. My privileges are being breached by not being recognized—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I will not allow the hon. member to repeat that three members were on their feet before I started presenting reports from standing and special committees. Members rose once I had said those words.

Mr. Cossitt: Might I raise another point of order, Madam Speaker?

Committee Report

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Leeds-Grenville on a point of order.

Mr. Cossitt: I would like to refer to page 8774 of Hansard for yesterday where a serious error occurs. I realize that it was yourself, Madam Speaker, who circulated to all Members of Parliament a document suggesting that where a serious error occurs in Hansard there are various ways of correcting it. I agree with this and I do not for a moment question the Chair—

An hon. Member: Not much!

Mr. Cossitt: But at the same time I would like to draw attention to the fact that if an error occurs in Hansard and we simply do not raise it in this House—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. At this point I can only entertain a point of order relating to presenting reports from standing and special committees. If the hon. member wants to correct Hansard he can do so later on in the course of the proceedings.

Mr. Stevens: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for York-Peel on a point of order.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, my point of order will be very brief. I was wondering if the hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre), the chairman of the Special Committee on Alternate Energy, could be given an opportunity to explain what we are being asked to concur in?

Mr. Collenette: On the same point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The report has been read and it is too late for that.

Tabling of documents, statements by ministers, tabling of bills. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth, (Mr. Scott) stand. The hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), stand. First reading of Senate public bills. Government notices of motions.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, do I take it you have just passed tabling of documents?

Madam Speaker: Yes, we have passed the tabling of documents.

Mr. Kempling: You blew it!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION TO LIMIT REPORT STAGE AND THIRD READING DEBATE ON BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL

Mr. Bussières moved:

That, in relation to Bill C-59, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of each of the report stage and the third reading stage of the bill; and that at 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on those days, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

He said: Madam Speaker, all hon. members are fully cognizant of our Standing Orders and even if at times we do forget the exact wording, we know that when we study certain bills we can proceed with dispatch under the provisions of Standing Order 75. For instance, it is possible for the leaders of the various parties in the House to reach agreement and allocate a given period of time to complete the study of a bill. When the parliamentary leaders are unanimous, they so advise the House and we agree on the way to end the debate. We do have another procedure when there can be no agreement on the amount of time to be devoted to debating a bill. When we cannot agree a notice must be given to hon. members in which the government states its intention of setting a time limit to study a bill. That notice was tabled last week and this evening I am indeed proposing that one additional day be devoted to the report stage of the bill to provide supplementary borrowing authority, and one additional day as well for third reading of the same bill.

Madam Speaker, many reasons may be invoked to resort to time allocation or set a limit on the debate on this borrowing authority bill. First of all, Madam Speaker, we all know that the government's borrowing authority will expire at midnight this day, March 31, because the borrowing authority already passed by Parliament has a provision under which any remaining borrowing authority of the government would lapse automatically at the end of the financial year, that is, on March 31.

In other words, as of midnight tonight the government no longer has any borrowing authority.

Second, the House has had the opportunity to debate numerous topics and, particularly in recent days, the business of the House has been, to put it mildly, delayed by hon. members who had questions of privilege and points of order to raise and on which the Chair, not I, had to rule.

Madam Speaker, during second reading and in committee we had lots of time to debate the borrowing authority. I would simply like to remind the House that the amounts of money and the provisions in the borrowing authority measure stem directly from the budget proposed to the House by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and that they indicate the financial requirements of the government.

I rest assured, Madam Speaker, that hon. members will appreciate the urgency of adopting the bill providing borrowing authority and that all members will co-operate so as to make the best use of the days of debate we will have at the report stage and on third reading. Hon. members will thus have an opportunity to express their views on the borrowing authority which the government is now seeking.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, this House is being presented with a disgraceful motion. This bill has been before this House on report stage one afternoon only, a Friday afternoon, on March 20. It is disgraceful that the government should bring this motion tonight to terminate this debate on the motion in two hours, and to terminate debate on the bill in two days.

An hon. Member: You make me cry!

Mr. Blenkarn: This is an unrealistic use of Rule 75C, and the government must be condemned for its use.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: Not only that, but the government is in no financial need, and the government need not press this matter forward today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: When this government took office immediately after February 18—indeed, on February 20—the amount in the government's accounts was $2.594 billion.

Last week, on March 25, 1981, this government had more money on deposit than it has had in government accounts for so many years that it is hard to remember. Indeed, the government has $6.4 billion in its accounts. It does not need to closure this bill. It has enough money to operate this month, next month and the month after in accordance with its own budget. It does not need to closure this bill. It does not need to come before this House and say that this is a matter of urgency, that the government will be broke, that it cannot pay its bills, or something of that nature. There is absolutely no reason for this unrealistic use of time allocation on this particular bill. This government must be condemned.

There is no question as to why the government comes before us. It is ashamed of its most inept, incompetent financial policies and financial administration of this country. It is no wonder that it wants to terminate debate, because it does not want us to point out its incompetence. The government wants to limit the incompetence.

Mr. Epp: It would take forever to show it all.

Mr. Blenkarn: If the government would look at the amendment on report stage, it would note that we have asked to reduce the borrowing to $8 billion. That is all it needs. It has $6.4 billion in the till. If it borrows another $8 billion, it would have $14 billion. The government does not need any more than the amendment calls for.

So, why must we have closure? It is because the government wants a blank cheque. We have a blank cheque government with a blank mind.

This is a disgraceful motion. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) ought to be embarrassed that he has brought it forward tonight. How can he possibly come to this House and say, "We are in desperate shape; our borrowing authority expires on the thirty-first, tonight at midnight, and we cannot borrow any money"? The government has $6.4 billion in the till. Why does it need to borrow money? It has no requirement for money.

• (2150)

You have no requirement for money; you won't have it this month, next month or the month after. So there is no need whatsoever for closure. There is no need for this unrealistic time allocation on this most important economic bill—indeed, the most important economic bill to come before this House so far this year.

It is clear that the government does not want to face the questions concerning inflation; it is clear the government does not want to face the questions of why it has acquired and brought together all of the money there is presently in its account; it is clear that the government wants to cut down the time that members have to talk about the economy of Canada, all this at a time when people are showing what they are concerned about and what is really bothering them. What has really got them upset is an inflation rate of 12.2 per cent. Their money seems to be disappearing; the purchasing power is no longer there. Yet this government wants to make sure that we on this side are not given an opportunity to voice the opinions of our constituents on what is happening to the value of their money.

When we look around at the real estate market, we see that in the major cities of this country people are bidding up the price of real estate unrealistically. All of that is caused by the kind of monetary policy that has been produced by this government. We are not allowed to bring the concerns of the people before this House of Commons because the government does not want to hear people's opinions about the way they have managed the economy of this country.

This is a disgraceful motion that my friend, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) before us today. It is a disgraceful one. It is a motion Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker).

ALTERNATIVE ENERGY AND OIL SUBSTITUTION AND NATIONAL TRADING CORPORATION

CONCURRENCE IN REPORTS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEES

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): There have been some discussions amongst us with respect to the two reports, the report of the Special Committee on Alternative Energy and Oil Substitution that was tabled by the hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre) and also, standing in the name of the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) of the Special Committee on the National Trading Corporation which is now on the Order Paper.

I would hope, Madam Speaker, that when we return from the other place, we could have a few moments to have a motion for concurrence on both those reports, on the understanding that it would be done without debate.

Madam Speaker: Is that agreed?

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, it is the understanding on the government side that these two reports would be concurred in without debate immediately following our return from the Senate.

Mr. Knowles: That is agreed, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Lefebvre: Do it now.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Suggestions have come from some hon. members that we do it now, Madam Speaker, and that we would all be agreeable. It would be a very short proceeding.

Mr. Lefebvre moved that the second report of the Standing Committee on Alternative Energy and Oil Substitution presented earlier this day be concurred in.

Mr. Marcel Roy (for Mr. Flis) moved that the third report of the Special Committee on the National Trading Corporation, presented to the House on Monday, March 23, be concurred in.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the two reports mentioned by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) be concurred in?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform you that a communication has been received, which is as follows:

Ottawa, March 31, 1981

Madam,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 31st day of March, at 9.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Madam,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière

● (2200)

[Translation]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Madam Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Madam Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (2205)

[English]

And being returned:

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate chamber, the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give in Her Majesty's name the Royal Assent to the following bills:

Bill S-16, an act respecting the president of the Lethbridge Stake of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

Bill C-62, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1981—Chapter No. 51.

Bill C-63, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1982—Chapter No. 52.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

Mr. Collenette: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker, to beg the indulgence of the House. I have discussed a matter with the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) concerning two reports that should have been tabled earlier. I regret that I did not rise at the appropriate time, but I believe there is agreement in respect of the tabling of these reports at this time.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Yes, Madam Speaker. These are documents which I understand would have been tabled at that stage of the proceedings today. The hon. member has indicated to me what they contain, they are in order and I would be pleased to consent.

Mr. Knowles: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree that we revert to tabling of documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TABLING OF REPORTS

MANDATORY SUPERVISION: A DISCUSSION PAPER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I should like to table in both official languages a report entitled "Mandatory Supervision: A Discussion Paper".

• (2210)

ACCOUNTABLE MANAGEMENT

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, also under the provisions of Standing Order 41(2) I would like to table on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) a document entitled "Accountable Management".

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

McDONALD ROYAL COMMISSION—INQUIRY RESPECTING OPERATION DIRECTED AT CHINESE EMBASSY IN OTTAWA

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to see my friend, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), here in the chamber this evening to deal with this particular matter on the adjournment debate. As the House may recall, this question was asked of the Solicitor General just a few days ago. It was pursuant to a notice I had given him on March 23 that I would ask him a question about a rather interesting operation which was carried out by the security service sometime ago against the People's Republic of China embassy.

The reason I felt after these years that it would be an interesting thing to bring out is that I felt sure the McDonald commission of inquiry and, indeed, the security service itself would probably be interested in seeing what lessons, if any, were learned from this Keystone cops operation, which had as its ultimate absurdity the then secretary of state for external affairs having to call John C. Doyle, who at that time was embroiled in some serious disputes with the Government of Canada, begging him, please, to keep quiet about this particular incident he and his employee discovered.

I am interested to know whether in this particular context the McDonald commission was apprised of this and whether, of course, there were other implications arising from it. Much to my surprise, the Solicitor General indicated that despite my notice, he knew nothing at all about it. I wonder how many files of this particular nature there are.

However, apart from that, I am interested in pursuing another aspect of the hon. minister's answer because in his reply he said to me that it is a matter of public record that the McDonald commission has been given full access to all the records of the security service of the RCMP and the whole of the RCMP.

Your Honour and I both know that there is a big difference between being given access to something and getting the actual information that may be there which ostensibly we can have by simply having access. That is a dodge, and not a very obvious one, to say the least.

The McDonald commission once again has had to have its mandate extended. It has become an annuity, obviously. I cannot understand why I as a member of Parliament cannot get some information about it on my Order Paper questions, which I intend to raise at another time. However, what bothers me is the feeling I have that the McDonald commission and, indeed, the Solicitor General himself, may not be seeking all of the information to which we will say for the sake of argument they have access.

Recent revelations in the United Kingdom indicate that at least over there they have begun to eradicate to some extent the old-boy network going back to the days of Philby, Blake, Burgess, McLean and May and lately Blunt and now there are questions raised about Sir Roger Hollis which, as I understand it, can neither be proved nor disproved.

What I want to ask the Solicitor General tonight is whether it has occurred to him, with the benefit of hindsight, just as it has occurred to the British security service, that apparently it may not have been the best thing to have sent Sir Roger Hollis over to interview or debrief Igor Gouzenko, perhaps it might not have been very smart for the security service—and, indeed, for the benefit of the United Kingdom and the United States security services—to have had Jim Bennett interview John Watkins, who apparently died of an unfortunate heart attack while this process was going on. As a matter of fact, I will take the opportunity to make this comment. In coming back to the question I asked about the particular operation directed against the People's Republic of China—an entirely proper one under the circumstances, which I do not condemn except for the clumsiness and the absurdity of it—I come back to comment—I suppose today the People's Republic of China is probably not nearly as disturbed about the CIA, which assisted in this operation, getting access to information through the good offices of the security service as they are about our security service having it.

I make the hypothesis, based on what is happening in Britain and based on the obvious fact that we have not even touched our old-boy network, that probably the information the CIA is getting at least is sacrosanct, while the information our security service is getting is going directly to the KGB. We do not know that, but I will bet you that the CIA and the Chinese are having their own thoughts about it right now.

Now, I would hope that the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) would put some information on the record. We have seen our former solicitor general make an effort to get to the bottom of the Taschereau papers. Surely, within the echelons of the security service there are fascimiles or briefing notes on those papers which the Solicitor General, after his time in office, which is considerably longer than his predecessor, still maintains he knows nothing about. It sounds very strange to me, and there are a few things that it is entirely proper to put on the record. In the past I have mentioned, naming names, some of the things about mail opening, the improper use of the RCMP security service having agents in place to get income tax data. It is a well-known fact as well, and I do not know that this has been put on the record, that prominent native people here in Ottawa have for years had their phones monitored as a matter of course. I have not heard this mentioned. Another thing that worries me, speaking about the McDonald commission and its alleged eagerness to get information—and this is something I intend to go into at some length—is that Corporal James Wood—who was one of the key figures in the "Obstacle Course" operation which a former secretary of state for external affairs used with great effect to trumpet the expulsion of 11 Soviet diplomats, and there were two others who were not allowed to come back—has been given one of the most rotten shakes I have ever heard of. He ought to be made Companion of the Order for Canada. Instead of that, practically every promise made to him has been broken. It is basically a tragedy. And here in my hand I have a letter that I have received addressed to him from the McDonald commission in effect telling him that they do not want his information, despite the fact he volunteered to give it, and he could give some very interesting information. The reason he was not allowed to testify, Mr. Speaker, is because he wanted his own lawyer, and when a lawyer was obtained for him, all of a sudden, although he was subpoenaed, his testimony was no longer required. I intend to go into this in some detail later on.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am going to answer some of the matters raised by my hon. friend, the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), and I know before I do that he is going to find the answers unsatisfactory. I regret that, but I think he knows perfectly well the reasons why solicitors general cannot be as forthcoming on the matters he raised as he would like them to be. And, in fact, I will be following a very well established tradition which the government of which he was a part followed.

Now, he indicated that my predecessor, the Conservative solicitor general, was in fact more forthcoming or was about to be. That is a matter of speculation. The fact is that he was not, and the answers that he put on the record are very much the sort of answers that I will give. The other reason that I regret having to give less forthcoming answers is that many of the allegations he made are completely false. I think he may believe them to be true, I am not asserting that he is putting forward things that he knows are not true, but I know they are not and I am not able to comment in particular on which are and which are not because, if I were to follow that practice, the operations of the security service would be disclosed in a way that would make them less effective in protecting the national security of Canada. If I confirm that certain individuals are or are not the subject of surveillance, answers like that, given over a long period of time, could give adverse elements, or those who are interested in undermining the effectiveness of the security service, a guideline into the operations of that service, which I am simply not prepared to give them.

• (2220)

However, I would like to comment at some greater length, in the rest of the time I have available, on the Taschereau papers. The Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) indicated recently in the House that he was constrained from making the Taschereau papers public because of the convention which existed between an incoming and an outgoing government. I examined the record, and I found that to be quite inconsistent with things he said when he was prime minister.

For example, on December 12, 1979, he said very clearly in the House that he had the authority to make the Taschereau papers public and that he was considering setting up a committee or a review process of some sort which would give him advice about whether he should exercise that authority to make them public. Recently, as Leader of the Opposition, he came up with the excuse that he was constrained from making them public by a convention. He was not constrained, neither are we.

I would assert that this government has the authority to make them public. They are being held in camera, or are not disclosed pursuant to a cabinet directive, which we can change, even though it was a directive of an earlier cabinet. We have asked a retired public servant to examine the Taschereau papers—I have not seen them—and to give advice to the government about what course of action should be taken. When that advice is received it will be reviewed, and a decision will be made about the papers.

EXTERNAL AID—CONCEPT OF TRIPARTITE AID

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, multinational organizations hold conventions, summits, and often they seem to plod away in futile and seemingly non-productive efforts. But, sometimes their efforts are rewarded with substantive expressions of moral and philosophical principle; sometimes they come around to giving us some very specific examples of innovative ways to connect the capacity and will to give with the need to receive.

An occasion which gave recognition of both these great principles was the Brandt report that evolved out of the north-south dialogue. Within that report, as well as a series of important philosophic value statements found therein, there were specific ideas. Canada is not a large country. We cannot change the whole world. There is not a lot we can do. But when a specific suggestion such as this is brought forward, there are some specific areas where we can take grasp, run with and show the way. I am referring to the specific recommendation of the Brandt report regarding tripartite aid. The report described tripartite aid as follows:

> The emergence of capital—surplus developing countries provide special scope for the establishment of projects on a basis of tripartite arrangements involving developing countries alone or in partnership with industrialized countries. Tripartite countries, including, when appropriate, industrialized countries, should be encouraged by nations with complementary resources such as capital and technology.

To make my point meaningful, I wrote specific examples of need to receive, a technological capacity to give, and administrative capability and technological capability to carry out the projects which are so desired. There could be a multitude of combinations for this new suggested form of aid. This form of aid has advantages in that multinational corporations have become so large and cumbersome that they tend to be slow to act and require many other principles aside from the principle of need.

When one looks at organizations other than multinational organizations such as the United Nations, one takes specific blocs, such as the Commonwealth, OPEC and so forth. Often one cannot organize as freely, efficiently and quickly as one could if one took bilateral aid and extended it to trilateral aid or three-country aid. The specific example I have chosen is only one example. I chose the countries at random, Saudi Arabia being one of them. I chose this country because it has proven to be one of the most generous givers of foreign aid in the world through the recycling of their petro dollars. I chose Somalia because it is the fourth poorest country in the world. I have travelled there and seen the need with my own eyes. I chose Canada as the third country, a country with the capacity for technological exchange and administrative capacity to co-ordinate and deliver the same. This is a specific answer to an immediate problem. Somalia is a part of the African dry belt where there is tremendous drought and where there is malnutrition and starvation. Yet, just below the feet of those people starving and dying of thirst, 35 feet underground, is a plentiful supply of water. The land connot be dug by hand because it is sand and it caves in. Digging could be done if there were some cribbing and a solar pump. The water could be pumped to the surface. This would give the most basic element of life to help those people survive. Second, it could be used to aid in planting the fertile soil which requires just water and a little effort. The need could be met.

• (2225)

Canada has a great organization called CIDA, which has a billion of our dollars to spend. Canada is a country which has the technology and the capacity to deliver it. I find it hard to understand that I can travel to that country, as members opposite have, and see the needs there. It has been the subject of discussion in committee, the minister concurs, it is debated in this House, but still the need in Somalia cannot be met, bilaterally or trilaterally. I would like to see a specific example initiated by Canada.

I would like to conclude by saying that in his response, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) showed that he was concerned and interested in this matter. Prior to our Summit, I would like to see him establish a demonstration project in this area. I hope this area will be specifically addressed.

I thank you for your patience, Mr. Speaker, and I look forward to a positive response from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

[Translation]

Mr. Louis Duclos (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, like most other industrialized countries in the western world, Canada tried in the last part of the seventies, both at bilateral meetings and in international assemblies, to encourage oil rich countries to share their new wealth with less fortunate developing countries and to co-operate with other donors and multilateral institutions to meet the priority development needs of these countries.

In 1980, Canada took part in the co-financing of 46 projects with a total value of $4.6 billion, its share coming to about $611 million, or 13 per cent of the total amount. Canada with OPEC Arab donors co-financed 18 projects with an approximate total value of $2 billion, in which the Canadian contribution amounted to about $350 million, or 17 per cent, and that of aid organizations of Arab countries which are members of OPEC, to over $750 million, or 37 per cent. In most cases, those were major projects for which the World Bank or some local development bank acted as the administrative or managing authority and Canada contributed financial assistance to an extent clearly defined as the Canadian participation to the project.

At the present time, Mr. Speaker, Canada is participating in major bilateral aid projects in 34 developing countries, of which 12 or so are currently of interest to donor members of OPEC which are considering the possibility of giving them considerable aid. Canada would like to work more closely with the main aid bodies in the Arab country members of OPEC and the governments of developing countries with a view to broadening the scope and nature of its co-financing for the mutual benefit of all participants.

However, our attempts, so far, to improve the co-operation with the other donors lead us to believe that co-financing of worth-while projects is not easy and requires more time, efforts and administrative resources than usual bilateral projects. Industrialized countries, Arab donors and developing countries have objectives, policies, strategies and procedures in the field of aid that do not always coincide.

It seems that expanding the scope of co-operation in co-financing is hampered mostly by the lack of aid procedures and policies that are common to all participants and allow each one of them to achieve their own objectives at a reasonable cost compared with the benefits of the project. Most aid bodies in the Arab countries that are members of OPEC tend to concentrate their assistance in those countries where close ties already exist between politics, culture, economics and religion.

The hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) has suggested on several occasions that we initiate demonstration projects in a special economic area such as energy and agriculture in a specific country, such as Somalia. While demonstration projects are sometimes a valuable tool to test an idea, a process or a product, we are not convinced, on the basis of available information and our experience in joint financing, that such a demonstration project is necessary or even appropriate in the case of joint financing with oil-rich Arab countries of OPEC.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, if we proceed with our present bilateral discussions concerning programs, plans and problems in countries which are of mutual interest, I feel that in the light of our recent working experience with aid agencies in the Arab countries of OPEC, we will no doubt obtain positive results. Therefore, we intend to make greater efforts in that area.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the parliamentary secretary but the time allotted to him has expired.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES—TESTING OF CHEMICAL DEFOLIANTS—MONITORING OF EFFECTS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, tonight I am raising a matter which was raised some month ago, on January 23, 1981, concerning the spraying of agent orange in Gagetown in the province of New Brunswick. At that time I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) if her ministry had been made aware of this particular program, and if her ministry had monitored this program in terms of health effects to the surrounding population and the servicemen who were used for those tests.

I originally asked the question because agent orange has been under great suspicion in the United States as being a cause of various forms of cancer. The United States government has treated this connection with a great amount of seriousness. There are at least three major U.S. government groups studying the herbicide-related issues. Our concern was to find out what the Canadian government was doing and whether the Canadian government had the same concern. The concern about the spraying in the province of New Brunswick is not a new one. In fact, just prior to the release of the information that we had of the spraying of agent orange in New Brunswick, Dr. Cameron McQueen, from the province of Nova Scotia, had released a study which showed that there was an alarmingly high number of birth defects and retardation among children in New Brunswick.

As well, in part, I have in my hand a quote by the Minister of National Health and Welfare concerning the question of her department being informed about the spraying by the American army in Gagetown. She was asked by a reporter whether it bothered her that the federal defence department had never informed her department about the tests of agent orange at the Canadian Armed Forces base in Gagetown in 1966, and she is quoted to have said: "I can be shocked, but it won't help anybody."

There is general concern—and on my part, as well—as to how chemicals are treated in our society, how chemicals are used by governments and government agencies, that they are generally outdated and outmoded, and that the procedures, concerns and regulations must be brought up to date. We have done things in the past out of ignorance which is just not excusable today. More and more, scientific information shows direct correlation between various forms of cancers and illnesses and the widespread use of deadly chemicals.

● (2235)

My concern is whether the Department of National Health and Welfare was informed by the Department of National Defence, and this springs from information that we have obtained and have read about the experience in the United States. I was concerned about whether Canadian servicemen knew what they were handling and whether, five or six years later, they could identify all sorts of symptons, or whether they were contracting cancer. Would they be in a position to seek some restitution from the government because they handled this particular chemical? As long as this situation was not made public and was not known to them, they could never be in a position to make a claim against the government.

At the time the minister indicated, and quite rightly, that she was not aware of the situation and that she would get as much information and details as possible. I will sit down in a few seconds because I want to give the government member ample opportunity to describe to the House exactly what steps the government has taken in the last two months to contact servicemen to perhaps change procedures so that when chemicals like agent orange are used in this country, the minister's department will know about it.

I look forward with interest to hearing what the government's spokesperson on this particular question will have to tell us tonight.

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it has been reported that in 1966 the Department of National Defence undertook spraying tests with chemical agents to test their effectiveness in reducing the foliage cover over a tract of land belonging to the Gagetown base. At the time when these tests were being carried out, it was not known that 2,4-D and 2,4-5-T formulations could be contaminated with trace quantities of dioxin impurities. During the intervening years, better analytical procedures have permitted scientists to identify these impurities and increased knowledge of toxicology now allows characterization of some of their toxic properties.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) met with the minister of health for New Brunswick at the end of January at which time they discussed this issue. It was agreed that federal and provincial officials would co-operate fully in providing and exchanging all information and details concerning the spraying operation.

[Translation]

The minister of health of New Brunswick then gave the Minister of National Health and Welfare all available information on the spraying program on the Gagetown base. Officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare are now examining statistics on spontaneous abortions and miscarriages in the Sunbury riding, in New Brunswick, where the city of Gagetown is situated, for the years 1965, 1966 and 1967. The study will be completed in two or three weeks, and the Minister of National Health and Welfare will inform the minister of health of New Brunswick and the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) of the results. If they are positive, the advisability of supplementary research will be considered with the New Brunswick government in order to confirm the effects of some chemicals.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.39 p.m.

SUGGESTED ADJOURNMENT OF DEBATE ON CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Since the government resolution on the Constitution will be heard by the Supreme Court of Canada on April 28, and since there are major economic problems in Canada affecting farmers, businessmen and consumers, and since the government is intending to limit debate through closure or other means, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway):

That the government adjourn debate on the Constitution and return to the business of running the country until the Supreme Court has completed its deliberations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED SUSPENSION OF DEBATE ON CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity affecting every member of this House. Whereas every barrister and solicitor who is a member of this House of Commons is also an official of the courts in his respective province and has taken a solemn oath to uphold the law, and whereas every member of this House who is a member of any professional society or association has also taken such a solemn oath, and indeed every member of this House who has promised to bear true allegiance to Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, has by inference sworn a solemn oath to uphold the law, and whereas the Supreme Court of Newfoundland in a unanimous decision has declared the constitutional resolution before this House improper, immoral, offensive, unlawful and illegal, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the constitutional matters before this House be suspended and adjourned until such time as the Supreme Court of Canada may or may not remove the impediment to members acting against their solemn oaths by taking part in illegal proceedings and this House get on with the business of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VANCOUVER SCHOOL BOARD STUDY—FUNDING FOR ENGLISH LANGUAGE COURSES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas a new study just released to me by the Vancouver school board shows that 44 per cent of public school students and 33 per cent of high school students have English as a second language, which is a startling statistic—the main first languages are Chinese, East Indian and Italian—and whereas these statistics have been confirmed in a recent city-wide conference chaired by the member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell), I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East:

That the federal government recognize its responsibility to immigrants after their admission to Canada through adequate federal funding to English second language courses in Canada's largest cities so that both immigrant and native Canadian children get a fair chance for a proper education.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

EXPIRATION OF CONTRACT WITH PROVINCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of today's expiration of an RCMP contract with the provinces and the unlikelihood of a new contract being negotiated because of a deliberate attempt by some provinces to link the constitutional resolution to any such agreement, I move, seconded by the hon. member for London-Middlesex (Mr. Bloomfield):

That this House condemns the governments of those provinces seeking to play politics with the peace and security of their citizens.

That the Prime Minister and his Liberals cease asking the members of this House to pass items that are contrary to the law and thereby set an example to our young people to uphold and obey the law.

REFERRAL OF CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION TO SUPREME COURT OF CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of published reports that the Supreme Court of Canada has indicated its displeasure with the unilateral plan of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to push through Parliament his constitutional resolution before the Manitoba appeal can be heard, and that the Supreme Court of Canada has indicated that the dignity of the Supreme Court of Canada is being affronted by the process the Liberal government has initiated, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon):

That, since the Prime Minister has finally admitted that the constitutional resolution should be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada for a decision, this House affirm the dignity of both the Supreme Court of Canada and the Parliament of Canada by urging the Prime Minister to cease his political posturing by referring forthwith the constitutional resolution to the Supreme Court of Canada.

SALE OF LIQUOR AT MOHAWK INN ON TYENDINAGA RESERVE IN ONTARIO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Following several months of harassment, the Mohawk Inn on the Tyendinaga Reserve in Ontario has been raided by the Ontario Provincial Police and the Indian proprietor has been charged under an archaic section of the Indian Act which prohibits the sale of liquor on an Indian reserve. This is in spite of the fact that the inn has operated with the knowledge and consent of the band council. Considering the implications of this case for Indian business people right across the country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That the government recognize that the Mohawk Inn is a legitimate business, run by a responsible Indian businessman, and that the government treat this case as an important test and make the resources of the Department of Justice available for the defence.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

SUGGESTED ADJOURNMENT OF DEBATE ON CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Noting that the Newfoundland Court of Appeal yesterday found the government's constitutional package to be illegal; acknowledging that by inviting this House to proceed with a proposal yesterday found illegal, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is inviting hon. members to enact something which five out of eight appeal court justices have already found to be illegal and which the Supreme Court of Canada will hear on April 28; noting that many members of this House who are lawyers are bound by the Canadian Bar Association code of conduct, one provision of which requires lawyers to encourage public respect for the administration of justice, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

RULING BY SUPREME COURT OF NEWFOUNDLAND ON CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION—POSSIBLE LAUNCHING OF APPEAL

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister tell the House of Commons whether he intends to instruct his officials to launch an appeal in the Supreme Court of Canada from the decision rendered yesterday by the Supreme Court of Newfoundland, a decision which finds the government's constitutional resolution illegal?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the position the government has taken after hearing the decision rendered yesterday by the court in Newfoundland and after learning, at the end of last week, that the Supreme Court of Canada had decided to hear the constitutional case before the end of this month, was to express the hope that these two cases would be brought before the Supreme Court of Canada, as well as the judgment of the Quebec Court of Appeal, if it is rendered in time. In other words, we would like to have the Supreme Court of Canada adjudicate all the cases which were brought before the courts by the provinces. How that will be done, I cannot say at this stage.

REQUEST FOR ADJOURNMENT OF DEBATE ON CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Prime Minister would not want this Parliament to be put in the position of voting on an illegal matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Clark: We on this side of the House certainly do not want this Parliament to be put in the position of voting on an illegal matter, which is the situation now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: In light of that, and in order to protect and respect the rule of law in the country, I wonder if the Prime Minister would consider adjourning debate on the constitutional resolution, which has been presented to the House of Commons and to the Senate, so that we can get on with the other important business of the country. Will he consider adjourning this debate until the Supreme Court of Canada has decided the legality of the government's position, and then bring the question back to Parliament for whatever limited debate would be necessary, after the Supreme Court of Canada had ruled what constitutional matters it is lawful for the federal Parliament to decide?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition makes the assumption that Parliament would be voting on an illegal matter. I do not recall him making the assumption that the matter was legal after the Court of Appeal in Manitoba had made a favourable decision.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I think that establishes, once again, that the opposition is not as interested in establishing the legality as it is in causing delay.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The point is that we on this side are interested in knowing whether the measure is legal or not. That is why I made the suggestion, my offer, yesterday. The whole point is we do not know, in light of the Newfoundland decision, whether the matter is legal or not.

• (1420)

We thought it was legal after the Manitoba decision, and we thought it had been legal before; but now there is a doubt. That is why we are putting to the opposition a proposition which would permit us to determine whether a specific bill, a specific resolution—a joint resolution, as it would be—is legal or not. I repeat, if it is judged not to be legal, then we will not press for its passage in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Stevens: Very big of you!

Mr. Crosbie: Fantastic concession!

Mr. Trudeau: Well, the counterpart of that fantastic concession, as the hon. member for St. John's West called it, would be that, if the matter is legal, then I would hope that the opposition would withdraw their opposition.

Mr. Crosbie: Not likely. Why should we? We oppose this process. It is unconstitutional. It is against the spirit of the Constitution.

Mr. Trudeau: I hear the hon. member for St. John's West saying that he opposes the process, and that it is unconstitutional. That is why I am suggesting that we have the courts determine whether his opinion or ours is right.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister and the country know that the Prime Minister made his suggestion yesterday because he had no alternative.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: He is trying to pretend that a position he is forced to take is an offer, when, in fact, all he is doing is admitting that he has been put in a box by the Supreme Court of Newfoundland which has decided that his constitutional position is illegal. That is now the law of Newfoundland. That is now the position with which this Parliament is faced.

The Prime Minister said that there was some doubt. There is no doubt, as it stands in relation to the decision of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland. That court has decided that it is illegal. This government is asking this Parliament to proceed with a matter which has been declared to be illegal by a court.

Will the Prime Minister of Canada seriously consider adjourning debate on this matter until the Supreme Court of Canada can assure the Prime Minister of Canada and this Parliament that what the Prime Minister is proposing is, in fact, legal or otherwise? Let me say to the Prime Minister that it makes no sense at all for him to say that he would not ask the British parliament to act on a matter which is illegal, but he wants the Canadian Parliament to act on a question which is illegal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: My question is quite simple. Why will the Prime Minister not apply to the Canadian Parliament the same practice which he applies to the British parliament? Why will he not adjourn discussion of this resolution until the Supreme Court of Canada has decided whether it is legally proper for the Parliament of Canada to act alone on the resolution?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition says that we have been put in a box by the Newfoundland decision. I repeat the same question. Why did he not find himself in a box by the Manitoba decision?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is a hypothetical judgment.

Mr. Trudeau: The Manitoba decision was to the effect that our action was legal, and we continue to act and the opposition continues to oppose. Therefore I argue that legality is really not what interests the Leader of the Opposition. It is obstruction that interests him. The Leader of the Opposition makes a suggestion that we adjourn the debate so that the Supreme Court could be seized—with what, Madam Speaker?

An hon. Member: Whatever you refer them to.

Mr. Trudeau: It would be seized with something which the court of Manitoba, through the voice of its Chief Justice, said was hypothetical. We must seize the court with something certain.

• (1425)

Let me read, if I may have the permission of the House, what Chief Justice Freedman of the Manitoba Court of Appeal said. We had long readings from the Newfoundland judgment yesterday. If the House would bear with me, I should like to read a very important point which permits me to answer the question of the Leader of the Opposition. I quote Chief Justice Freedman as follows:

> We therefore face a real likelihood that the amendments sought in the proposed resolution may be altered, deleted, or supplanted by other amendments before the resolution is deemed ready for transmission to Her Majesty. In this situation there is a danger that if we answer Question 1 . . . we may later find that we have answered matters no longer before us and have not answered matters that emerged in their stead. The Court should not be exposed to the risk of such an adventure in futility.

The Supreme Court, in the past, has also frequently objected to receiving matters referred to it because of their hypothetical nature. Let me remind the House that we have now a resolution, with a proposed amendment from the hon. member for Provencher.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on, Madam Speaker, this—

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member for Provencher has moved that we delete a very important part of this resolution, notably the part dealing with the referendum and amending procedure. If we go to the courts now, would we go with or without the amendment having been adopted? If we went in the present state and the court made this kind of statement, then we would have no solution. The court would say that there is an important amendment, there is another important amendment from the NDP, and we heard yesterday that the Tories want to introduce an amendment relating to property and certainly an amendment relating to the equality of sexes and to aboriginal rights. There are many amendments.

What would the Leader of the Opposition do if the court adjudicated on this hypothetical case? Would he then be prepared to pass that resolution judged legal by the Supreme Court, or would he say, "Give us a few more days. We have a couple more amendments to move."? If the latter, would he then say, "On these new amendments, nobody knows whether they are going to be legal or not. Let's go to the Supreme Court again to see if they are going to be legal." That is why, Madam Speaker, we have made a proposal to go to the courts, as it is our duty as legislators, with something certain. It has happened frequently in the past, and I have more than half a dozen instances in the past—

Some hon. Members: Order, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Trudeau: —in the past ten years where the Supreme Court has judged that Parliament acted in an ultra vires sense. This might or might not be the case. All I am saying is that our proposal has the advantage of going to the courts with something certain and final. If it is legal, that settles the matter; if not, it also settles the matter.

Why does the Leader of the Opposition, if he is interested in justice and right, not accept this course?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I will not take a great deal of the time of the House pointing out to the Prime Minister that in relation to Bill C-60 he adopted exactly the procedure that he rejects in this case.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: He knows there is nothing hypothetical about the Newfoundland Supreme Court decision.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: What we are doing is proposing a way by which the Parliament of Canada could get on with the business of Canada rather than debating a matter which might be illegal.

I ask for the third time, is the Prime Minister prepared to consider adjourning this debate on a resolution which has been declared illegal by the Supreme Court of Newfoundland, to allow Parliament to get on with other business and to permit us to come back to consider this question, or those elements of this question which the Supreme Court finds legal, taking whatever limited time is necessary after the Supreme Court of Canada has decided which parts of the government's proposal are within the competence of this Parliament of Canada to enact?

• (1430)

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, let us try to understand that proposal. The Leader of the Opposition says there is nothing hypothetical about what has been in front of the court of Newfoundland. The court of Manitoba, on the contrary, found that it was hypothetical.

Mr. Crosbie: It made a judgment.

Mr. Trudeau: But let me take the Leader of the Opposition's proposal. The resolution, according to this proposal, as I understand it, would go to the Supreme Court now in its present form, presumably without the Provencher amendment; presumably without the Indian amendment, and presumably without the amendment on women. It would be going with something not hypothetical but something absolutely final.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That would be your choice.

Mr. Trudeau: If it is not going to be hypothetical, it has to be something which exists now if we adjourn the House. If we go with something that exists now, and the Supreme Court of Canada judges it to be legal and intra vires, is the opposition prepared to say that the very next day or days, without any further amendment, that thing will be passed and sent to the United Kingdom?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Trudeau: They say no.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Therefore it means they want to change it in some way. That establishes our point.

Mr. Andre: How do you know what a judge is going to say?

Mr. Trudeau: It is hypothetical until we have made a final decision, and that settles the matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REPORTED WARNING BY BRITISH GOVERNMENT OF IMPOSITION OF ONE-YEAR HOIST

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Justice. However, I tell the Prime Minister that no matter what face he wants to put on the situation—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Is that my question or his?

Mr. Epp: —he has a matter which has been judged illegal by the Supreme Court of Newfoundland now, and he has to deal with it now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Nevertheless, there is another matter beyond the legal question, and that is the judgment made by the Supreme Court of Newfoundland that the government cannot change the federation through indirect means, which obviously it is prohibited from doing through direct means. That being the case, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice this question. After his return from Britain, and in view of the news of today, was he or any minister of the government warned that the British government, regardless of when the British government would get the resolution before it, was contemplating a one-year hoist?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the member from Manitoba made some remarks to me. I presume he was asking a question of me. I put to him the same consideration that I put to his leader. He says that the Newfoundland Court made certain decisions. I would point out to the hon. member that the appeal court of his own province made contrary decisions, which establishes that there is some doubt as to where the legality lies. I do not think, in fairness, that he can quote only one judgment when we have two contradictory ones. That is why our proposal is to go to the Supreme Court of Canada so that the Supreme Court can adjudicate in a final way as to which of these contradictory decisions is the right one.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, I simply say to the Prime Minister that he could do that right now and give the reference.

As the Minister of Justice still has not had an opportunity to answer my question because of the Prime Minister's intervention, may I ask him whether or not that warning, namely, the warning that the British government would use a one-year hoist regardless of when it would receive the proposition, was given to him or to any other minister? As well, I remind the minister of the question that I asked him on his return from London, that the British parliament could not deal with the matter while it was before the Canadian Supreme Court. On those warnings we have asked the minister about, could he now answer those questions specifically?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, to the first question I answer unequivocally that at no time was it indicated that the British government intended to postpone the introduction of the House of Commons and Senate resolution in the British Parliament. Mr. Pym and I discussed the timing, and I am convinced that when we send the resolution of the Parliament of Canada to the British parliament, it will act as Mrs. Thatcher said it would, quickly and in accordance with the precedents and the law.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

OPPORTUNITY TO AMEND CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION WITH REGARD TO STATUS OF WOMEN AND NATIVE RIGHTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday he made it clear that the constitutional resolution would be kept in Canada until the Supreme Court of Canada—

Miss MacDonald: No, he didn't.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Too bad, Ed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: —made a ruling on its legality.

Mr. Nowlan: You weren't here.

Mr. Broadbent: He also said that two proposed amendments from the New Democratic Party, one affecting the equality of women and one affecting native rights, ought to be included in that final resolution. In that he added to the commitment previously made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Minister of Justice.

In order to ensure that these important amendments, to which the government has committed itself, are included in the final resolution, I ask the Prime Minister what steps is the government prepared to take in the House, given the procedural delays which have occurred, to ensure that they are in fact included?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am somewhat puzzled by the question asked by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. There is before the House now a proposal for allocation of time, which would permit us within a reasonable period—a few days—to dispose of the amendment of the hon. member for Provencher and to move the amendment concerning native rights, and hopefully an amendment concerning equality of the sexes, since it appears that all sides of the House would like to see those included.

There is a motion before the House now. The hon. member is asking me what steps we are prepared to take. At three o'clock we would like to get on with this motion and deal with it, Madam Speaker. That is the only answer I can give to the Leader of the New Democratic Party. But, in order to do that, we have to have the official opposition cease its attempts to hijack Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, given the commitments which the government has made on these two important amendments, and given the House is in fact being blocked from proceeding with these measures, an action which members of my party agree is taking place—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Isn't that something?

Mr. Broadbent: —is the Prime Minister saying there are no options open to the government other than sitting back and witnessing the blockage of Parliament?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are a great kidder, Ed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, it seems to me that when Parliament has ceased to work, and not through a filibuster, because as I understand it a filibuster is on a specific question, but has ceased to work period—

Mr. Andre: Call an election.

Mr. Trudeau: —we are in a situation of absolute disorder where the Parliament of Canada cannot work. It seems to me that the question should not be addressed to me, but to all members of this House. Is there some way in which disorder can be replaced by order?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Clark: Adjourn the debate.

Mr. Trudeau: If that is the case, and the Leader of the Opposition nods in assent, I put it to you, Madam Speaker, perhaps you should call orders of the day forthwith and then we will get out of this hijacking process.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Good idea.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, that is certainly something which this party would strongly support.

An hon. Member: Try again, Ed.

RULES GOVERNING PROCEDURE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my last supplementary question is for the government House leader.

Is the government House leader aware of any other rules in the rule book—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Ask Stanley.

Mr. Broadbent: —that would enable the government to take action to ensure there is a vote on the amendment which the Conservatives have had before the House for six weeks, stopping all other amendments from being brought forward? Is the government House leader aware of that? Is he prepared to take any steps to ensure that we obtain the amendments for our native people and for women, which the government itself has promised?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the way the Standing Orders are drafted, an opposition party which is unsatisfied with a measure may, of course, resort to what is commonly known as a filibuster in parliamentary language. To put it another way, once the proposition has been introduced, that we have reached orders of the day and that it is debated, some hon. members prevent the question from being put, but by participating in the debate and constructively seeking to improve the measure.

However, there is a rule under which the government is allowed to propose changes to the existing Standing Orders with a view to ending a debate which, in this instance, has lasted for nearly six months. Under an even more drastic rule, we would be able to end it in less than 24 hours. Those are provisions contained in our Standing Orders and they can be used legitimately by the government. But there is a situation which is not covered in the Standing Orders, which does not belong to parliamentary practice and which is altogether improper and disrespectful to our institution and the Canadian people, and that is pure and simple disorder or any protracted filibuster which prevents the government from reaching the orders of the day and proceeding with the study of a given item. That is not what is commonly referred to as a filibuster, of which I spoke a moment ago. That is strictly a question of order or disorder, as the Right Hon. Prime Minister so aptly pointed out. In an even more popular language, it could be described as hijacking Parliament. Under the circumstances, Madam Speaker, when it amounts to a question of order or disorder you know full well that it is up to the occupant of the Chair to assume his or her responsibilities, as you have done so well until now and as we are confident you will continue to do.

Oral Questions

THE CONSTITUTION

RULING BY SUPREME COURT OF NEWFOUNDLAND ON CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION—EFFECT ON MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT FROM NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, apparently this is Sesame Street day for the Leader of the New Democratic Party on procedure. An easy way is to adjourn this debate in the House and carry on with all kinds of other business. My question is to the Prime Minister. The Supreme Court of Newfoundland on appeal has found this process to be unconstitutional—not some amendment, the whole process. It has found that the charter of rights and freedoms in this resolution must infringe upon the powers of the provinces to legislate in respect of property and civil rights. No amendment, except the very gutting of this resolution, would change the process.

Even if the courts find the process to be legal, and within the constitutional boundaries of the federal government, there would still be an argument as to whether it is proper in public policy terms to go ahead. We argue that it is not, that it would destroy confederation.

The Prime Minister, who was a professor, knows the difference between these two points. One is legality and the other is whether it is proper even if it is legal. It is not legal, and in our view it is not proper either.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order. I just want to warn the hon. member that he must be short in his questions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I allowed more than the usual time for questions at the beginning of the question period. The only way to help the Chair now is to be brief in the questions so that we can at least have a reasonable number of questions in this question period.

Mr. Andre: Be a little consistent.

Mr. Mitges: What about the answers?

Mr. Crosbie: In view of the decision by the highest judicial authority in Newfoundland, until the matter goes to the Supreme Court of Canada how can the Prime Minister ask the seven Newfoundland MPs to ignore the decision of their own court that this is beyond the power and jurisdiction of this House, illegal and unconstitutional, and go ahead and make a judgment, and vote on this matter in the face of the decision of our own court in Newfoundland?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for St. John's West points out that the Newfoundland Court of Appeal found the process illegal, he says. Then he wonders how members from Newfoundland can debate this process. I remind him that when the court of Manitoba decided that it was legal—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Let him answer.

Mr. Trudeau: It seems to me that this re-establishes once again ad nauseam that the question of legality is not settled. That is why we are proposing that it be settled. In so far as whether it is proper or not, a large part of my speech a couple of weeks ago dealt with that very matter. The question is that there is no precedent for what we are doing. The precedent in proceeding in the way suggested by the opposition has produced zilch for 54 years.

Some hon. Members: Untrue.

Mr. Trudeau: They say it is not true. I put it to them that since 1927 the governments of this country have been—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nielsen: How about the length of the answers, Madam Speaker?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member for St. John's West have a supplementary, a short one?

Mr. Crosbie: My supplementary is this. The court of Manitoba by a majority found the process to be legal. That still left the question as to whether it was a proper exercise of its powers by this House to carry this resolution through. We do not agree that it is a proper exercise of the powers of this House.

The Supreme Court of Newfoundland on appeal said that the government is asking Parliament to arrogate to ourselves an authority we do not possess. They held it not to be a proper request to Her Majesty's Parliament in Great Britain. Is the Prime Minister going to try to encourage the seven Newfoundland Members of Parliament here to carry out an impropriety, to vote on a process found to be improper by the highest judicial authority in Newfoundland? Surely we can wait until this matter goes to the highest judicial authority of the whole nation before he requires that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, in my previous answer I dealt with the matter of legality and how that could be determined. As to the matter of propriety, whether it is or is not, our whole point is that is a matter for Members of Parliament to decide, and then a matter for the Canadian people to decide. The courts are there to judge the illegality or otherwise. It is the Canadian people who are to judge whether our actions produce the effects that they want, and whether they are proper or not. That is our position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATEMENTS MADE BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I would like to get back to the replies from the—no, my friend, you are the showman of this House. We will wait for you to get up—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McGrath: You always speak from your seat.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member simply ask questions. This is the question period.

Mr. McGrath: I am entitled to do so without interruption. The Prime Minister in reply to the Leader of the Opposition indicated that there is some doubt as to the legality. In other words, he was not accepting the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland. Then he went on to refer to the judgment of the Chief Justice of Manitoba when he talked about the situation being hypothetical. There is nothing hypothetical about the closure motion before this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: And there is nothing hypothetical about the—

Madam Speaker: Order, order. The hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam.

FISHERIES

REGULATIONS FOR 1981 SALMON FISHING SEASON ON WEST COAST—FRASER RIVER FISHERY

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a very urgent question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. It follows the question yesterday of my colleague. Since the discussions yesterday between the Fraser River fishermen and the minister's Pacific coast officials apparently did not lead to any modification of the government's proposal respecting the closing of the 29 D section of the Fraser, will the minister now instruct his officials at their further meeting the day after tomorrow, Friday, to return to what was offered last December by the Pacific Salmon Commission, particularly leaving the Fraser open between the Pattullo Bridge and Mission Bridge and allowing a one day a week minimum fishery for the gill-netters?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. member, who is interested in my giving her reliable information, will forgive me if I tell her that I have not been briefed on the meeting which took place yesterday. I hope this will be done later this afternoon. Obviously, I will be glad to give her by telephone an immediate answer and in the House tomorrow, if she so wishes.

Miss Jewett: Madam Speaker, I particularly wish the minister would attend to the request about going back to what the Pacific Salmon Commission offered.

INVITATION TO MINISTER TO ATTEND MEETING

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, may I further ask the minister why he has not replied to the invitation sent to him by the Fraser River fishermen to attend their meeting this Sunday afternoon? It will be a very large meeting held in New Westminster. Why has the minister not had the courtesy to reply, and is he in fact going to attend that major meeting they are so anxious to have him attend?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, it is very much because we are trying to find a solution that the meeting took place yesterday, and I hope that on both sides there was some element of flexibility which might find accommodation. In the case of the sport fishery, I think we are on the road to finding accommodation between conflicting views.

As for attending the meeting, I must say that we are somewhat paralysed in Ottawa these days. I have had travel plans which have been—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. LeBlanc: Hon. members opposite are the reason for the paralysis.

I must confess that I have not found this type of issue is resolvable at mass public meetings where speech-making, and not discussion, is the order of the day.

Madam Speaker: Would the hon. member for St. John's East now like to ask his supplementary question? I would hate to frustrate his right to ask questions, but I did want to indicate, in the only way a Speaker can, that it is important for the Speaker to maintain decorum and to maintain a balance between the different parties in the House of Commons who like to ask questions during the question period. This was the only way I had finally to bring the hon. member to realize this. If he would like to ask a supplementary question now, I will give him the floor.

THE CONSTITUTION

STATEMENTS MADE BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, frustration is something we on this side of the House are learning to live with. It took the Prime Minister almost five minutes—four minutes 57 seconds—to reply to the Leader of the Opposition. I was given less than a minute.

How can the Prime Minister argue his case on the fact that the resolution now before the House is hypothetical when in fact the government refused in committee to accept any amendments on the process or any amendments on the amending formula? The government has placed a closure motion before this House to get the resolution through as it is—

An hon. Member: With the support of Ed Broadbent.

