GERMANS WILL NOT CONTINUE TO OCCUPY CITY OF BRUSSELS

Have Given Assurance That They Will Content Themselves With Marching Through Capital.

ARRIVAL AT GHEN IMMINENT.

[Canadian Press.]

London, Aug. 22.—9:35 a.m.—A Central News dispatch from Antwerp, forwarded today, says that it is reported from Brussels that assurance has been given by the Germans that they will not continue to occupy the capital, contenting themselves with having marched through the town.

Belgian Officers Dragged Through City.

[Canadian Press.]

Paris, Aug. 22.—8:55 a. m.—A local paper, describing the entry of the Germans into Brussels, says a feature of the manoeuvre was the presence with the German forces of a hundred automobiles fitted with machine guns.

Another story published here is to the effect that two Belgian officers, manacled to the stirrups of horsemen, were obliged in this manner to accompany the cortege through the city. The spectacle provoked an angry growl from the populace, who were threatened by the cavalrymen. On the whole, however, the people of Brussels were very self-possessed.

Civic Guard at Ghent Disarmed.

Paris, Aug. 22.—A dispatch to the Havas Agency from Bruges, Belgium, under date of Friday, says: "The civic guard at Ghent was disarmed this morning. The Brussels civic guard was sent to Bruges and Antwerp.

The enemy occupied Alost and Wetteren today. It is feared that the arrival of the Germans at Ghent is imminent. Many people are leaving the city by automobiles or carriages for Ostend.

AUSTRIAN LOSSES PLACED AT 35,000

Correspondent States Many Were Drowned in Flight From Servia to River Danube.

[Canadian Press.]

London, Aug. 22.—9:35 a.m.—According to a Central News dispatch from Rome, many Austrians were drowned in their flight to the Drina River. The Servian artillery annihilated the survivors. The correspondent says that 25,000 Austrians were killed or wounded in the battle, and that 10,000 were taken prisoners.

Invading Bosnia.

Nish, Servia, Aug. 22.—There has been continuous fighting along the whole frontier for two days, without any change in the respective positions of the Austrian and Servian armies. It is officially stated that a part of the Servian army has invaded Bosnia successfully, and that a great battle with an outcome favorable to the Servians, is expected.

A Brilliant Victory.

London, Aug. 22—9:35 a.m.—A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from St. Petersburg, sent under today's date, says: "After a brilliant Servian victory at Matschwa, the Austrians fled toward the bridges of the Drina, pursued by the Servians, who captured rich booty and a large number of prisoners. They took 40 guns, most of them howitzers, horses, ammunition, and field, hospital and military kitchens, which were abandoned by the Austrians in their flight."

THIRD GENERATION OF FIGHTERS

When Lieut. Chester Butler left with the Seventh Regiment volunteers this morning, he was representing the third generation that has gone from London to serve his country.

His father, Frank Butler, left London for the Northwest rebellion in 1885, and his grandfather, Walter Fairbairn, went with the troops who were called out in 1866 for the Fenian Raid.

Russian Army Advancing Along the Entire Frontier

[Canadian Press.]

London, Aug. 22.—6:40 a.m.—A dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company from St. Petersburg says:

"It is officially announced that the Russian army is now advancing along the entire Austro-German frontier, and successfully maintaining the offensive at every point of contact."

Russian Cavalry Brilliant.

[Canadian Press.]

London, Aug. 22.—4 a.m.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Daily Mail, in a dispatch dated Friday, says:

"According to information from a high source the retreat of the Germans, reported yesterday, was marked by brillian Russian cavalry exploits. Crack guard regiments hurled themselves with irresistible force on the foe. The third squadron of horse guards captured a hostile battery.

No Interruption.

London, Aug. 22—11:48 a.m.—In a dispatch from St. Petersburg, the correspondent of the Reuter Telegram Company says that the Russian general advance, both on Austria and Germany, is progressing without interruption.

A big cavalry engagement of the northern army on Friday was a severe blow to the Germans in East Prussia. An entire German battery was captured. Aviators are throwing bombs on the German entrenchments and military buildings.

Three Austrian army corps are engaged in the Austro-Servian theatre of war. They are wedged in the junction of the Drina and Yandal Rivers.

Captured Battery.

In a battle of four days' duration the Servians captured 60 Austrian guns.

A dispatch received here from Antwerp says the Russian minister has been advised officially that in an encounter in Prussia the Russians captured an entire battery of guns.

Germans Claim Great Victory

(Canadian Press.)

Washington, Aug. 22.—An official German dispatch reports a "magnificent victory" of the German forces between Metz and the Vosges Mountains. No additional details are given.

25,000 CITIZENS "FLAGGED" BEFORE NOON HOUR CAME

Patriotic Women of London G arner Great Harvest For Hospital Ship—All Stock Exhausted in a Few Hours.

Tiny Union Jacks, more than 25,000 of them, were all sold before 11 o'clock this morning to raise a fund for a hospital ship, to be presented by patriotic Canadian women to the British Government.

The Daughters of the Empire and other women's organizations in this city converted two large rooms in the People's Loan and Savings Company into a counting room. They were busy at 3 o'clock assorting dimes and quarters and many bills heaped on tables that they could only give a rough estimate of the money brought in by the scores of workers from all parts of the city.

Boy Scouts are doing good work around the outskirts of the city, while the ladies of the organizations attended to the crowds near the downtown section.

Sold All Before Noon.

At 11 o'clock all of the 25,000 flags had been sold and resource had to be made to ribbons, bows, and larger flags.

Handing the citizen a small Union Jack and the citizen then dropping a coin into the extended cardboard box was the commonest sight of the streets this morning and afternoon. There were more than 300 boxes, the exact number unknown, all being filled with the money of patriotic Londoners today.

Automobiles, decorated with flags and draped with bunting, carrying signs, "Help the Ship," "England Expects Every Man to Do His Duty," supplied the workers on the corners, and at unexpected places along the streets and avenues, with flags and encouragement.

Flagless Are Rare

A man or woman who walked across Richmond and Dundas streets any time after 11 o'clock this morning and not wearing at least one flag was a rare sight.

Flagging the citizens will continue until 11 o'clock this evening, when the band concert in Victoria Park will be patrolled with flag sellers. They take anything from one cent up with a smile.

SUGAR SOARS TO $7 PER HUNDRED

Commodity Is Now Being Retailed at 8 Cents a Pound---An Advance of $1.50 Per Hundred.

Granulated sugar is quoted at stores today at a price of $7 per hundred. This is an advance in the last two weeks of $1.50 per hundred pounds. Sugar is selling retail now for 8 cents a pound.

Except for the articles on which the Government has placed a special tax, food will not advance in price, the wholesalers say.

Agents and representatives of large wholesale houses have received word from their firms that in all likelihood the embargo on sugar, tea and other necessities will be removed inside of six months. All grades of tea advanced several cents a pound Tuesday, except in cases where wholesalers have announced that they will not raise the price.

BRITISH COALER SUNK BY GERMAN CRUISER DRESDEN

After Cargo Had Been Taken Out and Crew Shipped Off to Rio Janeiro.

[Canadian Press.]

New York, Aug. 22.—News was received in shipping circles today that the crew of the British steamer Hyades had been landed at Rio Janeiro, and had reported that their ship was sunk by the German cruiser Dresden, after the warship's sailors had taken out all the coal aboard.

The Hyades, 3,350 tons, plied between British and South American ports. Her crew was brought into Rio Janeiro by the German steamer Prussia.

BELGIAN CONCENTRATION AT ANTWERP COMPLETED

Paris, Aug. 22.—10:20 a.m.—Official information made public today is to the effect that the concentration of Belgian troops before Antwerp has been completed. The morale of the Belgians has not been impaired.

Prisoners Had Scrimmage.

A dispatch received here from Coralles, France, relates that, as an unnamed German general, together with 800 German soldiers, all prisoners of war, among the troops being many Alsatians, were on their way to a detention camp, the captives fell into an animated discussion of the war situation. Blows followed words, and soon there was a general scrimmage. Some were injured before they could be separated.

PATHOS AND PATRIOTISM MINGLE AS LONDON VOLUNTEERS LEAVE FOR VALCARTIER MOBILIZATION CAMP

NOTES OF THE FAREWELL TO LONDON'S VOLUNTEERS

One of the striking incidents of the final parade was the difference it showed between the volunteer corps and the regulars. There was no starchy hard drawn line between privates and officers. Men from the ranks, who were not going to the front, came to the officers who were going and, grasping them by the hand, said their farewells. In many cases they called them by their first names, and the responses in every case was just as hearty as those to the officers themselves.

Mayor in Line.

Mayor Graham marched to the station at the head of the Seventh volunteers. The mayor kept step with Lieut.-Col. Becher and his adjutant, Captain W. J. Taylor.

Drill Works Wonders.

Sixteenth Company Canadian Army Service Corps, that acted as part of the escort to the volunteers made a good appearance. The drill of the past few weeks has rounded the A. E. C. men into fine shape.

Unashamed of Tears.

Feelings, strongly suppressed by both officers and men, had their outlet at the last minute. Some of them were unashamed to shed tears at the thoughts of leaving their loved ones behind.

Anxious to Go.

"Wish I was going with them," was a frequent expression among the spectators of the last parade and march to the station. Officers who were left behind declared that the contingent could have been doubled at the last minute had a call been made for volunteers. A number of the sorry ones

COLLAPSE AS TRAIN BEARS SONS TO FRONT

Patriotism played its part in the great sendoff London gave to its volunteers this morning, but mother love played an even greater.

At the armories, as many a mother said good-bye to her son, tears coursed down her cheeks, and as the train bearing them away to the front left the G. T. R. station many of them fainted from the shock of the last parting.

The heat and the sad parting from their boys proved too much, and they collapsed on the platform. While thousands cheered themselves hoarse their hearts were well-nigh breaking.

As Mrs. A. Russell, of 184 Simcoe street, saw the train draw out with a son waving his last farewell through a car window, her feelings overcame her.

Carried to Doctor's Car.

She fainted crying out his name. Dr. Homer Black, who was at the station, carried her to his car. There she was revived after several minutes.

"Tom, my boy, was the only support that I had," said Mrs. Russell to an Advertiser reporter after she had recovered in Dr. Black's auto. "I had hoped he would not go," she said, as tears streamed down her face, "but I know that he felt he must answer the call, and I would be the last to stop him."

Other Son in Hospital.

"I have another son, who is very ill in the hospital, and if anything happens to him I do not know what I will do.

"I wouldn't have them call my boy a coward, and though I hated to see him go, yet I am proud of him," she said, brightening up a little.

Mrs. Russell was removed to her home in Dr. Black's auto.

London Gives Great Send-Off to Seventh Men and Their Comrades-In-Arms From the 25th Regiment and the Signal Corps as They Leave City Early This Morning

Streets Lined With Thousands as Troops Parade from Armories to Grand Trunk Station, Where They Entrained To Go To the Front.

Cheered by thousands, who lined the streets and crowded the Grand Trunk station, the volunteers of the Seventh Regiment, the Twenty-fifth (Elgin) Regiment, St. Thomas, and 1 Company Canadian Signal Corps, left the city today for cartier mobilization camp.

Three times have the men of the Seventh been called for active service, and never was a sendoff more spontaneous and whole-hearted than that which the boys received today.

Not a whit behind the enthusiasm that London accorded its own volunteers was that given the Twenty-fifth men from St. Thomas. London was out to do honor to the volunteers who have offered their services to their country, and honor them it did.

CONTINGENT'S SOLDIERLY APPEARANCE.

As the contingent marched through the cheering crowds to the station it presented a soldierly appearance. The 143 men and 7 officers of the Seventh, the score of men of the Signal Corps, and the St. Thomas Company, more than 80 strong, were in splendid fettle. Effects of the drill of the past few weeks was clearly shown in the way the men marched.

There were approximately 500 men in the parade from the armories to the station, where the volunteers entrained. Headed by the Veterans of '66 and '85 the order of the parade was:

Seventh Band.
Seventh Bugle Band.
Volunteers from Seventh, under Lieut.-Col. H. C. Becher.
Seventh Regiment, under Major William Spittal.
No. 1 Company, Canadian Signal Corps, under Major Talbot Hennessey.
Sixteenth Company, Canadian Army Service Corps.
Twenty-fifth (Elgin) Regiment.

Paraded at Armories.

The local volunteers were paraded in the armories at 10:30. Drawn up in four sections the volunteers listened to brief addresses by Mayor C. M. R. Graham and Lieut.-Col. Becher, commander of the Seventh, who commanded the contingent.

The mayor's promise that the city would look after the families of those who went to the front was greeted with cheers that seemed to shake the building.

Colonel's Last Words.

In his few words to his men, Colonel Becher seemed to make a deep impression.

MOST OF ENCOUNTERS ARE MERELY INCIDENTS OF MINOR IMPORTANCE

London, Aug. 22. — 2:45 p.m. — With the Germans bombarding the forts of Namur and large bodies of their troops continuing to move westward, a contact must soon be made with the main allied forces. The German army will then, for the first time, find itself facing its real opponents, and a great battle, which must have an effect on the war, will probably ebb and flow for several days before a decision is reached.

According to French official reports, victories gained by the French troops have opened the way to Colmar, capital of upper Alsace.

7,000 Austrians are reported to have arrived at Strassburg for the defence of that fortress.

Both Germany and Austria-Hungary have called the landstrum, their last reserve of troops, to the colors.

Austria Hard Hit.

If the news of the great Servian victory, which comes from many sources, be true, Austria-Hungary, which must be reeling under the smashing blow dealt by her small adversary, will need every available man.

The Russian army on the eastern frontier of Germany gradually is emerging from the mist, and in such force as will soon demand more attention.

The official press bureau this afternoon issued a warning to the public to bear in mind that for practical purposes almost all information, official or unofficial, concerning the progress of the land operations, comes at present from the side of the allies. The official statement continues:

"Very little news filters in from Germany and Austria by the channels of neutral countries, but sufficient does filter through to indicate that the enemy claims successes in various quarters, both in the western and eastern theatres of the war.

Only Incidents.

"It should furthermore be remembered that these campaigns have been carried out on an enormous scale, and that a majority of the encounters which already have taken place can only in their due perspective be classed as incidents of minor importance.

"No achievement on either side deserves to be called a victory. The French have gained gratifying successes in Alsace, and the Germans by a steady pressure have obliged a large portion of the Belgian field army to retire on Antwerp.

"In the eastern theatre there have been a number of affairs in which our allies are believed to have gained ground, but the campaign in that quarter can scarcely be said to have commenced. The exaggeration into important triumphs of minor episodes, in which the allied forces are alleged to have gained the upper hand, is misleading.

"This, however, may be said: In the western theatre of the war—that in which this country is most immediately interested—one real noteworthy success has been gained, although it should, perhaps, be called a German failure rather than an allied success.

A Notable Success.

"At the end of three weeks, the enemy has not yet attempted to deliver an attack which, had it taken place and proved even partially successful a week ago, might conceivably have interfered with the advance of the French army, and might have proved prejudicial to their subsequent operations.

GERMAN INVESTMENT OF NAMUR HAS NOW BEGUN

Cavalry and Infantry Pass Through Brussels—Heavy Fighting in Lorraine—Muelhausen Retaken by French in Daring Style.

[Canadian Press.]

PARIS, Aug. 21.—11 p.m.—An official statement issued tonight says:

"Namur is partially invested. Heavy artillery opened fire toward noon. The westward movement of the German columns continues on both banks of the Meuse outside the range of the action at Namur.

"German cavalry forces passed through Brussels today, going westward. They were followed later by an army corps.

"A war tax of $40,000,000 has been levied on the city of Brussels by the German general.

"The retreat of the Belgians continued today without incident.

Germans Driven Back.

"As already announced, after re-conquering the frontier, our troops advanced into Lorraine along a front extending from the Donan Mountain to Chateau Salins. They drove the Germans back into the valley of the Seille River and the marshy district, and our advance guards reached Delme, Dieuze and Morhange.

"Yesterday several German army corps made a vigorous counter attack and our advance guards fell back. The fight was extremely fierce on both sides, and in view of the greatly superior number of the Germans, our troops, who had been fighting continuously for six days, retreated.

"Our left covers the advanced works of Nancy and our right is firmly established in the Donan hills. The great strength of our enemy made our remaining in Lorraine useless and imprudent.

Re-occupation of Muelhausen.

"Details received show that the re-occupation of Muelhausen was a great success. The offensive, first along the line from Thann to Dannemarie (Dammerich) and then on to Muelhausen, was carried out with rare dash. By a bold stroke, Gen. Paul Pau, once he was master at Thann and Dannemarie, directed the troops west of Muelhausen, giving the enemy an opportunity to engage him between our lines and the Swiss frontier, and then by a second move the Germans were thrown back on Muelhausen."

TERRIBLE CARNAGE MARKS RETREAT OF BELGIAN ARMY

Defenders of Land Fight Desperately in Face of Terrific Artillery Fire—Germans Use Armed Motors in Advance.

[Canadian Press.]

LONDON, August 22—1:30 a.m.—The Amsterdam correspondent of Reuter's Agency sends the following detailed account of the advance of the Germans across central Belgium during the present week. The account, as sent by the corespondent, was taken from an Antwerp newspaper. It follows:

"Tuesday morning the great advance movement began along a line extending in a broad V from Diest to Tirlemonta nd St. Trond. The Belgians retired from St. Trond, as the Germans outnumbered the Belgian advance guard. The first Belgian battle line extended along a line of about 25 miles and included Diest, Haelen, Geetbetz, Neerlinter and Tirlemont.

"The latter city was guarded by cavalry detachments only, while on the other end of the line the burden of dence at Diest was taken by bicycle sharp-shooters.

BATTLE STARTED AT DAYBREAK.

"The battle started at daybreak Tuesday near Geetbetz, where the Belgians gained the first blood by bringing down a German aeroplane, which was scouting above the Belgian position. At 6 o'clock the Germans opened their attack with large forces of cavalry, supported by infantry, artillery and machine guns. Within a few minutes a fierce battle was raging along the six mile front.

"In the north the German right wing attacked Haelen and Loxbergen. In the south they attacked Budingen. The main attack was aimed to break through the Belgian line at Geetbetz, where the dismounted Belgian cavalry poured in a terrific fire, annihilating the German advance columns. Thereupon the German cavalry executed a daring brilliant flank movement around the Belgian positions, necessitating the slow retirement of the Belgians on Budingen, where Count Dursel was killed.

240 MEN AGAINST 2,000.

"The most remarkable stand was made outside Budingen by two Belgian squadrons of 240 men, who opposed for a long time 2,000 Germans.

"On the extreme north the Germans stormed Diest, bombarding the town furiously and destroying a large part of the city.

"Late Tuesday the Belgian headquarters having learned the enemy's strength from aeroplanists, decided that further resistance along this advanced line would be foolish and ordered a gradual retirement.

"Wednesday a tremendous battle along the whole line continued. The hottest fighting was near Aerschot, 23 miles northeast of Brussels, where the carnage on both sides was awful. The advance guard of two Belgian regiments made an heroic stand, but was forced to retreat at 7 o'clock in the evening.

GERMANS IN ARMED MOTOR CARS.

"At 11 o'clock the Germans reached Louvain in motor cars, armed with machine guns. The Belgians continued to fall back in good order, administering severe punishment to the enemy all the way. Their retreat took them through Malines and thence to Antwerp.

"While our right attacked (itkirch the, left advanced on Neubrisach and Colmar, threatening the enemy's line of retreat. The Germans were then forced to accept battle, which was hottest in the suburb of Muelhausen.

CAPTURED MANY PRISONERS.

Our infantry captured 24 guns at the point of the bayonet, and made several thousand prisoners. The fight swept through the streets from house to house, and the German losses were enormous.

"Following up the success, one part of the army occupied Muelhausen, while the rest turned on Altkirch and forced the Germans to fall backward in disorder. Thus we attained the initial object of our troops in Upper Alsace to drive the German forces on to the right bank of the Rhine."

BULLET STRUCK BUST OF KAISER, LIFE OF SOLDIER IS SAVED

[Canadian Press.]

Marseilles, France, Aug. 22.—Among the French wounded who have arrived here is a soldier who has been fighting in Lorraine. He owes his life to a small bust of Emperor William, which he gathered up in a village school and placed in his haversack. A German bullet struck the bust and damaged the head. Thus deflected, the soldier was only wounded by the missile.

SAW SUN ECLIPSE

[Canadian Press.]

Stockholm, via London, Aug. 22—5:30 a.m.—The observations of the solar eclipse were favored with a clear sky, and it was observed by English, Dutch, German and Swedish expeditions at five places in the north of Sweden, where the eclipse was total. A great crowd witnessed the phenomenon in Stockholm, where the solar spots of Venus were visible to the naked eye.

BRUSSELS' TREASURER WON'T PAY THE TAX

Detroit, Aug. 22—2:55 a.m.—The Antwerp correspondent of the Chronicle says:

"M. Hallet, treasurer of the city of Brussels, informs me that no possible coercive measures will influence him to give the Germans the $40,000,000 demanded from the city as a war tax."

U. S. A. DECIDES TO MODIFY CENSORSHIP

Will Permit Wireless Messages in Code After the Censors Know Text.

[Canadian Press.]

Washington, Aug. 22.—Administration officials said today that they had found an equitable solution of the wireless-cable controversy which has thus far furnished the question of neutrality of the United States Government's consideration.

The suggestion which has been advanced, after a careful examination of the legal and international aspects of the case, is that censorship be imposed, but in modified form.

Under the instructions to naval officers placed in charge of wireless stations, no code messages of any kind were permitted to go to foreign countries. The new arrangement would permit code messages to be sent, but after the American naval officers in charge had been satisfied with their context.

If accepted, the proposed method would give German embassy officials and consuls an opportunity to communicate directly with Germany, and it has been suggested might bring from Berlin more official news of the progress of the war from the German viewpoint.

HOW FRENCH TURNED TIDE AT ALTKIRCH

Muelhausen Difficult To Defend Against Forces From North to East.

RETREAT ONLY SOLUTION

Sharp, Decisive Fight Drove Germans Out of Thann and Dannemarie.

A DESPERATE STRUGGLE

Germans, Beaten Back, Retired in Disorder, Pursued by the French.

[Canadian Press.]

London, Aug. 22.—4 a.m.—The Paris correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Company adds the following details concerning the battles of Muelhausen and Altkirch:

"As the enemy's retreat had not been cut off, they made good their escape, hiding in the forest over a space eighteen miles in extent. Our troops entered Muelhausen as night was falling, to the acclamations of the people, who royally feted our soldiers. Muelhausen was difficult to defend against a force coming from the north or east and was relatively easy to retake.

"The Germans attacked our positions that same night, coming from the forest on the right and Neu Breisach on the left, while other troops marched in the direction of Cernay to cut off our retreat from there. Cernay is on the Thur River, southeast of Thann.

Risking Retreat Line.

"By staying in Muelhausen with a comparatively weak force, we risked losing our line of retreat to the heights of Vosges. Therefore it was thought possible to attack the enemy marching toward Cernay and still use our reserves when a rally was necessary. Our left was being attacked toward Cernay by a superior force. Our centre was engaged at Muelhausen, and our right was forced to remain inactive.

The battle was going against us. Therefore retreat was the only solution, as the enemy was not prepared to give up the heights of Alsace without a struggle, and had brought up a large force for its defence.

Wanted New Base.

"Our object was to take up a new base in the shelter of the Belfort. The enemy suffered severely from our artillery fire. Gen. Pau determined to give battle, while the enemy seemed inclined, rather than to continue the skirmishing.

"The battle front was less extended than on the previous week. The German line of retreat lay by the canal leading to the Rhine. When the attack commenced, Thann and Dannemarie were the objective points. The fight was sharp and decisive, and the Germans were driven out. They set fire to the greater part of the towns before leaving.

"Gen. Pau next gave an order to attack in the direction of Muelhausen. At the same time, our left being attacked in the direction of Colmar and Neu Breisach, our right began its march on Altkirch. Our left and right also menaced the line of the German retreat before Muelhausen. Four German batteries were abandoned, and our men, limbering up their guns, captured 24 of the enemy's guns.

"The struggle continued desperately, but already the enemy had found our troops steadily gaining ground, and, apparently, fearing that the bridges over the Rhine would be destroyed, retired in great disorder, vigorously pursued by our men. We now hold the sides and the main valleys of the Vosges, and are in the best positions to follow up our success in the direction of Colmar."

ONE SHELL SANK AUSTRIAN CRUISER

French Projectile Exploded in Ship's Magazine and She Foundered in Five Minutes.

[Canadian Press.]

London, Aug. 22—2:08 p.m.—Official news from Paris gives further details of the encounter in the Adriatic about a week ago which resulted in the loss of the Austrian battleship Zrinyi, a vessel of over 14,000 tons, and a crew of 857 men.

The Zrinyi was struck by a shell from a French warship. This projectile exploded in her magazine and damaged her so badly that she foundered in a few minutes.

WALLACEBURG, Aug. 21.—Not satisfied with the $180 they secured recently for the Canadian hospital ship, local Daughters of the Empire last evening at a big concert, raised $80 more, which will be forwarded to headquarters.

GERMANS MAKE AWFUL REPRISAL

One Shot in Liege Brings the Machine Guns Into Action —Houses Destroyed, Many Killed.

[Canadian Press.]

London, Aug. 22.—12:30 p. m.—The correspondent at Amsterdam of the Reuter Telegram Company has sent in the following account of the present situation at Liege which came from a correspondent at Maestricht:

The firing of a shot from a private house on the Quiaides Pecheurs in Liege yesterday was the signal for a widespread bombardment and arson on the part of the German army of occupation. The situation of the population of Liege became extremely perilous. Immediately the shot was fired the Germans opened up with their machine guns, destroyed twenty houses and killed the inmates of ten others.

In addition to the war tribute of $10,000,000 levied upon the province and city, Liege has been mulcted of an additional $2,000,000, the German army administration having seized this amount of cash in private banks.

All citizens have been ordered to hand over their arms, and at the same time the peasants have been invited to return to the country and begin harvesting.

The lives of foreigners in Liege are in danger. There are a great many Dutchmen in Liege at the present time and the Dutch Government is taking measures for their protection.

In conclusion the correspondent says that Prince Eitel Friedrich, second son of Emperor William, has left Liege.

NEARING THE END OF THE FIRST ACT

Times Correspondent at Boulogne Prophesies — "Chief War Lord" Thanks Army For Muelhausen.

London, Aug. 22.—5 a.m.—The Bologne correspondent of the Times describing the entraining of the British heavy field artillery for the front, but giving no indication of where the British camps are situated, says:

"To those of us who have watched the coming and going of the expeditionary force, it is plain that we are coming to the end of the first act. The curtain is certain to drop.

"Among the German papers received in London is the Strassburger Post, which gives the Emperor's rescript issued after the German victory at Muelhausen, and addressed to army headquarters. The Emperor said:

"I am grateful to our God, who is with us. I thank you and our brave troops for the first victory, and express to all who took part my imperial thanks, which your chief war lord addresses to them in the name of the Fatherland."

HUSBAND IS MISSING

Mrs. John Chapman, of Sandwich, Here In Search of Him.

Will John Chapman, who left Sandwich two weeks ago for St. Thomas, and who moved to London a week since, not being able to stand the excitement in St. Thomas, kindly go to the Y. W. C. A., where he will find his wife and child.

This morning Mrs. Chapman, with a miniature picture of her husband in her arms, entered the police station and asked the officers to locate her husband. "He left Sandwich two weeks ago for St. Thomas, looking for work, coming on to London a week ago," said Mrs. Chapman. "I got a letter from him on Tuesday, saying he had secured a job here, but he failed to say where, and he did not give any address.

"The people I was boarding with in Sandwich were afraid that they wouldn't get their money, so I had to go to Windsor, where I was given transportation here. I hope that my husband will read the paper and find me," said little Mrs. Chapman, as she left the police station. "I am awfully anxious to see him."

ORGANIZING WORK FOR UNEMPLOYED

Paris, Aug. 22.—The Minister of the Interior has informed President Poincare and members of the ministerial council that all measures had been taken by him and the mayors of 20 arrondissements in Paris to insure the systematic organization of various branches of work, to relieve families of workers in need. The Minister of Commerce submitted for M. Poincare's signature yesterday a decree relative to the cessation of payments by bankrupts. Citizens under the flag are exempt from bankruptcy proceedings under the decree.

U. S. ATTITUDE ON JAPAN ULTIMATUM

Expresses Satisfaction With Some of Promises Included Therein and Indicates Policy Expected.

[Canadian Press.]

Washington, Aug. 22.—The significance of the policy of the United States toward the situation in the Far East as expressed in a formal communication from the American Government to Japan was widely discussed by diplomats here today.

The declaration that the United States would remain absolutely neutral in eventuality was not unexpected, but the extent to which the present administration would reaffirm the policy of John Hay for the preservation of the territorial integrity of China and the principle of the "open door" for the commerce of all nations had not been generally known.

Points Noted.

In its latest communication with Japan, the United States has carefully refrained from expressing any opinion on the merits of the ultimatum presented by Japan to Germany, but has noted with satisfaction the following points:

That Japan has promised to restore to China the territory of Kiao-Chow if she should obtain possession of it from Germany.

That Japan seeks no territory in China.

That Japan would naturally communicate with the United States before taking any steps outside of the boundaries of Kiao-Chow, in the event that revolutionary outbreaks or disturbances in the interior of China threatened the lives and interests of foreigners.

Preserve Common Interests.

That Japan's attitude was based on the Anglo-Japanese alliance, one of the objects of which is:

"The preservation of the common interests of all powers in China by insuring the independence and integrity of the Chinese Empire, and the principle of equal opportunities for commerce and industry of all nations in China."

By referring to this part of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, the Washington Government, it was pointed out today, has in effect expressed the expectation that the "open door" policy and the principle of the preservation of the integrity of China will be maintained, no matter what the outcome of the present situation.

ECONOMIC EFFECTS FELT IN GERMANY

Police Regulating Food Purchases—Businesses Closing Down Because of Lack of Supplies.

[Canadian Press.]

New York, Aug. 22.—A London cable says:

"The German newspapers to hand last night, although evidently under an iron censorship, make interesting reading. They indicate, for one thing, that the economic disturbance in the Fatherland is already having disastrous effects. The pinch of scarcity is being felt acutely. The police have had to intervene in some places between provision dealers and the customers. Not only is Germany practically cut off from postal communication with the rest of the world, but various parts of the German Empire are suffering from an entire dislocation of the railroads.

Even between the most important centres only one mail train is possible in 48 hours. No goods are forwarded from Berlin to Stettin or any big centre without special permit, and, in the Rhennish provinces businesses in a number of cases have had to close, owing to a lack of supplies. In Berlin the labor bureaus are unable to find employment for the crowds of women who besiege them. Right and left people are dismissing their domestic servants and crowds of girls are now offering their services in exchange for bare board and lodging.

PARISIAN ARRESTED FOR LEAVING POST

Parents Say Son Is Only Guilty of Irregularity.

[Canadian Press.]

Paris, Aug. 22.—2 a. m.—Lieut. Andre Mesureur, son of the director of the Paris hospital asylum's board, has been arrested on a charge of leaving his post. Mesureur is an officer of the reserves. He was present at the action at Dinant August 15 and was sent to a hospital at the army's base for rest and treatment.

Taking advantage of the leave granted, he came to Paris to visit his parents. His family declare that he was about to return when he was arrested, and say that he was guilty only of an irregularity.

Max Barthou, the 18-year-old son of former Premier Barthou, is among the enlisted men mustered in yesterday. Joseph Caillaux, former minister of finance, has been promoted to be a second lieutenant and named as the general paymaster of the army.

BRITAIN TO ACT UPON DECLARATION OF LONDON

[Canadian Press.]

London, Aug. 22.—The Gazette announces the decision of the British Government to put into effect the Declaration of London, as though it had been ratified. The decision was taken in view of the fact that the British, French and Russian navies are acting jointly, and France and Russia had given notice of their intention to act in accordance with the provisions of the declaration, so far as is practicable during the present hostilities.

