We post some letters here, and are off again straight west, heading now for the foothills of the rockies, which we will reach about 5 o'clock to-morrow morning. We have disembarked a sick man at Medicine Hat, who came here from some point a short distance east to be admitted into the government hospital there. The moon rises higher and higher and hangs almost over our head, like a golden scimitar. All round and about us lies the white crusted snow glistening under the moons rays, and extending away on every side, flat and ghostly stop; passing now and then huge jets 'c natural gas burning near some habitation, or close beside the railway. These issue out of iron pipes 3 feet high, driven into the ground over the gas vein, and burn with a high, leaping, blue coloured burn with a high, leaping, blue coloured flame. There are very many of these passed during the evening, and we cannot magine for what purpose they have been lighted, unless it be the childlike interest which simple settlers such as l presume tenant these farms along here. have iff watching the bright flames against the black night. At Langevin. however we are informed that this gas is used for pumping water for the supply of the railway.