Mr. McGrath: —with the passive support of the Leader of the NDP, who has gone into some kind of metamorphosis and turned into a powder-puff.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East should ask his question right now. I plead with him to conform with what I am asking him to do.

Mr. McGrath: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I find it very difficult to restrain myself. The unanimous judgment of the Appeal Court of Newfoundland, as opposed to the statement of one judge in Manitoba, had this to say—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McGrath: The Prime Minister was allowed to quote.

The division of powers precribed by the Constitution excludes federal jurisdiction over provincial autonomy within their legislative competence, and thus a proper request to Her Majesty's Parliament in Great Britain to change such fundamental aspects of the Constitution can only be made after the provinces have agreed to such change.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member really think I can allow him to continue with such a preamble? I just have to cut him off and not allow him now to ask his question. I have to recognize members of the NDP because they must have the time allotted to them.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap.

ENERGY CONSERVATION

ABUSE OF CANADIAN HOME INSULATION PROGRAM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is not about the Constitution. It is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It deals with CHIP. I would be surprised if there is not a member of this House who has not been approached by his or her constituents about CHIP and the fact that it is being seriously abused by a number of unscrupulous companies operating across Canada which are defrauding not only the Government of Canada but also individual citizens, as well as the Canadian taxpayer indirectly.

What steps is the minister taking to bring to a close these fraudulent methods and techniques presently being employed from one end of Canada to another?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I must tell the hon. member that this indeed is a question about which I have had great concern over the last year. The overwhelming majority of contractors in this field are doing an honest job and a fair job for the citizens of this country and for the government of this country. Unfortunately, it appears there have been individuals who have abused the system, and in every instance where this has been reported there have been investigations. If necessary, prosecutions will be undertaken.

However, with respect to the general question raised by the hon. member, we have nonetheless decided to introduce a certification system for the contractors in this field. This certification system will ensure that the people who work in this field are properly qualified and meet the standards required. Already a high percentage of contractors have agreed and have received this certification. All the others will have to comply with this requirement by sometime next fall. This is in progress. We are monitoring the situation very carefully because it is a source of concern, and I thank my hon. friend for having brought this matter to the attention of the House.

INVOLVEMENT OF LOCAL ORGANIZATIONS IN CERTIFICATION PROCESS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the steps being indicated by the minister. However, unfortunately this plan will not come into effect until well into the summer and perhaps into the fall. In the meantime these fraudulent activities continue.

Would the minister look into improving the inspection system by taking advantage of the existing municipal infrastructure, or perhaps even by inviting community organizations to participate in this program in the place of many small businesses so that the labour is local labour, so that abuse is minimized, and so that funds stay in communities? My concern is that this is putting a black mark on many small businesses across Canada, and essentially on the small business community.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, if you will permit me to answer, the program which was described by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is undertaken in co-operation with the Canadian General Standards Board, which reports to me. We have signed a contract with the Royal Canadian Legion in order to accomplish exactly what the hon. member had identified. The Royal Canadian Legion will be involved in the process of the verification and certification of individual contractors at the local level.

THE CONSTITUTION

REPORTED INTENTION OF UNITED KINGDOM GOVERNMENT TO DELAY ACTION ON CONSTITUTIONAL PACKAGE

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, if I may, I would like to fine-tune the rather indistinct and vague answers given this afternoon by the Minister of Justice by asking the Prime Minister, if I could get his attention for a moment, if he or any member or official of the government, now that the Supreme Court of Canada is seized of the matter, has had any indication at all from the U.K. government that they do not desire in any manner, shape or form to deal with the constitutional package or resolution until the Supreme Court of Canada determines the validity or invalidity of it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Madam Speaker, I have not had any such notice from anybody in the United Kingdom, nor to my knowledge has anyone on their behalf said that to anyone on this side of the House.

Mr. Lawrence: I wonder if the Prime Minister, as succinctly and briefly as possible, because I am afraid it passed over me, could explain once again why he is acting in a discriminatory fashion in respect of this Parliament by putting it in a subordinate position in that he is not insisting that the British parliament pass this measure until the Supreme Court of Canada has ruled on it, but he is insisting that this Parliament pass on it.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, on the contrary, I am proposing a course of action which would bring certainty to the courts. They would know what this House has decided in a final way. That is what I am proposing. Once the courts know that, they will decide whether it is legal or not.

In the case of the United Kingdom, Madam Speaker, they have no choice, in our view. They will pass whatever they receive.

An hon. Member: Holding their noses.

Mr. Trudeau: And that is what the British Prime Minister has told us and said publicly. She will proceed expeditiously with the introduction of the measure proposed by Joint Resolution of both Houses of Parliament.

PROCEDURE FOR REFERRAL OF CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION TO SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, in view of the response by the Prime Minister as to the kind of matter which the Supreme Court of Canada would be seized of, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice, in view of the fact that the Supreme Court of Canada is now seized of the appeal on the Manitoba reference, which is on the proposed resolution prior to amendments by the committee and any that may arise on the floor of this House, and in view of the Prime Minister's so-called magnanimous offer, just how does he propose to have the amended resolution brought to the attention of the Supreme Court of Canada for adjudication?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): First things first, Madam Speaker. Let us vote here, it will be final, and after that we will find a way to transmit that to the Supreme Court of Canada.

REQUEST FOR ADJOURNMENT OF DEBATE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, with an answer like that I would not ask the Minister of Justice to represent me in a small claims court.

My supplementary is to the President of the Privy Council. Maybe I can get some sense out of this garbage we have been getting from the government over the last little while. The Prime Minister has insisted on the immediate passage of the Joint Resolution on the Constitution and the lodging of the address at the first reading stage—this was confirmed by the Minister of the Environment this morning on "Canada A.M."—in the House of Commons of the United Kingdom, awaiting the adjudication of the Supreme Court of Canada on the Manitoba reference.

Since a judgment of the Supreme Court striking down the constitutional package would require a withdrawal of that address by Parliament and require the introduction of a new constitutional package on the floor of this House, and a new committee proceeding, why does the government House leader not now move the adjournment of the debate to avoid delay, because this will involve a rerun of a six-month debate when the court strikes down the constitutionality of this particular package?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I must say to the hon. member that I can hardly give an answer which differs from that of the Minister of Justice. I am surprised that the Saskatchewan lawyer would even attempt to teach law to the Minister of Justice by pointing out that he would not accept to be represented by the Minister of Justice in a small claims court. As a lawyer he ought to know that no one is allowed to be represented by counsel before a small claims court.

[English]

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The House has now reached the point where it may hear questions of privilege. I just want to inform the House that I have several of them, nine on the Constitution, and I have tried to group them. I want to let the hon. members know how I propose to deal with these. The nine on the Constitution deal with the fact that the resolution on the Constitution places hon. members of this House in an unacceptable and improper position. They are worded nearly the same way, and most of them say that it violates the oaths that different members have taken before the bars of the different provinces. Although they did not all come in this order, I propose to hear first all of the questions of privilege having to do with the Constitution.

I would enjoin the hon. members who want to speak on these particular questions of privilege, since there are quite a number of them, to restrain themselves so that I will not have to, and I ask them to pick their arguments very carefully because I have questions of privilege on other subjects that I have to deal with today.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CLARK—THE CONSTITUTION—SUGGESTED PROCEDURE FOR AMENDING PROPOSED RESOLUTION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order having to do with government business which may well facilitate proceedings in the House. It arises from an exchange between the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and myself today in which he posed some questions to me and, as Your Honour knows, it would be improper for me to respond during question period to questions posed to me by the Prime Minister. I would like to raise a matter which may well be of interest to the Prime Minister and the government House leader, because it would elaborate upon a way in which we can resolve the impasse now before the House. It would allow us to get on with other business and resolve this question of the legality of what Parliament is being asked to consider before it is asked to consider it.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It really has to be a point of order and deal exactly with what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has said, and, of course, it should be as short as possible.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I am prepared to wager that my point of order will be briefer than most of the Prime Minister's responses.

What we have done today is propose that the government adjourn debate on the resolution now before this House and thereby allow Parliament to get on to other urgent business of the nation. It would also allow the government to send to the Supreme Court of Canada, either by following the appeal procedure or by reference, a question which would determine the legality of the proposal we are being asked to judge. I would appreciate some attention being paid to this serious proposal by the government side.

The Prime Minister responded to my suggestion by posing a question to me. He asked me what questions would go to the Supreme Court. He asked whether or not it would simply be the resolution proposed by the Government of Canada or whether it would have appended to it the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), the amendment on women's rights proposed by my party in the other place, the amendments which are apparently of interest to the New Democratic Party and certain other amendments. That question did not occur to the Prime Minister when he made a reference in relation to Bill C-60, but apparently it occurs to him now. I am prepared to take it as a matter of some seriousness to him.

● (1510)

There is a way to resolve this problem, and that would be to have an agreement among the three parties in the House as to the amendments we would want to have seriously considered in the House, if it were judged by the Supreme Court of Canada that it was legal for the House of Commons to consider this question at all. For the consideration of the government and the House leader on the other side, we would propose consultations now to determine with which amendments the various parties would want to proceed.

Once it was agreed which amendments were of priority to us—certainly there is the one standing in the name of the hon. member for Provencher and there are a number of others that are priority amendments—there could then be an agreement that the reference to the Supreme Court of Canada could include those amendments as well, so that we would know the legality—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am having a bit of trouble—

An hon. Member: He is the Leader of the Opposition, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Oh, yes, I am very conscious of that, but I am having a little trouble allowing this point of order. It seems to me that these kinds of negotiations are not covered by the rules of the House and that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is continuing debate on this whole question.

If the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has any proposal concerning the technical means at our disposal to get out of what other members—not myself—have called the "impasse", I could entertain this as a point of order after question period. But it seems to me that this kind of proposal ought to come out of the debate.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Madam Speaker: I am afraid it is very difficult for me to see a point of order in what the hon. member is now discussing.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, of course I will be bound by your ruling. I am trying to deal with House business. There was a suggestion put to me by the Prime Minister, which I took to be serious, as to how we could resolve the matter. I am not permitted under the rules to answer his questions, at least until after the next election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: So I was seeking this opportunity to respond to what I thought was a serious question by putting forward a proposal which I hope might be considered seriously by all parties. It would be the following: that all parties would agree on the amendments which would be put forward to the Supreme Court of Canada to determine their legality; that subsequently the debate in the House would, by agreement, be limited to those amendments submitted as a result of three-party agreement in the House which had been found to be legal and constitutional by the Supreme Court of Canada.

An hon. Member: Blackmail.

Mr. Clark: I suggest it is a way in which we could resolve the impasse with which we are now faced and get on with the business of Canada. It is a way in which we could ensure that the Parliament of Canada is dealing only with questions within the competence of the Parliament of Canada.

I raise it as a matter of House business in the earnest hope that the Prime Minister and the government House leader might consider it a means to expedite the business of Canada by the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, with your indulgence, I will attempt to deal with what seems to be a matter of negotiation between House leaders on this point of order. If the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) is suggesting that there merely be agreement among parties as to what subject would be raised after the Supreme Court has adjudicated, I would point out that obviously that is not enough, because although we know the subject we still do not know in what form it will pass and so on.

If the Leader of the Opposition is suggesting we spell out in detail amendments which would be accepted by this House after the Supreme Court has judged, I ask him how we can spell these amendments out in detail, know how the various members of the House will vote on them, know what parties would align for or against, say, on the property amendment or on the aboriginal rights amendment, unless he asks the House for its opinion. It cannot be the House leaders who would decide the text of an amendment which we would accept the day after the Supreme Court judged favourably. Therefore, the Leader of the Opposition is putting a proposition which seems to me is supporting my point.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Trudeau: The only way in which the court can know exactly what will come out of this House is to have it come out of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I would also remind the Leader of the Opposition that he quoted in the House—I think it was about ten days ago—a judgment of Beauchesne to the effect that the same subject matter should not be put before two public bodies, presumably at the same time. Now he is suggesting we do exactly that. We have before the House a joint resolution; he is now suggesting that we put it, at the same time, before the Supreme Court.

An hon. Member: We could adjourn.

Mr. Trudeau: Whether we adjourn or not, it is still before the House. We have engaged upon the legislative process; that is the course we are on. If he is suggesting that we go before the Supreme Court at the same time, he is flying in the face of the very judgment of Beauchesne he quoted ten days ago.

Let me just remind the opposition that in the 1930s, when the Hon. R. B. Bennett proposed his "new deal", particularly unemployment insurance legislation, the Liberal Party, which was then in opposition, argued the illegality of it, but they let the matter pass. It went to the Supreme Court and the Supreme Court, in effect, decided that it was illegal.

Mr. Andre: What about 1978?

Mr. Trudeau: This is what we are asking now. I can understand that the opposition thinks it is illegal, just as in the thirties the Liberals thought that the then Bennett "new deal" was illegal; but they did not systematically obstruct. They said, "Okay, we defer our opinions as to the legality; let us submit to the court something precise, something upon which it can judge, and we will rest by that judgment." I am just suggesting we continue that course.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would like to reply to what was said by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the constructive proposals put forward by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: It seems to me that we might at last be reaching the basis of some serious co-operation in the House.

I listened to the Prime Minister with care. He said that there was a sort of hypothetical aspect to what the Leader of the Opposition raised. I would like to respond to the suggestion; I hope all of us on both sides of the House can take some time to give it thought. If we could reach an agreement that each party could put forward another amendment—and we have an omnibus one covering two subjects only which are well known in the House—it would not require a lot of debate.

The government has indicated that it is interested in four-day time tabling. Each party could put forward an amendment which could be quickly dealt with and spelled out by agreement, in perhaps one day. We could vote now and then there could be a reference before final reading to the Supreme Court. We could have a vote on the amendments and then a reference to the Supreme Court, with the original resolution as amended by votes in the House. Then we could have a final vote in the House after hearing the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I should like to speak to two points. The first point is the one of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) concerning the program of R. B. Bennett in the thirties. The difference between R. B. Bennett's proposition and the proposition we have before us is that in the 1930s, when Parliament moved to pass that program, it was not faced with a judgment of the Supreme Court of a province which held the program to be illegal; that occurred afterwards.

Mr. Nowlan: That is absolutely correct.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): This is why I suggest the analogy of the Prime Minister does not apply.

With respect to the program itself, what has concerned us from the outset has been that Parliament would be asked finally to make an adjudication with respect to the matter before it had been considered by the Supreme Court of Canada. It appears that we see a split coming in the irresistible force meeting the immovable object.

● (1520)

With respect to this issue, I must say that we would be prepared to discuss an arrangement which would accommodate the constituencies represented by the various proposals for amendments before the House, provided, of course, that as a bottom line of those discussions it was understood that there would be no finality with respect to this matter until after the Supreme Court of Canada had adjudicated the issues which are before the court, or which may well be before the court.

We must remember, of course, that the Government of Canada must enter as a respondent in the appeal. It must defend itself in the appeal from the ruling of the Appeal Court of Manitoba, remembering that however it is resolved the Government of Canada must find itself in court. Finding itself in court, then, allows me to underscore to the Prime Minister, to the government House leader and to the Leader of the New Democratic Party the importance of the arrangement, which is that no final decision will be taken by this Parliament until the highest court in our country has ruled upon the constitutional validity of the proposals before it.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, in the proposition which is being put forward at this time there is one problem, and that is that the court would not be faced with a final decision.

Earlier in the question period the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) asked me how we intend to transmit the resolution, or whatever it is, to the Supreme Court. I would like to advise the House of Commons that the Supreme Court of Canada must take judicial notice of anything which has been passed by Parliament. If we accept the proposition put forward by the House leader of the Conservative Party, the Supreme Court of Canada will not be considering something which has been finally decided upon by the House of Commons. That would be one of the problems; the Supreme Court of Canada would be faced with a resolution which would not have been finalized. It would still be a hypothetical question to them because, coming back to the House of Commons after adjudication, someone could propose some amendment and the question of legality could be reopened completely.

If the Conservative House leader wishes to be serious in his proposition, he should recognize that we should help the work of the Supreme Court and give them something final, or have a very definite agreement that when the question has been decided by the Supreme Court, we pass it right away without debate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I am not sure if the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) listened with care. If he did, then I am not at all persuaded by his reply. As I heard the proposal of the Leader of the Opposition, there would be very specific amendments agreed upon by all the parties.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is right.

Mr. Broadbent: The only nuance that I added to the suggestion, and there seemed to be agreement on this side of the House, was that we could take the votes on the amendments here in the House before the package was sent to the Supreme Court for adjudication. There seems to be unanimity on this side of the House on that point. I simply cannot understand the argument of the Minister of Justice.

If there was a solemn agreement entered into, perhaps by a special House order passed in the House and supported by all parties, then that would be the definitive resolution that we are asking the Supreme Court to pass judgment upon. Surely there is no problem with that whatsoever. As I see it, the only problem is that the government is not responding in a reasonable way to a fair-minded proposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I would like to respond to one argument that was made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) on this question of the reference and the fact that there may be amendments still outstanding. I would draw to the attention of the Minister of Justice the provisions of the Supreme Court Act respecting references. Perhaps the Minister of Justice may like to read Section 55(1)(d), which reads:

> 55. (1) Important questions of law or fact concerning
> (d) the powers of the Parliament of Canada, or of the legislatures of the provinces, or of the respective governments thereof, whether or not the particular power in question has been or is proposed to be exercised;

What is being suggested in the House by the Leader of the Opposition is simply that we, as a chamber, decide what amendments we wish the Supreme Court of Canada to consider as part of the resolution. Having decided that question, having determined quickly and expeditiously in this House what the final form of the resolution will be, it is then completely within the jurisdiction of the government, and I suggest would be desirable, to refer this resolution with the proposed amendments to the Supreme Court of Canada, pursuant to the provisions of Section 55 of the Supreme Court Act, and await their ruling on the jurisdiction question and on what lies within the powers of the federal government as opposed to the provincial governments. Having had a determination on that question, we in this House could then take our responsibilities.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the two parties of the opposition have put forward two proposals that are not quite identical. To be as constructive as possible I would suggest to my hon. colleagues opposite that the House leaders meet this afternoon at which time we can examine more closely what has been proposed. I note a fundamental difference between, on the one hand, the proposal of the Progressive Conservative Party which gives no indication whatsoever about the length of the debate following the decision of the Supreme Court, which is essential. On the other hand according to the NDP proposal there could be an order of the House and one of the Senate, presumably, whereby when the decision of the Supreme Court has been handed down, the debate in the House would be extremely limited, no amendments would be allowed, and the resolution would be adopted probably within a set period of time, something like 24 hours. That is not clear in the Progressive Conservative proposal.

So, I feel that if hon. members are serious, they will accept the suggestion I am putting to them right now. Today, we have a motion that must be considered, ten minutes have already been used up and about two hours remain under the name of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières). We would promise not to introduce today the motion providing time allotment to limit the debate on the Constitution provided the Minister of State for Finance is allowed to have the debate on his motion completed today and that motion put to a vote before six o'clock.

We would not introduce, today, the time allotment motion to limit the debate on the Constitution provided we could proceed with the study of the other motion under the name of the Minister of State for Finance. While the House proceeds presumably, with that study, and not being a victim of an opposition party trying to tie up the system, the House leaders in good faith would look further into the two proposals put forth by their respective party leaders.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, there have been two House leaders' meetings and I am neither alarmed nor surprised by the proposals put forward by the Leader of the Opposition today, nor should my hon. friend be. Of course, I am prepared to meet with my hon. friend to explore the areas upon which we can find agreement, from the point of view of, hopefully, reaching agreement. That has been my position from the outset, and we can begin that meeting, or series of meetings, today.

• (1530)

I note his undertaking with respect to government business. He said he will move ahead with the motion under 75C, which is agreeable, and that he will not call the motion in his name because a point of order is already outstanding with respect to that matter. Perhaps we can sit down and begin the process of exploring a way out of a position in which I regret to say the Parliament of Canada should never have been placed in the first place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, may I indicate that we are also prepared to sit down with the representatives of the other parties to assess this matter. I dare to express the view that we are making progress right here. The Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) principal objection to the initial proposal made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) was that he was asking that a number of subject matter amendments be included in the reference, some of which might be hypothetical because they would not get passed down the road.

My leader offered something which corrected that. We could have a brief debate, one day each, on the various amendments so that we would be submitting to the Supreme Court only those amendments which actually have the support of the House. My leader also suggested that we could agree to a limited debate following the decision of the Supreme Court. I think we could also agree that there would be no further amendments unless amendments were necessary because of the ruling of the Supreme Court to strike certain matters out. I dare to believe we are making progress. I hope it will continue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: If I understand the terms of that proposal, it would be that today we would go to the business of discussing the motion under the name of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières). I am in the hands of the House, but if we need two hours to discuss that motion, I would have to be asked by the House to defer the numerous questions of privilege or points of order which might be raised until after that discussion has taken place.

I am in the hands of the House, but if the point is realistic, if that debate requires two hours, and if it is to take place today, it would have to begin almost immediately.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: This is agreed.

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Madam Speaker: I am sorry. I heard, "Agreed." I will hear the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I do have a question of privilege which I would like to bring forward. I was conferring with my leader and my colleagues around me, and I confess that I did not hear you, and I also did not agree. If you are proposing to go to orders of the day, or something like that, I would say no.

Some hon. Members: Oh, come on!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I do have a point to raise.

Madam Speaker: That is fine. There is no agreement. I am in the hands of the House. It is simply that I was listening to the proposal. I tried to calculate the time that the House need to agree with that proposal; but if the House does not agree, I have no other course but to follow the proceedings as I usually do. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I do not know how—the question never having arisen before, in my experience—our House leader or our leader can speak for whatever number of questions of privilege you have before you raised by individual members. That will take time in itself to canvass. Assuming that you have six or seven questions of privilege to deal with, there are at least six or seven members who will have to be consulted before we can come to any party conclusion on the matter. But surely neither our House leader nor any one of the officers of the party can take a position on the spur of the moment as to whether the rights and privileges of individual members on routine proceedings will be set aside.

While our House leader, who has a question of privilege filed with you, is speaking, I might take it upon myself to see you, Madam Speaker, to see what questions of privilege you do have, and then to speak to the members of this party, who might be involved. Others in the other two parties might do the same.

Madam Speaker: I certainly was not suggesting that the Leader of the Opposition or the Leader of the Conservative Party in the House would make a determination regarding other hon. members who have questions of privilege. They are individual questions of privilege, if I understand the concept. I was merely implicit, but I would not have gone up to that point, inviting the hon. members to allow me to do that. But if that is not allowed, that is final.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, there is a way out of this, and it is very clear under Standing Orders. If the hon. members in the party of my colleague, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), are serious and are in good faith, and I believe that, maybe they will then accept the proposal I have to make. If they are serious in saying they are interested in negotiating a way out of this situation, then you have the power, Madam Speaker, under Standing Order 17(1) to defer all questions of privilege to a time which is suitable to you. Since the debate on the motion of the Minister of State for Finance has on hour and 58 minutes to run, the debate would end at about 5.15, a division would be taken and there would be at least half an hour before six o'clock in which the questions of privilege could be heard.

Standing Order 17(1) allows you to defer all questions of privilege. If we look at Beauchesne's fifth edition, the Standing Orders are reproduced in Appendix 2. If you read it, Madam Speaker, you will see you have the right to do that. If the hon. members are sincere, they will agree that the questions of privilege today should be postponed until after the vote on the motion of the Minister of State for Finance, and then we could have the meeting. But if delay is what they want, they will have delay.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No delay. I have privileges in this House and you cannot deny them.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I think you put the matter very correctly in terms of what privilege is. It is an individual matter and not a party matter. As you know, I have put in a notice with respect to a question of privilege which I want to pursue because I believe it is important to me and to other members of the House. I will do my best to be as short as possible.

The bottom line of rule 17(1) is this:

> Whenever any matter of privilege arises, it shall be taken into consideration immediately.

We have always done our best to take them into consideration immediately after the question period and to dispose of them. Then the rule goes on to deal with notice. Technically, under our rules now, they can be taken during the question period. This procedure has not been followed, because nobody wants to interrupt the question period, I suppose. I am not quarrelling with that decision today. However, the custom in the House has been to proceed with the matter. I think that as we go forward you will find that my privilege is germane to the position we are in the moment. At least, I hope you will so find, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Pinard: The House leader of the Tory party read from Standing Order 17.

An hon. Member: That is the Conservative party.

Mr. Pinard: Let me bring to your attention, Madam Speaker, what is contained in Beauchesne's fifth edition. The Standing Orders are reproduced and on page 305 I read:

> Question of Privilege
> 17. (1) Whenever any matter of privilege arises, it shall be taken into consideration immediately or at a time appointed by Mr. Speaker.

The important words are "or at a time appointed by Mr. Speaker". I agree with my colleague that in an earlier edition of the Standing Orders dated June, 1978, those words were not included. But I submit that this is an error in printing, and I have grounds for that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pinard: If hon. members are serious, they will listen. In the January, 1976 edition, those very words "at a time appointed by Mr. Speaker" are included. When we go to the 1978 edition, as I just mentioned, the words are not there. This is an error, since in the latest edition of Beauchesne, which is subsequent to the Standing Orders of 1978, those words of 1976 are restored.

• (1540)

If I may, Madam Speaker, I would draw your attention and the attention of the Clerk of the House to the fact that at the very beginning of the edition of 1978 there is a foreword which says: "The changes in the Standing Orders since the printing of January 1976 are as follows:". That appears at the very beginning. Then there are five changes and Section 17 is not included. So it is obvious that Section 17 should not have been changed. This is an error of printing and Beauchesne is correct in reprinting what was printed in 1976.

That is the explanation why my hon. colleague, by quoting from the edition of 1978, could not find the words in Beauchesne's fifth edition but which were in the Standing Orders of 1976, words which are not quoted as having been amended at the beginning of the 1978 edition.

This is all very technical, but in fact never in this House was there a decision that permitted Standing Order 17 to be altered in the way it has been altered in the 1978 edition. That is why, Madam Speaker, I am saying that you have the power and the right to postpone, under the Standing Order, all questions of privilege to an hour that is suitable to you.

Madam Speaker: On the point of order, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, in 1976 we tried out something. An order determined that for the remainder of a certain period the Speaker could defer any question of privilege to avoid them during the oral question period. Unfortunately, the temporary order was not renewed and this is why—

An hon. Member: For what reason?

Mr. Lambert: What are the reasons? I do not know, but the order was not renewed nor were the amendments incorporated because the present Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), who was then government House leader, refused to do so. He absolutely refused to refer any procedure matter to the Committee on Procedure and Organization to enable us to refer the recommendations to the House for approval. There are now more shortcomings in the Standing Orders on account of that. It is merely a matter of shortcomings because the Standing Orders of 1978 as printed are correct.

[English]

Hon. Erick Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I will be very brief. I submit, first of all, that the little green book that I hold in my hand and which you also hold in your hand is the official "Standing Orders of the House of Commons." Nowhere else will they be found than in this book. Similarly with statutes across the country.

I suggest, secondly, Madam Speaker, that any appendix, which is what my hon. friend the government House leader was referring to when reading from Beauchesne, cannot be regarded as the official version of the Standing Orders contained in this green book. There is another explanation than the one given by him; he suggested there was a misprint and that the error occurs in the official edition and not in Beauchesne.

The other explanation and the more logical one is that this Rule 17(1) in Appendix 2 of Beauchesne blends the two occasions upon which privilege is raised. One, we find, is in 17(1) of the official Standing Orders, namely, that it must be heard immediately. The other aspect of it, "or at a time appointed by Mr. Speaker", deals with those questions of privilege that may be raised on occasions not contemplated by 17(1), of which, for instance, notice need not be given if the question of privilege arises out of the question period. The Chair has the power to deal with those at some other time.

The ultimate argument, and I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, the one that you must accept, is that this green book, the "Standing Orders of the House of Commons", is the official rules of this House and cannot in any way be supplemented by any appendix printed in Beauchesne, or anywhere else, for that matter.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: If I may, I shall try to clarify this first point. The 1975 version of the Standing Orders of the House of Commons did indeed include in Standing Order 17 a provision under which the Speaker of the House had to or could hear questions of privilege at the time specified by the Chair. This was included in Standing Order 17 following a temporary order made by the House which remained in effect from 7 April, 1975, to October 17, 1977.

Later on, this provision was removed from the first paragraph of Standing Order 17 because, if my information is correct, the parties involved had not agreed to have it maintained. However, on the basis of this temporary provision which had been included in Standing Order 17, my predecessor, Speaker Jerome, ruled that questions of privilege could no longer be heard during the oral question period, in all likelihood because the question period was going on indefinitely and Members of Parliament could not arrange their schedule on the basis of what was going on in the House.

He therefore determined on the basis of the temporary order which had then expired that questions of privilege would be heard at three o'clock after the Oral Question Period. After a trial period, he once again determined that his decision seemed to be appropriate, that it was likely to promote the orderly conduct of the business of the House, and he decided to maintain it.

If I were now to decide without the consent of all the parties involved in this House that such or such a question of privilege should be heard at another time than three o'clock, I would have to do an exercise of gymnastics that I refuse to do and declare that, since Mr. Speaker Jerome had ruled on the basis of a temporary order of the House which has now expired, I shall now, on the basis of another order of the House which has also expired and of the precedent created by Mr. Jerome when he took it upon himself to determine at what time the questions of privilege would be heard, decide that questions of privilege will be heard at another time. I believe that this would be a much looser interpretation of this provision of our Standing Orders than the Chair can be allowed to make. In my opinion, the 1978 version is the official version, the one I have followed until now, and if another version appears in another volume and another edition, it could be used as a reference if the House decides to amend this provision and allows me to determine at what time the questions of privilege should be heard, but I would not want to go against a custom, or rather a practice of the House which was set in more or less legitimate circumstances and conditions by my predecessor if we consider that the temporary order of the House on the basis of which he had ruled had then expired, and I would not want to take it upon myself to go further than what the previous Speaker had decided at that time. Now the fact that there are so many questions of privilege to be heard at a time when the House or certain members of the House would like to proceed with the orders of the day certainly is a problem. I must say that I quite understand this legitimate desire of some members and the frustration of others who want to expound on their question of privilege. However, the Chair must be guided strictly by the rules, and unless someone can give me undeniable proof that this is a printing mistake, I shall need the unanimous consent of the House to defer questions of privilege to another time than three o'clock. The hon. President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, for our part, we would agree that the questions of privilege be deferred until after the vote on the motion of the Minister of State responsible for Finance (Mr. Bussières).

Madam Speaker: Do the hon. members wish to debate the proposal? The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I thought I made it clear before, and I certainly did to the Chair because you understood me, that there is no way we as a party can defer the rights and privileges of individual members who have filed questions of privilege with the Chair. I intend to speak to you, Madam Speaker, and to find out who those members are on this side. I will then see those members and see what can be done. In the meantime, negotiations between my House leader and the government House leader will not be impeded. As soon as I can get things together with the individual members, then I will come back to my House leader who can convey that information to his other colleagues. I will come to you, and we can take it from there.

● (1550)

Madam Speaker: Obviously, there is no unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: We will then proceed with the questions of privilege. The first one I have is in the name of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker).

PRIVILEGE

MR. BAKER (NEPEAN-CARLETON)—DECISION OF NEWFOUNDLAND SUPREME COURT

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege was set forth in the correspondence of which I gave you notice as required by the Standing Order. I base it on four matters. My letter to you of April 1, 1981, reads:

> It will be my contention that the use of the House of Commons as part of a process for making amendments to the Constitution of Canada, amendments which have been found illegal as to both substance and process, by the Newfoundland Supreme Court, places all members of the House, and particularly members of the Bar, in an unacceptable and improper position.

Until we have satisfied, if we can, the negotiations—and that is by no means certain at this point—I think the matter is still germane. I meant to say that to you at the outset. I am speaking for myself. This is a matter of personal privilege which may affect others.

I am a member of the Law Society of Upper Canada. As such, upon my call to the bar I took three oaths. The first is the general oath of allegiance, which I took as well when I became a member of the House of Commons. The second was the solicitor's oath. The third, and the most important because it applies to this matter, is an oath which I took in 1957 as a member of the law society as a barrister upon my call to the bar. In that oath are these words:

> You shall not pervert the law to favour or prejudice anyone, but in all things shall conduct yourself truly and with integrity. In fine, the Queen's interest and your fellow citizens, you shall uphold and maintain according to the Constitution and law of this Province. All this you swear to observe and perform to the best of your knowledge, belief and ability.

That was the first oath I took which the proposals before the House still affect. The second arises out of the statute. I will give Your Honour these precedents so that you can look at the matter from my point of view, recognizing that I am an Ontario barrister. There are nine other jurisdictions in Canada and it may affect lawyers differently, but at least from the point of view of Ontario, as a member of the Law Society of Upper Canada the law society act of 1970 applies to me. There are certain regulations and rules under the law society act.

That act sets forth the oaths I have taken. These are matters not just of the law society deciding what should be done, but statutes of the province of Ontario stipulating which oath I must take and to what I bind myself.

The Law Society has produced a professional conduct handbook which is binding upon members of the law society in the sense that it is used by the law society and its members. It is a self-governing profession by the benchers of the law society who judge the conduct of members as members of the bar.

Certain rules bear on the position I hold as a member of the bar and a member of this House. I want to refer to rule 9 at page 26 of the rules of conduct of the law society, which reads:

The lawyer who holds public office should, in the discharge of his official duties, adhere to standards of conduct as high as those which these Rules require of a lawyer in the practice of law.

The commentary of these rules issued under the authority of the law society act, 1970, reads, in part:

The Rule applies to a lawyer who is elected or appointed to a legislative or administrative office at any level of government—

It applies to a Member of Parliament, a member of the legislature, a municipal councillor and so on. The commentary continues:

He must bear in mind that he is in the public eye and therefore the legal profession can more readily be brought into disrepute by failure on his part to observe its ethical standards of conduct.

It then goes on to deal with certain other matters which are not germane to this issue.

Commentary 9 on page 27 of those rules which govern me in the conduct of my private, professional and public duty, read in part:

—if his conduct in office reflects adversely upon his integrity or his professional competence, he may be subject to disciplinary action.

That is the first oath. I repeat briefly part of the oath which I took in 1957 which binds me:

You shall not pervert the law to favour or prejudice any one, but in all things shall conduct yourself truly and with integrity. In fine, the Queen's interest and your fellow citizens, you shall uphold and maintain according to the Constitution—

I am now in this position. Unless there was some arrangement made as an officer of the court—and I happen as well to be an officer of the court and no such arrangement has been made—it is my respectful submission that I would be flying in the face of the oath I took as a barrister if I agreed to the following procedure. I contend it would be a contempt of the Supreme Court of Canada to require me and the government—and the Prime Minister indicated to me yesterday that is what he intended to do, and he did not back off from his position today—subject to negotiation, to ensure that the resolution go through this Parliament in face of a judgment of the Court of Appeal of Newfoundland, which court has unanimously and clearly held that those very constitutional proposals are illegal. That is the first point on which I rely.

The second point flows out of the first but it is separate and distinct. I am an officer of the court. I am an officer of all the courts before which I have a licence to practise, namely, the provincial courts, the county court having federally appointed judges, the Federal Court of Canada and the Supreme Court of Canada.

As I tried to say in the debate when we were discussing the question of judges' salaries, all Members of Parliament have a duty with respect to the courts. This point has been covered also in the documents I will leave with you with respect to the rules of conduct of barristers and the statutes which govern them. I suspect they would probably apply to others across the country, but you will have to examine that. The oath requires that all of us conduct ourselves in a way that respects the integrity of the court.

● (1600)

My second proposition is that it is an affront to the court. It is a practice in which barristers, members of the Law Society, lawyers who happen to be members of this House of Commons and indeed other Members of Parliament are not to persist in and ought to resist. It thereby affects my privileges as a Member of Parliament.

I am subject to certain other things that are affected because of my membership in the bar. It is important to look at that and how it affects me here in the House. I am a member of the Canadian Bar Association. Membership in the Canadian Bar Association has no magic in itself. However, the code of professional conduct of the Canadian Bar Association is binding upon, affects, and is a burden upon barristers, whether or not they are members of the Bar Association, because the rules in the code of conduct are the kinds of rules that will move the minds of the disciplinary bodies of law societies across the country. In other words, that rule of conduct can be pleaded in the event there is an allegation of a breach of it by a member of the bar.

I am going to read from their rules to indicate to you the strictness of application. I quote from chapter IX entitled "A Lawyer in Public Office":

The lawyer who holds public office should, in the discharge of his official duties, adhere to the standards of conduct as high as those which these Rules require of a lawyer in the practice of law.

This is the commentary on that:

The Rule applies to a lawyer who is elected or appointed . . . He must bear in mind that he is in the public eye . . . The lawyer who holds public office must not allow his personal or other interests to conflict with the proper discharge of his official duties.

I suggest that applies to me and, incidentally, also to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien).

Mr. Blais: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I am a member of the bar and I have listened with a great deal of interest to the comments being made by the hon. gentleman. I would like to point out that there is about as much foundation for what he is advancing—I am getting to my point of order—as what he advanced on Friday, March 27. There is a point of order that I would like to address at this time.

Madam Speaker: Will the minister please address the point of order and not argue the case.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Let's not waste time.

Madam Speaker: If the hon. member wishes to argue the matter, I can recognize him later, but not on a point of order.

Mr. Blais: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. I am suggesting that the hon. member, in raising a spurious question of privilege, is breaching the order of this House. I would like to set the stage and quote the authorities upon which I base this particular point of order.

Madam Speaker: Order. I just heard the minister say that he was expressing the opinion that this was not a serious question of privilege. That has not yet been determined. The person to determine that in the House is the Speaker. If the minister has a point of order that is perfectly in order, I can hear him, but not to argue the case. That can come later, if I decide I want to hear him on it.

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, the point I am making is that there is an orchestration being conducted by the opposition of which the hon. gentleman's spurious or alleged question of privilege is but one part. In order for me to establish the point of order, I have to draw to Your Honour's attention the behaviour of the opposition since Tuesday, March 24. I might point out—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order. A point of order has to refer to something presently happening in the House. It is true we are discussing questions of privilege every day in this House. If the minister wishes to raise a point of order, it has to be directly related to what the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is presently saying; but it has to be a point of order, not debate.

Mr. Blais: The point of order I am bringing to your attention is the obstruction of the House.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry—

Mr. Blais: That is happening now.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry. I gave the minister three chances to state his point of order. I do not think he has one. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton.

Mr. McRae: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Kempling: Here come the heavies.

Mr. McRae: My point of order is simply this. The hon. member has risen as a Member of Parliament dealing with the privileges of Members of Parliament. He has not spoken about this privilege. He spoke only about privileges of members of the Bar Association. That has nothing to do with this House.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Just so the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) will be clear, I did not couch it in that way. I said exactly the opposite. I said it is a duty that falls on all Members of Parliament, and falls particularly heavily on members of the bar. That is the only contention.

I regret the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) is imputing motives to me. I have always spoken very kindly of him. I do not think I am going to be that long, Madam Speaker. If the minister will just contain himself, he can then argue the case.

I think I was at the point of having dealt with the lawyer in public life. I indicated that the proposition put by the Prime Minister in question period yesterday—

Mr. Blais: I rise on a further point of order, Madam Speaker. It is related directly to the comment just made by the hon. member. Your Honour will recall, and it is recorded at page 8714 of Hansard for last Friday, the categorical statement of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton that "we are going to use parliamentary time and we are going to waste it." It is that statement that I want to relate his present behaviour to, in terms of the systematic obstruction of the business of the House. That is the point of order I would like to draw to Your Honour's attention so that you can competently rule on it.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The minister will have to point out to me where the hon. member has violated a rule of this House. The minister may have an opinion of something that is going on, but that is not a point of order.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising from what the minister has just been saying. I would like him to be very specific. Who does he feel is the obstructionist in this House?

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, I would point out that the hon. member who has just spoken is part of the attempt to obstruct the business of the House. Because in effect we are not dealing with the obstruction—

Madam Speaker: Order. The minister made that point in another point of order.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I have a question of privilege of which I would like to give you notice. I asked who was the obstructionist.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. We are already discussing a question of privilege.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He is giving you notice, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: In the middle of a question of privilege? I do not need oral notice; I need only written notice.

Mr. Stevens: It is coming.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I should point out, because the Minister of Supply and Services is also a member of the bar, the difference between the circumstances on Friday and those of today. In the intervening time, the Supreme Court of Newfoundland ruled that what Parliament, all of us, are being asked to deal with is illegal. The court ruled that the approach of the Prime Minister with respect to federalism and with respect to the Supreme Court is illegal. The court said his approach is wrong. That is the difference.

● (1610)

Yesterday questions were put to the Prime Minister in which he was invited to take a course of action other than engaging Parliament in voting or acting upon an illegality. He said no, he would not depart from his course, and we have no indication today that he will depart from that course. The only indication we have is that we are going to sit down and discuss how we might mutually agree to depart from that course. The position of the Prime Minister has not moved one inch, but the circumstances have changed in that as of Friday there was no decision. Today there is a decision which says that what this Parliament is being asked to deal with is illegal.

My position is that all Members of Parliament have a duty, but it is a breach of my personal privilege when I as a member of the bar have to participate in what appears to be the perpetration of an act by Parliament which flies in the face of a judgment which says that what the Prime Minister is attempting to do is illegal. That is simple. I am a lawyer in public office, and I am subject to certain disciplines. That is the position.

If I could get back to the argument I was making before I was interrupted by the hon. gentleman:

> The lawyer who holds public office should, in the discharge of his official duties, adhere to standards of conduct as high as those which these Rules require of a lawyer in the practice of law.

It says that if he does not, that lawyer would be subject to disciplinary action.

My second point is that the whole code of conduct—which I am prepared to leave with Your Honour if you wish to consider the point, because it may apply to other members of the House—makes it clear that a lawyer in public office has a particular responsibility.

I took an oath as a Privy Councillor. I took that oath on June 4, 1979. Your Honour has taken the oath of a Privy Councillor. The Minister of Justice has taken the oath as a Privy Councillor. The Minister of Supply and Services has taken the oath as a Privy Councillor. A number of members have. The Prime Minister has taken the oath of a Privy Councillor. It is a very serious oath. I am sure Your Honour took a look at it, after it had been read to you by the Clerk of the Privy Council, and said, "My God, what have I taken?" Because what it said in your case, Madam Speaker, is that you could not even tell your husband, for instance, what was happening if your husband was not a Privy Councillor. That oath is a very serious oath. It is different from any other oath we have to take.

Mr. Nowlan: He took one too.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The difference in Your Honour's case, as I know, is that Your Honour's husband is a Privy Councillor as well. Nonetheless, the Privy Council oath is a very serious oath. It puts a burden on certain members of the House. It certainly does on me. That burden does not rest upon certain other members of the House.

I will read the oath in part. I will not read the words that terrified us when we read it the next day; I will read only the part which refers to the judgment.

An hon. Member: Read it all.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): My friend wants me to read it all. He can read it for himself some day, if he is so fortunate. The oath reads, in part, as follows:

> You . . . do solemnly promise and swear that you will serve Her Majesty truly and faithfully in the Place of Her Council in this Her Majesty's Dominion of Canada—

There are two small phrases. First:

> You will in all things to be moved, treated and debated in any such Privy Council, faithfully, honestly and truly declare your mind and opinion to the honour and benefit of the Queen's Majesty, and the good of Her Subjects without partiality or exception of persons—

That oath has been taken by the Attorney General of Canada, as argued by the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) yesterday. It places the Minister of Justice in the particular position in which he is. He must advise and take a particular position with respect to all other ministers when he takes that oath, as he did.

Then the oath goes on:

> In general you will be vigilant, diligent and circumspect in all your doings touching the Queen's Majesty's affairs; All which Matters and Things you will faithfully observe and keep, as a good Councillor ought to do to the utmost of your power, will and discretion.

What that means to me as a Privy Councillor is that when I see something which flies in the face of all reason, which holds the Supreme Court of Canada in contempt, which offers the Supreme Court of Canada a fait accompli, which asks Parliament to debate something which is now before the court and which has now been held illegal in another court—it is before the Supreme Court on the appeal from Manitoba, but it has now been held illegal by the court in Newfoundland—then as a Privy Councillor I think all of us have some duty to be vigilant.

I have a question of personal privilege which must be considered, and that question is whether I, as a Privy Councillor and as a member of the bar, having taken the oaths I am supposed to have taken, ought to be placed in the position—

Mr. Peterson: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is wearing so many cloaks of unctuous rectitude that I am wondering if, in the opinion of Your Honour, this is proper dress for a Member of Parliament.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The one coat I am not wearing is a coat of many colours, which my friend is wearing.

I was going to finish. My contention is that those of us who are members of the bar—and particularly myself because this is a question involving me as a member of the bar—those who have taken the oath as Privy Councillors, those who are bound, as I am, by the rules of the law society act of Ontario to which

I must adhere and by the rules of conduct of the Canadian Bar Association, to the extent that they can be pleaded against us in a breach—they have set a standard of conduct—are being placed in an invidious position with respect to the proposition which is being put to the House by the Prime Minister, namely, that we must—not necessarily support or reject, but must—deal with a matter which has been declared to be illegal and on which an appeal is now pending before the Supreme Court of Canada.

Finally, as an officer of the court I am put in a position which is different from the position of those who are not officers of the court. As an officer of the court I am bound by rules to uphold the integrity of the court. My duty to the court is important to me because I happen to be a member of the bar. The Minister of Justice, who is also a member of the bar, has a duty to the court as well. The Minister of Justice and the government—the Minister of Justice particularly because the resolution stands in his name—are in violation of their duty to the court—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1620)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —in putting that matter and suggesting that Parliament must deal with it, as the minister has said. It is still the government's position that we must deal with it before it goes to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Madam Speaker, in conclusion, none of us who is a Privy Councillor or a member of the bar will be in exactly the same position as members who are not if we are put in the position of having to deal or treat with this resolution in any way. The only way our particular rights and privileges can be dealt with—and some members may not feel so bound but I do; otherwise I would not have raised it—is if the matter is withdrawn now until the Supreme Court of Canada deals with it. There is nothing in that suggestion which departs from the idea of meeting and discussing how it would be dealt with later, but it can be withdrawn now. That is the proposition.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: On the question of privilege?

Mr. Collenette: On this question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: We have several questions of privilege and therefore I do not think I would like to entertain another speaker on this particular one.

The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton understands that whether something is legal or illegal is not within my purview. Whether it is or not, I am sure the hon. member knows he has a privilege in this Parliament and if he, as he says, were forced to do something which is illegal through the actions of this Parliament, he would be protected precisely by that privilege. The House would protect him. That has to be the case because he is a member of the bar, and he would have to be disciplined precisely because he is a member of the bar and a member of the Privy Council. Other members would not be equal in this House in the sense that the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton would be doing something illegal and another member who is not a lawyer would not be doing something illegal.

So the privilege to discuss matters freely in this House is protected; it goes back as far as 300 years ago. I quote from the British Bill of Rights:

—that the freedom of speech and debates or proceedings in Parliament ought not to be impeached or questioned in any court or place outside of Parliament.

I understand the hon. member's feelings about this question, but he would be free in this House to debate, amend or vote against whatever he feels is illegal or wrong. The point that he raises might be an argument for a course of action he may choose to follow if and when this question arises in the House, but it is not an argument that I can entertain as a question of privilege.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, since you have ruled on that question of privilege, may I ask at this time if the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) or somebody else on behalf of his party has checked to see whether or not we have the permission of those members who have given notice of privilege to defer consideration on that matter so we may proceed with the business of the day as described earlier?

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I have indeed canvassed those members on this side. I gave the undertaking across the way and to the Chair that I would inform my House leader of the result, who in turn would inform the government House leader and that is what I intend to do. He has been on his feet and that is why I have not been able to do it until now.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. ROY—OMISSION IN OFFICIAL REPORT

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): On a point of order, Madam Speaker. During routine proceedings yesterday when you called presentation of reports from standing and special committees, I rose, sought and got unanimous consent to present the third report of the Special Committee on a National Trading Corporation and that report was concurred in. Madam Speaker, I note that the Votes and Proceedings indicate that indeed I was given unanimous consent when I presented the report, seconded by the hon. member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Cardiff), for concurrence of the House.

I note as well that Hansard for yesterday does not even mention that this report received the concurrence of the House. I would like to make that correction immediately because it seems that, since the report does not appear as having been concurred in, the operations of this National Trading Corporation may have been interrupted pursuant to our terms of reference.

Madam Speaker: That is a fact, I am being advised that there was an error in Hansard and it will be corrected. I thank the hon. member for bringing this to our attention.

[English]

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, just to clarify, I understand you ruled there was no question of privilege because the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) had claimed that because he was in the legal profession he was being placed in a special position, and he was trying to distinguish himself from other Members of Parliament in that context. Surely—

Madam Speaker: Order. This is a commentary on a ruling, not a point of order and I cannot accept it at this time.

The hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) on a question of privilege?

Mr. Stevens: Yes.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, I have many more before the hon. member's.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, my question of privilege arises from the notice that I was attempting to give you with respect to the comment made by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais). I know the question of privilege that I gave you notice of is coming up later, but I feel we can clear up this question of privilege very quickly.

Madam Speaker: I would think it is a point of order.

Mr. Stevens: No, it is not.

PRIVILEGE

MR. STEVENS—USE OF WORD "OBSTRUCTIONIST" BY MR. BLAIS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege is this. As we know, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) made certain random comments about members of the House, and presumably of my party, being obstructionists. He said we were obstructing the progress of the House. You will recall I rose on a point of order and asked him to be specific and name the obstructionist that he was referring to. His reply was: "Well, you for one are obstructing; you are an obstructionist." I do not know whether he used the word "obstructionist", but I draw your attention to a precedent on this word "obstructionist" and generally obstructing progress of the House. I refer you to Hansard of May 6, 1961, page 4459. Mr. Churchill, the House leader, said:

Those are his words, and the hon. members of the opposition are certainly showing themselves as obstructionists today.

Then Mr. Chevrier said:

I rise on a question of privilege, to take issue with what has been said by the House leader, who referred to our tactics as obstructionist.

Madam Speaker, I suggest this precedent will give you absolutely no trouble. Mr. Speaker said:

I think perhaps the minister would like to modify the word "obstructionist". I will give him the opportunity to do so. As far as the question of privilege arising out of the intervention of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is concerned, I have disposed of that. Really the discussion was continuing on that basis, and I would ask hon. members to desist.

Mr. Chevrier then said:

I rise on a question of privilege. We have been charged by the House leader and another hon. member with using obstructionist tactics. What we have been doing is supporting the rules of this House and asserting the rights of Parliament. I ask you, sir, to invite the House leader and the hon. member for Calgary South to amend their language when they direct their attacks on us as obstructionists.