The Declaration of London was discussed at a conference of maritime powers held in London in 1908-09. Among other things it provided for a modification of the law of contraband and rights of seizure and search. It was agreed upon by the delegates, but has not been ratified by all the countries concerned.

"STATE OF OHIO" SLIGHTLY DAMAGED

[Special to The Advertiser.]

Port Stanley, Aug. 22.—The steamer State of Ohio, damaged in an accident here last night, left for Cleveland this morning, towed by the harbor tug Latz.

The State of Ohio ran against the dock, breaking her rudder and doing other damage. It will likely be a week before she is on her trips again.

Princess Pat Worked Colors For Regiment

OTTAWA, Aug. 21.—Her Royal Highness Princess Patricia will present the camp colors to the Princess Patricia Light Infantry at church parade Sunday at Lansdowne Park, where the regiment is mobilizing.

The colors have been worked by Her Royal Highness herself. The Governor-General and Duchess of Connaught will also attend the service.

This regiment is now up to full strength, 1,000 men being encamped here, all of them being veterans.

DID SPLENDID WORK.

HARRISTON, Aug. 21.—Harriston Daughters of the Empire did a great day's work today in aid of the new hospital ship. At the close of the canvass it was learned that $306 had been secured. The members of the D. O. E. were heartily congratulated on their fine work.

Magical Effect of New Face Peeler

To maintain a clear, white, youthful complexion, there's nothing so simple to use and yet so effective as ordinary mercolized wax, which you can get at any drugstore. Just apply the wax at night as you would cold cream. In the morning wash it off with warm water. If you've never tried it you can't imagine the magical effect of this harmless home treatment. It causes the old worn-out scarf skin to come off in minute particles, a little at a time, and soon you have entirely shed the offensive cuticle. The fresh young under-skin now in evidence is so healthy and girlish looking, so free from any appearance of artificiality, you wonder why you had not heard of this marvelous complexion-renewing secret long ago.

Equally magical in its action is a simple wrinkle-removing lotion made by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint witch hazel. Bathing the face in this for two or three minutes immediately affects every line and furrow and improves facial contour wonderfully.—advt.

PATHOS AND PATRIOTISM MINGLE

They were: "Do your duty as true soldiers and men. Remember, men, conduct and behave yourselves as true soldiers of the King and true gentlemen. There will be no farewells at the station."

Then followed a few short, sharp orders, and the men marched to the street, behind the veterans. Once outside the parade was marshalled and joined by the St. Thomas men, the members of the Seventh who are staying behind, the A. S. C., and the bands the troops marched off to the station.

CAPT. GORDON HUNT GOES WITH VOLUNTEERS

Yeo.

Streets Are Crowded.

By 10:30 o'clock Dundas and Richmond streets, along the line of march, were lined with citizens. Street car traffic was interrupted, and inspectors of the company experienced greatest difficulty in routing their cars through the downtown section.

Where clearings were made on the street autos and vehicles felt their way along.

At Dundas and Richmond streets the crowd was the most dense. Five minutes before the parade arrived traffic was tied up at the "hub," and vehicles were held back until the procession had passed.

At last far down the streets there was a noticeable stir.

They're Coming!

"They're coming! They're coming!" was taken up and passed from mouth to mouth.

Then "they" came. At the head of the contingent of picked men was the band. The strains of "O, Canada" and "The Maple Leaf" brought tears to many an eye, even to those who had no loved ones with those silent, gently swinging lines in brown.

Cheer Volunteers.

The volunteers were in the van, and as the crowds caught sight of them the cheering broke out afresh. In the multitudes that lined the streets were wives, mothers and sweethearts of those men. With tears streaming down their faces, many stood apart from the cheering masses. While friends yelled themselves hoarse they, with grim faces, made no sound. Perhaps they were offering up silent prayers that those dear ones marching so gaily through the streets would come safe through the battle to come back home again.

One old veteran stood near King street, on Richmond. By his side stood a little woman who gazed wistfully into the line of silent faces swinging by.

"Would 'he' see her?" was the only thought of the conflicting emotions in her heart. She reiterated it tearfully. The column swung along. Row after row passed the spot. Then—

A Mother's Cry.

"That's him, John. Oh, that's him!" she cried, pointing out a tall young fellow.

At the sound of the voice he half-turned in the rank. But discipline is strong. Resolutely he turned his face away. In a moment he was gone, and the regiment was swinging far down the street. But not before he had smiled once more at the mother waiting on the street corner.

She confided this to her husband as she trudged to the station to see the men entrain.

"It's for the country, girl," he told her. "For the country," he repeated, as he gazed at the empty, swinging sleeve at his left side.

Crowds Surge Onto Tracks.

Scenes at the station were almost beyond description. Crowds, despite the efforts of a special detail of A. S. C. men and police, swarmed over the platform and out onto the tracks. It was impossible to move them back against the station.

The parade turned at the tracks and moved onto the platform. On track No. 2 was the waiting special of eight cars and several baggage cars. Beside the coaches the band marched. The veterans of '68 followed, and received a tremendous ovation. Next were the volunteers, then the remainder of the Seventh, comprising the guard of honor, and then the Army Service Corps.

Speedy Entraining.

The time for departure had already passed, and no time was lost. With the strains of "God Save the King," and deafening cheers ringing in their ears the volunteers entrained.

The men immediately took possession of the windows, and friends by the hundreds crowded up to the openings and clasped the hands of the boys on their way to Valcartier and active service.

Wives Crowd to Windows.

Wives and children of the volunteers crowded to the front, and were the last to wave good-bye to their husbands and fathers. Tiny babies, too young to comprehend the stress of the moment, were held high in arms to be seen and to see.

Then the final "all aboards" were called. Slowly the heavy train began to move out of the station. The band struck up the National Anthem, and as the train gained momentum, "God Be With You Till We Meet Again."

Deafening cheering broke out afresh as the train moved on. Hats, flags and handkerchiefs were waved high in the air, to show the citizens' patriotism and honor for the men who were off for the front, while military caps on top of the rifles of the Service Corps men and the Seventh were bobbing above the heads of the crowd.

Farewell at Woodstock.
[Canadian Press.]

Woodstock, Ont., Aug. 22. — Woodstock said good-bye to her contingent of Canadian volunteers at noon today, when 65 of the members of the Twenty-second Regiment Oxford Rifles entrained for Valcartier. The contingent was escorted to the station through streets lined with citizens. At the station there was a civic farewell, and Mayor Hobson, on behalf of the city, presented each volunteer with a sum of money and assured them that those dependent upon them would be well looked after. The Seventh Regiment of London and the St. Thomas contingent were on the same train and were given a rousing send-off.

NOTES OF THE FAREWELL TO

sought out company officers and expressed a desire to enlist for a second contingent if one is to be sent.

Chaplain Davis Attends.

Honorary Major Dean Davis, chaplain of the Seventh, was at the armories to say good-bye to the members of his regiment. The major wore for the first time his long-service medal presented to him last week, and marched to the depot.

Seventh Engineers.

In the ranks of the Seventh Regiment marched one of the men of the Seventh Field Company Canadian Engineers—[illegible] North, a civil engineer of Deloraine, in those white cap, red tunic, and [illegible] trousers with the wide engineers' [illegible] was in direct contrast to the [illegible]-clad men of the infantry. North was unable to reach London in time to go with the Engineers when they left and therefore went with the next contingent—the Seventh.

Presentation to Ed Summers.

Lance Corporal Ed Summers, a finisher at the Globe Casket Company, was presented with a wrist watch and a fountain pen by fellow employees. The presentation was made at the armories.

March in Civilians.

Some of the latest joined members of the Seventh marched in civilians. They were unable to be fitted out with uniforms before leaving. Full webb equipment, however, was issued to all.

Veterans' Advice.

Veterans of the Fenian Raid and of the Northwest Rebellion were early at the armories to give the final advice to sons and friends who were marching to the front with the Seventh.

Garrison Officers There.

Major Archie Becher, of the Sixth Field Battery; Captain E. V. Buchanan, of the Seventh Field Company Canadian Engineers; Lieut.-Col. A. A. Campbell, late commander of the Seventh, and many other officers of the garrison were at the armories. The good-byes between the officers were significant. "Good-bye. Wish you luck," was the only expression they permitted themselves.

Hussars' Good-bye.

Members of the First Hussars gathered at the armories to say good-bye to their comrades in arms of the Seventh. It was expected that the corps would march, but at the last minute the order was countermanded.

Captain Eaton Marches.

Captain Eaton, of the Permanent Headquarters Staff, transportation officer of the First Militia Division, marched with the contingent to the station.

Made Great Showing.

The soldiery appearance of the St. Thomas men, with their regulation helmets and leggings, drew many a commendatory expression from the crowds that lined the streets. The men from St. Thomas were a fine-looking lot of soldiers.

Sixth on Guard.

Men from the Sixth Field Battery formed the guard at the armories today.

Ready For Anything.

Ready for anything was the appearance of the Seventh officers. Gone were the stiff collars, the gold lace and the fanciness of the dress uniforms. In their place were soft shirts, easy-fitting karki service uniforms and serviceable shoes. There was no style, but lots of service and ability in their appearance.

Comforts Mothers.

Chaplain Davis comforted many a mother at the armories, who with tear-dimmed eyes saw her son in full marching uniform for perhaps the last time.

Would Go In Ranks.

City Engineer Ashplant, who was in the parade as a lieutenant of the Seventh, though not of the officers who went away, said, before the soldiers left the armories, that he was willing to go even as a non-commissioned officer.

Mutual Protection.

The wives of two soldiers rushed up to Col. Becher before the contingent left the armory and grasped him by the hands.

"Be sure and take care of my Frank, cried one. Then the other interposed "and look after Harry, as they are going to look after you."

Veterans Applauded.

The veterans of the Northwest and of '68, lead by Col. W. M. Gartshore, got a big hand all along the line of march and were applauded at the depot. It was fitting that they should lead the contingent.

Ready at 6 A.M.

As early at 6 o'clock members of the Seventh Regiment and the Army Service Corps reported at the armories for duty and went through parade drills. The members of the Seventh who were going with the contingent fell into line early as Paymaster Pocock soon appeared to pay them off.

Last Farewells.

As the "Boys" stood in line adjusting their bags and belts, mothers, wives and sisters and not a few sweethearts wandered over to the lines for a last hurried confidential chat. Reassuring words were whispered in the soldiers' ears, tears were shed and the final handshake revealed the deep grief of feminine love at a parting where none knew when they would see each other again.

Went to Coronation.

Captain Ware and Lieutenants Butler and Galbraith, who went to Valcartier with the Seventh, were also on the coronation contingent. Captain Taylor holds a long service medal.

Entrained in Good Order.

Lieut.-Col. Macdonnell, of militia headquarters, and Captain Ingram, of that part of the Seventh Regiment which was not called out, stood at the corner of Dundas and Richmond streets at 11:15 today, when Col. Macdonnell remarked that the local contingent showed efficiency by marching on the depot platform promptly at 11 o'clock and getting aboard the train in a monster crowd by 11:09, when the train pulled out.

The Volunteers' Address.

The address of the members of the Seventh Regiment while at Valcartier camp will be in care of "The Seventh Fusiliers, Valcartier, Quebec."

Immediately after the contingent left the armories a company of 34 men, in charge of Captain Spry, were detailed to guard the military property in the city. The men were all put under pay and go on duty tonight.

$1,500 Paid Out.

Honorary Capt. Philip Pocock, paymaster of the Seventh Regiment, was one of the busiest of the officers today. During the morning he paid out $1,500 to members of the Seventh. The pay varied, some of the men drawing ten days' pay, having been on active service that length of time, while others only had put in a few days.

Knives From Officers.

As each member of the Seventh was paid off he was presented with a serviceable knife for campaign work. The cutlery was the presentation the officers of the regiment made to those who went to the front.

Cheer Twenty-fifth Men.

As the St. Thomas contingent from the Twenty-fifth Regiment marched to the Armories a few minutes before the local men marched out, it was tendered a great ovation. The Seventh Band and the members of the regiment who were not going to Valcartier were already out on the street, and they led the cheering that greeted the appearance of the helmeted Elgin volunteers.

Camera Fiends Busy.

Camera fiends by the score took shots from various vantage points as the troops paraded and marched to the station. One enterprising photographer mounted the roofs of the cars in the troop train and took a number of exposures.

Farewell Packages.

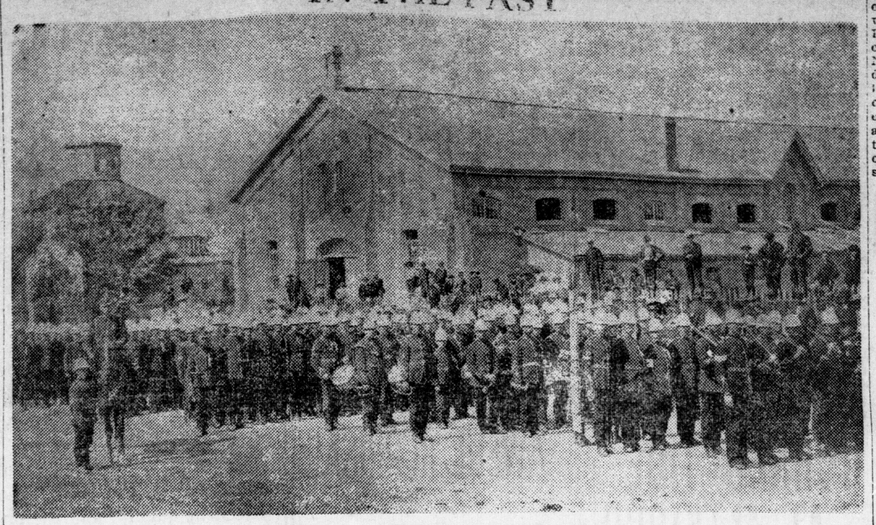

Shortly after the men took their places in the troop train there was a regular rain of packages over the heads of the crowd to the men in the coaches. Some of these packages were dainty lunches, others contained little gifts that friends and acquaintances had no other way of sending to the boys off to the front.

An Old Advertiser Boy.

Among the volunteers from London today was Harry Atkinson, for some years city editor of The Advertiser. Mr. Atkinson is a deep student of European politics, and he goes to the front expecting an experience that will be worth while recording. He passed the medical examination with flying colors, and has been acting as paymaster-sergeant for some time.

Scott Murray, the King street contractor, gives two of his sons for service, James and Thomas. The former left this morning with the Seventh boys, and the latter will go with the Postal Corps.

CAPT. GEORGE WATSON GOES WITH VOLUNTEERS

"Meanest Man" Again At Large

Says He Would Buy a Flag If He Thought It Would Sink Ship.

The meanest man in London was again at large today. Mrs. Scatcherd, one of the patriotic ladies engaged in selling flags in aid of the hospital ship, was stationed at the corner of Victoria Park when the aforesaid individual swaggered into view. Not being aware of his identity, Mrs. Scatcherd asked him to buy a flag. There were no other men nearby or else the crusty, surely unpatriotic anthropoid specimen probably would not have dared to reply: "I would if I thought it would sink the blooming ship."

However, he was the only one of his kind encountered by ladies selling flags.

CANADIANS MAY TRAIN FURTHER IN ENGLAND

Military Officer Says Volunteers May Not Reach Battle Line For Six Months.

A military officer stated to The Advertiser today that in all probability the Canadian volunteers for the overseas contingent would be transferred from Valcartier to Aldershot, or some other British training school, and given six months' hard training before being sent to the battleground in Europe. Many of the volunteers have had little or no military training, and the statement of the London officer would seem to bear out the announcement of Lord Kitchener, that he would have none but trained soldiers fighting in the battle line.

Death of Mrs. Robinson.

Mrs. Pauline Robinson, age thirty-two years, died at the residence of her mother, Mrs. Henry McCrorey, 563 Grey street, at an early hour this morning. She is survived by her husband, Ernest Robinson.

The funeral will be held on Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock, from the residence of her mother to Mount Pleasant Cemetery. The services at 2:30 will be conducted by Rev. Dr. McCrae, of Hamilton Road Presbyterian Church.

THE PAST RECORD OF THE SEVENTH

While the Seventh Regiment will undoubtedly lose its identity in the camp at Valcartier, the service which the local contingent will render at the front will be in the name of the Seventh, so far as local records go.

In this connection the official history of service of the Seventh Regiment is interesting. It appears in the manual at the armories and is as follows:

In 1855 there were only two volunteer companies in London, but during the excitement over the "Trent" affair in 1861 and 1862, there was much enthusiasm in military matters. Many "Drill Associations" were formed from which infantry companies were afterwards organized. These companies became the nucleus of the Seventh Regiment, or "Prince Arthur's Own," as it was first called.

THE FENIAN RAID.

In 1866, before the first Fenian Raid, a reorganization took place under the name of the Seventh Battalion of London Light Infantry, Lieut.-Col. John B. Taylor (then deputy adjutant-general of the district) being placed in command. About ten years later, during the term of Lieut.-Col. Walker, who brought the "Seventh" to a high state of efficiency, the regiment was changed from light infantry to fusiliers, and adopted the handsome fusilier uniform with scarlet tunics and bear-skin busbies.

The Seventh's members have had their full share of active service. One of the companies was stationed at Windsor during the Fenian troubles in the winter of 1865 and 1866, and later the whole regiment was sent to Fort Erie to meet the "Raiders," who crossed over from Black Rock near Buffalo. The Seventh did not arrive in time to take part in the engagement, but the men were subjected to many trying forced marches.

AT RIEL REBELLION.

In April, 1885, they were assembled by bugle call before daylight one morning and ordered to prepare to leave for the Northwest to assist in quelling the "Riel" rebellion. At that time the Canadian Pacific Railway was under construction, and there were several uncompleted gaps north of Lake Superior. The regiment had to march over these gaps, in some instances going over the ice on the lake. Serious hardships were endured. After a few days' delay at Winnipeg, they were ordered to the front and got as far as Clarke's Crossing on the Saskatchewan River, about 600 miles northwest of Winnipeg. They remained in active service about four months, and returned to headquarters with a most enviable record.

When volunteers were called for to assist the Mother Country in the late South African War, the Seventh furnished their full quota, and had their representatives on the field of Paardeberg and at many other battles.

BRANDENBURG ALLOWED TO LEAVE; BRITISH AFTER HER

[Canadian Press.]

Philadelphia, Aug. 22.—Loaded to the limit with coal and food supplies, the North German Lloyd ship Brandenburg is steaming down the Delaware River, bound for Bergen, Norway. This is the destination given in the clearance papers, and the captain says the journey will require about two months.

Despite the protests of the British ambassador in Washington, who declared that the Brandenburg is an auxiliary cruiser of the German navy, local customs authorities gave her clearance papers.

Naval men believe the vessel may proceed slowly down the Delaware River, and when she reaches the Atlantic Ocean, 100 miles away, hug the three-mile limit until a favorable opportunity presents itself for a dash seaward. The Brandenburg is slow, and her only chance for safety lies in protection by German cruisers.

Changed Appearance.

When the Brandenburg sailed her appearance was changed so that old mariners failed to recognize her as the vessel. Her buff-colored funnels had been painted black, and paint had altered the appearance of her hull. In her hold were 5,500 tons of coal, an additional 1,000 tons in her bunkers, and between decks was stored 2,800 tons of supplies, said to be mostly foodstuffs. Luxuriously appointed staterooms were loaded to their fullest capacity with coal, and the air of the passenger boat was gone.

Capt. Schmetz was superseded in command by Capt. Dietrich, on orders from Berlin. Capt. Dietrich is attached to the German navy auxiliary. He commanded a Japanese warship during the Russo-Japanese war, and took part in the siege of Vladivostock.

British After Her.

As soon as the Brandenburg started down the river, Admiral Cradock, commanding the British Atlantic fleet, was notified by wireless. The course of his flagship, the Berwick, was changed from off Nantucket, and she was headed toward Delaware Bay. It is said that the British armored cruisers Suffolk, Lancaster, Goodhope, King Alfred, and Niobe were also notified of the Brandenburg's departure. If, as is believed in shipping circles, the Brandenburg is on a mission of relief for the German cruisers Dresden, Karlsruhe, Strassburg and Kronprinz Wilhelm, which are said to be in these waters, interesting developments are looked for on the New Jersey coast.

GERMANY HAS FRESH FORCES READY TO USE

Will Be Hurled Into France if Plans Work Out Satisfactorily.

GREAT BATTLE RAGING

On Its Outcome Depends the Future Movements of Opposing Armies.

SITUATION IS CRITICAL

Emergency Hospitals Being Fitted Up All Along England Coast.

[Special to The Advertiser.]

London, Aug. 12.—That the war office believes stern work is already confronting the army now operating on the continent is best shown by an announcement that all arrangements have been completed for the establishment of emergency hospitals at fifty different points. It is known that a number of old English estates in parts of England and along the seashore have been fitted up as emergency hospitals, and corps of doctors from the medical reserve are now in attendance.

The Times' military expert, in discussin gthe movement of Germans says there is little doubt that the German armies are being hurled at the gap between Nons and Charleroi. He then says:

"It is certain that many of the troops that presented such an imposing spectacle at Brussels were perfectly fresh. They are an important part of that vast army which Germany, for fifteen days, has effectively screened behind her desperate fighting forces.

"This army is destined to be hurled into France.

"There is no doubt that a great battle is raging. On its outcome depends everything. If the Germans gain the advantage, the allies will have to form along their second line, well inside of the French frontier. If the allies win, then the Germans must fall back, facing the fire of the Namur and Liege forts, which are still holding out. The situation is very critical, and the public must not expect too much."

WAR DOES NOT STRIKE MARKET

Prices of Farm Products Have Not Been Seriously Affected.

PRICES MAY BE LESS

Apples Have a Ready Sale—Preserving May Be Reduced.

War prices have taken no hold on the produce at the local market. Vegetables, fruits, and grain sold at a steady figure today. Fruits were slightly cheaper than usual. Dealers say there is no reason why prices on the market this fall should be higher than usual.

In the opinion of dealers, eggs and butter may be a shade cheaper this fall than other years, on account of the small exports. Apples which are more plentiful this year than they have been for many years, will help to keep down the high cost of living while they are in season. They sold today for 50 and 70 cents a bushel.

Affects Preserving.

With the price of sugar so high, it is expected that less fruit will be bought for preserving. Most of the fruits, with the exception of apples are scarce this year. The higher prices which would result from this may be offset to a certain extent, dealers think, by the lessened demand.

Peaches, plums and pears are all small crops in Ontario, with the exception of the peach crop in the Leamington district, which is said to be the best in years.

Less Than Last Year.

Grain was plentiful, and although the demand was heavy, prices for oats and wheat were much less than that paid at the same time last year. Wheat sold this morning for $1 per bushel. Most of the grain was purchased by the large dealers, who are cleaned out.

Oats sold at $1.45 and $1.50 per bushel for new, and $1.55 and $1.60 per bushel for old grain. More than 40 loads of oats were on the square yesterday, and almost that many were sold this morning.

Eggs continue at a steady medium price, selling at 22½ and 23 cents a dozen in quantities, and retail for 24 and 25 cents a dozen.

FALLS FROM BRIDGE

John Clark Goes to Hospital Where He Will Recover.

John Clark, of Wellington street, had a marvellous escape from death about 2 o'clock this morning when he fell over twenty feet from the Pere Marquette bridge over the Thames River. He escaped serious injury however, only being slightly bruised on the back.

His two companions ran to Victoria Hospital where a call was sent in for the police ambulance. House Surgeons Drs. Siddall and Wilson, of the hospital staff hurried to Clark's assistance.

Clark and his two companions were on the bridge when the former fell off. It was fortunate that he was almost at one end of the bridge, for the trestle is sixty feet from the river bed in the centre.

It was reported at th hospital that Clark will be around in a few days.

WEDDING BELLS

CRUMMER—DYSON.

A quiet but very pretty wedding was solemnized at the Cronyn Memorial Church on Thursday evening, August 20, when the Rev. Dr. Sage, of St. George's Church, united in the bonds of holy matrimony Miss May Goodwin Dyson and Martin Howard Crummer.

The bride looked charming in her traveling suit of alice blue broadcloth, with a chic little hat to match.

The bride was attended by Miss Edna Routledge, and the groom by his bother, Frank Crummer.

The bride was given away by her brother, H. Dyson. The many beautiful gifts received by the young couple testified to the high esteemn in which they are held.

A solid brass bedstead from Cowan's Hardware, with whose firm the groom is employed, also a beautiful cabinet of silver from the Mason-Risch Company, where the bride was recently bookkeeper, showed the popularity of both the young people.

The groom's gift to the bridesmaid was a cameo ring and to the groomsman a pair of gold cuff links.

The couple left on the 7:55 C. P. R. train for Detroit and Bay City, Mich., and on return will take up there residence at their new home, 331 Simcoe street, city, where they will be at home to their friends after September 1.

SOLDIER'S WIFE HAD TO LEAVE HER HOME

To the Editor of The Advertiser:

By what I can learn from a letter sent to an Englishman who has been ordered to the front of war, his landlady forces his wife to vacate the house, selling the furniture for rent, being offered more rent for the house by some one not going to the seat of war.

I am requested by a unanimous vote of Trafalgar Lodge, Sons of England, and Englishmen, to state that we protest against such action of a certain landlady in this city on a man under these circumstances, having to leave for the front under such a short notice and forced to leave his wife alone in such a helpless condition.

Yours sincerely,
T. T. COOK,
Secretary.

ONTARIO'S GIFT IS NOT YET DECIDED ON

[Special to The Advertiser.]

Toronto, Aug. 22.—Hon. R. A. Pyne stated emphatically that there was no truth in the Ottawa dispatch that Ontario would give $500,000 to the imperial war fund being voted by the Canadian Parliament. There is still doubt in the minds of the provincial ministers as to what form the contribution will take, and the cabinet is at a loss to know whether it should be food fodder, Red Cross aid or relief to dependents.

How to Buy or Sell a Used "Talking Machine"

Of All Musical Instruments, the "Talking Machine" Is the Most Wonderful

If you want to add to your years on this earth, get a "Talking Machine." It is one of the best musical investments in the world. You can get the greatest musical selections and artists from all over the world and place them in a corner of your home and enjoy them as though they were there in the flesh. It is unfortunate that these wonderful machines cannot be in every home. Where they are, they cheer and inspire. They sell originally for all prices, many very reasonable, though the finest machines seem beyond the ordinary income. But there is a way to overcome this misfortune. Many owners because of various reasons want to sell cheaply machines they paid highly for. There are scores of such instances cropping up all the time. You can get in touch for a few pennies. And if you are the one who wants to sell, you can sell for the best price through the use of our little Want Ads that go into the thousands of homes in this city. Your chance now is to—

ACTION OF BRITAIN AVERTS TEA FAMINE

Embargo On Exports From India and Ceylon Has Been Lifted.

[Canadian Press.]

New York, Aug. 22.—A tea famine in this country has been averted by the English Government lifting the embargo placed on exports from ports in India and Ceylon, according to merchants who today announced receipt of cable advices from London telling of the lifting of the embargo.

Before war was declared there was an unusual shortage in the tea supply in the New York market, due to the light crop in India and Ceylon, which threatened to increase prices to a prohibitive figure. With the embargo as an added burden tea merchants feared that they would soon be forced to restrict sales to small amounts to conserve the supply.

UHLANS REACHED FIELD AT WATERLOO

LONDON, Aug. 22.—4:05 a.m.—A dispatch to the Daily Express from Ostend, Belgium, says that on Friday an encounter occurred between the allies' troops and the Germans at a spot probably southwest of Brussels. The result was favorable to the allies.

German Uhlans have been seen at Waterloo.

TAX ON BRUSSELS ACT WORTHY OF MIDDLE AGES

LONDON, August 22.—4:15 a.m.—All the morning papers in London denounce the German attempt to levy $40,000,000 in Brussels, which would work out at about $55 per capita for the population.

The papers declare that such an assessment is opposed to all idea of modern warfare, and is worthy of the robber barons of the Middle Ages. It is supposed that the demand was accompanied by threats to destroy the beautiful public buildings of the town, the newspapers say.

"BABYLON"

Wonderful Oriental Spectacle at Canadian National Exhibition.

"Babylon," the magnificent Oriental spectacle now in preparation for this year's Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto, will outshine in the beauty of its coloring and costumes, its life and the number of its people, any similar spectacle ever produced on the American Continent.

The very name "Babylon" is a synonym for luxury and lavishness, and the story of the handwriting on the wall that dazed the rioters at the feast of Belshazzar, and later the destruction of the most beautiful city of ancient times, lend themselves readily to romantic depiction and spectacular reproduction. The material is all ready to the hand of the author and artist.

When it is learned that a thousand costumes for the king, the nobles, the state officers, the envoys of other nations, the priests, the warriors, the Assyrian guards, the Nubians, the Arabs, the slaves, the charioteers, etc., are being imported, that they will be accurate in every detail, you can form some opinion of the riot of color the stage will hold.

The stage setting will consist of a view of the ancient city 700 feet in length—the largest stage in the world. b

GOVERNMENT WILL RAISE FORCE FOR CANADIAN DEFENCE

Announcement Made in House of Commons by Premier Borden.

SESSION TO END TODAY

War Measures Taken Under Authority of Laurier Naval Act.

[Special to The Advertiser.]

OTTAWA, Aug. 21.—Parliament will prorogue this afternoon.

The session will thus go down to history as the most important, and the shortest in Canadian history. It has lasted just five days, and the first of these was devoted to the formality of opening. In the four working days, measures of tremendous importance have been put through both Houses. Fifty million dollars have been voted for war, and substantial changes have been made in the tariff for the purpose of raising war revenue.

It is not expected that the regular session of Parliament will be called until January of next year.

Ratified War Legislation.

War legislation was rapidly ratified by the Commons and the Senate of Canada today.

The war appropriation of fifty millions received final enactment in both chambers.

The Senate in the afternoon found itself without measures to consider. It adjourned until evening, and then discussed and passed three important bills in an hour. One was for war supply, one concerned bank notes and Dominion notes, and the third amended the criminal code, wherein suspected enemies may be summarily dealt with.

Will Leave Balance.

Sir Robert Borden stated to the Commons that the war vote of fifty millions would leave a considerable balance to come and go on. Estimates did not indicate that it would all be spent during the seven months between today and the close of the Government year. However, all of it would be needed, as there was little likelihood of the Canadian forces returning to Canada within seven months.

Of the fifty millions, about thirty millions are appropriated for the use of the military force, and will be used to equip, pay and transport the troops, and six millions of it would be appropriated for naval expenditures. The million dollars, which the two Chilian submarines cost, is not included in this.

Home Defence Force.

There will be o home defence force. The Prime niMister stated that in addition in the expeditionary force, the Government would enlist and arm forces for home defense, and from this force men might be drawn to make additional contingents for expeditionary service.

During the day matters were dealt with in a few minutes without sign of party spirit, which were so essentially partizan that they would have engaged the House for weeks before.

The Government's Authority.

In a most delicate way, Hon. Dr. Pugsley sought to ascertain the authority under which the Government had taken most of its defence measures up to the present time. There was not a sound of partizan comment from the Liberal side when Naval Minister Hazen stated frankly that the Government had acted under the authority of the Laurier naval service act to put the Rainbow into active service on the Pacific coast and to overhaul the Niobe at Halifax that she might be commissioned against the enemies of Canada and the Empire. Under that account, two submarines had been purchased and offered to the Admiralty. Their ships had been promptly accepted by the British authorities, and they had been assigned stations on the Pacific coast of Canada. Hon. Mr. Hazen stated that it was only because the Niobe has been partly dismantled that she was not in commission today. There was not a comment from the Liberal side when the Government thus vindicated the naval policy of the late administration. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. Dr. Pugsley merely nodded their approval of the maritime defence measures which the Government has taken.

Might Aid Belgium.

The interesting suggestion was made by Dr. Pugsley that Canada, which gave a million bags of flour to the British people recently, might do something of the same sort to relieve the distress of the heroic Belgians who have suffered so desperately in the cause for the success for which England has pledged her army and fleets.