The House leader then said:

Mr. Speaker, if the word "obstruction" is objectionable—I do not think it is contrary to the rules—to hon. members on the other side I——will make an appropriate substitution.

Madam Speaker, that is the thrust of my question of privilege. We have a clear precedent on the word "obstructionist". I asked the minister who is an obstructionist in this House, and he named me. If you find that I have a prima facie case for my question of privilege, I would put the appropriate motion to you asking the hon. member to withdraw his statement.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, on that point, I would be pleased to document the facts upon which the allegation relating to obstructionism by members opposite was made.

● (1630)

Madam Speaker: Order, please. We are not discussing whether some people are obstructing or not obstructing. By the way, it is a point of order. The question of unparliamentary language is not a question of privilege; it is a point of order and I will treat it as a point of order.

I think I can rule on it quite easily. The word "obstruct" without any context—and I am forever having trouble with Beauchesne's list; somehow the word is on both lists, the list of words which are unparliamentary and the list of words which are not unparliamentary. I am forever having trouble with that list.

The hon. member quoted a precedent. It depends very much upon the context of the debate in which the word was used this afternoon. It did not strike me as being particularly offensive, because my recollection is that the word was applied to a group of people, not to an individual. I refer to Erskine May which indicates that expressions which are unparliamentary when applied to individuals are not always so considered when applied to a whole party.

In the words pronounced by the Hon. Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais), I did not hear anything unparliamentary. But, of course, there is always the reservation that I will look at the blues, and if it appears to be unparliamentary, I would proceed to get the normal redress for the hon. member.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I rise on what you have accepted as a point of order: I am very pleased to hear that you will examine the blues.

The sequence was that I asked a direct question: Would the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) be specific as to who is the obstructionist. He came back and named me as the obstructionist. Nothing could be more individually-oriented than what the Minister of Supply and Services has done.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Withdraw it.

Madam Speaker: I will look at the blues. That is final; I will look at the blues.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to belabour the point, but I want to return to the point I made a few minutes ago. I see the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is just about to enter the House. I would hope perhaps he has had those discussions, so that we may be able to defer the questions of privilege and proceed to the motion under Standing Order 75C which is under discussion.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, as I undertook, I have had consultations with my House leader who, I understand, will be getting in touch with the government House leader.

Madam Speaker: Then we will proceed with the question of privilege in the name of the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence).

MR. LAWRENCE—CONFLICT OF INTEREST IN DEBATING RESOLUTION ON CONSTITUTION

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): At the very beginning I would like to assure Madam Speaker that the question I am raising is not a frivolous one; it is a very sincere one. I have never, do not now, or will never raise questions of privilege designed merely to delay the House.

Mr. Blais: Oh, come on!

Mr. Lawrence: I can be no more sincere than this. My question of privilege today is a very personal and a very sincere one. I emphasize the word "personal". Perhaps some of the material the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) prepared in respect of his question of privilege may appear, on the surface, to be the same as mine. I understand Your Honour will be hearing from other members today in respect of similar questions of privilege. Whether they are similar or not should be immaterial. Mine is a personal one; my feelings are sincerely held in this regard. I would hope, when the rulings come out on this and if you find prima facie cases have been made, that each one of them will be treated individually by Your Honour.

I would like to outline for the benefit of the House—not for Madam Speaker's benefit because you have already received my letter—the actual notice I gave early this morning. I think I might have been the first one on this point to give notice of my question of privilege. It is dated April 1, this morning, and reads as follows:

> Madam Speaker:
>
> Would you please take notice that I wish to raise a question of privilege in the House today on the government's determination to proceed with their constitutional package in spite of a very clear finding of a Supreme Court of one of the Provinces that this proposal is illegal.
>
> My personal point of privilege is that as a Barrister and Solicitor, as a Queen's Counsel, as an ex-Law Officer of the Crown at both the provincial and the federal level, and a Bencher of the Law Society of Upper Canada I have a sworn duty to uphold the law and indeed could be disbarred and heavily penalized if I didn't do so.
>
> The rule of law must be paramount and we now have found that the very matter that the government is insisting that I debate and form a judgment on is illegal and this puts me in an impossible position as far as my rights and privileges—as a Member of Parliament are concerned.

The letter continues:

> I intend to raise this in the House today with your permission.

That was my notice to Your Honour today respecting the question of privilege which I would like to come to very briefly and very sincerely in a moment. In case there is any problem in Your Honour's mind about the validity of the notice or the validity of my raising it today, I would like to say that I raised this with you and gave you notice.

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, I simply draw to Your Honour's attention, on a point of order, that you have just ruled on a matter which in essence was the same as that which is being brought to your attention by the hon. member. I would suggest that, contrary to his allegations or his swearing that this is not a spurious question of privilege, it is in effect such, and raised in order to delay the process and the business of the House.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Spurious, take that back.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) just told me that his question of privilege was slightly different. I am listening to his arguments to hear what differences there are, compared with the one previously ruled upon.

But I caution him that new arguments, if he has any, would be useful in my deciding this. I would ask him not to dwell on the question I just decided, because as he knows one cannot raise a similar question of privilege to the one which has been ruled upon.

Mr. Lawrence: I agree with Madam Speaker's proposition that we certainly should not be repetitious and not raise duplicate arguments. However, I did not quite understand Your Honour's comments at the end of the presentation of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton to be a ruling. If I am mistaken, I am sure you will correct me. In respect of your comments, I believe you mentioned that no matter what happened, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton was protected.

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think Your Honour did not grasp the comments of the hon.

member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) who maintained that your last order or decision with reference to the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) did not constitute a finding on the question of privilege. I think the hon. member ought to be disabused on that point.

Madam Speaker: Well, the hon. minister may raise all the points of order he wishes; of course he is perfectly free to do that, but perhaps he would allow me to listen to the hon. member for a while so that I can ascertain that. It is more than a courtesy; there is an obligation on the part of the Speaker to listen to questions of privilege. I am trying to do just that, although I have been somewhat distracted. Many members have been sending messages to the Chair. I must listen to hon. members and read the notes at the same time. I must say that it is quite difficult. I will continue to listen to the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland to understand whether he does have a question of privilege.

● (1640)

Mr. Lawrence: I wanted to indicate to you, of course, that any member rising in his place on a question of privilege must obviously prove to you—I know you know this, I am saying it more, perhaps, for the minister than for the Chair—that it is a personal matter and that it vitally and obviously seriously affects that individual's riding. I would like to claim that the question of privilege I am raising with you affects not only me but the other 100 members of both these chambers, who are also practitioners and who are qualified to practice in the law. I would like to submit to you that the question of privilege I am raising does affect them all. By the way, Madam Speaker, you may not be aware of this, and it is somewhat of an oddity, but there are exactly 100 members of the other place and this place who are today qualified to practice law. I think you certainly understand, Madam Speaker, if the hon. member does not, that when I rise in my place, I must speak in a personal way and point out to you what is happening or what has happened which effects my own personal rights and privileges in this House.

Having said that to you, Madam Speaker, I feel, and I hope you will agree, that the notice which I gave to you is in order and that there is no defect or question which arises in relation to it. I did give the notice to you at the very earliest possible time, namely, early this morning, when, for the first time, I received a copy of the judgment of the Newfoundland Supreme Court. Of course, both that decision and the continued determination of the government to proceed with the matter before the House, form the grounds for my question of privilege.

If I may say so, I feel that I have three burdens upon me to prove to you. The first one is that the matter the government is determined to bring before this House, and to which I am objecting, is a matter which, at the very least, is now of questionable validity, as far as the law is concerned. I would go further and say that the matter the government is forcing upon us has now been proven to be illegal and, at the very least, it is not valid in law. That is the first burden which falls upon me to prove to you.

The second, I would say to you, apart from the 99 other practitioners in both of these chambers, and apart from the other members of the House of Commons, puts me in a difficult position, perhaps even more so than other members. I say this because I am sworn to uphold the law of this country. Other members may feel that they are equally—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. If that is the basis of the hon. member's—

Mr. Lawrence: No, I have three burdens.

Madam Speaker: —question of privilege, that is to say, that he has been sworn to uphold the law and he feels that to deal with the resolution on the Constitution is to do something which will cause him to be disciplined as a lawyer before the bar association of his province, then I am afraid it is very much the same question of privilege which was raised by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham is using the same arguments used by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton. I cannot hear those same arguments again.

It will be difficult to deal with these questions of privilege, which are similar, without referring to the ruling I have made on a previous one. It will be even more difficult for hon. members than it will be for the Chair. I just warn hon. members that they must choose their arguments extremely carefully in order that I may continue to listen to them.

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, in the very brief time I have been on my feet I was trying to outline to you a brief summary of the arguments I intend to proceed with. I appreciate that of necessity, you were engaged in a conference with the law clerk, and perhaps you did not hear me argue that I have three burdens upon me, as I understand it, to prove to you.

I will go back to the first burden very briefly, which is that the government intends to force upon me, as a member of this House, a question, to debate and upon which eventually to form a decision, which is of questionable validity in the law today. I claim it is illegal. In any event, as a massive understatement, I would say that it is a matter which has now been held by the Supreme Court of one of the provinces to be invalid and that there is a seizing of this general concept of this constitutional package before the Supreme Court of Canada to decide exactly the same thing. That is my first burden. I must prove to you that it is invalid in the eyes of the law.

My argument bears no relationship whatsoever to that of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton. I feel that I have a few more onerous responsibilities inside and outside this House, to the government and people of Canada and to the government and people of Ontario, which is my native province, than the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton. I am in a different and more difficult position than he is by virtue of the oaths I have taken to uphold the law of this province and this country. My question of privilege bears no relationship at all to the penalties, supposed or otherwise, to which I may be subjected in dealing with this matter here. I am now talking about my integrity, my reputation and my responsibility as a citizen of this country, as a Member of Parliament and as a professional man.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: I am not dealing at all with the penalties which may or may not flow from what I consider to be an ill-advised and now illegal action of the Government of Canada. That is the second burden which I intend to prove to you this afternoon, Madam Speaker.

The third burden upon me is that there is a conflict with my personal rights and privileges in that I am being forced to debate and decide upon this question in this House.

Those are the three burdens that are upon me. If you will be patient and tolerant with me—and I have not taken up very much time in the last little while—I will attempt to go through those three burdens, if I may.

First, may I point out to you that apart from what anyone may claim about hypothetical questions of law, the Supreme Court of Canada, which is the ultimate appellate jurisdiction in this country, is now seized with the question of the validity or invalidity of the constitutional package which is before this House and which forms the basis of the argument which I am now presenting to you. It matters not whether it is hypothetical—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I ruled on that point when I ruled on the point of order of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). The fact that the matter is before the Supreme Court must be ruled out of this particular discussion. I have already ruled on that.

Mr. Lawrence: I am merely pointing out that it is a question of legal validity which is before the supreme appellate court of this country. That is my first point.

● (1650)

Second, there is also the very clear and unequivocal unanimous decision released yesterday—this matter has not been brought before you—by the Supreme Court of Newfoundland. It is not only a unanimous decision, it is a decision—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Yes, I have ruled on that, too. The hon. member for St John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) raised a question of privilege on that particular point, and I have ruled on than too.

Mr. Lawrence: You have not ruled on the comment made this afternoon by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of this country in this Chamber just an hour or so ago—I know you have not, because I have been here since then and the matter has not been placed before you—that the moment, the Government of Canada is not appealing the decision of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland; ergo, the unanimous ruling and the unanimous decision of that supreme court is binding beyond the boundaries of the province of Newfoundland. There can be no question whatsoever but that that decision, because it is not being appealed at the moment, is therefore the rule of law. It is the law of this country.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member has to prove to me that that particular decision is binding on this Parliament to the point where it would not allow the Parliament to proceed with a resolution which some feel is illegal vis-à-vis that particular decision. We have decided that this Parliament is supreme—and that has come in my rulings—and that it can entertain matters of this importance. I did say that matters of national importance ought not to be prevented from being discussed in this House because something pertaining to or relating to that happens to be before the courts. I have ruled on that. That is the sub judice aspect of the question, and the hon. member must find other arguments. I know it is difficult for him, but the questions of privilege I am receiving are all pretty similar, and that is the difficulty. However, I have not created it.

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, I do not know if the other questions of privilege before you are similar to mine or to those of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton. Quite frankly, it is irrevelant and immaterial so far as I am concerned. I am claiming that my personal rights and privileges in this House have been abridged, not because of any sub judice rule. If you have already ruled on that, that is up to you, Madam Speaker. I have not researched your ruling carefully, clearly and in depth. But whether I have done so or not, I cannot question it. I am claiming that there is a continued insistence and determination of the part of the Government of Canada to place its resolution before this House and, in particular, to force me, as a representative of the people of my riding whom I attempt to represent in this House, to debate and to make a decision on a matter which is very clearly illegal and invalid according to the existing law of the land. The existing law of the land is the clear decision which was announced yesterday and of which I received a copy only this morning. I am sure no part of it has been read into the records of the House, or presented to you, Madam Speaker. That is the point I want to make so far as the first part of my question of privilege is concerned.

The second burden upon me is the very peculiar situation in which I find myself, because it is not only as a barrister and solicitor qualified to practise within the province of Ontario that I have taken an oath to uphold the law of this land. Again, I come to you with my question of what the law of the land is. I also happen to be a Queen's Council in this province, which also imposes further responsibility.

An hon. Member: That is your handicap.

Mr. Lawrence: I also suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that as an ex-law officer of the Crown at both the provincial and the federal level, I have had to take several extra responsibilities which perhaps exceed or perhaps do not exceed the attitude, the rights and the responsibilities of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton. However, they affect me, they affect my public responsibility, and they are a continuing responsibility. I know of no way to determine the end of an oath or a special oath in that respect as yet, so far as my practice of law is concerned.

As well, I have taken another oath. I have taken an oath as a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada. That was referred to earlier. I suggest to you that that is a lifetime oath. It will always be with me unless this House sees fit to strip me of it in a very peculiar and unique way. That duty and that responsibility which I took is upon me, and it certainly affects me. It may also affect the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton but, by golly, it affects me. I have a very sincere and high regard, not only for that right, but also for the responsibilities imposed upon me.

I would like to make another point which I know the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton cannot claim, but I do. In the province of Ontario there is a very special regulatory and licensing body for those who are qualified to practise law in the province of Ontario. It is called by the quaint old name which you will recognize: the Law Society of Upper Canada. That is the licensing and regulatory body of the people who are qualified to practise law in the province of Ontario.

There is another quaint term, Madam Speaker. The people who guide the fortunes and who guide the administrative policies of the Law Society of Upper Canada and, who are therefore, the people who set the regulations and licensing provisions for those who are qualified to practise law in this province have another quaint name. They are not called the directors, they are not called the board, they are called the benchers of the Law Society of Upper Canada. They also form a disciplinary body so far as people who practise law are concerned.

Madam Speaker, I am a bencher of the Law Society of Upper Canada, an ex officio one, but nevertheless, a bencher of that august body. I have an extra responsibility so far as the code of ethics is concerned, so far as the regulatory provisions are concerned, and so far as the disciplinary regulations of that body are concerned. I therefore have an extra responsibility to this House as well as to the people of this country and to my constituents in particular.

As well, Madam Speaker—and this was dwelt on very briefly by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton—his membership and my membership in the Canadian Bar Association which also has a code of ethics—

Mr. McRae: What is being argued here, Madam Speaker, is that one Member of Parliament, because he is a member of the bar, has special privileges or special encumbrances which the rest of us do not have.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McRae: I cannot accept that. I believe that that kind of argument is out of order.

Madam Speaker: Order. I pointed that out to the House a minute ago in my ruling.

An hon. Member: Yeah, wake up!

Madam Speaker: I will hear the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland now. However, he is repeating the arguments brought forward by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton. I would ask him to conclude because he has been taking quite a lot of time. I have asked hon. members to co-operate with the Chair and to try to expose their points of privilege inside of five minutes, if it is at all possible—

An hon. Member: He has exposed himself long enough.

Madam Speaker: —because of the great number of questions of privilege.

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, I hope you are not penalizing any of us as individual members of this House—and I mean this most sincerely—simply because of the stupid and arrogant attitude of the government which is attempting to ram something through this Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: I am not the cause of my standing up today to speak to you about my privileges and my rights in this House!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order. Nor is the Chair. Let us discuss these questions of privilege calmly so that we can get through with the business before us. It includes questions of privilege and many other matters. So the Chair is not responsible for the situation in which Parliament finds itself at the present time. I am patiently listening to all of your arguments. I am only asking hon. members to co-operate. If hon. members do not want to co-operate and try to accept what I am suggesting as a normal schedule to deal with the business we have before us, that is up to them of course. I am just appealing to them.

• (1700)

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, with all deference I point out to you that if the rights and privileges of any single member of this House of Commons are abridged in any way; if you find that there is a prima facie case, then certainly in your mind and certainly in your predecessor's mind and I hope in the mind of any successor in the high office that you hold, this would certainly take priority and paramountcy as far as the normal business is concerned, or what might be termed the normal business of any government, no matter what its political complexion.

The question of a personal right to raise a question of privilege concerning the very high office that we all have in this House, is a very, very important one. I am not being frivolous. Believe me, I hold very sincerely and very deeply the responsibility I have, not only as a Member of Parliament but also, Madam Speaker, as an officer of the court of this land. The reason I am indicating to you—

Mr. Kristiansen: Madam Speaker, a point of order—

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen).

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, in spite of your continual rulings that the sub judice argument was out of order and not acceptable; in spite of your continual references that the matter of somebody's obligations or duties as a member of the bar or as a member of the IWA, or as a member of the tin canners' society or something else, has nothing to do with our obligations and duties as members of this House, the member goes on and on and on.

Surely, Madam Speaker, there must come a point where the majority has some rights as does the minority.

Members have talked about impeding progress, Madam Speaker. These members are impeding the progress of a number of very important items through this House, not only the matter to which they make constant reference but the other matter on which here was an attempt to get an agreement so that we could proceed today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kristiansen: I suggest, Madam Speaker, that the hon. member who raised the last question of privilege has been pursuing those matters which you have already ruled out of order to the extent that it could almost be said that he is showing contempt for the Speaker of this House, and I think that is abominable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, I hope I have achieved the first two burdens that there are upon you. I now come to the third burden, the one that is upon me. That third burden, Madam Speaker, is—

[Translation]

Mr. Tousignant: I rise on a point or order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Témiscamingue on a point of order.

Mr. Tousignant: Madam Speaker, with all due respect to the hon. member, for whom I have much esteem, we have been hearing for over an hour and a half exactly the same question of privilege word for word as that raised by the previous speaker. I wonder why the hon. member would feel bound by the judgment of the court in Newfoundland and question that of the Manitoba court. Moreover, I would appreciate that the hon. member stop labouring the point that he has many responsibilities compared to those other members who are not lawyers. It seems to me that the hon. member is applying a double standard concerning the oath of office made by the members of this House. It makes me sick to hear this and I would appreciate that he stop doing it.

[English]

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Durham-Northumberland must realize that some other members of the House are becoming somewhat impatient with the fact—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Speaker has to satisfy everybody in the House. The hon. member knows he is repeating arguments which have been brought forward by his colleague. I hate to get up every other minute. I have had to rise several times in the course of the hon. member's intervention. That must be a message to him that something in his discourse is repetitive or not totally in order, considering that I have already ruled upon a certain question. The hon. member is of the bar and he knows all these rules; he knows how they should be applied in order to conform to the question of privilege itself.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I have a point of order. Being a great admirer of the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) and having been in this House a few years ago on one of the few occasions when the hon. member was successful in bringing a question of privilege to this House which was recognized by the Speaker then in the chair and which was debated at length in this House, I think that when he speaks on a question of privilege, he knows whereof he speaks and we ought to listen to him.

I do not want to leave unchallenged the words put on the record by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) and the member on the other side of the House. The hon. member for Durham-Northumberland has said that he is a member of that august body, the Law Society of Upper Canada. No more should be said. That society operates under a statute of the province of Ontario which is binding on people in the province of Ontario and which, in particular, is binding on the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland.

In answer to the hon. member across the way, let me say there is a difference. Those members of this House who are bound by provincial statutes with respect to the administration of justice in their province, have an obligation to observe the terms of those statutes and are affected in a different way. To that extent, if he wants to term that a double standard, then there is one.

I happen to be a member of the bar of Ontario and the bar of Nova Scotia so I am very much interested in this question of privilege. I think it should go forward without interruption by those who do not know better.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: May I—I hope forever—get off this point. Obviously there are people in the House who do not understand that there is discrimination in this House. We are not all equal in the eyes of the courts of this land. There is a heavier duty, especially upon some of us who are officers of the court, to uphold the law. That may not be accepted by some but it happens to be a fact.

The second point that I want to re-emphasize is simply this: I am not talking about the rights and privileges of the hon. member across the way.

Mr. Kristiansen: Madam Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. Lawrence: I am not talking about the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen). I am talking about my rights and privileges. If they also want me to talk about theirs, I shall be glad—

Mr. Kristiansen: A point of order.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry but there is another hon. member who is rising. Does the hon. member have a point of order?

Mr. Kristiansen: Madam Speaker, my point of order is this. The hon. member continues to go on about his special obligations and says that there is somehow a conflict between his role as an officer of the court and his role as a member of this House of Commons. If that is the case, there is always an opportunity available to him to decline one or the other, but in this House, in order for him to be able to claim a question of privilege, it must be his role as a member of the House of Commons which has been placed in dispute, not his capacity in any other realm. I happen to be a member of another organization and I owe loyalty to that organization. If I ever find myself in a position of conflict, I can resign my post here or resign my membership there. The hon. member has the same avenue open to him. I wish he would stop wasting our time, as his House leader said the other day.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: This is one of the points I was coming to. I cannot resign some of these positions. I cannot resign from my oath to the people and to the monarch of this country as far as being a Privy Councillor is concerned. I am sworn to uphold my oath. There may well be a conflict; that is the point I am making. But the conflict is not of my making whatsoever. There are other people in this House who are now caught in this bind. There is no question about that. But there is no way out of it. Until the Supreme Court of Canada clarifies the validity of the law of this land and the law that we are being forced to discuss and on which we will be forced to make a decision, I suggest that Your Honour should make a ruling that would somehow or other postpone or adjourn the hearings, the debates, the decision that affect so many of us in this House who are faced with this conflict.

That was going to be my summation to you, Madam Speaker, because it is a very special duty; there is no question but that it is a very special duty.

I wonder if the actual terms of the decision of the Newfoundland court have been brought to your attention. If I may, just to emphasize to you the illegality and the lack of validity of the constitutional package that is before the House, I should like to quote a few particulars of that decision of the Newfoundland court which is the resolution—

● (1710)

Madam Speaker: In the interests of the business of the House, I would ask the hon. member not to do so. Whether I read the decision ten times or 50 times, and even if I were convinced and had the same opinion as the court of Newfoundland, it is not for me to decide whether what is going on here is legal or illegal, constitutional or unconstitutional. That is a decision the Chair must never take. It is really irrelevant to this question of privilege. Therefore, it is not necessary to quote it to me.

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, I hope you understand that I am not attempting to force you, by any means, to make an interpretation of the court's decision or give a legal decision with respect to the law of the land. What I wanted to do was to bring to your attention, in the most forceful language that I could use, the actual terms of the decision of the Newfoundland court—

An hon. Member: What about the Manitoba court?

Mr. Lawrence: —to point out to you that it is the law of the land. My friend across the aisle speaks about the Manitoba court. That decision is exactly the same with respect to the whole question of the validity of the resolution and is now before the Supreme Court of Canada. I did not intend to get into that language. If my hon. friends want me to, I can. It is a fact already that there is a question as to the validity of the constitutional package as far as the Manitoba decision, being brought to the Supreme Court, is concerned. But the existing law of the land today, here in the House of Commons at this hour on April 1, is such that it is the law of the land today. The constitutional resolution which forms the four questions before the Supreme Court of Canada is today the law of the land because, as far as we know, it is not being appealed by the only group which can appeal it, namely, the cabinet and the government of this country.

You have indicated that you do not desire me to go through the actual wording of the decisions. I will not do that, Madam Speaker. I do not know, however, how official notice can be drawn to your attention of the law of the land which forms an integral part of the three points that I feel are a burden upon me to prove to you concerning my rights and privileges. But if you desire not to hear the words nor to see them, that is your decision and, of course, I must abide by it. I must say to you that the decision is in very straightforward language. It is in very clear and unequivocal language. It is the law of the land which I am bound to uphold. Without being impertinent, Madam Speaker, I would say to you that you as well are bound to uphold that law by virtue of the various oaths you have taken during the course of your public life.

Therefore, because I am forced to take part in a debate, to take part in a decision to judge that, I feel that this very clearly affects my rights and privileges to act in a clear and unequivocal way in this House as a Member of Parliament and as a representative of the people who elected me here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I will rule on that question of privilege before I hear points of order.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I wanted to speak on my colleague's question of privilege.

Mr. Cousineau: Sit down.

Madam Speaker: I will not allow another speaker. There are too many speakers to be heard. I am sure that all the other members will canvass the argument.

An hon. Member: It does not matter how many there are.

Madam Speaker: I am prepared to rule on this question of privilege.

I have listened very carefully to the arguments which were put before me. The main request, which the hon. member made of me, was to postpone the resolution before the House of Commons for reasons that it is illegal and that it would place him in a very embarrassing situation with regard to the different oaths he has taken during the course of his life.

In order to postpone this particular measure, I would have to make a determination that the resolution is illegal or unconstitutional. I repeat to the hon. members of this House that it is not up to the Chair to determine the legality or the constitutionality of any particular measure. As a matter of fact, the Standing Orders are quite clear and they enjoin the Speaker not to do that.

The hon. member feels that although some of the terms of his question of privilege were "the same as or similar to"—and those were the words he used—the question of privilege raised before his, he thought that was immaterial because this particular question of privilege, in his words, "was personal". They all are. I did treat the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton as personal. The fact that they are similar, or that they are the same is not immaterial. The only way for me to judge whether there is foundation for a question of privilege, is to look at them one by one.

The hon. member explained to me that a question of privilege should have precedence over all business of this House. That is precisely what I am doing. I am hearing questions of privilege first. We are dealing with these questions of privilege before any other matter which might be before this House. We are giving precedence to questions of privilege. That is exactly what we are doing this afternoon.

The hon. member feels that this resolution before the House will force him to discuss, debate or decide on something which is illegal or in conflict with other loyalties and other oaths he has taken in the course of his life. I repeat to him—and I think I have to correct the hon. member—that as members of this House we are all equal and our responsibilities are equal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I pointed out in my ruling that if I should discriminate in this House between those members who have taken an oath as members of the bar and those who have not, then that would be discriminatory. All members in this House of Commons are equal with regard to their responsibilities. Whatever responsibilities we have as fathers of five children, 15 children or as members of another society, is an added responsibility which is not, of course, covered by the rules of this House. It is not an argument that I can entertain. I cannot entertain it because it reflects on the equality of all of us in this House. First, in dealing with the point that this measure is forcing the hon. member to do something which is illegal, I say that I cannot determine whether it is illegal. Second, the hon. member is protected by any disciplinary measure which might be taken against him because he has taken part in a debate in the House of Commons. That is a provision which is 300 years old. It is the basis of parliamentary democracy, and contained in The Bill of Rights of 1688. We find that freedom of speech and debate and proceedings in Parliament ought not to be impeached or questioned in any court or place outside of Parliament.

If the hon. member were in any way harassed or brought before any other kind of tribunal because of something that he had done in this House, of course the House would want to protect him. We are all protected against that.

The hon. member has brought forward many arguments. He said this would be an attack on his integrity if he dealt with the matter which is before the House. The hon. member knows that in this House he has the opportunity of protecting his integrity by debating a question, by trying to amend to measure before the House, by arguing, by amending it and finally by voting against it. It is open to the hon. member to protect his integrity and to make sure that he does not have the kinds of conflicts he has evoked.

The hon. member has perhaps given us many arguments which might cause him to vote against this measure, but he has not given arguments that I can consider under the aegis of a question of privilege.

Therefore, I rule that the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland does not have a question of privilege.

• (1720)

MR. KILGOUR—SUGGESTED ILLEGALITY OF THE RESOLUTION ON THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, we are obviously both going to think that my question of privilege will be very similar to the ones you just dealt with. May I start with your ruling. You indicated that you disagree with the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) with respect to his question of privilege because it requires you to rule whether the measure is legal or illegal. With the greatest of respect, Sir Edward Coke established many hundreds of years ago that nobody's head is above the law, including the king. With respect to the questions of privilege of members of Parliament, I wish to quote the following passage from page 67 of the nineteenth edition of Erskine May:

> Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions, and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals. Thus privilege, though part of the law of the land, is to a certain extent an exemption from the ordinary law.

Because of the resolution brought forward by the government, we in this body have fewer rights than those outside this chamber. Your Honour tells those of us who are candlestick makers, lawyers or whatever, that we can vote no to the resolution. The simple fact is that party discipline overrules any votes that might be taken in terms of the government party.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Kilgour: One of the weaknesses is that party discipline has become virtually absolute in this House of Commons. You might ask: what about the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos) or the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) who have indicated they are going to vote against their parties? The result is those members opposite will vote for it because the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) told them to vote for it, whether or not their constituents are opposed to it.

Mr. Evans: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. That is clearly making inferences about other Members of Parliament and is absolutely out of order.

Mr. Hawkes: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. We have before this chamber the records of the constitutional committee. They are now part of our proceedings. I think you will find that when amendments were proposed in committee, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) indicated which way government members would vote. They did in fact vote that way. That is confirmation of the statement made by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour).

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: Madam Speaker, the hon. member on the side of the opposition has risen on a question of privilege and he has said nothing to this point which would justify his doing so. You have made a ruling, Madam Speaker, and the hon. member should address the question of privilege.

[English]

Mr. Chrétien: I would like to reply, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, this is not a debate. If the minister has a point of order, he should indicate that to me. If he rises on a point of order, I can recognize him, but he cannot debate across the floor.

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member said I gave instructions to the members of my party in committee. I did no such thing. I would like to tell the House of Commons that of all the amendments I presented on behalf of the government, nine out of ten were approved by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). He even did that in the House because they were good amendments which improved the charter of rights. What is happening in the House of Commons at this time is an affront to Parliament and to you, Madam Speaker. For the last five days we have been deprived of the opportunity to deal with the business of the House of Commons because of questions of privilege—

Madam Speaker: Order. In the first part of the minister's intervention, he had a point of order. In the second part, he was debating, so I have to call him to order.

Mr. Thacker: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. I cannot let that pass. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) is indicating that he had not talked people into changing their minds, but he has. On Friday they agreed to property rights, on Monday they did not.

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member is debating.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I am happy to see the members are paying attention. Further to what I said, the hon. member for Montmorency, for whom I have the utmost respect, said on Sunday night that 70 per cent of his constituents were against this resolution. The fact that he is the only one who has enough courage to stand up and say that he is going to vote against it, in my respectful submission, means that those members opposite have given up all sense of conscience, all sense of what their constituents feel—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member has to argue the question of privilege. Whether there are party whips on or off is not relevant to the question of privilege. I wish to remind hon. members that when discussing a question of privilege, I have to apply more strictly than in ordinary debate the matter of relevancy of arguments.

Mr. Kilgour: Let me take a hypothetical situation.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Kilgour: An analogy is the only way to make this point because members opposite do not understand the point that is now directly before the House. Let us suppose we had a resolution which proposed that all women in Canada be shipped to the moon.

An hon. Member: Let's hope not.

Mr. Kilgour: That simply points out, Madam Speaker, the fact that you could not vote for that resolution, nor could any female Members of Parliament. I am trying to point out the fact that you can have motions or resolutions which patently touch individuals or groups of Members of Parliament. We cannot vote for those resolutions because they violate our personal oaths which were referred to by the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland. They violate a concept of propriety, a concept of equality of the sexes, or whatever. I appreciate the fact that you may feel that the cases of the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and my own are not distinguishable. I submit that every day in this land there are cases of impaired drivers. There are about 10,000 such cases a year in the courts and every one is distinguishable on the facts. I submit, on the same basis, that the cases of the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton and myself may be distinguishable on the facts. May I simply put my own situation which I believe is different from that of the other two members to whom I just referred.

May I first refer briefly to the letter I wrote Your Honour. I quote:

> The subject matter is that the government's constitutional package is requiring me to violate the oath I took when admitted to the bars of British Columbia, Manitoba and Alberta, all of which require me to uphold the rule of law.

Mr. Blais: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. The hon. member is basing his argument on exactly the same foundation alleged by all the other lawyers, the glorified gentlemen in the opposition. I suggest it is another piece of evidence in the obstruction puzzle for which the opposition is laying the groundwork.

● (1730)

Mr. Kilgour: The barrister's oath in Alberta says, and I quote:

"That I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II—"

Madam Speaker: Order. I have made it quite clear that arguments regarding oaths of members of the bar of any province are not relevant. I have assured hon. members that if they were doing something in this House which was in conflict with those particular oaths, they would be protected by the House, so I cannot accept that argument. I ask the hon. member not to develop it. It has been developed twice, and I have said twice that it is not relevant.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I will leave that one.

The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton referred to the code of professional conduct of the Canadian Bar Association. He referred to the chapter dealing with the lawyer in public office. If I may, I wish to refer to the chapter dealing with the lawyer in the administration of justice. Will Your Honour permit me to speak about that?

I point out to hon. members opposite who are lawyers, but may not be aware of it, that the chapter says, and I quote:

> The lawyer should encourage public respect for and try to improve the administration of justice.

It talks about a basic commitment to the concept of equal justice for all within an open, ordered and impartial system. The important part is this:

> —judicial institutions will not function effectively unless they command the respect of the public . . . because of changes in human affairs—

And so forth. It talks about a duty to the court.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but just a moment ago the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) rose on a point of order and, if I heard him correctly, he used the word "obstruct" or "obstructionist". According to page 109 of Beauchesne's rules, that has clearly been established as an unparliamentary word, and the references are House of Commons Debates of November 19, 1957 and May 6, 1961.

Madam Speaker: Order. I already ruled on that at a time when the hon. member probably was not in the House. The word "obstruct" is in both lists of Beauchesne, so my second method of determining whether that is unparliamentary is to look at the context and to look at some other precedents which I quoted from Erskine May. When the word "obstruct" or "obstructionist" is applied to a group of people or to a party and not to a person, it is not considered to be unparliamentary. I have such doubts about the use of that verb, which is so useful in a debate, that I would say that it is only in very, very rare circumstances that it would be considered to be unparliamentary.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I intended to rise on a point of order just after the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), but now that this matter has been touched on again, let me remind Your Honour that you indicated, in response to my last point of order concerning the unparliamentary statement made by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais), that you would consult the blues. I have had an opportunity to consult the blues now, and, in addition to what I have already put on the record, I point out that the Minister of Supply and Services made a second unparliamentary statement in reference to me.

In response to my question, "Who does he feel is the obstructionist in this House," he replied, "Madam Speaker, I would point out that the hon. member who has just spoken is part of the attempt to obstruct the business of the House because—" And then he went on. That phrase was found to be unparliamentary on November 19, 1957 at page 1295. At that time a Mr. Broome was speaking in the House of Commons. He said:

> Our hon. friends over there on the other side of the House are doing as much as they can to harass—

And so forth.

> —and to obstruct the operation of government—
>
> MR. SPEAKER: Order. I would remind the hon. member that we are speaking on an amendment which has to do with health . . . May I also say that I do not consider it to be according to the best parliamentary practice to impute motives to hon. members and say that their actions are simply to obstruct. I would ask the hon. member to revise that statement.

MR. BROOME: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to hon. members. They are not obstructing.

Now that we have two clear precedents that the minister in his one statement used two unparliamentary words or statements, I ask that he be asked to withdraw those statements and apologize to the House.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I have attempted all afternoon to put on the record some of the facts upon which the allegations I made are founded. Your Honour did not find that I should do that. I would be pleased to do that at this time in order to show that there has been a systematic attitude taken by the opposition in order to prevent the House and the government from carrying on their normal business.

For the past five days we have been unable to carry on government business. The opposition has systematically, with every premeditation, interrupted the procedures of this House with spurious points of order and spurious questions of privilege in order to prevent us from proceeding. If Your Honour wants me to document it, I will point out that there have been until today 25 questions of privilege, none of which were recognized by Your Honour. There have been 21 points of order, none of which were determined to be valid, and over a long—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville have a new point of order?

Mr. Cossitt: Arising from what was said, I presume it would be a new point of order, yes.

Madam Speaker: I think I can rule on that one. Beauchesne says it is not out of order to say that a member has obstructed the business of the House or that a speech is an abuse of the rules of the House. That is from Beauchesne page 130, the fourth edition.

In addition, the context in which something is said has to be taken into account. The hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) said that he looked at the blues. The idea is that I should look at the blues. I will do that, but in the meantime I am referring this commentary of Beauchesne to hon. members. I will look at the blues. I will spend the whole evening looking at the blues, and I will determine whether the hon. Minister of Supply and Services has used unparliamentary language.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, in addition to looking at the blues—I hope you do not spend all night looking at them but just a brief time—may I also ask you to look at the fifth edition of Beauchesne. Your Honour referred to the fourth edition, but I think the more recent edition makes it very clear that the two references to which I have referred are both unparliamentary.

Madam Speaker: I am happy to assure that the officers of the Table will put before me all the references that are relevant.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My point of order arises from what I consider to be—after referring to Beauchesne—a further unparliamentary expression used by the Minister of Supply and Services when he used once—maybe it was twice—the word "spurious". I refer to Beauchesne at page 113. The debates of the House of Commons for October 13, 1966, at page 8598 and October 18, 1966, at page 8784 establish that the word "spurious" is unparliamentary. I ask whether I am correct in this regard and, if I am, that the minister be asked to withdraw his remark.

Madam Speaker: The word "spurious" is considered to be parliamentary. According to Beauchesne's list, that has been so since 1958. At any rate, it is used very often in the House, and no one has objected to it, so I suppose the practice is that the word "spurious" is parliamentary.

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have been listening fairly closely to the exchanges, and I want to say that it is my understanding that the word used by my hon. friend, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais), was "scurrilous". If that is the case, that word was used and withdrawn by the House leader of the New Democratic Party.

However, my point of order really relates to the remarks the minister made with respect to a systematic attempt—outside the rules, as he indicated—by hon. members on this side of the House to obstruct the business of the House. We all know that you, Madam Speaker, have publicly stated that the conduct of hon. members on this side of the House has been perfectly in order. I would suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that the Minister of Supply and Services by making that kind of statement has contradicted what you have said publicly, and I think he should withdraw that remark.

• (1740)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, the term I used is defined as meaning immaterial or unsubstantial, and the word was "spurious" not "scurrilous". In addition, I never said that they did not use the rules in order to obstruct; I know that they are. However, I would draw to your attention page 440 of Erskine May where it is stipulated quite clearly that members are being disorderly when they are obstructing the business of the House, even though they use the rules.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: I wish to apologize to my hon. friend. I now see what he was referring to; it is the points of order that he has been making all afternoon.

Madam Speaker: For the record, I just want to say to the hon. member that I said publicly that none of the members of this House were violating the rules. I would not allow myself to have any kind of opinion on the proceedings of this House. I did notice in the same article, though, that some hon. member had said that some of my judgments or rulings were nonsense, but I am sure they were misquoted.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, on a point of order in regard to the remarks by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais). He was inaccurate in one part and I am sure after I bring it to his attention he, being the gentleman that he is, will be more than willing to rise and withdraw those particular remarks.

He indicated that spurious points of order were being raised and that not one was legitimate. I bring to his attention the point of order I raised on March 24, at page 8557 of Hansard, on which Your Honour rendered a decision on March 25 which indicated that indeed my point of order was in order and that the government's supplementary estimates were out of order. So I hope the minister will withdraw his remarks that my point of order was spurious.

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: As the saying goes, Madam Speaker, the exception proves the rule, and that was the exception. Indeed there have been 21 points of order which were unacceptable to the Chair. One was acceptable and Your Honour took the right decision under the circumstances.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: I just want to inject one sentence here—

An hon. Member: That is still too much.

Mr. Nielsen: —because I am not going to comment on something that the Chair has reserved. I would just point out to the minister that when he was sitting on this side of the House a very short time ago, he and his honourable gang of 231 members raised 130 questions of privilege and points of order. And, of course, he is saying none of them were spurious, it was not obstructionism; no, not at all. There is a name for that kind of conduct and those kinds of words, but I have too much respect for Parliament to use unparliamentary expressions in describing them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, the impression has been given to this chamber by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) that we have not co-operated. I point out to the minister that last evening two very important reports of special committees of this House were filed and tabled by a deliberate effort of the House leader on this side. Not only that, Madam Speaker, this House managed to begin consideration of a closure motion improperly brought by the government, but nonetheless a closure motion. All in an effort to expedite the terms of—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Members are debating this point of order. Let us close the matter. I will look at the blues and we will see whether there was anything unparliamentary said. Members can express opinions about everything that goes on in this House, that is quite legitimate. The hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) on a point of order.

Mr. Thacker: With respect to this afternoon's procedure, Madam Speaker, concerning my question of privilege, may I please ask you when I might expect to be heard?

An hon. Member: Wait in line.

Madam Speaker: I will deal with points of order one at a time. I cannot give the hon. member a time when he should be in the House. There is no question of turns. It is up to me which hon. member I recognize.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I referred to some quotes from the code of professional conduct for lawyers. I am embarrassed to admit that I used to work for the department that the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) represents.

An hon. Member: Is that before you were fired?

Mr. Kilgour: It is humiliating to me that the department has been reduced to such a low point. Everyone in that department takes an oath—I think they did when I was there—that they will uphold the law. Everyone in this House, every school boy and school girl, knows that what has happened is that a matter has been found to be illegal—and I am not asking you to rule on that—by five out of eight appeal court judges in two provinces. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is the one who is trying to stay one step ahead of the law by getting every member in this House to vote for a proposition which is obviously of questionable legality. But I am not asking you to rule on that, Madam Speaker, because you feel very strongly that you must find on these points of privilege. What constitutes a question of privilege? What privileges do we have in this House? It seems to me that by your ruling or that of previous Speakers, we have less privileges here than the people out there. An example was referred to yesterday in Stewart's at page 58 of the Speaker having been notified by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) and two other hon. members that they wished to raise questions of privilege as a result of an allegation in a Montreal newspaper that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River had leaked tax information. It goes on to talk about how this was found to be a question of privilege.

Well, Madam Speaker, if you are going to rule that the lawyers in here cannot be bound by their oaths or their understanding of what their duties as lawyers are—and that ruling affects 100 members—what about the doctors or the women in the example I gave to you? Are we supposed to take the view that: no, we go ahead, we can vote against it? If that is what the privileges of members amount to, they do not amount to anything, in my respectful submission. In other words, anything can go on in this place. The vessel which contains the privileges of a member is empty. What privileges do we have in here if those of us who feel strongly that this gang across the way are trying to make us vote on something which is patently illegal at this point in our judicial history, can only vote or be absent when the matter comes up?

A long time ago Sir Edward Coke showed that nobody's head was above the law, including the king's. It seems to me that if this is the ruling you are going to make, we have gone full circle to the point where Members of Parliament can be forced to do anything, that only this so-called Prime Minister across the way is above the law. That is the effect of what he is trying to get the hon. members here to do on this motion. It boggles the mind. I have often said that I made a mistake in taking a course in logic at university, because in my respectful submission there is no logic, if that is what the privileges of members amount to, if Your Honour rises and says that you do not want to rule on the legality of the matter because the rules indicate that you should not.

● (1750)

I believe you said earlier to the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland that we are all equal and lawyers should not have special privileges. Every member in the House who has gone to high school, university or law school knows that there is a concept in the country known as the rule of law. In my respectful submission, the Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development does not have the faintest understanding of the concept, the Prime Minister does not have the faintest understanding of the concept, but every boy and girl outside this room knows the rule of law.

Hon. members opposite laugh; I see the hon. member from Fort William is smiling. He thinks it is a big joke. The consciences of those people are so small that they will vote for this, they will push through closure and force us to vote on a matter which, I submit, is illegal as of yesterday.

If those of us in this chamber who are lawyers were asked for advice by clients concerning the situation as it was yesterday and as it is today—and the matter will be going to the Supreme Court in approximately a month—we would be disbarred if we advised them to go ahead and do what hon. members opposite want us to do; certainly we would be sued for professional negligence.

Mr. Irwin: That is absolute nonsense.

Mr. Kilgour: I hear a member opposite saying that it is absolute nonsense. Apparently the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Irwin) is a lawyer, although I have seen no sign of it. If he were to so advise a client, in light of what happened yesterday in the Newfoundland court, he would not have any clients; I suggest he would be guilty of professional negligence. It is that simple. Members opposite do not understand because the whip has told them to vote for it.

I should like to give an extreme example in the hope of making my point clear. If members opposite were asked to vote in favour of a resolution asking that the ceiling on this side of the House be lowered to ground level—

Some hon. Members: Yes!

Mr. Kilgour: I hear them saying, "Yes"; they would vote for it. What I am trying to say is that Your Honour's ruling ignored the point of party discipline which is emasculating the House.

Mr. Chrétien: Sit down, you are mixed up.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is repeating arguments which have been brought forward by other hon. members. I ask him to summarize his point so that I can determine whether or not he has a question of privilege.

Mr. Kilgour: This afternoon we were invited by the Prime Minister to pass this resolution, to send if off in final form so that the court might consider it.

In all three provinces where the matter is presently being heard, there are constitutional questions acts which allow their lieutenant governors in council to refer the matter directly to their courts of appeal. This has been done.

I should like to refer to Section 54 of the Supreme Court Act which reads in part as follows:

(1) The Supreme Court shall have, hold and exercise exclusive ultimate appellate civil and criminal jurisdiction within and for Canada—

Two of the appeal courts have made their decisions; one has been appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada. The matter referred to those courts will be heard at the end of this month, but today the Prime Minister told us that we should pass a different package so that it can go in final form to the court to be heard.

It all comes back to basic legal concepts. How can any honest lawyer not say that it is perfectly clear, if we have any respect for the rule of law, that we should wait until the Supreme Court of Canada decides whether or not this question is legal? Either we respect the rule of law or we respect the rule of the Prime Minister. If the rule of law has any weight in the country, if what Sir Edward Coke decided 400 years ago has any weight—

Mr. Kristiansen: How long ago?

Mr. Kilgour: —we can wait one month to see whether what is going on here is legal.

No one is asking Your Honour to decide whether or not the question is legal. Why do you interpret our allegation that the package offends the privileges of members, particularly those who have legal training as requiring you to decide on whether or not it is legal? It offends the hon. member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King) who does not have legal training.

[Translation]

Mr. Tousignant: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Tousignant) on a point of order.

Mr. Tousignant: Madam Speaker, I appreciate that the hon. member opposite entertains high expectations. He wants to get closer to the front benches in the not too distant future. He takes this opportunity to do some practice but he is the third speaker on that side of the House who has delivered the same speech and debated the same issue. They are now holding a unilateral constitutional debate and we on this side of the House have no opportunity to take the floor. We are debating the constitutional question, solely and strictly. Therefore the hon. member opposite ought to stop telling us about his responsibilities toward members of the bar. He is the third one who has done that.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I disagree completely with the hon. member opposite. This is a matter of abiding by the rule of law. You do not have to decide whether the matter is legal or not, but rather, in my opinion, whether there is a valid question for the Supreme Court of Canada to rule on. I think that if you agree with this, you can say that the rights and privileges of the members of this House are involved and that the Speaker cannot force the hon. members to vote on this motion and to proceed in this regard. With all due respect, I am asking you as a Member of Parliament and as a lawyer like many others to extend the application of our rules. Yesterday evening, I asked whether you could give a larger definition of the word "obstacle." Would it be possible to also extend the meaning of our rules? If not, as I noted earlier, we are placed in a rather ridiculous position. May I call it six o'clock, Madam Speaker?

[English]

Madam Speaker: The hon. member still has a few minutes. If he wants to conclude before six o'clock, he would have to do it now.

[Translation]

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, as I said yesterday, you are not a lawyer and you do not have much experience in legal matters. Every day of their life, judges decide matters from a rather narrow position. Could we extend this position? In my opinion, it would be much better for this House if you could take a larger view than you have done so far. I believe that it was not necessary in the interests of the members of this House that you make a ruling from a rather narrow position. Madam Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

Madam Speaker: I believe that if the hon. member could conclude in two minutes, we could obtain the agreement of the House so that—

• (1800)

[English]

I will hear the hon. member for a few minutes more, if he is able to conclude. I think he should be able to conclude since he has been talking on this point for quite a while. I will hear him for a few minutes, but not for too long.

Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Stevens: On a point of order, Madam Speaker—

An hon. Member: Six o'clock!

Madam Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. tomorrow.

At 6.01 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

THE CONSTITUTION

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN CHILDREN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Since the proposed Constitution does not give consideration to the rights of unborn children, and since the abortion rate last year was 65,000, the lives so exterminated representing the size of my constituency and another city of 10,000, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour):

That the Prime Minister immediately announce his intention to exact a protection for unborn Canadians within any charter or, if there is failure to do so, that this House condemn the Prime Minister and his government for the endorsation of human destruction and that he remove himself as head of Canada's government since this country does not deserve the condemnation of practising genocide.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—SUPPORT FOR INDEPENDENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact manoeuvres in Poland, which were to have concluded on March 26, have now been extended indefinitely; whereas Moscow issued a statement that the U.S.S.R. will not tolerate chaos in Poland; whereas our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) lacks the resolve to initiate action by the NATO countries for a show of solidarity against any possible outside intervention in the affairs of Poland, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That this House sends its support and prayers to the people of Poland and strongly urges that all outside countries refrain from interfering in Poland's domestic affairs.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Paproski: The Liberals said "No" for the third time.

SALES TAX ON EXPLOSIVES USED IN CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Since it is perfectly clear that the government's proposed 9 per cent sales tax levy on explosives used for construction purposes discriminates against regions such as British Columbia and Newfoundland, discriminates against this one aspect of the construction industry, and discriminates against certain types of jobs such as logging and highway construction, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper):

That the federal government reconsider its decision to levy a sales tax on explosives used in the construction industry.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONTROL OF GOVERNMENT SPENDING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert):

That this House endorse the recommendation of the President of the Treasury Board that legislation introduced in the House have a cost estimate for the implementation of the legislation so this House may better control government spending.