Hon. Rudolph Lemieux said that if such a gift were made it might be done through the Hon. Dr. Beland, postmaster-general in the Laurier administration, who is now serving with the Belgian forces. Mr. Lemieux told the house that Dr. Beland, who married a Belgian lady last summer and was in that country when Germany invaded, had offered his services. They had been accepted and Dr. Beland was now with the Belgian army as a surgeon and was thus the first of all Canadians to become actively engaged in the struggle. The Government of Canada would do well to offer to equip a hospital for Belgium, as they had recently offered to do for France.

Sir Robert Borden said that the suggestions would receive the immediate consideration of the Government.

Destination of Force Unknown.

When the Canadian expeditionary force would leave and where they would be sent for service was asked by E. M. MacDonald. The Minister of Militia replied that Canada had offered the force for service abroad and Britain had accepted it. That was the extent of the arrangement.

"We have nothing to say as to the destination of the troops," said Col. Hughes. "We shall simply send them across the water, where they will be at the disposal of the war office." That a second expeditionary force would depend upon the exigency of the war, was stated to E. M. MacDonald by Sir Robert Borden. He added that at present it was undesirable to give information to the disposal of forces in Canada, at Halifax, or elsewhere.

Strong Engineering Force.

It had been decided that of the permanent Canadian force there would be sent for service abroad two batteries of horse artillery and a regiment of cavalry. The Minister of Militia told parliament that the engineering corps was being raised from among the best men available in Canada and Sir John Jackson, a British contractor engaged on large works in Canada, had offered the Government the services of his whole engineering staff. Col. Hughes agreed with Dr. Pugsley that officers should have the same treatment as the men in the matter of free uniforms. Up to the present there has been an allowance of only $140 to each of the officers for uniform and for incidental campaign expenses, which are much greater than this amount.

How Money Will Be Spent.

The Prime Minister stated that the thirty millions for military aid would be spent as follows:

Pay of 25,000 officers and men for seven months, $6,100,000; rations at 40 cents per man, $2,100,000; purchase of 5,000 horses at $200 per horse, $1,000,000; transport to Quebec, $450,000; ocean transport, $1,000,000; transport abroad, $800,000; return transport to Canada, $1,450,000; engineers services at Halifax, Quebec and elsewhere, $500,000; equipment, $2,400,000; clothing, $300,000; ammunition from Dominion arsenal, $660,000; censorship, $150,000; pay and maintenance of troops on guard in Canada, $2,000,000; for additional troops and unforeseen expenses, $7,615,000. Bills to conserve commercial and financial interests in Canada gave rise to some discussion.

Gold In Canada.

Finance Minister White stated that the present gold holding, both by the Dominion and by the chartered banks, as security against the note issue, was approximately $120,000,000. The gold now held in the treasury against Dominion notes totalled $91,735,584.

Under the new legislation, whereby there may be a note issue up to $50,000,000 against a holding of 25 per cent in gold, the finance minister announced that the percentage of gold to total note issue would be 77.7 per cent. On July 31 last the percentage was 81. The reduced percentage would still be larger than that held by the dominion prior to 1899.

Must Borrow More Money.

A. K. McLean asked how the Government expected to raise the balance of the money which would be needed to the end of the fiscal year, and which would not be provided for by the war taxes or by the supplementary note issue.

Hon. Mr. White replied that the only other course would be by loan. He did not explain how the loans were to be raised under existing conditions.

There was some disposition to criticize the banks.

F. B. Carvell expressed the opinion that the time had come when holders of bank stock and the banker should make some sacrifices, such as the rest of the people of Canada were being called on to make.

Concessions From Banks.

He suggested that the Government should prevent the banks charging more than seven per cent interest on necessary or secured loans. Mr. McCurdy stated that the banks had intimated already that there was to be a considerable curtailment of credit during the coming winter. He thought the government should see that every solvent concern was able to secure credit from banks at reasonable interest. Both bills were put through all stages and sent on to the Senate.

The Minister of Finance said that a commission of the bankers' association with the treasury board would pronounce upon the collateral to secure extra bank circulation. F. B. Carvell, J. C. Sinclair and Mr. McCurdy asked the Government to see that while the banks were reaping advantages, they should be required to give additional consideration to manufacturers and others seeking credit. "We are making very large concessions to the banks," said Mr. Sinclair, "but they are making no concessions to our citizens."

Favor Stamp Tax.

The bill ratifying the customs changes proposed developed a considerable amount of criticism. There was objection to the taxation of sugar, voiced by F. B. Carvell, E. M. MacDonald, W. F. Carroll, E. W. Nesbitt and other Liberal members, on the ground that it would bear most heavily upon citizens of small means. They expressed the view that a stamp tax on business paper, such as bank checks, would have supplied more revenue, and would have levied the war tax upon people of means, who were best able to bear it. Mr. Boulay and Mr. Carrol thought there could well have been a war tax levied on automobiles. Mr. Carvell said that if it were necessary to levy further war tax it should take the form of a stamp tax, and extend to packages of patent medicines.

Would Protect Tobacco Growers.

A. B. McCoig, of West Kent, commented that under the new tobacco tax there had been increased protection given the manufacturers, but none to the tobacco growers. If there were to be further taxes there should be some benefit given the tobacco growers when increases in the revenue were being arranged. It was stated that the provisions of the new excise act, allowing collection on liquors taken out of bond as far back as August 7, would be inforced only against liquor men who took an abnormally large quantity out for the purpose of escaping the anticipated excise increase. It is understood that practically all of them come under the new act.

Only two minor bills remain to be dealt with, and they will be put through tomorrow morning, but prorogation may take place in the afternoon.

PERU GOVERNMENT PROVIDES CURRENCY

[Canadian Press.]

Lima, Peru, Aug. 21.—The Peruvian Congress today authorized the banks to issue $5,000,000 in bank checks guaranteed as to 35 per cent by gold. The remainder is guaranteed by mortgages.

As gold circulation is paralyzed, the public welcomes the bany checks, which are considered as necessary for commerce.

GERMANS MOBILIZE ROUND NAMUR FOR DASH INTO FRANCE

Correspondent at the Front Warns Britain That Struggle Is Just Beginning.

LONDON, Aug. 22.—The Daily Telegraph's correspondent at Givet, Belgium, who has been traversing the French advanced posts in the valley of the Meuse River, says he expects the next determined effort by the Germans will be against Namur and nearby places, where he says the Germans are now mobilized for a slashing effort to plunge their army into France.

A full army corps is now on the way from Rochefort, which the correspondent thinks will be hurled squarely against the French frontier.

"The Germans," he says, "already have made tentative assaults at every point along the Meuse wherever its crossing is feasible. This war is no child's play. Solemnly I warn the English that this is only the beginning of a time of great trial.

"The English army, I think, must eventually accept the heaviest burden of the fighting. We have a handful of men here on the fighting line, but more must come, and many lives must be sacrificed to dam this engulfing flood."

POPE'S BODY TAKEN TO CHAPEL FOR LAST RITES

Great Procession Follows the Pontifical Cross—Burial To Be Private.

[Canadian Press.]

ROME, Aug. 21.—Borne by red uniformed members of the Sediali, who, when he was alive, carried him in the Sedan Gestatoria chair, the body of Pope Pius X., dressed in pontifical robes and mitre, and with the other emblems of his sacred office lying beside it, was taken today to the Chapel of the Blessed Sacrament in St. Peter's where the solemn rites of absolution were performed.

Thousands of persons previously had visited the throne room, where the body lay, to look upon the face of the dead pontiff, and many of them wove themselves into a great procession from the throne room to the chapel. The procession was headed by the bearers of the massive silver pontifical cross and twenty cardinals and patriarchs, archbishops, bishops, priests and papal and court chamberlain and members of the Swiss noble and Palatine guards, in their multicolored uniforms. The scene was an impressive one. Under the flare of the candles in the chapel could be seen the tear-dimmed eyes of prelate, priest, layman and papal guard. Especially affected were the bearers of the body of the Pope.

Burial to be Private.

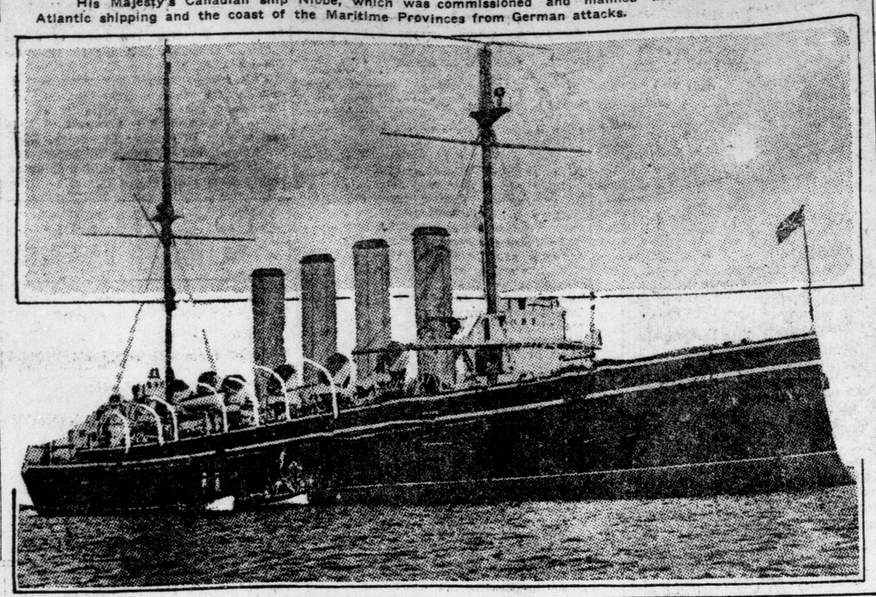

The burial of Pope Pius will be absolutely private. This was decided upon today.

The body was embalmed today, prior to its removal to the chapel for the ceremony of absolution. Instead of the antiquated method of removing the viscera and preserving it in a vase in the church of St. Vincent, near the quirinal, a fluid, which it is claimed will preserve the body perfectly, was injected into the arteries.

The late Pope's only brother, Angelo Sarto, arrived in Rome today. From a handsome elderly person, grief had changed him to a broken old man. Great affection existed between the two brothers, and when Angelo entered the mortuary chamber today and the dead pontiff did not answer his customary greeting he fell to his knees at the side of the body, sobbing aloud.

HAD BIG FIGHT WITH AN IMAGINARY FLEET

London, Aug. 22.—6:55 a. m.—A dispatch to the Havas Agency from Rome says that the corespondent of the Giornale d'Italia at Trieste relates that during Thursday night the Austrian fleet engaged in a violent artillery combat with an imaginary fleet. According to the correspondent the mistake was discovered only after a six-hours' cannonade.

SITUATION OF ALLIES ENTIRELY FAVORABLE

LONDON, Aug. 22.—The Daily Mail's Antwerp correspondent, Col. Fairholme, military attache of the British legation, says the situation of the allies is entirely favorable. He declares the Germans have lost ten days on their program, while the allies have carried out their program without the slightest delay.

GERMAN HORDE SWEEPING PATH TO NORTH SEA

Now Occupy Alost, Northwest of Brussels and Wettern, near Ghent --Cavalry Reaches Within Fourteen Miles of Antwerp---Belgian Army Driven Back On Antwerp.

[Canadian Press.]

LONDON, Aug. 22.—2 a.m.—Very little has yet become known of the operations of the early week which put the German army between the Belgian forces and their French allies and enabled the Germans to occupy Brussels. It is supposed the Germans must have brought up very strong forces behind their cavalry screens, and that a severe battle must have been fought to compel the Belgians to abandon Brussels and retire on Antwerp.

Whether or not the French forces were engaged with the Belgians is not known.

German Plan Unknown.

No information is available as to whether the Germans now intend to devote themselves to the task of reducing Antwerp or to an endeavor to force their way southward into France. It seems, however, that the determination is to attack the Belgian army of some 150,000 men who are still in or around Antwerp. The Germans already are advancing in the direction of Ghent. They have occupied Alost, fifteen miles northwest of Brussels, and Wettern, eight miles southeast of Ghent, and apparently intend to overrun the whole of northern Belgium to the sea.

Are Near Antwerp.

Cavalry patrols have been seen as far as Mechlin (Malines), fourteen miles southeast of Antwerp, and it may be expected before long to hear that the Germans have occupied Ghent and Bruges and, possibly, even Ostend.

If, however, this is their decision, a clear invasion of France through Belgium must still be much longer delayed.

NAVAL EXPERT SAYS THE BRITISH FLEET IS DEFENDING AMERICA

Declares Kaiser's Plan, When He Weakens Great Britain, Is To Invade the United States Which He Covets.

[Special Cable to The Advertiser.]

[By Archibald Hurd, naval expert of the London Daily Telegraph.]

LONDON, August 21.—The fact that the British fleet by holding the North sea is defending not only Canada, but the whole American continent is clear.

The Germans had never made a secret of their ambition to invade the great American republic when Great Britain has been humiliated and weakened.

Early tomorrow morning Japan's ultimatum to Germany will expire and she must withdraw or disarm her warships in far eastern waters, and relinquish Kiao Chau. This colony has been the apple of the eye of the German people. Millions of pounds sterling have been spent in building a model city at Tsingtao, which is not only the port, but the seat of Government.

We may safely anticipate that the far eastern squadron will not fight. The odds against it are too great. The British force of battleships alone would triumph and these with cruisers, eight destroyers, three submarines, four topedo boats and a number of sloops and gunboats, constitute a force that is irresistible. Germany must surrender in proud silence her only possession in the far east.

IMPATIENT OVER BRITISH FORCE

LONODN, August 22.—4:15 a.m.—No indication yet appears in the English press as to the whereabouts of the British expeditionary force, and with the approach of critical operations in the vast campaign, the greatest curiosity and anxiety are felt as to when the British troops will come into the fighting line.

Various descriptions, dated from unnamed corps in France, appear in the papers here, describing the excellent condition and the keenness of the British "Tommies." It is announced, however, that the authorities will not allow the soldiers to write home to friends. Therefore, some light may be expected speedily to be thrown on the mystery under which the English relatives and friends have become a little impatient.

ADVERTISER FAMOUS SONG SER

NO. 2---THE ROSARY

BY F. LINFORTH WILGOOSE, MUS. BAC. (DUNELM)

A work of art of an introspective character must almost of necessi highly sentimental. The man who lays bare his inmost thoughts to the b light of day, or brings to the surface the emotions of a passionate nature not only possessed of a capacity for emotion but also of a desire to displa The display of emotion is what we mean by the word sentimental. Nevin lighted in emotional displays, and one of the marked characteristics of his in general is their sentimentality. He possessed a lyric grace, however, more than fully compensated. His writings are finely expressive of the ge moods, gay, tender and charming to a degree. They finished workmanship and great skill in the treatme his musical ideas. His work as a composer was con almost entirely to short pianoforte pieces and a nu of songs.

THE ROSARY MOST POPULAR.

Of the latter "The Rosary" is far and away the popular. Since its publication in 1898 it has sold by of thousands. It is a song of the introspective type, consequently of the sentimental order. The sentimer very cleverly expressed by the words, and still mor by the music.

WORDS AN EFFECTIVE SIMILE.

Robert Cameron Rogers, the author of the w gives a comon enough idea, but very beautifully and originally expressed. To recount the hours spent with beloved and lost is a poetic idea that has been wo to death for centuries, but to think of those hours rosary made up of a string of pearls is an idea before thought of by any poet, as far as I am aware. simile is wonderfully effective, and is one of the rea for the marvelous success of the song.

The hours I spent with thee, dear heart,
Are as a string of pearls to me;
I count them every one apart;
My Rosary, my rosary.

The musical setting of the words is extremely beautiful, both in re to melody and harmony. One harmonic progression in particular—that tween the last two chords of the first measure and the first of the se measure—providing the color scheme of the whole song. A melody of an emotional character, consisting for the greater part of uninterrupted e notes, is naturally a very difficult one to give expression to. But Nevin's e notes here are not eighth notes at all. They are musical tones accompa the words, and are to be sung according to the stress and accent of the w of the poem. Any attempt to sing these notes in anything like strict would be ludicrous, and yet I have heard singers treat the song in just way. The song must be recited, as it were, in tones, with due regard fo important words of each phrase. Musical notation is imperfect, and the e notes are the best the composer can give in order to express his musical Their proper place can only be arrived at by a careful consideration o words they accompany.

NOT THE CUSTOMARY PRELUDE.

Nevin omits the customary prelude, nor had the song a single note i accompaniment after the voice had ceased. The introspective idea is th greatly emphasised. The singer should produce the effect of an ever pr sorrow, which sometime rises to the surface in the form of outward expres This outward expression begins most naturally, the accompanying instru merely supplying color and exciting an appropriate atmosphere.

Each hour a pearl, each pearl a prayer,
To still a heart in absence wrung,
I tell each bead unto the end,
And there a cross is hung.

This verse is treated in a similar manner to the first, except in the last where a striking change of harmony brings home the fact that a new em enters into the poem. The change in harmony and tone color is very vivid adds wonderful force to the new poetic idea.

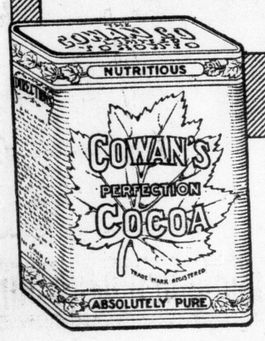

O memories that bless and burn,
O barren gain and bitter loss,
I kiss each bead and strive at last to learn
To kiss the cross sweetheart, to kiss the cross.

The climax in the poem is given very clearly. The musical climax is well carried out. The words demand a different musical setting—a setting stronger emotionally. Nevin gives the same music however, with a little lety of accompaniment and a different setting for the last line. In spite weakness of the climax, however, the principal emotional idea of the so kept predominant, and with the exception of the last verse, the music is be fully expressive of the words, adding colors and lending force by means of harmonic and melodic effects so characteristic of Nevin.

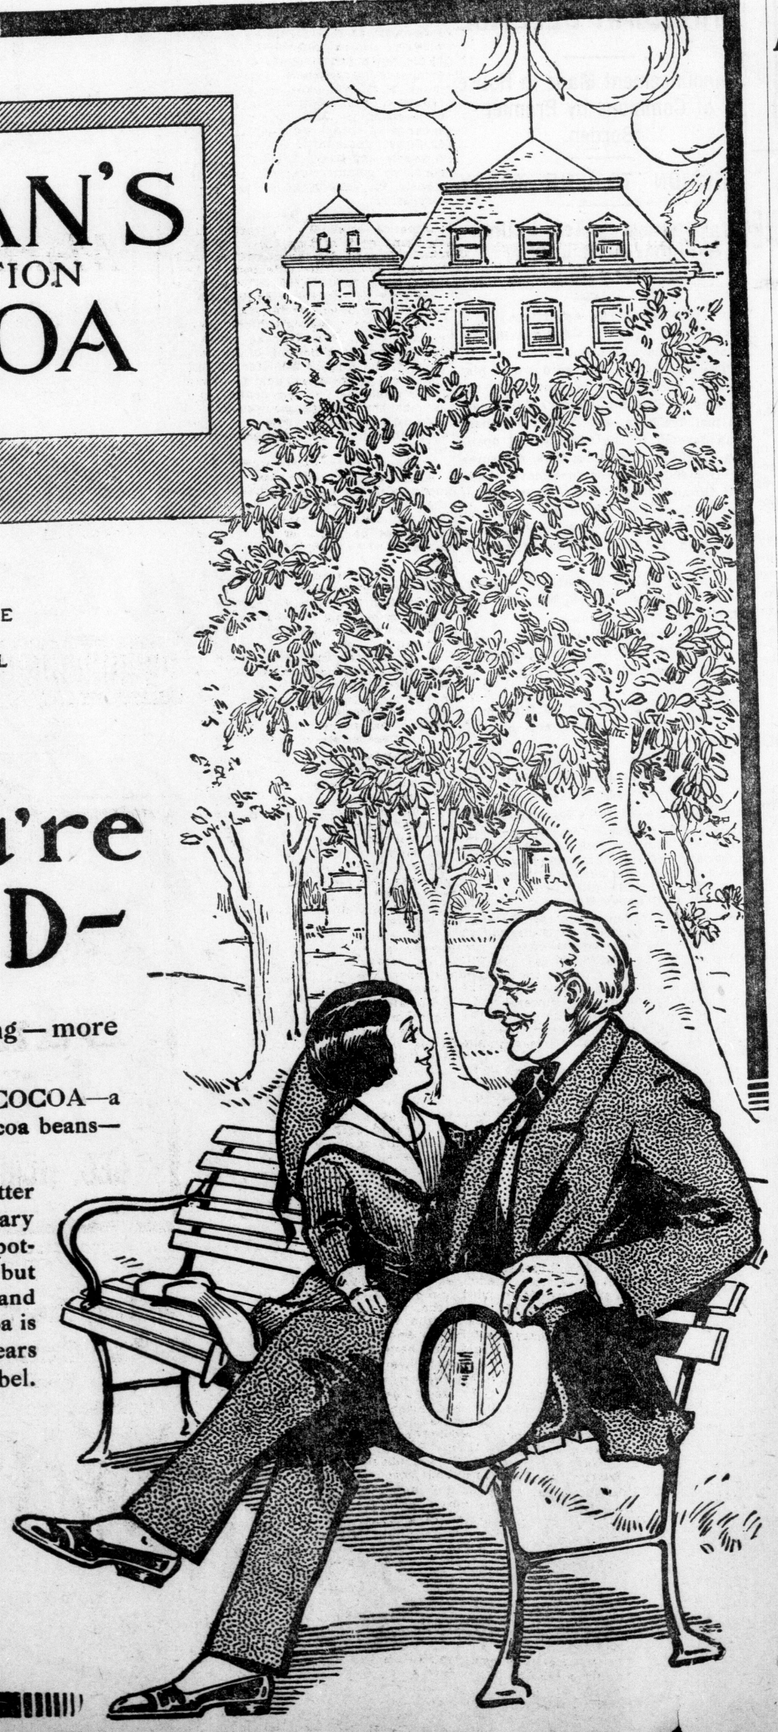

Without being exactly a great song, The Rosary is a wonderfully combination of words and music. Its emotional idea is cleverly expressed by the poet and the composer, and its phenomenal success is well dese Wether it will live, only the future can decide.

COULD NOT BREAK FISHERMAN'S RING

Cardinals Were Not Strong Enough To Perform Traditional Ceremony.

SCRATCHED IT INSTEAD

Pope Pius Provides For Maintenance of 400 Young Orphans.

[Canadian Press.]

Rome, Aug. 21.—Delayed in Transmission.—Twenty-three cardinals met late today in the first congregation of cardinals to arrange the temporary government of the church and prepare for the conclave in September, when a successor to Pope Pius X. will be elected. Cardinals Martelli and Di Pietro are ill, and for that reason were unable to be present. Cardinal Serappin Vannutelli, dean of the Sacred College, attended, but being incapacitated by an indisposition, the duties of the dean were performed by Cardinal Agliardi.

Ring Too Strong.

After taking the oath to maintain secret their discussions, "even to the shedding of blood," the cardinals performed the traditional ceremony of breaking the fisherman's ring. The rite, however, was not literally carried out. According to the rule of the Sacred College the ring should be broken and later reset and presented to the new Pope. Today, after each of the members present had identified the ring, it was found that none had the strength to break it. Even though a hammer was employed. Aid was not at hand, as Cardinal Della Volpe had not permitted the presence of anyone except the cardinals, and the latter finally decided that the symbolical ceremony would be properly observed if the symbol of office was scratched This was done.

Provides for Orphans.

It is learned that the testament of the late Pope provides for the maintenance of about four hundred little ones made orphans by the earthquake at Messina and Calabria in 1908. The Pope's sister Anna, who collapsed when the Pontiff died, was better today, and inquired about the arrangements for the funeral. She insisted upon kneeling in bed to pray for the departed soul.

Bells Ordered Tolled.

The outer walls of all the churches are placarded with notices from Cardinal Pompili, vicar-general of his holiness, stating that the chamberlain given him officially the said ne the death of Pius X. on Thursda instructed him to notify all the ful, and order that the bells in churches be tolled for one ho sunset today and on Saturday. clergy also are directed to say m for the late pontiff "recommendin blessed soul to God."

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 22.

GOOD-BYE.

UNTIL this week the people of London have regarded themselves as observers of the great drama in Europe. Today we know that we are active participants. Scores of our young men are gone from us, the first stage of their journey in their native land, the next upon the ocean amid perils unknown. Further on are the contending armies of millions. Into this veritable whirlpool of humanity these brothers and sons, and adopted sons and comrades of ours, are to be set down. Within a few weeks, it is almost inevitable, the gates of Europe will have closed upon them. They will be cut off from every suggestion of the homeland. If defeat comes, none may know for weeks. Our little detachment will be absorbed into the mightiest conflict the world has ever mustered. They may be upon the side of victory, but the war god will exact his toll from their ranks, once they place themselves upon his altar. The price will be paid, and the debt in shares is ours.

Some of these young men are our school day friends. Many are fine young Britishers who have become residents of our city. Others are our sons and brothers.

They are leaving us today. It may be that a little later on their vacant places will have to be filled in the line of battle, but the vacant place in many a home will never be filled. All the words of true sentiment that are not permitted for every occasion may be used now. In a full sense of love and devotion the volunteers depart. With the unrest of sacrifice they are prepared to lay down their lives. They are torn suddenly from the family table, from some quiet maternal circle, each has taken perhaps his last fond leave. That is the enormous cruelty of it all! It is the sternest hour that comes to the relatives of a soldier. They must share his bravery, and speed him on his way with cheering words, and then spend the intervening days in terrible anxiety.

Canada is a land of peace. London is a city upon which it would seem the blight of war would never fall. Today we come face to face with its realities. The men joined together in today's departure, both old countryman and Canadian, will carry with them our prayers and our cheering hopes for the hour, when we may take part in a greater ceremony—"the safe home again."

ECLIPSE OF SOCIALISM

THE growth of Socialism in all European countries has been acclaimed by its friends as the surest means of preventing war, and hastening the day of universal peace. No matter what rulers or legislatures might do, we were told, the masses had the matter in their own hands. Let them refuse to fight, let them develop a general strike of the laboring classes, and war would be impossible. The events of the past few days have shown that these hopes were unfounded. A military autocrat starts a war that now embraces seven nations, and may draw more of them into the vortex before it is over. In his own country there are probably more socialists than in any other. Today they are silent. More than that, many of them are in his army. In France there are socialists in abundance, and they are in the army, prepared to fight their brother socialists of Germany.

This does not mean that they have been insincere in the past. Doubtless they are just as anxious for universal peace as they ever were. But it shows that when war breaks out the fighting lust dormant in human nature suddenly becomes active. It shows also that the tribal instinct which we now call patriotic may slumber in time of peace, but when danger threatens the nation it awakes with a promptness that is sometimes astonishing. Then there is the contagion of enthusiasm. When popular sentiment swells into a great wave, the minority are silenced, the most ardent advocate of peace either becomes converted to the general view, or keeps quiet. There is no doubt a large party in Germany opposed to the military beaurocracy of that country. But at present it is not heard. There is a war fever there as in every other nation now in arms.

We often hear it said that war is due to the irresponsible rulers of the world; that kings and emperors involve their people in bitter struggles for personal reasons; that the masses are hurried into battle to lose their lives for a cause to which they are indifferent. But the people themselves often take the initiative. A sovereign is sometimes compelled to declare war against a neighbor by the force of popular sentiment. If he did not lead his people where they want to go his crown would not be safe. Republics get the war craze sometimes. It was the voice of the people in the United States that declared war with Spain a few years ago. Demos can be as blood-thirsty as any autocrat.

But because the anti-militant spirit is silent today in all the contending nations, that does not mean that it is dead. It is shrouded by the smoke of war, but it still lives. And at the first convenient moment its influence will be seen and felt. Those who love peace and hope for the future should bear this in mind. We have been forced to fight for the safety of the empire, and, as we believe, for the cause of the people. Fight we must and will. But the fight is not in the spirit of jingoism. It is in the hope of peace that shall be more permanent in the future than it has ever been. No single organization, like Socialism, even though international in character, can cope with the evil. Our hope is in that altruism which, overpowered at present by the lust and defects of human nature, is steadily growing, and which in the re-action that will follow the war fever may find opportunity for development.

They are no silly sentimentalists who bid us now "in war prepare for peace." For the hope of peace—though peace with honor—is the only justification for war. And while our actions now must be war-like, our thoughts must be for the peace that will succeed, and our plans all tend to make it more enduring. In the past, nations have been following the mistaken idea "in peace prepare for war," and their preparations have resulted in war. And now if the vast sacrifices that war entails shall so turn the minds of men that they see the folly of warlike preparations, and demand that an attempt shall be honestly made to "beat their swords into plow shares, and their spears into pruning hooks," there will be some hope for the future of the race.

THEY DID NOT WANT WAR.

AN AMERICAN in Berlin the day after the Kaiser addressed the populace from the palace, also heard the imperial chaplain talk to thousands who were gathered in the streets. "The Germans," he said, "did not want war." As the chaplain talked, tears ran down their faces. No one cheered or applauded his remarks, other than assenting with his request that peace might prevail, with nods of their heads. The final declaration of war was a blow to the people. This is in accordance with the character of the Germans we have known.

The Germans are quite capable of governing themselves as a republic, and in all likelihood, when the war is over, will do so. Herman Ridder, the proprietor of the Staats Zeitung of New York, a German and a German sympathizer, in his paper says:

"To take Paris is in my estimation to attempt the impossible. It is too well fortified. It cannot be surrounded, except by a million men. Germany cannot afford such an army to undertake siege operations that would last a year or longer. The lines of Chatalja were no stronger than the defences of Paris.

"On the other hand, Germany could indefinitely hold the frontier against the assaults of the French army. Deadlock is the only answer to the clash of the nations. They will find themselves each secure within their own lines."

If the judgment of Herman Ridder is correct that deadlock will be the result, then Germany will fail on land and there appears to be little belief that she will prevail at sea.

MONROE DOCTRINE AND CANADA.

SOMETHING is being said just now about the Monroe Doctrine and its protection to Canada against a possible German invasion or conquest. It is not at all likely that Germany will have a chance of attacking us, but if she does, a reference to the text of Monroe's message will show that its letter offers no protection to this country.

It reads:

"The American continents are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European power. The political system of the allied powers (the 'Holy Alliance' of Russia, Prussia, Austria and France) is essentially different from that of America. We owe it, therefore, to candor, and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers, to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered, and shall not interfere. But with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling in any other manner their destiny, by any European power, in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition towards the United States."

Note that it is not British America or Russia America (Alaska) that the American President Monroe proposed to protect against European powers, but those states that had "declared their independence and maintained it," etc. He laid it down that the United States would not "interfere with existing colonies or dependencies." He opposed merely the extension of Europe's monarchical policy in this hemisphere. If, then, a transfer of Canada should by strange chance take place from Britain to Germany, how does the letter of the Monroe Doctrine save us?

It may be urged that Monroe had in mind to check not so much European extension in America as the aggrandisement of the rank despotism obtaining in the countries of the "Holy Alliance," that Germany is a military autocracy, while Great Britain is as free as any American republic, and that a transfer of Canada from liberty to tyranny is just what Monroe was determined to prevent. But in the above text it will be noticed that the line is hardly drawn between the monarchies of Europe and of Great Britain, especially as France was then, though a member of the Holy Alliance and the one most feared by the new South American republics, herself like Great Britain, a limited monarchy. Monroe keeps saying that the United States will not permit any European power to gain independent American soil.

But the letter is one thing and the spirit is another. Canada is virtually as independent and free as Argentina, and the exclusion of European militarism from a country so close and kindred is positively vital to the United States. The Republic could not allow a German army to invade Canada, much less annex it, whatever the letter of the Monroe Doctrine. The Americans would interpret that principle of foreign policy in as full and effective a sense as England interprets her obligations to Belgium, going beyond rather than short of the mere letter.

The ticklish question is, what would be the price of the American protection? The British Empire having been overpowered, as the necessary preliminary to a German invasion of Canada, we might not quite so greatly care. But can't we look after ourselves? Germany has trouble enough with Belgium. She might well let us alone, even if successful in the European war.

AN ENDURING PEACE.

THE greatest criminal of all the ages is this week painting "the bloodiest picture in the book of time," and calling for the help of God in his work. There is no doubt that the greatest tragedy in the world's history, is being enacted in Belgium and France, including Alsace and Lorraine. The information that comes is not wholly satisfactory or easily understood.

The most satisfying information so far is the fact that the British navy has succeeded in keeping the German navy from doing harm to British commerce. The British navy must know where the German navy is, or it would not advise that the routes are safe, except the North sea. That the British troops were transported safely is further proof that England controls the sea.

What story the week will unfold, when the facts are known, may be in some respects doubtful, but there can be no doubt of the awful nature of the narrative, whatever it may be, or whatever relative effect it may have on the destinies of the world. It may be the beginning of the disarmament of the whole world. Let us hope that the words which Charles Summer applied to the United States, will be made to apply to Germany. He said:

"War is known as the last reason of kings. Let it be no reason of our republic. Let us renounce and throw off forever the yoke of a tyranny more oppressive than any in the annals of the world. As those standing on the mountain tops first discern the coming beams of mourning, let us, from the vantage ground of liberal institutions, first recognize the ascending sun of a new era! Lift high the gates and let the King of Glory in—the king of true glory—of peace. I catch the last words of music from the lips of innocence and beauty—and let the whole earth be filled with His glory."

WAR.

"WAR is the statesman's game, the priest's delight, the lawyer's jest, the hired assassin's trade, and to those royal murderers whose mean thrones are bought by crimes of treachery and gore, the bread they eat, the rest on which they lean. Guards garbed in blood-red livery, surround their palaces, participate the crimes that force defends, and from a nation's rage secure the crown, which all the curses reach—that famine, frenzy, woe, and penury breathe. These are the hired bravos who attend the tyrant's throne."

SHELLEY.

Let's hope that the war if severe will be short.

Whose "sinews of war" will be the first to snap?

After the "tumult and the shouting" comes tragedy and tears.

Even if we don't go to the front we can present a bold, cheerful front.

A mightier-than-the-Kaiser met his downfall on a Belgian ten-acre lot.

Anyway there's no wife to worm the facts of the campaign out of Lord Kitchener.

If the European people learn the real lesson of this war it may end in a general republic.

Pope Pius will not rank with the great popes, but history will know him as a pope with a great heart.

Tolstoi prophesied that the new Man of Destiny would be a journalist. We haven't noticed any stirrings or thrills.

It is one of life's little ironies that Belgium, which was not seeking martial glory, is getting the lion's share of it.

Maeterlinck, the Belgian poet, wants to go to the front. This puts it up to Rudyard Kipling, William Watson and Robert Bridges.

A cocaine fiend recently paroled from Toronto jail was found with cocaine hidden in his suspenders. Evidently he was not trying to brace up.

Dispatches say British soldiers are being enthusiastically kissed by French maidens. This should help increase the number of Canadian volunteers.

Russia is unwieldly and slow to move, like a steam roller, but cast your eye in the wake of the next steam roller you meet and note its effectiveness.

One big cannon's shot costs $1,700, as much as a workingman's home is worth or as much as a college education at $435 per year. We all pay a share every time one thunders.

It is not all the hot blood of youth on the European battlefields today. The Kaiser is 55, General Joffre, the French commander-in-chief, is 62, Earl Kitchener is 64, and General Paul Pau is a papa in the real sense, near in the eighties.

Statisticians have estimated that war has wiped out, in the course of time, 15,000,000,000 lives, or as many as all the people who have lived during the last 600 years. The human harvest will be an enormous one in this century as it was in the nineteenth.

FASHION HINT.

[Cleveland Plaindealer.]

How widespread are the effects of war! Even women's clothing is to reflect it. Manufacturers announce the fall styles will all be along military lines.

PERILS OF WAR.

[Chicago Herald.]

An American military attache in uniform in France received so many invitations to take wine that he decided to wear civilian's attire. It is probable that the circumstance will result in a rapid increase of American uniforms in those parts.

SCIENTIFIC NOTE.

[Chicago News.]

Events in Europe, at least, begin to justify the scientist who declared all the world is insane.

The Call of Empire

To Arms!
The Old Flag calls once more,
Again its crosses bear our sons,
Again it waves o'er the roar of guns,
Where the fight is thick and the red blood runs;
We give them up, our dearest ones,
We have answered the Call before.

"'Tis a cheer we give, my lads!
And a tear we give, my lads,
Protect the State
And the hearts that wait,
Of your glory we'll hear, my lads."

To Arms!
The clash of steel on steel,
An Empire rushes by,
War-clad to kill or die,
With the bugles' clarion cry
And a mother's tearful sigh,
'Tis the War God's iron heel.

"'Tis a cheer we give, my lads!
And a tear we give, my lads,
But there's hearts that ache
And hearts that break,
Oh, God—but it's dear, my lads."

To Arms!
For Peace have we vainly cried,
These are our lads that fell,
Fighting valiantly and well,
'Mid the cannon's thundering knell
And the battle smoke of hell.
Was it for this He died?

"'Tis a cheer we give, my lads!
And a tear we give, my lads,
And when you've won,
We'll shout 'Well done!'
But the price—oh, it's dear, my lads."

--and the Worst Is Yet to Come

Striking Comments On the Great War

A crisis undreamed of has come upon Europe in the course of a swift few days, and few of the lurid descriptions of what it means to men and women throughout the world are beside the mark. Few living have seen so dark a day as this.

Here are some of the descriptions applied to the hell let loose on Europe, first by the Austrian Emperor and then by his partner, the German Emperor:

The End of It All.

"The war fiend has been let loose in Europe, and what the end will be no man can foresee," says the Westminster.

Doom of General Peace.

"Such a conscious moment in the life of the whole world has never been known; its memory will never be forgotten while the recollection of this generation endures, nor its record lost while a page of history remains," says the Observer.

"It is the doom of that general peace which has not been broken at one time from end to end of Europe since the climax of the Napoleonic wars a hundred years ago.

"Taken for all in all, it is the most critical issue that British policy has ever yet had to decide. The life or death of sea supremacy and empire may depend on it."

The Tragedy of It.

"If a Greek tragedian were dealing with the events of today he would see in them a confirmation of his favorite theme that men strive in vain against the decrees of fate," says the Daily Graphic. "No one in Europe today really wants a European war."

"The chain of events that we have to fear, the dragging first of one country and then of another into the conflict, until practically the whole white race of the Old World is involved, seems to have all the inevitableness of ancient tragedy, where persons and events are controlled not by reason, but by the spell of an ironic fate," says the Statesman.

No Motto for Victory.

"The words 'hatred, mendacity and bloodthirstiness' constitute the motto of Austria, but such a device will never lead to victory," says the Novoe Vremya.

"Austria-Hungary's attack upon Servia has changed the face of the world," says the Spectator.

So Tremendous a Catastrophe.

"Within the compass of a single week we have had to watch the evolution of a crisis absolutely unparalleled in the memory of the present generation—perhaps in the history of the world—and has discovered to our astonishment and dismay that we stand on the brink, not of a mere localized conflict in the East of Europe, but of an appalling European war," says the Telegraph.

"It is this alarming violence, this remorseless haste, as of a tornado tearing its way with resistless force across peaceful lands, which takes away our breath and paralyzes our thoughts. Before we have had time to guess whither events were leading us, we find ourselves in the centre of the storm, and every man in every capital looks with feverish anticipation for what the next few hours may bring forth. Human imagination is stunned by so sudden, so tremendous, and so unexpected a catastrophe."

Greatest Calamity in History.

"The greatest calamity in history is upon us—a calamity so vast that our senses are numbed with horror," says A. G. G. in the Daily News. "We hardly dare look into the pit that yawns at our feet, and yet any hour, any minute may plunge us in beyond all hope of return. At this moment our fate is being sealed by hands that we know not, by motives alien to all our interests, by influences that if we knew we should certainly repudiate."

Wreck of Civilization.

"Europe has embarked upon a struggle so terrible that the imagination reels in the effort to think of the horrors it must bring in its train," says Lloyd's.

"It is a war that may well involve the wreck of modern civilization and the collapse of the very foundations of ordered society as we know it today."

A Crime.

"What a crime war will be, and what a monstrous folly!" said M. Jaures a few minutes before he was murdered.

Our Moral Equilibrium.

"To many people this far-reaching commercial disturbance seems almost the chief evil of war, or at least it is the veil which comes home to them most quickly and acutely," says the Inquirer. "But it is well to remember that it is even more fatal to our moral equilibrium.

"How easily the Christian creed is held by masses of men, how little there is in it of the spirit of Christ!"

"Conflict of Right and Right."

"We are in the presence of a supreme expression of the ennobling, but not enfeebling, Hagelian word, "Tragedy is the conflict not of Right and Wrong, but of Right and Right,'" says the Observer.

Those Things Which Are Coming.

"'Men's hearts failing them for fear; and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth.' The words are prophetic, yet they represent much the state of mind of the most thoughtful of our people today," says the Record. "Just at a time when all seemed well abroad, we are suddenly, swiftly, dramatically brought face to face with the awful possibilities of a great European war."

For No Lofty Cause.

"The nations are like Alpine climbers carried to destruction by the rope with which, for greater security, they bind themselves together," says the Glasgow Herald.

"If war comes it will be the most hideous of calamities, and the more to be deplored because it is being waged for no lofty cause and has dragged into its hideous activities millions of men."

The Devil's Work.

"What is happening in Europe is fearful beyond all words," said the Archbishop of Caterbury at Westminster Abbey. "The thing which was now stirring Europe was not the work of God, but the work of the devil. It was not a development of God's purpose; it was a maturing of the sheer wrongness of man.

"What was happening must be due somewhere, somehow to the pride, the high-handedness, the stubbornness of man's temper in undoing and thwarting the handiwork of God."

"Old men in the city declare that they have never seen anything to compare with this sudden chaos," says the Economist. "The whole machinery of international credit has been dislocated, regular exchange operations are at an end, the discount market is in utter dismay, and the Bank of England, after raising the rate to 8, is working at 10 or 10½ per cent."

Admiral Mahan's View.

"England must immediately throw her preponderating fleet against Germany for the one purpose of maintaining her own position as a world power," says Admiral Mahan, the naval writer, in the New York Evening Post. "For England it is a question, if she remains out of the war, of sacrificing the empire and the next generation to the interests of this generation."

"Talk About the Dead Hand!"

"All the great nations of Europe," exclaims the New York Evening Post, "are on the verge of war. Why, if not because of the alliances, offensive and defensive, into the leading European powers are grouped?

"Talk about the Dead Hand! Two alliances, with their subsidiary ententes, are laying the hand of death upon all Europe, and are today compelling the rulers to do what they shrink from—launching navies, setting armies on the march—leaving the masses dazed as to what it is all about, and opening a prospect of ruin and woe fit to stagger humanity. They have been called, these alliances, the safety of Europe. Now we see them as they are—a peril and a curse."

OLD MEN LEAD EUROPE'S WAR

The European war seems to disprove the old saying: "Young men for war; old men for counsel." The leaders in all nations are men no longer young. Some of them are really old. Here are a few of them:

England's war chief, Horatio Herbert Kitchener, general and viscount, was born in Baily Longford, County Kerry, Ireland, June 14, 1850, the son of a lieutenant-colonel in the British army. He entered the army in 1868.

Field Marshal Sir John French, commander-in-chief of British forces in the field, was born in England in 1852, the son of a naval officer. He served with distinction in the army in India and in South Africa.

General Joffre, commander-in-chief of the French army, is 62 years old. He entered the French army when he was 18 years old and served through the Franco-Prussian war. He is a noted disciplinarian.

General Helmuth Von Moltke, chief of Kaiser William's general staff, was born May 23, 1848, in Gersdorf, Mecklenburg. He is a veteran of the Franco-Prussian war and a field marshal.

Premier Stephen Tisza, of Hungary, called "the dual monarchy's man of the hour," was born in April, 1861. He has been rominent since 1886 in Hungarian political life.

Emperor Francis Josef, of Austria, was born August 18, 1830, and has reigned since 1848.

King Albert I., of Belgium, was born April 8, 1875.

Emperor William II., of Germany, was born January 27, 1859, and has reigned since June 15, 1888.

Emperor Nicholas II., of Russia, was born May 18, and has been on the throne since November 1, 1894.

King Peter I., of Servia, was born in 1846 in Belgrade and was proclaimed king June 11, 1903.

King George V., of England, was born June 3, 1865, and succeeded his father May 6, 1910.

MOVING ONWARD TO DISASTER.

[Montreal Herald-Telegraph.]

The Germans move steadily onwards, it is true—but they move onwards to a battlefield selected not by themselves but by the allies. They believe that they are moving onwards to victory. We believe that they are moving onwards to overwhelming disaster.

VICTORY FOR DEMOCRACY.

[Montreal Mail.]

With the Czar's promise of self-government to Poland has come, early in the present struggle, the first great victory for democracy. Other victories are confidently expected. If European autocracy began this war, European democracy will end it. Already democracy has begun to gather the spoils.

THIS WILL HELP.

God of the Nations Hear Our Praye

God of the nations, hear our prayer
In this the hour of war;
For false gods let us not declare,
Nor put our trust in Thor—
For peace and liberty and right,
God of the nations, help us fight.

Let not oppression heap with shame
The ashes of our sires;
Unsullied keep our blood-bought fam
Alive our latent fires—
For peace and liberty and right,
God of the nations, help us fight.

Lord, cleanse our hearts of vain desir
And righteous be our plea,
Lest Thou outpour on us Thine ire,
Or from our council flee—
For peace and liberty and right,
God of the nations, help us fight.

Be with our arms on land and sea—
Where'er the cannon roar,
Lord, shape and guide our destiny
And guard our farthest shore—
For peace and liberty and right,
God of the nations, help us fight.

Fill Thou our hearts with mercy, Lor
For ev'ry vanquished foe;
Instruct us when to sheathe the swor
And staunch of blood, the flow—
For peace and liberty and right,
God of the nations, help us fight.

God of the nations, hear our prayer,
Call off the dogs of war;
Of false gods, Lord, let us beware,
And break the idol, Thor—
For peace and liberty and right,
God of the nations, help us fight.

Enjoys the Column.

Dear Miss Grey,—Being a reader of The London Advertiser, I enjoy your column very much, and this is the first time I have asked for assistance.

1. I would like to know what would take ink strains out of a pine floor.

2. What does Jeanette, Marjorie, Isabel, Louise, Lizzie and May mean?

Hoping to see this in print soon, I remain, JEANETTE.

Ans.—1. Dissolve a tablespoon of oxalic acid in a pint of hot water and apply to the stain with a rag tied to a stick. Do not put the hands in it. Keep the spot moistened for twenty minutes or so, then scrub with hot water and ammonia powder, or any good scouring soap.

2. Jeanette, gift of God; Marjorie, a pearl; Isabel, worshipper; Louise, feminine of Louis, meaning bold warrior; Lizzie, consecrated; May, same as Mary.

Drying Herbs.

Dear Miss Grey,—Would you kindly tell me how to preserve parsley, also mint? Will be much obliged for a favorable answer. Yours, ALBANY.

Ans.—Gather the plants, dry thoroughly, remove the stems and pack leaves in glass or tin to keep.

Snow Pudding.—Soak one heaping tablespoonful of granulated gelatin in one-fourth cup of cold water for ten minutes. Dissolve it in one cup of boiling water, add a cup of sugar and a quarter cup of lemon juice. Strain and cool. When cool and just ready to set, beat until frothy and add the stiffly beaten whites of three eggs, and continue to beat until the mixture will hold its shape. Mold in any desired form and chill thoroughly. Serve with custard sauce.

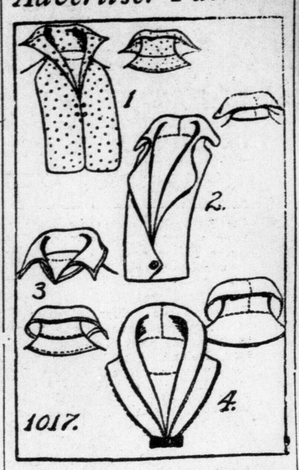

Custard Sauce.—Beat the yolks of the eggs and add one-quarter cup of sugar. Stir into this gradually two cups of scalded milk. When completely mixed place on the stove in a double boiler and cook until the mixture thickens. Add a teaspoonful of vanilla and chill thoroughly.

It is a very good plan to make this dessert the first thing in the morning. While the breakfast is cooking it can be made ready for the ice box. It will be ready to whip after the breakfast dishes are washed and, little time is required for the custard. Sufficient amount can be made for two meals if desired.

An attractive pink pudding can be made if the pink coloring matter that is found in nearly every box of gelatin is used. This can be served on the second day with crushed fruit. When flavored with pineapple and covered with crushed strawberries this is indeed a delicious dessert. It is better to leave the pudding uncolored in that case, as the white and red look very attractive in contrast.

OLD SONGS AND POEMS

MY KIND OLD MOTHER.

God bless my kind old mother,
Whate'er my fortune be;
I'll never find another
Who'll be so true to me.
Her hair, which once was raven,
Is lined with silver now,
And crafty time has graven
Deep wrinkles on her brow.

CHORUS—
Oh, how my life would alter
If mother were not near;
And how my heart would falter
Without her words to cheer.

Yet though her brow bears traces
Of trouble and of care,
To me my mother's face is
The fairest of the fair;
So tender and forgiving,
As gentle as a dove;
Ah! life were not worth living
Without a mother's love.

How often when complaining
Of life's perplexing care,
When nought there seemed remaining
Save countless ills to bear,
My mother's gentle chiding
Has turn'd my thoughts above,
And 'roused a faith abiding
In God's redeeming love.

CLIP THIS OUT

Wrongs himself more, and ever bears about
A silent court of justice in his breast,
Himself the judge and jury, and himself
The prisoner at the bar, ever condemned.

Canadian Social Problems

[Story of an English-Speaking Immigrant Woman.

Written for the Advertiser by Marjorie Macmurchy

A few years ago two sisters, Jennie and Bella, came to Canada from Scotland. They were both domestic workers and obtained situations immediately. This story is more particularly concerned with Bella, although the sisters throughout the story have held together with a great deal of affection. Such a fact not only speaks well for them, but the presence of a relative in the same country with her is always a source of strength to the immigrant woman.

Bella entered the service of a Mrs. Brown. Brown is not the name, but it will do as well as any other. She was kind to the Brown children, an efficient, clean, good maid. Mrs. Brown is a person who is interested in human beings, cares for their welfare, and is energetic. She speaks well of Bella to this day. Bella left the Brown household because the Browns were going to Europe, but she had secured another situation before Mrs. Brown left.

On her return from Europe Mrs. Brown heard from Bella's sister Jennie, who came to see her in great trouble, that Bella had been arrested and was sent back to Scotland, deported as a thief and undesirable citizen. Jennie said that if this happened it would kill her mother, and be such a grief to the whole family that none of them would ever be the same after it. "Poor Bella, poor Bella, what will become of her?" said Jennie. As for her mother, it was like cutting her heart to have such a thing happen. Those who know decent self-respecting working-class families in the Old Country can imagine the darkness of this tragedy which was impending over them.

Mrs. Brown was shocked and grieved. But she was determined that she would do something to cure the situation. She did not believe that Bella was a thief. She remembered at the same time how kind Bella had been to the Brown children. She was certain that Bella was a good girl. Besides all this she was intensely sorry for Bella, for Jennie, and the poor mother in Scotland. She was sorry for the whole family. Something must be done! Besides, was not the good name of Canada involved? Mrs. Brown said to herself. We invite immigrants to come and live here. We are always begging girls from the Old Country to come over and do our housework. Canada would have to give Bella fair play, Mrs. Brown said.

She found Bella in a house of detention waiting to be deported. The girl was broken-hearted and terribly cast down. Mrs. Brown heard Bella's story. She heard the story of the matron, who told her how Bella had come to be committed. She visited the magistrate, and made herself familiar with the case in every possible way. As nearly as Mrs. Brown could make out, this is what had happened to Bella:

After leaving the Brown household she had stayed in her next place a very short time. Now, on the ship on which Jennie and Bella had come to Canada they had made the acquaintance of a woman and her husband, who had come to live in the same city where the girls had employment. Jennie had not cared about them much. But they apparently took a fancy to Bella, who is a much more easily influenced girl than Jennie. When Bella left her place she went to stay with this woman on an urgent invitation, just for a few nights until she got another situation. But the next thing to happen was that the woman and Bella were arrested in a store for shop-lifting. Bella, with her ingenuous Scottish face and trusting character, would have been a valuable acquisition to this couple in their nefarious trade. The woman had been committed to the same house of detention. The man, who had not been proved to be connected with the shop-lifting. Mrs. Brown found to be visiting not only his wife in the house of detention, but Bella as well. Later he telephoned frequently to Mrs. Brown and insisted that he should be told where Bella was, but Mrs. Brown was able to prevent him from seeing her.

Mrs. Brown's task was to secure Bella's release and a cancellation of the deportation order. She encountered great difficulties. It was indeed most unfortunate that Bella had formed this bad association. Mrs. Brown could only convince herself that she was a really good girl by remembering the satisfactory year she had spent in her own household. She appealed to the Department of Justice, in Ottawa. But the magistrate who had ordered Bella deported refused to let her go. "Once a thief, always a thief," he said. Bella had to go back to Scotland. What difference did it make to the magistrate that Bella's own life would be ruined, her mother's heart broken, and the family disgraced? She was a thief. Finally, by enlisting the aid of a prominent man, Mrs. Brown, on her personal undertaking to look after Bella, secured Bella's freedom. Her next task was to keep Bella's whereabouts unknown to the man who was still determined to find her. Mrs. Brown had a friend who was taking her small family to the country and who was greatly in need of a good maid. Bella went with her, and what Bella was able to do for that household is very gratefully remembered by them.

The rest of Bella's story, as far as it concerns us, is brief. Two years later Jennie married and moved away to another part of the country and Bella today is with her sister Jennie.

Let us ask ourselves two questions: If it had not been for Mrs. Brown, what would have been the consequences to Bella and her family? How many Mrs. Browns are there in Canada? Few indeed.

We have not realized what a strain emigrating from one country to another really is. AN IMMIGRANT TO TAKE ROOT SUCCESSFULLY IN A NEW COUNTRY NEEDS SPECIAL CARE FROM THE AUTHORITIES OF THAT COUNTRY. We should not let them leave their homes for Canada if we are not reasonably certain that they will secure admittance on landing here. After they have landed they need care extending over a period of months, or in some cases years. If they go wrong they suffer for their faults and so does the country. THE MAJORITY NEED INSTRUCTION IN OUR LAW, IN OUR MORAL STANDARDS, AND OUR WAYS OF LIVING.

It is true apparently beyond a doubt that emigrant girls, even those coming from Great Britain and Ireland, seem to lose their standards of behavior and discretion on first coming to Canada. It is a great adventure to them, calling for uncommon strength of moral fibre. They see what is called our Canadian freedom; they are excited by it; and they do not perceive behind the apparently free manners of Canadian youth an ability on the part of the Canadian girl to take care of herself. Every immigrant girl should be specially supervised. It is a duty, not of private agencies, but of the Government.

Even good agencies sometimes fail to understand that money is not what we want from our new citizens, so much as good citizenship. Instead of treating an immigrant girl as a cared-for ward, even a subsidized agency is capable of sharing in a story like the following:

Last Christmas Day an immigrant girl, who was a domestic worker, left her situation. She had not been an entire success. Her employer had engaged a new girl. This English girl was to go to another situation the following Thursday. On Christmas morning she went to the headquarters of the agency that had brought her to Canada. She made the final payment of money owing for her passage—which had cost her a good sum. This payment left her without a cent in her pocket. She was not supposed to be given her dinner at this place, but one of the people employed at the establishment furnished her with the meal. She had noticed that the Young Women's Christian Association were offering a happy afternoon and tea to 100 lonely girls. She went there and she says she had a lovely time. But she did not tell them that she had nowhere to go that night. Finally, about 10 o'clock at night she applied for a night's lodging at the Salvation Army. She was kept till the following Thursday, when she went to her situation, in which she is at this present time doing satisfactory work. What would one rightly think, first, of the people in the household where she had been employed and which she left on Christmas morning, and, second, of the agency that had brought her to Canada?

THERE IS MORE NATIONAL WEALTH AND WELL-BEING TO BE SECURED BY TAKING CARE OF IMMIGRANTS WHEN THEY ARE IN CANADA THAN THERE IS IN ALL OUR GOLD MINES.

MARJORY MACMURCHY.

The Converting of John Grump

"I declare" observed Mr. John Grump peevishly, reaching in his vest pocket for that masculine necessity—an after supper cigar, "I never look for that sporting page of the Advertiser but some of you women are reading Cynthia Grey's page."

"Well" we manage to observe, as John G. strikes a match and puffs vigorously. "We only want it for a while and you ought to be able to read all the sport news at the office" We submit this with some caution, for the cigar is not pulling properly apparently, while we make sure of the page in question. "Now what on earth is so blame important about that page, and Cynthia Grey's queries?" He puckers up his brow and blows several rings of smoke contemplatively, as if musing on the idiosyncracies of all things feminine.

"Here's a bargain" we suggest, "We'll sit opposite to you so you can read the sporting page, while we read the woman's." We also use discretion and a spice of caution, yet with grim determination not to yield.

"Such confounded nonsense," grumbles John G. allowing his eyes to rest lovingly on the attractive headings and cuts that make the sporting page of the Advertiser so popular. "Have it your own way of course, and about ten o'clock when you are sufficiently through with it as to give it up, let me know."

He lays back and gives his attention to the smoke curling softly about the ceiling, then upon second thought he remarks "Upon my word why on earth don't they print those two pages separately, so a fellow gets half a chance? and what is there that is confoundedly interesting about that budget of letters? I wouldn't give it a glance."

"Then how is it you know it to be so uninteresting?" we challenge with a touch of scorn, "I guess the woman's page is the best part of the paper," we finish. This is too much for John G. who mumbles something, and relights his cigar.

It is a good hour later before John G. condescends to read the paper. He is still in a pettish mood and requires a certain amount of coddling and attention. He has read the war news, the editorials, the sport page, and all at once with startling suddenness he breaks the silence by remarking "well what do you know about Annette Kellerman." It is rumored that she is going to tour Canada and give lectures and practical demonstrations on how to swim." The look on John G.'s face is one of genuine satisfaction, his face breaks out into a myrlad of wrinkles, that only laughter can mould into a usually pre-occupied face. "That is the best news I have heard for some time," he says.

We crowd curiously around, each eager to get a glance for ourselves at this choice tit-bit of news, and for the principal reason that we read it ourselves, and are absolutely certain we read it on no other page than that of the woman's.

"Well," we shout in chorus. "I thought you never read the woman's page? Didn't you say it was uninteresting, and that you wouldn't glance at it, that it was nothing but silliness?" Chagrin is written all over his face, and he glances guiltily about as if seeking some avenue of escape. Then his face relaxes, and he breaks into a good-natured laugh, exclaiming, "Well I'll have to confess from what the fellows say, that it is a darned clever piece of work, and Cynthia Grey is a wonder," he acknowledged.

As for me gentle reader, being Mrs. John Grump, and deeply in love with my husband, and understanding the stupidity of the male sex in general and that of John G. in particular, I just hustle out to make lemonade, and let me tell you I am going to put in an extra amount of sugar into his glass—just the way he likes it, to get even.

A PRACTICAL JOKER.

[Detroit Free Press.]

"What shall I get for your birthday, Miss Cruiser?" he asked. "Something fancy or something useful—something that will last?"

"Something that will last, assuredly," she said.

On the evening of her birthday, while he hid a smile with one hand, he presented her in the other a small, oblong package. She opened it fluttteringly.

It was a package of Serpentiney's chewing gum!

"Oh!" she exclaimed, and cast the package on the floor where it broke into a thousand pieces, "Oh!"

"You said you wanted something that would last!" he hastened to explain. "I don't know anything that lasts longer without losing its flavor than——"

"Don't speak to me!" she hissed. "Your hat is on the rack!"

In spite of the poor chap's pitiful efforts to explain, he found himself out on the front step in bewilderment, and a perspiration. And, as he never had the nerve to call again, the girl never knew that he took the real present, a diamond solitaire ring, away with him in his back pocket.

The Tinder-Box

AS TOLD BY AUNT GERTIE.

CHAPTER VI.

Well, the king and queen had the poor soldier brought out where the scaffold had been put up. Round this horrid-looking thing were many soldiers. Thousands of people stood as near as they could in order to see the unfortunate man hung.

Just as the executioner was on the point of putting the rope around the soldier's neck he said, "Stop a minute, good sir. May I not smoke a pipeful of tobacco before I die?"

This seemed such a harmless request that the king agreed. Right away the soldier took up his tinder box and struck the flint—once, twice and three times! As he finished striking, the three queer dogs appeared before him.

"Dogs, dear dogs, help me," he cried. "These people are going to hang me. Don't let him. Throw them into the air so high that when they fall they will be dashed into a hundred pieces."

"We will not—" began the king, in a loud voice.

While he was trying to speak, however, the dog with the great eyes as large as a round tower seized him and the queen and hurled them into the air.

Of course, the soldiers were very, very frightened because they had never seen a dog like this one before. They feared that some power which they knew nothing of had come to the rescue of the poor soldier.

Immediately the people who had come to see the soldier hung changed their minds and decided he was a wonderful man.

What do you think they said to him?

"Good, nice soldier," they said. "We will make you our king. The beautiful princess shall be your wife and our queen!"

Smiling happily and thanking his lucky stars that he was safe, the soldier went to the palace in company with the old king's courtiers. The young princess was brought from the copper palace and laughed right merrily when she learned she was to be a queen instead of a prisoner.

(The End.)

And Then They Were Happy

He was a broken-hearted man. Of no fact in life was he more thoroughly convinced, and he would have resented any intimation to the contrary. True, in the four years which had passed since Evelyn-of-the-violet-eyes told him she no longer loved him he had eaten and slept in much the same manner as other men. He had changed from a lanky college boy to a full-chested, vigorous man, rapidly rising in his profession. He plunged with zest into his work every morning when he reached his office, but at night he gazed long and sadly at a miniature of Evelyn, which stood on his dresser. He felt a sense of satisfaction when he received a plump fee, yet he often assured himself that love and home were not for him.

But this morning as he sat at the table of his boarding house he felt a sudden distaste at the thought of spending the remainder of his days in company of tender memories and a gold-framed miniature. The words of a friend with whom he had dined the night before occurred to him.

"Why don't you marry, Bob?" George had said, as they lingered in the hall, "what's the use of mooning away forever for that tow-headed girl up country? Why, Minnie and I were both engaged before we met each other. I wanted to commit suicide when Nell Peters threw me over, but I'm glad now she did. And Minnie was engaged for two years to a sickly chap that afterward died of lung trouble. He had a very long nose," George had added, looking complacently at his own well-shaped features in the mirror,

Why should he not follow his friend's advice? True, he had a broken heart, but this bruised and maimed part of his anatomy lay deeply hidden and had not marred his handsome face. The thought of a home of his own appealed to him. He could never forget Evelyn's violet eyes, but he would like to sit down at his own dinner table.

Could he make up his mind to marry another woman? If so, who should it be? His glance swept over the table. Not Miss Siever, the school teacher. She would be sure to criticize his English. Then there was Miss Jones, a superintendent of telephone girls. No, she was too masterful. No strong-minded woman for him.

Well, there was the gentle-faced young woman who was passing the biscuits in such a pleasant manner to cross old Lawyer Hubbard. She had been in the house two weeks and seemed to have made friends with all the other boarders. Mrs. Myers, the landlady, had told him the girl's story one morning as she served him a late breakfast. Her name was Nellie Morton and she had kept house for her grandfather from the time she had left the high school. But now the old gentleman was dead and the girl was working in a department store to eke out the little that had been left her. "But entirely unfitted for it, Mr. Graham," Mrs. Myers had added earnestly. "She's the most domestic little thing I ever set eyes on. Why she came down into the kitchen last night and made the grandest salad. Didn't you notice it, Mr. Graham? Why, you've missed half your life."

No, he had not noticed the salad, but he had noticed the girl. He stole another look at her. She was listening to Mrs. Lewis and seemed to be really interested in the old lady's detailed account of the fever which had deprived her of her second husband. Miss Morton's eyes were brown and not for one moment to be compared to Evelyn's violet orbs, but there was something attractive about them.