NATURAL RESOURCES

CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE TO STUDY DEVELOPMENT OF NORTHERN RESOURCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The Yukon, the Mackenzie Valley, the Beaufort Sea and Arctic Island hydrocarbon and mineral resources are being increasingly delineated. The ownership rights, further discovery and delineation, development and transportation of these vast resources to markets present Canada with a major challenge and will set the stage for the future well-being of the northern half of this nation. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons be established to examine and report on the ownership rights of such resources, the programmed development of such resources, the appropriate transportation systems for delivery of such resources to markets, and the desirable nature of community development in the high Arctic.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

NATIONAL PRAYER BREAKFAST

ADDRESS BY MR. TOM SKINNER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of some importance under the provisions of Standing Order 43. At the National Prayer Breakfast this morning Mr. Tom Skinner of Washington, D.C., delivered an extremely inspirational and outstanding address to all those assembled. The remarks and observations of Mr. Skinner were so moving and so appropriate, and because I feel his comments would be of value to every member of this House, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Parent):

That this House give unanimous consent to having the complete text of Mr. Skinner's address incorporated into the Hansard for today, April 2, 1981.

Madam Speaker: I am afraid it is not possible to have speeches which are made outside the House printed in Hansard.

AGRICULTURE

HERD MAINTENANCE PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Because the government deliberately encouraged farmers in western Canada to purchase the necessary feed so that they would not sell off their livestock herds when the drought first occurred in western Canada, and because of the impractical criteria set by the government resulting in the rejection of one third of the applications, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer):

That the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, who is responsible for PFRA, meet with representatives of the appeal board to establish practical criteria so that the 8,000 outstanding appeals may be accepted into the program as requested by the appeal board.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

THE TAKING OF VOTES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, in light of the fact that Mr. G. Davidson, a district manager with Consumer and Corporate Affairs in Winnipeg, has announced in a letter dated March 13 the government's intention to have bait, including minnows, sold by number and not by weight, as is presently the case, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, in the same insane tradition, introduce a motion that all outstanding votes in this House be conducted by a count of fingers, toes, and, where necessary, both sides of a member's face.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION ON MARKET ASSURANCE PLAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, since the Canadian Wheat Board is trying to sell a new grain marketing plan, called the Market Assurance Plan, to western farmers, but has failed to provide sufficient details and specifics of the plan to enable farmers to make an accurate assessment of the program, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight):

That this House condemns the Canadian Wheat Board's inept attempt to inform farmers of the details of the Market Assurance Plan and that this House calls upon the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board to take responsibility for the Market Assurance Plan in the name of the farmers he purports to represent, and ensure that they are provided with accurate and complete specifics of the plan, and also with alternative plans which have been put forward, so that the farmers themselves can decide which program, if any, they want.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CALL FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION TO AID BIGSTONE INDIAN BAND OF WABASCA, ALTA.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, whereas over 150 members of the Bigstone Band of Wabasca, Alberta, including some elderly people and some children, have completed the first leg of their 240-mile march to Edmonton to protest the high rates of unemployment, poverty, poor housing, inadequate health services, and lack of funding for economic development, which continue to plague their everyday lives; and whereas the government's response to the plight of these native people has been almost non-existent, despite Telex messages from the Chief to the Prime Minister's office; and whereas the Bigstone Band is representative of the problems which exist for native people all across Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That this House direct the government to demonstrate its good faith and its pledge to honour and protect the special rights of Canada's first people in the Constitution by acting immediately to rectify the severe destitution now facing the Bigstone Band and, indeed, all native people in this nation.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

CALL FOR ROLL BACK—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to alert this House to an economic crisis of alarming magnitude. We have already pointed out that the 100th oil drilling rig has left Canada and crossed the United States border. Today I have learned that the sale of drilling licences in Alberta, which were valued at $280 million for 1.5 million acres in the first quarter of 1980, have dropped to $62 million for 555,975 acres in the first quarter of 1981, a decrease in dollar value in the order of 78 per cent. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson):

That the Prime Minister himself personally intervene to roll back the negative National Energy Program which is wreaking economic and social ruin and havoc in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE LEGAL OPINION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and it relates to the so-called Kirby document, the strategy document that was set out by the government in the summer of last year, which indicated the way it could get its constitutional package through. I wonder if the Prime Minister could tell the House whether the government has an opinion from the Department of Justice that:

—a law passed by the U.K. parliament to patriate the Constitution, with an amendment formula and other changes, could not be successfully attacked in the Canadian courts.

I would also like to ask the Prime Minister, in light of the unusual interest in a situation where action by the British parliament could not be challenged by the Canadian courts, whether the Prime Minister would take the unusual step, in these unusual circumstances, of publishing that legal opinion of the Department of Justice.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I indicated to this House before that I have seen the so-called Kirby document but I had not read it. I therefore cannot answer the question as to whether there is any legal opinion to that effect. However, it seems to me that if the Leader of the Opposition had any fears in that regard, they would have been dissipated by the proposal I made earlier this week to the effect that we would not, in fact, go to Great Britain, if the Supreme Court of Canada ruled against the constitutionality of the motion now before the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

QUERY RESPECTING FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETINGS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): I would feel considerably more comfortable about that matter if the Minister of the Environment, speaking for the government, had not indicated that the government intended to file any resolution which passed this Parliament for first reading in Great Britain before any decision was taken by the court. I would like to request the Prime Minister to inform himself on the question of the Department of Justice judgment and decision, and then, after he has informed himself, to consider whether he might publish that document so that the country and the public would know about it.

On March 27, in answer to questions which I had been putting to him regarding the possibility of a meeting with first ministers, the Prime Minister said:

—I will initiate discussions with them—

He was referring to the other first ministers.

—as soon as Canada has its own Constitution and as soon as Canadians have given themselves the means to improve that Constitution.

Did the Prime Minister intend, by that answer, to preclude meetings with the premiers before the constitutional resolution goes to Britain?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The Leader of the Opposition says he would feel more comfortable if the Minister of the Environment did not say certain things. I would like the Leader of the Opposition to feel comfortable. I would tell him that it is quite clear from my exchange with the House leader of the New Democratic Party that that aspect of it was negotiable. My first offer was to ensure that we would not press the British Parliament to pass the measure until the Supreme Court ruled. However, in answer to a specific question from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I said that it is quite acceptable to us—if that is what the House prefers that it would not be sent there at all.

So, now that the Leader of the Opposition feels comfortable, perhaps he will consider this very real offer of having the legality of the matter settled by the courts. I thought that was the whole purpose of the Tory obstruction, that they assumed we were doing something illegal. I am offering to let the courts determine whether it is legal or not before the British parliament acts on this matter.

● (1420)

In so far as the legal document which the Leader of the Opposition alleges might exist is concerned, I put to him once again that his fear, based on something that might have been said in a leaked document, is that once the British parliament has acted, then the Supreme Court of Canada would be powerless. I have made an offer to this House which would guarantee against that fear, that the British Parliament would not act until the Supreme Court had judged. Therefore there is no ground on which to concern oneself about a legal document saying that once Britain had acted the Supreme Court could not act. The whole intent of my offer is to put the Supreme Court first and the British parliament after, if indeed the Supreme Court decides the motion is legal.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I am pleased that the Prime Minister is prepared to put the Supreme Court decision first in relation to the British Parliament and trust that he will be prepared to put the Supreme Court decision first in relation to the Canadian Parliament so that we will know that we are dealing with legal matters here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: My question had to do with another important element of the constitutional resolution now before us, and that is the willingness of the Prime Minister to meet with the first ministers of the provinces prior to this resolution's leaving this country and going to Great Britain. I would like to know whether the Prime Minister's answer of the other day to me was designed to preclude any meeting with first ministers on constitutional matters or to discuss this resolution precisely prior to this resolution going to Britain.

Second, while I am on my feet, I wonder if the Prime Minister could tell us whether there are any elements of the proposal he now has before the House of Commons that he would not be prepared to have discussed at a meeting of first ministers.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition seems to make something in the fact that I am putting the Supreme Court first before the British Parliament but not before the Canadian Parliament. Surely that is the way he has been asking that things proceed. He wants to make sure that our action here, before it is sent to Britain, is judged to be within a law, and legal. Surely he is not asking that we should put the Supreme Court before Parliament on any matter it is legislating. Surely the Leader of the Opposition should remember that the whole basis of our system is that the Supreme Court judges upon laws which are made by this Parliament and the legislatures of the land.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I suggest that it is our duty in this House to pass laws as best we see them, relying on the people to judge them politically, and relying on the courts to judge them legally. It is the division of powers which is the essence of our system, that we do our job as legislators—that is what I am asking we do—and then we let the Supreme Court do its job as judges.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, the Supreme Court judges upon legality, and we in this House of Commons want to know that what we are being asked to approve is legal. That is very clear.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Go back to school, Joe.

Mr. Clark: If the shouting on the Liberal side will subside, let me bring the attention of the Prime Minister back to the first ministers. Twice now I have asked, and now for a third time I ask the Prime Minister about the possibility of a meeting between himself and the first ministers to discuss the best means of resolving the constitutional problems the country faces, and particularly the constitutional resolution before the House.

First, did the Prime Minister intend his answer to me the other day to preclude a meeting with first ministers before the constitutional resolution goes to Britain?

Second, is there any element of that constitutional package which he would not be prepared to have discussed in a meeting of first ministers?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition says this House of Commons has the right to know if what it is doing is legal before it does it.

Mr. Andre: The Newfoundland court says it is illegal.

Some hon. Members: Answer the question.

Mr. Trudeau: Hon. members opposite keep saying, "Answer the question".

An hon. Member: You don't do it.

Mr. Trudeau: I do not do it because you do not let me do it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: Poor Pierre.

● (1425)

Mr. Trudeau: I think we are well accustomed in this House to the practice of every member of the opposition making statements in preface to a question which, in my view, can be discussed and answered, then a question is added to the preamble. In past days, when I have been answering the sometimes very long preambles to questions, I got shouts from the opposition that I should be answering the questions. I am first answering the preamble, which the opposition has been allowed to make, and then I deal with the question. If you allow the preamble, Madam Speaker, I take it you will allow the answer to the preamble.

Mr. Clark: Now the question.

Mr. Trudeau: Not now the question. First the preamble, my friend.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition, in preface to his question, says the House wants to know before it does it if we are doing something legal. This would be the way to ensure the paralysis of Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: If every time a measure is introduced into this House, somebody, whether it be a province, a private individual, or some other litigant challenged the legality and put the matter before the courts—

Mr. Andre: But what you are doing is illegal.

Mr. Trudeau: —then this House would sit back and say let the courts decide. I suggest to hon. members opposite that they are failing to accept the division between the judicial responsibilities and the legislative responsibilities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Like Bill C-60.

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition talks about a first ministers' conference. He will remember that in the resolution before the House there is a provision for first ministers' conferences over the next two years. At this first ministers' conference we can discuss any item they want to put on the agenda. We can even discuss changing the resolution which would be adopted by this House, in a way which would be changed by the amending formula provided for in the resolution. That is why I said it can be negotiated. It can even be changed. The Leader of the Opposition can conduct his next campaign, if he is still around, on a mandate—

An hon. Member: You are getting desperate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —to withdraw the charter of rights from the Constitution, if that is what he desires. But I think I explained at some length, a couple of weeks ago, that after some 54 years of waiting for federal-provincial conferences to obtain—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Waiting for what?

Mr. Trudeau: Waiting for what? The hon. member for St. John's West does not know what we have been waiting for.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

POSITION OF BRITISH GOVERNMENT

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of the Environment. In his appearance on "Canada AM" yesterday, the Minister of the Environment said that the Canadian government would insist that the Canadian resolution be placed on the Order Paper of the British Parliament, in effect giving that resolution first reading in Britain before the Supreme Court of Canada could rule on the legality of the proposal.

Has the Minister of the Environment had any communication with the British government on that matter. Can he tell us whether the British government has given him any indication of its willingness to place the resolution on the British Parliament's order paper before the Supreme Court of Canada has ruled? Could he confirm he had that information?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid that question would be more properly addressed to another minister. I understand the Minister of the Environment was sent as an emissary. But this is not his ministerial responsibility and the hon. member's question would be better addressed to another minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Why did he get his nose stuck in it then?

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, you have given me an admonition that I cannot ask that question of the minister, yet the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of the Environment were emissaries, on behalf of the Prime Minister, to Britain to present that constitutional proposal earlier in the summer. On that basis, I wonder whether they were not speaking on behalf of the government. Definitely the minister of the Environment was speaking on television as a minister of the Crown. But if you keep that restriction on me, Madam Speaker, I would like permission to ask the question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Could the Secretary of State of External Affairs indicate whether or not the Minister of the Environment had had communications or whether he had had communications in which the British said they would be willing to place this matter on the Order Paper prior to the Supreme Court of Canada having made a judgment on it?

• (1430)

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, we have not asked any such hypothetical questions of the British government. We have not sought any such answers, so we have not received any.

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, obviously the Secretary of State for External Affairs has now totally repudiated the word of the Minister of the Environment. He has not been able to confirm it. The Minister of the Environment very clearly stated that was the position of the government. The minister says they have not asked for any such communication and therefore have not received any. I refer him to the meeting with St. John Stevas on November 10 as well as the meeting with the Right Hon. Mr. Pym on December 19. At the meeting with Mr. Pym, the Secretary of State for External Affairs was pushing the case that there should be a decision on the part of the British before the court decision in Canada. In other words, he was advocating that the British do an end run around the Supreme Court as well as the Canadian Parliament. Has the minister had further communication from any British minister along the lines of December 19 that the British would not be willing to do the end run which he advocated on December 19?

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, the hon. member is trying to create a false opposition between myself and my colleague. My colleague was speaking about the Canadian government, and the hon. member is asking about the British government. We have not discussed in any serious fashion, with the British government, questions of the kind he is raising.

AMENDMENT OF CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION AND REFERRAL TO SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, following on the point of order raised by the Leader of the Opposition yesterday, I made a proposal which I thought would achieve some consensus with regard to the concern expressed by all the parties in this House to get us out of this constitutional impasse. Before asking my question I would like to make it clear that this party believes in the general proposition that in the federal state it is our responsibility to legislate and the Supreme Court's function to pass final decision on the legislation.

Given the particular circumstances of dealing with a constitutional resolution that has been challenged in one court at the provincial level, negated in fact, although it has been affirmed in another, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question. Following the meeting of the House leaders which took place today, is the government prepared to accept a proposal which would limit time on the remaining stages of the debate to cover at least two amendments, the one before the House by the Conservative party, the important one on native rights and achieving greater equality for women which we in this party plan to move, to be followed by a decision on that final package by the Supreme Court of Canada and then, prior to sending the package over to Britain, have the final vote on the package, as adjudicated upon by the Supreme Court, here in the House of Commons?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think that the suggestion of the Leader of the New Democratic Party derogates somewhat from the statement of principles that he made in introducing his question. If it is our duty to legislate and the duty of the courts to adjudicate, then it would seem that the proposition we made, of legislating and then having the courts adjudicate, would be the proper procedure.

I am ready to look for some way to get out of the stalemate. If it could be made clear, if that course is accepted by other parties and ourselves in the House, that we do not consider this as a precedent but merely an exceptional procedure invoked because we are doing something that has no precedent because, I repeat, we have been failing for 54 years by following precedents, and second, if we could make sure that we agree with what the Leader of the New Democratic Party describes as his party's proposals on native or aboriginal rights and women's rights, that could easily be done because, in happier days when we were hoping to make some progress, there had been some exchange of texts as to what would be acceptable regarding women's rights and Indian rights.

If that could be made clear and if I could have the assurance from the Leader of the New Democratic Party that he would not entertain, after the Supreme Court ruling, assuming that it is favourable, another long debate on other long amendments which would change the nature of the subject matter referred to the Supreme Court, I would say on behalf of our party that we would be prepared to accept a House ruling stating those very things, if we could get agreement from all parties in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSITION OF OFFICIAL OPPOSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues, and I would hope all members on this side of the House, we see that as a genuine concession by the Prime Minister in the direction of consensus building.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: My Conservative colleagues—some, not all—are laughing. Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition said:

> Of course, we will be bound by what the courts decide and if they upheld Mr. Trudeau, we would be able to act pretty quickly in Parliament.

Given that fact, and the fact that today the Prime Minister has indicated the government's willingness to accept this kind of proposal which would enable us to terminate this serious debate and get on with other matters, I would ask the government House leader, and I have to put this question to him because of the rules of the House, whether, following the discussions this morning, there has been any report back from the official opposition as to whether they will accept these conditions.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker. I would point out to the hon. member that we are not in the habit of making public the nature of discussions held during meetings of parliamentary House leaders. However, since the question is being raised by the leader of a party and since no one would be harmed if I were to reveal what was discussed, I can say that this morning's meeting was held to clear up a few points and no one has made a decision yet.

I believe it is still possible that we will meet again later today to find out the reactions to a much more definite and much clearer proposition than the one made yesterday, including that suggested and proposed by the Progressive Conservative Party. For the time being I am unable to say whether that party accepts or rejects the proposition made by the New Democratic Party. In any event it is not up to me to answer for them, they can do that, but if they would prefer to hold more talks I am at their disposal and at the disposal of the New Democratic Party House leader; another meeting might be called later today to hold discussions and further negotiations in an attempt to reach agreement.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, since the Conservative party has proved itself quite adept at raising points of order, perhaps at the appropriate time today the Leader of the Opposition will use that opportunity to outline his party's position.

THE ECONOMY

DECLINE IN REAL WAGES—MINISTER'S ADVICE TO EMPLOYEES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I would like to turn now from the subject of the Prime Minister and the Leader of the New Democratic Party hijacking the country, to a different question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1440)

Mr. Crosbie: My question is to the Minister of Finance. We have been waiting 13 months, the whole term of this government, for some economic action from the government. The minister's department has reported that over the last four years real wages have declined in excess of 6 per cent, and has suggested that the government attempt to convince the public of the necessity of accepting something less in real wages in the current circumstances. In light of this advice from his department to him, and in light of the minister's firm stance against inflation, is he continuing to advise employees against attempting to get wage settlements which exceed the inflation rate or that provide for any catch-up? Is that part of the minister's policy to fight inflation?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I believe the threat of inflation is still the foremost economic difficulty the country faces. It is still my view that it is necessary to exercise restraint in wage settlements unless we want to give further impulse to even higher inflation in 1981. That view has been made clear more than once by myself, and it is obviously evident to all concerned that acceleration in wage settlements would lead inevitably to even greater pressure on the cost of living index.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, the minister then is stating it is the government's policy and its advice to the labour segment of our society, or everybody who is employed, that he does not want wage or salary settlements this year in excess of the rate of inflation or to provide for catch-up as part of his anti-inflationary stance.

On February 23 the minister made a statement in Montreal to the Canadian Club in which he said that Canadian workers had no "inalienable" right to better wages, pensions or benefits, and that this could only come from "increased economic growth". Economic growth last year was only 0.1 per cent, and this year is only forecast to be 1 per cent to 2 per cent. In view of this, is it the minister's advice to the country that since we are not going to have greater economic growth this year, and we did not last year, people should postpone their attempts to get better wages, pensions and benefits?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Madam Speaker, because there have been wage settlements that have already taken place which provide for increased wages. The President of the Treasury Board in the administration of public pay policy has authorized increases for employees in the public service. We are not suggesting that there not be better wage settlements than in the past, or no increases. That is not the suggestion. The suggestion is that in current circumstances, in the interests of the welfare of the country and all the people of the country, wage restraint is absolutely essential if we are to avoid a further acceleration in inflation. That is the point I have been making.

FINANCE

GOVERNMENT CASH POSITION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Finance. I would draw to his attention the Bank of Canada's weekly financial statistics as of March 26. I thought the minister might care to explain to the House why his coffers appear to be running over with cash to the extent they are. We note that as of that date he had $6.4 billion on deposit with Canadian chartered banks, up almost $3 billion compared to a year ago. Will the minister explain why he is running such a high cash position with the various banks of the country at a time when it is costing him 13 per cent, sometimes almost 14 per cent, on the money he has to borrow?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would be glad to tell the hon. member, as he probably recalls, that the cash balances held by the government are subject to very important seasonal fluctuations. Because of these seasonal fluctuations I believe he will see that the weekly financial statistics which are to be released today will show that cash balances of the government have been reduced to $4.8 billion, a reduction of $1.6 billion in one week. These seasonal reductions will take place as a result of a number of factors which occur at this time of the year.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I am pleased that the House has received this little advance release, if you like, that cash balances are still $4.8 billion. Would the Minister of Finance not agree then that any suggestion in relation to certain government measures that there is great urgency for the passage by this House of the bill authorizing further borrowing is a little stretched and, in fact, may be a deliberate misrepresentation?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I would not agree with that because, as his seat or desk mate will recall, one of the important functions of the Minister of Finance is to plan an orderly marketing program of government instruments, and it is quite impossible to plan, for example, the May 1 normal going to the market unless we have the authority from the House of Commons. If we do not have that authority, I believe this will create unnecessary uncertainty and possibly imperil the capacity of the government to undertake foreign exchange transactions and such like.

ENERGY

OIL PRICING POLICY—REPORTED INTRODUCTION OF TWO-TIER SYSTEM

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Yesterday the Calgary Herald had a report that the minister is considering a new two-tiered pricing system for oil. Is the minister considering such a system and, if so, what is the proposed price for the new oil? In addition, could the minister tell the House what impact this system will have at the gas pump?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, if I were considering such a possibility or concept, there would be nothing new to it because I have already indicated in this House that, in the course of my negotiations with the government of Alberta last year, I offered at that time an approach which would have implied a higher price for new oil. That proposal was rejected at that time. Since then I notice that several members of the industry have picked up that proposal and have suggested it has a lot of merit.

I can tell the hon. member that I am not considering any specific proposal at the present time, nor is the government considering any particular proposal. Obviously I will examine the matter further before my meeting with my colleague in Winnipeg on April 13, but I have reached no conclusion in this respect, and obviously the government has not at the present time. The whole report in this regard is totally speculative and has no foundation in so far as it could refer to my intentions or the government's intentions at this stage.

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF BILL C-48

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I am sure the minister will know that a two-price system will mean higher prices and a broken promise. Let me ask him about another broken promise, if I may.

The government rammed Bill C-48 through this House and into the committee stage by the use of closure. At the time his colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance, said we in committee could hear all the witnesses we wanted, yet next week the government is closing down that committee's hearings. Does the minister intend to impose Bill C-48 on the northern people without hearing from them and without consulting with them? Will he put an end to the steamrolling of Bill C-48 and allow the members to go up north and listen to the native people?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, there are so many inaccuracies in the hon. member's question I do not know quite where to start. There was no closure in respect of Bill C-48; there was an allocation of time under Standing Order 75C. As far as the hearings are concerned, the committee has heard a very large number of witnesses on Bill C-48 from industry, people from the north, and all kinds of experts from Canada and abroad. Certainly this bill during this session has been the subject of discussion by the largest number of witnesses, second to the constitutional resolution, obviously. As far as the proceedings of the committee are concerned, the committee is the master of its own business and it is improper for me to comment on its activities.

MANPOWER

COMMUNITY SERVICES PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR SUPPLEMENTARY FUNDS

Mr. Normand Lapointe (Beauce): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Considering that highly creative projects presented under the program of Canada Community Services projects have been temporarily shelved, can the minister say whether his department will soon release additional funds to make it possible to carry out those projects presented by people who are particularly affected by unemployment such as women, the handicapped and young graduates who would use such projects to meet precise social needs?

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question, and I am pleased he found that particular program to be beneficial to those who really need the assistance. For his information, we have signed something close to 500 projects across this country; of the participants in those projects, two thirds of them are women, large numbers are disabled, and many of them are young people, so I think the program has reached its objective. Because of the program's success we have an additional $1 million in supplementary estimates for it, and if the hon. member has some good projects he would like to propose, I would certainly be very pleased to receive them.

FINANCE

INDEXING OF INCOME TAX AND SOCIAL TRANSFER PAYMENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance and is supplementary to those of the hon. member for St. John's West and the hon. member for York-Peel. Last fall, with inflation considerably less than it is today, the minister considered, but did not put in his budget, a limit on the indexing of personal income tax and social transfer payments. The January 9 Finance Department document stated that, despite political difficulties, that policy appears to be worth keeping under consideration.

Will he tell this House whether he is again considering the imposition of a limit on such indexing, and give the House his assurance that he will not consider this in the future given its unfair application to the taxpayers and the recipients of old age pensions and so on?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I refer the hon. member to the budget statement itself when I dealt with the question of indexation and I said there, as I recollect, this was a subject that one might return to later. That situation has not changed and the words used in the October budget still apply.

Mr. Andre: So the minister is saying that still remains a threat to Canadians.

TAX BASED INCOMES POLICY

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Is the minister considering a tax based incomes policy with reference to price and wage guidelines, or does he agree with another part of the January 9 discussion paper which states that such a policy would cause more problems than it would be worth? Could he tell the House what his views are with regard to such a policy, and does he also go along with the view expressed in that discussion paper that this is unfair?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have not reached the conclusion to introduce TIP, as it is called, and if and when I do the House of Commons will be the first to know.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POLICY TO COMBAT INFLATION

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, on March 24 the Prime Minister stated in this House that the causes of inflation were "mainly energy prices and higher food prices and interest rates". Surely the Prime Minister is aware by now that when energy and food prices are removed, inflation is still running at a rate of 10.2 per cent.

In view of this I ask him to comment on these facts, interest rates clearly being an area that he could control, and tell the House whether he intends any new economic policies to control this killer inflation rate which is so devastating to our senior citizens and other low-income people?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member seems to suggest that we could control food prices and—

An hon. Member: Interest rates.

Mr. Trudeau: —and therefore bring the inflation rate down to 10 per cent.

An hon. Member: No, interest rates.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. members did not listen to their own questioner and so, Madam Speaker, I cannot deal with it.

REQUEST FOR ADJOURNMENT OF DEBATE ON CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister has just taken the reverse aspect of that particular question and did not answer it at all. The Gallup poll shows that inflation is a major concern of over half the population. Indeed, a recent poll shows that it is of major concern to over 70 per cent of Quebecers. Based on that, and the fact that over 60 per cent of the people disagree with his method of patriation of the Constitution, why will he not adjourn debate on this motion until the Supreme Court of Canada takes a decision on its legality, and concentrate on measures to fight inflation on which he will have the full support of this side of the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, now I do agree with the preamble to the question. The hon. member suggests that we should get on to other business—

Mr. Crosbie: You should.

Mr. Trudeau: —particularly the financial matters. We attempted all day yesterday to get on to the borrowing bill which the hijacking of Parliament by the official opposition prevented us from doing.

An hon. Member: There is another question of privilege.

Mr. Trudeau: I hope that they will be a bit consistent. If they want us to deal with other things, as we attempted to do yesterday, I hope they will permit us to do it today, unless of course the Leader of the Opposition is prepared to answer the suggestion made by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, which of course would be the perfect answer to the concern of the hon. member. If we can have agreement in this House on a House order in the direction indicated by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, then indeed we could dispense with this whole matter, I believe he has said in a couple of days, and then indeed we could get on to other things and tackle inflation.

FISHERIES

COSTS OF QUALITY IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM—ASSURANCE SOUGHT OF RETURN TO FISHERMEN

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The growing opposition in Atlantic Canada to the quality program announced by the government, and in particular the Newfoundland Fishermen, Food and Allied Workers have officially come out in opposition to the program simply because they feel that it loads the cost of quality programming on fishermen and offers no guarantee that they will benefit from increased quality.

Could the minister give some assurances to the fishermen in Atlantic Canada that his department is looking at ways to see that the price to fishermen increases as a result of their providing better quality?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I do not see many ways that I could intervene in negotiations as to price between fishermen and processors, but I know one thing: if we do not make sure that our place in the markets is protected and ensured by consistent quality of the fish we export, then I can predict to the hon. member that the price will drop because we will be the first to suffer from tightened market conditions.

Mr. Miller: No one in the industry questions the advisability of increasing quality. What the fishermen are saying is that they will have to increase their investment capital and manpower in their vessels, and yet there is no collective bargaining in three Atlantic provinces which would guarantee them a fair price. I am asking the minister if he is suggesting that all they have is hope for an increase in the price of their product, or is there some other mechanism whereby he can assure them that if they put that money in they are going to get some money back?

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, there is more than hope; there is reality. Of the $8 million in the boat subsidy program for the year starting yesterday, $2 million has been put aside for improvement of holding facilities, icing equipment, carrying equipment, gutting machines, etc., to be used on fishing vessels. Two million dollars is already committed to this program, and more will be added if the fishermen so require.

• (1500)

As to the three provinces the hon. member mentioned where fishermen have not yet been given the legal right to organize and to bargain for fish prices, I can only give fishermen one piece of advice: they should throw out the three Tory governments in those provinces.

HOUSING

EFFECT OF INFLATION ON INDUSTRY AND HOME OWNERS

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works, the minister responsible for the housing crisis in the country. Inflation is now at 12.2 per cent, and with its accompanying ballooning of mortgage interest rates, obviously is causing severe financial distress and wreaking havoc with Canadians holding mortgages which must be renewed, and with the housing industry.

Will the minister confirm that the Canadian housing industry, on a yearly basis, is in the deepest slump since the 1930s? Will he agree that the inflation created by government deficits and oceans of new money being printed to cope with this deficit are the major cause of the housing disaster facing Canada?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, in so far as my ministry responds to the part of the question dealing with the condition of the housing industry in Canada, I might say that about a year ago some of the statistics might have been approximately accurate, that is, the slump of the industry and the difficulties of the industry. But I am sure the hon. member and many hon. members have seen in recent months, particularly in the first quarter of this year, improvement in the industry, as reflected by the increase in the number of starts. Indeed, according to industry spokesmen—I am thinking of the urban development industry and, for example, the HUDAC spokesman; leaders in the industry—obviously the record of the first quarter of this year shows an improvement in the industry and optimism in the industry which was not apparent, as I have indicated, 12 months previously.

Mr. Cook: Madam Speaker, in an effort to be sweetly reasonable—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cook: —what new policy does the minister have to fight inflation as the main obstacle to expanding and building more houses? Will the minister try to persuade the government to get off its constitutional obsession, so that we can deal with both inflation and the housing problems?

Mr. Cosgrove: Madam Speaker, with some modesty, I might say that sweet reasonableness is one of the attributes I attempt to project and to apply to all my duties and responsibilities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cosgrove: I would think anyone applying those standards in any objective manner would have to agree that the signals in the industry are to an upturn, there is optimism in the industry and, in part, that reflects the previous action of the government in the last 12 months, for example, in increasing social housing starts, in the budget provisions with respect to MURBs, and in the better use of government machinery under the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to be a more effective provider vis-à-vis the housing needs of Canadians generally.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. CLARK—THE CONSTITUTION—SUGGESTED PROCEDURE FOR AMENDING PROPOSED RESOLUTION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order concerning House business and flowing from the fraternal discussions between the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I want a little clarification on what exactly the Prime Minister indicated he would find acceptable, particularly since it was not clear to me in the statement of the Leader of the New Democratic Party whether or not he was talking about votes on amendments in the House prior to any package going to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: Yes.

Mr. Clark: He now says, "Yes". To come back to the proposition I raised yesterday which caused discussions among House leaders that have now been carried on publicly—I must say it was somewhat to our surprise that those discussions should be carried on publicly on the floor of the House, but that process having been started, we will carry it on—let me ask the Prime Minister whether he would be prepared to accept a position which contained the following elements. First, there would be a grouping of a limited number of amendments agreed to among all parties in the House. Second, that the constitutionality of those amendments, as well as the constitutionality of the government's own resolution, would be determined by the Supreme Court of Canada before Parliament votes on any question relating to the constitutional resolution.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Third, that the debate in Parliament be adjourned until a decision by the Supreme Court of Canada to allow Parliament to get on with the other urgent business of the nation. Fourth, that no new amendments would be introduced to any resolution after the Supreme Court of Canada has rendered its decision on the legality of the government's position and on the legality of any amendments which might be proposed by other parties in the House.

Would the Prime Minister be prepared to respond positively to a proposal containing those elements?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, this is a rather strange point of order. It began with asking me to clarify the suggestion of the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) that I accepted. I can only suggest, since we are on a point of order, that the Leader of the New Democratic Party answer that. I have answered his suggestion affirmatively. Let us deal with that; let us hear the point of view of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) on that proposal. If it is accepted, it solves the matter; if it is not, then we will see if there is any further room for compromise.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister has heard our proposal and the proposal of the New Democrats. He knows there is one fundamental area in which they disagree. The New Democrats and the Liberals, together again, appear to be prepared to have the House of Commons vote on a matter which the courts of Canada have declared illegal.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: We are not prepared to have the House of Commons vote on a matter which has been declared illegal by the Supreme Court of Newfoundland.

An appreciable distinction between the two proposals concerns whether or not it is appropriate for Parliament to vote on matters which a court has found to be illegal. We believe it is not appropriate for Parliament to vote on a constitutional matter which has been found by a court of this country to be beyond the constitutional competence of Parliament. That is our position; that responds to the position put forward by the New Democratic Party.

I return to my question to the Prime Minister. Would he be prepared to accept a proposal such as the one I put forward yesterday and again today containing the elements I have enumerated, a proposal which would allow us to determine the question of legality, to consider the appropriateness of all important amendments, to adjourn this debate immediately so that we could get on with the important business of Canada, and to ensure that there was a Constitution in Canada which adhered to the constitutional law and practice of the country? Also, perhaps the adjournment would provide an opportunity for the first ministers of the nation to get together to see if there might be some greater room for agreement on the Constitution of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, neither the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) nor myself had the dubious pleasure, perhaps, of going to law school, but I would like to—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much.

Mr. Broadbent: Well, I never went to law school, Madam Speaker. However, I want to say in all seriousness to the Leader of the Opposition that I was responding in my comments yesterday to the suggestions I heard for the first time from the Leader of the Opposition. The responses were made on the floor of the House immediately after I heard them. There was no conspiracy either with members of his party or with the party opposite.

• (1510)

However, I would like to say, since he asked a question here on a point of order concerning our attitude with respect to voting on amendments, that the position I put forward on behalf of my colleagues was that, yes, there should be a vote on amendments. There are important matters affecting the native people of Canada; they want to know where we stand. There are important matters affecting the women of Canada; they want to know where we stand. There have been matters which my party have attempted to debate for six weeks in the House of Commons. We would like a vote taken on those. Presumably the official opposition, which has one amendment before the House, would like to have a vote on it or it would never have moved the amendment.

Mr. Clark: That was before the Supreme Court decision.

Mr. Broadbent: I want to come now to the final point of law. As I understand it, we are proposing to vote on the amendments but withholding the vote on the final resolution, as amended, precisely to deal with the point raised by the Leader of the Opposition, that at this point in our history, in the moral sense—

An hon. Member: What about the legal one?

Mr. Broadbent: —we should obtain the acceptance of the Supreme Court of the legitimacy of the way in which we are proceeding, given the fact that the court in Manitoba ruled one way and the court in Newfoundland ruled the other. We have made the proposal, although according to strict constitutional law I do not think it is necessary. But I think in terms of political and moral legitimacy it is necessary, which is the point the Leader of the Opposition is making.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: All I am asking the Leader of the Opposition to do is to be logical on this issue and allow a vote on his amendment, a vote on our amendments—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Broadbent: —and then suspend final judgment until we hear from the Supreme Court.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition motions for me to stand up. I will answer very clearly, Madam Speaker. I accept the proposal of the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Can the Leader of the Opposition stand up and say, yes or no, whether he accepts it? Let us hear his answer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Yes or no?

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I regret that the Prime Minister missed my first answer. We cannot accept a proposal which would have the House of Commons voting on matters which the Supreme Court of Newfoundland has declared to be beyond the competence of this Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blais: It's not so!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Do I understand the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is asking for the floor again?

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I am asking for the floor simply because in these exchanges between the Leader of the New Democratic Party and the Prime Minister we have yet to receive an answer from the Prime Minister to the question I put to him in respect to the proposal, the elements of which I have outlined today. I would like to have that response from him.

Some hon. Members: Yes or no?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, to look at things in order, I suppose that the Leader of the Opposition would require not only agreement from myself but agreement from the New Democratic Party.

Some hon. Members: Why?

Mr. Andre: He is in bed with you. He will do whatever you want.

Mr. Trudeau: I am asked why, Madam Speaker. Because if the New Democratic Party are not part of the deal, they can, if they wish, and if they are as destructive as the Tories, hold up the work of this House for weeks, just as the Tory party is.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Trudeau: That is why we are looking for a compromise that everyone can agree to.

The Leader of the Opposition wants a yes or no answer. It would depend on what happened after the Supreme Court decided. The Leader of the Opposition has not dealt with that. Once the Supreme Court decides and if the decision is that the matter is legal, would he then agree to pass in the House the whole package within, say, 48 hours?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: No!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I take it that is the only question in the Prime Minister's mind in relation to our package. Is that correct?

Some hon. Members: Answer the question! Yes or no?

Point of Order—Mr. Epp

Mr. Clark: Could I have an indication from the Prime Minister whether that is the only reservation, the only question he has in relation to the proposition—the time element after the matter comes back from the Supreme Court?

An hon. Member: Up, Pierre!

Some hon. Members: Up, up!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I want to point out to the House that the Chair is rather uneasy since these are the kind of negotiations that do not usually take place in the presence of the Chair. These are the kind of matters that are not usually conducted in open debate. I have tolerated it for a while in the hope that, perhaps, something speedy could be accomplished. It might be wiser to continue the negotiations in another place, but the House may do as it wishes.

Mr. Epp: I have a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Provencher on a point of order.

MR. EPP—DISALLOWANCE OF QUESTION ON CONSTITUTION ADDRESSED TO MR. ROBERTS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my point of order arises out of the question period today. You will recall that I asked a question of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) regarding the Constitution. Your Honour ruled that I was not in a position to ask that question of the Minister of the Environment in view of the fact that the Constitution does not fall within his area of ministerial responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Not again!

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, I direct the attention of the House to page 6224 of Hansard for January 15, 1981.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Epp: Could I have order, please?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Might we have some quiet in the House, please?

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, I refer you to page 6224 of Hansard for January 15, 1981. On that day the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) used the following words in his question:

> This matter has been discussed between the prime ministers in June. Could the Minister of the Environment in his capacity as envoy on constitutional matters inform the House?

The Minister of the Environment then proceeded to answer the question, which was strictly on constitutional matters as they related to his duties, as given to him by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and to his contacts in Great Britain.

My question today was exactly on that point, on the Constitution and the contacts the minister, as the envoy of the Prime Minister, had in Britain regarding the possible conversation between members of the British cabinet and the Minister of the Environment. On January 15 you allowed the minister to answer exactly with respect to that issue. Today you chose not to do so.

I would like the Chair to give me an indication whether I can ask the minister those questions in the future, in view of the fact that he has been able to answer them before, and it is public knowledge that the Prime Minister instructed the "Mark and John Show", the two apostles, to go to Britain.

● (1520)

Madam Speaker: Yes, I remember that incident, but I cannot call it a precedent because I did not make a ruling. These sort of things happen very quickly in the House of Commons, and having happened there is very little that the Speaker can do. However, the Speaker may not interfere if the minister chooses to answer the question. On this particular occasion, the minister rapidly answered that question; that was his choice. However, this point remains very clear in Beauchesne, Citation 361:

A question may not be asked of a minister in another capacity, such as being responsible for a province—

That is a very clear rule. It is also up to the minister to decide whether he wants to answer a question.

What I did today was not to disallow the question put to the minister; I simply suggested that it might more properly be addressed to someone else. The hon. member received an answer to his question from another minister. But the rule is there for his guidance. The Chair cannot really prevent a minister from answering or force him to answer a question.

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, on the same point, if you could give me further instructions, are you saying that, despite the ruling in Beauchesne if a minister chooses to answer, and if he is quickly enough on his feet, he can answer?

Madam Speaker: It is his own choice whether to answer. It is the minister's choice to answer a question or not to answer. It is very hard for me to determine all of the specific responsibilities of the minister. This particular question was long enough that I was able to react, and it seemed that it might more properly have been addressed to another minister. I simply suggested to the hon. member that he might address it to another minister.

In the particular circumstance of today, the Minister of the Environment chose not to answer the question I suppose, though I cannot answer for him, because he felt it was not within the realm of his specific ministerial responsibilities; but another minister took up the question.

Mr. Epp: Just one more point, Madam Speaker. If I interpret your ruling correctly, it is very difficult for an hon. member on this side of the House to ask a minister a question in an area in which he has answered before. The minister has made public statements which have been repudiated in this House by his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan). Therefore, it is impossible, in view of that ruling—despite the fact that the minister has already answered once—to discover who is speaking for the government in this House and what communications have taken place. It is a ruling which places all of us in a Catch-22 situation.

Madam Speaker: I think the hon. member is more confused than he need be. He did occupy a cabinet post and he does know that ministers may make statements outside the House on any aspect of government policy, be it the Constitution or any other matter. Therefore, the Minister of the Environment may quite properly make statements on the Constitution outside the House, but it does not then necessarily follow that because the minister has made a statement outside the House, hon. members in the House may be allowed to ask questions on that statement if it is not within the realm of his ministerial responsibilities.

The rule is quite clear. If an hon. member asks a question, a minister may answer it. But ministers may answer only those questions which are within the realm of their responsibilities, and they are the judges of what matters fall within the realm of their responsibilities. I think that is quite clear.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, on the same point of order, I believe this is important to what you said. I recall having asked questions of former solicitors general which they chose to answer despite the fact that they no longer occupied the portfolio.

I want to point out to Your Honour that while you were engaged in this interesting point of order with my colleague, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) was also listening very closely and he indicated, to me at least, that he did not agree with your interpretation that he did not want to answer the question. From his clear gesture, I understood—he is nodding his head now—that he really wished to respond to the question, which raises a whole new dimension here. Just as a former solicitor general responded to me when I was asking what I thought to be an important question, the Minister of the Environment indicated that he, too, wished to follow that precedent. It would appear that he was inadvertently prevented from having this opportunity.

Therefore, my point of order is that I believe the minister should now be given the opportunity to indicate to the House whether he does wish to exercise his option and answer the question.

Madam Speaker: Well, first of all, the question period is over. Secondly, to answer the hon. member's point of order, I suggested that the question might more properly have been addressed to another minister. If the Minister of the Environment had then risen in his place, I do not feel that I could have prevented him from answering the question; but he did not. Instead, the question was addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan), and he chose to answer it.

If another question is posed in other circumstances, I might again point out to the House that that question could perhaps be more properly addressed to another minister. However, that does not preclude a certain minister from rising in his seat to answer the question. For the time being, we cannot come back to this question because question period has concluded.

I will hear the Minister of the Environment, but only on a point of order; I will not allow him to answer the question.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): I understand, Madam Speaker. If I have caused any problem, I am sorry to have done so. I had no particular desire to answer the question, but I would have been quite happy and prepared to respond to it, as a matter of politeness to the hon. member opposite. There is really no need for me to do so since one of my colleagues gave the answer. However, if someone else wants to pose another question at some other time, I would be happy to hear it and possibly respond in a way which might be helpful.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition began the exchange a while go, he referred to it as having started under the heading of House business. I had assumed that somewhere in that exchange the usual Thursday questions would be asked. I do not wish to jump ahead of my friend, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Go ahead!

Mr. Knowles: You are very kind.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You are standing, so go ahead.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the government House leader if he can tell us what the government plans for business today, if we get there? At the same time may I make the plea, despite the fact that agreement did not seem to get reached earlier this afternoon on how we handle the Constitution, that we have further meetings of House leaders to see if we can resolve the one or two points of difference which still stand?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I think we will have some relief today, if the opposition has been sincere, and I think it has been. We will not deal with the motion to allocate time to the debate on the Constitution today, so I suppose there will then be no problem and no delaying tactics. What I propose to do—and I mentioned this earlier to my colleague, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton—is to deal with a motion in the name of the Minister of State for Finance to allocate time to the debate on the borrowing authority bill. Since less than two hours remain to debate that motion, it is possible that it will be voted on before the end of the day and we will have to deal with something else.

I say now publicly that we will not deal with the motion to limit time on the Constitution debate, but instead we will deal with the borrowing authority bill after the motion to limit time for debate on that bill has been voted on. That is the only item on the program today. We will deal with that very important motion on a very urgent bill which should have been passed by both Houses yesterday but is still pending because of the delays we have faced within the last days.

Since hon. members of the opposition have been saying all along that if another item of business is brought under the order of the day they would then show their seriousness and let it proceed, I am publicly saying that that is fine. Today we will not deal with the motion to allocate time on the Constitution. We will deal merely with the motion on borrowing authority and the bill itself.

In so far as the business for tomorrow and next week is concerned, obviously it would have been much easier to establish the order of business if we had concluded an agreement as suggested by the Leader of the New Democratic Party; but if I understood the Leader of the Opposition, he rejected the offer made by the Leader of the NDP.

Consequently, I think we will have to wait and see when the motion is voted on today and when there is an order of the House allocating two days to deal with the borrowing authority bill. I am prepared to discuss with the House leaders having the report stage tomorrow, for example, assuming that a vote is taken today and that part of the debate proceeds after that vote on the borrowing authority bill. I am prepared to discuss a proposal that the report stage of the borrowing authority bill proceed tomorrow. If there is a vote, we could agree to postpone it to next week. I am even prepared to discuss a proposal that the bill be read a third time Monday, assuming always that there is a vote today to limit the debate to two days.

If hon. members opposite are sincere, we will face no hijacking for the next three days and will make progress on a very urgent and important item of business.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, I wonder if the government House leader would also answer my question about further House leaders' meetings on the issue of the Constitution debate. Even though the differences today might have been rather sharp, their number is only one or two. Since we do want to get out of the impasse and get on, a further meeting might be useful.

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Madam Speaker, I am always pleased to meet with my colleagues. That seems to be a constructive suggestion. If it suits my colleague the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton, I am willing to have that meeting in 15 minutes in my office.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I am always happy to meet in House leaders' meetings with my colleagues in the hope that we can make some progress.

Point of Order—Mr. Waddell

POINTS OR ORDER

MR. WADDELL—ALLEGED MISLEADING REPLY OF MR. LALONDE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, it may be a pleasant change of pace to hear a point of order from down here; perhaps not.

My point of order is this. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) may inadvertently have misled the House in reply to a question I put to him in question period with respect to the meetings of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works. The minister indicated to the House that the committee had been hearing from many witnesses and from northerners. Perhaps the minister did not know this, but the fact is that in 11 meetings we heard from government civil servants and bureaucrats; in nine meetings we heard from the major multinational oil companies; and in only two meetings did we hear from the people who will ultimately be affected by the bill and have to live with it with respect to the whole development of the north. I see the minister in the House, and I would not want him inadvertently to mislead the House.

The second point is that the committee voted unanimously for my motion to visit the north at the request of northern people, and then on the instructions of the minister his department—

Madam Speaker: Order. I am afraid the hon. member is debating the question. Whether he finds the answer the minister gave him during the question period complete or not, that does not constitute the basis of a point of order or a question of privilege. I am afraid the hon. member is simply prolonging the question period, and trying to enter into debate with the hon. minister on this question. The hon. member will have many other occasions in the course of the proceedings to do that, but I ask him not to pursue it now.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, my point of order will be very short. I can deal with it in just two sentences. If the policy of not permitting an hon. minister to answer a question—

Madam Speaker: Order. That question has been settled. I have ruled on it.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, there is a point—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, I have just heard that the leaders of the various parties will be meeting to discuss a possible agreement. Madam Speaker, as a member of this House I should like to ask you, in your capacity as Speaker of the House, to reserve the right of any member to be informed first of any agreement which the parties may reach because, as I see it, parties do not have the right to speak. Members have the right to speak. I would also like to reserve the right to rise on a question of privilege should we as members of the House, be denied the right to introduce amendments to this resolution.

Madam Speaker: Hon. members will understand that negotiations which may be held between party leaders will surely be discussed afterwards with the members. This is something which does not concern the Chair in any way. The hon. member wanted to raise a question and did so, but it is certainly not a point of order.

Mr. Olivier: Madam Speaker, I would simply like to say that I wanted to raise the same point of order before the House. I will therefore follow the advice you have just given.

[English]

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, the whole question period could be stymied if one minister said to another, "You announce this program on television and then you cannot be questioned in the House of Commons". The entire question period would break down. There have been rulings on that in other legislatures. I very simply ask Your Honour to give cognizance to that fact, because that is doing something indirectly which cannot be done directly.

Madam Speaker: If the ruling is faulty, we can change it, but I certainly cannot change it. I can only follow it.

I merely want to read Citation 361 of Beauchesne for those who have not read it:

> A question may not be asked of a minister in another capacity, such as being responsible for a province, or part of a province, or as spokesman for a racial or religious group.

The interpretation of that rule has always been that ministers may answer questions on matters relating to their ministerial responsbility. However, the Chair cannot force a minister to answer. The whole question period could consist of questions and no answers at all, and there would be nothing the Speaker could do about it. Ministers are free to answer or not answer questions. That is the practice; the rule is there to confirm it and that concludes the point of order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KILGOUR—SUGGESTED ILLEGALITY OF THE RESOLUTION ON THE CONSTITUTION

Madam Speaker: I am now ready to rule on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour).

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I will be brief. I apologize to the Chair for not speaking more concisely yesterday. It is my habit to speak concisely about matters.

Madam Speaker: Order. I thought I had given the hon. member enough time to expose his question of privilege. I felt that if he allowed me, I would rule right now on his question of privilege. I know it was six o'clock, but he obviously had come to the end of his argument. As a matter of fact, he indicated that he was at the end of his argument. If anything, all I could allow would be that he finish his last sentence.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I thought about this last night and I think I can state the essence of my point—in a somewhat different way from the way I stated it yesterday—in about two minutes, if you will permit me.

Some hon. Members: Order.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: I realize it is a good thing to sleep on it and that is probably what happened. But it was yesterday that the hon. member argued his question of privilege. Of course he still had the floor at six o'clock and I had to interrupt him because the sitting was over. However, I remind him that I will give him exactly two minutes.

[English]

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I believe the position of the Chair is that you cannot find that we lawyers have a question of privilege, because to do so you would have to find that the matter is illegal. Your Honour said that we have the right to vote or not to vote. My respectful submission is that the way that ruling stands at the moment—

Madam Speaker: Order. I am sorry, but the hon. member is commenting on the ruling I made. Would the hon. member please resume his seat. I made that ruling quite specifically and answered those arguments, so the hon. member cannot come back on that ruling. I have determined that those arguments are not relevant to the question.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, in the minute and a half I have left, let us suppose the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that this measure was illegal.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Kilgour: It seems to me that by the jurisprudence referred to by Your Honour and by Your Honour's ruling, if the absurd notion of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that what the courts say does not matter here were upheld, with the utmost of respect Your Honour would then be in precisely the same position. If the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that this proposal was illegal and we were asked to vote on it—we would not be forced to vote—the position is that no one would attack us for voting. In my respectful submission, unless Your Honour takes a wider, newer or more expansive view of the privileges of members, that is precisely the position members of Parliament will be in.