Well, if the die were cast, if he really were in earnest the first move was to become acquainted. When the others had all left the table Graham strolled slowly into the hall. Judge Parsons stood by the door and Miss Morton a few feet from him. Graham knew intuitively that the girl had been urging the old gentleman to wear his rubbers. The judge patted her head in a fatherly way. "Here's a young man who needs care," he said, and putting up his umbrella he departed chuckling. Miss Morton blushed still more. Graham smiled pleasantly and went away feeling that the acquaintance had begun auspiciously.

It continued very pleasantly and it merged rapidly into comradeship. Miss Morton had a genius for friendship. Graham soon learned to enjoy her womanly manner and found a quiet amusement in her kindly point of view.

Though his proposed marriage, as he often assured the miniature, was but a matter of worldly policy, yet Graham was not unmindful of the proprieties of such a proceeding. "Any girl deserves to be courted," he told himself, "and we must learn each other's ways." He began to take Miss Morton out, occasionally at first, then more and more frequently. He was surprised, and just a little mortified, to find how much he enjoyed their evenings together. He realized that he played the role of an admirer very well, remarkably well, indeed, for a man whose heart was broken. One night he found that he had gone to bed without even looking at Evelyn's miniature. He knew that he was in honor bound to get up, gaze upon it and heave at least one sigh, but he did not for the blankets were warm and the room was cold.

Graham had meant to wait at least a year before asking Miss Morton to become his wife. Later he concluded that six months was long enough.

But there was the story of his broken heart which he must tell her. Not to do so would be to belittle his cherished romance. At last he screwed his courage to the sticking point. They had come in late from a concert and lingered awhile in the deserted parlor. Graham told his story as tactfully as he could, though his heart smote him as he saw the happy look die out of her eyes. Her answer took him quite off from his feet or would have had they not been seated on a sofa. She would marry no man who did not love her, she declared with unwonted spirit, no not if she sold ribbons all her life "and died a-selling." For a moment Graham was confounded, but not in vain had he studied law and learned the art of pleading. He waxed eloquent.

"But how did you expect me to feel to you?" interrupted Nellie. "Would you be satisfied with a 'sincere regard'?"

"Well, I am afraid I counted on your affectionate disposition."

"And well you might! I couldn't live in an unloving family. Why, grandfather kissed me a dozen times a day."

"I would do all I could to take your grandfather's place."

"And all the while be thinking of another girl."

"Why no! You do not understand."

"I understand only too well." The brown head dropped wearily. "Good-night, Mr. Graham."

For a few weeks after this Mrs. Myers noticed a falling off in the appetites of her two favorite boarders. She observed with concern that they were seldom together. Gradually, however, they resumed their habit of comradeship. Nellie could no more help being friendly than a bird can help singing. Graham refused to take her answer seriously, and fell into the way of proposing at regular intervals.

Spring came and went and the long, hot days of summer followed. Nellie grew pale and thin. Graham viewed the change in the girl with real concern.

"You are as out of place in a department store as a canary in a snowstorm," he told her one evening as they sat on a bench in the park. "What you need is a dove cote. A dove cote with hardwood floors and an enameled ice-chest," he added begullingly.

"But don't you see, Robert, what you are asking me to give up? Every girl hopes some time to have a real love affair. You have had one. But you want me to be satisfied with something so—so second-hand."

"Pshaw, Nellie! Do you mean to tell me you never had a lover? Honest now?"

"Well, yes, there was one," admitted Nellie reluctantly, "but he was pudgy."

Graham straightened his shoulders unconsciously. At least he was not bad looking.

"And," the girl went on as if the words came against her will, "there's a floorwalker at the store. He's good looking, but he doesn't look good. I wish he would let me alone," she added, with a sudden burst of tears.

"That settles it," cried Graham fiercely. "We will begin house hunting tomorrow. And as for that fellow," he went on, forgetting all he had ever said about the majesty of the law, "if he ever dares to speak to you again I'll wring his neck."

And so Mrs. Myers' best parlor was the scene of a pretty wedding, with the delighted boarders as guests. Even cross Lawyer Hubbard forgot to be cross, was interested and entertaining and entered into the festivities with right good will.

It was a jolly wedding and no one looking on suspected for one moment that the bridegroom was a broken-hearted man or that the bride was planning to treat her husband with kindly consideration, nothing more.

But try as she might, it was impossible for Nellie to repress her affectionate nature. Her delight in her home was unbounded and must needs find an outlet. In six weeks she was running to the door at the sound of Graham's step, and what more natural than he should kiss her.

As for Graham his satisfaction with domestic life was apparent to all with whom he came in contact. Every detail of the house was of interest to him. He became an authority on running a furnace, and was even known to express an opinion on sash curtains.

One evening after they had been married a few months, Graham came into the little parlor where Nellie stood before the gas logs softly humming. He noted the contented expression of her face.

"You look happy," he said, as he drew a chair up by her and sat down.

"Yes," the word came slowly, "Sometimes I forget I'm not like other wives."

"Not like other wives! Why what do you mean?"

"That my husband does not love me—much."

Graham drew her down to him. "I love you to distraction and you know it," he declared.

Nellie hung her head. "But the miniature?"

"I threw it in the furnace the first time I made the fire. Now will you be good?"

The Horoscope

MONDAY, AUGUST 24, 1914.

Astrologers read this as rather a fortunate day. Uranus, Venus and Jupiter are strongly benefic in influence, while Mercury and the sun are mildly inimical.

Romance is held to be under an uncommonly favorable government of the stars. While influences are most auspicious for making new friendships between men and women, there is a sway that is said to awaken sentiment.

Lightness of spirit and kindliness of thought are supposed to be encouraged by this government, which enables men to see what is best in women.

The government is an auspicious one for weddings and social entertainments. There is a happy omen for dinners, dances and outdoor festivities.

An event of national importance, which will be planned at Newport, will bring honors to an American statesman, the prophets announce.

Danger of illnesses due to heat and exhaustion is likely to be increased, while this configuration lasts.

The assassination of a high official in Russia is predicted next month or at least early in the autumn.

Fire in a grain elevator out West will destroy a large quantity of wheat, astrologers announce.

Lack of tact in dealing with foreign questions relating to the United States will cause anxiety in Great Britain.

The stars of two national leaders of rival political parties are not favorable to success. Loss of prestige and widespread criticism are indicated.

Again religious disputes and misunderstandings are foreshadowed. These will be most prevalent abroad, but they will cause interest in this country.

Persons whose birthdate it is have a happy augury for the coming year. Both men and women will prosper. Change and travel are presaged. Advancement for artists and musicians is probable. Agriculturists, builders and miners will benefit.

Children born on this day probably will be exceedingly alert and persevering. Boys will succeed in the professions or in business careers. Girls probably will marry happily.

BOUNCER'S LESSON.

Bouncer was very fond of balls, especially the bouncing kind. Nothing could persuade him to leave them alone. Dora scolded and Ted whipped him, but all in vain.

However, one day he learned a lesson which he has not forgotten. Dora and Ted were out, and no balls were to be found lying about at home, so Bouncer pushed his way through the hedge into the garden next door, and there came upon a party of young men playing tennis. Without a moment's hesitation he seized a ball which bounced towards him and bit it. A moment later he was dragged away to a shed by a young man who knew his mischievous ways.

"There, my boy!" said the young man, as he chained him to a heavy table. "There you will stay until our game is over." We will not put up with your nonsense." Unluckily for Bouncer the young man forgot him when the game was finished so he had to stay in his prison a long time. It was two days later when Dora and Ted found him, for although he howled his loudest, the shed was so far from the house that no one heard him.

It was a very hungry and sad little dog who was taken home; but the punishment did him good. Dora and Ted have now only to threaten to drag him away to the shed next door, and Bouncer will leave the most bouncing of balls alone—at any rate until no one is looking.

LOUIS SCHETTLER HOLDS LONDON TO THREE HITS, PETES WINNING

Peterboro Pitcher Was a Mystery to Reisling Outfit Yesterday—Hammond Was Pounded for Three Runs —Beebe Pitched Last Two Innings.

[BY BERT PERRY.]

There were only two frames in which the London club looked to have a chance to score off Louis Shettler, Peterboro's prize pill pusher, over in the West London pastime park yesterday afternoon. But looks were deceiving. Louis was pitching the same old kind of shut-out ball that he inflicted upon the local gents, when he sojourned on the mound here on the morning of civic holiday, and the London club went scoreless. Another reason for the Reisling outfit going scoreless was the presence of "Cuz" Hammond, "Hardluck" Hammond now, on the firing line for London. In the last four games Hammond has worked, the men behind him have just collected one run. Each time he goes in to pitch he stacks up against some heaver that seems to have the London hitters paralyzed, when they go up to the plate. Yesterday, the locals could only secure three safe raps, and only one was hit to the outfield, all of which goes to show the combination of Shettler vs. Hamond is a losing one to this London aggregation. The final score was 3 to 0.

Game Was Snappily Played.

The Petes didn't have to point any farther than the first inning to show where they won it. In the initial frame a couple of hits and a stolen base combined to give the Blountmen one run, which was enough and plenty to win with. The two runs that came in the sixth were just so much wasted energy as far as winning the game was concerned. That's just how good Louis Schettler was. The game was snappily played, with the Petes showing a great deal more snap and dash than has characterized their playing in previous exhibitions at Tecumseh Park. That Peterboro infield worked at times like Connie Mack's $100,000 quartette. It bungled a couple of times at critical stages, but it made this up in other ways.

Fox Makes a Great Play.

Frankie Fox, who used to be our Frankie Fox, looked like a million dollars on one play that robbed Eddie Linneborn of a clean single. In the sixth inning Eddie led off with a sharp rap through the box that Schettler sidestepped in order to save one of his legs. But not so Frankie Fox. He came tearing over from shortstop like a storm and with one big swoop right at the bag, he gathered in the sphereoid and threw out Linny at first base. As a top liner, it ranked with Louis Schettler's pitching.

Chester King, who second bases for the Curly Blountmen, was right there second basing all the time yesterday. He handled a bunch of drives off London bats and had only one miscue, a boot on Mullin's grounder in the seventh inning, which was one of those two frames in which the London club carelessly cluttered up the bases on Louis Schettler and tried to coax a few runs out of that scoreless pitching system of his.

Locals Played Errorless Ball.

The London club also fielded nicely. That's about all we can say about the way the boys played yesterday; they weren't doing any hitting, at least, any hitting to speak about. Not a bobble was registered against the local outfit and smart fielding plays were staged by Ray Whitcraft, Eddie Lamy and Cy Reidy, not to mention Oskee Neale, who was making his 1914 bow before the London fans. He is the same old Oskee. He can go and get them just like he used to do before Jimmy Sheckard's Cleveland American Association team introduced him to some higher class hotels and smarter looking ball parks. He also beat out an infield hit just like he used to do over at Tecumseh Park in other exciting but bygone days. Guess the American Association didn't rob him of very much.

There were only three innings in which the Petes were able to get to Hammond. In the first spasm, Curly Blount opened with a single, but Welsh fanned after trying to sacrifice. Blount pilfered second, Joe Dunn's throw being low. Dolan banged out a fly to Eddie Lamy, but "Little Annie" Rooney came up and punched a single to left, bringing Mr. Blount home. "Little Annie" was expunged trying to hook into second base.

Tried to Get It Back.

London tried to get the run back in its half of the initial inning. Eddie Linneborn took three stabs at some of Schettler's curves, then went and sat down on the bench again. Oskee Neale, however, took a few looks at what Mr. Shettler was offering up for inspection, then he got in the way of one and went to first base. Louis Bierbauer, who many a time and oft has delivered a slashing bunch of trouble in that opening inning, was not equal to the task this time, and "Little Annie" Rooney out in right field went back and smothered his long fly. By this time Oskee Neale was around to third base, having purloined second sack by a neat fallaway slide, and taken third on Bierbauer's out. Eddie Lamy hung around long enough to look over four wide ones and he went to first. Cy Reidy was unable to deliver, though, being called out on a third strike that Schettler sneaked over.

The Petes got a couple of hits in the second frame, but they didn't bring in any runs. "Noisy Joe" Byrne, the typographical error that third bases for the visitors, drove one to right safely, but was caught stealing. King flew out to Lamy, but Frankie Fox beat out a hit that Hammond tried to stop but merely hesitated. Frankie was left when Miller flied to Lamy.

Two More For Petes.

In the meantime the locals were going along playing shut-out ball. Louis Schettler had a no-hit game up to the sixth inning. In the fifth, Mike Mullin got on when Fox let his grounder go through him, but nothing happened after that to cause Schettler any worry. In the first part of the sixth, with two gone, the Petes shoved across two counters on four hits. Dolan started the fun by tripling just inside the right field foul line. Rooney dropped a hit over Whitcraft's head and Dolan scored. Byrne hit over Lamy's head for two sacks, after Rooney had stolen second base. "Little Annie" came in on Joe's drive. King beat out a hit to Whitcraft and stole second, but Hammond stopped Fox's drive and ended the session by throwing out Frankie at first base.

Pretty Near Scored in Seventh.

London's real bid for the game came in the seventh. In the sixth, Oskee Neale made the first hit off Shettler when he beat out a grounder to Fox. In the seventh a bunch of pinch hitters were injected into the session, but even then Louis Schettler went on pitching in the same old scoreless way. Cy Reidy opened the inning by singling to right centre over King's head. Whitcraft forced Cy at second by hitting to Shettler, who threw out Fox. Mullin got a life on King's boot of his grounder, Whitty getting safely to second. Dunn was taken out and Snyder sent in at this stage, but after fouling off a couple, Jack watched one go by and was called out. Herb Thoma then went in to pinch hit for "Cuz" Hammond, and he filled the bases by laying down a little tap and beating it out before Joe Byrne fielded it. Eddie Linneborn was unable to bring in any runs, though. His drive was right in Mr. Dolan's way and that gentleman grabbed it up and touched first base, retiring the side.

In the eighth and ninth, the local aggregation was retired in order. Ben Beebe went in to pitch in the eighth and Snyder did the pitching. Ben only allowed one hit and the visitors had but little chance to score off him.

BRANTS AND BEAVERS DIVIDED A COUPLE

Toronto Won First Game and Brantford Took Second.

BOBBY AULD DRIVEN OUT

Deneau's Team Batted Toronto's Star Out of Box in Fourth Inning.

[Special to The Advertiser.]

TORONTO, August 21.—From the way the Beavers played in the first game of the series with Brantford yesterday, which they won by 8 to 1, it looked as if they would also take the second game of the double header, but they failed. The Red Sox won the second game by 5 to 4.

Graham was too good for the visitors in the first game, and was never in trouble. He allowed only five hits, and his teammates gave him excellent support. Bobby Auld, the local's one-best-bet, was no puzzle to the visiting batsmen in the second game, and was driven to cover in the fourth inning, after the visitors had scored five runs. Schaeffer finished the game. Score:

DE PALMA WON COBEL TROPHY AUTO RACE

Winner Was Hard Pressed by Anderson Throughout.

BARNEY OLDFIELD FOURTH

Leader Installed Favorite for the Elgin National Race.

ELGIN, Ills., Aug. 21.—Ralph De Palma, hard pressed by Gil Anderson, won the Cobel cup automobile race today, finishing 305 miles in 4:05.001 an average of 73.6 miles an hour. Anderson finished 44 seconds later, followed by Mulford, in 4:08.16, and Oldfield, in 4:15.23.

De Palma was the winne of the event in 1913, when his average speed was 66.8 miles an hour. His fastest lap today was 6:05, an average of 82.5 miles an hour.

Only nine of the twenty-two drivers who started the race were on the course at the finish.

De Palma by his victory today became a favorite for the Elgin National race tomorrow, another thirty-six lap contest. Anderson and Mulford, who finished second and third today, are entered for the Elgin event. Each has won one leg of the trophy.

Oldfield, Tetzlaff, Pullen, Chandler, Roberts and Heinemann, of today's starters, also are in the Elgin National. The race tomorrow is over the same distance, and starts at the same time as today, 11 a.m.

A WORLD SERIES STAR TWO YEARS AGO; GIVEN HIS UNCONDITIONAL RELEASE NOW

STEVE YERKES, second baseman of the Boston Red Sox, who was given his unconditional release by the Boston Club yesterday, after all the other clubs in the American League had waived on him. Yerkes has been with the Boston Club for some seasons. Two years ago when the Red Sox and Giants played in the world series, Yerkes was regarded as the weakest member of either team. In the eight games played that year, however, Steve was one of the most prominent figures, playing a grand game at second base and batting in many runs by timely hitting. Last year he only had a fair season, and this year he has been going bad nearly all season. It is likely he will quit the game.

WALTER HAGEN TOOK TITLE FROM OUIMET

Rochester Golfer is American Open Golf Champion.

CANADIANS DO WELL

"Chick" Evans Jun. the Only Player to Give Hagen a Real Struggle.

Chicago, August 21.—Walter C. Hagen, 22 years old, native professional of Rochester, N.Y., today displaced Francis Ouimet, as open golf champion of America by winning the tournament at Midlothian with a medal score of 290 for the 72 holes.

Ouimet fell off in his play, taking 298 for his total, and it fell to the lot of Charles Evans, Jr., western amateur champion, hampered by a wrenched right ankle, to furnish Hagen's chief opposition. Outplaying the whole field in a spectacular finish that electrified the long gallery, Evans made two rounds of 71 and 70, and finished with 291, just one stroke behind Hagen.

Evans's score of 141 for today was the best double round of the tournament.

Jack Burke, of Port Arthur, led the Canadian contingent with 310, in a triple tie for fourteenth place. W. J. Bell, Toronto, 312, was sixteenth on the list, and George Cumming, Toronto, was nineteenth, with a card of 316.

Hagen's victory was accomplished by steady playing. Yesterday he made a record of 68 for the course by good work, aided by spectacular putting.

The new champion has not made any record outside his native city until the present tournament. He is slight in build, but follows Vardon's system of shooting straight for the flag all the time.

DICK HOBLITZEL LEADS AMERICAN HITTING AVERAGES

Jackson and Cobb Displaced by Former National Leaguers — Brooklyn Has Five .300 Hitters in the National.

Chicago, Ill., Aug. 22.—Two former National Leaguers are leading their colleagues of the American League in batting, according to averages published here today. Dick Hoblitzel, now with Boston, is the top-notcher, with a percentage of .379 for the 20 games he played, and Mike Mitchell, in the score of games he has played with Washington is next, with .372. Then follows: Jackson, Cleveland, .360; Collins, Philadelphia, .339, and Baker, Philadelphia, .330; Philadelphia, with .266, and Detroit and Washington, with .240 each, lead in club batting.

Brooklyn has five batters ranked among the first ten of the National League. They include Ross Erwin, who leads, with .348 for 20 games. Following Erwin are Grant, New York, .347; Dalton, Brooklyn, .345; Meyers, Brooklyn, .333; Becker, Philadelphia, .327; Daubert, Brooklyn, .321; Burns, New York, .310, and McCarty, Brooklyn, .310.

Brooklyn leads in team batting, with .273, and New York is next, with .265.

In the Federal League, Kauff still sets the batting pace, the Indianapolis slugger having a .363 average.

Indianapolis is ahead in club batting, with .284, and Baltimore is next, with .274.

Matty McIntyre leads the batters of the International League. In 26 games for Providence he has batted .342. Then comes Kritchell, Toronto, .340; Onslow, Providence, .327; Schulz, Rochester, 321; McConnell, Buffalo, .319; Hulswitt, Jersey City, .318; Mays, Providence, .316; Flynn, Montreal, .314. In club batting, Providence is head, with .276, and Toronto next, with .267. Gilhooly, of Buffalo, and Picks, of Toronto, lead in stolen bases, with 34 each. Wayne, of Toronto, leads the pitchers, with 10 won and 3 lost, followed by Hughes, of Rochester, with 17 and 6, and Keefe, Rochester, with 16 and 6.

WHAT LONDON HAS TO CONTEND WITH

(Hamilton Herald.)

Surely, the fact that Peterboro and Ottawa are in the way next door neighbors is not having anything to do with the games they play in the Canadian League. While it cannot be said point blank that Peterboro is in favor of the Senators grabbing the gonfalon, yet the fact that Bob Sterling was sent in twice in one series against the Shagman, while Schettler was not worked at all, would lead to that belief.

Even down in Peterboro it is hinted that Schettler is being saved for London. Sterling was beaten in both games that he worked against Ottawa.

Of course, it is remembered that Curly Blount and Dock Reisling had a battle, but then, that can't have had any such effect.

TROUT TOPS LEAGUE BATTERS: LONDONER'S THIRD AND FOURTH

The Official Averages, Issued by President Fitzgerald Up to August 15, Show Twenty Players Over .300 Mark —Bierbauer Leading Base Stealer.

Cather Irwin Trout, of the Toronto Beavers, is leading the Canadian League in hitting for all games played up to August 15, according to the official averages issued by President Fitzgerald this morning. Trout has taken part in 78 games, and has made 104 hits for an average of .361. Kelly Harris, the Erie right fielder, is still in second place, with an average of .349 for 92 games. Louis Bierbauer and Mike Mullin, of the London team, are third and fourth respectively. Louis is hitting .340 for 90 games, while Mullin has an average of .330 in 80 games.

Twenty Players Hitting .300.

There are an even 20 players hitting over the .300 mark. Of this number, Ottawa and Erie each have four players, London and Toronto three, St. Thomas and Peterboro two, and Hamilton and Brantford one each. Eddie Lamy is the third London player who is in the select circle. He has an average of .305 for 92 games. Bierbauer is the only London player to show an improvement in his hitting above the .300 mark. Linneborn and Reidy show slight gains, while Snyder, Lamy, Mullin, Whitcraft and Heck have fallen off.

Bierbauer Leading Base Stealer.

Louis Bierbauer is leading the league again in stolen bases, with 36, while Linneborn is close behind with 34. Linny has been suffering with a charley horse for the past two weeks, and this has had a great deal to do with cutting his lead down. Frank Shaughnessy, of Ottawa, is third, with 30, while Curly Blount, the Peterboro manager, is next, with 29.

Shag. and Rube Home-Run Leaders.

Shaughnessy and Deneau are the leading home-run hitters, with six each. Louis Bierbauer and Mike Mullin lead in three-base hits, the former with twelve and the latter with eleven. Scott, of Erie, and Lamy, of London, lead in two-baggers. Scott has 25 to his credit and Lamy 20. Harris, of Erie, has made the most hits, with 120 credited to him. Nine players in the league have made more than 100 hits. Both Bierbauer and Harris have been up to bat 344 times. Louis has made 117 hits, three less than the Erie outfielder.

The Joke Columns.

According to the pitching averages, which are away out as usual, Kubat, of Ottawa, is the leading twirler, with ten wins and two losses. "Doc." Reisling is next, with nine wins and two defeats. Bobby Heck is fifth, with thirteen wins and seven defeats, while Beebe is tenth with ten wins and seven setbacks. Hammond is tied with Ben and Steiger is fourteenth with nine victories and seven losses. None of these figures are correct, however, and the wonder is that President Fitzgerald keeps on issuing them in the same erratic fashion month after month.

A NATIONAL LEAGUE CAST-OFF LEADS AMERICAN LEAGUE BATTERS

DICK HOBLITZEL, of the Boston Red Sox, who, in 20 games played, is leading the American League in batting, topping such as hitters as Jackson, of Cleveland, Baker and Collins, of Philadelphia, and Ty Cobb, of Detroit. Hoblitzel was formerly with the Cincinnati Reds, but was going so badly for Herzog's aggregation that he was traded. Like many another Cincinnati cast-off, he proved a star as soon as he got away from Redland and Garry Herrmann.

HECK AND STEIGER WILL PITCH TODAY'S GAMES AGAINST PETES

London's Good Lefthanders Will Oppose Curly Blount's Team in Final Series Here — Beebe Will Start Against Ottawa Monday.

Heinie Steiger and Bobby Heck will work today's double-header for the London team. Heinie will work the first game and if he is right it is not improbable that Manager Reisling will send him back to pitch the second game. Bobby will start against the Senators on Monday in that case. However, should Bobby pitch the second contest, Beebe will pitch the opening game against the Shagmen at Tecumseh Park.

Blountmen's Farewell.

Today's games will mark the last visit of the Petes to this city this season. Curly Blount may send Louis Shettler back at the local club in the second game today. Shettler has been saved for the London series, as Blount is out to beat the local club as many games as possible. Sterling may work the first game, with Belting or Tracey also probable selections.

Saints Will Give Shag a Battle.

The Ottawa club has two games to play with St. Thomas today, and will also have a double-header with the Saints in Hull tomorrow. Craven's club will give the Shagmen a hard fight in all of the contests, and if the Senators get an even break they will be lucky. Billy Riley, who has been pitching shut-out ball for the Saints in his last two starts, will likely work the first game against Shag today, and if the Ottawa club beats him they will have to face Hughey in the second game, both hard twirlers to beat.

London's Advantage.

The London club will have the advantage in the race from now on, and with a little break in the luck should cop the pennant with ease. The Shagmen have nine more games at home and thirteen on the road. London has sixteen games at home and only three on the road, as a result of the transfer of the St. Thomas games here. The Shagmen must win at least three-fourths of their remaining games, and London would have to lose more than half of its games before the pennant goes to the capital. It is a pretty rosy outlook for the Reisling outfit.

SHAMROCK HIDDEN FROM PRYING EYES

Lipton Challenger Taken Into Drydock at Brooklyn, Sheathed in Canvas Petticoat.

New York, Aug. 22.—Sir Thomas Lipton's Shamrock IV., challenger for the America's cup, emerged from the water yesterday afternoon in a shipyard in South Brooklyn. She was taken into one of the drydocks, blocked and braced and then, before the water vanished from around her, a canvas petticoat, extending from stem to stern below the waterline, was rigged on her, that her peculiar lines might be protected from prying eyes. She is to be housed over for the winter. The steam yacht Erin, with nearly all of the Shamrock's crew, will leave for England Monday. Col. Neill, representative for the Shamrock owner, the Earl of Hardwicke and the others of the party aboard the Erin and the challenger when she arrived here, will return on board her. All hands expressed a hope to return next year and take part in the races for the cup.

Col. Neill said the Shamrock IV. was seriously considered by British yachtsmen, who knew, to have an excellent show against the selected defender, and that she would prove a surprise to many, despite her unusual appearance above the water-line.

Ty Cobb says the pennant looks secure for the Athletics. Ty ought to know; he made it that way.

Well, anyhow, they cannot say Tom Jones didn't try to avert the war.

Bill Buhl, world's tourist, gave a banquet for the White Sox. What's he doing, throwing his name?

A railroad has dragged the Killifer case into its defence—which is not helpful to the defendant side of the Killifer case.

Among those who are not returning to fight, however, is August Herrmann. He has enough of it to do here at home.

That skull that Little Peterkin found at Blenheim belonged to a chess player still waiting for his opponent to move.

PACIFIC COAST IS WELL PROTECTED

British and French Cruisers On Guard—Germans' Boats Gone.

VANCOUVER, B. C., Aug. 21. — Seattle papers today publish the story of the arrival on the Pacific coast of the British cruiser Newcastle and the French cruiser Montcalm, which, they say, are being coaled from Esquimault station and are cruising up and down the coast. There is therefore no longer need to keep from the Canadian public the news that their littoral and harbors are well protected from any incursion by the two German cruisers, Leipzig and Nurnburg, which were operating in these waters at the opening of the war, but which was supposed to have fled to Samoa to take refuge in the German fortified naval station of Apia.

H. M. S. Newcastle, Capt. Frederick A. Powlett, Commander Neptune W. Biggle, and Lieut.-Commander Arthur G. Sparrow, steamed into Esquamault harbor on the morning of Monday last, having been detached from the station of the British Pacific fleet for the purpose of protecting the British merchant shipping on the Pacific coast of North America. She was spoken on the previous night off Cape Flattery, and was steaming at top speed to intercept the German cruisers Leipzig and Nurnberg, then reported to be on the way to Victoria, B. C. After coaling at Esquimault, she continued south, and was joined by the Montcalm. This information was in every Canadian newspaper office on Monday last, but on the request of the Pacific coast censorship it was withheld, as no doubt the British naval authorities hoped to surprise the two Germans. The arrival of the two allied cruisers is now common news on the coast.

H. M. S. Newcastle is a second-class protected cruiser, faster and more heavily armed than either of the Germans. Her displacement of 4,800 tons and her 24,669-horsepower, give her a speed of 26.26 knots and permit an armament of two 6-inch guns, ten 4-inch and a number of quick-firers, and she is also equipped with two torpedo tubes. She was completed at Elswick in 1910. She carries 376 officers and men.

Considerably more powerful, though slower in speed, is the French armored cruiser Montcalm, attached to the French-China station. She was completed in 1902, has 9,367 tons displacement, cost nearly a million sterling, is armored with two 7.6-inch guns, eight 6.4-inch, four 3.9-inch and a number of lighter guns. Her speed is 21 knots and she carries 612 officers and men.

LONDON CLUB WINS LACROSSE DISTRICT

Brantford's Refusal to Play Today Gives Locals Gme.

FRANK DOYLE SENT WORD

Secretary of O.A.L.A. Notified Local Club That Brantford Refused to Play.

The London Lacrosse Club wins the local district championship as a result of the Brantford team refusing to play the scheduled game in that city this afternoon. Manager Mike Collins, of the London club, received the following telegram from Secretary Frank Doyle, of the O. A. L. A., last evening—"Brantford's refusal to play Saturday gives you the district championship."

Just why the Brantford club refused to play the game is not definitely known. The Telephone City aggregation had a chance to tie London by winning this fixture.

The London club will now play off with Fergus or Wingham, and if it should win, will likely meet the eastern winners for the championship of Ontario in the intermediate series.

KIAO CHOW MIGHT BE KEPT BY JAPAN

Need Not Hand Over Prize of War, Say Papers—Russia Ready To Strike Now.

Tokio, Aug. 22.—Japanese newspapers that are sometimes officially inspired, say that if Kiao Chow is to be a prize of war, Japan must not be obliged to restore the German protectorate to China. Restoration, they state, would be conditional on the peaceful transfer of Kiao Chow to Japan by Germany.

Hochi says that the German ambassador to Japan, Count A. Rex, will sail for Seattle on August 26. A number of German officials have already left on the steamer China for San Francisco.

There is absorbing interest in the arrival at Peking of the recently appointed Japanese minister to China, Eki Hioki. He is expected to bring about a friendly understanding between Japan and China.

Capt. Dmitri Vassilieff, naval attache at the Russian embassy in Washington, who stopped here on his way to the United States, said that Russia had 4,500,000 men ready to strike, and probably they would strike soon.

ITALY DECIDES ON MOBILIZATION NOW

King Has Been Prevailed Upon by Arguments of Ministers To Agree.

[Canadian Press.]

Paris, Aug. 22.—5:35 a. m.—A general mobilization in Italy has been decided upon, and will be proclaimed in three or four days, according to a message which the Rome correspondent of Eclair succeeded in smuggling through to his paper.

The correspondent asserts that King Victor Emmanuel until recently felt obliged to renounce all idea of Italian intervention in the conflict, but was won over by the arguments of his ministers. Minister of Foreign Affairs Marquis Antonio di San Giuliano alone of the cabinet held to a contrary opinion.

McGraw now has a Sac, a Cherokee and a Mission India, not to speak of Larry McLean, who is an Apache when he takes the war path.

BAD EXPLOSION AT RIDGETOWN CREAMERY

Boiler Blown to Pieces When Natural Gas Was Lighted —Man's Narrow Escape.

[Canadian Press.]

Ridgetown, Ont., Aug. 22.—Citizens were alarmed this morning about 7 o'clock by a terrific explosion in the south part of the town. Upon investigation it was learned that the creamery was the scene of the excitement. John Garlick, who had gone to the factory to work for the day, and was the only man in the building at the time, turned the three large natural gas burners under the boiler on and also the reserve tank, after which he proceeded to apply the torch.