I suppose Your Honour is going to cut me off. I thank you for listening so attentively.

● (1540)

Madam Speaker: I am ready to rule on the hon. member's question of privilege. However, yesterday when the hon. member offered me a hypothetical argument as to what would happen, for instance, if this House were to make a motion to send all of the women of this House to the moon, I was about to jump to my feet and say that that motion was quite in order, except that I might want to know whether there is a Parliament up there!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Of course, hon. members would not know why I want to know whether there is a Parliament up there. I can tell them I want to know so that I can decide whether I want a job or want to be relieved of one! That is my secret.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The hon. member began his argument by quoting from Erskine May. He read the first paragraph on page 67 of the nineteenth edition. Following that, he enjoined me to take a broader look at what constitutes privilege. He did refer to my inexperience in legal matters. I confess to that. Although I confess to inexperience in legal matters, I am beginning to have some experience in parliamentary procedure, and that is the business I am in.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: If the hon. member has such experience in legal matters, I am surprised, that he did not read the whole paragraph. I will read it to him.

Mr. Kilgour: That is because of experience.

Madam Speaker: That is because he is experienced, quite right!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: I can tell the hon. member that he is protected from any damage which might occur to him should he be forced by this House to do a number of things that he finds illegal or improper.

The second paragraph on page 67 of Erskine May reads:

> The particular privileges of the Commons have been defined as: "The sum of the fundamental rights of the House and of its individual members as against the prerogatives of the Crown, the authority of the ordinary courts of law and the special rights of the House of Lords".

In other words, May says that the hon. member is protected by parliamentary immunity. That is what it is all about. Members in this House can say whatever they feel they should say, and they are protected if they say it within the precincts of this House.

Incidentally, the hon. member had two questions of privilege; he argued them both at the same time. He argued the one about his oath, which would put him in conflict with what he is doing in the House. The second one had to do with the rules of the Bar association, which he would have to contravene if he were dealing with the constitutional motion.

The question of the oath has been answered. On the second point, the hon. member wants me to apply the rules of the Bar associations of the different provinces to this House. This House is run by the rules of the House, not by the rules of the Bar associations.

I have to tell the hon. member that he does not have a question of privilege on that basis. He did not bring forward any new argument to convince me that he has a question of privilege.

I want members to take note that I have ruled on both those questions of privilege.

REPETITIVE QUESTIONS OF PRIVILEGE

Madam Speaker: I have something to say about the number of questions of privilege that I have on the same matter. I think it was demonstrated yesterday, as speakers rose to defend their questions of privilege, that it is difficult for members to argue them without referring to my previous rulings and also without repeating the arguments which other colleagues have already put forward in their presentations.

Because I cannot allow members to comment on my rulings or refer to them during the debate which follows, I realize that members will be obliged to repeat those same arguments. In fact, three members in a row have repeated the arguments, and the Chair is placed in the peculiar position of having to listen to the same argument on each question of privilege that is raised. The Chair must listen to all members who give notice of a question of privilege. There is no doubt about that according to our Standing Orders. However, the Standing Orders do not provide that the Chair must listen to the same questions several times over. If I read the wording governing questions of privilege, it would be quite obvious to them that in this case we have questions of privilege that are all similar. I do not find it said anywhere that the Chair must listen to the same question of privilege several times over.

Because it will be difficult to pursue these questions of privilege without repeating the arguments and referring to the rulings that I have made, I am going to ask the hon. members who have submitted questions of privilege on the matter of the Constitution to withdraw them voluntarily.

I think hon. members realize that they themselves will have difficulty defending them, and it will be practically impossible to deal with these questions of privilege because of the constraint I will have to put on members regarding the repetition of arguments and reference to my rulings. Therefore, I ask those members who have submitted questions of privilege to withdraw them voluntarily. I will commence with the question of privilege of the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker).

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, before putting that proposal to hon. members, because of the rather unusual course which the Chair might be embarking upon, may I suggest that perhaps the more proper course to follow would be to hear members individually.

I say that for two reasons. First, while it is totally improper for an hon. member to question or comment negatively on the Chair's ruling, there is certainly no stricture on an hon. member to comment favourably on the Chair's ruling. We are doing it all the time by referring to precedents.

Second, and perhaps more important, the Standing Order requiring notice to be given of questions of privilege requires that notice be accompanied by a brief statement of the subject matter of the question of privilege intended to be raised. Given that a notice you have contains a brief statement—I do not know what kind of statement is contained in the notice but I assume it is brief, consisting of one or two sentences—it seems to me that the fairer practice might be, rather than embarking upon a totally new precedent which may prove to be undesirable in the future, at least to hear the hon. member who has given notice until such time as the Chair determines it is, in fact, the same question with which the Chair has already dealt. Therefore, it seems to me it would be fairer for the hon. member who has given notice to be allowed to develop his submissions to you to the point where the Chair finds there is duplication.

I think it would be extremely undesirable if the Chair were to rule now that there was a discretion in the Chair simply to read the notice, accompanied by the brief statement required under our rules, and to rule on the acceptability of a question of privilege merely on the basis of the notice and the brief statement.

● (1550)

I therefore urge you, Madam Speaker, to hear the hon. member at least until the Chair has formed an opinion one way or another that there is a duplication, at which time I totally agree that the Chair would be justified in saying the matter is intruding upon subject matter that the Chair has already rendered a ruling upon. I think the hon. member should be allowed to proceed to that extent.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sorry to take up some of your time with this matter, but I believe that it is extremely important to remind the House of what you have just said in effect that when the similarity among several questions of privilege is such that only a few words differ, it is obvious, normal and also logical for you to make a ruling on all of them at the same time.

I believe that if you could not make a ruling on all of them at one time, the privileges of the House as a whole might be threatened since every hon. member is a legislator, and as such, has the right to speak on legislative measures and not only on points of order or questions of privilege.

The problem, Madam Speaker, is that if you are not given the right to make a ruling on a group of similar questions of privilege which contain about the same words, we shall be prevented as legislators from playing the role for which we have been elected. This is why I support your decision, Madam Speaker, and I ask that you apply it.

[English]

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I find the intervention of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) a little offensive at this point. You indicated that you were about to proceed with a ruling. That is not subject to any questioning.

Mr. Nielsen: No.

Mr. Paproski: The Speaker did not rule.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I know the parliamentary secretary did not intend intentionally to mislead the House by that observation. I am sure Your Honour will confirm you were indeed inquiring of members who had filed notices of questions of privilege whether they wanted to withdraw their question of privilege. It is for the members, at the request of the Speaker, to make a decision. With respect to the intervention of the hon. member for Olivier, the person who shares an apartment with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde)—

[Translation]

Mr. Olivier: Madam Speaker, on a point of order—

Madam Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Paproski: Sit down!

An hon. Member: When the Speaker is standing you have to sit down.

Madam Speaker: We are already on a point of order and there cannot be two at the same time. I shall ask the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to conclude his point of order, and afterwards, if the hon. member for Longueuil wishes to rise on another point of order, I shall be able to hear him.

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, initially I have to apologize to the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier). He is a distinguished member of this House. He is a handsome, intelligent and concise man and I do not want to offend him by calling him by his own name.

The point I want to make is that if members are not allowed at least to make an initial statement with regard to their question of privilege, that would be an unfortunate precedent. In the course of carrying out your duties, Your Honour has the discretion at a particular point in time to ask an hon. member to get to the point. Indeed, you may not be satisfied that there is a question of privilege. If we look ahead to the consequences of not allowing members to have the opportunity to make an initial statement on their question of privilege, we may regard that as an unfortunate precedent. I wanted to clarify this because the parliamentary secretary did interject and I wanted to explain the point to him.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Longueuil yelled across the floor for me to shut up, which is unparliamentary language. I would ask the hon. member to withdraw it.

Madam Speaker: That is not an unparliamentary expression, although I am not sure that it is in the best of taste.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is what you get for living with Lalonde.

Mr. Paproski: You don't say that in your apartment.

Madam Speaker: I understand from the intervention made by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) that he is expressing a view on this subject. I want to say that I did not intend to rule from the written notices. That is not allowed by our rules. It is allowed in the rules or practices of the Parliament at Westminster, but not in our rules. I was not suggesting that I would walk into the House and rule on questions of privilege on the basis of the statements I had received. In the same manner, I do not suppose that the hon. member for Yukon wants to speak for all members who have submitted notices of questions of privilege. Therefore, I will ask them individually.

The only thing I was asking was whether these members would voluntarily withdraw their questions of privilege, taking into account they would be in quite great difficulty. I am giving them notice now that I will not accept an argument that has already been given and I will not accept any negative comments on my ruling—and I thank the hon. member for making the difference between the negative and the positive—It will be difficult to defend those questions of privilege because, as I said, they are similar.

I will ask the individual members if they want to withdraw. If they do not, that is their own decision. I will ask them individually if they wish to withdraw and then I will proceed. Does the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) want to withdraw?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): With respect, Madam Speaker, I would normally comply immediately with a request from the Chair, but in this instance, and because I did not hear all of the rulings given yesterday, only part, I believe I have a couple of points that would be a niche in the rulings you have given. My comments will be very brief, lasting perhaps five minutes. I am hoping they will give a perspective that Your Honour would appreciate and which would help you in your over-all ruling.

Madam Speaker: I understand the hon. member does not want to withdraw. I want to remind the House that the circumstance that the Chair should have so many questions of privilege to hear is quite unprecedented. Never in the history of Parliament have we not been able to reach the orders of the day for such a long period. I am told that never in the history of any Parliament has the Speaker had to be in the chair for so many consecutive hours. Apparently that has never happened in any Parliament that we know of, so the circumstances are really unprecedented.

Mr. Nielsen: The pipeline debate.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member is referring to the pipeline debate. Not even during that period did that happen. However, there are rules regarding the question period; questions should be short, answers should be short. There are rules in the Standing Orders about the length of debate; sometimes it is 40 minutes, 30 minutes or some other length of time. There are rules which are quite strict and they are followed by this House. There are rules about the number of times a member can speak on a particular question. However, there are no rules on matters of privilege.

Therefore, I will use my discretion, in view of the unprecedented circumstances in which the House finds itself, to determine that no member will speak more than five minutes. A member must make the point to me in five minutes that he has the basis for a question of privilege; I remind members they need not debate a question of privilege but need only indicate to me that they have the basis for a question of privilege. Members may debate it once I have determined there is a prima facie case of privilege, but they need not do that in the course of presenting their question of privilege.

I now inform all hon. members that I will give them five minutes. I will then have to cut them off in fairness to all members. That is a discretion I am exercising because of the circumstances.

• (1600)

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, because the Standing Orders and all of our precedents make no reference whatsoever to any time limit on questions of privilege or points of order, I would hope that by now exercising a discretion to impose a stipulated time limit the Chair is not setting a precedent or altering our Standing Orders to that extent. I would have felt very much better if you had come to that conclusion and not told us anything about it. To let it stand in Journals as a ruling from the Chair that there is to be inserted in our Standing Orders a precedent which limits an hon. member rising on a question of privilege to five minutes, I think, is very undesirable.

I am sure you may well wish to consider that you may have misdirected yourself in the interpretation of what you have just said if members conclude that there is now and henceforth a five-minute limitation on questions of privilege. I do not think the Chair intended to alter our Standing Orders to that extent. As I say, I would have felt much happier as a member if you had come to that conclusion silently and determined that was what you were going to do, and then give a member five minutes to discuss his question.

I do not think there should be any doubt whatsoever here that our Standing Orders are in any way so altered that we are now to understand there is a specific time limit on members of Parliament who wish to raise questions of privilege. I have raised questions of privilege over a period of time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Hon. members should read the rules, because we are here embarking on entirely new ground when we speak about time limitation on questions of privilege. I have raised matters that have been accepted and referred to standing committees which took a good deal longer than five minutes to develop in order to convince members of the House on all sides they were deserving of sending to standing committees.

I hope that you, Madam Speaker, would at least say from the chair, if it is your intention to deal with these questions of privilege which you consider to be overlapping a ruling you have already made by giving the hon. member a fair warning that if he cannot develop it in five minutes you will be disposed to conclude that he cannot develop it at all, that there is no practice or custom of this House, and no Standing Order or precedent, which imposes any specific time limit.

The discretion is entirely with you, Madam Speaker, as to how long you have to listen. I suggest it would be far better left at that. If you had not heard after listening for five minutes to these overlapping questions sufficient to convince you that there was a different dimension to the question of privilege or that it was a new question of privilege, then you would, of course, exercise your discretion. I certainly hope you will reaffirm that you are not injecting into our precedents a new rule, order or practice which means that in every case there is to be a five-minute time limit on questions of privilege raised by members.

Madam Speaker: There is no doubt that I did not say this would constitute a precedent, and I did not say it would apply to other questions of privilege on matters other than the one we are now discussing; that is to say, those questions of privilege which deal with the Constitution, the wording of which is similar. This certainly does not in itself change the Standing Orders, which say nothing on this matter, by the way. Since Standing Orders say nothing, somebody has to say something and I guess that is the Chair.

If the hon. member would rather I apply the five-minute limit and not warn members they will not be having a great deal of time to expose their arguments, I could have done it that way. I thought it was much fairer and easier for members if I gave them that warning. If the hon. member would rather this whole thing remain unsaid, I do not mind "unsaying" it. I am just telling the House now that I intend to use this discretion and I will be quite firm about it.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, may I just quickly comment that the Chair has very skilfully and quickly clarified the matter to my complete satisfaction.

MR. THACKER—ALLEGED ILLEGALITY OF CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak on this question of privilege in respect of which I hope you will find a prima facie case. I hope never in my lifetime or in yours will we again face what we are facing today. We are, indeed, in tough times. The government, as a result of this resolution, has put us in the position that we are really in a fight for the hearts and minds of Canadians.

I am sure, Madam Speaker, you are feeling the loneliness of high judicial office, because you really are on your own. You have joined an elite group of men and women across this country who are occupying positions at a high judicial level. I am sure you have a much clearer understanding of Beckett and his relationship to the Crown.

The issue before you in my question of privilege is whether or not Parliament can pass a law which in its present form is illegal. I submit to you that in your high judicial capacity you stand fifth in line in this nation, starting with the Governor General, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, the Speaker of the Senate and then you as Speaker of this House. In that very unique and high position you are bound to know, by virtue of the concept of judicial notice, that the present constitutional resolution is illegal.

Up until two days ago we were involved in this battle for the hearts and minds of Canadians. The government has a view as to what it wants to do in terms of an amending formula, an entrenched charter and a referendum. We on this side, of course, have a different view of what Canada is as we perceive it. Even when the Manitoba Court of Appeal made its ruling the resolution was still legal because it had not been declared illegal. However, as of two days ago when the Newfoundland Court of Appeal ruled, that constitutional provision became illegal. You are bound by that through judicial notice.

It follows from the Newfoundland decision that all of us find ourselves in a very unique capacity; some in their capacity as ordinary members of the House, some in their capacity as lawyers, some as former members of a cabinet and members of the Privy Council, existing cabinet ministers and you, Madam Speaker, in your high capacity, fifth in order in this nation in terms of precedent. It is within that context that we find ourselves involved in this question of privilege.

I stand by that position in asking you to find a prima facie case and refer the question to a committee. If you were to find a prima facie case, all these questions of privilege would go before a committee where we could debate this whole matter. This is a precedent and a first in the entire history of this country, as I understand it, in that we have a resolution which has been referred to the Supreme Court while it is still being debated in the House.

The perfect analogy, which I do not believe you have considered yet, would be Bill C-60. As you know, it came before this House and went to a committee. There were some problems and it was referred to the Supreme Court of Canada. The Supreme Court found it to be illegal and the bill then died. The analogy with the position we are in today would be, if the day after the Supreme Court of Canada declared Bill C-60 ultra vires of Parliament the government had reintroduced Bill C-60 in the House, in effect asking members to continue to debate the bill even though the Supreme Court had declared it illegal.

• (1610)

I think under those circumstances we would all be in a terrible dilemma in terms of constitutional law, yet that is exactly the point that we find ourselves at today. You have pointed out, Madam Speaker, that we are protected and, in terms of ordinary criminal law or civil law, that is true; but it is not true in terms of our general reputation in the community. Just as members who are clerics, men of God who have made a direct oath to their faith that they will uphold laws—

An hon. Member: Five minutes.

Mr. Thacker: —that are higher than the legal standard. We have a very low political standard in this country, a legal standard that is somewhat higher, and a moral standard which is much higher; and I think we would all agree we should operate at the moral standard. Many people operate at the legal standard, and there are some who operate only at the political standard.

I am saying to you, Madam Speaker, that if you find there is a prima facie case this question can go before the committee; the whole concept that has been declared ultra vires could be dealt with, and I would think out of that would flow a new Standing Order, a new understanding among us as to how we would handle this legislation. Therefore, if you do find a prima facie case, I will make the appropriate motion.

Madam Speaker: I want to say to the hon. member that despite my high office I am not bound by judgments such as the one to which the hon. member has been referring. I am not bound to concur that something that is going on in this House is legal or illegal in the face of a judgment made by a court.

The hon. member referred to Bill C-60 and its submission to the Supreme Court of Canada. I want to remind him that it is not the Speaker who determined that a reference concerning that bill should go to the Supreme Court of Canada. Although he cites that particular case, I think he defeats his own argument since that was not the Speaker's action but somebody else's, and quite properly so.

As for anything done by this House that would cause damage to his reputation, I am sure he is quite able to defend his reputation to his constituents should he be attacked in the way that members normally are attacked in the course of debate in this House. I can do nothing to protect his reputation; that would be perhaps extending my responsibility quite a bit. All I can do is protect my own. I cannot find a prima facie case in the hon. member's question of privilege.

I now call upon the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan), who is not in the House.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, he is unavoidably detained and hopes to be here in time to raise his question.

Madam Speaker: Then I will call on the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer). Does the hon. member wish to withdraw his question of privilege?

Mr. Speyer: Madam Speaker, I would like to have the opportunity to make certain submissions to you with respect to this matter.

Madam Speaker: So the hon. member does not withdraw?

Mr. Speyer: No, I do not withdraw.

MR. SPEYER—ALLEGED ILLEGALITY OF CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, this matter arises out of a treatise in Erskine May with respect to the jurisdiction of the courts in matters of privilege. To focus in on my question I would refer Your Honour to page 178 of that treatise, which says:

> In cases affecting parliamentary privilege the tracing of a boundary between the competence of the courts and the exclusive jurisdiction of either House is a difficult question of constitutional law which has provided many puzzling cases, particularly from the seventeenth to the nineteenth centuries. The history of this question affords many contradictory precedents in Parliament and divergent opinions and decisions in the courts. It is a question which has involved the courts in heated conflict with one or the other House of Parliament and has produced more then one temporarily insoluble rupture between the House of Commons and the House of Lords. In the course of this long controversy much light has been thrown on the nature of privilege and the relations between the judiciary and the legislature, although, no doubt, some unsettled questions still remain.

The question I wish to raise is that in every democratic country with a federal system, whether it be a republican system as in the United States or a parliamentary system such as we have here, there exists a system of checks and balances. In the United States the differences between the offices of the executive, the judiciary and the legislature are more clearly defined. Here there are certain rules that the governed have over the governors. Two of those are the Constitution and the courts.

It was said by Walter Bagehot in England that Parliament is supreme. Well, that is just not so in Canada. Parliament is not supreme in the sense that it can only pass legislation on matters within its competence. The history of our country is that we have a system of checks and balances, that the courts will render unconstitutional any action taken by Parliament beyond its jurisdiction.

Similarly, the provincial legislatures are not supreme; they can only act within their own competence. I submit that what has happened here, by reason of the judgment of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland, is that there is an opinion that the course of action taken by this government is null and void, is unconstitutional, and what you are asking hon. members to do is continue a debate on a proposal that has been found to be unconstitutional. I say to you that that is now beyond our jurisdiction and subject to the final decision of the Supreme Court of Canada.

To briefly trace the history of the government's argument in this matter, as Your Honour is aware, and as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) have brought to the attention of this House and the country, the position of the federal government in the Manitoba appeal was this. There were three questions posed, four in Newfoundland. The factum submitted by the Attorney General of Canada in Manitoba stated that its position was that in view of the tentative nature of the contents of the proposed resolution, the answer would be speculative and premature. With respect to questions one and two it said that the courts did not have jurisdiction to determine this matter because it was not right. Indeed, the Prime Minister indicated in the last few days that Chief Justice Freedman acceded to that.

On the other hand, we know that the position of the federal government is that it wants to get this proposal to the United Kingdom as quickly as possible, and its reasons are very clearly stated in the infamous Kirby memorandum which deals with the possible legal challenges to unilateral action. I wish to quote this paragraph so that my point comes into focus. It reads:

> As to the question of validity, it is the view of the Department of Justice that a law passed by the U.K. Parliament to patriate the Constitution, with an amendment formula and other changes, could not be successfully attacked in the courts. It seems abundantly clear that the legal power remains for the U.K. parliament to enact such a law for Canada, and it also seems clear that they will do so whenever so requested by the Parliament and Government of Canada.

● (1620)

The point I am making is that once the matter gets to the Parliament of the United Kingdom, it is beyond the scope of the Canadian courts to deal with it because it is replacing one British statute with another British statute. That is the intention of the government. On the other hand, certainly the courts of this land in Manitoba and Newfoundland have taken completely different positions. They tried to oust the court's jurisdiction by another method. The method was by saying that the proposals right now are tentative in nature and that any answer would be speculative and premature.

In these circumstances, this matter is beyond the power of Parliament at this point in time, because there is an attempt to oust the jurisdiction of the court. The court has always had the power of judicial review. Judicial review has always been a safeguard in any parliamentary democracy.

In the course of the last few days a decision was rendered by the Supreme Court of Newfoundland to the effect that this proposal is ultra vires. The Government of Canada is asking us as parliamentarians to continue to debate something which is illegal. In my respectful submission, that is beyond the scope of our powers, and I ask Your Honour to so rule.

There are a number of other matters which I should like to bring to Your Honour's attention in this regard.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member should conclude in about two minutes.

Mr. Speyer: A few days ago the Prime Minister attempted to make a distinction between Bill C-60 and the current proposals with respect to the matter of a reference. He said that Bill C-60 dealt specifically with Section 91 of the British North America Act and, therefore, it should have been referred to the court. On the other hand, he distinguished this matter because it did not refer to any matters involving the British North America Act. That is a totally nonsensical type of distinction; certainly it is a distinction not worthy of him. I bring it to Your Honour's attention because it seems to me that in these particular circumstances a decision must be rendered by the Supreme Court on constitutional matters which are pending right now.

I return to the initial matter which I brought to Your Honour's attention, that is, that it is unfair for any member to be participating in a debate in circumstances where we are dealing with an illegal matter with respect to a certain province of this land.

I know Madam Speaker has ruled on the question of sub judice. I respect that ruling, but may I say that the whole foundation of the notion of sub judice is that there should be no intimidation of the courts. At a time when the courts are seized with such an important matter, public debate on this matter should cease. The matter is now within the scope of the courts.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have ruled on that matter, and the ruling is quite clear. The matter cannot be considered sub judice for the various reason I gave in my ruling. I ask the hon. member not to discuss that.

Mr. Speyer: Madam Speaker, I certainly respect that comment, but the federal government must be in a position to refer the matter to the Supreme Court. It is no longer responding to a case which has been initiated by the provinces. It is now petitioning the court for relief. It is in a situation where it will be asking the Supreme Court for relief by overturning the verdict rendered the other day in Newfoundland.

In these circumstances, it is unfair and improper to ask us to continue debate on this important matter. This concludes my remarks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The arguments of the hon. member have boiled down to asking the Chair to determine that there is something clearly illegal in what is going on between members of Parliament and the proposal before Parliament. The hon. member referred to one court which brought down a judgment. It is quite obvious that another court has brought down a differnt judgment and he would want me to be the judge of which of those two courts is right.

The hon. member referred to checks and balances. One of the checks and balances of our system is that there are several courts. If one court has determined or found a matter one way and another court has found it in another way, there is other recourse. It is not for the Chair to determine what should or should not go to the Supreme Court; it is not for the Chair to determine legal or constitutional matters. Therefore, on the basis of the argument submitted by the hon. member, I cannot find that he has a question of privilege.

Mr. Lambert: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not know where I am on Your Honour's list, but I have a very serious problem involving my inability to control the departure time of a most important Air Canada flight. I was wondering, with the consent of my colleagues, if I could be heard at this time.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: Usually I take questions of privilege in the order in which they reach me. I would not want to be unfair to other members. Not all hon. members who have questions of privilege are in the House, so I cannot ask them whether they want to defer in your favour. I will do my best to recognize the hon. member as soon as I can.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, I appreciate this has been a difficult time for all of us, but I apologize to the House. Things were somewhat mixed up. I was on the telephone and I was advised that Your Honour had called on me. I have no hesitation in taking my chances at the end of the line or, if it is permissible, in standing down so that my hon. friend can present his question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: I took it that there was no consent because not all members who have questions of privilege are present in the House. Therefore, I will try to accommodate the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) as soon as I can. I recognize the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) on his question of privilege.

MR. NOWLAN—ALLEGED ILLEGALITY OF CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, obviously—

An hon. Member: Just keep it short.

Mr. Nowlan: In view of the ruling of the Chair, obviously one will have to keep it very short. As I said, I apologize for being on the telephone when Your Honour called my name. I understand that you have exercised your discretion in an attempt to keep questions of privilege to five minutes because of the multitude of them.

I was in the House when the Chair indicated that we were engaging in a very unusual procedure and that it was an extraordinary situation. I quite agree with those words, but as was said yesterday and on other days, that is really not the fault of hon. members or the Chair; I suppose it is the fault of the entire process.

This precedent of five minutes will come back to haunt all hon. members in the House. It is difficult to try to develop any type of legal argument on something as substantive as a rule of law.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: I hear the interjections. Do not push, my friends, for unless there is good will one can pervert a prostitute, or the role of anybody, if one wants to; but the point of the matter is that we will not do it. The reason this matter is so unusual and extraordinary is that we all know, regardless of where we sit in the House—even the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) must admit this—that there is a cloud on the status of the resolution before the House. Certainly a most conservative assessment of it would indicate that it has a taint to it. The fact of the matter, in terms of the rule of law which we are trying to explain in certain points of order and questions of privilege, is that as a member of the House for a few years I am being put in the position of being contaminated by debating and/or eventually voting on a tainted resolution, in view of the judicial expressions of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland and also some of the judges of the Supreme Court of Manitoba.

I should like to refer to one of the eminent constitutional authorities in Canada, Robert MacGregor Dawson, in his book entitled "The Government of Canada". At page 88 he attempts to define the rule of law, which reads as follows:

● (1630)

The following comment of Professor Corry on the rule of law in Great Britain is equally applicable to Canada:

> "For a long time now, Parliament has been granting to officials special powers to take action not justified under the ordinary law and it has been limiting the right of the citizen to have the actions of officials scrutinized by the judicial power. Yet there has been no general removal of officials from judicial surveillance and it remains true in most cases that anyone who asserts that he has been wronged by the action of a government official—

That is the basis of my question of privilege.

> —can bring that official before the courts of law to answer for his conduct. The official may justify himself by pointing to an act of Parliament which gives him a special privilege to do what he has done. But he cannot turn aside the complaint merely by asserting an exalted official status and an inscrutable executive expediency in what he has done. The state can throw away the conscript's life but it cannot conscript him in the first instance on the plea of high policy or public expedience except as supported by a law sanctioned by Parliament. The rule of law, although qualified today by the grant of special powers to officials, remains an indispensable instrument for ensuring that government remains servant."

That is basically the core of what I would like to argue here in the few minutes you have allowed me, Madam Speaker. Here, in effect, the exalted officials are really those in the government who have put before the House a resolution that the judicial process, the check and balance in our system, has said is wrong. Whatever pejorative you wish to use, there is a taint to it. By members being forced to debate or vote on it before that taint is cleansed, they are being contaminated.

I agree with Your Honour, there has never been a position as extraordinary as this, at least that I have heard about. I have talked to several constitutional authorities in the last couple of days. I asked them if there was ever such an experience in the British House, although you cannot apply the British case because they are not a federation. But in the history of the Parliament of Canada with respect to debating and voting on a proposition which has been ruled illegal by the superior court in one province and by a divided judgment in another, this is certainly an extraordinary circumstance. That is the reason members have presented you with so many questions of privilege, because the matter is so fundamental.

You can turn on the national news and see people in El Salvador shooting each other—there is no rule of law. In Iran they revolt and rebel because there is no rule of law. In Poland the people have a general strike in order to tell the government there is something wrong with the rule of law. The only bullets we have, Madam Speaker, are words. That is what we have been using. That is why members on this side have been exercised with respect to this fundamental issue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: We cannot call the Prime Minister and cabinet ministers before the bar of the House. But according to the rule of law, as set out by MacGregor Dawson and Corry, there is something wrong where members have to debate a question which two courts of the land question, one unanimously and one by divided decision.

The time allotted to me has almost run out, Madam Speaker, and I will not trespass. In conclusion, there is another element which has not been mentioned. With respect to the rule of law, what happened to Mr. Nixon, to the south of us, after he took on his oath? He did not observe the very simple oath of the presidency, which is almost as simple and as short as our oath as members, which says that we will do things according to law. Yet the very chamber which makes law is now forced to debate, and perhaps vote on, something which has been determined to be illegal.

This is the other element which has not been mentioned yet, Madam Speaker. Let us assume that this House makes a determination on the resolution. What is to prevent the government of the day, or of the next day, bringing in an amendment to the Supreme Court Act to change the composition of that court, doing what Franklin Delano Roosevelt tried to do in the "new deal" process—he wanted to stack the court? It is fundamentally wrong for this House to be placed in the invidious position of putting, in perpetuity, fundamentals into a new Constitution when the next day the Prime Minister could change the whole composition of the court to make sure he gets the proper interpretation from the court.

The other point is, we do not know what is before the court. By Parliament ruling and voting now on the resolution, we could be prejudicing other—

Mr. Orlikow: Time!

Mr. Nowlan: —matters that are in process in other jurisdictions. For those reasons, Madam Speaker, I believe you must, in an extraordinary way, go to the basic rule of law which keeps this country intact, not just the laws of people in transitory positions of power.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POINT OF ORDER

MR. KILGOUR—ALLEGED ILLEGALITIES IN FEDERAL LIBERAL PARTY FUND RAISING—RETRACTION OF REMARKS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): On a point of order, Madam Speaker. Approximately 15 minutes ago a copy of yesterday's Hansard of the Senate was provided to me and I would therefore like to deal with a very serious matter—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have notice of a question of privilege with respect to this particular matter. I must know whether that question of privilege is being withdrawn.

The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey).

Mr. Mackasey: Madam Speaker, I would appreciate it if the hon. member would be permitted to proceed with his point of order, so that I may decide whether or not I can withdraw my question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I will be as brief as I can, but this is a very serious matter.

On March 31, you will recall, since you were in the chair, that I made a statement with respect to a matter which I considered to be a question of privilege. I read some correspondence into the record and Your Honour ultimately ruled that I did not have a question of privilege. I would like briefly to refer to a statement made in the Senate by the senator about whom I referred. For purposes of clarity, I wonder if I would be allowed to read that statement into the record?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kilgour: The senator referred to the correspondence and said:

> To clarify the record, I am in no way involved in, and I therefore have no knowledge whatever of, the financial or administrative affairs of the Liberal Party of Canada in Alberta. As an ordinary member and supporter, my only financial involvement is that of a modest contributor, which is on public record with the Chief Electoral Officer. In the past six or seven years I have at no time sought contributions for the Liberal Party in any manner whatever. In 1974 and 1975 my principal activity in connection with financing of the party related to the organization of fund-raising dinners. I have never, never engaged in the conduct, related by the honourable member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

I apologize unequivocally to the member of the other place, Senator Hastings. If the senator had only told me in reply to the letter I wrote to him asking for his comments, I can assure hon. members that I would just as soon have jumped from a bridge as make the statement I made. My information is obviously false. Without hesitation, and with the indulgence of all members, particularly the member in the other place, I unequivocally apologize to Senator Hastings for any unfortunate inferences which may have been drawn from my remarks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I wish to express my satisfaction with the gesture made by the hon. member opposite today. I think it is a sign of maturity, which is a useful quality for a member of this House to have. I think it would be helpful if more people were prepared to do what the hon. member has just done, which is to retract without hesitation his allegations, which were extremely serious.

Madam Speaker, I just want to read the one paragraph which the hon. member omitted to read from the letter. Senator Hastings said in that letter:

> The allegations contained in his letters of March 12 and 26, and his slurring remarks last night in the other place, are totally false and devoid of substance. As a member of the Parliament of Canada, I am conscious of the duties and responsibilities relating to the public office I hold. I can only hope that, as a member of the same Parliament, the honourable member for Edmonton-Strathcona is aware of his duties and responsibilities.

● (1640)

I think the hon. member is aware of his duties and responsibilities, as evidenced by his retraction. I have no intention of pursuing the matter any further by way of point of privilege.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HNATYSHYN—ALLEGED INTRUSION ON RIGHTS OF MEMBERS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I now, at long last, appreciate the opportunity of raising a new and novel question of privilege which, I am glad to report, is unique in that it bears absolutely no relationship to the previous seven or eight questions of privilege. Indeed, it is of very great importance to every hon. member of this Canadian Parliament. I am sure you will find there is a prima facie case. I have prepared an appropriate motion to accompany this particular matter when you so find.

I would like to introduce my question of privilege by bringing to the record the statement which I made to you, Madam

Speaker, pursuant to Standing Orders, by way of a letter dated April 1, 1981. It reads:

I hereby give you notice of my intention to raise today a question of privilege relating to my privilege as a Member of Parliament and the privileges of all Members of Parliament by the stated and actual interference and intrusion of the Prime Minister as head of the executive between the will of the Parliament of Canada represented by the Joint Resolution on the Constitution now before the House and the parliament of the United Kingdom and Northern Ireland.

Madam Speaker, I simply want to bring your attention to the fact that this House is debating a resolution which is of very great consequence and importance to the future of this country. During the course of arduous debate, we have witnessed very strongly held views and positions on matters which hon. members on both sides of the House have identified with, and to which the people of Canada are now giving serious consideration. The matter which is being debated is on the minds of all parliamentarians.

During the course of debate issues raised have caused many questions of privilege to come forward. It is not as if we were dealing with any other item of legislation; but rather, we are dealing with matters pertaining to the very foundation of our country. We are in unusual times, as has been stated on many prior occasions. We must look very carefully at this matter to determine whether we are proceeding in a proper and appropriate manner.

What has caused me concern with respect to the present situation is that we are debating a resolution. I want to look at the very nature of the motion before us in the name of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien). This resolution will form part of a joint resolution of the House and the Senate and I imagine it will in due course receive—in whatever form it is presented, if it is determined to be constitutional or legal by the courts—the assent of the representative of Her Majesty in Canada and thereby constitute an address to Her Majesty the Queen.

I therefore want to refer to the actual text of the resolution which expresses the nature of that particular address. The address has taken the words of the resolution itself:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's loyal subjects, the—

Then there is a blank space to insert, of course, the "Senate".

—House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, respectfully approach Your Majesty, requesting that you may graciously be pleased to cause to be laid before the parliament of the United Kingdom a measure containing the recitals and clauses hereinafter set forth:

Attached to that is the proposed legislation which will be presented in first reading stage, as the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) stated on "Canada A.M.", plus the proposed Canada Act, including the various elements respecting the constitutional provisions, amendments and the charter of rights.

This particular address is from Parliament to Her Majesty the Queen or, to put it another way, from one Parliament to another Parliament. When the matter is finally resolved, it will reflect the will of the Parliament of Canada; it will not reflect the will of the Crown per se. It will not reflect the will of the cabinet of this country per se. It will not reflect the will of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or any member of cabinet holding a position in the executive of our country. It is an address which will be sent from the Parliament of Canada to the Parliament of the United Kingdom and Northern Ireland.

I want to begin with that very basic premise, because it is important to understand the nature of the legislation we are dealing with and its important consequences for the operation of Parliament, of which the House of Commons is a part. This address is not a request for action by the Prime Minister or the executive. It is a request which has been sent directly from the House of Commons and the Senate; from the Parliament of Canada, directly to Her Majesty the Queen.

Having stated that very basic premise, I now want to refer to some of the actions which the Prime Minister and the members of the executive of this country have taken, and indeed some of the activities and statements made on the floor of the House of Commons.

I refer to Hansard of March 31, 1981, to give examples of the intended and the actual actions of the Prime Minister of this country. During the course of the question period, in response to questions as to how this address to the Parliament of the United Kingdom would be handled, the Prime Minister said, as reported at page 8786:

If the hon. members opposite do not want to improve the resolution another way, my offer will still stand; that we get a resolution to the Supreme Court of Canada in return for which the government would certainly undertake—

The following words are important:

—not to press the United Kingdom to pass the resolution until it has seen the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada—

Further on, on that same page, in referring to this resolution he said:

—then we will undertake not to press its passage in the United Kingdom until after the Supreme Court of Canada has judged.

The Prime Minister again returned to this matter on that same page:

I repeat, if the Supreme Court should judge against it, we will of course not press the United Kingdom to pass it in all stages . . . but will merely ask the United Kingdom to continue its passage.

In response to a question from my colleague the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), in referring to the intention of the government vis-à-vis this resolution to be sent to the United Kingdom Parliament, the Minister of Justice said, as reported at page 8787:

—we will wait for the decision of the Supreme Court before deciding to press the matter in England—

The point I suppose I wanted to—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I do have to interrupt the hon. member, in all reasonableness. I understand from his argumentation that he does not particularly appreciate the process through which this resolution is being carried.

[Translation]

He has the right to do so.

[English]

That is his own prerogative. But he must speak about privilege. How is his privilege affected by the fact that one process has been chosen rather than another? Who has the liberty of choosing the process? Certainly the Chair cannot decide that.

• (1650)

[Translation]

Mr. Olivier: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. Once again, I am sorry. In view of what you mentioned this afternoon, I believe that the hon. member opposite has not been able to show in five minutes that he had anything new to say about the question of privilege. I believe that the more the hon. member opposite goes on, the more what he says is similar to what others have said on other questions of privilege. I therefore believe, Madam Speaker, that you would be justified in cutting off the hon. member and recognizing someone else.

Madam Speaker: According to the decision of which I have already informed the House, the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is somewhat different from the others which were worded in nearly the same terms and to which I applied a five minute limit. For the information of the House, I want to point out that the question raised by the hon. member for Saskatoon West is somewhat different. I shall now read it, but I find it is rather vague. I could not understand exactly to what the hon. member was referring. Since he started speaking, I have not been able to understand either how his privileges are affected, but I shall read the question to the House.

[English]

The hon. member states that the privileges of all hon. members are affected by the, and I quote:

—actual interference and intrusion of the Prime Minister as head of the Executive between the will of the Parliament of Canada represented by the Joint Resolution on the Constitution now before the House and the parliament of the United Kingdom and Northern Ireland.

[Translation]

That is the wording of the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Saskatoon West. It is different from that of the seven or eight other questions of privilege I received on this subject. That is why I have not applied the five-minute rule, however, I must warn him that I shall not give him too much time because I still have other questions of privilege to hear.

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I appreciate that admonition, Madam Speaker.

As I say, this is a new and quite different question of privilege from the ones which have been raised before. I want to get through it as quickly as possible, but I have citations to quote to substantiate the point I want to make. Perhaps the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) could get his apartment mate, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), to explain it to him after hours.

Madam Speaker: I see that the hon. member is going to quote Erskine May to me.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yes.

Madam Speaker: I want to see where the hon. member's privilege is breached. I know Erskine May nearly by heart on this particular point. Would the hon. member please resume his seat.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am sorry.

Madam Speaker: There is a limit. It is not a matter of my patience; I will have patience until the end. I know I am here till the end of the session, so whether it is one hon. member speaking or another, it does not affect me personally. But there has to be some kind of credibility to the office of the Speaker and the Chair, and the Chair should not be subjected to listening to arguments which do not at all relate to breaches of privilege. I know Erskine May practically by heart on this particular matter of privilege. The hon. member has spoken since 4.40. I would like him to tell me in what way his privilege is breached. That is what I need to know.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, Erskine May deals specifically with the question of privilege I am going to raise. I indicated to Your Honour in my letter that when the House does pass on this constitutional resolution addressed to Her Majesty the Queen and the parliament of the United Kingdom, there is absolutely no provision for—in fact there is adequate and some detailed prohibition against—interference with the parliamentary process. It does not lie upon the Prime Minister or any member of the executive to hold the address in his or her back pocket or to determine whether this resolution shall pass at any particular time. It is a matter for the two parliaments to determine exactly when that matter will appear on the legislative order paper of the House of Commons in the United Kingdom. Any interference—

[Translation]

Mr. Olivier: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. I fully agree that hon. members are entitled to raise questions of privilege. The member opposite is launching a debate rather than raising a question of privilege. In addition, he is holding your authority up to ridicule by failing to respect the decision you have made this afternoon. That member, Madam Speaker, is challenging your authority in the House through his decision to initiate a debate in spite of the warnings you gave him.

[English]

Madam Speaker: I have to take into consideration that particular point of order. The hon. member is discussing something which has not yet happened. It is hypothetical, and

I cannot decide a question of privilege based on a hypothetical situation. The hon. member's privilege must have been breached—right now—and I want him to tell me how. I think the hon. member is pointing to something which is becoming increasingly clear. The Chair cannot be put in a position indefinitely to hear questions of privilege which are not really questions of privilege. The credibility of the Chair and hon. members is involved, and I will preserve that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I take this matter very seriously; as you do, I appreciate. The point is that there is a very serious instrusion on and interference with the rights of every member of this House of Commons. There is no speculation; there is no hypothesis; I refer to the words from the mouth of the Prime Minister who sits across the aisle from me. By his own admission he intends to hold the address in his hip pocket. That is not hypothetical. He has said that is what he will do. He will step between the two parliaments. He has indicated his intention. He has gone to the United Kingdom on a number of occasions—

Madam Speaker: Order. The point I made to the hon. member is the following: the Right Hon. Prime Minister does not have an address at this point in time in his hip pocket. That has to be quite clear and it cannot be debated as the basis for a question of privilege. The Prime Minister has no address and no resolution. He has nothing.

Mr. Blackburn: Recognize someone else.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I want to refer, if I might, to Erskine May at page 115 with respect to the whole question of the position of the House of Commons on any resolution or motion passed by the House of Commons. I will read the last sentence on page 115. I am referring to a request of the House through the Speaker with respect to decisions made by the House in which the Speaker is, in effect, deferential to Her Majesty. The sentence reads as follows:

> But now the request is little more than formal courtesy; as the proceedings of the House are guarded against any interference, on the part of the Crown, not authorized by the laws and constitution of the country; and as by the law and custom of Parliament the Queen cannot take notice of anything said or done in the House, but by the report of the House itself.

I am not by any means saying that our privileges are impinged upon if we pass this resolution. The Prime Minister has stood in this House. I must accept his word as to what he intends to do. I read the resolution. The Prime Minister tells the House of Commons very seriously what his intention is; he is going to delay.

Mr. Fleming: That is hypothetical.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He has referred in this House to the fact that he is going to do that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, may I have order in this House? There is a systematic attempt on the part of the government to prevent us from bringing matters before this House. The Prime Minister has not hypothecated. He has said what he intends to do, that is not hypothecation.

The point I make is that there is adequate authority for this proposition. The Prime Minister is infringing on our rights. He is intimidating members of this House of Commons by his actions. He has no authority to threaten us with holding back a resolution. He tells us, on the one hand, that we are to pass this particular resolution, and then he says that once the resolution of this Parliament has been passed, he will interfere. I say that that threat is an intimidation.

Your Honour will be aware of the fact, having read the proposed resolution, that there is no provision by which there can be any delay. There is no provision authorizing or vesting in the Prime Minister to step between the two parliaments and to tell the United Kingdom parliament to delay passage. Yet if I may be permitted to say so, that threat is now on the floor of the House of Commons.

I would like to call it five o'clock, Madam Speaker.

• (1700)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki)—The Constitution—Effect of charter of rights on abortion provisions in Criminal Code; the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Health care—Extra billing by doctors—Co-operation of Ontario in banning practice; the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly)—Combines—Recommendation to prohibit ownership of pipelines by oil companies.

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I ask whether the House would be prepared to give me unanimous consent to table a petition?

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to table a petition?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, it is a petition from Saskatchewan senior citizens.

Madam Speaker: I might ask for consent again, but I did hear a "no". Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to table a petition?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: Madame Speaker, I know nothing of this. It takes me completely by surprise. It will not hurt to delay the matter for three hours. If the hon. member can tell me what he wants to do and show me what he has, then I might be able to give unanimous consent at eight o'clock.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, that is fine. I can even delay it until tomorrow if I have to do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business, as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, notices of motions, papers, private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

NUCLEAR ELECTRICITY EXPORT AUTHORITY

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

On the Order: Private Members' Public Bills:

May 2, 1980—Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works of Bill C-290, an act to provide for the establishment of a Nuclear Electricity Export Authority.—Mr. Watson.

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I seek the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw Bill C-290, which stands in my name on the Order Paper. It was the intention of the proposed bill to encourage the export of blocks of electricity from Canada to the United States. After further study, it seems clear to me that the establishment of a federal authority for this purpose would be an unwarranted interference by Parliament into a provincial jurisdiction. Therefore, it would be counterproductive.

I will seek to advance my objective by other means.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Does the hon. member for Châteauguay (Mr. Watson) have unanimous consent to withdraw his bill and discharge the order?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and bill withdrawn.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Motions Nos. 22, 5, 4, 28, 35 and 33 allowed to stand by unanimous consent.

APPLICATION OF FEDERAL LAWS IN VARIOUS PROVINCIAL COURTS

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved:

That an order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence, minutes of meetings, studies and other communications of the Department of Justice relating to the comparison of the application by the various provincial courts of federal laws.

He said: It was approximately four weeks ago, on March 2, 1981, that I had the opportunity to speak in this House on another motion dealing with the equality of minority language rights. I was happy to speak at that time because the motion dealt with a subject I considered of interest in the midst of this constitutional debate. In fact, I had the opportunity on that occasion to speak for approximately 20 minutes on a subject in which I have taken a considerable interest. When it became apparent that this motion for the production of papers would probably be called this afternoon, I was pleased because it, too, is a matter of some concern in this current constitutional debate.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development (Mr. Irwin), in reply to the motion, as reported in Hansard for February 18, 1981 at page 7433 said:

—the Department of Justice has none of the documents which the member is asking for in motion No. 32.

First, may I outline why I asked for these documents and why I believe that some documents must exist somewhere in the Department of Justice. It is true that when we are dealing with variations in the application of justice in the provinces we do have certain acts and bills in which regional variations are recorded. I will cite one or two examples. The first one concerns Section 150 of the Prisons and Reformatories Act. This is a federal act. Where a person under 22 has been convicted in British Columbia of an offence punishable by imprisonment for at least three months, that person may be sentenced to imprisonment for a term not less than three months; but he can be imprisoned for a period up to two years minus one day. Once sentenced under these circumstances, instead of going to jail the individuals are sent to certain correctional institutions.

In a proclamation under the Juvenile Delinquents Act, to give another example, a "child" means in the province of Alberta a girl under the age of 18 and a boy under the age of 16. Thus, there are provisions for treating people differently in different provinces. These variations have been ruled upon as not being discriminatory.

One can then ask if the constitutional proposal, when adopted as the Constitution of our land, will have any effect on these laws. In the case of family law, many women have expressed strenuous objection to a proposed transfer which would see the federal government passing jurisdictional responsibility to the provinces. The federal government has indicated its willingness to hand over these powers, and at least the two provinces of Quebec and Ontario have indicated their desire to take over this responsibility.

As the law applies to divorce, this could create a wide variation in treatment from province to province. Even today, with only the one federal law, there is room for a great deal of variation. It is not clear just how much variation there has been because no attempt has been made to quantify cases on a provincial basis.

Although our judges are guided by a doctrine of precedents, consistency is generally maintained only within a given jurisdiction. No province is bound by the case law of another province.

The difference in the manner in which a province proceeds in certain cases can accentuate the difference in treatment between provinces of what are essentially similar cases. The interpretation of the Divorce Act is an example. First, there has to be a case in order to be able to proceed. The making of a case often requires the co-operation and assistance of provincial law enforcement authorities. The degree of willingness of the provincial police forces to allocate personnel will, therefore, be a factor in the ability of a person to establish a reasonable case in court.

At the present time discussions are continuing in an effort to regulate some disagreement in the various provinces which use the Royal Canadian Mounted Police as their police force. At least in those provinces, there is one police force which, presumably, acts in a reasonably consistent fashion. Of course, each of the two largest provinces of Ontario and Quebec, which contain two-thirds of the population of this country, has its own provincial police force. Each of those two police forces is under the control of the provincial authority in those respective provinces.

• (1710)

We must not forget that expenditure of money is almost always necessary in order to proceed by legal process. Once again, the willingness or unwillingness of the provincial authorities to allocate funds at the political level has a big influence on the ratio of successful cases, certainly for poorer persons. Apparently the differing attitudes of the provincial governments toward their responsibility for law enforcement will establish a variety of standards of enforcement, prosecution and sentencing from coast to coast in Canada.

Let me be clear. I am not arguing against variations of provincial treatment. Likewise, I am not arguing for regional variations. I am only pointing out this afternoon that they do exist, are not tabulated—at least according to the response I got to my motion—and most surely should be considered in the formulation of federal legislation.

This week, for example, proposed changes to the Narcotic Control Act have been reported in the press. Apparently introduction of an amending bill was delayed until after the March 19 Ontario provincial election because of fears the Conservative government might turn it into a campaign issue. The only strong opposition to reduction of penalties has come from the Ontario government.

Under the Narcotic Control Act a person can get a maximum seven-year sentence if possession is treated as an indictable offence. Most of the 27,000 individuals convicted of possession in 1979 were given absolute or conditional discharges or light fines. Jail sentences are still imposed occasionally. Note that in the case of marijuana, the intention will be to limit the penalty for possession.

The federal government recognizes its responsibilities and its powers to ensure that the punishment for a transgression can be limited. Whether one agrees or disagrees with the subject matter and its handling, there is an inherent feature of equalization in this measure in that it would establish a far more moderate maximum penalty. The argument cannot, however, be applied to the minimum penalty with the same assurance of equality of treatment.

If I can speak briefly on the abortion issue as an example of inequality of application of federal legislation, it is abundantly apparent that in the province of Quebec the attitude of the Quebec government towards abortion on demand can be cited as very liberal, many will say far too liberal.

One can argue that it is a problem caused by the refusal of hospitals to establish abortion committees. However, that does not, or at least theoretically should not, give provincial law enforcement authorities the permission or the right to shut their eyes to what many people believe to be widespread illegal activity.

Let me reiterate that the raising of this particular issue is not an attempt by me to argue in this debate the pros and cons of the abortion issue, but simply to point out that one piece of federal legislation is viewed and treated in a completely different fashion in two neighbouring provinces. Such variation in treatment was never envisaged in the original legislation.

It is also appropriate to cite as an example today the decision of the dissenting provinces to proceed first in the Manitoba court. This had nothing whatever to do with its central location. It was, however, believed to be the court most likely to produce a favourable decision for the provinces that were fighting the constitutional proposal.

Then the dissenting provinces chose to proceed in Newfoundland and achieved a result which they would readily admit, I am sure, might not apply in the other provincial courts. Once again, what is accented is regional disparity in the administration of justice. I should reiterate, and I think it is important to keep saying this, that I am not arguing for or against such regional disparity. I am only asking in this motion that these differences, which I am trying to illustrate do exist, should be quantified.

A provincial prosecutor has certain discretion to decide whether to charge, at what level to charge and, in the event of conviction, to suggest to the judge conditional release, a fine or imprisonment. Without identifying cases, which I believe would be an abuse of my privilege to speak freely in this House, the requested incarceration, in more than one example of what some refer to as a political crime, has been lenient to the point of being questionable. There is at least the suggestion of political manipulation.

Law reports are devoted to sentencing and judges meet to discuss these reports. In many cases, the judiciary may already find itself limited because of what has transpired in the decision on how and where to prosecute.

In England, a study has been completed on discretion in prosecution. I have been told that the Law Reform Commission is conducting a study. Possibly it deals with the problem under discussion. However, I find it hard to believe that the officials in the Ministry of Justice have not at any time discussed, studied or written any communication dealing with a comparison of the application by the various provincial courts of federal laws.

Before this motion returns to the House for conclusion of the debate, I trust that a more serious examination will be made of departmental records. I hope to hear on some occasion that some studies, documents or papers have been found in the Ministry of Justice dealing with the subject which I find of importance, if only that I honestly find it difficult to concede that we can introduce certain types of bills in this House without first recognizing the manner in which they are likely to be treated in the various provincial courts.

I presume this debate will continue for the full hour this afternoon and that in some weeks ahead this motion may return for its concluding 40 minutes. I hope that before its return to the House there will have been a more thorough examination of the records of the Department of Justice, and that some of the documents to which I have referred and of which I have requested copies will be produced.

Mr. Ron Irwin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) in motion No. 32 asks:

> That an order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence, minutes of meetings, studies and other communications of the Department of Justice relating to the comparison of the application by the various provincial courts of federal laws.

On February 18 I responded that there were no such documents which fitted that particular description. I commend the hon. member for Vaudreuil for bringing this matter to the attention of the House because variation in the application of justice and the laws of Canada is a serious problem which is continuously under debate and discussion.

● (1720)

I think the hon. member does understand, but I would remind him, that part of the problem goes directly to the British North America Act and the division of powers. For instance, under Section 91(27) the federal government is responsible for criminal law. This reads:

> The criminal law, except the constitution of courts of criminal jurisdiction, but including the procedure in criminal matters.

That jurisdiction belongs to the federal government.

Penitentiaries, dealt with in the next part, fall within the scope and jurisdiction of the federal government. It states:

> The establishment, maintenance and management of penitentiaries.

On the other hand, the provinces have the administration of justice under Section 92(14), which states:

> The administration of justice in the province, including the constitution, maintenance, and organization of provincial courts, both of civil and of criminal jurisdiction, and including procedure in civil matters in those courts.

As far as incarceration is concerned, under Section 92(6) the province is responsible for:

> The Establishment, Maintenance and Management of Public and Reformatory Prisons in and for the Province.

What it means, and I do not know how this was developed historically, is for terms of imprisonment over two years the federal government is responsible, and for terms of imprisonment under two years the province is responsible.

While the historical documentation surrounding the development of the division of powers at the time of confederation is not clear, there is a general consensus to the effect that the fundamental distinction of constitutional jurisdiction in the field of criminal justice was aimed at developing, on the one hand, a consistent and nationally applicable set of laws and, on the other hand, allowing for the application of those laws in a way sensitive to the variation of conditions in the provinces and regions.

Besides this constitutional distinction there is a distinction periodically in substance and a distinction periodically in procedure. On substance, if I might through you, Mr. Speaker, give an example to the hon. member, in the criminal law on obscenity we refer to what is called the "community standard". Community standards vary from community to community across this country, and if not from community to community, certainly from region to region. Let me give an example in respect of procedure. The use of the grand jury varies from province to province.

As much as we want uniformity, for example, in sentencing, there is a wide discretion on the individual judge, and I suggest rightly so. What happens is that in most sections there is a maximum term in the Criminal Code and the sentencing judge has a discretion to look at the nature of the offence, whether there is a chance of rehabilitation and what should be the deterrent, and then decide whether there should be a conditional discharge, an absolute discharge, a fine, incarceration or several other different types of sentences now under consideration and being actively pursued.

There are certain crimes which are more prevalent in one area than another. This is evident from the month-end reviews by provincial court judges in Ontario. Provincial court judges will indicate that in a particular area there have been so many thefts, so many impaired drivers, and the number varies from region to region. A judge may want to have a specific deterrent in a particular area, so there should be some flexibility.

Some jurisdictions in the United States have tried this. They have imposed with some considerable success guidelines which restrict the police, the prosecution, the nature of the sentence and the nature of the correctional institutions. While there may be a great deal to be said about the need to subject the exercise of discretion to such guidelines—and I understand considerable attention is being paid to this in Canada now and has been in recent months and years—I am not certain we would wish to endorse without restraint this type of rigidity in criminal justice in Canada. This has not been the traditional stance of governments or of Canadians since 1867. I think we must respect growth in criminal justice because it was built on true trial and error.

On the other hand, if you look at the new Constitution and the consistency and uniformity of rights that will be applied, I think you will see that many of the things the hon. member for Vaudreuil has suggested will be incorporated. For instance, if this Constitution is passed there will be certain uniformity because no province or federal government can on its own take away certain basic rights. We are talking about legal rights specifically and most of them are in the proposed sections starting with Section 7.

I will briefly give some examples. In Section 7 there is a right to life, liberty and security of a person, and this right is to be applied uniformly across the country. By Section 8 there is a right of security against unreasonable search and seizure, and this is also applied uniformly across the country. Under Section 9 the legislatures are prohibited from passing laws that would provide for arbitrary detention or imprisonment. Under Section 10, on arrest or detention there is a right to be informed promptly, given the reason, the right to retain and instruct counsel, the right to be informed of that right, and the right of habeas corpus. Section 11 involves the uniform right across the country to be informed properly of an offence, the right not to self-incriminate and the right to be presumed innocent. Section 12 deals with cruel and unusual treatment or punishment, about which the hon. member is talking. Section 13 deals with self-incrimination and the protection of witnesses. Section 14 provides a uniform right across the country to assistance through interpreters. Section 15 basically is a leveller; it gives uniform rights across the country. It says in essence there cannot be a provincial or federal law that will discriminate because of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disabilities.

Later on there is a right to have a jury. That is not to sugget that there is a provincial right or a federal right to a jury; rather, there is a Canadian right to a jury.

Let me take this opportunity to remind some of the opposition members that these particular rights are included in this proposed Constitution. Maybe they have not read it and maybe they are not aware of them, but, as the saying goes, if a lack of knowledge will not hurt you, the Progressive Conservative Party is practically invulnerable. Members of that party say we should wait for the decision of the Manitoba Court of Appeal and the Newfoundland Court of Appeal; wait for this premier and that premier. They are waiting for their ship to come in. They have waited so long I suggest their pier has collapsed.

What have we heard from them? We heard one hon. member raise a point of order on the tabling of documents, another hon. member on the use of the initials "MP", another hon. member on misleading answers, another hon. member on unparliamentary remarks, another hon. member—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I would like to remind the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Irwin) that we are debating a motion which reads as follows:

> That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence, minutes of meetings, studies and other communications of the Department of Justice relating to the comparison of the application by the various provincial courts of federal law.

I would ask the hon. parliamentary secretary to relate his remarks to the motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1730)

Mr. Irwin: It is good to hear the opposition wake up, all four of them. They sit there unloved and unneeded, like a Greek chorus wanting to foretell doom.

Mr. Hawkes: I think sometimes the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice is carried away. He has insulted the Greek people of this and other nations and I wonder if he might like to withdraw those remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. May I ask hon. members to come back to the motion at present before the House and relate their remarks to that motion.

Mr. Irwin: The point I wish to make is that the entrenchment of the rights is being proposed by the government and yet—

An hon. Member: They are already there.

Mr. Irwin: The hon. member has said they are already there. These rights are not already there, they are not enshrined, and I am surprised that he does not realize that.

An hon. Member: We already have them; you are giving us nothing.

Mr. Irwin: We want to achieve a uniformity that would protect all Canadians in these specific areas, and yet we are prevented from doing so by debate about whether we should have bells ringing in the West Block.

In 1976, the provincial attorneys general established a national task force on the administration of justice and they were asked:

> 1. To examine existing justice services in Canada;
> 2. To gather data relating to the cost of the delivery of these services including both operating and projected and capital costs; and

3. To recommend minimum standards for justice services in order to provide governments with the appropriate criteria to improve existing services according to their specific needs and resources.

Now, there was a report in June of 1978 and the principle was twofold. The provincial ministers of justice wanted "continuing efforts to minimize disparity which now exists in administration of justice from province to province". And they stated that it is essential that a flexible approach be taken on this question since justice administration lies in provincial hands and must be suited to provincial circumstances. Now, the odd part about this report is the finding regarding the spending of money. The hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) says: Let us spend more money and we will get better results. After extensive study they found this not to be the case, stated as follows:

They found that, on a per capita basis, expenditures by all levels of government for justice services was $110 in 1977-78. This average figure varied from a low of $64.26 in Newfoundland to a high of $118.21 in British Columbia.

It continues:

On an average, 62 per cent of those sentenced to correctional services in Canada were sentenced to provincial or territorial jails or prisons. This figure varied, however, from a high of 80 per cent in Prince Edward Island to a low of 35 per cent in British Columbia. By the same token, 35 per cent of those sentenced to correctional services nationally, were given sentences of probation; but this figure varied from a high of 63 per cent in British Columbia to a low of 15 per cent in Quebec. The national average of those sentenced to correctional services who were given sentences of two years or more and therefore had to serve those sentences in federal penitentiaries was 2.5 per cent. This varied from a high of 7 per cent of all those sentenced in Quebec, to a low of 1.2 per cent in Ontario, and 0.7 per cent in the Yukon.

And they found that although more money was spent per capita in western Canada, there was a higher degree of criminal behaviour there than in Atlantic Canada. So, money spent does not seem to be the criterion.

I would like to point out that a simple concentration of the differential interpretation of federal statutes by provincial courts does not allow us to see the full picture. It is much broader and more complicated. There are regional differences. We must concentrate instead on all the elements of the system, all of the complex social, economic and cultural factors which affect it. I hope that I have shown that the federal and provincial governments in all spheres and responsibilities under the Constitution are very much aware of the concerns which underlie the motion of the hon. member. Through joint efforts of federal and provincial committees and ministers responsible for criminal justice, the work of co-operative efforts, such as the national task force on the administration of justice, and the commissioners of uniform law who meet annually, and through the encouragement of studies in this area, both levels of government are making efforts to eliminate the distinction between justifiable discretion and unjustifiable discrepancy, and therefore eliminate unfairness and injustice in Canada.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, on uniformity in the protection of rights, a very august board of lawyers, the Canadian Bar Association, came before the joint committee and asked for entrenchment of certain basic rights in a charter to protect Canadians and give them this uniformity. The Canadian Jewish Congress also appeared and said the same thing. Numerous individuals from across Canada came before the committee and petitioned members to do specifically what the hon. member for Vaudreuil is complaining about today, namely, to give protection from demagogic governments, to give protection before the law which is not dependent on provincial or federal whim but applies equally to every Canadian citizen.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the government spokesman as he began his remarks by assuring each and every one of us that the uniform administration of justice was a very important priority of the government. The member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) simply asked for copies of correspondence, minutes of meetings and studies that relate to this particular issue, and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Irwin) stands there and says: we have no correspondence, no minutes of meetings, no studies. How can he retain his credibility in this House when, in his first few words, he tells us it is important, and then tells us there have been no meetings, no correspondence and no studies. I think he suffers from a fairly severe credibility gap.

He then moves on to talk about the importance of the uniformity of rights. He is the great protector of rights. On two occasions in this House, and I have been trying for ten days to raise it again, I brought up the fact that secretaries who live in Ontario and Quebec are eligible to work in Canada's diplomatic missions but if they live in one of the eight other provinces or the territories, they are not. The second time I brought up that issue, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) sent me a letter saying that he is sorry that they have that policy but they will correct it in late summer or early fall, five to seven months from now. Then I come to this House this afternoon and listen to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice talking to us about the need for uniformity of rights and of the commitment of the members of the Liberal Party to rights. I remember very clearly our discussions about a mobility rights clause in the constitutional committee. That is a clause which purports to extend a uniform right to every Canadian to work anywhere in this country. I find that the government has a policy that deliberately says that unless you live in the province of Ontario or the province of Quebec you are not eligible to be a secretary in the Department of External Affairs. I ask myself whether we should accept the rhetoric of a belief in rights or whether we should look behind the rhetoric and into the actions of the ministers of this government. They tell us that the administration of justice is uniformly very important. But in the very next breath they tell us they have never had a meeting, they have no correspondence and no studies. There is a credibility gap related to justice and to what the parliamentary secretary would have us believe about the government's commitment to rights.

• (1740)

Let us examine the principle of uniformity of rights. To use an analogy, Mr. Speaker, it is easy for us all to have an equal amount of food when none of us have any. When none of us have any, we all have an equal amount. By the concept of uniformity, I am wondering if the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice would have us all come to some common minimal definition of rights. Would be have us all believe that uniformity is more important than the maximization of rights?

I wonder if the parliamentary secretary has considered the reality of what the Supreme Court is and what it is all about. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the ministers of the government would have us ignore the Supreme Court of this country and attempt to have us deal in this legislature with something the court has ruled illegal. I think that shows their contempt for the legal rulings which exist in this country today, April 2, 1981. They want us to ignore that legal ruling and continue to deal with an illegal act by this Parliament. They would then have us believe that they will give us this marvellous charter which they will then turn over to a body where five out of nine people will rule on it. The government must surely recognize that those nine people are real people. It must recognize that there are a limited number of hours in any given day that they have to devote to their function. It must surely realize that they can only deal with the principles in that new Constitution, in the broadest possible way, to provide us with a common denominator.

The parliamentary secretary brought up the subject of the obscenity and pornography laws in this country. Today he told us that one of the important parts of the definition of those laws relates to community standards. What is the principle of community standards? It simply means that in our communities in this country we call Canada we can determine, collectively and freely, what the standards should be for the community. As we travel, we encounter those differences from community to community. I think Members of Parliament are fortunate to be able to travel perhaps more than most Canadians. I received the impression from the parliamentary secretary that he valued those community differences and that they were important. Yet in the next breath he started to defend what he called the "uniformity" of rights. He defended what his government wants to do in this chamber, which is to move those standards through the medium of the court system to some principle of uniformity, to obliterate that principle of community determination of its standards with respect to subjects such as obscenity and pornography.

I can think of many small communities in western Canada which do not want to have the same standards as those which apply to large cities such as Montreal and Toronto. They are small communities and they want to retain their bylaws. They want the capacity to set their standards in areas such as this so that people can live in those communities in the fashion which they have determined. Yet the parliamentary secretary is really promoting a system which would take that possibility away from us.

He also brought up the topic of rigidities. I think that when one reads Hansard some time in the future, it will be seen that the parliamentary secretary was trying to tell us that rigidity is bad. I ask him to look to our neighbour to the south. In fact, he brought up the matter of there being jurisdictions in the United States which are trying to create rigidities across jurisdictions. He indicated that they were bad, yet he brings to this House in his speech today an undying passion—he demonstrated it before the committee—for what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) has said. In whatever way the minister says the government will vote, he will vote. That is a type of rigid system. He consistently voted to bring forward a system which would allow very little variation, which would give us a system where all kinds of matters in our lives would be determined by a small group of people sitting in Ottawa. Because of the limited time they have to consider matters, they would have to paint with a broad and rigid brush to eradicate some of these differences.

I heard the parliamentary secretary indicate in committee, as I heard him indicate here today, that one of the concerns of the government was to set a body above the Parliament, above the democratically elected people, to rule on their behaviour. There is a certain amount of intuitive appeal to that concept which is abroad in this land. I say to the people in my riding that they can relate to that principle, but I ask them to read the fine print and see if that is really being done. When the fine print is read, it will be found that in some cases that is what is being done and in other cases the words are clearly and unequivocally designed to place Parliament above all other considerations. I ask members opposite and the parliamentary secretary, as I asked the Minister of Justice in committee, to reread Clause 16 in its entirety. It says that nothing in the charter shall limit the authority of a legislature. That is what I call a boss clause. What is its content? Look back at the original resolution and look at the difference between it and what we have today. Nothing in this charter shall limit the authority of a parliament or a legislature. That is going in. I ask hon. members of this House to read the resource clauses, that brand new material brought to us by the red rump on the left. I ask them to consider whether that is a clause which does, in its entirety, exactly what the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) told us was in his head when he was proposing it, that is, to set governments over the people so as to make it impossible for people who own mineral rights to resist the government, to seek fairness and equity and compensation when their property is taken away for the common good. They should ask themselves whether that clause, the way it is worded in its entirety, is not a clause dedicated to putting governments over the people in this country.

Let us come back to the mobility rights clause and ask the government what it has done about Clause 6(3)(b) which makes it really obligatory—that is not the way it is worded, but the wording has the effect of making it obligatory—throughout our social service system for governments to have a residency requirement. If they do not think that is what it will do, they should put themselves in the position of someone who believes that a social service should not be available to the newcomers to the province that welfare, education, or whatever we might define as public expenditure on social services should not be made available to them. One should ask, if one happens to be the kind of a taxpayer who does not believe that public money should be spent on these people who have just moved into one's province, even though the elected representatives said they could benefit from social services whether those newcomers would take their case to the courts, provincial courts, or the Supreme Court of Canada, which would declare the decision of those publicly elected people to serve the newcomers to be invalid. To what extent is this government determined to hand that kind of power to those who have the resources and the wealth to successfully follow through the chain of courts to the Supreme Court of Canada on the basis of a principle in which they might believe but which runs counter to the common good?

When those rulings are made that the expenditure of public money cannot be spent on social services of one kind or another, for newcomers—people who just move from province to province—then there will be uniformity, that broad brush I referred to.

However, I really wonder if those are the types of things we want in this country, and are we determined to ram this through in the face of a court judgment which says that we are dealing with an illegal bill? I suspect that most of us on a public platform would feel, in trying to serve the best interests of our constituencies, a great deal more comfortable if the pressure were removed and we could engage in real dialogue on the kind of wording we really want to express the principles which would serve the people of this country well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the motion we have before us today put forward by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) calls for some documents to be produced relating to the comparison of the application of federal laws by the various provincial courts. He is concerned about the uniformity in the application of laws, particularly as it relates to criminal justice. The parliamentary secretary who preceded me in speaking for our party mentioned how the charter of rights would accomplish many of the things that the hon. member for Vaudreuil is seeking. He referred to two rights and spoke of how a charter of rights would make the rights of Canadians from coast to coast more secure. They could go before a court of law and ensure that their rights, as they are expressed in the charter, are enforced.

I think this is true, and it is perhaps a corollary, that it is fine that rights should be equal across the country. For example, the same rights should exist with regard to minority language education in Alberta or in British Columbia as they exist in Quebec or in New Brunswick, or anywhere across the country. To use an example cited by the parliamentary secretary, the right to be secure against unreasonable search and seizure should be the same in every province across the country.

However, where I take issue with the hon. member for Vaudreuil is in the application of criminal justice. There must be a certain difference from province to province and from community to community because, as has been mentioned—with regard to the obscenity rule, for example—community standards are different depending on the community in which one lives. I think there is a difference between rights, which should be equal across the country, and sentences, because there may be different violations of the criminal law from city to city.

What I really resent is how the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) takes one matter, confuses it with another and then comes up with a statement suggesting that many matters which concern us would be controlled by a small group of people sitting in Ottawa who would try to suppress our differences. He attempts to conjure up visions of "Big Brother" sitting in Ottawa, saying that community standards relating to obscenity laws would be enforced from a central point in the country. This is not true at all. It is really an indication of the types of misconceptions and deceitfulness which hon. members opposite have been trying to perpetrate in this debate as some sort of scare tactic against the people in small towns and people from one end of the country to the other.

I would like to repeat that rights of individuals should be the same from one end of the country to the other. However, the application of criminal justice is completely different from community to community.

I have an example which I would like to give, but as it is approaching six o'clock, I think that I will allow you, Mr. Speaker, to call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the Chair until 8 p.m.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions amongst House leaders with respect to the order of business for this evening.

It is the desire of the government to proceed this evening with the borrowing authority motion under Standing Order 75C in order to permit the House of Commons to get on to the economic business of the country' which has been our desire all along. The hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn), who had the floor with respect to a question of privilege, is prepared to defer further argument on that question of privilege now for the purposes of facilitating the business of the House.

My understanding as well is that other hon. members of the House are prepared to do that so that we can take up the question for the remaining time on the motion standing in the name of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières). We are prepared to allow that to happen. In any event, we are prepared to have a vote on that motion tonight at ten o'clock, and we would be agreeable to having it made a House order to clarify the situation.

The understanding we have reached is that one day will be spent on the report stage, and that it be tomorrow, Friday. If a recorded division is required on Friday, we will agree not to proceed with it on Friday. It will be deferred until Monday at three o'clock.

The government House leader has also agreed with us that he will be calling—it is part of our understanding—the third reading stage of the borrowing bill on Monday and that votes will be taken on Monday night to dispose—whichever way it is done—of the borrowing authority bill.

I emphasize that this arrangement has been agreed to. We as a party are prepared for a House order with respect to that so that we can proceed with the important business of the country, which it is our wish to do. I have discussed this with the government House leader, and I have set it out clearly for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who is here. I hope he will be agreeable to that proposal.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, yes, there have been these discussions. They have taken place in stages, but the statement just made by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton represents what we were discussing, and we agree with all of the proposals for a House order as he has outlined it.

Perhaps I should make it clear, however, that when the vote is called on the motion under Standing Order 75C, we shall be voting against it.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, what has been outlined by the House leader of the Progressive Conservative Party and confirmed by the House leader of the New Democratic Party corresponds to the offer which I made this afternoon. We have negotiated, and they have indeed replied in the affirmative to the suggestion which I put to them, and I believe that this, especially as far as the Progressive Conservative Party is concerned, is a way to be consistent with their commitment to the effect that if the motion to allocate a time period for the constitutional debate was withdrawn from the Order Paper, they would stop their filibuster. In these circumstances, I am pleased that my offer has been accepted, and the terms of the order of the House have been well stated by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton, and I believe that his comments may be used for the order of the House so that we may dispose of the bill on the borrowing power today, tomorrow and next Monday.

Madam Speaker, in the event that a vote were to be called tomorrow, Friday, it would be automatically deferred to 3 p.m. on Monday.

Madam Speaker: I believe that there is unanimous consent of the House concerning this proposal. I simply want to know if the House wishes to proceed immediately with the motion or go on to routine proceedings.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, there are some questions on the order paper which, I understand, the government wishes to answer. That is agreeable. If Your Honour would make what we have outlined a House order, then I think we could go through the proceedings and very quickly reach the subject matter.

Mr. Knowles: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Is it agreed that I should go through the proceedings until we reach the motion?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): No, Madam Speaker. This is to be a House order with respect to the motion under Standing Order 75C. I think it would be agreeable to all of us if it was made now in accordance with the terms which have been discussed among the House leaders.

Madam Speaker: Is the understanding agreed to unanimously by the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

METRIC COMMISSION

TABLING OF SEVENTH REPORT

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to table this evening, on behalf of the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe), copies in both official languages of the seventh report of the Metric Commission of Canada.

[English]

PETITION

INCREASED INCOME FOR SENIOR CITIZENS

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, now that we are on routine proceedings, may I present a petition?

Madam Speaker: Yes, that is in order.

Mr. Knowles: I have the honour on behalf of the Saskatchewan Senior Citizens Action Now Association to present a petition to the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled signed by 6,123 Canadians praying for certain improvements with regard to senior citizens and asking in particular that steps be taken to provide an income equal to at least 70 per cent to 75 per cent of the average industrial wage in Canada for persons 65 years of age and over.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if hon. members will bear with me, there are a number of questions in view of the delay over recent days. The following questions will be answered: Nos. 168, 1,522, 1,544, 1,693, 1,726, 1,751, 1,842, 1,895, 1,942, 1,967, 1,968, 2,000, 2,001, 2,040, 2,079, 2,080, 2,089, 2,092, 2,097, 2,130, 2,149, 2,173, 2,186, 2,187, 2,199, 2,212 and 2,215.

PRIME MINISTER'S CADILLACS

Question No. 168—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Does the government have any plans for the two Cadillacs formerly used by the Prime Minister up until May 22, 1979 and, if so, what are they?

2. Did the vehicles cost $80,000 or more in taxpayers funds?

3. Will the Prime Minister continue to make use of either one of them at any time and, if not, what are all the reasons for such a change in the government's policy since prior to May 22, 1979?

4. Will one of the vehicles be disposed of to recover public money spent?

5. What was the date of purchase of each vehicle and what is the present mileage on its odometer?

6. Are the vehicles necessary for Prime Ministerial safety and, if not, for what reason were they necessary prior to May 22, 1979?

7. What is the average mile obtained per gallon in the case of each vehicle?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General):

1. (a) One vehicle is presently used by "A" Division, (northeastern Ontario) RCM Police, to provide security to visiting heads of state, heads of government, foreign ministers, etc.

   (b) The other vehicle is being utilized by "O" Division (southern Ontario) RCM Police, to provide security to visiting heads of state, heads of government, foreign ministers, etc.

2. (a) The 1973 Cadillac (Special limousine) cost $76,408.

   (b) The 1974 Cadillac (Special limousine) cost $83,530.94.

3. The Prime Minister will continue to use the Cadillac in "A" Division, upon recommendation of the RCMP, if and when a threat should surface indicating the need.

4. No.

5. (a) The date of purchase of the 1973 Cadillac was March 18, 1973. In relation to the question, the odometer reading is 38,218 miles.

   (b) The date of purchase of the 1974 Cadillac was October 15, 1974. In relation to the question, the odometer reading is 37,228 miles.

6. Yes; the Prime Minister will continue to use the Cadillacs, upon recommendation of the RCMP, if and when a threat should surface indicating the need.

7. (a) The average miles per gallon obtained for the 1973 Cadillac is 12.

   (b) The average miles per gallon obtained for the 1974 Cadillac is eight.

PLEASURE BOATS—CANADIAN CUSTOMS SEASONAL PERMITS

Question No. 1,522—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the RCMP request from the United States Immigration Service on or about April 13, 1980, licence numbers on Canadian pleasure boats tied up at Morristown, N.Y. docks or anywhere within a reasonable distance of the area and, if so, for what reason and specifically, was it because of the alleged failure of certain Canadians, stopping for dinner in the United States while cruising the river, to report to Canadian Customs on return to Canada and, if so, how many Canadians were assessed penalties by the RCMP in the area of Brockville, Ontario for such an offence and was the penalty $50 in each case?

2. Is the government aware that the U.S. government has a system whereby Americans can obtain a seasonal permit for similar crossings to the Canadian side of the border without reporting in on return unless they have goods to declare and specifically, will the government consider the institution of a similar permit system for Canadians in order to eliminate the present problem?

3. (a) In regard to this particular type of matter, is RCMP action taken under the Canada Customs Act and, if so (i) for what reason does the RCMP not have to offer evidence against a person before a penalty is levied (ii) is a person considered guilty until they can prove their innocence (b) will the government consider amendments to the Canada Customs Act to provide seasonal permits and to permit persons to be considered innocent until proven guilty by a court?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Ministry of the Solicitor General and the Department of National Revenue as follows: 1. The RCMP have had no contact with the U.S. Immigration Service concerning licence numbers of Canadian boats in U.S. waters.

As a result of complaints by Canadian Customs officers that Canadians travelling via boat to the U.S.A. were not reporting to customs on their return to Canada, RCMP members contacted U.S. Customs officials on or about April 13, 1980, requesting licence numbers of Canadian boats found in U.S. ports. The reason for the request was to confirm inward report to Canadian Customs. A total of 19 Canadians were assessed penalties by the RCMP in the area of Brockville, Ontario for such an offence and the penalty was $50 in each case.

2. It is understood that United States regulations have the following requirements. All pleasure boats, regardless of size, need not report to U.S. Immigration when arriving with only U.S. citizens on board. However, all vessels must comply with customs reporting and entry requirements. In this regard, an American pleasure boat owned by a U.S. citizen must report arrival from a foreign area to customs within 24 hours. The report may be made by any means of communication, and if inspection is required, customs will direct the vessel to an inspection area.

Under the Canadian system, all persons arriving in Canada are also required to report to customs. The reporting mechanism varies from region to region according to the traffic volume, distances between offices, and availability of customs personnel. In some areas, officers are on duty at all locations during the season to process marine traffic, while in other areas, the system is complemented by the use of telephone reporting procedures. In areas where telephone procedures are used, residents of Canada may pre-register with Canada Customs before travelling on international waters. In all cases, however, a customs report is required in respect of each trip. As with the U.S. system, the traveller may be given a verbal clearance by customs and issued a clearance number, or may be required to wait on board pending inspection by a customs officer.

3. (a) The action taken by the RCMP was under the provisions of the Customs Act.

(i) The RCMP officers offered evidence to the above mentioned 19 persons that a Customs Act violation was believed to have taken place. All persons admitted being in the U.S.A. and not reporting to customs.

(ii) Under section 248 of the Customs Act, burden of proof lies on the person whose duty it was to comply with the act. However, RCMP investigators must have sufficient grounds to prove the offence has taken place before taking any action.

(b) The Department of National Revenue will consider amendments to the Customs Act to ensure the latitude exists for the establishment of various reporting procedures according to the circumstances and conditions in each region.

It is a cornerstone of our legal system that a person charged with a crime is presumed to be innocent until proven guilty and this principle will not be changed. However, it is important to realize that the question of guilt or innocence only arises under the Customs Act when criminal charges have been laid. In most instances where action is taken under the Customs Act, civil proceedings are involved. In these cases, it is the goods in Canada which have not been reported to customs that are in violation of the law, and action is directed against the goods in question and not the person in possession of them. The action is considered to be "in rem". The innocence or guilt of the person involved does not therefore arise in such cases.

RCMP—SECURITY CLEARANCE SECTION

Question No. 1,544—Mr. Cossitt:

Did Sgt. Tom Hardiman inform, at any time, employees of the security clearance Section at RCMP headquarters, that none of them would lose their jobs when computers were introduced and, if so (a) was he enunciating government or departmental policy (b) has the situation been changed and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Sgt. Hardiman did inform the employees of No. 2 section, "F" operations, that no lay-offs would take place due to the utilization of computers. He advised that staff reduction would take place through attrition and lateral transfer options.

(a) He was enunciating departmental policy.

(b) As those involved had not pursued lateral transfers, the date of December 31, 1980, was given as the target date when conceivably lay-offs might have to occur. No lay-offs have occurred and six of the original 35 positions remain to be accommodated, if possible, in the same manner as the others.

CPR BALLAST—ROCK CONTAINING ASBESTOS

Question No. 1,693—Mr. Benjamin:

1. Was the government informed that the CPR had ballasted a 90-mile stretch of line in the Quebec eastern townships with rock containing asbestos ore or tailings from the mining or refining of asbestos and, if so (a) on what date (b) was action taken in response and, if so, what was such action?

2. Was the (a) government (b) Canadian Transport Commission informed of any other lines so ballasted and, if so (i) which lines were reported (ii) how were the reports followed up (iii) were any tests conducted on reported lines to determine the composition of ballast and, if so, what were the results?

3. What were the results of the inquiry that the Minister of Transport referred to on June 2, 1980, at page 1627 of Hansard?

4. Did the (a) government (b) Canadian Transport Commission ask the railway companies to provide a list of the rail lines which have been ballasted with tailings from the mining or refining of asbestos or rock containing asbestos ore and, if so (i) what was the response (ii) which lines did the railway companies identify as being so ballasted and on what dates were they ballasted?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows:

1. (a) The government was made aware on December 13, 1978, that the CPR had ballasted a stretch of line in the Quebec eastern townships with a type of rock that contained asbestos fibres.

(b) A meeting of officials of the federal government and the Canadian Pacific Railway was held on March 9, 1979, to discuss whether this ballast posed a health hazard. As a result of the meeting, the Environmental Health Directorate of the Health Protection Branch, Health and Welfare Canada, in collaboration with CP Rail undertook to establish whether or not an environmental hazard existed.

2. No. Neither the government nor the Canadian Transport Commission has been informed of any other lines so ballasted.

3. There were two investigations referred to on June 2, 1980: the first was initiated by the Department of the Environment in 1979. During its investigative process, it was decided, after consultation with the Department of Health and Welfare, that the latter would conduct a scientific study of the air and water quality in the vicinity of the rail line. The study was made and a report submitted in February, 1980. The report concluded that the effect of using ballast containing asbestos fibres on the quality of the drinking water and the ambient air in the area tested was negligible.

The second investigation was conducted by the Canadian Transport Commission. It revealed that CP Rail was in the process of retaining an independent research group to undertake a study of the environmental effects of using asbestos-bearing crushed rock as ballast and, that the railway had discontinued the use of this type of ballast until the results of its study are known and evaluated.

4. (a) and (b) No. The Canadian National draws its ballast from other sources and CP Rail has changed its source of ballast to the Hilton Iron Mines.

G.L. KRISTIANSON LTD.

Question No. 1,726—Mr. Cossitt:

Did the government allot contracts or make payments during the period January 1, 1978, to November 1, 1980, to the public affairs consultant firm G.L. Kristianson Ltd., 26 Bastion Square, Victoria, or to Mr. Kristianson and, if so (a) how many and on what dates (b) for what purpose (c) will all reports, studies, etc. by the firm be tabled in the House (d) what was the cost of each study and the total cost of all studies?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): All departments and agencies have no information on this subject.

ADVERTISING EXPENDITURES

Question No. 1,751—Mr. Stevens:

For the current fiscal year, what are the estimated expenditures of the Department of National Health and Welfare for (a) advertising (b) free or subsidized publications (c) other information conveyed to the public?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The 1980-81 projected expenditures are: (a) media advertising $3,715,000, (b) free or subsidized publications $3,711,745, (c) other information $727,200.

CBC RADIO TRANSMITTER, MAITLAND, ONT.

Question No. 1,842—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the CBC recently conduct further tests of the CBC FM French and English radio transmitter at Maitland, Ontario and, if so (a) was it found that interference with television and radio reception in the surrounding area was as bad or worse as during previous testings (b) was an attempt made by the CBC to install adapters or other forms of devices on individual television sets, etc. and, if so, did this result in some improvement (c) were the transmitters once again shut down and, if so, on what date?

2. (a) Has the CBC reached the conclusion that nothing can be done to rectify the situation and, if so, what does it plan to do with the existing transmitters (b) will they be moved to another location and, if so, on what date?

3. What was the total cost to date of all installations, testing, etc. conducted by CBC since construction began at Maitland, Ontario?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): I am advised by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. The CBC conducted tests on November 24 and 25, 1980.

(a) Interference previously measured was confirmed. These tests further indicated that not all the problems can be solved by changes to equipment owned by listeners.

(b) The CBC installed filters, traps and pre-amplifiers on a number of individual sets, but some TV and most FM channels remained impaired.

(c) The transmitters have not been operated since these tests.

2. (a) The CBC concluded that a change in the licensed parameters of the English-language FM station will be necessary to provide service to the Brockville area while not restricting the viewing and listening habits of the Maitland area residents. Further tests are to be conducted with the English-language FM transmitter operating at reduced power to try to eliminate the problem.

(b) If the tests referred to in 2(a) are successful, the corporation will prepare an application for a permanent operation with a lower-powered transmitter at the present site. The French-language transmitter will be used as currently licensed and the present English-language transmitter equipment would be used elsewhere.

3. $519,000—total cost for English-language and French-language services.

GRANADA—FUNDS ADVANCED BY CANADA

Question No. 1,895—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. In (a) 1975 (b) 1976 (c) 1977 (d) 1978 (e) 1979 (f) 1980, what amount did the government advance, through CIDA or any other agency, to the government of Grenada?

2. Does the government have a program for advancing funds to Grenada during 1980 and 1981?

3. Did the government act on the complaints of owners of Levera Beach home sites in Grenada, particularly the complaints filed with the Canadian High Commissioner's office in Bridgetown, Barbados, by E. W. Anderson, 1190 Clarington Road, Mississauga, Ontario, L5E 3C5?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am informed by the Canadian International Development Agency and the Secretariat for External Affairs as follows:

1. Disbursements made by CIDA in the form of grants for bilateral development assistance to Grenada during the years in question were as follows:

FY	1974-75	$ 243,900
	1975-76	1,178,500
	1976-77	1,816,900
	1977-78	594,300
	1978-79	292,400
	1979-80	66,500

2. Planned expenditures in the form of grants for approved projects in Grenada during 1980-81 are $116,800.

3. Mr. E. W. Anderson visited the Canadian High Commission in October, 1979, to discuss the complaints of owners of Levera Beach home sites in Grenada. Our High Commission has informed us that Mr. Anderson did not request the High Commission to approach the Grenada authorities at that time, and the High Commission has no record of having received any correspondence from him subsequent to his visit.

Nonetheless, in the case of another Canadian owner of a home site in the Levera Development Properties, our High Commission did approach the Grenadian authorities concerning the sale of such property to another Canadian. Our mission also inquired of the Grenadian government if there had been new legislation affecting the sale of property in Grenada. We were informed by the Grenadian authorities that there had been no change in the legislation pertaining to the sale of property to aliens and that applications to sell property are considered by cabinet on an individual basis.

Our High Commission in Bridgetown has noted that the Grenadian land sale legislation is not aimed at the Levera Beach holdings but applies generally to limit land transfers between foreigners and was patterned, at least in part, on legislation in Prince Edward Island.

ACCESS TO PAPERS OF RIGHT HONOURABLE JOHN G. DIEFENBAKER

Question No. 1,942—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What are the names of all persons who have had access in any way whatsoever to the papers of the late Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker since the papers were placed in the Public Archives and, in each case, what was their job designation and what was the reason for such access?

2. Was any consultation held with the trustees of the papers regarding persons selected to work on them?

3. Were any "leaks" of the contents of the papers discovered and, if so, what action was taken to maintain proper privacy?

4. Is Miss Karen Teeple one of those working on the papers and, if so, was her competency and ability to maintain confidentiality etc. thoroughly investigated before she was permitted to perform such tasks?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Public Archives that the reply to the above question is as follows: 1. The names of all persons who have had access to the papers of the late Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker while they have been stored at the Public Archives since 1963 are as follows:

Name	Job Designation	Reason for Access
D. Lee McDonald	Archivist—Post confederation Section, PAC	Archivist responsible for the Diefenbaker papers.
R.S. Gordon	Director—Manuscript Division, PAC	Archivist responsible for the Diefenbaker papers
Carman Carroll	Head—Prime Ministers Section, PAC	Responsible for the section which housed the papers
Jean Dryden and Roy Maddocks	Archivists—Prime Ministers Section, PAC	Seconded to assist in the research for "One Canada"
Maureen Hoogenraad	Archivist—Prime Ministers Section, PAC	Helped in the first rough sorting of the papers
Paulette Dozois	Archivist—Prime Ministers Section, PAC	Helped in the first rough sorting of the papers
William Smith	Archivist—Prime Ministers Section, PAC	Helped in the first rough sorting of the papers
Dave Walden	Contract worker with the University of Saskatchewan	Organized portions of the papers
Giselle Pidek	Member of the PAC Microfilming Unit	Microfilmed the first two parts of the papers
Gail Devlin Yuri Daschko and Shaun Munro	Research assistants	Aided Mr. John Munro in his research. (See John Munro listed below)
Professors William Neville, Denis Smith and Colin Wright	One-time biographers of Mr. Diefenbaker	Prepared some research for a proposed biography which was abandoned.
Thomas Van Dusen	Former Executive Assistant to Mr. Diefenbaker	Assisted in researching some areas of the papers for Mr. Diefenbaker's autobiography
Norman Hilliker	Historian—External Affairs	Examined External Affairs material in the papers
Archie McQueen	Mr. Diefenbaker's Assistant	Searched the papers for material requested by Mr. Diefenbaker
Scott Munro	Writer/Director for CBC	Granted access to copy some photographs in the papers for a CBC documentary on Mr. Diefenbaker
*Ian McClymont	Chief—Prime Ministers Section, PAC	Responsible for co-ordination of Archives and University of Saskatchewan employees working on the Diefenbaker project
*Doug Whyte	Archivist—Prime Ministers Section, PAC (Formerly a contract worker with the University of Saskatchewan)	Responsible for the Diefenbaker project. Organized portions of the papers
*Karen Teeple	Contract worker with the University of Saskatchewan	Assisted in the organization of the papers

Name	Job Designation	Reason for Access
*Elizabeth Timlin and Colleen Dempsey	Clerks—Prime Ministers Section, PAC	Aided in the organization of material
*John Munro	Director—Diefenbaker Centre	Screened the papers for memorabilia and to select material for display at the Diefenbaker Centre
*John Munro	Editor and researcher for "One Canada", employed by Mr. Diefenbaker	Conducted research for the autobiography "One Canada"
*Joel Aldred	Executor of Mr. Diefenbaker's Estate	Searched the papers for documents concerning the financial aspects of the estate
*Kenneth Binks and his assistants	Solicitor for the estate of Mr. Diefenbaker	Examined papers to aid in the disposition of the estate

NOTE: Only those indicated (*) and the executors of Mr. Diefenbaker's estate presently have access.

2. The University of Saskatchewan, as owner of the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker Papers, consults with the Public Archives of Canada prior to the hiring of individuals to work on the Diefenbaker Papers.

3. The Public Archives is not aware of any "leaks" of the contents of the papers.

4. Karen Teeple is a contract employee of the University of Saskatchewan. The university has expressed its confidence in her competence as an archivist and in her integrity. The Public Archives shares this confidence in Ms. Teeple's competence and integrity.

MR. WILLIAM BURCHETT

Question No. 1,967—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. Is Mr. William Burchett identified as a journalist on CBC program "The Ten Thousand Day War" a Canadian citizen?

2. Was Mr. Burchett employed by CBC and, if so, on what basis?

3. Is Mr. Burchett the same William Burchett who was involved with the North Korean Forces during the Korean War?

4. Is Mr. Burchett the same William Burchett who served with the Vietcong Forces in the Vietnam conflict?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1, 3 and 4. "The Ten Thousand Day War" is a production of T.D.W. Productions Ltd., and was purchased for showing on the CBC network. The CBC has no direct knowledge of whether William Burchett is a Canadian citizen or of his affiliation during the Vietnam and Korean wars.

2. William Burchett's services were used by the CBC during the war, when he was one of the very few English-speaking journalists who had access to North Vietnam. His services have not been used since the Vietnam war ended.

Order Paper Questions

PERCENTAGE OF VIEWERS CBOT COMPARED TO CJOH

Question No. 1,968—Mr. Cossitt:

What are the latest statistics in the possession of CBC showing the percentage of viewers of CBOT, Ottawa, compared to CJOH, Ottawa and, in particular, what is the percentage breakdown of the viewing audience for both stations' news programs beginning at 6 p.m. nightly?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: the performance of news and public affairs programs varies substantially from city to city and is dependent on numerous factors, the most obvious being the number of competing television stations in a given city. In Ottawa, for example, nine TV stations have a reportable share of the audience, while a number of others account for too little viewing for reporting purposes. According to survey figures for the fall of 1980, the most recent period for which audience data are available for the metropolitan area of Ottawa-Hull, in the Monday to Friday 6.00-7.00 p.m. slot, CBOT had a 12 per cent share of the audience. CBOT also carries a late evening local news program, for which it receives an approximately 36 per cent share of the audience. Since the information requested on non-CBC-network stations is provided by a syndicated ratings firm, the Bureau of Broadcast Measurement, statistics required on CJOH-TV should be requested from the station itself.

CENSUS—"MINISTERIAL REFERRAL SYSTEM"

Question No. 2,000—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 162 which states in part, that the "Ministerial Referral System" will be one of the means by which persons employed in the upcoming census are selected, what is a full description of the term "Ministerial Referral System"?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports: the "Ministerial Referral System" is based on the authority in Section 5(1) the Statistics Act, as follows:

"Temporary employees"

"5. (1) The Minister may employ from time to time, in the manner authorized by law, such commissioners, enumerators, agents or other persons as are necessary to collect for Statistics Canada such statistics and information as he deems useful and in the public interest relating to such commercial, industrial, financial, social, economic and other activities as he may determine, and the duties of such commissioners, enumerators, agents or other persons shall be those duties prescribed by the Minister."

A description of the implementation, at the minister's discretion, of the Ministerial Referral System is as follows: the office of the minister responsible for Statistics Canada provides Statistics Canada with the name of a contact for each federal electoral district. Contacts are briefed by regional office personnel on the requirements of the position of census commissioner, (essential and desirable qualifications, duties, salary, time commitments, etc.) and they are requested to provide the names of two prospective candidates for each census commissioner district. Those individuals whose names are referred as candidates are required to write an examination and to submit to an interview to determine their personal suitability for such a position. This examination and interview are administered by Statistics Canada regional office census staff hired under the Public Service Employment Act, and results are submitted to the regional directors for review and recommendations. Names are then submitted to the minister for decision.

CENSUS COMMISSIONER POSITIONS

Question No. 2,001—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 162 which states in part, that opposition Members of Parliament will be allowed to make nominations for those who will be employed in the upcoming census, is it the policy of the government that such nominations will be accepted on the basis of their merit or will they be rejected unless they are supporters of the Liberal Party?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports: candidates for census commissioner positions are carefully assessed through an objective process. The results of this process are weighed by the minister before the selection is made. Candidates' names may be obtained from several sources and the same selection criteria are applied to all such candidates.

DVA—ADDITIONAL BEDS FOR DOMICILIARY CARE

Question No. 2,040—Mr. McKenzie:

What is the estimated number of additional beds that will be required for the domiciliary care of chronically ill veterans in (a) 1981 (b) 1982 (c) 1983 (d) 1984 (e) 1985?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): The department is not now in a position to forecast the bed requirement; however, it is generally accepted that there will be an increasing need for chronic care beds in the years ahead. It was this fact, coupled with our desire to better serve Canada's veterans, that led to the development of the "Aging Veterans Program" I announced in November, 1980. Implementation of this new program will commence on April 1, 1981, and its main thrust is directed at enabling aging veterans to remain in their homes and communities, rather than be institutionalized as has often been the case in the past. The Aging Veterans Program entails the provision of a range of personal and home care services designed to maintain the independence and self-sufficiency of the elderly veteran. This new initiative provides eligibility to disability pensioners initially; however, it is hoped to extend it to War Veterans Allowance recipients after a reasonable time during which we will gain needed experience in providing the new services. The effect that this program will have in reducing bed requirements cannot be estimated at this time.

See definitions below.

Definitions

Domiciliary Care

"Domiciliary Care", as used in DVA, equates to federal types I and II care. A domiciliary care patient is reasonably well and ambulatory; is capable of looking after his or her own needs; is able to get up, get dressed and go to the dining room; requires a minimum of either nursing or medical care or other assistance, and is essentially being provided with board and quarters.

Chronic Care

Chronic Care, which is federal type III care, is that required by a person who is chronically ill and/or has a functional disability (physical or mental) whose acute phase of illness is over, whose initial processes may or may not be stable, whose potential for rehabilitation may be limited, and who requires a range of therapeutic services, medical management and skilled nursing care plus provision for meeting psycho-social needs. The period of time during which care is required is unpredictable, but usually consists of a matter of months or years.

FEDERAL SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Question No. 2,079—Mr. Halliday:

What is the federal sales tax on (a) lumber (b) cement (c) steel products (d) masonry products such as bricks, shingles and other roofing materials (e) plumbing materials (f) electrical and wiring materials (g) paints (h) wallboards?

Mr. Claude Tessier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue):

(a)	5 per cent.
(b)	5 per cent.
(c)	Structural metal and fabricated metal for buildings and other structures.	5 per cent
	Other goods including firegrates, flagpoles, metal furniture, metal shelving and steel forms for concrete.	9 per cent
(d)	Bricks and shingles.	5 per cent
	Tar, asphalt, roofing materials and components including eavestroughing and downspouts.	5 per cent
	Other goods including roof repair kits and sheet metal for roofing without further fabrication.	9 per cent
(e)	Shower baths, bathtubs, basins, faucets, closets, lavatories, urinals, sinks, laundry tubs and parts for the foregoing.	5 per cent
	Other goods including towel rings, whirlpool bath units and soap dishes.	9 per cent

(f) Electrical conducting and telecommunications wire and cable, transformers, circuit-breakers and related electrical equipment designed for permanent installation in a system for the supply of electricity. 5 per cent
Other goods including doorbells, lightbulbs, extension cords and lighting fixtures. 9 per cent

(g) 5 per cent.

(h) Plasterboards, fibreboards, wall panels, building paper, wallpaper and materials for ceilings, walls, insulation for acoustical purposes. 5 per cent
Other goods including portable or free standing room dividers, ornamental panels, and particle board faced with melamine. 9 per cent

FEDERAL SALES TAX REMISSION ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Question No. 2,080—Mr. Halliday:

1. Is a general formula in use for calculating the amount of federal sales tax remission on building materials, for example, new schools and hospitals and, if so, what is it?

2. What are the guidelines or regulations pertaining to the rebate of federal sales taxes in Part 1?

Mr. Claude Tessier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): 1. A general formula or simplified method, as mentioned below, may be used to compute the refund of federal sales tax on materials used exclusively in the construction of a building for a hospital or a school.