The result was the large body of escaping gas exploded, blowing the casing from the boiler, springing the flues and taking the steam dome entirely off. This fell so close to Mr. Garlick as to tear the pocket from his pants. His escape was a miraculous one. As it was his arms and face were severely burned.

The loss will be considerable, but the proprietor has another factory at Wheatley to take care of the business while repairs are being made.

SHOW GOOSE STEP IN PUBLIC SQUARE

Germans at Brussels Parade Before People, Who Believe Invaders Will Not Last Long.

[Canadian Press.]

London, Aug. 22.—A dispatch to the Daily Mail from Brussels which came by way of Ghent, adds the following details concerning the entry of the Germans to Brusels.

"Burgomaster Max met the Germans outside the city. He was accompanied by four sheriffs, who went out in a motor car. M. Max endeavored to assert the claims of the populace to certain rights under the rules of war, but was roughly interrupted by the German officers, who insisted that he remove his scarf of office.

"The burgomaster complied and the negotiations being satisfactorily concluded, he was ordered to continue in charge of the civil affairs of the capital. At the same time he was warned that he would be held responsible personally for any overt acts of the people against the Germans.

"The Belgians watched open-mouthed as the Germans marched into the public square, where they broke into the famous parade march of the German goose step. Many observers were heard to mutter: 'They will not come back this way, for the allies will finish them.' "

CONDITIONS GRAVE IN POLA, AUSTRIA

WILL CARRY WAR INTO ENEMY'S TERRITORY

French Military Writer Says Germans Have Failed in Plans.

[Canadian Press.]

Paris, Aug. 22.—4:40 a.m.—Col. Leonce Rousset, writing for the Petit Parisien, says:

"The situation is good. The slight set-back at Lorraine is unimportant. On the whole the German staff's plan of invasion may be said to have failed. They sought to crush us with a lightning blow, but it is we who will carry the war into the enemy's territory."

WHAT THIN FOLKS SHOULD DO TO GAIN WEIGHT

Physician's Advice for Thin, Undeveloped Men and Women.

Thousands of people suffer from excessive thinness, weak nerves, and feeble stomachs who, having tried advertised flesh-makers, food-fads, physical culture stunts and rub-on creams, resign themselves to life-long skinniness and think nothing will make them fat. Yet their case is not hopeless. A recently discovered regenerative force makes fat grow after years of thinness, and is also unequalled for repairing the waste of sickness or faulty digestion and for strengthening the nerves. This remarkable discovery is called Sargol. Six strength-giving, fat-producing elements of acknowledged merit have been combined in this peerless preparation, which is indorsed by eminent physicians and used by prominent people everywhere. It is absolutely harmless, inexpensive and efficient.

A month's systematic use of Sargol should produce flesh and strength by correcting faults of digestion and by supplying highly concentrated fats to the blood. Increased nourishment is obtained from the food eaten, and the additional fats that thin people need are provided. Leading druggists sell Sargol and say there is a large demand for it.

While this new preparation has given splendid results as a nerve tonic and vitalizer, it should not be used by nervous people unless they wish to gain at least ten pounds in flesh. —Advt.

The "Thin Red Line" Again At the Battle Front

ENGLISH ARMY FRONT "BUILT UP" TO RECEIVE ENEMY'S ATTACK.

WHAT RIGHT HAS WOMAN TO BE JEALOUS, ASKS A NOTED WOMAN PLAYWRIGHT

What right has a woman to be jealous?

With the assertion today of Mrs. Edith Ellis Furness, the playwright, that jealousy, in the sense of devastating suspicion, expressing itself in acts of dishonor and even of crime can form no part of the truest, highest love, this present discussion closes. What conclusions may we draw from it?

These are the facts: Out of seven women, all except one of them married, I found that six had no hesitation in condemning jealousy and all its works. They maintained that the emotion itself is deplorable, that its manifestations are odious, that jealousy and the best type of love are incompatible. Work, a higher ideal of love, a sense of humor, a feeling of self-respect and a recognition of the futility of jealousy were suggested as methods of prevention and cure.

The one feminine defender of jealousy frankly expressed her belief in the old saying that without jealousy there can be no great love. She insisted that animals, children, mothers are torn by jealousy, as well as husbands and wives. She said that a wife is justified even in using the dictograph to spy on her husband, if her suspicions have been aroused, and that the "unwritten law" should be upheld for women if it is upheld for men.

Six to One Women Condemn.

That the women contributors to this series of discussions have registered a six-to-one vote against jealousy is a feather in the cap of feminism, using the word in the broadest sense. Here is proof that women are trying to be bigger persons, not simply to get more things. For despite its tragedies of swift destruction or lifelong wretchedness, jealousy is primarily a petty possession of a petty soul.

"Jealousy, at least in its violent and dishonorable expressions, is a state out of which we must evolve," summed up Mrs. Edith Ellis Furness. Mrs. Furness is the author of "Seven Sisters," one of the few American plays included in the "Modern Drama" series now being published.

"The jealousy which makes a woman kill or injure another person, or which persuades her to deal a blow to her own self-respect, cannot exist with the highest love. Perfect trust is a condition of perfect love.

May Suffer, But Not Kill.

"Of course, if a woman loves a man intensely, and the proof that he loves another woman is forced upon her, she will suffer horribly. She will naturally have no feeling of affection for her supplanter, and will desire not to see her. But as for stabbing or shooting this rival, or even trying to keep her husband against his will—these are impossibilities for the civilized woman."

"And isn't the behavior of the spy an impossibility for her?" I asked.

"Yes, yes, yes," exclaimed Mrs. Furness, putting her hands in front of her face as if to avoid some horrible sight.

"Yet I know women who consider themselves dignified, intelligent, respectable members of society, and who stoop to looking through their husband's pockets. How they can so poison their self-respect I am unable to understand. I would rather die than read a letter addressed to anyone else.

"I think that many husbands are emotionally single-minded as their wives are. Also, I think that many men remain true to their homes for the sake of their children. But here and there we find men who are hangovers from the times when first polygamy and later a double standard of morals was accepted by the whole world.

Urges Honor System.

"Our present social standards render it difficult for real mates to find each other. And so we make of marriage a penalization, which is emphasized whenever one of the two persons concerned attempts the role of jailer. The honor system is one which should be employed by husband and wife.

"And when marriage is broken up why is it that the wife always puts all the blame on the other woman?" Mrs. Furness inquired, a bit impatiently. "Not long ago a woman who is a grandmother nearly fainted when I mentioned the name of another woman who was to be a guest at a certain social function. 'Do I have to meet her?' my friend gasped.

"And then it came out that her husband had danced too much with the woman in question at a summer hotel 20 years before. 'He has a very boyish nature,' and she tried to lead him away,' my friend explained.

"'Stop right there!' I said. No man with children is ever led away from his wife unless he leads himself away.'

Type of Jealous Woman.

"The woman most apt to be jealous is the woman who has been brought up with the old romantic notion that there's nothing else in the world for her except the one man. She has no truly social qualities, even though she may be known as a 'society woman.' Therefore she often has most cause for jealousy, because after her superficial attraction wears off she bores her husband.

"The woman who is married for her personality doesn't worry every time she sees her husband talking to some one prettier than herself. She knows that his love for her is based on something securer than a fondness for curls and pink cheeks.

"The husband is cruel, however, if he tries to hurt his wife by flirtations with other women," Mrs. Furness added. "A wife in that position once came to me and I told her to cultivate a mental picture of a man beating a little dog which he had tied to the fence.

Blames Novels for Tigress.

"A man of that sort takes jealousy as a tribute. The best type of husband trusts a woman and expects her to trust him. The more campaigns they endure together the greater their loyalty. Even when two seem to have drifted quite apart trouble will draw them together like—that!" and the dramatist's palms met in a swift movement, the fingers interlocking.

"As for the tigress style of love—if it weren't for a lot of novels and plays I think we should have outgrown it before now," she ended with a smile.

BABY ALL COVERED WITH ECZEMA

Could Not Sleep Day or Night. Itched and Burned Terribly. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Cured in a Month. Also Cured Mother of Salt Rheum.

Quarryville, N. B.—"For a month after my baby was born he could not sleep day or night with eczema. He was all covered with small watery pimples which would break in a day or two and leave a humoury scab and would itch and burn terribly. He scratched so much that he made sores. His skin burned all the time and when the scab came off it left little marks like chicken-pox. At last I saw Cuticura Soap and Ointment advertised. After the first application he rested easier. I applied the Cuticura Ointment lightly and after an hour I would wash him with Cuticura Soap. After a month's treatment he was cured.

"I was greatly troubled with salt rheum on my hands. They broke out in little watery pimples and would be so itchy I could tear them to pieces. Then they would dry up and crack and bleed and when I put them in water the disease would eat in to the bones. They were so painful I had to keep them tied up with cotton rags. I could not do any work. One box of Cuticura Ointment with the Cuticura Soap cured them." (Signed) Mrs. Grattan, July 31, 1913.

Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere. For a liberal free sample of each, with 32-p. book, send post-card to Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Dept. D, Boston, U. S. A.

BOLD AND RUTHLESS IS THE KAISER; DOMINATED BY THE MILITARY SPIRIT; FEARLESS, ACTIVE AND MANY-SIDED

[From Munsey Magazine.]

For almost a quarter-century Wilhelm II., of Hohenzollern, King of Prussia and German Emperor, has been the centre of a world-wide controversy which is hardly paralleled in history. His enemies have painted him as a modern Mars, thirsting for the blood of nations. His advocates present him in the light of a royal peace-lover whose sole aim is the good of Germany and of the human race. All agree that his is the dominant personality of Europe.

There is no man in Europe so many-sided, so full of enthusiasms and antipathies, so daring in conception and so vigorous in execution as the present occupant of the imperial and royal throne in Berlin. Even his most bitter political opponents in his own dominions make no attempt to conceal their admiration for the energetic character of Wilhelm II.

A Restless Personality.

From his earliest childhood the Kaiser was a singularly restless and active personality. As a youngster he elicited from Prince Gortschakoff, the Russian chancellor, the prediction:

"This young Hohenzollern will considerably outshine all his predecessors on the throne. He will be the mainspring of Germany, and his influence will be felt throughout the world. When the time comes he will astonish Europe!"

With what degree of prophetic insight the uncanny old Muscovite spoke can be inferred from the dominant position which the Kaiser has occupied in the affairs, not only of Germany, but of the world, since that day in June, 1888, when the tragic death of his father, Friedrich III., placed him upon the throne.

From his earliest boyhood the presumptive heir to the crown of Friedrich the Great displayed a lively interest in things military and naval. In his seventh year he suffered the humiliation of his young life when the sentries in the garden of the palace at Potsdam failed to respond to his eager desire for a salute. He obtained his first lesson in military etiquette when, on complaining to his father, the then crown prince, of the neglect of the soldiers, his parent severely pointed out the fact that the little prince was in his tocking feet, without hat and coat, and that therefore the sentries were quite justified in paying no attention to him. That boy's tragedy of that bright day of late spring in the royal park at Potsdam was the beginning of the punctiliousness which distinguishes the Kaiser.

His Naval Ambition.

The naval ambitions of the future German emperor found expression in his summers at Jungfernsee, when he spent a large part of his play-time on board the miniature frigate, the Royal Luise, which had been presented to his father by King George IV. of England. Here he devoted himself passionately to the study of navigation and marine lore.

Chivalrous consideration for the rest of mankind was early incuicated into the lively young prince by Dr. Hinzpeter, his tutor. One day in 1870 Prince Wilhelm was informed by Dr. Hinzpeter of the capitulation of Paris. The boy threw up his cap with delight.

His tutor rebuked the ebullition of spirits with a stern, though calm admonition:

"They fought bravely and endured heroically in vain, those poor people who have just capitulated. Our joy is their despair; you must not forget that, Prince Wilhelm."

The young Hohenzollern quickly saw the great national tragedy that underlay the triumph of German arms.

An Adventure.

One of the adventures of his youth was a visit to the Paris exposition in 1878 under strict incognito. The prince was charmed with the gay atmosphere of the French capital, and deeply impressed with the tremendous powers of recovery exhibited by the people who, eight years after the historic disaster of Sedan, had mustered spirit and enterprise enough to invite a world-competition in the arts of peace which proved a great success. Wilhelm's admiration for the French people, whose blood flows in his veins from his great ancestor, Coligny, has made itself apparent again and again in Franco-German relations.

The entire scheme of education applied to Prince Wilhelm was intended to bring him into as close touch as possible with the people whom he was born to govern. A large part of the German empire stood aghast at the announcement that Prince Wilhelm, the heir to the throne, would be sent to a public school. The junkers (landed aristocracy) stormed at the idea as a derogation from the dignity of the royal house; the Socialists ridiculed it as a thinly veiled attempt to curry favor for a waning cause. Yet, at the insistence of the old Kaiser, the plan was carried out. Wilhelm II. is the first Hohenzollern to obtain his intermediate education on a public wooden bench, shoulder to shoulder with Hans and Fritz.

His Schooling.

As a pupil in Cassel Gymnasium, the grandson of Wilhelm I (the Great) was placed on a footing of exact equality with the sons of commoners who attended the same institution. He wore shabby clothes, and did his share of the school chores just as if he were not the heir to the throne, and there are still men in middle life in Germany who recall the time when the future emperor stuffed coal into the stove in the old schoolroom at Cassel, and cleaned out the ashes like the rest of the schoolboys. Although he received no favors from his instructors, Prince Wilhelm proved his capacity at the end of his gymnasium course in Cassel, when he won the Richter's medallion, a token of special distinction for diligence, industry, and punctuality.

After Cassel Gymnasium came the University at Bonn, which the prince entered in 1877. Here, too, under the supervision of Dr. Hinzpeter and of two military aides-de-camp, the young prince was dedicated to a rigid experiment of plain living and high thinking. In order to promote the spirit of true democracy in the immediate surroundings of the royal and imperial university student, his allowance was fixed at a figure that was barely high enough to cover his most necessary expenses. Although he lived up to the dignity of maintaining a "household," the appointments of the establishment were such as to arouse the commiseration of some of his richer fellow students.

Fell In Love.

At the end of his university course Prince Wilhelm, on a visit to Schloss Prinkenau, the home of a reigning house which had ceased to reign in the process of the elimination of ruling princes consequent upon the establishment of the German Empire, fell precipitately in love with the Princess Augusta Victoria, daughter of Duke Friedrich of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg. His wooing was characteristic of the self-reliant Hohenzollern who had obtained part of his education in a public school. In vain it was pointed out to him that the Princess Augusta Victoria was practically a pauper as a result of the absorption of Schleswig-Holstein by Prussia. That consideration, in fact, appealed to the generous impulses of the prince.

With a mixture of romantic devotion rare among royal personages, and a political acumen sometimes lacking among them, he reasoned that a matrimonial alliance between the House of Hohenzollern and that of Schleswig-Holstein would soften the blow which had been dealt to the race of his sweetheart. Accordingly, amid a lively newspaper discussion throughout Germany, the grandson of Wilhelm the Great on June 2, 1880, announced his betrothal to the princess. The wedding took place in Berlin on January 21, 1881, amid an imposing assemblage of royal personages, and the breach between the Hohenzollerns and the Schleswig-Holsteiners was healed amid the eager Hochs of the wedding guests.

The Army.

From his schooldays up the future German emperor had devoted himself with intense application to the main task of his life, the maintenance of the military efficiency of Germany. He began as a drillmaster out on the parade-ground, shouting orders with his resonant voice, marching for miles at the head of a regiment through rain and dust and snow and sleet, a soldier by choice and by earliest training. His military activities even at that early period caused mistaken peace lovers to shake their heads and murmur under their breaths: "There goes the war lord!"

Another occasion on which Prince Wilhelm attracted world-wide attention was his appearance at the jubilee of his grandmother, Queen Victoria. Just before the jubilee Friedrich III., Prince Wilhelm's father, had begun to feel the ravages of that affection of the throat to which he eventually succumbed. Largely through the medical skill and moral suasion of Sir Morell MacKenzie, a celebrated London cancer specialist, Friedrich's condition was sufficiently improved to enable him to appear at the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of his mother-in-law.

Goes to London.

Much to the surprise of his father's party Prince Wilhelm, with characteristic independence, decided to accept his grandmother's invitation and attend the ceremony. This decision caused another animated newspaper polemic in Berlin, which found an echo in the London press, and some of the German accounts of the procession of sovereigns in the great demonstration in honor of the Queen indicated that the young visitor from Berlin was received by the London crowds with coolness.

On his return to Germany the Friedrichers, the partisans of his father, charged the prince with a deliberate though unsuccessful attempt to outshine his parent in the great gathering of the anointed in the British capital. To these criticisms, with his habitual contempt for unwarranted attacks, the prince made no reply, although the hostile comments increased the breach between him and his father.

On June 15, 1888, on the death of Friedrich III., the new and energetic Emperor sent a gasp coursing around the world by surrounding the Neues Palais in Potsdam, where the Emperor had breathed his last, with a formidable array of troops, thus cutting off all communication between the palace and the town. The manoeuvre caused universal astonishment and gave ground to various rumors of a plot to divert the succession or bring about the fall of the monarchy.

Suppresses Memoirs.

The explanation of the startling incident proved much simpler. The new Kaiser had discovered that his enemies, the Friedrichers, were about to publish the secret memoirs which his father had been writing for the past 30 years and which were secreted in the Neues Palais. These memoirs, it had been plainly intimated, contained bitter reflections upon the character and the policies of Prince Wilhelm. Therefore Prince Wilhelm, with a bold directness of tactics which has availed him in more than one delicate situation, adopted the simplest method for the solution of the problem by isolating the palace of mourning and instituting a successful search for the perilous document and its prompt suppression.

The young Kaiser's first proclamation to his soldiers gave striking indication of his future policy toward the army. He said, in closing the address:

"We belong to each other, I and the army; thus we were born for one another; and firmly and inseparably we will hold together, whether it be God's will to give us peace or storm."

These few trenchant words aroused throughout the world another of those tempests of discussion and invective amid which the most individualistic of the Hohenzollerns apparently has found the true flavor of life.

Another state paper issued at Potsdam at about the same time gave the world fresh food for thought and indicated the Kaiser's future experiments in his enterprising but unsuccessful attempt to reconcile the growing power of socialism in Germany with the regime of royal privilege into which he had been born. In his manifesto to the Prussian people the Kaiser wrote:

"I have vowed to Almighty God that, after the example of my forefathers, I will be a just and clement chief to my people, that I will foster piety and the fear of God, and that I will protect the peace and promote the welfare of the country, be helpful to the poor and distressed, and a true guardian of the right."

Clashed With Bismarck.

In carrying out this policy the successor of Friedrich III. came into sharp and almost immediate conflict with that crag-like, immovable personality, Prince Otto von Bismarck. The Iron Chancellor, incorrigible junker that he was, vigorously opposed the Kaiser's plan of calling an international socialist congress in Berlin under imperial auspices. The Kaiser was as fully convinced that a congress should be held. The congress was held, and by imperial command its opening session took place in Bismarck's house.

As Bismarck had predicted, however, the project for an adjustment of relations between the monarchy and the proletariat failed utterly, and the rancor between the chancellor and his young master was aggravated by a widespread campaign of ridicule which Bismarck instigated at the expense of the Kaiser.

Finally the end of the bitter controversy came, and it came suddenly. Bismarck, facing the Emperor in a stormy interview at Potsdam, committed the indiscretion of offering his resignation verbally, hoping, of course, that it would be instantly declined by his lord. Such, however, was not the purpose of the young sovereign, who had made up his mind that he would govern Germany in person. So, when the chancellor had left Potsdam, the Emperor immediately dispatched an aide-de-camp to Bismarck's residence with a respectful but firm request for the old statesman's resignation in writing. Shortly after the aide-de-camp had communicated his message to Bismarck the news was transmitted to the Neues Palais that the chancellor would deliver his resignation in person at Potsdam on the morrow. Wilhelm promptly sent instructions to the aide-de-camp in Berlin to remain in Bismarck's house until he had obtained the resignation, signed and sealed. In 24 hours Germany rang with the astounding information that the builder of the German Empire was no longer its chancellor. The press of the world blazoned, in highly offensive language, the news of what was characterized as one of the most shocking acts of ingratitude in the history of statesmen.

Von Caprivi.

The firm intention of the reigning Hohenzollern to be his own chancellor was confirmed in a few days when Georg Leo, General Count von Caprivi, was appointed to the post vacated by the man of iron. Caprivi was a soldier pure and simple, and knew less about statecraft than any of the minor officials in the chancellery.

Von Caprivi was the first of a series of chancellors who have decorated a high imperial post; but it is well understood at all the capitals that the Kaiser is his own chancellor—and, above all, his own minister of foreign affairs.

Yet, despite the task of governing which Wilhelm has carried on with strenuous concentration, he has found time for various activities as art critic, painter, composer, playwright, plain sailorman, and hunter of big game. There is no phase of German life into which he has not delved deeply. His adventure in the field of feminism a few years ago set the feminine dove-cotes aflutter by a bland disregard of the force of the movement which he dismissed with the dictum:

"As for woman—kitchen, church, and children are her sphere!"

Wilhelm's intense devotion to the upbuilding of a great German naval power, his active promotion of the German merchant marine, and his constant endeavors to extend German trade are conditions, not theories, with which the political and commercial world is confronted.

In all the great crises in which Germany's dictum has been delivered before the councils of nations, the strongly masculine personality of Wilhelm II., Imperator et Rex, has stood out in bold outline against the backgrounds of events. Wherever there has been an opportunity to wrest an advantage for Germany by the shaking of a mailed fist, that fist has been shaken vigorously.

And yet the achievement for which this champion of pan-Germanism takes the greatest credit is the fact that, amid the clash of arms and the din of contending peoples, Germany has won her points without violating the peace of the world.

BEAUTIFUL ALGONQUIN PARK.

Two thousand feet above sea level, Algonquin Park is one of the most delightful vacation playgrounds in America. The log cabin camps, operated by the Grand Trunk Railway, are most attractive and everyone is delighted with the general scheme. They are reached by stage from the Highland Inn, Algonquin Park Station, Ont., and will be kept open until September 15. Just the out-of-the-way spot for a delightful summer holiday; in the wilderness with city conveniences. Splendid fishing, pure air, unlimited scope for the amateur photographer, and where health and pleasure abound. Handsome descriptive literature may be had on application to R. E. MOTHER! IF CHILD'S TONGUE IS COATED

If cross, feverish, constipated, give "California Syrup of Figs."

A laxative today saves a sick child tomorrow. Children simply will not take the time from play to empty their bowels, which become clogged up with waste, liver gets sluggish; stomach sour.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, or your child is listless, cross, feverish, breath bad, restless, doesn't eat heartily, full of cold or has sore throat or any other children's ailment, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," then don't worry, because it is perfectly harmless, and in a few hours all this constipation poison, sour bile and fermenting waste will gently move out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. A thorough "inside cleansing" is ofttimes all that is necessary. It should be the first treatment given in any sickness.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Look carefully and see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." Don't be fooled.

Cut This Out

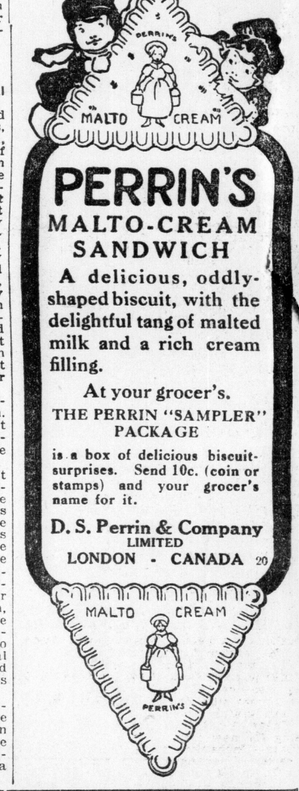

Famous Specialist's Recipe for Catarrhal Deafness and Head Noises.

If you know someone who is troubled with head noises, or catarrhal deafness, cut out this formula and hand to them, and you will have been the means of saving some poor sufferers perhaps from total deafness. Recent experiments have proved conclusively that catarrhal deafness, head noises, etc., were the direct cause of constitutional disease, and that salves, sprays, inhalers, etc., merely temporize with the complaint, and seldom, if ever, effect a permanent cure. This being so, much time and money has been spent of late by a noted specialist in perfecting a pure, gentle, yet effective tonic that would quickly dispel all traces of the catarrhal poison from the system. The effective prescription which was eventually formulated and which has aroused the belief that deafness will soon be extinct, is given below in understandable form, so that anyone can treat themselves in their own home at little expense.

Secure from your druggist 1 oz. Parmint (double strength), about 75c worth. Take this home, and add to it ¼ pint of hot water and 4 oz. of moist granulated sugar; stir until dissolved. Take one tablespoonful four times a day.

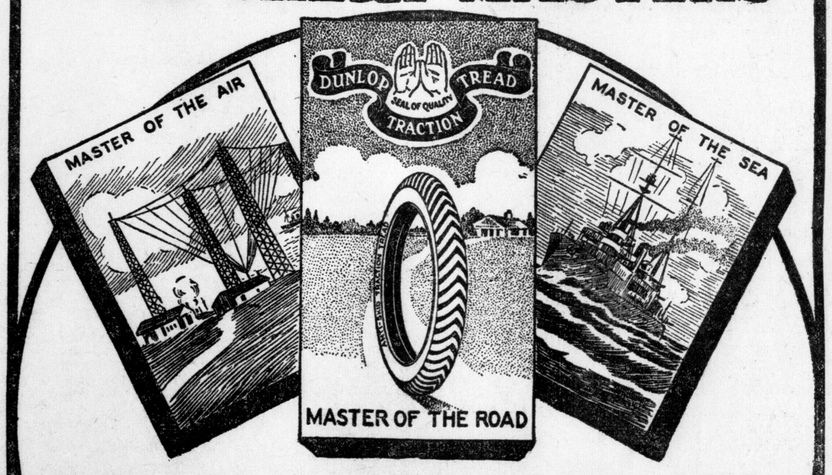

The first dose promptly ends the most distressing head noise, headaches, dullness, cloudy thinking, etc., while the hearing rapidly returns as the system is invigorated by the tonic action of the treatment. Loss of smell and mucus dropping in the back of the throat are other symptoms that show the presence of catarrhal poison and which are quickly overcome by this efficacious treatment. Nearly ninety per cent of all ear troubles are directly caused by catarrh, therefore there are but few people whose hearing cannot be restored by this simple home treatment. Every person who is troubled with head noises, catarrhal deafness, or catarrh in any form, should give this prescription a trial. There is nothing better.

Important.—In ordering Parmint always specify that you want Double Strength; your druggist has it or he can get it for you; if not send 75c to the International Laboratories, 74 St. Antoine S., Montreal, P. Q., who make a specialty of it.—ad

THE GREAT MASTERS

The motor car could have gotten along without DUNLOP TRACTION TREAD —but not so well.

If DUNLOP TRACTION TREADS had not come into being, motorists would still be looking for protection from skidding; a tire that would never rim-cut; and that would adapt itself to every car, every load, because it had sixty-six cubic inches greater air capacity.

In the generality of causes, DUNLOP TRACTION TREAD has sold more cars than any other single source. Tires make or mar the pleasure of driving. A standardized safety-ensuring tire like DUNLOP TRACTION TREAD means auto prospects can be made to forget their anticipated fears about skidding, punctures, rim-cutting, and go ahead and buy the car.

Winnipeg, August 21.—Trading was quiet today, there being little or no speculative business. Prices were stronger. Liverpool cables being firmer than expected, and American markets also showing strength, causing a feeling that wheat would be worth more money. Opening prices in wheat were ¼c lower to ¾c higher, and the range to noon was ½c to 1⅝c higher.

Oats opened ¼c down, but advanced ⅝c later up to noon.

Prices here, while strong, did not advance to the same extent as in the southern markets. Wheat closed 1½c to 1⅝c higher for options.

The cash demand for wheat of all grades is good. Oats of the lower grades are also wanted. The wheat buyers are houses with eastern connections.

Cash grains closed:

Wheat—¼c to ½c lower, the prices being for new crop.

Oats—Unchanged to ½c higher.

Barley—Unchanged to 1c higher, and flax 5c to 5½c lower.

Inspections — Thursday, 90 cars, against 90 last year. In sight today, 75 cars. Fifty-two cars new wheat were inspected today.

POSTAL FORCE DOES NOT LEAVE TODAY

Orders To Proceed With Seventh Men Cancelled at Last Moment.

Last-minute orders from military headquarters at Ottawa cancelled the entraining of the First Division Postal Corps with the Seventh Regiment volunteers this morning.

Yesterday the instructions were received that the corps was to prepare to leave with the London contingent entraining today at 11 o'clock at the Grand Trunk station.

Accordingly, the men made all arrangements to leave the city today. Cancellation orders stated that the corps was not to leave today, as was intended, but to hold itself in readiness for departure for Valcartier some time next week.

The corps will be fifteen strong and under the command of Lieut. Kenneth A. Murray. Five Londoners will be in the corps.

They are—T. H. Murray, W. Bowler, of the inspector's office staff; D. V. McPherson and Lieut. K. A. Murray, railway mail clerks, and F. Taggie, of the general staff.

The other ten men are from various parts of Western Ontario.

The corps will be with the London contingent at Valcartier, but it is not definitely known to what regiments they will be assigned when the Canadian troops embark for England.

The selection of one-third of the corps from the postoffice staff in this city is declared as high treason to the local branch of the service.

Indefinite Sentence.

William Baird, late of St. Thomas, was given not less than three months and not more than two years, less a day, in the Ontario reformatory, for stealing whiskey from a car in the G. T. R. yards. Special Officer Hughes arrested him on August 12.

Sergeant Gets Pinned.

Miss Gertrude Miller and Mrs. Mary Smith, both colored, had a fight over a pin and some clothes. After much evidence Police Magistrate Judd handed over the pin to Sergt. Birrell to keep for a week, while the women are trying to settle the case to their own satisfaction.

Andrew Thompson will pay $10 or 21 days for the privilege of being drunk.

The usual grist of first-timers was let go.

Charles Hadley was drunk. Five dollars or ten days.

Busy Summer.

The two youngsters, who have spent the summer stealing bicycles and who appeared earlier in the week, were allowed out on bail for two months, providing that the "bikes" they stole are returned to their owners. The boys gathered in a dozen wheels in the course of their operations.

THE RED CROSS FUND

Contributions Are Quickly Coming to the $2,000 Mark.

The Red Cross Society contributions are well on the way to the two-thousand mark. The work is a world-wide one and is well worthy of support.

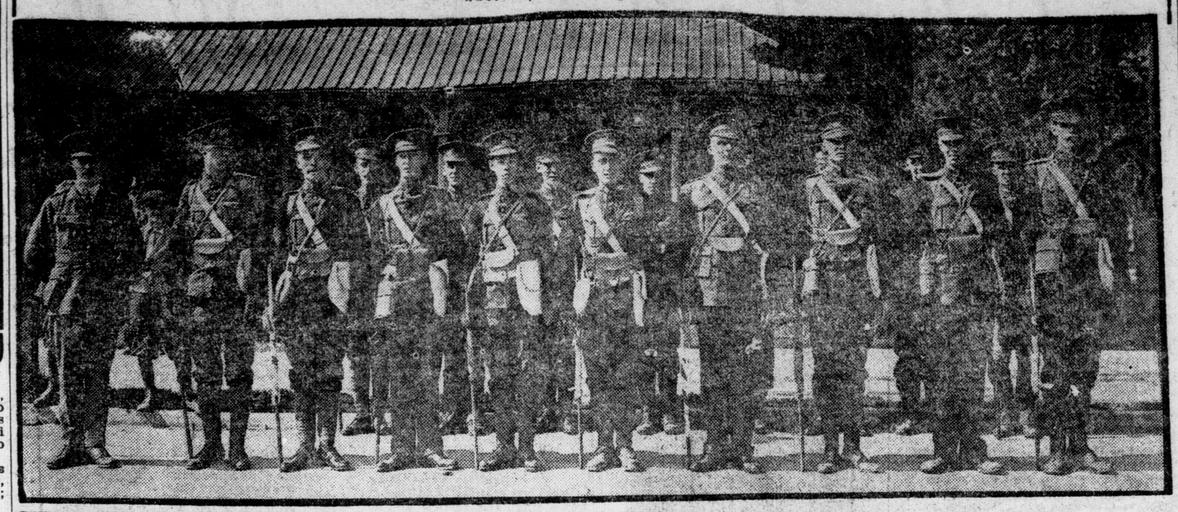

Now that the Seventh Regiment is off to the front the effects of the war are being brought right to the doors of everyone in the city. The Red Cross Society provides for the wounded soldiers at the front. Help to provide for wounded soldiers by making a small contribution.