2. Hospitals

An institution certified as a bona fide public hospital by the Department of National Health and Welfare claims sales tax exemption at the time of purchase or importation of building materials for its own use and not for sale. Accordingly, a hospital making direct purchases for a building construction program can obtain materials tax exempt and make the goods available to the general contractor or subcontractor. Or, the hospital may grant the contractor or subcontractor or both authority to purchase materials exempt on its behalf. A contractor or subcontractor who has not been appointed the hospital's purchasing agent is required to pay tax at the time of purchase and claim a refund from the Department of National Revenue. The refund may be computed either by claiming the exact amount of sales tax as substantiated by suppliers' invoices or by using a simplified method and calculating the tax as 2.25 per cent of the total contract payments.

Schools

Unlike a hospital, a school must pay sales tax when purchasing or importing materials for use in the construction of a building. However, the school may obtain reimbursement of the tax by filing for a refund based on either the exact amount of sales tax as substantiated by suppliers' invoices or by using a simplified method. In this instance the tax factor is 1.5 per cent of the total contract payments less an allowance for provincial tax (in Ontario .0315 per cent) for a net of 1.4685 per cent.

The tax factor is lower for a school than for a hospital because a hospital is entitled to an exemption on all goods it purchases whereas a school is entitled to a refund only on materials for use in the construction of a building. For instance, a fence around a school is subject to sales tax.

OVERSEAS BOOK CENTRE

Question No. 2,089—Mr. Herbert:

1. In each of the past five years, what amount did the Canadian International Development Agency give to the Overseas Book Centre and on what basis was the amount determined?

2. What are the objectives of the Overseas Book Centre and who are the beneficiaries?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. CIDA's contributions to the Overseas Book Centre over the last five years were as follows:

1980-81:	$647,939;
1979-80:	592,939;
1978-79:	684,857;
1977-78:	449,000;
1976-77:	329,000.

CIDA's contributions were given on a matching ratio. In 1980-81 CIDA gave the Overseas Book Centre three dollars for every dollar the centre raised from the Canadian public. These contributions were given after a detailed review of the Overseas Book Centre's administrative capabilities and procedures, its fund-raising capacity and the value of the books and equipment collected from the Canadian public being sent to developing countries. Also considered was the strong indication from both Overseas and Canadian non-governmental organizations of the value of OBC's services. The estimated value of the goods supplied to Third World countries by OBC in 1980-81 is $4 million.

2. The Overseas Book Centre is a charitable, overseas aid organization working in the field of education. OBC has two main areas of activity:

(1) The book program, whereby school textbooks, reference materials, library books, and encyclopaedias which are donated to the OBC by publishers, school boards, libraries, and private donors, are shipped overseas to needy recipient institutions. Special emphasis is placed on supplying books and materials for students in teacher colleges, nursing schools, agricultural colleges, and technical institutes. Last year OBC sent more than 200 tons of books to over 1300 institutions in 80 different countries.

(2) Special projects, wherein support is provided for functional adult literacy programs, especially in conjunction with instruction in health and hygiene, nutrition, simple skills training and the like, as well as indigenous publishing of educational materials, especially "non-formal" materials aimed at the most in need.

Project assistance can take the form of small cash grants for the supply of paper and simple printing equipment.

CUSTOMS OFFICERS AND TRAFFIC AT PORT OF DOUGLAS, B.C.

Question No. 2,092—Mr. Cook:

1. During the 1980 Thanksgiving weekend, what was the number of (a) cars and passengers (b) buses and passengers that passed through the Douglas Crossing on the King George VI Highway, Surrey, British Columbia?

2. During the same weekend, what was the number of customs officers on duty on a shift-by-shift basis serving on the crossing?

3. What is the number of customs officers on duty on a two day weekend on a shift-by-shift basis on the crossing?

4. Are extra customs offices available on an immediate basis if border points become clogged?

5. Are extra customs officers available to inspect convoys of tour buses?

Mr. Claude Tessier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): 1. (a) and (b) During the 1980 Thanksgiving weekend the following traffic was cleared through the port of Douglas, B.C.:

Saturday	4,163 cars	9,519 passengers
Sunday	4,512 cars	9,943 passengers
Monday	5,318 cars	13,139 passengers

In addition, on Saturday, four freight trains, on Sunday, two freight trains and on Monday, three freight trains plus one passenger train were cleared by Douglas officers. The train clearance point is ½ mile west of Douglas.

Buses do not enter through Douglas but through the Port of Pacific Highway one mile east of Douglas. The following traffic was cleared through Pacific Highway on the Thanksgiving weekend:

Saturday	1,254 cars	2,844 passengers
	28 buses	1,074 passengers
Sunday	2,339 cars	5,394 passengers
	18 buses	596 passengers
Monday	2,369 cars	5,225 passengers
	17 buses	481 passengers

2. The number of officers on duty per shift was as follows:

		A.M.	P.M.	Midnight
Douglas	Saturday	7	9	3
	Sunday	9	10	3
	Monday	10	8	3

Please note that the Monday p.m. shift of eight officers includes two held over on overtime from a.m. shift and two part-time officers called in. These were necessary because of absence due to illness.

		A.M.	P.M.	Midnight
Pacific Highway	Saturday	5	4	2
	Sunday	4	5	2
	Monday	5	7	2

Please note that on Monday, two officers scheduled for the p.m. shift were called in at noon, raising the number of officers to seven for the period from noon to 1600 hours.

3. The usual number of officers on duty at Douglas during a normal weekend is:

	A.M.	P.M.	Midnight
Saturday	7	9	3
Sunday	9	10	3

4. At the beginning of each shift all officers are assigned to various duties, there is no reserve. If a superintendent sees traffic building up or anticipates it, he usually telephones the afternoon shift officers and arranges for some to come in around noon. If the p.m. superintendent at the beginning of his shift has a backlog of traffic he will ask members of the morning shift to stay over until traffic eases off. No officers are available on an immediate basis for relief. The two crossings of Douglas and Pacific Highway are one mile apart, and if the traffic is heavy at one port it is usually heavy at the other port also, hence relief cannot normally be sent from one port to the other.

5. Greyhound scheduled buses arrive at Pacific Highway between 1500 and 2100 hours daily. While tour buses have been advised to avoid the above time period, they are all competitive and frequently arrive at the border in groups and are often mixed in with the Greyhound buses. There are no extra officers available to inspect these tour buses.

CAPELIN OFFSHORE HARVEST

Question No. 2,097—Mr. McGrath:

1. Does the government intend to eliminate the harvest of offshore capelin within Canada's 200-mile economic zone?

2. How much offshore caplin were caught in 1980 and by whom?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1. Offshore capelin stocks are currently at low levels. Until offshore capelin stocks have recovered sufficiently, no licensing will be permitted for either domestic or foreign offshore vessels. To aid in the scientific research of the northern capelin stocks an exploratory permit has been granted to the U.S.S.R. to allow 650 MT catch in sub-areas 2+ 3K (the Labrador and northeast Newfoundland waters within the 200-mile economic zone).

2. In 1980, the only commercial offshore fishing effort in the capelin fishery was by the U.S.S.R. under an exploratory permit of 5,000 MT. An actual catch of 4,818 MT was recorded.

SITE FOR LIQUEFIED NATURAL GAS TERMINAL

Question No. 2,130—Mr. Howie:

1. Since January 1, 1980, were studies conducted by the Department of Transport concerning the location of a site for a liquefied natural gas terminal and, if so, what site or sites were recommended?

2. (a) Was any site in New Brunswick considered (b) was a site recommended and was it rejected and, if so, for what reason?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Transport Canada has not on its own initiative conducted any studies since January 1, 1980, concerning the location of a site for a liquefied natural gas terminal. Transport Canada is in the process of assessing several submissions from companies proposing such terminals. In assessing these proposals, under an assessment system called TERMPOL, the department's Coast Guard, Ship Safety Branch, reviews the ship accessibility, terminal construction and environmental risk factors, and recommends to the proponent any restrictions, constraints or changes that might be necessary in the interest of safety. The assessments do not produce recommendations for one site over another, but rather an evaluation of the perceived problems or constraints that would arise at each of the sites submitted by a proponent.

2. (a) and (b) Submissions made by the Arctic Pilot Project Consortium in respect of the proposed Canso (Melfort Point) LNG site, indicate the proponent had considered and rejected other Nova Scotia and New Brunswick sites. Transport Canada has only been requested to assess two sites, the one at Canso and another at Gros Cacouna, Quebec. An earlier proposal by the same consortium for an LNG port at Saint John, New Brunswick (Lorneville) was withdrawn before the TERMPOL assessment began.

PILFERING OF BAGGAGE AT AIRPORTS

Question No. 2,149—Mr. Korchinski:

1. For each airport in Canada, how many reports of pilfering of baggage were received in each of the past three years and, in each case, how many persons were apprehended or was action taken against?

2. In each case, how many employees were suspended or was court action taken against?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Security of baggage is the responsibility of the air carriers who report pilferage and theft to the police force having primary criminal jurisdiction. The police force is responsible for apprehension and court action. Transport Canada is not normally informed of these occurrences.

2. None.

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK

Question No. 2,173—Mr. Herbert:

1. What amount was written off as non-collectable by the Federal Business Development Bank?

2. What is the total amount presently outstanding on which repayment is in arrears?

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned, the Federal Business Development Bank advises as follows:

1. Fiscal Year 1979 (March 31)	$13,240,660.
Fiscal Year 1980 (March 31)	$19,439,885.
2. As at February 28, 1981	$372,150,903.

Order Paper Questions

MRS. PAT JORDAN—CUSTOMS DECLARATION

Question No. 2,186—Mr. Riis:

1. Upon her return to Canada from the Orient in the summer of 1980, did British Columbia tourist minister, Mrs. Pat Jordan file a customs declaration identifying two shipments, one containing jade, the other containing furniture, as personal goods acquired abroad and that they would be subsequently shipped to British Columbia.

2. Were the shipments addressed to Mrs. Jordan personally or addressed to the government of British Columbia?

3. Did Mrs. Jordan pay duty on the shipments and, if so, did she pay it when she made the declaration or on some subsequent date?

4. Were any events and/or actions taken by Canada Customs to bring about a payment of duty tax on the shipments and, if so, what were they?

Mr. Claude Tessier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): 1. Upon her return from the Orient, Mrs. Jordan did file a customs declaration which included two shipments of goods to follow, namely a rug and a carton of miscellaneous souvenirs.

2. The shipments were addressed to Mrs. Jordan and not the British Columbia government.

3. At the time of her arrival, Mrs. Jordan paid duties and taxes on these goods in her possession which were in excess of her tourist exemption. She subsequently cleared the goods to follow upon their arrival. The rug was cleared at Vancouver airport, the box of souvenirs, including some inexpensive jade pieces, was cleared at Victoria.

4. When the goods to follow arrived in Canada, Mrs. Jordan was advised of their arrival in the normal manner and duty and taxes were collected as applicable.

GOVERNMENT COST TO PROCESS A FAMILY ALLOWANCE CHEQUE

Question No. 2,187—Mr. Flis:

How much does it cost the government to process a family allowance cheque for the minimum amount of $22 per month?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): The cost to the government to process a family allowance cheque per month is 60.3 cents. This is a composite total for the administrative processes within Health and Welfare Canada and Supply and Services Canada. It includes overhead costs and postage.

CANADIAN RAILWAY CARS IN UNITED STATES

Question No. 2,199—Mr. Herbert:

1. How many Canadian railway cars are presently believed to be in the United States and how many have been out of Canada for a period exceeding one month?

2. Has there been any appreciable change in the past five years in the number of the cars that are in the United States and in the type of cars that are sent across the border?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. There were 21,227 Canadian railway cars in the United States as of February 28, 1981, with less than 5 per cent exceeding a period of 30 days out of Canada.

2. There has been no appreciable change in the past five years in the number of cars that are in the United States. Records reveal that there has been a slight reduction in the number of covered hopper, flat, open-top gondola and hopper cars in the U.S. with a slight increase in the number of boxcars moving to the United States.

DSS—SLOWNESS OF PAYROLL SECTION

Question No. 2,212—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Department of Supply and Services receive numerous complaints regarding alleged slowness of the payroll section in making adjustments to the pay of the public servants over and above the usual routine salary payments?

2. Have many employees waited months for severance pay and, if so, what is being done to correct the situation?

3. How soon is it estimated that the service will be considered adequate?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Over the past year, the impact of a major systems modification, an increase in the volume and complexity of contract settlements, as well as the impact of the CR labour disruption, have all affected the level of service provided by the Department of Supply and Services. In particular, the loss of service experienced during the CR labour disruption inevitably created a substantial backlog of work. The backlog in turn led to delays in the processing of all pay changes (such as promotional increases, transfers, terminations, as well as other adjustments to pay). This disruption in our normal turnaround times subsequently resulted in an unusually large volume of inquiries received during the months of November, December, January and February.

2. The turnaround time taken to process severance pay was similarly affected by the events illustrated in No. 1. In order to minimize any delays relating to the processing of pay, the Department of Supply and Services is presently devoting all efforts to clearing up the backlog as quickly as possible. In fact, the backlog has been reduced significantly over the past month.

3. The pay service has been restored to a normal level as of the end of February, 1981, in all but one pay office. This office will be current by the end of March, 1981.

ST. LAWRENCE ISLANDS NATIONAL PARK EMPLOYEES

Question No. 2,215—Mr. Cossitt:

What was the name and job designation of each person employed at the St. Lawrence Islands National Park during 1980?

PARKS CANADA STUDIES—BANFF NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 681—Mr. Taylor:

1. During the years 1974 to 1979, what was the subject and purpose of all studies carried out under the authority of Parks Canada or any offices of Parks Canada involving Banff National Park or any aspect of the Park and, in each case (a) who carried out the study (b) on what date was it (i) started (ii) completed (c) what was its cost?

2. Were all the studies put to tender and, if not, what method was used to select the person, persons or firm that carried out each study?

3. Did the staff of Parks Canada carry out studies on the same or similar topics and, if so, in each case (a) what is an outline of the topic (b) how long did it take (c) what was its cost?

Return tabled.

DEPARTMENT OF SOLICITOR GENERAL—CONSULTANTS

Question No. 759—Mr. Shields:

Since August 1, 1978, how many (a) administrative (b) policy consultants were under contract to the Department of the Solicitor General and/or any Boards, Commissions or Corporations reporting to the Minister and, in each case, what amount was paid to them?

Return tabled.

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER

Question No. 1,462—Mr. Deans:

1. From 1965 to June 1980, how many orders in council were issued affecting International Harvester and its subsidiaries operating in Canada and what was the actual wording of each order in council?

2. What amount of customs duty was remitted for each order submitted concerning International Harvester and its subsidiaries?

3. What were the commitments from International Harvester and its subsidiaries in exchange for remitting each customs duty?

4. Did International Harvester and its subsidiaries meet each commitment?

Return tabled.

DND—ELECTRON TUBES

Question No. 2,057 (Revised)—Mr. McKinnon:

1. In 1980, how many contracts were placed by the Department of National Defence for electron tubes and (a) to which companies were contracts awarded (b) what was the amount of each contract?

2. Where were the electron tubes, specified in each contract, manufactured?

Return tabled.

SPORTS—AMOUNT BUDGETED

Question No. 2,102—Mr. Herbert:

Was any amount budgeted for sports in the fiscal year (a) 1978-79 (b) 1979-80 (c) 1980-81 and, if so (i) what was the amount (ii) in each case, which association or group received a grant and in what amount?

Return tabled.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION TO LIMIT REPORT STAGE AND THIRD READING DEBATE ON BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL

The House resumed, from March 31, 1981, consideration of the motion of the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Bussières):

That, in relation to Bill C-59, an act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of each of the report stage and the third reading stage of the bill; and

That, at fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on those days, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, when I spoke at the commencement of this debate a couple of days ago, I had three or four minutes left. I was pointing out to this House, as was pointed out by the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) that today during question period the government still has $6.4 billion available in the bank. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) said the government had only $4.8 billion available. But I remind hon. members of this House that the government still has more than the $11 billion in the till, or $8 billion borrowing authority, as suggested by this party. That is all the government needs for this year. The government has no need for any more money than provided in the amendment at report stage. If the government accepts the amendment, it would have enough money. This is a blank cheque government. I said that the other night.

Let us now go on to the question of time allocation. This is a time allocation debate. A government which comes to the House of Commons with a time allocation debate must say (a) there is an emergency or (b) that the government has been filibustered to death. On this matter, we have had one day's debate. Three speakers from this party have spoken. It was a Friday afternoon. But that is all we have had. There is no filibuster, there is no delay, there is no waste of time. There is no reason for Standing Order 75C to be imposed.

This debate is about whether this House of Commons should now employ a method of time allocation that involves Standing Order 75C.

The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) tells us there is an emergency. On the face of it, there is no emergency. The government has lots of money. The government has more money than it has ever had in years and years and years. The government has money coming out of its ears. Why does the government need the government borrowing authority bill? It does not need the money. There is no emergency. The government wants to limit the discussion by members of Parliament talking on behalf of their constituents about the economic concerns of Canada. That is why the government want to limit debate. It is not a matter of a national emergency. The government does not need the money, it has lots of it. The question is one of limiting debate.

The government does not want a debate on its inept performance as a government. I do not blame the government. It is the worst government this country has ever had. It is no wonder the government does not want to debate this issue. If the government did debate this issue, all of a sudden the people of Canada would rally together and say yes, this is the most inept government this country has ever had.

This debate is a total misuse and abuse of the rules of this House. This government has talked for the last few days about our party misusing the rules of Parliament. Here is a case where the government is abusing the rules of this Parliament. This government is bringing closure under Standing Order 75C to limit the debate to two days when there has been how much debate? There has been but a half day's debate on a Friday afternoon. That is misuse of the rules. That is misuse and abuse of the rules of Parliament.

Surely a government which claims to run by the rule of law would not want to misuse the rule of law. That is what it is doing, though.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allocated to him has expired.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When Standing Order 75C was imposed on this House of Commons—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Blenkarn: I want to say this and I make this point of order, and I do have respect for the Chair. There was a suggestion by the government that this rule would never be imposed until there has been debate for three, four or five days.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Blenkarn: No, Mr. Speaker, when this rule is imposed with one day's debate—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The time allocated to the hon. member has expired. It is in order for the Chair to recognize the next speaker. The hon. member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart).

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the discussion on Bill C-59 and the billions of dollars—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Knowles: No, Mr. Speaker, I was rising to take part in the debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Simcoe South caught my eye and I recognized him. Bearing in mind the normal courtesies of the House, I hope that it will be possible to extend recognition to the hon. member for Simcoe South.

Mr. Beatty: Is this a filibuster?

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to strain the agreement that has been made unduly, but the custom is to alternate between the opposition and the government. I have been seeking the floor to participate in this debate, not on a point of order, and that is the reason I have been jumping up and down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have recognized the hon. member for Simcoe South. I will take due note of the usual practices in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the Chair, I accept your decision.

As has just been pointed out by my colleague to the left, Bill C-59 will give borrowing authority for billions of dollars that are not needed. Then we come to Standing Order 75C, which really is closure. It is the muzzling of debate in this House in which a member who seeks the floor wishes to take part, we hope, in all good faith.

Time allocation is terrible. The constitutional debate in which we have engaged has run into a problem of legality. All of this takes the form of closure. But worse than that, we are not getting on with the real problems which are facing this country. All my constituents tell me these problems are tantamount to disaster if things go on the way they are, with inflation the way it is, with own unemployment and the real economic woes we face.

Canada's record in every economic indicator is appalling. The rate of inflation has passed 12 per cent. The rate of unemployment is almost at the double-digit stage. It has been chronically high for the past decade. The Canadian dollar has never been lower in comparison to the United States. Some of the most important elements of Canada's manufacturing plants continue to experience staggering trade deficits. In the plastics industry, with a total annual production of about $4 billion, there is a $1 billion deficit. The only people who are successful in the plastics industry are the people who are using R and D and up-to-date technology, such as our friends in Japan, in order to keep pace. One such plant happens to be in my constituency of Simcoe South. It is called Moldex. It manufactures toilet seats. The owner has kept up with inflation.

• (2020)

Mr. Evans: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to rule on the question of relevance. This debate is on Bill C-59, the borrowing authority, but the hon. member is talking about toilet seats.

Mr. Taylor: Inflation is so bad you can't buy them any more.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Simcoe South has the floor.

Mr. Stewart: The point is that we are on the borrowing authority and we are borrowing billions of dollars.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: And they are flushing them down.

Mr. Stewart: Look at the plastics industry. The fact is the government has about $4 billion available and a $1 billion deficit. Is that not borrowing? I was trying to say that in this particular manufacturing industry, we can be proud because it is a successful industry in this country. It has made use of robots as they do in Japan—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: So does the Liberal caucus.

Mr. Stewart: —if hon. members will take the time to go there and check. There is a little slogan that says "born in Barrie and raised everywhere" and it is very successful. In the case of computer hardware, the deficit has grown from $274 million in 1976 to more than half a billion in 1979. It is still growing and we are still borrowing. Even in mining and construction, the equipment area where Canada is recognized as a world leader, there is a deficit just under a billion dollars annually. When we talk about borrowing, it is about time we started to call a spade a shovel.

Mr. Evans: Hey, that's good.

Mr. Stewart: This country is in an economic mess. That is because of borrowing. Canadians possess a piece of real estate on this planet that is the envy of the world, and they are not making any more real estate.

Mr. Taylor: That's for sure.

Mr. Stewart: We have all the ingredients we need to be self-sufficient and we have the human and physical resources to achieve greatness in the world community of nations, but not by borrowing. We have access to petroleum reserves and every known mineral in the world, many of them in abundance. We have rich farmland, the fisheries, all the wherewithal to meet our domestic requirements and then some, if we stop borrowing. We have the capacity to become one of the manufacturing giants of the world. We have the capacity to become one of the world's great exporting nations. Instead, we have not begun to exploit our enormous potential.

We are still hewers of wood and drawers of water. Much of our export trade is raw or semi-processed resources. We find ourselves in the ludicrous position of exporting our raw resources to other countries and then ending up buying them back in the form of fully finished manufactured or processed products. It is being done by borrowing.

For a decade the government has paid lip service to industrial strategy and research and development. With this government, if I may paraphrase Lewis Carroll in "Through the Looking Glass", it is always "jam yesterday and jam tomorrow but never jam today".

Let us just look for a minute at expenditures on research and development. My colleague in the House of Commons and my party's spokesman for research and development, the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist), has just issued a special report on R and D. We currently spend less than 1 per cent, .94 per cent to be exact, of the gross national product on research and development. We borrow to do everything else. My colleague's expert sources tell him that for every one half of 1 per cent of the gross national product spent on research, 400,000 jobs are created. That is what we are talking about: jobs, inflation, the economy, not borrowing. That expenditure by the government would cut unemployment by 50 per cent in this country.

Research and development investment increases of 1.5 per cent or 2 per cent could eliminate unemployment. I am a businessman. I operate a small wholesale business in Barrie, Ontario, which has been in business since 1892. Our annual sales are in excess of $15 million. I will tell you, as a businessman, I am appalled at the way the government is mismanaging this country. We are running harder to stand still. Our manufacturing sector is overtaxed, overregulated and is not in a position to compete with the industrial plants of other nations. Those are the hard facts and it is getting worse and worse as we continue this borrowing madness.

We can turn it all around. The idea is not to be negative but positive. But the longer the government keeps its head in the sand, the longer it will take us to catch up with the rest of the world. We should never have been placed in the position of playing catch-up ball by a huge deficit and by more and more borrowing.

Look at what is happening in the rest of the world. Last year I had the good fortune of visiting Japan. In 1980, Japan produced ten million more watches than Switzerland. That may seem a ludicrous statement, but think about the transition that has happened in that country and how they did it. They did not do it by borrowing. The Japanese have long since overtaken and passed the United States in television and radio production. Japanese steel plants have the same capacity as the United States and almost as much as the European Common Market.

Three years ago, Japanese investment in new plant and equipment equalled that of the United States, but listen to this—with half the population, the per capita investment was twice that of the United States, and this did not happen by borrowing. In the early eighties, Japan will surpass the United States in total research and development.

Very soon Japan will be a world leader in computers, motorcycles, machine tools, copying machines and snowmobiles. Does anyone in this House think there is any reason why Canada could not do the same with our economy if we stopped borrowing?

I see my time is almost up. Let me conclude by saying that if we were to obtain large quantities of investment dollars, Canada would have to employ the same techniques that are used in other countries. We could do that with a lot of other vehicles, such as profit sharing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Before recognizing the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the Chair would like to call to the attention of the House the provisions of Standing Order 40(7):

> When it is provided in any standing or special order of this House that any specified business shall be continued beyond the ordinary time of daily adjournment or that any such business shall be forthwith disposed of or concluded in any sitting, the adjournment proceedings in that sitting shall be suspended.

It is anticipated that the adjournment proceedings will be suspended this evening.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under rule 75C we are limited to speeches of ten minutes each. It is not my purpose to take the ten minutes tonight. I made it clear when, on behalf of our party, I agreed to this being the business for tonight that we would be voting against the motion that is before us under rule 75C.

I have said on many occasions that in my view, every time the government uses this rule as a way out of a time problem, it puts off the day when we come up with something better. I have contended many times that there are other ways to plan the business of the House to avoid impasses and get the business done, but we do not seem to get around to that.

As I say, every time this rule is used, that puts off for another month, or another year, who knows, some sensible planning of the work of the House of Commons. Therefore, we are still opposed to the use of this rule. We oppose it in particular being applied to a borrowing authority bill of the magnitude of this bill.

Some of my colleagues will have something to say about the bill itself, its merits or demerits, when we get to the report stage tomorrow and the third reading debate on Monday, but for now may I simply indicate quite clearly and forcefully that when the vote comes tonight at 9.45 or ten o'clock, the New Democratic Party will be voting no.

● (2030)

Mr. David Smith (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I think the motion we have before us tonight is one none of us enjoys. It is something which simply has to be moved. We have to govern this country in an orderly and reasonable fashion. What has happened in recent days is well known. The legislative timetable of parliament has, in fact, ground to a halt. We have lost week after week after week because of unnecessary delay, filibustering and outright opposition to the Constitution. At some point there are other things which have to be dealt with and we would like to deal with them. What we are talking about here is not closure but, in fact, time allocation.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) made a very good point when he said that perhaps it is about time the rules were revamped so as not to have to go the 75C route. I agree with that. I think the House leader of our party agrees with it, and I certainly hope that during the life of this Parliament we can come to grips with it. In the meantime we have not been able to come to grips with anything for some weeks. We must set a reasonable time limit so as to be able to come to grips with this bill and borrow the money which is in fact necessary to keep the government going.

I was interested in the comments of the hon. member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) who was talking about borrowing, how he is opposed to borrowing, does not like it and thinks we should not be doing it. I am not sure anybody is wild about it, but the fact of the matter is that when his party was in power briefly, the deficit was not decreased. We heard a lot of predictions prior to that party assuming power, that in fact when it got into office the deficit would decrease immediately. That did not happen. I remember the day when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) said he had come to the conclusion, in fact, that the deficit would perhaps have to go up but this would be a short-term measure and, hopefully, after a reasonable period of time they would be able to turn things around and start a shrinking deficit, reducing the requirement for borrowing. That certainly was what was supposed to happen in terms of an increased deficit in the budget of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). That is exactly what did happen.

It is not as though suddenly you can somehow push a button, wave a magic wand and the need for borrowing disappears. There are some facts of life, and one of them is that before we are in a position to eliminate borrowing, we will have to continue to borrow if in fact the process of government is to continue. That is what we have to do. It is with regret we are in the position where we have no choice but to use the provisions of 75C to bring this to a head and get on with it, but that is the position we are in.

In the last few days, since March 24, there have been well over 100 points of order and questions of privilege, virtually all of which have been frivolous and spurious. In fact, the House leader of the official opposition indicated they were prepared to waste the time of Parliament. I was sitting opposite when he used that phrase. I sort of had the feeling he immediately knew he has said something like C. D. Howe when he said, "what's a million", or something like Walter Harris when he said, "the six-buck boys". It just gets out and you wish somehow you could pull that word back in or that you had not used it. He did say that. He said they were prepared to deliberately waste the time of Parliament. If there is one thing on which I am prepared to congratulate the opposition House leader it is his honesty on that occasion. He was very honest because that is what they have been doing for some time, and, regrettably, that is what they continue to do.

I sense a better mood in the House today. I hope we may be reaching the point where we can come to some agreement on the impasse which has held Parliament up to ransom. "Hijacked Parliament" is a phrase that has been used, and I think that is accurate. It is unfortunate we are in this situation, but we have to get on with the governing of the country. We must pass this borrowing bill, and we are using Standing Order 75C, not in any improper way, as was suggested a few minutes ago, but in accordance with the Standing Orders in a quite proper, reasonable and legitimate way. This is a custom which has developed in recent years. I do not believe we forced the government of that party opposite to do that when we were in opposition, but it is something that has become the custom in recent years. Until we are able to revamp the rules, it may well be that this custom will continue.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for correcting the speaking order which was thrown out of line a little bit. I would like to participate in this particular debate to deal with two aspects of the motion before us. The first is the procedural aspect, and the second is the financial aspect dealing with Bill C-59.

My friend, the hon. member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith), I think outlined rather well the reasons the government is acting in this manner. I think I should amplify his comments, especially for those people who are watching this debate in their homes across the nation.

Very often members on the other side, and I know the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was hinting at this, give the impression that what we are doing is closing off debate, again denying the right of members to speak. Anyone who has sat here for the last week and a half and talked about the denial of the right of Members of Parliament to speak, really could not have been paying much attention to what has been going on. If there is eagerness tonight on the part of members on this side to participate in this debate, it is simply that we have been sitting here patiently for the last six or seven working days watching members of the official opposition rise on points of order and questions of privilege, engaging in debate that we have labelled as obstruction. I do not particularly want to get into the troubles of the last few days, but I would—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. May I call to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette) that the debate before us relates to borrowing authority.

Mr. Collenette: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, what is before us is the motion under Standing Order 75C in relation to the borrowing authority bill. I think it is quite within my right to discuss procedural matters in connection with Bill C-59, the borrowing authority. That is the reason I was making the comments I was making, following on the comments by the hon. member for Don Valley East and my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. This is a procedural motion. It does not necessarily deal with the substance of the borrowing bill. What we have to explain to the people out there, members of the House and those who read Hansard, is why the government is limiting debate at this particular stage.

I was about to say that the reason we are doing this is that the affairs of the nation must be conducted in fairness, yes, but with some expediency. The government has an obligation, and I know members on the other side decry this. This government was elected to govern the country. It was elected to put before Parliament legislation to deal with the governing of this nation. It is an obligation of the government to see that its legislative program gets through Parliament using, of course, the proper parliamentary means at its disposal. The motion under 75A, B and C was developed about 11 or 12 years ago as a means to speed up debate. We in this country have almost a gun-shyness about using any allocation of time motion. We are faced today with the fact that our rules are somewhat archaic, but in today's modern society when fast decisions are required, when inflation, unemployment, and exchange problems all face Canadians, Parliament must act as best it can.

I submit that we need a major overhaul of our rules. One of those overhauls took place 11 or 12 years ago and the development of the time allocation motion which is now before us this evening was adopted. It is a means on which agreement cannot be achieved. And agreement could not be achieved in this case. I was present at those meetings, as is called for in the Standing Orders, when agreement under Standing Order 75A and 75C was not possible on report stage and third reading of Bill C-59. Therefore, it is perfectly within the rights of the government to proceed in this fashion.

• (2040)

Now, in Great Britain, the Mother of all Parliaments, Westminster—which has been cited this week as a substantial basis for the positions of those arguing points of order concerning the constitutional debate—is much more efficient than we are. Second reading of a bill passes within one sitting. That sitting may last until six o'clock in the morning, but it is of one day's duration. Mr. Speaker, how much debate is required to state whether one or one's party is or is not in favour of a piece of legislation before the House? So I think that the use of the time allocation rule 75C is quite defensible.

I draw your attention, as I have in other debates since we used this rule on Bill C-30 earlier in Parliament and Bill C-48 in January, to the fact that we have used it three times in this Parliament—

Mr. Knowles: You use it quite often.

Mr. Collenette: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) says we use it quite often; I make no apology for that, Mr. Speaker. If this government is to discharge its obligations to the people of Canada to govern, then it has to get its legislative program through Parliament with efficiency and with fairness. And this is fair because tomorrow we will be debating at report stage, on Monday, we will be debating on third reading, and we have had other days of debate, second reading and committee deliberations. Therefore, what we are doing tonight really does not deny the rights of any Member of Parliament to participate. That is what is going on in the next hour or so.

I would draw your attention to Hansard of December 5, 1979. My good friend, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) rose in this House to move a motion under Standing Order 75C on Bill C-20, which was the infamous Conservative property tax credit then before the House. I believe it was at Committee of the Whole stage. He talked in terms of this not being closure, of it being time allocation, a far gentler measure. And he said, quite rightly so because he was in government at the time, that the government has a certain responsibility when all positions have been made known, when everybody has expressed their opinion, to actually force the debate to an end and force the question.

I do not want to stray because I know that tempers have perhaps flared in the past few days, but I submit there is an analogy between the time allocation we are proposing on this borrowing bill and the time allocation discussion on the Constitution. I will not belabour that point, but I want our friends in the country watching us tonight, and members on the other side, to realize that this is no nefarious scheme to gag Parliament, this is purely a fair and efficient manner of disposing of the government's legislative program. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) stated earlier this year that he was not embarrassed to use the time allocation motion, and I quite agree with him. I think my colleagues on this side agree. It is up to the Canadian public to actually make the final decision as to whether or not the government is indeed cutting off debate and doing it in an unfair manner.

When this was done in 1956, the government of the day fell because, with all due respect to the fact that it was a Liberal government, Standing Order 43, which is not what is applied tonight, was used, but not in the most judicious manner. So it is not the rule that matters but how it is applied, whether there is not only a semblance and appearance but actual fairness in any debate terminated, whether by time allocation or by closure. I hate to mention that because closure is almost a four letter word, it is almost unparliamentary. This is not closure this evening, Mr. Speaker, this is time allocation; this is putting reasonable order to the debate before us.

An hon. Member: A rose by any other name.

Mr. Collenette: I had hoped to talk a little bit in depth about the substantive aspect of Bill C-59, but the parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) is here and is far more qualified than I to deal with that. All I will say is that what we have in this bill is the government seeking authority to borrow some $14 billion, $3 billion of which would, in a sense, be insurance against unusual delays in approval of the authority to borrow. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, with what has gone on the last few days, I think it is very prudent indeed for the government to take steps to get that kind of insurance because, as the President of the Privy Council stated earlier, Bill C-59 should have been passed yesterday. There is an urgent need for it. And I say with all respect, I am glad the members of the official opposition have terminated their dislocation and disorder in this House to allow us to get this measure through Parliament today and tomorrow. One must give credit where it is due, and for that I thank them very much.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, what we are now debating is another motion by a closure-crazy government to close debate. To close debate on what? On a bill that provides this government with authority to borrow $14 billion in addition to the $12 billion they were authorized to borrow just last July. This bill has been discussed at report stage for only one day and the government brings in closure to choke off debate and assigns two more days to debate the issues on this bill.

What does the bill provide, in addition to giving the government authority to borrow $14 billion? It has a new twist. It also gives them the authority to carry on with borrowing authority up to $3 billion beyond March 31, 1982. And when we ask them why they want the authority to do that, which has not been the practice in this House, they say it is because of contingencies, that there might be some kind of contingency that will require them to have $3 billion extra borrowing authority beyond the end of next year.

What about closure, Mr. Speaker? We have just seen this government attempt to hijack the whole Canadian nation, not Parliament but our whole country, destroy the very consensus on which it is based by using their majority in this House to do things they were not authorized to do by the public. They never had the guts and gumption to put this to the public, and that is why we on this side of the House have resisted, and we are going to continue to resist right to the last. They are not a legitimate government when they attempt to change the very nature of Canada from a federal state to something different, without the public having been asked to approve it before they attempt to do it.

So we have seen the spectacle for the last several weeks, Mr. Speaker, of the government deciding what business this House will consider. And we have had a government which does not want to consider anything but changes to the very Constitution of this country that will change its fundamental nature and that they and they alone have decided to bring the work of this Parliament to a halt while they try to pursue that objective. So it has been the government's choice. They are not interested in the fact that the cost of living in Canada is up 12.2 per cent, they are not interested in the fact that we have 928,000 unemployed, not interested in any of the economic conditions bothering the Canadian people. The government is interested in only one thing, and that is the Constitution. We have had a Constitution for 114 years, and the world's most perfect constitution would not bring us one iota closer to solving any of the economic problems that the people of this country are now suffering from.

An hon. Member: Speak to the motion.

Mr. Crosbie: I am speaking to the motion. The government wants $14 billion, it is imposing closure on this Parliament to get it, and with that $14 billion they are going to have a deficit of $13.7 billion. They have no anti-inflation program, no program to help the ordinary people of this country; all they are interested in is to carry on with the fetish of the one person who leads them and leads them by the nose. Not only leads them by the nose but says that over in England Members of Parliament there have to hold their noses while they put forward whatever dog's breakfast the government opposite sends over to them. That is why we are resisting on this side of the House. That is why any kind of resistance we put forward is legitimate. It is proper. It is to save this country and to preserve it.

● (2050)

The parliamentary assistant to the House leader says that the House leader is not embarrassed by using the closure motion. We know that. Nothing embarrasses the House leader for the government. He is not embarrassed at using closure. He has used it frequently since we came back 13 months ago. He is even prepared to use it on attempts to change the fundamental character of this nation, changes that the government never had the guts to go to the electorate with. The government deceived the people of Quebec about it last May and it now uses closure again. We know he is not embarrassed. There is nothing that would embarrass that hon. gentleman.

The parliamentary assistant to the House leader says that there is an urgent need for this bill. We had information today from the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) that the government has $4.8 billion cash right in the bank at this moment—the minister has $4.8 billion in his hip pocket. He does not need any borrowing authority whatsoever for the month of April. I doubt that he needs any borrowing authority for the month of May either. He could not give us a reason today why he needs it. All he said was that he wants the bill passed so that an orderly approach to the bond markets can be made. That, Mr. Speaker, to put it very simply, is complete and utter twaddle.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I say twaddle. I am using a polite word because I am always parliamentary when I speak here. I have great respect for you, Mr. Speaker, and I like to keep my words parliamentary. That is why I use the word twaddle instead of what it would be called on the outside.

There is no urgent need for this bill. Even if this bill does not pass the House until the end of May. The government has enough cash in the bank to carry on its operations. We even heard some suggestions the other day that the government would not be able to pay its bills, pay the RCMP, pay the poor widows and the poor people of Canada who receive social transfer payments, if this measure were not passed. And it was not passed, but everyone is still being paid. That is how much attention we must pay to members opposite.

I think that the parliamentary assistant to the House leader said that we have had dislocation and disorder in this House in the last several weeks.

An hon. Member: Absolutely!

Mr. Crosbie: We are saving Canada from dislocation and disorder. To do that, if we need a bit of dislocation in this House, that is what we will get—dislocation—until the government comes to its sense. We have begged it to go to the electorate to put these matters to the test and it dare not do that.

What is the record of the government opposite and of the gentleman who wanted the authority to borrow another $14 billion? By the way, Mr. Speaker, that does not include the borrowing that will be done for their Crown Corporations this year. In 1979-80, the Crown corporations for which the government is responsible borrowed $2.6 billion. Last year the figure was up another $1.6 billion. There will be several billions of dollars borrowed this year by Crown corporations for which the government is directly responsible, which has nothing to do with this bill. What is the government doing to try to restrain its own expenditures and set a good example to the nation?

The Minister of Finance is advising the people of this country, whose real wages have gone down 6 per cent in the last three or four years, since they have not been able to keep up with the cost of living increases, to hold tight, hold on to their belts and tighten them up, not go for wage and salary increases. The Minister of Finance is advising the wage earners of this nation not to expect wage increases which meet the rise in the cost of living this year, not to try to catch up. He is advising them to restrain themselves. What example is he giving to the people of the nation? He will have a deficit this year of $13.7 billion—that is just what he admits to. It will be considerably in excess of that. Last year it was $14.2 billion, which was a record for Canada. In the last ten years, it was $77.1 billion, if we include the year we are now in. In the last nine years, it was $63.4 billion. This is a Trudeau record. This is the record that he is leaving the Canadian people to pay. We have a total debt of $137 billion. The interest charges on this Trudeau debt—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Crosbie: —this Prime Ministerial debt, this legacy that he is leaving behind, amounts to $12,350 million this year. The interest charges alone in this present year exceed the entire budget of the Government of Canada in the first year that Mr. Trudeau took power—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Crosbie: —in 1968-69. Order, yes! If there was order in this country he would not be Prime Minister any longer, and he will not be if he accepts our challenge to go to the people now.

The whole budget of Canada was under $12,350 million when the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) started his career. In this year, 19.1 cents of every dollar the government spends will be spent on interest—19.1 cents out of every dollar that the taxpayers of Canada are paying. Those people are watching tonight. Out of every dollar they pay in taxes to this government this year, one of every four is going to pay interest on the debt that the Prime Minister has racked up for them over the last ten years. The cost to the average taxpayer this year is $795, up $2.1 billion over last year. And the parliamentary assistant claims that it is urgent for us to pass this bill so that they can go on in this course of action. You know, Mr. Speaker, there is no spending restraint. In the area of the cost of services to the government—services which it has done for itself, consultants, lawyers, Liberal this and Liberal that, and little Grits here, little Grits there, here a Grit, there a Grit, everywhere a Grit-Grit—expenditures have gone up 17 per cent. The cost of services for the government last year was $4 billion. This year it is $4.7 billion—another $700 million thrown out to little Grits here and there, chartered accountants, lawyers—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Crosbie: I regret that also, Mr. Speaker. I will vote against this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, with your permission, my comments will be about the use of Standing Order 75C and the need to reform the rules of the House rather than about the bill in respect of which the order is being used.

During the Thirtieth Parliament, the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization studied the question of reform of the rules of the House. Unfortunately, there was no action at the time in spite of much good will and hard work by members on all sides of the House. One particular proposition which received a good deal of attention at that time was the suggestion that, at the second reading stage, which is approval in principle, the debate be limited to one day and that the major debate on a bill should occur at third reading, after the committee has made whatever amendments seem appropriate following the hearing of witnesses. This is a proposal which I hope will be considered again and, perhaps, acted on shortly in this session.

What happens now at second reading stage is that we tend to have lengthy speeches. A long speech is not necessarily designed to be persuasive, to advance an argument or increase understanding. We have long speeches at second reading. We have the same points discussed in committee, again at report stage and again at third reading. I think members on all sides of the House suffer from this process because when fewer members can participate, both supporters of the government and members of the opposition feel frustrated. They do not feel the same sense of commitment toward dealing with the business of the House in an orderly fashion.

In the case of the bill before us, the borrowing authority, there were five days of debate at second reading before 75C was introduced, since it was not possible to reach an agreement to limit debate in any way. We then had another two days of debate after 75C was moved. This is a practice which seems to be taking place so often with our bills.

• (2100)

Recently I came across a definition of "nation" in St. Augustine's "the City of God" which read as follows:

A nation is an association of reasonable beings united in a peaceful sharing of the things they cherish.

I know many members of the opposition share that view. Very often when we work on committee, we are able to subordinate our partisan differences and work in a constructive fashion. We can expose our differences, but we do it with the intention of arriving at some common ground. Certainly as Canadians, when an all-party delegation goes abroad, usually we are able to agree among ourselves that we will present honestly our differences of opinion based on our different ideologies, but also, in the national interest, we try to present a reasonable picture of the things upon which we agree as Canadians.

What has been happening to the nation's business in recent days has been dispiriting. There has been a lot of name-calling which has been unsophisticated and unseemly. These have not been the highest days in the history of Parliament. While structural changes such as changes in the rules of the House will not solve all these problems, I think they would assist. With shorter speeches, with more work done in committee, with more opportunities for all of us to participate, we could reduce a lot of the unnecessary irritants in the House. We will always have differences of principle and differences of opinion, but it is urgent that we try to reduce some of the unnecessary irritants.

The eighteenth century definition that the role of opposition is "to oppose" is surely very old-fashioned for us. Surely, what is needed in our time is much more opportunity for members of the opposition and supporters of the government to work constructively together, recognizing some basic differences, and to be prepared occasionally to make more than a normal effort to find middle ground.

One of the big changes I should like to see, whenever we get around to discussing the rules of the House seriously, is a change in the rules of question period. In Westminster, supporters of the government can ask questions, just as members of the opposition can. In this House there has been a tradition that question period is the prerogative of the opposition. I think three Speakers have held that supporters of the government are able to get information in other ways. This is true, but I think our constituents have a right to see us representing their interests publicly; they should not always have to depend on faith and assume that we are pursuing their interests in caucus. It should be possible for those who have elected supporters of the government to see us expressing our concern for the interests of our constituents in exactly the same manner as members of the opposition can.

So, these are some of the issues which I trust will be addressed soon in Parliament. I know all members of the House would like to see some changes in the rules of the House which would enable us all to do our jobs more effectively and hopefully would reduce the number of occasions when Standing Order 75C or similar motions would have to be called into play.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in the debate on this closure motion. First, I should like to deal with a few comments of the parliamentary secretary to the House leader in his presentation when he indicated that they were elected to govern the nation and to bring forward policies, which is one of the reasons they brought on closure.

I hesitate to say it, but my friends opposite should examine their own consciences. If ever a party was elected to govern a nation and then became such great hypocrites, it is my friends opposite. They should examine upon what platform they were elected. They criticized my party for 18-cent gasoline. When we look at their record, in their short term we find it has risen some 41.5 cents per gallon. I will deal with that in more depth in a moment. They did not campaign on the constitutional issue; they did not say one word on the constitutional issue. Yet, they are willing to ram it down the throats of Canadians when the majority of the population is bitterly opposed to this issue.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Towers: They are a bunch of hypocrites.

Mr. Elzinga: I am talking to the closure motion, my friends. If the truth hurts, please squeal. Canadians wish you would squeal and back off on this very important issue.

Mr. Knowles: Address the Chair.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair calls the attention of the hon. member to the fact that what is before us is a time allocation motion dealing with the borrowing authority bill. I recognize there are some difficulties in the rule of relevance, but I would ask the hon. member to consider it.

Mr. Towers: It is all tied together.

Time Limitation

Mr. Elzinga: Perhaps I could seek Mr. Speaker's clarification before continuing. Am I allowed to deal with the motion upon which closure has been introduced in regard to Bill C-59? May I touch on that bill?

Mr. Collenette: It is not closure; it is time allocation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Obviously Bill C-59 is relevant to the discussion, and a measure to allocate time in regard to the debate is before the House.

Mr. Elzinga: In dealing with Bill C-59, it is noteworthy at this time to share with members of the House that we have introduced an amendment to reduce the borrowing authority to some $8 billion rather than $14 billion. It was interesting to hear the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) indicate that they were opposed to closure. It is obvious in the actions of that party that basically in their hearts they support this measure, even though they will vote against it. I wish they would be more forward with their positions as far as the Canadian public is concerned.

I should like to go through the economic record of the government, since this bill pertains to borrowing authority of some $14 billion. When we look at the record of hon. members opposite, we find it is a record of which they cannot be very proud. They should examine the record. As far as government spending is concerned, they have set records as far as the spending of government money is concerned which in reality is taxpayers' money.

As far as budgetary deficits are concerned, during the last election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) gave a commitment that he would not increase government spending in relation to the gross national product. We find that is not, in fact, happening. I cannot say what is happening in reality because it is unparliamentary, but he has not lived up to that commitment.

As far as unemployment is concerned, we now have the highest level we have experienced for many years. As far as taxation rates are concerned, again record levels have been set in Canada. There is double-digit inflation; it is out of control simply because the government cannot bring its own spending under control. Interest rates are another example of government mismanagement. Mismanagement is why you had to bring in closure on this issue, as you will have to do with the constitutional issue. You people do not know how to run the affairs of the nation.

Mr. Knowles: Order!

Mr. Elzinga: Obviously these are not records of which to be proud, yet hon. members opposite come forward with the constitutional issue in the hopes that Canadians will not realize the sad economic situation existing in Canada today. As the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) indicated, there have been 15 bankruptcies in the Nisku Industrial Park because of the government's National Energy Program. Is that a record to be proud of? Hon. members opposite are destroying the small business sector in this country. I could share with them articles which have appeared in numerous magazines which show that total bankruptcies in Canada are up some 17.3 per cent in 1980 as compared with 1979 because of their economic mismanagement.

I do not enjoy being bitter, but it is sad when we see individuals who have contributed much to this society going down the tube because of the lack of foresight which exists among hon. members opposite. It breaks my heart to see that happen in our nation, a nation which has an abundance of potential in natural resources, and an even more abundant potential in human resources.

It is sad when we look at what we had hoped to implement, but I want to share it again with hon. members opposite, who are blind to what we attempted to do in the short time we were in government. We had given an indication that we would reduce government spending. The minister of finance under our administration reduced government spending, yet his budget was termed as the most progressive budget in the last ten years. We did not hurt individuals who required help from the government, yet we were doing away with a great deal of the waste which exists again with respect to government spending today. We began to bring down budgetary deficits, which are a direct cause of inflation today. My friend, the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), is the Member of Parliament in whose constituency I live while I am in Ottawa. He claims he is an economist. He might have practised the art of economics, but he has not practised the science of economics, and there is a big difference.

We took a number of positive measures to reduce high interest rates. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette) indicated that when we were in government, his party filibustered one positive measure, our mortgage interest deductibility program. Hon. members opposite filibustered that measure, which we hoped to bring in to assist individuals attempting to purchase homes. Hon. members opposite are proud they filibustered a bill which would have helped home owners. They do not wish individuals to own homes. They do not wish individuals to own property. They will not even include property rights in the Constitution. They are nothing but a bunch of socialists.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Elzinga: They are obsessed with following one man, our present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and he is going to ruin this country.

We also introduced relief for the farming population with respect to capital gains. I am encouraged to see that my hon. friends opposite did accept portions of our budget. One measure which is good is for deductibility with respect to working spouses in family businesses or on family farms. Ours was the party which initiated the Small Business Development Bond. Ours was the party which pushed for the extension of that bond, and we are delighted to see that hon. members opposite had the insight to accept and implement that program.

I could deal with a number of issues. We were in government for a short period of time, but we were taking steps.

My time is almost up.

Mr. Towers: You haven't even started.

Mr. Elzinga: I was hoping to have the opportunity to share with hon. members opposite the submission of the Alberta Chamber of Commerce. That submission illustrates how money coming to Alberta through increased oil prices would benefit all Canadians because of spin-off benefits. I hope when hon. members opposite received this submission some weeks ago they read it, because all of us as Canadians will benefit from an increase in price for petroleum products.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I am torn between a feeling of satisfaction and a feeling of bitterness. That satisfaction stems from the fact that we in the House can talk with so much ease and abandon about billions of dollars without giving the odd thought to the fact that there are people in our country who have hardly a few cents to live or survive.