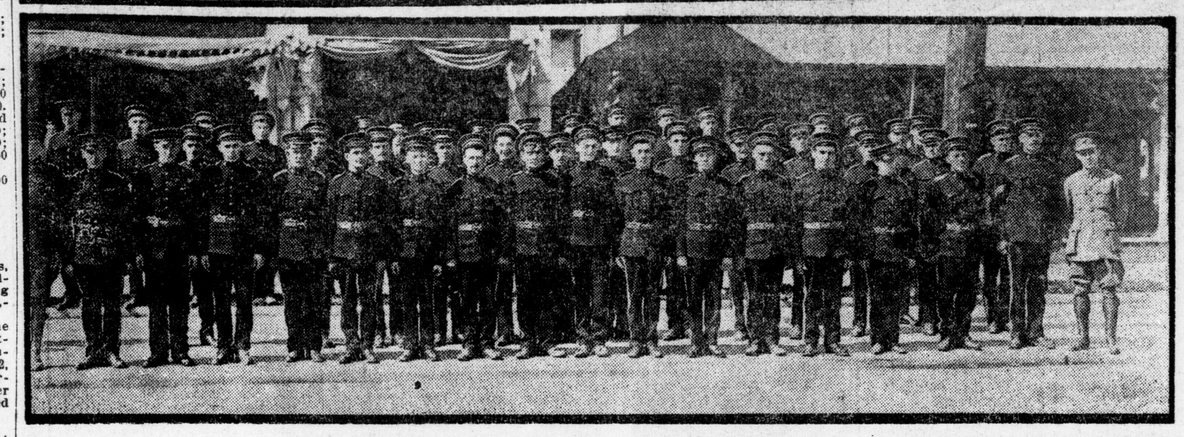

The fund up to the present is as follows:

Previously acknowledged	$1,475.90
Lady Beck	100.00
Mrs. T. Bryan	2.00
Miss M. E. Bryan	1.00
Miss C. M. Jessery	5.00

SPECIAL PRAYERS WILL BE USED IN CHURCHES

Bishop Williams Submits Selection to Diocesan Clergy.

Bishop Williams has selected special prayers for use in the churches of the Diocese of Huron during the war.

The prayers and the accompanying letter to the diocesan clergy follow:

To the Clergy of the Diocese of Huron:

Dear Brethren,—I hereby submit three prayers to be used in the public services of the church during the war forced upon our Empire.

The first to be used Sunday, followed by one or both of the others, at the discretion of the minister. They should be used immediately after the collect for the King in the communion office, or after the collect for the royal family in morning and evening prayer.

O Lord God of Hosts, stretch forth, we pray Thee, Thine almighty arm to strengthen and protect the sailors and soldiers of our King in every peril, both of sea and land; shelter them in the day of battle, and in the time of peace keep them safe from all evil; endue them ever with loyalty and courage; and grant that in all things they may serve as seeing Thee who art invisible; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

O Almighty God, King of Kings, and governor of all things, whose power no creature is able to resist, to whom it belongeth justly to punish sinners, and to be merciful to them that truly repent; save and deliver us, we humbly beseech Thee, from the hands of our enemies; that we, being armed with Thy defence, may be preserved evermore from all perils, to glorify Thee, who art the only giver of all victory; through the merits of Thy only Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

O most powerful and glorious Lord God, the Lord of Hosts, that rulest and commandest all things; Thou sittest in the throne judging right and therefore we make our address to Thy Divine Majesty in this our necessity, that Thou wouldst take the cause into Thine own hand, and judge between us and our enemies. Stir up Thy strength, O Lord, and come and help us; for Thou givest not always the battle to the strong, but canst save by many or by few. O let not our sins now cry against us for vengeance; but hear us Thy poor servants begging mercy, and imploring Thy help, and that Thou wouldst be a defence unto us against the face of the enemy. Make it appear that Thou art Savior and mighty Deliverer, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Believe me yours faithfully in Christ.
DAVID HURON.

MINARD'S LINIMENT USED BY PHYSICIANS.

NO WORD FROM LONDON TEACHER SINCE JULY 26

Miss E. Tarrey, 559 Colborne Street, Is Somewhere in Europe.

Mr. and Mrs. George Tarrey, of 559 Colborne street, are greatly concerned for the safety of their daughter, Miss E. Tarrey, a teacher in Lorne Avenue School, who left the New Westminster Palace Hotel in London, England, on July 26 to begin a tour of the continent, and since when her relatives have received no communication from her.

Miss Tarrey was accompanied by Miss C. Sparling of Wingham, formerly a teacher in the London Conservatory of Music. They had just completed a tour of England, Ireland and Scotland, and Miss Tarrey, writing July 26, said that she was going to Holland, but made no reference to the prospect of trouble on the continent. From Holland she intended going to Antwerp, thence to Switzerland, thence to Venice, Rome and Paris, leaving London for home about Aug. 23.

Miss Tarrey's relatives believe that she is still within the war zone and fear that she may be suffering hardship or inconvenience, as she had converted all her traveling funds into $10 express orders.

Mrs. W. Smithson, of 619 Waterloo street, and Mrs. Charles Turner, of Maitland street, are sisters of Miss Tarrey.

ITALIANS OPPOSE HELPING GERMANY

Every District Replies to Circular That People Do Not Want War On That Side.

New York, Aug. 22.—A cable from Rome to the Tribune says:

"Signor Salandria, the prime minister of Italy, has issued a circular to all the 69 prefects throughout Italy, requesting them to support the opinion in their respective districts on the attitude to be followed by Italy in the present crisis. The answer has now been received and in every case the prefect replied that the people were opposed to war on behalf of Austria and Germany."

RIDICULOUS THREAT BY GERMAN PRESS

Says That Revolution Will Be Stirred Up in British Lands Because of Japan Joining.

[Canadian Press.]

London, Aug. 22.—9:30 a.m.—A dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company from Rome says that, according to a message from Berlin, the German press is indignant at Great Britain's acceptance of Japanese support.

The leading papers declare that Germany will retaliate by stirring up an Islamitic revolution in India, Egypt, Tunis, Algeria, and the Sudan, which will quickly bring England and France to terms.

DROWNED MAN IS NOT WILLIAM GRAHAM

CHATHAM, Aug. 21.—It has been discovered that the remains of the man drowned in the river a short time ago are not those of William Graham, of Montreal, a marine fireman. The remains of the unidentified man were kept for several weeks at Jahnke & Hinnegan's morgue, and were buried only last week. He came to this city and was known here only a day when the accident occurred. None of the men whom he met in Chatham could remember his name. A relative of William Graham of Montreal who has been missing for some time, read of the incident in the papers and sent for a photograph of the deceased. The photo was taken and the answer came back to Chef of Police Groves today that the drowned man was not William Graham.

DUM-DUM BULLETS FOUND IN FRENCH

Powers Are Informed That Germans Are Using Ammunition Forbidden by the Hague Convention.

[Canadian Press.]

Paris, Aug. 22—12:10 p.m.—The Government today calls the attention of the powers which signed The Hague convention to its report that on August 10, following an engagement, a French army surgeon found five dum-dum bullets on the road to Munster, in Alsace. These bullets were in a rifle clip, and were turned over to the French commanding general.

Other dum-dum bullets, taken from the bodies of French soldiers killed in battle, have been forwarded to the minister of war.

JAPANESE CRUISER OFF SAN FRANCISCO

Waiting Orders After Having Plates Cleared of Barnacles.

[Canadian Press.]

San Francisco, Aug. 22.—After 24 hours in dry dock, where her plates were freed of barnacles, the Japanese cruiser Idzumo was floated out today and dropped anchor in the stream, to await orders.

It is deemed probable in marine circles that should war be declared between Germany and Japan, the first duty of the Idzumo would be to convoy the Japanese liner Shinyo Maru out of the harbor on Monday.

The German steamer Mazatlan, which was refused clearance papers by Collector of the Port Davis, still lies in the stream under the guns of the warships.

HELD SPECIAL MASS IN HONOR OF POPE

[Special to The Advertiser.]

BLYTH, Aug. 21.—Rev. Fr. Hogan, incumbent of St. Michael's Church here, held holy mass for the repose of the Pope's soul in the church here Thursday night and Friday.

The town council is having the cement sidewalk for a few yards on the front street torn up and replaced with a new one. The top of the blocks had overheated during a fire a number of years ago and the water going on them while they were in that state had spoiled them.

There has been a surplus of rain the last few days and the grain which is still in the fields has been so badly soaked that it will be some days before drawing operations start again.

The Indians who are now here employed in the pulling of the flax are getting along very well. The crop is a heavy one and will keep them at work longer than usual.

The local women are busy collecting money for the hospital ship to be sent by Canada to the seat of war. The Women's Institute held a meeting and decided to send $50, and collectors are now out to secure donation.

Premier Asquith Flung Back Infamous Offer of German Kaiser; How the Latter Tried to Buy Off the British

Great Britain's Prime Minister Shows That His Government Made Every Effort Possible to Avoid a War and Clearly Demonstrates That the Blame Rests On the Shoulders of the Kaiser---Bonar Law, Leader of the Opposition, Pledges His Party to Support Government, All Parties Facing the Common Peril Together

The Advertiser today gives to its readers the detailed report of Premier Asquith's speech in the British House of Commons following the declaration of war with Germany. The report holds a special interest, as it sheds light on the temper of the speaker and on the spirit of the British people as a whole. Mr. Asquith showed himself equal to the unusual and great occasion. Throughout his speech there is no boasting or appeal to unworthy passion. He recognized the gravity of the step he had taken, and presented the facts in the most lucid manner possible. It will be readily seen that Premier Asquith did not enter on the war lightly. Two things are clear, that the British Government did everything possible to avert war, and that the Kaiser, had he so desired, could have preserved peace. The report is taken from the Manchester Guardian.

The House of Commons yesterday, in committee of supply, voted 100 millions for war purposes. The resolution was moved by the Prime Minister in a speech in which he reviewed the events which led up to the declaration of war against Germany, and declared that in this war, which had been forced upon us, we were fighting to fulfil a solemn international obligation and to vindicate the principle that small nationalities were not to be crushed, in defiance of international good faith, by the arbitrary will of a strong and overmastering power.

The House went into committee of supply, Mr. Whitney in the chair, and on the motion for a vote of credit for a sum not exceeding £100,000,000 for expenses which might be incurred during the year ending March 31, 1915, arising out of the existence of a state of war.

Mr. Asquith, who was received with general cheers, said: In asking the House to agree to the resolution which you have just read from the chair I do not propose, because I do not think it is in any way necessary, again to traverse the ground which was covered by my right honorable friend the Foreign Secretary two or three nights ago. He stated—I do not think any of the statements he made are capable of answer, and they certainly have not yet been answered—(cheers),—the grounds upon which, with the utmost reluctance and with infinite regret, his majesty's Government have been compelled to put this country in a state of war with what for many years, and indeed many generations past, has been a friendly power. (Hear, hear.) But, sir, the papers which have since been presented to Parliament and are now in the hands of members will, I think, show how strenuous, how unremitting, how persistent, even when the last glimmer of hope seemed to have faded away, were the efforts of my right honorable friend—(cheers)—to secure for Europe an honorable and lasting peace. (Cheers.)

Everyone knows that in the great crisis which occurred last year in the east of Europe it was largely, if not mainly, by the acknowledgment of all Europe, due to the steps taken by my right honorable friend that the area of the conflict was limited and that so far as the great powers were concerned peace was maintained. If his efforts on this occasion unhappily have been less successful, I am certain that this House and the country and, I will add, posterity and history—(hear, hear),—will accord to him what is after all the best tribute that can be paid any statesman, that he has never derogated for an instant or by an inch the honor and interest of his own country, and has striven, as few men have striven, to maintain that which is the greatest interest of all countries—universal peace. (Cheers.)

What Was Offered To Buy Our Neutrality.

But, sir, these papers which are now in the hands of members show something more than that. (Cheers.) They show what were the terms which were offered to us—(cheers)—in exchange for our neutrality. (Cheers.) I trust not only the members of this House, but all our fellow-subjects everywhere will read the communications—will read, learn, and mark them—(cheers)—which passed only a week ago today between Berlin and London upon this subject. The terms upon which it was sought to buy our neutrality—(cheers)—are contained in the communication made by the German Chancellor to Sir Edward Goschen on July 29—No. 85 of the published papers. I think I must refer to them for a moment. (Cheers.) After referring to the state of affairs between Austria and Russia, Sir Edward Goschen goes on:

"He (the German Chancellor) then proceeded to make the following strong bid for British neutrality. He said that it was clear, so far as he was able to judge the main principle which governed British policy, that Great Britain would never stand by and allow France to be crushed in any conflict there might be. That, however, was not the object at which Germany aimed. Provided that neutrality of Great Britain were certain, every assurance would be given to the British Government that the Imperial Government aimed at no territorial acquisition at the expense of France should they prove victorious in any war that might ensue."

Sir Edward Goschen (Mr. Asquith went on) proceeded to put a very pertinent question: "I questioned his excellency about the French colonies." What do the French colonies mean? (said Mr. Asquith). They mean every part of the dominions and possessions of France outside the geographical area of Europe. "He (the German Chancellor) said he was unable to give a similar undertaking in that respect." (Cheers and laughter.)

A Crucial Consideration.

Let me come to what in this matter, to my mind, speaking for myself personally, has always been a crucial and almost governing consideration—namely, the position of the small states. (Loud cheers.) He (the German Chancellor) said:

"As regards Holland, so long as Germany's adversaries respected the integrity and neutrality of the Netherlands, Germany was ready to give his majesty's Government an assurance that she would do likewise."

Then we come to Belgium:

"It depended upon the action of France what operations Germany might be forced to enter upon in Belgium, but when the war was over Belgian integrity would be respected if she had not decided against Germany."

Let the House observe the distinction between these two cases. In regard to Holland not only independence and integrity, but neutrality; but in regard to Belgium no mention of neutrality at all, but an assurance that after the war came to an end the integrity of Belgium would be respected. Then his excellency added that:

"Ever since he had been Chancellor the object of his policy had been to bring about an understanding with England. He trusted that these assurances might form the basis of that understanding which he so much desired."

"This Infamous Proposal."

What does that amount to? Let me just ask the House. I do so not with the object of inflaming passion, and certainly not with the object of exciting feeling against Germany, but I do so to vindicate and make clear the position of the British Government and of Great Britain in this matter. What did that proposal amount to? In the first place, it meant this—that behind the back of France, which was not to be made a party to these communications at all, we should have given, if we had assented to them, free license to Germany to annex in the event of a successful war the whole of the extra-European dominions and possessions of France. What did it mean as regards Belgium? To Belgium when she addressed, as she did, address in these last days, her moving appeal to us to fulfil our solemn guarantee of her neutrality, what reply should we have given? What reply could we have given to that Belgian appeal? We should have been obliged to say that without her knowledge we had bartered away to the power that was threatening her our obligation to keep our plighted word. (Loud and prolonged cheers.)

Sir, the House has read and the country has read in the course of the last few hours the most pathetic address by the King of the Belgians to his people. (Cheers.) I do not envy the man who could read that appeal with unmoved heart. (Cheers.) The Belgians are fighting; they are losing their lives. (Loud cheers.) What would have been the position of Great Britain today in the face of that spectacle if we had assented to this infamous proposal? (Loud and prolonged cheers.)

The Price of Betrayal.

Yes, and what were we to get in return? For the betrayal of our friends and the dishonor of our obligations, what were we to get in return? We were to get a promise—nothing more—(laughter)—as to what Germany would do in certain eventualities—a promise, be it observed (I am sorry to have to say it, but it must be put upon record), a promise given by a power which was at that very moment announcing its intention to violate its own treaty obligations—(cheers)—and inviting us to do the same. I can only say if we had even dallied or temporized with such an offer, we as a Government should have covered ourselves with dishonor. (Cheers.) We should have betrayed the interests of this country of which we are the trustees. (Cheers.)

I am glad to turn to the reply which my right honorable friend made, and from which I will read to the House one or two of the more salient passages, because this document 101 put on record a week ago the attitude of the British Government and, as I believe, of the British people. My right honorable friend says:

"His majesty's Government cannot for a moment entertain the Chancellor's proposal that they should bind themselves to neutrality on such terms. What he asks us in effect is to engage to stand by while French colonies are taken and France is beaten so long as Germany does not take French territory as distinct from the colonies. From the material point of view (My right honorable friend, as he always does, uses very temperate language) such a proposal is unacceptable, for France, without further territory in Europe being taken from her, could be so crushed as to lose her position as a great power and become subordinate to German policy."

That is the material aspect. He proceeds:

"Altogether apart from that, it would be a disgrace to us to make this bargain with Germany at the expense of France—a disgrace from which the good name of this country would never recover. (Loud cheers.) The Chancellor also in effect asks us to bargain away whatever obligations or interests we have as regards the neutrality of Belgium. We could not entertain that bargain either."

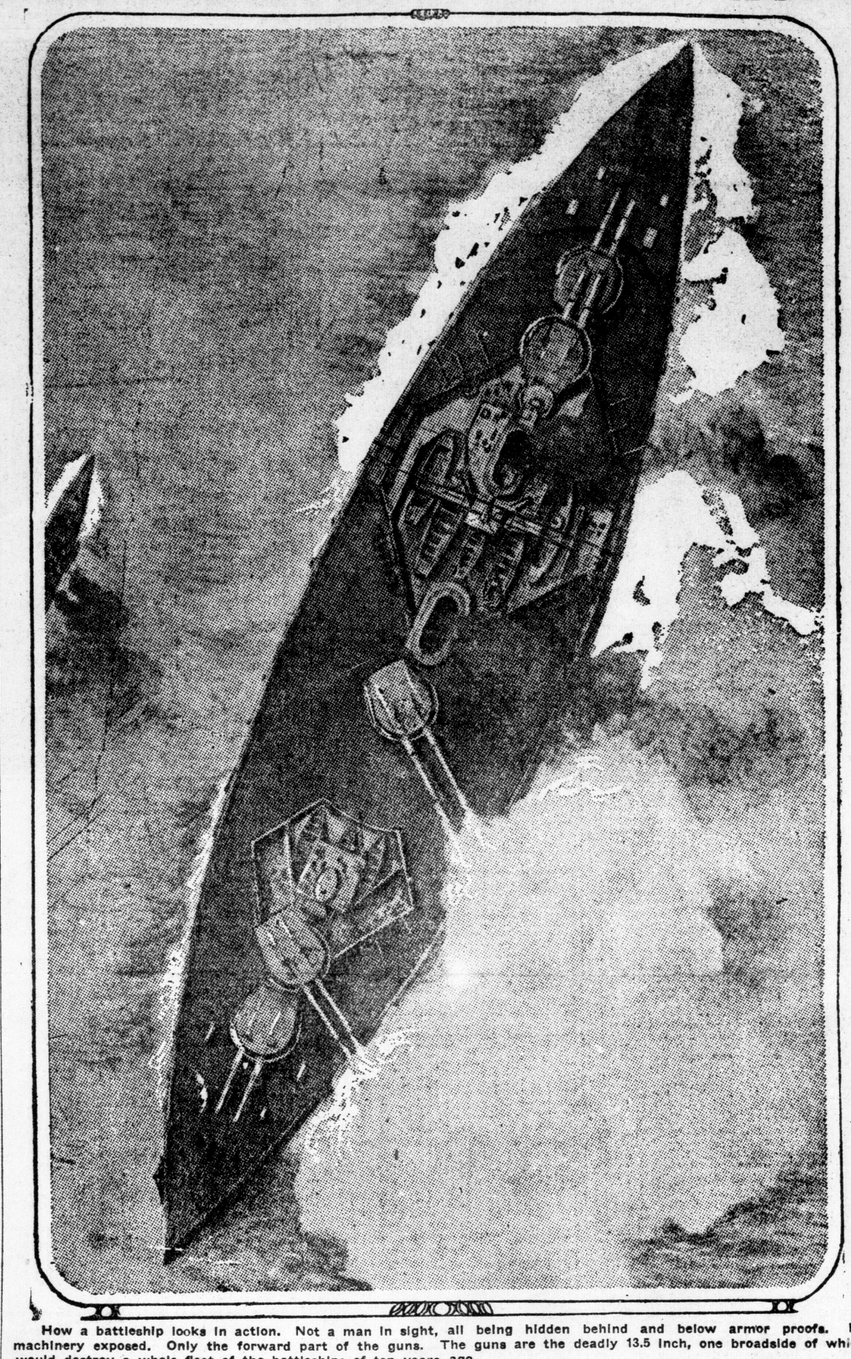

He then says in these circumstances "we must preserve our full freedom to act as circumstances may seem to us to require."

The One Way of Preserving Good Relations.

I think in the circumstances the House will appreciate—I trust it will admire—the self-restraint of my right honorable friend. (Hear, hear.) He (Sir E. Grey) then said:

"The one way of maintaining the good relations between England and Germany is that we should continue to work together to preserve the peace of Europe. For that object his majesty's Government will work with all sincerity and goodwill. If the peace of Europe can be preserved and the present crisis safely passed, my own endeavor will be to promote some arrangement to which Germany could be a party by which she could be assured that no aggressive or hostile policy would be pursued against her or her allies by France, Russia, and ourselves jointly or separately. I have desired this, and worked for it as far as I could through the last Balkan crisis ('No statement,' commented Mr. Asquith, "was ever more true"), and Germany having a corresponding object, our relations sensibly improved. The idea has hitherto been too Utopian to form the subject of definite proposals, but if this present crisis, so much more acute than any that Europe has gone through for generations, be safely passed, I am hopeful that the relief and reaction which will follow may make possible some more definite rapprochement between the powers than has been possible hitherto. (Cheers.)"

War Forced Upon Us.

That document, in my opinion, states clearly in temperate and dignified language the attitude of this country. (Cheers.) Can anyone who reads it and who realizes and appreciates the tone of obvious sincerity and earnestness which underlies it, can anyone honestly bring against the Government of this country the charge that in spite of great provocation — for I regard the proposals made to us as proposals we might have thrown aside without consideration and almost without answer—(cheers),—can anyone doubt that in spite of great provocation my right honorable friend, who had already earned the title—and no one ever more deserved it—of the peacemaker of Europe—(cheers),—persisted to the very last moment of the last hour in that great and beneficent but unhappily frustrated purpose? (Cheers.) I am entitled to say, and I do say on behalf of this country—I speak not for a party, but for the country as a whole—(cheers)—we made every effort that a Government could possibly make for peace.

This war has been forced upon us—(cheers),—and what is it that we are fighting for? No one knows better than the members of the Government the terrible and incalculable sufferings, economic, social, personal, political, which war, especially war between the great powers of the world, must entail. There is not a man among us sitting on this bench in these trying days—more trying perhaps than any body of statesmen for a hundred years has had to pass through—there is not a man among us who has not during the whole of that time had clearly before his vision the almost infinite suffering which war even in a just cause must bring about not only to us who are for the moment living in this country and in the other countries of the world, but to posterity and to the whole prospect of European civilization. Every step we take with that vision before our eyes and with a sense of responsibility which it is impossible to describe.

What We Are Fighting For.

Unhappily, if in spite of all our efforts to keep the peace, and with that full and overpowering consciousness of the result of the issue to be decided in favor of war, we have thought it to be the duty, as well as the interest of this country, to go to war, the House may be well assured it was because we believe, and I am certain the country will believe, we are unsheathing our sword in a just cause. If I am asked what we are fighting for, I can reply in two sentences. In the first place, to fulfil a solemn international obligation—an obligation which if it had been entered into between private persons in the ordinary concerns of life would have been regarded as an obligation, not only of law but of honor, which no self-respecting man could possibly have repudiated. I say, secondly, we are fighting to vindicate the principle—In these days when material force sometimes seems to be the dominant influence and factor in the development of mankind—we are fighting to vindicate the principle that small nationalities are not to be crushed—(cheers)—in defiance of international good faith by the arbitrary will of a strong and overmastering power.

I do not believe any nation ever entered into a great controversy—and this is one of the greatest history will ever know—with a clearer conscience and stronger conviction that it is fighting not for aggression, not for the maintenance even of its own selfish interest, but in defence of principles the maintenance of which is vital to the civilization of the world. (Cheers.) If with a full conviction not only of the wisdom and justice, but of the obligation which lay upon us to challenge this great issue we are entering into the struggle, let us now make sure that all the resources not only of this United Kingdom but of the vast Empire, of which it is the centre, shall be thrown into the scale. (Cheers.)

Scope of the Vote.

It is that that object may be adequately secured that I am now about to ask from this committee—to make the very unusual demand upon it—to give the Government a vote of credit of £100,000,000. I am not going, and I am sure the committee do not wish it, into the technical distinction between votes of credit and supplementary estimates. There is a much higher point of view than that. If it were necessary I could justify upon purely technical grounds the course we propose to adopt, but I am not going to do so, because I think it would be foreign to the temper and disposition of the House. There is one thing I do call attention to—that is the title and heading of the bill. As a rule in the past votes of this kind have been taken simply for naval and military operations, but we have thought it right to ask the committee to give us its confidence in the extension of the traditional area of the votes of credit so that this money which we are asking them to allow us to expend may be applied not only for strictly naval and military operations, but to assist the food supplies, promote the continuance of trade, industry, business and communication, whether by means of insurance or indemnity against risk or otherwise, for the relief of distress and generally for all expenses arising out of the existence of a state of war. I believe the committee will agree with us that it was wise to extend the area of the vote of credit so as to include all the various matters. It gives the Government a free hand. Of course, the treasury will account for it, and any expenditure that takes place will be subject to the approval of the House. I think it would be a great pity, in fact, a great disaster, if in a crisis of this magnitude we were not enabled to make provision—provision far more needed now than it was under the simpler conditions that prevailed in the old days—for all the various ramifications and developments of expenditure which the existence of a state of war between the great powers of Europe must entail on any one of them.

Lord Kitchener at the War Office.

I am asking also in my character of Secretary for War—a position which I held until this morning—for a supplementary estimate for men for the army. Perhaps the House will allow me for a moment just to say on that personal matter that I took upon myself the office of secretary for war under conditions upon which I need not go back, but which are fresh in the minds of everyone, in the hope and with the object that the condition of things in the army, which all of us deplored, might speedily be brought to an end and complete confidence re-established. I believe that is the case—in fact, I know it to be. There is no more loyal and united body, no body in which the spirit and habit of discipline are more deeply ingrained and cherished than in the British army. Glad as I should have been to continue the work of that office, and would have done so under normal conditions, it would not be fair to the army, it would not be just to the country, that any minister should divide his attention between that department and another—still less that the first minister of the crown, who should look into the affairs of all departments, and is ultimately responsible for the whole policy of the cabinet, should give, as he could only give, perfunctory attention to the affairs of our army in a great war.

I am very glad to say that a very distinguished soldier and administrator in the person of Lord Kitchener, with the great public spirit and patriotism that everyone would expect from him, has, at my request, stepped into the breach. (Cheers.) Lord Kitchener, as everyone knows, is not a politician. His association with the Government as a member of the cabinet for this purpose must not be taken as in any way identifying him with any set of political opinions. He has at a great public emergency responded to a great call, and I am certain he will have with him in the discharge of one of the most arduous tasks that has ever fallen upon a minister the complete confidence of all parties and all opinions. (Cheers.)

500,000 More Men.

I am asking on his behalf for the army power to increase the number of men of all ranks, in addition to the number already voted, by no less than 500,000. (Cheers.) I am certain the committee will not refuse its sanction, for we are encouraged to ask for it not only by our own sense of the gravity and the necessities of the case, but by the knowledge that India is prepared to send us certainly two divisions, and that every one of our self-governing dominions spontaneously and unasked has already tendered to the utmost limits of its possibilities both in men and in money every help it can afford to the Empire in a moment of need. (Cheers.) The mother country must set the example while she responds with gratitude and affection to those filial overtures from the outlying members of her family.

Sir, I will say no more; this is not an occasion for controversial discussion. In all that I have said I believe I have not gone beyond, either in the statement of our case or in my general description of the provision we think it necessary to make, the strict bounds of truth. It is not my purpose—it is not the purpose of any patriotic man—to inflame feeling, to indulge in rhetoric to excite international animosities. The occasion is far too grave for that. We have a great duty to perform, we have a great trust to fulfil, and confidently we believe that Parliament and the country will enable us to do it. (Loud cheers.)

THE UNIONIST LEADER.

Mr. Bonar Law (leader of the Opposition)—There are two things which I desire to impress upon the House. The first is that we have dreaded war and have longed for peace as strongly as any member of this House, and the second is that in our belief we are in a state of war against our will and that we, as a nation, have done everything in our power to prevent such a condition of things arising. When this crisis first arose I confess I was one of those who had the impulse to hope that even though a European conflagration took place we might be able to stay out of it. I had that hope strongly, but in a short time I became convinced of this, that into this war we should inevitably be drawn and that it really was a question—and a question only—whether we should enter it honorably or be dragged into it with dishonor. (Cheers.)

Wickedness and Folly—But Not Britain's.

I remember that on the first occasion after the retirement of my right honorable friend (Mr. Balfour) when I had to speak on foreign affairs I made this statement, which perhaps is wrong, though I do not think so even now; I said that if ever war arose between Great Britain and Germany it would not be due to inevitable causes, for I do not believe in inevitable war, but that it would be due to human folly. It is due to human folly and to human wickedness. (Cheers.) But neither the folly nor the wickedness is here. (Cheers.)

What other course was open to us? It is quite true, as the Foreign Secretary explained to the House the other day, that we were under no formal obligation to take part in such a struggle, but every member of this House knows that the entente meant this in the mind of this Government and every other Government, that if any of the three powers were attacked aggressively the others would be expected to step in to give their aid. The question, therefore, to my mind was this: Was this war in any way provoked by those who will now be our allies? No one who has read the White Paper can hesitate to answer that question. I am not going to enter into it even as fully as the Prime Minister has done, but I would remind the House of this—that in this White Paper is contained a statement made by the German ambassador, I think, at Vienna, that Russia was not in a condition to go to war, and in the same letter are found these words: "As for Germany, she knew very well what she was about in backing up Austria-Hungary in this matter."

The Responsibility Berlin's.

Everyone for years has known that the key to peace or war lay in Berlin—(cheers),—and at this crisis no one doubts that Berlin if it had chosen could have prevented this terrible conflict. (Loud cheers.) I am afraid that the miscalculation which was made about Russia was made also about us. (Cheers.) The dispatch which the right honorable gentleman referred to is a dispatch of a nature which I at least believe would not have been addressed to Great Britain if it had been believed that our hands were free, and that we had the position which we had always held before. That at least is my belief.

Now, what does this mean? We are fighting, as the Prime Minister has said, for the honor—and with the honor is bound up always the interests — of our country. (Cheers.) But we are fighting also for the whole basis of the civilization for which we stand and for which Europe stands. (Cheers.) After referring to Germany's invasion of Belgium, Mr. Bonar Law added: This is no small struggle. It is the greatest perhaps that this country has ever engaged in, and the issue is uncertain. It is Napoleonism once again. (Cheers.) Thank heaven, so far as we know, there is no Napoleon. (Cheers and laughter.)

Mr. Law and the Manchester Guardian.

I am not going to say anything more about the causes of the war, for I do not desire to encourage controversy on this subject, but I should like to be allowed to say this. I read yesterday with real pleasure an article in a paper which does not generally commend itself to me—the Manchester Guardian. In that article it still held that the war ought not to have been entered upon, but it took this view, that that was a question for history; that now we are in it there is only one question for us, and that is to bring it to a successful issue. (Cheers.) I have felt sympathy far more than at any other time for the Prime Minister and for the Foreign Secretary. I can imagine nothing more terrible than that the Foreign Secretary should have the feeling that perhaps he has brought this country into an unnecessary war. No feeling could be worse. I can say this, that whether we are right or wrong—the whole House agrees with it, I am sure—that that is a burden which the right honorable gentleman can carry with a good conscience—(cheers)—and everyone can put up unhesitatingly this prayer—"May God defend the right." (Cheers.)