That satisfaction is due, of course, to the possibility we as Canadians have to own huge untapped resources which make it possible for us to use that borrowing power almost at will. But using that borrowing authority does involve some risks. Indeed we must never forget that we ought to show a lot more moderation when borrowing because we have to keep in mind that the money we borrow will sooner or later be paid back by the people, by the taxpayers and, especially, by the workers.

Mr. Speaker, I think I am speaking for the workers in my riding as well as others throughout the country when I say that taxes now weigh heavily on that class of citizens who never miss an opportunity to tell us that their pay cheque has a long list of deductions and precious little left in the way of income. I think that the debate this evening should make us pause for a moment, because if in today's world we have made commitments toward our people and must respect them by adopting the bill before us, we must still think about the future and ask ourselves how one day we will have to use more sparingly the money we can get so easily.

I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that I had mixed feelings of both satisfaction and bitterness. My bitterness stems from the atmosphere in this House. I have a feeling that every time the government introduces a bill, the speakers almost always feel obliged to attack, in a way that strikes me as exaggerated, the hon. members who try to represent as best they can the interests of the taxpayers.

I feel our hon. friends opposite should realize that we are not borrowing such enormous amounts for the fun of it. We have obligations to meet. We also have people who are entitled to a minimum of comfort, and we must protect the interests of the underprivileged in our society. When I see what language is too often used in this House by some hon. members, I wonder if we are aware of the example we should set for the population as a whole, namely, that of parliamentarians who are eager to work for the good of all the people rather than for the promotion of a political and partisan philosophy.

Mr. Speaker, I listened very closely to the speeches that were made and I must say that my comments do not apply to all parliamentarians; but it does seem to me that we should be mature enough and wise enough in debates of this type, when we discuss before the whole nation matters as important as those before the House this evening, to address our remarks to the real issues instead of attacking the persons who either defend or oppose them. I believe I echo the statements of several hon. members when I deplore the fact that we have to resort to setting time limits for our debates. And I have no intention of saying that the opposition is solely responsible for this situation, even if it contributes to it. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that if we, as parliamentarians, want to convince the population that politicians are able to disregard party lines in their search for real solutions to our problems, if we want to convince the population that parliamentarians and politicians are mature people as they claim to be, then it becomes more and more necessary to find solutions which will allow us to schedule the proceedings of this House so as to discuss a bit more calmly such important questions which affect the well-being of our fellow citizens.

Mr. Speaker, when we talk about billions of dollars in this House, we are often tempted to forget that the real problem is not the borrowing itself, but rather how the money will be used to benefit those who really need it. The wish I express this evening, Mr. Speaker, is that when these sums are voted, we take greater care to ensure that they are used for the benefit of those who need it most. We are too much inclined to believe, Mr. Speaker, that everyone in Canada is wealthy and well off, while the facts show that this is not so, Mr. Speaker, and that even in a country with as many dynamic and able people as ours, there are also poor people who are often ignored and who would require the co-operation and the assistance of parliamentarians.

This evening, Mr. Speaker, I would like to appeal to all my colleagues on both sides of the House to spare a thought, while dealing with all those millions of dollars, for the poor, for the disadvantaged, and for those who expect us to make a conciliatory gesture of support and assistance. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the funds which we shall agree to spend in the next few months and weeks will be used for the benefit of those who need it most.

[English]

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I cannot recall in the eight and a half years I have been here how many times I have been called upon to contribute to a debate and vote upon a motion on closure under Standing Order 75C—

An hon. Member: Time allocation.

Mr. Clarke: Time allocation, call it whatever you like, it is all the same thing.

I heard the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette) speaking about process and change when he was contributing to this debate earlier tonight. I suppose he was referring to the substitution of time allocation under Standing Order 75C for Standing Order 33, the absolute closure motion. It is like substituting a ball-peen hammer for a sledge hammer. If hon. members read Standing Order 75C, and I suppose this is the way rule 75C was eventually passed, it provides that a minister can give his intention and, in part, we read:

> —may propose a motion for the purpose of allotting a specified number of days or hours for the consideration and disposal of proceedings at that stage; provided that the time allotted for any stage is not to be less than one sitting day—

We have the motion before us and the absolute minimum has been chosen, namely one sitting day for each stage.

If we had had rule 33 imposed, we would have been voting at one o'clock in the morning. I suppose that does not suit members opposite because one o'clock in the morning is not a good time for them to be voting. However, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council also talked about the obligation of the party in power to govern. I say to members opposite there must also be an obligation on the part of Parliament to hear debate. But the party opposite seems to have forgotten all about that obligation. It does not care about hearing debate any more, it just wants to get things through any way it can and as quickly as it can.

I spoke on Bill C-59, the bill on which we are imposing closure, at second reading. It was not so long ago. In fact, it was February 16, 1981. Since that time, which is a month and a half ago, this bill has been to committee and it has come back. It could have come back to Parliament at any time during the last month or so. However, during this time, the government was insisting on presenting its debate on the constitutional amendment. We had made it clear earlier that whenever the government wanted to bring back normal parliamentary business, we would be willing to hear it. The governement resisted so long that now it feels compelled to impose closure on the borrowing bill because it is running out of money. Is the government runing out of money? When one hears about the government running out of money and that it is going to go bankrupt, we might have some sympathy. After all, taxpayers need their pensions and the government must operate. We would not want the government to go bankrupt. Therefore, we would look with sympathy on the government whenever it would have this problem. But today in this House, I think it was the member from Mississauga South who asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) how short the government was of cash. The Minister of Finance indicated quite clearly to the House that there were billions in the till and there was no shortage of time or money from the government's point of view at this moment.

On the use of closure, where would we be in Canada if closure had been imposed on Bill C-42, the post office bill? We would have had an awful bill. During committee, the government and the opposition parties introduced many amendments to that bill. If the government had felt inclined to invoke closure on a bill like that, the post office bill would have been a terrible piece of legislation. We may get a terrible piece of legislation anyway, but closure would not have helped the bill; it would have hindered it.

We are now all familiar with the current debate on the constitutional resolution. The government would like to invoke closure on that too. Fortunately, there are some in this House who are adamantly opposed to closure being presented on that resolution. But the number of times when the government could have invoked closure and did not is innumerable. If it had, the end product would have been a very poor bill.

As I said at the outset, we have used closure on countless occasions since I have been here. I cannot remember them all now.

Mr. Malone: Twice a year.

Mr. Clarke: My colleague from Alberta tells me twice a year. But the point is the government has used closure in debates recently with the same kind of frequency that members of the opposition, or maybe a Speaker, might use aspirin.

This rule was put into the Standing Orders with a great deal of trouble. I have heard from historians who were here at the time—

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clarke: —but for it to be abused now is the same as popping a pill. This is a very wrong procedure for the government to use and it will come back to haunt it. I hope it does not come back to haunt this institution. I will not delay the debate any further, but I want to add my voice to those who will vote no as strongly as we can against this kind of abuse of Parliament.

• (2130)

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I will stick as best I can to the matter before us, the implementation of the use of 75C. Tomorrow I hope to deal with the bill itself, Bill C-59. As the House leader for this party said, we will oppose that, as we will oppose the imposition of this time allocation.

I apologize in advance. When I speak about House rules, I tend to think back to my previous experiences. In the years that I spent in the Ontario legislature, I cannot recall an occasion, although there might have been one, when there was a need to impose any kind of time allocation or closure motion. The reason was that the members of that assembly knew fairly well in advance what the business of the government was to be. The House leaders, together with the whips, sat down and carefully scheduled the activities in order to allow for an adequate period of time for debate while making sure that the business of the House progressed with some degree of consistency.

I do not mean that it was not possible for the opposition to embark upon a procedure that would delay the government's attempts to push its legislation through from time to time on matters of considerable and obvious importance. I want to suggest that, drawing on my experience, I cannot understand why my colleagues in this House, given that they are intelligent and understanding, cannot sit together and make some reasonable decisions about the amount of time necessary to deal with various and sundry pieces of legislation.

That would require, on the one hand, the government to be much more open about what they propose to put before Parliament. The government would have to be prepared to sit down at the beginning of the session and map out in a general way the legislative proposals they propose to put before Parliament and to allow for the kind of allocation of time in a co-operative sense that ought to take place.

Mr. Blenkarn: They wouldn't do that.

Mr. Deans: The hon. member says they would not do that. I might say the events of the last week, justified though they may be in the eyes of the Conservative Party, will not lead us to that kind of co-operation in the long run. I am not going to argue the merits of the opposition of that party. I am only saying that kind of activity will lead to more restrictive rules and regulations rather than to more openness which we ought to have here.

It worries me when we are required to have time allocation brought in. Call it time allocation, call it closure, it does not matter. They mean the same. The debate will end at a time predetermined by the government. It flies in the face of parliamentary tradition, as I understand and like to think of it. Parliamentary tradition tells me that the government will propose to Parliament the legislation that it hopes to pass and that Parliament will dispose of that legislation having reasoned it through, offered its suggestions, and ultimately will support or defeat it. In that kind of co-operative House, time allocation measures such as this would never be necessary.

I think there is a misunderstanding here of the roles. The government has a right to expect to be given the latitude and leeway it requires in order to govern, but it does not have the right to muzzle the opposition whenever it feels so inclined. I want to suggest that the behaviour of the opposition from time to time arouses the passions and the anger of the government, and it will respond, just as the behaviour of the government will arouse the passions and anger of the opposition and it will respond. However, those occasions must never be allowed to become the main feature of the parliamentary system and the main impetus for negative change to the rules.

I am sure that when people sent us here, they believed we had reached a stage of adult growth, a degree of native intelligence, an understanding of the process, a commitment to the country and that we were capable of representing the many and diverse interests of the constituencies, the provinces and the country as a whole. I wonder what they must think of us when they discover the government has to bring in a motion to stop debate on a matter as important as this.

We cannot afford to wait much longer to set up a working group within this House to come to grips with the problems of the rules. If nothing else, there has to be an informal working group sitting together on a regular basis to look at the rules, consult with the Speaker, Deputy Speaker and Acting Speakers, consult with the Table officers and the House leaders, to try and come up with a comprehensive program for change which will allow Parliament to work and enable us to have the kind of timetabling procedures without being faced with the time-wasting procedures which this motion in fact is. Tonight we have taken—and I have contributed, and I hope directly to the point—two hours which could well have been spent debating the merits of the bill rather than debating the merits of closure and perhaps other things as well.

Rather than take up the time of the House debating these matters over and over again, let us get on with the business, talk about the things that are important and get on with dealing with what matters to the people of Canada and let us stop being so damned silly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the words of my friend for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). He is right that we have to learn to work together much more co-operatively in this House. We have not done so, especially not in the last little while. We must not try to fool the people. However, there are certainly some political games which are played in this House of Commons. Your Honour knows that as well as I.

With regard to the time allocation motion, there are many times when my friends and colleagues on the other side of the House have told us clearly that if we do not bring in time allocation, we will not get the bill because they gain political advantage from making the government bring in time allocation. They then have two hours to stand up and rail against the government.

An hon. Member: Tell the truth.

Mr. Evans: That is the truth of the matter. That is what happened in this case. We have talked about this bill for a good period of time. It came in around the middle of January. Second reading debate went on for a good length of time. It then went to committee where it was talked about and witnesses were heard. It is now back before the House.

We tried to get agreement with hon. members on a limitation of debate to see how long it would take, whether two days or three days would be enough. We could not get agreement. I can understand the political motivation that some members opposite might have, saying they are not going to let us have an agreement, that they are going to make us bring in rule 75C so that they have a chance to get up and say what a terrible government we are for bringing in time allocation. Those are the facts.

• (2140)

Mr. Blenkarn: You know you are.

Mr. Evans: My hon. friend, the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) is becoming a little incensed over there, but I think he has to agree with me that the truth is the truth.

Having regard to this particular Bill C-59—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Evans: I am not sure I can be heard over my friends on the other side.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) on a point of order.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I seek your guidance on this point of order. I hate to admit this but the hon. member opposite is my Member of Parliament representing the area in which I live. Should I be sitting here listening to this trivia that he is—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) has the floor.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, all of us have constituents of which we are ashamed. Luckily I have very few. Perhaps I might say a few words in respect of what the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) said earlier this evening. I am rather interested in this.

He said the bill we brought in, C-59, has a new twist never before used. I think those were his words and I will check Hansard tomorrow. He said that what was never used before in the House of Commons in respect of borrowing authority was the non-lapsing feature. Those were his words.

Prior to 1979 and his budget, the non-lapsing aspect of the borrowing authority was commonplace. In fact, the hon. member for St. John's West could not have run the financial side of the Conservative government had it not been for the non-lapsing part of the borrowing authority brought in by the previous Liberal government, and that is the fact. The hon. member's memory might not be very good, but certainly it is short. Without that non-lapsing borrowing authority, the Conservative government could not have gone as long as it did without calling Parliament because it would have required a borrowing authority bill to carry on its fiscal responsibilities at the time. I know the hon. member for St. John's West was dramatically affected when the rug was pulled out from under his mukluks, but it certainly could not have affected his memory so badly he would forget the very fact that his financial responsibilities in the Conservative government were carried on for seven months with the non-lapsing borrowing authority of the previous government. I personally think the non-lapsing aspect is a good aspect.

In this particular borrowing authority bill, C-59, presently before the House, in respect of which we are debating a motion under Standing Order 75C, we are asking for $14 billion, $11 billion of which is provided for in the budget and in the estimates as expenditures and financial requirements to cover that expenditure, with $3 billion, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) have explained, provided for the possibility of contingency, but mainly for non-lapsing flexibility. It might be that the government could run into another situation such as we have seen in the last few days. I think we are all unhappy about that situation on both sides of the House.

An hon. Member: We are not.

Mr. Evans: I hear an hon. member opposite saying they are not unhappy about it. I am sorry about that because I assumed we would all be unhappy with this situation and the wasting of the time of the House, but apparently not.

We could run into this again and the government could be in bad financial straits and have to delay a borrowing authority bill into a fiscal year for which there was no borrowing authority. I think the $3 billion non-lapsing flexibility is the kind of thing which should be provided for automatically, especially if we move to a new budgetary cycle. I suggest we should do that. The Minister of Finance has indicated that is what he would like to do. I refer to a fall budgetary cycle, bringing the budget forward in the fall. This would mean that the borrowing authority bill could not be brought in until probably December, or perhaps January. This makes a relatively tight legislative time frame within which to bring forward a borrowing authority bill, get it through second reading, into committee, back for report stage, third reading and royal assent after going through the Senate as well. We are talking about a very tight fiscal time-frame in which to get the borrowing authority bill through.

It makes sense to have a fall budgetary cycle for many reasons. One is that having your budgets in the late fall would allow the provinces to see what the federal fiscal framework will look like and, therefore, plan their budgets more effectively, and, typically, they come in the spring. In fact, we have had very good reaction from the provinces in respect of that kind of a suggestion at the December meeting of finance ministers. We were discussing when they would like to see a federal budget and the kind of consultation and interaction they would like between the two levels of government in order that budgetary cycles of all governments could be more closely integrated with better co-ordination than we have now. I think that is a good process.

In doing this, as I said, it does place the federal government in a rather peculiar situation, having a very short time-span from the point at which the budget is brought down to the fiscal year end when new borrowing authority has to be implemented. As a result, this non-lapsing component of the current borrowing authority bill gives us flexibility if contingencies occur so the bill cannot be brought forward, as in the event of an election, for example, which was the case on February 18, 1980. That did not allow the fiscal framework and borrowing authority bill to be brought in immediately. Last year we had to go in fact until June or July before we could bring in a borrowing authority bill. For all these reasons I think it is a good thing for the government.

I think if the government changed, hon. members opposite would say exactly the same thing. They were very happy, I am sure, to have had that non-lapsing borrowing authority provided for in the previous budget so they could carry on the fiscal operations of government without having to call Parliament, rush a borrowing authority bill through before having a notion as to what their fiscal requirements were to be and what kind of financial plans they wanted to make. I think that non-lapsing authority is an extremely valuable component of a borrowing authority bill.

Also in respect of the bill we are bringing forward I would like to say a few more words. The hon. member for Mississauga South and the hon. member for St. John's West indicated some things about the current cash balances of the government. I see that I do not have time, so I will bring this forward tomorrow when I speak.

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to discuss this important motion before the House under Standing Order 75C. This government is attempting to tell us that this is simply an allocation of time, that it is not closure motion and was never intended to be such. In actual fact, if one reads what the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) said when he moved this motion, he will see the motion, as reported at page 8830 of Hansard for March 31 states the following:

> —for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

The "Oxford Illustrated Dictionary" defines closure in Parliament as a decision by vote of the House of Commons to put a question without further debate.

Members of the government are attempting to tell us that this is simply an allocation of time. Like many other things that happen in the House, they say one thing and do another.

I should like to take you back to the 1969 debate when Mr. Blair, who was in charge of the committee which brought in 75C stated, as reported at page 10957 of Hansard for July 8:

> I would like to say first of all with reference to Standing Order 75C that it cannot be invoked unilaterally by the government.

I should like to know how it is being invoked if it is not being invoked unilaterally. It is binding on our side and not binding on the government. Only the government can bring it in.

• (2150)

Now, Mr. Speaker, they are telling us it is an allocation of time. But here we have a bill for $14 billion which the government wishes to pass, and they want to allocate the minimum amount of time for debate. I would like to quote Mr. Blair, the chairman of that committee in 1969 when he said:

> I think what I have said is clearly on record.

There will be at least ten days of time in this debate. Well, Mr. Speaker, there has not been ten days of time in this debate. He also said that there would be at least three days of debate in committee, and there were only two days of debate in committee. We can go on and on, but this is not allocation of time, it is just another method of closure.

What do they really want to do? They want to borrow $14 billion when we know that as of March 26 they had $6.4 billion. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) admitted that they still had $4.8 billion, which means they spent $1.6 billion in one week. The Minister of Finance admitted in committee that the government needs approximately $1 billion a month more than they receive. Why do they need to borrow $14 billion when they have $4.8 billion left? And at the rate at which they admitted they were spending more than they were taking in, they only need $1 billion. So it is quite obvious that this government does not know what they are spending.

I would like to quote the Minister of Finance further. He said five months ago that inflation was going to be 10 per cent, and admitted last week that it was 12.2 per cent. When did he have that revelation? Obviously he did not know five months ago, yet the deputy governor of the Bank of Canada admitted in committee that they are able to define inflation six months ahead. How come the Bank of Canada knew we were going to have 12 per cent inflation but the Minister of Finance did not? He still does not know. He does not know what inflation is going to be next month.

This government does not need the $14 billion it wishes to borrow; it is a sham. If it needed the money, we would be more than happy to pass it the bill, but it is quite obvious that the minister admitted they did not yet need to borrow the money. But, he says, one of these days they will.

In conclusion, there is no need to impose Standing Order 75C. This government brought it in in 1969 to limit debate and it is just another way that this government is going to close off debate, and that is why over the last week we have been attempting to bring this government to order so that they will be responsible for what they are doing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wright: And we are not going to allow this government to get away with spending money irrationally, we are not going to allow them to get away with imposing on this country an illegal and irrational resolution to the British Parliament. And we are going to continue to stand and speak against this government on bill after bill until they get sick and tired of trying to impose closure, whether it be Standing Order 75C or Standing Order 33. We do not intend to let this government get away with it any more. We have reached the point where we are not going to allow this government to run roughshod over the opposition.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, it is always with great pleasure and honour that I rise to speak in this House, all the more so because the subject we are debating tonight is very important for our country. As it has been done regularly over the past few years, we have to borrow billions of dollars for the day to day affairs of the state. Oftentimes that money goes to the poorest Canadians, those who benefit from the redistribution of wealth. It is precisely because they need it without delay that we are here debating this bill tonight.

I should like to be more specific and refer to the fact that we had to set a limit on this debate. It is true that when Canada borrows $13 billion for its regular budget the people are entitled to know why and, normally, it is a good subject for debate. But there has been an allocation of time for this debate; the reasons for that are not all that complicated and I can explain in a few words. This time allocation is due to the fact that over the past two weeks the Progressive Conservative party has resorted to all kinds of tricks, a sort of organized disorder of nothing but points of order and questions of privilege in the House with the result that we have been unable to do our job in the last 15 days. That is why we set a limit on the debate.

Organized disorder cannot be tolerated in a rink when people play hockey, or on a football field, and much less in the House, and in such a situation, we have to hurry in the last minutes to accomplish what we have to do. That is what is happening now. Still, no matter how bad things are, there is always a positive aspect. It is true that since we have been witnessing this organized disorder, we have seen a lot more Progressive Conservative members across the floor, a very rare event. I can say that it does change the panorama, for instead of seeing five or ten of our colleagues we can now see 50 of them or even more at the same time. I would not say it is an honour, but it is a more pleasing sight than empty benches.

In that same line of thought, I would like to point out that when our government borrows $13 billion, there are people who talk about blank cheques or what have you, but that is not what is happening at all. The simple fact is that because Canada collects taxes at specific times of the year, the government sometimes does not have enough money to carry on its routine business, to redistribute wealth in the country so that those most disadvantaged are a little less unfortunate and at least keep their human dignity.

This is precisely what we are doing with this borrowing. We are simply getting the money that the government needs to fulfil the commitments made by its predecessors, whether they were Progressive Conservatives or Liberals, to the citizens of this country. Obviously, when we can have the co-operation of the official opposition, this becomes much easier and can be accomplished in better conditions. We have been living in the last two weeks in the organized disorder of a party which should be progressive, but seems to be increasingly conservative. Since we have been living in these conditions, we have had to take the bull by the horns, as we often say in the Lake Saint-Jean area, and limit the duration of this debate. Those who benefit most from this will obviously be the Canadian people because the Government of Canada, which is their government, will be able to meet its commitments to them and continue to help them develop their resources in this vast and beautiful country which is very important for all of us. It is in this context that we are taking this action. I hope that our friends in the Progressive Conservative Party will understand why we are limiting this debate. I also hope that they will acquire some wisdom in the process, which will be useful in another important debate which has been going on for sometime in the House, a wisdom which is quite Canadian, very little conservative, extremely progressive, which goes beyond narrow partisanship, strictly inspired by political motives. May the Divine Light guide them very strongly so that they will understand—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being ten o'clock, the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion now before the House have expired.

The question is on the motion of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Nay.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Bussières) which was carried on the following division:

EFFECT OF EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY DECREE ON HORSE MEAT PLANTS IN CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the European Economic Community has issued a decree that, as of June 30 of this year, it will require a certificate stating that all fresh and frozen horse meat exported from Canada must come from horses which were located in Canada for at least three months before slaughter, a decree which will put all horse abattoirs in Canada out of business since at least 80 per cent of slaughter horses come from the United States, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Kushner):

That the government make the strongest protest possible to the European Economic Community to withdraw this decree which would have such a devastating effect on the viability of all our horse meat plants throughout Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TRANSFER OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR PROGRAMS TO MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the confusion and multitude of problems which plagued the herd maintenance program were due primarily to the fact that the minister in charge of the program is from the other place, and not directly responsible to either the House of Commons or the electorate, and in view of the fact that the program is designed to assist livestock producers who suffered as a result of drought, which logically falls within the purview of the Department of Agriculture, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton):

That the responsibility for any similar programs in the future be delegated to the Minister of Agriculture and that guidelines for future programs be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture for consideration and study before they are finalized.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SALE OF LIQUOR AT MOHAWK INN ON TYENDINAGA RESERVE IN ONTARIO—WORDING OF MOTION MOVED BY MR. MANLY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. On April 1 of this year the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) introduced a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 which dealt with a charge laid by the Ontario Provincial Police under the liquor licensing act on the Tyendinaga Reserve in my constituency. The statements made in the motion were false to the point of being scurrilous.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Ellis: Neither the present nor the previous band councils have approved the sale of liquor. The band police force participated fully in both the raid and the charges. The proprietor knew that his actions were in contravention of the law. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the members of the NDP attempt to get their facts straight before they make accusations about events in other ridings which give an erroneous and injurious view of those ridings.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

PUBLIC SERVICE

GOVERNMENT HIRING PRACTICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, in view of a letter which I have just received from the chairman of the Public Service Commission which states that it is not practical or in the best interests of the public service to open all job competitions to everyone in Canada, and I quote further from the letter:

At times, an area of competition may be restricted to those persons residing in a province or territory, or indeed, to those residing in a city or town.

I therefore move under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes):

That this House hereby recognizes that the government's promise of complete mobility rights for job seekers to gain employment anywhere in Canada is nothing more than a hypocritical charade, being completely opposite to the hiring practices of the federal government.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PENSIONS

IMPROVEMENTS IN PUBLIC SYSTEM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Since the government's well-hyped pension conference has now been held, and since the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has declared that there will be no improvements in our public pension system in the foreseeable future, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare spend this coming weekend contemplating the ways and means she can use to convince the Minister of Finance that the much needed improvements to our public pension system be introduced now so that Canada's pensioners can at least get pension payments which will bring them above the poverty level.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

LEBANON—RESUMPTION OF HOSTILITIES—CALL FOR CEASEFIRE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Given the renewed hostilities in Lebanon, and particularly the reports of shelling, property damage, and now the loss of life in and around the town of Zahala and the city of Beirut, and given the large number of Lebanese-born Canadians calling upon the federal government to use its good offices to call upon the combatants to cease and desist the destruction of life and property, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Bossy):

That this House deeply regrets the loss of life and property resulting from the resumption of hostilities in Lebanon, and calls upon the combatants to cease hostilities forthwith and return to the negotiation of differences which exist, in the democratic and peaceful manner for which Lebanon and its people have always been historically recognized.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

THE MINISTRY

CALL FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Given that, as the result of pressure by the Quebec Liberal caucus, bidding on the F-18A fighter aircraft has been reopened, six months after the deadline, and given that as a result of this unfair action Ontario plants may be deprived of some of those contracts, especially industries in my riding, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources—who has been appointed minister responsible for Erie riding—resign as his kind of assistance is not appreciated.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN CHILDREN—LETTER FROM CANADIAN CONFERENCE OF CATHOLIC BISHOPS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to millions of concerned Canadians of all faiths and beliefs. Whereas the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) has received a letter dated March 26, 1981, from the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops; whereas this letter focuses attention on a question which is described as of "primordial importance", namely "respect for human life", and requests that assurance be given that provisions of the new Constitution will "enhance the respect for life from its very beginning"; and inasmuch as Emmett Cardinal Carter is today quoted on the subject as saying, "I must state categorically that the charter of rights as presently phrased does not enjoy my full and unqualified support", I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the Prime Minister provide all members of Parliament with his answer to this question raised in the letter from the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

CANADIAN ACCESS TO EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY HIGH QUALITY BEEF QUOTA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Madam Speaker, I rise under standing order 43 on an urgent matter arising out of current GATT discussions. Under the GATT Agreement Canada is eligible to participate in the 10,000-tonne high quality beef quota into the European Economic Community; however, the EEC has only allowed access under this quota to the U.S.A.

In view of a recent GATT council ruling that the EEC should not deny access to Canada to this high quality beef quota, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway):

• (1115)

That the Minister of Agriculture take appropriate action at ongoing GATT discussions, to ensure that Canadian high quality beef is able to participate in this EEC access quota with the U.S.A. and not be excluded as is presently the case.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CONVENTION AIDS

AID FOR WINNIPEG PROJECT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the federal government has recently been able to entertain and grant financial assistance totalling $10.8 million to four more Canadian cities in spite of the fact that last October the city of Winnipeg was told that it could expect no help from the same program—that is the government's trade centre program—for at least three or four more years due to current commitments creating a situation whereby the federal government now provides aid to convention centres in Vancouver, Toronto, Montreal, Halifax, Windsor, Hamilton and Charlottetown, while in Winnipeg the cash is flowing in the opposite direction, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper):

That the city of Winnipeg which pioneered the establishment of a major convention facility designed to attract large internationally based conventions be given renewed consideration; that financial assistance be made available, and failing this, that the Minister of Employment and Immigration be reassigned within cabinet to look after the interests of some region other than Winnipeg because Winnipeg has not received one red cent of extra money since the minister's term in office began, despite all the breast-beating and well orchestrated announcements of old programs for which he has become so famous.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PENSIONS

GOVERNMENT POLICY RELATING TO PEOPLE ON PENSIONS AND FIXED INCOMES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I promise I will not tax your patience.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Bégin: Bonjour.

Mr. McGrath: Bonjour to you, Madam.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: I can assure you this is a very serious matter, Madam Speaker.

My question is for the Minister of Finance. He told the pensions conference that the government attaches a high priority to pension reform and that it is totally committed to pension reform. His colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, also told the conference that several European countries were able to affect pension reform without bankrupting the economy, those are the words I think the hon. minister used.

Can the Minister of Finance tell us what the government intends to do to help bring some relief to Canadians who are on fixed incomes and pensions and who are seeing their pensions and fixed incomes being eroded day by day by double-digit inflation?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, obviously one of the main concerns expressed at the pensions conference was the question of indexation, especially of employer and private sponsored plans. We are now embarked on a major consideration of pension reform in this country. We have had a very successful conference. Now it will be necessary for the government to consider what it ought to do, based upon the views that were expressed.

Following the government's consideration it will be necessary to have consultations with the provinces whose participation is absolutely essential if changes are to be made, either to the Canada Pension Plan or to private pension plans, through changes in the law. It is not possible at this stage to indicate what the final outcome will be.

GOVERNMENT PRIORITIES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question to the minister deals in an area in which the government has total jurisdiction and control. The minister also told the conference that improvements to old age security must be determined by economic realities. That is, of course, consistent with what the minister said in his budget, in which he said the government intended to achieve net savings in the social policy envelope in order to finance initiatives in other envelopes.

● (1120)

Is the Minister of Finance in a position to tell the House what steps the government is prepared to take, given the fact that the last initiative the government took was almost a year ago when it increased the guaranteed income supplement, which is now being eroded by inflation, to bring some form of relief to the old age pensioners of this country for which the minister has complete and total jurisdiction? Is he able to change his priorities, because I think the need speaks to that kind of change?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member mentioned that we increased the guaranteed income supplement a year ago. That supplement is fully indexed and is not eroded by inflation. There is absolutely no basis for the assertion that the protection provided to the recipients of old age security and the guaranteed income supplement is in a deteriorating position as a result of the inflation that we are experiencing. What I said yesterday, and that came out of the conference, was that there is a segment of recipients of the GIS, namely, single persons, and women in particular, who face a more difficult situation. I also stated that that was obviously a priority that had to be dealt with as economic circumstances warranted. That is the situation at the present time.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

COVERAGE FOR HOMEMAKING SPOUSES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister of Finance will find that increases in the cost of fuel, food and shelter have overtaken the indexing of the GIS which the minister talks about. That is my concern. That is the concern I want to express to the minister. Is the Minister of National Health and Welfare able to tell the House that she is going to discharge her commitment made to the homemaking spouses of this country with regard to coverage under the Canada Pension Plan? Perhaps, Madam Speaker, you might also permit me to ask the minister if she anticipates any changes in the funding of the CPP to accommodate the change in demographics in the country and the additional burden that will be placed on the CPP in the future.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased with the sudden interest of the Tory party in pension reform.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Bégin: This is very important and welcome. The hon. member has asked three questions. I will try my best to answer them. The first question was with regard to indexation of the GIS. I can inform the House that special indexation for seniors, over ten years would have been one per cent different from the general indexation of all our programs. The additioned $420 a year which we provided last July is fully indexed to the cost of living.

With regard to the second question concerning coverage for housewives, there are three million housewives in this country. I have repeatedly said that it is in that dossier of pension reform that we have the most work to do. There seem to be two major avenues open to reform. One is opening the Canada Pension Plan on a voluntary basis to housewives who want to build a pension in their own name. The other is the pension credit splitting everywhere in the country. These questions will be discussed by the government and we will make a final decision as to our preferred avenue for reform. Of course, the whole CPP is under review and is part of that reform.

SOCIAL SECURITY

EFFECT OF INFLATION ON PENSIONERS—REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY TASK FORCE

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my question is to the same minister. In light of what she just said to my colleague, what does she intend to do about the fact that 12.1 per cent inflation hurts pensioners more than any other group in society? What does she intend to do about one of my constituents who has $109 left at the end of every month after paying his rent and utilities? Is she prepared to consider appointing a parliamentary task force to consider funding, given this double digit inflation, with regard to the OAS, GIS and CPP?

• (1125)

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I would recommend to the hon. member in the case of the constituent to whom he is referring that he should apply and would probably be eligible for the full GIS which would provide him, on top of the basic $208 a month of OAS, because it has been indexed this month, an additional $209 as of this month. This surely is a case for full GIS.

Other than that, I should like to repeat to the hon. member that the objective of the government is that we define our responsibilities, having all seniors in Canada above the poverty line. We have often said that we succeeded in that regard last July for couples, but we still have one more reform regarding single pensioners.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, he is getting the GIS which gives him and his wife a total income of $409 a month which, after paying their rent and utilities, leaves them $109. It is just not enough, and I would again ask the minister to answer the question of whether or not she is prepared to consider a parliamentary task force to study the funding of these various government pension plans.

Miss Bégin: The hon. member should know that the couple in his riding would get twice $208 for basic OAS and, if they do get the full GIS, they each get an additional $161 a month. The figures the member is giving are not the right figures and I want that to be made very clear. These people have been brought up above the poverty line since we increased their pensions by $420 this year. I know we are not talking of a luxurious way of life, but they have been brought up above the poverty line. Our next priority will be with respect to people alone living in situations of poverty.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON ACID RAIN

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the minister responsible for the environment I have a question for the Prime Minister. This question relates to acid rain. In view of the fact that there is a tremendous lobby building up in the United States, with over 200 industries at the state level, publicly and privately owned, as well as the coal industry, mounting a tremendous campaign virtually to do away with those provisions of the U.S. clean air act which control acid rain emissions, and following the Prime Minister's meeting with President Reagan and other government officials, what specific accomplishments has the federal government been able to attain so far in the negotiations with the United States in respect of acid rain?

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, it is much too early to address that particular question as to what the accomplishments have been. We are very much on schedule with the memorandum of intent between the two administrations; the four task forces are now doing their work and have submitted their preliminary report. We are anxiously awaiting the subsequent report with a view to beginning negotiations this summer.

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT UNITED STATES HEARINGS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I would again attempt to get through to the Prime Minister because this question really does not relate directly to the parliamentary secretary.

The clean air act in the United States is in trouble. Will the Prime Minister assure this House that he will ask the United States federal government whether Canada can send a delegation to the hearings when the U.S. clean air act comes up for review in order that we may at least be present while that act is under review and, hopefully, have some input?

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, we are slightly ahead of the hon. member as, indeed, is the American administration ahead of him. We have already had an invitation to participate in those hearings and we are at the present time contemplating doing so.

DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION AT BORDER CROSSINGS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister and it requires a commitment from him. The Brookhaven Institute in New York estimated that 5,000 Canadians died last year as a result of acid rain, half of which comes from American sources.

• (1130)

In view of the fact that 38 million Americans came into Canada last year, would the Prime Minister give a commitment that he will seriously consider giving out information to Americans entering Canada at the border crossings and at airports, regarding the bilateral health and environmental seriousness of acid rain to Canada?

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the Department of the Environment took that initiative a number of months ago. We have been handing out that kind of literature to people entering Canada from the United States.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PENSION TRUST FUND—REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN BENEFITS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I will direct my question to the acting minister for the day.

The pension trust fund of the CNR made sufficient profit this year to invest $53.5 million in oil and gas properties. This is just one investment in a huge investment portfolio. Due to these enormous profits, would the Acting Minister of Transport instruct the president of the CNR to grant an immediate pension increase and to establish at least a partial indexing of railway pensions, especially since today's pensioners must cope with 12.2 per cent inflation and the devastating effects of the National Energy Program?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will refer the gist of the question of the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine to the Minister of Transport so that it can be dealt with and a reply made.

HALL REPORT RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the parliamentary secretary, if he is answering for the minister today. Would he have the minister consider implementing the recommendation of the Hall report calling for the establishment of a heritage fund for pensions based on a levy of 1 per cent of current payrolls, shared equally by employees and the companies? I would like to point out to the parliamentary secretary that CNR pensioners are amongst the lowest paid pensioners in Canada.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Transport has dealt with the CNR on a number of occasions. The CNR voluntarily upgrades its pension fund each year and tries to meet the inflation rate which exists. We will simply carry the message. I am not sure whether it is within the purview of the Minister of Transport to give that kind of direction to the CNR, but I will bear that message and turn it over to the Minister of Transport when he returns.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PLIGHT OF BIGSTONE INDIAN BAND OF WABASCA, ALTA.—TELEGRAM TO PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. He will be aware that he has received a telegram from Chief William Beaver of the Bigstone Band, the members of which are presently walking from Wabasca to Edmonton, a distance of 280 miles, to demonstrate the plight in which that band is at present. What will the Prime Minister be doing about that telegram?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I regret to say that I have not seen that telegram as yet. I have had no notice of it, but I will look it up. I thank the hon. member.

MEASURES TO INCREASE EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister of Employment and Immigration is also in receipt of a telegram from Chief William Beaver of the Bigstone Band outlining that that band is presently experiencing 75 per cent unemployment on the small Wabasca reserve. What will the minister be doing about that?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as I have indicated to the hon. member for Athabasca in the past, I would be very pleased to meet with representatives of the band to talk about their specific employment conditions. As the hon. member knows, we did apply extra employment measures to his region and to his constituency to deal with the problems of native unemployment, but I would certainly be prepared to meet with the representatives of those native organizations to see how other additional measures might be taken.

IMMIGRATION

REQUESTED ASYLUM FOR EL SALVADORAN DEPORTEES FROM THE UNITED STATES

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Since the United States government has already deported two illegal entrants from El Salvador and, I understand, is about to deport a third back to El Salvador, since those deported have immediately disappeared, and recognizing the fact that Canada has already made it easier for Salvadorans to settle here, I would like to ask the minister whether it would not be possible under our policy to invite these people to Canada rather than see them returned to certain death.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am certainly sympathetic to the proposal put forward by the hon. member. We have relaxed the refugee conditions for El Salvadorans, but if they are located in a third country such as the United States it is somewhat more difficult for them to make application. It would be something which perhaps my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, could take up with his counterpart in the United States. I could indicate that if there is some arrangement made, we would certainly be prepared to consider sympathetically any application from those in a third country to come to Canada.

REQUEST FOR TALKS WITH UNITED STATES AUTHORITIES

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he would be willing to join with his colleague to ensure that these illegal immigrants in the United States can come to Canada? Would he talk to his opposite number in Washington and say that we are willing to have them come to Canada rather than have them deported back to El Salvador?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, if I understand correctly from my colleague that he is prepared to admit such people to Canada, we will certainly do everything possible to facilitate their applications to come.

URGENCY OF TALKS STRESSED

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one previously asked. I think it is a matter of some urgency because news reports have indicated that the two who have been deported have not been heard from since. The third one is either in the process of going through a deportation hearing or may very well be deported soon. I wonder if the Secretary of State for External Affairs would undertake to contact his opposite number today, because it is that urgent.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, with the support of the Minister of Employment and Immigration I will certainly do that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER WORKS PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF APPLICATION DATE DEADLINE

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. During the preliminary period leading up to the application time for summer works projects there has been very little publicity, and many communities were not aware that the program had a deadline of, I believe March 16. Would the minister consider advancing that date, for example, to April 20, to allow for additional information, and for applications to come from communities which have not hitherto had any way of knowing when that deadline was?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am a little surprised at the observation of the hon. member because a national advertising campaign was undertaken. Advertisements appeared in newspapers right across Canada, as well as in a number of student and university publications, so there was sufficient advance notice given. If, however, the hon. member is facing difficulties in his own riding, as he knows, because of the establishment of an advisory board in his own constituency, he had some degree of control.

I will speak to the regional director in his province to determine if there has to be any special measures in his particular location, but my understanding now is that in almost every part of Canada there are more than enough applications to consume the money available for that summer program.

DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, I have checked with the weekly publications in my constituency and with the only radio station located within my constituency, and no advertising or publicity has been carried by any of those in that area, which I think emphasizes the point I made about lack of publicity and warning with respect to the closing date.

Would the minister authorize the regional director to accept late applications from Carleton-Charlotte in view of the fact that publicity did not in fact exist in that area?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I want to point out to the hon. member, as I have several times in this House, that we have tried to put a substantial amount of responsibility on individual Members of Parliament to provide information on the conditions under which the employment programs would be operated. So I suggest to the hon. member that he had a great deal of power in his own hands to make sure that the information about that summer program—which was in his hands by late January—was disseminated in his riding.

I will undertake to talk to the regional director to determine if there has to be any form of special requirement in the hon. member's area, but that will not be a general application.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

SALES OF NUCLEAR REACTORS ABROAD

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources a question regarding the government's nuclear energy policy and recent events surrounding the transfer of funds involving AECL where the government was asked to forgive $700 million worth of financing. This indicates that the government's nuclear energy policy is not able to deal with the sale of Candu reactors because we are not able to provide a market for the heavy water that we produce. This, coupled with the fact that the uranium mining industry is also in a questionable state of health, indicates that the manufacture of nuclear equipment in Canada is clearly at stake here.

Could the minister clarify a comment made by the president AECL when he said we would have more sales this year of nuclear reactors, particularly to Korea and Mexico?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, there is not much to add to the statement of the president of AECL. Indeed, the government is actively pursuing the possibility of the sale of a 600 megawatt reactor to Korea, and the government of Mexico has expressed interest in receiving a bid for the construction of additional reactors and AECL intends to submit a bid. We are one of three countries from which the government of Mexico intends to order additional reactors. We are very hopeful of success and AECL is working very hard on that.

Mr. Gurbin: Madam Speaker, I hope the minister's optimism expressed in his response will indicate to the nuclear industry that they have a future, but I wonder whether this optimism comes from the internal review the government has undertaken and whether it means this review has been completed and whether or not it has given the government a new sense of its management responsibility for nuclear sales abroad, and also whether there is any change in the nuclear safeguards policy that would indicate to the minister a more optimistic future for the sale of nuclear reactors.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the review is not yet completed. However, I hope we will be able to make public a document in this respect in reasonable time. The nuclear industry in the international field is extremely competitive. Although we are quite confident that our system is the best and safest in the world, we have to face very stiff international competition. At the same time we face somewhat lower projections domestically in the rate of growth of electricity consumption, so I would not want to paint an over optimistic future for the industry.

I think we will have to work extremely hard in the decade ahead to make sure our industry remains very much involved in and a major contributor to this field in the world. We are going to make, and are making, a renewed and vigorous effort in the international field and I hope that we will be successful in the next few months in obtaining more international orders because I think this is how we will be able, over the next few years to ensure that our industry remains very dynamic.

TOURISM

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO NARROW DEFICIT

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for tourism. According to the government's own figures, the deficit in tourism in Canada for 1980 reached $1.14 billion, up from the $1.07 billion the previous year. Would he tell the House what plans he has, if any, to attempt to narrow this gap, and if in fact the government intends to do anything in the near future to indicate it is not just paying lip service to this untapped industry?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question, for I believe he has just pinpointed a very significant problem in Canada's tourist industry. When we managed to bring the deficit from $1.8 billion down to $1.07 billion in 1979, we were hoping we would be able to maintain that trend. Unfortunately, for various reasons our deficit went up from $1.07 billion to $1.2 billion in 1980.

What do we intend to do? Just as we committed ourselves in 1978 during consultations with the industry and the provinces, I am now busy preparing a tourism strategy in which we will attempt to spell out more precisely the provincial and federal jurisdictions. We will also try to obtain the necessary resources to shore up the statistical base of the tourist industry, and we will combine all provincial plans with the federal tourist industry plan in such a way that we will have a greater impact on foreign markets with a view to attracting an increasing number of foreign tourists to Canada.

ADVERTISING BY AIR CANADA OF UNITED STATES ATTRACTIONS

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is to the same minister. In view of the tremendous need for a boost in this industry, which he has already acknowledged, would the minister tell us why Air Canada consistently advertises pictures of United States attractions on its schedules and why he does not encourage the use of Canadian scenes in its publications?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for drawing that problem or that fact to my attention. I will make it a point to raise the issue with my colleague, the Minister of Transport, and also directly with the president of that corporation.

IMMIGRATION

IMMIGRANT STATUS FOR LEBANESE NATIONALS LIVING IN CANADA

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

[English]

In view of the new and tragic outburst of violence in Lebanon would the minister inform the House as to the status of Lebanese nationals in Canada, and consider making special provision either for extending their stay or, as I would prefer, receiving applications from them for immigrant status?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as it happens, just about four or five days ago I met with the Lebanese ambassador. As the hon. member knows, in the past we applied special measures to that country when there was serious civil strife. I want to have a further meeting with the Lebanese ambassador, with the co-operation of my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to discuss what measures could be taken. We would certainly not in any way want to have somebody return to a situation in which there would be any danger or serious disruption, so we are again prepared to consider special measures for Lebanese nationals in Canada. I would want to discuss that first with my colleague and the Lebanese ambassador, and then I would be prepared to make a formal announcement in the House.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

APPLICATION BY CANADIAN GENERAL ELECTRIC TO PURCHASE PIONEER ELECTRIC IN WINNIPEG

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Canadian General Electric announced earlier this year the closure of the distribution section of its Davenport complex. It claimed at the time that it could not compete in the oil-filled transformer business. I understand that CGE now has an application before FIRA to allow it to purchase Federal Pioneer Electric in Winnipeg which is also in the oil-filled transformer business. What action will the minister take to guarantee that FIRA is made aware of the fact that, at the time it is faced with a decision on the purchase, CGE is closing down similar operations in Toronto?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I will ensure that this information is before the officials and will be taken into account by the cabinet in reaching a final decision on this matter.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, at the time this matter is being considered by FIRA and subsequently by cabinet, will the minister also take into account the fact that the vast majority of employees in the Toronto plant have over 20 years' seniority? They range in age between 50 and 60, and they stand to lose their supplemental pension benefits if the proposed purchase and subsequent closure are allowed. And will the minister make sure the CGE guarantees no loss of over-all employment as a result of any action by FIRA?

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, discussions are continuing on these matters and I can assure my hon. friend that the employment implications will be a very important priority aspect of consideration and decision.

FISHERIES

SMALL CRAFT AND HARBOURS—FUNDS FOR NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT PROJECTS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I acknowledge and thank the minister for the meeting I had with him a few days ago. I want to ask him whether he has anything to report about the matters we discussed which involved the maintenance and licensing affairs of fishermen along Northumberland Strait. I am receiving urgent requests from several small communities along Northumberland Strait for maintenance and repairs, and reports that small craft and harbours people do not have sufficient funds to carry out the needed repairs at this time. Does he have anything to report?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the conversation on the sites which the hon. member asked me to check was followed up by officials looking at the plans for the area. I suspect some sites may already have been visited. I have had no further reports, but I will obviously ask for an update.

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, would the minister consider checking with his colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, and getting his support to see if more moneys can be allocated or obtained from Treasury Board for small craft and harbours which provide a very great economic impetus, as the minister knows, in an area where not only repairs are needed but jobs are needed as well?

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, I do not want to be partisan with the hon. member who never is himself. But the fact is that the budget was increased by about one third when the new government took office a year ago. The small craft harbours budget was increased by $10 million, from a budget of $26.5 million to $36.5 million. On the whole, I think we have been doing quite good work. The problem is that inflation is catching up with us, as it is with everybody else.

Large projects like Steveston in British Columbia, or some projects in the riding of the hon. member for South Shore, are becoming very expensive. The budget is stretched, but we will try to do what we can, using Canada Works or anything; I will beg and steal from everybody to give fishermen facilities.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Just beg.

NATIONAL SECURITY

INVESTIGATION OF FURTHER SPY RINGS IDENTIFIED BY TASCHEREAU ROYAL COMMISSION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In reply to a question which I put to him on March 30, he mentioned that he had not read the Taschereau papers. I hope, nonetheless, he has read the Taschereau report which would give him an indication that there was more than one spy ring active in Canada at that time. Could the minister let us know whether there have been inquiries into the other spy rings that were identified but the membership of which was not all that clear at the time?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I will take notice of the question, look into it, and be prepared to report to the member.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, while he is doing that, I wonder if the minister would ensure that he inquires into certain current stories that there was a stoppage of inquiries into some of these rings effected by the public service. Would he be able to identify those members of the public service who caused the inquiries to be interrupted, in fact stopped?

Mr. Kaplan: Madam Speaker, I will look and see if there is any truth at all to those allegations and whether any statement can be made about them.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY WHETHER NEGOTIATIONS ARE PROCEEDING WITH QUEBEC TO ALLOW COMMERCIAL SALMON FISHING IN GASPÉ AREA

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, my question is for the hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

The hon. minister has announced that commercial salmon fishing in New Brunswick, which has been banned since 1972, will once again be authorized this year on a limited scale. I would like to know whether the hon. minister has undertaken negotiations with the province of Quebec so that commercial salmon fishing can be authorized in the Gaspé peninsula in 1981?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, we announced several months ago that the ban which has been applied since 1972 or 1973 would be lifted in 1981, which is what we have done. No compensation has been provided for the fishermen for 1981 since they received compensation for nine years.

As for the decision in Quebec, this decision comes under the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec in accordance with the 1922 agreement on fisheries administration. I was to meet the Quebec minister a few months ago, but this meeting did not take place as he was ill at the time. I offered to see him in Ottawa, but I believe that the events currently taking place in Quebec might have something to do with his inability to come. In any case, I have not been able to meet with Mr. Lessard, who is the minister responsible for sport fishing. After the election in Quebec, the new government will have to decide what it wants to do. For our part, we have not provided any compensation for 1981, and we believe that salmon fishing could be restricted in the east coast waters.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

TENDERS FOR CONTRACTS APPLICABLE TO QUEBEC

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. I would ask the minister whether situations exist where firms located outside the province of Quebec would be excluded from an invitation to submit a tender or a proposal in any area of supply and services which is purchased for use in that province by the federal government?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I can advise the hon. member that no regional preferences are given. The whole process of procurement is through an invitation to tender process. We rely on sourcing lists. From time to time a decision may be made to source from within the region which is close to where the goods may be consumed as a result of our regionalization policy, but I can assure the hon. member that there is no exclusionary rule.

QUERY RESPECTING JANITORIAL SUPPLIES

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. Would he take a look at a request which came out of his department which required janitorial supplies for all regions of the country, excluding Quebec? Would the minister indicate whether requirements for that province will be handled by a future tender call to all of Canada?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I will take note of the hon. gentleman's question. I might point out to him that we have adopted a policy of regionalization. As a result of that policy, 90 per cent of our