Now I should like, if I may, to pass another topic, and that is to consider the conditions under which this war is going to be carried on. I was pleased to hear the Prime Minister say the other day that he realized, as we all must realize, that in a country situated like ours the development of industry and the supply of food at home is just as much an operation of war as is the conduct of our armed forces in the field. (Cheers.) I am quite sure that there is no danger of a scarcity of food, and that the only danger is the fear of a scarcity of food. Every one of us must do what we can to impress upon the people of this country that there is no danger. (Cheers.) But remember that this war, unexpected by us, is not unexpected by our enemies, and I shall be greatly surprised if we do not find that at first on our trade routes there is a destruction of our property which might cause a panic. That is inevitable, I think, at the outset. Let us be prepared for it and let us realize that it has no bearing whatever on the ultimate course of the war. (Cheers.)

Danger of Taking Too Gloomy Trade Views.

As to the question of credit, I think the Government have taken the right course. After all, the question of credit really depends on what we believe is going to be the effect of this war on our trade and industry. I think there is a danger of our taking too gloomy a view, and by doing so bringing about the very state of things which we fear. (Hear, hear.) If we keep command of the seas, what is going to happen It all depends on that, but I have no fear. (Cheers.) Five-sixths of our production is employed in the home trade. Of course, if the population which supplies the one-sixth are thrown out of work that would react on the whole thing. But, after all, the total amount of our exports to all the European countries now at war is only a small part of our total exports. There is here no question of fiscal reform. We are far beyond that. Our total exports to all the countries now at war do not exceed our exports to India and Australia alone. Well, now, consider this. We shall have free trade, if the sea routes are maintained, with the colonies and with the whole of the American continent, and, unfortunately for them, both our allies and our enemies will not be competing with us in those markets. We have a right to believe not that trade will be good, but that it will be much more nearly normal than is generally believed in this country. (Cheers.)

Opposition's Co-operation.

There is only one thing more I wish to say. This is the affair of the nation. Everyone would desire to help. There will be a great deal of work to be done which cannot be done by the Government. I was glad that the Prime Minister asked the co-operation of my friends the members for West Birmingham and the Strand. They gladly gave it; but I am sure I speak not only for this bench but for the whole of our party when I say that the Government have only got to requisition any one of them—(Opposition cheers)—and we will serve them and our country to the best of our ability. (Cheers.)

This is to certify that I have used MINARD'S LINIMENT in my family for years, and consider it the best liniment on the market. I have found it excellent for horseflesh.

SOUR, UPSET STOMACHS FIXED IN FIVE MINUTES--PAPE'S DIAPEPSIN

Best for Indigestion, Gas, Heartburn and Dyspepsia —It's Great!

When your meals don't fit comfortably, or what you eat lies like a lump of lead in your stomach, or if you have heartburn, that is a sign of indigestion.

Get from your pharmacist a fifty-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and take a dose just as soon as you can. There will be no sour risings, no belching, no chunk of undigested food mixed with acid, no stomach gas or heartburn, fullness or heavy feeling in the stomach, nausea, debilitating headache, dizziness or intestinal griping. This will all go, and, besides, there will be no sour food left over in the stomach to poison your breath with nauseous odors.

Pape's Diapepsin is a certain cure for out-of-order stomachs, because it takes hold of your food and digests it just the same as if your stomach wasn't there.

Relief in five minutes from all stomach misery is waiting for you at any drug store.

These large 50-cent cases contain enough "Pape's Diapepsin" to keep the entire family free from stomach disorders and indigestion for many months. It belongs in your home.

The MILLION DOLLAR MYSTERY By HAROLD MAC GRATH

$10,000 FOR 100 WORDS

The publication of "The Million-Dollar Mystery" began Aug. 1 in The Advertiser. The story will run for twenty-two consecutive weeks in this paper. By an arrangement with the Thanhouser Film Company it has been made possible not only to read the story in this paper, but also to see it each week in the Advertiser district. For the solution of this mystery story $10,000 will be given.

CONDITIONS GOVERNING THE CONTEST.

The prize of $10,000 will be won by the man, woman, or child who writes the most acceptable solution of the mystery, from which the last two reels of motion picture drama will be made and the last two chapters of the story written by Harold MacGrath.

Solutions may be sent to the Thanhouser Film Company, either at Chicago or New York, two weeks after the last installment is published in this paper, Advertiser readers would have to submit their solutions on or before January 14.

A board of three judges will determine which of the many solutions received is the most acceptable. The judgment of this board will be absolute and final. Nothing of a literary nature will be considered in the decision, nor given any preference in the selection of the winner of the $10,000 prize. The last two reels, which will give the most acceptable solution to the mystery, will be presented in the theatres having this feature as soon as it is practical to produce same. The story corresponding to three motion pictures will appear in The Advertiser coincidentally, or as soon after the appearance of the pictures of the winner, his or her home, and other interesting features. It is understood that the newspapers, so far as practical, in printing the last two chapters of the story by Harold MacGrath, will also show a picture of the successful contestant.

Solutions to the mystery must not be more than 100 words long. Here are some questions to be kept in mind in connection with the mystery as an aid to a solution:

No. 1—What becomes of the millionaire?

No. 2—What Becomes of the $1,000,000?

No. 3—Whom does Florence marry?

No. 4—What becomes of the Russian countess?

Nobody connected either directly or indirectly with "The Million-Dollar Mystery" will be considered as a contestant.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS

Stanley Hargreave, millionaire, after a miraculous escape from the den of the gang of brilliant thieves known as the Black Hundred, lives the life of a recluse for eighteen years. Hargreave one night enters a Broadway restaurant and there comes face to face with the gang's leader, Braine.

After the meeting, during which neither man apparently recognizes the other, Hargreave hurries to his magnificent Riverdale home and lays plans for making his escape from the country. He writes a letter to the girls' school in New Jersey where eighteen years before he had mysteriously left on the doorstep his baby daughter, Florence Gray. He also pays a visit to the hangar of a daredevil aviator.

Braine and members of his band surround Hargreave's home at night, but as they enter the house the watchers outside see the balloon leave the roof. The safe is found empty—the million which Hargreave was known to have drawn that day was gone. Then some one announced the balloon had been punctured and dropped into the sea.

Florence arrives from the girls' school. Princess Olga, Braine's companion, visits her and claims to be a relative. Two bogus detectives call, but their plot is foiled by Norton, a newspaperman.

By bribing the captain of the Orient Norton lays a trap for Braine and his gang. Princess Olga also visits the Orient's captain and she easily falls into the reporter's snare. The plan proves abortive through Braine's good luck and only hirelings fall into the hands of the police.

CHAPTER IV.

"She has never seen a scrap of it. All that Miss Farlow ever received was money. The original note left on the doorstep with Florence has been lost. Trust me to make all these inquiries."

"Another good point. I'm going to after dinner, a taxicab will await her just around the corner. Grange is the best man I can think of. He's an artist when it comes to playing the old man parts."

"Not, too old, remember. Hargreave isn't over 45."

she could drop to sleep like that. Very stretch out here on the divan and snooze for a while. Had a devil of a time last night."

"When shall I wake you?"

"At 6. We'll have an early dinner sent in. I want to keep out of everybody's way. By-by!"

In less than three minutes he was sound asleep. The woman gazed down at him in wonder and envy. If only she could drop to sleep like that. Very softly she pressed her lips to his hair.

At 11 o'clock the following night the hall light in the Hargreave house was turned off and the whole interior became dark. A shadow crept through the lilac bushes without any more sound than a cat would have made. Florence's window was open, as the arch-conspirator had expected it would be. With a small string and stone as a sling he sent the letter whirling skilfully through the air. It sailed into the girl's room. The man below heard no sound of the stone hitting anything, and concluded that it had struck the bed.

He waited patiently. Presently a wavering light could be distinguished over the sill of the window. The girl was awake and had lit the cande. This knowledge was sufficient for his need. The tragic letter would do the rest, that is, if the girl came from the same pattern as her father and mother—strong willed and adventurous.

He tiptoed back to the lilacs, when a noise sent him close to the ground. Half a dozen feet away he saw a shadow creeping along toward the front door. Presently the shadow stood up as if listening. He stooped and ran lightly to the steps, up these to the door, which he hugged.

Who was this? wondered Braine. Patiently he waited, arranging his posture so that he could keep a lookout at the door. By and by the door opened cautiously. A man, holding a candle, appeared. Braine vaguely recognized Olga's description of the butler. The man on the veranda suddenly blew out the light.

Braine could hear the low murmur of voices, but nothing more. The conversation lasted scarcely a minute. The door closed and the man ran down the steps, across the lawn, with Braine close at his heels.

"Just a moment, Mr. Hargreave," he called ironically; "just a moment!"

The man he addressed as Hargreave turned with lightning rapidity and struck. The blow caught Braine above the ear, knocking him flat. When he regained his feet the rumble of a motor told him the rest of the story.

* * *

By the dim light of her bedroom candle Florence read the note which had found entrance so strangely and mysteriously into her room. Her father! He lived, he needed her! Alive, but in dread peril, and only she could save him! She leaped to fly to him at once, then and there. How could she wait till tomorrow night at 8? Immediately she began to plan how to circumvent the watchful Jones and the careful Susan. Her father! She slept no more that night.

"My Darling Daughter—I must see you. Come at 8 o'clock tomorrow night to 78 Grove street, third floor. Confide in no one, or you seal my death warrant.

"Your unhappy
"FATHER."

What child would refuse to obey a summons like this?

A light tap on the door startled her.

"Is anything the matter?" asked the mild voice of Jones.

"No. I got up to get a drink of water."

She heard the footsteps die away down the corridor. She thrust the letter into the pocket of her dress, which lay neatly folded on the chair at the foot of the bed, then climbed back into the bed itself. She must not tell even Mr. Norton.

Was the child spinning a romance over the first young man she had ever met? In her heart of hearts she did not know.

Her father!

It was all so terribly simple, to match a woman's mind against a child's. Both Norton and the sober Jones had explicitly warned her never to go anywhere, receive telephone calls, or letters, without first consulting one or the other of them. And now she had planned to deceive them with all the cunning of her sex.

The next morning at breakfast there was nothing unusual either in her appearance or manners. Under the shrewd scrutiny of Jones she was just her everyday self, a fine bit of acting for one who had not yet seen the stage. But it is born in woman to act, as it born in man to fight, and Florence was no exception to the rule.

She was going to save her father.

She read with Susan, played the piano, sewed a little, laughed, hummed, and did a thousand and one things young girls do when they have the deception of their elders in view.

All day long Jones went about like an old hound with his nose to the wind. There was something in the air; but he could not tell what it was. Somehow or other no matter which room Florence went into, there was Jones within earshot. And she dared not show the least impatience or restiveness. It was a large order for so young a girl, but she filled it.

She rather expected that the reporter would appear some time during the afternoon; and sure enough he did. He could no more resist the desire to see and talk to her than he could resist breathing. There was no use denying it; the world had suddenly turned at a new angle, presenting a new face, a roseate vision. It rather subdued his easy banter.

"What news?" she asked.

"None," rather despondently. "I'm sorry. I had hoped by this time to get somewhere. But it appears that I can't get any further than this house."

She did not ask him what he meant by that.

"Shall I play something for you?" she said.

"Please."

He drew a chair beside the piano and watched her fingers, white as the ivory keys, flutter up and down the board. She played Chopin for him, Mendelssohn, Grieg, and Chaminade; and she played them in a surprisingly scholarly fashion. He had expected the usual schoolgirl choice and execution; Titania, the Moonlight Sonata (which not half a dozen great pianists ever played correctly), Monastery Bells, and the like. He had prepared to make a martyr of himself; instead, he was distinctly and delightfully entertained.

"You don't," he said whimsically, when she finally stopped, "you don't, by any chance, know 'The Maiden's Prayer?'"

She laughed. This piece was a standing joke at school.

"I have never played it. It may, however, be in the music cabinet. Would you like to hear it?" mischievously.

"Heaven forfend!" he murmured, raising his hands.

All the while the letter burned against her heart; and the smile on her face and the gayety on her tongue were forced. "Confide in no one," she repeated mentally, "or you seal my death warrant."

"Why do you shake your head like that?" he asked.

"Did I shake my head?" Her heart fluttered wildly. "I was not conscious of it."

"Are you going to keep your promise?"

"What promise?"

"Never to leave this house without Jones or myself being with you."

"I couldn't if I wanted to. I'll wager Jones is out there in the hall this minute. I know; it is all for my sake. But it bothers me."

Jones was indeed in the hall; and when he sensed the petulance in her voice, his shoulders sank despondently and he sighed deeply if silently.

At quarter to 8 Florence, being alone for a minute, set fire to a veil and stuffed it down the register.

"Jones," she called excitedly, "I smell something burning!"

Jones dashed into the room, sniffed, and dashed out again, heading for the cellar door. His first thought was naturally that the devils incarnate had set fire to the house. When he returned, having, of course, discovered no fire, he found Florence gone. He rushed into the hall. Her hat was missing. He made for the hall door with a speed which seemed incredible to the bewildered Susan's eyes. Out into the street, up and down which he looked. Far away he discovered a dwindling taxicab. The child was gone.

In the house Susan was answering the telephone, talking incoherently.

"Who is it?" Jones whispered, his lips white and dry.

"The princess. . . ." began Susan. He took the receiver from her roughly.

"Hello! Who is it?"

"This is Olga Perigoff. Is Florence there?"

"No, madam. She has just stepped out for a moment. Shall I tell her to call you when she returns?"

"Yes, please. I want her and Susan and Mr. Norton to come to tea tomorrow. Good-bye."

Jones hung up the receiver, sank into a chair nearby and buried his face in his hands.

"What is it?" cried Susan, terrified by the haggardness of his face.

"She's gone! My God, those wretches have got her! They've got her!"

Florence was whirled away at top speed. Her father! She was actually on the way to her father, whom she had always loved in dreams, yet never seen.

Number 78 Grove street was not an attractive place, but when she arrived she was too highly keyed to take note of its sordidness. She was rather out of breath when she reached the door of the third flat. She knocked timidly. The door was instantly opened by a man who wore a black mask. She would have turned then and there and flown but for the swift picture she had of a well-dressed man at a table. He lay with his head upon his arms.

"Father!" she whispered.

The man raised his careworn face: so very well done that only the closest scrutiny would have betrayed the paste of the theatre. He rose and staggered toward her with outstretched arms. But the moment they closed about her Florence experienced a peculiar shiver.

"My child!" murmured the broken man. "They caught me when I was about to come to you. I have given up the fight." A sob choked him.

What was it? wondered the child, her heart burning with the misery of the thought that she was sad instead of glad. Over his shoulder she sent a glance about the room. There was a sofa, a table, some chairs, and an enormous clock, the face of which was dented and the hands hopelessly tangled. Why, at such a moment, she should note such details disturbed her. Then she chanced to look into the cracked mirror. In it she saw several faces, all masked. These men were peering at her through the half-closed door behind her.

"You must return home and bring me the money," went on the wretch who dared to perpetrate such mockery. "It is all that stands between me and death."

Then she knew! The insistent daily warnings came home to her. She understood now. She had deliberately walked into the spider's net. But instead of terror, an extraordinary calm fell upon her.

"Very well, father. I will go and get it." Gently she released herself from those horrible arms.

"Wait, my child, till I see if they will let you go. They may wish to hold you as hostage."

When he was gone she tried the doors. They were locked. Then she crossed over to the window and looked out. A leap from there would kill her. She turned her gaze toward the lamp, wondering.

The false father returned, dejectedly.

"It is as I said. They insist upon sending someone. Write down the directions I gave to you. I am very weak!"

"Write down the directions yourself, father; you know them better than I." Since she saw no escape, she was determined to keep up the tragic farce no longer.

"I am not your father."

"So I see," she replied, still with the amazing calm.

Braine, in the other room, shook his head savagely. Father and daughter; the same steel in the nerves. Could they bend her? Would they have to break her? He did not wish to injure her bodily, but a million was always a million, and there was revenge which was worth more to him than the money itself. He listened, motioning to the other to be silent.

"Write the directions," commanded the scoundrel who discarded the broken man style.

"I know of no hidden money."

"Then your father dies this night. Grange put a whistle to his lips. "Sign, write!"

"I refuse!"

"Once more. The moment I blow this whistle the men in the other room will understand that your father is to die. Be wise. Money is nothing; life is everything."

"I refuse!" Even as she had known this vile creature to be an impostor, so she knew that he lied, that her father was still free.

Grange blew the whistle. Instantly the room became filled with masked men. But Florence was ready. She seized the lamp and hurled it to the floor, quite indifferent whether it exploded or went out. Happily for her it was extinguished. At the same moment she cast the lamp she caught hold of a chair, remembering the direction of the window. She was superhumanly strong in this moment. The chair went true. A crash followed.

"She has thrown herself out of the window!" yelled a voice.

Someone groped for the lamp, lit it, and turned in time to see Florence pass out of the room into that from which they had come. The door slammed. The surprised men heard the key click.

She was free. But she was no longer a child.

THE MAGIC OF OLD GARDENS

Did you ever have the good fortune to wander idly in an old-fashioned garden—one of those high-walled inclosures, with a blur of color tintings of those quaint old posies that were the pride and glory of colonial days: a garden running over with wild plant life with stately hollyhocks standing prim and trim in the shadowy background, jassamine here, a tiny tuft of fragrant heather blowing there? In a word, every description of old-fashioned bloom, where every truant seed is welcome to grow to suit its own sweet will. And sometimes, if it is a really truly old-fashioned garden, one may suddenly emerge upon a path

"That leads where none may guess
Save lovers to exchange unseen
Shy whispers and caress."

Then to make the scene idealistic and charming, at the end of this path, there is an old rustic seat, half hidden behind shady shrubs

"Just a place to sit and dream
All your dreams over."

Surely such a garden as this was meant for moments of idleness and contemplation, just the place to dream of those things we strive so hard to attain, and which never come true, the place to build those wondrous air castles that surely never materialize in the prosaic humdrum of the work-a-day world. Foolish nonsense, you say, yet that is where the charm lies, just the luxury of dreaming them. And where better can these precious minutes be passed than in the garden, where the leaves rustle softly as the breeze tosses them to and fro, and the lengthening shadows across the green sward as the sun goes down, filling the garden with a strange and radiant glow, when imperfections are lost in the gathering dusk, and even the prosaic shrubbery seems a likely home for elves and faries?

Where Flowers Slumber.

Let the idler, with flowers, fragrant breath for greeting, go softly across the grassy ways that lead between the roses. A magic door closes upon the world of work and strife. The hurry and hustle, the strain of everyday grind are things of the past—a far off echo of a bad dream. Everything is peace. The soft sighing of the wind, the gentle flutter of some petal as it falls from a full-blown flower, the fragrance-laden air, fills you with a contentment that is beyond words to express, a content that is born of peace and perfect sympathy with surroundings. This you saw is a dream that never comes true. The garden is like some delightful picture book. The turning of the first page is the most entrancing, since all the others lie hidden, and even as the garden slumbers, so it will awake to give us greeting.

Nowadays gardens are more or less methodical affairs, the flowers set in precise rows and climbing with well-trained precision. But once in a while one stumbles unconsciously upon a sacred little, haunt which is usually kept by some dear old body, with a delicious sense of "things past," and where just an honored few are allowed to enter. It seems like the fragrant borderland connecting the "Land of Memories" and that visionary "Never, Never Land."

With the Hollyhocks.

And what sweet suggestions there are of other days. Even a tiny fragrant tuft of heather recalls some loved incident, or the slender long stalk, bursting here and there with flaming hollyhocks, tall sentinels of the garden, stirs our brain to hosts of pleasant thoughts.

Dear old-fashioned garden, overrun with moss, where the lily of the valley is allowed to pursue its way unchallenged, and where wild plant life, such as a common weed, are held sacred by its owner, unmolested and welcome.

Close-nestling leaves and subtle-scented flowers,
That deepen joy and soothe the saddened hour,
Of strenuous life with summer showers,
Of fragrance, freely given.

Lend me you aid that I may find
Sweet solace for the troubled mind
In thoughts soft-echoing that bind
Unhallowed earth to heaven.

EMBRYO SOLDIER WALKED MILES TO SEE TROOPS

Saw "Lots an' Lots of Them," But Missed His Dinner and Got Lost.

"Which way is it to the Asylum road?" piped a small, tired voice, and the tall lady, walking on Dundas street at 3:30 yesterday afternoon, looked down to behold in the questioner, a bare-headed, bare-footed small boy, coatless, browned and travel-stained.

"Right straight ahead," she replied.

"I thought it was, but I wasn't just sure. I asked someone else a long time ago, and they told me to go right on. Is it very far?"

Then the tall lady noted the weary quiver in the voice, the redness of the eyes, just ready to overflow.

"Are you tired?"

"Awful."

"Where do you live?"

"Near the Asylum."

"Then how do you come to be so far away from home?"

Came To See Soldiers.

The confession was a ready one. "I got up awful early this morning at seven o'clock, I guess, an' I thought I'd come an' see the soldiers."

"Did you see them?"

"Yes, lots an' lots of them, but I guess I'll go home now."

"Where have you been all this time?"

"Oh, all over, to London West, an' ever so many places."

"Does your mother know where you are?"

The wanderer hung his head, and the "No" would have been a whimper from a less manly lad.

"And you haven't had anything to eat?"

Went Without Dinner."

It was almost a last straw. He shook his head, swallowed hard, then managed, "I guess I'll get my dinner when I get home."

"How would you like to take the car?"

His face brightened for a moment, then the light was blotted out.

"But I haven't got any money, an' they don't take you unless you have some, or tickets."

Suppose I let you have a ticket. Would you like that?"

"Would you? Then I'd get home pretty soon, wouldn't I."

Even after the trials of the day, he remembered his manners and to say "Thank you" as he stuffed the car-ticket into his pocket with a grimy little fist, the fourth finger of which boasted a ring.

Walked Like Little Soldier.

He was once more the soldier of the early morning. Shoulders erect and clear-eyed, he marched to the corner.

But there was still something troubling him, and a light dawned upon the tall lady. "Do you know which car to take?" she asked.

"I'd know the Dundas car, all right, but I wouldn't know if it was the Ridout car. Could you tell me?"

The first car along proved to be the right one, and the conductor looked his surprise when the only passenger to board was a dignified but nevertheless disreputable little tramp of not more than seven or eight.

He was all ready with his ticket, and he looked up to make quite sure the conductor was seeing as he gravely dropped the fare in the "pay-as-you-enter" box, then marched inside. A smiling face looked back through the open window to the tall lady as the trolley whizzed eastward with a mite of a man, answering to the name of "Charley," who had quite enough soldiering for one day.

LONDONER RECEIVES WORD OF HIS MOTHER'S SAFETY

Niece of Edward L. Stine Was Studying Grand Opera in Paris.

A telegram was received last night by Edward L. Stine from his brother, Frederick L., in New York city, stating that he had received a cable from their mother, Mrs. Caroline Stine, notifying him of her safe arrival in London from Paris. Mrs. Stine was accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. Louise Schieder, and the latter's daughter, Miss May Schieder.

Mr. Stine, who is manager of the enameling department at the McClary Manufacturing Company, states that no word had reached him of his mother's whereabouts since the opening of the present war, until last night's telegram was received, and that the news of her safe arrival in London along with her daughter and grand-daughter comes as a distinct relief after the suspense of knowing that they were within the borders of war-ridden Europe.

Studying in Paris.

Mrs. Stine, her daughter and grand-daughter have spent the last eight years in Europe, where the latter, Miss May Schieder, for the past three years has been studying grand opera in Paris. Miss Schieder has been conducting her studies under the celebrated singer and teacher, Jean de Reazske. A very successful operatic engagement had just been completed by Miss Schieder in Paris when the war cloud appeared on the horizon, and she was forced to leave her studies and take passage for London, accompanied by her mother and grandmother.

As soon as possible the party will engage passage for Canada and return to their old home, where they will rest until after the war is settled.

WEDDING BELLS

ARTHURS—LESLIE.

At the Hamilton Road Presbyterian Manse, 13 Hyatt avenue, Friday afternoon, Rev. Dr. McCrae united in marriage George Arthurs and Miss Bella Leslie, daughter of the late William Leslie, of this city.

Miss Catherine Hamilton assisted the bride, and Peter Stewart was best man.

The bride was daintly gowned in white embroidered voile, and carried a shower bouquet of white bridal roses. The bridesmaid wore pale yellow mull, and carried pink rosebuds. After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Arthurs left for an eastern honeymoon trip, on returning from which they will reside in this city at 77 St. George street.

COLLINS—GARRETT.

A quiet wedding was solemnized Wednesday by Rev. G. B. Sage, St. George's Anglican Church, when Hazel Anna Collins, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Collins, of 433 Ontario street, was united in marriage to Roy William Garrett, of 123 Wilson avenue, West London. Miss Clara Miller, of Winnipeg, attended the bride, while G. Finchamp acted as best man. The groom's gift to the bride was a necklace of pearls and cameos; to the bridesmaid, a three-pearl ring, and to the groomsman, engraved gold cuff links. Mr. and Mrs. Garrett left on the 4:25 p.m. train for Niagara Falls and points east. On their return they will reside at 34 Rogers avenue, West London.

ADAMS—GIBSON.

A quiet, pretty wedding was solemnized yesterday at the residence of Henry Silk, when his grand-daughter, Hazel Crete Gibson, was married to Charles Edgar Adams, of Chicago, the ceremony being performed by the bride's uncle, Rev. Dr. Knowles, of St Thomas, assisted by Rev. Dr. Flanders, of the First Methodist Church, London. The bride was charming in her bridal robe of ivory charmeuse satin, with serpentine train, and cape of dentelle lace, caught with pearl trimmings. She wore the customary veil and orange blossoms, and carried a shower bouquet of roses and lily of the valley. She also wore the groom's gift, a solitaire diamond, in platinum setting. Miss Marie Gibson, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid, daintily gowned in pink accordeon-pleated ninon, over satin, with mauve trimmings, and hat of tulle, and carried a bouquet of pink roses and lilies of the valley. She also wore the groom's gift, a beautifully-engraved bracelet. The groom was supported by Frank Gibson, of St. Thomas.

After a buffet luncheon, Mr. and Mrs. Adams left for a month's honeymoon among the Muskoka Lakes. The bride travelled in a smartly-tailored suit of meadow green and black striped silk poplin, with small black plush hat. An orchestra of lady harpists played during the ceremony.

Among the out-of-town guests were the bride's mother and father, of Ayimer, Mrs. Gibson wearing king's blue charmeuse satin, draped with black chantilly lace. Others present from a distance were Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Knowles, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Adams, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Adams, Mrs. F. W. Wright and Miss Wright, St. Thomas; Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Silk and Dr. H. E. Silk, of Toronto; F. H. Silk, of Shelburne, and Miss Patti Gibson.

Horses are being purchased every day, but a large number is still required for the use of the battery.

RECEIVE WRIST WATCHES

T. H. Murray and W. Bowler, of the postoffice inspector's office, who are leaving with the Canadian division of the Army Postal Corps were pleasantly surprised yesterday afternoon when they were made the recipients of two beautiful wrist watches by the postoffice inspector, Col. C. E. H. Fisher and his staff. Inspector Col. Fisher, in a very appropriate speech, mentioned the loss to himself and staff caused by their departure. Assistant Postoffice Inspector F. W. Matthews, in making the presentation, also spoke, wishing them a speedy and safe return.

In accepting the watches, Messrs. Murray and Bowler warmly thanked the inspector and staff for their kind remembrance.

MANY CANADIANS ARE SPENDING HOLIDAYS IN LOG CABIN CAMPS.

The log cabin enterprises in Algonquin Provincial Park of Ontario, the first of their kind on Canada, are proving very popular this season. The Grand Trunk Railway officials are receiving many appreciations of the camps as ideal holiday resorts. Mr. H. A. Macdonell, director of colonization for the Ontario Government, with his family, has been staying at "Nominigan Camp."

"We are delighted with the arrangements, he says. "It is up to the minute for a perfect summer home to holiday in."

Nominigan Camp is situated on the easterly shore of Smoke Lake. Like Camp Minnesing it has a large central lodge, which is used as a general rendezvous and dining-room. In close proximity is a series of individual log cabins, thoroughly in keeping with the natural beauty of their location, which furnish accomodation for families and parties. b

SAYS GUARD'S WOUND WAS SELF-INFLICTED

Chairman of Public Utilities Reports On Springbank Reservoir Shooting.

Hydro will guard the Springbank water supply at night. This was decided at a meeting of the public utilities commissioners yesterday afternoon. Dr. H. A. Stevenson, a member of the commission, suggested that the park be closed for the present and all people be prohibited from going to Springbank. Chairman Pocock and Commissioner J. H. Chapman thought this would be too drastic a measure, and it was finally agreed to put more lights around the pump house so the night crew could see the prowlers if there were any.

Chairman Pocock told the commissioners that the watchman, Harvey Johnston, who was injured by a bullet last Saturday night, which entered his left leg, shot himself. He was unable to state whether it was an accident or not. This was the only report made of the shooting.

There was no other business discussed at the meeting, with the exception of passing a few accounts.

LOOK OUT HANS! A SECRET SERVICE MAN'S IN TOWN

Says He Needs a Gun in His Business, But Police Officials Say "Call Again."

Magistrate Judd and Chief of Police Williams always assume a tired and politely bored expression when a man, who says his name is Latham, secret service man, "on the trail of the Germans in London," walks into the police station.

Predicted Martial Law.

Latham has been trying to get a permit from Magistrate Judd to carry a revolver. He says he needs one in his business. Latham visited Magistrate Judd at his own home a week ago, said he knew for a certainty that London would be under martial law within two days, that he was on the trail of the men who had shot at sentries at the Barracks and at the Armories, and asked for a permit to carry a gun.

Had No Credentials.

Asked to show credentials, Latham was unable to produce the necessary papers from Ottawa. According to Chief of Police Williams, a government secret service man would already have a permit to carry a revolver or do almost anything he wanted to.

Latham told Lieut.-Col. Becher, the night following the shooting at the Barracks, that "the Armories would be next." Early the next morning several shots were fired at supposed spies by sentries on duty at the Armories. Latham confided soon after to the chief of police that he knew the man at whom the sentries fired, and would probably arrest him within a few days.

"Spies" Are Still At Large.

So far, London has not been put under martial law, the "spies" have not been caught, and Latham has not produced the papers to show he is a secret service man, according to Chief of Police Williams, who believes the nearest secret service men are at present in Ottawa.

BENEFIT CONCERT FOR LONDON HUMANE SOCIETY

Musicale Will Be Given in Masonic Temple by Leading Artists On Thursday, September 10.

For the benefit of the London Humane Society a musicale of unexcelled artistic merit will be given in the Masonic Temple on Thursday evening, September 10, under the direction of F. Linforth Willgoose, of the London Conservatory of Music.

Funds Greatly Needed.

Doubtless, friends of the society will be glad of this opportunity to help replenish the treasury, which, because of the heavy demands made upon it during the summer, has been almost depleted. Scarcely a day has passed when the officers of the Humane Society have not had some case drawn to their attention. The unmerciful beating of delivery horses by youthful drivers, is a common offence, and this, and any other brutality to dumb animals is what the Humane Society seeks to prevent. Remedial measures are being taken to influence poultry shippers to provide larger crates for live fowl. Heretofore, these have frequently been shipped in crates at least two inches too small each way.

Has Many Sympathizers.

In spite of the rather uphill work since its organization three years ago, the London Humane Society is making progress, and has many sympathizers in the city. The musicale promises to be one of high order, some very prominent local artists taking part, a fuller announcement of which will be made later.

The officers of the London Humane Society are: President, Colonel Gartshore; secretary, Miss Meta Macbeth, and treasurer, Mrs. Whitman. Adam McGuire is the officer, and any citizen wishing to report cases of cruelty to animals are requested to telephone him at 1187.
